Oscard was sitting in the windowless room without a light, for a light only attracted a myriad of heavy winged moths. He was seated before the long French window, which, since the sash had gone, had been used as a door. Before him in the glimmering light of the mystic Southern Cross the great river crept unctuously, silently to the sea. It seemed to be stealing away surreptitiously while the forest whispered of it. In its surface the reflection of the great stars of the southern hemisphere ran into little streaks of silver, shimmering away into darkness.

All sound of human life was still. The natives were asleep. In the next room Joseph in his hammock was just on the barrier between the waking and the sleeping life, as soldiers learn to be. Oscard would not have needed to raise his voice to call him to his side.

The leader of this hurried retreat had been sitting there for two hours. The slimy moving surface of the river had entered into his brain; the restless silence of the African forest alone kept him awake. He hardly realized that the sound momentarily gaining strength within his ears was that of a paddle—a single, weakly irregular paddle. It was not a sound to wake a sleeping man. It came so slowly, so gently through the whisper of the dripping leaves that it would enter into his slumbers and make itself part of them.

Guy Oscard only realized the meaning of that sound when a black shadow crept on to the smooth evenness of the river's breast. Oscard was eminently a man of action. In a moment he was on his feet and in the darkness of the room there was the gleam of a rifle barrel. He came back to the window—watching.

He saw the canoe approach the bank. He heard the thud of the paddle as it was thrown upon the ground. In the gloom, to which his eyes were accustomed, he saw a man step from the boat to the shore and draw the canoe up. The silent midnight visitor then turned and walked up toward the house. There was something familiar in the gait—the legs were slightly bowed. The man was walking with great difficulty, staggering a little at each step. He seemed to be in great pain.

Guy Oscard laid aside the rifle. He stepped forward to the open window.

"Is that you, Durnovo?" he said, without raising his voice.

"Yes," replied the other. His voice was muffled as if his tongue were swollen, and there was a startling break in it.

Oscard stepped aside and Durnovo passed into his own house.

"Got a light?" he said in the same muffled way.

In the next room Joseph could be heard striking a match, and a moment later he entered the room, throwing a flood of light before him.

"Good God!" cried Oscard. He stepped back as if he had been struck, with his hand shielding his eyes.

"Save us!" ejaculated Joseph in the same breath.

The thing that stood there, sickening their gaze, was not a human being at all. Take a man's eyelids away, leaving the round balls staring, blood streaked; cut away his lips, leaving the grinning teeth and red gums; shear off his ears—that which is left is not a man at all. This had been done to Victor Durnovo. Truly the vengeance of man is crueler than the vengeance of God!

Could he have seen himself, Victor Durnovo would never have shown that face, or what remained of it, to a human being. He could only have killed himself. Who can tell what cruelties had been paid for, piece by piece, in this loathsome mutilation? The slaves had wreaked their terrible vengeance; but the greatest, the deepest, the most inhuman cruelty was in letting him go.

"They've made a pretty mess of me," said Durnovo, in a sickening, lifeless voice, and he stood there with a terrible caricature of a grin.

Joseph set down the lamp with a groan and went back into the dark room beyond, where he cast himself upon the ground and buried his face in his hands.

"O Lord!" he muttered. "O God in heaven, kill it, kill it!"

Guy Oscard never attempted to run away from it. He stood slowly gulping down his nauseating horror. His teeth were clinched; his face, through the sunburn, livid; the blue of his eyes seemed to have faded into an ashen gray. The sight he was looking on would have sent three men out of five into gibbering idiocy.

"Good God!" cried Oscard.

Then at last he moved forward. With averted eyes he took Durnovo by the arm.

"Come," he said, "lie down upon my bed. I will try to help you. Can you take some food?"

Durnovo threw himself down heavily on the bed. There was a punishment sufficient to expiate all his sins in the effort he saw that Guy Oscard had had to make before he touched him. He turned his face away.

"I haven't eaten anything for twenty-four hours," he said, with a whistling intonation.

"Joseph," said Oscard, returning to the door of the inner room—his voice sounded different; there was a metallic ring in it—"get something for Mr. Durnovo; some soup or something."

Joseph obeyed, shaking as if ague was in his bones.

Oscard administered the soup. He tended Durnovo with all the gentleness of a woman and a fortitude that was above the fortitude of men. Despite himself his hands trembled, big and strong as they were. His whole being was contracted with horror and pain. Whatever Victor Durnovo had been, he was now an object of such pity that before it all possible human sins faded into spotlessness. There was no crime in all that human nature has found to commit for which such cruelty as this would be justly meted out in punishment.

Durnovo spoke from time to time, but he could see the effect that his hissing speech had upon his companion and in time he gave it up. He told haltingly of the horrors of the simiacine plateau; of the last grim tragedy acted there; how at last, blinded with his blood, maimed, stupefied by agony, he had been hounded down the slope by a yelling, laughing horde of torturers.

There was not much to be done, and presently Guy Oscard moved away to his camp chair, where he sat staring into the night. Sleep was impossible. Strong, hardened, weather beaten man that he was, his nerves were all a-tingle, his flesh creeping and jumping

HAVE A FELLOW.—The efforts of the Ladies' Home Journal to prod pastors and church-members to greater effusiveness in welcoming strangers to public services may lead to over-doing hospitality in various ways. One of these ways was revealed to a warm-hearted western pastor. Coming down from the pulpit after the evening sermon he found a stranger in the person of a fair-haired Swede, and, greeting her with a cordial hand-clasp, said: "I am very glad to see you. I want you to feel at home here. I'd like to become acquainted with you. If you'll give your address I'll call and see you." "Thank you," she replied, "but I have a fellow."—Congregationalist.

Tuberculosis

PAPER READ BY DR. C. E. SMYTH BEFORE THE Y.M.C.

Tuberculosis is responsible for one-quarter of the total mortality of mankind. It is responsible for one-third of all deaths between the ages of 20 and 45 years. Just think of this for a moment. Think of the myriad of diseases that infect or cause death in the human species, and then consider that this one disease kills one out of every seven persons who die. This is truly appalling. The mortality from this disease is remarkably large amongst Anglo Saxons. It is a wonder indeed that our concern about this state of affairs is not greater; that we are not up in arms demanding some action on the part of our municipal councils, legislatures or parliaments, towards the lessening of this frightful mortality. We hold up our hands in holy honor at the spectacle presented by the people of India who regard with complacency the epidemics of plague that occur periodically amongst them. It is the old story of "familiarity breeding contempt." They have always had the plague with them and regard it as something that must be, as something useless to struggle against. But how much more culpable are we Anglo Saxons who regard with equal equanimity the much more frightful scourge, Tuberculosis, well called the white man's plague. It causes more deaths every year than are due to Asiatic plague, cholera, smallpox or all our other infectious diseases together, and our culpability is the more heinous when we consider that Tuberculosis is as much a preventible disease as any of the infectious diseases, indeed, more amenable to prevention than many of them.

Tuberculosis may be defined as an infectious disease due to the tubercle bacillus, a small rod-shaped germ. This gains entrance to our bodies, as a rule, by inhalation. Sometimes it is swallowed with infected milk, or infected meat. The disease may affect any organ of the body, most frequently though it affects the lungs causing what is commonly known as phthisis or consumption. It may affect the brain, causing tuberculous meningitis, so common in children, or it may affect the bones or joints, causing hip joint disease, white swellings of joints, etc. It may affect the lymphatic glands, causing enlarged glands of the neck, also common in children, it may also affect the skin, liver and kidneys, indeed, no organ is immune or free from infection by this ubiquitous germ. In whatever organ the germ lodges it causes the same kind of lesion or change of tissue. It first causes irritation. This is followed by irritation forming a small nodule or tubercle of inflammatory tissue in the affected organ. This is the essential change in tuberculosis of any organ. There may be only a few of these tubercles, or there may be many. The severity of the disease in any individual depending on the amount of tissue involved. Later changes may occur in any tuberculosis area as follows: The spot may heal or the tubercle become replaced by scar tissue, or necrosis or death of the tissue may take place leading to cavity formations, &c.

The general health, of course, suffers in proportion to the amount of the disease present and in proportion to the extent to which the functions of any organ are interferred with. So much for the lesions of tuberculosis.

We will now pass on to a consideration of the ways in which the disease spreads. An intelligent appreciation of this phase of the subject will lead us directly to a knowledge of the proper measures to take to prevent that spread.

It was formerly thought that tuberculosis was an hereditary disease. That it ran in families. It does run in families but by infection one to the other. It is not hereditary, though the children of consumptive parents seem to show an increased susceptibility to the disease.

The most common means of conveyance of the disease one to another is through the sputum or expectoration of a consumptive. Germs do not exist in a consumptive's breath but they exist in millions in the expectoration. It is estimated that the average consumptive throws out in his sputum every day over 7,000,000,000 of germs. The sputum is spat about carelessly, it dries and the germs arise in the air with the dust and are re-breathed by others. In nearly every case that one runs across in practise one can trace the source of infection, living in a house formerly occupied by a consumptive, or association directly or indirectly, with a consumptive. Other modes of infection are through the milk or meat of tuberculous cows. Milk is a common mode of conveyance of the disease to infants and children. For practical purposes, however, we may consider that tuberculosis spreads in all cases by the sputum.

We all breathe more or less of these germs. We know from our post-mortem examinations that no body is free from its attacks. We are all tuberculous at some time. In some cases it develops and we have well marked tuberculosis, in others the germ succumbs to the resisting vital forces, with which nature has generously endowed us, the little tubercle heals and is replaced by scar tissue.

The conditions that predispose to the development of the disease when one is exposed are such as will in any way lower our vitality or resisting power, more particularly living in poorly ventilated and poorly lighted houses, poor food, overwork, alcoholic excesses, indoor employments in poorly lighted and poorly ventilated workrooms. The most important of these predisposing causes is the lack of fresh air in work rooms and houses. Earl Grey, honorary president of the Canadian Anti Tuberculosis League, was in Toronto a short time ago. Arriving in the early morning he thought he would walk to his hotel, and being interested in this subject, he noticed as he passed along the number of closed and open windows, and rarely did he find one open. I think the same rule obtains pretty generally. We keep our windows closed too much. We should so arrange our environment as to provide that we are practically living in fresh air twenty-four hours a day. Direct draughts can be avoided by proper arrangements of windows or use of screens.

Knowing then the cause of the disease, being able to demonstrate the germ and knowing how that germ is disseminated and affects others we arrive at once at the proper measures to take to prevent its spread, to prevent it from disseminating and infecting others. The precautions to be taken will be best given in tabulated form, and I will first give the more important directions a consumptive should observe.

I. He must not expectorate about the house or on the floor of any public building, store, railway carriage, nor on the street.

II. He should not spit anywhere, but into a spitoon kept for the purpose, and this should contain some catbolic acid or other antisentic.

III. When absent from his own room or house a small wide-mouthed bottle should be used with a carefully fitting cap. The contents can be disinfected on arrival home and the bottle cleansed.

IV. We should not spit into a handkerchief, but if not provided with a spitoon should use a piece of clotk or paper and this should be burned as soon as possible.

V. Handkerchiefs that may have been used in an emergency should be boiled one-half hour before being washed.

VI. Kissing by consumptives should be prohibited. When laughing he should hold a piece of cloth or gauze before the mouth and should avoid coughing in the direction of another person.

VII. A consumptive should not hold a position in which he is required to handle the food or wearing apparel of others.

VII. A room occupied by a consumptive should not be carpeted, nor have any unnecessary hangings, but should be so arranged as to admit of easy cleaning and disinfection. It should not be swept or dusted but should be wiped instead with damp cloths and these frequently boiled. Fresh air should circulate freely through the room.

IX. Every consumptive should have a separate set of feeding utensils, knife, fork, spoon, cup, saucer, plate, &c.

X. When a room or house is vacated by a consumptive it should be thoroughly disinfected.

Now, as to some precautions to be taken by people generally to prevent their taking the disease. Amongst the more important of these I would place a knowledge of the nature and cause of tuberculosis and how it spreads, and insisting that those already affected should not be a focus for disseminating the disease, as it should be insisted that they observe strictly all the precautions enumerated above. Together with this, people generally should observe all proper rules of hygiene being as much as possible in the open fresh air, breathing fully and deeply of that fresh air, sleeping with windows open, having offices and workrooms well lighted and ventilated. Germs abhor the light. People should eat a nourishing and easily digested diet. They should assume and maintain a hygienic attitude, head and back erect, shoulders back, when standing, sitting or walking, as this is the attitude most conducive to full, deep, breathing. In fact be big breathers, and moderate but wise eaters, avoiding excesses of all kinds except an excess of fresh air and sunshine.

Thus we will provide a stony ground for these germs to grow upon—a stony ground of exuberant vitality and robust health.

Now as to the enforcement of regulations or precautions such as are necessary.

Some of them can be enforced by by-laws of a municipality or statutes of legislatures, but for their strict and proper observance and enforcement we must have behind such by-laws or statutes an enlightened public opinion. The public must be educated up to a proper appreciation of the grave danger that exists to all of us under present conditions and how much good can be accomplished by preventive measures. Grant that these methods for prevention were strictly enforced what decrease is it going to make in the death rate, and the total number of deaths in the country and what money value does that decrease represent for after all we will have to demonstrate this question in money values before we can get legislators to take it into their serious consideration. Human lives have a money value, that is, each one of us contributes something towards the carrying on of the world's work, each in our own sphere. The measure of our contribution to the general work is the measure of our money in value to the State. Reduced to averages we can place the value in money of a life at $2,000. Now Canada's annual death rate from tuberculosis is about 15,000 people, valuing these at $2,000 each, we have a loss to Canada every year of $30,000,000. Suppose we can by proper observance and enforcement of preventive measures reduce this mortality 50 per cent., and this is easy within the limits of probability, we would effect a saving to Canada of $15,000,000 annually. The annual money loss from tuberculosis in the United States reaches the stupendous fiure of $330,000,000. In Great Britain in recent years the mortality from this disease has been reduced about 30 per cent., and this by general education of the people rather than by strict enforcement of laws. In fact it is the general consensus of opinion that not only can the mortality be reduced but the disease can be eradicated by a strict observance of proper preventive measures.

Now let us glance for a few minutes at the efforts already being put forward to conquer this disease. In England there exists a powerful anti-tuberculosis league under the august patronage of the King. In other European countries they have similar organizations. Nearly every State in the Union to the South of us has its league, New York State's appropriation to its league this year is $75,000. These organizations are all doing good work, issuing pamphlets of instructions to the public, also pamphlets for the patients and establishing sanitariums, delivering series of lectures throughout their territories and doing their best to influence their legislative assemblies. In Canada we have the National Association for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, under the Hon. Presidency of His Excellency Earl Grey. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and Lord Stratocona are among the Hon. Vice Presidents. They have a very efficient secretary, lecturer and organizer in the person of Rev. Dr. Moore, of Ottawa. He is touring Canada in the interests of the work and about a year ago delivered a lecture in Medicine Hat, and there was formed at that time a local organization to act under the larger one in carrying out the propaganda here. I am sorry to say that so far as I am aware, nothing has been done by this local association. To give you some idea of the scope of the work, as carried on by this association I will read to you extracts from the reports of some of these committees.

To recapitulate:

"Tuberculosis is a communicable disease. It is a very widespread disease, accounting for one in seven of all deaths and one in three of all deaths between the ages of 20 and 45 years. It is caused by a germ—the tubercle bacillus. This germ spreads from a consumptive to others through the sputum. The sputum from an average case in one day containing about 7,000,000 germs. It is a preventible disease. It is prevented by every consumptive taking precautions regarding his sputum and submitting to a semi-isolation and by people generally living according to the best hygienic laws, maintaining the vitality at the highest possible point."

James Heard, of Morton Park, Ont., says: "While employed at the Specialty Works of Newmarket 6 or 7 years ago, I bruised my ankle, but through neglect this bruise turned to an ulcerated or burning sore which caused me a great deal of suffering. I tried a great number of doctors and was in the hospital four times. I tried almost everything, but nothing did me any good. I could not sleep at night with the scalding and burning pain, but from the first application of Zam-Buk I never lost any sleep, and felt nothing more of it than if I hadn't had any sore at all. It started healing and gave me no further trouble. Shortly after this as I was getting on a street car, my foot slipped and I came with all my might down the edge of the step and gave my foot a terrible mangling up. This made it far worse than ever, but I started again with Zam-Buk and it did the same work over again as it did at first and my ankle is sound and well as ever it was. I cannot speak too highly of Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk cures cuts, burns, chapped hands, chafings, cold sores, itch, chilblains, eczema, running sores, sore throat, bad chest, ringworm, piles (blind or bleeding), bad legs, inflamed patches, rheumatism, neuralgia, sciatica, abscesses and all diseased, injured and irritated conditions of the skin. THE REVIVAL SERVICES

LARGE MEETINGS NIGHTLY IN ST. JOHN'S CHURCH

Large and deeply attentive have been the congregations to gather in the Presbyterian church since the opening of the revival services last week. The plain, downright talking of the evangelists, and lack of emotionalism will commend this movement to many who have been sceptical or opposed to revival services as a form of religious hysteria, whose experience has been all too frequently, that in these special efforts the feelings are worked upon and so-called conversions obtained under emotional or hypnotic influence.

On Friday evening Mr. Tatch took as his text, St. Luke 5; IV., "Launch out into the deep and let down the net for a draught."

What, the evangelist asked in opening, were the conditions necessary for a revival? He believed there was a fixed law in this case, just as there was a fixed law in agriculture relative to the raising of crops. The law of revivals was stated in the verse he had chosen as his text. The miracle of the multitude of fishes the Master had used as a means for teaching a very valuable lesson. Hence His words at the close of the episode, "Fear not, from henceforth thou shalt catch men." In these words Jesus showed His disciples the means to bring about a revival at any time. He would attempt to show the real setting of this incident and apply it to present day conditions.

The command, he continued, indicates divine wisdom. Human wisdom always stood in the way of a revival. Human argument in this very city was opposed to a successful revival. When people began to reason they were all apt to do so about the wisdom of God's commands, instead of obeying them unquestionably a revival was impossible. Just as Peter, and James and John, who could not see beneath the surface of the water, obeyed the Master's commands so we must do if the spirit of God was to work among us. Many of us were only playing at being Christians. We had spent our time in arguing, in reasoning and neglected to do the real serious work which Christ had commanded us to do.

It was necessary that the "nets of men" should keep their own taste clean; else they were stultified and their work might prove of no avail. The net which was not thoroughly cleansed would keep away the fish by its evil odor; and moreover, it would eventually rot and be utterly valueless. The Christian who would save souls must first be thoroughly cleansed himself; and evil in his own life must be discarded before he could be used as a tool for the carrying out of the Divine purpose. His net must be without holes. Any inconsistencies in the life of a professed follower of Jesus would be injurious rather than helpful to the Cause he represented. The evangelist mentioned the case of a lady—not a Christian—whom he had visited before leaving Calgary. Her friend, she said, with whom she had gone to the theatre, and indulged in other such amusements, had stood up as a professed Christian in one of the services of the mission. In that kind of Christian, his confidante stated, she had no faith.

After the singing of a gospel hymn by the united choir, Mr. Gale spoke briefly on the necessity of tact on the part of Christian workers who would make converts. He instanced a case in which time had been spent in impressing a one-legged man with the evils of dancing. He would urge Christian workers to use the utmost tact in the way they approached their fellows. They should never take "No," for an answer. If one bait would not do they should try another. "What we want in Christian life," he said, "is what we have in business—no beating around the bush, but diplomacy." If their goods were not wanted it was not for the evangelists to force them upon their fellows. They should present them as a good commercial traveller did his goods—in their best light. And there Christian responsibility in the matter ended.

The services are being continued throughout the week at 4 o'clock in the Methodist church and at 7.45 in the Presbyterian church.

Around the Station

The meeting of the officers of the Western Division, which is held every three months, will be held in Moose Jaw on April 8.

Superintendent Lawrence left for Lethbridge yesterday.

The new transcontinental trains started yesterday. They pass through at the following hours: No. 1, arrives 11.40k, leaves 12 noon; No. 2, arrives 14k, leaves 14.20k.

The Soo-Spokane Flyer will be started on the 19th of April. The train will be a heavier one than last year, transfers to the transcontinental being made at Moose Jaw.

There is nothing as far as can be discovered in the rumors going around about a new station and roundhouse.

The C.P.R. gardens are to be made a beauty spot this year. This work is being done at several stations.

THE SYNOD

Rev. Mr. Nicoll a Prominent Figure

Many matters of importance to churchmen came up for discussion at the recent Synod held in Regina. Several amendments to canons were carried, amongst them being one for the enlargement of the executive committee. The Rev. Wm. Nicholl of this city was appointed as a member and also as a delegate to the provincial Synod and substitute to the general Synod.

Our rector was one of the central figures of the meetings in Regina and aroused marked interest when he spoke on the subjects of diocesan journalism and the attitude of the church to pressing social problems of the day.

On the attitude of the church to capitalism. The Regina Standard says:

Rev. Rural Dean Nicoll, of Medicine Hat, was responsible for the most item of real interest in the afternoon's proceedings.

In many ways one of the most interesting figures in the Synod, the Rural Dean from Alberta undoubtedly held the respectful hearing of the whole assembly as he spoke, and while what he said was not always in accordance with the views of his fellow-delegates, it was obvious that his sincerity was appreciated. A man of advanced social views, indeed practically a Socialist, he has always shown an interest indirect in all social questions, a fact which was evidenced yesterday when he rose to move the following resolution.

"Whereas a bill entitled 'An act respecting co-operation' has, by the untiring efforts of Mr. F. D. Monk, M.P., with the assistance of the Dominion government, successfully passed its third reading in the Dominion house of Commons.

"Be it therefore resolved that this Synod of the Church of England, Diocese of Qu'Appelle, assembled in session desires;

(1) To heartily congratulate the promoter of this measure upon the passage of the bill through the House of Commons.

(2) To express the earnest hope that the bill may soon become law and

(3) To command the provisions of the act to the thoughtful and sympathetic consideration of church people."

The executive committee's report showed that a grant had been made under special circumstances to H. C. L. Hooper and others. Mr. Hooper, however, had not accepted his grant of $100. In new work grants were made from a special fund at Eagle Butte.

Date of Camp

The date for the Calgary camp has been set for June 8 to 19.

The staff will be nine camp commandant D.O.C., M.D., to thirteen orderly officers, Lieut. Wilkins, D.A.A. general captain, E. F. Mackie; acting district staff adjutant; senior T.S.C. officer, Capt. W. Armstrong; principal medical officer, Capt. S. W. Hewetson; principal veterinary officer Veterinary Capt. Riddell; senior ordnance officer, Capt. T. G. Boulanger; paymaster; district paymaster M. N. No. 113; musketry instructor Lieut. Belk. The corps will be 15th Light horse, 19th Alberta mounted rifles, Canadian mounted rifles, Alberta rangers 25th.

LOCAL MAN APPOINTED.

At the ninth annual meeting of the Alberta Horse Breeders association held in Calgary D. Carrill, of Seven Persons, was elected 1st vice-president; Wm. Hargrave, a general director; Hon. W. T. Finlay, an honorary director.

ROBBERY AT READY'S

SUM OF MONEY STOLEN LAST WEEK

ROBBERS NOT YET CAUGHT

Sometime between late Saturday night and Monday morning March 23, nearly $200 was stolen from the safe in Vic Ready's pool room, most of it in checks. Vic has been accustomed to leaving the safe open after he puts the money in at night until the sweeping is concluded and the front door locked. On Saturday night he followed the same practise, but forgot to lock the safe when he left.

On Monday morning when the proprietor went to get the money out he found it had been stolen. The police were immediately notified and suspicion attached to two men who had been in the city for some months, Sudbury and Stanley Wilson. Sudbury had been working at Howson's tailor store and had left town on Sunday night. Wilson, who had been familiar with him left on Monday night, on a trip up the C. & E., which he had contemplated for some time. The reason why some suspicion seemed to point towards Wilson was that he had been last in the pool room as far as was known. Ready, Wilson and a few others were in a room over the pool room, after the latter had been closed up, discussing the prospects of the crops and the evangelistic meetings, when a stimulant in the form of a cigarette seemed to be requisite for a clear conception of the outlook. Wilson was sent down to get the necessary and this, combined with his departure on Monday night, put Ready to Calgary on the second section of the transcontin

Almost the first man he saw on the platform at Calgary was Wilson waiting for the train north. When the latter heard that he was under suspicion he agreed to come back immediately.

He was not arrested, as reported in a local paper and sent to the Calgary papers. Some of the checks were cashed in Calgary on Monday and returned here on Wednesday morning.

Sudbury secured money here on Sunday to buy a ticket to Cranbrook where he obtained a position. It was reported that he had gone north but this was not verified, nor has there appeared any stronger case against him.

The police are working on the case. Only $30 in cash was taken, the remainder being checks, of which payment was stopped.

Engineers Coming This Way

Cowley, Alta., March 24.—Engineer Wilkinson and a party of two men are working eastward of here towards Macleod, north of the Old Man River on a preliminary survey from Michel to Calgary.

He is after a grade that will enable them to haul sixty loaded cars through the Crow's Nest Pass, whereas the C.P.R. are only able to handle eighteen cars.

As soon as the spur from Michel up the Elk river is completed active work will commence on the line to Calgary and Lethbridge. The junction is likely to be at Claresholm.

ANOTHER ADDITION TO FAIR PRIZE LIST

Thanks to the munificence of a number of her citizens the Medicine Hat Fair prize list is likely to be the most attractive and varied in her history.

The latest addition is a series of three prizes to be given for the best bread baked of Lake of the Woods flour. The donor is Samuel Fawcett, whose valuable additions to the prize list will be greatly appreciated by the housewives in the city. The values will be $15, $10 and $5.

The German children, who are the only attenders of the school house, do not go to school in summer, as they are required to assist about the farm at this time. The schoolhouse therefore, closes from May 1 to November 1, six months later.

Ed. Smith drove into the Hat on Thursday for the new organ which was purchased with the money made at the concert held two weeks ago. There is some talk of breaking it in with a dance.

Bowell.

On the evening of Friday March 27 the "Beauty and Chivalry" of Bowell and vicinity gathered at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. Richardson where a most enjoyable time was spent. To those who were personally acquainted with the host and hostess of the evening it was a foregone conclusion that the evening would be an enjoyable one, as a more sociable host and hostess than Mr. and Mrs. Richardson would indeed be hard to find.

In spite of the somewhat unfavorable condition of the weather guests to the number of sixty-five turned out, and each and all voted it the best party ever held in this vicinity. During the early hours of the evening the time was pleasantly spent in card playing, and at 11.30 lunch was served, after which everything movable was cleared from the large and beautifully decorated dining room and suddenly Lorne Swanson's melodious voice was heard in the cry "partners for a square." Almost instantly eight couple were on the floor, and with Mr. Albert Lemon at the piano, Mr. James Lecon with the violin and Mr. Peters with the guitar. The fun was fast and furious, square dances, round dances, waltzes, two-steps, jigs, etc., followed each other in rapid succession. While the floor was constantly occupied there was no unseemly haste, nor scrambling for positions. Courtesy and good will prevailed during the entire evening. Everyone danced with the greatest enthusiasm and the music was of the best. But, alas! all things earthly must come to an end, and too, too soon Old Sol threw his golden rays over the eastern horizon and the party reluctantly broke up. Lunch of superior quality and in immense quantity was served to all and the merry-makers betook themselves homeward. The writer mingled freely with the throng and on every hand words of appreciation were heard coupled with the wish that in the not too distant future these kind people might again throw their home open in the same generous manner.

Inviting people to a party of this sort is usually a delicate matter as undesirables must be left out, and it is sometimes hard to draw the line. We think, however, that the ones who issued the invitations in this case are the to be congratulated on the fact that not one undesirous person was inflicted on the decorous company who gathered under that hospitable roof on that long-to-be-remembered evening.

Eagle Butte

Mr. and Mrs. Heyduff have been on a visit to Mr. Garlough's. Mrs. Heyduff's father. They returned to their home Sunday night.

Miss Elder, of the sawmill, is returning to her home in Scotland for a trip.

Mrs. Roth is recovering from a sickness.

James Anderson's dance on St. Patrick's day was a great success. Everybody enjoyed himself.

A New Lamp

Also a Saving in Mantles

A sample of a new lamp has been put to a 72-hours' test by Mr. Porter, with eminently satisfactory results. The lamp "Noontide" was sent up by the Gas Supply & Construction company of Toronto, last week, and on the 20th at 4 p.m. was put on the test. It is of 500 c.p. as compared with 50 c.p., the illuminating power of the ordinary lamp now in use. It consumes 6¼ cu. feet of gas per hour, as compared with 5 feet in the common 50 c.p. lamp and thus for a difference in intensity of at least six or seven times that of the lamp now in use, only 1¼ feet more gas per hour is required. The cost of gas for the new lamp is thus 2¼ cents per 24 hours, compared with 1 4-5 for the ordinary lamp.

A useful lamp attachment, which is already in use in the city hall, also was brought into the city last week. This consists of an anti-vibrator, an arrangement of metal springs by which any vibration which may occur in the lamp stand or chandelier will be neutralized. This will undoubtedly prove a great mantle-saver. One of the greatest costs to gas consumers is the renewal of mantles which do not last out one half their natural life.

The cost of this whole outfit complete will be not more than 75 cents, burner included, as compared with a cost of $1.25 for the present lamps.

The "Noontide" which is one of the latest things out for indoor lighting, can be seen any day at Mr. Porter's office.

A FINE BUGGY

The Times representative recently saw the handsome buggy which Doane & Son have turned out for James Fleming. This rig, which is the first of its kind ever seen in the west, has wheels of the Seven type, ball bearings and rubber tyres, being used with the ordinary wooden wheels and forming a strong and easy running combination.

Mr. Doane originally intended this buggy for F. W. Brown but the latter has decided to have a slight modification in his, an automobile seat being put in.

Since Mr. Fleming's buggy was built, Doane & Son have secured a number of other orders for a rig of similar pattern, John Hargrave being among the firm's latest patrons.

The buggy, which is probably the finest ever turned out in Medicine Hat, can be seen by anyone interested at the builders' carriage works, on Main street north of the track.

REAL ESTATE NOTES.

A number of real estate deals are reported and there appears to be every likelihood of an early revival of activity in this line.

The Northwest Real Estate company report three sales of city property within the past week.

The Beaver Real Estate company have been doing considerable business, their deals including the sale of Lot 13, Block 91, facing on Fourth avenue to Joe Chambers, value in the neighborhood of $600; Lots 6 and 7 with improvements, in Block 59, facing on Braemar street, for a figure in the neighborhood of $2,000; Lot 10, Block 59, facing on Balmoral street, about $500. Several sales have been made of lots on the flats near the tracks.

Locals

W. J. Brotherton returned Sunday from a week's tour in the Arrow Lake district in B.C. He reports a revival of trade in the coast province and a very hopeful outlook.

In connection with the suggestion of a leap year quadrille a meeting will be held in council chamber at 8 o'clock. All ladies interested are requested to attend.

John Dixon of Maple Creek has been appointed a member of the board of governors of the univeristy of Saskatchewan.

Taber Free Press.—A. C. Hawthorne of Medicine Hat spent Saturday in town on business.

The Times can conscientiously advise anyone who can do so to see Clay Clement on Monday April 6. He is by a great margin the best actor who has appeared here.

Flocks of wild geese are flying north almost every night.

Doane & McCutcheon of Hamilton and Toronto have gone into partnership in the dyeing, cleaning and pressing business. They have secured the agency for the Crown Tailoring company, Toronto.

WESTERN CHANGES.

The new spring time card of the Canadian Pacific shows several changes of interest. The chief of these is the extension of the service of the eastern express, train No. 1, from Moose Jaw to Calgary, and the placing of an additional fast train on the line between Calgary and Edmonton. The first eastern express to run through to Calgary will leave Moose Jaw on March 30, at 2.30 a.m., arriving at Calgary at 6 p.m. The returning train will leave Calgary at 8.30 a.m., arriving at Moose Jaw at 11.30. From Moose Jaw the journey eastward will be continued as at present. On the Edmonton branch a new daily train will be put on at the close of the month. This train will leave Calgary daily at 8 a.m., and will arrive at Strathcona at 4 p.m., arriving at Calgary at 11.40 p.m. This train will make connections at Calgary with the transcontinental trains east and west bound. In addition to this train the local train will leave Strathcona daily except Sunday at 8 p.m., and will reach Strathcona at 10.45 p.m. Slight changes will be made on the Lacombe and Wetaskiwin branches. A train, running daily, except Sunday, will leave Stettler at 7.15 p.m., arriving at Lacombe at 11 a.m. Returning it will leave Lacombe at 1.30 p.m., and will arrive in Stettler at 4.55 p.m.

On the Wetaskiwin branch the train will leave Hardisty at 5.55 a.m. and will arrive in Wetaskiwin at 9.50 a.m. Returning the train will leave Wetaskiwin at 3 p.m., arriving at Hardisty at 7.30 p.m.

On the Pheasant Hills branch a daily train will be run from Elkhorn to Lanigan, instead of triweekly as at present.

The new summer time card will be put on in June, when the local train service in Manitoba will be considerably increased, double train service being inaugurated on several of the Manitoba lines. Changes will also be made at that time in the transcontinental service.

Messrs. Webb and Ware of the public school staff took the services last Sunday at Irvine and Walsh.

Marshall & Hunter are talking of closing the opera house on account of the new license by-law.

B. F. Souch has a new Ford runabout automobile. It's the cash system man who can afford (no pun) an auto.

A meeting of the agricultural society will be held on Thursday.

R. A. Conkey, of Calgary, was in the city on Friday.

Gleichen Call.—It is stated that the Medicine Hat Milling company has decided to do business at Gleichen and will erect a warehouse here in theverv near future.

Mr. Butzon and family, lately of Germany, are in the city. Mr. Butzon has bought a ranch at Winifred, where he will go in for mixed farming.

W. D. McCrimmon, manager of the Sun Life Insurance company of Canada, spent several days of last week in the city soliciting.

R. L. Reynolds of Calgary came into the city this morning. He has just sold out his photographic business in Calgary and will probably set up in the same line in this city.

Mrs. Hooper is expected to return from St. Paul this week.

Mr. J. B. Grant is moving from Montreal street to 726 Toronto street.

Mrs. J. K. Drinnan returned Wednesday from California where she has spent the winter.

Mrs. and Miss Cochran will return next week.

IRVINE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

An agricultural society has been organized at Irvine under the name of the Irvine Agricultural Society. The first meeting for transaction of business will be held Saturday April 11, at 1.30 p.m.

Mounted Police Notes.

"Postmaster Howard Connors, of Burdette, a parish 50 miles south of here on the Crow's Nest division, has been missing since Sat. March 21st. Friends came to Medicine Hat in search of him, as he stated that he was coming here and would return on Sunday. The R.N.W.M.P. are taking up the case."

John M. Hoaglin, a friend of the missing man, was in the city on Friday and called round to see the Mounted Police. Connors has not as yet been located.

Corp. Barschel, who has been filling Corp. Humby's place since the latter's accident a Coleridge, returned to Lethbridge on Saturday.

Corp. Humby has been out of the hospital since Wednesday last and is making excellent progress. It will be many weeks before he can resume his heavier duties.

Police Court News

A man who was trying to get board on the cheap had a narrow escape from getting it in the city hall cells. A youth in the city picked up one of John Paul's meal tickets which had been dropped on the street Wm. Anderson saw a chance here to invest his money to advantage and bought the ticket from the youngster for 25 cents. However, his speculation did not turn out well for the police got wind of the affair, and he was arrested, tried for theft and found guilty. He was allowed out on suspended sentence, on paying the costs, $5.

For drunkenness and disorderly conduct John McNeil was fined $5 and costs, or alternatively, he will undergo thirty days hard.

Jasper Desmaris was tried on Tuesday last for theft. A pair of spurs and chaps, the property of Mr. Broder, were stolen last December from Johnson's livery barn. Mr. Broder has been away at Red Deer all winter, and it was not until his return to the city recently that the articles were missed. He set to work on the case and the stolen property was traced to a rancher of the name of Jenkins out in the country. It was stated that Mr. Jenkins bought them from Brower for $9, Brower having paid $8 for them to the accused. Desmaris was found guilty and sentenced to three months hard labor at Lethbridge.

A newly arrived Englishman was talking to a local merchant the other day.

"I say," he remarked, "your river seems to get jolly low at this time of the year."

"Oh !"

"Yes, I walked right across to the other bank on the gravel near the new bridge this morning, and didn't even get my feet wet, though it was a bit sloppy."

"Gentlemen,—I have pleasure in stating that I have used $18.00 worth of Psychine, and as a result was cured of very serious throat and lung trouble.

My case was a most difficult one, and the doctors had practically said that I could not get well. I tried Psychine, and it did me so much good that I continued its use until I had taken $18.00 worth, with the result that I am now a new man physically. I have gained thirty-five pounds.

"It is with the greatest confidence that I recommend Psychine to all who are afflicted with throat or lung trouble.

Yours truly, C. A. PINKHAM.

ATHLETICS

BASEBALL.

The executive of the Gas City Baseball League held a meeting last Wednesday night. The principal work attended to was the restriction of the signed players for any club after June 1, to fifteen, in order to give the weaker teams a chance to strengthen up. Vice-pres. Elliott submitted designs for cups and shields and the executive selected a fine silver shield on an oak base, with smaller shields attached for the names of the players.

The four clubs—City, C.P.R., Fire Brigade and Bachelors applied for admission and sent the $10 fee.

The colors for the clubs are: City, grey and red; C.P.R., probably green and white; Fire Brigade, maroon and black; Bachelors, blue and white.

The league will start on Friday, May 15, the City and C.P.R. teams being the opposing teams. The games will start at 6.15 until the evenings are long enough to call the game at 6.30. Admission will be 15 cents; children under twelve, 5 cents; admission to grandstand 10 cents, ladies free.

Games will be played every Tuesday and Friday, with two games on May 24 and July 1. The season will last until August 15, and each team will have fifteen games.

The Fire Brigade held their baseball organization meeting last week. Enough money was contributed by the boys themselves to buy suits and outfits. The colors selected were maroon and black, the suits being maroon, with black lettering on the front and black stockings.

Permission was granted by Mr. Harrrave to practise across the bridge on his property.

The officers elected were:

Hon.-Pres.—T. Hutchinson.
Pres.—W. E. Hatcher.
Vice-Pres.—W. R. Hawke.
Sec.-Treas.—S. C. Taylor.
Committee—C. A. Kraces, W. Switzer, W. B. Finlay.

Get to work now, boys, and hand in your names to the baseball team you intend to play with. There's going to be good ball in the city this year, and it will provide sport for everyone. If you haven't played start now. As President Pingle, of the City club, said, there is no reason why some of our boys should not appear on the big leagues in coming years. And this is the way to start it.

Artie O'Dea is signing up a lot of good ones he says for the Brandon team, of which he is manager.

SPIT BALL SHOULD BE BARRED.

Bill Lange sat on the bench with fielder Jones and chatted over ancient and modern baseball happenings. They played together in the National league ten years ago. "You never batted against a spit-ball pitcher ?" quizzed Jones as Gaddy applied some saliva on the ball.

"No, I never hit at one," retorted Lange. "I don't think it was discovered until a year or so after I left the league."

"Well, it ought to be cut out," declared the White Sox leader with some vehemence. "It's a bad thing for baseball. There are a bunch of pitchers up in the big leagues who who would be in the bushes but for the spit ball. They have that and nothing more. There is Orth. He was about ready to quit the box when he got control of a spitter and he is hanging on. This ball knocks the dickens out of batting. If the leagues want more hitting they should pass a rule against a pitcher wetting the ball."

"If it is as hard to hit as you say I should think they would bar it," addedLange. Speaking of hitting. Lange recalled an incident which happened at Pittsburg the last year he was in baseball. His little story went to show how a good umpire can get off on his wrong foot sometimes. There were men on second and third and two out when Lange came to bat. "I was batting well that year," said Bill, just as though he ever hit poorly, "and Clark gave signal to walk me. The pitcher started to throw the balls wide. Jim McDonald was umpiring, and after one ball had passed I said to Jim: 'Would it be all right for me to step over into that other box and take a swing at the ball ?'

"'Sure,' said he; 'go ahead.' And I stepped right over the plate and hit the ball for two sacks and scored both runs. There was a big howl made about it, but McDonald ruled that it was a hit."

"It was not a hit," observed Jones "I know it wasn't," agreed Lange, "but I got away with it."

RUGBY.

Defying weather conditions a number of rugby enthusiasts gathered on the baseball grounds on Saturday last. There were a number of new players but in spite of this it was impossible to get up as good a game as last week, as some of the best players were absent. Many of Saturday's players were new to the game, but with practice very good players should be produced from the raw material and next fall the Gas City hopes to challenge the teams of Calgary and Edmonton. On Saturday the score was in favor of the Probables—something between 27 and 34 points to 3. Any old rugby players should send in their names to Mr. Frost, and turn up for next practise.

GOVERNMENT AFTER BELL SYSTEM.

Edmonton, March 25.—A definite offer will shortly be made on behalf of the Alberta government to purchase the plant of the Bell Telephone company in Alberta. It is understood that Hon. W. H. Cushing, minister of public works is now on his way east and will meet general manager Size of the Bell company in Montreal to make a definite proposal regarding the purchases.

In spite of the lack of co-operation by the Bell company the experts of the Alberta government have made a careful inventory of the Bell plant in the province and have reported on the exact conditions of the line in the province. The line has been found to be in good condition, and Mr. Cushing in making the offer, will have the exact valuation of the plant at hand.

Asked as to the visit of the Hon. W. H. Cushing to the east, Premier Rutherford said that while all that was stated might not be quite correct, the minister of public works had certainly gone east with the view of making a deal, if possible, with the Bell Telephone company for the purchase of the company's system in Alberta. "If we can obtain the plant at anything like a reasonable price, we are prepared to buy it," concluded Mr. Rutherford on the subject.

COMING

"A ROYAL SLAVE"

Opera House, April 1

"A ROYAL SLAVE" is one of the most elaborate and beautifully melodramatic productions on the road. The scenery is the finest that the studios can furnish and is painted from photographs made in Mexico. The costumes and stage accessories are very rich and the powerful and thrilling dramatic situations make the play a series of beautiful stage pictures. Though it is a melodrama of the sensational sort, there is not a shot fired during the entire play, and it is possessed of real literary and dramatic merit of a high order.

This great production represents more than half a year's work by an able corps of scenic artists and skilled mechanics, and will give our people a chance to see not only the beautiful scenic equipment, but decidedly the most original play on the stage of this country.

It is something to be able to say that at least we can herald the coming of a new play, full of new ideas, situations and startling effects. Such is true, however of the forthcoming production of "A Royal Slave," which is put on in a most artistic manner, complete in every detail. Mr. Clarence Bennett has always brought us the finest attractions and he assures us this is his best. The play will be seen at the Opera House on Wednesday April 1.

Hygiene

(Paper read by Dr. Boyd before the Y.M.C.)

The subject of hygiene may be defined as the study of prevention of disease; the art of preserving health and securing a sound mind in a sound body through wise sanitary precautions and attention to diet, regime, etc. In this way growth will be increasingly perfected, life more vigorous, decay less rapid and death more remote.

Hygiene was studied long before the art or science of medicine, the subject dating back to B.C. Cicero in his writings tried to impress the Romans that "the safety of the people was the supreme law."

Great and unnecessary waste of life, health and vigor has resulted, and still results, from a neglect of scientific principles in regard to COMMON THINGS; and yet these little everyday matters largely affect life and health. The scope and objects of hygiene are by many persons confounded with those of the practise of medicine, the feeling being that the study of all matters relating to hygiene may be relegated to professional men. Now, while it is unwise to attempt to treat disease without the advice of those who have made a special study of it it is certainly not unwise to endeavor to understand and practise the ordering of our daily lives and surroundings in such a manner as to avoid sickness and to maintain the highest condition of health.

Some idea of the importance to us of carrying correct sanitary principles into practise may be obtained by considering what has been gained by increased attention to a few of the main principles. In England after the passing of the public health act in 1875 the death rate was reduced in six years from 22.09 per 1000; to 20.63 per 1000, and this death rate has been diminishing since then notwithstanding the fact that the population is coincidentally increasing. The sanitary reforms by which this result was achieved were in general terms, the cleansing of premises, both private and public, the establishment of correct systems of plumbing and drainage, the improvement of water and food supplies, and greater care in regard to isolation and treatment of infectious diseases. It is stated that now the sickness rate and the death rate of Great Britain has been reduced one-third by the practise of sanitary laws. The history of sanitary science affords many striking instances of the removal of disease to an extent almost incredible. In India the death rate among the soldiers from 1845 to 1880, 35 years, was diminished from 63 per 1000 to 18 per 1000. Since then further reductions have been made due to proper treatment of sanitary law and administration.

Sanitary laws are made and put into operation by the governments of the several provinces of Canada. But we have, directing these law makers, associations, such as the American public health association embracing Canada, United States, Mexico and Cuba, Dominion Medical associations and provincial associations. In the province of Alberta for example we have the:—I. Provincial Board of Health; II. Provincial Health Officers; III. Provincial Bacteriologist. And in the cities and towns we have: I. Local Board of Health; II. Medical Health Officer; III. Sanitary Inspector. In the near future it is expected that a Dominion Bureau of Public Health will be formed by the government at Ottawa and also a similar department formed in each of the provinces. Other important steps along that line would be the inspection of schools by medical men at intervals. Montreal has adopted a system whereby trained nurses visit the schools and attend to poor children, at their homes when required, for simple diseases such as scales, ringworm, etc. Winnipeg is also considering the inspection of schools as an advancement in sanitary precautions.

The most important subject in connection with hygiene is the air or atmosphere, that gaseous envelope encircling the earth and in which we live, move and have our being. It is composed principally of two gases, viz., oxygen and nitrogen, with a small percentage of water vapor and carbonic acid gas. Oxygen was discovered in 1774 by Priestly and the foundation of chemistry was laid by that discovery. Nitrogen constitutes about four-fifths by bulk of the atmosphere. It occurs combined in the bodies of plants and animals and in various chemical compounds. (Can be obtained from the air). It is a colorless, inodorous, tasteless gas, slightly lighter than air, is a very inert element not uniting with other elements nor supporting combustion or animal life.

Carbonic acid gas is found in pure air in the proportion of 4 vol. in 10,000. It is the best index as to the extent of air pollution. If the carbonic acid gas reaches 6 in 10,000 it is fatal to animal life. The effect on a man going into an atmosphere of CO2 is sudden, almost like an electric shock. Notice the cases of men going into wells or mines. The quantity of this gas in the air is small but is always constant in pure air. It is given off in large quantities from active volcanes, and also involved in respiration and burning of coal gas, thus it is always found in larger quantities in the air in dwelling houses than in open air. It is soluble in water, e.g., soda water and champagne.

Expired air is 4 per cent. CO2. The amount of carbonic acid gas varies in proportion to the amount of energy expended, e.g., a man working sends off more CO2 than when asleep. .95 cu. ft. CO2 is evolved in one hour per individual when at rest and 2.00 cu. feet per hour when at work. The quantity of air which is habitually and uniformly changed in each act of breathing is about 20 cu. inches, varying with the character of work or occupation, stature, weight and age. The number of respirations in a healthy adult usually ranges from 14 to 18 per minute.

Air cannot be changed in a room more than 3 times per hour by natural ventilation. Air moving at the rate of 1½ feet per second is imperceptible. At 3 per second it is perceptible, and a greater speed gives rise to drafts which are very injurious to health.

Besides the three above mentioned constituencies of the air, there is also some moisture in the form of aquous vapor or water vapor and organic impurities that are given off with the CO2 from the lungs and skin of the body. The amount of water vapor depends on the temperature of the air and altitude.

Other gaseous impurities are coal gas, ammonia and gases from decomposing animals on the earth's surface and from sewer air.

Solid impurities in the air: Dust, minerals, coal, cotton, flax, tobacco, wool, silk and paper.

Ozone, Chemically,

e.g., is Anthrax—1st micro-organism discovered in San Domingo in 1870; 15,000 people died from eating the flesh of anthrax animals. In 1897 twelve men and sixty head of cattle died in Pennsylvania. Tanneries and rivers cause.

Bacteria in the air:—The bacteria in the air are those of a spore bearing variety and resist drying. The tubercle bacilli are relatively common in the air, especially in houses occupied by consumptive people. The dust of towns where tuberculous people live shows a greater number than elsewhere. (Note e.g. of guinea pigs in ventilator). The germs of diptheria stand fairly well also. Measles, scarlatina and smallpox are transmitted by way of the air. Of course, all diseases that are transmitted by way of the air are also transmitted by way of the clothing or by contact. Other germs are anthrax, tetanous (lock jaw) and erysipelas.

Next to pure air a good supply of pure water is the greatest necessity of life. The lowest amount that is compatible with good health is about 20 gals. per day per head but 40 gals. is really necessary.

There are three sources of water supply, viz., from I. Wells; II. Rivers; III. Upland gathering grounds.

The character of the water depends on the nature of the ground through which it percolates or over which it travels.

Under water pollution may be classed:

(1). Vegetable impurities; decayed bodies, saw dust, weeds.

(2). Animal impurities cause dysentery, vomiting and cramps.

(3). Bacterial—Cholera and typhoid are waterborn diseases. Anthrax —In 1892 twelve men and sixty head of cattle died in Pennsylvania tanneries and rivers. The first micro-organism discovered in San Domingo 1770, 15,000 died from flesh.

Purification of water, (1). Sedimentation in large reservoirs. (2). Aeration. (3). Filtration. (4). Boiling and freezing; in freezing nine-tenths of the bacteria are lost.

The care of the skin is an important factor in hygiene. The skin is not an independent tissue with functions for its own particular benefit; but is a portion of a general system, existing by its dependence upon the other parts and also contributing its full share to the maintenance of the health of the whole body. In the process of life there is a continual waste and repair of tissue going on. The various tissues are being reformed, the worn out material being disintegrated and thrown out. There are organs set apart for getting rid of this effete or worn out material in the system, the retention of which is not only injurious but fatal to life. These organs are said to perform the function of excution. Chief among these are the skin, lungs and kidneys. The skin eliminates a comparatively small quantity of salts, a little carbonic acid and a large quantity of water, in the form of perspiration. It is estimated that the maximum loss by excution is about 5 pounds in 24 hours, and the minimum loss about one and two-thirds pounds. The lungs excute about 7-18 of this and the skin about 11-18.

The skin is the great heat regulator of the body. It is extremely sensitive to surrounding conditions of atmosphere, by reason of the rich network of veins and minute blood vessels in the outer layers. The vast excuting apparatus in the form of millions of little glands over the whole skin enables the body to either expend or retain heat. Under the influence of external cold the cutaneous vessels are constricted and the blood is thus withdrawn from the colder and cooler parts to the warmer portions of the body. By this means less heat is expended by the skin and the body retains sufficient heat to preserve a healthy temperature when the cold is removed. On the other hand in a warm atmosphere the little blood vessels are dilated and more blood reaches the surface, the body perspires freely, the perspiration is evaporated rapidly, evaporation cools the surface and the temperature remains at a healthy standard.

The natural excutions if allowed to remain on the skin tend to obstruct healthy excution. They tend to obstruct the free open ends of the sebaceous and sweat glands and thus the excution is retained in the superficial vessels and returned again to the general current of blood, setting up a kind of blood poisoning.

Bathing in very cold water, 33 degrees—75 degrees, is attended with risk in the case of old persons and young children. But for those who enjoy good health it is an invigorating tonic. It is most important that reaction should be complete in order to obtain the full benefit from a cold bath. When this reaction sets in the blood returns to the skin, giving it a ruddy glow all over. This reacis assisted by rubbing with a course towel. A cold bath should not be taken after long physical or mental exertion, nor immediately after a meal, because at these times reaction is not apt to take place so readily. The warm bath (90-98 degrees) is preferable for cleaning the skin, rendering it softer and unloading the tissues. Friction with a rough towel should be practised, as in a cold bath.

CURES

Dyspepsia, Boils, Pimples, Headaches, Constipation Loss of Appetite, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, and all troubles arising from the Stomach, Liver, Bowels or Blood.

Mrs. A. Lothangue, of Ballyduff, Ont., writes: "I believe I would have been in my grave long ago had it not been for Burdock Blood Bitters. I was run down to such an extent that I could scarcely move about the house. I was subject to severe headaches, backaches and dizziness; my appetite was gone and I was unable to do my housework. After using two bottles of B.B.B. I found my health fully restored. I warmly recommend it to all tired and worn out women."

TO DAM SASKATCHEWAN.

In the senate railway committee at Ottawa the bill originating in the senate to incorporate the Saskatchewan Power company was discussed. The promoters of this bill are Saskatoon men, and the powers asked are the right to develop power from the South Saskatchewan river within 25 miles of Saskatoon. A question of Dominion or Provincial jurisdiction was raised. Alexander Smith, of Ottawa, explained for the company that all of the waters in the province of Saskatchewan are, by the autonomy bill of 1905, under federal control. He said that all the promoters wanted was incorporation and the right to dam the Saskatchewan river. For all the water powers required there would be an application to the provincial authorities.

THE SEASON'S EVENT.

(Edmonton Bulletin.)

It was said of Miss Patterson of Baltimore, the pride of Jerome Bonaparte, that she danced her way into the heart of Europe. And just as this was true of the beautiful Southern girl it was true of Clay Clement last night, that he played his way into the heart of Edmonton. He was presenting his own play, "The New Dominion," one of the most enjoyable presentations of comedy-drama Edmonton has yet known.

From the opening scene where every, gesture and accent revealed his scorn of the low-bred Bonar to the genial "Prosit!" of the Christmas toast at the close, the lovable figure of the Baron had the stage. For the German, with his quaint botanical loves and quainter English had the hidden fires of the soldier, the tenderness of the nature-lover and always the innate breeding, the chivalrous regard for woman, of a veritable gentleman.

More Terrible Than War!

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydra-headed monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race.

"It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to hack away with an irritable tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Consumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. If on the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of you would save yourself a great deal of unnecessary suffering. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the life-giving properties of the pine trees of Norway, and for Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough and all Throat and Lung affections it is a specific. Be sure when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to get it. Don't be humbugged into taking something else. Price 25 cts.

Miss Lena Johnston, Toledo, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for throat troubles after taking numerous other remedies, and I must say that nothing can take the place of it. I would not be without a bottle of it in the house."

Unionism & Socialism.

A Catholic priest in Calgary has started a lengthy controversy with a Socialist leader of that city by advising Catholic trades union men to have nothing to do with Socialism. And Father Jan had the good of Unionism in mind when he gave the warning.

It is unnecessary to discuss in detail the merits or faults of Socialism. Unionism is no more Socialism than it is Atheism or any other "ism." Socialism and Unionism aim at two distinct results. The former seeks a change in the entire social fabric without regard to any special classes or qualifications possessed by classes. Unionism is a protection of the laboring man from the greed and oppression of the capitalist. It has at heart no great radical overthrow of society, but merely maintenance of the proper relations between labor and capital. The capitalist who treats his employers properly in wages and attention to their needs has no quarrel with unions, nor they with him. If every capitalist or employer did this Unionism would be satisfied. That is its sole aim.

But Socialism has no mercy on any capitalist, however carefully he may conform to Union demands. Socialism damns the capitalist, good bad and indifferent. No consideration is given the most upright capitalist. The entire policy is "slash, kill, level." Socialism may be said to start where Unionism leaves off. Unionism secures reasonable satisfactory conditions; Socialism would overthrow all existing conditions for an untried, theoretical and plainly impracticable state where itself would wield the tyranny it now deprecates in the capitalist.

This is Socialism as it shews its head nowadays.

Unionism can gain nothing by amalgamating its forces with Socialism The gain will be entirely to Socialism. The latter has yet to show any good it has accomplished. It would therefore build up a record on the great good effected by Unionism. Socialism would wear the sheep's clothing while being a most ravenous wolf, and Unionism would show teeth where they were never intended for tearing. As a political force Unionism plus Socialism would appear formidable only on paper. Unionism depends upon and appreciates the support it receives from men who are not union men; but yoked with Socialism it would lose most of this support. Unionism can depend upon the Socialist forces backing it up, since the success of Unionism means the first step, (but that only) towards a Socialistic ideal. Therefore any definite promise to assist Socialism from Unionism is something given for nothing.

Socialism can only hope to secure conditions by education that will make itself in modified form possible or feasible. The equality idea cannot exist where there are so many useless units among the people. A man has no right to be the equal of his fellow-man as long as he wastes his time in unprofitable living. There are several decades of work for the Socialists in protecting many of the so-called laboring men against themselves, before they attempt to place them in a position where they would not know how to live. To make property common and men equal would mean the equalizing of the sot and tough with the hard working man. It would mean the lowering of the better class of workman, as you can't raise the ne'er-do-well without education and conversion.

Unionism, in its proper sense, is a movement towards elevation, with a knowledge of the comparative values of planes. It is possible to satisfy Unionism in the present system of society. Therefore Unionism can always claim a moral support that obviates undue friction and reversal. United with Socialism it would expend its energies on unattainable and undesirable ends, which would entail constant strife and dissatisfaction, and end in a windmill fight.

But Socialism depends largely on the men forming each separate body. Socialism has no definite leader who forms an unchangeable platform for the party. Each Socialist has his own views to a great extent, and as a rule, the ordinary, everyday Socialist is a much milder, more reasonable man than his leader.

The opinions expressed by those who see danger in Socialism are based upon the statements of the leaders, and, they are misleading, misdirecting Socialism.

The Awakening.

It requires no special amount of optimism to see that it will not be many months before the West, Canada, the entire financial world, will be in almost as good a position as it was a little over a year ago.

The only signs that show infallibly the position of affairs from a financial point of view are those that are uninfluenced by the little whirls of panic or lack of confidence shown in certain sections or among certain classes of men. And every institution or movement which goes below the surface has resumed its ordinary business swing. The general confidence of the public is sure to follow quickly.

The Bank of England last week dropped its discount rate to 3 per cent, the figure maintained in the ordinary course of events. How great a difference in money matters this reveals is shown by the fact that the rate was 8 per cent. four months ago. Several of the larger financial institutions in the United States which closed their doors within the past four months have re-opened and are doing business as usual, among them the well-known Knickerbocker Trust company.

As a direct result of the awakening of confidence the car reports of last week show that there were almost eight thousand more cars in use than there were four months ago. The migration to Canada is in bigger numbers than ever, and this entails the loosening up of large sums of money that have been withdrawn from circulation since the first of the year. It also increases the general optimism. In the stock market fluctuations are becoming as marked as ever, and instead of the movement being downward it is almost always upward. For instance C.P.R. sold almost ten points higher on Wall street than it did a month ago. Manipulation in the market is being commented upon, and, of course, this means higher prices. In fact the short interests have almost entirely disappeared, so that a bull movement is very difficult. It is estimated that about $10,000,000 went to Wall street during the tighter times to protect speculative investments. With a rising market this will return to the banks of Canada. The bank clearings reports of Canadian cities are approaching the amounts of a year ago and in many cases show an increase.

In this city the next couple of weeks will see a very great change if the weather opens up. Dependent as we are, to a great extent upon the C.P.R., the laying off of a number of men during the winter months was keenly felt. Now some of these men have been taken on. Two extra passenger trains started yesterday, and several more are in the wind. The track grading which will be resumed just as soon as the weather is favorable will call into service about fifteen crews. All told there will be more men in employment on the C.P.R. than ever before. Building operations are opening up with an energy that bespeaks large numbers of workmen. From present appearances the chances of industries locating here are excellent, and this is not merely a vague statement. Several good property sales are recorded.

Altogether it looks as if Medicine Hat will feel little of the past stringency by the end of the next two months.

EDITORIAL NOTES

INCORRECT STATEMENT.

(Calgary Albertan.)

A dispatch from Medicine Hat, Alberta, which appeared in last night's Herald referred to the fact that Ready's pool room had been roobed on Saturday night. It mentions that two suspects left for Calgary and one by the name of Stanley Wilson, had been arrested.

This is, to say the least, incorrect, as Mr. Wilson has proved conclusively that he had nothing to do with the robbery, and left for Medicine Hat this morning. This is one of the unfortunate circumstances where a correspondent jumps to conclusions over the wire.

This item explains itself, and shows how carefully a paper must collect its information. The News article of last week contained a similar statement about Mr. Wilson, and perhaps rashly connected his name with the robbery. However, The News was not so much to blame for the statement that Mr. Wilson had been arrested, as this information was received from an apparently authorative source, and any paper would have published the report. However, when a man who has borne a good reputation is only suspected it is unfortunate to indirectly connect his name with a lot of other robberies, and to follow it up by saying that the police have often wondered how he made his living, although the young man was living with his parents.

Spokane business men are arranging an excursion to Calgary in June, or July. Could we not extend their trip to Medicine Hat?

The Liberals have been claiming the New Brunswick election as a coalition, not a Liberal defeat. Here is what the St. John Sun, the organ of the defeated Robinson government said two days before the election:

"For Liberals as a party this campaign has a new significance. For the first time the provincial government is straight Liberal in personnel, in sympathy and affiliations, and makes its first appeal on straight party lines. Its defeat would mean Liberal disaster. It would be hailed all over Canada as a great Conservative victory, as evidence that Laurier was losing his hold, that a tidal wave was forming in the Maritime Provinces which would later sweep him from power. Mr. Hazen, who professes to be a coalition leader and yet has but one Liberal candidate on his ticket throughout the province would not be in office a week before he would throw off his disguise and begin to lay a foundation for a Conservative victory in the next federal campaign."

CLAY CLEMENT.

(Calgary Herald.)

That Clay Clement and his company will be the theatrical success of the season almost goes without saying. Those who heard him last night for the first time were immediately captivated, while to those who knew him before there appeared no diminution of his wonderful powers as an actor of the first rank. Mr. Willis has displayed commendable enterprise in bringing such a company to Calgary, thereby giving our citizens an opportunity usually enjoyed by the people of the largest cities of the continent.

The play last night was "The New Dominion," Mr. Clement's own play, written by himself. It is not flattery to refer to it as a well nigh faultless piece of stage craft.

Clay Clement had not been on the stage a minute before old friends knew that it was indeed the Hohenstauffen of old that had greeted them, and in that same minute he had added a host of admirers in those who were seeing his remarkable characterization for the first time. Surrounded by a capable company, as he was last night, it proved to be just as entertaining and just as delightful as ever, and it must be regarded as still holding its place as one of the most remarkable plays ever put on the American stage.

Miss Kathleen Kerrigan was a winsome and charming Flora May. Mr. Rutledge, as "Mr. Randolph," was a fine type of the Southern country gentleman of reconstruction days. Mr. Conklin made a very satisfactory "villain." Mr. Sanbrook, as "Napoleon," made the most of this role, and the other members of the company were all very satisfactory.

"The New Dominion" abounds in the funniest kind of humor and the most genuine of pathos. It is full of keenly interesting situations, and the audience never has a dull moment. Calgarians are indeed fortunate in having such a company at the Lyric for two weeks.

Theatre-goers who complain of lack of really good attractions have only themselves to blame if they miss seeing Clay Clement and his splendid company.

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

WASHINGTON March 21.—Congress was electrified the other day by the sudden elimination of the railroad bond feature from the Aldrich currency bill, and later by a bitter attack on the measure by Senator LaFollette, in which he charged that it was the legislation most desired by a comparatively small clique, which has succeeded in dominating the finances of the country.

The business of the nation, he declared, has gradually been centralized until it is directed by men who control New York banks, and these men number less than one hundred. The list follows:

Edwin S. Marston, James Stillman, Edward H. Harriman, Moses Taylor, C. H. Dodge, J. H. Post, H. A. C. Taylor, William Rockefeller, Henry C. Frick, T. A. Valentine, Cyrus H. McCormick, G. W. Perkins, M. Taylor Pyne, William D. Sloane, C. S. Fairchild, John W. Stirling, Henry O. Havemeyer, Stephen B. Palmer, Jacob H. Schiff, T. H. Hubbard, V. Morawitz, P. Mortie, John Jacob Astor, A. W. Brady, August Belmont, Chauncey M. Depew, Isaac N. Seligman, James C. Fargo, James J. Hill, Edwin Hawley, John R. Hegeman, J. H. Hyde, W. H. Moore, D. O. Mills, C. H. Mackay, C. W. Morse, A. B. Orr, Elbert H. Gary, H. A. Peabody, Daniel G. Reid, John D. Rockefeller, Adrian Iselin, Jr., Bratton Iles, Levi P. Morton, W. Oakman, D. H. Ryan, G. W. Young, G. F. Baker, E. H. Harriman, C. Dethard Blair, J. J. Dryden, H. Duer, G. J. Gould, D. Guggenheim, V. Le Snyder, H. H. Vreeland, John Claflin, Charles Lanier, Woodbury Langdon, J. Pierpont Morgan, A. D. Juliard, G. G. Haven, James N. Carlyle, Frederic Cromwell, H. P. Whitney, C. A. Peabody, C. H. Allen, A. W. Krech, F. D. Gravath, H. H. Rogers, James Speyer, Charles Steele, Charles M. Schwab, H. McK. Twombley, F. W. Vanderbilt, W. K. Vanderbilt, Henry Walters, John T. Waterbury, W. S. Webb, E. F. C. Young, J. Ogden Armour, Charles G. Dawes, James B. Forgan, J. J. Mitchell, Norman B. Ream, L. F. Swift, Oliver Ames, T. J. Coolidge, N. L. Higginson, Nathaniel Thayer, Thomas Dolan, P. A. B. Widener, E. H. Gary, Samuel Rea, John H. Converse, E. B. Morris, S. B. Shipley.

Last year there were four labor councils formed, two in Ontario and two in western Canada. In fact the year 1907 furnishes some interesting statistics relative to the increase of organized labor. The growth has been rapid. During the year 232 unions were formed and fifty-eight disbanded, leaving a net gain of 174 for the year. The mining industry and building trades showed the largest increase, while the railroad service and metal workers showed splendid advances. The real strength of this large body of organized union men cannot be adequately gauged just at present. One great point is the strength it gives the international organizations.

What is called the small holdings act in England appears to have a good effect in increasing the number of agriculturists in the country. A report handed down recently stated that the number of applications thus far was 6,924 for 115,556 acres. The chairman of the Land Law Reform association discussing this report said he thought we were on the threshold of obtaining reforms in respect to housing, both in town and country such as would give the poorest classes the means of getting an honest, decent and sufficient livelihood. It is evident that the advice of the economist who is ever urging the return to the land is having its realization. If the impecunious laborer either by law or any other process can be induced to take up land it will be an immense benefit to himself and the country as well.

Besides supporting a home for enfeebled workmen which has a continent wide reputation the International Typographical Union is now planning to pension old members, to which fund all printers will be expected to contribute. Under the law the payment of old age pensions does not begin until the assessment has been in force for five months. Payments for the fund will therefore begin August 1, 1908. Prior to that date secretaries will be furnished with the proper forms for use of members entitled to the pension in establishing their records and proving their eligibility to participate in the fund.

The Poetic Instinct

Effusion of a Medicine Hat Child

The other day the teacher of the Second Book in one of the Medicine Hat schools called for a composition on "Snow." Having thoroughly trained them in the outline work for composition, a plan was roughly drawn up, as follows:—1. When does it come? 2. What is it? 3. What is it like? 4. What is it for? The usual line of composition was the result, with the exception of that presented by a youngster whose poetical efforts might be encouraged.

Here is what he handed in, punctuation, indentation, spelling and all:

SNOW.

Snow always comes in winter, you know.
It most always comes in November
It ends in March. Now, don't forget.
Oh, surely you'll remember.

Snow is frozen vapor.
It feezes almost round.
It then comes falling down and down
Until it strikes the ground.

Snow is light and like a star,
It falls from some big cloud
And when you hit the kids in the ear
They sure will holler loud.

Snow is made for a blanket
It covers up the flowers.
If there was no snow the flowers would die
And sad would be the hours.

Not so bad for an eleven year old.

C. E. E. USSHER FORECASTS HEAVY PASSENGER TRAFFIC

(Winnipeg Telegram.)

C. E. E. Ussher, assistant passenger traffic manager of western lines, returned from the conference of the Western Transcontinental Passenger Association last night. At this meeting, which was held in Chicago, arrangements were made to make tourist rates between transcontinental termini and the Pacific coast. That is, the rates from termini both north and south, will be equal to corresponding points south and north on the coast. From Fort William, Winnipeg, St. Paul, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, New Orleans the tourist rates will be equal by direct routes to all points on the Pacific coast from Vancouver to Santiago. The general rate will be $60 from these points with additions for lines passing over the Shasta route between Portland and San Francisco.

From and to Chicago the rate will be $72.50. In the conference the lines that were contending for a rate no higher than last year felt that it would be not only bad policy, but actually suicidal to raise the rates. The same arrangement was continued as has been made in previous years in allowing a return journey on another line from that on which the outward journey was made. Thus passengers may go to the Pacific coast on the Chicago and northwestern or Santa Fee or Southern Pacific and return by the C.P.R. and vice versa. Indications are that an increasing number will this year either go out or return by the C.P.R.

Mr. Ussher stated that the prospects for the tourist business this year were very good, and a very large number were travelling to California. Prospects for a large influx of immigrants are also good both from the old country and the United States. The advance sailings were as good or better than they were this time last year.

No special excursion rates were arranged for conventions apart from the regular tourist rates. However, this will not affect the general public greatly as there are few big conventions being held on the western coast this year, and special rates will therefore not be in any great demand.

Recipe for Rheumatism

Directions to Prepare Simple Yet Remarkable Home Mixture.

There is so much rheumatism here in our neighborhood now that the following advice by an eminent authority, who writes for readers of a large eastern daily paper, will be highly appreciated by those who suffer:

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce compound Extract Cardol, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this dread and torturous disease who will fail to find ready relief in this simple home-made mixture, and in most cases a permanent cure is the result.

This simple remedy is said to strengthen and cleanse the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, so that they can filter and strain from the blood and system the poisons, acid and waste matter which cause not only Rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman here who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to make up this mixture, as it is certain to do much good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after while.

Our home druggists say they will either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription ready to take if our readers ask them.

THREE Trying Times in A WOMAN'S LIFE WHEN MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS are taken and strengthen nervous women for future health.

The first when she is just budding from girlhood into the full bloom of womanhood.

The second period that constitutes a special drain on the system is during pregnancy.

The third and the one most liable to leave heart and nerve troubles is during "change of life."

In every town and village in Canada there are women who will tell you of the benefit they have derived from the use of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills during the "change of life." Mrs. Alfred Hall, of Amherst, writes: "I was troubled with heart trouble and nervousness owing to a great extent due to "change of life." I have been taking your Heart and Nerve Pills for some time, and mean to continue doing so, as I can truthfully say they are the best remedy I have ever used for building up the system. You are at liberty to use this statement for the benefit of other sufferers."

Socialist Leader Addresses

Socialist Local Formed

Many of the labor men of the city gathered in Cochran's Hall on Saturday evening to hear John Leheney, of the Socialist party of Canada. Mr. Abernethy, vice-pres. of the Trades and Labor council, occupied the chair and introduced the speaker of the evening, leaving subsequent proceedings largely in the hands of the Calgary man. Mr. Leheney is an effective platform speaker, deliberate and unemotional., and throughout his speech was listened to with deep interest by all present. His one failing appeared to be a too frequent repetition of arguments, and his address would, perhaps, have carried more weight had it been cut down somewhat in length.

In his opening remarks the speaker urged upon his hearers the necessity of themselves becoming conversant with labor questions. For the leaders of a working class movement to have made a study of industrial and economic matters was not enough. Success depended upon the education of the average man, since it was the latter who set the pace at which progress could be made. And here he might say that no man present in the hall was more entitled than himself to claim to have been a factor in the fight for industrial freedom.

Mr. Leheney called upon the Trades Unionists present to form a clear conception of what the unions stood for, to recognize their limitations; they should not expect too much from the purely economic movement. It was a misfortune that the idea of altruism had come to be associated with Trades Unionism; the character of which was purely selfish—the purpose of a union was to fight for its members and, (to use a vulgarism)—to hell with the rest. This was evident from the fact that when a strike was called the first duty of the strike committee was to notify the rest of the working class to stay away from the district affected. Thus the Trades Unions emphasized rather the divisions amongst the workers, not their unity. For there was ever a struggle going on amongst the proletariat themselves—a struggle which formed the basis of the capitalist system and without which that system could not work. There was the class who had the jobs and wanted to hold them and the class of out-of-work laborers who were the weapon in the hands of the capitalist. This weapon they made use of to injure the workers, by means of competition reducing the wages of labor. That unionism was not adequate to protect the workers was illustrated recently in Colorado. Here the Western Federation of Miners, which could be considered a crystallization of the trades union movement, had by agitation secured a majority of 47,000 in favor of the eight-hour day in mines. This, through capitalist influence, had been declared unconstitutional by the courts and had ended as follows.

Proceeding the speaker claimed that his party was the only one to truly represent the workers' interests. So long as the capitalist press or even men in the ranks of unionism upheld or accepted the capitalist system, so long—though they might be honest—they were the enemies of hoped for emancipation under the present system was an economic igtheir class. The working man who noramus. Within this system the aims of the workers could never be realized, and it was a regrettable fact that most of the labor leaders of the present day ignored the most important factor in the problem.

The old shibboleth, "Life, Liberty and the Pusuit of Happiness," supposed to be guaranteed under Anglo-Saxon laws, was a mere sham under present conditions. The workers had the privilege of living—if they could get a job. And every man who had to ask another for the privilege of labor—and hence of life—was in very truth a slave.

Trades unions were essentially combinations of merchants, voicing the instincts of every other trader under capitalism. Their merchandise one of the most perishable products of capitalism, for if a sale could not be effected it was merely a matter of days before starvation would ensue. Unions were machines for the trustification of labor.

Mitchell and Gompers might resent this commercial parallel, but it was true nevertheless. Labor power was down to the level of a commodity, and the price was just sufficient to keep the laborer alive.

Capitalist policy of today the speaker characterized as an unscrupulous attempt on the part of capitalists to get in the legislative halls, there to do anything but what is honest.

The workers must take labor power from the list of commodities and place it where they could claim freedom in its disposition. They must question the right of any man to own what they produced. The trades unions had stood helpless in the recent financial panic, and would always be helpless in such cases. There was one solution, one way to emancipation, at a time when the trades unions, the churches, stood helpless. And that way was the way of Socialism. In Socialism they would find freedom, the ability to live without asking another man's permission, without sacrifice of manhood, of noble aspirations. They would be able to achieve the ideal that is in every man's heart.

They had been called dreamers, Utopians. "They tell us we're dreamers when they're not telling us we're murderers," said the speaker. In answer to this charge he contended that the Socialist movement was a natural evolution from capitalism. It was founded in economic truth.

At the conclusion of the address Mr. Leheney invited questions and discussions.

W. D. Cousley was satisfied as to the effect of capitalist production. He would like to know the remedy suggested. Mr. Leheney replied that the remedy lay in substituting collective for capitalist ownership.

"Are you willing to be slaves?" was a question put to the audience, and from one quarter of the hall the answer came, "Yes, if there's money in it." An argument ensued between the Socialist organizer and E. Hodges, who could not be convinced that he was a slave. He had listened for many hours in many cities to Socialist leaders, but had never been satisfied that it was the thing he wanted.

"Can we get Socialists who will go up to the Legislatures and represent us honestly?" asked Mr. Cousley. "I will refer you to B.C.," was the reply. "Or in Alberta take my own record on the Compensation Act."

R. Shaw would like to learn how the tables were to be turned, that instead of the working man having to ask for a job, the employer would come to him and request him to lend his services. "Don't appeal to their good feelings," was the reply. The workers should rather use their numerical voting strength. They were the people in whom were bound up the destinies of society.

Another questioner asked if under Socialism the community would divide money up equally. "Whenever Socialism undertakes to equalize men it has undertaken the impossible," was Mr. Leheney's reply. Men were not equal and never would be. Socialists were not after individual property, but capitalist property.

Mr. Cousley thought the idea was very prevalent that Socialism meant dividing up. This was not the case. Mr. Leheney contended that the C.P.R. for instance was not an example of private ownership but an evolution from it. The coming of the machine had involved the expenditure of more capital in production. Thus the day of the middle class man, the working capitalist, represented the next stage in development, until in its final stage two classes were evolved, one the class who produced, the other the class of idlers who lived upon their toil.

A. J. Matthews of the North West RealEstate company said that after much study it appeared to him that the only way out for the workers, their only hope lay in Socialism.

John Snowdon asked if Socialism in B.C. had given any relief to the working man. There today men were working under bad conditions and were compelled to work on Sunday. Mr. Leheney claimed that all the industrial legislation which had been passed of benefit to the worker, was due to Socialist influence. As an example of the height of folly to which pure unionism sometimes went in the coast province, he instanced a case where a carpenter, who was working on outside work during the day, was stopped by his union from building his own house after working hours. He was scabbing!

Mr. Leheney advised the formation of a legislative committee for Medicine Hat. He complained that a telegram sent by him from Edmonton, asking for support in his action on the compensation bill, had never been answered. His telegram to Lethbridge Trades and Labor Council had not been answered. Someone suggested that the telegrams might never have been delivered. The C.P.R. were none too anxious to help out the labor interests. The telegram, Mr. Leheney said was addressed to Ald. Baker.

Mr. Cousley was cut short in moving a vote of thanks, Mr. Leheney saying that workingmen had been passing votes of thanks to their leaders till the latter had "got their heads swelled." He asked for a collection to defray expenses, but this was ruled out by the chairman, who said that the matter of expenses had been left in the hands of the Trades and Labor Council.

At the conclusion of the meeting a local of the Socialist party of Canada was formed with D. Howrie as sec.-treas., and W. D. Cousley as organizer.

Yesterday Mr. Leheney was expected to speak in Moose Jaw.

EXODUS FROM UTAH.

(Winnipeg Free Press.)

That a large portion of the population of the State of Utah will immigrate to Alberta is the statement made by a well known real estate man in a letter sent to Mr. Nolan of High River. The writer states that the influx from that State will surpass all expectations of the Canadian immigration officials, and will be composed of the very best class of settlers. Already the Utah people have started to come into the province, a large number of good settlers having located in the Claresholm district this early in the season.

James Winn, the local immigration official stated yesterday that the coming year would be a record one in the history not only of Alberta, but the whole of western Canada in the matter of immigration.

Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them

Editor of The Times

In your last issue I note a paragraph referring to the striking of a dog by my automobile.

In reference to this I might say at the outset, that your correspondent has got things twisted as it was the dog who ran into the automobile, not the auto into the dog.

The car was proceeding in a leisurely manner down the street, when without a bark of warning the canine in question rushed out from the sidewalk, and precipitated himself under its wheels. Whether this was a deliberate attempt at suicide or a grand stand play, inspired by the presence of some young ladies on the walk, is impossible to decide.

Since the advent of the automobile in the city some eight dogs have had the same experience as this one, and they have all been without exception, dogs who have had the habit of running out and barking at vehicles. No dog has been struck that was attending strictly to business, whether it was in the middle of the road or not. Those who survived the experience have been permanently cured of the habit.

A recent decision given in a suit for damages brought by the owner of a dog killed by a motor car against the driver of the car, ruled that dogs allowed to run at large on the public highways, did so entirely at the owner's risk. Furthermore, as it has also been decided that damages resulting from runaways caused by dogs barking at horses are to be paid by the possessor of the dog, it can be reasonably argued that any driver of a vehicle who runs into, or over a dog afflicted with the habit of rushing out and barking at every conveyance that passes him, is not only doing a service to the community at large, but conferring a distinct favor on the owner of the dog.

Yours truly,

C. F. SMITH.

with horror. Gradually he collected his faculties enough to begin to think about the future. What was he to do with this man? He could not take him to Loango. He could not risk that Jocelyn or even Maurice Gordon should look upon this horror.

Joseph had crept back into the inner room, where he had no light, and could be heard breathing hard, wide awake in his hammock.

Suddenly the silence was broken by a loud cry:

"Oscard! Oscard!"

In a moment Joseph and Oscard were at the bedside.

Durnovo was sitting up, and he grabbed at Oscard's arms.

"For God's sake!" he cried. "For God's sake, man, don't let me go to sleep!"

"What do you mean?" asked Oscard. They both thought that he had gone mad. Sleep had nothing more to do with Durnovo's eyes—protruding, staring, terrible to look at.

"Don't let me go to sleep," he repeated. "Don't! Don't!"

"All right," said Oscard soothingly—"all right. We'll look after you."

He fell back on the bed. In the flickering light his eyeballs gleamed.

Then, quite suddenly, he rose to a sitting position again with a wild effort.

"I've got it! I've got it!" he cried.

"Got what?"

"The sleeping sickness!"

The two listeners knew of this strange disease. Oscard had seen a whole village devastated by it, the habitants lying about their own doors, stricken down by a deadly sleep from which they never awoke. It is known on the west coast of Africa, and the cure for it is unknown.

"Hold me!" cried Durnovo. "Don't let me sleep!"

His head fell forward even as he spoke, and the staring, wide open eyes that could not sleep made a horror of him.

Oscard took him by the arms and held him in a sitting position. Durnovo's fingers were clutching at his sleeve.

"Shake me! God! Shake me!"

Then Oscard took him in his strong arms and set him on his feet. He shook him gently at first, but as the dread somnolence crept on he shook harder, until the mutilated inhuman head rolled upon his shoulders.

"It's a sin to let that man live," exclaimed Joseph, turning away in horror.

"It's a sin to let any man die," replied Oscard, and with his great strength he shook Durnovo like a garment.

And so Victor Durnovo died. His stained soul left his body in Guy Oscard's hands, and the big Englishman shook the corpse, trying to awake it from that sleep which knows no earthly waking.

So, after all, heaven stepped in and laid its softening hand on the judgment of men. But there was a strange irony in the mode of death. It was strange that this man, who never could have closed his eyes again, should have been stricken down by the sleeping sickness.

They laid the body on the floor and covered the face, which was less grewsome in death, for the pity of the eyes had given place to peace.

The morning light, bursting suddenly through the trees as it does in equatorial Africa, showed the room set in order and Guy Oscard sleeping in his camp chair. Behind him, on the floor, lay the form of Victor Durnovo. Joseph, less iron nerved than the great big game hunter, was awake and astir with the dawn. He, too, was calmer now. He had seen death face to face too often to be appalled by it in broad daylight.

So they buried Victor Durnovo between the two giant palms at Msala, with his feet turned toward the river which he had made his, as if ready to arise when the call comes and undertake one of those marvelous journeys of his which are yet a household word on the west coast.

The cloth fluttered as they lowered him into his narrow resting place, and the face they covered had a strange mystic grin, as if he saw something that they could not perceive. Perhaps he did. Perhaps he saw the simiacine plateau, and knew that, after all, he had won the last throw, for up there, far above the table lands of central Africa, there lay beneath high heaven a charnel house. Hounded down the slope by his tormentors, he had left a memento behind him surer than their torturing knives, keener than their sharpest steel. He had left the sleeping sickness behind him.

His last journey had been worthy of his reputation. In twenty days he had covered the distance between the plateau and Msala, stumbling on alone, blinded, wounded, sore stricken, through a thousand daily valleys of death. With wonderful endurance he had paddled night and day down the sleek river without rest, with the dread microbe of the sleeping sickness slowly creeping through his veins.

He had lived in dread of this disease, as men do of a sickness which clutches them at last; but when it came he did not recognise it. He was so racked by pain that he never recognised the symptoms. He was so panic stricken, so paralysed by the nameless fear that lay behind him, that he could only think of pressing forward. In the night hours he would suddenly rise from his precarious bed under the shadow of a fallen tree and stagger on, haunted by a picture of his ruthless foes pressing through the jungle in pursuit. Thus he accomplished his wonderful journey alone, through trackless forests. Thus he fended off the sickness which gripped him the moment that he laid him down to rest.

He had left it, a grim legacy, to his tortufers, and before he reached the river all was still on the simiacine plateau.

And so we leave Victor Durnovo. His sins are buried with him, and beneath the giant palms at Msala lies Maurice Gordon's secret.

And so we leave Msala, the accursed camp. Far up the Ogowe river, on the left bank, the giant palms still stand sentry, and beneath their shade the crumbling walls of a cursed house are slowly disappearing beneath luxuriant growths of grass and brushwood.

CHAPTER XXII.

IN a dimly lighted room in the bungalow at Loango two women had been astir all night. Now, as dawn approached, one of them, worn out with watching, wearied with that blessed fatigue of anxiety which dulls the senses, had lain down on the curtain covered bed to sleep.

While Marie slept Jocelyn Gordon walked softly backward and forward with Nestorius in her arms. Nestorius was probably dying. He lay in the Englishwoman's gentle arms, a little brown [illegible] was terribly hot. All day the rain had been pending. All night it had held off until the whole earth seemed to pulsate with the desire for relief. Jocelyn kept moving so that the changing air drifted over the little bare limbs might allay the fever. She was in evening dress, having, indeed, been called from the drawing room by Marie, and the child's woolly black head was pressed against her breast as if to seek relief from the inward pressure on the awakening brain.

A missionary possessing some small knowledge of medicine had been with them until midnight, and, having done his best, had gone away leaving the child to the two women. Maurice had been in twice, clumsily, on tiptoe, to look with ill concealed awe at the child and to whisper hopes to Marie, which displayed a ludicrous, if lamentable, ignorance of what he was talking about.

"Little chap's better," he said; "I'm sure of it. See, Marie, his eyes are brighter. Devilish hot, though, isn't he? Poor little soul."

Then he stood about, awkwardly sympathetic.

"Anything I can do for you, Jocelyn?" he asked, and then departed, only too pleased to get away from the impending calamity.

Marie was not emotional. She seemed to have left all emotion behind, in some other phase of her life which was shut off from the present by a thick curtain. She was patient and calm, but she was not so clever with the child as was Jocelyn. Perhaps her greater experience acted as a handicap in her execution of those small offices to the sick which may be rendered useless at any moment. Perhaps she knew that Nestorius was wanted elsewhere. Or it may only have been that Jocelyn was able to soothe him sooner, because there is an unwritten law that those who love us best are not always the best nurses for us.

When at last sleep came to the child it was in Jocelyn's arms that he lay with that utter abandonment of pose which makes a sleeping infant and a sleeping kitten more graceful than any living thing. Marie leaned over Nestorius until her dusky cheek almost touched Jocelyn's fair English one.

"He is asleep," she whispered.

And her great dark eyes probed Jocelyn's face as if wondering whether her arms, bearing that burden, told her that this was the last sleep.

Jocelyn nodded gravely, and continued the gentle swaying motion affected by women under such circumstances.

Nestorius continued to sleep, and at last Marie, overcome by sleep herself, lay down on her bed.

Thus it came about that the dawn found Jocelyn moving softly in the room, with Nestorius asleep in her arms. A pink light came creeping through the trees, presently turning to a golden yellow, and, behold, it was light! It was a little cooler, for the sea breeze had set in. The cool air from the surface of the water was rushing inland to supply the place of the heated atmosphere rising toward the sun. With the breeze came the increased murmur of the distant surf. The dull continuous sound seemed to live amid the summits of the trees far above the low built house. It rose and fell with a long drawn rhythmic swing. Already the sounds of life were mingling with it—the low of a cow, the crowing of the cocks, the hum of the noisier daylight insect life.

Jocelyn moved to the window, and her heart suddenly leaped to her throat.

On the brown turf in front of the house were two men stretched side by side as if other hands had laid them there dead. One man was much bigger than the other. He was of exceptional stature. Jocelyn recognized them almost immediately—Guy Oscard and Joseph. They had arrived during the night and, not wishing to disturb the sleeping household, had lain them down in the front garden to sleep with a quiet conscience beneath the stars. The action was so startlingly characteristic, so suggestive of the primeval, simple man whom Oscard represented as one born out of time, that Jocelyn laughed suddenly.

While she was still at the window Marie rose and came to her side. Nestorius was still sleeping. Following the direction of her mistress' eyes, Marie saw the two men. Joseph was sleeping on his face, after the manner of Thomas Atkins all the world over. Guy Oscard lay on his side, with his head on his arm.

"That is so like Guy Oscard," said Marie, with her patient smile; "so like, so like. It could be no other man—to do a thing like that."

Jocelyn gave Nestorius back to his mother, and the two women stood for a moment looking out at the sleepers, little knowing what the advent of these two men brought with it for one of them. Then the Englishwoman went to change her dress, awaking her brother as she passed his room.

It was not long before Maurice Gordon had hospitably awakened the travelers and brought them in to change their torn and ragged clothes for something more presentable. It would appear that Nestorius was not particular. He did not mind dying on the kitchen table if need were. His mother deposited him on this table on a pillow, while she prepared the breakfast with that patient resignation which seemed to emanate from having tasted of the worst that the world has to give.

Joseph was ready the first, and he promptly repaired to the kitchen, where he set to work to help Marie with his customary energy.

It was Marie who first perceived a difference in Nestorius. His dusky little face was shining with a sudden, weakening perspiration, his limbs lay lifelessly, with a lack of their usual comfortable looking grace.

"Go!" she said quickly. "Fetch Miss Gordon!"

Jocelyn came, and Maurice and Guy Oscard; for they had been together in the dining room when Joseph delivered Marie's message.

Nestorius was wide awake now. When he saw Oscard his small face suddenly expanded into a brilliant grin.

"Bad case!" he said.

It was rather startling, until Marie spoke.

"He thinks you are Mr. Meredith," she said. "Mr. Meredith taught him to say 'bad case.'"

Nestorius looked from one to the other with gravely speculative eyes, which presently closed.

"He is dying—yes!" said the mother, looking at Jocelyn.

Oscard knew more of this matter than any of them. He went forward and leaned over the table. Marie removed a piece of salted bacon that was lying on the table near to the pillow. With the unconsciousness of long habit she swept some crumbs away with her apron. Oscard was trying to find the pulse in the tiny wrist, but there was not much to find.

"I am afraid he is very ill," he said.

At this moment the kettle boiled over and Marie had to turn away to attend to her duties.

When she came back Oscard was looking, not at Nestorius, but at her.

"We spent four days at Msala," he said in a tone that meant that he had more to tell her.

"Yes?"

"The place is in ruins, as you know."

She nodded with a peculiar little twist of the lips as if he were hurting her.

"And I am afraid I have some bad news for you, Victor Durnovo, your master"—

"Yes. Tell quickly!"

"He is dead. We buried him at Msala. He died in my arms."

At this moment Joseph gave a little gasp and turned away to the window, where he stood with his broad back toward them. Maurice Gordon, as white as death, was leaning against the table. He quite forgot himself. His lips were apart, his jaw had dropped. He was hanging breathlessly on Guy Oscard's next word.

"He died of the sleeping sickness," said Oscard. "We had come down to Msala before him—Joseph and I. I broke up the partnership, and we left him in possession of the simiacine plateau. But his men turned against him. For some reason his authority over them failed. He was obliged to make a dash for Msala, and he reached it, but the sickness was upon him."

Maurice Gordon drew a sharp sigh of relief which was almost a sob. Marie was standing with her two hands on the pillow where Nestorius lay. Her deep eyes were fixed on the Englishman's sunburnt, strongly gentle face.

"Did he send a message for me? Yes?" she said softly.

"No," answered Oscard. "He—there was no time."

Joseph at the window had turned half round.

"He was my husband," said Marie in her clear, deep tones, "the father of this little one which you call Nestorius."

Oscard bowed his head without surprise. Jocelyn was standing still as a statue, with her hand on the dying infant's cheek. No one dared to look at her.

"It is all right," said Marie bluntly. "We were married at Sierra Leone by the English chaplain. My father, who is dead, kept a hotel at Sierra Leone, and he knew the ways of the half castes. He said that the Protestant church at Sierra Leone was good enough for him, and we were married there. And then Victor brought me away from my people to this place and to Msala. Then he got tired of me; he cared no more. He said I was ugly."

She pronounced it "ogly," and seemed to think that the story finished there. At all events, she added nothing to it. But Joseph thought fit to contribute a post scriptum.

"You'd better tell 'em, mistress," he said, "that he tried to starve yer and them kids; that he wanted to leave yer at Msala to be massacred by the tribes, only Mr. Oscard sent yer down 'ere. You'd better tell 'em that."

"No," she replied, with a faint smile. "No, because he was my husband."

Guy Oscard was looking very hard at Joseph, and, catching his eye, made a little gesture commanding silence. He did not want him to say too much.

Joseph turned away again to the window and stood thus apart till the end.

"I have no doubt," said Oscard to Marie, "that he would have sent some message to you had he been able, but he was very ill—he was dying—when he reached Msala. It was wonderful that he got there at all. We did what we could for him, but it was hopeless."

Marie raised her shoulders with a pathetic gesture of resignation.

"The sleeping sickness," she said, "what will you? There is no remedy. He always said he would die of that. He feared it."

In the greater sorrow she seemed to have forgotten her child, who was staring open eyed at the ceiling. The two others, the boy and girl, were playing on the doorstep with some unconsidered trifles from the dust heap, after the manner of children all the world over.

"He was not a good man," said Marie, turning to Jocelyn, as if she alone of all present would understand. "He was not a good husband, but"—she shrugged her shoulders with one of her patient, shadowy smiles—"it makes so little difference—yes?"

Jocelyn said nothing. None of them had aught to say to her, for each in that room could lay a separate sin at Victor Durnovo's door. He was gone beyond reach of human justice to the higher court where the extenuating circumstance is fully understood. The generosity of that silence was infectious, and they told her nothing. Had they spoken she would perforce have believed them, but then, as she herself said, it would have made so little difference. So Victor Durnovo leaves these pages, and all we can do is to remember the writing on the ground. Who among us dares to withhold the extenuating circumstance? Who is ready to leave this world without that crutch to lean upon? Given a mixed blood—evil black with evil white—and what can the result be but evil? Given the climate of western Africa and the mental irritation thereof, added to a lack of education and the natural vice inherent in man, and you have—Victor Durnovo.

Nestorius—the shameless—stretched out his little bare limbs and turned half over on his side. He looked from one face to the other with the grave wonder that was his. He had never been taken much notice of. His short walk in life had been very near the ground, where trifles look very large, and from whence those larger stumbling blocks which occupy our attention are quite invisible. He had been the third—the solitary third child who usually makes his own interest in life, and is left by or leaves the rest of his family.

It was not quite clear to him why he was the center of so much attention. His mind did not run to the comprehension of the fact that he was the wearer of borrowed plumes—the sable plumes of King Death.

He had always wanted to get on to the kitchen table. There was much there that interested him and supplied him with food for thought. He had risked his life on more than one occasion in attempts to scale that height with the assistance of a saucepan that turned over and poured culinary delicacies on his toes, or perhaps a sleeping cat that got up and walked away much annoyed. And now that he was at last at this dizzy height he was sorry to find that he was too tired to crawl about and explore the vast possibilities of it. He was rather too tired to convey his forefinger to his mouth, and was forced to work out mental problems without that aid to thought.

Presently his eyes fell on Guy Oscard's face, and again his own small features expanded into a smile.

"Bad case!" he said, and, turning over, he nestled down into the pillow, and he had the answer to the many questions that puzzled his small brain.

As through an opera runs the rhythm of one dominant air, so through men's lives there rings a dominant note, soft in youth, strong in manhood and soft again in old age. But it is always there, and whether soft in the gentler periods or strong amid the noise and clang of the perihelion, it dominates always and gives its tone to the whole life.

The dominant tone of Sir John Meredith's existence had been the high, clear note of battle. He had always found something or some one to fight from the very beginning, and now, in his old age, he was fighting still. His had never been the din and crash of warfare by sword and cannon, but the subtler, deeper combat of the pen. In his active days he had got through a vast amount of work; that unchronicled work of the foreign office which never comes through the cheap newspapers to the voracious maw of a chattering public. His name was better known on the banks of the Neva, the Seine, the Bosporus, or the swift rolling Iser, than by the Thames, and grim Sir John was content to have it so.

His face had never been public property; the comic papers had never used his personality as a peg upon which to hang their ever changing political principles. But he had always been "there," as he himself vaguely put it. That is to say, he had always been at the back—one of those invisible powers of the stage by whose command the scene is shifted, the lights are lowered for the tragedy or the gay music plays up the buffoon. Sir John had no sympathy with a generation of men and women who would rather be laughed at and despised than unnoticed. He belonged to an age wherein it was held better to be a gentleman than the object of a cheap and evanescent notoriety, and he was at once the despair and the dread of newspaper interviewers, enterprising publishers and tuft hunters.

Science of Advertising

I have heard persons say they would not buy advertised goods because they did not care to help pay for the advertising. They wanted full value in the goods themselves. I have heard salesmen argue that their firms did not advertise, and for that reason could sell cheaper.

Some time ago I began an investigation which I have practically completed. I had tests made of various lines of advertised and unadvertised goods, full and complete comparisons made of their respective qualities. I priced goods and bought goods in stores which did not advertise, and in stores which did advertise, and compared prices and qualities. I equired goods to be purchased from merchants who did not advertise and from those who did advertise liberally, and made careful comparisons of the prices of the goods purchased.

Who pays for the advertising?

If it were possible I would like to answer this question in a word—but as the cost of all advertising is distributed among so many people, I must needs go into detail. Before doing that let me set your mind at rest on one point. When you buy an advertised cigar you do not pay for the advertising. When you buy a brand of advertised ham you do not pay for the advertising. When you travel on a railroad train you do not pay for the advertising of that railroad. When you buy a pair of shoes you do not pay for the advertising. This applies to every conceivable article of merchandise—evert conceivable thing which enters into the commerce of the world.

Who pays for the advertising?

ADVERTISING A SAVING.

Advertising is an economy and not an expense—not even an investment. Advertising is a saving. You don't believe that? I didn't expect you to—I didn't believe it myself until I had absolute and convincing proof that the buyer of merchandise does not pay for the advertising. In order to make this matter clear to the lay mind I must use some rather homely examples. A clothing merchant on one corner does not advertise, but he pays $100 per month rent, employs four clerks at $75 per month each—pays $50 per month for his light and $100 per month for incidental expenses, bookkeeping, etc. On this total expense of $550 per month he sells four suits of clothes per day at a gross profit of $7.50 per suit. This business for twenty-five business days a month brings in a total gross profit of $750, and after deducting his expenses of $550 leaves a margin of $200 per month as the dealer's remuneration for his personal services, and for interest on his investment. Another merchant on the next corner pays the same rent, a trifle more for clerk hire, a trifle more for light and a trifle more for general expenses, bookkeeping, etc., and finds that his total expenses for the month is $600—but this merchant spends $500 a month on advertising. Somebody pays for that. Is it the man who buys the suit of clothes? No. The customer has nothing to do with it, and pays no part of it, either directly or indirectly. These two merchants handle the same grades of clothing and sell the same goods at the same price. At the end of the month the advertising merchant finds that he has sold eight suits of clothes per day—twice as many as the merchant who does not advertise—and making the same profit on each suit, he finds he has a profit for the month of $1500. He deducts his expenses of $600, his advertising of $500, and finds he has $400 left as remuneration for his own services and interest on his investment. Who paid for the $500 worth of advertising?

Well, in this case, the owner of the building paid part of it, because he received no more rent from the advertising merchant who sold eight suits per day than he did from the merchant who did not advertise and sold only four suits per day. That accounts for $100 of the $500, which is paid by the landlord, and then the electric light company paid $45 of it because the light bill of the non-advertising merchant was $50 per month, and of the advertising merchant was $55 per month, instead of being doubled at the same time he doubled his sales. So the electric light company and the landlord paid part of it. Then the four salesmen paid the other proportion, and were glad to pay it. They had once worked for a non-advertising merchant at $75 per month and they are now working for the advertising merchant at an advance of 10 per cent. in salary. They are now getting $82.50 per month each, and each man sells two suits of clothes per day, while previously they received only $75 per month and sold an average of one suit per day. So these four salesmen pay $270 of the advertising bill, and by so doing gain an increase in salary of ten per cent.. And then the bookkeeper and the general expense paid $35 toward the advertising bill, because the bookkeeper's salary was increased 15 per cent., while the business doubled, so that an economy of $85 per month was effected. This amount went toward the advertising fund of $500 per month. Now, there is a comparison of your advertising merchant and the non-advertising merchant in the same business on the same street selling the same grade of goods and employing the same grade of help. Two men, we will say, of equal ability—one of them believing that if he advertises he must increase the price of his goods, and the other knowing that the mere fact that he does advertise will enable him to sell more goods for the same price, or possibly at a less price.

Who pays for the advertising?

When I buy a hat from an advertising merchant I am not at all interested in who pays for his advertising as I am quite sure that I do not. The hat merchant who advertises, assuming that he knows how, can sell his hat for $2.50, while the same quality of hat must bring $3 in the store of the merchant who does not advertise.

AN ECONOMIC SAVING.

Get this point then, fixed firmly in your mind. Advertising is an economic saving and not an extra expense.

In talking with a retail druggist regarding advertising he told me that his business was not one that could be profitably advertised, and that he could not afford to advertise. I suggested to this merchant that he spend one-half the net profits of his business in advertising and he adopted my suggestion, with the result that his business for 1906 was three and one-half times his business in 1905. His profits were sufficient to pay his expenses, to pay for his advertising to pay him $285 per month more than he had been accustomed to draw for himself, sufficient to enable him to increase his stock of goods, as his added sales furnished additional capital, and he is today selling every article in his store on which the price is not regulated by the manufacturers or by the Retail Druggists' Association, at from 5 to 15 per cent. less than he was selling, or could sell these same articles before he began advertising.

Who pays for his advertising? The answer is the same as in the case of the clothing merchant. The advertising bills are liquidated by the landlord, the light company, the clerks and even by the sprinkling wagon that passes before the front of his store. He paid during 1905 one dollar per month toward the sprinkling of the street in front of his store, and in 1906, although his business was three and one-half times as much, he still pays only $1 to the street sprinkler.

Who pays for his advertising?

The sprinkling cart.

Who pays for the advertising?

The man who doesn't—advertise.

A drawing by Laurel Baker entitled "A Loving Pair" appeared in last Saturday's Winnipeg Telegram.

Sunday services in the Presbyterian and Methodist churches drew large congregations, and from the evening service in St. John's many turned away before the service commenced at 7.30, the church being filled. Later chairs were requisitioned and many were seated along the aisles, while others stood in the doorways.

The services in Josephsburg Mission on Sunday April 5 will be held at St. Anne's church, Josephsburg at 11 a.m., at St. Alban's church, Gros Ventre, at 3.30 p.m., and at St. George's church service at 7.30 p.m.

SETTLERS FLOCKING IN

MORE FARMERS THAN EVER THIS YEAR

That there will be more farmers than ever coming in this year is certain. The influx has been on for more than a month but during the past ten days it has been particularly active. Every day on the streets of the city dozens of new people can be seen, most of them farmers coming to settle on their homesteads, or seeking homesteads.

Many farmers are forced to settle on their homesteads this year in order to save them, a great many having taken up the land a couple of years ago and having remained in the States until the year for proving came. A number have been visiting in the west during the winter and the climate has taken their fancy. The crop reports for this district last year is also a drawing card for settlers, the frost having done almost no injury.

Correspondents of The Times from Irvine, Seven Persons, Woolchester Bowell, and Bow Island tell of the new arrivals. At Seven Persons there is a great number settling. Last week one party, consisting of Oli E. Jenson, Oliver Moore, Mrs. Bratton and family and Nels Nelson, all Americans, went out to land at Willow Lake, south of Seven Persons. J. W. Osborne, formerly of Minnesota, has settled at Bow Island. A. F. Werts, lately despatcher at Lethbridge, has purchased the store of C. H. Bell at Bow Island. A score of newcomers have dropped into The Times office to get the local paper right at the start. Many of these mention that it is seeing copies of The Times taken by friends in the States, that has brought them here.

Plowing, discing and seeding are going on all over the district, some of the farmers having already quite a bit of crop in. The recent falls of snow have put the ground in excellent shape and everything points to a great crop. Large quantities of new implements are being bought and the new arrivals are bringing good stock and machinery. Mr. Lavey arrived last week with a carload of stock and machinery to work his homestead.

Those who went back to the States for the winter are returning in large numbers.

OLD TIMERS MEET

SHAGINAPPI CLUB—OR WORDS TO THAT EFFECT

A number of old timers came together last Saturday afternoon at 2.30 to discuss matters in connection with the Shaginappi club. Robt. McCutcheon, who occupied the chair, stated that it was now eighteen months since a meeting had been held. The president had been away and in consequence the club had been unable to meet. The object of calling the members together was to reorganize the association with the object of holding monthly meetings in the future.

Any person was eligible for membership, he went on, who had lived for twenty years in the district bounded on the east by Maple Creek, on the west by Pincher Creek, on the north by Red Deer river and on the south by the international boundary line.

Mr. McCutcheon then called for nominations for officers. He would like to see some young blood introduced. He thought the young men would take a greater interest in the welfare of the club if put in office.

Wm. Finlay was nominated for president but declined to stand, and on Mr. Shield's motion Mr. McCutcheon was elected.

The complete list of officers is as follows:

Hon. Pres., Hon. W. T. Finlay; Pres., Robt. McCutcheon; Sec.-Treas., J. H. G. Bray; committee, Wm. Finlay, John Shields, Dr. Wm. Hawke, Jas. Porter, Lawrance Hay.

The following applications for membership were accepted, bringing the total up to 83: John Earl, Harry Coooper, Wm. Bridgman, Joseph Leonard, Arthur Brier, W. Venables, Robt. Louden, J. W. Wright, Thos. Littleford, W. S. Smith, E. Hodder, Geo. Jenkins, Jas. Mitchell, F. O. Sissons.

The question of getting up some kind of entertainment to be held after Lent came up for discussion. Several different plans were suggested and eventually an excursion up the river in the "City of Medicine Hat," was decided upon. The club then adjourned until the first Monday in May.

THE TIMES QUARTERLY COMPETITION

THE TIMES NEWSBOYS HAVE A GREAT FIGHT

The competition carried on every quarter by The Times' newsboys develops the keenest rivalry. The Times makes use of the larger newsboys only as it does not consider the training too good for youngsters just into their first trousers, nor is it a good advertisement for the paper, to use boys too small and young.

In the first competition held by The Times for the last four months of last year John Littleford secured first prize with 291 papers sold on the street. The second prize went to Donald Ross with 198, and the third highest number was sold by Percy Unwin with 163. This year in a competition a month shorter in duration the four leading boys sold within 50 of what were sold in the last competition.

Donald Ross advances to first place with a total of 200 papers. Percy Unwin also moves up one, to second place, with a total of 180. John Scacoy runs him close with 177. John Littleford drops to fourth, having sold 161 papers in three months.

The first three receive bonuses on the papers sold.

Another competition starts immediately with this issue and continues to the end of June.

Does It Pay?

A young man wanting board and room, and particular about what he got, advertised last week in The Times Want column. He was suited within a day.

Remember The Times has always talked results only, knowing that was what everyone was looking for—and that only. If you want Results, advertise in The Times; if anything else catches your fancy don't use this paper.

ADVERTISING MEDICINE HAT.

Rouleau Enterprise.—On Wednesday evening in Sanderson's Hall Mr. Ansley, who is one of the pioneers of the Soo line and who is well known in this district, delivered an interesting and instructive lecture on Medicine Hat and the country adjacent it. After a few preliminary remarks on the west as a whole the speaker said that when he came to Regina 8 years ago and spoke of inspecting the country along the Soo line the people of Regina ridiculed the idea of a man trying to farm in "that dry belt," and, continued Mr. Ansley, that impression is even now current regarding Medicine Hat. The speaker said, however, that he had seen sufficient to prove that the district is fertile and that the proofs he had with him would uphold this contention, here he exhibited fine samples of potatoes, corn, wheat oats, etc., which were grown last year, which was a particularly dry season. Mr. Ansley is enthusiastic over the supply of natural gas; and claims that there is an abundance of coal which is of first class quality and easily accessible. Lime and brick can be manufactured very cheaply and the Saskatchewan river is available for water power and also provides the city with a never-failing water supply. Mr. Ansley stated that good homesteads can even now be obtained within a short distance of the city. There was a good attandance at the lecture and many stayed after the finish to consult with the speaker. The chair was ably filled by Mr. Wes. Geddes who made a few biting and laughter provoking remarks.

Suspected Burglar

James Porter, alias Stanton, alias J. Maxwell, was arrested last week by policeman Craig of Calgary, in connection with the theft at Ready's pool room. The prisoner was handed over to the Mounted Police and brought down to Medicine Hat on the 3rd inst., under escort of Constable Wragg. On Saturday morning Porter appeared before Inspector Parker, charged with the theft of $100 from Ready's pool room. Corporal Humby prosecuted. Three witnesses gave evidence; M. J. Whiddleton, teller in the Merchants Bank, Calgary; G. S. Francis, accountant in the Union bank, Calgary, and Vic Ready. The bank men identified Porter as the man who had presented the stolen cheques.

Prisoner pleaded guilty to passing the two cheques, but denied having stolen them. He found them, he said, under a wire fence opposite the C.P.R. station.

Porter was committed for trial on this charge.

In the afternoon he again appeared before the inspector, this time charged with having in his possession on the 2nd inst., certain housebreaking instruments. The only evidence taken was that of Corp. Humby. Prisoner made a long statement as to how the instruments came into his possession. A bottle containing a corrosive fluid, skeleton keys, a file and small saw, and a formidable looking knife which would be useful in the burglar's craft, were among the suspicious articles found on his person.

On this charge also Porter was committed for trial and sent up to Lethbridge the same night under escort of Constable Murchason. It is understood the prisoner requests a speedy trial, and the case will probably come up at the next district court.

"THE NEW DOMINION."

Clay Clement made a great hit last night in "The New Dominion." Without doubt he is the best actor who has ever appeared in Medicine Hat and his support was worthy of him. The most novel feature of the play, as far as Medicine Hat's experience is concerned, was the naturalness of the acting. There were no fruitless words and no unnecessary acting, a characteristic which pleased the select audience immensely. Neither Clement nor his assistants needed to bring in irrelevant matter to maintain the interest.

As a German, Clement "beats the Dutch," so to speak. One cannot imagine him acting anything else than the German who speaks English only under compulsion. He never sinified, because it did not suit his part, but the audience laughed unrestrainedly. The simple German with botanical pursuits and seemingly that only, falling in love with just as simple a girl, provides all manner of fun. The man who used to be able to speak English fairly well, but has now forgotten even his German was inimitably funny.

Kate Kerrigan as Flora May Randolph divided the honors with Effie Darling as Mrs. Josephine Dulaney, the woman who started early to train her lover. The former is scarcely the winsome innocent in size, but the latter acted a perfect part in gowns that were a treat. Lucy Blaxe's rejected sweetheart character was a fine bit of actinr although minor in importance. Among the men there was little to choose, unless J. J. Sambrook as "Uncle Poly" the hero might be selected.

The plot puts one strongly in mind of "The Professor's Love Story," which Willard has made so popular. The difference is that Willard as the professor did not recognise his allment, while Clement as Hohenstauffen recognized little else—forgot flowers and rocks for the one "specimen."

It was a fair-sized crowd, but should have atracted more than the opera house could seat.

Amalgamation of Societies

Fair Date and Races May be Together

A joint meeting of the Turf association and Agricultural society was held in the American hotel yesterday morning. Judge Mitchell, Robt. McCutcheon and Jas. McClellan representing the former; Jas. Fleming and Jas. Rae the latter.

As a result of the meeting a wire was sent to Calgary askine for an alteration in the Fair date to coincide with the date of the race meeting here.

There is much talk of amalgamation between these two organizations. Much will depend upon the result of next Monday's turf club meeting.

The date of the Medicine Hat race meet has not as yet been definitely fixed. Regina's races will take place on Sept. 1, 2, 3 and 4. The Gas City is now waiting for Swift Current and Maple Creek to fix their dates. From all appearances the 14 or 15 of September is likely to be fixed upon.

A. E. Whitm, who was in Calgary last week as our representative at the Western Canada Turf association meetings, reports a considerable revival in that city and every prospect of a busy season.

THE CITY FATHERS

The regular meeting of the council was held last evening. Present: The Mayor; Alds. McKay, Forster, Huckvale, Tweed, Baker, Penhale, Spencer, Morrow—the first full council of the year.

Superintendent of immigration, W. D. Scott, wrote that the request of the council for an immigration hall to be provided was receiving consideration.

Application of Jos. Leonard for salary of $50 per month for town bandmaster was read. Ald. Tweed understood that the applicant did not expect to receive a salary the whole year through. He thought the band should be supported, as it was a good advertisement for the city. The Mayor thought the matter should be referred to parks and market committee for report. Ald. Huckvale stated that Mr. Leonard had in conversation agreed to play two nights a week. Ald. Morrow thought something should be paid to the band itself. Ald. Penhale said there appeared to be two sides to the question; he believed the matter should be left in hands of committee. Referred to parks and market committee.

The band secretary, B. T. Watkins, wrote requesting that lights be placed in the bandstand. The band commenced practise this week, and, if lights were provided, would be ready in two or three weeks to give concerts. Referred to gas committee.

Commissioner Hall wrote asking the co-operation of the council in the making of arrangements in connection with the opening of the new traffic bridge. The bridge would probably be complete in two or three weeks. The Mayor was of the opinion that the opening would be better left over till the 24th of May. After some discussion, Alds. McKay, Spencer, Huckvale and Tweed were appointed a committee to confer with committee of the board of trade to arrange for opening of bridge.

Mr. Carnegie, who had arranged to give an entertainment in the Salvation Army barracks, complained in reference to the license fee which the chief informed him would have to be paid if a charge were made. The fee was to be 15 cents; it would not be worth while holding the show if a license were demanded. The solicitor said that the object of the theatre by-law was to tax halls used solely for entertainment purposes, for entrance to which a charge was made. The by-law might have no reference to the Salvation Army, except in the case of outsiders coming in to give an entertainment. There was a license to be paid by all companies coming in to the city. In the case of the opera house an exemption was made, as taxes were paid on the building, but if an entertainment were given in a tent for instance the tax would have to be paid. The Mayor: "That's like special legislation."

It further transpired that in the case of the opera house it was necessary to give some date on which the new license by-law should come into force; this is on account of engagements entered into before the passing of the by-law.

Mr. Carnegie stated that Medicine Hat was the first place at which he had been asked to pay a license. No action was taken in the matter.

A petition for sidewalk from owners of land abutting on Fourth avenue, between Main and Toronto streets was read, and after some discussion referred to public works committee.

A petition for a water main to be laid on Queen street was read. Ald. Baker stated that the wells in this porton of the town were insanitary and ought to be closed up. Referred to water commissioners.

The medical health officer's report called attention to the state of the wells on Queen street, near the old nuisance ground. They were dangerous to the health of the district and in the doctor's opinion it was inadvisable to leave them open. He did not think they should be allowed to stay until an epidemic broke out. He recommended that mains should be laid down Dominion and adjacent streets. A standpipe should be laid and the residents of the district allowed to use water from it. The Mayor thought this might be done and before the winter there might be a sufficient population to justify the city in laying mains right down into the district under question. Referred to board of health.

Gas committee recommended that new gas well be not less than 8 in. bore, that it be located on the nuisance ground, that the engineer be instructed to ask for tenders for the work at once. Ald. Forster preferred a location about 150 yards on the city side from Purmal's. After considerable discussion the report of the committee was adopted.

Ald. Baker brought up the matter of Medicine Hat's exhibit at the Calgary Fair. He thought that two tanks could be obtained that would carry a sufficient supply for all purposes, up to Calgary. Mr. Porter would test them and if in proper condition they would be used.

Ald. Baker further suggested that about five lamps should be placed along the new bridge, one at each span. Some ten lamps and supoiles were needed around the city. The cost would be about $12 each. Lights on the standpipe had also been suggested. Referred to gas committee with power to purchase supplies.

Finance committee recommended payment of following accounts:

Ald. Foster read report of finance committee recommending the engagement of a man to assist in treasurer's and clerk's offices and in storekeeping. Ald. Spencer moved that it was in the opinion of the council desirable that the treasurer devote his whole time to the business of the city. The treasurer had stated that at the end of six months he would devote his whole time to the city or resign. He (Ald. Spencer) thought it was a simple matter of business. No business man would want an employee of his to depute another man to do his work every other month, while he took on other duties. The Mayor said he did not know whether it was desirable that the treasurer should resign or not, but it was very desirable that he should give up his outside work. Ald. Forster thought it might be advisable to grant the treasurer more remuneration in case of his doing this. Report was adopted. Also decided to advertise for storekeeper and assistant to clerk and treasurer, salary $65 a month, application to be in by the 21st inst.

Tenders for formalin from local druggists were all alike. Referred back to license and police committee.

Tender of Revelstoke Lumber company of $576.96 was accepted. Council adjourned till Wednesday night.

Mr. Mordant Crisall returned from Calgary today having spent the week end with his uncle, Archdeacon Tims.

C. Rossiter has received a special consignment of tan calf skin and patent colt for the spring trade. See his ad.

J. McClellan was in the city last week from Moose Jaw. He says he fully realizes the value of our gas now. In Moose Jaw the electric light for his store cost him $86 for December and at that it was out a great part of the time on account of the heavy tax on it. Coal in winter costs about $30 a ton, with Galt coal at $8 a ton. During the coldest weather he burnt a ton in four days.

St. Mary's Journal.—Mr. James Beattie leaves today for Medicine Hat, where he is manager of the American hotel, after spending two months here with his mother. Jim warmly recommends the climate of Sunny Alberta. He tells wonderful stories of growing vegetables there in the winter time and even hints that the Hat is in the banana belt. Jim braves the rigorous winters of the east every winter now and needless to say his old time friends are always glad to see his genial face.

Death of G. B. Borradaile

On Saturday afternoon George B. Borradaile, J.P., one of the best known figures in the making of western history, passed away at the general hospital at the age of 49 years.

Mr. Borradaile has been associated with the west throughout the whole of his active career. He was one of the earliest members of the Northwest Mounted Police, which force he joined about 1876 or '77, when he came out from his birthplace in the Maritimeprovinces. For six years he remained in the force attaining the rank of sergeant. He served through the rebellion as a scout and during this campaign distinguished himself by a very plucky deed. After the fight at Frenchman's Butte near Fort Pitt, against Big Bear and his Indians, General Strange wanted to open communications with General Middleton of Battleford. The matter was entrusted to Borradaile, who successfully carried out the desperate mission through the Indian infested country down the river from Fort Pitt to Battleford. Mention of this exploit was made by General Strange in a book he afterwards wrote on the rebellion.

For a number of years after leaving the force, Mr. Borradaile acted as commissioner of the Crofter immigration at Yorkton. He came to Medicine Hat about eight years ago for his health's sake, and considerably improved after some months' residence here. About a year ago he was made a justice of the peace by the Alberta government. In spite of his plucky fight the disease gradually brought him down and a couple of weeks ago Mr. Borradaile was removed to the general hospital, where he died at 3 o'clock on Saturday.

He leaves a widow and three sons the eldest, Mr. Richard Borradaile, is engaged in ranching; the second, Mr. Paul Borradaile is in the Dominion bank at Winnipeg, and a boy of about eight years of age.

The funeral took place yesterday and was in accordance with the expressed wish of the deceased, of a quiet nature. Before his death Mr. Borradaile had requested that the police wagon and team be used in place of hearse and that no flowers be sent.

The service was conducted in St. Barnabas' church, of which Mr. Borradaile was an adherent, whence the procession proceeded to the cemetery.

F. W. Hess, treasurer of the Revelstoke lumber company inspected the yards yesterday. Today he is being shown the sights of the city.

F. C. Manning of the Revelstoke lumber company also is in the city today.

A meeting of the rifle association was held last evening for the election of officers and consideration of plans for the year.

The association is in flourishing condition and a number of new members have joined. It is probable that this will be the best year in its history.

The secretary elected is M. Fulton; captain, J. L. Peard.

TRAFFIC BRIDGE OPENED

A Rush to be First to Cross—Toll Paid

James Fleming is a briber. He had it all arranged with the bridge gang to be the first to cross the traffic bridge. The work had been carried along with its usual gait until Saturday. Mr. Fleming had offered a keg of liquid refreshments to be the first to cross. It was expected that the bridge would be finished for Saturday afternoon, but a keg was too much for the usual stolidity of a bridge gang, and it hustled. Mine host of the American sneaked out the back door of the hotel about 6 a.m., harnessed up his own horse and drove through lanes to the bridge, arriving there at 7 a.m. The bridge gang got to work while Fleming blanketted his horse and snuggled down in his fur coat to await the placing of the last planks. It was an hour's wait, and the morning air was raw. But the honor and the fur coat were enough for Mr. Fleming, and the work and —— coffee sufficed the gang.

Then, just as the last half dozen planks were being placed and the horse was untied ready to start, J. A. Carbert hove in sight, and seeing the condition of things he beat the planks. After lengthy dickering Mr. Fleming agreed to carry Mr. Carbert in his rig, and with boards to take the place of the last few planks, at 8 o'clock the happy couple, (this isn't a wedding announcement), reached the land on the other side of the bridge.

During the morning the keg of —— coffee was delivered.

Fred. Pingle and W. D. McCallum manager of the Sun Life, ran the first auto over, and had to serve cigars. Mr. Hargrave and Dr. Stoner also were generous. W. Turpin had the honor to run the first baby carriage over. But there was no tariff for perambulators, it being considered sufficient penalty to have to push it over.

The bridge is 900 feet from end of steel to end of steel. It is 20 feet wide with a footpath of 6 feet width. The first work was done a year ago last November, a difficulty with one of the piers having delayed the work.

The old ferry is up on the bank—its work is over, and few are sorry. It was more interesting to look at and to ride on, but less interesting to wait for and pay for.

Mounted Police Notes.

Before Inspector Parker and Dr. Ferguson on the 31st ultimo, Gottlieb Potzer was charged with assault on a young girl, Charlotte Lindiman. It appeared there had been some dispute in reference to a number of horses which had been running loose on Potzer's land. Gottlieb, his son, and daughter, set out with the object of driving the animals away; the Lindimans tried to prevent them carrying out their plan, Charlotte, a girl of 17 or 18 years of age, being armed for the purpose with a kind of club. The prisoner jumped out of his rig and horsewhipped the girl, and, (so she claimed), seizing the club, struck her a heavy blow upon the head, making a small cut. The evidence showed that the girl remained unconscious for several minutes.

The case lasted about three hours. Potzer was found guilty, the magistrate stating that only his age (he is about 60) had saved him from a heavy prison sentence. He was fined $50 and $12 costs, or alternatively, 2 months' hard labor. The fine was paid. Prosecution was conducted by Constable Ashe.

Jean Baptiste Cayan, a halfbreed, was arrested on a search warrant on the 31st. ultimo and brought up from Maple Creek by Sergeant Redmond. The warrant against the owner of the classic name was issued by Inspector Parker for theft of six quilts, a sweater, a grip, a canvas sheet, and divers other articles from Cayan's granmere. Mrs. David Boyer. Cayan appeared on Wednesday last before Mr. Milne and the Inspector, and pleaded guilty. It would have been difficult for him to do otherwise as the stolen goods were found right under his nose, and he was putting on style in the red sweater when the arrest was effected. He was sentenced to three months hard. Corp. Hunby prosecuted.

This youth escaped from the Indian school at Qu'Appelle last fall, with a boy of the name of Deegan. Both came to Medicine Hat. Deegan was taken back and has seen been sentenced to four months' imprisonment for theft at Regina.

D. Scheller was arrested for assault on the 31st inst. Tried before Mr. Milne he was found guilty and fined $5 and costs.

The Famous Pedestrian

Gentlemen:—

"I was a martyr to catarrh of the head, throat and stomach. I was so bad the doctors feared consumption. I tried many physicians and medicines. A friend suggested Psychine. I tried it and it was the only thing ever did me any good. I am now perfectly well. It is the greatest remedy the world has ever known. I do not need it for my health now but I use it as a strengthener for my walking matches. I owe much of my physical endurance to Psychine."

JAMES REYNOLDS,

ATHLETICS

OTTAWA'S HIGH-PRICED SEVEN.

Ottawa, March 26.—The high-priced hockey team which the Ottawa club got together this winter with the object of again securing possession of that big money-earner, the Stanley Cup, has disbanded, after having failed in the attempt. Whether the same seven men will be seen wearing the red, white and black next winter is a problem which is just now occupying the attention of those who like to delve into the future. They will probably not.

Ottawa this winter had about the highest-salaried organization playing the game but the result fell far short of expectations. They lost the championship primarily by going up against a sure thing at Quebec in the first match of the season and meeting the fate of so many sure-thing players who have gone before. This was evidently not sufficient of a lesson for after a couple of brilliant victories at home Ottawa again fell victims of over-confidence and went and at that stage of the game the Irishmen were not nearly as strong a team as they were earlier in the season.

On the salary list the highest man of the seven was Tom Phillips, whose contract called for the nice little lump of $1,600—not $1,800 as the coy Tom was supposed to be receiving; then came Fred. Taylor, who was brought to Ottawa for $800 and a job on Parliament hill; the four members of last year's team, Lesueur, Pulford, Alf. Smith and Westwick, played on a guarantee basis of $700; with a division of profits at the end of the season. Marty Walsh, of Kingston, got a straight $60 per week for his services and as the little centre man was a resident of the capital for about ten weeks he took home a matter of $600. It is thus seen that for players' salaries alone Ottawa paid out in the neighborhood of $6,000.

It was rumored that Kid Ford was going to play with Brandon instead of with Philadelphia, but he left Edmonton a week ago Sunday for the latter city, having received a ticket and wire to report immediately.

The Olympic lacrosse team is to be selected from all Canada, and will leave Canada about the middle of August, the trip occupying three weeks.

Abe Attell, champion featherweight of America fought Battling Nelson in Chicago last Tuesday night and brought off a draw Attell had rather the best of the fight, but Nelson had 7 pounds advantage.

Those who have known the Toronto baseball boys during the past six years will be interested to know that "Jack" Toft, the well known catcher of that club, who last year retired to run a hotel in Toronto, is going to manage the Columbus, Minn., club of the Cotton States League, this year. "Jack's" habit of getting to first by receiving the ball on his elbow made him a favorite at home, but the nightmare of the umpires. Latterly "his umps" was cutting Toft out of a lot of free bases. No ball was too swift for the clever catcher to get his arm in front of and four times out of five he drew a base. If the umpire refused, Toft would look highly indignant, then grieved, then would stop rubbing the spot, let out a stream of tobacco juice—and get in front of the next one.

The Clifford cup presented by Maurice E. Gifford, of London, Eng., for the champion lacrosse team of British Columbia has been opened to the Western provinces.

George Hackenschmidt quit in his wrestling match with Gotch. Gotch wore the heart out of him after two hours' gruelling work.

The Southern Alberta Baseball League is likely to be a "go," says the Lethbridge Herald. A convention to organize the league will be held in Macleod on the 15.

TAYLOR-JARDINE.

(Maple Creek Signal.)

A pretty house wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. William Graham Jardine, at 6.30 on the evening of Tuesday, the 31st ultimo, when their daughter, Miss Sarah one of Maple Creek's most charming young ladies, was united in the bonds of marriage to Mr. John Martin Taylor, of Medicine Hat. The marriage service was conducted by the Rev. R. Macknight, B.A.

The bride was given away by her father, and looked charming in a white silk gown, covered with white net, with veil and bride's blossoms on her hair, and carrying a beautiful bouquet of white roses, lily of the valley and ferns. Her sister Miss Bessie, was bridesmaid, gowned in white silk and carrying a bouquet of white roses and ferns. A little niece, Sophia Jardine was maid of honor, dressed in cream nun's veiling trimmed with cream satin sash and collar. Mr. William Hyslop Martin was bride'sroom's man.

After the marriage ceremony, between sixty and seventy guests including parties from Antelope, Big Stick, Crane Lake, Medicine Hat and other places, sat down to a delicious wedding supper which reflected the highest credit upon the hostess.

Mr. and Mrs. Taylor took the train about 11 o'clock for their home in Medicine Hat, amidst a deluge of rice. The company afterwards, having been much reinforced by other friends from the town and vicinity betook themselves to Stern's hall, where dancing was in order for a few hours.

SIDEWALK DEBENTURES SOLD AT 91--ALDERMAN MORROW ON SEVERAL COMMITTEES--SEVERAL SCHEMES FOR OUR BOOTH AT THE DOMINION FAIR

A special meeting of the council was held last Tuesday evening to consider an offer for debentures. There were present the Mayor; Alds. Baker, McKay, Spencer, Tweed, Huckvale, Penhale, Morrow, the only absentee being Ald. Forster, who sent a leeter expressing regret at his inability to attend and stating his views on the debenture question.

Briefly he was opposed to selling the bonds at 91, and suggested that the debentures should be lumped and sold through the bankers on the Old Country market. The objection to doing this in the past, he pointed out was that the amounts were small, but by bulking the whole this trouble would be overcome. The Mayor was opposed to Ald. Forster's suggestion. He thought the city had got a reasonable offer and it was their duty to accept. Otherwise they would not have money to pay their creditors. The engine and pumps would be here before long and it was absolutely necessary to obtain money. It was not straight business to keep the banks waiting when an opportunity to obtain money had occurred. The city had other debts to pay off and he did not think there was any choice in the matter; the city must accept. Ald. Huckvale thought the city might have to wait six or seven months if this offer were turned down. If the offer were not accepted, someone else would have to be obtained to sign the cheques. Ald. Spencer was of the same opinion as the Mayor. It appeared to him absolutely necessary for the city to get the money. Ald. Morrow took the same view. On Ald. Spencer's motion, seconded by Ald. Huckvale, the offer of Mackenzie & Co., for $40,000 sidewalk debentures at 91, with accrued interest, was accepted.

The Mayor read a telegram he had received apropos the postponment of the visit of the Municipal convention to Medicine Hat till next year. The secretary had assumed that the reply of the council to his letter sent some weeks ago, expressed agreement with the idea of postponment. The secretary had been asked to come up to this city, but a reply to his telegram should be sent immediately. According to the letter the reason for desiring an alteration in the arrangements was that the Quebec tri-centennial was being held this year. The Mayor stated that he had had a talk with Commissioner Hall who thought it advisable to agree to the proposal to postpone the convention if a pledge were given to hold the convention here next year. This the council decided to do.

The Mayor thought a re-arrangement of committees should be made, on account of the addition to the council of the new member, Ald. Morrow. He thought Ald. Morrow should be on the public works committee. In the course of discussion Ald. Huckvale asked whether "fire, water and light" was not a m'snomer for the committee so described. Water was left in the hands of the water commissioners. Ald. Penhale: "That's what it was called during the first two or three years before there was any water, I suppose." (Laughter). The Mayor appointed Ald. Morrow on the following committees: Public works, water, gas, parks and markets. Ald. Penhale: "He is a minister without-what?" Ald. Baker: "Without portfolio." (Laughter).

Ald. Penhale thought the plans should be drawn up and tenders called for in connection with the new gas well. Ald. Baker said the committee were anxious to go ahead as soon as money could be obtained.

Medicine Hat's exhibit at the forthcoming Dominion exhibition was next discussed, the Mayor stating that space for this city had been secured by Mr. Hall. Other places were spending from $200 to $2000 on their exhibits and it behooved the Gas City to make a good showing.

A number of suggestions were made for utilizing our special product at the Fair. Ald. Baker said that Mr. McArthur had taken two footballs down to the coast with him, both charged with natural gas. The gas was burnt and kept alight in one case for an hour. Ald. Huckvale thought it would be a good idea to send tanks charged with gas up to Calgary, and to use gas entirely for illuminating purposes. Some discussion followed on ways and means of making the Gas City's the most brilliant (sic) of all exhibits. Commissioner Hall, the Mayor said, had talked the matter over with Mr. Winters, of the C.P.R. Ald. Baker thought it might be possible to get some castings made in the city. Among other schemes for making Medicine Hat famous and Calgary jealous were Ald. Tweed's that five or six footballs charged with natural gas should be sent up and the wondering sight-seers informed that gas was what we used down here for such purposes instead of air; and the Mayor's, that we should fix up a kind of natural gas peanut heater.

The engineer's report on the sewer question and a letter from the provincial sanitary engineer were then read.

The public works committee's report was as follows:

The Mayor and City Council,

Gentlemen:—Your public works committee beg to report re sewers as follows:

Work done in 1907:—Pipe laid in South River street from Sixth avenue to South Railway street, 1689 ft., of this 198 ft. crosses avenues, 4 manholes, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in Main street from Fourth avenue to South Railway street, 566 ft., of this 66 ft. crosses street, 2 manholes, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in Fourth avenue from Main street, 170 feet, of this 33 ft. crosses street, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in Toronto street from Sixth avenue to South Railway street, 1686 ft., of this 198 ft. crosses avenues, 4 manholes, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in Montreal street from South Railway street, westerly, 444 ft., of this 53 feet crosses street, 2 manholes, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in South Railway street to Toronto street, 630 ft., of this 132 ft. crosses street, 12 in. pipe; pipe laid in South Railway street between Toronto street and Montreal street, 310 ft., of this 33 ft. crosses street, 10 in. pipe; pipe laid in Main street from South Railway to North Railway streets, 262 ft., one manhole, 16 in. pipe; pipe laid in from Main street to River street, 580 ft., one manhole, 6 in. pipe. 27 Manholes at 883.80 ea.	$2,262.60
28 Lampholes at $10.94 ea.	806.32
6 Flush Tanks at $166.10 each	996.60
	$3,565.52

Septic tank 8 feet deep, 40 feet wide and 120 feet long, for a population of 4,000. Using 60 gals. of sewage per capita per (24) hours. Estimated cost $5,000, filter beds in connection with tank, estimated cost $7,000, purification plant complete will cost in the neighborhood of $12,000, which with a pumping system of $7,200 makes a total of $19,200.

We recommend that the cost of sewers be borne by the property owners with the exception of the cost of purification plant, street intersections and non-assessable property which we recommend to be borne by the city at large.

The rate per foot frontage will be equal to $1.86 per foot.

A SCHEME OF SEWERAGE FOR THE CITY OF MEDICINE HAT, ALBERTA.

To His Worship the Mayor and Aldermen,

Gentlemen:—In conformity with your instructions I have gone very carefully into consideration of all matters necessary to the contsruction of a thorough system of sewers for the city. On March 7, 1905, a plan for a system of sewers was prepared by Mr. John Galt, C.E., of Toronto. In his plan he provided for taking care of some of the storm water from a certain portion of the city, and pipes were ordered in 1906 to carry out his scheme. In the early part of the year 1907 an act was passed by the Alberta government compelling all cities and towns installing a system of sewage to put the sewage through a certain degree of purification before allowing the effluent to flow into any river or stream. This necessitated the design of a separate system, as the carrying, purifying and pumping of house sewage and storm water combined would require larger pipes, septic tanks and pumps than the house sewage alone would require. Consequently I have designed a system to take care of the house sewage only and which is known as a separate system of sewer.

I have prepared a plan on a scale of 200 feet to the inch showing the proposed system suitable not only for the present population but for the district through which the sewer passes when this district is thickly populated and also of sufficient size to admit of extension as the city expands. The plan also shows the surface elevation of all street intersections and approximately the grades and elevations of tke sewer inverts at all manholes as well as the location of manholes, lampholes, flushtanks, ejectors, stations, power house and air piping. The ventilation of the sewers will be through the manholes and lampholes which are placed so as not to be more than 300 feet apart. The automatic flushing of the sewers every 24 hours will also be a great help to the ventilation of the system.

For figuring the sizes of pipes required after deciding on grades which would guarantee self-cleaning velocities the work was proceeded with as follows; for every 100 feet of sewer allowance was made for two 50 ft. lots on each side of the street, this makes four fifty foot lots for every 100 feet. Eight people were figured for on every 50 feet lot making 32 persons for every 100 feet. For every person 80 gallons per day was allowed which makes 256 gallons per day per hundred feet. As has been found from gaugings made it was estimated that half of this amount would flow off in 5 hours making 0.68 c. ft. flow per 100 feet of sewer per minute. This amount, it was figured the pipe would carry when flowing half full which means that the pipes are of sufficient size to carry 1.36 c. ft. of sewage per 100 ft. per minute. This should allow the pipes to be of sufficient size to take care of any ground leakage and also to allow a good factor of safety for an increase in population above what has been estimated.

Upon examination it was found that for a portion of the city the sewage would have to be pumped all the time and for a portion west of Fourth avenue pumping would not be necessary. If the disposal of the drainage from the last mentioned part of the city were considered by itself it would mean that a septic tank would have to be constructed for this section. This would mean two tanks for the city, one for this part and one for the first two portions of the city first mentioned, this would not only mean an increase cost for construction but also for maintenance. Pumping has to be resorted to for a part of the sewage and as practically the same labor will look after the pumping of all the sewage, the increased cost of pumping all over that of pumping part being practically cost of fuel, which is very small and I have deemed it advisable to advise the building of one septic tank and any other appurtenances required by the act of the health board and the pumping of all the sewage.

Another objection to the installing of a separate tank for that portion of the city lying west of Fourth avenue even if it had been found advisable to do so, is the fact that the effluent would have to be discharged into the river above the C.P.R. pumping station.

The means of purification adopted will have to be such as will be approved of by the Provincial Board of Health, and entirely consists of a septic tank and filter beds. I would recommend the building of a tank and filter bed at present to take care of the sewage from a population of at least 4000 people to be located in the Johnson Park. This would mean we would have a tank of sufficient size for the city until it reaches a population of 8060, as statistics show that rarely in any city or town does the population using the sewers exceed 50 per cent. of the total population. From present indications figuring as above we would be looking four or five years ahead.

A septic tank is simply a tank for the reception of sewage, in which anaerobes are cultivated and spontaneously increase in size until the point of equilibrium with the solids is reached thus preventing the accumulation of solids by liquefying of the solids. The inlet and outlet should be below the surface. A cover is only necessary to keep out the frost and to prevent the wind from disturbing the surface of the sewage. The tank should be of sufficient size to hold at least 24 hours supply, should not be less than 5 and not more than 10 feet in depth and should be of such a width that the flow through the tank will not exceed one inch per minute. Further purification is obtained from passing the effluent of the septic tank through filter beds where it is exposed to the air and light which relieves it of putrefactive gases and promotes Aerobic conditions. In passing through the coke of the filter bed it is subjected to the action of aerobic bacterie which completes the purification.

The filter beds should be of sufficient size to take care of 2,500,000 Imperial gallons of the septic tank effluent per 24 hours.

A septic tank of sufficient size for a population of 4000 would have to be of about the following dimensions; length 100 feet, width 48 feet, depth 8 feet. The filters would have to have an area of about 6970 square feet.

On the plans I have shown the size of the different mains, the approximate grades which will ensure self-cleaning velocities, approximate elevations of the inverts at each manhole, manholes and lampholes for ventilation and flush tanks for a proper cleaning and air ventilation of the system. For pumping I have figured on the shoe ejector system. It is a sytem whereby the sewage can be raised and conveyed automatically from any number of points to any given point the power employed being compressed air.

The system is employed in the following cities and towns of importance as well as in many cities all over the world: Winona, Chicago, Charleston, Portsmouth, Lynn, Jamestown, U.S.A., and Portage La Prairie, Can. It has been successfully employed in the following cases:

(1st.) In low lying places where there was not sufficient fall to enable the sewers to be laid at proper grade or at the desired depth.

(2nd.) In places where there was little or no indication to the surface of the ground and the consequent cost of sewers of the necessary size and depth for a simple gravitation system would have been excessive or prohibitory.

(3rd.) For raising sewage of low or outlying districts in order to get it into the general gravitation system.

(4th.) For the raising and distribution of effluent and sludge at sewage purification works, I would advise the placing of the sewage purification plant, the ejectors and compressed air generating station as shown on plan, viz: The purification plant in the Johnson Park. A pair of ejectors at the purification plant and the other injectors in pairs as they were required where shown on the plan. The power generators and air compressors would be placed in a building near the purification plant. If the Shone system is adopted the ejectors shall be placed in chambers constructed for them beneath the surface and shall be connected with the central air compressing station by a system of air pressure pipes and another system of iron sewage discharge pipes shall be laid from them to the purification plant. The sewer of each district of the city will connect directly with their respective ejectors and as air ejector is filled compressed air will automatically be admitted which will at once empty the ejector by forcing the sewage through the discharge pipe to the purification plant. As the city grows other portions from which the sewage will not flow by gravity to the purification plant can be served as already described by the Shone system. The object of placing two ejectors at each station is to allow the uninterrupted operation of the system should it be found necessary at any time to clean or repair one of the ejectors.

There are within the city limits at present about twenty miles of streets In the proposed system 14 miles of sewer are shown on the plan but the sewers shown are of sufficient size and the whole system is so designed that extensions can be made as the city expands, where the topography of the country will permit, without in the least affecting the proposed system. That portion of the system which is estimated for at the present time is described on appended schedule attached you will find an estimate of the cost of constructing sewers as shown on the plan. Although in the estimate as to the cost of the system I have figured on the Shone system for the drainage for the lowlying parts of the city yet I am not yet in a position to advise the adoption of the scheme.

A system of conveying the sewage from the low-lying portions of the city to the purification plant could be installed by running an 18-inch trunk sewer along Washington avenue to the purification plant on a 2 per cent. grade. This scheme would necessitate putting in a well at the purification plant capable of holding 6 hours supply. If this scheme were adopted the pumping could be done by Turbine pumps operated by gas engines. The average depth of the trunk sewer would be 17 feet, and the greatest depth would be about 23 feet. I have figured that the cost of this scheme would be about the same as the Shone system, so that whatever scheme is adopted the cost will be about the same. The decision of this matter will not affect any work at the present time.

Attached you will find an estimate of the cost of the complete system as outlined as a well as the cost of the portion necessary to be done at the present time, as outlined by the chairman of the public works department.

Yours respectfully,
W. P. MORRISON,
City Engineer.

Statement showing total cost of sewer system for a population of 15,200, using 75 gals per capita per 24 hours and consisting of 74,770 feet of sewers:

Cost of sewer pipe laid	$99,820.00
Manholes, lampholes and flushtanks	21,541.84
Pumping system complete	66,226.80
Septic tank and filter beds	51,629.00
Total cost of complete system	$239,217.64

Statement showing total cost of portion of system proposed to be installed during 1908:

Cost of sewer mains	$21,172.40
Manholes, lampholes and flushtanks	3,565.52
Pumping system	7,158.57
Purification plant	12,000.00
	$43,896.49
Work done during 1907 to be provided for	22,258.25
	$66,154.74
Less value of pipe on hand	3,050.00
Amount to be raised by debentures to cover work done and work proposed for 1908	$63,104.74

Ald. Baker thought if everything went well with the debentures the best plan would be to go ahead, starting with the filter-beds. In answer to a question the engineer stated that at present there were 35 sewer connections. It was decided to leave the matter over till the report of the public works committee was in.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

The liver is the largest gland in the body; its office is to take from the blood the properties which form bile. When the liver is torpid and inflamed it cannot furnish bile to the bowels causing them to become bound and costive. The symptons are a feeling of fulness or weight in the right side, and shooting pains in the same region, pains between the shoulders, yellowness of the skin and eyes, bowels irregular, coated tongue, bad taste in the morning, etc

"I feel it my duty to testify to the benefit I have received from the use of Psychine. While travelling in New Ontario conducting special meetings I contracted a very bad cold, which gradually developed into Bronchitis of the worst form. I was advised to try Psychine, which I did, and after using but a few bottles I was completely restored to health. I recommend this wonderful remedy to sufferers from Bronchitis and other troubles."

Later: "I wish to add that my voice, since using Psychine, is stronger and has much more carrying power than it had before I had bronchitis, and the vocal chords do not tire with speaking."

Couclusive Proof.

No more scathing and conclusive arraignment of the methods of a government has been afforded the world than that presented by the commission appointed by that government to examine into some of the departments. It is a decision that disqualifies all defence on the part of the departments criticised and reveals to Canada the inside rankness of the workings of the government.

It must be remembered that this commission was government appointed, and the report was presented only on examination of all the details.

The chief criticism deals with the fisheries and marine department, concerning which an account for $47,000 held up parliament for three days. At that time the Conservative party in the House were forced to put up a stiff fight, under all sorts of accusations. The finding of the commission shows how necessary is some such stand.

The report says that patronage seems to run more or less through each department of the public service, to the extent of employing men who have failed to qualify by examinations, as "laborers." Very many of the clerks are utterly unfit. Candidates for civil service have been "fluked" through by political influence. The politics of the party is of greater importance in making appointments than the public interests.

Of the post office department the charge of running things too cheaply is almost the only serious one presented.

But concerning the department of marine and fisheries the commission finds it difficult to select sufficiently severe terms. It says: "There is not only a lack of efficient organization and method in the department, there would also seem to be lack of conscience. In connection with the enormous expenditures which are deemed necessary the word discount never appears. If no one gets any benefit from trade except the trader, then it must be clear that in these great purchases made for the government without discount, its officers must be assisting the trader to get better prices from the government than he can get anywhere else." The department has been constantly called to book by the auditor-general on the question of prices, but the only results are unsatisfactory explanations ending with whatever certificate may be deemed necessary and the balking of investigation. A list of prices paid for work in Quebec was found to be 50 per cent. higher than those charged in Sorel. The department is without organization or discipline, and zeal for the public interest and regard for economy are conspicuous by their absence. Money is wasted in small things as in great things and no one seems to have any notion of anything else. There is no punishment in the departments for blundering and no reward for merit.

The militia department is also treated without gloves. The militia council has too much power, the staff is too large, and some members are too well paid. An inspector-general at $6,000 a year does nothing but make reports. The business management is bad.

In the public works department enterprises are undertaken because they are demanded by influential bodies, not because they are needed.

Several specific instances of overpayment in the marine and fisheries department are given. Tallow that was worth 9cents in Ottawa was bought for 15 cents. $24 a barrel was paid for pork worth $17.50. Flour cost $6.95 a barrel, that was worth $5.20 in the ordinary way. A clerk who had stolen thousands of dollars from the department was simply transferred to another appointment.

And so the instances accumulate.

Hon. G. E. Foster said the country would not be satisfied until a Royal commission had gone into the matter more fully. And Mr. Foster was right. If the inspection of the civil service commission found out so much, what would be brought to light by a Royal commission with all the authority of a court?

EDITORIAL NOTES

The idea of quoting from Collier's Weekly concerning Canadian politics!

As a last spasm of Liberalism Premier Robinson of New Brunswick recommended a number of appointments to the Lieut. Governor. The latter, however, refused to sanction the appointment of men just before the old government was going to retire.

There has been altogether too much evidence of a certain Alderman carrying too much weight in the committee meetings and council meetings. A few of the others were willing to be lead around by subtle remarks, "pooh-poohs," hints at experience, etc. It is a good sign, however, that the nose-leading is about past. The aldermen have discovered that experience is one of the least important of the qualifications of an alderman. The strings are gradually breaking.

A good step to take would be to show that personal favorites do not necessarily possess all the qualifications for civic positions. One alderman should not be able to push into position friends of his own. Personal friendship should not count in civic appointments, or we will have a repetition of the Ottawa scandals. The ratepayers will rise in their might and enforce competence as a qualification, instead of favoritism. A laugh, an insinuation, large talk on patriotism should not be the tools of an alderman to fill positions. Nor should the same talk and assumed superiority be sufficient to burke investigation into misdeeds by civic employees.

Liberal papers are paving the way for Sifton's re-entry into the Cabinet should the Liberals win the next elections. They talk of his cleverness, make much of his knowledge of affairs, etc. No one houbts Sifton's ability. A cursory view of the financial position he is in now compared with his ducats before he entered the cabinet will prove his cleverness. But Canada requires honesty before cleverness. The professional burglar, the pickpocket, the swindle promoter, the forger, and Sifton, are all remarkably able people.

How would you like to be Sifton's brother-in-law?

The Railway Committee of the House of Commons has passed a good bill, although rather late in the season. It demands that charters granted for railway constructions less than 250 miles in length must be followed by the building of ten per cent. of the line within two years, and by five per cent. if the railway is over 250 miles in length. This scrambling of railway charters without any intentions of building, of which we have samples in this locality, holds back legitimate railway construction. The promoters of these railways in the air never intend to build, but attempt to keep out other railways until their charters have to be purchased. The government should be shown the ability of the promoters to finance the scheme before it grants a charter. As it is now, a couple of local men without enough money to build a sidetrack can secure a charter for hundreds of miles of railway.

The citizens of Medicine Hat would like to know the plans of the school board as to the teaching of languages after the beginning of the new school year.

Rowley, the ex-manager of the defunct Elgin Loan company, of St. Thomas, Ontario, has been released after serving four years and a half of his twelve year sentence for embezzling $187,000 and swindling poor depositors out of all the money they ever owned. The thief in high position is called an embezzler and either escapes the law or has his term cut down, as in Rowley's case. Two men were convicted of highway robbery of a few cents in Woodstock, and were sentenced to five years. They'll serve their full term—longer than the bank-manager robber, whose crime was all the greater because he was in receipt of a good salary, was supposed to have some self-respect, and was stealing from the people every day, while holding out the friendly hand. A modified Socialism is necessary to stop this injustice.

Laurier has announced the appointment of the judge of the Exchequer court to examine into the report of the civil service commission. Then some other official will examine his report and so on, each pulling out afew thousands of dollars, and nothing serious being done with the guilty departments.

It's a good move the cities of the west are taking—bringing sellers of impure milk before the magistrate. But as usual they get off on a technicality.

Mr. Simmons, the Liberal candidate for this riding commenced his campaign at Stirling the other day, in a manner that is not. The Times hopes, a criterion of the methods he will continue to pursue. His remarks regarding Mr. Magrath were so uncalled for and undeserved that he will lose the sympathy of those members of his own party who have known the Conservative candidate for a longer time than Simmons has been in the west. Simmons held up two tracts, "Our Western Lands," and "A Session of Disclosures." He said these had been sent out by Mr. Magrath, "which showed the nature of the campaign to be one of scandal monging." If such were the issues that Mr. Magrath intended to put before the people in his personal campaign, he would meet him on his own grounds. Simmons knows well that these two pamphlets are regular campaign literature, that every word in them is absolutely true, and furthermore, that Magrath had nothing whatever to do with sending them out. The coming election is bound to be a brain-stormer on Simmons and the Liberals all over Canada as the revelation of graft and robbery will be the thing that will put the Conservatives in power. Naturally, Mr. Simmons prefers to call an exposure of his government's deeds scandal monging. It was remarked at Stirling that the Liberal candidate did not deny the truth of the pamphlets. If Mr. Magrath's work was bad the candidate who coolly acknowledges he will "meet him on his own grounds" has few qualms of conscience in undertaking such work.

As a matter of fact The Times can inform Mr. Simmons that Mr. Magrath has done nothing in the way of a campaign as yet. And Mr. Simmons will soon discover that his only hopes of beating out a man whose character and conduct will bear such close examination as Mr. Magrath's, is by keeping himself strictly away from the casting of aspersions. Mr. Magrath has stood twenty years' acquaintance with this constituency and many of its strongest men; no one knows that Mr. Simmons' character could endure such critical knowledge.

You can't say slighting things about Mr. Magrath, and things you know to be untrue, Mr. Simmons, to men who know the Conservative candidate much better than you do, and better than they do you.

It's an early start in the campaign for aspersions.

The shipment of tanks of gas to Calgary, for the Medicine Hat exhibit, as suggested by The Times, has caught on to the fancy of the citizens. The plan is so simple and so effective that it is an easy solution. Ald. Tweed's idea of footballs filled with gas adds a novelty that would make a catchy addition. If the footballs could be refilled from the tanks they could easily be kept going.

Ald. Forster's idea, and that of The Times as expressed a couple of weeks ago, to sell the bonds in England is the one that should be followed under ordinary conditions. This plan could have been adopted some months ago in order to give us sufficient time, but, as pointed out by the Mayor and Ald. Tweed, the need of the money is too immediate to admit of this delay. At the same time 91 is altogether too low a figure when Regina got 94.

Oh! Engineer Morrison! How dare you say in your report that this city will not be larger than 8000 in four or five years? We have a wager that it will be more like twice that size.

With Edged Tools

He was so little known out of his own select circle that the porters in Euston station asked each other in vain who the old swell waiting for the 4 o'clock "up" from Liverpool could be. The 4 o'clock was, moreover, not the first express which Sir John had met that day. His stately carriage and pair had pushed its way into the crowd of smaller and humbler vehicular fry earlier in the afternoon, and on that occasion also the old gentleman had indulged in a grave promenade upon the platform.

He was walking up and down there now, with his hand in the small of his back, where of late he had been aware of a constant aching pain. He was very upright, however, and supremely unconscious of the curiosity aroused by his presence in the mind of the station "canaille." His lips were rather more troublesome than usual, and his keen eyes twinkled with a suppressed excitement.

In former days there had been no one equal to him in certain diplomatic crises, where it was a question of browbeating suavely the uppish representative of some foreign state. No man could then rival him in the insolently aristocratic school of diplomacy which England has made her own. But in his most dangerous crisis he had never been restless, apprehensive, pessimistic, as he was at this moment. And, after all, it was a very simple matter that had brought him here. It was merely the question of meeting a man as if by accident, and then afterward making that man do certain things required of him. Moreover, the man was only Guy Oscard, learned, if you will, in forest craft, but a mere child in the hands of so old a diplomatist as Sir John Meredith.

That which made Sir John so uneasy was the abiding knowledge that Jack's wedding day would dawn in twelve hours. The margin was much too small, though, however, no fault of Sir John's. The west African steamer had been delayed, unaccountably, two days. A third day lost in the Atlantic would have overthrown Sir John Meredith's plan. He had often cut things fine before, but somehow now—not that he was getting old, oh, no!—but somehow the suspense was too much for his nerves. He soon became irritated and distrustful. Besides, the pain in his back wearied him and interfered with the clear sequence of his thoughts.

The owners of the west African steamer had telegraphed that the passengers had left for London in two separate trains. Guy Oscard was not in the first—there was no positive reason why he should be in the second. More depended upon his being in this second express than Sir John cared to contemplate.

The course of his peregrinations brought him into the vicinity of an inspector whose attitude betokened respect while his presence raised hope.

"Is there any reason to suppose that your train is coming?" he inquired of the official.

"Signaled now, my lord," replied the inspector, touching his cap.

"And what does that mean?" uncompromisingly ignorant of technical parlance.

"It will be in in one minute, my lord."

Sir John's hand was over his lips as he walked back to the carriage, casting as it were the commander's eye over the field.

"When the crowd is round the train you come and look for me," he said to the footman, who touched his cockaded hat in silence.

At that moment the train lumbered in, the engine wearing that inanely self important air affected by locomotives of the larger build. From all quarters an army of porters besieged the platform, and in a few seconds Sir John was in the center of an agitated crowd. There was one other calm man on that platform—another man with no parcels, whom no one sought to embrace. His brown face and close cropped head towered above a sea of agitated bonnets. Sir John, whose walk in life had been through crowds, elbowed his way forward and deliberately walked against Guy Oscard.

"Hang it!" he exclaimed, turning round. "Ah—Mr. Oscard—how d'ye do?"

"How are you?" replied Guy Oscard, really glad to see him.

"You are a good man for a crowd. I think I will follow in your wake," said Sir John. "A number of people, of the baser sort. Got my carriage here somewhere. Fool of a man looking for me in the wrong place no doubt. Where are you going? May I offer you a lift? This way. Here, John, take Mr. Oscard's parcels."

He could not have done it better in his keenest day. Guy Oscard was seated in the huge, roomy carriage before he had realized what had happened to him.

"Your man will look after your traps, I suppose?" said Sir John, hospitably drawing the fur rug from the opposite seat.

"Yes," replied Guy; "although he is not my man. He is Jack's man Joseph."

"Ah, of course! Excellent servant too, Jack told me he had left him with you."

Sir John leaned out of the window and asked the footman whether he knew his colleague Joseph, and upon receiving an answer in the affirmative he gave orders, acting as Guy's mouthpiece, that the luggage was to be conveyed to Russell square. While these orders were being executed, the two men sat waiting in the carriage, and Sir John lost no time.

"I am glad," he said, "to have this opportunity of thanking you for all your kindness to my son in this wild expedition of yours."

"Ah—Mr. Oscard—how d'ye do?"

"Yes," replied Oscard, with a transparent reserve which rather puzzled John.

"You must excuse me," said the old gentleman, sitting rather stiffly, "if I appear to take a somewhat limited interest in this great simiacine discovery, of which there has been considerable talk in some circles. The limit to my interest is drawn by a lamentable ignorance. I am afraid the business details are rather unintelligible to me. My son has endeavored, somewhat curtly perhaps, to explain the matter to me, but I have never mastered the—er—commercial technicalities. However, I understand that you have made quite a mint of money, which is the chief consideration—nowadays."

He drew the rug more closely round his knees and looked out of the window, deeply interested in a dispute between two cabmen.

"Yes—we have been very successful," said Oscard. "How is your son now? When I last saw him he was in a very bad way. Indeed, I hardly expected to see him again."

Sir John was still interested in the dispute which was not yet settled.

"He is well, thank you. You know that he is going to be married."

"He told me that he was engaged," replied Oscard, "but I did not know that anything definite was fixed."

"The most definite thing of all is fixed—the date. It is tomorrow."

"Tomorrow?"

"Yes. You have not much time to prepare your wedding garments."

"Oh," replied Oscard, with a laugh. "I have not been bidden."

"I expect the invitation is awaiting you at your house. No doubt my son will want you to be present—they would both like you to be there no doubt. But come with me now; we will call and see Jack. I know where to find him. In fact, I have an appointment with him at a quarter to 5."

It may seem strange that Guy Oscard should not have asked the name of his friend's prospective bride, but Sir John was ready for that. He gave his companion no time. Whenever he opened his lips Sir John turned Oscard's thoughts aside.

What he had told him was strictly true. He had an appointment with Jack—an appointment of his own making.

"Yes," he said, in pursuance of his policy of choking questions, "he is wonderfully well, as you will see for yourself."

Oscard submitted silently to this high handed arrangement. He had not known Sir John well. Indeed, all his intercourse with him has been noted in these pages. He was rather surprised to find him so talkative and so very friendly. But Guy Oscard was not a very deep person. He was sublimely indifferent to the long drawn motive. He presumed that Sir John made friends of his son's friends, and in his straightforward acceptance of facts he was perfectly well aware that by his timely rescue he had saved Jack Meredith from the hands of the tribes. The presumption was that Sir John knew of this, and it was only natural that he should be somewhat exceptionally gracious to the man who had saved his son's life.

It would seem that Sir John divined these thoughts, for he presently spoke of them.

"Owing to an unfortunate difference of opinion with my son we have not been very communicative lately," he said, with that deliberation which he knew how to assume when he desired to be heard without interruption, "I am therefore almost entirely ignorant of your African affairs, but I imagine Jack owes more to your pluck and promptness than has yet transpired. I gathered as much from one or two conversations I had with Miss Gordon when she was in England. I am one of Miss Gordon's many admirers."

"And I am another," said Oscard frankly.

"Ah! Then you are happy enough to be the object of a reciprocal feeling which for myself I could scarcely expect. She spoke of you in no measured language. I gathered from her that if you had not acted with great promptitude the—er—happy event of tomorrow could not have taken place."

The old man paused, and Guy Oscard, who looked somewhat distressed and distinctly uncomfortable, could find no graceful way of changing the conversation.

"In a word," went on Sir John in a very severe tone, "I owe you a great debt. You saved my boy's life."

"Yes, but you see," argued Oscard, finding his tongue at last, "out there things like that don't count for so much."

"Oh, don't they?" There was the suggestion of a smile beneath Sir John's grim eyebrows.

"No," returned Oscard, rather lamely. "It is a sort of thing that happens every day out there."

Sir John turned suddenly, and with the courtliness that was ever his he indulged in a rare exhibition of feeling. He laid his hand on Guy Oscard's stalwart knee.

"My dear Oscard," he said, and when he chose he could render his voice very soft and affectionate, "none of those arguments apply to me because I am not out there. I like you for trying to make little of your exploit. Such conduct is worthy of you, worthy of a gentleman; but you cannot disguise the fact that Jack owes his life to you and I owe you the same, which, between you and me I may mention, is more valuable to me than my own. I want you to remember always that I am your debtor, and if—if circumstances should ever seem to indicate that the feeling I have for you is anything but friendly and kind, do me the honor of disbelieving those indications. You understand?"

"Yes," replied Oscard untruthfully.

"Here we are at Lady Cantourne's," continued Sir John, "where, as it happens, I expect to meet Jack. Her ladyship is naturally interested in the affair of tomorrow, and has kindly undertaken to keep us up to date in our behavior. You will come in with me?"

Oscard remembered afterward that he was rather puzzled, that there was perhaps in his simple mind the faintest tinge of suspicion. At the moment, however, there was no time to do anything but follow. The man had already rung the bell and Lady Cantourne's butler was holding the door open. There was something in his attitude vaguely suggestive of expectation. He never took his eyes from Sir John Meredith's face, as if on the alert for an unspoken order.

Guy Oscard followed his companion into the hall, and the very scent of the house—for each house speaks to more senses than one—made his heart leap in his broad breast. It seemed as if Millicent's presence was in the very air. This was more than he could have hoped. He had not intended to call this afternoon, although the visit was only to have been postponed for twenty-four hours.

Sir John Meredith's face was a marvel to see. It was quite steady. He was upright and alert, with all the intrepidity of his mind up in arms. There was a light in his eyes, a gleam of light from other days not yet burned out.

He laid aside his gold headed cane and threw back his shoulders.

"Is Mr. Meredith upstairs?" he said to the butler.

"Yes, sir."

The man moved toward the stairs.

"You need not come!" said Sir John, holding up his hand.

The butler stood aside and Sir John led the way up to the drawing room.

At the door he paused for a moment. Guy Oscard was at his heels. Then he opened the door rather slowly and motioned gracefully with his left hand to Oscard to pass in before him.

Oscard stepped forward. When he had crossed the threshold Sir John closed the door sharply behind him and turned to go downstairs.

CHAPTER XXIII.

GUY OSCARD stood for a moment on the threshold. He heard the door closed behind him, and he took two steps farther forward.

Jack Meredith and Millicent were at the fireplace. There was a heap of disordered paper and string upon the table, and a few wedding presents standing in the midst of their packing.

Millicent's pretty face was quite white. She looked from Meredith to Oscard with a sudden horror in her eyes. For the first time in her life she was at a loss, quite taken aback.

"Oh-h!" she whispered, and that was all.

The silence that followed was tense, as if something in the atmosphere was about to snap, and in the midst of it the wheels of Sir John's retreating carriage came to the ears of the three persons in the drawing room.

It was only for a moment, but in that moment the two men saw clearly. It was as if the veil from the girl's mind had fallen—leaving her thoughts confessed, bare before them. In the same instant they both saw—they both sped back in thought to their first meeting, to the hundred links of the chain that brought them to the present moment—they knew; and Millicent felt that they knew.

"Are you going to be married tomorrow?" asked Guy Oscard deliberately. He never was a man to whom a successful appeal for the slightest mitigation of justice could have been made. His dealings had ever been with men, from whom he had exacted as scrupulous an honor as he had given. He did not know that women are different—that honor is not their strong point.

Millicent did not answer. She looked to Meredith to answer for her, but Meredith was looking at Oscard, and in his lazy eyes there glowed the singular affection and admiration which he had bestowed long time before on this simple gentleman—his mental inferior.

J. R. Dinnen of Abernethy has been selected to represent the Conservatives of the Saltcoats district in the next Dominion elections.

The British Columbia Fruit Lands.

The Money-Making Industry.

Although the exploitation of B.C. fruit lands is of recent date the fruit grower is an institution that promises to make a big name for the province. Not only is he making big money out of his venture, but the life he leads is so agreeable and the returns so certain that British Columbia is getting the best advertising any province can get—that of thoroughly satisfied settlers.

While the first attempts at fruit growing were purely experimental, success was met with the initial efforts, and, now, with the best kinds of fruits all selected, the fruit grower need not be an expert to make a pleasant, profitable livelihood out of a few acres of ground. All it requires is a willingness to learn and to observe the results of the work of others. So simple is it that hundreds of men whose work has been office or professional have found themselves making more money than they ever expected to make.

Nor does a man require a big capital. Some of the best companies, such as the Creston Fruit Lands Co. of Creston, B.C., and others, allow an honest man to purchase a plot of land with a small cash payment, the larger payments not coming due until the land has commenced to bring returns. And these fruit lands will raise strawberries the first year. The profit from one acre of strawberries is often $1,300 an acre, so that it does not take long to pay for the land.

The lands held by the Creston Fruit Land company on the Crow's Nest railway, are admirably situated, too, for shipping and are very easily cleared.

How Is Your Cold?

Every place you go you hear the same question asked, "

Do you know that there is nothing so dangerous as a neglected cold?

Do you know that a neglected cold will turn into Catarrh, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, disgusting Catarrh and the most deadly of all, the "White Plague," Consumption.

Many a life history would read different if, on the first appearance of a cough, it had been remedied with

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

GROWTH OF TRADES UNIONISM.

Some remarkable figures have just been published in an English "white paper" from the office of the chief registrar of friendly societies. It carries the history of trade organization to December 31, 1906, the latest date to which complete returns are obtainable. It not only gives the number of members enrolled, but it also shows the contributions paid and the amount of the accumulated funds and comparisons with other years.

At the close of 1906 there remained on the registrar 674 trades unions, of which 645 furnished returns. In 1878 the number was only 159, in 1884 it was 184, and in the next ten years it had grown to 595. The total membership for Great Britain and Ireland of the 645 unions was 1,719,031, having grown from 309,099 in 1878 to 340,893 in 1885, and 1,006,507, an increase that demonstrates how persistently the various organizers have educated the workers. The income in 1878 was about $1,600,000, in 1885 it had grown to $3,300,000, in 1895, to nearly $8,000,000, and in 1906 to close upon $18,000,000.

The expenditure was always kept within the income and indeed funds accumulated in as great a ratio as the subscriptions. No returns are given of the expenditure for 1878 and 1885, but in 1895 it was upwards of $6,000,000, and in 1906, in the neighborhood of $14,000,000. There was an increase of 6.7 in membership over 1905, of contributions of $700,000, and a decrease of expenditure of $1,000,000. The balance of funds belonging to the 645 trades unions for campaign and other purposes was when the return was made close upon $26,000,000, to which it had grown from about $11,000,000 in 1896, and two and a half millions in 1886. During 1906 there were 36 trades unions registered, while 15 were dissolved.

It is to be hoped that these vast funds will never have to be drawn upon for destructive warfare, but that they will continue to accumulate until they have attained sufficient magnitude to solve the old age pension problem without outside help.

The Builders' Exchange of Edmonton contracss with six labor unions connected with the building trades. These are the carpenters, painters, bricklayers, laborers connected with the building trades, plasterers and plumbers. The lathers and electricians have a schedule of wages and hours of work, but have no agreement with the builders' exchange. The agreements between the bricklayers, laborers and plasterers and the builders' exchange are to be renewed on April 1 and the remainder on May 1.

The following are the existing schedule of wages and hours of work in force as a result of last year's agreements and which will probably be renewed this year:

Carpenters—Work 8 hours, receive 42 cents per hour.
Painters—Work 8 hours, receive 45 cents per hour.
Bricklayers—Work 8 hours, receive 60 cents per hour.
Laborers (with building trades)—Work 8 hours, receive $2.25 per day.
Plasterers—Work 8 hours, receive 60 cents per hour.
Plumbers and steamfitters—Work 8 hours, receive $4.50 per day.
Lathers—Work 8 hours, receive 4½ cents per square yard.
Electricians—Work 8 hours, receive 40 cents per hour.

Ottawa, March 30.—The Department of Labor some time ago received an application from the Sailors' Union of the Great Lakes, asking for the appointment of a board of investigation under the Lemieux act into the conditions of employment of the lake sailors. The request was referred to the Dominion Marine association, which was asked to name a representative. Today they have forwarded a declination and as a consequence, it is expected that the department will have to name one.

A meeting of the Laborers' Union will be held at 84 Montreal street tomorrow evening at 20k. A good attendance is desired.

Indianapolis, Ind., March 29.—After ten years leadership of the United Mine Workers of America, John Mitchell on Tuesday will retire from the head of that organization, and will be succeeded by Thomas L. Lewis, of Ohio. Mr. Mitchell will devote his time to regaining his health, which has given way under the strain of office, and will undertake no work until his health improves. It is reported that President Roosevelt has offered him a mission to Panama, and that the national civic federation wants to place him at the head of a bureau to investigate and promote the use of trade agreements. The present mining contracts of the coal fields of the country will expire with the presidency of John Mitchell. Central Pennsylvania is the only district that has a new contract under which the miners can continue to work until April 1. The indications are that in nearly all other fields the mines will close Tuesday night, not to be open for several days, and in some fields for several weeks. There is little likelihood of serious inconveniences to industrial activity, as the demand for coal is slack and considerable is on hand.

MAKE THEIR BOW TONIGHT

(New Westminster Columbian)

Tuesday, March 31.—This evening in the spacious diningroom of the Hotel Russell, Ald. E. J. Fader, who built and for a time managed New Westminster's fine new hostlery, will entertain at an informal banquet the business men of the city when he will introduce to them Messrs. Harry F. Brine and C. G. McLean, the new lessees of the house, who bring with them into their venture a combination of practical hotel and business experience that augurs highly for their success.

Mr. Brine has connections with the travelling public that stretch from the Atlantic to the Pacific. The son of one of the oldest medical practitioners of Charlottetown, P.E.I., he has spent some years gaining the knowledge that has finally placed him in charge of a business of his own. During the last twelve months his rise has been rapid. At the beginning of that period he was manager of the hotel Victoria in Charlottetown, later he took charge of the Alberta at Medicine Hat, and then the Yale of Calgary. Now, to use his own words, he has "the gem of the lot," the hotel Russell of New-Westminster. Mr. Brine is an enthusiastic follower of field sports and has as proofs of his ability in athletic lines more than fifteen trophy cups and medals. In this connection he has followed closely the career of the now world-famous New Westminster lacrosse team, and in him the wearers of the red and blue have gained an enthusiastic and appreciative friend and backer.

While Mr. Brine will bring to the management of the Russell ripe experience in the hotel business, Mr. C. G. McLean will furnish mature judgment in commercial affairs gained in another school. Like his partner, he is a Charlottetown boy, and to continue the likeness further he is also an ardent supporter of all the games and sports that go to make manly men. For some years he was connected with the bank of Nova Scotia, and in Calgary he occupied the post of teller in that institution. Some months ago he severed his connection with the bank and went into the real estate and insurance business on his own account in Calgary, leaving that line to join his present partner in a ten-year lease of the Russell.

Speaking of the policy which they intend to follow in the conduct of the Russell, Messrs. Brine and McLeem have declared for a first-class house, conducted on the most modern and approved lines and catering to the travelling public with all their own experience and the up-to-date facilities which have been placed at their disposal by the finished plans of the builder. The investment is a heavy one and they intend to leave nothing undone that will make their hostlery attractive to the people of the Royal city and to those who sojourn here. Large and well appointed sample rooms appeal to those unerring critics, the commercial travellers, and these have been made a special feature in the building of the Russell.

Summing up the impressions so far received by Mr. McLean and himself Mr. Brine said: "New Westminster appeals to us, and as for the hotel itself, well, it is a perfect gem. We were barely three weeks closing a satisfactory deal with Mr. Fader for a ten-year lease of the house, which was signed on the 19th inst., and I think we were prouder on that day than we have ever been before. In our business relations with Mr. Fader we have found him truly a 'prince of good fellows,' and with him at our backs we are certain of success."

The hotel is modern in every detail and demonstrates the spirit of confidence in New Westminster's future, and of progressiveness, held by Mr. Fader. It is a handsome pressed brick structure occupying a commanding position overlooking the reaches of the Fraser river, and contains over 100 spacious and well lighted rooms. The latter are arranged in suites of 2, 3, or 4, and are replete with every detail, baths, toilets, telephones, hot and cold water, etc., being found connected with every room. The diningroom will comfortably seat 200 guests and the vestibule, general room, ladies' parlor, etc., are all spacious, richly furnished apartments. A billiard room with two English tables, five sample rooms, bar and other hotel accessories complete the up-to-date arrangement of the establishment. It is, however, designed with a view to enlargement, the complete scheme showing the centre courtyard laid out as a palm garden covered by a glass dome. The structure represents an investment of between eighty and one hundred thousand dollars.

DYSPEPSIA AND STOMACH DISORDERS MAY BE QUICKLY AND PERMANENTLY CURED BY

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Mr. P. A. Labelle, Manwaki, Que., writes us as follows: "I desire to thank you for your wonderful cure, Burdock Blood Bitters.

Three years ago I had a very severe attack of Dyspepsia. I tried five of the best doctors I could find but they could do me no good. I was advised by a friend to try Burdock Blood Bitters and to my great surprise, after taking two bottles, I was so perfectly cured that I have not had a sign of Dyspepsia since. I cannot praise it too highly to all sufferers. In my experience it is the best I ever used. Nothing for me like B.B.B.

Don't accept a substitute for Burdock Blood Bitters. There is nothing "just as good."

The School Board

A special meeting of the school board was held on Tuesday night. Present: Chairman Brotherton; trustees Niblock, Milne, Kennedy.

A letter from the Western School Supply company was read offering slate for blackboard purposes. It was decided to purchase three sheets, 5 ft., 4 ins., by 3 ft., 6 ins., cost about $35. The firm have offered immediate shipment.

A letter was read from Geo. H. Gowan of the Credit Foncier offering to buy $20,000 school debentures at 92½, if allowed an option of from six to ten days. Mr. Kennedy thought the rate very high. Mr. Niblock was in favor of turning the offer down; for his own part he would not consider letting them go at that price for a moment. The question of providing adequate accomodation without the necessity of immediately disposing of the bonds was discussed at some length. One suggestion was that two rooms be rented for a couple of months. Mr. Niblock thought that the attic at the Montreal street school might be fitted up to tide over the period of difficulty. The general opinion seemed to be that it would be wise to call for plans now for the new high school building. If a start were to be made now it would be June or July before they would be finished and a year from June before the building would be ready. Mr. Niblock pointed out that it was not necessary to accept the plans unless they suited the board. It was, Mr. Kennedy said, for the board to find out what they wanted and then submit the proposition to the architect.

On Mr. Niblock's motion it was decided to notify the Credit Foncier that the board could not consider their offer. Messrs. Kennedy and Brotherton were then appointed a committee to report on plans and mode of procedure in connection with the high school building.

Miss McCallum's resignation was read and accepted. Applications for the vacancy created were received from James Wilson, on behalf of his daughter, Edith G. Wilson, and from Katie E. Baker. Miss Wilson held a first-class professional certificate and had been teaching at Macleod for two years and at Gleichen for a year and five months. Mrs. Baker had been substituting at various times in the local schools. Mr. Niblock thought it advisable that a teacher experienced in primary work should be obtained, as that department was probably the hardest in the school to successfully manage. Miss Wilson was appointed.

Band Organized

The band met on Tuesday night at 8 p.m., in the American hotel. There was a good attendance. R. Collier was moved to the chair and B. W. Allen was secretary pro tem.

The officers elected were:
Hon. Pres.—M. Leonard.
Hon. Vice-Pres.—R. Collier.
President—H. L. Tweed.
Vice-Pres.—J. Fleming.
Leader—Joe Leonard.
Sec.—B. Watkins.
Treas.—R. Shaw.
Managing committee.—T. Wood, M. Trigg, A. Teel, J. Legh and B. W. Allen.

It was decided that the band would be managed by the committee with the officers as members ex-officio. A schedule of charges is to be drawn up. The band will appear one night a week during the summer in the bandstand in the park. Joe Leonard made a present of a fine new drum to the band and received the thanks of those present. R. Collier also was thanked for his work during the past.

The committee desire to make it known that any musicians in the city will be welcomed. Applications should be made to Joe Leonard, the leader.

A meeting of the band was held on Friday evening, when a number of bylaws were carried. A practise will be held this evening.

The first engagement of the season will be for the baseball match on Good Friday.

BAD LEG CAUSED 19 YEARS TORTURE

VARICOSE ULCER HEALED BY ZAM-BUK

Mr. C. Johnston of Poplar Hill Creek, Athabasca Landing, Alta., writes: "Nine years ago a running sore commenced on my right leg, caused by a ruptured blood vessel. As time went on it got worse and my sufferings were intense. I had a very sore leg indeed, and had very small hope of ever seeing it healed, in fact I was told by several who had known such sores that I should suffer with it for life. This was very discouraging. When I was almost in despair I heard of Zam-Buk and wrote to the Company stating my case. They inspired me with hope, and I commenced with Zam-Buk, using it according to instructions. Other salves I had used caused me much suffering, but Zam-Buk soothed the pain, and although it appeared for some time to be doing little good, I persevered, and as soon as the wound became clean, it was only a matter of three or four days before my leg was healed."

New Railway Line
Charters and Surveys Interest to Medicine Hat

From Pierre, North Dakota, c the news that a great company ed the Great American Railway pany, with a capital of $150,000 has filed articles to construct a way from Chicago to Medicine with branches all over the What interests are behind this company are not known.

The Winnipeg Free Press of 6, said:

A large survey party which done a very important work the direction of the Canadian P railway will complete its work week, the members of the party ing expected to reach Edmo within a few days. This com which consists of 20 men, under direction at the present time of gineer McMillan, left the line of Canadian Pacific at Weyburn proceeded westerly and northw ly in the direction of Swift Cu From Swift Current they made trip south of the main line and of the Crow's Nest branch until reached Lethbridge. From Leth they proceeded north, crossed main line to Edmonton at Sed From Sedgwick they proceeded northwesterly direction to E ton.

No announcement has been by the Canadian Pacific rega the ultimate object of the work by the survey party. It is s however, that the company has in view for some time the build a new line from Weyburn to the main line of the C.P.R. point somewhere in the vicinity Swift Current. This would i ity be an extension or a develo of the Soo line, and would allo the shipment of freight in direct line from the far west to Twin Cities. The construction new line south of the main li the C.P.R. and south of the Nest branch is apparently co lated.

A number of years will nece pass before active steps could en to construct railway lines t the entire territory surveyed engineering party; but it is

Everything in Shape for a Big Production

Only eleven months ago the first work on the big plant of the Red Cliff Brick company was performed. Just seven months ago gas was struck; and today the company is producing brick with one of the most complete plants on the continent. It has meant steady employment to 30 or 40 men every day, but the work has all told.

At Red Cliff now there is a village of a dozen buildings, a large brick plant, a water tank, a gas well, a production of 40,000 brick a day and unlimited enthusiasm.

A month from now there will be a half dozen more houses, a spur line from the main line of the C.P.R. and a capacity of double the present production of brick.

Next year who knows what will be at Red Cliff?

On Tuesday the company opened its first kiln of 50,000 brick, a number of autos going out to see the results. On Wednesday Mayor Cousins, Publicity Commissioner Hall, S. T. Hopper and The Times representative were driven over the works by Dr. Stoner, the president of the company. The brick, for a first kiln, built largely in a snow storm and with all the attendant difficulties of the initial burning, is of a specially good quality and fully bears out the hopes of the company. Eighty-five per cent. of the kiln is marketable brick. When struck together the bricks ring like metal and break to pieces those produced by a neighboring city. The color is good and there is practically no trace of lime.

The first trip of the visitors was to the shaft where the clay is being brought up. An electric elevator carried them to the clay seam, 40 feet below the surface. From a south it runs in horizontally 125 feet with a branch shaft near the end, and an air shaft to the surface. Just as the shaft was reached a charge was about to be exploded, so that there was all the pleasure and nervousness of standing under forty feet of ground with a charge of powder to be exploded some place near and the men running to cover. Fortunately it is mining with all modern conveniences, as every place is brilliantly illuminated with electric light, and the shaft is head high. The air shaft soon carries off the powder fumes. The main shaft goes 60 feet further down towards the coal seam, which runs through from the river level, and this coal will be worked later, in conjunction with the mine near the river which has already shipped coal to Manitoba.

The clay is loaded into the cars which run along the galleries to the elevator where it is raised to the surface and dumped into the crusher. The powdered clay is carried to the top of the building and dropped into the pug mill, where jets of water give it the required moisture. From the pug mill it is forced out in a steady column the size of a brick, onto a belt runway where wires attached to a wheel cut off six bricks at a time, the bricks being then carried on a belt to men who load them on cars ready for the drying rooms. When a repressed brick is desired the bricks are dropped from the belt into the repress machine, which has a capacity of 20,000 a day.

The drying rooms, three in number, have a capacity of 125,000 bricks. The heat at present is direct but a hot air draft system is being installed, whereby the heat will be produced in a furnace outside and blown into the rooms.

The burning kiln is the next process. A new kiln to hold 350,000, to 400,000 is now being constructed, with permanent walls three feet thick at the bottom.

The power is steam, the heat being provided by gas. The engine is of 150 h.p. and an electric dynamo of 75 h.p. supplies the lighting and the power for the elevator, lift and water pump at the river.

A water tank of 50,000 gallons is filled by the pump at the river and supplies everything, including the hydrants which are placed around the plant.

The company is burning 100 bushels of lime a day as well, and is commencing experiments on B. C. limestone, a car of which has just been received.

There are big plans for future development. A townsite is just being placed on the market, two new gas wells will be bored and a reservoir constructed that will serve the land for ten or twelve miles around.

Mr. Dickenson, the superintendent, has made many improvements since his arrival, and is making more. His kindness in explaining all the details was appreciated by the visitors and was appreciated by the visitors to the plant on Wednesday.

New Railway Lines

Charters and Surveys of Interest to Medicine Hat

From Pierre, North Dakota, comes the news that a great company called the Great American Railway company, with a capital of $150,000,000 has filed articles to construct a railway from Chicago to Medicine Hat with branches all over the west. What interests are behind this big company are not known.

The Winnipeg Free Press of April 6, said:

A large survey party which has done a very important work under the direction of the Canadian Pacific railway will complete its work this week, the members of the party being expected to reach Edmonton within a few days. This company which consists of 20 men, under the direction at the present time of engineer McMillan, left the line of the Canadian Pacific at Weyburn and proceeded westerly and northwesterly in the direction of Swift Current. From Swift Current they made the trip south of the main line and south of the Crow's Nest branch until they reached Lethbridge. From Lethbridge they proceeded north, crossed the main line to Edmonton at Sedgwick. From Sedgwick they proceeded in a northwesterly direction to Edmonton.

No announcement has been made by the Canadian Pacific regarding the ultimate object of the work done by the survey party. It is stated, however, that the company has had in view for some time the building of a new line from Weyburn to strike the main line of the C.P.R. at a point somewhere in the vicinity of Swift Current. This would in reality be an extension or a development of the Soo line, and would allow of the shipment of freight in a more direct line from the far west to the Twin Cities. The construction of a new line south of the main line of the C.P.R. and south of the Crow's Nest branch is apparently contemplated.

A number of years will necessarily pass before active steps could be taken to construct railway lines through the entire territory surveyed by the engineering party; but it is believed that almost all of the territory traversed by them will eventually be covered by lines of the company. The country between Weyburn and Swift Current, is all open prairie, very little timber being found in any section of it. It is largely unknown, having seldom been traversed by white men. It is reputed to be dry, and plans have been made for irrigation works in parts of it. Portions of the country west from Swift Current on the way to Medicine Hat are well adapted for farming operations. From the country about Walsh and Irving, a considerable quantity of seed wheat has been shipped during the present spring—a thing that would have been considered impossible not many years ago. In the Cypress Hills country there are large quantities of timber, and a government timber reserve. Much of this country is underlaid with coal.

W. Cousins sold four lots during the week.

On Saturday Harris & Baker sold three lots in Block C, across the river. Value $400.

Roadmaster De Sharney was in Calgary for a few days last week.

R. F. Struthers was in town Saturday and Monday testing the eyesight and hearing of a number of trainmen.

D. Jayes, chief clerk in the Roadmaster's office, has returned from an extended leave of absence in the Old Country. L. H. Hopper, who has been taking his place here left for the east on leave of absence on the 6 inst.

A special district court will be held on Friday by Judge Mitchell. Porter will come up for trial in connection with the Ready burglary.

Medicine Hat has secured a space at the Dominion exhibition at Calgary this year about 8 x 16 feet. Just what form the exhibit will take is not known for certain but it will be something unique and striking. Gas will probably be taken to Calgary in tanks and used in various ways one of which will probably be to run an engine to manufacture electricity.

North Portal, April 10.—All trains arriving from the south are heavily loaded with settlers and landseekers. They are bound for all parts of Saskatchewan and Alberta, and are a good class of settlers. A number of steam plowing outfits are coming in daily.

THE CITY FATHERS

The adjourned meeting of the council was held on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Present: The Mayor, Alds. Baker, McKay, Morrow, Forster, Huckvale.

The chief matter for discussion was that of the frontage tax to be paid by all property past which sewers are laid. The committee recommended that $1.15 be the amount paid per foot frontage.

There appeared to be some difficulty in arriving at an equitable solution of this frontage tax question so far as corner lots are concerned. The engineer stated that the method in vogue in the Maritime provinces was where lots are 100 feet by 40 feet, to exempt from taxation forty feet on the shortest side.

The Mayor sent out a request for Commissioner Hall to attend the council and throw some light on the situation. Mr. Hall stated that the usual practise was, in the case of corner lots, to charge on the front of the property only. If a second sewer were put in at the side, a rental charge was made. This would be the system on which the Cypress Club and the Merchants Bank, for instance, would come in.

In large municipalities the practise was for the city to construct the trunk sewer and charge a rental to users. A municipality put money into such work as an investment and expected to have it returned in the form of a rental. Property paying frontage tax was exempt from rental.

Ald. Baker suggested that the frontage tax should be passed immediately, and the rental system adopted later.

The engineer stated that the cost of the sewers themselves was but the small end of the expenditure. If the city paid for purification plant, etc. they would be bearing more than one-half the cost of the system.

Eventually, a charge of $1 per foot frontage was agreed upon, the renting system to be adopted on side streets.

A discussion followed on the advisability of using one of the fire teams for the sprinkling wagon. The Mayor thought the city could not afford to be paying out money for a special team. The general opinion seemed to be however, that it might be dangerous practise to have one of the fire teams used for this purpose, in case of fire invaluable time would be lost. On Ald. McKay's motion it was decided to advertise for a team.

The question of the printing contract for building by-laws was brought up. This matter was referred to last year's finance committee which went out of existence without taking any action. Referred to present finance committee.

Crockford Mines Bought

Three Local Men to Develop Mines

The Crockford Coal mines, which have been offered for sale for some time have been purchased by Wm. Ansley, his son Harvey Ansley and Mr. Pruitt. It is intended to develop the mine by adding every convenience An engine will be installed for raising the coal from the mouth of the mine to the top of the cliff. Connection with the Red Cliff spur line by means of a cable across the river is thought of. Some experiments are going on with the clay on the property, which, it is believed, is of good quality for brick. A quantity of it is being burnt now in Mr. Pruitt's brick kilns.

The mine will be working full force by fall.

Weddings

WAUNSCH-HEPPER.

On the 31st. ult., in the home of the bride by the Rev. H. Bryant, Adolph Waunsch, of Elkwater, to Lizzie Hepper, daughter of Henry Hepper, of Walsh.

ROBINSON-SCOTT.

At their new home 802 Allowance street on Wednesday evening April 8, Mr. Harold Edgar Robinson and Miss Mary Euphemia Scott were united in marriage by Rev. A. McLaren in the presence of a number of friends. The bride looked very charming in a white silk voile and was the recipient of many beautiful gifts. Mr. and Mrs Robinson went west on No. 97.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Woolchester

A rifle club, instead of the usual baseball club is being organized for the Woolchester and Coleridge district. A good number of enrollments have been made already. The rumor that the members are to wear kilts is being strongly denied.

Mrs. Young from the east is going to teach school here, beginning on Monday April 13.

Mr. Smyth is at present away at Brasano, but is expected back again in a few weeks.

Chris O'Hagan is now living on his homestead on the Creek.

Mr. George Miller is here on a visit from Taber just now.

Little Plume

Rev. A. Fraser passed through here last Friday on his way to take up a new appointment south of the Cypress Hills. His last field was Gleichen.

Mr. Dickson has purchased a new plough. Farming is gaining in importance here and generally, all the ranchers do a little bit in raising crops now.

Mr. and Mrs. Albright have arrived to manage Mr. Carroll's ranch. They came from Dakota to Canada about two years ago.

R. Gummer has come to the Bruce ranch at Woolchester. J. Salmond is still here attending to his stock but will be leaving in a few days.

Almost all the people around the Creek have had the unwelcome visitation of la grippe. The mild winter which we had is blamed for it.

Seven Persons

The Sinclair gang have gone to Taber but will return in a short time to ballast up the tracks and finish them up in first class shape.

J. N. Good has moved on his homestead about two miles south of here.

Philip Lousley, Inspector J. W. Brown, J. A. Brand, J. H. Butler, T. O. Nesting, Ole Torgeson, J. F. Leonard and E. Iverson had business at the Hat this week.

Miss Cargill, who has spent the last winter in California, returned to Seven Persons Sunday.

Ten new shacks put up in sight of this place this spring, and still they come. J. Babbage will put his up in a day or two.

J. F. Leonard made a business trip to Calgary this week.

D. Bellrichard is the happy possessor of a team of horses purchased at the Day ranch.

Geese and ducks are going by in large numbers.

The Misses Ada and Jean Miller were guests of Mrs. Lousley Monday

We are informed that the digging of the cellar and the laying of the foundation of the new store have been let to Messrs. Boucher and Wagner.

Mr. Weiss and Miss Zimmerman were seen on our streets Saturday, the first time Mr. Weiss was riding since his accident.

Mr. J. A. Young returned to his sheep ranch last Wednesday. He had spent the winter at Lethbridge.

Irvine.

Weather forecast for the past week has been mild and sunny with a great tendency of fine spring weather

Now that the two noon trains have been put on again we see more persons travelling to Medicine Hat from here than we did when there was only one train a day each way. The only thing that is an inconvenience to the business people is the mails being put off and on the noon trains but whenthey get into tde run of it, they will soon call it a convenience. It is hard to suit everybody.

Messrs. H. Yuill and W. B. Marshall of Medicine Hat were visitors in town the middle of last week. Mr. Yuill let the seeding of his homestead to the competent hands of Fulton Bros., the well known contractors of this place, and we see that they are right after it as we go to press.

John Hausour is well under way with his new pool room and bowling alley, and we see that he is now putting the front into the premises and expects to open up his new establishment at the beginning of next month.

Frank Girrard moved into his new barber shop and pool room on Saturday, and in conversation with him he stated that he was about to put another pool table in and have the barber shop enlarged, which will make a fine display. He is now in the basement of the building known as the Masonic Hall on South Railway avenue opposite the depot.

The Golden West hotel was very busy last week when they moved the present hotel back to enable the contractors to start on the fine addition that will be completed in the near future in the place vacated by the old building. The new building, we understand, will be 40 x 50, which without a doubt will make it one of the finest country hotels along the line.

Messrs. Paul Pagett and Chas. Aldridge of town left for Medicine Hat on the afternoon train on Saturday we suppose to see the sights of Medicine Hat.

At the first meeting of the Irvine Agricultural society held in the Irvine schoolhouse on Saturday April 11, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Pres., Capt. D. H. Dawson; 1st Vice-Pres., H. H. Hassard; 2nd Vice-Pres., O. Mayberry, and the following directors, H. Wooley, B. E. Earl, Geo. Schalier, G. P. White, W. Foster, W. Keller, E. J. Beswell, Jas. Crawford, W. Sommers, Fred. Weiss, Sr., Carl Beny, Pete Draudson, and three others whose names have been mislaid, but a fuller report of this meeting will appear in the next issue of this paper, not forgetting Mr. Will Dakin who has been given the position as the sec.-treas., and from reports deserves any good position that may be offered to him, as it is assured he has been the mainstay of the organization of this society here. We all trust that under the able guidance of our old and experienced officers it will prove a great success.

Rev. Hugh Wilson of Maple Creek was in town on Saturday and was quite surprised at the growth of our town. He stayed over Sunday and took the morning service at St. George's and held Holy Communion returning to Maple Creek on the afternoon train.

There are rumors around that in the near future there will be a new postmaster. Many people say he is welcome.

It is understood on good authority that Fred. Weiss & Son are the half owners of the sawmill Joe Peters is operating on the east end of the Cypress Hills. They have something like 90,000 feet of rough lumber cut and stacked at their mill at the present time, which we have no doubt will all be sold in a very short time.

Real estate is moving a little, but it is changing hands mostly directly with the owners. A lot or so was sold last week on the north side of the track through the C.P.R. agent here.

Don't forget the Bachelors' Ball on April 20. It will be the finest of its kind held in this section.

Elora

A new district has been formed to commence at E. J. Smith's and extending as far west as Cochran's farm then north as far as Smyth's farm, taking in a portion of the Creek running just east of Woolchester post office and continuing east as far as the Bruce ranch.

Mr. David Hamilton has returned from the Kootenay and says Sunny Alberta beats B.C.

The farmers in this district have commenced preparing the land for seeding.

Mr. Ramsay, the well known auctioneer has purchased a valuable horse. He intends moving on his homestead in a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Fallis paid a visit to Maple Grove Farm last week.

Miss Pearl Doane has returned home from her visit at Maple Grove Farm, where she is greatly missed by the young bachelors. (Ha! ha! ha!)

We are pleased to state that Mr. Armstrong's family have all moved out on the farm.

We understand some of the young people from this district intend taking in the social at Medicine Lodge on April 20.

What might have proved a very serious accident happened at the Maple Grove Farm last week. Mr. Colter started for town accompanied by two young ladies when the team took fright at the robe and began to run at a desperate rate. But for the presence of mind of the driver, who sprang forward, jumped in the wagon, seized the reins and by hard pulling got them stopped after they had run several miles, there might have been a fatality. Good boy, Jimmie, you're a stayer.

Who was the young man who won the foot race last Saturday night. There are no flies on Billy R.

We are very much pleased to state that the organ purchased by the three young ladies has greatly increased the congregation, more especially those who stayed for the after meeting. Don't forget choir practise on Friday night April 17. Everybody welcome.

Church Notes

The special Easter services will be held in St. Patrick's church on Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 9 a.m. On Sunday Low Mass at 8.30, High Mass at 10.30 a.m. Henceforward High Mass will be held each Sunday at 10.30.

Father Turblaux goes to Maple Creek on Monday next to conduct special services.

The Ladies' Aid of St. John's are decorating the church with flowers for the Easter services on Sunday. Special music will be rendered by the choir.

A meeting of the Missionary society of St. John's church will be held on Monday next.

On Good Friday services will be held in St. Barnabas' church at 11 and 7.30 p.m. On Sunday celebration of the Holy Communion at 7 and 8.30 a.m.; Matins and Holy Communion at 11 a.m., Evensong at 7.30.

An executive committee meeting of the Synod of the diocese of Qu'Appelle was held at Indian Head on April 8 with a full attendance of members. Grants amounting to about $22,000 were allotted for mission work. The Synod took over the debt on the vicarage at Irvine upon legal title being given to the land.

The following motion on the co-operative bill now before the Senate was introduced by the Rev. Wm. Nicoll and passed:

"Whereas a bill respecting

"Whereas a bill entitled 'An Act respecting co-operation in the interests of the laboring and farming classes of Canada' has passed the Commons unopposed. And whereas this bill is now being considered in the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee: Be it therefore resolved that this executive committee of the Church of England, Synod of the Diocese of Qu'Appelle desires to express its approval of the principle expressed by this measure, which is designed to improve the condition of the community and hopes that the measure will soon become law."

The children of St. Barnabas' Sunday school will give an entertainment in the Parish Hall on Monday and Tuesday evenings, 20th and 21st of the month. The following is the programme, which speaks for itself:

1. A Visit with the Children from the Land of Never-Never.
2. Little Bo-Peep will sing a song about the Fairies.
3. The Pilgrim Fathers will show how they practised the art of war.
4. Eight Merry Maids will Dance Around the Maypole.
5. Professor Gruffenuff will teach the noble art of Elocution.
6. A Sweet Little Maiden will show you how Grandma danced the Minuet.
7. Six Little Mothers will train up their children in the way they should go.
8. Looking Backward.
9. Good-Bye.

God Save the King.

The children have received a long and careful training by Mrs. Rowe, Miss Caldwell, Miss Kealy, Mr. Hodgson and others, and, needless to say, a rare treat is in store for those who attend. Admission 50 cents. On Tuesday evening children will be admitted at half price. Doors open at 7.30, enjoyment starts at 8 o'clock promptly.

The proceeds will be devoted to Sunday school work.

A meeting of the Epworth League will be held in the Methodist church basement tonight at 8 o'clock.

Prayer meeting in the Methodist church basement tomorrow night at 8 o'clock.

Prayer meeting will be resumed in Knox church on Wednesday night.

On next Sunday night an Easter service will be held in Knox church. All made welcome.

The Baptist church was closed on Sunday evening on account of the special services in the Methodist and Presbyterian churches.

The regular services of the week at the Baptist church which have been given up during the revival services, are now being resumed.

The Evangelistic services have been continued throughout the week and large numbers have taken a definite stand for Christ and a purer life. Each night the Presbyterian church has been filled, and, as the end of the services drew near, many who have sat unmoved throughout the earlier days of the revival, or have been unable to summon up courage to take the first step in the New Life, have been convinced and publicly confessed the Christ.

On Sunday three services were held. In the afternoon the subject of amusements was dealt with and in the evening Mr. Gale spoke on the unpardonable sin.

At the farewell service last evening the church was crowded, and even at the after meeting which lasted till nearly half-past ten there was not sufficient seating accommodation within the church for all.

From Medicine Hat the Evangelists proceed to Kenora, where they will conduct revival services.

The entertainment which the children of St. Barnabas' Sunday school intend giving on Monday and Tuesday evening next, is for the purpose of replenishing the library. This is a cause which should be of interest to all parents who attend the S. S.

THE ROSERIES

VEGETABLES AND PLANTS WILL SOON BE ON SALE

Since the advent of spring, work at the Roseries has been going on apace, and the manager, Mr. Huberheim, hopes to have a large supply of plants for the market in the course a few weeks.

Astors, mignonette, pansies, lobellia, are among the varieties, while one house is being devoted entirely to the raising of tomatoes. A considerable trade has already been done in vegetables—radishes and lettuce; and cabbage and cauliflower will be ready for sale later in the season.

Mr. Huberheim is determined to make a success of the enterprise, so far as personal efforts can avail. When a Times man called in last week he was transplanting tomatoes, and had barely time to look up and put in a few words on his plans for the season, in between the rows. The healthy looking plants, he anticipates, will be fruit bearing before the summer is far spent.

The greenhouse roof will require to be whitewashed in the course of a few weeks at the most, as the midday temperatures are becoming excessive. For two or three hours every day the temperature hivers around 90, and in a small forcing house the other day the men were working in an atmosphere of 120 degrees in temperature.

Residents who have hitherto met with some difficulty in getting a supply of plants for garden purposes, will not need to go outside of the city this year, as large city this year, as a large stock will soon be ready for the local market.

H. Hobson, Sr., of Taber, is in the city.

Percy Bryenton has returned to the city.

W. C. Simmonds of Lethbridge came into the city yesterday.

Pete Draudson has moved in with his family from Josephsburg.

Mr. Elwin Wade of Calgary is here relieving Mr. Walton, local customs inspector, for a few weeks.

Mrs. G. B. Borradaile wishes to thank her friends for their kindness and sympathy in her recent bereavement.

The Mayor received a telegram from the Attorney-general yesterday appointing O. W. Kealy stipendiary magistrate.

The Medicine Hat Lumber & Manufacturing company are installing this week a big addition to their plant. A carload of heavy machinery was received last week, which the firm are now putting in and expect to have running in the course of a few days.

A new restaurant has been opened up on South Railway street, in the building lately occupied by C. E. Brougham in his tobacco and barber business. Wm. Hayes and W. J. Rahn, the proprietors, are both old timers in the restaurant business. Everything about the place is kept neat and clean, and a good table is being provided.

It is reported that M. C. Sackrider has secured the contract for the erection of W. B. Marshall's terrace on the hill at a price in the neighborhood of $15,000.

The Alberta Baptist association will hold their annual convention in Medicine Hat beginning on June 9. There will be 45 churches represented and each is entitled to send from 3 to 7 representatives.

The Dreamers, a German sect south of Irvine, are said to be in difficulties. One of them had his house burnt over his head on Sunday, and the police have gone out to round up the bunch.

A bad prairie fire is reported near Bowell on Sec. 20, 13, 7. It started from a match thrown in a manure heap and has burnt the stables and five horses of R. Loudon, meaning a loss of $2,300 to him.

The Arington Comedians drew a fair house last night. The music of the Polmatier Sisters was much enjoyed by those who went early. The play, too, was of a good quality. The company remains all week and should be liberally patronized.

W. T. Williams has sold out his candy store on South Railway street to W. H. Moore.

Charlie Watson left for Quebec yesterday. He expects to return with his bride Miss Constance Drum of that city, in the course of a few weeks. He has bought a house on the flats from F. S. Pingle.

Miers has been showing some beautiful sepia platinum photographs in his windows of late that have attracted a lot of attention and favorable comment. The pleasing brown tint and artistic mountings place them in a class by themselves.

All Oddfellows are invited to meet at Cochran's Hall at 19k sharp on Sunday April 26, for the purpose of attending the Anniversary service at the Presbyterian church. Members will please furnish themselves white gloves.

Mounted Police Notes.

Chief Veterinary Inspector Burnett of the R.N.W.M.P. was here Saturday, leaving the same afternoon for Maple Creek.

On Thursday the police received instructions from the Commissioner to look out for and arrest, if found, one J. Bowen Davies, who had been collecting subscriptions for the Canadian Courier in Saskatchewan. In the neighboring province he had lamboozled several people and it was suspected that he had come on to Medicine Hat.

On receipt of the message Corporal Humby set out to make enquiries and effected an arrest within a few hours. Davies had registered at the Cosmopolitan hotel (as J. Byron Davidson) on the 21st March and had since been living in the city. He refused to plead on Friday, but requested and was granted interviews with the Chief of Police and with the Rev. J. W. Morrow, who had paid him subscriptions for the Courier.

Davies appeared before Inspector Parker and Mr. D. Milne on Saturday and was prosecuted for frauds committed in Medicine Hat. It appeared that he had collected about $20 from local people on subscriptions for 'The Ladies' Home Journal and $12 for the Canadian Courier. He owned up to having converted to his own use all the money collected. He had "not as yet remitted any, but expected to do so some day."

Most of his receipts were signed "J. Byron Davidson." The subscriptions had been taken for the April issue; he could remit the money in time for the May number. E. M. Cawker and the police chief appeared as witnesses, Corp. Humby prosecuted.

On the first charge Davies (or Davidson) was sentenced to three months' hard labor in the guard room at Lethbridge and a similar term was imposed for the Canadian Courier fraud, the second to commence at the expiration of the first. The prisoner begged that the sentences be allowed to run concurrently. He was taken down to Lethbridge by Constable Murchison on Saturday.

Davidson was some years ago engaged on the staff of the Manitoba Free Press, and in the early days of western development fever toured through the prairie provinces on behalf of that paper and the Winnipeg Telegram. Some of the cleverest write-ups of western towns were by Davidson, Medicine Hat being one of his earliest, and his work has been without doubt, one of the important factors in the building up of the new Canada.

A few weeks ago he interviewed Commissioner Hall, with the object of getting another write-up for the Gas City.

Police Court News

Capital and labor came to blows last week in the persons of a couple of Celestials. Wing Sam had been employed for some time at the Chinese store on the corner of Railway and River streets. That was over a year ago. Last week he returned for the purpose of collecting $9.50, balance of wages owing to him, and as Der Yee, the storeman, was not amenable to reason, and chances of recovering the $9.50 by peaceful persuasion appeared remote, Wing Sam decided to clean up the debt in another way—if he couldn't recover his money he would have his pound of flesh. A scuffle in the catch-as-catch can style followed, Mr. Sam opening the first round in a valorous attempt to scratch the skin from his opponent's scalp. The following day proletarian and bourgeois appeared before the magistrate, and Wing Sam coughed up $10 and costs, which leaves him about $22 in the hole, though he no doubt considers the satisfaction he obtained cheap at the price.

Roland Tuck and Robert Brady, drunk and incapable, each fined $3 and costs. J. W. Morris and James Clynch, drunk and disorderly, each $3 and costs.

In spite of the efforts of the chief to put a stop to damage to the sidewalks, cases keep cropping up, nearly all in the same locality. Last week L. McCully was fined $1 and costs for driving over the sidewalk near A. P. Burns' lumber factory.

BACHELORS WORKING OUT.

The Bachelors are working out regularly now at the Ball Park and some fast ones are to be seen in the bunch. Pitchers Phillips and Green say the weather is a little chilly yet for the strenuous performance of "getting 'em over," but the warmer days which are fast approaching will find them "there with the goods."

To date the Hill Climbers have signed the following last year's players: Ward, Johnson, s.s.; Art. Finch, 3b.; Ed. Johnson, catcher; Jim Gilmore, 1b.; A. R. Gatenby, c.f.; P. Gatenby and the following new ones, Phillips, Green, pitchers; Hood, Reber, Ireland and Haines.

The City Baseball team has signed the following players: T. H. Navin, John H. Bell, J. C. Porter, Geo. N. Atkinson, Wm. B. Scott, Wilf. L. Vogan, Fred. S. Pingle, H. E. Bray, V. N. Anderson, Jas. Turpin, Jr., J. C. Hargrave, G. S. Bitton, E. V. Smith, A. M. Johns, Sam Harris, H. W. Cavan, Roy Martin, Dan Barker.

There will be a whirlwind game—the opener of the season—on Good Friday at 3 p.m. in the baseball grounds, for the benefit of the band. Music and ball and bawl will be served up in large doses. The City team will be 1b., Fred. S. Pingle; 2b., W. L. Vogan; 3b., Harry Bell; s.s., V. N. Anderson; r.f., J. C. Porter; c.f., T. H. Navin; l.f., G. N. Atkinson; c. W. Scott; p., D. Barker; spare J. Turpin, H. E. Bray, H. W. Cavan, Roy Martin.

Twenty-five cents will admit to grounds and ten cents to the grandstand. The game will start at 2.30 and the band will give a half hour's concert before the game.

DON'TS FOR LACROSSE PLAYERS.

(Vancouver World.)

A well known local lacrosse player who is content to remain hidden under the non de plume of "Local Player" has compiled a sort of Lacrosse player's catechism of "Don'ts," which have been forwarded to the sporting editor for publication. While the don'ts are not all new there is good sound advice in every one of the sub-joined paragraphs—advice that, if followed to the letter by good lacrosse players would result in a considerable improvement in the Canadian national game.

Being on the verge of the season, local players would do well to read, mark, learn and inwardly digest these suggestions and endeavor to live up to them. Here they are:

Don't start the season by doing too much strenuous work. Get into shape gradually.

Don't practice the game on practice nights with the sole object of improving your own play, but do all you can to assist other members of your team to improve theirs.

Don't practice one style of play. Remember there are different methods that can be introduced and its variety of play that counts.

Don't get into the habit of passing slow; put speed to the ball.

Don't wait too long to make a pass A moment late has lost many goals.

Don't pass the ball to a player if he is closely covered by his check, unless its a pass that he is sure to get.

Don't be slow in getting to free territory when you are looking for a pass.

When you are closely checked and have possession of the ball, don't make a pass if you think you will fumble it, better to hold it as long as you can, even till it's knocked out of your stick, than to give your opponents a chance to intercept. Keep it until someone relieves you.

Don't expect another player to run after the ball when it's out of play if he is farther away from it than you are. The player who is nearest to the ball should chase it. Circumstances to govern this rule; save each other's strength and wind as much as possible.

Don't forget that it pays sometimes to pass the ball back to the player who passed it to you, before passing to someone else. Many local players neglect to do this.

Don't think when you are up on the home and trying to score it's absolutely wrong to pass back in the direction of your own goal. Better to do this sometimes and bring other players into the play, than to try to pass the odd defence man.

Don't take too many chance shots on goal. Better to pass the ball and work it in by combination play and be sure of your work, than to waste time by erratic shots at the net. Some players like to stand away out from goal and blaze away into a network of lacrosse sticks but this is poor judgment.

Don't leave it to one or two players to do all the coaching or leave it all to them to tell where a player should pass the ball. Every player should act as a field captain in respect, if are near a player who is about to make a pass, and you can see where the ball could be placed to better advantage give him the signal. The Montreal Shamrocks point their sticks towards the player who should receive the ball. By practising this rule it will help to develop your judgment.

Don't if you are a home player, stand idle when the ball is out of your territory. You should take up some arranged position and be ready to change this position instantly when the ball comes your way.

Don't think if you are a defence player, you should always run back to your position after you have run up on the home field and delivered the ball to the home players. It counts sometimes to stay with the home and assist them to score, especially if you make an odd man. And to do this at times successfully, you must be a player with all round capabilities.

Don't go on the field with any intention of getting even with an opponent over some personal grudge. Remember dirty work makes a bad impression in the grandstand.

Don't be opposed to any new methods that are suggested that will improve the team. Co-operate with the team you are playing with and assist those who are trying to make it a success. See that the best men are picked to play your games and encourage in every way any promising player.

REGULATIONS FOR AUTOS.

The features of Mr. Sutherland's Automobile bill in Ontario are: No person shall for hire, pay or gain drive a motor vehicle on a public street or highway unless he is licensed so to do and no person shall employ anyone to drive a motor vehicle who is not so licensed.

Licenses are to be issued by the provincial secretary's department.

No person under the age of seventeen years shall drive a motor vehicle.

If an automobile meets a horse or horses, going in the opposite direction, and if the horses appear frightened, or if signaled so to do the driver shall stop the motor vehicle, including the motor, and shall remain stationary so long as may be necessary to allow such rider or driver to pass, or until directed to proceed, and in case any animal appears to be frightened the operator and any occupants of the motor vehicle shall render assistance to the driver of the animal.

On meeting a funeral procession outside the limits of the city, the driver of a motor vehicle is to stop, and, where practicable, turn into any intersecting street, road or lane until the funeral procession has passed.

Provision is made for persons sustaining loss or injury, upon giving notice in writing.

NEEPAWA MAN ADMITTED THEFT.

Portage La Prairie, April 7.—Arthur Goule was brought back from Medicine Hat to Neepawa by Constable Johnson yesterday, on a charge of theft. He admitted to the Constable that he took $45 and $450 in notes from Wm. Gerrie as charged, and burned the purse and notes before leaving Neepawa. He was arraigned before Magistrate McGill and sent down to Portage la Prairie for trial. Constable Johnston brought him to Portage la Prairie today.

Half-Hour Gardening

MANY CROPS FROM THE SAME GROUND.

The reason even a tiny patch will furnish vegetables for a family throughout the season is that new seeds can be dropped into the furrows as fast as the matured vegetables are taken for use. The only precaution that is necessary is to put in a little fertilizer each time. Of course this fertilize must be fine stuff. Fresh manure will burn the roots, and also breed root maggots and worms.

A wise precaution is not to let vegetables of the same family follow each other in the same ground. For instance, if you take beans out of a place, put lettuce, or something similar in. This is because plants of the same family exhaust all of a certain kind of nutriment from the soil.

A good plan for succession is to make a first planting of radishes, lettuce, beets, beans, peas, tomatoes, parsnips and carrots. When the radishes and lettuce are used up plant that ground to a middle season variety of corn. Let summer lettuce follow the beans and peas. Follow the beets with egg plant or cauliflower, or drop in seeds of lima beans. The carrots and parsnips stay late, so their rows will be in use. Cabbage may be planted late between the tomato plants, as the latter will be out in time to give the cabbage a chance to head.

In selecting seed, remember that nowadays all good seedsmen carry seeds for early growing, mid-season and late varieties of almost all ordinary garden vegetables. Therefore be sure to select early varieties for the first planting. After the first crop is out sow the mid-season kinds and follow these with late sorts.

Some seedsmen put up "succession packages." Use these if possible.

If you wish you can plant a few rows of very early corn and follow this crop with beans or peas. You can also follow your early crop of lettuce or radishes with middle season corn. If you have room, however, don't plant corn in the vegetable patch proper. Give it a patch of its own, where you can put the plants widely apart, thus giving them their best conditions. If you wish, you can plant squash between the hills of corn.

Remember that root crops like beets, radishes and carrots should not go into freshly manured ground. Radishes, especially, will be almost certain of destruction either from rot, grubs or maggots in freshly manured soil.

THE GARDEN SAVINGS BANK

The garden savings bank is the compost heap. It pays more than compound interest. Most people with small plots feel that they cannot afford to have such a heap, because they have not room enough to hide it away. As a matter of fact the compost heap can be made an attractive part of the garden corner, because in its very nature it offers the most tempting sort of a place for vines and other bush and rank growths, and thus can be so thoroughly hidden that it will never be suspected.

The first thing that the amateur gardener should learn is that every scrap of vegetable refuse thrown away is actual money wasted, for sooner or later the garden will need plant food, and when you come to buy it in the form of chemical fertilizer, you will discover too late that even a small garden will use up $5 worth and hardly show it.

The best compost heap is made in a pit. One two feet square and even less, and three or feet deep will be ample for the average garden. Line and floor it roughly with old boards if you can. Such a pit is not absolutely necessary, but if you have no pit you will have to spade the kitchen refuse under, or limit your heap to garden refuse entirely, in which latter case you will lose some of the best fertilizing material.

The first offering from your garden this spring will probably be sod that you break up when making flower beds. This sod must under no circumstances be turned under in the beds. The roots will simply make new grass and bother you all the season. Throw the sod, roots up, in the place selected for the compost heap. If you have no pit, you can lay the first sods in a circle to make the foundation and wall for the heap.

Don't let a single blade of grass, a single flower or weed stem go anywhere except to the heap. All litter, even old paper and bits of wood, go there. At intervals they can be burned, which will give the heap the added value of ashes.

As the garden refuse goes on the pile, pound it down with the spade. This will hurry decomposition.

If weeds go on, always burn the seed heads. A little quick lime now and then is good.

You can raise splendid pumpkins and watermelon around the compost heap. Morning glory hop vines and honeysuckle will thrive there and cover it in a few months. While the vines are growing, the pile can be hidden by brush wood, which will afterwards serve as welcome support for the vines.

TO GET FLOWERS THE FIRST SEASON.

A decided fault in most seed catalogues is the fact that they do not always tell the amateur whether or not certain seeds will produce flowering plants the same season they are planted.

Speaking generally, the only plants that will produce flowers in the summer from seeds planted in the spring are the annuals. These can be sown in the open ground between early April and late May, will flower during the summer and autumn and then die.

Biennials are plants that are sown one year and come up the next. They too, die after flowering.

Perennials are plants that withstand the winter and live many years. Some of them live practically forever. They may be raised from seed, but rarely bloom the first year. It is best to buy root stocks or growing plants and set them out in the spring or the fall, if one wants a perennial garden.

For early spring bloom the hardy perennial or biennial is always the best. If you are making a new garden this year it will be wise to dismiss all thought of early bloom. You can obtain it in a much more satisfactory manner by buying potted plants, such as pansies, tulips, etc., and burying the pots in the beds while you are waiting for the seeds of later flowering kinds to come up.

Select seeds of varieties that will flower late in June and in the following months. Then in the fall you can sow early flowering biennials and put in bulbs and root stocks for the bloom in the following spring.

Of course, there are exceptions to the general rule laid down here. Every year horticulture is producing new varieties of old species. For instance, it is possible now to get a hollyhock seed that will flower the first season. The old-fashioned hollyhocks did not flower until the year after they were sown. Reliable seedsmen will always be willing to tell purchasers if certain seeds will not produce plants flowering the same season. Therefore, in selecting seeds of varieties unknown to you, be sure to inquire before purchasing.

EASIEST FLOWERS TO RAISE FROM SEED.

Experimenting is one of the delights of gardening, and there is no reason why you should not do it, even if you are making your first garden this spring. Do not, however, try the experiment on the places on which you depend for your main garden spots. Plant only things that you can rely on there, and put the doubtful things into corners that wont disappoint you by their barrenness during the year if the experiment fails.

Some of the flowers that are practically sure and have the further advantage of being practically free from insect enemies, are sweet pea, morning glory, nasturtium, phlox, golden glow, calliopsis, petunias, zinnia, marigolds, four o'clocks, sunflowers and verbenas.

Plant these either in beds or borders. The more simple the shape of your beds is, the easier it will be kept in order. Fancy designs seem easy enough to keep in shape when the season is young. But as soon as grass weeds and flowers begin to get strong and thick you will have a daily job of shipping, spading, digging and edging on your hands. Make your beds with simple edgings, either straight lines or bold, simple, curves.

Plant a lot of one kind, rather than many different kinds with only a few specimens of each. This is advised not only on account of the superior color effects gained by massing flowers of the same tint, but because flowers of different kinds have different habits, and those with heavy foliage will so crowd others that the latter will try to escape by shooting up till they stand tall and spindly, looking sadly out of place.

For bold masses to hide undigntly backgrounds or to make backgrounds plant sunflowers, golden glow or castor bean. Use root cuttings or growing plants for the golden glow if you want to be sure of flowers the first year.

PREPARING FOR TOMATOES.

Now is the time to make your tomato supports. Do not leave this till the young plants are set out, because at that time your garden will need all your time, and tomato plants must have adequate support as soon as they are planted.

Don't trust to makeshifts. The tomato is a heavy plant and the breaking down of its support during a rain storm may ruin all chances of a good crop.

Every tomato grower has his extremely well fixed ideas of what is the best support. The purpose of every form of support is to keep the tomato on the ground and permit the sunlight to reach every fruit on the vine. Any support that will achieve this will answer.

Remember that the tomato is a tropical plant. Its season here, is short. It must ripen quickly. Therefore, the more sun you assure it the better.

The most simple form of support is made of four stout stakes, of a square about a foot each way. Slats are nailed from stake to stake and the tomato is trained over those. They are good and anybody can make them. But they do not force the tomato to expand sufficiently, and this permits the foliage to hide some of the fruit.

If there is plenty of space a good frame for each plant can be made by nailing about half a dozen slats over a frame about 18 inches or 2 feet square. Lay this frame on top of four stakes that are driven into the earth so that the frame will not be much more than six or eight inches above the ground. Let the tomato clamber over this frame.

It will thus spread out and the sun is bound to touch every part of it. Each fruit will not only be fully exposed to the sun, but in addition, it will lie on the framework and thus there will be no danger of its breaking off. Another advantage is that if it does not ripen evenly (a prevalent trouble with tomatoes) it can be turned while still on the plant—much better than the ordinary method of taking it off and laying it some where where the sun will reach the unripened part.

TO START PLANTS INDOORS.

Sowing flower seeds indoors has three great advantages. The plants can be started months earlier than in an outdoor garden. They grow stocky and strong because they have warmth and sunlight, and need not struggle for existence. They are protected against the driving rains that wash out a large proportion of tender young plants that grow from seed outdoors.

Most amateurs are afraid of tackling an indoor seed bed because they do not realize how simple the work is and how many plants can be raised in a small box.

A plant box no larger than the top of a kitchen table, and four inches deep, will grow seedling plants enough to fill 200 square feet of garden, that is far more than enough for the ordinary border garden for the side of a small house. In a seed box 4 feet by 1½ feet, 768 plants were started. After thinning, 380 remained for transplanting.

Broken flower pots or other porous stuff is scattered thinly on the bottom of this box which is then filled with finely sifted garden mould. Fertilizer is not needed unless the earth is very poor indeed. As a matter of fact, fertilizer encourages the plants too much, for what you want in the indoor seed bed is slow, sturdy growth.

If you want to be sure to kill all weed seeds, so that the tender plants will not need to be disturbed by weeding when they come on, the earth can be baked in the oven before it is put in. Place the box in a sunny window, southwest preferred. Tilt it slightly so that the surplus water will run off to one corner, where you can place a receptacle to catch it. There should not, however, be much of this, for you should water only enough to keep the soil throughly moist.

Smooth the earth thoroughly by scraping it with the edge of a straight board. Then pack it down by patting it smartly with the flat side of the board, bearing your weight on it. When it is all very level and even, lay any straight-edged slat across the box for a ruler and with a little stick draw tiny furrows 1½ inches apart. Press the seeds into these furrows about ½ inch apart. When the plants have all made their appearance, thin them out to about 1½ inches apart.

Be sure to give them all the sun you can. Keep the window shades up to the very top. The more sun they get, the less will they try to shoot up to height before their time.

Excessive heat is harmful. Keep the seed bed away from direct artificial heat.

If you seed such a box about fifty days before you expect to transplant your plants will be just about right when the time comes. They will then be strong enough and large enough, and yet they will not have become so large that they will have begun to suffer from being so closely crowded.

COMMON THINGS TO SAVE.

Soot from the kitchen chimney and from the furnace smoke pipe; finely sifted coal ashes; soap suds, cigar stumps and pipe ashes; waste paper, excelsior and similar stuff—all these are of the greatest use for the garden.

The soot is invaluable, both as a food for plants and as a destroyer of grubs. Sprinkled around rose bushes etc., it will save hours of insect fighting later, besides enriching the roots of the plant.

Well sifted coal ashes are excellent as loosening material for clayey soil that is too dense. They also convey a share of chemical plant food to the roots. They are highly obnoxious to earth-inhabiting grubs.

Soap suds will discourage caterpillars, rose aphis and scores of other bugs. Applied in a thick lather to the stems and leaves, they will often make it unnecessary to resort to the more heroic remedies such as kerosene emulsion.

Cigar stumps, etc., will make the best sort of tobacco mixture, one of the leading applications for plants infested with such smaller parasites as rose lice, etc. Bought from dealers, extract of tobacco costs 30 cents a pint.

Paper, excelsior, etc., will furnish wood ashes, and wood ashes are among the most valuable fertilizers—so valuable that every garden should be dressed with them at odd times. Dealers charge more than two cents a pound for it. (Most paper is wood pulp).

What is the best way to save all this?

Keep a barrel in the cellar, into which every scrap of combustible waste is thrown. When it is full, have a bonfire. Keep a covered box for every bit of soot.

Keep old buckets, paint kegs or other water-tight receptacles either in the cellar or a corner of the garden where you can cover them with a board. Into one throw all the cigar stumps, etc., and keep it full of water. Into another have the soap suds dumped often enough to keep it full, so that you will always have some the very moment you want it.

If you have another receptacle into which dishwater is thrown you will find it the best of liquid fertilizer already made. It is splendid to put around plants that appear to need some food. The soapiness of the dishwater will be an added advantage, not a detriment.

It may seem unnecessary to keep soap suds handy; but you will often see insects on your plants when you haven't the time to mix anything to kill them. If the soap suds are all ready, it will take you only a moment to get rid of the enemy.

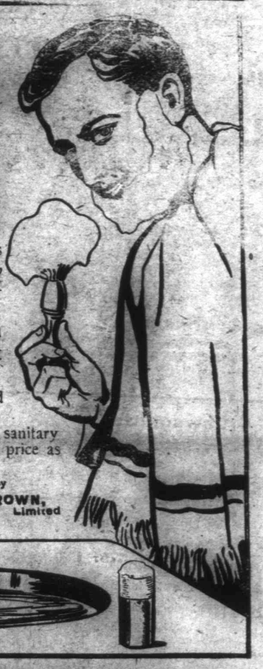
GET OFF THE LINE.

A neighborhood not far from here,
Put in a telephone last year.
The farmers built a rural line;
The instruments all talked up fine;
Every neighbor had his call—
Turn the crank and that was all.
All you had to do was ring.
Every bell went ting-a-ling.
One for Swanson, one for Boggs,
Long and short for old man Scroggs
Every time the signal rang.
To the phone each farmer sprang
Slyly grinned and softly took
The receiver from the hook;
Slapped his leg and said, "I swan,
Telephones are lots of fun."
Mighty nice when work was through
To gossip for an hour or two
With your neighbors, one by one,
Mighty nice, but lots of fun.
To overhear some other two
Telling what was not for you.
Somehow in a week or two
Troubles dark begin to brew.
Farmer Jones got fighting hot,
Heard Scroggs calling him a sot;
Farmer Brown seemed angry, too,
Heard Smith telling what he knew,
Smith heard Johnson telling lies—
Paid him off with two black eyes;
Johnson heard young Ezra Boggs
Under bid him on some hogs;
Ezra heard some sneaking churl
Making love with his best girl.
Women, too, were in a muss;
Raised the most outrageous fuss,
Everyone from Scroggs to Jones,
In glass houses throwing stones,
Twenty friends are deadly foes,
Each too mad to speak a word
Because of things they overheard.

CONSTIPATION.

Although generally described as a disease, can never exist unless some of the organs are deranged, which is generally found to be the liver. It consists of an inability to regularly evacuate the bowels, and as a regular action of the bowels is absolutely essential to general health, the least irregularity should never be neglected.

MILBURN'S
LAXA-LIVER PILLS



have no equal for relieving and curing Constipation, Biliousness, Water Brash, Heartburn, and all Liver Troubles.

Mr. A. B. Betts, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—For some years past I was troubled with chronic constipation and bilious headaches. I tried nearly everything, but only got temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Laxa-Liver Pills, and they cured me completely.

Price 25 cents per box, or 5 boxes for $1.00, all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price.

ONLY A Common Cold

BUT IT BECOMES A SERIOUS MATTER IF NEGLECTED. PNEUMONIA, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CATARRH or CONSUMPTION IS THE RESULT.

Get rid of it at once by taking

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

Obstinate coughs yield to its grateful soothing action, and in the racking, persistent cough, often present in Consumptive cases, it gives prompt and sure relief. In Asthma and Bronchitis it is a successful remedy, rendering breathing easy and natural, enabling the sufferer to enjoy refreshing sleep, and often effecting a permanent cure.

We do not claim that it will cure Consumption in the advanced stages, but if taken in time it will prevent it reaching that stage, and will give the greatest relief to the poor sufferer from this terrible malady.

Be careful when purchasing to see that you get the genuine Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark.

Mr. Wm. O. Jenkins, Spring Lake, Alta., writes: "I had a very bad cold settled on my lungs. I bought two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup but it only required one to cure me. I have never met with any other medicine as good."

Price 25 cts., at all dealers.

Lawsonitis.

Lawson has been at it again. And again he has carried to a successful completion the thing he wanted to pawn on the public.

For three or four years Lawson has given a public demonstration of what a big fool the public is. First, in Frenzied Fianance he made thousands for himself and Everybody's magazine, and nothing but distrust for the public. He got the ordinary investor and the every day reader so wrought up over his spectacular revelations that Lawson was placed in the same class as General Booth and other great workers for humanity. It was no use for sensible men to point out that Lawson, the Defender of the Public, was the same man who was deeply steeped in the thing he was decrying, that his revelations only went to a certain point, that every new scandal concluded with "Sell Copper" or buy something else.

And the people bought and brought to pass just what he predicted, never thinking that they were simply making his prophecies true, as he intended.

Lawson's "Frenzied Fianance" was nothing but a manipulation of the market. It was only one of the thousands of schemes emanating from Wall street, designed to bring money to some broker's pockets. In the meantime Lawson was a little God among the people. He was undoubtedly clever, but the evidences of honesty were so few to people who refused to be blown along that the enthusiastic mob presented the appearance of the street corner crowd that pays a good fifty cent piece for a counterfeit dollar bill.

Then when Lawson had effected his ends, (only Providence, Lawson and Amalgamated Copper know exactly what they were) he spurned the public out of his mouth. He came out in his true light and the list of epithets he applied to the poor confiding public was enough to warrant them in hating the name of Lawson for ever.

But not so. Lawson had always shown his knowledge of that fluctuating body, the people, even after an open amalgamation with the people he had been "exposing," after laughing openly at his dupes—and only a few months after—he is willing to spend $100,000 in advertising to that public he had recently turned down.

And what has he to sell? Gold mining stock! Not another man in the world would dare push such stock at long range. Lawson simply sits in his office on Wall street, wires most of the big dailies of America and Europe, pours out his money in big spaces for three days and on the fourth boosts onto an excited gullible public that biggest fake of his career—Yukon gold stock. The people tumble over themselves to throw their hard-earned money when cash is at a premium, into the most ridiculous of all investment. Lawson cutely connects the name of Guggenheim with the stock, and the "Guggs" have made so much out of mining.

Result: The stock Lawson had advised to buy at not less than 5 and not over 7.50 was kept strictly within the limits of the prices, and all bought and most of it re-sold. The curbstone market in New York took all the interest from the stock exchange on that Red Letter day for Lawson.

And it certainly made a fortune for the man who has so long used the people to make his money. It developed that the Guggenheims had never given Lawson orders to sell this stock, but had entrusted it to Trippe & Co., at $5 per share. The latter had turned it over to Lawson to dispose of for them, and almost every cent made over $5 went to Lawson. There were 700,000 shares and the average profit per share was more than $1. A rather neat little sum to pull from the public, when it is considered that every cent of the price was speculative, that every cent was profit to someone and money out of the pockets of the public. Lawson cleverly set the price in his ads.—he might have set it at $50 for that matter.

The smoothest rogue is the one who gulls the great hard working public. And there is no limit to the number of times the same man can use the same schemes to fool the same public. It looks as if a man can fool some of the people all the time.

Later reports bring the natural sequel to the Lawsonitis microbe. The Yukon Gold stock fell last week to 4¾.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Ald. Forster informs The Times that last week's issue of The Times reported him wrongly as saying that he favored a location for the gas well about 150 yards on the city side from Purmal's. The alderman states that this was directly opposed to his views as he moved an amendment to the adoption of the committee's report, with the object of drilling the well as far from Purmal's well as possible.

J. L. Manwaring, editor of The Lethbridge News, has brought a charge of graft against Ald. Cunningham in connection with the purchase of 1500 feet of hose last year. A move like that is inclined to make the aldermen more careful in their dealings with the agents of companies trying to sell things to the city.

There are some very interesting incidents coming to light at Ottawa. One of the latest is in connection with the notorious Marine and Fisheries department concerning which the Civil Service commission brought down such a severe report, and whose reckless extravagance was checked by the three days' sitting forced by the Opposition.

The government had hired a tug on the St. Lawrence at $80 a day, the owner to find the fuel and the crew and to operate the vessel. Then this tug was dropped and one was hired belonging to Merwin, the middleman who has made so much out of the government. The contract required the government to pay $25 a day for the tug, which was smaller than the old one. The government had also to supply the fuel, to pay and feed the crew, and to pay for all repairs. In 147 days the hire alone amounted to $3,675. Merwin had paid $3,700 for the tug in the first place. Thus Merwin bought the tug for $3,700, rented to the government for one season for $3,675 and had all repairs done for him. At the end of the season he owned the tug, in much improved condition, and had received all but $25 of the entire cost from the government.

There's certainly something wrong with the price we are receiving for our debentures. Other cities in less favorable circumstances are getting good prices, but somehow we can't get above 92. Edmonton has sold $900,000 worth at 96, and these have been resold on the English market at 101. It's too bad we cannot wait to sell ours on the English market direct.

The fortunes of the mail order house are not always enviable. A Winnipeg house of this description failed a few weeks ago and scattered all over the country are trusting people who sent their good money and received nothing in return.

Eaton is always trying to get his advertisements into the larger western papers. A great many are carrying his ads., but The Times has steadfastly refused, although there is a good rate and prompt pay. Both residents of this city and Eaton's themselves have been urging The Times to carry these ads. As there is one line of business in the city that persistently combines to keep out of The Times' columns no one could blame this paper for carrying advertising of Eaton's in that line, especially as the refusal of the merchants of this line is not for business reasons.

The latest venture in the journalistic field is "The Queen Charlotte News," a weekly newspaper published in the interests of Queen Charlotte Islands. These islands are sixty miles west of Prince Rupert and one hundred and forty miles northwest of Vancouver Island. The paper is at present published in Victoria, B.C., but the next issue will come from the Islands. These islands, which will be new to most people, contain about four thousand square miles, of which two hundred thousand acres are agricultural and one hundred and fifty thousand mineral.

Everybody who cares is busy on his lawn and garden. There are going to be many more attractive lawns in 1908 than there were in 1907, the possessors of good lawns last year having been the envy of the man who was previously satisfied to retain a piece of prairie for his front yard. Some are drawing loam for an upper coating in order to assure fine grass at the start.

Health the Fetish of the Swedes

"Health is the fetish of the Swedish soul"—thus the writer of a striking paper in the current issue of "World's Work." Here are some of the interesting facts he has compiled concerning the means adopted by the Swedes to make them what they are at present—the healthiest nation in the world:

With the Swedes exercise, gymnastic exercise, not mere walking, is a religion. The very criminals under sentence must have it, and therefore full instructions for daily gymnastics are posted even in the condemned cell. As soon would they think of depriving a malefactor of his Bible as of his day's "order." Grown folk must have it, and therefore gymnasiums spring up as thick as mushrooms. The children must have it, therefore when the state has done all it can for them, physically, private associations take them up. Free skating rinks and toboggan slides—even free toboggans and skates for the skateless—are provided, less with the end of giving the children joy than of promoting that fetish of the Swedish soul—public health. Associations for outdoor games take charge of the public playgrounds, organizing so-called pedagogic games that are not only uproarious fun but develop swiftness, precision and nerve. With government aid, these societies send teachers of games to all the common schools and the children are turned loose in the open air every day for a short romp. We use these Swedish games in our gymnasiums and in such of the public schools as can command the space. Why not use them out-of-doors and make them universal.

The Swedish government itself takes splendid care of the muscles of its little citizens. Every school child in the kingdom is under bonds to learn to swim, unless, as is rarely the case, the schoolhouse is too far from any water.

As for the formal gymnastics in Swedish schools, it is a very serious affair; for it is body building. The bodies of English boys and girls are not "built," they just grow.

The rugged children of Sweden are a convincing recommendation of the national method. In agility, poise and grace, to say nothing of physical stamina, they are far in advance of our school children. A bigger investment in scientific physical training in the schools would pay dividends in the shape of a steadier nervous organization, a sounder physique.

When a Swede has got his body built, he does not leave off there. What the club is to an English business man, the gymnasium is to the Swede. He takes exercise suited to his age to keep him in condition; or if not up to the mark, puts into the nearest gymnasium for repairs. The movement cure and massage—these are his substitutes for drugs. Headaches, liver complaints, nerves, dyspepsia, are all treated, at least partially, by active or passive gymnastics.

Medical gymnastics after the Swedish mode are more and more coming into favor with English physicians. But middle-aged English people have a lot to learn about the therapeutic value of exercise. It keeps off fatty degeneration; it cleans skins, their fresh color, their freedom from surplus weight. Look at their mortality rate—the lowest in the civilized world!

Not a Miracle But Medical Science

Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited,
Toronto, Ont.

Gentlemen:—

"Some time ago I began to lose flesh and failed every day until I had to quit work. My physicians and all my friends said I had contracted consumption. I failed from 165 pounds down to 119. I was advised to go to the Rockies or to the coast. I went to both places under heavy expense. I continued to fail, and was advised by the doctors to come home as nothing more could be done for me. Hope seemed to have left me.

"I tried Psychine and since starting its use I have gained from 119 to 141 pounds. I have used $10.00 worth of the medicine. I am a well man and I cannot say too much in praise of Psychine. The strongest recommendation would be weak in view of the fact that I believe it has saved my life. It is without doubt the best remedy for run-down conditions and weak lungs.

"I sincerely hope and trust that you will continue your good work of saving run down people and consumptive from the grave. Wishing you and Psychine continued success, I remain, one of Psychine's best friends."

ALEX. McRAE,

Almost every mail brings us letters like the above. Psychine will repeat this record in every case. It is the greatest medicine known. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN

Author of "The Sowers," "Flotsam's Corner," "From One Generation to Another," Etc.

Copyright, 1904, by Harper & Brothers

"Are you going to be married tomorrow?" repeated Oscard, standing quite still, with a calmness that frightened her.

"Yes," she answered, rather feebly.

She knew that she could explain it all. She could have explained it to either of them separately, but to both together, somehow it was difficult. Her mind was filled with clamoring arguments and explanations and plausible excuses, but she did not know which to select first. None of them seemed quite equal to this occasion. These men required something deeper and stronger and simpler than she had to offer them.

Moreover, she was paralyzed by a feeling that was quite new to her—a horrid feeling that something had gone from her. She had lost her strongest, her single arm—her beauty. This seemed to have fallen from her. It seemed to count for nothing at this time. There is a time that comes as surely as death will come in the life of every beautiful woman—a time wherein she suddenly realizes how trivial a thing her beauty is; how limited, how useless, how ineffectual!

Millicent Chyne made a little appealing movement toward Meredith, who relentlessly stepped back. It was the magic of the love that filled his heart for Oscard. Had she wronged any man in the world but Guy Oscard, that little movement, full of love and tenderness and sweet contrition, might have saved her. But it was Oscard's heart that she had broken; for broken they both knew it to be, and Jack Meredith stepped back from her touch as from pollution. His superficial, imagined love for her had been killed at a single blow. Her beauty was no more to him at that moment than the beauty of a picture.

"Oh, Jack!" she gasped; and had there been another woman in the room that woman would have known that Millicent loved him with the love that comes once only. But men are not very acute in such matters; they either read wrong or not at all.

"It is all a mistake," she said breathlessly, looking from one to the other.

"A most awkward mistake," suggested Meredith, with a cruel smile that made her wince.

"Mr. Oscard must have mistaken me altogether," the girl went on, volubly addressing herself to Meredith; she wanted nothing from Oscard. "I may have been silly, perhaps, or merely ignorant and blind. How was I to know that he meant what he said?"

"How, indeed?" agreed Meredith, with a grave bow.

"Besides, he has no business to come here bringing false accusations against me. He has no right—it is cruel and ungentlemanly. He cannot prove anything; he cannot say that I ever distinctly gave him to understand—er—anything—that I ever promised to be engaged or anything like that."

She turned upon Oscard, whose demeanor was stolid, almost dense. He looked very large and somewhat difficult to move.

"He has not attempted to do so yet," suggested Jack suavely, looking at his friend.

"I do not see that it is quite a question of proofs," said Oscard quietly in a voice that did not sound like his at all. "We are not in a court of justice, where ladies like to settle these questions now. If we were I could challenge you to produce my letters. There is no doubt of my meaning in them."

"There are also my poor contributions to your collection," chimed in Jack Meredith. "A comparison must have been interesting to you, by the same mail presumably, under the same postmark."

"I made no comparison," the girl cried defiantly; "there was no question of comparison."

She said it shamelessly, and it hurt Meredith more than it hurt Guy Oscard, for whom the sting was intended.

"Comparison or no comparison," said Jack Meredith quickly, with the keenness of a good fencer who has been touched, "there can be no doubt of the fact that you were engaged to us both at the same time. You told us both to go out and make a fortune wherewith to buy your affections. One can only presume that the highest bidder—the owner of the largest fortune—was to be the happy man. Unfortunately, we became partners, and—such was the power of your fascination—we made the fortune, but we share and share alike in that. We are equal, so far as the price is concerned. The situation is interesting and rather amusing. It is your turn to move. We await your further instructions in considerable suspense."

She stared at him with bloodless lips. She did not seem to understand what he was saying. At last she spoke, ignoring Guy Oscard's presence altogether.

"Considering that we are to be married tomorrow, I do not think that you should speak to me like that," she said, with a strange, concentrated eagerness.

"Pardon me, we are not going to be married tomorrow."

Her brilliant teeth closed on her lower lip with a snap, and she stood looking at him, breathing so hard that the sound was almost a sob.

"What do you mean?" she whispered hoarsely.

He raised his shoulders in polite surprise at her dullness of comprehension.

"In the unfortunate circumstances in which you are placed," he explained, "it seems to me that the least one can do is to offer every assistance in one's power. Please consider me hors de concours. In a word—I scratch."

She gasped like a swimmer swimming for life. She was fighting for that which some deem dearer than life—namely, her love. For it is not only the good women who love, though these understand it best and see further into it.

"Then you can never have cared for me!" she cried. "All that you have told me"—and her eyes flashed triumphantly across Oscard—"all that you have promised and vowed was utterly false if you turn against me at the first word of a man who was carried away by his own vanity into thinking things that he had no business to think."

If Guy Oscard was no great adept at wordy warfare, he was at all events strong in his reception of punishment. He stood upright and quiescent, betraying by neither sign nor movement that her words could hurt him.

"I beg to suggest again," said Jack composedly, "that Oscard has not yet brought any accusations against you. You have brought them all yourself."

"You are both cruel and cowardly," she exclaimed, suddenly descending to vituperation. "Two to one. Two men—gentlemen—against one defenseless girl. Of course I am not able to argue with you. Of course you can get the best of me. It is so easy to be sarcastic."

"I do not imagine," retorted Jack, "that anything that we can say or do will have much permanent power of hurting you. For the last two years you have been engaged in an—intrigue such as a thin skinned or sensitive person would hardly of her own free will undertake. You may be able to explain it to yourself—no doubt you are—but to our more limited comprehensions it must remain inexplicable. We can only judge from appearances."

"And, of course, appearances go against me. They always do against a woman," she cried rather brokenly.

"You would have been wise to have taken that peculiarity into consideration sooner," reulled Jack Meredith coldly. "I admit that I am puzzled. I cannot quite get at your motive. Presumably it is one of those sweet feminine inconsistencies which are so charming in books."

There was a little pause. Jack Meredith waited politely to hear if she had anything further to say. His clean cut face was quite pallid. The suppressed anger in his eyes was perhaps more difficult to meet than open fury. The man who never forgets himself before a woman is likely to be an absolute master of women.

"I think," he added, "that there is nothing more to be said."

There was a dead silence. Millicent Chyne glanced toward Guy Oscard. He could have saved her yet by a simple lie. Had he been an impossibly magnanimous man, such as one meets in books only he could have explained that the mistake was all his, that she was quite right that his own vanity had blinded him into a great and unwarranted presumption. But, unfortunately, he was only a human being, a man who was ready to give as full a measure as he exacted. The unfortunate mistake to which he clung was that the same sense of justice, the same code of honor, must serve for men and women alike. So Millicent Chyne looked in vain for that indulgence which is so inconsistently offered to women, merely because they are women, the indulgence which is sometimes given and sometimes withheld, according to the softness of the masculine heart and the beauty of the supplant feminine form. Guy Oscard was quite sure of his own impressions. This girl had allowed him to begin loving her, had encouraged him to go on, had led him to believe that his love was returned. And in his simple ignorance of the world he did not see why these matters should be locked up in his own breast from a mistaken sense of chivalry to be accorded where no chivalry was due.

"No," he answered. "There is nothing more to be said."

Without looking toward her, Jack Meredith made a few steps toward the door—quietly, self composedly, with that perfect savoir faire of the social expert that made him different from other men. Millicent Chyne felt a sudden plebeian desire to scream. It was all so heartlessly well bred. He turned on his heel with a little half cynical bow.

"I leave my name with you," he said. "It is probable that you will be put to some inconvenience. I can only regret that this—denouement did not come some months ago. You are likely to suffer more than I, because I do not care what the world thinks of me. Therefore you may tell the world what you choose about me—that I drink, that I gamble, that I am lacking in—honor! Anything that suggests itself to you, in fact. You need not go away; I will do that."

She listened with compressed lips and heaving shoulders, and the bitterest drop in her cup was the knowledge that he despised her. During the last few minutes he had said and done nothing that lowered him in her estimation—that touched in any way her love for him. He had not lowered himself in any way, but he had suavely trodden her under foot. His last words—the inexorable intention of going away—sapped her last lingering hope. She could never regain even a tithe of his affection.

"I think," he went on, "that you will agree with me in thinking that Guy Oscard's name must be kept out of this entirely. I give you carte blanche except that."

With a slight inclination of the head he walked to the door. It was characteristic of him that although he walked slowly he never turned his head nor paused.

Oscard followed him with the patient apathy of the large and mystified.

And so they left her—amid the disorder of the half unpacked wedding presents—amid the ruin of her own life. Perhaps, after all, she was not wholly bad. Few people are; they are only bad enough to be wholly unsatisfactory and quite incomprehensible. She must have known the risk she was running, and yet she could not stay her hand. She must have known long before that she really loved Jack Meredith, and that she was playing fast and loose with the happiness of her whole life. She knew that hundreds of girls around her were doing the same, and, with all shame be it mentioned, not a few married women. But they seemed to be able to carry it through without accident or hindrance. And illogically, thoughtlessly, she blamed her own ill fortune.

"You need not go away; I will do that."

She stood looking blankly at the door which had closed behind three men, one old and two young, and perhaps she realized the fact that such creatures may be led blindly, helplessly, with a single hair, but that that hair may snap at any moment.

She was not thinking of Guy Oscard. Him she had never loved. He had only been one of her experiments, and by his very simplicity, above all, by his uncompromising honesty, he had outwitted her.

It was characteristic of her that at that moment she scarcely knew the weight of her own remorse. It sat lightly on her shoulders then, and it was only later on, when her beauty began to fade, when years came and brought no joy for the middle aged unmarried woman, that she began to realize what it was that she had to carry through life with her. At that moment a thousand other thoughts filled her mind; such thoughts as one would expect to find there. How was the world to be deceived? The guests would have to be put off, the wedding countermanded, the presents returned. And the world—her world—would laugh in its sleeve. There lay the sting.

"Where are you going?" asked Meredith when they were in the street.

"Home."

They walked on a few paces together.

"May I come with you?" asked Meredith again.

"Certainly; I have a good deal to tell you."

They called a cab, and, singularly enough, they drove all the way to Russell square without speaking. These two men had worked together for many months, and men who have a daily task in common usually learn to perform it without much interchange of observation. When one man gets to know the mind of another, conversation assumes a place of secondary importance. These two had been through more incidents together than usually fall to the lot of man; each knew how the other would act and think under given circumstances; each knew what the other was thinking now.

The house in Russell square, the quiet house in the corner where the cabs do not pass, was lighted up and astir when they reached it. The old butler held open the door with a smile of welcome and a faint aroma of whisky. The luggage had been discreetly removed. Joseph had gone to Mr. Meredith's chambers. Guy Oscard led the way to the smoking room at the back of the house—the room wherein the eccentric Oscard had written his great history—the room in which Victor Durnovo had first suggested the almiacine scheme to the historian's son.

The two survivors of the originating trio passed into this room together and closed the door behind them.

"The worst of one's own private tragedies is that they are usually only comedies in disguise," said Jack Meredith oracularly.

Guy Oscard grunted. He was looking for his pipe.

"If we heard this of any two fellows except ourselves we should think it an excellent joke," went on Meredith.

Oscar nodded. He lighted his pipe, and still he said nothing.

"Hang it," exclaimed Jack Meredith, suddenly throwing himself back in his chair, "it is a good joke!"

He laughed softly, and all the while his eyes, watchful, wise, anxious, were studying Guy Oscard's face.

"He is harder hit than I am," he was reflecting. "Poor old Oscard!"

Uncle Sam.

Those who read the daily papers will have noted that Englishman are said to be the least welcome immigrants to Canada. This must come as a surprise to everyone, for it has always been an article of our national faith to believe that John Bull comes second to no one, whether European, American or Asiatic, is there any real ground for this faith we have in ourselves?

While travelling recently in the United States I came across what is probably the best evidence existing of Englishmen's ability to take the lead of all other people.

An American asked me what I thought of his country, and I said it was a very fine country.

"And what do you think of the American people?" he asked.

I said they were a very fine people, too.

"You have nothing to equal them in England?" he said.

"But where did you get them?" I inquired.

He could not answer off-hand; so we went into the question, and here is what we found.

THE LAND OF EQUALITY.

In the United States every man has equal chances with everyone else. At the last census it was found that there were nearly 37 millions of inhabitants who were born in foreign countries, or born in America of foreign parents. Of these only 2,989,762 were of purely English blood; 10,501,815 were Germans. Of English, Irish and Scottish combined, 12,896,000; but of Germans, Swedes, Norwegians, Italians, etc., there were 23,768,000.

Now it is quite obvious that among America's leading men Germans and others ought to make a good showing in a country of equal chances. There are a lot of old English descendants there, but at present more than half the population must be of Continental blood. If Englishmen hold the vast majority of leading positions it must be because they are the best men. The result of our investigation so surprised my American friend that he drank to the health of John Bull right away. Here it is:

There have been twenty-five men in the highest office in the land—the Presidency—since America gained her independence in 1789. These were 14 of English ancestry; 13 of Scotch, Welsh and Irish; 2 of Dutch ancestry. Not a solitary German, French, or Swede, or anything else.

Now take the 26 vice-presidents: 17 were of English blood; 7 were of Scottish, Welsh and Irish blood; 2 were of Dutch blood.

UNION JACK MINISTERS.

Remembering that anyone, providing he has the ability, and was born in America, may be President or Vice-President, this is a marvellous tribute to British capacity.

Of course, the United States has men corresponding to our Ministers of the Crown—War Secretary, Army Secretary, Navy Secretary, Post-Master General, etc. Let us lump them all together. There have been 291 of them in all during the past century and a quarter. Of these 268 were English, Scottish, Welsh and Irish; 9 were French, 5 were German; 3 were Dutch; 6 we could not allot to any particular nation.

Now here is a more surprising fact still. The United States representatives in foreign countries would be chosen one would think, from all nationalities among her citizens; but of course, the President chooses above all, the ablest men. Now, of all the United States' Ministers to England, Russia, France, Germany, Italy, Austria and Spain, 230 have been English, Irish, Scotch or Welsh; 23 Germans, French, Dutch, etc.

Thus both the home and the foreign policy of the United States are determined by Englishmen. Could we ask a better proof that John Bull's faith in himself is well founded?

We have more proof. In the American parliament there are 90 Senators and 386 Representatives corresponding to our Lords and Commons. Of their Senators 85 have English, Irish, Scottish or Welsh names; 5 have French, Dutch and other names. Of their Representatives 331 have English, Scottish, Irish and Welsh names; 19 have German names; 37 have French, Dutch, Swedish and other names.

BRITISH STATE LEGISLATORS.

Each State in this country over the Atlantic has a parliament of its own—the State Legislature. We cannot go through the whole 51 State legislatures. But take that of the State of New York as an example. In the Assembly of 150 there are 124 members with English, Scottish, etc., names, and only 26 representing all other countries. And, of the governors of this State since the Revolution no less than 36 have been of English blood, to only 3 from all other countries.

The United States is certainly ruled by Englishmen. And why? Because it finds Englishmen to be the best rulers.

But, they are also, apparently, the best judges, lawyers, army officers and naval officers. There have been 62 judges in the highest position since 1789—judges of the Supreme court. Of these no fewer than 38 were unmistakably English, Scottish, Welsh or Irish, and only 4 French, Germans, etc. Here are the names of the present Chief Justice and associates—all British it will be seen:

Chief Justice Fuller, Judges White, Holmes, Brewer, Day, Peckham, Moody, Harlan and McKenna.

There are also 30 circuit judges, and 25 of them are indisputably British. There are 90 district judges and 78 are English, Scottish, etc. And the list of United States' Marshalls and Attorneys tell the same tale. John Bull runs the American legal business from top to bottom.

SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Lastly, take the Army and Navy. In the Navy, anyhow, the Continental emigrants have even a better chance than Englishmen. But what do we find? The highest Army officer is Lieut.-General McArthur. Next below him are 7 Major-Generals, named Wade, Wood, Ainsworth, Weston, Grant, Greely and Lee. Then come 27 Brigadier-Generals, of whom all but three are English, Scottish, Welsh or Irish. These are followed by 110 Colonels, and 92 of them are English, etc., 127 Lieut.-Colonels, of whom 110 are British in name; and 360 Majors, of whom only 45 have Continental names, the remaining 315 being British.

The same is found in the Navy—British always on top. The Supreme Officer is Admiral Dewey. The next in rank are Rear-Admirals Evans, Sands, Sirsbee, Goodrich, Davis, Craig Thomas, Snow, Mead, Brownson, Stockton, Walker, Dayton, Sperry, Burwell, Berry, Swinburne, Hemphill, Emory, Very, Lyon and Reiter.

JOHN BULL NOT SO BAD.

This is something for John Bull to be proud of. But also of the 70 Captains, 55 are British; and of the 107 Commanders 91 are of our own blood.

"Well," said my American acquaintance, "I guess John Bull must do things pretty well at home, anyhow."

"Make no mistake about it," I said. "At home or abroad—wherever John Bull goes he is the leader among white men."

"Sort of defies competition," he said. "Well, yes, there's more in John Bull than I thought."—Answers.

Canadian Pacific Railway

In reviewing the financial and physical conditions of the Canadian Pacific railway company, one is overwhelmed by the stupendous task of making but slight allowance for the increase in values that must ensue. To carry the question of land assets further, it would be impossible to estimate the tremendous permanent value to the railway company of the lands that have been sold, or those areas that will be turned over to the farmer in the near future. This will constitute a field for annual concentrating within the limited space of two or three columns of this journal the essential date for a complete and comprehensive article that will be useful to the generality of investors in America and Great Britain. With a capitalization of one hundred and fifty millions of dollars, equities of, perhaps, a corresponding amount, and a gross annual income that will soon aggregate one hundred million dollars, it can readily be appreciated that the system is one of the greatest and most involved even in this era of giant industrial corporations.

It is with considerable gratification though not surprise, that Canadians hear of the splendid loyalty of thousands of British and Continental investors towards the stock of this greatest of all Canadian corporations; especially when, for the last two or three years, professional interests have been organized to upset the marketable value of the security, and it is, no doubt, due to the steadfast faith of these same investors abroad that the stock was not driven to a much lower level during the aggressive "bear" campaign of 1907.

BIG SURPLUS AFTER MEETING ALL OBLIGATIONS.

That their faith was not only worthy of themselves and of the best traditions of the Canadian Pacific railway company cannot be better exemplified than by the enormous surplus, after all interest and dividend obligations had been met, from the operations of the year ended June 30, 1907. For that period the road earned $18,876,038 for dividends on the preferred and common stocks. After the full payment on the preferred stock there was left a sum of $16,639,806 to meet the dividend on the common. A six per cent. dividend on the outstanding $121,680,000 of common stock amounted to $7,300,800, thus leaving a net surplus of $9,839,005, or an excess of about seven and one-half per cent. over and above the dividend requirements on the common stock. At the same time a one per cent. dividend was paid from the proceeds of land sales.

The above-mentioned surplus was gained in a year that included one of the worst winter periods in the history of the company, not alone due to the rigors of the climate, but through a combination of circumstances that could not be foreseen. There was car congestion of the most aggravated type, following an unprecedented cereal yield in practically every province in the Dominion; and, to make matters worse, a coal famine in the prairies, which necessitated prompt action by the company in supplying not only motive power and cars to relieve the situation, but large quantities of the company's own coal from its different coal stocks in the west. Thus there was deviated from the ordinary channels of operation a very considerable proportion of the company's rolling stock, and, as it was almost impossible to successfully operate under the multiplicity of disadvantages, there ensued a most embarrassing congestion throughout the whole system, and particularly at terminal points. This was not lightened in any way by the manufacturing and wholesale houses, all of whom shouted loudly, and frequently in vain, for the much desired freight cars.

DIFFICULTIES IN OPERATING AND EFFECT ON EXPENSES

January and February are usually the most severe months in the matter of operating costs, and it may throw some light upon the difficulties of the season to point out the ratio of costs to receipts during those two months of that winter. January operating expenses in 1907 took no less than 87 per cent. of the gross earnings, which was exceedingly high by contrast with 71.34 per cent. in January of the previous year. An increase of 15½ per cent. in the ratio made a material reduction, it will be granted, in the net income of that month, approximately some $500,000. In the month of February, 85.42 per cent. was required to operate the system, as against only 71.75 per cent. in February of the previous year. And notwithstanding this and the many difficulties attending operations in the late autumn, when the car congestion, was, perhaps, at its worst, the company was in a position to earn over twice the six per cent. dividend obligation on its common stock in the year closing June 30, 1907.

The story of surplus earnings does not, however, stop here, as there are to be taken into account a few equities, which must continue for some time to be of vital interest to stockholders and their yearly income return. They include deferred payments and receipts on land sales, and also the "undivided" earnings of the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Sault Ste. Marie railway, of which the Canadian Pacific controls a majority of preferred and common stocks. The land sales alone in 1907 realized $5,887,877 by the sale of 994,840 acres, at an average price of $5.92 per acre. According to the annual report there was included in the sales a large area for which contracts had been previously made at $4 to $5 per acre. The average price realized from lands actually sold within the year was slightly over $8 per acre.

VALUE OF THE LAND HOLDINGS

Investors cannot give too much favorable consideration to the value of the land areas controlled by the Canadian Pacific railway company, because the values of the same represent a permanent equity, either in the direct sale of the land or by indirect returns from the ultimate yield they will give to the farmer, the forester, the miner, or by revenue from town lots and many other sources. It may be computed that the value of the lands unsold is in excess of one hundred million dollars—say one hundred and twenty million dollars—and, as about sixty-five million dollars has so far been received by the sale of lands, there is thus a total very much in excess of the one hundred and forty-six million dollars that will be this year outstanding.

That is to say, for every $100 share of Canadian Pacific stock there is more than that equivalent per share in land equities alone to the holder of the stock, and that is revenue for the company's active railway operations that will add materially to the gross and net receipts of the roads.

In considering the land equites mentioned in the foregoing paragraph, it should be stated that over sixty millions of the gross receipts have been received already on the sale of the land, and, while that may not appear at first sight to be properly entitled to a place in the present or future estimate of equities, it must be appreciated that only a very small fraction of that amount has been paid out to stockholders, and must, therefore, be either in reserve or have gone back into the property, thus forming an undoubted equity for the benefit of the stockholders.

GROSS TRAFFIC RECEIPTS INCREASE,

There has been phenomenal development in the gross traffic receipts of the Canadian Pacific railway company during the last half decade. For the complete fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, there were gross traffic receipts of $43,957,373, contrasted with about $10,883,000 for the six months of the current fiscal year—the half year ending December 31, 1907. It is not improbable that the business of the road will continue to increase at, at least, a similar ratio, the recurring arguments of vigorous competition to the contrary notwithstanding. The large influx of immigrants and the daily development of fresh resources of one description or another that are in process throughout the length and breadth of the system will guarantee to the parent railway a steady increase of traffic just as long as the Dominion maintains its present ratio of agricultural and manufacturing advances.

That these increases in gross business can be maintained may be demonstrated by the earnings of the last six months by contrast with those of the corresponding period of 1906. In the earlier period there was a total western wheat yield of approximately one hundred million bushels, to say nothing of a particularly fine yield of all the coarser grains and roots, all of which were substantially in excess of any former year; yet the returns of that especially prosperous period are shown to be already much below those of the similar period of the present fiscal year, notwithstanding a late crop movement and a serious financial stringency that closed down many of the leading western mining and smelting plants, which factors are considerable revenue earners for the railway system. The western wheat yield did not total seventy million bushels last year, 1907, and, owing to the adverse climatic conditions, the coarser grains suffered correspondingly.

INDEPENDENCE OF GRAIN PRODUCTION.

This would indicate that the general districts served by the Canadian Pacific railway company have grown in gross traffic importance, and have maintained an activity of production that has, in a sense, shown a remarkable independence of the grain cultivation in Central and Western Canada.

The figures upon which the foregoing is based will substantiate the statement. There was a gross return of $37,464,474 for the six months ending December 31, 1906, as contrasted with gross of $40,883,017, the latter figures being subject to a slight addition when the final returns are out, for the half year ending December 31, last.

If, it might be argued, the company can maintain such a degree of development during a season of indifferent crop results over one of particularly large returns, it is conceivable that, with the growing wealth of the country and the increasing numbers of immigrants, there will be a continuous series of similar increases that will more than maintain the present rate of earnings on the capital stock of the railway company. Even on the 1907 standard of earnings and the 1908 requirements of interest and dividend payments, there would still be a very substantial surplus to be carried forward to the following year.

The increase in passenger business on the Canadian Pacific railway system has been on a very large scale as for the year ended June 30, 1903, there was $11,001,973 from that source, compared with $19,528,878 for the last fiscal year. With the advent of the fast steamship service the company has gained a great advantage over other railroads through its better facilities for booking through to western points, and even to points that are reached by the "Empresses" sailing on the Pacific coast. A large tourist trade is also encouraged, and the revenue from British and United States travellers is growing to very respectable proportions. The company also carries many thousands of immigrants from coast to coast, which greatly aids in the sum total of gross receipts.

As might be expected, the freight business has also grown abnormally during recent years and taking the same years for purposes of comparison, it is seen that for the year ending June 30, 1903, freight returns were $28,502,081 as compared with $45,885,968 in the year ended June 30, 1907. The main part of this latter traffic is grain and lumber, while flour, manufactured articles and live stock are factors of much importance to the business of the road.

SOME NOTES ON STOCK OUTSTANDING.

In relation to the large increase of capital stock of the Canadian Pacific railway company, it will be useful to review the company's ability to meet the entire amount that will be outstanding, say, at the end of the current fiscal year. The amount of common stock outstanding on December 31, 1907, was $121,680,000 and the amount to be issued out of the newly authorized $28,360,000 is $24,336,000, thus bringing the entire capital paid in to $146,116,000; but as this entire amount will not be paid in until about the end of October this year, and only 60 per cent. of it paid in by the end of the present fiscal year, the increase in dividend obligations will not be so heavy as might be considered at first sight. Extra dividends on the new common stock will probably not exceed $130,000 for this fiscal year.

The new preferred stock of $7,500,000, issued in the early months of 1907, will, however, come in for the full dividend payments by the end of the fiscal year, but that will only total in the aggregate some $330,000, and is also a very insignificant amount by contrast with the surplus over dividends of the last fiscal period, 4 per cent. only being the rate of disbursement on the preferred.

When the entire $150,000,000 of common stock is paid in there will be an annual sum of $8,766,960, required to meet the full dividend, and for the year ending June 30, 1907, there was a total sum of $16,639,805 available for this purpose, after making due allowance for the preferred dividend charges, and including net profits from subsidiary roads such as dividends and interest on stocks and bonds held by the company in the Sault Ste. Marie railway company and other roads controlled by the Canadian Pacific stockholders.

There is absolutely no danger that the directors will allow the capital expansion to outrun the dividend capabilities, as, notwithstanding the tremendous amounts issued during the past five years, the last two or three annual financial statements have shown the common stock to be well looked after in the matter of surplus earnings.

Within a period of five years the company has floated over $80,000,000 of common, or ordinary stock, and a total of nearly $120,000,000 of bonds, preferred and common in the same period. Despite this large amount of new stock, which after all had been a nucleus of the system's increased earning powers, there has been rather a strengthening than weakening of shreholders' equities.

NATIONAL CRISIS ONLY WOULD DISTURB.

It might be said, without fear of contradiction, that no less than a national commercial crisis could reduce the surplus available on the Canadian Pacific's common to below an eight per cent. basis, and that, in the circumstances of Canada's present unique position in the eyes of the old countries, would probably be restricted to within a very short period. The eight per cent. earned would be ample to meet the dividend requirements, to say nothing of the thirty odd millions surplus shown in the general balance as at June 30, 1907. All things considered, however, it is unlikely that the earnings will be so materially reduced within at least the next few years. The stock is strictly a six per cent. railway issue, although it pays an extra one per cent. from the receipts on account of land sales.

WINNIPEG EXHIBITION.

The list of races as issued by the Winnipeg exhibition this year is without doubt one of the best that has ever been sent out by any organization in Canada for harness purses, and compares most favorably with those of the Great West circuit, or we might say, the Grand Circuit.

The amount of money offered by the association is close on to $21,000. Entries for the following stakes close on April 15: 3.00 pace or trot for horses owned in Minnesota, North Dakota, Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, $500.. 2.10 pace or 2.05 trot, stake $1,500. 2.20 pace or 2.15 trot, hotelkeepers' stake, $3,000. 2.25 trot, stake $1,000. 2.13 pace or 2.08 trot. Merchants' or manufacturers' stake, $3,000. 2.35 trot, stake $1,000.

We bespeak for the largest Western Canadian exhibition, one that is held in the middle of July at a season that is most favorable to them, the best class of horses that has ever been seen in the northwest.

WEAK TIRED WOMEN

How many women there are that get no refreshment from sleep. They wake in the morning and feel tireder than when they went to bed. They have a dizzy sensation in the head, the heart palpitates; they are irritable and nervous, weak and worn out, and the lightest household duties during the day seem to be a drag and a burden.

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

are the very remedy that weak, nervous, tired out, sickly women need to restore them the blessings of good health.

They give sound, restful sleep, tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart, and make rich blood. Mrs. C. McDonald, Portage la Prairie, Man., writes: "I was troubled with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and weak spells. I got four boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and after taking them I was completely cured.

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

"There is no God. He is merely a bogie man invented to frighten humanity." This was one of the utterances of Emma Goldman in her anarchistic lecture in Winnipeg. She attacked Christianity on the ground that it does not represent today the principles of the brotherhood of man. She claimed that Christianity only existed either as a profession, a business, or because the great majority knew no better than to support the churches. Only the cloak of the original belief remained.

It was a field night at Trades Hall for at the close of the anarchistic lecture a half dozen speakers representing several branches of socialism, the free thinkers, reform laborites and radicals denounced many of the utterances of Emma Goldman, who came back at them later in the vigorous style for which she is noted. Nothing but a revolution, with attendant horrors of bloody war would suit her and she clamored for a general strike of railway and street railway employees for May 1 as a demonstration of the power of the trades unions. She denounced the Canadians in scathing terms for what she called their prudery and piety and continued her tirade against all forms of law and authority. The whole address was of a most radical character, without, however, seeming to arouse any great excitement, for the majority of those present took her more or less as a joke.

Ottawa, April 9.—The department of labor has received the majority report on the conciliation board in the street railway strike at Hamilton. They find that John Theaker, president of the union, was dismissed for an infringement of the rules and not because he was a member of the union. It holds that the trouble arose from friction amongst the men and not from discrimination.

OTTAWA, April 7.—The National Trades and Labor Congress of Ottawa has refused to contribute to the fund to pay the costs of Alphonse Verville, M.P., of Montreal, against whom a libel action was taken previous to his election. The said libel consisted of the words "That any man who claims to be a labor candidate, and at the same time a Liberal or Conservative, is a scoundrel, for no man can serve two masters at the same time."

The report of the Congress executive, which has been adopted, says: "The question that immediately suggests itself to your committee is, as to whether the said Alphonse Verville was the same gentleman, who since being elected to parliament entered into caucus chamber with the Liberal party, and since then has not hesitated to give them general support. We wonder if Mr. Verville would like to be taken at his own estimate of character. Your committee cannot recommend any contribution for such purpose."

A labor man requesting a definition of the various parties in Canada and their general attitude is answered as follows: (1) A Conservative is opposed to any drastic or radical change in the affairs of state further than what is deemed necessary to safeguard the welfare of the public. (2) A Liberal urges reforms and is often lead into advocating visionary propositions which may be good or bad, but which being untried often lead them into awkward situations. (3) A Labor representative is one who advocates legislation favorable to workingmen and for representation of labor in all elective positions. (4) A Socialist is one who demands a more equitable division of property and a better arrangement of social conditions of mankind than at present prevailing.

Vancouver, April 9.—A plan to form and perfect one gigantic organization of all skilled labor employed in the various mechanical departments of the C.P.R. from Pacific to Atlantic, the officers of which shall have power to represent in negotiations with the company the thousands of men of the various trades, was discussed at a mass meeting held in labor hall last night. The result of a thorough canvass of the idea of the meeting, which was attended by 300 employees of the company, was a decision to form the big labor combination immediately.

It is learned that the reason for the amalgamation of interests is the recent notice of the C.P.R. that it will withdraw on May 1st from the wage and working agreements which it has with the employees. At present these agreements are between the company and the various trade associations.

MAGISTRATE PRAISES ZAM-BUK

Magistrate Rasmussen, of 202 Marquette street, Montreal, writes: "For many years I was troubled with a serious eruption of the skin. This was not only unsightly, but it was at times very painful. I first tried various household remedies, but these proved altogether useless. I then took medical advice. Not one, but several doctors in turn were consulted, but I was unable to get any permanent relief. Some time ago I practiced a report from a Justice of the Peace (Magistrate Perry, J.P. for B.C.) who had been cured of a chronic skin disease by Zam-Buk, and I determined to give this balm a trial. After a thoroughly fair test I can say I am delighted with it. I have the best of reasons for this conclusion; because while everything else I tried—salves ,embrocations, washes, soaps and doctors' preparations failed absolutely to relieve my pain and rid me of my trouble, three boxes of Zam-Buk worked a complete cure. In my opinion this balm should be even more widely known than it is, and I hope that my experience will lead other sufferers who are in despair to try this herbal healer, Zam-Buk."

For healing eczema, running sores cuts, bruises, burns, boils, eruptions, scalp sores, pimples, spring eruptions itch, chapped hands, and diseases of the skin, Zam-Buk is without equal. All druggists and stores sell it 50 cents box, or postpaid from Zam-Buk company, Toronto.

TRADING STAMP GIVEN WITH SALVATION NOW.

Each Child Attending Golden Sunday School Gets Ticket, Redeemable in Worldly Things

Denver, Colo.—Salvation with green trading stamps, redeemable in the purchase of worldly things, thrown in, has succeeded so well in the Presbyterian church at Golden that members of other congregations are crying out in anger. The pastor of the little church has offered trading stamps to every child who attended Sunday school. By continuous appearance for a month the faithful ones can collect enough stamps to cash in on a nickle's worth of candy.

Printed by Request.

Recipe is Easily Prepared at Small Cost, and Many Swear By It.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggists.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder Weakness and Urinary Trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

The Scranton (Pa.) Times was first to print this remarkable prescription, in October, of 1906, since when all the leading newspapers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other cities have made many announcements of it to their readers.

VOL. 5. No. 33. MEDICINE HAT, ALTA., CANADA, TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1903. $1.50 PER ANNUM

THE TOWN THAT WAS BORN LUCKY

Rudyard Kipling's Tribute to Medicine Hat

The Lucky City Luckier from the Visit of the Great Author

Rudyard Kipling left many pleasant memories in Medicine Hat after Tuesday's visit had fall, and from his article of last week in the series of eight on Canada, he carried away some pleasant memories.

A few of the characters referred to in his letter will be recognized by those who had the good fortune to spend the day with him. Among these Inspector Parker is the Major referred to.

Medicine Hat is indeed fortunate in receiving more notice than any other city in this series of letters describing his visit to Canada. In fact, only Winnipeg is more than mentioned outside of this city.

This is what he says:

There was a town down the road, which I had first heard discussed nigh twenty years ago since, by a broken-down prospector in a box-car. "Young feller," said he, after he had made a professional prophecy, "you'll hear of that town if you live. She's born lucky."

I saw the town later—it was a siding by a trestle bridge where Indians sold beadwork—and as years passed I gathered that the old tramp's prophecy had come true, and that luck of some kind had struck the little town by the river. So this trip I stopped to make sure. It was a beautiful town of six thousand people and a railway junction, beside a high-girded iron bridge; there was a public garden with trees at the station. A company of jovous men and women whom that air and that light and their own good will made our brothers and sisters, came along in motors and gave us such a day as never was.

"What about the luck?" I asked.

"Heavens!" said one. "Haven't you heard about our natural gas, the greatest natural gas in the world. Oh, come and see!"

WHAT LUCK MEANS.

I was whirled off to a roun house full of engines and machinery shops, smelling slightly of fried onions, at a pressure of six hundred pounds, and by valves and taps is reduced to four pounds. There was luck enough to make a metropolis. Imagine a city's heating and light—to say nothing of power—laid on at no greater expense than that of piping.

"Are there any limits to the possibilities of it?" I demanded.

"Who knows? We're only at the beginning. We'll show you a brick-making plant out on the prairie run by gas. But just now we want to show you one of our pet farms."

Away swooped the motors like swallows, over roads any width you please, and up on to what looked like the high veldt itself. A major of the mounted police who had done a year at the war, told us how the ostrich farm fencing and the little meercats sitting up and racing about South Africa, had made him homesick for the sight of the gophers by the wayside, and the endless panels of wire fencing along which we rushed. (The prairie has nothing to learn about fencing or tricky gates).

"After all," said the major, "there's no country to touch this. I've had 30 years of it—one end and the other."

Then they pointed out all quarters of the horizon—say fifty miles wherever you turned—and gave them names.

The farmer had taken his folk to church, but we friendly slipped through his gates and reached the silent, spick and span house, with its trim barn and a vast mound of corn colored wheat piled in the run between two mounds of golden chaff. Everyone thumbed a sample of it and passed judgments—it must have been worth a few hundred golden sovereigns as it lay on the veldt, and we sat around on the farm machinery and in the hush that a shut up house always imposes, we seemed to hear the lavish earth getting ready for new harvests. There was no true wind but a push as it were, of the whole crystal atmosphere.

"Now for the brick-field," they cried. It was a dozen miles off. The road led by a never-to-be-forgotten drop, to a river broad as the Orange at Norval's Point, rustling between mud hills. An old Scotchman, in the very likeness of Charon, with big ship boots, controlled a pontoon, which sagged back and forth by current on a wire rope, and the reckless machines bumped on to this ferry through a foot of water, and Charon who never relaxed, bore us statlily across the dark broad river to the further bank, where we all turned to look at the lucky little town and discuss its possibilities.

OVER THE YELLOW-GREEN PRAIRIE.

"I think you can see it best from here," said one.

"No, from here," said another, and their voices softened on the very name of it.

Then for an hour we raced over the prairie, great yellow-green plains crossed by old buffalo trails which do not improve motor springs, till a single chimney broke the horizon like a mast at sea, and there by were more light-hearted men and women, a shed and a tent or two for workmen, the ribs and frames of the brick-making mechanism, a fifteen foot square shaft sunk sixty foot down to the clay, and stark and black, the pipe of a natural gas well. The rest was prairie—the mere curve of the earth—with little gray birds calling.

I thought it could not have been simpler, more audacious or more impressive, till I saw some women in pretty frocks go up and peer at the hissing gas valves.

"We fancied that it might amuse you," said all those merry people, and between laughter and digressions they talked over projects for building first their own and then other cities in brick of all sorts, giving figures of output and expenses of plant that made one gasp. To them the affair was no more than a novel or delicious pic-nic. What it actually meant was a committee to change the material of civilization for a hundred miles around. I felt as though I were assisting at the planning of Nineveh, and whatever of good comes to the town that was born lucky, I shall always claim a share.

But there is no space to tell how we fed with a prairie appetite in the men's quarters on a meal prepared by an artist; how we raced home at speeds at no speeds no child could ever hear of, and no grown-up should attempt; how the motors squattered at the lord and took pot-shots at the moon till even Charon smiled; how great horses hauled the motors up the gravelly bank into the town; how there we met people in their Sunday best, walking and driving and pulled ourselves together and looked virtuous, and how the merry company suddenly and quietly vanished because they thought that their guests might be tired. I can give you no notion of the pure, irresponsible frolic of it, of the almost affectionate kindness, the gay and inventive hospitality that so delicately controlled the whole affair; any more than I can describe a certain quiet half-hour in the dusk before we left, when the company gathered to say good-bye, while young couples walked in the street and the glare of the never-extinguished gas lamps colored the leaves of the trees a stage-green.

It was a woman, speaking out of the shadow, who said what we all felt, "You see, we just love our town."

"So do we," I said, and it slipped behind us.

THE JOSEPHSBURG FANATICS

SECT WITH DANGEROUS DOCTRINES

Dream and then Murder

Since development fever set in and the large influx of people of allblood, Canada has had her full share of colonization problems. The trial now in progress, however, and the state of things it discloses promises to provide the greatest sensation of all. The vagaries of the Doukhobors have been long considered the standing test of Canada's patience, in her efforts to assimilate and turn into good Canadian citizens her immigrants from the backward parts of Europe. But the Doukhobor, with his belief in non-resistance, is a desirable colonist when compared with a sect which, if the allegations of one-time members are correct, adopts as a part of its creed the necessity of murdering, and destroying the property of all those who do not accept its tenets.

The "Dreamers" have been in the Josephsburg district for some three years, but it was not until the event of a week ago and the sensational developments which followed that their existence was widely known. Shortly after one o'clock on the night of Saturday the 11th inst., John Lehr, a farmer of the Josephsburg district was awakened by his son. The house was in flames and Mr. Lehr was only just in time to save his family and get clear of the premises. Everything pointed to the outbreak being the work of intendiaries, coal oil having been used in starting the conflagration. Mr. Lehr states that he had received letters from members of the sect of Dreamers, in which they threatened to burn himself and family in his home.

On Monday morning Mr. Lehr laid a complaint against a number of members of the sect, to wit, Jacob F. Merkel, Daniel, Emanuel and Christian Gill, Karl Otto, Frederick and August Neiman, Jacob and John Reib and Jacob Merkel (are considered the Dreamers "head men" in Josephsburg. Mr. Lehr was accompanied by about thirty settlers of the district, who were anxious to take the law into their own hands. Had they done so there might have been an abrupt end to the Dreamer sect in Alberta, so intense is the hatred of them and all their works, where they are known. James Robinson, J.P., to whom the complaint was made, advised the farmers to await the course of justice, and telegraphed Inspector Parker, who immediately sent out Constable Ashe, with a search warrant. Corporal Humby and Constable Murchison followed and effected the arrest of the men named above. The nine prisoners were brought up for the preliminary hearing on Wednesday morning in the Court house. Inspector Parker was on the bench and D. G. White prosecuted on behalf of Mr. Lehr. The first prisoner in the dock was Frederick Neiman. The prosecutor, John Lehr, was the first witness. He gave evidence to the effect that on the night of the 11th he retired at about 11 o'clock. About one o'clock he was awakened by his son, and found the house in flames at the northwest corner. Mike Gill and Emanuel Gill, who were his nearest neighbors, were the first to come to the fire. Mr. Lehr having sent one of the boys to ask for help in fighting the flames. It was evident to Mr. Lehr that gasoline had been used in setting fire to the house and there were other indications of a predetermined plan to destroy all his buildings.

Mr. Lehr's evidence and that of other witnesses was further to the effect that the Dreamers met every Saturday, and at their meetings they discussed dreams and consulted to carry them into effect. They believed themselves to be inspired by God, and bound to carry out his plans as thus revealed. In many cases they were inspired to murder and destroy the property of unbelievers.

John Lehr, jr., Mrs. Lehr, Mr. and Mrs. Schneider, Michael Brost, the Rev. Mr. Sillack, and other witnesses, some of them ex-Dreamers, gave evidence. Mr. Sillack also acted as interpreter.

On Thursday Frederick Neiman was remanded for eight days. Jacob F. Merkel was next put in the dock and the hearing continued throughout Friday and Saturday. W. A. Legg taking part in the prosecution on the latter date, in behalf of the attorney-general.

There was considerable trouble in getting the prisoners to give evidence, and they generally contented themselves with denying all knowledge of matters which might prove incriminating.

On Saturday afternoon Emanuel Gill was given the protection of the court and sworn in to give evidence, the Rev. Mr. Sillack acting as interpreter. Gill stated that he was at a meeting of the Dreamers in Frederick Neiman's house on Saturday the 11th inst., leaving at 5.30. He was engaged durin the evening getting a load of hay and attending to the horses. From 9.15 when he retired to 2 a.m. Sunday he was in his father's house. He did not set fire to John Lehr's house, nor did he know who had done so.

Mr. Begg—"What is the creed of the Dreamers?"

Witness (through interpreter)—"We believe in the scriptures."

"Do the Dreamers believe that they are the only people of God on this earth?"

"I don't believe there are any people of God except ourselves."

"Do you believe that others should be destroyed."

The interpreter understood witness to say that it was none of his business and he didn't care. Mr. Begg insisting on a proper answer to the question being given to the question, witness said, "Yes, it is so."

"How is the will of God communicated to you about this excommunicating business?"

"Either through visions or dreams." Witness explained that all dreams were not of God.

Mr. Begg—"How can you tell when a dream is of God?"

"It must be genuine and it must be clear."

"What God do you believe in?"

"God is spirit. God cannot be seen."

"Is there any person at the head of the Dreamers known as God upon earth?"

"Yes, there is a person who is God on earth." This man it was explained, was Jacob Merkel of South Dakota, known among the Dreamers as "the God Jacob." God Almighty gave the God Jacob His commandments to lead his people.

"Is it just as good to have a dream by the God Jacob as by the unseen God?"

"It is one and the same."

Witness would consider a dream influenced by a letter from the God in South Dakota to be as binding as if inspired directly by God Almighty."

Witness went on to say that at the Saturday meetings it was the practise of the sect to read the Bible and pray to God Almighty. They also discussed dreams.

"Did you ever hear at any of these meetings that anyone was to be destroyed or any buildings?"

"No."

"Did you ever hear John Lehr's name mentioned at any meeting?"

"Very often I heard John Lehr spoken about."

"Do you remember what was said about him at any time?"

"No."

"Do you know that you are expected to tell the truth, and that if you do not do so you are liable to punishment by the government, and also by God Almighty?"

Witness replied that he could not remember anything that had been said about John Lehr, Michael Gill and Michael Brost had also been spoken about. He could not remember what was said. He said his memory was bad.

Continuing the cross examination, Mr. Begg asked witness if he had ever heard letters from Jacob Merkel read. Witness had heard such letters read but remembered nothing about their contents.

The following letter was read to witness in the German. He "had never heard it before."

From God Jacob, Isaiah 2nd, verse 3.

To Ahab, Dias and Lehr:

Thou accursed Satan hadst until now trodden my holy commandments with thy feet, and hadst greedily devoured full on my Earth, and thou art with that not yet satisfied now God himself is there and tells thee thy sin, now thou wilt strike God to death, and that thou wilt therefore do, that thou mayest do so forth with thy sin, keep still God commands thee, it is said, the Lamb is one Lord of all Lords, and King of all Kings, Revelations, chapter 17, verse 14, this is thy doom, Zachariah, chap. 14, verse 12, their flesh shall be consumed or decayed as long as they stand on their feet, and that soon—Revenge, Revenge, Revenge.

"Was your mother ever fired because she shot at John Lehr's little girl?"

"Yes, she was fined, but she did not shoot."

D. G. White went on with the cross-examination.

"Has John Lehr been talked about at any meeting since Jacob Lehr came back?"

"No. I don't know."

"Can you swear that he has not been talked about?"

"I can't swear that I have heard and I can't swear that I have not heard."

He did not remember anything about it.

"Do you remember cutting Lehr's fence?"

"I never cut it."

"Were you tried for cutting Michael Brost's fence?"

Witness replied that himself and his brother were sent to Lethbridge and were also fined for this offense. He denied that they were guilty.

"Did you ever get a message from Jacob Merkel to kill J. J. Dias?"

"No."

"Have you ever heard John Lehr called Satan Lehr?"

"No."

Witness was questioned as to an article of the Dreamers' creed as enunciated in a letter brought into court. This stated that "at first we had to confess to the ungodly and then we might tell them a lie."

Witness—"It is not permitted to lie at all by us."

Michael Brost next gave evidence.

"Do you know about Jacob F. Merkel over wanting to burn down a public bridge?"

"Yes, a bridge between sections 15 and 16, township 10, range 3, west of fourth meridian."

Witness deposed that after Emanuel Gill got out of jail at Lethbridge, Jacob F. Merkel said that he would put gasoline or coal oil under the bridge and burn it. He said this at a meeting of the sect, at which all the members were present. Witness was a member of the Dreamers last summer but left them in October.

At six o'clock the court was adjourned till Wednesday morning.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Woolchester

Owing to some unforeseen accident Mrs. Young will not be able to come here to teach school, so the children are having an extended holiday.

Mr. Walker is getting his land into shape. He is hauling away the logs from his shack upon Plume Creek.

Miss Jessie Johnstone is still in town with her sister Mrs. Johnstone.

The new settlers seem to like their location: they are busy working around their homesteads.

Mr. Salves, the secretary of the rifle club is still on the lookout to secure a few more names to make the necessary number—thirty.

Little Plume

Some new settlers from Dakota have arrived near Willow Lake.

It is now feared that the school will not be opened this year, owing to lack of pupils. A new school district has been formed south-west of the creek by the German settlers there.

Mr. Paul from Moose Jaw is in the district looking for suitable horses to take back with him.

Mr. David Hamilton has come back from B.C. He is come to live on his homestead near Gros Ventre Creek.

Farming is going on well those days, all the people in the district are busy on the land. Mr. McKenzie and the Clark boys are ploughing just now.

Constable Merrich was doing a visit around this way last Monday.

Gros Ventre

A proposal to form a choir of ladies and gentlemen is being taken up with enthusiasm here.

Mr. William Putman has returned from the hospital in town, where he had a slight operation for tonsilitis performed. He is getting along very well now.

Plowing, discing and seeding is being carried out by the farmers here Mr. Ed. Smith is almost finished seeding.

The prairie is taking on a different tinge, with the green grass sprouting up. The horses and cattle are looking in good order.

Mr. Joe Peachy, passed this way on Saturday going south to his ranch near the line.

Eagle Butte

Mr. Dempster has had two ploughs going all last week. His irrigation ditch is running well, and the soil is looking in good condition.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnstone begin duties at the sawmill this week.

A loose bolt in a wagon was the cause of a runaway near Ted Leslie's place. The tongue slipped out and the horses bolted with the two front wheels. The three men in the wagon got pitched out but escaped with a few bruises.

A missing plow gave some excitement here last week, but it has been discovered again not much the worse of its journey.

The forthcoming social is being looked forward to with expectation. A large number of tickets have been sold.

Mr. Paul Hester has left here to go down to Wild Horse Lake to Mr. DesBrisay's ranch.

Walsh

The social event of the season was the opening of the new hotel on the evening of the 15th. It took the form of a dance to which everyone was invited and a glorious time was participated in by all. Mine host, Fred. Mund, was on his metal and kept the good time flowing merrily until the "wee sma' hours."

No license has as yet been procured by the proprietors of the new hotel, but that is only an incidental matter; one will, no doubt, be obtained.

A. P. Day of Medicine Hat, the well known cattle buyer, was in town for a few days this week buying cattle. He purchased three cars from Messrs. McDonald, Wilson and Drinan giving good prices, and shipped the cattle to Winnipeg on Friday.

Miss Mamie Flood daughter of Mr. John Flood, section foreman, and who recently returned from a short visit to Vancouver and Strathcona, has been suffering from a very severe attack of rheumatism of the heart for the past week. For a time her life was in grave danger, but we are pleased to say that at the time of this writing she is showing much improvement.

Mr. and Mrs. Corbett, of Irvine, were in town for a few days this week, called here by the illness of their neice, Mamie Flood.

That silver tongued orator, and Liberal leader, from Graburn, he of the sunny smile, to wit: W. D. Reesor, was among the many visitors to town during the week.

And another welcome visitor was the irrepressible Joe Mort. The years roll on and time changes—but Joe, never.

The Citizens lumber company of St. Paul, who have opened a lumber and coal yard here are now prepared to cater to the wants of all needing anything in those lines. Mr. John Haerin real estate and insurance agent is the local manager.

A good sized bunch will no doubt be present from this burg at the bachelors' ball at Irvine, and Mr. Reesor's dance at Graburn.

We had our first fire the other day and for a while there was excitement galore. Mr. Kuch's house, which has been occupied by a newly arrived immigrant and his family in some way caught fire, and for a time looked as if it were going up in smoke. But the clever work of our fire brigade saved the day and the house. Led by chief Fred. Grant, Capt. Robert Nesbitt and Lieut. Ranton, the firemen quickly got the fire under control and only $100 damage resulted. John Haering was here, there and everywhere at the same time, while the chief was a beaut. in giving directions. It is a good thing however, that the fire did not gain further headway as it would have been a race between it and the firemen as to which could tear the house down the quicker.

One of the delights of the week has been to shake hands again with Mr. John Grant, formerly of this place, now of Maple Creek. Mr. Grant has gone to his ranch where he and his family expect to spend the summer.

Seeding operations have been delayed for the past week owing to the terrible windstorms which have been blowing. The prairie fires too, have given much bother and each one is hoping that he will soon be able to move around without fear of having his hair blown from his head.

Two cars of seed grain from the Dominion government have been here for some days but have not been delivered as yet. Applicants have been after their shares for some time now, but the C.P.R. agent has received no papers from Mr. Leech, so the farmers have to wait. No doubt Mr. Leech finds running elections via "the thin red line" route more in his line than his present job.

Church Notes

The attendance at Holy Communion in St. Barnabas' church on Sunday, was the largest in the history of the church, and throughout the day the congregations were large. In the morning an anthem was rendered by the choir. The altar was tastefully decorated with lilies.

The annual meeting of St. Barnabas church will be held on the 27th inst., in the Parish Hall at 8 p.m.

Next Sunday is Missionary Sunday in the Methodist church.

Over $1000 was contributed by the congregation last year, for the missionary work of the church and it is confidently anticipated that this sum will be considerably increased this year.

A meeting of St. John's church missionary society will be held tonight at 8 o'clock. At the same hour tomorrow a preparation service for the communion next Sunday will be held.

On Thursday night the Rev. G. W. Kirby, pastor of the Century Methodist church, Calgary, will give an address in the Methodist church on "The Layman's Missionary Movement."

There will be a celebration of the Holy Communion at St. Anne's church, Josephsburg, at 11 a.m. and at St. Alban's church, Gros Ventre, at 3.30 p.m. on Sunday April 26.

In connection with the scholars of the above Sunday school a very successful concert was given in the Parish Hall last night. A highly enjoyable and interesting programme was arranged by Mrs. Rowe, Miss Caldwell and Miss Kealy, who have taken great pains to tutor the children. A pleasing feature was the Maypole dance in which the following young ladies took part: Misses M. Taylor, N. Niblock, B. Goddard, E. Terry, E. Draudson, G. Calkins, E. Wales and M. Coursey. A dance entitled "Looking Backward" caused a good deal of amusement and altogether the whole show was one pleasing spectacle from start to finish. The performance will be repeated at 8 p.m. tonight, when it is hoped a good company will assemble to witness the efforts of the children.

An interesting event of the week will be the visit of Brigadier and Mrs. Burditt, of the Salvation Army. Both the Brigadier and his wife have had a long career of faithful service in the cause of the Army, which they have been connected with for over twenty years, seven of them spent in mission work in India. They will address a meeting in the Salvation Army barracks at 8 p.m. on Friday.

At a committee meeting of the Board of Trade held on Friday evening, the 16th of May was decided upon as the most suitable day for the bridge opening.

The rate from Medicine Hat to the Dominion Fair in Calgary will be $4.90, good going from June 26 to July 8 and good to return until July 13.

Fergus Kennedy shipped a carload of horses from his Red Deer ranch last week. They passed through Medicine Hat on Saturday on the way to the Battleford district.

GROS VENTRE CHILD LOST

MARY NORQUAY DISAPPEARS

ALL THE NEIGHBORS HUNTING FOR DAYS

Gros Ventre district is greatly excited over the mysterious disappearance of little Mary Norquay, the two year old daughter of James Norquay, living on the Gros Ventre creek, a mile south of John Hawke's.

On Saturday about ten o'clock in the morning Mrs. Norquay sent two of her children with lunch to the men ploughing in a nearby field. Mary, two years and four months old, was left at home with her mother, who, thinking the little tot was playing around, did not notice her absence until a half hour afterwards. When the child could not then be found the mother called the men to her help, with no better success.

In the afternoon a number of the neighbors collected and, with horses, scoured the country until late at night. The horses were also taken through the creek, which is in holes, some being about six feet deep, other spots being almost dry.

At daybreak Sunday morning the searchers started to work again. In the afternoon there were 27 riders and 30 on foot roaming the prairie and dragging the creek. Three men waded through the holes but found nothing. Two pitchforks with bent tines were tied together and while a man in a rig drove through the centre of the creek, another man held the other end of the rope on the bank.

Not a single trace of the child has been found. Those who dragged the creek are confident she is not there, while the riders are certain they have covered every coulee and bush in the vicinity. It seems certain such a little girl could not have gone very far. It is thought that perhaps she has been picked up by someone, thinking she was lost.

J. C. Porter was called up by Mr. Hawke on Saturday, and Inspector Parker was informed. Constable Harris went out and on Monday night had not returned.

Tuesday noon.—Word was brought to the parents this morning by Mr. Conn, a neighbor six miles distant, that he had the little girl at his place. On Monday morning, while at work in the field, Mary had walked up to him, and had shaken hands with him, none the worse for her two nights and almost two days on the open prairie. Of course she was hungry but in some way had kept up vitality when a grown man would have been done out. The child has not yet been returned, but is live and well.

ATTEMPTED MURDER OR FOOLISHNESS

A sensation was caused yesterday in the Irvine district by what was at first considered to be a case of attempted murder.

A German, Joseph Wenner reached the town about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and reported at first that he had been shot. Later he stated that he heard an explosion as he was walking along the track, but did not see anyone. For a time then he remained unconscious. When he came to he found himself in the middle of the track. He walked into Irvine, which he reached in a pitiable condition, his legs and arms being badly shattered. A piece of metal was found immediately over his heart, and an artery in the vicinity severed. Metal was also found in his hat. After hearing all the circumstances the police knew well that the injuries were not inflicted by a bullet. They surmise that the man had in his possession a C. P. R. torpedo, which he pounded against a rock to satisfy his curiosity as to its contents. Corporal Barschal has been ordered by telegram to investigate the case.

A couple of carloads of seed grain were hauled into the city yards yesterday. The grain will be distributed to farmers in the district, who should apply to Mr. Strong at the ticket office. In lieu of cash a mortgage will be accepted from those who are unable to provide the necessary ready money. Grain is being distributed in this way all along the line.

A joint meeting of the Agricultural society and the Turf association was held last evening in the Board of Trade building. There were present: James Fleming, Robt. McCutcheon, John Shields, James Fisher, W. Rose, F. G. Forster.

Jas. Fleming stated that the agricultural society had never called a meeting to thresh the question of amalgamation out, and they themselves were not in a position to say what they would do. They made a suggestion, however, that a half interest in the forty acres at the race track should be deeded over, the agricultural society to build buildings and fence the property; meetings to be held together and the profits divided equally.

Mounted Police Notes.

Corporal Barschal came down to Medicine Hat on Friday from Taber. Constable Coleridge came in from Lethbridge.

A reward of $200 is being offered for the arrest of Wilmot the Fernie policeman.

Superintendent Wilson came up to Medicine Hat on Saturday.

At the district court this morning James Porter came up for trial before Judge Mitchell. Porter was arrested a couple of weeks ago in connection withthe Ready burglary. Last week he made an unsuccessful attempt to break jail at Lethbridge.

Shortly after noon on Saturday a prairie fire broke out at Dutton's ranch and was soon fanned into activity by the strong wind, spreading rapidly. Con. Murchison and Harris were detailed off and succeeded in putting out the side fire. They fought the flames towards the river at Police Point, and, after a few hours' strenuous work it was extinguished.

A social was held in the Presbyterian mission at Eagle Butte last evening.

The Soo-Spokane Flyer is to be put on again. The first left St. Paul, April 19, and will pass through Coleridge at 17k on the 21st (today). The first eastbound train will leave Spokane on the 22nd, passing through Coleridge on the 23rd at 9.10k.

Special Easter services were held in the Baptist church on Sunday. In the morning the Rev. H. Bryant preached on Christ's appearance to the disciples after the Resurrection, taking as his text Acts 1-3. In the evening he preached on "The Cross" from Galatians, VI.-14.

Two cars of seed grain from the Dominion government have been here for some days but have not been delivered as yet. Applicants have been after their shares for some time now, but the C.P.R. agent has received no papers from Mr. Leech, so the farmers have to wait. No doubt Mr. Leech finds running elections via "the thin red line" route more in his line than his present job.

ATHLETICS

Mayor Cousins and Chas. Neff have received notifications from Calgary of a meeting held in that city in the interests of clean amateur sport. A suggestion was made at the meeting that each city and town in the province should do the same and appoint a delegate to a provincial meeting to be called later for the purpose of considering a Provincial Amateur Athletic Association. It is proposed to start the sheet clean by making every professional in the province amateur. It was asked that the matter be taken up with local representative men.

A meeting of the Curling Club was held on Friday night in the City Hall at which it was decided to approach A. P. Burns with a view to having effected a sale of the rink property. Steps will be taken towards the formation of a company.

FIRST GAME OF THE SEASON.

The principal feature of the opening ball game of the season on Good Friday was a driving wind and sand storm, which made it impossible for the boys to do any effective work. The Bachelors succeeded in defeating the City team, although until the last inning or two the play was evenly divided, but when Pingle went into the box for the City the Bachelors had an easy victory, succeeding in making fifteen runs in one inning, and thus doubling the score of their opponents.

For the City Barker was the star performer on the slab and for an inning or two the twisters he served where very elusive to the Bachelors. Phillips and Warden Johnson did the pitching for the Bachelors.

It is generally conceded that the weather was largely responsible for the lack of vim in the play and those who witnessed the game may hope that with the 4 or 5 weeks practise ahead of the boys before the season opens a different exhibition of the game will be seen on May 15. The City band was in attendance and their selections were highly enjoyed.

Spoon shoot has been postponed until April 25.

The Y.M.C. lacrosse players met for practise on the baseball grounds on Good Friday morning. After the game a meeting was held and a club formed. The following officers were elected: Pres. Dr. Smith; 1st Vice-Pres. A. Patterson; 2nd Vice-Pres. J. T. Hall; Sec.-Treas. Ernest R. Muir: Captain, Alf. Peard: Committee; Thos. H. Gawley, A. Collier, P. Gatenby, J. Porter.

SPOKANE BEATEN.

Billy Hulen's team did not win out in the opening game against Aberdeen, last year's champions. But it was largely the fault of Jansen, the Spokane twirler, who allowed 17 hits. On the Spokane team old friends to Medicine Hat fans were Hulen, Chandler, Mackin, Kippert.

The score:

	R	H	E
Aberdeen	8	17	2
Spokane	2	6	1

Hulen had a sacrifice hit, Chandler a stolen base, Chandler and Kippert were hit by pitcher and Kippert and Hulen pulled off a double play. The report in part, says:—

Aberdeen won the opening game of the season from Spokane yesterday afternoon in the presence of 3600 people by a score of 8 to 2. Coupled with the fact that Jensen's twisters looked like large juicy easter eggs to the Black Cats, and they swatted them with a vengeance, the visitors had all of the luck and every bingle went into safe territory. Spokane played a fairly good fielding game, but slow at times, while Aberdeen was like a well-oiled machine. Starkell pitched a good game.

The crowds in the grandstand and bleachers had no sooner cheered because Jensen's first ball over the plate was a strike than they again screamed their joy when Moore, first up, struck out. When Van Burin proved an easy victim from Mackin to Hulen enthusiasm was at its height, but its reign was temporary the fireworks being inaugurated right then and there, which netted four runs. There were five hits, a passed ball, a fielder's choice, and error and some base running that would have made Dan Kelley look slow. It was awful and sent the multitude into a trance from which it was rudely awakened by the clanging of the bell. This rubbed in the fact that Aberdeen had won for itself a safe lead and a Spokane victory for the opening day seemingly was an utter impossibility.

Errors of omission and not commission were mostly responsible for the runs which Aberdeen did get through its clouting of the leather. Right in the first inning, preceding the fusilade, a grounder in the direction of Chandler should have been handled and would have retired the side. There were several other similar pieces of bad judgment which will only be washed away with hard work. Donovan in left fielded weakly and was affected with a glass arm.

But at that, Spokane showed up nicely for the opener, considering the team was up against the aggregation which has practically been intact for two years. Chandler was a wizard at short and he was in every play. His one-handed catch while running back for the ball was as nice a piece of work as ever witnessed in Spokane. Mackin showed himself a ball player, and he took care of many hot ones, his error being the muff of a high fly which was out of his territory, and which he should have allowed Bill Carney to handle. Hulen was lively at first and at the bat demonstrated he is still the wise head he has always been. Kippert at center was the bright, particular star, in a fielding way. In the third he threw in from deep left and got a man at the plate and in the ninth he figured in a double play, making a nice running catch of Brown's hit and getting Fitzgerald a first with a perfect throw.

Spokane's two runs were scored in the fourth. Chandler and James walked and Hulen sacrificed. Mackin got a complimentary, filling the bases. Chandler came home on a passed ball. Kippert went out on an infield fly. Reniker scored James with a single to left.

On the Butte team, in the same league, Si Bennett, Edmonton's star right fielder, the best fielder in last year's league, and Lussi, the first baggger on the same team, hold positions and are the star performers. Bennett is playing left and Lussi first. Each made three hits, two of Bennett's being three-baggers. Lussi also figured in a double play. The Spokesman-Review says: "In Si Bennett and Lussi, Butte has picked up two swell fielders and hard hitters."

Editor The Times:
Medicine Hat, Alberta.

Dear sir,

A few issues ago you published an article in your paper concerning the Canneries company meeting held at Maple Creek which was not correct in some respects and I would ask you to be so kind as to set the matter right in your paper. I beg to state that NO ONE ever mentioned either at the meeting or while any of us were at Maple Creek that there were not enough shareholders present to constitute a quorum, and it was only on our arrival at the Hat that a gentleman who was present at the meeting informed us that the meeting was abortive on account of there being no quorum. It was then, after discussing the matter, thought advisable that Mr. Forster, Dr. Halpenny and the secretary of the board should go to Regina and interview the Attorney-General and ascertain what would be the proper course to follow.

This, my dear sir, was done under advice we received in your town and surely after such an unlooked for occurrence as a non-quorum we could not have followed a wiser course in the interests of the company and the shareholders than to go and lay the case before the attorney-general and ascertain what he thought would be the best course to adopt. Thanking you in anticipation.

I am, yours truly,
CHAS. A. FLOUR.

NO MOTHER TO GUIDE HER.

"No Mother to Guide Her," which comes to the Opera House on Saturday abounds with thrilling situations and startling episodes. Few melodramas, since the advent of "The Silver King" have given such general satisfaction to the lower part of the house and theatre-goers who know and enjoy clever comedy cannot afford to miss this production. It is heralded as being brighter, better and stronger than ever. This will be the first time the piece has been seen in our city. Every woman who loves a good pure play should see "No Mother to Guide Her."

The Future of the Ranching Country and The Live Stock Industry

(Paper read before the National Live Stock Convention at Ottawa, by Robert Sinton, Regina, President of the Saskatchewan Stock Breeders' Association.)

I am afraid that a residence of 30 years on the western prairies with all the attendant experiences of pioneer life, such as skirmishing with Indians, fighting prairie fires, camping in the open with the mercury ranging about forty below, riding the sun-parched plains for days and even weeks at a time with the mercury hovering around 100 in the sun—I fear that experiences such as these do not afford the best training for easy and fluent platform speaking. I shall endeavor, however, to lay before you as briefly and concisely as I can, some of my conclusions concerning the future of the ranching country and of the cattle industry drawn from the observations and experiences of nearly a third of a century spent in the west.

I note with pleasure that the live stock commissioner has very thoughtfully included in his invitation to this convention representatives from every province in confederation, and I hope that, while discussing questions from our own local or provincial standpoint, we may be able always to keep in mind the national scope and objects of this convention as implied in the name.

I suppose that the ranching area in the prairie provinces, as included in the question under discussion, may be understood to mean that portion of the west described in the Dominion grazing regulations as that portion of Alberta lying south of the north boundary of township 28 and taking in all of the southern end of the province, comprising about 33,600 square miles of territory. In Saskatchewan the grazing regulations apply to a territory including about 22,650 square miles, situated in the southwestern corner of the province.

This area, if devoted exclusively to stock-raising, would, at the rate of 20 acres to the animal, furnish pasturage for nearly 2,000,000 head of cattle. It must be borne in mind, however, that a large part of this country has been found suitable for agricultural purposes; and it is impossible to say just how much of it may ultimately be found to be more profitably devoted to farming than to ranching.

While live stock can be successfully raised in almost all parts of the prairie provinces by putting up hay for winter feeding, it is only in the area above mentioned that it has been found possible to winter cattle on the open range with any degree of success. The great stretch of country just referred to above has had many attractions for the rancher of the past, among these may be cited the great extent of the country and the abundant pasturage that it affords, the shelter that might be had in various places and could be taken advantage of in case of storms, the modifying effect of the Chinook winds, the nature of the grass, and the abundance of water. While the country was yet untrammelled with wire fences (those death traps of the range) live stock could drift ahead of the storm until a place of shelter was reached. The nature of the grass in this section of the country is such that it cures as it stands retaining all of its nutritive qualities thus making an ideal winter food for stock. Water can be obtained everywhere from rivers, creeks, lakes, springs and sloughs. The strength of country commonly known as the ranching country and at present under discussion is also frequently spoken of as the chinook belt. The modifying effect of these warm winds is felt in greater or less degree over the greater portion of the cattle country.

With all of these advantages, this district affords, except for an occasional hard winter, almost ideal conditions for ranching purposes for both cattle and sheep; while for the purpose of raising horses, I do not believe that either the climate or the country can be beaten in the world.

THE PASSING OF THE RANGE.

To an experienced stock man of the range it is a matter of regret that this country, with its peculiar advantages for ranching purposes, should be so rapidly invaded by the farmers. This, however, must be accepted as the inevitable. The progress that has been made in recent years in the process of dry farming has made it possible to utilize for farming purposes large portions of this country that were regarded ten and fifteen years ago as absolutely unfit for agriculture; irrigation systems of considerable magnitude are also being rapidly established and extended; and these facts supplemented with the excellent homestead regulations and aggressive immigration policy of the present government, are gradually having the effect of peopling this country with large numbers of prosperous farmers where once the intrepid rider of the range held absolute sway. The fencing of the railways through this country has also had a baneful effect on the ranching industry. Cattle drifting before the storm are driven up against one of these wire fences and perish in a few hours; when, but for the fence they would have drifted to the shelter of some coulee or river bottom and would probably have survived. While visiting Calgary summer fair last season, I was struck with the effect of these fences even on the wild animals of the range. All along the south side of the railway from Medicine Hat to Gleichen were hundreds of antelope that had been intercepted in their northerly migration; while on the north side of the railway were the carcasses of hundreds of cattle that had perished during the storms of last winter as a result of their being caught in their drifting south before the storm by these deadly wire fences. Many of the farmers' settlements are also fenced and farmers have, in many cases, fenced in the water supply, so that the masses of the open range cannot be utilized by the ranchers. As a result of the combined effect of all these influences, the time is not far distant when the open ranging of stock in large bands and herds will, like the buffalo, be a thing of the past.

MIXED FARMING.

This territory, however, is beautifully adapted for a system of mixed farming. Nature has indeed been kind to us in western Canada in this regard. We have large tracts of beautiful farming lands, alternating with great stretches of grazing lands But this very fact that our farming land is often found in such large tracts makes it necessary, if mixed farming is to be adopted, that we devise a system suitable to our peculiar conditions. I have thought that at some period, perhaps not far distant, in the evolution of our farming and stock raising methods in the west large organizations of farmers would band together and lease a considerable tract of grazing land where they could run their stock in the summer months on the co-operative plan. I have thought that some such plan as the following might be worked out with advantage to all concerned in the west: It is expected, I believe, that the province of Saskatchewan will be organized into municipalities of uniform size, to consist of nine townships in the form of a square. Alberta will, in all probability, adopt a similar municipal division. Now, if our grazing lands could be set aside by the government and arrangements made whereby a municipality in the exclusively agricultural country could lease a block of grazing land of about the same area, the municipality could then fence, fire guard it, and engage a rider in the summer to take charge of the stock. The farmers' cattle and young horses could be collected in the municipality early in the spring and sent out to this range where they could be cared for all summer, and would come home in the fall in prime condition and would have cost their owners comparatively little. The municipality could charge each farmer taking advantage of the municipal range, say $1 or $1.50 a head for the season. This would amply cover all expenses for fencing and labor; in fact, this municipal range could easily be made a revenue-producing enterprise for the municipality if it were thought wise. This stock could be brought home from the range in the fall and wintered on the farm at a very slight expense. I have had considerable experience in wintering cattle on straw with the addition of a small quantity of grain and I know that very satisfactory results can be obtained at a trifling expense for grain fed. For the last two or three winters I have wintered a herd of something like one hundred pure-bred cattle and have brought them out in the spring in excellent condition, having won prizes with some of them at the fat stock show in the spring. These cattle were wintered on oat and wheat straw supplemented with about six pounds of chop per day. This grain I bought at the mill for about $10 a ton; so you can see that the cost of wintering my cattle in this way was a mere trifle. If, therefore some such system of mixed farming as I am suggesting were introduced in the west a great deal of the straw that we now burn, and much of which is quite equal to ordinary hay for feeding purposes would become a valuable source of revenue. Our coarse grains could be fed at home with advantage; labor would be provided for the farmers' hired men all the year round, which is a great advantage in itself, and instead of building up a population of wheat ranchers who have no attachment for the land, we should be developing a population of farmers more deeply interested in their agricultural operations and more permanently attached to their holdings.

As it is at present in our open-prairie wheat-growing country, many farmers regard themselves as only sojourners on the land. Too many of them, although well-to-do financially, never build comfortable buildings, do not plant trees, cultivate gardens, or make any of those other permanent improvements that indicate the home. Too many of them regard themselves as merely camping on their wheat farms for a few years until they can make enough money to retire to their towns. I need scarcely remind you that it is only among stock rearing nations that we find the real permanent home makers on the farm; and I may add here that we shall never succeed in introducing any system of mixed-farming on these wheat-growing plains unless provision is made for the summering of cattle on some such co-operatipe plan as I have suggested. The land, to begin with is too valuable for wheat-growing purposes to set any portion of it aside for summer pastureage. Again, these pasture fields would necessitate fencing; and there are many other arguments that tend to deter the farmer on the wheat-growing plains from keeping any more stock than enough to furnish the draught power required on the farm.

What an immense advantage it would be to the farmers of the great plains around Moose Jaw, Regina and down the Soo line, if they could by some such co-operative plan as I have suggested, take advantage of that great stretch of country adjoining this prairie to the southwest and west and known as the Dirt Hills country. Although this country has not in the past proved a safe winter range for cattle, it is a first class summer range for all kinds of stock and a splendid winter range for horses. It is not, however, suitable as a rule for farming purposes. Those farmers could, without curtailing their wheat-growing operations in the slightest, keep large herds of cattle and horses. Their cattle and young horses could be brought home from the range and wintered on the farm, and all the older horses could be wintered on the range very satisfactorily if thought desirable. I think it would be well however, to bring the foals and yearling colts home to the farm for the winter for the purpose of having them halter-broken and thoroughly domesticated. Some such system as this would be of immense advantage to the wheat-grower as it would furnish him with an additional source of revenue, without in any way interfering with his grain-growing operations; it would act as an insurance against a partial or total crop failure; it would enable him in bad years like the present to feed his low-grade grain instead of marketing it at ruinously low prices; it would enable him to find profitable employment for himself, his family and his hired help throughout the year; it would very greatly add to the interest of life on the farm, and thus tend to bind the younger generation more closely to the farm; and in many other ways it would tend to the permanent advantage, not only of the individual, but also of the community as a whole.

It would also re-act very beneficially upon the stock industry of the west, in as much as it would tend to the production of a better class of cattle than are at present produced by exclusive range-growing. These cattle would be placed on the market in a better finished condition and because of their greater numbers and better quality would attract and stimulate greater competition among exporters. And, further it would benefit the market by distributing marketing of our cattle over a large portion of the year, instead of flooding the market for two or three months in the fall of the year as is the case at present with the cattle from the ranching country. In fact, if we are ever to establish a chilled meat trade with all its kindred industries, some such means as this must be devised for providing a more uniform supply of cattle on the market throughout the year.

From a national standpoint, also, some such arrangement as I have suggested is very much to be desired; as it would bring the ranching land itself and the live stock industry in the west into the hands of a greater number of people who would be more profitably employed and more permanent holdings and to the country as a whole. In a country given over to an entirely attached to their individual ranching on the old lines, the natural tendency is for the control of the land to fall gradually into the hands of a few large corporations. But under the Canadian colonization system the control of the land cannot easily be wrested from the hands of the people. We have many holdings and many holders all working on an equality. And these are the conditions that tend to build up a strong, prosperous, and contented people.

British and American Railway Accidents

(Scientific American.)

It is not generally known that the British railroads carry a far larger number of passengers in a single year than do those of the United States; and this in spite of the fact that the aggregate mileage in Great Britain is about 27,000 as against over 200,000 miles in the United States. A comparison of the statistics of the year 1906, as published in the reports of our inter-state Commerce Commission and of the British Board of Trade show that during the year 1906, 799,000,000 passengers were carried on all the railroads of the United States and 1,240,000,000 passengers on the railroads of Great Britain. Now, the carrying of a billion and a quarter passengers on 27,000 miles of road means a very much denser traffic than the carrying of 800,000,000 passengers on over 200,000 miles of railroad. Furthermore, it will be admitted that the risks of accident are proportional to the density of traffic, and that, on two equally well-managed railroad systems, we naturally expect to find that the greater number of accidents happen on the road with the denser traffic, or the one carrying the greater number of passengers per mile of track.

A comparison of the statistics for 1906, however, shows that as far as the United States and Great Britain are concerned, the system with the denser traffic shows by far the smaller number of casualties. It is probably safe to say that the surest test of safe railway operation is the number of collisions and derailments; and we find that during the year named there were 239 such accidents in Great Britain as against 18,455 in the United States. In these accidents 58 passengers were killed and 631 injured in Great Britain, as against 146 killed and 6,053 injured in the United States. The number of employees killed and injured in train accidents in Great Britain was respectively 13 and 140, as against 870 killed and 7,483 injured in the United States. The number of employees killed by coupling accidents, ain was 425, and in the United States falling from cars, etc., in Great Britain 2,388, and the number of employees injured in the year was 4,225 in Great Britain as against 32,564 in the United States. The astonishing disparity between the records of the two countries is further established by the records of the year 1904, when only 6 passengers were killed and 584 injured in Great Britain as against 262 killed and 8,231 killed in the United States.

Although the superior safety of British railroad operation is due in large measure, no doubt, to the higher average of excellence of the roadbed and rolling stock—a considerable portion of our railroad system being even yet of the pioneer type—the true secret of the difference is to be found in certain fundamental traits of national character. The smooth and safe working of the British railroad is chiefly due to the inbred cautiousness of the employees; to their natural inclination to remain for many years in the same position, thereby acquiring thorough familiarity with the conditions; and lastly and chiefly, to the excellence of the railroad discipline. There can be no doubt that the prevalence of railway accidents in America is due in large measure to the fluctuating, migratory character of the labor. A census of railway employees at any given time would show that a considerable percentage of them are either new to their positions, or are contemplating a change in the near future. No amount of natural intelligence and alertness can give the American railroad man that familiarity with the duties of his position which marks the British employee, who has probably held his job for a dozen or fifteen years past.

Even more serious, as a predisposing cause of railway accidents, is the lamentable lack of discipline which is becoming increasingly manifest in these days of labor union interference This has been carried to such a point that the officials of our railroads have no longer that direct control of the employees which is absolutely essential to the maintenance of discipline. Until this condition of things is changed it is hopeless to look for any material reduction in the annual number of killed and wounded on our railroads.

DRUGGIST — EXPERT OPTICIAN

Don't Neglect a Cough or Cold

IT CAN HAVE BUT ONE RESULT. IT LEAVES THE THROAT or LUNGS, OR BOTH, AFFECTED.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP IS THE MEDICINE YOU NEED. . . . . .

It is without an equal as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Pain in the Chest, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Quinsy and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.

A single dose of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will stop the cough, soothe the throat, and if the cough or cold has become settled on the lungs, the healing properties of the Norway Pine Tree will proclaim its great virtue by promptly eradicating the bad effects, and a persistent use of the remedy cannot fail to bring about a complete cure.

Do not be humbugged into buying a called Norway Pine Syrups, but be sure and insist on having Dr. Wood's. It is put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark, and price 25 cts.

Mrs. Henry Seabrook, Hepworth, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup in our family for the past three years and I consider it the best remedy known for the cure of colds. It has cured all my children and myself."

Permanent Results

"I had been suffering for over two months with an obstinate cough, as had also my little girl. We tried several remedies common to any drug store without obtaining any apparent relief, in fact we were growing worse. I got a bottle of Coltsfoote Expectorant from my druggist and inside of two days the cough was stopped, and the results so permanent and rapid that we decided to keep it in our home continually.

Financial Specialists.

The school board has given no notice of what it intends to do with the teaching of languages. They have been elected to provide the best education possible and residents of the city have a right to demand attention to such an important part of the high school training as the teaching of languages. However, the board sees fit to control things so exclusively and so independently that they do not see fit to relieve the anxiety of the parents. Admitted they are masters of the situation to a certain extent, it is not necessary to resent suggestion so strongly as to refuse to be influenced by other than their own ideas. Not all the members are of the narrow, financial variety, but there appear to be enough to keep those down who think it is education they are there to work for and not cheapness alone.

It must be that the school board has neglected to read the curriculum, since anybody reading the book that sets down the rules controlling the studies, does not require any better education than that possessed by the board to know that languages are a necessity in preparatory work.

Here is what the curriculum states: (For the information of the board, they can be obtained from the Department of Education at Edmonton). Pupils in Standard VII. must write on English composition, English literature, general history, physical geography, geometry, animal life and any three of the following: Algebra, English grammar and rhetoric, chemistry, Latin, French or German. In Medicine Hat they have no option; they MUST take the first three of the options. In Standard VIII. the same thing exists.

But more important still. Alberta is opening a university in the fall and Medicine Hat is not preparing one pupil for it or any other university. Has the school board come across the following notes in the curriculum ?:

Students desiring standing equivalent to matriculation MUST SELECT FOR EXAMINATION THE LANGUAGES and other subjects prescribed therefore by the university.

Also:—

Students desiring university standing equivalent to the first year MUST SELECT FOR EXAMINATION THE LANGUAGES and other subjects prescribed therefore by the university.

It is said Dr. Tory had a few sharp words for the board when he found languages being ignored.

Every other high school in Alberta gives languages such importance that over 80 per cent. of the pupils take one or more of the languages. Lethbridge has just now decided to offer two annual scholarships of $50 each to pupils writing Junior or Senior Alberta University matriculation. The chairman of the school board cannot claim that there has been no demand. There is one instance only a few months ago of a girl coming to the city, with a good training in German, French and Latin; but when she reached our educational institution she had to start into science.

A city is advertised by the students it sends to the great universities, almost as much as in any other way. Calgary, Edmonton, Strathcona, Lethbridge and Medicine Hat each hope to be honoured by her sons and daughters in university circles. But any student going from Medicine Hat has no chance whatever with those sent out even by Lethbridge and Strathcona, because the latter students can step right into university work, while Medicine Hat's sons have to spend a preparatory year in languages before they can enter the university.

What Medicine Hat seems to need for educational purposes is a school board that will consider brains rather than bawbees; a board that will educate our children rather than save us a few cents. The board is selected to provide the best education in its power, not to look after our pocket books. We will let them know when we think they are giving us too much education.

Of course we recognize that all these arguments are most effectively and cleverly dismissed by that historical squelcher: "Oh, someone has to kick at something."

All that is necessary now is the assurance from the school board that with the beginning of the new school year our high school pupils will have the ordinary advantages of languages.

Cleaning Them Out.

(Edmonton Saturday News.)

The Edmonton city authorities have been called upon during the past week to face what we have no hesitation in describing as the gravest and most difficult problem that confronts modern communities. The word "modern" is used advisedly. The evil that has to be dealt with is probably as old as humanity, but with the change from simple to more complex conditions, that is involved in our growth as a nation or as a city, it becomes many times accentuated. Mr. Leckv in his history of European morals, has a chapter on the subject, which no one who reads it can ever forget. Describing the changes which follow upon the spread of civilization he writes:

"Under these circumstances there has arisen a figure which is certainly the most mournful and in some respects the most awful upon which the eye of the moralist can dwell. That unhappy being whose very name it is a shame to speak appears in every age as the perpetual symbol of the degradation and sinfulness of man."

It is not a pleasant topic to dwell on but there is no use shutting our eyes to the existence of conditions which require treatment of some kind at the hands of the public. In Edmonton the question arose as the result of a petition from the residents of Norwood against certain resorts being allowed to continue in that portion of the city. Other citizens, (none of whom lived in Norwood, we venture to say) presented a counter petition asking that they be not disturbed and pointing out the evils that would follow if they were. But the council, when the matter came before it, did not take long to make up its mind and the police, as a consequence, have been engaged in breaking up the undesirable community to which the people of Norwood objected to so strongly.

The argument against this policy is stated very succinctly in a recent editorial in The Lethbridge News.

(Here the Saturday News quotes The Lethbridge News which openly favors segregation. The Edmonton paper continues :)

This is a bald enough statement. The ideas set forth are often heard in private conversation, but it is not often that a public journal has the courage to come out and express them. Whether right or wrong, however, we are confident that no Canadian town or city will ever knowingly adopt them. The authorities may secretly uphold a policy of segregation but just as soon as the question becomes a public issue, they will have to abandon it. It may minimize certain of the evils that are referred to in the article from The Lethbridge News. But there are objections which more than counter-balance this advantage.

Is it fair to any particular locality to make it the centre of this traffic ? The fear of exposure has kept many a young fellow straight. What if he knew he underwent no risks, that there was no danger of the police pouncing down upon a resort, while he was there ?

But there are more fundamental objections still. It is an offence under the law to conduct such establishments as those referred to. Have the city police, or the commissioners from whome they receive their orders, or has the attorney-general's department, which is charged with the enforcement of the law, any right to allow its violation ? If we are to have a segregation system, an amendment to the criminal code is necessary. Those who advocate the system should therefore address themselves, not to the city council nor to the attorney-general but to the members of the parliament of Canada. But, among the latter, it is extremely doubtful if they would find a single individual to take up their cause.

The men who express their accord with the segregation idea are indeed few, but The Edmonton News need not feel much surprise that covertly a modified segregation was practised in Edmonton. In conversation with the writer, a very prominent official of last year's council of the City of Edmonton advocated such treatment of the question. To be sure, not another of the group of six supported him, but he persisted in his belief that cities would come to it, and nothing would shame him. The attitude of this official explained thoroughly to the group of men, and would explain to the west, why it is that Edmonton had a bad name for houses of this kind. And the very fact that this was so should be proof sufficient that segregation is not the way to treat one of the worst sins of mankind.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Rudyard Kipling's tribute to Medicine Hat and his entertainment here is appreciated by the city and by those who took part in the day's sight-seeing. If the pleasure to the well known author was as great as it was to those whom he thanks, we are satisfied. Read his story about his visit on the front page.

The Times is at the back of any move for the beautifying of the city. Any suggestions for gardening, tree-raising, caring for the lawn, etc. will be received and published. If you have discovered any little knacks peculiar to successful gardening in this city they will be valuable to others.

A letter from C. A. Flour, a director of the Western Canneries is published in another column. Mr. Flour states that the information received by The Times regarding their knowledge of a no-quorum meeting at the time it was held was wrong.

The mistake will certainly never occur again.

Remember we have always sent The Times, the paper that publishes ALL the news, to subscribers outside of Alberta for $1.00, when ordered b a local subscriber.

THE DEBUTANTE PLAYS BRIDGE

Let's see . . . what's trumps ?—O Grace, you're hat's a dear
And so becoming too...Girls did you hear
That Clara Cotrox is engaged at last
And to a Count with a dreadful Past
And not a penny to his titled name?
(I dote on bridge; it's such a clever game.
Let's see.....what's trumps ?)
There's Catherine over there.
And entre nous, I hear she dyes her hair
And paints—but I might too, with such a face !
(Oh ! partner ! did I really trump your ace ?)
Who is that freak three tables to the right ?
I saw her at the Wilbur-Brownes last night;
Some parvenu, no doubt, and goodness knows
I think a blacksmith must design her clothes.
(Are hearts or diamonds trumps ? O that's a fact.
It's clubs).
Some girls are so devoid of tact;
That Carlton creature in the last year's hat
Just makes me mad as mad—she's such a cat,
And nearly snaps your head off if you don't
Keep absolutely dumb—of course I won't.
Oh, girls, Jack's so devoted it's a joke,
He's quite my shadow. What did I ... revoke ?
Well, anyway, I think it's mean to take
Three tricks from me for just that small mistake.
Bridge bores me frightfully, I'm bound to say,
Though Jack says it's astounding how I play.
Why will some hostesses invite such frumps ?
Oh, dear! My lead again?—Let's see .....what's trumps ?

—Puck.

By HENRY SETON MERRIMAN
Author of "The Sowers," "Flotsam's Quarry," "From One Generation to Another," Etc.

Copyright, 1894, by Harper & Brothers

The habit of self suppression was so strong upon him—acquired as a mere social duty—that it was only natural for him to think less of himself than of the expediency of the moment. The social discipline is as powerful an agent as that military discipline that makes a man throw away his own life for the good of the many.

Oscard laughed, too, in a strangely staccato manner.

"It is rather a sudden change," observed Meredith, "and all brought about by your coming into that room at that particular moment—by accident."

"Not by accident," corrected Oscard, speaking at last. "I was brought there and pushed into the room."

"By whom?"

"By your father."

Jack Meredith sat upright. He drew his curved hand slowly down over his face—keen and delicate as was his mind—his eyes deep with thought.

"The guv'nor," he said slowly. "The guv'nor!"

He reflected for some seconds.

"Tell me how he did it," he said curtly.

Oscard told him, rather incoherently, between the puffs. He did not attempt to make a story of it, but merely related the facts as they had happened to him. It is probable that to him the act was veiled which Jack saw quite distinctly.

"That is the sort of thing," was Meredith's comment when the story was finished, "that takes the conceit out of a fellow. I suppose I have more than my share. I suppose it is good for me to find that I am not so clever as I thought I was—that there are plenty of cleverer fellows about, and that one of them is an old man of seventy-nine. The worst of it is that he was right all along. He saw clearly where you and I were—damnably blind."

He rubbed his slim brown hands together and looked across at his companion with a smile wherein the youthful self confidence was less discernible than of yore. The smile faded as he looked at Oscard. He was thinking that he looked older and graver—more of a middle aged man who has left something behind him in life—and the sights reminded him of the few gray hairs that were above his own temples.

"Come," he said more cheerfully, "tell me your news. Let us change the subject. Let us throw aside light dalliance and return to questions of money. More important—much more satisfactory. I suppose you have left Durnovo in charge? Has Joseph come home with you?"

"Yes, Joseph has come home with me. Durnovo is dead."

"Dead!"

Guy Oscard took his pipe from his lips.

"He died at Msala of the sleeping sickness. He was a bigger blackguard than we thought. He was a slave dealer and a slave owner. Those forty men we picked up at Msala were slaves belonging to him."

"Ach!" It was a strange exclamation, as if he had burned his fingers. "Who knows of this?" he asked immediately. The expediency of the moment had presented itself to his mind again.

"Only ourselves," returned Oscard. "You, Joseph and I."

"That is all right, and the sooner we forget that the better. It would be a dangerous story to tell."

"So I concluded," said Oscard in his slow, thoughtful way. "Joseph swears he won't breathe a word of it."

Jack Meredith nodded. He looked rather pale beneath the light of the gas.

"Joseph is all right," he said. "Go on."

"It was Joseph who found it out," continued Oscard, "up at the plateau. I paraded the whole crowd, told them what I had found out, and chucked up the whole concern in your name and mine. Next morning I abandoned the plateau with such men as cared to come. Nearly half of them stayed with Durnovo. I thought it was in order that they might share in the simiacine. I told them they could have the whole confounded lot of the stuff. But it was not that. They tricked Durnovo there. They wanted to get him to themselves. In going down the river we had an accident with two of the boats, which necessitated staying at Msala. While we were waiting there one night after 10 o'clock the poor devil came alone in a canoe. They had simply cut him in slices. A most beastly sight. I wake up sometimes even now dreaming of it, and I am not a fanciful sort of fellow. Joseph went into his room and was simply sick. I didn't know that you could be made sick by anything you saw. The sleeping sickness was on Durnovo then. He had brought it with him from the plateau. He died before morning."

Oscard ceased speaking and returned to his pipe. Jack Meredith, looking haggard and worn, was leaning back in his chair.

"Poor devil!" he exclaimed. "There was always something tragic about Durnovo. I did hate that man, Oscard! I hated him and all his works."

"Well, he's gone to his account now."

"Yes, but that does not make him any better a man while he was alive. Don't let us cant about him now. The man was an unmitigated scoundrel. Perhaps he deserved all he got."

"Perhaps he did. He was Marie's husband."

"The devil he was!"

Meredith fell into a long reverie. He was thinking of Jocelyn and her dislike for Durnovo, of the scene in the drawing room, of the bungalow at Loango; of a thousand incidents all connected with Jocelyn.

"How I hate that man!" he exclaimed at length. "Thank God, he is dead, because I should have killed him."

Guy Oscard looked at him with a slow, pensive wonder. Perhaps he knew more than Jack Meredith knew himself of the thoughts that conceived those words, so out of place in that quiet room from those suave and courtly lips.

All the emotions of his life seemed to be concentrated into this one day of Jack Meredith's existence. Oscard's presence was a comfort to him. The presence of a calm, strong man is better than many words.

"So this," he said, "is the end of the simiacine. It did not look like a tragedy when we went into it."

"So far as I am concerned," replied Oscard, with quiet determination, "it certainly is the end of the simiacine. I have had enough of it. I, for one, am not going to look for that plateau again."

"Nor I. I suppose it will be started as a limited liability company by a German in six months. Some of the natives will leave landmarks as they come down so as to find their way back."

"I don't think so!"

"Why?"

Oscard took his pipe from his lips.

"When Durnovo came down to Msala," he explained, "he had the sleeping sickness on him. Where did he get it from?"

"By Jove!" ejaculated Jack Meredith, "I never thought of that. He got it up at the plateau. He left it behind him. They have got it up there now."

"Not now"—

"What do you mean, Oscard?"

"Merely that all those fellows up there are dead. There is £90,000 worth of simiacine packed ready for carrying to the coast standing in a pile on the plateau, and there are thirty-four dead men keeping watch over it."

"Is it as infectious as that?"

"When it first shows itself infectious is not the word; it is nothing but a plague. Not one of those fellows can have escaped."

Jack Meredith sat forward and rubbed his two hands pensively over his knees.

"So," he said, "only you and I and Joseph know where the simiacine plateau is."

"That is so," answered Oscard.

"And Joseph won't go back?"

"Not if you were to give him that £90,000 worth of stuff."

"And you will not go back?"

"Not for £900,000. There is a curse on that place."

"I believe there is," said Meredith.

And such was the end of the great simiacine scheme—the wonder of a few seasons. Some day, when the great Sahara is turned into an inland sea, when steamers shall ply where sand now flies before the desert wind, the plateau may be found again. Some day, when Africa is cut from east to west by a railway line, some adventurous soul will scale the height of one of many mountains, one that seems no different from the rest and yet is held in awe by the phantom haunted denizens of the gloomy forest, and there he will find a pyramid of wooden cases surrounded by bleached and scattered bones where vultures have fed.

In the meantime the precious drug will grow scarcer day by day, and the human race will be poorer by the loss of one of those half matured discoveries which have more than once in the world's history been on the point of raising the animal called man to a higher, stronger, finer development of brain and muscle than we can conceive of under existing circumstances. Who can tell? Perhaps the strange, solitary bush may be found growing elsewhere—in some other continent across the ocean. The ways of nature are past comprehension, and no man can say who sows the seed that crops up in strange places. The wind bloweth where it listeth, and none can tell what germs it bears. It seems hardly credible that the plateau, no bigger than a cricket field, far away in the waste land of central Africa, can be the only spot on this planet where the magic leaf grows in sufficient profusion to supply suffering humanity with an alleviating drug, unrivaled—a strength giving herb unapproached in power. But as yet no other simiacine has been found, and the plateau is lost.

And the end of it was two men who had gone to look for it two years before—young and hearty—returning from the search successful beyond their highest hopes, with a shadow in their eyes and gray upon their heads.

They sat for nearly two hours in that room in the quiet house in Russell square, where the cabs do not pass, and their conversation was of money. They sat until they had closed the simiacine account, never to be reopened. They discussed the question of renouncement and after due consideration concluded that the gain was rightly theirs, seeing that the risk had all been theirs. Slaves and slave owner had both taken their cause to a higher court, where the defendant has no worry and the plaintiff is at rest. They were beyond the reach of money—beyond the glitter of gold—far from the cry of anguish. A fortune was set aside for Marie Durnovo, to be held in trust for the children of the man who had found the simiacino plateau; another was apportioned to Joseph.

"Seventy-seven thousand one hundred and four pounds for you," said Jack Meredith at length, laying aside his pen; "seventy-seven thousand one hundred and four pounds for me. And," he added, after a little pause, "it was not worth it."

Guy Oscard smoked his pipe and shook his head.

"Now," said Jack Meredith, "I must go. I must be out of London tomorrow morning. I shall go abroad—America or somewhere."

He rose as he spoke, and Oscard made no attempt to restrain him.

They went out into the passage together. Oscard opened the door and followed his companion to the step.

"I suppose," said Meredith, "we shall meet some time, somewhere?"

"Yes."

They shook hands.

Jack Meredith went down the steps almost reluctantly. At the foot of the short flight he turned and looked up at the strong, peaceful form of his friend.

"What will you do?" he said.

"I shall go back to my big game," replied Guy Oscard. "I am best at that. But I shall not go to Africa."

CHAPTER XXIV.

"I RATHER expect — Lady Cantourne," said Sir John to his servants when he returned home, "any time between now and 10 o'clock."

The butler, having a vivid recollection of an occasion when Lady Cantourne was shown into a drawing room where there were no flowers, made his preparations accordingly. The flowers were set out with that masculine ignorance of such matters which brings a smile—not wholly of mirth—to a woman's face. The little used drawing room was brought under the notice of the housekeeper for that woman's touch which makes a drawing room what it is. It was always ready, this room, though Sir John never sat in it. But for Lady Cantourne it was always more than ready.

Sir John went to the library and sat rather wearily down in the stiff backed chair before the fire. He began by taking up the evening newspaper, but failed to find his eyeglasses, which had twisted up in some aggravating manner with his necktie. So he laid aside the journal and gave way to the weakness of looking into the fire.

Once or twice his head dropped forward rather suddenly so that his clean shaven chin touched his tie pin, and this without a feeling of sleepiness warranting the relaxation of the spinal column. He sat up suddenly on each occasion and threw back his shoulders.

"Almost seems," he muttered once, "as if I were getting to be an old man."

After that he remembered nothing until the butler, coming in with the lamp, said that Lady Cantourne was in the drawing room. The man busied himself with the curtains, carefully avoiding a glance in his master's direction. No one had ever found Sir John asleep in a chair during the hours that other people watch, and this faithful old servant was not going to begin to do so now.

"Ah," said Sir John, surreptitiously composing his collar and voluminous necktie, "thank you."

He rose and glanced at the clock. It was nearly 7. He had slept through the most miserable hour of Millicent Chyne's life.

At the head of the spacious staircase he paused in front of the mirror, half hidden behind exotics, and pressed down his wig behind either ear. Then he went into the drawing room.

Lady Cantourne was standing impatiently on the hearth rug, and scarcely responded to his bow.

"Has Jack been here?" she asked.

"No."

She stamped a foot, still neat despite its long journey over a road that had never been very smooth. Her manner was that of a commander in chief, competent but unfortunate in the midst of a great reverse.

"He has not been here this afternoon?"

"No," answered Sir John, closing the door behind him.

"And you have not heard anything from him?"

"Not a word. As you know, I am not fortunate enough to be fully in his confidence."

Lady Cantourne glanced round the room as if looking for some object

"John, you know something about this!"

upon which to fix her attention. It was a characteristic movement which he knew, although he had only seen it once or twice before. It indicated that if there was an end to Lady Cantourne's wit she had almost reached that undesirable bourn.

GO TO THE WEST FOR $7,500

Here is the most an easterner knows about farming in the west. It is from an exchange.

What amount of capital is necessary in order to establish a farm on a good basis in Western Canada? An answer to this question will interest a great number of prospective settlers at this time; for already thousands who turn their eyes to the golden west as their future home are making preparations to enter in and possess the land as soon as their eager eyes discern the first faint smile of spring. Particularly timely, therefore, is an article in the Empire Review, by Col. Mark Goldie, who has a large farm in the west, and who is competent to discuss the question of western farming.

HOW THE MONEY GOES.

If the Colonel must answer in a word his reply is "Seven Thousand Five Hundred Dollars." This amount will buy and stock a five hundred acre farm and run things for two or three years, until the farm becomes profitable. The $7,500 is made up of the following items:

Land, including legal charges	$3,425
Dwelling house, building and wells	810
Horses, cattle, pigs, fowls	1,055
Implements	793
Fencing	100
Seed, labor, food, clothing, etc.	1,296
Insurance	20

The outlay for land is calculated at $10 an acre for 340 acres, one-quarter section—160 acres—being obtainable practically for nothing. The price of land depends on two things, its quality and its proximity to a land at no great distance from a railway line can be secured.

THE WOMAN IN THE WEST.

In discussing the outlay for house and stabling, which appears to us a very low one, Col. Goldie asks the question, "Should a farmer be married?" and he answers, "Yes, as soon as he can give his wife a fair degree of comfort; a woman should not be asked to stand the rougher hardship of a prairie, unless she is prairie bred." The number of people who are to occupy the house determines its size and cost, and in considering this point Col. Goldie gives a useful hint. He says: "The rooms should not be too small, for in winter, out on the open prairie, the farmer seals up most openings, and is apt in small rooms to breathe the same air again. Should he do this, each spring finds him poorer in blood than he was the previous summer." As regards stabling, etc., the choice does not lie between protection for the stock and no protection, but between such protection as is effective, but must be reconstructed every three years, and that which is both effective and durable. The latter is the more expensive, as regards first cost, but in the long run is really economical.

STOCKING THE FARM.

As regards live stock the farmer's tastes must be taken into consideration, and the cost will vary accordingly, but Col. Goldie thinks that half a dozen work horses are necessary, that is, two teams and a spare animal or so. He recommends the purchase of good young horses at about $180 each, rather than the older horses that sell for less money. As a farmer should have butter and a few calves to sell, he ought to buy half a dozen head of grades with calves, or about to calve. This type he can get for $25 each. He should keep no more than he can house each winter, selling off surplus stock, until he is in a position to increase stable accommodation and therefore winter more cattle. For a couple of pigs and a well-bred flock of poultry only a few dollars need be allowed.

IMPLEMRETS AND WAGES.

The implements necessary include a binder, and a seed drill, as well as a couple of plows, harrows, carpenter's tools, pump, etc., while highly desirable, but not necessary, are a gang plow, scales, separator, pulverizer, and roller. The price of these implements, Col. Goldie considers too high. Some fencing is necessary from the beginning; so is some help for the idea is to keep two plows at work. When the hay is ready to cut another hired man is wanted. The cost of wages for the first couple of years is included in the estimate. The cost of feeding the farmer himself and the laborers Col. Goldie considers astonishingly small, and he puts the monthly board bill for one man at $6. For fuel nothing is allowed, for it is presumed that wood can be had for the cutting and hauling.

WHAT THE MONEY BUYS.

He remarks, too, that while he considers $7,500 necessary for a man to make a good start, it is possible to pay for the land on the instalment plan, thus spreading over ten years a sum that amounts to nearly half the capital. It is also possible for a man to begin without any help, but when this economy is necessary it only delays bringing the farm to a profitable stage. So one might go over every item on the list and trim it down, for there can be no doubt that the average western farmer has started with less than half this capital, but in Col. Goldie's opinion it is a real economy to make the expenditures he recommends, if it is possible for the farmer to do so. And even if $7,500 does seem a large sum it is small when one considers that it supplies three men with work for a couple of years, buys and improves a stretch of land the size of five Ontario farms, stocks it, crops it, and leaves the owner free of debt and in a fair way to independence and comfort.

A FALSE IDEA.

When trade is brisk and you daren't risk
New work on hand to take,
For fear through stress and business press
The contract you might break;
Don't stop your "ad." you'll yet be glad
In slacker times to find
You've fixed the fame of your good name
On some new buyers' mind.

It is a curious fact that some advertisers will stop their ad. in the slack time, and others will stop it in the busy time, from exactly the same idea that they should not advertise. The most prosperous firms today are those who hang out their sign twelve months in the year, and do not give people the mistaken idea that when they stop advertising they are going out of business for good. Remember this:

Heaps of rubbish have been sold
Through the tales that quacks have told
In their advertising.
If you couldn't do as well
When you've real good stuff to sell,
It would be surprising.—Ex.

The Recent Works of Luther Burbank

For over twenty-five years we have heard of the Burbank potato, but very few could have imagined what lay behind that name and into what greater meaning it would grow. Potato hoeing is usually considered a dull, tiresome task, but as a boy Luther Burbank took a different view. He looked at his home potato patch in New England, as a fascinating problem. The result was a new and improved variety of potato which, when he was eighteen he sold to a seedhouse for $150. This was practically Mr. Burbank's first experiment, and his success since then in developing principally the ideally beautiful in fruits and flowers makes it all the more interesting that again he is experimenting with the homely potato. For the last several years Mr. Burbank has planted and propagated potatoes on an immense scale, and now, with ten thousand kinds—his own hybrids—he diligently studies and works to perfect the white tuber in size, form and flavor.

Until recently it was almost impossible to obtain either tubers or seeds of the "Irish" potato in its original, wild form, from its ancient habitat in South America. There, high up in the peaks of the Andes, the potato plant still finds food on the grim, gaunt rims of extinct volcanoes, and slowly, in two years' time, develops into one shapeless tuber. But the Indians of those regions are as wild and resistant as the potato and fiercely resented encroachments by white men until civilization took the form of whisky. It is true that the seeds are washed down the sides of the mountains, but the plant changes form in its descent, finally becoming the worst weed the people have. More than ten thousand seedlings, Mr. Burbank says, of this weed, are found upon a single acre. He has been importing specimens of the original wild form from off the coast of Chili and crossing them with others of his cultivated types; from the results selecting the best for further development. Of the new varieties already obtained Mr. Burbank says some are almost as sweet as sweet potatoes. Certainly the world will await with great curiosity and equal faith the final results of this present series of potato experiments. One of the most important examples of the work to which Mr. Burbank has devoted himself is the development of a plant friend of his earliest years—the opuntia; for, as he expresses it, a thornless cactus was one of the first pets he had. There are hundreds of varieties of the opuntia, or prickly pear—so many that it has been a difficult matter to classify them; and they grow in almost as many different portions of the globe. Commonly supposed to be naturally thorny, in reality the opuntia was originally spineless and in addition possessed leaves. Lack of rain in the wild regions in which it spread caused it gradually to discard its leaves and substitute its stems (enlarged) as moisture gatherers. And in time thorns developed as the ravages of hungry animals increased, for nature usually gives her offspring some means of defense. Some varieties of the wild thornless cacti are still to be found in Hawaii and other countries growing in crevices of rocks or other spots inaccessible as feeding grounds. But in the places where forage is most needed, upon millions of arid acres all over the world, the opuntia's spines are most huge and fierce, its fine, sharp needles most deadly. In periods of draught and famine hundreds of thousands of animals have perished on Texas tracts and other wide stretches for lack of food and water. At its best the prickly pear means both, but even where ranchmen since the cactus for their cattle the spines cannot be entirely destroyed, so that in such instances animals suffer and die as well as when driven, desperate to the unsinged plants.

Our own government and scientific men of other countries have taken this work of Mr. Burbank's very seriously, since it has been found that the cultivated spineless opuntias he has bred will withstand adverse conditions of climate or soil quite as well as those native to desert regions and at the same time produce ten times more food than the average type of wild opuntias. But it is not only in desert regions that the thornless cactus is practicable and useful. The usual farm crop of forage is about twenty tons per acre; the new varieties, Mr. Burbank says, will produce 200 tons per acre, that is, under favorable conditions on good cultivated soil; and upon gravelly or rocky stretches where nothing now brings returns to the farmer this easily grown fodder crop will assure excellent results.

Although in one sense the thornless opuntias have virtually been brought to perfection, Mr. Burbank is still at work upon them, developing another phase of their usefulness, and one of the very latest things he has accomplished is to prove that the seeds may be made to go the way of the thorns. He has now two kinds of prickly pear whose fruits are practically seedless. The few still in evidence are almost as small as tomato seeds now, he says, and growing fewer all the time. The fruit is of value to stock from its juiciness and from the amount of sugar it contains (14 per cent. more or less). Also the best cactus contains 21 per cent. of fat, while others contain only a small fraction of one per cent. He reckons that on the poorer class of soil the average crop of fruit alone is 18,000 pounds per acre. As food for man the fruit is not new, but the tree oftenest found hitherto has been rather insipid—not unpleasant, yet distinctly peculiar in its flavor and of mucilaginous consistency. The wild specimens have chiefly been valued to quench thirst, yet in a number of warmer countries they are eaten to some slight extent as a dessert fruit, in marmalades, and are used for coloring ices, jellies, and other concoctions, the usual color being crimson. Mr. Burbank, however, has bred both crimson and yellow opuntias which he considers superior to the banana in flavor and they are delicious, variously prepared. One novel use to which both fruit and leaf-juice are put is as an addition to whitewash, since it acts as a preservative against exposure to inclement weather.

Mr. Burbank has now growing under his own observation the original wild type of grass (native to Mexico) from which gradually developed our modern maize. However, he cannot achieve results so quickly with this cereal as with many other forms of plant life, for corn, like cactus, is very persistent in clinging or reverting to type. Compared with the work necessary in developing these two plants he considers his development of the wild yellow California poppy into an orange, a crimson, and a blue poppy comparatively easy.

Some of Mr. Burbank's most powerful work has been with plums, creating among various delicious new types, the stoneless Blue Miracle plum. In the new Sanata Rosa, Gaviota, Formosa and Vesuvius plums—of reddish shades—only just placed upon the market, the pits are comparatively nil. Of the new fruit created by crossing the plum and apricot, the Plumcot, there are also already new varieties, for the famous plant-breeder does not halt at the first step but experiments ceaselessly.

An example of Mr. Burbank's development of various berries is his new Himalya blackberry (its ancestor a seedling sent from the Himalayas to the plant-scientist) each plant of which will yield eighty pounds of fruit each year, keeps well, and, according to his own judgment, is exquisite in quality.

Other experiments being carried on at Santa Rosa and the proving grounds at Sebastopol have to do with forage grasses, grapes, apples, cherries, chestnuts, and walnuts. The chestnut's richness as a starch-food is extremely valued in the Orient and Southern Europe. Foreign chestnuts are as a rule larger than ours, but Mr. Burbank has produced varieties far superior to any of those yet known and has thousands of hybrids which he has developed from Italian, American, Chinese, and Japanese species.

One of the unusual ideas embodied in the Burbank experiments is that of developing hardy types of tropical plant life, adapting them to colder climates. The banana is a most delicate fruit, the succulent leaves and stalks of the plant being extremely susceptible to frost. Yet Mr. Burbank expects to render it immune from cold and from the plantains (type of the species) he is now growing evolve a type which can be successfully raised by even New England growers out of doors.

Mr. Burbank's Shasta daisies (equal to chrysanthemums) his immense and miniature species of calla-lily breeding, his verbenas with odor of trailing arbutus, his new crested Heuchera cristata, his enormous, almost over-bearing crimson rhubarb, his improved prunes and other creations are wonderful, but those with an eye for both the practical and the beautiful will consider that few of his productions equal or surpass his two new hybrid walnut trees, the Paradox (the result of a cross between the California and the Persian or English walnut), and the Royal black walnut, from the California and the American black walnut. Both are essentially ornamental shade or forest trees, and no trees of the temperate zones can approach them in rapidity and luxuriance of growth. The fruit of the Paradox is not of any commercial importance. The Royal black walnut bears more abundantly and its nuts are larger and better than the old-fashioned black walnut, but their fruit is of mere secondary importance, for it is as lumber and shade that these trees were created and are pre-eminently adapted. The grain of their wood is fine, compact, hard and durable and susceptible of the highest polish. That of the Royal is very dark and is handsomer than that of the American black walnut, more nearly approaching mahogany. The Paradox is lighter in color but is also beautiful and "silky" in appearance. As our native black walnut forests have been almost entirely destroyed and the tree is slow in growth, foliage-loving foresters and practical lumbermen feel that the Burbank walnuts are almost priceless in value to the world.

In addition to his constant experimental work Mr. Burbank is now writing ten volumes for the Carnegie Institute, daily dictating to three stenographers. And because of Mr. Burbank, Santa Rosa now has three other busy scientific men as residents, for Prof. H. B. Humphrey and Dr. Leroy Abrams, both botanists and members of the Stanford university faculty are assisting Dr. Mays Martin (from the east) who has charge of the work of editing the ten-volume record of the Burbank botanical discoveries. With all this Mr. Burbank yet finds time once in a while to address some important public gathering, as the Irrigation Congress or the Teachers' Institute. He has identified himself so thoroughly with educational interests by his book, "The Training of the Human Plant," that it was a happy thing for the teachers that he could personally appear before them. This modern apostle of the practical and the beautiful is also the loving apostle of childhood, with ideas just as radical and just as sensible concerning children as concerning plants.

But those who achieve greatness pay the penalty. The world restlessly seeks the secret of happiness and success persistently, and naturally Therefore Mr. Burbank is sought by thousands who do not realize that he cannot spare time and strength from his work. Hard work and brilliant achievement are almost inseparable companions. And so it happens that nearly every friend who writes of Luther Burbank feels it his duty to protect him by quoting the notice now placed at each gate of the Burbank grounds ("By the Friends and Relatives of Luther Burbank"): "Positively no Visitors Allowed. Warning! Any Person Entering or Trespassing on these Grounds will be Prosecuted," and portions of the circular published for the information of the public, stating that the public has no moral, legal, or other right to invade his grounds, his home, his private office or his laboratories; and that Mr. Burbank has nothing for sale; he is not a nurseryman, not a florist, not a seedsman, not a dealer and not a raiser of any plants or seeds for sale.

SUFFERING WOMEN

who find life a burden, can have health and strength restored by the use of

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

The present generation of women and girls have more than their share of misery. With some it is nervousness and palpitation, with others weak, dizzy and fainting spells, while with others there is a general collapse of the system. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart and make it beat strong and regular, create new red blood corpuscles, and impart that sense of buoyancy to the spirits that is the result of renewed mental and physical vigor.

Mrs. D. O. Donoghue, Orillia, Ont., writes: "For over a year I was troubled with nervousness and heart trouble. I decided to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial, and after using five boxes I found I was completely cured. I always recommend them to my friends."

Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25, all dealers or The T. Milburn Co., Limited Toronto, Ont.

are mild, sure and safe, and are a perfect regulator of the system.

They gently unlock the secretions, clear away all effete and waste matter from the system, and give tone and vitality to the whole intestinal tract, curing Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Coated Tongue, Foul Breath, Jaundice, Heartburn, and Water Brash. Mrs. R. S. Ogden, Woodstock, N.B., writes: "My husband and myself have used Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a number of years. We think we cannot do without them. They are the only pills we ever take."

Price 25 cents or five bottles for $1.00, at all dealers or direct on receipt of price. The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Cure for Weak Lungs

The Spectacle.

A newspaper is in business purely and simply for the health and well being of other people. An editor is supposed to be willing to do any old thing from lying about his circulation to spending his time and newspaper space to boom some cheap-John company that wouldn't spend a cent on him without kissing the copper and shedding a few tears over its departure.

But sometimes the worm turns, or in other words, the editor rears and delivers a few kicks—and then subsides into dull acquiescence to any old thing.

The Times the other day received one of those tokens of belief in a newspaper's charitable disposition from a carriage firm in Grinnell, Iowa.

The letter read as follows:

Gentlemen :

We are desirous of knowing about your section of the country. Will you kindly favor us with answers to the following questions in the space left below each one ?

What is the financial condition of your farmers and the people of your town and vicinity ?

Do your farmers raise stock to any great extent ?

What are the principal crops raised in your section ?

Did your farmers raise a full crop last season ? If not what per cent. of a crop did they raise ?

What is the prospect of a crop this season ? Will you have a full average ? If not, what per cent ?

Are there or have there been parties trailing or selling vehicles direct to the people in your section during the past year ? If so, give names, if possible.

Is your road narrow track, 4 ft., 8 in. or wide track 5 ft. 2 in ?

What do you think of the prospects for selling a carload of vehicles in your section of the country ?

We enclose a stamped envelope for your reply, and wish to thank you in advance for any information you can give us.

Respectfully yours,

Grinnell Vehicle Company.

Send us copy of your paper.

Enclosed in the commonest manilla envelope with a stamped address were two bright new American coppers.

In the disappointment of finding that they were not gold dollars, to partially cover the time answering such a letter would take, the editor got real mad. With his coat off, his sleeves up, hair mussed, a big pen stuck fiercely in his teeth, he sat down and wrote :

Dear Spongers—

Your touching appeal to our generosity received and we hasten to devote our inconsequential time to your interests. As the space left between each question is not sufficient to do it justice we are writing a separate letter. The machine is busy or we would strike it off in type for you. Our failure to do so must not be construed into a lack of desire to gratify your slightest wish.

1. As to the financial condition of our farmers. we have asked for a statement from each one, and the banks may give us something to add to the report we receive from them. We have had to transfer our account to each bank in succession to secure this information, but we do not begrudge you a little thing like this. Regarding the finances of the town, everybody has so much money that they are buying automobiles, not carriages.

2. Yes, the farmers raise stock, and anything else they see move except checks. The townspeople, too, are interested in stock—most of it well watered.

3. The principal crops are wheat, oats, whiskers and children.

4. Crop was very full last season.

5. Prospects this season are bright.

6. Yes, several parties have been selling vehicles to the people as, for some reason, the vehicle business has gone on without the Grinnell carriage. This will change when they know you are coming.

7. Our roads are wide—extra wide. In fact there is often a distance of fifty miles on either side that can be used for track. We feel sure your rigs will sell, even if they are trackless.

8. The chances for you to sell carriages are exceedingly bright. Any company with your gall ought to be able to sell carriages where the people think they want self-binders or wheelbarrows. Don't bring a carload. Build your own railway line and run train loads; it will pay you. People are sure to come from Toronto, Montreal, Halifax and Vancouver to buy rigs from the company that thinks an editor will write the history of Alberta for two Yankee coppers and a manilla envelope.

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

The Socialist party of Canada local will meet to organize in Stationary Engineers' Hall on Tuesday evening, April 21, at 20k. All interested please attend.

It is anticipated that the new regulations by which every immigrant into Canada must have in his possession $25 on landing, will result in a considerable diminution of European immigration as compared with last year.

The Winnipeg street railwaymen are asking for a reduction of one hour in the working day, the schedule drawn up on the close of the big strike a couple of years ago having expired.

There are signs that the Liberal and Labor parties in Great Britain have come to the parting of the ways. Hitherto members of both parties have generally appeared in the same lobby when industrial measures are concerned, but the attitude of the government to certain social legislation has alienated the Labor group. The Unemployed Workmen Bill, better known as the "Right to Work" Bill, provided that it would be the duty of the local employment authority to find work for the unemployed, or failing that, should the necessity exist, to find maintenance which should be equivalent to the cost of the necessities of life. This measure was introduced by a Radical member, but opposed by the government.

The reconstruction of the Cabinet with Mr. Asquith as Premier will tend to widen the gulf. Amongst labor men the new Premier is regarded with distrust, almost with hatred. Should the rumor prove correct, that much of the advanced legislation (notably the old-age pension scheme) on the official programme, is to be dropped, Liberals will be opposed by Labor men at future elections in almost all industrial constituencies.

The tendency would appear to be for the advanced Radicals and Socialists (of the latter there are several, Mr. Chiozza Money, one of England's most eminent economists and statisticians, being among the number), to break away from the Whigeish official element. Political parties in the old land are in the melting pot.

D. Howrie left the city yesterday evening for the Okanagan valley. Mr. Howrie has been a prominent figure in Labor circles, being secretary-treasurer of the Trades and Labor council and of the recently formed Socialist local, and vice-president of the Carpenters' Union.

A meeting of the Socialist local was held on Thursday evening.

A branch of the Canadian Labor Party has been formed in Brandon.

There is a Workmen's Compensation act before the house of assembly of Nova Scotia at the present. The Trades council of Halifax is taking an active part in its furtherance.

Mackenzie King has returned from his mission to the Imperial government, and is said to have come to a satisfactory arrangement on the question of restriction of Hindu immigration to Canada.

Rumor has it that the Labor Minister will shortly be elevated to Cabinet rank.

Christian Guardian.—One of the most encouraging signs of the times to Temperance men is the very pronounced stand that is being taken by labor organizations both in Great Britain and in this country. A very interesting item in this connection comes recently from Montreal. At a recent meeting of the Trades and Labor council, a letter was read from Mr. Mee, president of the Montreal Bartenders' association, asking permission for the members of that association to take part in the Labor day parade. The request was quietly refused. The excuse given was that the admission of the bartenders to the Labor day parade would have damaged the cause of Labor; and the fear was expressed that the liquor trade would probably have tried in the end to secure control of the whole labor organization, and use it to further its own interests. This the labor party realizes would be suicidal. Labor and liquor are enemies and can never be friends.

A Montreal telegram states that the reason for the C.P.R. cutting loose from its contracts all over its lines on May 1, is the company's determination to maintain an open shop throughout their territory. The officials claim that under the present system competent and incompetent workmen are paid the same. To cope with any situation which may arise, extensive advertising is being carried out in British papers for workmen for Canadian Pacific lines, it is said.

Simple Home Recipe.

Mix This Simple, Helpful Recipe at Home and Try it Anyway.

Get from any prescription pharmacist the following:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered by an eminent authority who writes in a New York daily paper, as the finest prescription ever written to relieve backache, kidney trouble, weak bladder and all forms of prinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the eliminative tissues of the kidneys enabling them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture, yet those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising the relief being effected without the slightest injury to the stomach, or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes well recommended. It is the prescription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

A druggist, here at home, when asked, stated that he could either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription for our readers, also recommends it as harmless.

AGONIZING PILES.

CURED BY ZAM-BUK.

Mr. F. Astridge, of 3 St. Paul street, St. Catharines, Ont., says: "For five years I suffered untold agony with protruding piles. No one knows the suffering one has to endure only those who are so unfortunate as to have them. The pain was so great at times I would almost scream. I went down in weight and had no appetite. I tried everything I heard of for piles but got no relief. I went to several doctors but they would give me little hope of ever getting rid of them and I finally gave up in despair. One day a friend gave me a sample of Zam-Buk salve and told me of someone who had been cured. I decided to try it and the relief I got was encouraging. I bought a box and the piles kept on dominishing and the pain was getting less. I used three boxes and am now completely cured. I wish I could have got Zam-Buk years ago, it would have saved me a great deal of misery. One thousand dollars would be none too small an amount to give for such a cure as mine. I wish I could convince every sufferer of the value of Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk cures cuts, burns, chapped hands, cold sores, itch, ulcers, eczema, running sores, catarrh, piles, bad legs, abscesses, face sores, spring eruptions and all skin diseases. It is good also for rheumatism, sciatica, etc., when well rubbed in. Of all druggists and stores, 50 cents, or from Zam-Buk company Toronto.

The Josephsburg Fanat

The preliminary hearing in Dreamers' case was continued Wednesday and Thursday last, on Saturday and yesterday.

On Wednesday Emanuel Gill again called upon to give evide Cross-examined by D. G. White stated that he had never been p ent at any meetings at which J Lehr's or Michael Brost's names w mentioned. (This was contradict of his evidence on the previous urday).

"Ask him what he's lying for."

Witness replied that nothing "b had been said about these men. the meeting on the 11th Mic Gill's name was mentioned in nection with a straw stack fire. further deposed that Merkel, Ch ian Gill and F. Neiman were at meeting held on the 11th inst., Frederick Neiman's house. Au Neiman was there all day. Dre had been mentioned at the meeti but never discussed.

Witness had never set poison for John Lehr's dog. Last sp he had set poison for the gophers

Mrs. Christian Gill gave evid to the effect that she was up in c on a charge of shooting at J Lehr's daughter, but denied that had committed the offense.

Magdalene Gill, wife of Daniel and sister-in-law of Emanuel said she had never heard of a called "Dreamers." She belon to the congregation of the Peopl God, of which Emanuel Gill, Ja Merkel and the other prisoners members. She was present at meeting about two weeks ago Frederick Neiman's house. All members of the church were th except Mrs. Reib. John Reib there all the time. She had n heard any dreams discussed. VOL. 5. No. 34. MEDICINE HAT, ALTA., CANADA, TUESDAY, APRIL 28, 1908. $1.50 PER ANNUM

The Josephsburg Fanatics

The preliminary hearing in the Dreamers' case was continued on Wednesday and Thursday last, and on Saturday and yesterday.

On Wednesday Emanuel Gill was again called upon to give evidence. Cross-examined by D. G. White he stated that he had never been present at any meetings at which John Lehr's or Michael Brost's names were mentioned. (This was contradictory of his evidence on the previous Saturday.)

"Ask him what he's lying for."

Witness replied that nothing "bad" had been said about these men. At the meeting on the 11th Michael Gill's name was mentioned in connection with a straw stack fire. He further deposed that Merkel, Christian Gill and F. Neiman were at the meeting held on the 11th inst., at Frederick Neiman's house. August Neiman was there all day. Dreams had been mentioned at the meetings, but never discussed.

Witness had never set poison out for John Lehr's dog. Last spring he had set poison for the gophers.

Mrs. Christian Gill gave evidence to the effect that she was up in court on a charge of shooting at John Lehr's daughter, but denied that she had committed the offense.

Magdalene Gill, wife of Daniel Gill, and sister-in-law of Emanuel Gill, said she had never heard of a sect called "Dreamers." She belonged to the congregation of the People of God, of which Emanuel Gill, Jacob Merkel and the other prisoners were members. She was present at the meeting about two weeks ago in Frederick Neiman's house. All the members of the church were there, except Mrs. Reib. John Reib was there all the time. She had never heard any dreams discussed. She had heard about some trouble in reference to the cutting of a wire fence. Her husband, in her hearing, had never threatened damage of any kind to any person. Mrs. Karl Otto she had never seen, but she had talked with Mrs. Neiman. Witness had never mentioned John Lehr's name. Merkel had done so, but never to threaten "anything bad." Witness had never spoken to John Lehr's boy. She had never called John Lehr a whore-pup. On being further questioned she admitted having called John Lehr a "hurer." By this she meant a "fornicator with the word of God" or one who "preached and did not preach right."

The first witness to be called on Thursday morning was Jacob Bietz. He stated that he had known Jacob Merkel for two years. He had never belonged to the sect, but had attended some of their meetings. He had been present at only one meeting when Jacob Merkel had been there. At the meetings dreams were discussed. Whoever had a dream was supposed to carry it into effect and the best means of doing this were discussed. If the dreamer himself was unable to carry out his dream, it might be left to someone else to do, and meanwhile the thing should be quiet. Mrs. Schneider was once told to burn down the "whore churches" in Josephsburg. By this the Baptist and Lutheran churches were meant. This command was not given in a dream, but the creed of the Dreamers was to murder and burn. Karl Otto had suggested the crime. Witness was told to strike old man Brost. He struck him once, but got into trouble because he did not strike him twice. He was told that Karl Otto and Reib's wife have held old man Brost down while his wife drove over his head with a buggy so that he would be killed. That was nearly two years ago. Witness last went to a Dreamer meeting in 1906, since when he had received no letters from the Dreamers. He did receive letters while attending the church. The members of the sect had instructions to destroy other people, especially Mr. Martin, J.P., J. Lehr, Baumbach and Dais. They were to be killed in different ways as they could be got at. Because Baumbach had sued Reib about threatening letters from Dakota they were to take revenge upon him. All the men of the sect had guns which they had bought in the States. They did not carry them about with them, because they were warned that it was against the Canadian law to do so, without license, and they were liable to get into trouble. After the shooting affair of Jacob Merkel, jr., in Dakota, all the Dreamers had to carry firearms. Witness had known Karl Otto to carry a revolver, and had on one occasion when on the way to a trial at court, informed him that if anyone came too close to him he would kill him. It was part of the creed of the Dreamers to carry guns.

Witness deposed that he left the sect because they went the wrong way and told lies and did other bad things. He had heard them talk about taking oath in court. They decided amongst themselves to swear not to kiss the Bible because the government was from the Devil.

Inspector Parker—"I suppose that is why the lawyers are devils, is it?"

"Ya." (Laughter).

The interpreter was told to ask witness if he had ever heard the Dreamers say that if they had to kiss the Bible that would not make them tell the truth.

Rev. Mr. Sillack, (interpreter—"He says that because this government is not of God, therefore the oath is not binding—and the book was too dirty —everyone cleans his mouth on that."

Adolph Brost said he used to belong to the Dreamers. He was a member for a year and a week. He went to the meetings regularly and had told about dreams he had had. Emanuel Gill, he believed it was, who had a dream in which he was supposed to kill Michael Gill, shooting him through the window of his house. Witness left the Dreamers because he thought things were getting too strong and that he might get into trouble if he stayed with them. They had talked about destroying John Lehr several times; they were to kill him because he did not believe as they did, and wouldn't join them, and because of some trouble about a fence. Jacob Dais and Emanuel Gill had a fight in March, 1907, about a well. Gill had threatened to kill his antagonist whenever he got a chance. Witness had heard dreams discussed at every meeting. If they could not be interpreted properly they were allowed to drop, and nothing said. All the members of the church had firearms, which they kept in the house, as they were afraid of the Canadian law. They carried guns, because they said Jesus Christ carried a gun.

Mr. White—"Whom do they call Jesus Christ?"

Witness—"You know Jesus Christ; you've read about him."

Witness went on to relate how on a certain occasion he was driving with Michael Brost and Jacob Merkel, and passing Michael Gill's place, they saw John Lehr. Merkel had said that if anyone opened his mouth he would shoot him right down; he had a revolver in his hand. On a later occasion Emanuel Gill had spoken of getting rid of the two Dais, John Lehr and Michael Gill, they were to be killed when alone on the prairie, or elsewhere where no person would see.

John Reib was the first witness called on Thursday afternoon. He said he was at the meeting of the 11th inst., from 2 to 5 in the afternoon. Questioned as to an incident of last spring when himself and August Neiman were at a coal mine together, and John Lehr also there, witness stated that Lehr had spoken to August, saying "Good morning." August replied, "You're a man of God, and that word is not in the Bible."

Frederick Neiman testified that he had been in Alberta two years, coming from N. Dakota. Jacob Merkel, sr., he knew. Merkel called himself the God Jacob. Witness did not believe Merkel was God according to the scriptures. He could not believe except according to the scriptures.

His son August had been present and read the Bible at the meeting on the Saturday of the fire. Asked if August were out of the room at all after two o'clock the witness became somewhat perturbed. Finally he said he could not remember his son being out. He denied having burnt down Meirs' barn. He never tore any note. In Dakota he gave a note for $70 for something he bought at an auction sale. Meirs said that he (Neiman) had torn up the note and he had to pay a fine of $127. He was jailed one hour and released on paying the fine. He was in trouble once before because of some trouble he had with a man named Hartmann, who called himself a prophet. He had never told anyone that he would have burnt Meirs' house had he not found the old people at home. Witness had never said anything bad about John Lehr. He had not said, "The Devil thinks now we had done it, because they had gathered signatures and would harm us, and if anything happened they would say we had done it."

Jacob Reib, the head man of the Josephsburg Dreamers, was examined on Saturday morning. He said that dreams were never talked about at meetings.

Mr. White—"Ask him if he has ever heard the story of Ananias and Sapphira."

Witness had heard.

"Tell him that Mr. Begg and myself will be carrying him out."

Daniel Gill was examined on Saturday afternoon. He deposed that he had heard letters read at meetings. He was not sure that old Reib had read any. F. Neiman had read letters from Jacob Merkel, sr.

The examination of Jacob Reib was continued on Monday morning. He said he had never given any advice as to how a dream or vision should be carried out. Later, he admitted having spoken about a vision he had had, at Baumbach's house. Witness displayed an exasperating indifference to the questions put to him. In the first place he stated that he could not remember having heard any suggestion of destroying people at any meeting. He would not swear to his statements. In common with all the other Dreamer witnesses he was troubled with a hopelessly bad memory, and had only a vague recollection of anything which transpired at meetings of the Elect. Asked if he would swear that he had never heard the destruction of any person suggested, he replied, "No, I don't know."

Mr. Begg—"Answer, 'yes,' or 'no,' you're not standing here now as one of the chosen of God. Sagen, sie Ja oder Nein."

Witness was understood to say that he couldn't remember anything. (Profane silence of counsel and court).

In the afternoon Christian Gill deposed that the Bible was read at Dreamer meetings. No dreams were mentioned. Further questioned, he remembered that Karl Otto had once spoken about a dream he had had.

The Inspector—"Is he sure he remembers?"

Witness was sure he remembered.

The Inspector—"That's wonderful.

John Lehr's name had been mentioned frequently. The Dreamers had talked about the hard way in which he had treated them. They had never spoken of taking revenge. Jacob Merkel had never written suggesting the burning of Satan Lehr's home. An exhibit being handed to him to read, witness stated that he could read no handwriting but his own.

As The Times goes to press Merkel is giving evidence, Fred. Neiman being in the dock.

LEAP YEAR BALL

There must be many happy men since last Friday night—and there must be many who feel it's all up. The ladies had it their own way at the Leap Year Ball and it is hard, certain the results were eminently satisfactory. As such details are not for publication the details are held back. At any rate, the quieter (?) sex took advantage of the opportunity and made the men feel that all they had to do was to "see daddy."

Most of the ladies exhibited symptoms of heart failure at the start, but as they warmed up to the job their enthusiasm was refreshing.

About 75 were in attendance at the opera house and found everything well prepared from the floor to the refreshments. The walls were decorated with two large hand-printed sheets bearing a heading "Finds," which may or may not have been a part of the decoration or scheme of entertainment. The preponderating line seemed to be for "big feet" or something equally unbelievable about one's guests. The floor was in excellent condition and the orchestra of three pieces did itself credit. The refreshments were so tasty and freshly home-made, that the ladies, (who did the serving) were kept very busy. It may not be strictly correct in this place, but the coffee was so exceptional that it was handled in pic-nic style by the gentlemen.

The dances continued until after 1 a.m.

The work of the reception committee should be mentioned with special praise. It was greatly appreciated that one did not have to introduce himself, nor walk around looking for something to look at.

The Reds are Blue

After having the laugh on the Blues from the first week of the competition, six weeks ago until one minute to eight on Thursday evening, the Reds in the Y.M.C.A. competition went down to defeat.

The contest was to close at 8 p.m. Thursday. At 7.50 the Reds were 15 ahead, the score being 30 to 45. Then the Reds brought in 5 new ones and thought it was all cinched. But immediately afterwards M. A. Brown and B. F. Souch, for the Blues, handed in 26 names, bringing the score 50 to 56 in their favor. S. McClellan, a Red, made the score one for the Reds, but Brown and Souch added four more and the final score was 57 to 60 for the Blues.

The Reds will entertain the Blues on Monday night May 4th at the gymnasium.

The collection of money made by Messrs. Brown and Souch on Thursday was not made just to put the Blues ahead. The money was badly needed, as even with the additional members and subscriptions of time there is barely enough to carry the current expenses of the club. Being Blues they naturally put the result of their personal work down in favor of the Blues. Had they not hustled that day they would have been forced to do it in a very short time.

BRIDGE OPENING.

The date upon which the new traffic bridge will be formally opened is Thursday May 14.

The programme is for the opening at about 11 in the morning, a boat trip in the afternoon and a banquet at night in the City Hall. Only 200 tickets will be sold, the price being $2. This will include boat trip and banquet. Everyone is invited, but no one will be admitted after the 200 tickets are sold. First come, first served. The receipts from the sale of tickets to go towards defraying expenses.

Tickets are on sale at the Board of Trade building and at the drug stores.

NO HARD TIMES FOR MEDICINE HAT

It is one of the best evidences of faith in a city when the building permits keep high. Last year Medicine Hat's record for the entire year was $244,500 and this was during what was considered a boom year.

That Medicine Hat is not a boom-city, but a steady, go-ahead place, is seen from the building permits issued for the past four months. The first three months of 1908 were admittedly the hardest months the west has seen since its big growth, and Medicine Hat was, naturally, affected. However, April has been a big month for the city.

Up to April 25, or during less than a third of the year, most of which was during financial stringency, the building permits amounted to $82,875. Of this $52,700 was entered during April. Of these the larger sums are made up from W. B. Marshall's terrace of houses, and the extensions to the Cosmopolitan and American hotels.

WEDDINGS.

HARRIS-MORRIS.—On Saturday, April 25, at 7 p.m., at the home of Mr. Thos. Thompson, by Rev. A. McLaren, M. A., Mr. Lawrence Unwin Harris of Medicine Hat to Miss Mercy Morris of Nightwick, England.

JACKSON -CUMBERLAND.— On the 23rd inst., at the Methodist Parsonage, by Rev. A. C. Farrell, Mr. J. T. Jackson, of Michel, B.C., to Miss Alice Cumberland, of Nottingham, England.

IRVINE.

The Irvine bachelors more than excelled themselves on Monday evening last when they gave the return dance to the Bachelor girls in Irvine and district. The affair proved a great success from the start to the finish. Through some small mishap the piano was put out of commission for a few dances, but with the aid of some of the well known Irvine talent was soon put into running order again. Messrs. Geo. Mayberry and Mat Wilson acted as M.C.'s and the following were among those present: Mrs. H. R. Huroman, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Benwell, Major and Mrs. Harris, Medicine Hat, Mr. and Mrs. R. Porter, Mr. and Mrs. J. Crawford, Mrs. Beatty, Walsh, Mr. and Mrs. C. Beny, Mr. and Mrs. J. Housour, Mrs. Pollock, Mrs. G. W. Weiss, Mrs. Ichly, Mr. and Mrs. Cooper, Mrs. Schlatt; Misses E. Heiner, B. Crawford, F. Crawford, C. Toll, Armstrong, McLaughlin, M. Gray, M. Cairns, L. Cairns, L. Mort, A. Becker, M. Pollock, A. Housour, L. Love, C. Schlatt, J. Calkins, C. Widner, M. Wagner; Messrs. A. Paul Pagett, Harry C. Aldrich, A. C. Haench, J. Bearing, H. S. Newby, J. Anderson, F. G. Fitzgerald Trurux, F. McLaughlin, W. Armstrong, L. Harris, L. Bouspied, H. Weiss, E. Weiss, Roy Grant, R. Nesbitt, Geo. Mayberry, C. Mayberry, W. Cairns, H. Cairns, H. Cairns, A. Pollock, C. Pollock, Robt. Rutherford, L. Cooley, B. B. Renton, S. McLeod, D. McLeod, P. Ramsey, H. Mundie, G. Miller, G. Mitchell Hollings, A. E. Orr, C. Briggs, Dr. H. J. Ferguson, Corp. Barschall, Constable Ashe, A. E. Hollings, E. Glock, H. E. Gussey, J. Gussey, J. Vockenroth, Fred. Weiss, jr., J. Calkins, Frank Girrard. Dancing was kept up until the early hours of the morning and everybody expressed themselves as having a good time, thanks to the dance committee o. the Irvine Bachelors.

Capt. and Adjt. Mackey of Military district No. 13, was in Irvine on Tuesday the 21st inst., and inspected the rifles and equipment of the Irvine Rifle Association. H. Newby was showing him the sights of Irvine during the morning and he expressed himself satisfied that we should have a good rifle association here and he was surprised to see the growth of our town.

What might have been a very serious accident occurred on Monday the 20th inst., when the greater part of Irvine was aroused to the fact that a man by the name of Jacob Wenner, a new settler to the country walked into Irvine suburbs and reported that he had been shot and was at a loss to know where the shooting came from. Dr. Ferguson was quickly called to render medical attendance, and one or two of our old military men were there also, and they expressed themselves satisfied that no bullet ever caused the injury. We see in other reports that the man would likely recover if he kept very quiet for some time, but on Friday he was seen walking around the village. The police are trying their utmost to ascertain how the man came by his injuries, but it is very hard to get him to disclose anything of the accident. The general idea is that he came by his accident by a C. P. R. torpedo.

Jim Fitzgerald happened with what might have been a fatal accident on Friday evening in the C.P.R. stockyards here. He and some other well known broncho busters had a young horse and of course Fitz was right after him, and while the colt was on the ground, the rope either broke or got misplaced and Mr. Broncho kicked out and landed Fitz a swift kick on the forehead, which rendered him senseless for a time. The boys wanted to send for a doctor, but Fitz would not hear of it. At the time of writing he is progressing not favorably.

The contractors on the Golden West hotel are well under way and if the rains keep off they should be able to have the new addition finished inside of two months.

John Hausour has his new pool room and concert hall in full swing, and same does the town much credit. We understand that he is about to put in a stock of cigars, tobaccos and cigarettes. The town is badly in need of a cigar stand.

If all reports are true Irvine will be an incorporated town in a short while, and if this be the case Irvine will be in a position to give a franchise to any company that may be willing to bore for gas, which will ensure the growth of our burg, and according to all reports there is no reason why gas should not be found here. Now is the time FOR ALL GOOD CITIZENS TO COME TO THE AID OF THEIR TOWN.

Baptists are about to purchase a site for the construction of a church here in Irvine, and it is rumored that the contract is practically let for the construction of same.

Sam Kalmbach has secured the contract from Mr. J. A. Strong for the construction of the new post office which will be located on Block 3, between the two lumber yards. At time of writing the skeleton of the building is near completion.

Messrs. W. & T. Fulton, the well known contractors of Irvine, have left for a point near Lethbridge where they have secured the subcontract for some railroad grading and will be away all summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Robt. Rutherford came in from their north ranch on Saturday, and Bob reports that the prairie fire which has been raging in the north country for the past week came within three miles of his place. This, he states, will make feed very scarce.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Benwell went up to Medicine Hat on Friday returning again on the noon train Saturday.

Peat and the auto came down from Medicine Hat on Monday in record time. We understand he must have been running against time as he arrived in Irvine on train time.

SEVEN PERSONS.

(Too late for last week)

The next industry to start here will be a blacksmith shop. We hear one of our neighbors has already sent for the necessary tools.

drivers and two riders going to the ray and Master George Murray spent Easter Sunday in the Hat.

Our farmers are getting along finely with their spring work, a number of them having finished sowing their small grain.

One party here sold all the potatoes he had and turned down orders for eighty-five bushels in two days.

Sam Carlson and family were guests at the Nestin home Sunday.

C. Tonbere Sigrid Olson and W. G. Reed were visitors at the Hat this week.

Mr. Robb of the Pelican Creek ranch took out quite a load of freight for Mr. Carcill last Thursd v.

E. Van Valkenburg of Bell's Head was a caller here Sunday.

Mr. Albert Bellrichard bought another fine team from the D v ranch.

Mrs. J. R. Huntley and Mrs Pettarisce were Seven Persons visitors this week.

Roadmaster Olsen is in town.

T. Apker & Son arrived from Chetek, Wisconsin, with a carload of settler's effects and four horses. They have moved on Mr. Apker's homestead.

Three men with wagons and seventeen horses, passed through here from Saskatchewan en route for Lethbridge to work on the railroad.

H. H. Foster came to town to meet a carload of cattle, but returned disappointed, as he received a telegram saying they were just shipped.

The cellar and foundation for the new store is progressing finely and will soon be in condition for the erection of the building.

The building committee met on Tuesday and let the contract for building the store to David Schneller, reported price $170. J. F. Leonard received the contract for supplying the lumber, (he being the only bidder), the great portion of which is now on the ground.

J. F. Leonard has been expecting a new engine for the last three or four days, but it has not yet arrived.

Mr. Cooper and another gentleman from the Hat were looking over the lots in our city with a view to buying and erecting a store and livery barn thereon.

Mr. Glen is out on the GG ranch with Mr. Foster.

Mr. Endersby and another gentleman from the Hat are visiting Mr. Endersby's sister, Mrs. Foster.

Mr. A. W. Butler has rented the Foster house. Query—What does a single man want with such a large house?

Messrs. Butler, Duncan, Tyrrole, Carlson Torgeson and Amundson were Hat visitors this week.

WALSH.

Not much doing in the way of news this week.

Quite a number attended the ball at Irvine on the 20th from this place and report having a splendid time.

Mr. Reesor's dance on Friday evening was a gem. Several were present from this burg and reported that the genial Liberal orator fairly outshone himself.

W. A. Silverwood, of Saskatoon, has been in town the past few days buying horses and purchased two cars from the Sarnia ranch and W. W. Wilson. One carload was shipped Saturday evening and the other will follow in a few days.

No license has been procured for the new hotel as yet, but such a thing is unnecessary when ———

Fred. Murray and Louie Trotter took a flying trip to Irvine on Saturday.

Mosie Desmarais and Walter Runton were taken suddenly ill on Saturday and were compelled to seek the doctor's services at Maple Creek. We cannot say at this writing whether anything serious will result or not.

The C.P.R. has a work train out at this point at present unloading gravel at the bridges.

At last, at last, the seed grain has been delivered. It took a long time to do it, but it serves as a close to homo illustration of the incompetency of the outfit at Ottawa.

Miss Mamie Flood, although considerably better than at the time of last writing, is not as well as could be wished.

It is rumored, with what correctness we cannot say, that one of our well known bachelor ranchers is thinking of taking unto himself a wife. He has had this step in mind for some time, but further developments may be expected later.

The Presbyterian mission board sent a young student here the other day to look over the field preparatory to a six months' stay. We do not know whether he found us too good or too bad, at any rate he decided not to remain. Likely he discovered his efforts would be wasted on the desert air. One gentleman has fully decided in his own mind that a preacher is not necessary because of the great labor required in looking after the financial affairs.

WOOLCHESTER.

The Conn brothers, who found the little girl Norquay, live up on the ridge here. They mistook the child for a coyote at first when they saw her coming up the hill toward them.

The question might be asked here, how is it that coyotes will kill and carry away calves and small pigs, and yet never interfere with the smallest child?

Mr. Johnstone's irrigation ditch is running well.

Mr. Bell, of the Bruce ranch, intends breaking 75 acres in all this spring.

School resumes on Tuesday the28 inst. Miss E. Dunn of Medicine Hat is coming to teach.

EAGLE BUTTE.

Mr. Dempster is busy sowing just now. His land is looking in good shape that the neighbors are all thinking of trying the "Dempster system" whenever possible. By the way, this system calls for energy and plenty of hard work.

The social held here on the twentieth was a huge success; indeed it was the largest gathering ever seen in the Lodge. The supper was tastefully laid in the larger rooms of the police camp. The bachelors turned out in full strength and rose up from the table glad they had come, for the cooking was the very finest, the waiters and waitresses making the boys feel sorry they could not oblige them by eating more. After supper an excellent musical programme was submitted, Rev. A. Fraser presiding. Miss Ora Musgrave opened the concert with a song, and this was followed by violin selections by Messrs. Anderson and Merrick, Rev. A. McLaren of the Hat exhibited some splendid lantern slides, which were enjoyed by old and young. The following ladies and gentlemen contributed during the evening: Miss Musgrave, Miss Smith, Mr. Coulter, Mr. Mattison, Mr. F. Leslie, (gramaphone selections), Mr. Merrick, Mr. Haviland, Mr. Wallace, Mr. Anderson, and Mr. E. J. Smith.

The best concert of the season was brought to a close by the singing of "God Save the King." A sum of $42 was handed over to the Presbyterian mission fund.

Two straight questions—Who emptied the baby's milk bottle that night? And who cleaned out the cake and condensed milk? And here's another, why did George Prouski refuse to sing?

ELORA.

The farmers in this district are almost through seeding.

Quite a large crowd attended church last Sunday.

We are pleased to state that Mr. Doane has moved his family out to the farm. Skidoo! Skidoo!

The Rosedale farmer has put an overhead gate on the south east corner of his farm for the benefit of lady riders.

Mrs. Henry Hamilton and her daughter Miss Annie Hamilton and David, late of B. C. stopped over night at the Canyon Coulee farm last week on their way to the city.

E. J. Smith drove a load of young people from this district to the social at Medicine Lodge. They report a good time.

Prospects are bright along Coyote Coulee. Schmidt has got a new drag cart. Who says I haven't a snap?

The bachelors of Rosedale farm were taken by surprise when a party of young people drove in and spent a very enjoyable time at games and dancing.

Mr. O'Hagan is busy fencing his land.

Mr. Ramsay is on the lookout for rooms suitable for photographer's studio.

Choir practise at J. Armstrong's, Wednesday May 6, at 8 p.m. sharp.

Mr. W. McCutcheon visited Skidoo farm last week. While there he had great sport shooting gophers. He intends taking up land in this district soon.

Mr. James Conn spent a few days in the city last week.

Mr. James Fisher paid a visit to Rosedale farm last week and returned to the city much the wiser.

Some of the young bachelors of this district find it very hard to leave their friends, so they just stay till they think the old man is about coming home. But don't let him catch you.

ROSEDALE.

Mr. Sid Smith of Coyote Coulee Farm has been working for the past two weeks.

We understand that Mr. Colter, of Rosedale Farm, is going to put a large addition to his house in the near future. What is it for, Jim?

Mr. David Hamilton, who has been engaged in the lumber business at Nelson, B.C., has returned to perform his homestead duties. The years roll on, and time changes, but Davie, never.

A number of people from this district took in the social and dance at Medicine Lodge on the 20th. They report having a good time.

Mr. Ramsay, the well known runner, of Windy Valley Farm, is in training for the Olympic games at London this summer. He broke the record from Bruce ranch to Rosedale farm last week. Time: 2 hours 30 minutes.

One of our young bachelors is applying for a patent for a new kind of gate. It is easily made but we understand is hard on saddles.

Mr. Ed. and Miss Pearl Smith visited the city on Friday.

An accident that might have ended seriously happened to Mr. Bob Armstrong last week. The plow hit a stone and threw him amongst the horses' feet. Luckily he got off with a few bruises. You have been losing too much sleep lately, Bob.

REAL ESTATE.

The movement in real estate goes quietly on. There is no flurry like last year, but a little selling is recorded every week.

The Alberta Realty & Brokerage company sold six lots on the hill back of the high school; also four lots on the hill in Block 85; also a half section of farm lands 12 miles south-east of Coleridge.

The Beaver Real Estate company sold one house for $2,500 and another for $3,000.

Lot 7, Block 94, on the hill, has been sold for $550.

Walter Sinclair has sold two Lots in the Yuill survey.

Robert Wilson bought Lot 13, Block J at a price of $1400.

Peter Bell bokght Lot 19, Block K, for $1000. A. Patterson put the above deals through.

A big store building is being spoken of for South Railway street.

The following officers for the Cadet Corps have been appointed: Capt., Geo. Calder; Lieutenants, M. Cory, Robert Porter, A. DesBrisay. Sergeants will be appointed later.

Mr. Reynolds, a civil engineer of Spokane, Wash., spent yesterday with J. F. Bending.

The Woman's Literary Club had their annual business meeting last night when the election of officers took place. The following were elected: Hon.-Pres., Mrs. J. G. Waldock; Pres., Mrs. A. DesBrisay; Vice-Pres., Mrs. A. McLaren; Sec.-Treas., Mrs. J. G. Waldock; Literary critic, Mrs. Isaac Hooper; Parliamentary critic, Miss Jessie Fraser; Program committee, Mrs. Carbert, Mrs. Williamson, Mrs. Morrison, Mrs. D. G. White, Mrs. McBean.

The Y.M.C.A. has had a couple of flying rings covered with leather by L. Foster. The workmanship is perfect. The boys thought they would have to send to Toronto to buy the rings through a sporting goods house.

The Alberta-Saskatchewan Coal Co., Limited, has been incorporated with head office at Medicine Hat. Incorporation has not yet been made in Saskatchewan. Ira Farringer and Hamilton Seeley, of N. Dakota and a third party, form the company.

One of the Weller boys brought up before the Inspector last night was fined $1 and costs, the other being released with a warning. Considerable damage has been done at the Police Point barracks and the Inspector hopes that this prosecution will be sufficient to prevent trouble in the future.

F. W. Brown has sold his stables to Williamson & Nichols. Mr. Brown will remain in the city.

The Oddfellows had the biggest turn-out in their history on Sunday when, under the leadership of Vice-Grand F. W. Brown, they marched, seventy-five strong, to the Presbyterian church, to hear a sermon from Rev. J. W. Morrow. The Oddfellows are rapidly gaining in numbers.

The supper which is due to be delivered on Thursday to the Blues by the Reds as a result of the Y.M.C.A. membership competition will be postponed for one week. This will give the Reds more time to hustle around and make the necessary two-bits, and will bring the supper on the 7th of May, the evening before Arbor Day.

E. J. Smith of Gros Ventre was in the city on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. Benwell of Irvine were in the city on Friday to attend the Leap Year Ball.

There will be a meeting at St. Barnabas' church on Wednesday evening at 7 o'clock, to which all men are invited. The meeting will be addressed by Mr. Birmingham, the travelling secretary of the St. Andrew's club.

The additional entrance in the rear of the Methodist church is almost completed. It includes a brick porch with entrances to auditorium and basement.

A. Macdonald is in the city from his ranch, 70 miles north east. He told a Times' representative that the prairie fires all around their section have been exceptionally bad. Both sides of the river totalling hundreds of miles have been burnt. He was fighting the fires around his place for two days and nights, suffer-

GOVERNMENT

Seed Grain for Sale

After filling all requirements for government seed oats, there will be a surplus remaining, which I am authorized to place on the market at 85 cents per bushel, sacked, delivered at country stations.

These oats have all been imported recently, either from Prince Edward Island or Great Britain. The British oats comprise Abundance, Banner, Waverly, and No. 1 English varieties, and weigh from 41 to 45 pounds per bushel. The Prince Edward Island oats are an excellent milling variety, weight 39 to 40 pounds per bushel.

Besides the above a quantity of 2 White Alberta grown oats are also available for sale at 70 cents per bushel on the same terms and conditions.

All of the above are white varieties, and the finest procurable, and upon arrival have been very carefully re-cleaned.

These oats will be sold in two ways, either for cash or on time.

When sold for cash, postal or express orders, currency or marked cheque must accompany order. All cheques must be made payable at Edmonton.

When sold on time, applicants will be required to give chattel mortgage for seed the same as required of applicants for the regular seed grain distribution.

There is no limit to quantity that will be supplied to any applicant.

All orders for Alberta must be made to Geo. Harcourt, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, Edmonton.

Orders will be filled as received until the surplus is disposed of. Named varieties ordered by customers will be supplied as far as possible, but the undersigned reserves the right of substituting any of the above varies if unable to supply the one desired.

ATHLETICS

The C.P.R. baseball team has signed the following players: A. W. Maxworthy, Leonard Black, John D. Snowdon, J. W. Douglas, M. Biette, Geo. Westwood, Gilbert Sinclair, E. F. Hoover, Geo. A. Hannah, M. L. O'Hara, Lorne McFarlane J. W. Legh, S. W. Dean, F. Ardell, G. Ardell, E. J. Lemieux.

T. H. Navin has been appointed manager of the City baseball club.

The Fire Brigade team has a fine diamond over the bridge on Mr. Hargreaves' ground. The ground was plowed, harrowed and rolled and is as level as a board. Some say the fire fighters are going to spring a surprise on the other teams.

The City Club has been getting down to a little practise of late. A few have met at the baseball grounds and sizzling grounders are being grabbed up like beer in a local option town. That first game was just a bluff in order to draw the bets out. A number of new players have been signed. In a practise game the other night an infielder stopped such a hot one that when it reached home plate there was a distinct odor of burning rubber.

On another page will be found an advertisement from the City Clerk asking that all athletic clubs wishing to use the baseball grounds notify him.

The baseball season opens in Winnipeg and Brandon on May 14. Following is the number of games played at home and abroad:

	At Home.	Abroad.
Winnipeg	70	44
Brandon	49	63
Duluth	58	57
Fargo	59	63

The mileage figures out as follows: Winnipeg travels 3,114 miles; Brandon, 3,274 miles; Duluth, 4,160 miles; Fargo, 3,698.

OTTAWA, April 21.—The Central Olympic committee met today to deal with matters in connection with sending the Canadian team to London. The announcement was made that the government will grant the $15,000 asked for by the committee some time ago. This makes a total of $18,500 so far promised.

Kippert dropped a fly the other day at Spokane, which let in two runs and enabled Aberdeen to beat Spokane 4 to 3. 5500 people were at the game.

Maple Creek lacrosse players are making an effort to get under way an intermediate league, to include that city, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat, Swift Current and Caron.

Maple Creek and Swift Current have written expressing their willingness to join in the formation of a league and the Gas City is prepared to fall in line. It is somewhat doubtful what Caron's decision will be.

Erickson, pitching for Vancouver, threw wild to first and let in two runs, which gave Tacoma the game.

Spokane, up to Saturday night, had won only one of six games played. They have had Aberdeen, last year's champions, to play, and this may account for it. On Thursday they were beaten by 5 to 4. Hulen and Kippert made two-baggers.

On Friday Spokane won its first game taking Aberdeen in by 11 to 3. The experience of Mackin, Kippert, Chandler and Hulen in the windy games of last year, made them invaluable, as a strong wind was blowing. The star play was a three-bagger by Hulen with three men on bases, Mackin had two errors.

On Saturday Aberdeen won by 5-3, although the hits were 9-4 against them. Mackin tried a dirty trick, according to report, handing on to a base runner.

Wessler, who played second and short for Edmonton, started with Butte on Friday. Butte now has Si Bennett, Lussi and Wessler of the Western Canada league last year.

Mounted Police Notes.

A Mounted Police post is to be established out at Spring Coulee, under Corp. Barschal. They will give advice gratis as to the best means of carrying into effect the dreams of the People of God.

James Porter, alias J. Stanton, alias J. Maxwell, was tried before Judge Mitchell at the district court on Tuesday afternoon last.

Mr. White pleaded for a lenient sentence on account of the prisoner's youth, evil associations of the penitentiary being demoralizing. Prisoner was sentenced to three years in the penitentiary for forging the $10 cheque; two years for obtaining $10 by false pretences; two years for having in his possession the skeleton key; two years for having in his possession the saw; the three latter terms to run consecutively with the first. For prison breach a term of one year was imposed, to begin at the expiration of the three years; sentence for breaking out of cell was allowed to stand.

Two young fellows, Rae and Weller, were brought up before Inspector Parker last night charged with damaging the police barracks at Police Point. They were noticed on Sunday to be throwing stones at the walls of the barracks, thereby bringing down large quantities of plaster.

'PHONE TO LETHBRIDGE

Hon. W. H. Cushing, Minister of Public Works of the Province of Alberta, states that there will be no reduction in the telephone rates for the present.

He is contemplating the establishment of a line between Lethbridge and Medicine Hat. If this is completed and another line to Calgary, we will not be the only city in the west unconnected with other cities.

The telephone line established to Calgary a couple of weeks ago is a private line for the C.P.R.

Scientific Soil Culture.

Speaking broadly and comparing large areas, it has been estimated that 50 per cent. of the rainfall in humid regions runs off in the streams A portion of this consists of flood waters which run off the surface and do not enter the soil, but a large part is subterranean water that finds its way to the creeks and streams from the lower depths of the soil. Estimating in the same way it is believed that about 10 per cent. of the rainfall of the plains regions runs off in the streams. For the most part this consists of storm waters. There are few springs, and the springs generally cease running soon after rains. If the rainfall be 18 inches and the run-off be 10 per cent., about 16 inches of rain will have entered the soil. However, in some portions of the semi-arid regions and during some years in any portion, the rainfall may be no more than 10 or 12 inches. For the most part the soils of the plains region are loams of exceptional fertility, when sufficiently watered. The 16 inches of water absorbed would saturate these soils with capillary water at depth of 5 or 6 feet if none were lost between rains by evaporation. The rains moisten the surface to a depth depending, of course, upon the amount of rainfall, but the moisture is always confined to a few feet of the surface soil. it is during exceptionally wet seasons only that dry soil cannot be found at a depth of 3 or 4 feet. The conditions are so different here from those in humid climates that it is difficult fully to realize them and their bearing upon farm practice.

Water is not readily taken up by dry soil, but if the surface of soil particles be already covered with thin films of moisture, water added to the soil will thicken these films. If a film becomes very much thicker than that on neighboring soil particles, a portion of the water passes to the new particle, and so on, tending to equalize the distribution of water over the grains of soil, the size of grains and gravity influencing the final condition of equilibrium. When the liquid layer is reduced to a certain thickness the grain does not readily give up water. A condition favoring the use of special methods to conserve soil moisture exists in the plains region. With its dry undersoil the water cannot readily sink deeply into the soil and escape in a downward direction. It remains for the farmer to prevent its loss by evaporation into the air.

There is an important difference of character between the rains of the east and those of the west. The summer rains of the west, and especially of the plains country, consist largely of infrequent heavy showers. If the soil be open and deep, this rain sinks deeply into the ground. As previously mentioned the hot sun and drying winds of the semi-arid regions rapidly dry the top soil, and this forms a mulch or covering which retards evaporation Light showers in a dry time do very little good. They wet the surface, and if the water extends to the moist soil below, water from below actually flows to the surface over the wet soil grains and the water of the light shower, as well as some of that previously in the soil, is lost by evaporating into the air. In humid countries where much of the precipitation consists of frequent, light, slow-falling rains, with much cloudy weather, the surface dries more slowly giving less protection to the lower soil, so that much more water is lost from the soil as a whole than would be the case if the same quantity of water came in less frequent rains, provided, of course, the heavy rains all soak into the soil.

SOIL MANAGEMENT UNDER IRRIGATION.

Conditions in the semi-arid regions differ so much from those in humid regions that special attention should be called to them; but, where water is available for irrigation, methods of handling soils may be much the same in the two regions. It is important that irrigation water should be made to go as far in crop production as possible. Systems of farming that increase the duty of water so that a greater acreage can be irrigated with present supplies are of the greatest value to the irrigation farmer. The deep bed of finely granulated but well firmed soil to absorb and hold the water applied, and the surface cultivation to conserve the moisture, are more important under irrigation than in humid climates. Light soils consisting largely of sand and gravel may be made more retentive of moisture by the admixture of organic matter and loams and heavy soils may be improved by thorough and deep plowing. After soils have been irrigated the surface dries rapidly and frequently forms an objectionable crust. Therefore special care should be taken so to cultivate them as to break up the crust while it is forming. If the work be done at the right time a granular mulch will be produced. Heavy soils require very careful handling after irrigation in order to leave them in good condition.

SOIL MANAGEMENT IN DRY FARMING.

The farming operations in the semi-arid sections of the country have generally been of the roughest kind. The effort has been to grow a large acreage of crops. In good seasons the profits have been large; in dry years the losses were not considered to be so great as if better farming had been practiced. But some few farmers have followed better methods and have shown that the benefits resulting from good farming, as compared with poor farming, are even greater under semi-arid conditions than under humid conditions. Good farming not only gives better yields in good seasons, but often secures fair yields when poor farming gives absolutely nothing.

It is not to be expected in the semi-arid regions that any method of farming without irrigation will insure crops in all years. There will be years of such light rainfall or of rainfall so poorly distributed that the best system rigorously applied will not prevent crop failures. But by proper soil managment and farm management the disastrous years may be rendered less frequent.

Successful management of soils under semi-arid conditions requires that thought and effort be directed to accomplish these three things:

1. The collection within the soil of all water falling upon it.
2. The retention within the soil of water it has absorbed.
3. The growth of crops that thrive well under semi-arid conditions.

STORING WATER IN SOILS.

In dry farming (farming without irrigation) in the semi-arid regions the quantity of water available to plants is the limiting condition of success. Land is abundant and cheap and the soil is fertile. Water is the one element that may be needed to produce a crop. Such being the case it is obvious that no water should be allowed to run off from farm lands. It should all be made to enter the soil. The rains of the semi-arid regions, as has been said, often come in the form of sudden and heavy showers fill the upper soil completely. The pore space becomes full of water, and unless the lower soil permits the excess to move down rapidly much of the subsequent rainfall runs over the surface and off the fields. This loss of water and accompanying injury by washing is greater as the surface of the field is steeper. In the plains region the lands are generally level, and in this respect every opportunity is given the farmer to save the water. To enable the water to run down quickly inth the lower soil, a deep bed of porous soil should be prepared. This does not mean that the soil should necessarily be loose and open with large air spaces. It should be a mellow, close-grained mass, without any tendency to solidify or to stick together. When the soil is in the condition described by saying it is in "goodtilth," it will take up water readily. This layer of fine, close-grained soil should be deep, in order that much water may be stored in it. Water occupying the interstitial spaces in this upper soil will slowly sink into the deeper soil. Thus, when the soil isproperly prepared, the water of a heavy rain may be collected and held as a sponge-like reservoir. It will sink down so as to equalize itself and leave the soil in good condition for surface tillage and for the development of plant roots. The tilth should be deepened gradually in semi-arid regions as well as in humid ones, although less injury will result from storing up the better weathered sub-soil of the former.

SURFACE PACKING.

In the process of plowing, the furrow slice is completely separated from the soil below. Trash of various kinds is often turned under, further separating the two. This loosened soil should be settled to re establish connection with the lower soil. Rains will do the work in time and in humid regions this may be all that is required, but in semi-arid regions it is not. Evaporation is rapid from such loosened soil, and it should not be left in this open condition where water is so valuable. A process of settling and firming the lower soil, while leaving the immediate surface loose and granular has been called sub-surface packing. This packing may be done with an instrument specially devised for the purpose, or less effectively with a weighted disk harrow, setting the disks straight so as to cut down into the soil and turn it as little as possible. A corrugated roller or a spike-tooth harrow also serves to settle the soil when other tools are not available. If much trash has been plowed under or the furrow slice is thick the harrow will be less effective. The common, smooth roller, by compacting the surface increases the loss of water by evaporation. The ground plowed in the forenoon should be packed and harrowed before stopping work for noon, and the same at night. This is very imoortant, as a fresh, moist surface, loses water to the air very rapidly. The surface loosened by the harrow dries out quickly and protects the soil below. If the soil becomes too dry before the harrow is used a fine dust will be the result and winds will carry much of the latter away.

The time when the seed bed is prepared is of importance. It will vary with the nature of the cropping of the land. With wheat, oats or any crop that is harvested in the summer, the ground should be stirred as soon after the removal of the crop as possible. In this case more will depend upon the time of doing the work than upon the kind of tillage. Owing to the crowding of work at harvest time some rapid way of breaking up the surface should be adopted so that the whole of the field may be gone over quickly. Double-disk the ground and follow with a smoothing harrow. Keep the harrowing close up to the discing. By performing this work early the moisture in the soil will be retained and the plowing may be done more at leisure, but it should not be postponed too long. Plowing will leave such fields in much better tilth than those not so disked. Any rains that come previous to plowing will be taken up by the disked land better than by the dry stubble ground. After plowing, pack or settle the soil by one of the methods already given and surface with the harrow. Should the plowing be delayed too long after the disking and especially should heavy showers intervene, stir the surface of the soil with the harrow. This should be done as soon after the rain as the soil is in a condition not to puddle. After the ground is plowed use the harrow as frequently as is necessary to maintain the mulch 2 or 3 inches deep. Continue this until seeding time.

If the previous crop was harvested in the fall, a forage crop, for instance, the double-disking may be done before the ground freezes. If this has not been done it should be done as early in the spring as the surface is dry enough. Unless there have been late snow or early rains, disk the ground as soon as the frost is out. The crop to be grown, will of course, determine the time of plowing. If fall wheat is to be grown, the plowing need not be done until late spring or early summer if the surface tillage be kept up. Plow not later than mid-summer, pack and harrow as directed for the wheat stubble. In all cases of fall seeding summer tillage with harrow or disk should be continued so as to maintain the soil mulch.

Advantage of Summer Culture.

The treatment of the soil out-lined above has been called summer culture by some. While quite similar to the old custom of summer fallowing, it is something more than that In the fallow, the land was plowed to keep down the weeds and to aerate it. The culture was not specially timed to conserve moisture nor of a special character adapted to that purpose. The culture here described will give all the benefit of a summer fallow and at the same time save the moisture. It should be pointed out, however, that in regions of high wind some types of soil will not permit of constant stirring, which causes the loosened surface to drift. such soils are not as well suited to dry farming as more stable types, especially where intertillage crops are to be grown, or where the surface is left unprotected.

In several of the western States many of the farmers are successfully following a system by which they raise a wheat crop once in two years storing up water in alternate years. Where the rainfall is somewhat greater a crop is grown two out of three years. The system is perfectly flexible and should be adopted quite generally in the semi-arid region.

Plow and cultivate the land as directed for storing and retaining moisture in the soil. If at seeding time the soil is in a moist condition to a considerable depth, put the crop in, even if a crop was grown on the same ground the preceding season. If sufficient moisture has not been stored in the soil, let the land lie over and continue the tillage. The work on a whole will be less than if a crop be attempted each year and the crop will be greater. Indeed, by saving the rainfall of one year to help out the next year, a profitable crop will often be secured when there would have been nothing had an attempt been made to grow a crop each year.

The seed should be planted in the firm, moist soil below the dust mulch. The shoe drill will do this work satisfactorily. An occasional leguminous crop to restore nitrogenous compounds to the soil will be found very beneficial.

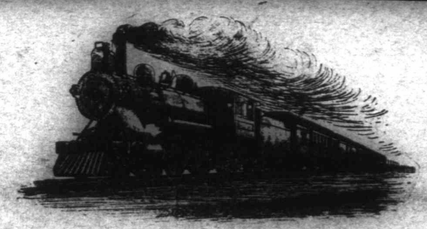
Alkali Ruins Cement



A Montana Exchange has the following:—That ordinary white alkali of this State attacks and destroys cement, concrete and probably some kinds of sandstone is one of the definite and highly important conclusions at which the departments of engineering and chemistry of the state experiment station have arrived thus far in the investigations which they are carrying on in regard to alkali. The importance of this discovery is recognized when one considers the important part which cement plays in the construction of foundations, drains, sewers, irrigation works and other constructions, and the fact that nearly all the soil of Montana contains more or less alkali.

This means that it is unsafe to use cement in any foundation or other structure coming in contact with the soil in the alkali regions of the state unless some method is devised to protect it from the action of the chemical. To devise some protection against this action of alkali on cement is one of the main objects of the further investigation of this subject which the experiment station expects to carry on.

NEW ARRIVALS

IN

Manitoba
Saskatchewan and Alberta

Every new family that comes to Western Canada should be users of Royal Crown Soap right from the start.

Ask any of the people you settle near, and they will tell you it is the best soap to use.

It is specially made for the West. The water in this country is very hard. Royal Crown Soap is made from a special formula to suit this hard water.

Don't begin your life in the West by using any other soap, and thus wasting money and getting poor results.

Tests made show that 6 bars of Royal Crown Soap do more work than 8 bars of ordinary soap.

Royal Crown Soap will save you money. It is easier on the clothes. It washes whiter than ordinary soaps.

Don't make the mistake of starting with any but Royal Crown Soap. You will find that your neighbors are using it as they know it is the best soap for use in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Start right away and save your wrappers for premiums. We will send a list of premiums free to any who ask for it.

Royal Crown Soap has been in use almost exclusively for over 20 years in Western Canada.

DRUGGIST EXPERT OPTICIAN

Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them

Dear Editor:

We were delighted with "The Town That Was Born Lucky" in your last issue. Glad to know that it is our very own Medicine Hat. But nothing was said of the town that got rich quick (an oversight on your part probably). That is Medicine Hat, too. We have other sources of revenue besides natural gas. "The City of Medicine Hat" thought well of imposing a fine on the Evangelists for the sale of hymn books necessary in their work. What commendable zeal, what energy, what foresight, what magnanimity ! We are seven dollars ahead in our finances now. What need of a publicity commissioner. From Halifax to Vancouver it will be known how thoroughly efficient and tactful are our officials and how careful to see that every statute is enforced. "Medicine Hat ?" inquires the stranger. "Oh, yes, that's the town that fined the Evangelists !"

It is strange, however, that the real live citizens of Medicine Hat are so unappreciative. They express themselves as thinking that a man of scholarly attainments, every inch a gentleman, working with his helper for a higher plane of living among our people should hardly have been treated as a lawbreaker, as a "hawker and vendor." A man they say, whom other cities delighted to honor, and were proud to have address their men's clubs, might, at least, have been spared humiliation in our little city. Some have even dared to use the awful words "contemptible!" "outrageous!" in this connection. And others have boldly suggested that if we are to have a general spring house-cleaning in our town that our untiring officials take a broom and a lantern into some of the dark corners, and do the business up thoroughly. Let it not be one-sided. I heard one fanatical person quoting something about "stoning the prophets." But anyway we have seven dollars towards paving our streets. Thank you for your space, Mr. Editor. Glad to notice you are not responsible in any way for the views of your correspondents. I know The Times, too, loves Medicine Hat and I overheard the other day that when the intimation of the fine was ready for print, the poor "devil" blushed black to his finger-tips—and omitted it.

M.H.C.

Editor of The Times:

Please allow me a few lines in your valuable paper to call the attention of stockmen of this district to the annual meeting of the Western Stock-Growers' Association to be held in this city on May 14.

While only members can vote in the meeting, all stockmen will be heartily welcome to attend, and I should like to call their attention to two of the more important works of the association, viz: The inauguration of the wolf bounty (now, unhappily, defunct) and the inspection of brands on beef cattle in Winnipeg. Either of these, I think, make the association a worthy one to join.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, in anticipation,

Yours faithfully,

WALTER HUCKVALE,

President Western Stock Growers' Association.

THREE Trying Times in A WOMAN'S LIFE

WHEN

are almost an absolute necessity towards her future health.

The first when she is just budding from girlhood into the full bloom of womanhood.

The second period that constitutes a special drain on the system is during pregnancy.

The third and the one most liable to leave heart and nerve troubles is during "change of life."

In all three periods Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will prove of wonderful value to tide over the time. Mrs. James King, Cornwall, Ont., writes: "I was troubled very much with heart trouble—the cause being to a great extent due to "change of life." I have been taking your Heart and Nerve Pills for some time, and mean to continue doing so, as I can truthfully say they are the best remedy I have ever used for building up the system. You are at liberty to use this statement for the benefit of other sufferers."

Amateur Sport.

A number of those interested in athletic sports met in Calgary the other day and discussed amateur athletics. The different clubs—lacrosse, tennis, hockey, baseball, polo, cricket and golf, had previously formed a local amateur association for the promotion of amateur sport in that city; so the meeting decided to ask the co-opiration of all the towns and cities of Alberta in the formation of a Provincial Amateur Athletic association. Each town and city is to appoint a delegate to a provincial meeting to be called later.

Amateur sport has had a set-back in Canada of late years, and everyone is the loser. The prime cause of the disturbances in the various games is the desire of clubs to win at all hazards, rather than to play the game for the sport of it. One lacrosse town is beaten by another, whereupon it rings in a couple of outsiders and wins. This goes on until every team is getting its ringers, and control by any central body—especially one supporting amateurism—is impossible. The C.A.A.U. could not keep control of the situation, but on account of its very purposes of organization. could not wink at the open breaches of amateur sport which were allowed in almost all the clubs. Players were suspended, followed by clubs. These clubs formed outlaw leagues and the public in its anxiety to see its town team win supported the paying of players.

The result has been that sport is no more satisfactory to its supporters than it was before, since every team in a league would go into professionalism or semi-professionalism. As a matter of fact the game has become much less interesting since outsiders form the teams—men who are out to win at all costs, or are open to selling the game. Rowdy work becomes more common and there is much less inducement for the busy young man to go into sports. He will not make it his life work, nor will he stoop to win a game by dirty work. He does not play enough to shine with a professional, nor does he find it necessary to work out schemes to circumvent the tricks of the salaried player.

Professionalism is allright in its place, but its place is very limited. Where a professional game drives out interest in amateur players it is undesirable. Not only does it prevent the introduction of amateur games but it cannot keep up the interest except in the larger cities. We have yet to see a city in Canada under fifty thousand which has sustained a professional team in any sport for more than four or five years. There may be instances, but a dozen years experience in amateur sport has not revealed them.

The very basis of professionalism is wrong. The game should be enough without the money. The fundamental principle of sport refers to the participant, not to the observer. A game in its purest sense is for the players. In professionalism it is solely for the spectator.

One of the propositions put forward by the Calgary meeting was that all professionals in the province be re-instated, thus enabling the organization to start with a clean sheet. This suggestion is so silly as to make one certain that the aims of the promoters are other than an encouragement of amateur sport. The only use of such an organization is to protect the amateur, and yet it would start out by deliberately countenancing what it claims it will discourage. If a professional is not a professional now, why should he be hereafter. Can it be that the promotors are merely using this means to re-instate some professionals whom the hard times or lack of proficiency have shoved outside the boundaries of profitable professionalism.

This proposition reveals another intention as well—to have our own little, petty provincial organization distinct from any Canadian association. And this is where a big mistake would be made. If the object of the organization is to foster amateur sport, it is necessary to work in with the other provinces. Is every professional to be re-instated as soon as he enters Alberta? In other words, does every man have to accept pay in Alberta for his services before he is a professional in Alberta?

Some steps should be taken locally to encourage the formation of the association. Medicine Hat is reaping a lot of likely young men and giving them the opportunity of indulging in many sports. The protection of the amateur is therefore very important here.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Edmonton police are determined to clean that city of undesirable women. After lying in wait for several hours the other night, they captured two, and heavy fines were imposed.

The prospects of a strike on the C.P.R. when the new schedule goes into force on May 1 are disturbing all western Canada. Should such a thing occur it will hold back this country at a time when it cannot stand it. The results, coming at this time, will be worse than those of the financial stringency we are just getting over. For the sake of the country, for the sake of themselves, it is to be hoped the railway and the men will come to terms that will prevent such a disaster.

The C.P.R. has selected a time for a change of schedule, when the men are weakest after a short-time season. Whoever won would do so only after a long fight, and if the railway were successful it would mean a much more serious blow to unionism than if a time more favorable to the men were awaited for a struggle.

But the chances of a win to either party are not to be thought of with the terrible consequences of the fight to Western Canada. 1908 must run smoothly or the effects of the bad winter past will remain with us for years.

Business is rapidly picking up. That is the opinion expressed by all the local merchants. One merchant said that for the past ten days business was exceedingly good, although February and March and been dull.

No Alberta paper has striven as hard to turn all the local buying into the local merchants' pockets as has The Times. Time and time again it has spoken against the sending out of town of money that will never again be seen.

And what is more important, neither the editor of The Times, nor anyone connected with him, has ever sent one dollar to a departmental store. That is more than the most of those who decry the departmental store can say. The Times certainly believes that when a newspaper which is entirely dependent upon the local merchants for its livelihood sends to Eaton's or other departmental stores, for the dress goods, etc. required, it would be wiser strictly to avoid a discussion of the departmental store question.

The Times has never spent a cent in departmeotal stores. Can any other paper honestly say so?

As to the statement that no Alberta daily carries Eastern departmental store advertising that is the usual baldedash. Going only to Calgary, every Calgary daily has carried it.

If there is one paper published that talks about things it is most ignorant of it is that spectacular baloonish sheet, Collier's. About six years ago Collier's started a circulation campaign, and it has kept it up pretty steadily ever since. A big circulation was secured in Canada by a "Canadian Edition" which was sprung on Canada once a month. Four times out of five the "Canadian Edition" contained not one word about Canada, and then it was endurable. But on the fifth time, when some pin prick of conscience penetrated the self-satisfied brain of the editorial or managerial departments a paragraph or two would be cast to Canadians to hold them loyal to the paper. Then was the agony. Collier's knows about as much about Canada as a South Sea Islander does about wireless telegraphy or about Calgary. It has been laughed at more than any other paper, by the people about whom it was writing.

The latest sample of ignorance was the advance notices sent out by it that "The Town That Was Born Lucky" referred to Calgary. Medicine Hat has lost a lot of good advertising by this carelessness.

The Calgary Daily News publishes a letter from a shoe firm of that city saying that their boot and shoe advertising in that paper has brought them a very large business in Medicine Hat, with other towns. Why should this be so? Medicine Hat has its own boot and shoe firms and the papers of this city are open to their advertising to stop this outside dealing.

How would you like to be a favorite of the Liberal government, Shepley for instance? Mr. Shepley seems to have been able to do a nice satisfactory little business with the Ottawa crowd; and he has done it in such a quiet gentlemanly way that known K. C. was taking our hard-known K.C. was taving our hard-earned money without a "thank you." Since 1896 he has drawn $82,000 from the Dominion government—as much as we pay our governor-general. This bank account is made up partially of G.T.P., $10,760; Yukon legal cases, $9,000; labor department $2,246; railways and canals, $24,875; insurance investigation, $25,136.

It is to be hoped our new filter does its work more thoroughly than the Lethbridge style. The other day complaints were made in that city about the cloudy water. The engineer explained it by saying that the river had risen and was forcing the water through the filter too fast to purify it. It is only when the river is high that we need a filter here.

The energy of the citizens in building lawns and planting trees shows a commendable desire to improve the appearance of the city. Dozens of new lawns are being laid out where any old thing was sufficient in former years. Tree-planting, too, is finding a place in the spring work. If everyone would aim at a lawn such as is seen at the Methodist parsonage, and in a few lots on the Esplanade, there would be less dust flying in a windstorm, there would be more shade from the bright sun of the summer, more wind breaks and a fresher, cleaner, greener odor in the air—to say nothing of the improved appearance of the city.

As an example of the advance in lawn making five of the eight houses in one block have prepared new lawns this spring.

Keep it going.

For goodness' sake, ! Why doesn't the City Council see that the City bell is somewhere near the right time. Most of the past week it was from two to five minutes fast by the correct time in jewelry stores. If the bell is any use it is only when it is within a few seconds of the correct time. Five minutes wrong rather disorganizes things.

During the month of July Western Canada will be visited by 175 members of the Minnesota Newspaper Association. An invitation should be sent them to stop off in Medicine mat.

One cannot but admire Mayor Mills' stand in regard to the police investigation at Strathcona. Whether right or wrong in his conclusions regarding the investigation, he at least, is confident he is right, and is willing to stand or fall by it in another election. And it looks as though he will stand. The standing-in of the police with lawbreakers is getting some severe blows in the west at last. Revelations are being made in quarters where they are not expected.

Again the Medicine Hat correspondent for so many outside papers has let his imagination run away with his ideas of truthfulness. The Mail and Empire contains an account of the loss of Mary Norquay, the article saying "there are many great eagles in the district." Probably one would be one too many.

"He has broken off his engagement," she said, looking her companion very straight in the face, "now—at the eleventh hour. Do you know anything about it?"

She came closer to him, looking up from her compact little five-feet-two with discerning eyes.

"John!" she exclaimed.

She came still nearer and laid her gloved hands upon his sleeve.

"John, you know something about this!"

"I should like to know more," he said suavely. "I am afraid—Millicent will be inconvenienced."

Lady Cantourne looked keenly at him for a moment. Physically she almost stood on tiptoe, mentally she did it without disguise. Then she turned away and sat on a chair which had always been set apart for her.

"It is a question," she said gravely, "whether any one has a right to punish a woman so severely."

The corner of Sir John's mouth twitched.

"I would rather punish her than have Jack punished for the rest of his life."

"Et moi?" she snapped impatiently.

"Ah"—with a gesture learned in some foreign court—"I can only ask your forgiveness. I can only remind you that she is not your daughter—if she were she would be a different woman—while he is my son."

Lady Cantourne nodded as if to indicate that he need explain no more.

"How did you do it?" she asked quietly.

"I did not do it. I merely suggested to Guy Oscard that he should call on you. Millicent and her fiance—the other—were alone in the drawing room when we arrived. Thinking that I might be de trop, I withdrew and left the young people to settle it among themselves, which they have apparently done! I am, like yourself, a great advocate for allowing young people to settle things among themselves. They are also welcome to their enjoyment of the consequences so far as I am concerned."

"But Millicent was never engaged to Guy Oscard."

"Did she tell you so?" asked Sir John, with a queer smile.

"Yes."

"And you believed her?"

"Of course—and you?"

Sir John smiled his courtliest smile.

"I always believe a lady," he answered, "before her face. Guy Oscard gave it out in Africa that he was engaged to be married, and he even declared that he was returning home to be married. Jack did the same in every respect. Unfortunately there was only one fond heart waiting for the couple of them at home. That is why I thought it expedient to give the young people an opportunity of settling it between themselves."

The smile left his worn old face. He moved uneasily and walked to the fireplace, where he stood with his unsteady hands moving idly, almost nervously, among the ornaments on the mantelpiece. He committed the rare discourtesy of almost turning his back upon a lady.

"I must ask you to believe," he said, looking anywhere but at her, "that I did not forget you in the matter. I may seem to have acted with an utter disregard for your feelings"—

He broke off suddenly, and, turning, he stood on the hearth rug with his feet apart, his hands clasped behind his back, his head slightly bowed.

"I drew on the reserve of an old friendship," he said. "You were kind enough to say the other day that you were indebted to me to some extent. You are indebted to me to a larger extent than you perhaps realize. You owe me fifty years of happiness; fifty years of a life that might have been happy had you decided differently when—when we were younger. I do not blame you now. I never blamed you. But the debt is there. You know my life; you know almost every day of it. You cannot deny the debt. I drew upon that."

And the white haired woman raised her hand.

"Don't," she said gently, "please don't say any more. I know all that your life has been, and why. You did quite right. What is a little trouble to me, a little passing inconvenience, the tattle of a few idle tongues, compared with what Jack's life is to you? I see now that I ought to have opposed it strongly instead of letting it take its course. You are right; you always have been right, John. There is a sort of consolation in the thought. I like it. I like to think that you were always right and that it was I who was wrong. It confirms my respect for you. We shall get over this somehow."

"The young lady," suggested Sir John, "will get over it after the manner of her kind. She will marry some one else, let us hope, before her wedding dress goes out of fashion."

"Millicent will have to get over it as she may. Her feelings need scarcely be taken into consideration."

Lady Cantourne made a little movement toward the door. There was much to see to; much of that women's work which makes weddings the wild, confused ceremonies that they are.

"I am afraid," said Sir John, "that I never thought of taking them into consideration. As you know, I hardly considered yours. I hope I have not overdrawn that reserve."

He had crossed the room as he spoke to open the door for her. His fingers were on the handle, but he did not turn it, awaiting her answer. She did not look at him, but passed him toward the shaded lamp, with that desire to fix her attention upon some inanimate object which he knew of old.

"The reserve," she answered, "will stand more than that. It has accumulated, with compound interest. But I deny the debt of which you spoke just now. There is no debt. I have paid it, year by year, day by day. For each one of those fifty years of unhappiness I have paid a year of regret."

He opened the door and passed out into the brilliantly lighted passage and down the stairs, where the servants were waiting to open the door and help her to her carriage.

Sir John did not go downstairs with her.

Later on he dined in his usual solitary grandeur. He was as carefully dressed as ever. The discipline of his household, like the discipline under which he held himself, was unrelaxed.

"What wine is this," he asked, when he had tasted the port.

"Yellow seal, sir," replied the butler confidently.

Sir John sipped again.

"It is a new bin," he said.

"Yes, sir. First bottle of the lower bin, sir."

Sir John nodded with an air of self satisfaction. He was pleased to have proved to himself and to the "damned butler," who had caught him napping in the library, that he was still a young man in himself, with senses and taste unimpaired. But his hand was at the small of his back as he returned to the library.

He was not at all sure about Jack did not know whether to expect him not. Jack did not always do what one might have expected him to do under given circumstances. And Sir John rather liked him for it. Perhaps it was that small taint of heredity which was in blood, and makes it thicker than water.

"Nothing like blood, sir," he was in the habit of saying, "in horses, dogs and men." And thereafter he usually threw back his shoulders.

The good blood that ran in his veins was astir tonight. The incidents of the day had aroused him from the peacefulness that lies under a weight of years (we have to lift the years one by one and lay them aside before we find it), and Sir John Meredith would have sat very upright in his chair were it not for that carping pain in his back.

He waited for an hour with his eyes almost continually on the clock, but Jack never came. Then he rang the bell.

"Coffee," he said. "I like punctuality, if you please."

"Thought Mr. Meredith might be expected, sir," murmured the butler humbly.

Sir John was reading the evening paper, or appearing to read it, although he had not his glasses.

"Oblige me by refraining from thought," he said urbanely.

So the coffee was brought, and Sir John consumed it in silent majesty. While he was pouring out his second cup—of a diminutive size—the bell rang. He set down the silver coffee pot with a plebeian clatter, as if his nerves were not quite so good as they used to be.

It was not Jack, but a note from him.

My Dear Father—Circumstances have necessitated the breaking off of my engagement at the last moment. Tomorrow's ceremony will not take place. As the above named circumstances were partly under your control, I need hardly offer an explanation. I leave town and probably England tonight. I am, your affectionate son, JOHN MEREDITH.

There were no signs of haste or discomposure. The letter was neatly written in the somewhat large caligraphy, firm, bold, ornate, which Sir John had insisted on Jack's learning. The stationery bore a club crest. It was an eminently gentlemanly communication. Sir John read it and gravely tore it up, throwing it into the fire, where he watched it burn.

Nothing was further from his mind than sentiment. He was not much given to sentiment, this hard hearted old sire of an ancient stock. He never thought of the apocryphal day when he, being laid in his grave, should at last win the gratitude of his son.

"When I am dead and gone you may be sorry for it," were not the words that any man should hear from his lips.

More than once during their lives Lady Cantourne had said:

"You never change your mind, John," referring to one thing or another. And he had invariably answered:

"No, I am not the sort of man to change."

He had always known his own mind. When he had been in a position to rule he had done so with a rod of iron. His purpose had ever been inflexible. Jack had been the only person who had ever openly opposed his desire. In this, as in other matters, his indomitable will had carried the day, and in the moment of triumph it is only the weak who repine. Success should have no disappointments for the man who has striven for it if his will be strong.

Sir John rather liked the letter. It could only have been written by a son of his—admitting nothing, not even defeat. But he was disappointed. He had hoped that Jack would come—that some sort of a reconciliation would be patched up. And somehow the disappointment affected him physically. It attacked him in the back and intensified the pain there. It made him feel weak and unlike himself. He rang the bell.

"Go round," he said to the butler, "to Dr. Damer and ask him to call in during the evening if he has time."

The butler busied himself with the coffee tray, hesitating, desirous of gaining time.

"Anything wrong, sir? I hope you are not feeling ill," he said nervously.

"Ill, sir!" cried Sir John. "Hang it, no; do I look ill? Just obey my orders, if you please."

* * * * * * *

My Dear Jack—At the risk of being considered an interfering old woman, I write to ask you whether you are not soon coming to England again. As you are aware, your father and I knew each other as children. We have known each other ever since—we are now almost the only survivors of our generation. My reason for troubling you with this communication is that during the last six months I have noticed a very painful change in your father. He is getting very old. He has no one but servants about him. You know his manner; it is difficult for any one to approach him, even for me. If you could come home—by accident—I think that you will never regret it in after life. I need not suggest discretion as to this letter. Your affectionate friend,

CAROLINE CANTOURNE.

Jack Meredith read this letter in the coffee room of the hotel of the Four Seasons in Wiesbaden. It was a lovely morning; the sun shone down through the trees of the Friedrichstrasse upon that spotless pavement, of which the stricken wot. The fresh breeze came bowling down from the Taunus mountains all balsamic and invigorating. It picked up the odors of the syringa and flowering currant in the Kurgarten and threw itself in at the open window of the coffee room of the hotel of the Four Seasons.

Jack Meredith was restless. Such odors as are borne on the morning breeze are apt to make those men restless who have not all that they want. And is not their name legion? The morning breeze is to the strong the moonlight of the sentimental. That which makes one vaguely yearn incites the other to get up and take.

By the train leaving Wiesbaden for Cologne, "over Mainz," as the guide book hath it, Jack Meredith left for England, in which country he had not set foot for fifteen months. Guy Oscard was in Cashmere. The simiacine was almost forgotten as a nine days' wonder except by those who live by the ills of mankind. Millicent Chyne had degenerated into a restless society hack. With great skill she had posed as a martyr. She had allowed it to be understood that she, having remained faithful to Jack Meredith through his time of adversity, had been heartlessly thrown over when fortune smiled upon him and there was a chance of his making a more brilliant match. With a chivalry which was not without a keen shaft of irony father and son allowed this story to pass uncontradicted Perhaps a few believed it. Perhaps they had foreseen the future. It may have been that they knew that Millicent Chyne, surrounded by the halo of whatever story she might invent, would be treated with a certain careless nonchalance by the older men, with a respectful avoidance by the younger. Truly women have the deepest punishment for their sins here on earth, for sooner or later the time will come, after the brilliancy of the first triumph, after the less pure satisfaction of the skilled siren, the time will come when all that they want is an enduring, honest love And it is written that an enduring love cannot, with the best will in the world be bestowed on an unworthy object If a woman wishes to be loved purely she must have a pure heart and no pas ready for the reception of that love This is a sine qua non. The woman with a past has no future.

The short March day was closing in over London with that murky suggestion of hopelessness affected by metropolitan eventide when Jack Meredith presented himself at the door of his father's house.

In his reception by the servants there was a subtle suggestion of expectation which was not lost on his keen mind. There is no patience like that of expectation in an old heart. Jack Meredith felt vaguely that he had been expected, thus, daily, for many months past.

He was shown into the library, and the tall form standing there on the hearth rug had not the outline for which he had looked. The battle between old age and stubborn will is long. But old age wins. It never raises the siege. It starves the garrison out. Sir John Meredith's head seemed to have shrunk. The wig did not fit at the back. His clothes, always bearing the suggestion of emptiness, seemed to hang on ancient given lines as if the creases were well established. The clothes were old. The fateful doctrine of not worth while had set in.

Father and son shook hands, and Sir John walked feebly to the stiff backed chair, where he sat down in shame-faced silence. He was ashamed of his infirmities. His was the instinct of the dog that goes away into some hidden corner to die.

"I am glad to see you," he said, using his two hands to push himself farther back in his chair.

There was a little pause. The fire was getting low. It fell together with a feeble, crumbling sound.

"Shall I put some coals on?" asked Jack.

A simple question, if you will, but it was asked by the son in such a tone of quiet, filial submission that a whole volume could not contain all that it said to the old man's proud, unbending heart.

"Yes, my boy, do."

And the last six years were wiped away like evil writing from a slate.

There was no explanation. These two men were not of those who explain themselves and in the warmth of explanation say things which they do not fully mean. The opinions that each had held during the years they had left behind had perhaps been modified on both sides, but neither sought details of the modification. They knew each other now, and each respected the indomitable will of the other.

The Scottish Imigrant's Farewell

The Rev. Albert G. Mackinnon, of Lochmaben, who is to preach in St. Andrew's on the coming Sunday, has a crisply-written article in the March "Quiver" on the field Canada offers to young men who quest westward in search of a kindlier fortune than stern Caledonia offers them. Here is his description of "Scotland's Good-bye":—

The rugged Mull of Kintyre is beginning to grow dim in the distance. Scotland is thrusting out its long, knuckled arm, sleeved in mist, as far as it can for a last "Good-bye." Groups of emigrants crowd the forecastle, and there is a tearful silence, the true pathos of which only the Celtic heart can feel. As the gathering haze that hangs on the steamer's track makes indistinct the last traces of the wild headland, the sympathetic onlooker feels a strange throb other than the churning of the screw, vibrate through his soul—it is the wrenching of filial love: Scotland parting with her sons. In the centre Norwegians and Swedes chatter and laugh. Leering out of the encircling shadows are swarthy faces, black beards and gleaming teeth. It is the first time those Polish Jews have smiled. Already they are becoming intoxicated with the air of liberty. But in that crowd that cling to the rail, even though a dip of the bow and a slash of spray announce the Atlantic swell, lips are sternly set, only their firmness betrays their suppressed emotion. The grim characteristic of the Scotsman rules that hour. There stands the two we know, the mother leaning on the arm of her son.. Kilted and bonneted, Scotland has often sent such as he in days of old to redden foreign battlefields. Now, though a cap has replaced the feathers, and trousers the tartan, the blood is the same. He goes, as his sires, to spread old Scotia's glory, and with mind and muscle and indomitable pluck, to form out of the wastes of the west another homeland—broader, freer, but never dearer than the one that fades away into the night. A pitch and a splash, and the sickness of heart sinks a little deeper. Perhaps in his rough blunt way Old Neptune means it all in kindness, and though one by one he lays them in their berths, is there not a mercy in his madness? For the next few hours he gives them something else to think of than a fatal brooding on the parting; and, when at last they stagger to their feet again, and the fresh breezes from the ocean burdened with the brine invigorate like a tonic, they face the west with a new bouyancy, a quickened interest, and a freash something which you can guess, but whose control over bodily comfort it takes a tossing on the deep to make one fully realize.

America's welcome, the scene at Ellis Island, where the incomers have to pass the jealously guarded portals of the customs, the long journey by train and waggon to the land of promise are all touched with a sure hand. How Scottish grit and Scottish character can win a home and comforts amid these virgin wastes is evidenced in this concluding scene:—

Fifteen years have sped. We see now a gaily painted farmhouse on the prairie, two-storeyed, with a broad verandah at the front. Well-tilled fields stretch on each side of the prettily planned garden. The pasture lands are dotted with horses and cattle. As you look a smart buggy drives up to the door, and the driver a strapping lad, with the frank manners and clear accent of the Canadian, jumps out to help down an old lady, whose grey locks fringe a wrinkled, but smiling face. "All right, granny," he cries with a laugh, as he reaches out his arms to take her. "it is just the heather step you used to practise as a lass." A portly, middle-aged man, who has been lounging in a hammock rolls onto his feet and welcomes them in a cheery voice. His cheeks, too, are tanned and wizened, and his hands are hard with work; yet you recognize the family group that fifteen years before left the Scottish shore.

BUSINESS MEN ARE THE FREQUENTERS.

Edmonton, Alberta, April 22.—Protesting that they had done real detective work while the police had not, a delegation from the north end headed by T. Norman and C. H. Leonard, waited on the council last evening, and in the name of the sanctity of their homes protested that the houses of ill-fame in their district were still running.

Mr. Norman stated that no effective action had been taken by the police since the delegation was present before the council four weeks ago. He was of the opinion that either the instruction of the council were insufficient, or that the police were unable or unwilling to cope with the situation. He considered the police work child's play.

Mr. Leonard further stated that the Reform association had a vigilance committee at work. The committee had assigned men to watch the houses of ill-fame on the nights of Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday in order to ascertain the number of men who entered the houses in question between the hours of 11 p.m. and 3 a.m.

The speaker further remarked that one house had the brazen effrontery to display a red light. The spokesman of the delegation said they had conclusive evidence that the resorts in question were frequented by prominent business men of the city. The council promised to do all in their power to rid the city of this evil.

More Terrible Than War!

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydra-headed monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race.

"It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to hack away with an irritable tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Consumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. If on the first appearance of a cough or cold you would take a few doses of you would save yourself a great deal of unnecessary suffering. Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup contains all the life-giving properties of the pine trees of Norway, and for Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough and all Throat and Lung affections it is a specific. Be sure when you ask for Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup to get it. Don't be humbugged into taking something else. Price 25 cts.

Miss Lena Johnston, Toledo, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for throat troubles after taking numerous other remedies, and I must say that nothing can take the place of it. I would not be without a bottle of it in the house."

Spent Eighteen Dollars

"Gentlemen,—I have pleasure in stating that I have used $18.00 worth of Psychine, and as a result was cured of very serious throat and lung trouble.

My case was a most difficult one, and the doctors had practically said that I could not get well. I tried Psychine, and it did me so much good that I continued its use until I had taken $18.00 worth, with the result that I am now a new man physically. I have gained thirty-five pounds.

"It is with the greatest confidence that I recommend Psychine to all who are afflicted with throat or lung trouble.

Yours truly, C. A. PINKHAM.

Prevention of Tuberculosis

TUBERCULOSIS BONE AND JOINT DISEASE IN CHILDREN—ITS EFFECTS ON THE DURATION AND USEFULNESS OF LIFE.

By

A. H. TUBBY, M.S.F.R.C.S.
Surgeon and lecturer on Clinical and Orthopaedic Surgery, Westminster Hospital; Consulting Surgeon the Evelina Hospital for Children; Author of "Deformities," a treatise on Orthopaedic Surgery.

We are all too familiar with the many sad examples of crippling resulting from tuberculosis in infancy and childhood, and the aspect of these cases is the more sad, inasmuch as there are very strong reasons for believing that by early care and greater supervision, with a wider and more intelligent grasp of the problem, many of the very serious after-effects can be prevented. In the short space at my disposal I propose to speak only of the three most common forms of tuberculosis bone and joint disease—namely, spinal caries, hip and knee disease.

Spinal caries.—This is the most serious of all forms of bone tuberculosis. It is extremely difficult to estimate the actual mortality, immediate and remote, but it may safely be said without fear of contradiction that at least twenty per cent. of all patients die, either during the progress of the disease or within a few years of its onset. Even if the patient survives the acute stages of the disease and attains adult age, the span of life is appreciably shortened. The average age of death in such cases is considerably under fifty years of age, and this contrasts very favorably with the expectation of life of healthy male adults. The disease is formidable enough in itself, apart from its most frequent complications, abscess and compression paraplegia. Deformity should not be regarded as an inevitable sequel of Pott's disease. If it is correct, as I have reason to believe to be the case that not more than five per cent. of cases of spinal caries are diagnosed before deformity has set in, then what is required is a wider knowledge of the earlier symptoms and a more correct appreciation of the evil results of a hump-back. Among such are displacement of the heart and great vessels, and even in extreme cases kinking of the thoracic aorta. The lungs, too, are compressed and the blood insufficiently aerated. The result is gradual failure of the heart to carry on its work, and early death. If the formation of abscess complicates the case, as it is likely to do in inefficiently treated patients then the risk is immensely increased. It is found that 20 per cent. of cases of Pott's disease become complicated by abscesses, and these constitute an immediate danger to the patient's life, or render him entirely incapable of becoming a useful member of the community for a considerable period, even extending to years. Paralysis appears in 13 per cent. of the cases, and even when cured, after long periods of recumbency is liable to relapse. Such figures speak for themselves.

Hip disease.—Until recently a large number of cases were treated by operation, but now the results which can be obtained by Conservative methods are believed to be more satisfactory. It was thought that in hospital patients, operation done comparatively early in the disease would limit the length of treatment, but the final results have not been on the whole such as to afford very great encouragement. It is true that the disease may be eradicated by early excision, but it must be conceded that in very many cases the usefulness of the limb is very largely impaired. The direct mortality of hip disease is undoubtedly due largely to the immediate or remote effects of abscess. The statistics obtained by Bruns clearly shows this. The mortality of the non-suppurative cases was 23 per cent., as compared with 52 per cent. in suppurative cases. Statistics vary very largely whether they are collected from the hospitals or from the results of private practise. According to Whitman the death rate in America has been estimated to be from 10 to 15 per cent., a much lower rate of mortality than that at the Alexandra Hospital, where a fatal issue followed in 26 per cent. of the cases. Whitman claims that the low rate in America is accounted for in part by the facts that the patients are of a better class and they receive earlier and more efficient mechanical protection and the latter is a vital consideration. We must now turn to the functional results which can be obtained from the treatment of the disease. There is no doubt that in a small proportion of cases the joint may recover entirely, and this is dependent upon the extent of the disease and the timeliness and efficiency of the treatment. The statistics obtained by Gibney, Waterman and Reynolds, of 107 cases in which mechanical and operative treatment was employed are very instructive. In more than half the number deformity was present when treatment was begun. No flexion was present at the end of the treatment in 47, but in 60 flexion followed of from 10 to 30 degrees. Perfect movement was retained in 13, good in 22, limited in 41, and there was ankylosis in 31. In 69 cases the shortening was 1 inch or less, 35 having none. In 38 it was more than an inch. We therefore see that the disabling effects of hip-joint disease are very serious, but the lessons to be learned are that much crippling and danger can be saved to the patient if the case is recognized early and placed under skilled care, and has persistent treatment from the BEGINNING TO THE END OF THE ILLNESS.

Tuberculosis knee-joint disease.—Gibney, of New York, collected 800 cases. The mortality amounted to 40, or 13.3 per cent. Of those who survived, in 51 cases ankylosis was present, in 16 of these the limb was practically straight, and in 35 it was flexed more than 30 degrees. There is no doubt that when ankylosis of the knee exists in young life there is an increasing tendency towards deformity as the patient grows up. The results of operations upon the knee, such as arthrectomy and excision, are more satisfactory than in the case of the hip, but there is still much room for improvement.

"It appears to me that the whole question of the incidence of tuberculosis in childhood needs to be grappled with on systematic lines. The first point is that it must be thorough from beginning to end. A case once taken in hand should never be lost sight of, and should not cease to be under constant supervision, until it is cured or beyond the reach of cure. In dealing with tuberculosis half cures are no cures at all. Early recognition, thorough and complete treatment, extending, it may be over years, and watchful after-care are are the key-notes of success. There is no doubt that the question must be dealt with from a common sense point of view. A careful record should be kept of every case seen, and each case followed up through all its stages. This can only be done through the instrumentality of a central body having much influence and considerable funds. J.A.B.

Recipe for Rheumatism

Directions to Prepare Simple Yet Remarkable Home Mixture.

There is so much rheumatism here in our neighborhood now that the following advice by an eminent authority, who writes for readers of a large eastern daily paper, will be highly appreciated by those who suffer:

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion, one ounce compound Kargon, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this dread and torturous disease who will fail to find ready relief in this simple home-made mixture, and in most cases a permanent cure is the result.

This simple remedy is said to strengthen and cleanse the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, so that they can filter and strain from the blood and system the poisons, acid and waste matter, which cause not only Rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman here who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to make up this mixture, as it is certain to do much good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after while.

Our home druggists say they will either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription ready to take if our readers ask them.

C. P. R. Statement to Men

Old and New Schedules.

Schedule before Sept. 23, 1907:

	Working days	Hrs	Hourly Wage	Daily Wage
Division—
1 Fort William to Broadview, (not including Broadview)	10		37½	$3.75
2 Broadview to Kamloops (not including Kamloops	10		40	$4.00
3 Kamloops to Vancouver inclusive	10		38½	$3.85

Schedule after Sept. 23, 1907, which the company will declare invalid on May 1, 1908.

1st Division	9		42½	$3.82½
2nd Division	9		45	$4.05
3rd Division	9		43½	$3.91½

The Canadian Pacific Railway has made public the new rules and regulations to govern the mechanics of the entire system west of Fort William, effective May 1. The statement is signed by Grant Hall, superintendent of motive power and apparently is the company's decisive answer to the complaint of the men. These rules will take the place May 1, of all the rules under the agreement with the shop men's union. In fact this practically means the end of the harmonious work between the company and the union of the shop men. Following is the notice issued by the company:

"On and after May 1, 1908, the following rules will govern mechanics and specialists and their helpers in all shops and roundhouses on western lines:

Working hours in Shops.

Nine hours will constitute a day's work. The working hours will be from 7 o'clock to 17 o'clock with one hour off for dinner, from 12 o'clock to 18 o'clock, except from April 1 to October 1 when the hours shall be from 7 o'clock to 17.30 o'clock, the first five days of the week with one hour for dinner between 12 and 13 o'clock and 7 o'clock to 12 o'clock on Saturday. Night hours in back shop shall be from 19 o'clock to 6.30 o'clock with one-half hour between 24.30 o'clock to 1 o'clock for supper five nights per week, for which 12 hours per night shall be allowed.

Working hours in Roundhouses.

Nine hours will constitute a day's work, hours to be worked between 7 o'clock and 18 o'clock. Night men will be allowed ten hours for 9½ hours on duty with one-half hour for mid-night lunch.

Overtime Conditions.

Overtime rates shall be as follows: From the close of shop hours as above to 24k, time and one-half; after 24k double time. Sundays and all Dominion holidays, including New Year's Day, Good Friday, Victoria Day, Dominion Day, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas Day, will be paid at the rate of time and one-half; should any of the above-mentioned days fall upon Sunday the day observed by the Federal or Provincial government will be observed. Men will not be laid off during regular working hours to equalize overtime made.

No call to work overtime will be paid less than five hours.

Night men called during the day will receive same consideration.

When employees are sent out to work on steamers at Fort William or Vancouver or outside work their hours shall be from 7k to 17k, with one hour for dinner from 12k to 18k; ten hours pay to be allowed for same.

Travelling Rates Allowed.

Employees sent out on the road temporarily to work will be allowed shop rates during the first twenty-four hours and straight time thereafter, except on Sundays and specified holidays, when the time and one-half will be allowed. When it is necessary to transfer employees to roundhouse or other shops they will receive one day's time for each day of travelling and reasonable expenses until they arrive at their destination. Receipts to be attached to expense voucher.

Rules for Wrecking Crews.

Employes called for wrecks will receive pay from the time called or from the time of registration.

Straight time will be allowed when travelling to or from wrecks except on Sundays or specified holidays, and time and one-half when working at wrecks or when in charge of wrecked engines. No time will be allowed when laid up for rest.

Pay of Apprentices.

Boys serving apprenticeship to learn a trade shall be designated apprentices.

Any boy hereafter engaging to learn a trade must serve not less than five years, must be over sixteen years and under 21 years of age, and must be able to read and write English, and must know the first four rules of arithmetic.

Employes will be rated according to ability. A rate granted will not be changed without thirty days' notice being given.

These rules will be in effect May 1 1908, and will remain in effect until changed subject to 30 days' notice.

What it Signifies.

The present schedule which affects the C.P.R. machinists was decided upon at a conference which was held last fall between the officials of the company and a representative committee of seven representing the machinists and which began on September 4, of last year. The demands then made by the machinists included the requests for a shorter working day. The schedule then in force on all divisions between Fort William and Vancouver [illegible] adversely affected the machinists required a ten-hour day with a wage schedule of 37½ cents per hour. The machinists requested a nine hour day with a rate of pay which would net them what they were drawing in the ten hours. The granting of the increase meant the augmentation of the monthly pay roll by many thousands of dollars.

Complicated Schedule.

A similar conference between a committee of the boilermakers and the officials was also held. The schedule which was discussed was especially complicate in that it dealt with all the intricate details of the shop work. A nine hour working day with a wage schedule of 45 cents an hour was the demand of the men then. Another matter of discussion was the matter of night work. Then men had previously been working eleven and a half hours per night, five nights a week and drawing twelve hours' pay. They at that time asked for a nine hour shift by night as well as by day. After two weeks of conference the machinists and the company affected a settlement on Sept. 23.

Interesting to Women.

Bottles for baby's milk should be thoroughly washed with boracic acid water.

Good ink can be made by soaking discarded or worn-out typewriter ribbons in water.

Some persons prefer thin slices of brown bread lightly buttered instead of cake, with ice cream.

To prevent olive oil from getting rancid try dropping into the bottle a small lump of loaf sugar.

An old thimble worn smooth is the best to use when working with flosses which require so much care.

To make everlasting cement, melt in an iron vessel equal parts of common pitch and gutta percha.

If onions are soaked several hours in cold water they may then be peeled without making the eyes smart.

Always scald rhubarb before cooking, for it requires so much less sugar, and yet loses none of its flavor.

A bit of charcoal in the vase with flowers or rooting slips will absorb the odor and keep the water fresh.

To enrich plants water with a solution of 150 grains of glue in about two gallons of water; fine for geraniums.

Try this to settle the stomach: A raw egg in a glass, covered with vinegar, pepper and salt well and swallow it.

A case of croup in a child may often be relieved by applying to the chest a strip of flannel wrung out in very hot water.

To clean a zinc bathtub take a woollen cloth and wet with kerosene oil. Rub tub well, then wash with hot soap suds.

Water may be softened for complexion use by pouring boiling water on to oatmeal, a heaping teaspoon to half a gallon.

A drop or two of sweet oil poured around the top of a glass stopper and left to stand a while will loosen it, be it ever so tight.

To get a polish on mahogany furniture clean it constantly with beeswax and turpentine, using nice clean dusters to polish with.

Discolored cups and dishes used for baking can be made as new by rubbing the brown stains with a flannel dipped into whiting.

Sprinkle salt immediately over any spot where something has boiled over on the stove and the place will be more easily cleaned.

Milk for children must be prepared fresh each day. Under no circumstances should that which has been standing over night be used.

To give a child quinine, put white of egg in spoon, quinine on the egg, and with a tooth pick rope the egg around the quinine.

The woman who does her own work should make a one-piece bib apron, the kind that slips over the head, of any pretty table oilcloth.

To remove paint from aprons soak in a little paraffin, rub it thoroughly till the paint is removed, and then wash in the ordinary way.

When castors to metal or brass beds stick in the sockets and refuse to move, remove them from the bed, grease with machine oil and return.

Dyspepsia, Boils, Pimples, Headaches, Constipation, Loss of Appetite, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, and all troubles arising from the Stomach, Liver, Bowels or Blood.

Mrs. A. Lethangue, of Ballyduff, Ont., writes: "I believe I would have been in my grave long ago had it not been for Burdock Blood Bitters. I was run down to such an extent that I could scarcely move about the house. I was subject to severe headaches, backaches and dizziness; my appetite was gone and I was unable to do my housework. After using two bottles of B.B.B. I found my health fully restored. I warmly recommend it to all tired and worn out women."

The Spectacle.

Did you ever go to a Leap Year ball and find out just how unpopular you were with the girls after all your ambitions to be a "lady's man," "a poodle dog and a pink tea creation? Fortunately the men and women were pretty evenly divided the other night, and the girls had to ask the men, or sit out themselves, and that they never do if they can help it. I was one of the odd men the other night so I had a good chance to study the Leap Year business from the viewpoint of one who is already settled, one who can, with industry, fill up his time to the running-over point studying the one woman without spending rainy nights, or after-pool-room hours wondering if my moustache is cut in the most catchy way, or if I really could play off Miss Smith against Miss Jones, and how best to do it.

We (the men) all lined up dutifully and beautifully (?) against one wall at the ball, while the ladies we were hoping to throw into a perfect furore of agitation lined up opposite and examined us casually but closely at long range. I had time to look around and see things because I have a lady whose sole care I am, and such things as Leap Year balls fit in with my mode of living to a T. I pitied the other poor agitated men who seemed doubtful about their reception. I knew full well that every other number would be taken up on my programme by the woman who sews on my buttons. My neighbor was terribly excited, and by trying to work in I-don't-care-a-fishhook-look he resembled a minister trying to look comfortable when his next page of notes has just blown off the pulpit. Being so free from care myself I attempted to assist my poor neighbor, while trying to see everything else at the same time. I talked entertainingly on the rain and the prospects of starlight to go home by and the beauty of the opera house and—Oh, a whole lot more rot, that one can get rid of without thinking what he is saying, and escape being examined by the jail physician next day. My neighbor evidently had his eye (or mind) fixed in one quarter (mine was on a half—a better half), for he said "yes," and "no," most feelingly, but little else. Evidently his powers of concentration were top powerful for me to break, because he didn't take seriously the possibility of a five-cent fine for not running the razor around a spot on the chin, instead of through it.

And then things began to look serious across the floor. Several faint little starts were made like a timid girl in a game of "pomp-pomp-pull-away." There was no giggling—it was too serious for that. For wasn't this the last chance of the season for some of us. In a few minutes there was a decided breeze as the ladies took a big gasp and made for us. Without a tremor we stood our ground (poetical for "sat our kitchen chairs") and awaited the charge (no reference to the "fines"). We all looked our best, except me, who didn't have to, as my work would all be done for me and I wasn't for sale. My chaperon was, of course, in the rush, and I laughed at the agony the other men must be in. I pulled my program out and started to dot off the outside limit of dances I would allow my home-maker to take—and then I looked up to find this woman who had made all sorts of promises in a church only a few short years ago—promises most interesting to me—quietly writing her name on the programme of the second man up. Had there been space to run afterwards I would have pulled his hair, and done scratchy things like women are supposed to do.

It's awful for a man to know exactly what his wife thinks of him, and how she would act if she only had her way.

Then, as the ladies buzzed around me, not like bees around a flower but rather in the nature of getting around an obstruction, I had time to think of how lucky that second man up the line was, of how horribly out of it would be the girl who was making feeble charges on the outskirts of the crowd that swarmed around him. She looked as if she would have liked to have had on her morning dress so that she could have made a bargain-counter rush, and have grabbed the goods, so to speak.

When I found I wasn't to be disturbed very much I began to wonder how my bank account stood; for there was that ornamental sign, "Fines," staring me in the face. On some of the counts I appeared to be able to prove an alibi. For instance, my hair wasn't curled—wasn't curly, even—and I hadn't rings enough to bring the charges high. But I had no tuft on my chin, my feet were big without a doubt, I would be late for the circle, as I wasn't going to be a segment of that circle, and I certainly would have to cross the floor without a partner if I ever hoped to get a dance. I wasn't going to serve refreshments if I could help it, but I hadn't my valet with me and it looked as if I'd have to or go home hungry. (You who weren't there must know there was a fine for all these things).

I was just feeling for my check book to make out my subscription check and charge it to charity account, when the orchestra struck up and I was busy for the rest of the night congratulating myself that as a wall flower I was going to get off easier in the matter of fines than some other mere men I saw.

OTTAWA, April 22.—A strike of the bricklayers and bricklayers' laborers occurred this morning on the new Y.M.C.A. building. The latter are non-union men and have been working for 25 cents. The union bricklayers struck in sympathy. They get 48 cents.

MONTREAL, Que., April 22.—The mechanics of the C.P.R. decided at a meeting last night that if the company forced a strike on the western in connection with the abrogation of the union schedule, the eastern section would strike, not only in sympathy, but to secure another working schedule.

OTTAWA, April 24.—The Allied Trades and Labor association is sending out circulars to all unions locally, asking for weekly contributions, for use eventually for election purposes, federal, provincial and municipal.

WINNIPEG, Man., April 24.—The C.P.R. posted notices yesterday that all employes in the Winnipeg shops with the exception of the coach shop men would be laid off till May 4, owing to the shortage of work. A conference between the C.N.R. and its employes will be held today.

OTTAWA, Ont., April 25.—Some two score railway men representing the various companies in Canada and the railway men's unions, were present at a sitting of the board of railway commissioners today to consider the large question of a uniform code of operating rules for all railways.

The question also includes a big list of grievances submitted in a memorial of the employes to the board in reference to conditions of work, train equipment, investigation of accidents, train crews, etc.

After considerable discussion it was finally agreed that the representatives of the unions should submit in writing to the commissioners the list of objections to the uniform code of rules drafted by the companies. If these objections are found to be valid the rules as submitted will be amended accordingly, unless further evidence from the railway companies sustains their contention on the points in dispute. Argument was also heardin connection of a number of requests preferred by the unions, including a minimum age limit of 21 for all telegraphers and the removal of obstructions and structures within six feet of the track.

CITY OF MEDICINE HAT.

ATHLETIC GROUND

The secretaries of Athletic associations and other persons requiring the use of the Athletic Ground are requested to make application at once to the City Clerk.

WALTER HUCKVALE,
Chairman Parks and Market Committee. 34-1

THE CITY FATHERS

The regular meeting of the city council was held last Tuesday evening. Present: The Mayor; Aids. McKay, Morrow, Spencer, Forster, Tweed, Huckvale.

A letter from M. J. Macleod, clerk of the Executive Council, Edmonton, called attention to the extension of the city's boundaries to include Central Park; five acres of this land owned by Mrs. Bassett to be exempt from municipal taxation so long as it remained in the hands of the present owner or her heirs.

The school board wrote asking for $18,500 for educational purposes for the present year. Filed.

The Copeland-Chatterson company wrote objecting to paying a license. They had consulted their solicitors, who stated that they were neither hawkers nor peddlars, and the by-law under which the license had been charged, did not apply to them. They stated that a similar case had come up in a Manitoba town and on appeal to the High court at Winnipeg, this interpretation had been upheld. Claim referred to license and police committee to get the solicitor's opinion.

A petition from property owners on Montreal street between Seventh and Eighth avenues, for extension of water mains to their property was read. Also a petition from property owners on the south side of Main street between Fourth and Fifth avenues, for cement sidewalk on the street, between the said avenues. The first referred to water commissioners; the second to public works committee.

W. H. McKinnon and M. O'Hara presented a petition for extension of hours in pool rooms and bowling alleys to 11.30, the week through. The present hours, Mr. McKinnon pointed out, were not advantageous to business. Signatures of Vic Ready, W. B. Marshall, C. E. Brougham, M. O'Hara and W. H. McKinnon were appended. Matter referred to license and police commission for a report.

Ald. Huckvale read the report of the Parks and Markets committee on the matter of payments to the band. This recommended a grant of $15 to the band for each performance, two performances to be given weekly. If every engagement were kept between May 1 and September 30, the amount would total $645. The Mayor thought the amount rather large. Ald. Tweed thought the band ought to be given every encouragement possible. After some discussion it was decided to grant the amount recommended, the Parks and Markets committee to make arrangements with the band in regard to payments.

Ald. McKay read a letter from J. J. Lait. This stated that Mr. Lait had some gravel to dispose of; if the city could use it he could supply for one-half the cost of hauling. Filed.

Finance committee recommended payment of following accounts:

The engineer reported on the question of Queen street water mains extensions. The total cost would be $1,280; the revenue each year from the twelve houses was $144. Ald. Spencer took the view that all petitions for such conveniences should be acceded to when the property would pay a percentage on the outlay. The Mayor thought the council should have some idea how they were going to provide the money for the work, before any action was taken. It seemed to him to be a question of finance. Ald. Spencer thought the extension should be gone on with right away if money could be raised.

Tenders for man and team for sprinkler were read, that of A. P. Day at $3.90 a day being accepted.

Seventeen applications for the position of storekeeper and assistant in the offices of the clerk and treasurer were read; N. Charlton being appointed.

Ald. Huckvale brought up the question of putting in a horse trough on the market site for the convenience of farmers, and also the fixing up of the stables. On Ald. Tweed's motion the Parks and Markets committee were authorized to carry out their recommendations.

Ald. Morrow thought the license fee of $7 levied from the evangelists was contrary to the spirit of the by-law. He did not think the chief should be blamed in the matter, however. Ald. Tweed thought the council should take no action in regard to refunding the money till application was made from the churches.

Highland Bulls For Sale.

The undersigned offers for sale one three-year old black, pure bred Highland Bull, and one pure bred native yearling bull. Also a young cow of the same breed in calf to the three-year old bull. All in good condition and good specimens.

Owing to closing of exportation of cattle from Scotland the future supply of this world-renowned breed is cut off from this country thereby enhancing the value of such stock. To any rancher who wishes to introduce this strain into his herd this is his golden opportunity at remarkably reasonable prices. Correspondence solicited, or come early and avoid the rush.

DREAMERS RELEASED

INSUFFICIENT EVIDENCE TO CONVICT—ONE SENT UP FOR TRIAL FOR PERJURY

A BAD LOT TURNED LOOSE AGAIN BUT POLICE WATCH THEM

On Tuesday morning Merkel was allowed to make a statement, which he did in a very able manner. He had, he said, been in the country two years, coming to the Spring Coulee district from Dakota, and originally, nineteen years ago, from Southern Russia. He was a member of the Dreamer church; had never threatened or heard any threats made, against the person or property of anybody who did not belong to the church. He attended the meeting on the 11th April, and there was no talk about injury to anyone. He had had trouble in the States with the Swartz brothers, to whose sister he was married. These men had several times debauched his wife, and after several times warning them, without avail, the parties came to blows. In a scuffle which occured on one occasion, when he discovered one of the brothers misbehaving, knives and a gun were used. Prisoner was stabbed first, but succeeded in shooting one of the men. For this he suffered thirty days' imprisonment. He obtained a divorce from his wife. Prisoner believed the fire at John Lehr's to be the work of incendiaries. He had read letters at meetings of the sect, but the destruction of other people's property was never mentioned.

In the afternoon Frederick Neiman was again put in the dock. Jacob Merkel gave evidence that he was present at the discussion of dreams at meetings of the sect. Bible dreams were first discussed and then those of members of the congregation. Witness had told Gill that if he could get even with John Lehr under the law he would do so. He had told John Lehr that he would go the same way as W. E. Martin went. Lehr had threatened the same thing about witness. Witness had understood that a petition had been circulated to get the Dreamers out of the country. Karl Moser was arrested for setting fire to a house in Dakota. He afterwards left the Dreamer church and hanged himself.

Referring to an incident mentioned by a previous witness, Merkel stated that he had taken a revolver with him on the occasion mentioned, in his coat pocket. He stated that if anybody tackled him without a cause he would empty his revolver into him.

Jacob Reib deposed that he had never heard dreams or visions mentioned at any of the Dreamer meetings, or at any other time.

Elizabeth Reib, wife of the previous witness, testified that she had heard dreams discussed occasionally, but never at meetings. Previous to two years ago dreams used to be discussed, and she had described a dream in which the People of God were rebuked for sending for the police on the Sabbath day (Saturday,) about a colt belonging to Dais. Letters, witness stated, were read at meetings from Merkel, sr., and David Hauffman, and from Russia.

Katherine Otto, wife of Karl Otto, said she never heard Bible dreams talked about by her fellow-religionists. She saw Mrs. Reib a couple of days previous; neither of the two spoke about the case going on at the court house. Witness believed that the people of her church were the only people of God. She did not like the "Revenge, Revenge, Revenge" part of the religion. She had discussed this objectionable feature with her husband. If Merkel and Hauffmann did not answer the letter sent to them since the trial began, witness and her husband would leave the church. F. Neiman, Cacob Merkel, jr., Jacob Reib, Daniel Gill and witness' husband had formed a syndicate to purchase a threshing outfit. Her husband's share in the concern was $600. Had it not been for this he would have left the Dreamers some time ago.

On Thursday afternoon Justina Neiman, wife of Frederick Neiman, gave evidence. She deposed that she had been a member of the Dreamer sect for five years, in Dakota and in Alberta. She attended the religion

Western Canneries Meeting

F. H. Malcolm Appointed Manager

Many Changes from Last Meeting

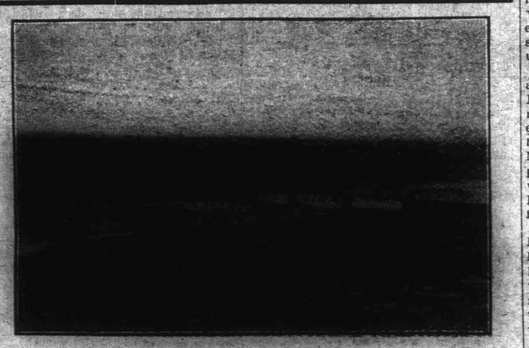
The Western Canneries held their meeting on Friday in Maple Creek. This meeting was rendered necessary on account of there having been no quorum at the meeting held some weeks ago. Special efforts were made to secure the attendance of a quorum and as a result 36 were present. From Medicine Hat F. G. Forster and S. F. Miller attended.

The meeting was called at 11 a.m. and scrutineers appointed, after which adjournment was made to 1.30. At the beginning of the afternoon meeting it was evident that F. H. Malcolm was slated for position of managing-director, and there was no opposition to the first nominations. Mr. Malcolm had the majority of the proxies, Mr. Forster and two or three others having collected a number as well. Three names were proposed at the start—F. H. Malcolm, as man. dir. C. A. Flour of Winnipeg and F. G. Forster of Medicine Hat, as advisory board. To these there was no objection. Afterwards the additional directors elected without opposition were Mr. Dixon, of Maple Creek; Hon. W. Scott, premier of Saskatchewan; and S. T. Miller, of this city.

Stock to the amount of $100,000 is to be placed on the market immediately, as this amount is necessary before the factories can start. The head office is to be moved here immediately from Winnipeg. The official headquarters will have to be in Regina on account of the incorporation of the company being in that province.

Quite a bit of discussion took place upon the expenditure, as only about $18,000 is left. Mr. Malcolm pointed out, however, that the machinery and the new factory were all paid for, although something is owing on the old building. There is about ten acres of Calgary land owned by the company and about $15,000 is sunken in Winnipeg land.

The meeting was not nearly as stormy as the last, and many of those present said they would buy more stock as soon as the new lot is offered.



Mr. Malcolm expects to be back in the city in a couple of weeks and if things go right the factory should be running in couple of months.

REGULATIONS REGARDING HORSES.

"Persons contemplating the importation of animals from any part of the world, except the United States and Newfoundland, must first obtain from the Minister of Agriculture a permit stating the number and kind of animals to be imported, the country of origin and probable date of shipment, the port of embarkation, the port at which said animals are to be landed, and the approximate date of their arrival, and such permit shall not be available at any port other than the one mentioned therein.

WEDDINGS.

McNEELY-MacCALLUM.

On Thursday night at 9.30 the marriage took place, in St. John's Presbyterian church, of Miss Winnifred Gertrude MacCallum of Port Hope, Ont., and Mr. William Walter Noel McNeely, son of Mr. John McNeely, of this city. The bride and groom were unattended and only immediate relatives were present. They left on the Crow train for British Columbia and will likely visit San Francisco before returning.

Dr. Hargrave Appointed

Veterinary Inspector for Alberta

Dr. J. C. Hargrave has been placed in charge of the Dominion veterinary inspectors for Alberta, with headquarters in the Sissons-Hargrave block in this city.

Previous to the first of the month the veterinary inspection of the two new provinces was handled from Regina, and before July the work largely devolved upon the police.

Under the new arrangement twelve regular inspectors are appointed for Alberta. Drs. White and Hawke are assisting Dr. Hargrave in Medicine Hat. Other inspectors are located at Lethbridge, Macleod, Pincher Creek, Calgary (three), and at Twin Lakes, Goutts and Pen D'orille.

J. C. Porter has been appointed chief clerk in Dr. Hawke's office. Mr. Spanner, chief clerk at Regina, is helping temporarily with the work at Medicine Hat.

LAUNDRY CHANGES HANDS.

Mr. Pruitt has bought out Green Bros., laundry, which will henceforward be known as the Medicine Hat Steam Laundry. The new laundry is under excellent management and the very best of work is guaranteed.

New Trains on Crow

Extra Day Train Between This City and Cranbrook

A new passenger train between this city and Cranbrook will be put on on the 14th of next month when the summer time table comes into force.

Hitherto a mixed train has run between Medicine Hat and Lethbridge. This will be superseded and the new train will leave Medicine Hat shortly after noon. It will be so arranged that connection can be made with the mid-day transcontinentals, reservations for berths for which will be made here.

THE DREAMERS' CASE.

August Neiman was committed for trial on the perjury charges on Friday. The case will come up at the next district court.

On the five complaints from Josephsburg residents, each Dreamer was bound over to keep the peace with assurances of $2,500. John Reib gave assurance in his own behalf on each complaint for $350, his father giving $200, a total of $2,250.

The local lodge of Knights of Pythias last night appointed Past Chancellors Judge Mitchell and L. W. McBean delegates to the Seventeenth Annual Convention of the Grand Domain to be held in Moose Jaw on June 1st, 2nd and 3rd. At this convention William Jennings Bryan and several other brilliant and well known Pythian orators will be present.

Maple Creek News.—An invitation has been received by the Mayor requesting the pleasure of the attendance of the members of the Maple Creek town council at the opening of the new bridge at Medicine Hat.

Cranbrook Herald.—C. Farrant, of Medicine Hat, has purchased the business of L. Cohn and will conduct a first-class tailoring business at the same stand on Armstrong avenue.

An ice cream social will be given by the ladies of St. Patrick's church, this afternoon, from 3 to 5 and this evening from 7 o'clock, in Mrs. Krauss' residence.

THE CITY FATHERS

The regular meeting of the council was held last night at 8 o'clock, the aldermen attending in full strength.

The solicitor wrote advising that the taxation of C.P.R. land cannot be insisted upon, as they are by contract exempt from taxation for 20 years from the time patent is granted.

Regarding sub-section 8, clause 4, title 31, of the City charter, as to the meaning of "a building used for church purposes," the solicitor wrote that in his opinion the phrase was intended to mean any building used solely for the worship of God, and should be construed strictly in that sense. The church buildings of the Roman Catholic and Anglo-Catholic bodies were used for the worship of God alone and in the case of St Barnabas' church in this city taxes were paid on the buildings used for other purposes. Buildings belonging to the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, which were not used exclusively for the purposes of worship, should be paying taxes.

Woods, Gundy wired offering 90 and accrued interest for the $40,000 five per cent., sinking fund debentures providing granted option remaining $35,000 same terms. The Mayor said that the new bonds were not negotiable till September; he did not suppose the council would consider the offer anyway. Woods, Gundy to be notified offer not acceptable.

Former editor Western Municipal News wrote that he was now editing the Canadian Municipal News, having resigned his position on the former paper. The Canadian Municipal News was not influenced by interests opposed to those of its readers, nor by outside foreign firms.

Ald. Baker in giving the report of the gas committee, stated that it was the opinion of Mr. Simons that the gas pipe for the new lamps on the traffic bridge should be between the main driveway and the sidewalk. It was decided to instruct Mr. Porter to purchase six second-hand lamps from Mr. Fleming.

Ald. Spencer stated that the committee re extension of time to pool rooms and bowling alleys had not been able to get together; they would be prepared to report at the next meeting.

Mr. Moore wished the council to permit him to use a building for entertainment purposes, the rear exit of which was three feet wide, instead of five feet as required by by-law. He did not think there was any necessity for a five foot rear exit in "so outlying" a question, as the number of persons who could be accommodated within were only small. It was a difficult thing, moreover, to cut a wider opening in the door. Ald. Baker did not think the council had power to do anything in the matter without amending the by-law. Referred to fire, water and light committee for a report.

Board of health reported one case of measles, and one of smallpox. Every precaution was being taken to prevent infection. The medical health officer was present and stated that the location of the new nuisance ground was not healthy, being too near the city. According to by-law it should be down on the old nuisance location. The Mayor stated that the new ground was being used because it was thought desirable to level up the land in that part of the city. The trouble appeared to be the burning of the rubbish and disagreeable odor therefrom. Ald. Baker thought the filling in was to be done only with rubbish of an unobjectionable nature. Ald. Penhale opined that the time was drawing near when an incinerator plant would have to be installed. The nuisance ground would give trouble otherwise where ever situated. Engineer to be instructed to place all rubbish in future on the old ground.

From property owners on Sixth avenue between Montreal street and Braemar a petition for grading was received. Grading was badly needed to support the rapidly growing business population. Mr. Ansley and Mr. Bending spoke on the subject, pointing out that at present there was no good grade out of the city. Referred to public works committee for report as to feasibility and cost.

On behalf of the athletic clubs, T. Ready asked for the use of the athletic grounds for baseball, football, lacrosse and cricket. If the city would supply 1000 feet of piping and repair the windows in the club house the clubs would do the rest. If the cattle stalls could be moved two teams could practise at the same time, where one could only practise now. The clubs would also like to be granted the use of the lockers in the grandstand. The Mayor thought it very important that provision should be made for the young men of the city in this way. It was stated that the city did not own the grandstand. Matter referred to parks and markets committee to make own arrangements and confer with athletic clubs.

Matter of new springs for hose wagon referred to fire, water and light committee with power to act.

It was left in the hands of the solicitor to write to the Roseries Co., with regard to complying with conditions on which land was granted. This they had never done as yet.

Question of hydrant and water carts referred to fire, water and light committee to consult with engineers One water cart is adequate for the town's requirements.

Tender of LaDrew Bros., for old town hall for $40, was accepted. Building to be moved by May 10.

Mayor was authorised to sign agreement with C.P.R. re transfer of property.

Wouldn't Be Hoaxed

Dreamer with Very Bad Memory

Having become accustomed to being rallied for his short memory, Fred. Neiman was rather suspicious of the Inspector on Friday, when the latter asked him to remain behind after the other ex-prisoners had gone as there was a ten dollar bill waiting for him.

At the beginning of the hearing Mrs. Neiman had deposited $10 in the hands of the police, in case her better half should be released and find himself short of cash.

When the Dreamers were released on Friday, Inspector Parker detained Neiman till the last, greatly to that gentleman's wonder. A dialogue ensued in something like the following words:

"I've got $10 of yours, I suppose?"

"I can't remember."

"Mrs. Neiman left some money for you."

"I don't know anything."

"Your wife gave me $10 to keep till you were released."

"I don't remember anything."

"Didn't your wife say anything to you about it?"

"How can I remember when it is so long ago? (A whole fortnight). How can I remember everything my wife says?"

Convinced that he was being hoaxed, Fred was not eager to take the money. He had not been dreaming for some few days and doubtless expected to receive Divine inspiration before accepting cash from the hands of the "devil's government."

Local Notes

A. Shaw was in the city on Saturday.

J. R. Huntley, of Seven Persons, was in the city on Saturday.

The Teachers' Institute will be held in Medicine Hat on May 20 and 21. It will be in charge of members of the Normal school staff, who will be assisted by Inspector Brown.

McGill School of Mining Visits City

Thirty-Six Students and Professors Examine Gas

A sleeper of McGill students of the school of mining spent Sunday in the city. In the morning a telegram was received by John T. Hall saying that the boys would stop here for a few hours to see all about the natural gas.

At 2 the sleeper and diner arrived and the thirty-six students in charge of Prof. A. W. Bell, assistant professor of mining; J. A. Dresser, instructor in geology; H. Grey, instructor in assaying; J. C. Kemp and H. F. Strangways, instructors in mining, were met by a number of local men, including John T. Hall, Mayor Cousins, C. S. Pingle, president of the Board of Trade; Supt. Lawrence, H. W. McLeod, resident engineer; Inspector Parker and others.

The visitors were shown over the C.P.R. plant by R. A. Winter, and were most interested in everything shown them. Several pictures of the interesting parts were taken by the boys, as well as picture of the men who entertained them.

The trip is one of a series taken every year during the summer holidays for the purpose of giving the boys practical experience. They left Moatreal April 22 and visited Copper Cliff and Victoria Mines where the officials showed them everything. From here they proceeded to Coleman where they will examine the International Coal and Coke Company's mines. After that some days will be spent at Moyie and Nelson. Many of the boys will remain at the mines for the summer months.

Dr. Porter, head of the Mining Department, has preceded them to Coleman.

On the train regular lectures are maintained, with charts, maps, etc., and with a study of what they see from the car windows.

J. F. Bending is breaking several hundred acres of land at Stair with a steam breaker.

R. D. Prettie, C.P.R. superintendent of Forestry, came into the city Wednesday.

Mr. Sharp of the Bank of Montreal has gone for a holiday to California.

A. M. Grace has been in the city for a few days from his engineering work for the Southern Alberta Land company.

Mr. J. C. Colter received word today of the serious illness of his brother, S. S. Colter, of Virden, Man. and left on No. 97 for Vancouver where his brother is in the hospital.

Dr. T. G. Holt has moved his dental offices from over Souch's Drug store to the Turpin Block.

Mrs. Edward Broad came to the city yesterday.

Elmer Wright went to to Lethbridge last Sunday to visit his brother, R. A. Wright, the jeweler.

Fred. Allott has bought out Ready's pool room.

Vic Ready went up to Calgary last night to attend the meeting of the Southern Alberta lacrosse league to be held in that city this evening.

Moore & Moore, two eastern men, are opening a moving picture show in Drinman's old store on Main street

At least seven steam plowing outfits will be at work in this district throughout the summer.

W. H. Moore is moving his candy and fruit store to the premises lately occupied by G. A. Luno, as real estate office. The old candy store will be pulled down to make room for Jas. Mitchell's new brick building.

John Rutherford has taken up a new stand on Main street, across the track.

Taber Free Press.—Rev. Father A. Turbiaux, of Medicine Hat conducted service in the school-room over McAskile Bros.' store Sunday last.

Taber Free Press.—Mr. Simons, construction foreman on the bridge, and a number of men arrived down from Medicine Hat last night, and work will immediately start. Only a few men will be employed at first, but the crew will be increased as work progresses.

Maple Creek Signal.—The north horse round-up started on Tuesday. Mr. Thos. Hargreave is captain. They started from Dixon Bros., Sand Hill ranch.

Maple Creek News.—Mrs. Harper of Skull Creek, returned on Thursday last from a visit to Medicine Hat and is now the guest of Mr. and Mrs. J. J. English.

Maple Creek News.—A large stretch of country extending from Medicine Hat to Swift Current, has been completely burnt up in the north country near the river, and ranchers and others have lost considerably in stacks, buildings, etc. T. H. Minor had his stacks destroyed, and J. Sayers at Coffee Pot, had the whole of his buildings burnt down. The country this side of the river presents a picture of desolation and ranchers to reach the river now have to haul their feed along with them.

Moose Jaw News.—Geo. Whitely left on the Soo-Spokane Sunday morning for Medicine Hat to see his brother-in-law, Dr. Code, who is very ill. Dr. Code was in Moose Jaw hospital for a month, but as it was thought he was on his way to recovery, he was removed to his home at Gull Lake. He took a turn for the worse, however, and it was found necessary to place him in Medicine Hat hospital where he is now in a very serious condition.

Mr. and Mrs. Margesson returned Saturday from a trip to England.

PUBLIC HOLIDAY.

Mayor Cousins will proclaim May 14, the day of the traffic bridge opening, a public holiday.

Horrible Murder in Lethbridge

Murder and Suicide before Eye-witnesses

A Servian man shot a Servian woman to death, horribly mutilated her, and then killed himself, close to the immigration hall, in Lethbridge, on Friday. It appears that the man boarded at the house of the woman and had given her his money to keep so that he could not spend it in liquor. Meeting her on the road on Friday he demanded the money, and when she refused fired at her. He then went up to the prostrate woman emptied his revolver into her and slashed her with a razor. A spectator attempted to interfere but was driven off at the point of the gun.

Again the man shot the woman and cut her throat, afterwards shooting himself.

R. Graham, of this city, saw the bodies almost immediately after and says it was a horrible sight. The woman was badly slashed and appeared to have been shot several times. The man had first shot himself in the neck, breaking a celluloid collar; then he had fired into his ear.

Both were from the mining settlement.

Filtration Plant Working

Water That Can be seen Through

During the past week the new filter beds have been put into operation. At present these are two in number with a capacity of 1,000,000 gals. per 24 hours. The ultimate capacity, which may not be required for a few years, will be 2,000,000, two more beds to be installed.

The new beds were first used on Thursday, the plant afterwards having to be shut down on account of a leak which required attention. Since then the filters have been repaired and their efficiency is demonstrated by the clearness of the water now supplied.

Work has been pushed ahead on the pumping plant. The boilers were fixed up last week, most of the brick work on the new pump house has been completed, and the men are now engaged on the roof, and on the engine foundations.

The two new pumps are by the John McDougall company and have a capacity of 1,500,000 gals. per 24 hours. The gas engines are built by a well-known engineering firm of Nottingham, England, and are of the "Premier," one of the most up-to-date types. They were obtained through the Canada Foundry Company.

Leads The World

Local Insurance Man Heads The List for April

On Saturday Fred S. Pingle, agent for the Sun Life Assurance Co., received the following telegram from F. G. Cope, superintendent of agencies, Montreal:

"Congratulations on heading special mention list for April. Wish you continued success."

Every month the list of agents who have written over $10,000 for this company in all parts of the world, is published from the head office in Montreal. F. S's name appeared in the March list but among the bottom number. For April, however, he succeeded in writing more life insurance than any other agent of the company, and that means something in the Sun Life.

As thousands of these printed lists are sent out Fred's name at the top will be some advertising for the city.

RAILWAY SITUATION.

(The Voice, Winnipeg).

The process of confederation among the workers has gone along briskly. Connection has now been made with the men in the east, and eastern organizations have served the companies with the required thirty days' notice of the termination of their schedules. This means that the whole employees of the roads have got to be dealt with at one and the same time.

On Monday last there were posted in the different railway shops a memorandum of conditions which the companies propose shall hereafter prevail. It is to all intents and purposes an open shop notice. The nine-hour day is recognized under it. The company proposes to pay employees according to ability and, of course, no provision is made for grievance committees or for employees to approach the officials. The collective bargain fades away according to this notice on May 1. It is a bad guess.

The committees in Winnipeg are not giving out any information whatever. The committee keeps in touch with a representative man at every point by means of a daily message, but until such time as the companies show their hand no particulars will be given out for publication.

WINNIPEG TELEGRAM.—On visiting the C.P.R. shops this morning everything was found to be very quiet. All the works are shut down excepting the freight and passenger departments. The machinists, blacksmiths, mechanics, etc., have been away from work a week on account of their respective shops being closed They will, however, be in operation again on Monday.

MONTREAL, May 1.—All important building operations are closed down here today, owing to the deadlock between the bricklayers and the contractors. The stand taken by the latter for the open shop is the cause. The bricklayers and all other unionized labor connected with building operations will fight the contractors and some 12,000 men will be idle in consequence. These include bricklayers, plasterers, stonemasons, carpenters and joiners, painters and decorators, sheet metal workers, plumbers and steamfitters, building laborers, roofers, marble workers and granite cutters, iron structural workers, stair builders and wood workers, sash and door workers, all of whom are well organized.

It is announced that some contractors have signed the union wage schedule for another year, and that the bricklayers locked out number about 500 out of a total of 900, but as the trade has been slack by no means all of the bricklayers have been employed.

Peter Lyall & Son and C. E. Deakin are two of the largest employers whose men are idle. The Canadian White company is the largest concern which has signed the union schedule.

ATHLETICS

121,425 PEOPLE SAW THIS GAME

The "gate" at Hampden park, Glasgow, for the international football match between Scotland and England amounted to £7,800, which represented an attendance of 121,452 spectators. This is a record for paid attendance at any form of sport in any part of the world. Possibly as many people see the Derby but a great proportion occupies the free fields. In fact, the largest gate at any race in England is obtained at Liverpool on Grand National Steeplechase Day, and represents 70,000 persons. The Melbourne Cup race is said to have been attended by more than a hundred thousand people during exhibition year, but they do not all pay at Flemington. The Football Association Cup Final at the Crystal Palace, London, has drawn more than a hundred thousand, but has never reached Hampden Park's tremendous total. The first day of the Ontario Jockey Club's Spring meeting when the race for the King's Plate is seen by about 18,000 people, is probably the occasion of the largest similar gathering in Canada. In the States the greatest crowd in a race was always seen at Washington Park, Chicago. The Derby Day attendance there was always greater than ever seen on a New York track.—Globe.

After two tie games the Calgary Caledonias Football club defeated the Vancouver Thistles by 7-0. The Caledonias are undoubtedly one of the best teams in Canada.

There is a prospect of a game between Calgary and Medicine Hat being played in this city on May 25. Calgary were invited to come here, but wrote to say that they understood the 25th was booked for a game between Medicine Hat and Nelson, and that Calgary was therefore arranging to play Regina. Nothing was known here of such a fixture, and efforts are now being made to bring the Calgary lacrosse team here for Dominion Day.

The three teams in the southern league are Calgary, Medicine Hat and Lethbridge.

In a game against Vancouver the other day, Si Bennett for Butte, made three of the seven hits, and all the runs—2. Of the other 4 hits, Lussi made 2.

The annual meeting of the Alberta Amateur Lacrosse Association will be held in Calgary on Tuesday afternoon, May 5, at 3 o'clock.

W. J. Kirby, who was secretary of last year's baseball league at the beginning of the season, has been transferred from Calgary.

Maple Creek News.—The lacrosse boys are endeavoring to arrange for a game here on Victoria Day, May 25. The secretary has written to the Swift Current club asking them to send a team up. If the Swift Current team cannot come the local club will try to induce a team from Medicine Hat to come down and show their worth.

Secretary M. J. Graham, of the lacrosse club has received a communication from the secretary of the Maple Creek lacrosse club of Moose Jaw, stating that at a recent meeting held in that city it was decided to form a provincial lacrosse association, and if the local club favored the idea let them know at once so that a meeting could be called at an early date for organization.

The proposal is to divide the province into districts. The division would be somewhat after the following manner, viz: Western district, including clubs from Swift Current, Maple Creek and Medicine Hat; central district, Moose Jaw, Regina and Lumsden; Soo Line district, Estevan, Weyburn, Yellow Grass, Milestone and Rouleau; northern district, Saskatoon, Prince Albert, Hanley and Warman; eastern district, Indian Head, Sintaluta, Moosomin and Wolseley; southern district, made up of clubs south of the main line. Winners of the district would play off in the semi-finals and finals. These clubs would afford excellent sport, and place the national game in Saskatchewan thoroughly on its feet. Of course there could be but one series, that is intermediate.

A local lacrosse league was formed last Tuesday evening. Over fifty players have signed and it is intended to put in the field three teams. The Intermediates and Y.M.C.'s were represented, the latter in large numbers; and a fire brigade team is spoken of.

The following officers were elected:
Hon. Pres.—Hon. W. T. Finlay.
Pres.—Robt. McCutcheon.
Vice-Pres.—T. Ready.
Sec.-Treas.—Vic Ready.
Executive committee—W. E. Hatcher, C. E. Brougham and W. Gawley.

BEGGAR PRINCE OPERA CO.

Edmonton's society paper The News, has this to say of the Beggar Prince Opera company in "The Bohemian Girl"—The Beggar Prince Opera company has been greeted wrth crowded houses each night at the Edmonton Opera house and they certainly deserve the patronage accorded them. It is by all odds the best organization of its kind that has visited this city. The most enjoyable production of the week undoubtedly was that of Balfe's over beautiful "Bohemian Girl" on Wednesday. The wonder is with so popular an opera in repertoire and a company so admirably fitted to produce it that we did not hear it on the occasion of the previous visit. The Saturday News has had occasion to criticise the acting of Miss Balch in one other opera, but after seeing her as "The Bohemian Girl," our idea as to the dramatic and vocal ability have undergone a decided change. Her acting was admirable throughout and in the exquisite solos, which fell to her lot, notably the "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," she won all hearts. Her triumph was shared by Mr. Joseph Combs, whose tenor voice had adequate opportunity to display itself. Mr. Murray, with his deep bass, and Miss Forrest, a spirited actress if ever there was one, were excellent as the chief of the gypsies and the gypsie queen respectively. The choruses were well sung, and of a decidedly high class. Don't forget Medicine Hat gets this splendid attraction Monday and Tuesday, May 11 and 12. Seats on sale at usual place.

Was Alberta Easy?

(Winnipeg Telegram).

Was the Alberta government held up in its purchase of the Bell telephone system or did the Manitoba government drive such a bargain that they were able to come out on top and pay $26.90 per phone less than the Alberta officials?

From information gleaned by The Telegram it is evident that in spite of all the criticisms and insinuation cast at the provincial government the bargain made that was made by the officials with the Bell company was one worthy of any governing body. It has been said that the money paid by the government to the Bell for its system—$3,300,000—was too much. If this is so, the Liberal government of Alberta has received a body blow from the officials of the Bell, who apparently found them easy.

In comparing the two plants it has been found that if Alberta had a system similar to that of Manitoba she would be paying from one-half to three-quarters of a million more than Manitoba paid.

Below will be found a comparison of the two systems.

	Man	Alta.
Telephones	14,195	2,700
Pole lines (long distance and copper current wires	2,375	460
Miles of iron current wire	2,143	100
Exchanges	67	18
Till offices	75	18
Price paid	$3,300.000	$675,000
Unearned rentals		25,000
Total		$700,000
Price per phone including all other assets	232.40	259.30

It will be seen by this table that Manitoba has made by far the better bargain. Added to this increased amount paid for the system comes the statement from Premier Rutherford to the effect that the rates for phones will not be lowered. The local government has not yet made a statement as to what course it will pursue in regard to the rates.

The Spectacle.

The Calgary papers have got up against what every paper that trusts solely to its circulation butts into sooner or later. Both The Herald and Albertan of that city have the largest circulation in Alberta. In fact every paper that boasts of its circulation too loudly firmly maintains it has the largest that is, and expects the public is going to instantly grasp the situation that a half dozen papers send out the most copies.

The Herald and Albertan have been putting the figures on the front page. The Herald swears to its number, but The Albertan never could bring itself to do that, apparently. And that does not mean, necessarily, that it was lying any more than The Herald. It might mean a more sensitive conscience. This went along until through some lapse of attention the business departments of the two papers crossed each other. Then there were pyrotechnics. The Albertan was celebrating its sixth anniversary, and getting its first pockets in its trousers at that age, it stuck its hands into its pockets and jingled its money. And The Herald sneered and said it was nails that was rattling. Then they stood off and dared each other to empty their pockets. They dared each other to come on and both went up to just outside of hitting distance and stood and jawed. But they wouldn't get near enough to hurt, a team of horses couldn't have pulled them together. They used up piles of steam, hitting and ducking, and side-stepping, but were most careful that their hits didn't land.

They wanted the public to think they were really fighting, because it looks silly for two papers in one city to claim the largest circulation.

This is what did happen. The Albertan shook hands with itself on its birthday and said, "Ah, you're a pretty husky kid. You're quite the biggest thing in town." The Herald came into evidence the same day with a cool handshake for The Albertan, but as an older brother advised moderation. Then warming up to the subject offered $100 to each of the hospitals if The Albertan could prove it was the biggest, and $100 more if The Herald couldn't prove it was the biggest. A committee was to be appointed, one by each, and a third by the first two.

The Albertan got real saucy, as it really is a big boy of its age, and to show its precocious independence said The Herald could pick the whole committee.

After that both got busy to see how they could fool the public into thinking they were really scrapping. You see, neither paper ever intended to expose its circulation sheets to an intelligent committee with much authority. For it wouldn't do with papers that talk too much about circulation. To a newspaper man the circulation talk is so largely a bluff that he always laughs at it in his sleeve. There are hundreds of ways of publishing big figures in your circulation talk and every newspaperman knows it. The Herald knew The Albertan would not expose its circulation dept., and The Albertan knew The Herald would be just as reluctant. It would have been a horrible thing for both to be exposed. But there wasn't any danger of it. Did you ever see a circulation test carried through? And you never will, unless both are willing to give away a lot that had better never be known, when figures of circulation are published to gain advertising.

But a committee had to be appointed, and it was honest. It went to The Albertan, which then backed down on its independence and demanded a practical newspaper man, and it was wise to do so. No outside committee ever appointed would get onto all the tricks of the circulation boaster. This was the chance for The Herald; it refused to allow it and grabbed for its money.

Puff! It was all off and Calgary doesn't know now which has the biggest circulation—nor does it care a darn.

But think of the beautiful front pager it made for The Herald, when The Albertan demanded a newspaper man on the committee! And think of the stirring editorial it provided for The Albertan when The Herald refused to allow this.

And what does the public think? Oh! It's busy wondering how on earth two men can call each other such naughty names, dare each other to fight, and subside before a blow is struck—it's too busy wondering to realize yet what fools the circulation managers made of themselves.

THE SPECTATOR.

THE DREAMERS.

meetings whenever possible. She was present at the meeting on the 11th inst., the whole day. Her son, August, read the Bible as ordered by his father; he was present most of the day. Witness at first denied that she had heard dreams mentioned at any meeting, but on a statement of a former witness being repeated to her, she remembered. A letter from Mrs. Reib had once been read before the congregation, in which the writer referred to a dream she had had. In this it was intimated to her by God that the church had sinned in sending for the police on a certain occasion, on the Sabbath Day. Letters had been received from Jacob Merkel, sr., and read at the meeting.

Mr. White—"How do you like the letters you have been getting during the last two or three years from Merkel?"

"They are the Word of God."

Further questioned witness said she did not approve of Merkel's recent letters; she thought they might get her people into trouble. Merkel, sr., was known among the people of the church as "old Merkel;" he called himself God Jacob. Witness could not remember that Jacob Reib had threatened to do any burning. Dreams were discussed, but she she couldn't just remember who had ever told one. She had never spoken of a dream of her own. Assisted again by the cross-examining lawyer, she called to mind a number of other dreams. After each return of intelligence she lapsed into her former state of innocence, apologising profusely when, with the help of the evidence of former witnesses, she remembered something. When a letter in witness' own handwriting was exhibited and reference made to some of its contents, she could not herself remember what she had written. The interpreter, pointing out a particular passage, in which she had referred to a dream experience, and where, in another connection, the words "Satan Lehr" were used, she admitted that they were correct. The name Satan Lehr was first used by Jacob Merkel, sr., then the church members began to use the expression. She had never seen a statement in any of Merkel's letters to the effect that the property of other people should be destroyed. She did not remember Otto telling a dream about the Schneiders in which it had been disclosed that Schneider had lied about some horses. Nor could she recollect a dream or vision told by Jacob Merkel, jr. Witness had known Jacob Moser in South Dakota. At one time he belonged to the church of God. After leaving them he was convicted of setting fire to a church building. Where he got instructions to commit the crime she did not know. Afterwards Moser hanged himself. She had not heard that Merkel ordered the man to burn down any church.

"Did you ever hear about a schoolhouse being burnt?"

"I don't know."

Witness never heard any talk about "getting even with Satan Lehr, nor had she heard it said that Michael Gill should be shot through his window until the previous day (Wednesday), when Lehr had told Katherine Otto and herself. Referring to a passage in one of her letters in which sage in one of her letters in which the name "Satan" was used of some person, she admitted that one Hartmann was meant. Hartmann was a farmer in Dakota in the district Merkel is living.

"What grudge did you have against Hartmann?"

Witness replied, after some equivocation, that this man had got her husband in jail. The reason, at this distant date, she could not recollect.

"Do you know Rosa Hartmann?"

"Yes."

"She was a great friend of Merkel's was she not?"

"She was his wife."

On Friday morning Mr. Begg asked leave to withdraw the charge of conspiring to burn John Lehr's house, against August Neiman. The Inspector, in allowing a withdrawal pointed out to him that he was still liable to a term of several years, if further evidence of his being implicated in the dastardly crime were obtained. There was another charge against him, however. People out at Spring Coulee were afraid of him and the police were going out to inquire into the matter that day.

August Neiman then stepped down out of the dock and was released. He was immediately re-arrested on the information and complaint of Corp. Humby, that he, August Neiman, while a witness in a judicial proceeding, after having sworn to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, did commit perjury, firstly, by swearing that he had never spoken to John Lehr, prosecutor in the action; secondly, that he August Neiman, was not present at any meeting of the Dreamers on the 11th of April; thirdly, that John Reib was not at any meeting on that date; fourthly, that he, Neiman, did not read from the Holy Bible at meeting on the said date; fifthly, that he did not read at all at the meeting in question.

Corporal Humby deposed that he had heard the prisoner make the alleged false statements.

John Sillak gave evidence that he was the interpreter in the action referred to. He had heard the prisoner swear to all the statements imputed to him.

John Lehr testified that prisoner had spoken to him once on the way to Gros Ventre coal mines last spring, and once on the way home on the same day. Prisoner had called witness shameful words when the latter was engaged in breaking in May or June.

F. Neiman, father of prisoner deposed that his son was present at the meeting on the 11th, as far as he could remember, all the time. He read the Bible when commanded to do so by his father. John Reib was also present at the meeting. Witness did not know why his son should say that he was not present or that he did not read the Bible.

Jacob Reib deposed that prisoner was present with John Reib at the meeting on the 11th April, for two or three hours. Prisoner read the Bible to the congregation.

On Friday afternoon the nine prisoners appeared at the bar. Inspector Parker stated that he had gone through all the evidence very carefully, and spent a large amount of time on the case and found that there was not sufficient evidence to commit the two men, Jacob Merkel and Frederick Neiman, for trial. Some of the witnesses had come within a hair's breadth of being committed for perjury as was August Neiman. Now information had been laid against them that they should be bound over to keep the peace, and Corporal Humby, on behalf of the King, requested that the information be withdrawn against these two men. This, however, did not end the case. The police would continue in their efforts to bring the guilty party to justice for the dastardly work carried out on the 11th ult. The Inspector then allowed the complaint to be withdrawn.

Speaking to the other prisoners the Inspector said that his remarks bore just the same effect to them—that they would have to give sufficient information why they shouldn't be bound over. There were five different complaints against them. Corporal Humby then withdrew the charges against them all.

In answer to Inspector Parker's enquiry, the Dreamers stated that they had not had any word from Merkel and Hoffman, their leaders in South Dakota. They had written asking these men to come and help them out in the trial, and had been expecting a wire in reply.

The Inspector went on to say that he expected the government would take drastic measures against Hoffman and Merkel, sr., for the writing of their inflammatory letters. He hoped the prisoners when released would try to get along at Spring Coulee without more trouble in the future.

Jacob Reib was disposed to argue the question of being bound over. He said that if anything happened to John Lehr, he would get blamed. He was afraid John Lehr would get false witnesses to forswear themselves in court.

The Inspector—"He can please himself whether he fights the case or not. I don't intend to waste any more time with him now."

Prisoner could be sent to jail if he refused to be bound over after sufficient evidence had been produced. Their was no fear of the men being convicted unless their guilt was proven. Under British law the Dreamers would be given every protection, just as much were all other subjects of His Majesty. A police post had been established in their district, and the police would be riding amongst them all the time, day and night.

Reib thought it might be possible he would be unable to get any sureties for his good behavior. He was accordingly allowed to give his own assurances for $500 on John Lehr's complaint, and a similar amount on the other four complaints. Reib owns a homestead and six other quarter-sections.

The other eight men were similarly bound over.

The People of God then trekked home to Spring Coulee.

WEAK TIRED WOMEN

How many women there are that get no refreshment from sleep. They wake in the morning and feel tireder than when they went to bed. They have a dizzy sensation in the head, the heart palpitates; they are irritable and nervous, weak and worn out, and the lightest household duties during the day seem to be a drag and a burden.

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

are the very remedy that weak, nervous, tired out, sickly women need to restore them the blessings of good health.

They give sound, restful sleep, tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart, and make rich blood. Mrs. C. McDonald, Portage la Prairie, Man., writes: "I was troubled with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and weak spells. I got four boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and after taking them I was completely cured.

Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25, all dealers or the The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

FOOT OF MONTREAL STREET

TO CONSIDER PURCHASE OF INTERIOR ELEVATORS.

Regina, April 22.—It was learned tonight that a conference will be held here on May 4, between Premiers Roblin, Rutherford and Scott and the executive of the western grain growers' association to consider the matter of the western provinces purchasing the interior elevators and operating them under government management. It could not be learned whether any definite plan has been drafted for consideration or not, but it is believed that Mr. Partridge has a plan all worked out. It is creating considerable interest here.

Didn't Agree with Me

Mr. Arthur Tennison, 88 London Street, Toronto, writes enthusiastically of the merits of Psychine for all stomach troubles.

"For seven years I have had indigestion and dyspepsia. I tried scores of remedies. My room resembled a drug store with nostrums which I had bought. Eventually I used Psychine, and every dose brought permanent relief."

All throat, lung and stomach troubles quickly cured by Psychine. It is the prescription of a great specialist. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

ZAM-BUK SAVED THIS MAN'S FINGER!

Mr. William C. Edwards, Peter Street, Toronto (late steward Elks' Club), sustained a severe cut on the middle finger of the left hand. Blood poisoning ensued and the finger caused him excrutiating agony. He says: "My hand was so swollen and painful that I had to carry it in a sling for some months. I was under the care of a well-known doctor in Toronto for several weeks. The wound got no better, and one day he said my finger would have to be taken off. The pain from the wound was terrible and was extending right up the arm. I consulted another medical man and was treated by him for some weeks longer. He then suggested that the finger be opened and the bone scraped. At this stage a friend advised me to try some Zam-Buk which I did. I bathed the wound and applied Zam-Buk as directed. Next morning the wound began to bleed. It was a healthy sign so I continued with the treatment, and in a weeks time I was able to discard the bandage. A little more perseverence and Zam-Buk cured the wound completely."

Zam-Buk Cures cuts, burns, chafings, itch, eczema, running sores, ringworm, piles, bad legs, poisoned wounds and all skin diseases. All druggists and stores, 50c., or postpaid from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

The Convention City.

Medicine Hat is to have more conventions this year than any other city in the west. Although the convention of Canadian Municipalities, the biggest of them all, is postponed until next year, there are enough left to make it the Convention City.

It is also safe to say that no western city has been talked of more during the past year, and no other city has acquired one-half the prominence in proportion to its size. A dozen things have combined to advertise us—our natural gas, our publicity commissioner, Kipling's visit, our location and prominence on the C.P.R. system, even our name, our weather reputation and the Dreamers. The conventions we are to be favored with are the Associated Boards of Trade, the Baptist Association, the Methodist Conference, the Stock Growers' Association, the Sunday School Convention and the Woman's Missionary Convention—a list that cannot be duplicated west of Winnipeg.

Each of these conventions will bring from seventy-five to two hundred strangers, and affords us the best opportunity for publicity with which the city has ever been favored. The Board of Trade and the City Council can be depended upon to provide ample entertainment and to attend to the immediate needs of the conventions. But there are provisions which should be already commenced, which will be much more important factors in the use of the conventions for publicity purposes than the boat rides, auto rides, smoking concerts, banquets and other entertainment of our guests. These can be attended to in part by the citizens and in part by the two public bodies referred to.

The citizens' work which presents itself immediately is the beautifying of private property. Medicine Hat has reason to be proud of what it has done this spring, but there is much yet to perform. The new lawns, the trees planted, the fences erected will all bring their reward in a very few weeks. Part of the Esplanade has been the show section of the city, not on account of the residences, but more on account of the lawns and trees and attention to property. There are streets on the hill which would be almost as beautiful had they lawns and trees. We have many trees, but we want many more. Paint can be freshened up, back yards and lanes made more presentable, fences renewed and painted, walks built, grass planted AND KEPT WATERED, gardens started—everything we do in this way will return us tenfold, and be invaluable as an advertisement for the city.

The greatest publicity we will get when the conventions are here will be from the manner in which we attend to our private property. We do not want to be called a prairie town, with all the images it arouses of a flat, treeless, greenless stretch. Nature has favored us in location—let us take advantage of the soil she has given us.

The worst eyesore of the city is just in the spot where it does us most harm. A stranger viewing the city from the station, sees South Railway street, and little else. And what a sight! It might be called our slums, but, unfortunately business is too good there to invite a change. However, the new American hotel will be a great improvement, and the replacing of the "fire row" by a fine brick store, (if it comes to pass), will be the biggest relief that ever happened here. Until these changes are completed it might be a good idea to apply for permission to blind all arrivals until they pass South Railway street.

There are several improvements the council can make without incurring the great expenses everyone is trying to save them. One of them is the levelling of the roads all over the city. Grading is expensive, but merely taking off the lumps, filling the holes, etc., could easily be undertaken. For instance, South Railway street from Toronto to Montreal streets, has recently been graded and left in a very rough condition. It is a series of bumps and the expense of levelling these off would be nothing. It would almost seem that with the best of gravel all around us a little more might find its way to our streets. A run over our most used streets in an automobile would show the council what is needed. The attention of the aldermen, too, might be directed to the entrances to the city. There are practically four—two from the lower town and two from the south side. The north side roads are passable, but there is not a reasonable entrance from the south. Main street is too steep for loads, and Sixth avenue is no entrance at all now. A fence is built across the old road, and in another place excavations for a cellar have run right across the road. This entrance is disgraceful. Is there no road allowance here at all?

Our visitors will be run around in autos, but you mustn't try to get them out of the city to the south.

Our sidewalks no city can beat: most of our streets near the centre of the city are well graded. Now the levelling and the outlet roads want to be attended to.

These are small things that require little expense and yet will not only advertise us to our convention visitors, as residents of a progressive, modern city, but will give us large returns in our own personal enjoyment.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Western Federation of Miners did itself proud when it dismissed "dynamiter" Haywood as its representative. The Federation gave Haywood the best defence in his murder trial that money could provide. He had every opportunity to prove his innocence, but the best that could be done for him was to render the prosecution insufficient for conviction. The Union saved his neck, but like everybody else who followed the trial, believed Haywood guilty of the foulest crimes. First of all they took away his position as a member of the executive, and now he is ousted from the Union.

By doing this the Federation of Miners has proven that the main body of members will not strive to live by murder.

Another little tug scandal has been exposed in the House. An order-in-council authorized the purchase of a tug in May, 1906, in order to save the $12 a day rent that was being paid. Instead of buying immediately, the tug was rented all season, as usual, and purchased near the beginning of winter. Rent for $1,440 was paid, and then the $4,000 for the tug.

John F. Leheney, who lectured here a few weeks ago in the interests of Socialism, and who organized the local Socialist club, has turned Anarchist. Fortunately, as he said himself, he recognized no leader in Socialism, and therefore could not be considered a Socialist leader. His indignant denial in a controversy in Calgary only a month or so ago, that he had anarchist tendencies, is rather amusing now.

When it was announced last Tuesday that the C.P.R. men were submitting their differences with the C. P. R. to arbitration everyone in the west drew a breath of relief.

The only thing the Liberals have been able to say about the recent civil service report has been that it is a proof of the honesty of the Liberal government, that they are determined to push the investigation to the limit as soon as they find bad conditions existing. It was shouted loudly and seemed to have some little weight even though the Laurier government was simply making a virtue of necessity.

But now even that proof of honesty ceases to exist. The names of the commission have been made public. Of the head, Judge Cassels, nothing wrong can be said. But imagine these two assistants chosen to investigate the misdeeds of the Liberal government—G. H. Watson, late chairman of the Liberal organisation in Ontario; and J. L. Perron, late partner of the late Raymond Prefontaine, former Minister of the department under investigation.

Can anything be more ridiculous as an impartial commission?

Contrast this with the policy pursued by the Conservatives at the time of the departmental investigation of 1891, when B. B. Osler and Mr. Geoffrion, both associated with the Liberal party were named. It is becoming more evident every day that the government dare not expose their actions to impartial judges. When they do—well, look at the civil service report.

Supply of Wool Run Out.

(Lethbridge Herald.)

The Woollen Company has closed down its factory for a time. President Freeman told The Herald that this action was due to the failure of the wool supply. The company has manufactured all the wool it had on hand and is forced to close for five or six weeks until another supply can be secured. The factory has been running to its fullest capacity all winter, making over fifty thousand dollars worth of blankets during the season.

An Irrigation Problem.

Ottawa, May 1.—Dr. W. F. King, chairman of the Canadian waterways commission, and Mr. Campbell head of the irrigation branch of the interior department, left for Washington yesterday to confer with the American authorities in charge of irrigation and the reclamation bureau, in reference to an international question of considerable importance to the whole irrigation system of the Canadian west.

The matter at issue is in connection with the plans of an American irrigation company to divert the waters of the St. Mary's river, south of the Alberta boundary, to the Milk river, which has its source in Idaho and flows northward into Alberta, and then re-enters American territory in Montana. The waters of the St. Mary's, however, are now used in a large irrigation system south of Lethbridge, and the Canadian government is anxious to protect the interests of southern Alberta farmers by seeing that the source of water supply for irrigated lands is kept adequate for all the present and future needs. As the waters of the St. Mary's river, even if diverted to Milk river, would have to flow through Canadian territory, and could, if necessary be re-diverted to the St. Mary's river, north of the boundary, it will be seen that the permanency of the Southern Alberta irrigation system is well safe-guarded.

A Prized Cough Cure

"I have not been without a bottle of Coltsfoote Expectorant in the house for over nine years. At that time I procured it for a bad cold I had. It worked such wonders then that it has been a household remedy ever since, and we will have no other for coughs and colds—it is so pleasant to take, and all of my children look for it as soon as they get a cold at all. Nearly all of them have been subject to croup, and that's when I find Coltsfoote Expectorant useful. You are welcome to use this testimonial as you wish."

MRS. LEWIS NIGH.

Free Sample of Coltsfoote Expectorant will be sent to any person sending their name and address and naming this paper. It has established a wonderful record as a successful cure for coughs, colds, sore throat, croup, whooping cough, bronchitis and all irritated conditions of the throat and chest. It is the prescription of a great specialist in medicine. At all good druggists, 25c. Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

It took five years to build a ship,
It took five hours' time to sink it.
It took an age to age old wine,
It took eight seconds straight to drink it.
It took one day to build a trap,
It took one moment more to set it;
It took one hour to catch a skunk,
It took one fortnight to retreat it,
It took ten years to make a home,
It took ten minutes just to deed it.
It took a week to write this "pome"
It took one E. Z. mark to read it.

They inquired after each other's health. They spoke of events of a common interest. Trifles of everyday occurrence seemed to contain absorbing details. But it is the everyday occurrence that makes the life. It was the putting on of the coals that reconciled these two men.

"Let me see," said Sir John, "you gave up your rooms before you left England, did you not?"

"Yes."

Jack drew forward his chair and put his feet out toward the fire. It was marvelous how thoroughly at home he seemed to be.

"Then," continued Sir John, "where is your luggage?"

"I left it at the club."

"Send along for it. Your room is—er—quite ready for you. I shall be glad if you will make use of it as long as you like. You will be free to come and go as if you were in your own house."

Jack nodded with a strange twisted little smile, as if he were suffering from cramp in the legs. It was cramp—at the heart.

"Thanks," he said. "I should like nothing better. Shall I ring?"

"If you please."

Jack rang and they waited in the fading daylight without speaking. At times Sir John moved his limbs, his hand on the arm of the chair and his feet on the hearth rug, with the jerky, half restless energy of the aged which is not pleasant to see.

"Shall I put some coals on?" asked Jack.

When the servant came it was Jack who gave the orders, and the butler listened to them with a sort of enthusiasm. When he had closed the door behind him he pulled down his waistcoat with a jerk, and as he walked downstairs he muttered "Thank 'eaven!" twice, and wiped away a tear from his bibulous eye.

"What have you been doing with yourself since I saw you?" inquired Sir John conversationally when the door was closed.

"I have been out to India, merely for the voyage. I went with Oscard, who is out there still after big game."

Sir John Meredith nodded.

"I like that man," he said. "He is tough. I like tough men. He wrote me a letter before he went away. It was the letter of one gentleman to another. Is he going to spend the rest of his life 'after big game?'"

Jack laughed.

"It seems rather like it. He is cut out for that sort of life. He is too big for narrow streets and cramped houses."

"And matrimony?"

"Yes, and matrimony."

Sir John was leaning forward in his chair, his two withered hands clasped on his knees.

"You know," he said slowly, blinking at the fire, "he cared for that girl more than you did, my boy."

"Yes," answered Jack softly.

Sir John looked toward him, but he said nothing. His attitude was interrogatory. There were a thousand questions in the turn of his head; questions which one gentleman could not ask another.

Jack met his gaze. They were still wonderfully alike, these two men, though one was in his prime while the other was infirm. On each face there was the stamp of a long drawn silent pride. Each was a type of those haughty conquerors who stepped, mail clad, on England's shores 800 years ago. Form and feature, mind and heart, had been handed down from father to son, as great types are.

"One may have the right feeling and bestow it by mistake on the wrong person," said Jack.

Sir John's fingers were at his lips.

"Yes," he said rather indistinctly, "while the right person is waiting for it."

Jack looked up sharply, as if he either had not heard or did not understand.

"While the right person is waiting for it," repeated Sir John deliberately.

"The right person"—

"Jocelyn Gordon," explained Sir John, "is the right person."

Jack shrugged his shoulders and leaned back so that the firelight did not shine upon his face. "So I found out eighteen months ago," he said, "when it was too late."

"There is no such thing as too late for that," said Sir John in his great wisdom. "Even if you were both quite old it would not be too late. I have known it longer than you. I found it out two years ago."

Jack looked across the room into the keen, worldly wise old face.

"How?" he inquired.

"From her. I found it out the moment she mentioned your name. I conducted the conversation in such a manner that she had frequently to say it, and whenever your name crossed her lips she gave herself away."

Jack shook his head with an incredulous smile.

"Moreover," continued Sir John, "I maintain it is not too late."

There followed a silence. Both men seemed to be wrapped in thought, the same thoughts with a difference of forty years of life in the method of thinking them.

"I could not go to her with a lame story like that," said Jack. "I told her all about Millicent."

"It is just a lame story like that that women understand," answered Sir John. "When I was younger I thought as you do. I thought that a man must needs bring a clean slate to the woman he asks to be his wife. It is only his hands that must be clean. Women see deeper into these mistakes of ours than we do. They see the good of them where we only see the wound to our vanity. Sometimes one would almost be inclined to think that they prefer a few mistakes in the past because it makes the present surer. Their romance is a different thing from ours. It is a better thing, deeper and less selfish. They can wipe the slate clean and never look at it again. And the best of them rather like the task."

Jack made no reply. Sir John Meredith's chin was resting on his vast necktie. He was looking with failing eyes into the fire. He spoke like one who was sure of himself—confident in his slowly accumulated store of that knowledge which is not written in books.

"Will you oblige me?" he asked.

Jack moved in his chair, but he made no answer. Sir John did not indeed expect it. He knew his son too well.

"Will you," he continued, "go out to Africa and take your lame story to Jocelyn—just as it is?"

There was a long silence. The old worn out clock on the mantelpiece wheezed and struck 6.

"Yes," answered Jack at length, "I will go."

Sir John nodded his head with a sigh of relief. All, indeed, comes to him who waits.

"I have seen a good deal of life," he said suddenly, arousing himself and sitting upright in the stiff backed chair, "here and there in the world, and I have found that the happiest people are those who began by thinking that it was too late. The romance of youth is only fit to write about in books. It is too delicate a fabric for everyday use. It soon wears out or gets torn."

Jack did not seem to be listening.

"But," continued Sir John, "you must not waste time. If I may suggest it, you will do well to go at once."

"Yes," answered Jack, "I will go in a month or so. I should like to see you in a better state of health before I leave you."

Sir John pulled himself together. He threw back his shoulders and stiffened his neck.

"My health is excellent," he replied sturdily. "Of course I am beginning to feel my years a little, but one must expect to do that after—eh—er—sixty. C'est la vie."

He made a little movement of the hands.

"No," he went on, "the sooner you go the better."

"I do not like leaving you," persisted Jack.

Sir John laughed rather testily.

"That is rather absurd," he said. "I am accustomed to being left. I have always lived alone. You will do me a favor if you will go now and take your passage out to Africa."

"Now—this evening?"

"Yes. At once. The offices close about half past 6, I believe. You will just have time to do it before dinner."

Jack rose and went toward the door. He went slowly, almost reluctantly.

"Do not trouble about me," said Sir John. "I am accustomed to being left."

He repeated it when the door had closed behind his son.

The fire was low again. It was almost dying. The daylight was fading every moment. The cinders fell together with a crumbling sound, and a grayness crept into their glowing depths. The old man sitting there made no attempt to add fresh fuel.

"I am accustomed," he said, with a half cynical smile, "to being left."

CHAPTER XXV.

"THEY tell me, sir, that Missis Marie—that is, Missis Durnovo—has gone back to her people at Sierra Leone."

Thus spoke Joseph to his master one afternoon in March, not so many years ago. They were on board the steamer Bogamayo, which good vessel was pounding down the west coast of Africa at her best speed. The captain reckoned that he would be anchored at Loango by half past 7 or 8 o'clock that evening. There were only seven passengers on board, and dinner had been ordered an hour earlier for the convenience of all concerned. Joseph was packing his master's clothes in the spacious cabin allotted to him. The owners of the steamer had thought it worth their while to make the finder of the simiacine as comfortable as circumstances allowed. The noise of that great drag net directed toward the west coast of Africa that floating scum of ne'er-do-welldom which is ever on the alert for some new land of promise.

"Who told you that?" asked Jack, drying his hands on a towel.

"One of the stewards, sir; a man that was laid up at Sierra Leone in the hospital."

Jack Meredith paused for a moment before going on deck. He looked out through the open porthole toward the blue shadow on the horizon which was Africa, a country that he had never seen three years before and which had all along been destined to influence his whole life.

"It was the best thing she could do," he said. "It is to be hoped that she will be happy."

"Yes, sir, it is. She deserves it, if that goes for anything in the heavenly reckoning. She's a fine woman; a good woman that, sir."

"Yes."

Joseph was folding a shirt very carefully.

"A bit dusky," he said, smoothing out the linen folds reflectively, "but I shouldn't have minded that if I had been a marryin' man, but I'm not."

He laid the shirt in the portmanteau and looked up. Jack Meredith had gone on deck.

While Maurice and Jocelyn Gordon were still at dinner that same evening a messenger came, announcing the arrival of the Bogamayo in the roads. This news had the effect of curtailing the meal. Maurice Gordon was liable to be called away at any moment thus by the arrival of a steamer. It was not long before he rose from the table and lighted a cigar preparatory to going down to his office, where the captain of the steamer was by this time probably awaiting him. It was a full moon, and the glorious golden light of the equatorial night shone through the high trees like a new dawn. Hardly a star was visible; even those of the southern hemisphere pale beside the southern moon.

Maurice Gordon crossed the open space of cultivated garden and plunged into the black shadow of the forest. His footsteps were inaudible. Suddenly he ran almost into the arms of a man.

"Who the devil is that?" he cried.

"Meredith," answered a voice.

"Meredith—Jack Meredith, is that you?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm blowed," exclaimed Maurice Gordon, shaking hands; "likewise glad. What brought you out here again?"

"Oh, pleasure!" replied Jack, with his face in the shade.

"Pleasure? You've come to the wrong place for that. However, I'll let you find that out for yourself. Go on to the bungalow. I'll be back in less than an hour. You'll find Jocelyn on the veranda."

When Maurice left her Jocelyn went out into the veranda. It was the beginning of the hot season. At midday the sun on his journey northward no longer cast a shadow. Jocelyn could not go out in the daytime at this period of the year. For fresh air she had to rely upon a long, dreamy evening in the veranda.

She sat down in her usual chair while the moonlight, red and glowing, made a pattern on the floor and on her white dress with the shadows of the creepers. The sea was very loud that night, rising and falling like the breath of some huge sleeping creature.

Jocelyn Gordon fell into a reverie. Life was very dull at Loango. There was too much time for thought and too little to think about. This girl had only the past, and her past was all comprised in a few months—the few months still known at Loango as the simiacine year. She had lapsed into a bad habit of thinking that her life was over, that the daylight of it had waned and that there was nothing left now but the gray remainder of the evening. She was wondering now why it had all come, why there had been any daylight at all. Above these thoughts she wondered why the feeling was still in her heart that Jack Meredith had not gone out of her life forever. There was no reason why she should ever meet him again. He was, so far as she knew, married to Millicent Chyne more than a year ago, although she had never seen the announcement of the wedding. He had drifted into Loango and into her life by the merest accident, and now that the simiacine plateau had been finally abandoned there was no reason why any of the original finders should come to Loango again.

"You!" she exclaimed.

(To be continued.)

Escaped from Police.

Exciting Time at Taber.

Taber, April 29.—While Corporal Mason, R.N.W.M.P. was out this morning on patrol duty he was accosted by a man named Moshier who charged another man named Gier with having stolen a saddle from him. Both returned to town where Mason arrested Gier.

The latter being able to give substantial bail for his appearance in court next Friday and stating who would go bail for him, both the Corporal and Gier proceeded to call on the man who would go bail.

In the meantime an old man named Fender arrived in town and laid information charging Moshier with having drawn a gun on him. The parties then proceeded to the court house where the magistrate was sitting, the Corporal intending to apply for a warrant for Moshier's arrest. On the way they had to pass by Pearson's livery stables, where Moshier had put his horse up, the Corporal taking the precaution of telling Mr. Pearson that if Moshier attempted to remove his horse to immediately acquaint him. While at the court word was brought that Moshier had taken his horse and bolted. Corporal Mason immediately mounted, but lost some time in tracing what direction the fugitive had taken. At length, finding that he had gone south he gave chase, following him about six miles, but the former having a good start and being well mounted, he was unable to overtake his man. Returning to town he immediately wired the outlying stations giving information of Moshier's escape. It is very probable that his freedom will be of short duration. Moshier had some guns on his saddle, which Corporal Mason removed and now has in his possession. The charges were to have been heard Friday next, but as both prosecutor in one case and defendant in another, combined in one individual have disappeare the cases must be postponed "sine die" until the man is landed.

More Brains and Less Pulp

Calgary News).

When Hon. Frank Oliver at the banquet of the Canadian Press Association held in Toronto some time ago, threw out the phrase, "put more brains and less pulp into your newspapers," he struck a hard shot at a foolish system that has prevailed in many parts of Canada and the United States.

It is not so long since the leading newspapers of the continent were able to put all of the news the people wanted to read in the columns of a twenty-eight column paper. Charles A. Dana's New York Sun was never more prosperous or more entertaining than when it came out with four pages of seven columns each. Cosuph Pulitzer, when he took hold of the New York World, said in his opening editorial that he believed the news of the world could be found in the forty-eight columns of the New York World and the foundation of the great prosperity of that journal was laid on the basis of its first editorial announcement.

This question is affecting all thinking newspaper men today and will affect the general public later on. In the introductory editorial of the Daily News, over a year ago the statement was made that it was the intention of this journal to furnish its subscribers with news—not wrapping paper—and that policy has been continued to the present.

There is a very good reason in the west for following the advice of the Hon. Frank Oliver as fully as it is possible to do. The people want the news in the most condensed form and at the earliest moment possible. In addition to that the cost of freight to the middle west puts a tax upon the newspaper that few people are aware of. A carload of white paper valued at $750 will cost in freight between the eastern mills and Calgary the sum of $500. This means that every cent's worth of white paper costs two-thirds of a cent to carry it to its destination, and this involves a discriminatory tax against western newspapers as against those published nearer the seat of supply.

Which is another reason why western newspapermen should endorse the trite saying of Hon. Frank Oliver, "More brains and less pulp."

"Dreamers" Not of The True Faith

Says a Seattle "Dreamer"

Seattle is to have a branch of a sect known as "The Dreamers," says a Seattle paper. At least this is what Mrs. Laura Burns, who has come from Spokane to establish the strange religious movement, says. The Dreamers do not preach in the ordinary way, she says. They come into an ecstatic condition of mind and allow the soul to wander through the regions of the infinite until it receives some divine command, which, according to Mrs. Burns, it is bound to execute.

Mrs. Burns says human laws cannot be considered when divine commands are given, because as soon as God speaks all statutes dictated by man fall. She denies that the persons who are on trial for burning houses in Medicine Hat, Alberta, at the behest of the organization, because they have strayed from the narrow path, but still if they really had been commanded to do the burning, long to the faithful "Dreamers." She their duty as loyal "Dreamers" was to do exactly as they were ordered to do.

The meetings of this strange cult are held at midnight. They do not address each other, they do not admonish their hearers to become good, but the head dreamer, who is appointed to the position on account of the superiority of his or her dreams, delivers orders and the orders must be executed with skill and dispatch. Mrs. Burns says the penalty for disobedience will be swift sure and effective. She says, however, that God will be his own avenger and will select the instruments of his wrath.

How Is Your Cold?

Every place you go you hear the same question asked.

Do you know that there is nothing so dangerous as a neglected cold?

Do you know that a neglected cold will turn into Chronic Bronchitis, Pneumonia, disgusting Catarrh and the most deadly of all, the "White Plague," Consumption.

Many a life history would read different if, on the first appearance of a cough, it had been remedied with

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

This wonderful cough and cold medicine contains all those very pine principles which make the pine woods so valuable in the treatment of lung affections.

Combined with this are Wild Cherry Bark and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other pectoral herbs and barks.

For Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pain in the Chest, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. You will find a sure cure in Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. C. N. Loomer, Berwick, N.S. writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for coughs and colds, and have always found it to give instant relief. I also recommended it to one of my neighbors and she was more that pleased with the results."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup 25 cts. per bottle at all dealers. Put up in yellow wrapper, and three pine trees the trade mark. Refuse substitutes. There is only one Norway Pine Syrup and that one is Dr. Wood's.

"Hip-O" Fights Extradition

Alleged Cattle Thief Captured.

Great Falls, April 30.—The Tribune says: "Charged by the Canadian government with being a fugitive from justice, Charles R. Johnson, better known as "Hip-O" Johnson, the name having been taken from a cattle brand formerly owned by him was yesterday taken by deputy United States Marshall Haigler of Helena from Belt to Butte, where he will have a hearing before Judge W. H. Hunt in the Federal Court in order to determine whether or not there is sufficient evidence against him to warrant the issuance of extradition papers.

Johnson was arrested near Macleod, Alta., in 1904, charged with stealing beef on the range and slaughtering it for sale in the butcher shop that he was conducting at the time. He broke jail, according to the allegations of the Canadian officials, and came to this country. For some time the Northwest Mounted Police were active in trying to run him down and offered a reward of $1,300 for his apprehension. Last year, however, the reward was reduced to $200. The chase for Johnson was conducted through Montana Wyoming and down into Colorado and Oklahoma, but Johnson alleges he was never within danger of being captured and that he never travelled by night or hid from the officers. Some months ago he returned to Cascade County, where he was once in the stock business, and secured employment at Belt under the name of William Caldwell. He was located there by Deputy Sheriff Kirschwing, who knew he was an alleged fugitive from justice, and complaint was made against him on that charge. Attorney J. W. Speer, acting as an agent of the Dominion government. He was arrested and released on $500 bail until the hearing should be held before United States Commissioner W. S. Frary, who issued the warrant for his arrest. On being arraigned before Commissioner Frary he entered a plea of not guilty and demanded a trial by jury.

Last week Sergt. Major W. C. Bryan of the Northwest Mounted Police and Crown prosecutor W. M. Campbell arrived from Macleod and after filing a complaint direct in the Federal court at Helena secured the dismissal of the proceedings pending before Commissioner Frary. Johnson is confident that there is not sufficient evidence against him to secure a conviction, and he anticipates a speedy release as soon as he has had a hearing.

"I feel it my duty to testify to the benefit I have received from the use of Psychine. While travelling in New Ontario conducting special meetings I contracted a very bad cold, which gradually developed into Bronchitis of the worst form. I was advised to try Psychine, which I did, and after using but a few bottles I was completely restored to health. I recommend this wonderful remedy to sufferers from Bronchitis and other troubles."

Later: "I wish to add that my voice, since using Psychine, is stronger and has much more carrying power than it had before I had bronchitis, and the vocal chords do not tire with speaking."

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

THE MAN WHO DOES MOST FOR LABOR.

He who is thrifty and sober and provides for his family.

He who has the good sense to know that the success of the Union depends upon getting others to join it.

He whose sense of honor will not permit him to take advantage of a fellow-worker.

He is opposed to disorder at meetings and shows due respect for the presiding officer, assisting him in all efforts to conduct things decently and in order.

He who loves peace, preferring not to fight the employer, yet is sensitive to unjust treatment and is not a coward.

He who, when he goes on a strike stays out until the wrong is righted.

He whose card is always clear.

He who is not a knocker, but by force of logic opposes all foolish motions and insists upon the passage of all good ones.

He who is mentally broad enough to perceive that there are other honest men besides himself.

—LABOR LEADER.

Winnipeg, May 1.—The announcement was made this morning by the C.P.R. authorities that Charles Hufferton of the law firm of Atkins, Robson & Co., has been nominated by the company to represent their interests in the negotiations with their mechanical staff, instituted under the Lemieux act.

It was thought at first that A. Manson would accept, and the men will now be disappointed that a member of the C.P.R. solicitor's office here has been nominated in his place thus suggesting that the company means to fight the issue to the bitter end.

A peculiar case has just been reported of a New York labor contractor being sent to Sing Sing prison for eight months. His name is Michael Tooke. He wanted cheap laborers, and under contract imported a large number from Bulgaria and Macedonia. This is in direct opposition to the stipulations of the law, and now he is doing time. It is also the first instance of a sentence being enforced for conspiracy to evade the immigration law, and should have a salutory effect. The Canadian immigration law is not quite as stringent but borders along the same lines. It is generally understood that for all purposes, including the immense demands upon labor for construction that there is sufficient here and nothing to warrant the importation of anything like more help from Europe.

BIENFAIT, Sask., May 1.—The Board of Conciliation appointed by the department of labor to settle the dispute between the miners and mine owners of the Western Dominion collliers, met yesterday, Judge Myers presiding. The result of the sitting is as follows: Recognition of the union and eight-hour day. Johannah, of Calgary, and F. H. Sherman of Taber, the other members of the board are still in conference with the officials of the mining company settling the details of the agreement. Judge Myers returned to Winnipeg this morning.

How to do the Arbor Day Planting.

(Contributed by the Western Horticultural Society.)

In two former newspaper articles we dealt with the Arbor Day question, showing in the first article the importance of an observance of the day, and in the second indicating the kind of material that it would be well to plant. In this article we shall discuss the methods of planting etc.

In growing trees, shrubs, or flowers successfully, there are four things necessary: First, that the land shall be properly prepared; second, that the plant shall be a good one; third, that it be properly planted; and fourth, that it shall be cared for in the right way afterward.

We will look first of all to the ground. On the farm where there is generally plenty of room, and where there is horse power to do the work, the problem of getting the land into good condition is easily solved. The best preparation of the land is summer fallowing the previous season or the growing of some cultivated crop that leaves the ground mellow with a good mulch of loose soil on top. To grow potatoes on ground intended for planting trees the season following, is a plan that works well But on the school ground where much more Arbor Day planting should take place, the question of soil preparation becomes a more difficult one. About the worst state in which soil can be put for the reception of trees is to have it in sod, tramped hard. But this is the very state of the average school ground.

Under such conditions it would probably pay in the long run not to do too much permanent planting the first year, but to put most of the attention upon the preparation of the ground for trees to be set out the next year.

It would be well first of all to lay the ground out somewhat deliberately so as to be sure that the general effect would be good when all the planting was done, then do only such parts of the work as would be possible this year. It takes no more energy to plant half a dozen trees in such locations that other things may be fitted in among them with good effect later on than it does to set out at random in such a way that half of them will require to be dug up in years to come.

As a general rule small trees are much more easily transplanted than large ones, but for the school ground it will mostly be best to set out at least four, five or six feet high, small trees being so easily broken and destroyed. If trees that had been previously transplanted can be had from a nursery or farmer's lot these would be the best to get hold of, because the root system would be more compact, and thus a larger number of roots could be dug up, but in some instances trees will be taken from spots where nature has planted them. In such cases trees growing in open places apart from other trees will always be better than those found in midst of a clump. The trees in the open will be more sturdy and much better rooted. Take up all the roots that may be had, carrying as much earth as possible with the roots.

In setting out, have deep wide holes. Flower pot holes in the sod are no use for tree growing. The sod should be thoroughly dug up and kept well cultivated three or four feet back from the tree. The finest mellowed soil procurable should be sifted in around the roots, and when they are well covered the earth should be well firmed down with the foot so as to make the tree quite steady and secure. Then throw some loose earth on top, and see that it is kept loose throughout the season.

Plant the tree about two or three inches lower than it was growing and set it in a depression rather than have the earth banked up around it. Thus the water will run toward the tree and soak in about its roots. Many a tree dies because the rains all run away from it as fast as they fall.

Trim the top back so as to balance it with the root system. If half the rootlets have been lost, half the top should be trimmed off. Generally it will pay to take off considerably more than half the top and this should be done by shortening each limb rather than by cutting out half of them completely. If there is more top left on than the roots can support, the tree is sure to die. Some of the ground that is not planted this spring could be plowed or dug up, worked down finely and sown to annual flowers. They may not do well this season, but if they are set in rows and the surface kept hoed throughout the summer, the land will be in nice shape for planting with something more permanent next year. If not too much exposed to the wind, dahlias would answer well for part of this planting. They give one a good chance to hoe the ground, the plants fill the eye of the scholars well throughout the season, and the blooms are most beautiful. The plants will need to be tied to strong stakes when they get up to about twelve or eighteen inches high. The bulbs can be dug in the fall, and the dahlia bed removed to another spot for next year. It is best to order dahlia bulbs rather than dahlia seed from the seedsman as plants grown from seed grown in the open would probably not bloom the first year.

Candytuft is hardy, grows well from seed, and makes a good showing of flowers. Nasturtiums also thrive on soil with very little preparation, and would work in well as a first crop. Sweet peas would also be excellent if given some brush stuck into the ground to climb up on.

In planning how the grounds should be laid out, it is well to remember that the big things should be kept to the outside, so that finally there will be large trees, big shrubs and climbers against the side and rear fences, smaller shrubs, such as spiraea, barberry and Ginnalian maple inside, and flowers inside of these. A hedge of caragana right across the front of the school ground just inside the fence, would be splendid, and it is as hardy as the poplar. A few clumps of shrubs scattered about the lawn also appear to good advantage.

In addition to planting trees, much work may be done on Arbor Day in the grounds generally. It is said that in some places in Nebraska the boys have even fenced the school grounds.

Then, too, one mission of Arbor Day should be to let our boys and girls know more about our trees and flowers, how they grow, when their seeds ripen, and how the trees are reproduced.

Besides this, the economic value of the forest might well be impressed upon the minds of the children, so that the next generation may be more ready than the present one to use economically this gift of Providence. A circular on Arbor Day issued by the United States Forest Service, says:

"What child has not seen a muddy freshet? Yet, this sight, so common in the spring, is full of suggestion for a forest lesson. The stream is discolored by the earth which it has gathered from the soil. This carries us back to the stream's source, in the forest springs. Again, it shows us with what force the water has rushed over the exposed ground where there was no forest to shield and bind it. In just this way the Mississippi tears down and flings into its bed, each summer, more soil than will be dredged with years of costly labor to make the Panama canal. An experiment with fine and coarse soils stirred quickly in a tumbler of water, and then allowed to settle explains how the stream remains muddy while it runs swiftly, and how it clears again as it slackens on more level stretches, dropping the soil to the bottom.

"On any steep plowed hillside, or on any railroad or trolley embankment, exposed soil may be seen washing with the rain. A forest on a mountain slope may be pictured by a cloth upon a tilted table; then if the water be poured on the higher edge, it will creep downward through the cloth and drip slowly from the lower edge, as would rain falling upon the forest. If now the cloth be plucked off, and the water still poured, we may observe at once what happens when such a forest is destroyed."

This is an admirable illustration of the difference in run-off between the spongy soil of a forest and the bare soil or bed rock from which the forest litter has been removed.

In many cases the trees planted by school children on Arbor Day are neglected afterward and allowed to die. In many other cases, however, they are carefully looked after by the children, and in Idaho, South Dakota and Utah the law requires the school board to care for them during vacation. It would be well for school boards in this country to do the same thing.

BIG SURVEY PARTY.

A. G. Stacey was in the city most of last week making preparations for surveying 24 townships just north of the border, directly south of the city. The district is around Milk River and Manyberries Creek.

Mr. Stacey is an old Toronto University boy of '00, who has been working for the government ever since. He is assisted in this survey by W. G. McElhanney, a graduate of '04. They have taken 20 men from the city amongst them being Tom Bell, Stanley Wilson akd P. Gateby. Mr. Stacey will run two parties from the one camp and expects to be six months on the work.

All his provisions will be bought in Medicine Hat, his outfitting alone meaning $1,200 left in the city, with only one month's supplies purchased.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Walsh

We are pleased to announce that Mr. Walter Ranton and Mr. Mosie Desmarais who sought the doctor's services at Maple Creek are so far recovered as to be able to resume work.

Mr. Arthur Grant has decided to add to his already many activities in the stock line industry. He has purchased some tumbling pigeons and intends to make the Sarnia ranch headquarters throughout the west for "tumblers."

Louie Trotter and Fred. Murray have returned safely from "the land of the Dreamers"—Irvine.

What a rivalry we will have here when the hotel gets its license. Wonder if prices will be cut?

Two husky ranchers in riding to a dance the other night lost their way and while debating as to the right course to pursue, heard the most blood curdling screams from a nearby field. For some time they considered them the cries of the coyotes, but at length plucking up courage, decided to investigate, and found that the terrible sounds proceeded from another lost pair. Needless to say, the cries came from a woman.

Charles Briggs, Deputy Returning Officer, Game Guardian and general all round Liberal ward politician of Graburn, was unsuccessful in securthe renewal of the contract for carrying the mail between here and that hamlet. We understand Mr. Schultz was the successful tenderer and commenced his duties May 1. It is to be sincerely hoped that Mr. Briggs will not forsake us as we like to hear the news of the country from hundreds of miles round about.

Billy Wilson and Fred. Grant paid a flying visit to Maple Creek on Friday.

Five cars of settlers unloaded here the class of settlers we have had during the present year has been a splendid one and the last bunch was no exception. They came well supplied with stock and implements and should make a sucess of farming here.

Mosie Desmarais left on Saturday for Lethbridge via Maple Creek.

Considerable complaint has been raised by those who have been seeking seed grain from the government that no barley was sent, although requisitioned. Had an ordinary business-like course been pursued the applicants would have been notified that barley could not be supplied and so an opportunity would have been given the farmers to add to their wheat and oats orders. But such was not done and many of the farmers are unable to sow the acreage intended. It's a beautiful gang that runs that emporium for grafters at Ottawa.

Mrs. A. D. Grant has returned from an extended visit with Mrs. A. Trent, of Edmonton.

Mrs. Charles Lye is spending a short time with friends in Medicine Hat.

Herbert Newby, the Napoleon of real estate, was with us on Saturday.

Knight & Co., purchased a car of sheep from W. Glennie and shipped them to Vernon on Thursday.

Mrs. Finlay, of Maple Creek, is visiting Mrs. J. Nesbitt.

No more fires lately and the chief and the rest of his aggregation are rusting for want of practise.

Mr. A. Thurn is wearing a proud and pleasant smile again. We cannot say if it is a boy or girl.

Seven Persons

Superintendent Lawrence and Mayor Cousins of the Hat visited Seven Persons this week.

Mr. Glenn, of Indian Head, Mr. H. H. Foster and Mr. George Armstrong passed through here with a carload of horses to ship from the Hat.

The G.G. ranch received a carload of young stock on Sunday last, one of which was dead and another died before reaching the ranch.

The frame of the new Farmers' store is up and enclosed and a directors' meeting was held Saturday at Mr. Meyers'.

Homesteaders and homeseekers are arriving on every train, the maximum number for one train being ten. All seem well pleased with the country and all go home after filing on a quarter section of land.

Inspector J. W. Brown, wife and child, passed through here to the Hat Monday, returning Saturday.

Like to Try Psychine

"Please send me a bottle of Psychine. I have a child afflicted with tuberculosis, and have been advised to try your medicine by our family doctor, as he says he cannot do anything more for my child."

MRS. H. STEPHENS.

Arthur, Ont., July 14, 1907.

Psychine cures when doctors fail. Many are sorry they did not try Psychine first. Throat, lung and stomach troubles yield to its curative power. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

We understand Wm. Rutherford lowered his price on all lumber when Joe Peter started a saw mill. The farmers are very glad now.

The people are pretty sick now from sore throat. We wish that they would be well again.

Elora

The farmers are all through seeding in this district.

Mr. Doane is out on the farm. He is laid off work with a lame arm.

Mr. McCutcheon and Mr. Doane were around the district on Sunday. Willie, has a homestead.

While driving through the district the other day I noticed two drills at work in Canyon Coulee farm. Keep a-humping, Tommy.

Mr. James Douglas and son are stopping with the Conn brothers for a few days.

Mr. S. B. Smyth and others are kept busy putting out poison for gophers.

Miss Dunn has accepted the position as teacher of this district. She is at present stopping at the Canyon Coulee farm.

We understand that one of our young bachelors has purchased a hairless horse. He intends exhibiting it at the western fairs this coming season.

While Miss Pearl Smith was driving home from her uncle's on Sunday the single-tree broke. Very lucky for her that she had a quiet horse. It stood still till a young friend ran out and fixed things up for her.

Gros Ventre

"Work, for the harvest is coming," is the motto of the farmers here, and everyone is pushing on with the seeding.

Miss E. Dunn, school teacher, has come to board with Mrs. T. Walker.

Messrs. C. Putnam and T. Graceon have the contract for erecting the telephone poles. They are busy hauling from the mill just now.

Another family is expected here to take up a homestead near Alexander's old place.

The young folks who went up to the Lodge seemed to have a good time at the social, arriving home in time for breakfast next morning.

Woolchester

Mr. Frank Lang arrived here from Cobalt, Ont., and has gone out Willow Lake way.

School started last Tuesday with an attendance of twelve children and as a few more pupils are expected this will make a record session.

The Fenton boys have gone up to their homestead near Willow Lake.

Rev. J. Morrow of Medicine Hat conducts communion service here on Sunday, while Mr. Wallace, missionary takes his place in town for that day.

Mr. McLaughlin reports that the land here is the best he ever saw for farming, even the Old Country cannot surpass it. Another clap on the back for Woolchester.

Mr. Doane and Mr. W. H. McCutcheon visited the Doane Farm known as the Pleasant Valley Farm. Whilst there Mack also visited the Maple Grove Farm where the Maples were conspicuous by their absence. Mack, the renowned gopher hunter, in looking for larger game was sadly disappointed. Mack is very much pleased with this locality and, is taking up land.

Irvine

The council purchased from Mr. Joseph Bietz Lot 6, Block 2, Irvine, (old townsite), for the purpose of erecting a suitable municipal building. The price paid was $160.00.

Mr. Jacob Kalmbach purchased two lots from the C.P.R., across the track, on the north side and he intends to put up a stable and handle the draying business exclusively.

This week will see the commencement of the building of the new Baptist church here. They recently purchased two fifty foot lots from the Canada Northwest Land company.

G. J. Hansch, managing director of the Citizens' Lumber company was in town on Saturday. He reports business to be on the mend up west. He seems to be more than satisfied of their purchase of the lumber yard here in Irvine, as he thinks this place has an excellent future ahead of it, and more especially if they get incorporated and bore for gas.

On April 15 a fire damaged Mr. Geo. Kuch's residence at Walsh, Alberta. Upon hearing of the fire the agent of the company with whom the owner had his buildings insured, drove down to Walsh and inspected the risk, and at once reported to head office, who immediately replied "Claims papers are coming forward this mail." On April 22 the agent received the claim papers and on April 24 same were completed and sent to head office, Toronto, for approval, and on May 1 the amount of claim was paid, the sum of $115.00 being the sum claimed by the insured. Mr. Kuch was insured in the Sun Insurance office, of London, Eng, and Herbert Sutton Newby is the agent of this company at Irvine and Walsh. This is only one of the many instances where this company have paid their claims promptly. Only twelve legal business days were between the fire and the paying of the claim.

Wallace Nicholl of Eagle Butte was in town on Friday. He is hauling out some government seed oats. He reports that farm work in the Medicine Lodge district is progressing, and seeding is well under way.

Newburg

The farmers are mostly all done with their crop. Some are going to plant some potatoes and would be very glad to get a good rain after this.

Carbon, a small burg somewhere in Alberta, probably in the Calgary district, has a great lot of scientists. A despatch from there says they have discovered gas while boring for water. The report says: "The gas forces its way up through a depth of forty feet of water." What would have been really remarkable would have been if the gas had been held down by the water, even if there was only a wee bubble of gas and g mile of water.

The C.P.R. are going to considerable expense this season in the beautifying of their stations in the west. In Medicine Hat considerable work has already been done in the railway park; the lawn has been put into good shape and seeds are now being sown.

The old ferry is going up to Bow Island. The Southern Alberta Land company has secured it and its transfer will be effected by means of the boat. The cable is down ready for shipment and as soon as the water is high enough the ferry will be moved.

The Y.M.C. now boats of a membership of 250. Many friends are giving books for the use of the library, and to these the club extends its thanks.

James Horner, an old timer, who has lived in Medicine Hat for 22 years, but left two years ago to take the position of Roadmaster of the C. E. R. in Edmonton, called at the Times office the other day. Mr. Horner says he sees big changes in the city since he left and, while he likes Edmonton, he has many nice things to say of the town he lived in so long.

One Dollar off men's pants, and seats thrown in free—that's what A. C. Hawthorne is advertising.

Established yesterday, Medicine Hat Furniture Company, across the track, sell furniture at reasonable prices. No combine here and a straight and fair deal to everybody. Come and inspect my stock. Note prices. Go-Carts and Carriages at your own prices, to clear. J. W. Thompson, across the track.

Fancy china and silk you will find at John Paul's store.

Those $6 bppts for $3.75 are still offered by A. C. Hawthorne.

The Roseries have a stock of pansy and verbena plants ready for planting. Later on they will have all the popular flowers in time for the spring gardening.

DYSPEPSIA AND STOMACH DISORDERS
MAY BE QUICKLY AND PERMANENTLY CURED BY
BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Mr. P. A. Labelle, Manlwaki, Que., writes us as follows: "I desire to thank you for your wonderful cure, Burdock Blood Bitters.

Three years ago I had a very severe attack of Dyspepsia. I tried five of the best doctors I could find but they could do me no good.

I was advised by a friend to try Burdock Blood Bitters and to my great surprise, after taking two bottles, I was so perfectly cured that I have not had a sign of Dyspepsia since. I cannot praise it too highly to all sufferers. In my experience it is the best I ever used. Nothing for me like B.B.B.

Don't accept a substitute for Burdock Blood Bitters. There is nothing "just as good."

Highland Bulls For Sale.

The undersigned offers for sale one three-year old black, pure bred Highland Bull, and one pure bred native yearling bull. Also a young cow of the same breed in calf to the three-year old bull. All in good condition and good specimens.

Owing to closing of exportation of cattle from Scotland the future supply of this world-renowned breed is cut off from this country thereby enhancing the value of such stock. To any rancher who wishes to introduce this strain into his herd this is his golden opportunity at remarkably reasonable prices. Correspondence solicited, or come early and avoid the rush.

Mrs. Lawrence's tea on Thursday was most enjoyable. A novel feature was the observation table in which Miss Lucile McLaren won the prize, a beautiful book of copies of celebrated pictures. Mrs. Lawrence wore an Irish crochet waist over heliotrope and black skirt, and Miss Telfer a beautiful grey silk tissue much trimmed with lace. Mrs. Telfer also assisted in receiving, and had a gracious word for all. The dining table was most spring-like with its large vase filled with marguerites and daffodils surrounded by small vases filled with the same flowers. The chandelier was draped with smilax. Mrs. Alan Parker and Mrs. C. D. Strong presided over the tea and coffee urns, Mrs. Beverley Grant served ice cream and the assistants were Miss Krauss and Miss Lucille McLaren.

VOL. 5. No. 36. MEDICINE HAT, ALTA., CANADA, TUESDAY, MAY 12, 1908. $1.50 PER ANNUM

DAIRY FARM STARTING

CHICAGO MAN MOVES TO THIS CITY

The milk famine which prevails in Medicine Hat during parts of the winter is likely to be felt no more when the dairy farm which is to be established on the outskirts of the city by J. E. Lussier of Chicago is put in shape.

Mr. Lussier is not a new-comer, as he was here in 1904 and built the older part of the present roundhouse for the C. P. R. While here he was so impressed with the prospects that he purchased a half section of land back of what is known as the McCutcheon farm, toward Red Cliff. His intention has been to move to his farm for the past three years, but he has been delayed closing up his business in the States.

His wife and family of two girls and a boy arrived yesterday, and Mr. Lussier has a car of effects, including horses and farm machinery. He will immediately build a house and barn on his property and stock up for a dairy farm. He also intends to do contracting until his farm occupies his whole time.

Mr. Lussier is glad to get here and possesses the enthusiasm that the country values. He believes there is no better place in the world to live than on his half section. He states that many Americans think so too. Mr. Broughton, the Government Land Agent in Chicago offered him $40 an acre, cash, before he left Chicago, but the offer was refused.

THE CITY FATHERS

The adjourned meeting of the council was held last night in the city hall. Present: The Mayor; Alds. Baker, McKay, Morrow, Spencer, Forster, Huckvale.

Ald. Baker read the estimates for the gas department. These totalled $9,040.21. Mr. Craft's salary of $960.00 the alderman explained, had been put on to this department.

In the absence of Ald. Penhale, Ald. Huckvale read the estimates of the water commissioners.

The public works, license and police, and parks and markets estimates were presented by Alds. McKay, Spencer and Huckvale, the chairmen of the respective committees. A matter of $1,000 was devoted to relief.

The board of health report was read by the Mayor.

The following are the estimates as presented:

Gas	$9,040.21
Water	14,784.43
Public Works	11,508.00
License, police and relief	5,656.25
Parks and markets	2,500.00
Health	1,270.00
Fire, water and light	6,000.00
Total	$50,753.89
Assessment	850.00
Interest	1,000.00
	$52,603.89

Messrs. Bending, Ansley and Trimble addressed the council on the matter of the grading of 6th avenue. Mr. Bending stated that if the city had not the necessary money for the carrying out of the work they were willing to do the work and take the city's note. The easiest grade out of the city was in this place, and there were about twenty or thirty houses on the avenue interested. Mr. Trimble said that a sixteen-foot road was all that appeared to him to be necessary, for the time being. This would cost between $350 and $400. Referred to finance committee.

Matter of the adjustment of money for debentures was referred to finance committee.

Moore & Co., made application for a license to run a moving picture show in Drinnan's old store. The clerk stated that he was informed by the applicants that the license committee were satisfied that the building came up to the requirements of the by-law. The clerk was instructed to issue the license provided the by-law was complied with.

The Mayor said that people were not buying tickets for the banquet as they should. It was impossible to provide a free banquet. Ald. Huckvale thought an effort should be made by the townspeople to make Thursday's events a thoroughgoing success. In connection with this matter Ald. Baker said there had been more or less adverse criticism of the council's action, in his hearing. "And," he added, "I got an awful raking over for suggesting putting lights on the bridge." (Laughter).

A spur track to the Canneries was discussed at some length. It was decided that this should be placed on the west side of the road allowance.

Moore & Co., were granted the privilege of conveying an electric light wire across Main street from the McKinnon pool room for operating the moving picture apparatus. Council then adjourned.

The Band gave its first public performance on Thursday night in front of the Y.M.C.A. and The Times' office. A large crowd collected to hear the boys, and were not disappointed in the quality of music provided. As the lights were not on the bandstand, the concert had to stop at dark.

BEGGAR PRINCE OPERA CO.

"Olivette," as presented last night by the Beggar Prince Opera Company, pleased the audience exceedingly. There was not a very large house perhaps due to the unsettled weather, but those who attended saw an excellent performance. The particular star, as usual, was Coquelicot in the person of Fred. Godding, the man with the rubber face. No matter what part he takes he keeps the audience in roars of laughter. Ethel Balch as Olivette sang some pretty songs and was as pretty as ever. Jas. Combs as the Duc and Vivian Forrest as the Countess acted their parts well and J. C. Taylor as Valentine had a chance to show his good voice. Geo. Murray is always pleasing with his big robust presence and as the Captain last night he sustained his part well.

Tonight they present The Bohemian Girl, an opera which is said to be their best. A big house should see it. They will not be disappointed.

Putting 'Em Up

The Reds Treat The Blues White

As previously announced the Blues beat the Reds in the Y.M.C. membership contest, but the Reds won the Blues on Thursday night when they treated them to cake, ice cream, lemonade, oranges, candies, nuts ad infinitum. It can be said of the Blues that they did the feast justice. As one boy said when he rolled out of the door: "I et four dishes of ice cream, seven pieces of cake, three sandwiches, an orange (and showed another in his pocket), and had four cups of lemonade and had to leave half a one." The next day was Arbor Day and a holiday.

The Red "grub" committee had things in the best of shape at 8 p.m. and seats for 110 were soon filled. About 150 were present.

A good program was presented, including songs by the Misses Cooper, and Mr. Hall, recitations by Mr. Ware, piano solos by Miss Thelma Muir and Mr. Hulburt.

Military Camp June 8-19

Big Force to Camp at Calgary

Militia orders for the holding of Calgary camp in military district No. 18, issued March 18, call for the assembling of all the Alberta troops for 12 days, from June 8 to June 19.

During that period between 700 and 800 men will be camped on the large farm of Lieut.-Col. Walker, in East Calgary, and will be the largest gathering of the militia ever seen in the west for drilling purposes.

The 15th Light Horse, Col. Walker, commanding headquarters, Calgary, will have squadrons in camp from Calgary, High River, Cochrane, and the district between Red Deer and Calgary.

One squadron of the Alberta Rangers, from Macleod; one squadron of the C.M.R. Medicine Hat; and four squadrons of the 16th C. M. R., with headquarters at Edmonton, also be in the camp.

Land Company Desires to Change Lands

Southern Alberta Land Company Requests Large Tract from Government

In reply to a question by Mr. Herron in the House of Commons, the minister of the interior said it was true that the Southern Alberta Land Co., Ltd., successors to Robbins Irrigation Co., had made application to the government to exchange a portion of the lands granted under their contract for other lands situated outside the original area. The company proposed to release 186,000 acres and to ask in lieu thereof a similar area. The land applied for is located in townships 13, 14, and 15, in ranges 6, 7, 8, and 10 west of the fourth meridian. The company claims that the success of their scheme from a financial point of view depends on securing the new area applied for. The application of the company has been referred to the superintendent of irrigation and no decision could be reached till he made his report.

The School Board

A Language Teacher to be Engaged

The regular meeting of the school board was held last night in the office of the secretary-treasurer. Present: The Chairman, W. J. Brotherton; Trustees Colter, Milne and Kennedy.

W. M. Dodd wrote offering his services as architect for any new buildings which might be required. Filed.

Woods, Gundy wrote asking board to quote the lowest price they would accept for the debentures. Filed.

Miss M. B. Morrison applied for a position on the staff. Filed.

W. R. Simmonds wrote giving price of cylinders for locks required at Toronto street school. Board gave instructions to have the work carried out.

Geo. E. Pentland wrote in reference to the amount of money ($40) which he had been asked to refund to the board. He had been entirely unaware that he had been overpaid. He asked that in consideration of a month's salary owing to him for annual leave of absence, the question of the $40 be allowed to lie. Moved that Mr. Pentland be asked to return the $40.

Another salary question was raised by a communication from Miss McCallum, according to which there was $39.90 due to her. She had been granted extended leave of absence, appointing a substitute to take her place. She understood that she was to be paid from the 17th August, when the school opened, and when all the agreements were dated. The secretary explained that according to Miss McCallum's agreement she judged she was to be paid from the 17th August, and a letter from Mr. Hay to the same effect, suggested that Miss McCallum be paid for the period dating from then, with the amount paid for the substitute deducted. Mr. Kennedy thought too much was expected of the board in such matters. If a teacher were granted special leave of absence it was the board's loss, and they could not be expected to pay the same salary for the services of a substitute as for the regular and more experienced teacher. The letters were filed.

Letter from D. R. Ware asked that an amount of $7 overpaid by him to the secretary treasurer be refunded. This will be done on verification being made.

Following accounts were passed:

Mitchell	.50
W. H. Simmonds	$31.95
W. H. Simmonds	2.75
B. F. Souch	13.85
Marshall & Co.	.95
D. Milne Co.	3.80
D. Milne Co.	6.25
Walton Hardware	13.41
Finlay & Co.	3.19
Gas account	33.21

Western School Supply Co's account for $30.80 for slate was not paid as slate was broken in transit.

The principal's report showed that there has been a large influx into the schools since Easter. There were 629 pupils in April as against 572 in March. The primary departments were overcrowded and the large number of beginners in Miss Caldwell's class had made it necessary that it should be divided into two parts, the children in each part attending a half day. Increased accommodation for the fall term would be required.

The appointment of a teacher of languages next year, the report went on, would necessitate the use of another class room for high school purposes. It would be necessary to provide accommodation for three additional teachers after the summer vacation. The report was adopted, and the secretary-treasurer instructed to pay Miss Mitchell for services rendered as substitute.

The report of the committee appointed to look into the matter of providing manual training showed that there were about 45 ready to take up the work. These would be divided into three squads of fifteen each. A fifteen bench room would be adequate for the present.

The estimated cost:

Benches, tools, etc.	$390.00
Freight on stools, etc.	50.00
Installing and setting up	100.00
	$540.00

Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them

Editor of The Times:

The papers of the country in general are giving considerable space to labor topics of every kind, and while dealing mainly with mechanical subjects there are other phases of the question that are seldom broached, and which in our own city, are of considerable moment, and are well worthy the thought and consideration of all. I refer to the hours of our merchants and their employes.

The chief point where a very great change could be made which would be a benefit both to employer and employe would be the closing of all stores at eight o'clock on Saturday night.

For nine out of ten customers there is nothing to prevent them ordering their goods earlier than is done at present. This is a habit in most cases. On other days the orders are sent in early, and why not on this day also?

It is a common occurrence to see delivery men going around with lanterns at midnight. If any of us were asked to do this, unless we were remarkably well paid for it, we should look on it as a joke, or tell the parties concerned to go somewhere. This being so, why should we demand it of others? I would suggest that stores close at 8 p.m. All goods ordered up to 7.30 p.m. to be delivered that night.

The men who have got the go and brains to build up a business have also the brains to overcome any of the small objections that might be raised to such a scheme.

The summer is almost here and it would be a Godsend to both employer and employe to have an hour or so in the fresh air before retiring.

I am, yours truly,
Harry Stephenson.

Dreamer Sentenced

On Thursday afternoon August Neiman came up for trial before Judge Mitchell charged with perjury as witness in the recent Dreamer hearing before Inspector Parker. At first he was unrepresented by counsel. Mr. Kealy was present at court and by consent defended the prisoner. After a brief consultation Neiman decided to plead guilty and was sentenced to two years in Edmonton penitentiary. W. A. Begg prosecuted on behalf of the Attorney-General.

Serious C. P. R. Strike

Rioting at Owen Sound

Owen Sound, May 11.—The strike of the C.P.R. Longshoremen and Truckers assumed serious proportions this morning when the strikers commenced throwing coal at C.P.R. officials on the steamer Dundee lying at the docks. In the melee which followed three strikers were shot, but not seriously hurt. Two detectives were badly beaten up. The Mayor read the riot act and further trouble is feared.

Following are the known injured:

Detective Wright, C.P.R. detective, skull fractured by club, dangerously injured.

Another C.P.R. detective slightly hurt.

Edward O'Brien, Toronto druggist, spectator, shot in thigh.

James Lambie, Hanover, striker, shot in ankle.

James McIntosh, Owen Sound, striker, severely beaten about head.

Battle arose through the company trying to unload C.P.R. steamer Dundee with tie aid of scabe breakers from Toronto, but hundreds of strikers interfered and threatened to use force.

Important Decision

A Real Estate Case

Order cancelling agreement of sale on behalf of E. D. Bennett. Application was heard under the originating summons to cancel an agreement of sale of land entered into by A. R. Webster and W. N. Schram. Purchasers had made default in payments, and although notified several times to fulfill their part of the agreement, they had not taken any steps. Order was granted rescinding the agreement for sale and directing that the land revert to Mr. Bennett.

Arrest Made Last Night

Man Caught In C. P. R. Car

An important arrest was made by Constable Beaumont last night in connection with the alleged pilfering of goods from C.P.R. cars. For some time there have been going on minor thefts from the cars. Last evening Robert Fraser, who has been living in the town for some time and is fairly well known was noticed by fireman Leveque to be prowling around a boarding car. Leveque called up Constable Beaumont and the two kept watch over the suspect. He was caught in the act of striking a match to examine the contents of the cellar of the car. Later he was arrested by Constable Beaumont on a warrant and this morning appeared before the magistrate in the court room of the city hall. He was remanded for seven days.

The rain of the past few days is worth thousands of dollars to the country. It has not been heavy in the city but the surrounding district has caught more.

Regular classes at the Y.M.C. have been called off for the summer months. Outside work will be done. Notice of new classes will be given later.

Bridge Opening Day

Programme for the Day

A joint committee of the City Council and the board of Trade will form a reception committee for the welcoming of Thursday's visitors. All trains on Thursday morning and, if necessary, on Wednesday evening, will be met, and the guests seen to their hotels.

The following have accepted invitations to be present at the bridge opening ceremony on Thursday:

Hon. A. C. Rutherford, Premier.
Hon. C. W. Cross, Attorney-General.
Hon. W. W. Cushing, Minister of Public Works.
John Stocks, Deputy Minister of Public Works.
J. A. Carbert, Engineer of the bridge.
Mr. Cross, of the Calgary Brewing Company.
W. H. Woods, of Calgary Herald.

The program for the day will include an automobile ride through the surrounding district, probably out to the Red Cliff Brick Yards, in the morning at ten o'clock. The opening ceremony will take place at 1.30 p.m. and, at the close, the boat will be in attendance. All ticket holders for the evening banquet are entitled to take part in the river trip; each ticket holder has the privilege of taking one lady.

The City of Medicine Hat will return between 5 and 6 o'clock and in the evening the banquet will take place at 8.30.

The following is the toast list:

The King.
The Province of Alberta.
The Learned Professions.
Our Sister Cities.
The Press.
The Ladies.

A hearty welcome is extended to all the people of the city and district to take part in the day's celebrations.

TO GIVE EXHIBITION

Y. M. C. PREPARING FOR PUBLIC PERFORMANCE

The Y. M. C. is trying to get eight or ten of its members into shape to give a gymnastic performance in public. There will be six gymnasts and two extra funny clowns, whose work is to keep the audience from getting tired, and have to take turns off to go behind the scenes and wipe the tears from their eyes.

While the boys hope to give a much more advanced exhibition next year, it will be possible to see what advance has been made in the short time the gymnasium has been open, as most of the performances have never been given in a gymnasium before.

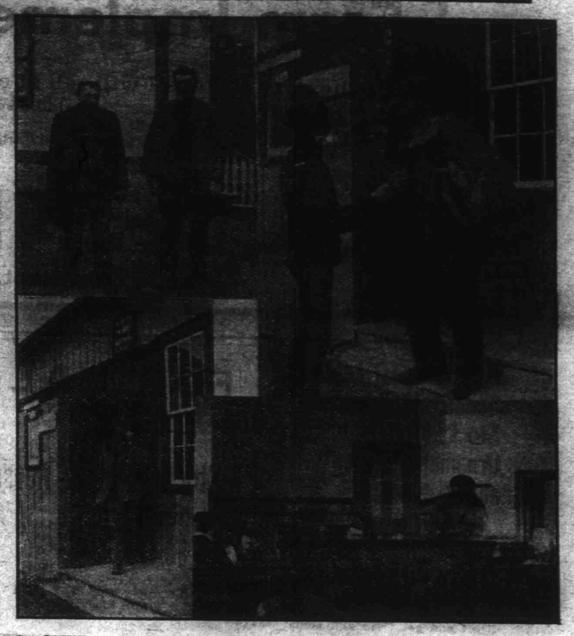
There will be work on the horizontal bar, the flying rings and parallel bars, with tumbling and pyramid building. Wand and dumb-bell exercise will also be shown.

T. Gawley, the Y.M.C. instructor, and Dr. Smith are getting the boys in shape and will do some stunts themselves. The date will be announced later.

Small Fire

Firemen Had Run Last Evening

For the first time since the Idle Hour theatre was burned down in February the fire boys were called out on business last evening.



The fire, which broke out in Littleford's barn shortly after five o'clock was first noticed by one of the children. Mr. Littleford was down town at the time driving his team. The whole building was rapidly becoming enveloped in flames and though an attempt was made by Mrs. Littleford to check their progress with water from the household supply, little could be done until the arrival of the brigade. Jack Porter played on the building with water from the hose in Mr. Foster's garden and Harry Rodd with buckets of water carried out of the house by Mrs. Littleford, and although this was of little avail in reducing the flames, the adjacent frame barn was probably saved by this means. Meanwhile the alarm had been given by telephone and in a few minutes' time the fire boys were on the spot. In the course of a quarter of an hour the fire was extinguished.

This is the second time Mr. Littleford has lost a barn by fire. The first was a frame building which was thought to have caught fire from the gas well just across the lane. In the present instance, fortunately, neither of the horses were in the stable, or a much more serious loss would have been sustained.

Quite a number of fruit trees in the city are in bloom as a result of the warm weather of the past week.

The Benedict vs. Bachelor game billed for tonight at 6.30 o'clock will not be played if it is raining. This will give the Bachelors more time to get in shape.

Those who want to take advantage of the boat trip and banquet on Thursday should buy their tickets right away. The drug stores and the Board of Trade have them for sale.

1.—JOHN LEHR AND MICHAEL GILL. Gill, (on the right) was to have been shot through the window of his house by his brother Emanuel.

2.—FREDERICK NEIMAN AND CORPORAL HUMBY. At Neiman's house the last meeting of the sect took place, on the eve of the burning of John Lehr's house.

Western Canneries Meeting

Salaries Named

A report received since last week's issue of The Times, from Maple Creek, states that F. H. Malcolm's salary as general manager of the Western Canneries will be $3,500. C. A. Flour of Winnipeg, who was [illegible] assistant, receives $2,500, and will have his headquarters in Winnipeg where he will be selling agent.

The directors are A. D. Rankin, Brandon; F. G. Forster, Medicine Hat, J. P. Miller and A. Carter, Winnipeg; and Hon. Scott, secretary of State, Ottawa.

Last week's Times stated that two of the directors were S. T. Miller and Hon. Scott, Premier of Saskatchewan. The corrections are given above.

Local Notes

H. W. Ireland will close his store at 13k on Thursday.

The band will play tonight, weather permitting.

Rev. J. W. Morrow will be in Gros Ventre next Sunday where he will administer the sacraments of the Lord's Supuer and of Baptism.

Communion service at Knox church will be held at 11 o'clock Sunday morning. Regular service at night.

F. W. Brown has bought out the Union restaurant from Rahn & Hayes.

John C. Landis, of Greenville, Ohio, was in Medicine Hat today. Mr. Landis has spent the last three weeks in Swift Current district, where he owns a lot of farm lands, as well as near Medicine Hat. He has completed the seeding of 300 acres at Swift Current and 150 acres here. Mr. Landis will return from Ohio in about four weeks.

His Honor Judge Mitchell, on opening the district court last Wednesday was presented with an address by the local legal fraternity.

J. D. Wright has been moved from Calgary to Medicine Hat by the C.P.R.

A correspondent writes that on Sunday a small boy of eight years of age waited patiently for two hours outside the shack of A. J. Brower, with a half a dozen bottles more or less for sale and received the big sum of five cents. The correspondent goes on to express the opinion that it would be better for the children to go to Sunday school on Sunday than to be enticed into trading on the Lord's Day.

A number of local auto enthusiasts took a run on Arbor Day out to Jas. Fleming's ranch where a new system of irrigation was inaugurated.

The W.M.S. of Knox church will meet on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock instead of Thursday.

A meeting of the missionary society of St. John's church will be held tonight. Mrs. Morrison will read a paper.

The Alberta Realty & Brokerage Co. made the following sales last week: Two houses in Central Park; 2 Lots Block 88; 2 in 89, 2 in 97; and Lots in Blocks 81, 65 and 12. Real estate is [illegible].

J. M. Keating received word last week of the illness of his son Wellington, who has been spending some time with his grandfather and uncle at Silver Creek. Mr. Keating left for that place immediately, but his son was dead from appendicitis before he arrived. The burial took place in Silver Creek.

Maple Creek Signal.—Messrs. John T. Hall and F. G. Forster of Medicine Hat, while in town on Friday, gave The Signal a call.

The Royal Templars of Temperance holds its meetings every Monday in Cochran's hall and on its last regular night of meeting much interesting work and an enjoyable program was got through. Reference was made to the Anti-Cigarette Bill now before the Dominion Parliament and a hearty endorsation was given its provisions. It has also been arranged for another silver medal contest to take place some time in June—date and place of meeting will be made known later. The council has a very strong roll but needless to say there is always room for any who desire to bring themselves in line with the movement against the drink traffic.

E. F. Wheaton has opened an office in the city for the sale of B.C. Fruit Lands. Wheaton & Company own 800 acres in the Kootenay district near Trail.

The set of Balzac advertised in The Times' Want Column drew an answer from a man in Nelson, B.C., and negotiations for purchase are now on. A woman wrote from Boston, Mass., in answer to another ad.

The Methodist church is being redecorated in preparation for the Methodist Conference which is to be held here next month.

Lethbridge Herald, May 4.—R. J. Maads of the International Harvester Company staff here has been transferred to Medicine Hat.

Lethbridge Herald, May 8.—Chas. Avery, manager of the Bow Island Stock Company is in the city for a few days on business. He reports that the Bow Island district is developing rapidly this year.

J. McCarroll, the restauranteur of Coleridge was in the city on Saturday. Mr. McCarroll has just opened a store in Coleridge and has moved the restaurant. The latter he is refitting and will have in shape in a couple of weeks.

WOOL PRICES ARE TO DROP.

(Lethbridge Herald.)

Wool growers will be interested to know that the price of wool is likely to decrease this year. In the American market the price has decreased from 20 per cent. to 25 per cent. below that of last year.

Two years ago the sheep raisers in this district received 17 cents per pound for their wool and last year the value dropped to 16 cents. This year indications are that 15 cents per pound will be the prevailing price. The buyers in Montana have advised the growers not to sell.

To counteract the decrease in value in this district is the fact that this is an exceptionally good year. The local ranchers report that they are having the best of luck with their flocks this season.

ATHLETICS

The annual meeting of the Alberta Amateur Lacrosse Association was held in Calgary last Tuesday. Vic Ready represented Medicine Hat. The officers elected were as follows:

Hon. pres., Senator DeVeber; pres., Dr. Stanley, High River; first vice-pres., Robert McCutcheon, Medicine Hat; second vice-pres., John Mosley, Calgary; secretary treas., B. Collison, Calgary; council, A. Ripley Lethbridge; A. McDonnell, Calgary; V. Ready, Medicine Hat; W. McCoy, Nanton; H. Gilchrist, High River; judicial committee, M. S. McCarthy, M. P., D. L. Darroch, W. A. Buchanan.

Official referees were also chosen as follows: A. Ripley, Lethbridge; J. J. O'Gara, Calgary; C. P. McQueen, Calgary T. J. Moore, Pincher Creek; G. W. Edmonds, Okotocks; A. Burns, Medicine Hat; W. J. Powers, Edmonton; B. Stanley, High River; H. Shearer, Tabor; T. Woods, Nanton; W. Hatcher, Medicine Hat; J. Moir, Calgary; V. Ready, Medicine Hat; E. Fraser, Lethbridge; A. McDonnel, Calgary; Dan McLeod, Calgary.

The alterations made in the rules are:

Rule 4, section 4—Should a player be injured in a match before the first half is played, his team can either replace him with another man or else the other team must drop a man. In no case can a new man be played after half time.

Section 2, rule 5, is changed to read 20 instead of 30 days.

Section 1, rule 8, now reads: "A minimum of twelve referees shall be appointed."

Section 2, of the same rule now gives the duties of field captain to the manager of the team.

Two new sections were added to rule 9.

Section 7 reads: Timekeepers shall be supplied with whistles or bells by the home team.

Section 8: Penalty timekeepers may also be appointed to keep a record of the penalties.

Rule 12 read that in case of a tie at the end of 80 minutes' play the teams shall change goals and play 10 minutes each way. If it still remains a tie then the captains toss for goals and they will play sudden death.

Rule 12 was cut out entirely and a new clause inserted to the effect that any player committing a foul the referee has full power to penalize him and any player so penalized shall receive a check from the referee stating the length of his penalty the time of the penalty to start when the slip is handed to the timekeepers.

One important change that was made was section 6 of rule 13: "At half time the manager of the home team shall give to the manager of the visitors the sum of $100 if a senior match, and $35 if a junior or intermediate match, to go toward expenses. In the event of the home manager refusing to do so the referee can award the match to the visitors and the club so refusing will be expelled."

John Mosley presented the league with a handsome trophy to be played for in the intermediate series, and the delegates decided to make the trophy known as the Mosley Cup.

This year's schedule is as follows:

Senior series—
June 4—Medicine Hat at Lethbridge.
Jun 17—Lethbridge at Calgary.
June 22—Calgary at Medicine Hat.
July 1—Lethbridge at Medicine Hat.

June 26—Calgary at High River.
July 7—Nanton at High River.
July 14—Calgary at Nanton.
July 20—High River at Calgary.
July 27—Nanton at High River.
July 31—Calgary at Nanton.
Aug. 7—High River at Calgary.
Aug. 14—High River at Nanton.
Aug. 20—Nanton at Calgary.
Aug. 28—Calgary at High River.

If you want to see a baseball game that will be a revelation, that will settle for all time the doubt as to the relative athletic qualities of the benedict and bachelor, get out to the game tonight at the park. The benedicts will consist of O'Hara, Rood, Tweed, C. S. Pingle, Binning, Any, Navin, Turpin, Ready and others.

Rooters extraordinary will be A. Patterson, F. W. Brown, and D. Matheson. James Fleming will hold the indicator and try to hold the players down.

It is expected the Benedicts from force of habit will excel in "home runs," and for breaches of discipline can be made to walk the carpet without feeling embarrassed. "Pop" ilies will be familiar, too.

The Bachelors tried to get Mathewson or Cy Young, but notice was too short. However, they say they will win anyway.

The game starts at 6.30 p.m. and

The first game of the baseball league will be held on Thursday after the bridge opening. The Citys will play the C.P.R. Both teams are in fair shape and should put up a good game.

Artie O'Dea has been laid up with tonsilitis at a hospital in Burlington but is now out at work again.

On Monday evening, May 4 a number of football enthusiasts met in the Socialists' rooms over the Assiniboia Music Store, to discuss the formation of a football club. It was decided to organize a club known as the Medicine Hat Argonauts. The following officers were elected:

Hon. Pres.—Hon. W. T. Finlay.
Hon. Vice-pres.—Mayor Cousins.
Pres.—Ald. H. A. Baker.
Vice-pres.—Harry Stevenson.
Sec.-treas.—D. G. Perrott.
Capt.—J. Pettit.
Exec. com.—J. McColl, J. Reams., W. Williams, R. Nichols.

Totman is signed with the Springfield, Ohio, team.

A meeting of the Park Tennis club, the Medicine Hat Tennis club and any others who are interested, will be held in the court room of the City Hall at 8 o'clock on Wednesday evening.

LOOKS GOOD.

WINNIPEG, May 6.—Winnipeg bank managers report that eighty per cent. of the paper due on May 4, which is one of the big settling days in western Canada was promptly met. The promise of a good crop and optimistic feeling has loosened up a good bit of money that was hoarded and confidence is returning daily. The percentage of notes paid is larger than at any time since December.

ALBERTA WILL AID.

A Thorough Enquiry Into the Meat Industry; also the Pork Industry.

Edmonton, May 6.—The provincial department of agriculture is now making arrangements for making a thorough enquiry into the pork industry in Alberta. With this end in view a commission of three men is being appointed to conduct the investigation. The commission will gather information with regard to the extent of the pork industry in the province in order that the government may have authentic information as to the advisibility of establishing government pork packing factories in Alberta.

W. T. Finlay, minister of agriculture, stated this morning that the government were also considering the report of the beef commission presented last year with a view to improving conditions prevailing in the beef industry in the province.

THE CITY FATHERS

The adjourned meeting of the council was held on Wednesday evening at eight o'clock. Present: The Mayor, Alds. Baker, McKay, Morrow, Forster, Tweed, Huckvale, Penhale.

A telegram received from the Woods, Gundy Co., was in the following terms: "Would you kindly advise if bonds sold elsewhere, if not what is the lowest price you will accept?"

It having been brought to the attention of an alderman that Brandon had disposed of her bonds for 98.5—$35,000 fifteen year and $25,000 twenty year debentures, a discussion on the price which might be accepted for Medine Hat's issue ensued.

Ald. Penhale—"I don't see why our debentures should not be worth as much as theirs."

After a short discussion it was decided to notify Woods, Gundy that Medicine Hat would sell her bonds at the same price as had been paid to Brandon.

The council then went into committee of the whole to consider hardware tenders. The tenders were not accepted and the question of supplies for gas and water was referred to gas and water committee with power to act. The council then went on to consider estimates for the year. As the reports were not complete this work had to be postponed.

The court of revision for the filing of objections to the sewer assessment was appointed for the first day of June.

The council then adjourned till Monday night.

SEED GRAIN

We have just unloaded at the Elevator one car of choice SEED OATS—White Banner. These oats are government inspected and test 90 per cent germination, and we guarantee them to be the best that can be had this season. Anyone requiring seed oats will do well to leave their orders at the flour mill at an early date, as seed oats are very scarce.

SEED WHEAT.—We have a car-load of Red Fyfe spring wheat perfectly clean.

SPRING RYE—We have been unable to locate any quantity of Spring Rye that we can guarantee for seed west of Winnipeg, and have only a very limited amount on hand.

The Spectacle.

Next to being the star player in the local baseball league, I'd rather be a Dreamer—not the ordinary kind of a dreamer—the fellow who goes to sleep with the bed clothes tied down over him and wakens to find himself out in the back yard on a wintry night wondering who pulled the clothes off him; nor the fellow who wakens up with a yell hugging the bed post under the impression that the ship he was crossing on had foundered and he was the sole survivor with the mast for a life buoy.

Speaking from experience and wide reading there is no fun being a dreamer of that kind, not only for the discomfort it entails but for the conviction it brings that two cups of coffee are your limit and that fried cheese immediately before retiring is an active agent in your belief in the hopefessness of your case with only a little thing like a mast between you and miles of water straight down—down. The number of miles and the horror of the situation varies in direct ratio with the amount of cheese you have eaten.

No! I mean the Dreamer with a capital D—the man who can steal his wife's jewelry and whistle the doxology at the same time; the man who can murder his mother and feel a few feathers added to his wings. That's the kind of Dreamer for mine. If it were not a closed sect—one that is necessarily limited in order to secure the greatest benefits to the greatest few, I'd be an Elder or choir leader or Financial Secretary or Recording Steward (or whatever their chief Mogul is) tomorrow.

Anybody could get credentials and present all the qualifications that would make him a son of the moon, or some other kind of a son without needing a civil service pull or a University examination. We all dream, some more, some less—but all, much Some pass it off as ambition, some as impudence, some as conceit, some as mere eccentricity ("but he's a pretty decent fellow, you know"); and some whose dreams were a little too far ahead of the time and place, were set down as clean looney. It all depends upon the way your dreams fit in with your neighbors whether you are made a Cabinet Minister or hold a steady job in a padded cell. Galileo, Newton—but, oh, pshaw! This isn't that kind of an article.

There was once a young fellow dreamt he could do the back cut off on the flying rings with a double somersault. He had a close shave for permanent dreamland. A farmer dreamt he could throw his grain around without breaking the soil, and reap a sixty bushel crop. Nothing would break the dream shore of incapacity to scatter. A government dreamt the resources of a country were at its disposal for division. It will have a rude awakening. A city dreamt it had a claim on everything man controlled and was figuring on serving an injunction on Providence for giving other cities some advantages. It enjoyed the dream. A newspaper dreamt that large circulation talk took the place of results to the advertiser. It required heroic treatment and a large doctor's bill to waken it by degrees. A city council dreamt it was offered 110 for its debentures. The awakening was followed by complete collapse. A consumer dreamt that the stores were in business solely for his convenience—no bills, no payment. The awakening left him hungry. A man dreamt he could leave his window open in the sandstorm the other night. When he awakened he was reminded that he had also left his mouth open.

All these men are eligible for a thirty-third degree in the Chosen People—the Dreamers. And it isn't probable that they'd be bound over to keep the peace.

FOSTER'S FORECASTS

Washington, D.C., May 9.—My last bulletin gave forecasts of disturbance to cross the continent May 9 to 13; warm wave May 8 to 12; cool wave, May 11 to 15. The next disturbance will reach the Pacific coast about May 12, cross the Pacific slope by the close of May 13; great central valleys, May 14 to 16; the eastern States May 17. The warm wave will cross the Pacific slope about May 12; the great central valleys about May 14; the eastern States May 16. The cool wave will cross the Pacific slope about May 15; the great central valleys, May 17; the eastern States, May 19.

This disturbance will bring the last high temperature wave of the long hot spell of May and the belated low temperatures will take a deep plunge towards the frost line. One of the best known periodical weather events usually occurs all around the earth about May 13 to 15, at which time very cool weather prevails, but if I have calculated right that peculiar weather feature will not show up this year until May 17 to 19.

Following this storm wave of May 14 to 16 will come a long spell of very cool weather not good for growing crops, particularly not good for corn along mid-latitudes of the great central valleys. Temperatures in northern States and Canada will go near the frost line May 18 to 24, and the last half of May will average cooler than the first half. This disturbance will be of more than usual force, and weather features will continue radical from May 14 to 21.

In the Ohio vallays and the southeastern States rainfall will largely increase from May 14 to 20, but dry weather will prevail north of the Red River of the southwest and west of the Ohio valleys. Heavy rains will occur along the western Gulf States and moderate rains in western Canada.

Immediately following May 9 hot dry weather will prevail, and serious drouth will threaten in several western States. Temperatures will average cooler in eastern Canada and northern States than elsewhere.

CHILD'S SEVERE BURNS HEALED BY ZAM-BUK.

The little girl of Mrs. Lewis Best, of Carlisle P.O., recently fell against the stove and burned her forehead very badly. Mr Best says:—"The burn was about the size of a fifty cent piece and was near the bone. It made my little girl's eye swell till it was almost shut, and then she got cold in it. It began to run matter very badly, and I could not stop it, although I bathed it every night and morning. At last I sent for some Zam-Buk which very soon stopped the matteration and very quickly healed the wound. I have never seen a burn heal so quickly, and I am sure Zam-Buk has no equal for curing cuts, or burns, and I shall always keep a box on hand in case of emergency."

Every home needs Zam-Buk. 'All diseases of the skin quickly yields to it. It is also an excellent remedy for piles (blind or bleeding), rheumatism, etc. All druggists and stores 50 cents a box, or post-paid from the Zam-Buk company, Toronto.

NEW ARRIVALS

Manitoba
Saskatchewan and Alberta

Every new family that comes to Western Canada should be users of Royal Crown Soap right from the start.

Ask any of the people you settle near, and they will tell you it is the best soap to use.

It is specially made for the West. The water in this country is very hard. Royal Crown Soap is made from a special formula to suit this hard water.

Don't begin your life in the West by using any other soap, and thus wasting money and getting poor results.

Tests made show that 6 bars of Royal Crown Soap do more work than 8 bars of ordinary soap.

Royal Crown Soap will save you money. It is easier on the clothes. It washes whiter than ordinary soaps.

Don't make the mistake of starting with any but Royal Crown Soap. You will find that your neighbors are using it as they know it is the best soap for use in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Start right away and save your wrappers for premiums. We will send a list of premiums free to any who ask for it.

Royal Crown Soap has been in use almost exclusively for over 20 years in Western Canada.

The Newspaper Correspondent

A few days ago a resident of the city received a letter from Illinois that reveals the sins of the ordinary correspondent and the credulity of the ordinary reader.

My dear sir: (it read)

Did Mr. Norquay recover his child (or any of its remains) that was carried away by the Great Eagle?

This refers to the little girl lost at Gros V entre, and who is alive and well now. The writer of the letter is not to blame, as the report of the child's loss sent out from this city by the correspondent of the Winnipeg Free Press, the Calgary Herald and Albertan, and what other papers are open for copy, contained the astonishing statement that "there are a great many eagles in the district." Naturally the inference was that the community blamed an eagle for the disappearance of the child. As a matter of fact an eagle is truly a "rara avis". People who have lived here for twenty years have never seen an eagle.

It is probable that had the correspondent thought the papers would accept it he would have blamed it on polar bears or sperm whales. Fortunately even the Winnipeg Free Press or the Toronto Mail and Empire or the Globe wouldn't swallow that. It puts one in mind of the report wired all over the country that the Council was seriously thinking of adopting a ludicrous suggestion made by a local man for the raising of funds. In the first place, the correspondent knew he was sending abroad a statement that was false, and in the second place, Medicine Hat came in for such ridicule from financial firms over that proposition that it has probably had some effect on our standing in the matter of debentures.

During the winter of 1906-07, the correspondent for these papers sent abroad reports about the cattle dying on the streets of the city, until every other paper in America was publishing the most sensational stories of the bovine mortality in Medicine Hat. It formed the basis for other yarns, and this city was most seriously harmed by a story that had no more foundation than if it said we were flooded out because we had a slight shower. A dozen other foundationless or misleading items have been scattered broadcast.

It all brings before us what a great amount of injury a careless or thoughtless correspondent can do a city. There is no doubt he can just as easily give large free advertising. The temptation to send sensational news, knowing it will be acceptable to the papers, is too great at times for the correspondent to stop to realize the consequences of such publicity. It made good reading to talk about the eagles, the death of four cattle meant double column headings if properly exaggerated, and the reasons for the mortgage-of-public-utilities publicity were grasped by everyone. It means money in the pocket of the correspondent, but undesirable notoriety for the city.

When a city can blame almost all the wild stories circulated about it upon a correspondent, it's time a censor was appointed. Letters like the above show how these stories are believed.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Now that the sun is getting its summer strength it would be well for lawn and garden-makers to know that watering grass or vegetables in the morning does more harm than good. When the heat of the sun gets its work in on the wet grass, it scalds it. Vegetables it affects in the same way and in addition bakes and cracks the wet earth, making it hard and lifeless. In summer heat water only in the late afternoon or evening, so that the grass can be receiving the good during the cool night hours, and the surface moisture will have disappeared by the time the sun's heat becomes great. A man with experience in lawn-building advises covering freshly planted seed with old sacking which is left there until the grass is nicely sprouted. The sacking retains the moisture and protects the ground from the sun, as well as preventing the washing away of the seed by the hose.

Here, bumble bees and butterflies and a temperature of 88 in the shade! How do you spell "snow", Ontario?

The shareholders of the Western Canneries had time to think between their experimental meeting in March and the official meeting in May. They began to realize that as the directorate is, so is the business, that no concern is going to be a success simply because it has done a lot of advertising in the formation period. The comment of the papers interested, and of unprejudiced outsiders whose sole anxiety is the success of the institution made them see that experience is necessary to run a meat canning factory as it is to successfully manage a store or anything else. Accordingly F. H. Malcolm, who claims experience in the canning business was the one man available as a manager who would be more than a figure head as far as knowledge of canning went. Then, too, with a big chunk of stock to sell, it was wise to add such a name to the directorate as that of the Secretary of State. In a new company it is the fame of the directors that sells the stock.

The outlook for the new company is much brighter and more residents of the city will begin to see a future before the industry. F. H. Malcolm has experience at any rate, and C. A. Flour, his assistant, seems to be a man of some influence, and with breadth of vision, which was evident in a recent affair between the Canneries and The Times. The success of the Canneries is too serious an affair to the city to allow entrance to petty individual considerations.

A wise decision at the recent meeting in Maple Creek was that every director should hold a certain number of shares to serve on future directorates. This will either force some of the present directorate to increase their holdings from a couple of shares, or they will be unable to hold position in future directorates.

It was a great relief to the district that the Mounted Police secured sufficient evidence to send one of the Dreamers down for a couple of years. It is not considered au fait to wish anyone harm, but it was a public necessity to force upon this sect the fact that however bloodthirsty and unthinkable their belief may be they must respect the law of Canada to the letter. From the evidence it was clear that life and property were in the gravest danger in the district in which they lived. They cared neither for God, man nor the devil. They made their own laws and their past record in North Dakota showed what they would do if given any rein. They cared nothing for their oath—in fact not one scruple of ordinary decency, morality or conscience seemed to constrain them. Being bound over to keep the peace restrain them through the common greed for gold, but it was no punishment. A couple of years in jail will keep one of them out of the road where he can dream himself into catalepsy without hurting anyone but himself. It will not convert the others, but it may hold them down. The utter disregard for law and right expressed by this loathsome sect makes one wne wish a special law of special violence could be made to fit their case. Settlers who live near them say they will leave the district, and why should desirable people be driven out to give lunatics the protection of the law?

This holiday business is enough to make a man wonder who has a right to interfere with business by simply putting pen to a proclamation. Arbor day is a school children's day, and as such is observed in the east. For them alone it is a holiday and they spend the time to some practical benefit. In the west the Lieutenant-Governor looks around and sees a space some place in the year and jabs in a holiday. The Governor declares it a public holiday and nobody does any tree-planting. It's simply an off day for no practical use. It is a day missed to the west. The man who plants trees on Arbor Day is an eighth wonder. Then when the Lieut-Gov. gets tired writing some local event is made the excuse for another holiday, until we are laughed at. The banks scare up a holiday on ten minutes' notice and then every other man wonders why he is working. When Medicine Hat gets to the where she feels her size, where factories are a part of our city it is probable that the celebration of local events will be indulged by those whose business is not seriously interfered with. Surely it isn't necessary to close up the business of a city and a province at the orders of a man or men who suffer nothing thereby.

As an instance of the interference holidays mean to everyday life, School exams. come on in June and in May are five holidays—8th, 14th, 20th and 21st, and 25th.

It is possible that the head offices of the banks will stop the holiday freedom of the west, and this will remove one of the incentives to the over frequent leisure which must seriously handicap the west in its fight for commercial supremacy.

The Merry Widow Hat

Yes, cabby, that's my girl inside—
Great Scott! But I am soaking wet;
This rented suit must needs be dried
Before I take it back, you bet.
"Why don't I ride with her?" you say.
No—not because we've had a spat;
She loves me in the same old way,
But wears a merry widow hat.
That's why I asked to ride with you,
I didn't think that it would rain;
Drive faster up the avenue
I'd like to wear this shirt again,
I'll have to have these trousers pressed.
I shiver like a drowning rat;
And just to think that she's my guest,
Who wears that merry widow hat.
The blame thing's twenty inches wide
Across the brim and has two quills
That take up all the room inside,
This cab her hat completely fills.
There was no room in there for me,
She was afraid I'd crush it flat;
And so I sought your company
To save that merry widow hat.
Excuse me, cabby, if I swear,
Just take a look at her, and see
How smug and warm she is in there.
Then take another look at me,
Why, Job would lose his patience, now,
If on this box with you he sat,
With water dripping from his brow,
To save a merry widow hat.
If I don't catch my death of cold,
And lie upon a bed of pain,
It's not my fault—you may behold,
Confound it! Will it always rain?
Next time you come to call for us,
You have the number of her flat—
Please bring along an omnibus,
There should be room for me in that.

—Edgar A. Guest.

Make It Yourself

Tells Our Readers How to Mix Best Rheumatism Cure.

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the readers of a large New York daily paper the following valuable, yet simple and harmless, prescription, which anyone can easily prepare at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists here will mix the prescription for our readers, if asked to.

And the creepers were pushed aside by one who knew the method of their growth. A silver glory of moonlight fell on the veranda floor, and the man of whom she was thinking stood before her.

"You!" she exclaimed.

"Yes."

She rose, and they shook hands. They stood looking at each other for a few moments, and a thousand things that had never been said seemed to be understood between them.

"Why have you come?" she asked abruptly.

"To tell you a story."

She looked up with a sort of half smile, as if she suspected some pleasantry of which she had not yet detected the drift.

"A long story," he explained, "which has not even the merit of being amusing. Please sit down again."

She obeyed him.

The curtain of hanging leaves and flowers had fallen into place again. The shadowed tracery was on her dress and on the floor once more.

He stood in front of her and told her his story, as Sir John had suggested. He threw no romance into it, attempted no extenuation, but related the plain, simple facts of the last few years with the semi-cynical suggestion of humor that was sometimes his. And the cloak of pride that had fallen upon his shoulders made him hide much that was good, while he dragged forward his own shortcomings. She listened in silence. At times there hovered round her lips a smile; it usually came when he represented himself in a bad light, and there was a suggestion of superior wisdom in it as if she knew something of which he was ignorant.

He was never humble. It was not a confession. It was not even an explanation, but only a story; a very lame story indeed, which gained nothing by the telling. And he was not the hero of it.

And all came about as wise old Sir John Meredith had predicted. It is not our business to record what Jocelyn said. Women—the best of them—have some things in their hearts which can only be said once to one person. Men cannot write them down; pictures cannot print them.

The lame story was told to the end, and at the end it was accepted. When Sir John's name was mentioned—when the interview in the library of the great London house was briefly touched upon—Jack saw the flutter of a small lace pocket handkerchief, and at no other time. The slate was wiped clean, and it almost seemed that Jocelyn preferred it thus with the scratches upon it where the writing had been.

Maurice Gordon did not come back in an hour. It was nearly 10 o'clock before they heard his footstep on the gravel. By that time Jocelyn had heard the whole story. She had asked one or two questions which somehow cast a different light upon the narrative, and she had listened to the answers with a grave, judicial little smile—the smile of a judge whose verdict was preordained, whose knowledge had nothing to gain from evidence.

Because she loved him she took his story and twisted it and turned it to a shape of her own liking. There items which he had considered important she passed over as trifles; the trifles she magnified into the cornerstones upon which the edifice was built. She set the lame story upon its legs, and it stood upright. She believed what he had never told, and much that he related she chose to discredit—because she loved him. She perceived motives where he assured her there were none; she recognized the force of circumstance where he took the blame to himself—because she loved him. She maintained that the past was good; that he could not have acted differently; that she would not have had it otherwise—because she loved him.

And who shall say that she was wrong?

Jack went out to meet Maurice Gordon when they heard his footsteps, and as they walked back to the house he told him. Gordon was quite honest about it.

"I hoped," he said, "when I ran against you in the woods that that was why you had come back. Nothing could have given me greater happiness. Hang it, I am glad, old chap!"

They sat far into the night arranging their lives. Jack was nervously anxious to get back to England. He could not rid his mind of the picture he had seen as he left his father's presence to go and take his passage to Africa—the picture of an old man sitting in a stiff backed chair before a dying fire. Moreover, he was afraid of Africa. The irritability of Africa had laid its hand upon him almost as soon as he had set his foot upon its torrid strand. He was afraid of the climate for Jocelyn; he was afraid of it for himself. The happiness that comes late must be firmly held to. Nothing must be forgotten to secure it or else it may slip between the fingers at the last moment.

Those who have snatched happiness late in life can tell of a thousand details carefully attended to, a whole existence laid out in preparation for it, of health fostered, small pleasures relinquished, days carefully spent.

Jack Meredith was nervously apprehensive that his happiness might even now slip through his fingers. Truly, climatic influence is a strange and wonderful thing. It was Africa that had done this, and he was conscious of it. He remembered Victor Durnovo's strange outburst on their first meeting a few miles below Msala on the Ogowe river, and the remembrance only made him the more anxious that Jocelyn and he should turn their backs upon the accursed west coast forever.

Before they went to bed that night it was all arranged. Jack Meredith had carried his point. Maurice and Jocelyn were to sail with him for England by the first boat. Jocelyn and he compiled a telegram to be sent off first thing by a native boat to St. Paul de Loanda. It was addressed to Sir John Meredith, London, and signed "Meredith, Loango." The text of it was:

I bring Jocelyn home by first boat.

* * * * * * *

And the last words, like the first, must be of an old man in London. We found him in the midst of a brilliant assembly. We leave him alone. We leave him lying stiffly on his solemn four post bed, with his keen, proud face turned fearlessly toward his Maker. His lips are still. They wear a smile which even in death is slightly cynical. On the table at his bedside lies a submarine telegram from Africa. It is unopened.

We leave him lying stiffly on his solemn four post bed.

THE END.

Witticism in Epitaph.

A writer who has made a study of the early literature of our country says that our ancestors seem to have reserved their witticisms chiefly for tombstones and funerals. Family history and genealogy were often united with an exaggeration of virtues interminglied with personal peculiarities. These with a variety of puns and a frequent play upon words and sounds made an agreeable epitaph two hundred years ago. If from the spirit land these ancestors of ours are permitted to look upon the marble slabs that mark their burial places some of them doubtless are scarcely able to recognize themselves as the original possessors of the many virtues that are ascribed to them, while others must observe that the unblushing truth is conspicuous regardless of literary flourish or posthumous praise.

The same tendency was characteristic of our English forefathers. As far back as the fifteenth century there lived a man in England, John Collier by name, whose avocation was that of a village school master. He also took high rank as a humorist and caricaturist. He died at seventy-seven. Within an hour of his death he composed an epitaph for himself and his wife which suggests the truth of the statement that the ruling passion is strong in death. The epitaph has come down to us through the mazes of 500 years:

"Here lies John and with him Mary,
Cheek by jowl and never vary;
No wonder they so well agree:
John wants not punch and Moll no tea."

The tendency to extreme eulogy in which the most elaborate rhetoric was employed was especially marked in the early days if the epitaph was magistrate or minister. Upon the tombstone of one of the New England Divines were read these words:

"A treasury of benevolence, a storehouse of theological learning, a library of the choicest literature, a living system of Medicine, an embodiment of integrity, a repository of faith, a pattern of Christian sympathy, a garner of all virtues."

A living wit says of this eulogy: "No wonder John Rogers died! Such an accumulation of graces would make an angel of any man."

When another popular minister died, John Mitchell, of Cambridge, this epitaph was composed for his tombstone:

"Here lies the darling of his time,
Mitchell expired in his prime;
Was four years short of forty-seven,
Was found full ripe and plucked for Heaven:
Was full of prudent zeal and love,
Truth, patience, wisdom from above;
New England's stay, next ages' story,
The church's gem, the college glory,
Angels may speak him, oh, not I,
Whose worth's above hyperbole;
But for our loss, wer't in my power,
I'd weep an everlasting shower."

The plain, unvarnished, unpoetical truth sometimes found its place upon the old-time tombstone, complimentary or otherwise to the one for whom it was written. An illustration of this is found in the Mather geneology:

"Under this stone lies Richard Mather,
Who had a son greater than his father,
And eke a grandson greater than either."

A century or more ago it was no uncommon thing for a man to write his own epitaph. A man whose name was Green wrote his as follows:

"Summer and winter Green was he
Most like the noble olive tree.
His master's work he did so ply,
He did but just get time to die."

The great grandfather of a man now living was a singing master. His Christian name was Stephen. When he was a young boy he planted a tree which grew until it became large and old. The boy Stephen had become the grey-haited old man. The sentiment connected with his having planted the tree and grown old with it awakened the idea in his mind to have his coffin made from the tree. Accordingly he had the tree cut down and his coffin made from it under his direction. That being done he composed the epitaph that now marks his burial place, and reads:

"Time and Stephen
Now are even,
Once Stephen beat time,
Now Time beats Stephen."

Here is one from a graveyard near Columbus, Ohio, purporting to have been written by the one buried beneath it, and seeming to carry the spirit of unconcreniality, or, perhaps better, retaliation, to the resurrection.

"Under the earth doth lie,
Back to back, my wife and I.
We are free from toil and strife.
Happier far than we were in life.
When the last trump the air shall fill
If she gets up I'll just lie still."

In an old Indian graveyard in the same State is the attempt at poetical inscription:

"Here lies the father of twenty-one,
All lived to be men and women but some.

But the most unique epitaph struggling for poetical expression that can be found occurs in Maine:

"Beneath this rustic pile of stones
Lie the remains of Mary Jones.
Her name was Brown; it was not Jones,
But Jones is here to rhyme with stones.

Many years ago a young lady died in Vermont and the Historical Gazateer of that state printed an eulogy on her death from which we quote two stanzas:

"Methinks the angels tuned her harp
That she might join their song;
And oh, what joys do fill my heart
To think she'll sing so long.
Come, Savior, come, prepare my heart.
By sanctifying grace,
That I may be prepared to go
And sing eternal bass."

A country graveyard among the mountains of northern Vermont has an inscription upon one of its tombstones which declares that the buried one is

"Confined within these narrow bordass, Awaiting here for further orders."

In a beautiful cemetery in New Hampshire is a double slab. On the left side is the mother's and on the right the father's inscription:

"Mother gone home."
"Father at Rest."

There is no connection between these two statements only what comes to the observer as he looks upon the stones. There was a tendency, however, in the early days to hint at family troubles, as in the following:

Sleep, my dearest in the dust,
Death gives to hope its birth,
You're happy now is what we trust,
You never were on earth."

An epitaph reputed to be found in Northumberland has an accumulation of virtues and faults recorded of Mary Bond, who died July 20, 1768. Among the long list of each are the statements that—

"She sometimes made her husband happy with her good qualities.
But much more frequently miserable with her many failings.
Dispensed plenty to every person in her family,
But would sacrifice their eyes to a farthing candle.
Her worn-out husband survived her four months and two days."

A Kentucky woman had buried seven husbands. From sheer necessity she was compelled to erect one stone to mark the graves of the seven. The epitaph is a figure seven and a hand pointing upward.

In similar style is the record of a stone representing a woman reclining on Abraham's bosom. This would not be marked for aught save a peculiar taste but for the unfortunate remark of her husband who, after appreciatively observing the carved forms finds his sympathies going out to Abraham, while he is quite satisfied with the pictorial fate of his wife.

A Scotch graveyard has this racy epitaph:

"Here lies Maggie Lawson,
Here, or here about;
The place where Maggie Lawson lies
No man can find it out.
The place where Maggie Lawson lies
Nae man on earth can tell,
Until the resurrection day,
When Maggie'll rise herself."

A tombstone at Sterling Castle has inscribed upon it a philosophical sentiment that may have appealed to the Scotch heart and softened the hardness of death's encroachments.

"Large is his expense
That lingers out the day.
He that goes soonest
Has the least to pay."

It was a modern cemetery, filled with fine monuments and beautiful epitaphs, that a little girl after reading some of the inscriptions, asked her mother where the naughty people were buried. It is at least suggestive of good taste when the failings of the dead are not publicly perpetuated or their virtues greatly overdrawn.

Gardening Hints.

Two things are necessary for raising seedlings in the house; fine soil and a good window where there is sunshine at least part of the day.

First make what is known as a "flat," which is nothing more or less than a flat box. Any box four to six inches deep will do. Make several holes in the bottom to allow extra moisture to escape. This can be done with a brace and bit, an auger, or even a large nail tapped gently, tapped and removed until it has punctured the wood.

Buy from the tinsmith ten cents' worth of charcoal. Break this into small pieces, and put a good layer over the bottom of the flat.

Now sieve your soil (and if the weather is still very damp and cold, have some soil brought into the cellar to warm up and dry out some). The ash sieve is as good as anything else; if this leaves the soil too coarse use a colander or kitchen sieve—the soil will not poison either.

If your soil is very full of clay, add a little sharp sand; if too sandy add some rotted leaves or old stable manure.

Fill the flat to within an inch of the top. Then take a board and press the earth down firmly and evenly. Next mark lines three inches apart by pressing the edge of the board into the soil about a quarter of an inch.

Sow your seed in these lines, but not too thickly. Remember this.

Then if sand is handy, fine dry soil will do almost as well.

After the seeds are covered, pat the rows firmly with the hand. This gives the seed a firm—not hard—place in which to start.

Do not have the soil too wet, neither must it be powder dry. Squeeze some in the hand and if it cracks and crumbles when the pressure is withdrawn it is all right.

Water with tepid water with a can with a very fine spray commercially known as a "rose spray." Keep the surface moist, never wet; and under no circumstances allow it to become bone dry.

If the window is too sunny, take some very thin unbleached muslin and stretch across the lower sash while the sun shines in at that window. Two glass push pins in the window frame and two brass rings stitched on either corner of the muslin make a curtain easily put up and removed.

When the plants are well up, take out the crowding plants either with a tiny pair of pincers or the fingers; when they have the third pair of leaves lift each plant and set it in another box of earth which has been prepared just the same as the first.

Use a wooden skewer, stick, or anything handy, and make holes two inches apart in this box. Set a seedling in each hole, press the earth firmly around the roots, water well and keep shaded four days. If the plants crowd before they can be set out of doors, this process should be repeated.

If a little green bug appears, sprinkle the plants with powdered tobacco. If space permits, each seedling can be placed in a paper pot full of soil when removing from the first box. This will give you quicker blossoms, as the roots are not disturbed when setting in the garden.

Pansies, asters, verbenas, early nasturtiums, early morning glories, coboea scandens, and many other flowers can thus be started in the house easily.

THREE RELIABLE FLOWERS.

Marigolds, now-a-days, are superb. They have been "bred" and cultivated till these yellow flowers are of every conceivable tint from almost white through orange to a virtual brown.

They are vigorous and chipper plants, blooming freely and for a long season. Many people do not like the pronounced odor, but they turnish a glorious warm glow, especially when planted in front of rich foliage.

Petunias in the days gone by were not always of real good color and were rather insignificant. Today they are superb. They come in white, pink and purple, single and double, fluted edges or crinkled and scalloped in wonderful shapes. Modern culture has improved them in size and color and made them worthy of the highest esteem, for border plants or bedding purposes.

No flower is daintier than the poppy. Nothing in the blossom world is more ethical and satisfactory. Try a packet of the common seed and another of the wonderful shirley poppies. Mix them, make the bed fine and soft, sift the tiny seed over and sprinkle all with a watering can. They grow quickly into plants that vary in height through tall, short and medium. The leaves are dark green, yellow green and silvery green All are slender and deeply cut and the flowers are huge, four-petaled bright crimson, in great pompons or rosettes of red, white or pink mostly and fluttering upon their long slender stems, they wave with the slightest wind, making a picture of colormotion that is glorious, even though they are in but a tiny patch.

ONLY A Common Cold
BUT IT BECOMES A SERIOUS MATTER IF NEGLECTED. PNEUMONIA, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CATARRH or CONSUMPTION IS THE RESULT.
Get rid of it at once by taking
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup
Obstinate coughs yield to its grateful soothing action, and in the racking, persistent cough, often present in Consumptive cases, it gives prompt and sure relief. In Asthma and Bronchitis it is a successful remedy, rendering breathing easy and natural, enabling the sufferer to enjoy refreshing sleep, and often effecting a permanent cure.
We do not claim that it will cure Consumption in the advanced stages, but if taken in time it will prevent it reaching that stage, and will give the greatest relief to the poor sufferer from this terrible malady.
Be careful when purchasing to see that you get the genuine Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark.
Mr. Wm. O. Jenkins, Spring Lake, Alta., writes: "I had a very bad cold settled on my lungs. I bought two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup but it only required one to cure me. I have never met with any other medicine as good."
Price 25 cts., at all dealers.

Chronic Coughs Cured
Mrs. Joseph Eccles of Dromore, says: "I took 4 or 5 bottles of Psychine, and a cough I had continually for nine months disappeared. It is the best remedy for chronic coughs that I ever used."
Thousands of living witnesses pronounce Psychine the greatest medicine in the world. It is not a patent medicine, but a prescription of a great physician. Put it to the test in any case of throat, lung or stomach trouble or any run down or weak condition. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

Old Timer Leaves

On Sunday Albert Hughes, a resident of this city for nineteen years, left for the Old Country to retire on some property he owns there.

Mr. Hughes left England 24 years ago. For a year he was a druggist in Hong Kong, China, giving up there to take 600 coolies to Australia for a big ship firm. Twenty-two years ago he came to Winnipeg, and joining Dr. Brett, opened a drug store in Banff. Three years later he sold out and opened a drug store in Medicine Hat, selling out later to Messrs Cawker and Souch.

Mr. Hughes bought land at the race track and at Coleridge, and went to ranching on the former land, what is known as the Hughes property. He claims that were he remaining in the city he would rather live there than any place. He thinks Canada the best of all the countries he has visited and will advise his fellow-countrymen to come here.

Mr. Hughes still owns large interests locally, which will be managed in his absence by Mr. Croskill.

IN LABOR CIRCLES

This department is given over to labor interests in Medicine Hat, to use as they see fit—discussions of labor subjects, notes of events in the labor world, and notices of meetings, etc. The editor does not assume the responsibility for the opinions expressed or the news sent in for publication, except in so far as he must eliminate libellous or personal discussions, and place some limit on the space used.]

Montreal, Que., May. 4.—The cotton manufacturing business of Canada is at a standstill. The spinners of the Dominion Textile and Montreal Cotton Company's various mills going on strike against a ten per cent. reduction in the wages scale. The spinners are the mainstay of these mills and their failure to go to work today means that within a few days seven thousand hands will be idle.

Toronto, May 5.—The Grand Trunk conductors and trainmen, after a three weeks' session here, are now prepared to place a request for a new schedule before Mr. Brownlee, general transportation manager The new schedule will not include any great increase of wages, but rather a readjustment of the old prices and conditions. The delegates represent the entire Grand Trunk railway system.

A general change in the working hours of clerks employed in the Calgary C. P. R. offices has been granted, in order to give them a little more time in the evenings. Instead of working from 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. their office hours will be from 8 until 5.

The convention of the Brotherhood of Railway Carmen on the C. P. R. system, which has been held in Winnipeg during the past week, elected the following officials:

Chairman—A. R. Mowatt, McAdam Junction.
Vice.-Chairman—D. M. O'Dwyer, Vancouver.
Ses.-Treas.—A. Chartrand, Montreal.

(Lethbridge Herald.)

A bunch of about 60 Galicians, sectionmen for the C.P.R. in the yards in the city, went on strike on Wednesday. Arrangements were made to have 50 Japs come up from Medicine Hat to take their places. However, the Galicians were satisfied with one holiday and all turned up for duty at 7 o'clock yesterday morning. They asked for a raise of 25 cents per day, but got nothing.

Roadmaster Olson, as a result, wired to have the Japs put off at Woodpecker. A gang of 67 Japs have been working for the company at Purple Springs since April 15.

MONTREAL, May 8.—A general committee representing the C.P.R. mechanics which has been in session here for the last eight or nine days has succeeded in uniting the organizations, which is to be known as the Federation of Railway Employes, taking in some 5,000 men. The principal demands of the federation will be a nine hour day. This has been in operation for some time in the west, but the men in the east have had to work ten hours. This move of the men is expected to counter that of the railway.

(Winnipeg Telegram)

May 8.—Today is the last day in which the chairman of the board of arbitration to settle the dispute between the C. P. R. and the men, can be appointed by thetwo representatives, and so far no appointment has been made. Cames Somerville, the arbitrator selected by the men, arrived in the city over the Great Northern from Chicago this morning, but would not talk to the press.

C. P. Fullerton, the company's representative, is still in Yorkoton and is not expected home until Monday, so it looks as though the government will have to make the selection of a chairman.

Representatives of the men stated this morning that it is likely an extension of the time in which to make a choice would be granted by the department of labor, as the two representatives have not yet had an opportunity to meet together and select a chairman.

In the meantime the men are all working under the old schedule, and there is not exoected to be any change until the decision of the board of conciliation is given.

A Fruit Land Opportunity

One of the best opportunities for investment in British Columbia Fruit lands that has ever been presented to local people is the Central Park Orchard Tract, for the sale of which Wheaton & Company of Calgary, Medicine Hat and Sioux Falls, have opened an office at 388½ Toronto St. Medicine Hat. Mr. E. F. Wheaton is in charge of the local office and in conversation with a Times representative Saturday, Mr. Wheaton stated that the Central Park Tract is the best thing in orchard lands that he has seen. This statement coming from the man who so successfully placed on the market the big Arcadia fruit land tract in Washington, and also big orchard tracts in California and Oregon, should be of interest to people who realize the tremendous opportunities for profit that exist in fruit raising. The success of such an undertaking depends largely on soil and climatic conditions, and Mr. Wheaton states that these are ideal at Central Park. The tract immediately adjoins the city of Trail, lies south of the mountains in a section where there is a maximum of sunshine, and is very fertile. It is right on the bank of the Columbia River, which settles the doubt as to irrigation, rendering it unnecessary, and has direct water and rail transportation to the big markets. There are only 770 acres for sale at prices ranging from $100 to $125 an acre on easy payments and the owners pay the expenses of prospective buyers to the property. Mr. Wheaton states that his firm is rapidly disposing of this land and intending buyers or interested parties should communicate with him without delay An excursion to the property will leave soon.

LIVER COMPLAINT.

The liver is the largest gland in the body; its office is to take from the blood the properties which form bile. When the liver is torpid and inflamed it cannot furnish bile to the bowels, causing them to become bound and costive. The symptoms are a feeling of fulness or weight in the right side, and shooting pains in the same region, pains between the shoulders, yellowness of the skin and eyes, bowels irregular, coated tongue, bad taste in the morning, etc.

MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

are pleasant and easy to take, do not gripe, weaken or sicken, never fail in their effects, and are by far the safest and quickest remedy for all diseases or disorders of the liver.

Price 25 cents, or 5 bottles for $1.00, all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

CONSTIPATION.

Although generally described as a disease, can never exist unless some of the organs are deranged, which is generally found to be the liver. It consists of an inability to regularly evacuate the bowels, and as a regular action of the bowels is absolutely essential to general health, the least irregularity should never be neglected.

MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

have no equal for relieving and curing Constipation, Biliousness, Water Brash, Heartburn, and all Liver Troubles.

Mr. A. B. Bettes, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—For some years past I was troubled with chronic constipation and bilious headaches. I tried nearly everything, but only got temporary relief. A friend induced me to try Laxa-Liver Pills, and they cured me completely.

Price 25 cents per box, or 5 boxes for $1.00, all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price.

"Life in Every Dose"

"I cannot speak too highly of Psychine, for it is the greatest medicine I ever used. I was just about 'all in' when I began the treatment, and in 3 months I was as well as ever. It is a great tonic for weak and run down people. There is new life in every dose."

JAS. STOLIKER.

Ridgetown, Ont., Dec. 19, 1906.

It is a sin not to tell your sick friends about this wonderful prescription. Throat, lung and stomach troubles, and all run down conditions quickly cured by its use. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Ltd., Toronto

Where the Dollars Grow on Trees

Is The Land I Want to Tell You About.

The Central Park Orchard Tract.

On the Columbia River, immediately adjoining the city of Trail, British Columbia, and having two steamboat landings on the property, as well as railroad connection with the world's big markets, is positively the best fruit land opportunity known to-day. It is south of the mountains, in the sunshine country, and is right on the bank of the Columbia River. The land is cleared of timber, and cannot be excelled in fertility. At the present price of $100 to $125 per acre on easy payments, YOU can make 300 to 500 per cent. on your investment in three to five years.

Call on me, or ask me to call on you, and give you an exact description of this property. If you are interested enough to buy if my statements are proven correct, I will take you to the property at my expense, and if I have misrepresented anything in connection with it, I will pay you for your time and trouble. Can anyone make a fairer offer?

An Excursion to the Property will leave Medicine Hat shortly.

Will you go?

Full information cheerfully given to those interested.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Walsh

Mr. James Mitchell received a hurried call to Medicine Hat on Tuesday. The little girl and mother are both doing well.

J. A. Grant shipped 2 cars sheep to his ranich here this week from Winnipeg.

The weather continues insufferably hot. Rain must come soon or there will be no crop and no grass.

Joe Mert, the king of Broaco Busters, is breaking in a bunch of vicious cayuses for Arthur Grant.

Robt. Nesbitt and J. A. Grant put through a horse deal the other day and according to all accounts Bob came out ahead.

Charles Lye is passing around the cigars as a result of another visit of the stork.

The C. P. R. surveyors have been here for a part of the week,completing the work they commenced last year.

The Messrs. Fraser of Detroit, Mich., are spending a holiday in this community. They are holding out with Roy Grant at the latter's headquarters.

And so the Medicine Hat News sounds the praises of the Alberta Government because of the stringency of the License Act and its rigid enforcement. Well, well, well—if some of these arm chair politicians would take a look around they would cut out the "rigid enforcement" part of their song, and we have a license commissioner here,too

Considerable Alberta Government bridge material has been lying in C. P. R. yards for months past. It begins to look as though it were going to be there until next election comes into view. Then won't there be a rush to use this stuff? Our Liberal friends here have the same characteristics as the breed elsewhere—they are great election manipulators.

Miss Seacombe of Medicine Hat is spending a few days with Miss Hughes.

James Strong, Irvine fruit prince was with us on Saturday.

Woolchester

Rev. J. Morrow conducted communion services here last Sunday. The attendance was somewhat smaller than usual.

Mr. Athroll was up here from the south last week and purchased one of Mr. Johnstone's young Clydesdale stallions.

The settlers around Willow Lake are hustlers, and a few newcomers have arrived,—all farmers from N. Dakota.

Blow high; blow low. The winds on the prairie have been fierce these few weeks back and it is hoped, they will blow some rain along.

Mr. Stark is down in California just now where Mrs. Stark was spending the winter. He has been constructing a large irrigation ditch and intends to break a large part of his land around the creek.

B. Lattimer who has been working for Mr. Stark goes down east again very soon.

Mr. H. Clark has been putting in some good work on his quarter since he took it over last spring, and is expecting a good crop this year again.

There is one bachelor who is not a great deal at home just now. A skunk has invaded his shack, and despite all his efforts he cannot get him dislodged. Poor Christ! We sympathise but we are too busy to help.

Little Plume

Mr. Clarke has returned from Moose Jaw where he had gone on a business trip.

Coal, good and plentiful, is being got at the mine here, and business is fairly brisk.

Mr. Cleveland has come up here to stay on Gobbett's place, as W. Boyd has gone up to his own homestead.

•

Some of the settlers here feel they have a grievance, as they had much smaller numbers than the Germans at the last school meeting, where the wily farmers had all their own way.

Mr. G. Millar was here for a day last week at Mr. Shaw's ranch.

Seven Persons

This has been a dull week at Seven Persons; not much going on.

School Inspector J. W. Brown passed through here on his way to Taber last Sunday, visiting the school in this vicinity on his return.

Mr. J. F. Leonard's new engine was unloaded here and taken home under its own steam.

Another carload of ties was left at this place for the new switch track which is not yet complete.

Our new store has not made much progress this week for lack of shingles and flooring, but it is reported there will be a grand dance there next Friday evening.

Hat visitors this week were John Meyers, C. Tonberg, J. W. Butler, R. Apker and J. F. Leonard.

The Misses Pearl and Jean Miller spent part of the week in the Hat.

Sam Carlson is building a fine barn on his homestead.

Divine services were held at the schoolhouse today and will be continued through the week evenings.

G. W. Reed visited this place and took home some fine seed potatoes.

J. W. Babbage's house on his homestead is completed and some mornings looks like a three-storey building.

Newburg

Rose Creek is getting smaller every day. Unless it rains soon it looks as if it will dry up.

The wheat is coming out of the ground pretty fast. Some fields are green, but it is too dry altogether.

Mr. Cole is in this district every week with "Coming King." We wish him a successful season.

What about the hot weather, now? We suppose it will rain after this.

A number of men are working on the southwest quarter of 18-10-3 to get rid of the stink-weed, but they are having a hard time of it.

The Medicine Hat Lumber and Manufacturing Company have recently carried out important extensions and the installation of new machinery, bringing the plant into line with the largest in Eastern Alberta. The principal changes are the erection of a couple of large buildings to provide accommodation for the carload of machinery recently received—a four sided moulder, rip saw, railway cut-off saw, drum sander and shaving fan, 75 horse power steam engine and boiler, etc. Through the sander doors in the rough are passed and turned out in the finished state.

Rosedale

We understand that Mr. Calder has let the contract for 22 miles of fence to Mr. Beecher Ramsay of Windy Valley Farm, late of Boston. Beecher expects to have the fence completed this year. He is a hustler.

Mr. Wm. McCutcheon was a visitor at Pleasant Valley Farm last Sunday. He was not looking for gophers this time.

Who was the young man who was looking up a homestead on Sunday?

Mr. Thos. Walker of Seldom Seen is going some these days. He had two drills working last week and it will take him another week with three drills to finish seeding. Everybody works poor Tommy.

Mr. Doane is out with his family. He has a lame arm.

We understand that Mr. James Armstrong is going to have his blacksmithing done at the Hat in the future. That's right, Jim, don't let them fool you. H

Mr. Ramsay says his time from Bruce ranch to Rosedale was 2 min. 30 seconds fastead of 2 hours and 30 minutes as reported last week. We'll take your word for it, Beecher.

Say Jim, the next time they tow you on the rig come up and get Pa's

When Mr. E. J. Smith, daughter and son, were crossing Coyote Coulee last Sunday the shafts broke. Of course, to keep up the excitement the horse did some sidestepping, etc., and when the dust had cleared it was found that Miss Smith had been thrown out and sprained her wrist, and "Pa" had jumped and broke his pipe. Will you quit smoking, now, Pap?

Sid Smith lost one of his best laying hens last week. Hard luck, Schmidt, but it will lay longer now.

Mr. Colter of Rosedale Farm is on the sick list. It is not expected that he will improve until the invitations are out. Oh, let it be soon.

Can anyone answer this question? How is it that all the young fellows are anxious to work for one man this summer?

Boys Easay on Editors

The following composition was prepared by a school boy who had been instructed by his teacher to write an essay on editors:

"I don't know how the newspapers come to be in the world, and I don't think God does, for he's got nothing to say about them in the Bible. I think the editor is one of the missing links we read about and stayed in the bushes till after the flood, and then came out and wrote the thing up and has been here ever since. I don't think he ever died. I never saw a dead one, and never heard of one getting licked. Our paper is a mighty good one; but the editor goes without clothes all winter and don't wear any socks and pa aint paid any subscription since the paper started. I asked pa if that was why the editor had to suck the juice out of snowballs in the winter and go to bed when he had a shirt washed in summer. About then pa took me out in the woodshed and he licked me awful hard. If the editors make mistakes folks say he ought to be hung; but if a doctor makes any mistakes he buries them and people dassent say nothing because doctors can read or write Latin. When the editor makes mistakes there is lawsuits, and swearing, and a big fuss; but if a doctor makes one, there is a funeral,cut flowers and a perfect silence. A doctor can use a word a yard long without him or anyone knowing what it means, but if the editor uses one he has to spell it. If the doctor goes to see another man's wife he charges for the visit; but if the editor goes he gets a charge of buckshot. When the doctor gets drunk its a case of being overcome with the heat and if he dies it's a case of heart trouble. When an editor gets drunk it's a case of too much booze, and if he dies it's the jimjams. Any college can make a doctor, but an editor has to be born.

Not a Miracle But Medical Science

Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited,
Toronto, Ont.

Gentlemen:—

"Some time ago I began to lose flesh and failed every day until I had to quit work. My physicians and all my friends said I had contracted consumption. I failed from 165 pounds down to 119. I was advised to go to the Rockies or to the coast. I went to both places under heavy expense. I continued to fail, and was advised by the doctors to come home as nothing more could be done for me. Hope seemed to have left me.

"I tried Psychine and since starting its use I have gained from 119 to 141 pounds. I have used $10.00 worth of the medicine. I am a well man and I cannot say too much in praise of Psychine. The strongest recommendation would be weak in view of the fact that I believe it has saved my life. It is without doubt the best remedy for run-down conditions and weak lungs.

"I sincerely hope and trust that you will continue your good work of saving run down people and consumptive from the grave. Wishing you and Psychine continued success, I remain, one of Psychine's best friends."

ALEX. McCABE,

Highland Bulls For Sale.

The undersigned offers for sale one three-year old black, pure bred Highland Bull, and one pure bred native yearling bull. Also a young cow of the same breed in calf to the three-year old bull. All in good condition and good specimens.

Owing to closing of exportation of cattle from Scotland the future supply of this world-renowned breed is cut off from this country thereby enhancing the value of such stock. To any rancher who wishes to introduce this strain into his herd this is his golden opportunity at remarkably reasonable prices. Correspondence solicited, or come early and avoid the rush.

Dance Ends in Free Fight

Seven Persons Has an Excitment

A sensation was caused in Seven Persons last week end, by the unfortunate ending to a dance held in the new general store building.

It appears an element of discord was introduced into the gathering by the presence of Christian Zimmerman, a rancher of the district. Zimmerman's company was not desired, but he insisted on remaining and making himself unpleasant. Accordingly M. Sneller, the contractor for the building, who is at present, technically, the owner, brought the matter to the notice of Constable Chalkley, and requested him to effect the removal of the undesirable intruder.

Sneller and the constable entered the building, and the latter told Zimmerman to withdraw, intending to take him outside and give him a little friendly advice. Zimmerman, it is alleged, refused to comply, and instead, struck Sneller a severe blow with a club and turned on the constable. A profounged tussle ensued, Zimmerman, who is a powerful man, proving a hard nut to crack, but evidently the constable gained the upper hand and laid the big bully out. It was, however, impossible single handed to bring him up to Medicine Hat. The aid of Arnie Olson, a peace officer, was sought, but that gentleman, it is alleged, refused to give any assistance. For this, he will have to appear before Inspector Parker, and it is possible he may get into serious trouble.

Constable Chalkley's only course was to come up to Medicine Hat and lay information against Zimmerman and Olson.

It appears that after the unfortunate incident between Zimmerman and the constable, the whole party became imbued with the pugilistic spirit, and the dance ended in something very closely resembling a free fight.

On Saturday morning Zimmerman came up to the barracks in the city to lay information against a number of persons, whom, he stated, had assaulted him. He walked in innocently enough, and appeared rather surprised to learn from Corporal Jenkyn that a warrant was issued for his arrest for resisting arrest on the previous evening. He had unwittingly saved the police a great amount of trouble.

Zimmerman was bailed out by D. G. White and will appear before a magistrate.

The maximum penalty for resisting arrest is $[illegible] fine.

City Paylag a Big Price for Small Losses

A local fire insurance company is being formed and is meeting with good success. It has been worked out that more than $50,000 a year is paid out in this city in assurance premiums and thanks to Providence and the fire brigade the losses have not averaged more than $5,000 in the past five years for both insured and uninsured property.

Thus $45,000 (and more) has been taken out of circulation in the city and the idea is to keep the premiums here as well as to net a fine profit for the shareholders. The rate too, can be lowered if it is considered wise.

The capital of the company will be $75,000 of which, 25 per cent. is to be paid up before organization. It is expected that no more will be necessary. As examples of the profits declared last year by insurance companies, six declared dividends of over 40 per cent., and when the San Francisco fire was a great thing for them as the incomes increased so largely afterwards.

Wheaton & Co. are fiscal agents.

The capital stock of $75,000 is being divided into 750 shares at par value of $100 a share. Stock Growers' Association

Important Questions Discussed

Government Officials Present Make Promises

The members of the Stock Growers Association of Western Canada gathered in the court room of the city hall in large numbers on Thursday afternoon, when their annual meeting was held. The members of the provincial government who attended the bridge opening ceremony were present and many matters of moment to stock growers were brought to their notice, legislation for the protection of their interests and those of the farming community was strongly urged. The president, Ald. Huckvale, occupied the chair. The proceedings opened with a resolution calling for the enactment of a law to compel vendors of beef to have examined the hides of animals offered for sale, in order that the brands might be inspected. This would put a stop to the peddling of stolen beef at less than the cost of production—an evil very prevalent last winter in some parts of Southern Alberta. The resolution urged, further, that the selling of beef by persons other than butchers should be made illegal. An inspector of hides should be appointed to see that the law was carried into effect.

Hon. W. T. Finlay stated that the matter had been brought to his notice some four years ago. He had looked into the different aspects of the question and found that the greatest objection came from the representatives of farming communities, who took objection to having an inspector. Moreover, they could not have an inspector in every town. The chairman thought the work of inspection might be done either by city or town police or the mounted police. The onus of proof, he opined, should lie with the seller. It was the peddlar whom they wished to get at.

Mr. Clark and Mr. Maclellan spoke further to the question, the latter stating that the same difficulty had been experienced in Montana, where eventually a law was enacted that any man who killed a animal should hang the hide [illegible] days in a place where it might be publicly seen. This even if the beef were for home consumption alone. It was found that the neighbors would look after the rest.

Mr. Lane, of Calgary, thought the farmer was in a worse situation in this regard, than the rancher. He did not see that anyone could object to the proposal made. It was no hardship to anyone to bring the hide with him and clip it off to show the brand; the whole business was only a matter of three minutes or so. Even if a law were made that any man who sold beef should have the hide of the animal sold in his wagon, it would be a decided improvement.

Premier Rutherford said the government were pleased to receive any suggestion as to the manner of dealing with this problem. He believed that the practice advocaten would meet with the approval of most of the members of the legislature. He would suggest that the area be prescribed to which such a law should apply. He confessed that he had been unaware that there was so much cattle stealing in Alberta; little had come to his notice in the central and northern parts of the province. Careful consideration would be given the proposals. He trusted that a copy of the resolution would be forwarded to the government, embodying the chief arguments in its favor.

The next resolution to be discussed was a strong plea for the revival of the wolf bounties. It was proposed that the bounty of $15 for grown wolves and $5 for cubs, should be given. E. S. Mansell and H. M. Hatfield were mover and seconder respectively. Hardly a member of the stock growers' association said the chairman, had resided here for less than twenty to thirty years, and he thought the opinion of such men in the matter should carry considerable weight with the powers that be. The wolf question was as serious a matter to the farmer, the real farmer, who kept stock in addition to growing wheat as for the rancher. The wheat rancher-the man who grew 320 acres of wheat on a half section-was a detriment to the land in the long run and was unworthy of consideration. The Association itself took up the matter of having a bounty some years ago and later the Territorial Government saw the wisdom of assisting in the extermination, finally giving the full bounty. The speaker himself had paid a man $100 for the destruction of fourteen cubs during the past year, and he considered his money well invested. In three years the fourteen would have increased to a hundred—this at a very modest estimate. Taking the annual cost of the wolves' "keep" at $500 per head per year, they would be a burden on the community to the tune of $50,000. The speaker would be pleased to double any bounty the government might give. The coyote also was a source of considerable loss—not however to be compared with that due to the wolf.

The premier thought there was no need for discussion of the matter. He would bring it up before his colleagues and had no doubt legislation would be forthcoming along the lines desired, next session.

Hon. W. T. Finlay introduced to the association a new official, Mr. Stevens, who hoped to be the means

PREMIER RUTHERFORD, HON MR. CUSHING, HON MR. FINLAY PERFORM THE CEREMONY

A GALA DAY FOR MEDICINE HAT—SHOWERS COULD NOT SPOIL IT

AUTO RIDE, BOAT TRIP, BANQUET MAKE FESTIVE DAY—THE CITY'S APPRECIATION OF THE WORK OF THE GOVERNMENT AS SHOWN IN THE GREATEST TRAFFIC BRIDGE IN ALBERTA

A heavy drizzle during the forenoon and a portion of the opening ceremony did not spoil the day set apart for the formal opening of the great traffic bridge across the South Saskatchewan. The great convenience of the bridge, the commendable efforts of the Government the kindly remarks of the Ministers, the general good humor of Medicine Hat citizens overcame any unfavorable weather conditions.

The Government visitors including the Premier, Hon. Mr. Cushing, and John Stocks, deputy minister of public works, arrived in the city on Thursday morning's train, and were met by Mayor Cousins. Almost all morning a drizzle or rain fell, but no arrangements were disturbed. At 10:30 the auto train with the mobiles of Dr Smith, W. B. Marshall W. Rutherford, H. L. Tweed, A. C.

Who Opened the Bridge.

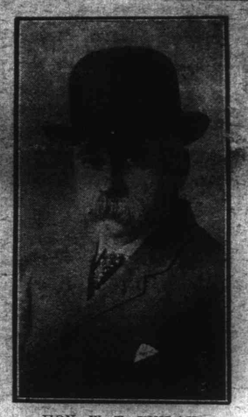
Hawthorn, Dr Boyd, H. C. Yuill, F. S. Pingle and C. S. Pingle filled up with visitors at the city hall and took a run around the city. Ald. McKay's apple trees in full bloom were visited, and afterwards the Canneries and Roseries.

After lunch, the opening ceremony was carried through. Dr. Smith's auto containing the Premier and Hons. Cushing and Finlay ran up to the bridge and the Premier declared the bridge open for traffic, at the same time naming it the Finlay Bridge in honor of our member, who was largely instrumental in securing its construction. The Mayor, Premier,

The Finlay Traffic Bridge.

Messrs. Cushing and Finlay stood in the rain and talked as pleasantly as if we were having our ordinary Sunny Alberta weather. The band played joyously, the crowd cheered, the fire brigade gave an exhibition of quick work, and it was known the rain was doing more good than it felt like.

At 3.30 a crowd of 125 went up the river on the boat. The rain had stopped, the air was warm, the scenery was beautiful, the boat was comfortable, the whole trip thoroughly enjoyable.



The crowning feature of the day's festivities was the banquet in the evening, when 125 men sat down to a choice menu in the Council Chamber. The Council and Board of Trade had prepared a beautiful banquet hall for the diners. Six bouquets of roses and carnations adorned the tables, and the sweet perfume added to the unrestrained enjoyment of the occasion. Leonard's orchestra entertained the banquetters, and were reluctantly allowed to give way to the speakers. That inimitable host, the Mayor, was toastmaster, but was not called upon for lengthy introductions, on account of the length of the toast list. In proposing the toast of "Our Province" he referred to the number of times in the last 20 years we had been promised the bridge by aspiring candidates. He took advantage of the opportunity to mention our need of a court house and experimental farm. He expressed the belief that in the not-very-distant future Medicine Hat would be the centre of the great fruit growing district of the west, and not British Columbia.

In replying Premier Rutherford assured the Mayor of his pleasure that the previous politicians had not deprived him of the pleasure of opening the bridge. If the bridge had been built a dozen years ago it would have been called the Davis Bridge, later the Scott Bridge, and later still the Knowles Bridge, but now it was the Finlay Bridge, and he had a share in its pleasures. He had been struck with the fruit trees, and care shown in beautifying the residences. Turning to government affairs, this bridge was one of 296 built last year, but, of course, this was the largest. The government had recognised the necessity of it, and Mr. Finlay had not allowed them to forget it. Improvements all over the province were following thick and fast. As Minister of Education he complimented Medicine Hat upon its advancement in educational matters. A large number of schools was being opened every year, and in time will be intended to spare nothing. The experimental farm mentioned by the Mayor was a question on the estimates. As to court house was, no doubt, a much needed public building, but there were other towns needing public buildings worse than we did a court house. However, it seemed probable that in the near future Medicine Hat would have its court house, and it would match our other public buildings.

Hon. W. T. Finlay, rising to applause, said it was a happy day for this district when it was included in Alberta at the formation of the provinces. As Minister of Agriculture, his work was more with the farmer, but he had always tried to consider the interests of the rancher as well. He felt certain that this district was bound to be a great fall wheat tract. The Government had undertaken the establishment of creameries, and it had always been a puzzle to him why Medicine Hat had not secured one. It required 400 milk cows in the district but here this might be made no obstacle and with an average price of butter 23½ cents there was a lot of money in it. The Government had come to the conclusion that the chilled process was the proper treatment of meat for shipping, but this was a Dominion affair. A live-stock commissioner, Mr. Stevens, had been appointed to look after the stock interests, and in his hands it would be safe. The matter of the experimental farm was now in the hands of the Agricultural Society. There was $1000 for it in the treasury at Edmonton, and the Dominion Government had offered land The Department of Agriculture had an expert bacteriologist who had experimented with alfalfa, and had discovered something which if added to the seed would make it a sure success in Alberta A package of this would be given free to anyone asking it.

Hon. Mr. Cushing responded to the "Department of Public Works." He expressed his disappointment that Mr. Stocks, his deputy, was not down for a response. He complimented the city upon its appearance and evidences of prosperity. The boat trip had to him been the most pleasant spot in the day. In his department there was no such thing as politics. Their endeavor was to do the work where it was most needed irrespective of party. Regarding the public buildings, he could assure Medicine Hat that just as soon as the money was voted he would get right to work on the court house. Speaking of the telephone purchase, he thought Alberta had done well in it in spite of what some newspapers have to say. Telephones must be a monopoly, and every monopoly should be in the hands of the people. He believed that the telephone should be handled like public roads—provided for the farmers even without consideration of profits. As to a railway policy, while the government had nothing to announce, they are carefully considering the question, and will be prepared when the time comes. The development of the coal mining industry and the stopping of the disputes between miner and owner were parts of the Government's policy. In 25 years he believed Alberta would have a larger population than all Canada now.

"The Stock Interests and Railways" was responded to by Mr. McMullen, who in a witty speech defended the C.P.R. from some charges made against it. Mr. W. Huckvale was given an ovation upon rising. He spoke of the size of the stock industry, and dwelt upon the withdrawal of the wolf bounty and the injustice of the tax on grazing leases, where a rancher had to pay for what he doesn't own and has not even full control of. Mr. Watson, a large cattle man of St. Paul, then spoke. "You people are right after the game all the way," was his tribute to Alberta. He advised encouraging a home market, or we will some day "get ripped up." Mr Andrews of Macleod had to leave before his response, and Mr. Anderson of Orillia spoke. He said he was convinced fall wheat could be raised here equal to any section.

"Learned Professions" brought out Drs. Smyth and Boyd and Messrs. White and Begg in apt remarks.

Mayor Henderson of Lethbridge did honor to "Our Sister Cities," but on account of the lateness of the hour spoke briefly.

"The Press" was ommitted, with the consent of the representatives present, as it was getting late.

Messrs. W. E. Bay and F. S. Pingle spoke for "The Ladies."

Songs were rendered during the evening by Mr. Matthews of Macleod, Mr. F. L. Crawford, and Mr. John T. Hall.

At about 1.30 the banquet came to an end.

of getting something done to improve the live stock business of the province, which had fallen somewhat into the background since the advent of the wheat farmer. The world-famed Alberta hay fed steers sold at 6.25 per cwt. in the Chicago market, as compared with $5.90 for Montana fed animals. But the price of grain fed cattle on the same market was $7.25 and this quality must be striven for by the Alberta stockmen. It was the ambition of the government, however, to make it unnecessary to take the produce to a foreign market, and while the highest price was desired it was considered preferable to keep the trade along the line of the "All-Red route." The difference of transportation along Canadian lines to Canadian markets was to be ascertained. "My especial duty," Mr. Stevens continued "will be to take care of the man who has less than a trainload to ship."

Another resolution introduced asked for the granting of grazing leases for a longer term than at present, and that they should be made irrevokable for the period for which they were originally granted. This was moved by A. DesBrisay.

A clause was added later asking that the power to purchase ten per cent of land at close of lease should be given, area in no case to exceed 10,000 acres or be less than 160. This resolution to be forwarded to the Dominion government.

A letter from J. R. Rutherford, veterinary director general, apologising for his absence, was read. This called attention to the course to be adopted in dealing with the mange and similar pests. Dr. Hargrave, veterinary inspector for Alberta, spoke at some length on the matter. It was, he said, the determination of Dr. Rutherford to stamp out the mange evil in Western Canada. It was up to every stockman to assist by keeping his cattle clean. The years sale of export cattle for the Dominion, realized 11,500,000— 4,500,000 was from west of the Great Lakes, the bulk of this from Alberta.

A letter from Mr. Clark of Plume Creek, who was present at the meeting, called attention to the urgency of looking into the fireguards question, in view of the enormous losses sustained through prairie fire. Railway fireguards required especial attention. Old fire guards should be thoroughly inspected and plowed.

New Buildings

That beautiful aspect from the station platform is going to present a very difference appearance in a few weeks. The high rent for south Railway street buildings, is going to cease to be sufficient incentive to perpetuate shacks and eyesores. The brickwork of the addition to the American Hotel is almost complete. The excavating is almost finished for the new Mitchell block. This will be a two-storey brick, 130 feet in depth. It is said that it will be used for a bowling alley in the lower part An eight foot basement is being dug out.

Another new business building is to be started immediately on Main street. J. K. Drinnon is erecting a one storey amusement theatre beside his warehouse on the west side of the street. This will 60x25 and will be occupied by J. W. McDonald, and will be finished by July 1st.

A couple of other stores are talked of, and before the year is over there promises to be a big change in the skyline and window front effects of the business section.

THE CITY FATHERS

There was a full attendance of aldermen at the regular meeting held last night.

O. W. Kealy tendered his resignation as city solicitor, on the ground that the office of police magistrate might as some time clash with his position with the city. He was willing to finish the business in hand before relinquishing post. Resignation was accepted. Mr. Kealey to be asked to continue his services until such time as a successor could be appointed.

The solicitor wrote to call the attention of the council to an amendment to the Health Act, under which the board must consist of Mayor, Medical Health Officer, Municipal Engineer and three ratepayers—one to be appointed for three years, another for two years, another for 1 year. Their successors would remain in office for three years, a new member thus being appointed each year. This act conflicts with one of the city's bylaws—Referred to Board of Health.

Public works constuction was next dealt with. It was decided that the proportion of cost of sewers construction to be borne by the community should be $37,353, and the proportion to be raised by special frontage tax, $32,647. The total estimated cost was $70,000, to be raised by forty year debentures, the frontage tax to be in accordancewith he decision arrived on a previous occasion, $1 a foot on front streets, with a special rental in case of property facing only on side streets.

During the course of discussion Ald. Penhale took exception to the proposal to levy any portion of the sewer cost on the community at large. He thought the man on the outskirts of the city who was not directly served by a sewer, should not be called upon to bear a proportion of the cost. He was willing to pay for every yard of sewer which went past his house. The Mayor pointed out that if a change were made in accordance with Ald. Penhale's ideas, a new assessment would be required.

The report on grading approach to the city by Macleod trail, estimated cost of a sixteen foot road at $2,470; the cost of a 66 foot road would be $4,446. The committee made no recommendation. Ald. Baker pointed out that there was a tremendous difference between this estimate and the estimate of the gentleman who addressed the council at last meeting. Filed.

Ald. Spencer read recommendation of license and police committee on the question of requested extension of pool room hours, that present hours of closing be adhered to. Ald. Tweed thought the pool-room men were hardly receiving fair treatment. Ald. Spencer said no business in the town was doing better than the pool business during the present hours. The Mayor thought this fact showed the advisability of allowing an extension of time. Ald. Tweed was in favor of the committee recommendation, though so far as he was concerned the pool rooms might keep open all Sunday.

Ald. Penhale explained that one of the strongest reasons for the committees making the recommendation they did was that the new liquor license law would come into effect in July. The pool rooms had claimed that under the old conditions the bars were especially privileged. This would be done away with when the early (ten o'clock) law, came into force.

The question being put resulted in a tie vote. Aye's and Nay's were called for, resulting as follows. Aye's Alds. Baker, Spencer, Morrow, Forster; nay's, Alds. McKay, Tweed, Huckvale, Penhale. The report was thus negatived by a tie vote, which the Mayor emphasized by casting his vote for the Nay's.

Regarding the tenders for formalin which were referred back to committee as were all alike, report recommended that tenders be accepted as they were lower than the regular retail price.

Tenders for drilling of new gas well were opened. Tender of J. A. Grant offered to do the work at 7.50 per foot. M. A. Currie, whose tender was invalid as it was not accompanied by the required cheque for $[illegible], offered to do the work for $7.00 per foot for the first thousand feet, $8 per foot below that. Purnal Bros., who were present in the council chamber, stated that the time given them to prepare a tender was too short. The Mayor thought the matter should be settled as early as possible, so the contractor could get to work. Ald. Baker said the new well should give a flow equal to the other two, if it came up to expectations. Mr. Grant addressed the council, taking exception to certain clauses in the contract, notably the fair wage clause which would compel him to pay union wages and work union hours, though it was, as a matter of fact, necessary for him to work day and night according to another part of the contract, and he paid his men four times as much as the best paid union man in town.

The Mayor thought Grant's tender not according to contract, and the matter was eventually referred to the gas committee.

On behalf of the water commissioners, Ald. Penhale read a report on the trouble at the pumping plant on the 4th inst., when the boilers were allowed to run dry. They recommended that the pump house engineer, responsible, be required to make the damage good. The Mayor thought it would be a serious thing for the city if the offense were overlooked, and if similar neglect should result in a coroner's inquest at any time, the city would come in for some censure for allowing the man to stay. He thought the engineer should be dismissed. Ald. Penhale thought the city would be severely censured in the eventuality hinted at by the mayor, for allowing a man to work under the disadvantageous conditions which prevailed at the pumphouse.

The Mayor thought the expenditure going on in the engineer's department excessive. Certain work, notably the culvert on South Railway Street had been commenced without any member of the council being notified. Expense in connection with the banquet had been gone into without sanction. He emphasized the necessity of complying with the requirements of the council and all orders for an amount greater than $1 must be O K'd by a member of committee concerned. On Ald. Huckvale enquiring whether the heavy expense in the engineer's department was permanent or temporary, the engineer stated that it was likely to go on ,or a couple of months.

Ald. Penhale expressed himself as disapproving of the council's voting $250 for last Thursday's celebrations. Board of Trade had done nothing in the matter except to sell the tickets, which realized abother $250.

Council adjourned till Tuesday evening the 26th inst.

Mr. J. G. Waldock, whose serious illness alarmed his friends last week is holding his own, and there is every reason to hope for his recovery.

Zimmerman of Seven Persons was sent up for trial yesterday. This afternoon a number of other revellers will appear before the magistrate.

As Monday May 25th, is a holiday, all changes of advertisements must be in the Times office by Friday evening.

Mrs J. D. A. Molson desires to express her thanks for the many kindnesses shown her upon the death of her son, Walter Turnbull, and especially to thank Mrs. Ewart and the Presbyterian choir for their thoughtfulness.

A meeting of the Tennis Club will be held in the city hall on Wednesday at 8 p.m.

A meeting of the Gun Club is called for 8 p.m. Thursday, at the American Hotel.

For Victoria Day the Canadian Pacific Railway Company announce a rate of fare and one-third for the round trip. Tickets on sale May 22nd, to May 25th., inclusive, final return limit May 27th. 37-2

The fire boys were called out on Saturday afternoon, to a fire at the planing mill stable.

At a special meeting of the council held on Saturday afternoon, the Mayor and treasurer were authorized to make arrangements for the loan of $35,000 from the Bank of Montreal.

Mr. J. W. Martin spent Sunday in town and Mrs. Martin and Harold returned to Edmonton with him to be absent a week.

Police Court Items.

A couple of holiday revellers got into trouble on Thursday. D. D. Doyle engaged in a little play of his own on South Railway street, and had attracted quite a crowd when the police interfered. He was fined $3 and costs on a drunk and disorderly charge.

J. A. Robertson had reached a further stage of inebriation than his companion in distress, and being afraid to go home in the dark, he seated himself in a gateway on 3rd Avenue, and prepared to make himself comfortable for the night. Incidentally, he gave the lady of the house a severe shock when she opened the door and made the unpleasant discovery. The following morning a fine of $3 and costs was imposed by the stipendiary magistrate.

Yesterday morning Fraser, the man arrested in connection with the C.P.R. car thefts, appeared before the magistrates, and was sent up for trial on a charge of getting four pounds of butter by false pretenses on the 16th of November last. The prisoner, it was alleged, who had previously been in the employ of the company, obtained four pounds of butter, as he stated for car No. 3,-019. It was discovered that no such car came into Medicine Hat.

Prisoner has yet to appear on the other, more recent charges. Among the goods seized by the police in Fraser's room, are twenty-four new shirts, of assorted sizes, ranging from 14 to 16, and eleven pairs of new pants. All are by the same maker and are ticketed.

A local man was charged on the 11th inst., with being drunk while an interdicted person, the offense costing $26.

Just received at the Flour and Feed store, one car load of rolled oats, rye flour, corn meal, in all sizes.

The City vs. C.P.R. baseball game on Thursday afternoon, which opened the season was as interesting as most of our professional games last year. Of course, the batting, base running and fielding were not up to the professional class but these were more than offset by the interest of local players. The boys deserve every praise for the quiet, gentlemanly game played, and if this continues, the crowds will get larger all season

Umpire Gilroy gave excellent satisfaction and his decisions were never seriously disputed.

The star performers were the battery on the C.P.R. team, Ardell and Douglas. The former struck out 14 men and made a two and a three-bagger at bat. Gallup, the city's shortstop showed himself an old player and was as good a player as any on the field. Dever, the city's pitcher shapes up well, his pitching being good and his fielding perfect. He also bats and runs well. Lemieux the C.P.R.'s third base, is a handy player, and with a few risky motions and catches out out, would be a star at the hard corner. Both first basers did their work well. Biette, at short for the C.P.R. is a neat player, who, with a quicker recovery and throw, will catch most of them at first. The other players are comers, but were a little out of shape for the first game. However, not one of them showed poor selection on the part of the different managers.

The game was pretty well won by Ardell for the C.P.R. He allowed only 5 hits, struck out 14 men, 8 hits out of 5 times at bat, and brought in 4 runs. His pitching was very wild at times, walking one and hitting seven men. Illjudged base-running deprived the Cities of many runs. Each catcher had 6 passed balls.

If the sample of ball is a fair one for the beginning of the season, the citizens can feel satisfied that before the season is half over they will see games that will compare favorably with the professional ball of last year. Wait till the batting picks up.

Billy Lush, the star outfielder of the Toronto Eastern League team of seven or eight years ago, and who graduated into major league ball is out of the game for good, as explained in the following despatch:

Detroit, Mich., May 7.—Billy Lush the great sun fielder, will never play baseball again. This spring, his contract with Yale having expired, Lush was sold by Cleveland to Nashville. He reported to his old team mate, Bill Bernhard, a few days ago but found he could not play the game. His eyes, injured last year, when he was struck by a stone, failed him and he had to give up.

The knowledge that he can no longer play baseball has just about broken Lush's heart. Lush was a former outfielder on the Detroit team, coming here when Ed. Barrow was manager, and at one time played with Toronto in the Eastern League. He was considered the best throwing outfielder the game has ever known.

At the Fort Saskatchewan Victoria Day sports this year a new event on the programme is a road race from Edmonton to Fort Saskatchewan, finishing on the track at the latter place, the distance being approximately 19½ miles. By permission of the Canadian Amateur Athletic Union this race will constitute the Olympic Trial race for Alberta, the best man in the race having the privilege of going to Toronto to compete there for the honor of representing Canada in the Olympic races in London, England. A further incentive to runners in the Fort Saskatchewan road race are valuable prizes, consisting of cup, value $100 for winner and gold medals value $35 and $15, for second and third respectively.

Intending competitors are requested to send in their names to Mr. R. G. Fraser, Sec., Fort Saskatchewan Sports Committee.

The Intermediate Lacrosse team will play in the Saskatchewan Lacrosse Association, in a district with Maple Creek and Swift Cuerent.

The following lacrosse players are requested to attend practice every night if possible: L. Bell, B. Ritchie Robertson, Teal, Leslie, Collier, Legh Taylor, Halworth Bros., Peard Bros. Hatcher, Ritchie, Ready, DesBrisy, Porter, Dalton, Finlay Bros., Dunn, Gawley, Reber, Fulton, Flannigan, and all others who wish to take part in our national game.

At a meeting held last Wednesday night, the Medicine Hat Tennis club and the Park Tennis Club amalgamated under the name of the Medicine Hat Tennis Club. The executive is: President, J. K. Drinnan; 1st vice-pres., A. C. Terrill; 2nd vice-pres., Mrs. Huckvale; sec.-treas., A. J. Terrill; exec. com., J. D. Everard, C. H. Sherwood. The courts are to be put in shape immediately. The formal opening day will be on May 25th, when refreshments will be served on Mrs. Krauss' lawn.

Not Insane but Badly Used

Two Ranchers Get In Trouble about a Woman

A case which was kept out of The Times last week for the sake of all interested but which has now become public property, arose over the alleged misconduct of a rancher south of the Hills. One rancher claims that another rancher and his wife were too intimate and threatened the amorous rancher's life as well as everyone else. The second rancher had the first arrested on a charge of insanity, and Constable Meyrick of Medicine Hat was despatched to bring the accused in. With the assistance of Constable Coleridge of Josephburg he succeeded in taking rancher No. 1, only after the latter had dislocated his shoulder in the fight he put up. On Friday morning early, May 8th, the injured man reached the hospital and a summons was issued for rancher No. 2, and the wife of rancher No. 1.

On Saturday the case came up, D. G. White defending. Rancher No. 2 got himself so beautifully tangled under cross examination that he would not sign his evidence and No. 1 was acquitted, No. 2 having ty pay the costs, over $25.

Rancher No. 2, he who loved another with all the harrowing details, had come to town with Mrs. Rancher No. 1, trunk and all, and after the ceremony (of paying over the $25), it is said they skipped to the States on the first train, Rancher No. 1, whose home had been blighted is selling everything and will leave for California. As No. 2 has large ranching interests here he will have to return, or sell out at long range.

Two officers of the Dominion Government, Duncan Anderson of the Live Stock Department and T. M. Morgan of the Annual Health Department were in Medicine Hat yesterday completing arrangements prior to a tour of the province in the interests of the live stock industry. The particular work they will aim at will be the dissemination of knowledge regarding the extermination of mange. Addresses will be given in several districts, a list will be given elsewhere in this issue.

The C.P.R. brotherhoods have issued a statement on the situation on the C.P.R. The concluding sentence is: "While we do not wish to anticipate trouble, we fully realize the possibility of the arbitration board giving an adverse decision and one that we cannot honorably accept, and as our policy will necessarily be determined by the amount of support we can depend on, we will be glad to receive expressions of opinion from you as early as possible."

We are to have shortly one of the greatest treats in the musical line ever heard in our City. Mr. Leanard has secured the Louise Brehany, Co. of four artists to appear in the opera house, May 30, those who were fortunate enough to hear the Kilties Band he brought here, will give him credit for giving us something extra on May 30.

(New York Herald)—An altogether charming, refreshing, debonaire creature was Louise Brehany, the prima donna, she came on the stage with an unaffected grace and ease that won every heart before she sounded a note. She sang sweetly and with good method; and one can understand her every word. The great audience was delighted with her; burst into spontaneous applause and would not be content until she sang a third time. Opera House, May 30.

(Le Figaro, Paris)—The audience accorded a veritable ovation to Mr. Dick, the celebrated American violinist. Opera House, May 30.

Miss Mary Levesque, 313 Stadacina St., Hochelaga, Montreal writes:—"I have found Zam-Buk an excellent remedy for skin eruptions. Up to this Spring I was bothered for almost five years with a red rash, small pimples and sores on my face and on the scalp thro' the hair. Nothing I used would clear this rash from the skin until I began using Zam-Buk. This salve has effectually and I believe permanently taken off those unsightly pimples and sores from both scalp and face. I shall recommend Zam-Buk to all my friends."

A TALK ON ADVERTISING

Advertising and news are first cousins.

The railroad and the stage coach are grandchild and grandfather.

Four out of five advertisers still use stage coach methods. The agency that distributes news has the quickest, cheapest and most effective machinery for distributing advertising. This agency is the newspaper.

The man who is passing your shop window is going somewhere. He is on some other errand. If you want to catch him when he is not in a hurryput your shop window in the newspaper, a few articles at a time. You can make a hundred and fifty thousand people look at this every day, and with much better selling results than if that hundred and fifty thousand walked by your shop one by one.

I know a retail store in one of our large cities, a branch of an English house, which until the autumn of 1906 was managed by an Englishman; austere, conservative, dignified; a man who would have been shocked to see his shop advertised in an American newspaper. He had an exclusive trade, and the shop has an excellent street location. His net profits amounted to about $20,000. The Englishman died. His assistant, an aggressive young American, took charge. He advertised; advertised continually in the best local newspapers. Last year this exclusive shop made a net profit of over $80,000.

This is a complete case the facts of which I personally know. The Englishman depended upon the quality of his goods, and his beautifully crested stationery, and his attractive shop window, and his perpendicular-backed dress-parade clerks; all of which were above criticism. The young American put the whole show into the newspaper, admission free.

Show me ten shops which advertise regularly in a newspaper, and I will show you nine that are making money. The failure of the tenth is probably due to bad management of some sort.

Some people value goods by the price they pay; others by the shop in which they buy; others by the effect the goods have upon their neighbors. It is only the common work-a-day sensible people who value goods by the goods. If you want all four classes as customers it is your business as an advertiser to make the cap fit.—Ex.

THE TIMES

Reaches Them All

The Unemployed in Canada

Causes of the Trouble

(By H.A. Kennedy of London, Eng., who visited Canada in December.)

The novelty of the words, "out of work in Canada," the land of all lands hitherto hungering for workers, has so struck the imagination of the mother country that anything printed on this subject finds ready readers. Yet much that has been printed is beside the mark, much creates a false impression, and much is simply absurd. If people here were familiar with Canadian life, they would know how many grains of salt to add before swallowing the information served up to them. Much of this information comes from men who have been thrown out of work, or who have failed to get the work they wanted, and who, let us hope from ignorance, lay the blame on any shoulders but their own. Some accounts too, are biased by the natural desire of wage-earners in Canada to keep up the level of wages by dissuading other wage-earners from coming out and swelling the labor supply; while other versions are biased by the equally natural desire of employers for a well-stocked labor market in which they can dictate terms instead of being dictated to.

On a recent visit to Canada I made it my business to look into the mid-winter labor situation in the chief industrial centres. I should perhaps say that my equipment for this task consisted of long residence in Canada and knowledge of Canadian ways, a not less intimate acquaintance with the working classes at home, and an inveterate habit of investigation. As a result I venture to lay before the public not a cyclopaedia of details, still less a dogmatic array of influences, but a simple statement of facts from which the public can draw their own conclusions.

The principal questions to be answered are—What are the causes and extent of unemployment in Canada? Who and what are the unemployed? And what is being done about it?

Winter Work in Canada.

It is perhaps well enough known, though we have to be occasionally reminded of elementary facts, that in the course of nature there must be slack as well as busy seasons in many occupations. This is so even in England,—in agriculture and some of the building trades for instance The same is true of Canada; and there, as the climatic seasons are more sharply defined, the industrial seasons are more sharply defined also. The trades most seriously affected are the same there as here—building and agriculture; with a third, railway construction, which is of comparatively small importance in a country already covered with railways, like England, but employs a vast amount of labor in Canada; and a fourth, inland navigation, with the loading and unloading of ships at Maritime ports.

Here, however, a word of caution is necessary. It will probably surprise some readers to learn that building, agriculture, railway construction and wharf labor are not altogether suspended during the Canadian winter. Take agriculture first as the greatest of Canadian industries. The actual cultivation of the land, of course, must stop when the land becomes frozen or covered over with snow; and the farmer who only raises crops has little to do in winter but to keep up his fuel supply, if he burns wood, and to get his machinery and wagons into repair for the next season. On the other hand dairy farming, or the keeping of cattle for the production of milk, butter and cheese is practised in almost all parts of Canada on an enormous and increasing scale; and even those who do not throw themselves wholly into dairying tend to become "mixed" farmers and to increase their holding of horned stock. Horse breeding, too, is an important and growing industry, and even poultry farming, long scorned as trifling and unprofitable is making converts here and there. The animals must have attention all the year round, and the more live stock is kept the more labor is wanted in winter. Besides all this many farmers who can possibly manage the winter work themselves are nevertheless willing to engage a good man for the whole year, paying somewhat less per month for the slack than for the busy season, but of course giving free board and wages all the time.

As for building, the digging of foundations comes to an end, and the erection of walls and roof practically ceases when winter has fairly set in. The contractor, however, aims at getting his building roofed in before the frost comes, so that the carpenters and decorators can go on with the interiors regardless of weather. Work is not absolutely impossible even outside, though it is expensive, difficult and a little risky. I have lately seen work proceeding, with the mercury below zero, on a great office building in Montreal; the vital part of the structure being a steel frame, and its strength depending not on mortar but on rivets.

In railway construction a somewhat similar situation exists. Ordinary earth work ends when winter begins; but the steam shovel can excavate even when the surface of the ground is frozen; rock blasting also continues and many miles of rails have this winter been laid on embankments and in cuttings graded before the earth was frozen or covered with snow. On the Grand Trunk Pacific construction was still being actively carried on in January. The Canadian Pacific, too, was finishing the rock work required for the doubling of its track from Winnipeg to the head of lake navigation at Fort William, and had been laying rails even after snow-fall, to relieve a particular wheat growing section in the west.

Finally, there is the shipping industry. Although navigation on the St. Lawrence and the Great Lakes is suspended for the winter, and the number of ships crossing the Atlantic is much reduced, there is still a great amount of ocean traffic carried on. The steamers which go up the St. Lawrence to Montreal and Quebec in summer go in winter to St. John and Portland, the terminal of the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk railways; and a large proportion of the ship laborers migrate to those ports when St. Lawrence navigation ends.

These allowances having been made it remains true that a large suspension of work in the industries mentioned is a normal condition of the Canadian winter.

THIS WINTER IS EXCEPTIONAL.

The conditions of the present winter, however, are quite abnormal. Let us see why.

The first cause has probably nothing to do with Canada at all. The Dominion, and especially its manufacturing industry, is suffering for the sins of the United States. When the financial crisis occurred in that country and American Banks were shutting their doors, the Canadian banks resolved to take every precaution on their side of the frontier. One of these precautions was a refusal to grant the regular amount of credit to manufacturers. Many of the manufacturers, therefore, having to restrict their operations, either discharged a certain percentage of their employees, or put their works on short time, or at any rate lengthened by a week, a fortnight, or even more, the period during which the works are commonly closed in mid-winter for stock-taking and repairs. The American crisis also hit the Canadian manufacturers in another way. The American manufacturers, unable to get money as usual from their bankers, tried to get it by offering their goods at reduced prices, both in Canada, and in other countries where they competed with Canadian goods.

Another but minor cause of depression in the manufacturing industry is to be found in the agricultural mishaps of last year in the west.

That season was bad almost beyond precedent; both wheat growers and cattle ranchers suffered severely. Taking the west as a whole the high prices of grain may have made up for the shortage in quantity; and the magnificent crops of previous normal years enabled the prudent and well-established farmer to stand this exceptional shortage as any other long-sighted and well established business man can stand an occasional loss. Still, many farmers had not been prudent; instead of laying up reserves they had speculated in land to the limit of their resources and often beyond that limit; and they had increased their general expenditure to a scale which would only have been justified if every year was bound to be a fat year. Moreover, many of the settlers, whether prudent or otherwise, were not well established: they had only made a beginning, in fact, and had had no time to accumulate reserves of capital. Accordingly, when the lean year came the western farmers could not give the orders which eastern manufacturers had been in the habit of receiving from that quarter. The eastern farmers had no such trouble to face; but some of them had a little difficulty of their own. In Ontario and Quebec the dairying industry has grown to vast proportions. It has also been extremely profitable so that many farmers who twenty years ago were just grubbing along now live in a style which then they would have deemed luxurious. A short hay crop, however, affected the pockets last year. "My father taught me," said one of the leading stock raisers of the Dominion whom I visited, "that a short hay crop may be expected once in five years; so I never sell any. The consequence is I don't have to buy." Those who sold their hay, either from lack of foresight or from lack of cash, have now to buy and at high figures. Oats, too, have gone up, and owners of horses and cattle have had to pay such a price for feed that they have felt obliged to cut down purchases in other directions. The builders of carriages and waggons, for instance, find that the farmer who would have been their customer, is holding off, apparently resolved to do with his old buggy or buckboard, and even his old waggon, for another year.

The Extent of the Trouble

It is not easy to estimate, with any hope of exactness, the total number of men out of employment by reduction of work in Canadian factories. The percentage in different industries, and even at different factories in the same industry varies greatly. One company making agricultural machinery, and formerly employing a staff of about 1,800, was only employing 1,100 in September, but has since been able to raise the number to 1,800. In a great many places there has been a reduction of 20 or 25 per cent.; though it is a significant fact that some of these works, even after the reduction are still employing as many men as they did a year ago. Some factories which have discharged nobody are only giving their men, say, 40 hours a week instead of 60. Others, in spite of what has been said, are working not only with full staffs but on full time.

It is not the manufacturing industry of the towns alone that has had to retrench owing to the causes just mentioned. The lumbermen have felt the pinch too. Now, the cutting of timber is one of the countries' most important industries, and it is particularly important from the laboring man's point of view because it becomes busiest just when work in general becomes slackest. Thousands of men employed on farms all summer go to the woods when the agricultural season ends, and spend the winter in the lumber shanties, cutting down the trees and hauling them over the snow to the rivers which are to float them down to the sawmills with the opening of spring. If, therefore, the owners or lessees of timber limits have to retrench, the men they would normally employ are driven to seek work in the towns; and this at a time, when, even in an ordinary year, there is least work to be had.

Then there are always a certain number of men employed on farms for the open season, who drift into towns when the term of their engagement ends. If they have been really good farm workers, earning the wages commonly paid to experienced men, and receiving also—as practically all farm workers do—free board and lodging, they can save at any rate enough to keep them until the next farm season begins. Even a married man in this class if his wife has taken such casual or regular work as her husband's employer and other neighbors usually have for her, and if both are thrifty, can pull through the winter. In such a case the margin is small and a discharged farm worker always, in one sense, may be called one of the unemployed for even if he has saved money he will naturally take the temporary work if he can get it, and therefore he comes into competition with those who are driven to seek work by sheer necessity.

The distinction between those who are out of work and those who are not only unemployed but destitute in consequence must not be forgotten. But this winter the distinction between the two classes is not so well defined as it used to be. This seems chiefly owing to two causes. First of all, the standard of living has risen. This is so in all classes of society, and on both sides of the Atlantic. Men, and women and children, too, are no longer content with the housing, the clothing and the food, which satisfied the last generation. In some details, this is well. In other respects, the change is a change for the worse, in more quarters than one. It seems hardly fair to accuse of extravagance the poor, who, in adding to their little comforts only follow at a distance the example of the rich who are constantly adding luxury to luxury. At any rate it is my business here not to deal out praise or blame but to describe facts. One of these facts is that—just as a man with £1,000 a year often feels straitened though his father with the same income was rich—the wage-earner whose expenses have risen faster even than his income finds that multiplication of comforts often means less comfort, and, in the long run, actual distress. This is one explanation of the fact that an unusual number of those who used to keep themselves in the slack season on the busy season's earnings, with such odd jobs as the winter brought are now found among the applicants for relief. Another explanation probably is the extent to which relief has been organised, and the publicity given it. Many a man who scrapes through the winter by strict economy when there seems no alternative can hardly resist the temptation to join in the scramble when the public purse is thrown open.

LATE IMMIGRATION.

The situation this winter has been complicated by the fact that thousands of old country applicants went out right after the emigration season should have closed. Even in an ordinary year a man takes a considerable risk if he goes to Canada late in the season without a definite situation to go to, or money to keep him till spring; unless he joins one of the special harvesters' excursions and is ready to take advantage of the very cheap return fare when harvest is over, if no permanent work is offered him for the winter. The time to emigrate is in the spring, when any man able and willing to work on a farm can get employment at all events for the whole of the season then opening. The late-comers were particularly numerous last year, and the consequence as might be expected when even the older residents were thrown out of work, were disasterous. It would not be safe to say that most of the unemployed this winter, at any rate in the industrial centres of Ontario, have been late arrivals; according to one estimate, in Toronto about 3,000 out of 8,000 unemployed in mid-January were new-comers; but the new-comers form a large proportion, and probably a majority, of the unemployed who are destitute.

A certain number of the new-comers to be sure, have been able to get work while earlier immigrants have had to go without. There is no doubt that up to last September, when factories were busy and skilled workmen scarce, employers took on men whom otherwise they would not have looked at. The head of one of the greatest industries in the Dominion asserts that while wages increased 30 or 35 per cent. the working efficiency of the working staff decreased 40 per cent. Some men, and especially, I regret to say, men from English towns, proved not only inefficient, and unable or unwilling to improve their capacity, but unsatisfactory and unreliable in other than technical ways. They knew that if they were discharged they could get other work at once; and they took advantage of the commanding position given them by the state of the labor market. Now the tables are turned. There is a surplus instead of a shortage in the labour market. Employers are taking advantage of this fact, and replacing inefficients by men of greater skill, or at any rate of greater adaptability and more anxious to please, whether these are old residents or immigrants of yesterday. The greater number of the new-comers, however, hardly possess that marked superiority which alone would induce an employer to make room for them at a time like this.

RELIEF

Relief is being given to the unemployed by many agencies and in various forms. One of the most striking differences between the Dominion and the old country is that the pauperism which is one of the largest and worst blots on our national life has practically no existence in Canada. The mass of submerged and hopeless humanity which we allow to waste and stagnate in our midst, with the huge and costly apparatus of Poor Law and charitable institutions to palliate its misery—are unknown in that land of hope and opportunity. The exceptional cases of poverty found in every large community, chiefly caused by unsupported old age, or ill-health, are in Canada generally provided for by private generosity or by "national" societies. In Montreal, for instance, with its population of 400,000, there are modest homes maintained by the English, Scottish and Irish residents for the unfortunate of these nationalities; besides institutions, generally connected with the Roman Catholic church, for French-Canadians, a race and a church to which the large majority of the population belong; a few shelters of more general character established in recent years; and a Charity Organization Society. These as a rule find it easy to cope with their self imposed task; but this year it has not been so easy. In the first fortnight in January the C.O.S. had 236 new cases to deal with, as compared with 68 in the same period of last year. The whole number of new cases dealt with in 1907 was 1660, comprising 353 adults and 1,761 children. The society, after investigation, helps the best of these by paying the rent of their lodgings and by providing them with food; others it sends to such of the homes or shelters as may seem most suitable, and even to the worst, under the special circumstances of this winter, it gives a meal. Many of the destitute including some whom the ordinary shelters would not receive, take refuge in the police stations, where at any rate they can keep warm. Most of the people who apply to the C.O.S. are found to be old country emigrants; and some of these have been so demoralized by the ease with which they received charity while at home that they are inclined to grumble because they have to come for what they get instead of having it brought to their doors. There are some of a very different class, however; people who make a little go a long way, even though they know they can get more by asking for it. To preserve this spirit of self-respect, to revive self-respect when it has almost disappeared, and to keep Canada free from the pauperized spirit, and the pauper class, is one of the most anxious tasks that the administrators of Canadian charity have to carry out.

Old Country emigrants as a rule, however, have other destinations than the province of Quebec in which Montreal lies. They go on, to the English-speaking province of Ontario, if not even farther west. The charitable societies of Toronto, the Capital of Ontario, have been doing their utmost to cope with the emergency.

It is very significant that, so far from cutting down their requirements, the Canadian farmers are sending in more applications for men than ever before—a fact to be noted

The Election Act

The Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, minister of Justice, is urging an election act before the House which threatens to tie up the supplies as it did when the Opposition forced an explanation of the expenditure of $47.000 in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The report of the Civic Service commission immediately after that celebrated battle was an efficient answer to the Liberal papers which clamored loudly about the money the Opposition was wasting in thus holding up the business of the House; and when the underlying scheme in the proposed Election Act is understood the Opposition will be just as surely defended.

Mr. Aylesworth's plan is to have the Dominion lists in certain Provinces prepared by the Returning officers with appeal to a county court judge. This, Mr. Aylesworth says, is rendered necessary by the fact that Provincial lists have to be revised in order to suit the Dominion constituences which have different boundaries.

All this sounds very fair and reasonable, and, presented in this manner by the eloquent Minister in his support of his measure it carried quite a bit of weight when reported in the party papers.

But it requires little astuteness to see the intentions of the Act, or at least the fallacy of thinking it would mean other than the preparation of the lists in favor of the Government.

The lists would be prepared from the provincial lists by the Returning officer who is always the strongest party man that can be secured. The workings of this style of preparation are revealed by the notorious thin-red-line scandal, where Leach, a present Government employee, cut off hundreds of Conservatives entitled to vote in Manitoba—a scandal which even the Liberal papers never attempt to explain. And yet with this example of the work of a Government official fresh in their minds the Government expects Manitoba to endure the same thing again.

Then the stipulation of appeal to a county court judge seems to give ample protection. This, however, would mean that, while those who appealed might have their names inserted, the man with a right to vote who had not the time or did not know his name was omitted, or who was careless about his rights, would be left off the list because he didn't vote the right way. No man should have to appeal to a judge to secure the right to vote.

But here is the detail that proves that Aylesworth and the Cabinet were not innocent of trying to work the lists to suit the party. Only Manitoba and British Columbia are affected as provinces. "Unorgagized territory" in Quebec is included as a blind, but, as a matter of fact, there is no unorganized territory in Quebec and when this assertion was made in the House, no one denied it. And why were Manitoba and British Columbia selected? Every province in the Dominion differs in Provincial and Dominion constituences, just as do the two provinces selected. The explanation can only be that with the exception of Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia are the only provinces with Conservative Governments. In Ontario the objections would take more active form than in the West, and the approaching provincial elections in that province would be affected. The Dominion Government would not dare treat Ontario, as they are trying to treat the two western provinces.

Leaving all ulterior motives out of consideration, is it possible anyone would think that, where the preparation of the lists in the hands of the strong party men, there be fairness?

EDITORIAL NOTES

The idea some people have of tax rates is revealed in a dispatch sent out from Guelph, Ont., to the effect that the tax rate for that city is fourteen mills, "probably the lowest in the country." For the average Ontario city, fourteen mills is a low rate, but there are a dozen towns and cities in Canada of over 4,000 with a tax rate lower than Guelph's. The rate of our own city last year—ten mills—is so far below it as to make that rate look high to us. At the time of writing our rate for this year has not been struck.

Bole, the Liberal member for Winnipeg, who refuses to risk exposing himself again at the polls, worked up much excitement on the ministerial benches the other day when he flourished an affidavit of a Galacian which said that a number of Galicians had been induced to sign blank forms of naturalization which were afterwards certified by the commissioner in their absence. It was considered a squelcher for those who opposed the provisions of the new Election Act.

The Manitoba Government has done a number of things of which Conservatives as a body are not proud, but in this case it was soon proven to be a Liberal dodge. The next day the explanation was forthcoming. The original check which had been paid Rudneski, the Galician, by Walton the Liberal organizer, for these affidavits were produced. Rudneski has received $25 for his "time," the check read. It transpires that Rudneski has spent much of his time in jail, that he is now a fugitive from justice, and that his fellow countrymen say he murdered his wife before he left his own country.

And then Bole had held these affidavits for a year without using them. Walton is a member of the Manitoba Legislature and yet he had not dared use them in the local house, which the affidavits affected.

The Liberal party has seen the change in sentiment that has come about through the revelations presented by the Opposition, and have tried to do something similar to counteract them. This is the first, and it has proven a dismal failure.

The poor News! Now if you had kept real nice and quiet no one would have suspected you were the correspondent that has been sending out such weird tales about Medicine Hat and district. If The Times had known you couldn't keep from splattering over when stirred it wouldn't have said anything against the dear correspondents. They have to make money some way, we know, and perhaps we should have remembered this and not felt it was unworthy of Medicine Hat that it should be advertised as a home for eagles, a charnel house for cattle, or an inventor of marvellous financial stunts.

And News, say, please have a talk with the editor of some paper—make a point of meeting one—and ask him what he thinks of the paper that cannot criticise anything appearing in another paper, except by getting after the editor personally. The editor of the Times must officially deny (if you will excuse him) your statement that he has "told almost every man in the city how business should be done." No sir! Allow us one exception. The editor of this paper has never attempted to show the editor of the News "how it should be done." It would obviously be a hopeless task to teach an editor who knows no more about journalism than to allow himself (or whoever is guilty of those striking editorials) to indulge in personalities because a rival paper happens to express an opinion.

Taking the smile off our face as we write, we would permit this reflection—that a man who has done so many things that would be interesting in print, as has the editor of The News, is taking advantage of the good nature of the editor of the Times when he writes personalities about him. Some day he (the latter) may write an answer in the heat of the moment about wonderful events during the mayoralty (and before) of the editor of the News for which they both would be mighty sorry afterwards. So far the danger of thus stooping to the level of the editor of The News is not imminent enough to deprive the editor of The Times of his sense of the ridiculous. Poor old News! Never mind, old boy, your senility and our adolescence make a fitting mixture for any city.

Despite our inclination to enjoy that News commotion, we must sober up again long enough to remind "that great family journal" that they state falsely when they say that the cattle story originated in The Times office, and they know it. But, fudge! What's the use of taking the string of yarns in that News effervescence seriously?

We, and everybody, know you are trying to get back at us on the salary-grab question. Have another go at us, you dear old thing. We have a great reverence for old age, and know how you'd like to spank us. We're only five years old and need our knocks. Naturally, of course, we prefer them from those who have intellect, education and experience, rather than senility alone. And it would make our chastisement so much more effective, grandpa, if you didn't let your impotent rage misdirect your blows. We side step, and laugh.

In the meantime we apologize for having an idea unthought of by the News. Naturally The News gets after us, just as they do publicly and privately after every new-comer who tries to do his little best for the city. Please give us credit for being as much bound up in the city's prosperity as yourself, News!

Poor old News!

If you dare express an opinion unexpressed by The News you have no "sense", you are "trying to run the town", etc. It doesn't matter who you are, you mustn't dare open your mouth until The News waggles its ears. If you have come to Medicine Hat since The News you must let it form all your opinions for you.

The Times challenges The News to show one lone instance outside of a "story-book" where one paper publishes such mean personalities about the editor of another paper as The News allows itself. In not one instance does The Times attack the editor of The News personally for what The News says; you can't show an instance where The News attempts any other method of criticising The Times' remarks except by descending to primeval village journalism. It is most unfortunate that the directors of The News, who are all honorable, fair-fighting gentlemen, cannot restrain their employee from indulging in this style of conduct. The opinions of the papers are open for discussion editorially, but the people are not paying for spitefulness and personalities felt by one editor towards another. The residents of the city can stop it, as they did the salary grab scheme. But it would save trouble to have the directors use the muzzle.

MACHINERY FOR HORSES AND CATTLE.

Messrs. Burns & McLean, of the Alberta Stables, are offering to exchange any of their big stock of Frost & Wood farm machinery, including binders, mowers, rakes, seeders, discs, plows, harrows, also the famous Lorne wagons and the Brantford buggies for good horses and cattle.

Here is a chance for a man to secure the best farm machinery without the outlay of any money. 35 4

Printed by Request.

Recipe is Easily Prepared at Small Cost, and Many Swear By It.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggists.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder Weakness and Urinary Trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

The Scranton (Pa.) Times was first to print this remarkable prescription, in October, of 1906, since when all the leading newspapers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other cities have made many announcements of it to their readers.

The Spectacle.

The wiles of the newsboy are as the sands of the sea.

For general, all-round cleverness and a knowledge of human nature the experienced newsboy shows his heels to everyone. The methods of one little local paper seller have called to my mind some of the dodges they use to dispose of their wares. The local boy has been using a time-worn beguiler. He entrusts his bundle to another boy and then runs around the corner with only one paper, and meeting a man, coaxes him to buy the last paper he has. Many of you have met him. He sells a lot of papers, too.

But the newsy of the big city is a product of different conditions. His life's work at that age is the making of a fraction of a cent out of each paper he sells. Roughly he pays 7 cents a dozen for his papers and sells them at a cent apiece—a profit of 5 cents on a dozen papers. For that cent he is always on the watch, and he can deceive even those accustomed to his way.

Calls to mind a certain newsy in Toronto. One night I was going down Jarvis street when a little fellow leaning against a fence and crying as if his heart was broken attracted my attention. It was with apparent reluctance he said a bigger boy had robbed him of all his papers but four and he hadn't any money to take home. I bought his four papers and let him keep them and his gratitude was my reward. Two days after I was over in the west end and lying on the sod of a vacant lot close to the sidewalk was the same small boy with his arm under his head and a few papers lying beside him. He was weeping bitterly and I had no difficulty in getting the same hard luck story from him. This time I didn't buy the papers. A week afterwards at Hanlan's Point the same boy was having the same weep for the same cause. With righteous indignation I reminded him he was travelling pretty widely with his story, telling him at the same time where I had seen him before. He pulled his hand down and with the sauciest look said: "Well, mister, you're travelling 'bout as wide yourself, aint you? But honest: The first time a big guy had swiped me papers, and you were such an easy mark I worked the game often since, and say, these is all I have left tonight, and I want to catch tde next boat 'cause my little sister's sick. Buy 'em, won't you?" And I did.

The cruel parent-gag is a big favorite among the news vendors. A crying boy will say he hasn't sold any papers for an hour and has to sell ten more or his father will lick the hide off him. Or the kid will spring the hard luck story of a drunken or deceased father and a sickly mother or sister. Or he has to sell some more papers to buy some coal, because his little sister is sick and his mother has to stay home and nurse her, and there's no coal in the house.

•

The smaller the boy the better, and parents often take measures to stunt the growth of the youngster. Then they dress him in the most dilapidated clothing they can get to excite pity. In cold weather the professional newsy always looks frozen. He stands hunched up in a corner, and when he runs he has both hands in his pockets, and a bend in his knees that never comes out. His hands are dirty and cracked and blue One little kid used to stand in a lane near a prominent corner about mid-night Saturday night. As you passed he'd whisper out from the dark: "Mister is there a cop around.' If there wasn't he'd come out and tell you he had to sell some more papers but the police wouldn't let him sell after mid-night Saturday, and he was afraid to go home and so on.

Once I saw a big newsboy and a little fellow fighting most fiercely. The little fellow was bawling, but fighting for all he was worth. Then the big fellow got in an extra heavy blow and the little fellow turned away to protect his face. An elderly gentleman ran across the street and gave the big fellow a slap that sent him around the corner. Then he bought two papers from the little fellow, who immediately went back to the corner and got some more papers from his late apponent, who was waiting for him.

The newsboys have their own corners and resent with tooth and nail the encroachment of another boy. In fact it is an awful breach of newsboy etiquette to sell on another's beat. One newsy, on a good corner, can't sell across the street even. To get on a beat a new boy has to pay the head boy of a section. Below the corner of Yonge and Front Streets, towards the station, in Toronto, no boy can sell papers cheaper than 3 for 5 cents. At the station four big boys have the monopoly, and not another boy dare come within sound of their voices. On the corner of Church and King Streets one big boy, or rather young man, is boss of the job. He keeps his papers on a window sill and when a paper is wanted gives it to a smaller boy to hand to the customer. He never moves from his stand. If a man whistles across the street for a paper he has to wait until a youngster is sent over by the boss.

but he has to stay on his corner. Two Russian Jews, elderly men, started selling in the downtown district, and for a time ignored all rules. They found out their mistake, however, in a week, although they could not say more than "Globe," "Mail," "World," "paper," in English.

There are a dozen other dodges, which it is wisest not to tell, since they are so easily worked and the buyer is so apt to be fooled by them that it would be better not to make them too well known.

DEATH OF MR. NAVIN.

(Moose Jaw Times).

A message was received by Miss Josie Navin yesterday morning informing her of the death of her father in Victoria Saturday. He had been ill for some months past and in February left for California in the hopes of improving his health. He, however, never got any farther than Victoria. While very sick when he first arrived there, he got better since and was able to be up and around. Two weeks ago Saturday he was taken worse, but it was not thought that the endwasso near.

This morning Miss Navin received a letter from her sister, written on Thursday last. In it she said her father was feeling much better and they intended to leave for home last night. Since the writing of the letter, Mr. Navin must have been taken suddenly worse.

The deceased was born in the county of Cork, Ireland, almost 59 years ago and came with his parents to this country when but a child. They settled in Amherstburg, Ont. He was married there thirty-two years ago but being engaged in a contracting business, largely on government work lived in different parts of Ontario, where his contracts called him. Eight years ago he came west with his family, living in Cranbrook for a time. Afterwards he moved to Macleod and then to Moose Jaw three years ago, having the contract there of erecting the post office.

During his residence here Mr. Navin made many friends, and it is with the deepest regret that they learn of his death.

Besides Mrs. Navin, seven children survive. They are: Fred, in Chicago Harry, William and Morris, in Medicine Hat; Mrs. Scott, of Cranbrook; Evangeline and Josie, at home. Mrs. Scott, Harry and Evangeline are with Mrs. Navin at the coast.

Deceased was a member of the Roman Catholic church. He also belonged to the C.M. B. A. and the Knights of Columbus. The remains will arrive in the city Wednesday afternoon and the funeral will likely take place Thursday morning from St. Joseph's church to the Moose Jaw cemetery.

by any who may have been anxious for the future of Canada because there happened to be a light crop in part of the country last year. Those farmers' applications, which I examined in some detail were significant in other respects. Most of them called for men by the middle or end of March; but many wanted help "any time in January," "at once," or "as soon as possible." As a rule the applicant wanted an experienced farm worker, but would take an inexperienced hand. For a hand in the former class as much as $20 to $24 (£4.3.4 to £5.) a month was offered; but $15 (£3.2.6.) was a more usual figure. One farmer offered seven months' work at $18 to $22 (£3.15. to £4.11.8.) a month; another nine months' work at $15 (£3.2.6.). Many a farmer offered a full years' eogagement at $150. or $200. (£31.5. or N41.13.4.). For an inexperienced man, from $9 to $12 (£1.17.6 to £2.10.) was offered, or $100 to $120 (£20.16.8. to £25). In every case free board and lodgings were given, and sometimes a rent-free house and garden for the man's family were thrown in, with fuel for his stove and a promise of extra work for his wife. A number of applications contained such words as "a Scot preferred," or "Scotch or Irish preferred," and occasionally "a Welshman or Scotchman," or "a Protestant preferred." I did not on this occasion catch sight of the ominous words "no English need apply," but one farmer emphatically declared "On no account do I want a Londoner." The opinion is strongly expressed by an observer, himself an Englishman, who has had long experience among the poorer class of immigrants, that rural Englishmen as a rule do much better even in the towns of Canada than men bred in the towns of England. This is hardly surprising, for the English townsman, even in his native place, often finds it hard to compete with the fresh blood pouring in from country districts.

Toronto seems to have attracted the greater number of those who flock into town when work fails them in the country; but other towns have their own unemployed to care for. At Hamilton, for instance, the busy manufacturing city at the west end of Lake Ontario—St. Andrew's, St. George's and other charitable societies have had more to do than usual; and the Relief Officer of the Municipality says that in December he had to deal with 35 or 40 per cent. more than in the last month of the preceding year. The majority were Englishmen who went out in 1907, and who were handicapped by several causes in addition to the untoward circumstances affecting newcomers and old residents alike. For instance, a man without money who brings his family with him, has to buy furniture on the instalment plan giving in the long run perhaps a 100 per cent. more than if he had been able to pay cash, and remaining in debt very likely for a couple of years. The lack of adaptibility shown by too many Englishmen, who have been used to working always in one particular way and rather resent being asked to adopt any different way which has been found suitable in the different circumstances of the new world, has often been pointed out. But even a man who is quite willing to learn the new way takes a little time to do so, and in the meanwhile he finds it impossible to earn what he has heard are the usual wages of his trade, and what his Canadian mates are actually earning. For example a hardware manufacturer finds that in one branch of his business he is paying a good workman about $5 (20s. 10d.) a day piece rate, while some of the newcomers paid at the same piece rate, can at first only earn about $1.50 (6 3) a day. If the newcomer is easily discouraged, this naturally discourages him; though a newcomer of the right sort soon acquires the knack and the quickness that put him on the wage-earning level of his fellow-workers. The right sort of English workman is very good indeed, and his excellence is speedily recognized and rewarded. The wrong sort, well, we know him at home, and we tolerate him as he is not tolerated in Canada. I refer to the man who is not only unadaptable—a defect that may be accompanied by many virtues—or, speaking quite frankly, too fond of his beer and too fond of taking a holiday regardless of the work that is to be done. Such habits as these not only handicap a man by at once increasing his expenditure and decreasing his income, but put him high up on the list of candidates for dismissal if a time comes, as it has come this winter, when the staff has to be cut down.

As Hogarth's extremely industrious and extremely idle apprentices do not represent the great mass of youths in the city, so the English immigrants in Canada are not confined to two classes, the first-rate workman and the slacker. In the ranks of the destitute unemployed are men who have worked regularly and well, and have never taken a quite incapacitating amount of liquor, but have saved nothing and find themselves destitute as soon as they are out of a job. Sometimes this is owing to unthriftiness, sometimes to misfortune, sometimes to both. Typical of this is a young Englishman whom I met at the Municipal Relief office of a town in western Ontario. He had lived there for eighteen months, earning $9 (37-6) a week. The wage was not high for Canada, but was probably all his poor physique was worth; and if his income was low his necessary outgoings were low also. He had been paying $6 (25.-) a week for the full board and lodging of himself and wife. They had no children; they had not had to buy furniture; they lived within an easy walk of his work; and his clothing was of the common sort, which in spite of the accepted belief that "clothing is much dearer in Canada," is almost as cheap there as in England. Yet before he had been out of work for a month he was not only penniless but a fortnight in arrears with his board.

There is still another class of Englishmen who have swollen the ranks of the unemployed, not through their own fault or incapacity, or even through the stringency of the time, but because their form of capacity is permanently at a discount in Canada. These are the harmless but unnecessary clerks. As it is in the Canadian work-shop, so it is to a less extent in the Canadian counting-house—a newcomer may by well certified superiority obtain a desk which many a Canadian youth would like to occupy; and I have known a Canadian bank regularly importing clerks from Scotland. But, taking the class as a whole, the clerk who has gone to Canada, in search of a clerkship has made a great mistake.

Besides the forms of relief already mentioned, there is one to which the unemployed are indebted to the weather, and another which they have provided themselves. Every heavy fall of snow gives temporary work for thousands of men, and not on the railroads only, for the tramway tracks and the sidewalks in towns having to be cleared, and the roads in general levelled into a fit state for sleighing. The other form of relief which thousands of men have chosen, is—going back to the mother country. This has certainly been a relief to Canada. It is a great relief to the Dominion to be relieved of the necessity of providing for so large a number of the unemployed. How far the men themselves have gained, and how far their return has added to the mother country's burden, are other questions. A large proportion have come back to friends willing to keep them for the winter, or with savings enough to keep themselves. Others, it is feared have either swollen the ranks of the unemployed at home, or taken work away from those who had it. If these returned emigrants meant to remain at home the outlook would be serious for them and for the United Kingdom, and, except in the case of inefficients—would not be altogether agreeable to the Canadian people. The probability is, however, that a vast majority, at any rate, of those who have been on farms or are ready for farm work or railway construction if the full revival of manufacturing activity is delayed, have come back with a firm intention of emigrating to Canada again in the spring. Meanwhile to prevent an influx of men, who, by untimely arrival, would add to the number of unemployed, the Government insists that an immigrant seeking admission to Canada before the end of March, without a definite situation waiting for him must have at least $25 (£5.4s.2d.) in his pocket.

It is quite evident to all who have intimate knowledge of Canadian conditions that the trouble here described is but a passing incident in the Dominion's history, the momentary backwash of a rising tide. A great development of Canadian agriculture and manufactures is as certain as anything in the world. While the setback lasts it is disagreeable; but already there are signs that it will not last long. Just as the causes of trouble and the trouble itself have been far less in Canada than in the U. S., so the recovery in Canada is likely to be more rapid. One very healthy sign is the remarkable fact that the number of farmers in the United States who are enquiring for land on the British side of the frontier is larger this year than ever before.

The trouble, too, may have a valuable result. One of the sweet uses of adversity is that it teaches by severe experience lessons that the careless will not learn by any milder means. A famous preacher used to impress upon the world "the exceeding sinfulness of sin." The present adversity has compelled attention to such fundamental but often ignored facts as the rashness of rash speculation, the unthriftiness of unthrift and the exceeding unfitness of the unfit.

SUFFERING WOMEN

who find life a burden, can have health and strength restored by the use of

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.

The present generation of women and girls have more than their share of misery. With some it is nervousness and palpitation, with others weak, dizzy and fainting spells; while with others there is a general collapse of the system. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart and make it beat strong and regular, create new red blood corpuscles, and impart that sense of buoyancy to the spirits that is the result of renewed mental and physical vigor.

Mrs. D. O. Donoghue, Orillia, Ont., writes: "For over a year I was troubled with nervousness and heart trouble. I decided to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial, and after using five boxes I found I was completely cured. I always recommend them to my friends."

Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25, all dealers or The T. Milburn Co., Limited Toronto, Ont.

MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

are mild, sure and safe, and are a perfect regulator of the system.

They gently unlock the secretions, clear away all effete and waste matter from the system, and give tone and vitality to the whole intestinal tract, curing Constipation, Sick Headache, Biliousness, Dyspepsia, Coated Tongue, Foul Breath, Jaundice, Heartburn, and Water Brash. Mrs. R. S. Ogden, Woodstock, N.B., writes: "My husband and myself have used Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a number of years. We think we cannot do without them. They are the only pills we ever take."

Price 25 cents or five bottles for $1.00, at all dealers or direct on receipt of price. The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Psychine Missionaries

A friend of Dr. Slocum Remedies writes: "Send a bottle of Psychine to Mrs. W . . They have a daughter in decline, and I believe it would help her. I have mentioned your remedies to the family, and also cited some of the miraculous cures accomplished inside the last 18 years, of which I have knowledge."

On Barton's Reef

By GEORGE ETHELBERT WALSH

Copyright, 1908, by George E. Walsh

A DEAD animal ain't giner'lly wurth more'n what his pelt will bring in the open market, minus the fees an' commissions of them rascally agents who come down here to swap trade with us an' get the lion's share, an' the jackass', too—me an' the rest of the hunters down here bein' mostly the jackasses—but a live animal is an onsartain commodity that has what Captain Kennelly calls "possibilities." I'm meanin' by that that an old diamond back rattler's skin an' teeth an' rattles ain't wurth much more'n $5 down here, but a live rattler shipped up north in a cage may bring $25, an', ag'in, it may be knocked down for an even hundred.

So Captain Kennelly ain't never been in the killin' bisness. An' I was brung up by Captain Kennelly! "Live an' let live," that's been our motto, an' we've waxed fat—the captain weighs 200, an' I ain't far behind—an' wealthy, not millionaires exactly, but middlin' well to do.

We ain't never regretted bein' kind an' consid'rate to the animals an' birds—never except onct, an' then the captain said 'twas my fault. I ain't disputin' him in that, but there is room for a diff'ence of opinion.

We'd been up the Caloosahatchie one winter tryin' to bag snakes, birds an' other creepin', crawlin' an' flyin' critters when we got wind of a mighty big, sassy mountain lion rendoovoolin' up near Wadin' Landin'. The captain decided at onct that we'd bag the critter. Mountain lions was bringing pretty handsome prices then—the Floridy variety bein' a little underpriced, for they ain't no bigger'n a good size dog.

The captain an' I sailed up the Caloosahatchie an' went campin' on that big fellow's trail, an' before a fortnight we had him clip an' clean aboard the Marthy Ann, tied toe an' nail an' a-roarin' in a box on deck as though he'd like to eat us alive. We was mighty tickled at our prize, an' we figgered on a couple of hundred apiece when we landed him north.

The Marthy Ann warn't much of a sailboat, but she was a lubberin' old craft that did dooty for us for well nigh a dozen years. When we set sail down the Caloosahatchie the captain says:

"Steve, can't you take the Marthy Ann to Charlotte Harbor alone? You can hand the critter over to the railroad people there an' get a receipt for him. I want to get off at Fort Myers an' run up a spell to see Cousin Obadiah. He's real sick, they say."

I warn't goin' to stand in the way of the captain's seein' his sick cousin, so I answered with affermashun an' said I'd run back to Fort Myers in a couple of days an' pick him up. The captain was mighty pleased, but when I landed him at Fort Myers he sort of suspishioned somethin' an' said:

"You think you can manage it alone all right, Steve?"

"I'll land this old patriarch in Charlotte Harbor before night or I'll drown him in the gulf tryin' it," I answered promptly.

I didn't know that I was makin' a pretty sure guess of what I'd be doin' before sundown. I jest hove off from the dock an' turned the Marthy Ann's nose toward the gulf. I ain't much of a deep water sailor, but I knew the coast up to Charlotte Harbor tol'rably well an' I didn't have no misgivin's.

That lion was mighty quiet-like at first, but when we got away from the land an' he began to sniff the salt air of the gulf he sort of got oneasy. He was gettin' out of his element, an' he felt sort of homesick. Mebbe it was seasickness. I dunno which. Anyhow, he roared an' whined an' scratched to beat the band. He jest kept me company with his noise, an' I didn't have no time to get lonesome. Onct or twice he got so scratchy that I took a look at his cage to see if 'twas all right.

Barton's reef is jest ten miles sou'-west of Charlotte Harbor—a nasty little, treach'rous shoal that sticks out of water at low tide an' keeps out of sight at flood. 'Tain't charted, an' sometimes a ship trips up on it an' jest nachurally rips herself to pieces tryin' to get off ag'in.

I don't know what made me forget Barton's reef, for I'd been round it a dozen times, an', come to think of it now, I'd been nigh wrecked on it onct or twice. I ain't got no excuse to make except that lion must have made me forgetful by his everlastin' roarin'.

First thing I knowed a puff of wind keeled the Marthy Ann over, an' before I could ketch her up ag'in we struck somethin'. It was only sand an' mud, but the keel stuck there, an' the next wind slambanged the old lubberin' craft clean over on her side. I wasn't lookin' for the shock an' pitched headforemost through the air an' landed 'bout twenty feet away.

When I went down into the water I expected to find bottom somewhere less than a mile or two, but the sudden way in which I stopped showed me that I was on Barton's reef. I was standin' on my head in 'bout a foot of water. There was some mud, an' that made sticky standin', but when I finally got my head out of it an' the water cleaned out of nose an' mouth the Marthy Ann had drifted away in deep water.

I ran after her, but she was holdin' her own so tantalizin'-like that I couldn't gain an inch. I swam roun' for some minutes, an' then to save my life I turned back to the reef. I could see the bare back of it jest shinin' above the gulf not more'n ten yards away. I ain't much of a swimmer, but I made double quick time to that reef.

I hadn't thought much 'bout that lion all this time, so excited was I over the loss of the Marthy Ann, but now I jest gasped for breath an' hove a sigh of relief. If I'd lost the Marthy Ann, I'd saved the lion. There he was crawlin' out of the water upon the reef as limp an' frightened as a water rat with a dog on his trail. His big cage was floatin' away with the tide, runnin' a close race for shore with the capsized boat.

I saw how things had happened. The Marthy Ann had dumped the cage an' lion on the reef, an' the blow had bust open the slats, an' there you are! The lion was free to go an' come. When I swam to the reef he had full possession, but he was so wet an' frightened that he jest sat there an' shivered an' roared.

"You great, big onery coward," I says, shakin' my fist at him. "You ain't got away yet, an' I'll keep you here until the captain comes for us."

The reef warn't more than fifty feet long and twenty wide, but there was

I pitched headforemost through the air.

room enough for both of us. I crawled up an' tried to dry my clothes. At first the lion noticed nothin', but roared for help. Then he got a sight of me an' slunk to the other end of the reef.

"You keep there," I says, feelin' better by talkin' to him as if he was a human bein', "an' don't you come on my end."

We both felt better after we got dried off a bit. The sun was pretty hot an' it scorched the water up like a hot iron. First thing, then, that big critter began to lick himself, an' then he eyed me out of the corners of his eyes. I didn't partic'lar like the way he did it. It seemed as if he grinned an' then shook his head to show me that he warn't hurt.

Well, I suppose nothin' would have happened if the tide hadn't come up an' made Barton's reef look like a turtle's back. The water jest rose up higher an' higher, an' every minit we had to move closer together.

The lion didn't like gettin' his paws wet an' was for retreatin' toward me, an' I didn't fancy closer quarters with him an' jest stayed as near my edge of the reef as I dared.

Now, as I have remarked, the Floridy mountain lion ain't no kind of a fighter, but when he's cornered I've some respect for him. I saw right away that trouble was a-brewin'. When the reef got too small to hold both of us one or t'other had to git, an' I didn't fancy bein' the one to go a-floatin' adrift on the gulf in that latitude.

"Now, you great big yellow cuss," I said, addressin' his lionship, partly to keep up my courage, "I ain't huntin' for trouble, but if you seek it I'll do my best to make things mighty onpleasant for you on this little sand speck."

Right then a change come over the critter. He seemed to accept the challenge an' began to growl and crouch. I jest faced him an' got ready for his spring. But the tide comin' up from behind lapped a wave over his tail an' made him turn roun' like a shot. He crept an inch closer an' watched for things to develop.

We hadn't more'n five feet between us, an' I was tremblin' most as much as that big brute when somethin' bobbed up near the reef. We both looked at it, an' when I saw it was the lion's old wooden cage floatin' back ag'in I jest made up my mind to jump for it. It was a pretty hefty box an' big enough to carry me.

I edged away toward it, an' when it was as nigh as I thought it would come I waded out in the water an' made a grab for it. By lyin' slantwise on it, with my feet in the water an' my head 'bout three feet above it, I was tol'rably comfortable, an' I addressed myself to the marooned critter ag'in:

"Now you kin have the reef an' all that goes with it. I'm off for the Floridy ceast or a trip to sea. Anything's better'n bein' drowned on that reef or bein' chewed up by a cowardly lion."

I guess my words sort of startled him, for he growled an' whined an' seemed anxious to accompany me. He was sort of sorry at my desertin' him. At any rate he crouched down on the reef, his tail in the water an' his head mighty close to the other edge of the reef, an' then I saw him spring an' shoot through the air just like a skyrocket.

There was a crash an' disturbin' undulashion of the gulf. I saw stars an' sharks an' numerous other onpleasant things. When I got a grip on the floatin' box ag'in I was half drowned, an' that old lion was hangin' for dear life on the other side of it. He was 'bout as frightened as I was. His paws was within two feet of my hands, an' I could feel his breath fannin' my cheeks, but he warn't for fightin' any more.

We hadn't improved our positions much, for that wabbly old craft warn't built for two. Both of us couldn't keep our balance at onct. When the lion was up I was down, an' when I bobbed up above the gulf his head went under. We went seesawin' like this for some time, neither one able to catch his breath.

Then it occurred to that tarnal critter that I was tryin' to duck him, an' he began to hit out at me, snappin' an' snarlin' fit to give one the shakes. After pawin' some of the hide off my hand he got more brave an' tried to climb over on my side. That was his ondoin', for the box tripped clean over an' landed both of us in the water. The box floated away, an' we had to make a swim for it.

I got there first, for I had begun to scent sharks. I dreaded 'em worse'n all the lions in Floridy. I jest yelled an' jumped up on the box an' tried to hold my feet in the air. I kicked an' splashed to frighten the lion away, but he was game. He came on like a paddle wheel, churnin' the water into a terr'ble foam.

He struck the box ag'in with a bang, an' over we went onct more, turnin' a clean somersault in the water. I went down pretty nigh to the bottom of the gulf an' then bumped up agin the box so hard that I had a headache for a week after.

The lion was there ahead of me, an' he took a turn at fightin' me off. I saw he was gettin' on to the game. The box was a good boat for one, but too small for two. One or t'other had to keep off, an' as possession is half the law the big yellow cuss was goin' to hold on to his advantage. I couldn't get a hold of the box without gettin' a swipe that ripped up a yard of human hide.

I saw somethin' in the water a little way ahead that made matters worse. It was a shark comin' to see what all the disturbance was 'bout. He was sailin' along like a revenoo cutter after harbor thieves. I knowed then 'twas a question of shark or lion.

An' I chose the lion! If I could knock him off, the shark might be satisfied with him an' leave me alone for a spell. I jest made for that box an' put up the fight of my life. It was give an' take, an' no quarter for the vanquished.

My, how we spit an' tore an' cuffed each other! It was like a cat an' monkey tied up in a bag. We didn't stand on any rules, but jest fought fit to kill an' never knowed how much we was tearin' each other to pieces.

But I hadn't forgot that shark. I jest kept a weather eye on him an' tried to twist the box roun' so he'd come up under the lion an' not on my side. I guess the battle would have gone hard with both of us an' the shark would had a dinner of lion meat an' human legs if rescoo hadn't come in the nick of time.

I heard a voice call over the water in the captain's drawl. "Hello, Steve! What you tryin' to do? Don't kill that lion. Part of him belongs to me."

I jest twisted roun' mighty scared, for I thought I must be a-dreamin', an' there was Captain Kennelly in the Marthy Ann, sailin' straight down upon us.

"Good Lord, captain!" I says. "I'm nearly tuckered out."

Then I dropped the box an' swam for the boat.

But, if you'll believe it, that old yellow critter was ahead of me. He just

My, how we spit an' tore an' cuffed each other!

leaped from the box to the deck of the Marthy Ann an' was ragin' an' roarin' up an' down it when I crawled aboard.

"Steve, this is bad work," said the captain. "I thought I could trust you better'n that. If I hadn't felt suspishous 'bout you an' come down jest in time to find the Marthy Ann floatin' away on her sides we'd lost our prize an' the boat too."

I didn't have breath for any reply then, but I felt mighty like explodin' an' sayin' somethin' that would hurt the captain's feelin's. But I didn't, an' later I forgot all 'bout it in the excitement of capturin' an' cagin' that old lion ag'in—the cause of all the trouble. He seemed to think he owned the Marthy Ann, an' we had a long tussle to convince him of his error.

Gardening Hints.

SHRUB PESTS.

Roses are the great sufferers from all sorts of pests. Scale will attack stems and twigs. A very weak kerosene emulsion applied now may save them from further attack during the summer. Rose lice, which are tiny bright green insects, will often appear in amazing multitudes almost over night. Tackle them with kerosene emulsion or whale oil soap. Be sure to spray it or otherwise apply it so that it will get on the under side of the leaves. The same treatment must be adapted for mites, thrips and red spiders.

SWEET PEA ENEMIES.

Chrysanthemums are often overrun with tiny coal-black bugs till the stems are absolutely invisible. The best remedy for them is tobacco water. The writer does not use it, however, he has found it better still to put on gardening gloves and snnply squeeze each affected stem and twig gently, covering every inch till all the bugs are crushed. Whale oil soap will answer fairly well, too.

Almost the same kind of bug gets on sweet peas at times. The same treatment will answer. Delphinium often suffers from a root worm. It must be lifted then to kill the worm and reset in clean earth in which a little tobacco powder or soot is mixed.

CRESS OR PEPPERGRASS

Sow thickly, in shallow drills, in moist soil, covering very slightly every two weeks for a succession. It is a hardy perennial, stays green nearly the whole year, and is ready for use before any other salad in the spring.

BEANS.

Sow one quart to one hundred feet of drill or two hundred hills. Warm light, slightly fertilized soil, in a sunny situation, should be used. As soon as all danger of frost is past plant in drills eighteen to thirty inches apart, two inches in depth, and at a distance of three to six inches in a row; the distance between both drills and planting varying according to the habits of the varieties used. If drills be preferred, space them two feet apart one way and three feet the other. Never work among the vines when wet, as it induces rust.

KILLING INSECTS.

Very often what seems the longest way round is the shortest way home in gardening. Picking off the insects by hand is not so tedious a job sometimes as it appears to be, and it is extremely certain if you make sure to have a receptacle with you full of kerosene or some other sure killer to receive them.

CARROTS.

Sow one ounce to a hundred feet of drill. For early crops sow as soon as ground can be worked, in drills one inch deep and one foot apart, thinning four to eight inches according to varieties. Keep your plants well cultivated.

WATERMELONS.

Although northern gardeners do not consider the watermelon a very sure crop, the difficulties that confront them will hardly confront the home gardener who needs to raise only a few in a spare place in the garden.

Almost any kind of soil will suit them, except a heavy, tough clay. A rich warm loam, well supplied with humus, will suit them best.

The seeds need not go in until pretty late in May. The ground must be well worked to make it very fine and soft. The seeds are best planted in hills, and each hill should hake ten feet clear around it. These hills should be almost level with the ground and should have plenty of fine manure dug in them about eight inches deep.

A dozen watermelon seeds are planted in a circle of about a foot in diameter in the middle of each hill. One inch or less is the right depth for the seed.

Sprinkle about half an inch of fresh, light dirt on top and press it all down with a hoe.

As soon as the plants have come up enough to begin running over the ground, thin them down so as to leave only the two or three strongest plants in each hill.

Cultivation should be thorough, deep and constant after the plants are well up. After the rains the soil must be loosened around each plant carefully. When the vines begin to run sturdily the cultivation need not be so deep.

A tramp just touched me for a dime, and told me he hadn't a relative in the world.

Lucky dog! I haven't any but poor relations.

We understand that one of our athletically inclined young ranchers is considering the advisability of entering the Olympic games in London Eng., this year. For the past while back Joe Mort has been very earnestly practising the walking game, heel and toe variety, especially, and in order to exclude the prying eyes of a very inquisitive public and at the same time, prepare a pleasant surprise for his many friends, he has been taking the necessary exercise between one and four a.m. So look out for Joe.

Mrs. Findlay left on Tuesday for Gleichen.

Rosedale

While riding past Pleasant Home farm the other day I noticed that everyone was busy in the garden except Mr. Newton, he was leading Tommy to water. I guess that was the day Tony went dry.

We understand that Mr. Mannie Coltor arrived home at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. He has been on a three week's visit to Maple Grove Farm, and Uncle says he looks better after his trip.

John Alexander has taken the position of housekeeper at Rosedale farm.

Bob Armstrong started breaking last week and I noticed he hit every stone in sight. You must want another trip to the blacksmith's Bob.

Jack Elwood is working for "Cap" Walker.

The birthday party given by Miss Pearl Smith last Friday night was the social event of the season. The 30 couples present started dancing at 9 p.m., and kept it up till daylight. When lunch was being served, Mr. Sid Schmidt entertained the guests with songs and step dances.

Everybody left at 5 o'clock, except Mr. Colter. He stopped for church.

Mr. David Hamilton was a visitor at Mr. Tommy Walker's last Sunday.

We understand that one of our young ladies is going to change her name soon. Congratulations.

Woolchester

Wiss Watson from Medicine Hat, has been staying for some time with Mrs. E. Bell at the Bruce ranch.

The first meeting of the Sabbath school takes place here next Sunday, it is expected there will be fully 20 children, and also a bible class for the older people.

Chris. O. Hagan completed his fencing adding still another to the many fences here.

The range for the Rifle Club has been fixed upon Bull Head flat, the number now being made up. Soon we shall hear lots about crack shots hitting the bulls-eye—of course, some one else's bull.

Mr. Meatin, who sowed early, has already seen green blades sprouting up; the rain has come as a boon and a blessing to all the farmers.

Mr. Smyth has now got a well dug on his place, and some land broken and sowed.

The Hitings have come out from town and are living on their place.

Attendance at school is keeping up very well, despite the showery weather, seventeen is the highest number recorded so far, and other children are yet to come.

Several visitors from the east are expected at the Bruce Ranch this week.

Seven Persons

The last meeting of the Farmers' Store Association, before the opening of the store, was held at Sam Carlson's Saturday afternoon.

John Meyers and W. Strand, who have a contract of government fireguard work, started for their work Tuesday, and expect to be gone two weeks.

Roadmaster Olsen was in town on Friday night.

The dance at the Farmers' Store Friday, was well attended, but the pleasure of the evening was marred by a little unpleasantness on the part of two parties present, which report says, will probably end in their troubles being aired in court.

Mr. H. H. Foster lost two or three of his best horses lately, caused by insufficient help and barbed "wire fence.

The religious meetings held in the school house during the last week closed Friday.

The fine showers of the last week have freshened up things, and started the crops to growing in fine shape.

At the rate the land is being turned over this season, it won't be long before the whole valley will be under cultivation.

Newburg

The rain which came the past week was better than when the Dreamer came out of jail, but we think if we would get more it would be very good.

Some men are building a church on the Cape Horn creek. The name of the church is not given.

The dating stamp here has been changed from Assa. to Alta., which is a good thing and will look better to the editor.

Mounted Police Nots.

James Nesbitt was apprehended at Irvine on Friday evening, for stealing g mirror from W. J. Lemon of Medicine Hat. Mr. Lemon gave the man free shelter during the winter in a shack in the neighborhood of his own house, as the man could not find work. On leaving the city to take up work at Irvine, Nesbitt stole the mirror, just to show his sense of gratitude to his benefactor. He sold it to The Exchange on Main stteet, and it was here that it was discovered by Mr. Lemon.

Nesbitt appeared on Saturday before Inspector Parker and Mr. Milne and was sentenced to one month at Lethbridge.

Preacher's Opinions

Rev. P. K. McRae, Forks Baddeck, C. B.: "I always count it a pleasure to recommend the Dr. Slocum Remedies to my parishioners. I believe there is nothing better for throat and lung troubles or weakness or run-down system. For speaker's sore throat I have found Psychine very beneficial."

Rev. W. H. Stevens, Paisley, Ont.: "Psychine seemed just the stimulant my system needed. I shall add my testimony as to its efficacy at every opportunity."

Rev. R. M. Browne, Amherst Head, N.S., "I have often recommended Psychine since taking it myself, for it is a cure for the troubles you specify."

Rev. Chas. Stirling, Bath, N.B.: "I have used Psychine in my family; the results were marvelous. I have visited people who state that they never used its equal. I strongly recommend it.

Rev. J. S. I. Wilson, Markdale, Ont.: "I have taken two bottles of Psychine and am pleased to say that I am greatly improved in health. I was troubled with my throat, but now I find it about restored to its normal condition. I find my work very much less taxing. I believe Psychine is all claimed for it."

These are earnest preachers of the gospel of Psychine. They know whereof they speak. Psychine cures all throat, lung and stomach troubles. It is a great voice strengthener, acting directly on the vocal, respiratory and digestive organs, thus specially adapted to public speakers. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. (Calgary News.)

Christine Anderson, the young woman, who has been missing since Monday from the Women's Hostel, 20 Fourth avenue west, was found on Thursday wandering about on the Indian Reserve at Morley by Constable Plant of the R.N.W.M.P., who is stationed at Cochrane.

Miss Anderson, who had only been in Calgary a few days, came from Cardston and on Monday last left the Hostel where she was staying, to go to the post office. She did not return, and no trace of her was found until Thursday. She wandered into the house of a Blackfoot Indian woman on the Morley reserve, and her actions being so strange the police were notified. She was in a demented state of mind at the time, and was wearing two wigs one over the other She could give no account as to how she wandered from Calgary to Morley and was sentenced by a justice of the peace at Cochrane to fourteen days in the barracks at Calgary, under the vagrancy act for wandering about. She appears to be perfectly sane now and is serving sentence. Miss Anderson's parents live in the vicinity of Seven Persons near Medicine Hat

Highland Bulls For Sale.

The undersigned offers for sale one three-year old black, pure bred Highland Bull, and one pure bred native yearling bull. Also a young cow of the same breed in calf to the three-year old bull. All in good condition and good specimens.

Owing to closing of exportation of cattle from Scotland the future supply of this world-renowned breed is cut off from this country thereby enhancing the value of such stock. To any rancher who wishes to introduce this strain into his herd this is his golden opportunity at remarkably reasonable prices. Correspondence solicited, or come early and avoid the rush.

The Great Unwashed.

The Hill Climbers Envy the Vale Dwellers.

They're On The Water Wagon Now.

They say the country needed the heavy rain of yesterday afternoon. Perhaps it did. But it filled a more immediate want when it gave the Hill climbers an opportunity to wash their faces.

Something has slipped a cog at the power house—it almost seems as if all the cogs are gone. Since Sunday morning the houses on the hill have been without water except for a very few hours, when, throughsome mistake, and without warning, enough pressure was mustered up at the pumping station to take a scream up. Every one was asleep Rhen it occurred, and the proof is insufficient but an early riser states emphatically that it came on about 3 a.m. Monday and a kind Providence and a providential accident at the pumps kept it on until 7 a.m. Then it went off again. Another rumor is that it was on for an hour at noon on Monday, but as no one expected it, this is only verified by a man who had left his tap turned on, but it was off again before any waterwas caught. On Sunday a watering cart went the rounds and able bodied men, hard working women and growing children were doing after-hour stunts filling tubs, barrels, pails pitchers, kettles, tin cans and basvets—any old thing that would keep wet.

After a hot Sunday without water a few hill climbers went to the power house and found a little engine doing its work honestly, and nothing else. Ald. Penhale, John Rutherford and these couple of citizens sat on the job until 1 a.m. Monday morning and succeeded in getting a gas engine to work on the filtration plant. This supplied the early morning dose. Then something happened at seven a.m. and it was all off.

Some say there is a leak in the suctionpipe; some say no one knows what is the matter. The latter seems the most probable as two days of no water is a little too long for ordinary repairs. Anyway it's two days too long to be without water—and two fire alarms in the middle of it.

It will be thus when the new pumps are installed and one can go down town without carrying one's soap with them, and a photograph for identification purposes.

In the meantime it is only fair that the residents of the city below the hill keep before them the fact that when they use their hoses they are taking that water from the hill. It makes a cliff dweller hot under the collar to come down, unwashed, and find hoses playing recklessly all day long in the lower city. The City Council should tonight pass a by-law regulating hose-use to certain hours, in order to restrain those who think of nobody but themselves Limited hours only should be allowed even when the new pumps are in. The power house should not be forced to work full pressure all the time to accommodate those who find it too much trouble to turn off their hose.

And the Great Unwashed have other things to say, but they're not presentable in style. An oral report is more effective, stop one of them and mention water. You'll know them by the set of their jaws and the facial streaks where the rain of yesterday didn't complete its job.

This morning the water is on again but that does not explain the lack of it for the past few days. There is mismeanagement somewhere and where the fault lies there should be no gloves used. Before this can happen again the ratepayers should demand an explanation, and that explanation should be more than, "I know more about this than you"—the only explanation handed out so far on all the big losses the city has incurred.

It is possible that at any time until the new pumps are working, a portion of the city may be without any water for days at a time?

American Capital for the City

Local Man to Solicit It in the States

It is likely that several new enterprises will shortly be set on foot in this vicinity through the efforts of Mr. E. F. Wheaton who recently located in Medicine Hat to enter the field of company promotion. Now that the Medicine Hat Fire Insurance Company, Limited, is an assured fact. Mr. Wheaton has announced his intention of opening several offices in the larger cities in the States for the purpose of selling local investment securities to the general public in the republic. According to his plan briefly outlined to a representative of the Times, Mr. Wheaton believes that Medicine Hat as well as the entire province of Alberta has a bright future in view, both as commercial and as a manufacturing territory and it is for the purpose of developing the existing opportunities with outside capital that he will shortly leave for a brief trip to the States to arrange for representation there.

Apropos of the idea so frewuently expressed that a financial depression is prevalent in the States, Mr. Wheaton cites an editorial in the Saturday Evening Post of recent date which states that the forty million dollar loan of the Pennsylvania railroad was oversubscribed twentytimes This in the face of a message to Congress from President Roosevelt to the effect that action must be taken to curb the railroad influence. The article concludes with the significant words, "The Roosevelt policies are just what they have always been. The difference is that The American public have money to invest."

Recent correspondence received from the States bears out the foregoing statement, and it is believed that many American investors can be induced to put their money into securities for the development of local enterprises if the same are properly organized and managed. As this will undoubtedly result in increased prosperity for local business circles, The Times urges all who have the welfare of their home city at heart to give Mr. Wheaton the support and encouragement that his undertaking deserves.

The Times' New Serial

The Hound of the Baskervilles.

The new serial commenced in this issue of The Times is one that everyone should read who has not already done so. Sir wonan Doyle, the author of Sherlock Holmes, excels himself in this story. It is the most absorbing novel he has ever written with excitement enough to sustain the interest from issue to issue, and withal well written.

New subscribers during the next week can get a copy of the first issue of the story by asking at the office.

Don't miss "The Hound of the Baskervilles."

A Badly Twisted Case

Seven Persons Continues Its Excitement

On Tuesday Christian Zimmerman, who was committed for trial the day before for resisting arrest laid information against David Schweller, John Schneider and Claude Edwards, for assault. P. C. White prosecuted and Corporal Jenken defended. The plaintiff was ordered to pay the costs of the court. David Schneller then brought action against Zimmerman, who was fined $1 and costs—the whole proceedings putting him out of pocket to the tune of $26.

Arnie Olson, who refused to assist Constable Chalkley in effecting the arrest of Zimmerman, appeared before the magistrate yesterday.

Editors Coming

The National Editorial Association of the United States has completed arrangements for a trip through Western Canada leaving Duluth on Monday, August 24. They will take in Winnipeg first, then Saskatoon, Edmonton, Calgary Banff and other mountain resorts; then back to Medicine Hat by way of the Crow's Nest.

During the latter part of July the Michigan editors are paying Canada a visit and will likely call here, if invited and in August the Minnesota editors are taking the same trip.

As these bodies of men will advertise the cities they visit as nothing else can, they will likely be given a warm reception here.

Struck by Lightning

Severe Thunderstorm Passes over City

The St. Denis House, out by the flour mill, was struck by lightning during yesterday's storm. All the windows in the house were broken, the joists smashed, and a general wreck made of the premises.

Leo. St. Denis, aged 16, wasstruck and remained unconsciousness for ten minutes. Dr. Boyd was called in and attended the half-breed youth, who is now recovering rapidly, though still confined to his bed.

Joe Landry felt a shock on the arm while going from the kitchen to another room, the lightning travelling down the stove pipe.

Chief Meiklejohn received a slight shock in his left hand, which he had placed on a wire fence, while standing out in the rain.

The chimney of R. C. Becker's house was struck and demolished.

BIRTHS.

ALLEN—On the 25th inst., at the general hospital, to Mr. and Mrs. Alex. Allen, a son.

LEVINE—On the 21st, inst., at the General Hospitalt to Mr. and Mrs. Edward Levine of Seven Persons, a son.

C. H. Wagner, the city transfer man, can remove that furniture for you. Phone 245.

If you want that trunk up from the station, phone 245. (C. H. WAGNER), the city transfer man.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Seven Persons

A brother of Mr. McCaskill is with him here to assist him in getting ready for the opening up of the store, which is expected to take place next week.

Ye Gods! What a difference in the statements in the papers, and the statements of some eyewitnesses, who were present at the late unpleasantness at this place, and claim to have seen the whole performance.

Mrs. J. W. Brown spent Thursday night at this place, having driven over to meet Mr. Brown, who expected on the morning train.

This country is getting fenced up so much that parties travelling the prairie get lost and know not where they are, till they get sight of the water tank.

Parties in Wisconsin, former residents of the Hat are making inquiries in regard to the price of lots and prospects for business at this place, having seen it mentioned in The Times that a new town had been planted here, and that lots were for sale.

A. W. Butler is painting the Foster house inside and making it look quite neat and homelike.

John Meyers and W. Strand have returned home having completed their fire guard job.

W. W. Good has just completed fencing one hundred acres for Philip Lousley and expects next week to commence doing some building for him.

A member of the N.W.M.P. passed through here yesterday on patrol duty.

Little Plume

Mrs. Weir has been sick for a few days seemingly a bad cold is the cause. Mr. Weir, Jr., is at present up from Milk River.

Mr. F. Morrison's experimental farm wheat is doing well; it has already attained a few inches.

All the settlers around the creek have got through seeding, although some of them have still some potatoes to plant.

Lambing season now being on, Mr. Shaw is busy with his flock.

Mrs. Geo. Millar went home to Taber last week, after spending a few months at Mr. Shaw's ranch.

Presbyterian church service was held at Mrs. Lindsay's house, Bull Head Lake, last Sunday evening, where there was an attendance of twenty-one.

Four new homeseekers from Dakota have arrived near Bull-Head Lake, and they are busy fixing up their place.

The German settlers are rushing matters to have their school built, and started this summer if possible.

It is understood that the coal mine here has changed hands and Mrs. H. Hamilton and family will be leaving for Creston, B.C., in a short time.

Woolchester

Mrs. and Mr. McKerracher and friends are visitors at the Bruce Ranch just now.

Mr. Sadler from Minnesota is staying with Mr. Windsor.

Talks of ice cream socials are being heard around here. They will meet with a warm reception.

Mr. Smyth is at present in town, his place is in very good shape, and Mrs. Smyth and family are taking well to the prairie.

Mrs. J. Wilson is having a visit from her daughter, Mrs. Wolfe, and family just now; they expect to be here for some time.

Mr. T. Walker is ploughing his place near the creek, he intends to leave it fallow until next spring.

Mr. Stark returned from California last week, bringing Mrs. Stark with him.

Several new forms and chairs have arrived for the school, owing to increased attendance.

Another new settler has arrived, and has taken up a quarter west of the Creek.

The Fenton boys put in some fancy work last week, in erecting a wooden fence around the house.

The farmers are wondering when that rain storm is to come off; the land needs a lot more moisture yet, and they are thinking of wiring Mr. Foster for a right good thunderstorm.

Walsh

We understand another livery stable is to be started in town. Further developments may be looked for later.

M. S. Campbell, Bill Gibb, Fred Mund, J. A. Grant, M. S. Schroder, are a few of our leading citizens who spent a few days in the Hat this week on business.

Arthur Trent, ex-Mayor of Graburn, now one of Edmonton's leading citizens spent a few hours with his friends here on Wednesday. He was on his way to his ranch in Graburn where he expects to spend some time.

License Commissioner Henry Vockeroth was also a Medicine Hat visitor this week on matters pertaining to his department.

Various are the rumors in connection with the hotel license. Someare positive it will be granted, others are equally certaid it will not.

Otherwise matters are quiet in the boozological gardens.

If the C.P.R. can only strike water here in their boring operations, it will be a veritable Godsend to this community.

The Alberta Government—side partner of that aggregation of incompetents at Ottawa—has made no attempt as yet, to have the timber removed from the C.P.R. yards. Mr. Finlay was in Irvine this week and speaking at the banquet made references to what they had done and would do in bridge building. But it looks as if they intend to leave this part of the country alone until the elections.

Mr. Charles Briggs of Graburn paid his friends a short visit on Thursday.

The Presbyterian services seem to have come to a full stop. Mr. Webb of Medicine Hat, who was supplying has not been in attendance for two weeks, carrequently there was nothing doing. The "man with the plate" has evidently discouraged our Presbyterian students.

We must be a horribly wicked bunch around here. Not a drop of rain—everything being burned up—while the rest of the country is revelling in lots of rain and good prospects.

Newburg

The new church which is close to the Cape Horn Creek, is a very nice building—24 feet wide and 36 feet long. All the neighbors are working on it; on Tuesday there were 21 men. Mr. John Young and Walsh got the contract.

Mr. James Robinson the Weed Inspector is looking for some stink weed again this year.

Ross Creek is looking very nice now. It is very green and the saskatoons are white with buds. We wish all the fields would look like the trees.

Miss E. Mort will arrive in Newburg towards the end of this month from Saskatoon, where she has been spending the winter.

Eagle Butte

Another Dempster Method.

The pugilistic powers of the Irishman are proverbial and pugnacity plays no paltry part in the composition of Mr. Wilfred Dempster, (pardon the alliteration). But Mr. George Zatupruski does not seem to share the same views of the gentle art of "scrapping." It appears that one, Stevenson by name entrusted a certain plough to the safe-keeping of "Pruski" and subsequently lent it to Mr. John Dempster, (presumably for the purpose of plowing the snow under last winter.)

Mr. Dempster considered this "his sufficient warrant" (and naturally enough) proceeds to make immediate use of the plow, and in order to do some breaking requests Zatupruski to procuce the remaining parts of the plough for that purpose. This the latter fails to do even upon production of a written order from the owner. In addition to this he confiscated the said order, which was then in the possession of Mr. W. Dempster. The Irish blood then came to boiling point and Mr. Zatpruski was astounded to find himself laid gently but very firmly upon the floor of his house. We entertain serious doubts for the integrity of his skin had it not been for the timely intervention of Mr. Robert Roth whose strength and agility were severely taxed in separating the compatants. A charge of assault was laid against W. Dempster before Jas. Robinson, J.P., of Josephburg, Mr. Dempster, Sr., acting in the capacity of counsel for the defence. Mr. Zatupriski stated his side of the question in eloquent language deriving much encouragement from the frequent interruptions of his better half, Mr. Roth gave his evidence, we understand, in clear, resonanant tones, and Mr. Dempster put up an excellent monologue in defending. As a result of this defendant was let off with $. and costs, the plow to remain in his custody and the order being recognized as the rightful property of the complainant.

Fritz Gulb, Sr., of Eagle Butte was fined $5 and costs by Jas. Robinson, J.P., for shooting duck out of season. He returned to his home a sadder and a wiser man—sadder, at having lost $5, and wiser in having learut that duck shooting is prohibited until after August 22nd.

We have great pleasure in welcoming Mr. Stimson on his return to this locality with his bride.

Mr. G. Golding who left for a temporary visit to Spokane some weeks ago, writes that he has "struck it rich" there. We wish him success and venture to hope that he willsoon return to grace our dances again. In his absence Mr. H. T. Clarke performs the arduous duties of M. C. at Golding estate.

All congratulations are due to Mr. A. B. Hodges and his staff of skilled workmen for the excellent headway they are making on the new church. Mr. D. C. Haviland is "happy" to announce that the proceeds for the church stable, as realised by the recent social, amounted to over $60. The untiring energies of all concerned are very encouraging. The date of opening the new church will be announced later on.

The R.N.W.M.P. are advertising for remounts. Description of horses required can be obtained at F. R. Kettlewell & Co.'s store or at the post office on Main street.

The J. A. Carbert Survey camp is now situated at Robt. Mitchell's north east of Fly Lake. The party, comprising in all seven good men and true, are engaged in putting a trail through from Elkwater Lake to Medicine Lodge. On completing this work they will entrain for Calgary, where operations await their arrival. They expect to leave this vicinity about the 28th inst.

(Crowded out from last week.)

A most successful entertainment was given at the ranch of Mr. C. F. Musgrove on Thursday evening, the 14th inst. It consisted of a concert in the forepart of the evening, followed by a dance. An excellent programme was prepared and well-rendered by Miss Ana Musgrove and Miss May, Miss Musgrove played the accompaniments. Songs were also given by Messrs. Haviland, Hodges, Mathinson, and others and Messrs. Anderson and Meyrick gave some very fine musical selections.

The dance was voted by all hands a huge success. The house was turned inside out to make room and everyone enjoyed themselves immensely It was the largest attendance of dancers that have been at any dance in this vicinity during the season.

The proceeds are in aid of St. John's Church, Medicine Lodge, and exceeded the most sanguine expectations. The hostess spared no trouble to make the concert and dance a success and was ably assisted by Messrs Haviland, James Hassard and Jas Anderson. Among the attendants were noticed Mesdames Swinburne, Nicol, Macdoncll, Weir, English, Kowaski, Moodie and Stimson. Among the unmarried ladies were Misses Connor, Wel- Hassard, May, Bridges (two), Nicol and the hostess of the house.

Dancing was kept up until after daylight and everyone went home thoroughly satisfied. An excellent supper was served at midnight at which all appeared to do ample justice.

Watching The Dreamers

Inspector Parker has been in the Josephsburg district for a few days, as the result of Jacob Morkel senior's latest incendiary letters. Everything is quiet, though the police are kept at work every night, patrolling the district in which Dreamer farms and those of the unbelievers are located.

German settlers who gave evidence against the sect are in constant state of fear of a future outbreak, and remain up all night to keep guard with a rifle at elbow.

It is rumored that "God Jacob" is coming to Josephburg to visit his little flock.

H. A. Whimn laid information this morning against a local woman for alleged burglary. The person in question he found in his house on Yuill St., in a terribly drunken condition.

There were four feet of water in the cellar under Brougham's shaving parlor and pool room last night. Over $1,000 worth of damage was done to the stock of cigars and tobacco. All the stores on South Railway street between Toronto and Montreal have been more or less flooded in the basements.

No. 97 of the 25th and today's 97 are not in yet. One will arrive about 2 a.m. in the morning. The delay is said to be due to blasting operations beyond Winnipeg, but nothing can be learned from the officials.

James Elliott of Milk River celebrated Victoria Day in a rather violent manner, careering in a fit of drunken excitement up and down Main street with a team. To make matters worse, his little girl was in the rig with him and subjected to a severe fright. Elliott was arrested and put in one of the cells in the city hall basement, where he immediately set to work to break to splinters the seat provided for him. This morning he was fined $5 and costs for the first offense and $4 and costs for the second.

It is said that orders have been issued by the Government that the new post office must be finished by Sept. 1st. It is to be hoped there will be no more extensions.

The heavy rain of yesterday has put the district in fine shape. In the city it was a deluge. The sewers were inadequate to carry off the over flow and the streets were flooded. Parts of the Esplanade and South Railway Street were under water for hours. A half foot of water found a resting place on the post office floor. There was an inch and a half of rain.

James Fleming and his brother, T. C. has been called to Lake City, Minn., by the illness of their father. They left on Saturday.

The evening service at the Presbyterian Church will commence at 7 o'clock instead of 7.30, as heretofore.

Mr. Webb left the city on Friday night to spend the week end with relatives at Fernie, B.C.

Attention is drawn to the Fletcher Kindergarten method of teaching music advertised by Mrs. Marshall on another page.

The Rev. Mr. F ortune will preach in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday next, on the Temperance and Moral Reform Movement.

The committee of the Board of Trade met on Wednesday and Thursday last. It was decided to wait upon the city council this evening, to request them to take over the expense in connection with the city's exhibit at the Dominion Fair.

Mrs. J. W. Martin and Master Harold accompanied Mr. Martin to Edmonton for the holiday.

Mr. Sanson, D. R. Ware and E. B. Assseltine of Josephburg, left thecity on Saturday for the Cypress Hills, where they are going on a nature faking expedition. After a few days spent in following big game in the hills, Mr. Ware called on Hargrave and other ranchers in the histrict, returning yesterday.

A. G. Trotman has been transferred from North Bay to Medicine Hat as stenographer to the chief clerk in the superintendant's office. J. Forbes, his predecessor, has been transferred to the office of the general superintendent, Calgary.

Father Turblaux was out of town for a short time last week, visiting the rural parts of the diocese.

Ascension Day (the 28th) is observed as a holy day by the Roman Catholic church and special services will be conducted in St. Patrick's church.

Mrs. Platt and Mrs. McGibbon of Montreal, Mr. J. G. Waklock's daughters have come to Medicine Hat on account of the serious illness of their father. Mrs. Platt arrived in the city Wednesday last, and Mrs. McGibbon on Sunday.

The 3rd annual meeting of the Western Branch of the Women's Missionary Society will be held in the Methodist church in this city, on May 27, 28, and 29. Among the out of town speakers will be Mrs. J. The Sons of England social, which was to have been held on Thursday evening, has been postponed for a month on account of the serious illness of Bro. J. G. Waldock.

On account of the holiday several columns of good reading matter have been crowded out of this issue of The Times.

The fire boys were called out twice during the week-end. First, on Sunday, they had a burning manure pile in Mr. Stark's stable yard on Esplanade. The origin of the fire was in all probability, spontaneous combustion. Some night owl played a fool joke on the brigade by sending an alarm in from box 14, near the roseries, at 2 a.m. Monday causing a great deal of inconvenience and expense.

The steamboat is to leave the city for a trip down stream.

The river has fallen considerably during the past week, and it will be advisable to leave at an early date to avoid difficulties in navigation which will be encountered should the volume of water coming down from the mountains still further decrease. Capt. Ross is now awaiting the arrival of steam coal. His plans for the summer will not be determined until he reaches the Nelson River where he may cater to the large tourist traffic. The Board of Trade committee interviewed the captain on Saturday with a view to inducing him to remain for the Board of Trade convention on the 19th and 20th of next month, but no settlement was arrived at.

Mounted Police Notes.

On Wednesday John Morgan was handed over to the Mounted Police by the city police. Morgan was convicted of trespassing on C.P.R. cars which he used for his nightly dose.

Peter Robinson Fraser was also handed over by the city police.

On the 16th inst., Corporal Jenkyn saw a blue roan dogie steer in the corral at Bell's slaughter house, which he suspected was the property of another rancher, A. Desbrisay. On Friday the Corporal, accordingly, warned Tom Bell, jr., that he must not slaughter the animal. Bell informed him that he couldn't prevent him doing so. However, Bell was seen a mile up the trail, across the bridge, at a quarter to five on Saturday morning, the 16th, driving the steer in question, and when stopped volunteered the information that he was taking it back where you said it belonged."

Since Saturday the steer has been in the Mounted Police corrall, and after going to great pains the police have succeeded in reading the brand—inverted Y and a 7 over quarter circle—used by A. Desbrisay.

This morning the Mounted Police arrested Mr. Bell and his son Tom and released them on bail, which was immediately provided. The hearing of the case will be next Tuesday afternoon.

FIRE BRIGADE VS. C. P. R.

The game on Friday between the Fire Brigade and the C.P.R. was a wavy, flashy sort of an affair. The score was terrific and so was everything else. It was good in spots but the spots were too far apart. The Fire Brigade had a list of errors as long as your arm—18 in all, but at that were running nip and tuck up to the eighth. Andrews was batted out of the box in the fifth and Ardell replaced him in the sixth, but was very wild. He struck out a number of men but it was only was through fear of his wicked wildness. It seems as though it would be a good move to limit the number of men a pitcher can strike before he is taken out of the box, as it leads to poor ball, no batter being willing to stand up and be made a mark of.

Sinclair's batting was a feature, he securing a 3-bagger, two 2-bagger and 2 singles out of seven times at bat. In the eighth every C.P.R. man made a run with only 5 hits. The score:

C. P. R. VS. BACHELORS

In the afternoon a large crowd saw the best game of the season. The C.P.R. had the lead all the way but had to play for all they were worth. Both Andrews and Squance pitched fine ball, the latter shining also at bat and on bases. The errors of the bachelors were responsible for their defeat. Both Johnston and Lemieux at short put up a good specimen of ball, each having 5 assists, and Johnston one error. Green was replaced by Ireland in the sixth. The score:—

A TALK ON ADVERTISING

Advertising and news are first cousins.

The railroad and the stage coach are grandchild and grandfather.

Four out of five advertisers still use stage coach methods. The agency that distributes news has the quickest, cheapest and most effective machinery for distributing advertising. This agency is the newspaper.

The man who is passing your shop window is going somewhere. He is on some other errand. If you want to catch him when he is not in a hurryput your shop window in the newspaper, a few articles at a time. You can make a hundred and fifty thousand people look at this every day, and with much better selling results than if that hundred and fifty thousand walked by your shop one by one.

I know a retail store in one of our large cities, a branch of an English house, which until the autumn of 1906 was managed by an Englishman; austere, conservative, dignified; a man who would have been shocked to see his shop advertised in an American newspaper. He had an exclusive trade, and the shop has an excellent street location. His net profits amounted to about $20,000. The Englishman died. His assistant, an aggressive young American, took charge. He advertised; advertised continually in the best local newspapers. Last year this exclusive shop made a net profit of over $80,000.

This is a complete case the facts of which I personally know. The Englishman depended upon the quality of his goods, and his beautifully crested stationery, and his attractive shop window, and his perpendicular-backed dress-parade clerks; all of which were above criticism. The young American put the whole show into the newspaper, admission free.

Show me ten shops which advertise regularly in a newspaper, and I will show you nine that are making money. The failure of the tenth is probably due to bad management of some sort.

Some people value goods by the price they pay; others by the shop in which they buy; others by the effect the goods have upon their neighbors. It is only the common work-a-day sensible people who value goods by the goods. If you want all four classes as customers it is your business as an advertiser to make the cap fit.—Ex.

Hatching Chickens by Natural Means

Anyone can set a hen, and the veriest tyro may often find his efforts rewarded by a fine clutch of fluffy chickens. Think not, however, that there is nothing to learn about the art, or no helpful suggestions to be offered. In a bulletin, last year, by the Massachusetts Board of Agriculture, appeared quite an exhaustive article on "Hatching and Rearing Chickens by Natural Methods on the Farm." It was prepared by that prince of American poultrywriters, John A. Robinson, author of that excellent manual, "Poultry Craft," and it is surprising how many practical suggestions Mr. Robinson finds to offer on this single subject. Part of the article we reproduce in this issue retaining the balance for publication at a later date. It is all well worth reading:

A leading manufacturer of incubators is my authority for the statement that there are in the United States and Canada about one hundred and thirty concerns manufacturing incubators and brooders. Many of these are small establishments whose separate output is comparatively insignificant, but the aggregate output of these small factories must be very large, and there must be fully two-score of concerns manufacturing on a large scale, the largest turning out hundreds of incubators and brooders daily. Though the total production of these machines for the hatching and brooding if chicks is greater now than ever before, it has for years been large; and when we consider that a well-made incubator ought to last for a good many years it would seem that the increasing number of incubators and brooders sold must indicate a general substitution of artificial for natural methods of hatching and rearing chicks, and the early advent of the era, to which some enthusiasts in artificial methods look forward, when the hen will have nothing to do but produce eggs. The incubators and brooders sold do not necessarily represent hens put out of commission as mothers. To just what extent they actually displace hens it would be impossible to determine, butwhere they are most used, their service is either in supplementing natural methods or in lines which could not be developed on a large scale by such methods.

Thousands and thousands of the cheaper machines will hatch well only while new, and under the most favorable circumstances. Thousands of poultry-keepers who buy good machines never learn to run them satisfactorily. They may continue to use them experimentally for some years, but in the end they go back to natural methods as easier and better for them. And the question: Which is the better method in the end? comes to a question of circumstances and of the aptitudes of individuals. Some people can do so much better with artificial methods that they prefer them under any circumstances. Some can use either method successfully. Others get their best results by natural methods. So, natural methods continue to be used and used very extensively, and, further, the competition of methods has without doubt, served to give a better general understanding of the weak points of natural methods and the best ways of treating them.

The operator of incubators and brooders soon finds that these mechanical contrivances are not self-operating. He has to tend to them constantly and carefully, and give a great deal of thought to what at first seems the trivial matter of putting into practice the few simple directions for operating which accompanies the machine. He learns in time (if he succeeds) that, to have his machines work well, he must, in working with them, be methodical and regular, and, as far as possible, furnish conditions of operationwhich are favorable.

Natural Methods Without Natural Losses.

The farm furnishes as near an approach to purely natural conditions for the production of poultry as we can have for domesticated fowls, yet it is a most exceptional farm that offers conditions which admit of leaving the poultry—particularly the young poultry—to itself. In a state of nature, the tendency is for such creatures as fowls to maintain themselves in about the same numbers on the same area year after year. This means that the great majority of the young produced must succumb to their natural enemies or to the rigors of natural conditions before reaching maturity. Now, though the domestic hen may be far more prolific of eggs than her wild counterpart, she is also an expense to her owner, and his profit upon her is measured not by the number of eggs she may lay, but by the difference between the value of her produce and the cost of her keep. In the hatching and rearing of chicks come the heaviest losses of most poultry-keepers on farms, and, to a very great extent, these losses are not necessary, and could easily be avoided. To avoid losses, and make the most of natural facilities for hatching and growing chicks, systematize the work

Quarters For Sitting Hens.

Provide for the sitting hens exclusive quarters, and for the hens with chicks coops of substantially the same size and style, and a piece of land of such extent and character that the chicks have all the advantage of range and freedom without being so much scattered that the work of looking after them four or five times daily is too laborious.

If this is done, and a reasonable amount of attention given the chicks up to the weaning age, losses up to that point should be small, and the stock on hand at that stage much better developed than when the work is not so thoroughly done.

When any considerable number of chicks is to be hatched by hens, it is advisable to set as many hens as possible at the same time, and prefer able to have a certain day of the week for setting hens, and set none at other times. This simple point of practice introduces at once an element of regularity in the workwhich would have a marked influence all through, even if no other effort to secure regularity were made.

Make the nests in banks of tiers, built up like shelving in a store, or perhaps more graphically described as resembling a sectional bookcase. The nests need no back, for they are placed against the wall. The fronts should have covers of slats, or of a board just wide enough to leavespace for air above and below it. Each cover should be the length of a section, opening and closing all nests in one section together. The covers should be hinged at the bottom (leather hinges will do), because they must be fastened when closed, but if hinged at the top, they must be fastened to keep them open as well. Besides this the cover-front, hinged at the bottom, may be used as a running board in front of the nests, if so desired. For ordinary hens' nests should be twelve inches square inside measurement. For nesting material, use short, fine hay or broken straw, and shape the nest well with the hand. If the nest is not shaped before the eggs are put in it, and the material well pressed down, eggs are likely to be broken during the first day of incubation.

Selecting Sittings and Eggs.

Set only hens that are evidently in good health, and give the preference to those in fair flesh. Set no hen that is not easily handled after dark or that will fly from the nest if approached by daylight. To have hens that are healthy, quiet and easily handled means freedom from a large portion of the usual losses in the early weeks of the chick's life, as well as during incubation.

Select for incubation, eggs of uniform size and good form and color. If, for any reason, it is desired to set some eggs larger or smaller than the average, sort the eggs and give the special sizes to separate hens. The rule of thirteen eggs to a hen is a good one to follow if all nests are twelve inches by twelve inches. Some hens can cover more, but, for a reason which will shortly appear, the number of eggs should be adapted to the smallest hens in the lot. If nests are of different sizes, the largest nests and hens may have more eggs, though fifteen is as large a number as it is advisable to give any hen.

Regular Attention.

Have the hens come off for food and water daily. If a large number of hens are set at the same time—all the apartment will contain—they may all be let off together and the nests closed while they eat, drink and dust themselves. If the floor is of earth, without too much broken droppings in it, no special dusting box need be provided. The food should be corn or other hard grain, corn preferred, and the whole corn used rather than cracked corn. For the first few days the hens should be watched closely, to prevent fighting. After they become used to the place and to each other the attendant may let them out, close the nests, and leave them until time to return them to the nests—twenty minutes to half an hour. In returning to the nest, make no effort to have the hens go back to the same nests. On the contrary, if any are noticed which persistently take a certain nest, return them to another. By doing this, all eggs have the same treatment. A hen that, if on the same eggs continuously for three weeks, would make a poor hatcher, is never on one nest long enough to specially affect the eggs in it, and the results are better average hatches and a larger total hatch.

Dust the hens with an insect powder when setting them, again about the tenth day, and again about the nineteenth day, just before the eggs begin to pip. After the hens return to the nests, remove the droppings before they are broken into the floor, and the place will be free from the peculiarly offensive odor too common where hens are sitting.

Test the Eggs.

Test the eggs the seventh day, and again the fourteenth day. A metal chimney for testing which may purchased at any poultry-supply house. An infertile egg remains clear throughout the period of incubation. A fertile egg, at the seventh day, shows quite opaque, with the air cell at the larger end sharply defined, and in the same position with reference to the shell as the egg is turned before the light. If the germ is dead, but the egg not yet decomposed, the dead germ may show as a dark or bloody spot in the opaque contents of the egg. If the egg is rotten, the line of the air cell will remain horizontal as the egg is turned before the light.

Unless fertility is exceptionally good, enough eggs will be taken out at this test to release one or two hens, the eggs from their nests being used to fill others, and they either reset with the next lot or returned to the laying pens. If the eggs were fresh when set, there will rarely be rotten eggs to take out at the first test. The test on the fourteenth day discovers most eggs that will not have full-formed chickens at the end of the period of incubation, and it is important that these should be removed for the rotten egg is the egg that breaks, and broken eggs not only make a nasty mess to clean up, but injure the chicks in the eggs which are soiled, and thus reduce the prospects of a hatch. Unless an unusual number of eggs should be taken out at the second test, it is as well not to double up again.

After the eggs begin to pip, keep the hens on the nests until the hatch is complete. This will usually be in thirty-six hours. Look into the nest enough to see that things are progressing right, to clear away shells as they accumulate, and to see that no chicks smothered by an empty shell capping the egg containing it. If a hen is so restless that she tramples her chicks, exchange for her a quieter one from a lot set later.

When the chickens are all dry, remove them from the nests to coops previously made ready for them, giving each hen from twelve to twenty chicks, according to the season. Select as mothers the hens that are in the best condition and most thrifty-looking.

According to the statisoics published by Consul Robert J. Wynne, of London, England imported 2,225,000,000 eggs, valued at nearly forty million dollars in 1906. The countries furnishing most of this vast quantity in order of volume of stock supplied, were Russia, Denmark, Germany, Belgium, France, and Canada with smaller quantities from other parts of the world. The native production in England is said to be rapidly increasing of late years.

Why Not More Trees on Prairie?

Mr. Arch Mitchell, formerly of the Alberta Department of Agriculture contributes the following to the Montreal Herald and Weekly Star:

"If Nature had intended the prairies to be covered with trees, why are they so bare?" was the remark made by an old-timer to the writer when he was trying to persuade him to grow a little shelter belt around his prairie home. Five years before, the same man would doubtless have said "If wheat was to be grown on the prairies why isn't it growing there now?" The one remark would have been just as much to the point as the other. The soil is rich enough for crop production, and the moisture is in quantity enough—if it is properly taken care of, and the proof of it is to be seen in the splendid yields of wheat and oats from every part of the bare country wherever settlers have tried to grow them.

The fact that crops are being grown is proof enough that they were intended to be grown, and it is the same with trees, which have been called the "home makers" of the prairies. They can be grown quite readily if proper care is taken and a few simple rules observed.

But the question of "tree growing on the prairie" can be answered in another way. Nature herself has answered it and is answering it and will continue to do so if she is not interfered with. In Alberta we have the western limit of the open prairie. Beyond that there are the foothills of the Rocky Mountains. Here is the home of the famous "chinook" winds, which are liable to blow at any time, and at any season. In winter, to drift or melt the snow, and in summer to cure the prairie hay. It is just because they are liable to do this that we have the following fact. In that part of the country, which is within the regular sweep of the chinooks, is the only part of Canada where it is possible for a prairie fire to run in every month of the year except two, and these, from the middle of May to the middle of July—the following months—when the grass is green and not easily burned, and sometimes even that period is cut short.

A carelessly quenched fire, or a burning match thrown down after a pipe is lighted, or even a lightning flash, and we have a prairie fire in winter or summer, spring or fall. No wonder the prairie is bare. It is curious sometimes to note how quickly some people jump to conclusions. Because the chinooks are warm and under their influence some of the buds of the trees may swell and a cold spell following may do some damage, the conclusion has been drawn by most people that this is the full and true reason why trees do not live on the prairie. The chinooks do a little damage, of that there is no doubt, but if they have been the cause of all the the trouble why is it that at the south end of the Porcupine Hills, as one looks north, that trees can be seen fringing the crests of many of the ridges on the west side? If the chinooks are the direct cause of the lack of trees, why is it that these fringes are able to stand right in the teeth of the warm chinook blast? The rest of the ridges are grass-covered and a close inspection soon reveals the real reason for the tree growth. Those trees are growing amongst rock rubble or even in the fissures of the rock itself and there was no grass to carry the fires over to them in days gone by. Just north of Cowley on the banks of the middle fork of the Old Man River there is a striking example of the same thing. A great slab of rock sloping towards the southwest, and about one quarter of an acre in extent, and right in the middle of it where a great fissure runs across is to be seen the stump of a tree 10 or 12 inches in diameter. There is no other, probably there was no other place in the crack where roots could pierce, to the soil below and the rest of the surface of the great slab is quite bare, but right here in the middle, facing the southwest, the direction of the so-called tree-killing chinook winds come from, was this tree growing. It must have been quite a striking object standing there alone with its spreading branches, till that settler, with no eye for the beautiful or the wonderful, or the lessons it could teach, came along, greedy after timber, and cut it down. If the chinooks are the tree destroyers they are supposed to be, they surely had here an excellent opportunity to do their deadly work. But no, the tree lived on for many years, simply because grass will not grow upon stone and there was no grass to carry the forest fires over to it and so it escaped destruction.

There are plenty of other proofs A stranger coming north to Calgary on the Calgary and Macleod line from the real bare prairie is agreeably surprised to find that on the hill sides and even in some of the fields, from Okotoks north, are flourishing quite a number of groves and clumps of native trees of anywhere from 6 to 20 feet high. They are pleasant to look upon and the stranger wonders why they are there. The reason is not far to seek. Look at the map of Alberta, and at this part of it, and you will see a great number of little creeks marks upon it. The map does not record them but creeks usually mean coulees in the west country and coulees mean snowdrifts and snowdrifts mean "thus far and no further." Then later on the prairie fires come sweeping along burning everything before them. Hence the trees in that part of the country. They have been protected in this way on the east, south and west and the great Bow River has rolled between them and the open prairie to the north and they have escaped the fires. North of the Bow you have to go nearly sixty miles before striking the tall timber and half that distance ere you find willow scrub or small bush poplar brush.

Another striking proof are those two small clumps of poplars about twenty odd miles east of High River. Towering up on the prairie they can be seen for miles and the reason is not far to seek, for there areloughs and little cut-banks and coulees all around them, which held the snowdrifts and kept back the fires. And the same can be seen all over the West. Wherever the fires have kept out, the forest is working its way slowly but surely, back on to the prairie, and in time there is every reason to believe that the prairie would become completely forest covered.

The dry climate and the drying action of the chinooks are doubtless a serious drawback, but they are not everything and in time nature would find its own way to overcome them. Even the very fertility of the prairie soil is against natural tree growth for the delicate seedlings are easily choked out by the long grass and it is usually where there is a bare spot, the result of the wallowing of some old buffalo years ago, or of some busy badger hunting for gophers and turning up the soil as he digs down after them, that the tree seedlings have been able to get a start, as may be easily seen at several places in the Porcupine Hills and elsewhere.

There is at least one cottonwood about sixteen feet high, nearly half way between Gleichen and Medicine Hat on the north side of the mainline of the C.P.R., and there will soon be thousands like it.

To the settler on the prairie these things are of great moment and to the man who is building a home for himself and his children, they are very encouraging, for he knows that given the conditions necessary for tree growth, thorough preparation of the soil, and a little attention afterwards, it is possible to grow as many trees as he wants on the "bald headed prairie" and that the causes detrimental to tree growth are none but what he may easily overcome. Planting material can be easily obtained, for it is not to be had in natural bluffs in the vicinity, it may be got by application to the Forestry branch of the Department of Interior at Ottawa. Eighty five per cent. of the trees planted under the auspices of the department are growing, surely proof enough that planting can be done successfully and this, added to nature's own incontrovertible testimony as we have seen, is answer enough to the question "Why are the prairies treeless?" Nature is doing her share, to prove that they need not fear, it only remains for man to follow rightly and assist her, wherever he sees it necessary, to graft a belt of trees. They will grow as they get a chance.

NEW ARRIVALS

Manitoba
Saskatchewan and Alberta

Every new family that comes to Western Canada should be users of Royal Crown Soap right from the start.

Ask any of the people you settle near, and they will tell you it is the best soap to use.

It is specially made for the West. The water in this country is very hard. Royal Crown Soap is made from a special formula to suit this hard water.

Don't begin your life in the West by using any other soap, and thus wasting money and getting poor results.

Tests made show that 6 bars of Royal Crown Soap do more work than 8 bars of ordinary soap.

Royal Crown Soap will save you money. It is easier on the clothes. It washes whiter than ordinary soaps.

Don't make the mistake of starting with any but Royal Crown Soap. You will find that your neighbors are using it as they know it is the best soap for use in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Start right away and save your wrappers for premiums. We will send a list of premiums free to any who ask for it.

Royal Crown Soap has been in use almost exclusively for over 20 years in Western Canada.

The Fletcher Music Methods

(Simplex and Kindergarten)

Endorsed by the leading musicians of America and Europe, among whom are Dr William Mason, Geo. W. Chadwick, W. Cavon Barrow, Thomas Tapper, Dr. Percy Goetschins, John Philip Sousa, Kate S. Chittenden, Dr. Lyman Abbot. The F. M. M. places in the hands of the teacher a thorough, tested and endorsed system of teaching music, entirely in accord with all modern and psychologically true methods of instruction. It gives her for herself a basic and practical knowledge of modulation, analysis, memoizing, and the pianoforte.

Mrs. S. Marshall is the only authorized teacher of this method to teachers throughout Western Canada, and will open a class at her residence in Vancouver on JULY 1st. For terms and information address MRS. S. H. MARSHALL, 1075 Denman St., Vancouver, B.C.

CURES

Dyspepsia, Boils, Pimples, Headaches, Constipation, Loss of Appetite, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Scrofula, and all troubles arising from the Stomach, Liver, Bowels or Blood.

Mrs. A. Lethangue, of Ballyduff, Ont., writes: "I believe I would have been in my grave long ago had it not been for Burdock Blood Bitters. I was run down to such an extent that I could scarcely move about the house. I was subject to severe headaches, backaches and dizziness; my appetite was gone and I was unable to do my housework. After using two bottles of B.B.B. I found my health fully restored. I warmly recommend it to all tired and worn out women."

Better Than Prison.

It has long been recognized in judicial and legislative circles that prison as a corrective influence has its limitations. Theoretically and practically, sending a man to jail is punishment, pure and simple, without many chances of the influence being for good. Its effect on the character of the criminal can never be salutary. It may frighten him into an outward observance of the laws of the country, but the association with criminals and criminal treatment must work for harm rather than for good.

The idea of Hon. Mr. Cushing expressed at the bridge opening banquet is worthy of consideration by all governments. At present we have but one form of incarceration for the adult criminal—the prison. The man who breaks the law in a thoughtless moment, in a fit of temper, or who feels himself almost forced to it by certain conditions, is not a criminal properly speaking. As a law-breaker he deserves punishment. But to put him in a cell with the deliberate criminal, the man who sins for the desire of it, is to add an undesirable influence to his punishment. Also, the man who earns imprisonment through lack of knowledge should not be treated as the recognized criminal.

Mr. Cushing's suggestion was that a different form of imprisonment be given the criminal who is open to correction—something in the nature of an Industrial Home. While the imprisonment is complete, there are no bad influences. The discipline is there, so is the punishment, but that is all. A criminal could come from such an institution without the terrible stain of a prison name. He loses nothing in character and no more than is necessary in reputation. He would have healthful, outdoor life, with much relieving labor, time to recognize his misdeeds; and there would be none to rub in larger desires for crime, and the brazen demeanor of the hardened criminal.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Calgary has sold its bonds at 92.55 interest 4½ per cent. Wood, Gundy & Co. stated to the city that the reason that they couldn't offer 98 for our bonds when they had bought Brandon's at that figure was because this city is not as large as Brandon. At that rate the larger a city is, the bigger the price it will get. Calgary has sold at above par according to our rate of interest. It appears that 97 or 98 is a fair price for debentures now, and the city did well to refuse any offer so low as that made by Wood, Gundy & Co.

That this company is not basing its offer to us on value, is proven by the fact that it added a note to its letter asking that it be given first choice when any offer was made, as it was prepared to pay as high as any other firm.

After that, it would be well to let Wood, Gundy & Co. know that they couldn't get the bonds at any price. Such a note shows that Wood, Gundy & Co. think they have a cinch here.

The biggest thing for Medicine Hat at the moment is the retention in town of all the cash we have. Not only isthis so in the ordinary buying but also in the money spent in advertising, etc.

More than a week ago a man called at The Times office urging us to sell him space in the paper for a directory of business men. He received a point blank refusal, and for very evident reasons. The scheme is that the man buys space in a local paper at about $25, and then goes around to the merchants, and after promising any old thing soaks them five dollars for a single insertion of a tiny ad, and their name on a piece of oilcloth that isn't worth the price of the ink as an advertising medium. The paper gets $25, and the merchants pay out a couple hundred dollars which goes out of town for good, and receive an ad which in the ordinary way would cost them only about fifty cents. Exactly the same space and advertisement secured direct from the paper would have cost about fifty cents, and yet that man thought The Times would lend itself to a scheme whereby the merchants were robbed of ten times that amount.

Well The Times didn't mince matters in giving its reasons for refusing to fall into a scheme that meant about ninety per cent of the expenditure going out of town. However, the man got busy and a woman solicited his work for him. But it did not appear in the Times. This paper would rather lose $25 than be the means of sending $200 out of town, for which there is very little value received. The Times does its own soliciting, gives merchants full value for their money, and does not employ outside men who receive ninety per cent of the money paid. That money would have been lost to the city for all time, and is even worse than sending money out of town for goods.

The Times is working for the city as well as for itself. It doesn't confine itself to TALKING the city.

The Vermillion Signal has issued a fine illustrated edition of Vermillion and section. It is printed on good book paper, and in other ways shows evidences of having been prepared as an advertisement and not only as a money making scheme.

Still another newspaper has been forced to show that it was stepping too fast for the needs of its district. The Prince Albert Times, a newsy, well-edited paper with a semi-weekly issue has gone back to a weekly issue only. Prince Albert, a city of much importance, was not sufficiently large to support the two issues a week, and the editor wisely decided to cease publishing at a loss. While his decision was the only one under the circumstances, Prince Albert suffers by the enforced acknowledgement that the editor's hopes for the town were not sufficient financial support.

Medicine Hat has a grand opportunity for free advertising of the very best kind if it takes advantage of the visits of the various editorial associations which are planned for this summer.

What in the world would Medicine Hat do without the dozen automobiles which the owners so kindly place at the disposal of the Board of Trade for the entertainment of visitors. The city owes the auto owners a great deal for assisting in the advertising of the city. All visitors who come to the city have to see the sights by auto, and every owner considers his machine at their disposal. It is fitting that we should show our appreciation by providing good roads.

One would not be suspected of "barking up the wrong tree," when he assumes that an editor writes his own editorials. Of course, now that The News is forced to acknowledge that its editorials are not editorials by reportorial outbreaks, The Times will make more allowance hereafter.

Dominion Exhibition

Manager Richardson has just received word from Mr. Hunter, Superintendent of the Banff National Park, that he will send the following attractive exhibit to the Dominion Exhibition.

One pair of buffalo, two hybrid cows (one Galloway and one Polled Angus) a pair of coyotes, a pair of wolves, one bear, a pair of badgers, a pair of racoons, a pair of kit-foxes and a porcupine.

This will be one of the most interesting features at the Dominion Exhibition, and the directors are particularly grateful to Superintendent Hunter as well as Commissioner Howard Douglas for allowing the exhibition board to have this splendid exhibit.

Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them

Editor of The Times:

As there are a number of very careless drivers of rigs and perhaps of automobiles in this town, I send a paragraph from the police court proceedings of Ottawa. The rights of pedestrians in this town are exactly the same as in an Ontario town. So drivers take a hint.

"Two stiff penalties were handed out by Magistrate O'Keefe in this morning's police court and both were accompanied by little sermons. For almost running his auto over a bunch of people awaiting a street car on the corner of Mosgrove and Rideau, the other evening, Douglas McNair was fined $27 or one month in jail. The public, said the magistrate, have some rights and are not to be made scamper out of the way of autonlobiles. The season is just opening and I wish to make the law clear to owners of these machines."

To the Editor of The Times:

Dear Sir,—There appeared in a recent issue if The News an article relating to the unreasonable prices that are being asked by the merchants of our town. This as everyone knows was the true standing of the wage earner of Medicine Hat. Below this article was a few words by the editor asking Mr. Fowler if he were overtaken by misfortune or, hard times who would he ask to tide him over, the catalogue house or the merchant at home. The Editor of the News thinks the merchant at home. Now dear reader, what I want to ask is this. Do you think it a business proposition to pay from 30 to 50 per cent more for your goods so that if you are overtaken by misfortune you would have someone to lean on? And I am not positive you would have anyone then. Take the railroad man for instance, he is dismissed from service. The merchant whom he is dealing with is very quick to enquire if there is any chance of his returning to work. If so, they perhaps, may carry him for a time. If no chance remains he is quietly told to go elsewhere or pay cash.

Not very long ago one of the leading stores of our town was not profiting enough by the prices they were exacting, but cut the staff by hiring younger labor, which could afford to work for about half. This is called business in the business world. Then what would you call sending out of town and reducing your expenses 30 per cent.? Isn't that business I would ask the fair-minded reader? The editor of The News thinks not. It is just pulling the town to pieces in his estimation. It would take the editor of any paper a life time to show the wage earner of Medicine Hat where he is losing anything in the proposition put to the public by Mr. Foster. The wages of today are a great deal less than last year, are the merchants doing anything to meet the wage tarner half way? Why even that 5 per cent. reduction that cropped up awhile ago has disappeared like a rat in a hole in mostly every store in town.

What our town wants is an up-to-date cash store that can handle business at a reasonable profit. For there is no townalong the line that has more ready cash in it than our town, "The town that was born lucky." If he had said "costly" he would have struck it right.

Thanking you for your valuable space, I remain

Yours truly,

One Who is Interested in the Town's Welfare.

EDITOR—The above letter has been sent in, and as the standing of The Times on this subject needs no defence, it is scarcely a questionthat it has a right to exclude from its columns. The Times has always talked home trade—and what is more, has never spent a cent in an eastern departmental store.

The point that is undefended in this letter (leaving a discussion of prices out of the question) is the fact that money leaving the town is money lost to the town. More cash— more profit to everyone.

SIMPLE HOME RECIPE.

Mix This Simple, Helpful Recipe at Home and Try it, Anyway.

Get from any prescription pharmacist the following:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered by an eminent authority, who writes in a New York daily paper, as the finest prescription ever written to relieve Backache, Kidney Trouble, Weak Bladder and all forms of Urinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, enabling them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture yet those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising the relief being effected without the slighest injury to the stomach or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes highly recommended, it is the prescription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

A druggist here at home, when asked, stated that he could either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription for our readers, also recommends it as harmless.

The Hound of the Baskervilles

Another Adventure of Sherlock Holmes.

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War"

Copyright (1902) by A. Conan Doyle.

CHAPTER I.

Mr. Sherlock Holmes, who was usually very late in the mornings, save upon those not infrequent occasions when he was up all night, was seated at the breakfast table. I stood upon the hearth-rug and picked up the stick which our visitor had left behind him the night before. It was a fine, thick piece of wood, bulbous-headed, of the sort which is known as a "Penang lawyer." Just under the head was a broad silver band, nearly an inch across. "To James Mortimer, M.R.C.S., from his friends of the C.C.H.," was engraved upon it, with the date "1884." It was just such a stick as the old-fashioned family practitioner used to carry—dignified, solid, and reassuring.

"Well, Watson, what do you make of it?"

Holmes was sitting with his back to me, and I had given him no sign of my occupation.

"How did you know what I was doing? I believe you have eyes in the back of your head."

"I have, at least, a well-polished silver-plated coffee-pot in front of me," said he. "But, tell me, Watson, what do you make of our visitor's stick? Since we have been so unfortunate as to miss him and have no notion of his errand, this accidental souvenir becomes of importance. Let me hear you reconstruct the man by an examination of it."

"I think," said I, following as far as I could the methods of my companion, "that Dr. Mortimer is a successful elderly medical man, well-esteemed, since those who know him give him this mark of their appreciation."

"Good!" said Holmes. "Excellent!"

"I think also that the probability is in favor of his being a country practitioner who does a great deal of his visiting on foot."

"Why so?"

"Because this stick, though originally a very handsome one, has been so knocked about that I can hardly imagine a town practitioner carrying it. The thick iron ferrule is worn down, so it is evident that he has done a great amount of walking with it."

"Perfectly sound!" said Holmes.

"And then again, there is the 'friends of the C.C.H.' I should guess that to be the Something Hunt, the local hunt to whose members he has possibly given some surgical assistance, and which has made him a small presentation in return."

"Really, Watson, you excel yourself," said Holmes, pushing back his chair and lighting a cigarette. "I am bound to say that in all the accounts which you have been so good as to give of my own small achievements you have habitually underrated your own abilities. It may be that you are not yourself luminous, but you are a conductor of light. Some people without possessing genius have a remarkable power of stimulating it. I confess, my dear fellow, that I am very much in your debt."

He had never said as much before, and I must admit that his words gave me keen pleasure, for I had often been piqued by his indifference to my admiration and to the attempts which I had made to give publicity to his methods. I was proud too to think that I had so far mastered his system as to apply it in a way which earned his approval. He now took the stick from my hands and examined it for a few minutes with his naked eyes. Then with an expression of interest he laid down his cigarette and, carrying the cane to the window, he looked over it again with a convex lens.

"Interesting, though elementary," said he, as he returned to his favorite corner of the settee. "There are certainly one or two indications upon the stick. It gives us the basis for several deductions."

"Has anything escaped me?" I asked, with some self-importance. "I trust that there is nothing of consequence which I have overlooked?"

"I am afraid, my dear Watson, that most of your conclusions were erroneous. When I said that you stimulated me I meant, to be frank, that in noting your fallacies I was occasionally guided towards the truth. Not that you are entirely wrong in this instance. The man is certainly a country practitioner. And he walks a good deal."

"Then I was right."

"To that extent."

"But that was all."

"No, no, my dear Watson, not all—by no means all. I would suggest, for example, that a presentation to a doctor is more likely to come from a hospital than from a hunt, and that when the initials 'C.C.' are placed before that hospital the words 'Charing Cross' very naturally suggest themselves."

"You may be right."

"The probability lies in that direction. And if we take this as a working hypothesis we have a fresh basis from which to start our construction of this unknown visitor."

"Well, then, supposing that 'C.C.H.' does stand for 'Charing Cross Hospital,' what further inferences may we draw?"

"Do none suggest themselves? You know my methods. Apply them!"

"I can only think of the obvious conclusion that the man has practised in town before going to the country."

"I think that we might venture a little farther than this. Look at it in this light. On what occasion would it be most probable that such a presentation would be made? When would his friends unite to give a pledge of their good will? Obviously at the moment when Dr. Mortimer withdrew from the service of the hospital in order to start in practice for himself. We know there has been a presentation. We believe there has been a change from a town hospital to a country practice. Is it, then, stretching our inference too far to say that the presentation was on the occasion of the change?"

"It certainly seems probable."

"Now, you will observe that he could not have been on the staff of the hospital, since only a man well-established in a London practice could hold such a position, and such a one would not drift into the country. What was he, then? If he was in the hospital and yet not on the staff he could only have been a house-surgeon or a house-physician—little more than a senior student. And he left five years ago—the date is on the stick. So your grave, middle-aged family practitioner vanishes into thin air, my dear Watson, and there emerges a young fellow under thirty, amiable, unambitious, absent-minded, and the possessor of a favorite dog, which I should describe roughly as being larger than a terrier and smaller than a mastiff."

I laughed incredulously as Sherlock Holmes leaned back in his settee and blew little wavering rings of smoke up to the ceiling.

"As to the latter part, I have no means of checking you," said I, "but at least it is not difficult to find out a few particulars about the man's age and professional career." From my small medical shelf I took down the Medical Directory and turned up the name. There were several Mortimers, but only one who could be our visitor. I read his record aloud.

"Mortimer, James, M.R.C.S., 1882, Grimpen, Dartmoor, Devon. House surgeon from 1882 to 1884, at Charing Cross Hospital. Winner of the Jackson prize for Comparative Pathology, with essay entitled 'Is Disease a Reversion?' Corresponding member of the Swedish Pathological Society. Author of 'Some Freaks of Atavism' (Lancet, 1882). 'Do We Progress?' (Journal of Psychology, March, 1883). Medical Officer for the parishes of Grimpen, Thorsley, and High Barrow."

"No mention of that local hunt, Watson," said Holmes, with a mischievous smile, "but a country doctor, as you very astutely observed. I think that I am fairly justified in my inferences. As to the adjectives, I said, if I remember right, amiable, unambitious and absent-minded. It is my experience that it is only an amiable man in this world who receives testimonials, only an unambitious one who abandons a London career for the country, and only an absent-minded one who leaves his stick and not his visiting-card after waiting an hour in your room."

"And the dog?"

"Has been in the habit of carrying this stick behind his master. Being a heavy stick the dog has held it tightly by the middle, and the marks of his teeth are very plainly visible. The dog's jaw, as shown in the space between these marks, is too broad in my opinion for a terrier and not broad enough for a mastiff. It may have been—yes, by Jove, it is a curly-haired spaniel."

He had risen and paced the room as he spoke. Now he halted in the recess of the window. There was such a ring of conviction in his voice that I glanced up in surprise.

"My dear fellow, how can you possibly be so sure of that?"

"For the very simple reason that I see the dog himself on our door-step, and there is the ring of its owner. Don't move, I beg you, Watson. He is a professional brother of yours, and your presence may be of assistance to me. Now is the dramatic moment of fate, Watson, when you hear a step upon the stair which is walking into your life, and you know not whether for good or ill. What does Dr. James Mortimer, the man of science, ask of Sherlock Holmes, the specialist in crime? Come in!"

The appearance of our visitor was a surprise to me, since I had expected a typical country practitioner. He was a very tall, thin man, with a long nose like a beak, which jutted out between two keen, grey eyes, set closely together and sparkling brightly from behind a pair of gold-rimmed glasses. He was clad in a professional but rather slovenly fashion, for his frock-coat was dingy and his trousers frayed. Though young, his long back was already bowed, and he walked with a forward thrust of his head and a general air of peering benevolence. As he entered his eyes fell upon the stick in Holmes's hand, and he ran towards it with an exclamation of joy. "I am so very glad," said he. "I was not sure whether I had left it here or in the Shipping Office. I would not lose that stick for the world."

"A presentation, I see," said Holmes.

"Yes, sir."

"From Charing Cross Hospital?"

"From one or two friends there on the occasion of my marriage."

"Dear, dear, that's bad!" said Holmes, shaking his head.

Dr. Mortimer blinked through his glasses in mild astonishment.

"Why was it bad?"

"Only that you have disarranged our little deductions. Your marriage, you say?"

"Yes, sir. I married, and so left the hospital, and with it all hopes of a consulting practice. It was necessary to make a home of my own."

"Come, come, we are not so far wrong after all," said Holmes. "And now, Dr. James Mortimer——"

"Mister, sir, Mister—a humble M.R.C.S."

"And a man of precise mind, evidently."

"A dabbler in science, Mr. Holmes, a picker up of shells on the shores of the great unknown ocean. I presume that it is Mr. Sherlock Holmes whom I am addressing and not——"

"No, this is my friend Dr. Watson."

"Glad to meet you, sir. I have heard your name mentioned in connection with that of your friend. You interest me very much, Mr. Holmes. I had hardly expected so dolichocephalic a skull or such well-marked supra-orbital development. Would you have any objection to my running my finger along your parietal fissure? A cast of your skull, sir, until the original is available, would be an ornament to any anthropological museum. It is not my intention to be fulsome, but I confess that I covet your skull."

Sherlock Holmes waved our strange visitor into a chair. "You are an enthusiast in your line of thought, I perceive, sir, as I am in mine," said he. "I observe from your forefinger that you make your own cigarettes. Have no hesitation in lighting one."

The man drew out paper and tobacco and twirled the one up in the other with surprising dexterity. He had long, quivering fingers as agile and restless as the antennae of an insect.

Holmes was silent, but his little darting glances showed me the interest which he took in our curious companion.

"I presume, sir," said he at last, "that it was not merely for the purpose of examining my skull that you have done me the honor to call here last night and again to-day?"

"No, sir, no; though I am happy to have had the opportunity of doing that as well. I came to you, Mr. Holmes, because I recognized that I am myself an unpractical man, and because I am suddenly confronted with a most serious and extraordinary problem. Recognizing, as I do, that you are the second highest expert in Europe——"

"Indeed, sir! May I inquire who has the honor to be the first?" asked Holmes, with some asperity.

"To the man of precisely scientific mind the work of Monsieur Bertillon must always appeal strongly."

"Then had you not better consult him?"

"I said, sir, to the precisely scientific mind. But as a practical man of affairs it is acknowledged that you stand alone. I trust, sir, that I have not inadvertently——"

"Just a little," said Holmes. "I think, Dr. Mortimer, you would do wisely if There ran behind him such a hound of hell.

without more ado you would kindly tell me plainly what the exact nature of the problem is in which you demand my assistance."

CHAPTER II.

"I have in my pocket a manuscript," said Dr. James Mortimer.

"I observed it as you entered the room," said Holmes.

"It is an old manuscript."

"Early eighteenth century, unless it is a forgery."

"How can you say that, sir?"

"You have presented an inch or two of it to my examination all the time that you have been talking. It would be a poor expert who could not give the date of a document within a decade or so. You may possibly have read my little monograph upon the subject. I put that at 1730."

"The exact date is 1742." Dr. Mortimer drew it from his breast-pocket. "This family paper was committed to my care by Sir Charles Baskerville, whose sudden and tragic death some three months ago created so much excitement in Devonshire. I may say that I was his personal friend as well as his medical attendant. He was a strong-minded man, sir, shrewd, practical, and as unimaginative as I am myself. Yet he took this document very seriously, and his mind was prepared for just such an end as did eventually overtake him."

Holmes stretched out his hand for the manuscript and flattened it upon his knee.

"You will observe, Watson, the alternative use of the long 's' and the short. It is one of several indications which enabled me to fix the date."

I looked over his shoulder at the yellow paper and the faded script. At the head was written: "Baskerville Hall," and below, in large, scrawling figures: "1742."

"It appears to be a statement of some sort."

"Yes, it is a statement of a certain legend which runs in the Baskerville family."

"But I understand that it is something more modern and practical upon which you wish to consult me?"

"Most modern. A most practical, pressing matter, which must be decided within twenty-four hours. But the manuscript is short and is intimately connected with the affair. With your permission I will read it to you."

Holmes leaned back in his chair, placed his finger-tips together, and closed his eyes, with an air of resignation. Dr. Mortimer turned the manuscript to the light and read in a high, crackling voice the following curious, old-world narrative:—

"Of the origin of the Hound of the Baskervilles there have been many statements, yet as I come in a direct line from Hugo Baskerville, and as I had the story from my father, who also had it from his, I have set it down with all belief that it occurred even as is here set forth. And I would have you believe, my sons, that the same Justice which punishes sin may also most graciously forgive it, and that no

Alfalfa Experience

I am considered somewhat of a crank on Alfalfa in this neighborhood, and will give you my experience with it. I plow the land in the fall and plow as deep as possible so that the freezing of winter will pulverize it. As soon as the land is fit for work in the spring I work it down with the harrow and get as good seed bed as I can. Then I sow the alfalfa and go over it with the roller, following immediately with a light harrow. I sow two bushels of oats to the acre with the alfalfa for a nurse crop. When the oats are in the dough stage I cut them for hay. By this time the alfalfa will be far enough advanced to stand cutting. Then I let it alone, and let it grow, weeds and all, until the alfalfa bloom when I cut it again. If you have prepared your seed bed properly there will not be enough weeds to hurt the alfalfa. I cut it every time it comes in bloom until fall, but like to leave the third growth on the land the first year for protecting during the winter. I sowed five acres in this way last spring, and got two good crops of hay. If alfalfa is sowed in the fall in this locality I would advise sowing one and a half bushels of oats to the acre with it. This will grow, and the winter will kill the oats, making a fine coat over the field for winter protection.

In curing the alfalfa I cut it when it is about all in bloom, cutting one day and raking it up the next morning. I do not want it to get altogether dry, but am particular not to get any rain or dew on it. I put one load of alfalfa in the stack and follow it with one load of cleanwheat straw, and build up the stack in this way with alternate loads of alfalfa and straw. In this way the dry straw takes the surplus moisture out of the alfalfa and also takes on a good deal of flavor of the alfalfa so that the stock will eat the straw almost as well as the alfalfa. The second and third crops I put up as I do clover.

Confidence Men Work Alberta

Calgary, May 19.—There are some slippery confidence men working out of Calgary, through Alberta, and the fact that they have not as yet "stung" anyone is due to the vigilance of the banks. Several times attempts are known to have been made to work their stick game, but no account has yet been heard where they have succeeded, although there have been some narrow escapes.

The game is as follows: A well dressed man rides from point to point in Alberta and Saskatchewan. He opens up a conversation with some likely looking passenger, and in the course of said conversation he finds where said passenger is from. Gradually he grows more friendly and a little more confidential. At last comes the parting. The well-dressed man of the world expressed a sudden weakness for his new-found acquaintance and requests him to write his name in his notebook, so that in case he wanted to communicate with the guileless passenger he could do so. The passenger writes his name and address and then departs, possibly forgetting all about his casual meeting in a few days.

But the well dressed man does not forget. He has taken the first step towards succeeding in his crooked scheme of securing a living without working. He wanted the other man's signature and he got it.

After he has secured the signature only a few days pass until a draft, signed with the name of the guileless passenger, is received at one or other of the banks here. The crook mails the draft with instructions to have the money forwarded to some hotel in the province. Then he wires that hotel, whichever it is, instructing the management to forward the draft to him at some other point, always using the name of the innocent dupe.

These attempts have thus far been nipped in the bud and no one is yet the loser except the smooth one himself. Once the deal was caught in this way. The draft was sent to one bank. The management of the bank knew that another local bank handled all of the business of the man whose name appeared on the draft. Thinking that he had filled out a wrong blank by mistake, he forwarded the slip of paper to the bank of which the customer was a patron. The manager of the bank at which point the supposed signer of the draft lived happened to be in the city and thought it strange for two days before he had been talking to the customer on the street in his own town.

Inquiries were made and the draft found to be fictitious. The police were notified, and the hotel to which the money was to be sent was watched closely, but the crooked gentleman must have smelled a rat, for he did not materialize. This is only one instance of the work which either one very lively man or else a gang are attempting to do in Alberta. The authorities hope to have them before they do any damage.

Summer Trians

It has been announced that the summer transcontinental service of the C.P.R. will be put in operation on June 14. A decision has not yet been reached as to whether the Trans Canada will be put on again this year.

The Famous Pedestrian

Gentlemen:—

"I was a martyr to catarrh of the head, throat and stomach. I was so bad the doctors feared consumption. I tried many physicians and medicines. A friend suggested Psychine. I tried it and it was the only thing ever did me any good. I am now perfectly well. It is the greatest remedy the world has ever known. I do not need it for my health now but I use it as a strengthener for my walking matches. I owe much of my physical endurance to Psychine."

JAMES REYNOLDS,

Medicine Hat Milling Co., Ltd.

London Opinion of Land Values.

A London financier says: "In many respects the land in Canada, in those districts which are in course of settlement, offers an attraction to investors of a kind almost unique in the history of the world. In the northwest, particularly (though the phenomena are by no means confined to those regions), the prospect of agricultural land continuing to rise in value for an indefinite number of years is so good that nothing but some great and unthinkable national calamity can interfere with the increment that will take place.

WHEAT GROWING.

"One or two points in connection with the wheat trade have a most important bearing upon this question of Canadian land values. There is a duty of one shilling a bushel on all wheat entering the United States. But owing to the exigencies of the flour trade this duty was found to be a clog upon the milling business. American millers bought large quantities of Canadian hard wheat, which indeed, is necessary for blendingwith American grain if the best flour is to be manufactured, and formerly the export of flour from the States was regarded as an expanding trade with immense possibilities. As the result of representations to congress, a rebate on exported flour made from Canadian wheat was granted equaling 90 per cent. of the duty paid. This is the law to-day, but the time has arrived when the exports of either wheat or wheat flour from the States are vanishing quantities. They want all they can grow themselves, and more. The imports of Canadian wheat will grow larger every year, and the Canadian exporters of the grain will have a better and better market as time passes. In these circumstances the price of Canadian wheat, taking one season with another, will average higher, the farmer will make a bigger profit and the wheat-growing land will attain a continually higher value. These special circumstances have to be given due weight when considering the future of Canadian land.

"Another matter of moment is this Owing to the tendency of foodstuffs in general to command higher prices in the world's markets, Canadian farm products all round, indeed everything coming from the soil, from wheat and cattle to timber and paper, will infallibly go up and not down in price, comparing one decade with another. So that, if the stream of immigration into Canada from Europe were to fall away to insignificant number there would still be an influx of American farmers over the boundary and the value if agricultural land would still trend upward.

SPECULATIVE AREAS.

"In this connection of question, it must, of course, be understood that, unless an investor is prepared to wait for an indefinite number of years, he should confine his selections to areas within practicable distance of: (1) A railway already in existence; (2) a railway in courge of building, the completion of which is assured; (3) some other adequate means of transport. Among the latter, sometimes a stretch of navigable waterway—lake or river—may be as good, or better, than a road. Land outside this category can, of course, be had much cheaper, but the risk of having to wait considerably longer than the prospects of the moment seem to warrant is more than appreciable.

In this connection the question of irrigation may well be mentioned. Although the railway companies and other corporations are carrying out great schemes of irrigation on a large scale, there are numerous areas where irrigation might be undertaken by a modest capitalist with the best prospects of large profits on the outlay, providing the work were carried out under competent technical management. The government, it may be remarked, in such a case would be glad to give away very generous terms to the individual or firm that undertook such work.

TOWNSITES.

"With regard to townsites, the question of selection is one that demands something akin to expert knowledge. So many large and small fortunes have been easily made by speculation in town lots that a host of small capitalists have come into the market whose cupidity was out of all proportian to their judgment.

"Any newcomer to the west bent on speculating on townsites should either know the locality himself tolerably well, have some experience in building land values, or he should take a friend with him that he can trust. A feature of the land-dealing business in Canada just now is the number of Americans who came over look around, for a few weeks, buy some land, and then go back to their homes. Many of these people have in view the emigration northward of a son, or they may, perhaps, later on come themselves, but many buy the land as a lockup, intending to wait a few years and then sell for the best price they can get. It must of course, not be supposed that Canadians and Englishmen are not taking the same advantages, and as regards townsites there is always the risk of undue inflation, either locally or generally, but with regard to good agricultural land within moderately easy range of railway communication there are any amount of opportunities for sound investment over areas. That is the position today, but of course, every year things will change, and the choice will necessarily become more and more limited."

More terrible than war, famine or pestilence is that awful destroyer, that hydra-headed monster, Consumption, that annually sweeps away more of earth's inhabitants than any other single disease known to the human race.

"It is only a cold, a trifling cough," say the careless, as the irritation upon the delicate mucous membrane causes them to back away with an irritable tickling of the throat. When the irritation settles on the mucous surface of the throat, a cough is the result. To prevent Bronchitis or Consumption of the Lungs, do not neglect a cough however slight as the irritation spreading throughout the delicate lining of the sensitive air passages soon leads to fatal results. Royal Templars of Temperance.

The Templars again spent a pleasant and profitable evening at their regular meeting o Monday, May 7. A debate had been arranged for; but of course before the debaters were allowed to take the floor necessary business had to be gone through.

The picnic committee made their report, and on their recommendation the steamboat excursion which was at first thought of was dropped, it being decided to hold the picnic at one of the many spots in the neighborhood of Medicine Hat, suitable for this purpose, on a day in the early part of June.

Report of progress was also made on the Silver Medal contest which is to take place some time in June; and in this connection an interesting proposal was brought forward; namely, that the secretary should get into communication with the council at Maple Creek to see if arrangements could be made for the holding of a couple of gold medal contests—members of each council competing — the first to take place in Medicine Hat on some date to be arranged and the second to beheldat Maple Creek. This was certainly an interesting proposal, for if it materializes it cannot have other than a good effect. Not only will it create a healthy rivalry between the two councils but it will also bring the work of the order welltothe front both here and at Maple Creek.

The debate—subject of which was, "Resolved that the rich man has more happiness than the poor man"—was a spirited affair, the debaters refuting their opponents' arguments and corating their own in good s[pirit] to the end the decision rested v[ote] negatives, so that evidently t[he] ouncil, who were the arbitrat[ors] their faitk to the poor man's [hap]or happiness despite all that w[as] d by the other side about the and pleasure that money command. LOUISE BREHANEY COMPANY

(Nelson Daily News, May 20.)

The audience at the Opera House last night was delighted with the programme put on by the Louise Brehany Company. They encored rapturously each and every number and were not satisfied on more than one occasion with a single recall but insisted on a double repeat. Some of the best musicians in the city, to say nothing of that important personage the man on the street, concurred in declaring after the performance that it was the best concert they had ever seen put on in this city.

Such praise might seem to be superlative, but, after all, it is not a bit above the merits of the performers. All who did not take advantage of the opportunity will regret it until they have anotherchance of hearing the talented quartette.

Bad Case of Piles Cured by Zam-Buk.

Sufferers from Piles will be interested in the following testimony of Mr. Garfield Logan, 149 Welland Avenue, St. Catharines, Ont. He says: "For years I was a great sufferer from protruding bleeding piles. They got so bad that it was impossible for me to walk or sit down without a great deal of suffering. The pain I endured was dreadful. I tried everything and the doctors told me I would have to be operated upon before I could be cured. I do not think that there was one remedy that I did not try, but they failed to cure me. One day I received a sample of Zam-Buk and tried that. I got some relief and decided to give it a good trial. I bought three boxes and before I had finished the third box I was completely cured. Zam-Buk salve has saved me hundreds of dollars because I had decided to have the operation if Zam-Buk did not cure me. I have recommended Zam-Buk to a number of my friends and am always praising Zam-Buk."

Zam-Buk succeeds because it goes right to the root of the trouble. Healing, soothing and antiseptic, it is nature's remedy for all skin diseases. All stores and druggists sell it at 50c., or from the Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

Psychine Missionaries

A friend of Dr. Slocum Remedies writes: "Send a bottle of Psychine to Mrs. W. . They have a daughter in decline, and I believe it would help her. I have mentioned your remedies to the family, and also cited some of the miraculous cures accomplished inside the last 18 years, of which I have knowledge."

The second period that constitutes a special drain on the system is during pregnancy.

The third and the one most liable to leave heart and nerve troubles is during "change of life."

In all three periods Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will prove of wonderful value to tide over the time. Mrs. James King, Cornwall, Ont., writes: "I was troubled very much with heart trouble—the cause being to a great extent due to "change of life." I have been taking your Heart and Nerve Pills for some time, and mean to continue doing so, as I can truthfully say they are the best remedy I have ever used for building up the system. You are at liberty to use this statement for the benefit of other sufferers."

"Gentlemen,—I have pleasure in stating that I have used $18.00 worth of Psychine, and as a result was cured of very serious throat and lung trouble.

My case was a most difficult one, and the doctors had practically said that I could not get well. I tried Psychine, and it did me so much good that I continued its use until I had taken $18.00 worth, with the result that I am now a new man physically. I have gained thirty-five pounds.

"It is with the greatest confidence that I recommend Psychine to all who are afflicted with throat or lung trouble.

Yours truly, C. A. PINKHAM.

Mounted Police Notes.

Corporal Barschal was in from Josephburg yesterday, and took out with him the remounts for the detachment.

Corporal Meyrick was in yesterday from Medicine Lodge.

Inspector Burnett was in the city Thursday. He drove out with Inspector Parket to Mr. Marguesson's ranch, where they purchased half a dozen very fine remounts.

Geo. Meiers of North Dakota was in town on Friday and Saturday, collecting evidence in connection with the burning down of his barn.

Jacob Merkel, Jr., Fred Neiman, Jacob Reib and Christian Gill were in the city on Friday. They called at the Mounted Police barracks and after seeing the Inspector said they would call again. They did not put in a second appearance however. They gave out that a deposit of $200 was to be handed over to the Inspector, this to form a reward to be granted any person who would give information which might lead to the identification of the criminal who set fire to John Lehr's house.

Under the fiat of the Attorney-General, Karl Otto has been summoned to appear before Inspector Parker for breaking the Lord's Day by working on Sunday on his farm. The case is set for Thursday morning at Irvine. The Dreamers, of which Otto is a member, keep their Sabbath on the Saturday.

The preliminary hearing in theBeil case begins this afternoon at two o'clock.

GETTING AMERICAN CAPITAL

E. F. Wheaton left on 97 last Saturday night for Spokane via Calgary. It is his intention to interest American capital in the development of this section, and he hopes to open several offices in the various central points in the States for the sale of Canadian investment securities. Inasmuch as Mr. Wheaton has been in the investment business in the States, his knowledge of that field and of the people there who have money to invest, as well as his connections in that line, should bring results for his enterprise in this territory. Speaking to a Times representative before leaving Mr. Wheaton said: "I like the City of Medicine Hat and its people very much, and the only drawback to a new era of prosperity for the town seems to be that there are not so many newcomers flowing into the town asthere should be. This condition will not change until something is done for the industrial development of Medicine Hat. There should be more manufacturing done here, and the only way to get that, seems to be to go to the States and encourage the small manufacturers there who have been held down by the trusts to come here, where power is cheap and the field is large. Moreover, if an industrial revival comes to pass here, it will make the real estate field here very profitable. In consequence I am going to try and build up an organization in the States to sell Medicine Hat realty and securities, and if I succeed, it will be a mighty good thing for us all."

This personal contact with the money market of the United States will undoubtedly ho more to interest capital in this city than any amount of long range firing.

THE BREHANY CONCERT.

The most select audience that has ever collected in Medicine Hat heard the Brehany Company in the City Hall on Saturday night. It was a delightful concert, gaining pleasure from the surroundings. The City hall seats only 800, but it is clean bright and airy, and the seats are usable.

There were four real artists, Louise Brehany, Edith Adams, Alice McClung and Maximilian Dick, and, without belittling the first three, the best artist was the man. Louise Brehany, whose main advertisement is her range of three octaves, has a beautiful mezzo-soprano voice that is unfortunately showing the strain of long concert work. She is good now but that she has been better is evident. With characteristic reluctance she is being forced to depart from the three-octave voice, and on Saturday sang a song, "given to show Miss Brehany's range, sung in three distinct voices." To use a western-ism, it is no reflection on Miss Brehany's old-time voice, to say that the lease on the range she made use of on Saturday expired some time ago. The freakiness of "three distinct voices" is the last effort of a former accomplishment. But as long as she remained mezzo, her wonderful ear and fluent execution made her singing a delight.

Maximilian Dick is a master of his instument. His technique is superb but it is where it should be the means to the end, not the end itself as is too often the case. In the trios he was hampered at times by the weak pianofort. Miss McClung is a gifted pianist and splendid accompanist but was weak in her attacks in the trios. Miss Adam the cellist, is a stirling artist whose playing was satisfying.

E. Bourgeois, The Watchmaker, is selling jewelery at the lowest prices, as he intends to do only a repairing business. Any kind of watches, and clocks and jewelery carefully repaired.

Citizens across the track have been complaining that of late they have been getting air mixed in with the water, causing knocking in the pipes. The city authorities say it is all hot air.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correspondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Seven Persons

Our store opened Tuesday last and judging from the number of teams we see going to and from they must be doing a thriving business.

Eggs are twenty cents a dozen in the market here.

J. H. Apker visited the Hut and returned with a new breaking plow.

Mr. Ullery has broken fifty acres of land for Mr. Royer, whose homestead is near Mr. Peter Welch's, and now expects to break one hundred for himself.

Invitations are out for a grand dance at the ranch of Mr. H. H. Foster, in celebration of their fifth wedding anniversary.

Quite a nice gathering met at Mr. T. O. Nestigs yesterday to celebrate the seventy-second birthday of Mr. Iverson, father of Mrs. Nesting.

The C.P.R. have given Philip Lousley the right to erect a fence along their right of way, through his land at their expense.

Major Hollinger made two trips from their ranch to Seven Persons today (Saturday.)

Irvine.

The great rains that visited this district last week have certainly put a different aspect on things in general, from what it was before. Crops were looking very backward.

The new addition to the Golden West Hotel will certainly make a great difference to this place, and will without a doubt be one of the finest country hotels along the C.P.R. giving accommodation to the travelling public.

Miss host at the Alberta hotelgave a dance in the Masonic Hall on Monday the 25th inst. and the rainwhich fell in the early part of the evening prevented quite a number from attending this social function, but with all the bad rain there were quite a number in attendance at same, which was kept up until the early hours of Tuesday morning, dancing music was supplied by Messrs. L. H. Dawson, Jim Crawford, H. Gusey, Walter Cooper. Ice cream was also served at the dance.

This rain should certainly make the real estate men smile, as up to the present there are quite a number of settlers in here that are waiting to see rain, before they have any intentions of purchasing land, there has certainly been a good rain,and they will do a good shower as we send this.

Thevillage of Irvine's new chemical fire engine has arrived and the only thing we are waiting for now is the man that sold it to us to drill our brigade, and show us the working parts of same. The engine has been here since May 22nd, but the man must still be in Winnipeg from which place he said he was following the engine very closely.

There is talk amongst the Anglican church people that they are intending to have a dramatic entertainment in the near future, and the proceeds af samo will go towardsthe purchasing of a new organ for St. George's Church at Irvine, which at the present time is very badly needed. The details of this proposed entertainment will be published later.

Dr. Ferguson has taken a trip down East for a week or so. We understand that this is on vesy important business.

Church of England service will be held in Saint George's church at Irvine at 7.30 p.m. on Sunday, June 7th, when all are welcome.

Elora

When J—— was a baby,
The ladies all did say,
He was a darling joker,
But was always in the way.
Nice stories they would tell him
With sugar in a reg,
And in his little mouth,
They would put the sugar bag.
Last week he was twenty-one years old,
Said he, it is time for me
To settle down in married life
So he started out to see.
He shaved the whiskers off his face
And saddled up the grey,
He only rode a couple of miles,
But didn't get back that day.

Pap. and Cap. Walker butchered last week.

I noticed a sewing machine and the dressmaker going up to "Dads" last week. That looks like business.

Mr. David Hamilton is gaing to build a handsome residence on his farm. Some of the material is on the ground and Mr. John Mewton is assisting Davie to haul the balance. We understand that the contract for the building has been let to Mr. Herbert Doane. There's nothing like keeping things in the family, Davie.

Bob Armstrong and Barker Smith made a business trip to the city Monday. It must have rained very hard as both sides were wet when they arrived home.

Some one took possession of Mr. Colter's shack on Sunday and if we can judge by appearances, they must have had a fine time. Mannie had been visiting at E. J. Smith's and when he returned home about six o'clock he found everything in the house turned upside down and the floor covered with mud and empty bottles. Come again boys when the owner is at home.

Woolchester

Miss Jessie Johnstone returned home last week.

Sheep-shearing operations commence shortly at Mr. Shaw's ranch.

A Dakota family have filed on a quarter between Mr. Walker and Mr. Shaw.

Mr. Jack Fenton has been hauling lumber to fix up his place at Willow Lake.

A man with a sheep shearing rig passed through here the other day, he said he was looking for Eagle Plume" it is possible he was a trifle mixed.

Choir practice came off last night at Mr. Doane's farm. Owing to the stormy weather, there was a smaller attendance than usual.

The Doane boys have finished fencing their place.

All the grain in the neighborhood shows signs of coming away early, the fields are looking fine with the green blades sprouting up.

Mr. Newton has completed fencing his land. He is now busy building a stone addition to his house.

The new English church is expected to be opened next month, the work is being pushed ashead rapidly.

Mr. Muntie has removed into their new house nearer the soulee.

Mr. Ad. Day took a trip out to his ranch at Sage Creek last Friday.

Eagle Butte

Messrs. Wm. Babb and Sheridan visited the Jenkinson ranch on Monday, the 25th inst.

Mr. Wallace of the Presbyterian church held service here on Sunday the 24th inst., which was attended by a large number of local residents. He delivered an eloquent sermon on the incident of the Woman of Samaria from St. John's gospel.

Mr. Gordon of Medicine Hat was in the district on Sunday, the 24th.

We learn on excellent authority that the Stacey survey party are making first-rate headway in the vicinity of the McLean ranch.

Mr. Lawrence Seaton's round-up started out on the 24th inst. We trust their ardour will not be extinguished by the disagreeable effects of the weather, notably that of Monday.

Cleve. Pruitt left this district to return to the city on Sunday.

Last week's showers came as a God-send to those who were not out in it. Mr. J. Dempster derived at least half a day's solid enjoyment from his irrigation system!

The local dairy, under the supervision of Messrs. Clarke, Hodges & Co., is making good progress and judging from the present bright outlook the enterprising partners anticipate a prosperous season.

Miss Weir paid a short visit to the ranch on the Little Plume last Friday by way of a brief intermission in her ardous scholastic duties.

The Rev. Hector Fraser, late of Gleichen has taken up a homestead in this part of the country on the s.w. quarter of section 7, township 8, range 3. The majority of his attention will be devoted to the district from the Cypress Hills to the boundary line in the pursuance of his calling.

While visiting the store on Tuesday we noticed what may be called the latest thing out in the form of irrigation systems. The scheme employed by Mr. F. R. Kettlewell is the embodiment of simplicity and effectiveness and the machinery is calculated to give the best results possible. It consists of a pump, a barrel and some ordinary iron piping. We neighbors are advised to study the system carefully.

The ingenuity displayed in the construction of the apparatus is worthy only of such afertile brain as that of the owner. The only draw back appears to be the lack of driving power.

There seems to be some doubt as to the identity of the person who couldn't hit a badger at five yards range and subsequently discussed the advisability of inaugurating a rifle club for the district. We think he cannot have overlooked the urgent need of practice.

Corporal Barschel of the Josephsburg detachment of the Mounted Rifles and his two satellites are busy day and night. The "dreamers" seem to be under control now but will it last?

Miss Viola Hester is honouringthis district with a visit which we hope will be a long one. Hearty congratulations are extended to her on the recovery of her health after a dangerous and trying time in the hospital. Miss Hester is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Kettlewell and the sister of the latter.

A certain happy event between a well-known couple takes place early in June; best wishes say everyone. By the way, Mrs. Dempster gives a dance in the Police Barracks on the third of June.

We ought to be pretty good people here now; last Sunday the preachers got a bit tangled up, and we had two services instead of one (at one sitting) owing to some mistake with the time arrangement, and now the Rev. Hector Fraser has taken up a quarter in the coulee between Mr. Dempster's and the late Sergeant Allan's place.

Mr. Garlough has constructed an irrigation ditch and his land looks in good shape with the copious supply of water.

Mrs. Johnstone, from Nova Scotia, arrived at the sawmill a short time ago to take over house keeping duties.

Mr. W. Nicol has about twenty goslings and they are getting along well

Mr. Dempster being through seeding, is going to break another fifty acres for summer fallow.

The S. E. round up started off last week. They are goers, ain't they?

One man was seen breaking up wagons last week, but he has put it right by buying a new rig.

Y. M. C. Exhibition

Gymnastic Performance to be Presented in a Few Days

The First Annual

Friday evening, June 5th, is the date set for the first performance of the Young Men's Club.

It is nearly seven years since the last performance of this nature was given in Medicine Hat by the members of the Medicine Hat Amateur Association, and those of the residents of the city who lived here at that time will remember with pleasure their entertainments. There never has been since, any amateur performance that met with anything like the approbation these did. The Lethbridge News of May 26th, 1902 had the following to say about the exhibition given there on May 24th of that year. "There never was a bigger crowd in Oliver's hall, than that which witnessed the performanceance of the Medicine Hat Athletic Association, nor a more gentlemanly lot of fellows on the stage. The young amateurs went through their various feats with an ease and finish that suggested plenty of reserve ability, and held the interest of the crowd from start to finish. If the visit of these young athletes has the effect of stimulating the youth of this place into the formation of a similar organization we feel that a great benefit has been done the town."

Those who were familiar with the shows put up by the old organization, and have seen the practicework of the Young Men's Club, are satisfied that the latter combination will compare very favorably with their predecessors, and at the matinee tend the performance on Friday evening will be amply repaid for so doing.

The prices are set at 50c and 25c The plan is now open at Souch's Drug Store. Those who have secured tickets can exchange them for reserved seats at Souch's.

The programme will be as follows:

1.—Overture by orchestra.
2.—Speech by Mayor Cousins.
3.—Dumb Bell Exercise.
4.—Flying Rings.
5.—Club Swinging.
6.—Horizontal Bars.
7.—Wrestling.
8.—Parallel Bars.
9.—Wand Drill.
10.—Trapeze.
11.—Boxing.
12f—Diving over chairs.
13.—The House of Mirth.

There will be a couple of funny, clever clowns.

The performance will be held on Friday, June 5th, in the opera house commencing at 9 p.m. sharp.

Death of Mr. Waldock

One of the Best Known and Most Respected Citizens Passes Away

With the death of Mr. Waldock last Wednesday morning, Medicine Hat lost one of the best liked of her citizens. A man of sterling character, a fearless Christian, a friend to everyone, and an eager supporter of every movement for the prosperity of Medicine Hat, his place cannot be filled immediately by any other citizen. Every one knew Mr. Waldock and everyone liked him. His illness was the cause of hourly enquiries, his death, of common regret.

The deceased was born on Dec. 25, 1849, at Bassingbourne, Bedfordshire, England, where his father, John Risely Waldock inherited some of the largest flour mills and brick yards in the county, at Bassingbourne, Astwick and Stotfold; his mother before marriage was Ann Hopkins, of Bassing Bourne.

Coming to Canada as a young man, in 1872, Mr. Waldock first settled in Brantford, Ont., where he engaged for a number of years in the grocery business, subsequently moving west to Birdtail, Man., in 1879, and later to Shoal Lake, being variously engaged first in farming, and later in cheese manufacturing at those places. He was married on Dec. 29, 1875, to Agnes Nesbitt, of Woodstock, Ont.

In 1890, the lure of the west brought Mr. Waldock with his family to our city, and here he became one of the pioneers of development and of progress, both in the field of commercial expansion and the higher realm of moral and religious betterment. It was through his efforts and those of Mr. C. Lean that the Baptist church in this city was established, and ever since the nucleus of an organization was formed in the first year of Mr. Waldock's residence here, he has been an untiring worker in its behalf. He was an active member of the Temperance and Moral Reform League, of which he held the secretaryship at the time of his death. In fact, every effort which made for social right eousness and a higher ideal of citizenship met with his encouragement and support. His was one of those deeply religious natures which are manifested, not in an aloofness from the things of the world, not in a spiritual pride, but in a broad Christian charity and kindliness towards all. "God and my neighbor" were the watchwords of his life.

In politics Mr. Waldock was a lifelong and loyal worker in the Conservative cause. He was at the time of his death a member of the Knights of Pythias, The Sons of England, and the United Commercial Travellers' Association, and, until a year ago, the A.O.U.W.

He is mourned by his widow and two daughters, Mrs. D. L. McGibbon of Montreal and Mrs. Platt of this city. His son "Mont" Waldock predeceased his father by ten years.

Mr. Waldock has two brothers, Mr. S. O. Waldock of Kettleby, Ont., and Mr. F. W. Waldock of Hitchin, Herts, England.

The funeral on Friday afternoon was attended by almost every business man in the city. Representatives from every church, every society, every class to show their esteem for the broad man whose work had been felt in every quarter, and in every good cause. Rev. Mr. Bryant conducted the services, and a long line of carriages followed to the cemetery. The pass bearers were Messrs. Niblock, Drinnan, Mayberry, Sissons, Hutchinson and Lean.

Several out-of-town men attended the funeral, including Mr. Holden of the Canada Rubber Co., Winnipeg; Mr. Libby of the same company, Calgary; Mr. Chapin, Calgary; Mr. Darker of Canada Life Ins. Co. of Calgary.

Local Notes

The boat left early Saturday morning with, in addition to the crew, the following passengers on board, Harry Yuill, W. B. Marshall, F. L. Crawford, T. Tweed, Alf. Hunter. Some of these gentlemen will go as far as Saskatoon, possibly all the way to Lake Winnipeg.

Since a week ago yesterday there has been a rainfall of 2.85 inches.

Mr. C. A. Magrath, Conservative nominee for this riding, was in the city on his way back from Ottawa.

The Canadian Brick Co., which was burnt out some weeks ago expects to be manufacturing this week, with their new plant.

Saturday's show at the Opera House was called off about a score of men paying for admission. On Friday, most of the ladies had left the house before the end of the first act, and most of the remainder left at the close of the act. It is hardly probable that this company will again visit the city, for which return thanks.

A workman was partially buried by a cave-in in a water trench on Toronto Street. He was not seriously injured.

A horse belonging to Mr. Lussier had to be shot yesterday morning on account of bad cuts it received from a barb wire fence.

Some fake Assyrian priests are going the round of the cities and towns, collecting money for missions, they say.

Calgary Herald.—Mr. and Mrs. W. H. McNeely, Medicine Hat are guests at the Alberta Hotel.

Red Deer News—E. R. D. Porter, accountant of the Merchants Bank, has been promoted to Manager pro tem of the Red Deer branch. It would be difficult to find a more popular appointment as Mr. Porter is a general favorite and we congratulate him on his appointment.

Lethbridge Herald.—Miss J. McLeay went to Medicine Hat last night.

At the meeting of the Grand Lodge of the Masonic Order for Alberta, held in Edmonton, O. W. Kealy was appointed Grand Registrar, Dr. Smyth was made a member of the board for general purposes, and H. L. Tweed was made Grand Pursuivant.

Mr. F. J. Deane, formerly editor of the Nelson News was in the city on Sunday.

Mrs. Waldock desires to take this opportunity of expressing her sincere thanks for the many acts of kindness shown to her in her recent bereavement, particularly to the members of the General Hospital, the staff of the Hospital, for their conscious care of her late husband and unlimited kindness to herself.

F. Shipman, a world known theatrical manager was in town yesterday trying to arrange for a visit of the Kilties Band. Mr. Shipman volunteered the remark that the large cards printed for the Louise Brehany concert were as good a piece of theatrical printing as he had seen. The Times does it right, always.

A memorial service to the late Mr. Waldock was conducted in the Baptist church on Sunday morning, by the Rev. H. Bryant.

The Baptist church pulpit will be occupied next Sunday by Rev. E.J. Hodgins, B.A., in the morning; in the evening by Rev. J. H. Johnston M.A., B.D. Both ministers are attending the Methodist Conference.

Father Leduc, Bishop of St. Albert, visited the city yesterday.

The services for Pentecost will be held in St. Patrick:s church next Sunday. After next Sunday the morning servile in St. Barnabas church will commence at ten o'clock. Sunday School will he held in the morning during the hot summer months instead of in the afternoon.

L. H. Hopper has returned srom his eastern tour and is taking up a position with the rasly at Bassano. He passed through the city at noon today.

Miss Alexander and Mr. Grayson are visiting at Mr. Geo. Lait's ranch.

Last night's Council meeting report will appear in next week's issue.

Tomorrow evening the marriage takes place in the Baptist Church, at nine o'clock, of Miss Emily Van and Mr. Bruce Atwood of Creston, B.C. They intend leaving on the Crow train for Cranbrook, B.C., where they will visit Mr. Atwood's parents and then proceed to their future home in Creston.

Mrs. J. M. McDonald of Detroit, is visiting her parents Mr. and Mrs. J. Kennedy.

A psychological society was formed on Friday evening, with a membership of eight. S. McLellan was elected president, J. J. McKim, secretary.

The fire alarm this afternoon was a false alarm from box 23 near the flour mill. The glass was not broken so that it must have been something wrong with the wires.

Mr. T. O. Kennedy of Philadelphia is a guest of his brother, Mr. J. Kennedy, Main St.

One of the surveyors on the Government survey near the border has been brought to the Hospital, ill with typhoid fever.

C. E. Archer was in the city on Saturday from Sage Creek.

Those who heard Prof. Campbell last fall will be glad to know that he is coming back to give another lecture on his system of farming. Prof. Campbell has been engaged by the Government to deliver a series of lectures in Albertaf

The first will be given in this city on Monday, June 15th, at 2 p.m.

ATHLETICS.

CITY VS. C. P. R.

This the first cricket match of the season was played in the baseball grounds on Saturday, and after a very interesting game ended in a win for the city by 16 runs.

Neither side was strong with the bat, though A. Gardner (11) and Clements (15) played well for their respective sides.

During the game Baker and Jebson each captured 11 wickets; Watkins took 9 and A. Gardner 8.

ALBERTA LACROSSE SCHEDULE

June 4—The Hat at Lethbridge.
June 16—Lethbridge at Calgary.
June 22.—Calgary at Medicine Hat
July 1—Lethbridge at The Hat.
July 7—Medicine Hat at Calgary.
July 14—Calgary at Lethbridge.
July 21—Lethbridge at The Hat.
Aug. 1—Medicine Hat at Calgary.
Aug. 7—Calgary at Lethbridge.
Aug. 13—Calgary at The Hat.
Aug. 20—The Hat at Lethbridge.
Aug. 27—Lethbridge at Calgary.

The date of the Calgary match match in July and of the Lethbridge match in August, down for the 7th July and 20th August respectively) are not definitely settled, and other dates may have to be arranged to fit in with the Dominion Fair programme and that of Lethbridge fair. Things are unsettled in regard to intermediate league. So far as Medicine Hat is concerned, a schedult might be drawn up right away. It remains to be seen whether Maple Creek and Swift Current can put up teams.

Maple Creek Signal.—The lacrosse club has received several communications lately from the Secretary of the Saskatchewan Lacrosse Association at Regina, asking them to enter the western division with Medicine Hat. On Wednesday evening at a meeting held in the fire hall it was decided to enter the league along with Medicine Hat and play a double schedule.

The City baseball club has re-organized. T. H. Navin has resigned the managership, as he cannot be sure of being in the city for the games. C. S. Pingle has been asked to manage. Dever will be given a position in the city so that he can always be on hand for the games. Barker will soon be back to catch. With these improvements and a shifting of players in the field the City team will make them all hustle.

There was no game on Friday night as the City team was in the process of re-organization and lacked some of its players.

ALBERTA PLAYERS ARE MAKING GOOD.

Almost without exception all the men who played in the Western Canada Baseball League last year and who are playing in the North Western League this year are more than making good.

Si Bennett, the Hebrew right fielder who was with Edmonton last year has boulder fielding good, run up a batting average, making .378. He is second on the list of league batters, the other man having the very high average of .42.

Si is with Butte, as also is Lussi who held down the first sack for the Esquimos last year, Lussi is also getting along well, and has a batting average of .268.

Chandler, who held down third for Calgary last year, almost owns Spokane, and is a big favorite. He has been hitting well at a .279 clip and his fielding is nothing like as erratic as it was at times last year.

Huelen, who as Hamilton, was the real manager of the champion Medicine Hat team last year, is managing the Spokane Indians this year and is making good.

Rogers, who caught for Lethbridge is receiving for Spokane, and hitting at .267. Mackin of the same team is slamming .265, while Wessler and Kippert, who both played in the Western Canada League, are batting .192 and .177 respectively.

The following is taken from the Seattle Post-Intelligencer.

"It Rill be interesting to see what Kid Huelen has done with the Spokane Indians. At the beginning of the season he had a lot of new material most of it from the Twilight League. Ribht here it must be said that the Twilight League must have had a lot of star performers. Butte did not have first choice, yet Lussi who has proved a fine first baseman and dangerous batter, and Si Bennett, the sensational left fielder and base runner, both came from the land of twilight.

"Spokane really had the pick of the players from theNorth and they took Chandler, Mackin and one or two others. Rekorts from all quarters are to the effect that all of the new men are making good.

"Eddie Quinn, manager of Spokane, made this statement regarding his team:

"While I lost a lot of good players last fall I was fortunate in securing good ones. I think you will find that when the team settles down to business it will be stronger than last year and that it will play better inside ball."

"As the team is now made the following are strangers to Seattle fans: Stevens, right field; Kippert, center field; Mackin, second base; Sturgeon, third base; Mullins, pitcher; and Chandler a star wherever he is put.

"It may be that Chandler will not be able to play the first few games in Seattle. He has been on the hospital list for several days, and in recent games he has not been in the line-up. Quinn says that he is a peach, an intelligent player and one of the most timely batters in the league. Otherwise than what Quinn says everything goes to show that Mackin is a first class man. Stevens comes from Milwaukee, in the American Association, where he was a .228 hitter, which should let him in close to the .300 mark in the Northwestern League on the basis of official comparisons. In fielding he was good for a clip a trifle under .950.

The management of the Dominion Exhibition of Calgary have been successful in securing a unique and interesting educational exhibit which will be one of the greatest attractions at the fair and which will be appreciated by all who may be privileged to attend.

It is the exhibit of the Garbutt Business College which has been established in Alberta but nine months, but which through its enterprise, superiority and thoroughness of its courses, and the loyalty of its former students, has grown in this short time to be the largest school of its kind in Calgary and possibly in the Province.

All who attend the Fair will be sure, therefore, to see this interesting exhibit.

A TALK ON ADVERTISING

Advertising and news are first cousins.

The railroad and the stage coach are grandchild and grandfather.

Four out of five advertisers still use stage coach methods. The agency that distributes news has the quickest, cheapest and most effective machinery for distributing advertising. This agency is the newspaper.

The man who is passing your shop window is going somewhere. He is on some other errand. If you want to catch him when he is not in a hurryput your shop window in the newspaper, a few articles at a time. You can make a hundred and fifty thousand people look at this every day, and with much better selling results than if that hundred and fifty thousand walked by your shop one by one.

I know a retail store in one of our large cities, a branch of an English house, which until the autumn of 1906 was managed by an Englishman; austere, conservative, dignified; a man who would have been shocked to see his shop advertised in an American newspaper. He had an exclusive trade, and the shop has an excellent street location. His net profits amounted to about $20,000. The Englishman died. His assistant, an aggressive young American, took charge. He advertised; advertised continually in the best local newspapers. Last year this exclusive shop made a net profit of over $80,000.

This is a complete case the facts of which I personally know. The Englishman depended upon the quality of his goods, and his beautifully crested stationery, and his attractive shop window, and his perpendicular-backed dress-parade clerks; all of which were above criticism. The young American put the whole show into the newspaper, admission free.

Show me ten shops which advertise regularly in a newspaper, and I will show you nine that are making money. The failure of the tenth is probably due to bad management of some sort.

Some people value goods by the price they pay; others by the shop in which they buy; others by the effect the goods have upon their neighbors. It is only the common work-a-day sensible people who value goods by the goods. If you want all four classes as customers it is your business as an advertiser to make the cap fit.—Ex.

In all there were present ten officers, forty-two delegates, and nineteen visitors.

The opening meeting was held on Wednesday morning, Mrs. Dolmage presiding. Mrs. J. H. Laird called the roll and read the minutes. It was moved by Mrs. Chowan, seconded by Mrs. Bellamy, that an address of welcome be given to the deaconess Miss Haddock, of Moose Jaw. Committees were appointed, after which memorial resolutions were read, a memorial service being conducted by Mrs. (Rev.) C. Brown of Regina. The meeting came to a close with a praise and sacramental service conducted by the Rev. A. C. Farrell.

In the afternoon Mrs. Ferrier gave a report of her work during the past year as corresponding secretary. This showed an increase in the annual membership of the auxiliary from 940 to 1152. There are 113 life members as compared with 87 of last year. From 483 the number of members who have subscribed to the missionary Outlook has increased to 544. Rest fund is $110.20, increase of $26.70. Easter offerings $705.04 increase $97.54. Total raised $4,-718.76.

Mrs. Knowles gave a report of the young people's work, striking a very hopeful note. The amount biven in to branch treasurer was $1,156.26, an increase of $130.89.

After an interesting and profitable discussion of younz people's work, the treasurer read her report, which augured well for the future of the missionary movement in the Canadian Northwest.

On the subject of systematic giving, a highly suggestive paper was read by Mrs. Jarrett, shortly after the conclusion of which the conference adjourned.

In the evening the Rev. A. C. Farrell took the chair. Mrs. A. Patterson read an address of welcome, which was replied to by Mrs. (Rev.) H. McConnell. The corresponding secretary, Mrs. Rev. T. Ferrier then read the report as follows: —

Despite the repeated cry of "hard times" our women of the north west branch have nobly put forth an extra effort and I believe in some cases at the cost of self-sacrifice, thus enabling me to report to you to-night an advance in funds over the past year.

To me it has been a splendid lesson in faith and trust. As one after another of the Auxiliary reports came in reporting a decrease I would exclaim, "Oh! we are going to be behind this year," we officers were almost afraid to find our totals. But we found as usual, that God was far better to us than our fears.

Yet we must not forget that the financial side of our work is only secondary. Our first motive being the "engaging of the efforts of Christian women in the evangelization of heathen women and children" and along this line I think our organization's have taken a decided step forward.

Is it not possible that feeling the financial depression has led us all to pray more? Has this not been the secret of our success?

Such reports as the following have been sent me, "God has blessed us in our work as much progress has been made, not so much in increase in membership, as in the interest taken in our work." "The members seem to be quite interested in the work." "God has indeed graciously blessed our work and we go forth into the new year with renewed energy and an earnest desire to work for Christ who did so much for us." "With God's blessing we are looking for great awakenings." "Spiritually our Society is approaching high water mark, as our members would rather miss the program than the devotional exercises." "We have very spiritual and helpful meetings." Do you not think we should take courage and go forward?

Another cause for great rejoicing is that one of our bright and much beloved girls has offered herself as a candidate for our work, Miss Edna Speers of Brandon has been accepted by our Board and goes to Chinathis fall as our representative. Brandon Auxiliary is proud and thankful to have one of their number so noble, and consecrated to this work. May we gathered here tonight wish her God speed and assure her of our support and prayers, as we go through her, to carry the blessed news to one corner of the vineyard, may their be other mothers here so honored as to have daughters follow in her footsteps.

During the past year seven new auxiliaries have been organized at the following places: Craik, Grace Church, Edmonton, Rocanville, Nesbitt, Millville, Red Deer and Bradwardine.

I am sorry to be obliged to report Okotoks and Qu'Appelle disbanded, leaving us 51 auxiliaries, increase 5.

New circles have been organized at McDougall Church, Edmonton; Weyburn and Regina. These, with Brandon circle, making a total of four.

Five new mission bands have reported from Olds, Lethbridge, Medora and East Saskatoon. Total 26, increase five.

Total membership of mission bands circles and auxiliaries; Auxiliary 1264; Bands, 838; Circles, 897. Total 2,999.

Total receipts for the year, $4,-718.76.

Mrs. Dolmage's report on the Woman's Missionary Society was as follows:

Beloved Comrades:—

We praise God for the privilege of thus assembling in our Third Annual Convention, and for the opportunity of looking into each others faces and to feel the warm hand clasp. Although scattered all over our extensive branch area throughout the large Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, toiling in our several Societies, we have never been far apart. The thought of our hearts has been always the same, and "Mutal thought gives mutual presence." We would not forget the recruits who have come to our assistance with noble effort as they yet may lead. We are pleased also to he'd this Convention in the Alberta Province in the beautiful city of Medicine Hat, whose natural facilities for heating and lighting have been coveted throughout all new Canada. Your churches and educational institutions speak your interest in all that tends for the up-building of character, and teaches your most effective work will be done amongst the children.

Our W. M. S. is enlisting the sympathy and effort of women for women, and by its complete organization prompts the gathering of women into little geoups for study, plan and prayer and the missionary training of the young for the spread of Christ's Kingdom. This augura well for consolidation into one great Sisterhood the women of Canadian Methodism.

This annual gathering is perhaps the brigtest spot in the year's work, as we meet to rejoice with each other over successes and sympathize over difficulties, where we gather to discuss methods learn successes and to avoid mistakes. Our various reports give food for thought and material for representation to our several Societies, and the enthusiasm created is not merely temporary, but eventuates in building up our cause both financially and spiritually. The missionary movement is the greatest happening in the world today. Its growth since the days of Carey is magic. It was my privilege last summer to listen to Mrs. Katherine Stevenson of Boston speak on the subject of Temperance. That she might illustrate forcibly the real progress thus temperance warfare was achieving and thus bring conviction to pessimistic hearts that would mean encouragemeot, she led us back in through to seventy years ago and made comparisons which were most conclusive evidences of the real growth of prohibition, thought and sentiment. In this missionary movement, if we were to take a retrospect of the last thirty years even the last decade, we would be compelled to exclaim "How marvellous." "What hath God wrought?"

It was forty years after the new era opened under Carey before women began to organize. Previous to this all the organized missionary work was carried on by men. An indifference had been all too prevalent among the women of the church and they were content to smile whentheir husbands gave an annual contribution in response to the usual annual appeal, and then dismiss the subject, the organization of our W.M.S. has laid upon their hearts the sense of responsibility which comes with a knowledge of the need of their efforts. Our organization is pre-eminent educationally and spiritual and is surely proving to be the leaven hid in the meal, whose permeating influence is bursting forth into those powerful movements which do not hesitate to proclaim their lofty aim, even the evangelization of the world in this generation. Time will not permit us to refer to the great movement and upheavals in the world at large, but will say it means great encouragement for the friends of missions. Surely the fields are already white to harvest and the master is calling, "Hasten, thrust in your sickle."

We find the year's work of our W. M. S. on the home side, and presents a bright record. As we review the tabulated successes of the ten branches of the Dominion, the statistics become more interesting. Especially when we consider the high standard which special effort the two years previous placed before us. There has been considerable enlarging of area by organization as reports enumerate an increase of 43 new societies making a total of 989 Auxiliaries with a membership of 28,045. Our Circles and Bands report an enrollmeot of 16,000. The income from all sources this year totals $97,501.96, and increase of $4165.62. Of this increase, our own Northwest Branch contributed a major share, about one-fourth of the whole.

This giving presupposes some knowledge of the work, and information gained through the reading of our missionary periodicals. Thus our Society is manifesting a far sighted business policy in the publication and circulation of literature. The literature compares the increase in work by stating that during the past year there was a necessity for 37 meetings against eight the year before. The circulating library, distribution of leaflets, increasing subscription lists of Outlook and placing Palm branches in the hands of our children have been some of the forces at work creating real missionary interest. The study of the Text Book in the seven years course for Auxiliaries is developing intelligent giving, and the day is fast passing when "sweet charity was content with the flinging of a coin to the beggar in the gutter and riding on, satisfied that duty was done."

Our supply work is a link that binds us directly in interest and practical sympathy with our Home Missions. Homes, Institutions, Hospitals among the Indians are grateful recipients of the donations of this committee. The reflex influence of this work has often come as a benediction to the "shut-ins", and to the aged whose only avenue of revenue lay through this medium.

Let us for a few moments study the field side of our work, the object for which our Sisterhood has been called into existence, for this past year. It is impossible for us to tell all and fully comprehendwhat has really been accomplished by our fifty-nine missionaries at work last year, neither would time permit. Our corresponding secretary who was our representative to the board meeting last October, will also bring before you Thursday p.m., the whole story of the year's work so definitely and optimistically that you may catch much of the inspiration and enthusiasm of that convention. We cannot speak too highly of our girls who represent us at the front. The education, the training, the culture, the high spiritual attainments they bring to this work is surely a repetition of the breaking of the box of Spikenard, the gift of love so well pleasing to the Master, the rich aroma of which is making pleasant the solitaey places.

For Japan the year has been one of special privilege. The conference of the world's Christian Students Federation, together with the special meeting for girl's schools in which forty teachers, students and servants decided to accept Christ as their Savious. There were also helpful gatherings of the W.C.T.U. and Y. M. C. A. Our nineteen workers there send cheery news of advancement, not forgetting to unanimously make appeal for reinforcement. I trust you have carefully and thoughtfully read Miss Timberlake's appeal through the Outlook. She says, "Things are just now at floodtide in Japan." The people are learning rapidly all they can of the lore of Western Nations and never was there a greater urgency for immediate action on the part of Mission Boards.

The union of the Methodist Churches superintended by a native Bishop marks an important event. Our boarding schools and day schools have a combined enrollment of 375 and of this number 190 attend class meeting and 59 are workers in the Sunday School. In Kofu, Miss Alcorn has more thoroughly organized Sunday Schools and over 500 are attending. There is nomore attractive sight in Japan than the well conducted kindergarten, and there is no department of mission work which enlists to so large a degree the interest and co-operation of the neighborhood. The kindergarten school under the trained care of Christian teachers and with a distinctly Christian atmosphere are bound to multiply from year to year.

In Shizonka aw well as in other stations they have various organizations among the girls and women for spiritual help and mutual improvement. These are also proving to be real training classes to develop Christian workers. There are the Red Cross, King's Daughters, Busy Bees, Purity Societies, Y.M.C.A. and W.C.T.U. Besides being interwoven in the school Rork, evangelistic work is carried on in many places. If there is a value in Christian truth sufficient to warrant the propagating at all, the acceptance of that truth by individuals is of supreme importance. Only as it gains a hold on the heart and lives of individuals is it of true value to Society. The house to house visiting giving Bible lessons; in the homes the mothers meetings all help to gain on the hearts and homes of the people. Dr. Connors testimony as he visited three schools taught by girls from Ozoky, "We heard the singing, saw the earnestness of the teachers and were impressed with the excellence and possibilities of such a work. Our lady missionaries take great delight in it, and well they may for it reaches the needy and is full of hope and promise." The council of Japan passed a resolution to "Aim to develop and extend the work of Domestic Science," appealing for funds for suitable buildings and a trained worker.

There is no field which so directly claims the interest and help of Canadian women as China. That strip outlined by the Advisory Board places responsibility upon our Methodist Church for the reaching of nearly eight millions. The contrast with former years is very marked. The Chinese are sending invitations from all sides to the foreign mission ary to come and teach them. The women attend church much more regularly. A great aid to our mission work is the breaking down of the ancient custom of foot binding. We have some twelve workers on this field which we are proud of, but in the face of the multitudes to help and teach and evangelize, this school in Chentu is considered the best west of Chung King and our number appears pitifully small. Our splendid new buildings mean extended opportunities for more workers. Miss Hambly in her appeal says, "Shall we close the doors of these schools for lack of teachers." We ought to open schools in several other cities at once, but are hindered because of the dearth of workers. In towns and villages of Cz Chuan there are no girl schools, but every where the girls are imploring us to start schools, and the women also are pleading for some education. The homes everywhere are open to lady evangelists. Our medical work has been such a blessing to these poor women gaining the sympathy and appreciation of the Chinese women. Some of the older girls in the school are taking up work and proving acceptable assistant teaches. Commodious buildings have been about completed at Ben Shou.

The various points in our Dominion where we have been privileged to place workers present encouraging reports for the year,, enlisting special interest in the work among the Indians and the strangers within our gates. Our attention has been specially drawn to the coast work. Our workers there say, "The all important question presented to us by the growing Oriental immigration, is their evangelization and the need of keeping pose. "Our policy concerning the rescue work is broadening and the educational is apparently a necessity. A school building is now in the course of construction and a kindergarten is needed.

We are pleased to have with us Mrs. Ash (nee Miss Sherlock) who spent five successful years in the work and it will be so helpful and pleasant to listen to her on Thursday p.m., while she addresses us.

The work at Port Simpson continues to be encouraging and the prize winning at the exhibitions tell us of the girls proficiency in Domestic Science. Their little mission Band raised $41.00 last year and every member takes the palm branch. After considerable delay we are able to report the revival of work at Kitamay. Our society have decided to put up a new building costing $7,-800 and already operations have begun.

NEW ARRIVALS
Manitoba
Saskatchewan and Alberta

Every new family that comes to Western Canada should be users of Royal Crown Soap right from the start.

Ask any of the people you settle near, and they will tell you it is the best soap to use.

It is specially made for the West. The water in this country is very hard. Royal Crown Soap is made from a special formula to suit this hard water.

Don't begin your life in the West by using any other soap, and thus wasting money and getting poor results.

Tests made show that 6 bars of Royal Crown Soap do more work than 8 bars of ordinary soap.

Royal Crown Soap will save you money. It is easier on the clothes. It washes whiter than ordinary soaps.

Don't make the mistake of starting with any but Royal Crown Soap. You will find that your neighbors are using it as they know it is the best soap for use in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Start right away and save your wrappers for premiums. We will send a list of premiums free to any who ask for it.

Royal Crown Soap has been in use almost exclusively for over 20 years in Western Canada.

DYSPEPSIA AND STOMACH DISORDERS
MAY BE QUICKLY AND PERMANENTLY CURED BY
BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS.

Mr. P. A. Labelle, Montreal, Que., writes us as follows: "I desire to thank you for your wonderful cure, Burdock Blood Bitters.

Three years ago I had a very severe attack of Dyspepsia. I tried five of the best doctors I could find but they could do me no good.

I was advised by a friend to try Burdock Blood Bitters and to my great surprise, after taking two bottles, I was so perfectly cured that I have not had a sign of Dyspepsia since. I cannot praise it too highly to all sufferers. In my experience it is the best I ever used. Nothing for me like B.B.B.

Don't accept a substitute for Burdock Blood Bitters. There is nothing "just as good."

The Fletcher Music Methods
(Simplex and Kindergarten)

Endorsed by the leading musicians of America and Europe, among whom are Dr William Mason, Geo. W. Chadwick, W. Caven Barrow, Thomas Tapper, Dr. Percy Goetschius, John Philip Sousa, Kate S. Chittenden, Dr. Lyman Abbot. The F. M. M. places in the hands of the teacher a thorough, tested and endorsed system of teaching music, entirely in accord with all modern and psychologically true methods of instruction It gives her for herself a basic and practical knowledge of modulation, analysis, memorizing, and the pianoforte.

Mrs. S. Marshall is the only authorized teacher of this method to teachers throughout Western Canada, and will open a class at her residence in Vancouver on JULY 1st. For terms and information address MRS. S. M. MARSHALL, 1075 Denman St., Vancouver, B.C.

The Care of Consumptives

A problem that has been forced upon the west within the past three or four years in a form that demands consideration is the handling of the consumptives who turn to this country when signs of the disease are discovered. That the question is one of vital interest is shown by the resolutions to be submitted by the Calgary Board of Trade to the convention of Associated Boards of Trade. The resolution is that whereas we are burdened with an invalid class that endangers the health of the community, be it resolved that the Alberta Government be memorialized to take the initiative in having the Dominion Government set apart land for a national consumptive park, and establish a tuberculosis sanitarium in the Rocky Mountains.

There is no doubt that thousands of people with lungs affected in various degrees have come to the west to throw off the disease. In very many cases these tubercular patients seek employment without givingtheir employer any intimation that he is harboring a public danger. The affected person may recover or may not, but the danger is always there. There hre several inducements to an employer to accept affected labor, as the applicant is often a well trained office man from the east, one who has been able to take his place with the best of them but is forced to leave for his health's sake. He must have work and will accept lower wages to secure it, giving his employer the maximum of service for the minimum of wages.

He takes his position in the store in the church, and, with none aware of his condition, he scatters germs by the millions. Admitted that the germ of tuberculosis has less chance in the west, it is still dangerous where it has any chance. The bedroom he sleeps in is infected, so is the store he works in, the house he lives in, the dust of the street, and everything else. And every day healthy men and women are thrown in contact with the danger. A healthy man is little liable to supply an incubation ground for the germs but no healthy man is always in condition.

A further consideration in this matter is the fact that many of these patients arrive in this country, not only penniless, but also unfit to take their place in the struggle that represents the money making interests of the West. On a moment's notice they are packed off from the east, with no thought of provision for their maintenance. The anxiety of looking for work, the loneliness at first, the wandering, are all hard on a weakened frame, and it is not long until the man becomes a care on the community.

This is an injustice to the country. This class is not sought, and therefore should not be an expense. We cannot deprive the poor consumptive of every opportunity to improve and throw off the disease, but we cannot be made responsible for the germicidic qualities of the atmosphere in Alberta. We do not advertise Alberta as a home for men with affected lungs, and we cannot be expected to care at our own expense for those who decide to try this climate for consumption.

The solution that is fair to us and to the man who is seeking relief from pulmonary troubles is to supply him with a sanitarium at the public expense. The air of the Rockies gives the consumptive every chance for recovery, and it is to the interest of everyone that he should have this chance. But Alberta should not provide for it, especially when almost none of the consumptives have taken the disease in Alberta.

The recommendation of the Associated Boards of Trade will have great influence with the governments and their decision will be watched with interest.

Newspaper Ethics

(Toronto Saturday Night).

A newspaper gains nothing by protestations of its independence in politics. If it be truly independent the proof will, as time goes on, manifest itself, but this proof will not come out as a pale and opinionless neutrality. It is more likely to evince itself in a frankness of speech, saying what needs to be said without much concern as to the temporary effect, politically. The way to give independent opinion is to give it. If a newspaper charges itself with the duty of ladling out political views impartially, a quart to one side and then a quart to the other—a roast to one side and then a roast for the other—saying nothing about one party without being careful to say quite as much about the other, it deserves nobody's respect. A newspaper to be independent should be guided by certain standards of right and wrong which it should endeavor to uphold no matter what politician or what political party is concerned. As between a party journal and a neutral one, the former seems to be infinitely preferable. It pools opinions with others and works in unison with them, yielding here and gaining there, but on the whole, advancing its beliefs in general; whereas the neutral paper shirks the having of opinions.

EDITORIAL NOTES

It shows pretty plainly that the merchants are past the advertising fakir period when so few were bitten by the woman who tried to soak them five dollars for fifty cents worth of advertising. As usual most of the banks tumbled in, but they have the money to spare and have a habit af patronizing those schemes. A couple of these banks spend nothing in local advertising that is of some value, but any old fakir that comes arounfl can get his five dollars or ten dollars. It's our money they make money out of, but they won't let us share the profits with them.

Take a look at the oil cloth strip these people paid five dollars to get their names on (if you can find any of them in view), and see how few merchants were induced to throw away their money. They showed their belief in the spend-your-money at-home talk by keeping it there.

But, however valuable the advertising was, there was no excuse for that female solicitor giving the merchants to understand that she represented a local paper when she was merely collecting ads to fill a space she had bought in a local paper. Some advertisers even get the idea the five dollars included a year's ad.

It is just about a sure thing that the outside solicitor for scheme advertising is a fakir pure and simple, or is not giving anything like value for his money.

Buying advertising from an outsider is exactly the same as buying goods at Eaton's, with this addition that you are paying ten times as murh as you would pay locally. Both cents and sentiment hold in thus case.

The Labor Unions have taken hold of the land graft scandal at Ottawa and it will not take them long to show the Liberal Government that the grafters have to figurewith something stronger and more insistent than the ordinary public. Time and opportunity has been given Laurier and his ministers to prove the falseness of the revelations of the Opposition, but black could not be made white.

At a meeting of the Trades Council in Winnipeg a resolution was passed calling upon the member for Winnipeg in the Federal Government to vote in favor of a motion calling for a commission of investigation into the charges of alienation of the timber lands of the Dominion.

The laborer is as much injured by this graft as anyone. If the government is innocent an investigation cannot injure them. But the Opposition is willing to stake its future on the guilt of the Liberal Government.

A local man has estimated that this city pays out in fire insurance premiums $50,000 a year. The fire damages for the past 3 or 4 years have not exceeded $5,000. Surely there is something in this for the Board of Trade or City Council to look into. Is it reasonable that the Underwriters Association should demand a rate that is ten times as much as our annual loss for many years. We have a brigade equal to many of the paid brigades and surpassed by no volunteer force. We have the best of apparatus, two well trained teams a fire alarm system, a large stand pipe, and when the new pumps are installed the water pressure will be perfect. There is no reason why we should be payingwhat we are. Our rate may compare favorably with that of Lethbridge or Calgary or Edmonton, but no excuse can be given that will justify a payment of $50,000 for receipts of $5,000.

The passing of Mr. Waldock is worthy of more than the ordinary notice. In the struggle for gain, the consideration of monetary profit that characterizes so much of Western living, the late Mr. Waldock shines forth as a man who threw every energy into every undertaking that tended not only to the building up of the city, but to her moral welfare. The best thing that can be said of any man can be said of him—he thought not of himself but of the public good.

To the editor personally he stood for much in the life of the city. His open hand, pleasant smile, and frank encouragement was a bright spot in the loneliness of a new city, and the struggle for recognition. A half dozen Mr. Waldock's would build up a city much more quickly than a thousand talkers of prosperity who openly treat the new comer as an interloper. He had the spirit of friendship and a ready understanding of the position of the new arrival.

With the lack of recognition that meets every man in life who does his duty without ostentation, in death the citizens strove to show their respects for the man who loved his duty for duty's sake.

Now is a good time for the city to introduce its anti-expectoration by-law. The winds of summer will continue to carry the dust and germs into the air. The filthiness of the habit will be felt more than any other time of the year. Lethbridge has its by-law, with street signs, "$50 for anyone spitting on the sidewalks. Why doesn't Medicine Hat fall in line and protect the citizens.

District Attorney Jerome, whom the New York newspapers have built up into a prominent, almost an heroic, figure, now rounds on his servile flatterers and denounces them. There is a hint here for newspapers which unreservedly fling themselves at the feet of some demogogues.—Mail and Empire.

Recipe for Rheumatics

Directions to Prepare Simple, Yet Remarkable Home Mixture.

There is so much Rheumatism here in our neighborhood now that the following advice by an eminent authority, who writes for readers of a large Eastern daily paper, will be highly appreciated by those who suffer:

Get from any good pharmacy one-half ounce Fluid Extract Dandelion one ounce Compound Kargon, three ounces of Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla. Shake these well in a bottle and take in teaspoonful doses after each meal and at bedtime; also drink plenty of good water.

It is claimed that there are few victims of this dread and tortuous disease who will fail to find ready relief in this simple home-made mixture and in most cases a permanent cure is the result.

This simple recipe is said to strengthen and cleanse the eliminative tissues of the Kidneys, so that they can filter and strain from the blood and system the poisons, acids and waste matter, which cause not only Rheumatism, but numerous other diseases. Every man or woman here who feels that their kidneys are not healthy and active, or who suffers from any urinary trouble whatever, should not hesitate to make up this mixture, as it is certain to do much good, and may save you from much misery and suffering after a while.

Our home druggists say they will either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription ready to take if our readers ask them.

BOARD RESOLUTIONS.

Following are extracts from resolutions to be submitted by the Calgary board of trade for consideration at the annual convention of the Associated Boards of Trades of Western Canada, to be held at Medicine Hat, June 18, 19, and 20.

Establishment of national consumptive park and tuberculosis sanitarium.

"Whereas it is a well-known fact that the climatic conditions prevailing in central Alberta have a favorite influence on the disease of tuberculosis, which attracts to this district many thus afflicted. Many others are advised to come by their medical attendants, and will continue to come. We are burdened with an invalid class that endanger the health of the community. Persons thus afflicted appeal strongly to public sympathy, and must be cared for. And, in the interest of humanity, they cannot be allowed to mingle with the general public, but should be taken care of. They can only be housed and cared for at a hazardous risk to those who take them in and those with whom they associate. A large percentage of these people arrive penniless and are unable to support themselves, they necessarilyhave to be provided for, notwithstanding the fact that they have no rightful claim on this community for such support.

"Therefore, be it resolved, thatthe Alberta government be memorialized to take the initiative in having the dominion government set apart land for a national consumptive park, and establish a tuberculosis sanitarium somewhere in the Rocky mountains, by constructing and maintaining suitable buildings for the maintenance and care of all Canadians suffering from this disease.

Pay for Patients.

Payment by municipalities for outside patients at hospital where patient does not make payment:

"Whereas efficient general hospitals have been established in the larger cities and towns throughout the province of Alberta and Saskatchewan, at a heavy expense to the individual communities. Rural municipalities having no accommodation for patients, send them to these hospitals, to the support of which they do not contribute, and have in the past refused to contribute to the support of these hospitals.

"Therefore, this convention of associated boards of trade of western Canada, respectfully urges the governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan to pass legislation at the next session, compelling all municipalities to reimburse the hospital for treatment given patients from their district in all cases where patients have not made payment.

"Resolved that this convention appoint an executive committee to act with the secretary and follow up, to their final conclusion, all resolutions passed at this convention and report on the same at the next annual convention."

ADVERTISING.

The average merchant usually gives advertising too much or too little credit. If the store management and service are bad—if the stock is poor and the sales force inefficient and discourteous—he is likely to have a poor opinion of the efficacy of advertising, for advertising can do very little for a store of that sort.

On the other hand the merchant who has a fine store with a good stock of merchandise and excellent service is apt to think that it s not necessary to advertise. He thinks he can get along without it on the presumption that the store will advertise itself. That's where he is wrong. The better the store is the more this fact should be advertised. —From the Hardware and Metal, June 15, 1907.

WEAK TIRED WOMEN How many women there are that get no refreshment from sleep. They wake in the morning and feel tireder than when they went to bed. They have a dizzy sensation in the head, the heart palpitates; they are irritable and nervous, weak and worn out, and the future looms a burden during the day feels to be a drag and a burden.

MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

are the very remedy that weak, nervous, tired out, daily drained need to restore them the blessings of good health.

They give renewed mental sleep, tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart, and make rich blood. Mrs. C. MacDonald, Portage la Prairie, Man., writes: "I was troubled with shortness of breath, palpitation of the heart and weak spells. I got four boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and after taking them I was completely cured.

Price 50 cents per box or three boxes for $1.25, all dealers or the The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Rivers Islet, Hazelton, Morley and Norway House. All People's Mission in Winnipeg has been helped and a second deaconess is being placed there, and the Italian mission in Toronto has been wonderfully aided by the addition of a deaconess to the staff of workers and through the kindergarten for the children.

The educational work in our French Mission in Montreal continues to grow and the results are most gratifying, also the spiritual influences at work show that Christianity is taking a hold on the hearts and lives of the pupils. There are some 27 children cared for in our Protestant home.

How often through the year do we look for news from Wahstao, our first effort among the Galicians and our hearts are cheered as we learn of the steadily growing interest in the work of our missionaries there. The day school and Sunday schools send in records of advancement and the necessity for extended efforts for these strangers within our gates is borne in upon us. In Edmonton there is the beginning of help for the Galician girls that may mean much, of which no doubt Mrs. Ash will tell us, as she is the founder of the same.

Our special interest, I am sure, was centred in the report of our corresponding secretary, as she caused to pass in review before us the year's work of our own N. W. branch. Again gratitude swells up within us to the great Helper whose presence and aid we proved through all the days of another year. There has been growth and progress and increase numerically, but the greatest contribution of our branch this year is one of our fairest daughters to China, Miss E. Speers of Brandon. All our efforts to extend our area in all departments would be lacking in real value to our aim as an organization if none of our girls volunteered for the field. We hope and pray there will be many more. As a branch let us unitedly covenant that every day of the year we will go with Miss Speers, remembering her in prayer.

What are the needs? The arrival 215,912 immigrants during the calendar year of 1906, speakingmany languages and coming all over the globe is of commending importance. By careful investigation the Department of the Interior report that the less enlightened nations of south-eastern Europe contributed 3½ times as many immigrants as the more progressive nation. The destination of a large percentage of this influx is within our branch area. There are also some 8,000 Mormons settled in our Canadian Northwest. Am I correct in saying a Mormon holds a seat in this provincial legislature? Now if these foreigners came to our country more rapidly than we can assimilate them, it means the ruin, certainly the peril of much we hold dear. As Canadians our true loyalty and patriotism will be sustained only as we endeavor to uphold all that tends to foster a christian citizenship. We may boast of our advantages in education in economics and sociology, yet the strong hope of Canada and the Empire is in our Bible, the only thing in the world that gives us homes and our Sabbath; what an urgency that we use all means to reach the mothers and homes.

Let us strengthen our hands by increased organization. See the ground to be covered in Saskatchewan and Alberta, some 300 circuits and yet only 52 societies. Shall we not endeavor this year to work harder and reach our aim. An auxiliary in every church and every Methodist woman a member of the same." The greatest hindrance to our extention is the dearth of leaders. Very few but agree with us in the necessity and benefit of an Auxiliary in their church, but immediately if you suggest to them the responsibility of office, a barrier is raised. On sister cannot you hear the call of service in the speechless need of humanity or the voiceless appeals of opportunity. Jesus calls men definitely to the service of His Kingdom; showing its work, demanded the leaving of their nets. Ah, here is one stumbling block in the way, its so hard for us to leave our nets.

There is need to extend our juvenile organizations. Surely it was Christ's thought to recognize the importance of the child in the development of His kingdom. Are not the well organized MissionBands sheltered nooks where the soil is most fertile for the tender slips to be well rooted ready for transplanting into the great open field of ripened opportunity?

Are there not training classes where leaders are being prepared to take hold of organized work. Will it not be from these Bands we will look for our coming missionary.

In the final analysis, after all it is the spiritual that count. With all these great needs staring us in the face how should we know the power of prayer, its value and practice it. In summing up here is one thought we want every delegrate, every one listeneing to remember. Dr. A. person in the missionary Review tells us. After a careful comparative study of missionary biography and of the life work of those who have been the feeders and supporters of missions at home reveals nothing more clearly than this, that the degree of real power wielded for Christ depends not on wealth, rank, culture or genius, but on the measure of close personal fellowship with God, and to Him with other fellow workers and fellow helpers to the truth.

A short address was given by the Rek. E. J. Chegwin, after which the meeting adjourned.

On Thursday morning a round table conference on Auxiliary work was held, presided over by Mrs. Chegwin Edmonton, deaconess of Moose Jaw, Miss Haddock leading in the devotional exercises. The secretaries of auxiliaries throughout the North-west read their reports, after which three papers were given.

Mrs. Down the reader of the first, took as her subject, "What constitutes a good auxiliary meeting?"

Mrs. Chowan followed, discussing in detail the duties of the members. Much was heard, she said, about the duties of officers, and there was a tendency to regard the officers as alone responsible for the success or failure of an auxiliary. This was a mistaken view. The Divine command, "Go ye and teach all nations," was as binding upon each individual member of Christ's church as upon the officers. Since all were workers together with God. Each member, the speaker continued, should try to induce others to join. It was the president's duty fromtime to time to ask the members what efforts they had made in this direction.

There were a number of points which required emphasizing. In the first place, let every member, as far as possible, so arrange household duties that faithful and regular attendance at the monthly meetings might be made. Secondly, they should be on time. Thirdly, fees should be paid regularly. Fourthly and this point was a very important one—each member should carefully study parliamentary rules. The amount of time frequently wasted was due to a lack of knowledge of correct procedure at meetings, was a very serious matter and resulted in the efficiency of an organization being impaired. Fifthly, it was the duty and privilege of every member to vote—not to go away and express freely their views when a meeting was over. Sixthly let all the members work harmoniously together, and not permit mere differences of opinion to cause friction in the organization.

Seventhly they should observe an attitude of friendliness and sociability to all, and especially towards new-comers.

In addition to the observance of these rules, a good practice was to provide ourselves with all the missionary literature available. The children, especially, should be encouraged to read the lives of great missionaries. By an interest created in the adventure and romance of the missionary movement, might some be led to consecrate their lives to this branch of the Master's work.

In this field of missionary service, continued the speakur, there was a wonderful opportunity open to the womeb of the church for pure, unselfish effort in the service of Christ. She would conclude with a missionary equation.

Enthusiasm plus information minus self, equals a successful Women's Missionary Society.

Mrs. Ash then read a paper in which she contended that the most important factor in the success of an auxiliary was the choice for president. This office holder, to be competent, must become acquainted with the various fields of labor and the workers in the cause of the evangelization of the world. The speaker then outlined a suggestive programme for each month of the year, for the systematization of the work of auxiliaries.

A suggestion that Miss Speers, who is shortly departing for China, be made a life member, was enthusiastically received, the great majority of those present rising to express their willingness to subscribe towards that end.

So great was the enthusiasm displayed by those members who took up the matter, that a sufficient sum was colected to provide the life membership subscription ($25), a beautifully embossed certificate and a gold membership pin.

At the beginning of the afternoon's session, greetings from sister societies were extended by Mrs. (Rev.) Bryant on behalf of the Baptist and by Mrs. W. M. Williamson on behalf of the Presbyterian Church.

Reports from band and circleswere read, showing how great a work is going on in the Methodist church.

Miss Ash gave an address on "Our Work at the Coast," referring to the missionary labors o our sistmmmmm missionary labors of our sisters in Victoria and Vancouver.

The "question drawer" in charge of Mrs. Bellamy, gave rise to a profitable, instructive discussion. One of the question—Is it the wiser plan to have the boys and girls combine and form one society or to have two separate societies?" there was considerable difference of opinion, it being eventually decided that the matter should be left in the hands of the band.

The Rev. E. J. Chegwin then addressed the meeting, emphasizing the great importance of the work in which the ladies were engaged.

At the close of the meeting, supper was served to the officers, delegates and their friends, by the ladies of Century church.

On Thursday evening an inspiring address was given by Mrs. McKenney of Claresholn on "Woman's Opportunity in Mission Work." The speaker made an eloquent appeal to her women hearers to shoulder the burden of responsibility which should rightly fall to their lot. It wastheir bounden duty as Christian American women to spread the Gospel of the Larger Hope amongst the heathen—and especially the heather who were found almost at their own doors—the teeming millions of the Orient—the awakening China and the awakened Japan.

The women of the American continent were placed by providence, in a position of splendid advantage for this particular work. Let them, then, as followers of the Christ, put forth every effort for the accomplishment of that great work—the evangelization of Asia; let them consecrate their whole lives to the cause. It was not so much the actual amount of work, it was the amount of love with which they devoted themselves to the advancement of the Kingdom, that was of value in the eyes of the Master.

Presentation of banners for the auxiliaries, mission circles and bands took place at the close of Mrs. McKenney's address. In the first organization, Lethbridge carried off the honors, Mrs. Harrison receiving the banner on behalf of our sister city. For mission circles, Brandon had the record. Miss Olive Bedford of that city receiving the banner. Fleming won the banner for Mission bands. In previous years there has been one banner for both the latter named branches of the missionary society, but this year, thanks to Mrs. Bellamy's munificence, provision has been made for a trophy for each.

After the presentation ceremony the lights were turned down and an interesting service of views illustrating the work of the W. M. S. in China, Japan and at the Coast were thrown upon the screen by the Rev. Mr. Chegwin.

At the closing meeting of the session on Friday morning, officers for the ensuring year were elected, the same officers as last year being returned in every case.

Committee on memorials made a number of recommendations which were adopted by the meeting, to wit, that the Board of Managers be memorialized at its next annual meeting to set apart the Alberta societies as a separate branch—this on account of the long distances which some of the delegates must travel preventing many auxiliaries from sending a delegate to the branch meeting and in any case entailing a heavy expense on the branch treasury. It was also recommended that the support of one missionary be allotted to circles and one to the branch, the missionaries to the chosen by the directors—this that the circles and bands might have some definite object in view in their work.

A further resolution was passed expressing a desire that the anti-cigarette bill granting the prohibitive right to provinces be passed during the present session of parliament.

A number of other resolutions were passed, after which the report of the social committee, as follows, was read and adopted.

It is with pleasure that we, as a branch, desire to express our sincere appreciation of the kindness and hospitality extended to us by the people of Medicine Hat, to the auxiliary in meeting us as such an unreasonable hour and the entertainment which the ladies provided last evening in the church parlor. To the organist and choir who have contributed so much to the enjoyment of our meetings, also the Mission band workers, for we feel that the children of today are the church of tomorrow. Not forgetting the S. S. May we all carry with us the beautiful sentiment in the "Song of Trust."

To the trustees for the use of the church, also the press for the excellent reports given. Through the thoughtfulness of Mr. Miers, we are able to take home a photo of our Branch.

To any and all who have in any way contributed to our enjoyment and help while in the city. Our workers appreciata very much the greetings from the sister societies in the city and pray that we may go hand in hand in the great work both for time and eternity.

The committee requests that a letter of appreciation and thanks be sent to Rev. Mr. Chegwin of Moose Jaw for the help and assistance so cheerfully given during the convention, also a telegram conveying the greeting of the branch to Mrs. Ross as her words of encouragement and counsel have been to us such a source of strength and comfort.

To the pastor who has so cheerfully attended our sessions and assisted so heartily in the programme. With a prayer that we go on to larger and greater things.

SPOKE FROM THE HEART.

The Illinois Central train was half a hundred miles from Chicago, headfor the city, and at a little station an old farmer came aboard. He was a little, weasened man, with a sensitive mouth half concealed by an iron-gray bears. His ill-fitting clothes were evidently his most uncomfortable best. He slid softly into a seat occupied by a grave stranger, reading a newspaper. Two or three times the old man turned his face to the brown flying landscape. The stranger was struck by the troublesome expression and glanced wistfully at his companion.

The latter spoke at last with a strange huskiness in his voice.

"I am going to the city for the second time in my life," he said, half startled at his own words.

"Yes?"

"Thirty years come July I went there for a wedding suit and I am going back there to-day for a coffin and a shroud for the little woman that married me.

"You don't know wnat it is, mister, to live and work 'longside a woman for thirty years, day in and day out, to find her always patient and willing and working, and then leave her dead and cold, with her worn-out hands crossed on her breast. It was just a little after the turn of the night, and nobody but me was watching, when Margie kinder woke up.

"'David,' says she, "it's restful, so restful, and I am so tired.' And so she went to sleep and woked up in eternity. You know stranger, these things set one to thinking, and when it was too late I found out that I had put too much work into her life and not enough rest and enjoyment so that she was glad to cross the great divide, and leave me here alone to wonder through the balance of my dreary life."

If you have lost or found anything advertise it in the Want columns of The Times, not in the post office. Nobody reads the bits of paper pinned all over the latter building.

How Is Your Cold?

Every place you go you hear the same question asked.

Do you know that there is nothing so dangerous as a neglected cold?

Do you know that a neglected cold will turn into Chronic Bronchitis, Pneumonia, disgusting Catarrh and the most deadly of all, the "White Plague," Consumption.

Many a life history would read different if, on the first appearance of a cough, it had been remedied with

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup

This wonderful cough and cold medicine contains all those very pine principles which make the pine woods so valuable in the treatment of lung affections.

Combined with this are Wild Cherry Bark and the soothing, healing and expectorant properties of other pectoral herbs and barks.

For Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Pain in the Chest, Asthma, Croup, Whooping Cough, Hoarseness or any affection of the Throat or Lungs. You will find a sure cure in Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup.

Mrs. O. N. Loomer, Berwick, N.S. writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup for coughs and colds, and have always found it to give instant relief. I also recommended it to one of my neighbors and she was more that pleased with the results."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup 25 cts. per bottle at all dealers. Put up in yellow wrapper, and three pine trees the trade mark. Refuse substitutes. There is only one Norway Pine Syrup and that one is Dr. Wood's.

MISS MABEL KNAPP

BURNING ITCHING ECZEMA CAUSED MANY SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.

Miss Mabel Knapp, of 247 Wolfe Street Peterboro', Ont., says: "Eight months ago small white blotches and pimples broke out on my hands. To keep from rubbing and scratching was impossible as the the itching was intense. This caused the pimples to break forming mattered sores between my fingers and spreading to the joints of my fingers. My hands were actually in a raw state. I suffered cruelly lying awake night after night with the burning, itching sensation and pains which followed. For months I could not bear my hands in water and did very very little work about the house. Various remedies were tried still the disease was not checked and I was now almost discouraged when a statement in the newspaper made by some person who had been cured of a similar disease by using Zam-Buk caught my attention. I obtained a box of Zam-Buk and began using it. Each application brought great relief. It checked almost instantly the burning and itching and soothed the pains, and soon banished all inflammation and swelling and in about three weeks from commencing with Zam-Buk, I was cured of this dread disease."

HEALING, SOOTHING AND ANTISEPTIC

Zam-Buk cures cuts, burns, scalds, ulcers, ringworm, itch, barber's rash, pimples and eruptions, blood poison, bad leg, salt rheum, abrasions, abscesses and all skin diseases. As an embrocation it is good for rheumatism, sciatica and all nerve pains when well rubbed in. Of all stores and druggists, 50 cents box or from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, postpaid for price.

The Hound of the Baskervilles

Another Adventure of Sherlock Holmes.

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War"

Copyright (1902) by A. Conan Doyle.

"Of the origin of the Hound of the Baskervilles there have been many statements, yet as I come in a direct line from Hugo Baskerville, and as I had the story from my father, who also had it from his, I have set it down with all belief that it occurred even as is here set forth. And I would have you believe, my sons, that the same Justice which punishes sin may also most graciously forgive it, and that no man is so heavy but that by prayer and repentance it may be removed. Learn then from this story not to fear the fruits of the past, but rather to be circumspect in the future, that those foul passions whereby our family has suffered so grievously may not again be loosed to our undoing.

"Know then that in the time of the Great Rebellion (the history of which by the learned Lord Clarendon I most earnestly commend to your attention) this Manor of Baskerville was held by Hugo of that name, nor can it be gainsaid that he was a most wild, profane, and godless man. This, in truth, his neighbors might have pardoned, seeing that saints have never flourished in those parts, but there was in him a certain wanton and cruel humor which made his name a byword through the West. It chanced that this Hugo came to love (if, indeed, so dark a passion may be known under so bright a name) the daughter of a yeoman who held lands near the Baskerville estate. But the young maiden, being discreet and of good repute, would ever avoid him, for she feared his evil name. So it came to pass that one Michaelmas this Hugo, with five or six of his idle and wicked companions, stole down upon the farm and carried off the maiden, her father and brothers being from home, as he well knew. When they had brought her to the Hall the maiden was placed in an upper chamber, while Hugo and his friends sat down to a long carouse, as was their nightly custom. Now, the poor lass upstairs was like to have her wits turned at the singing and shouting and terrible oaths which came up to her from below, for they say that the words used by Hugo Baskerville, when he was in wine, were such as might blast the man who said them. At last in the stress of her fear she did that which might have daunted the bravest or most active man, for by the aid of the growth of ivy which covered (and still covers) the south wall she came down from under the eaves, and so homeward across the moor, there being three leagues betwixt the Hall and her father's farm.

"It chanced that some little time later Hugo left his guests to carry food and drink—with other worse things, perchance—to his captive, and so found the cage empty and the bird escaped. Then, as it would seem, he became as one that hath a devil, for, rushing down the stairs into the dining-hall, he sprang upon the great table, flagons and trenchers flying before him, and he cried aloud before all the company that he would that very night render his body and soul to the Powers of Evil if he might but overtake the wench. And while the revellers stood aghast at the fury of the man, the more wicked or, it may be, more drunken than the rest, cried out that they should put the hounds upon her. Whereat Hugo ran from the house, crying to his grooms that they should saddle his mare and unkennel the pack, and giving the hounds a kerchief of the maid's, he swung them to the line, and so off full cry in the moonlight over the moor.

"Now, for some space the revellers stood agape, unable to understand all that had been done in such haste. But anon their bemused wits awoke to the nature of the deed which was like to be done upon the moorlands. Everything was now in an uproar, some calling for their pistols, some for their horses, and some for another flask of wine. But at length some sense came back to their crazed minds, and the whole of them, thirteen in number, took horse and started in pursuit. The moon shone clear above them, and they rode swiftly abreast, taking that course which the maid must needs have taken if she were to reach her own home.

"They had gone a mile or two when they passed one of the night shepherds upon the moorlands, and they cried to him to know if he had seen the hunt. And the man, as the story goes, was so crazed with fear that he could scarce speak, but at last he said that he had indeed seen the unhappy maiden, with the hounds upon her track. 'But I have seen more than that,' said he, 'for Hugo Baskerville passed me upon his black mare, and there ran mute behind him such a hound of hell as God forbid should ever be at my heels.' So the drunken squires cursed the shepherd and rode onwards. But soon their skins turned cold, for there came a galloping across the moor, and the black mare, dabbled with white froth, went past with trailing bridle and empty saddle. Then the revellers rode close together, for a great fear was on them, but they still followed over the moor, though each, had he been alone, would have been right glad to have turned his horse's head. Riding slowly in this fashion they came at last upon the hounds. These, though known for their valor and their breed, were whimpering in a cluster at the head of a deep dip or goyal, as we call it, upon the moor, some slinking away and some, with starting hackles and staring eyes, gazing down the narrow valley before them.

"The company had come to a halt, more sober men, as you may guess, than when they started. The most of them would by no means advance, but three of them, the boldest, or it may be the most drunken, rode forward down the goyal. Now, it opened into a broad space in which stood two of those great stones, still to be seen there, which were set by certain forgotten peoples in the days of old. The moon was shining bright upon the clearing, and there in the centre lay the unhappy maid where she had fallen, dead of fear and of fatigue. But it was not the sight of her body, nor yet was it that of the body of Hugo Baskerville lying near her, which raised the hair upon the heads of these three daredevil roysterers, but it was that, standing over Hugo, and plucking at his throat, there stood a foul thing, a great, black beast, shaped like a hound, yet larger than any hound that ever mortal eye has rested upon. And even as they looked the thing tore the throat out of Hugo Baskerville, on which, as it turned its blazing eyes and dripping jaws upon them, the three shrieked with fear and rode for dear life, still screaming, across the moor. One, it is said, died that very night of what he had seen, and the other twain were but broken men for the rest of their days.

"Such is the tale, my sons, of the coming of the hound which is said to have plagued the family so sorely ever since. If I have set it down it is because that which is clearly known hath less terror than that which is but hinted at and guessed. Nor can it be denied that many of the family have been unhappy in their deaths, which have been sudden, bloody, and mysterious. Yet may we shelter ourselves in the infinite goodness of Providence, which would not forever punish the innocent beyond that third or fourth generation which is threatened in Holy Writ. To that Providence, my sons, I hereby commend you, and I counsel you by way of caution to forbear from crossing the moor in those dark hours when the powers of evil are exalted.

"(This from Hugo Baskerville to his sons Rodger and John, with instructions that they say nothing thereof to their sister Elizabeth.)"

When Dr. Mortimer had finished reading this singular narrative he pushed his spectacles up on his forehead and stared across at Mr. Sherlock Holmes. The latter yawned and tossed the end of his cigarette into the fire.

"Well?" said he.

"Do you not find it interesting?"

"To a collector of fairy tales."

Dr. Mortimer drew a folded newspaper out of his pocket.

"Now, Mr. Holmes, we will give you something a little more recent. This is the Devon County Chronicle of May 14th of this year. It is a short account of the facts elicited at the death of Sir Charles Baskerville which occurred a few days before that date."

My friend leaned a little forward and his expression became intent. Our visitor readjusted his glasses and began:

"The recent sudden death of Sir Charles Baskerville, whose name has been mentioned as the probable Liberal candidate for Mid-Devon at the next election, has cast a gloom over the county. Though Sir Charles had resided at Baskerville Hall for a comparatively short period his amiability of character and extreme generosity had won the affection and respect of all who had been brought into contact with him. In these days of nouveaux riches it is refreshing to find a case where the scion of an old county family which has fallen upon evil days is able to make his own fortune and to bring it back with him to restore the fallen grandeur of his line. Sir Charles, as is well known, made large sums of money in South African speculation. More wise than those who go on until the wheel turns against them, he realized his gains and returned to England with them. It is only two years since he took up his residence at Baskerville Hall, and it is common talk how large were those schemes of reconstruction and improvement which have been interrupted by his death. Being himself childless, it was his openly expressed desire that the whole countryside should, within his own lifetime, profit by his good fortune, and many will have personal reasons for bewailing his untimely end. His generous donations to local and county charities have been frequently chronicled in these columns.

"The circumstances connected with the death of Sir Charles cannot be said to have been entirely cleared up by the inquest, but at least enough has been done to dispose of those rumors to which local superstition has given rise. There is no reason whatever to suspect foul play, or to imagine that death could be from any but natural causes. Sir Charles was a widower, and a man who may be said to have been in some ways of an eccentric habit of mind. In spite of his considerable wealth he was simple in his personal tastes, and his indoor servants at Baskerville Hall consisted of a married couple named Barrymore, the husband acting as butler and the wife as housekeeper. Their evidence, corroborated by that of several friends, tends to show that Sir Charles's health has for some time been impaired, and points especially to some affection of the heart, manifesting itself in changes of color, breathlessness, and acute attacks of nervous depression. Dr. James Mortimer, the friend and medical attendant of the deceased, has given evidence to the same effect.

"The facts of the case are simple. Sir Charles Baskerville was in the habit every night before going to bed of walking down the famous Yew Alley of Baskerville Hall. The evidence of the Barrymores shows that this had been his custom. On the 4th of May Sir Charles had declared his intention of starting next day for London, and had ordered Barrymore to prepare his luggage. That night he went out as usual for his nocturnal walk, in the course of which he was in the habit of smoking a cigar. He never returned. At twelve o'clock Barrymore, finding the hall door still open, became alarmed, and, lighting a lantern, went in search of his master. The day had been wet, and Sir Charles's footmarks were easily traced down the Alley. Half-way down this walk there is a gate which leads out on to the moor. There were indications that Sir Charles had stood for some little time here. He then proceeded down the Alley, and it was at the far end of it that his body was discovered. One fact which has not been explained is the statement of Barrymore that his master's footprints altered their character from the time that he passed the moor-gate, and that he appeared from thence onwards to have been walking upon his toes. One Murphy, a gipsy horse-dealer, was on the moor at no great distance at the time, but he appears by his own confession to have been the worse for drink. He declares that he heard cries, but is unable to state from what direction they came. No signs of violence were to be discovered upon Sir Charles's person, and though the doctor's evidence pointed to an almost incredible facial distortion—so great that Dr. Mortimer refused at first to believe that it was indeed his friend and patient who lay before him—it was explained that that is a symptom which is not unusual in cases of dyspnoea and death from cardiac exhaustion. This explanation was borne out by the post-mortem examination, which showed long-standing organic disease, and the coroner's jury returned a verdict in accordance with the medical evidence. It is well that this is so, for it is obviously of the utmost importance that Sir Charles's heir should settle at the Hall and continue the good work which has been so sadly interrupted. Had the prosaic finding of the coroner not finally put an end to the romantic stories which have been whispered in connection with the affair, it might have been difficult to find a tenant for Baskerville Hall. It is understood that the next-of-kin is Mr. Henry Baskerville, if he be still alive, the son of Sir Charles Baskerville's younger brother. The young man when last heard of was in America, and inquiries are being instituted with a view to informing him of his good fortune."

Dr. Mortimer refolded his paper and replaced it in his pocket.

"Those are the public facts, Mr. Holmes, in connection with the death of Sir Charles Baskerville."

"I must thank you," said Sherlock Holmes, "for calling my attention to a case which certainly presents some features of interest. I had observed some newspaper comment at the time, but I was exceedingly preoccupied by that little affair of the Vatican cameos, and in my anxiety to oblige the Pope I lost touch with several interesting English cases. This article, you say, contains all the public facts?"

Standing over Hugo there stood a foul thing, a black beast shaped like a hound.

"It does."

"Then let me have the private ones." He leaned back, put his fingertips together, and assumed his most impassive and judicial expression.

"In doing so," said Dr. Mortimer, who had begun to show signs of some strong emotion, "I am telling that which I have not confided to anyone. My motive for withholding it from the coroner's inquiry is that a man of science shrinks from placing himself in the public position of seeming to indorse a popular superstition. I had the further motive that Baskerville Hall, as the paper says, would certainly remain untenanted if anything were done to increase its already rather grim reputation. For both these reasons I thought that I was justified in telling rather less than I knew, since no practical good could result from it, but with you there is no reason why I should not be perfectly frank.

"The moor is very sparsely inhabited, and those who live near each other are thrown very much together. For this reason I saw a good deal of Sir Charles Baskerville. With the exception of Mr. Frankland, of Lafter Hall, and Mr. Stapleton, the naturalist, there are no other men of education within many miles. Sir Charles was a retiring man, but the chance of his illness brought us together, and a community of interests in science kept us so. He had brought back much scientific information from South Africa, and many a charming evening we have spent together discussing the comparative anatomy of the Bushman and the Hottentot.

"Within the last few months it became increasingly plain to me that Sir Charles's nervous system was strained to the breaking point. He had taken this legend which I have read you exceedingly to heart—so much so that, although he would walk in his own grounds, nothing would induce him to go out upon the moor at night. Incredible as it may appear to you, Mr. Holmes, he was honestly convinced that a dreadful fate overhung his family, and certainly the records which he was able to give of his ancestors were not encouraging. The idea of some ghastly presence constantly haunted him, and on more than one occasion he has asked me whether I

ADVERTISING MAKES THE TOWN GO.

A writer in Printer's Ink makes an interesting diagnosis of the reason why some towns are "slow." He says: "Anybody who has had experience travelling among the small cities and towns of this country knows that wide differences are seen between places of the same population, and in much the same locality, and enjoying what would seem to be equal opportunities for trade. One place of 10,000 people, for instance, will be thoroughly alive, its shops bright, its people brisk, and prosperity apparently on every hand. Another, perhaps but 25 miles away will be thoroughly dead, its stores deserted, dull, dusty, its people given to the habit of cracker-box conversation. In one town it is a pleasure to step off a train and look for business, while in the second an experienced traveling man has no sooner alighted than he wants to know the time of the next train out."

The diagnosis is ridiculously simple. In one, the newspapers encourage live advertising by charging a rate which includes setting up new ads. as often as the merchant cares to change. In the other, an antiquated rate system is in vogue, making a low charge for space and an extra charge for every change of advertisement. It's just worth while considering what good, live advertising by the merchants does for a town and its trade.—From The Canadian Grocer, August 28, 1907.

CANADIAN TEACHERS TO VISIT BRITAIN.

Arrangements have been made by Mr. Alfred Mosely, C.M.G., of London, England, and an English committee, for the visit of Canadian teachers to the British schools during the coming autumn and winter. The co-operation of the leading men of England as represented by this committee, assures that the visiting teachers will receive a cordial welcome wherever they go, and that every effort will be made to add to the comfort and success of the enterprise. A local committee is being organized in each town or city to be visited by the teachers and these committees will act as advisers to the Canadian teachers, to introduce them, to procure in advance accommodation in boarding houses or hotels, to meet the teachers if desired on arrival and to minister to their comfort in every way.

About two hundred teachers may go from Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The number in each Province to which the privilege will be extended will be in proportion to the number of teachers in these several provinces. Should any province, however, fail to send its proportional number the vacancies will be filled from the applicants from other Provinces.

Mr. Mosely has succeeded in making arrangements with the Canadian Steamship Companies to take three hundred Canadian teachers to England and back for $25 each. Passages at this rate are available between Sept. 1st, 1908 and February 1st, 1909. The total expense of the trip from Toronto, allowing a month in the Old Country, need not exceed $125, and $200 is considered ample to provide for extra purchases as well as for necessary expenses. The steamship travel will be in second cabin but this accommodation is now as good as first class was a few years ago.

Alberta teachers desirous of taking advantage of these arrangements should notify the Deputy Minister of Education, Edmonton, immediately as the list should be forwarded to Toronto during the first week in June.

C. N. R. WILL BUILD WEST.

Regina, May 27—It is believed the C.N.R. will proceed with the construction from Regina through the Fairville and Cottonwood district and westward to Calgary this season if the Governments of Alberta and Saskatchewan can be prevailed upon to guarantee the bonds of the line. During a recent visit of officials of the company to Regina, the proposition was mentioned to persons here, and today it is reported that the railway company would be prepared to construct if the bonds were guaranteed.

The proposition is to go northwest through the Fairville and Cottonwood districts and to cross the Saskatchewan at or near the Elbow, opposite Craik. From the point of crossing thereof is a straight stretch of very good country through which the railway would pass, and as it is already thickly settled, there is every reason to believe that the construction of the line would be made to pay easily enough. That there is a demand for the railroad is undoubted, for the petitions circulated by the Regina Board of Trade were signed by 1,500 settlers throughout the district.

AN IMPORTANT DECISION.

(Lethbridge Herald)

Claresholm, May 25.—Quite a lot of discussion has been caused among the farmer people as to the decision in the late case of Symonds against Gunderson which was tried at the recent sitting of the District court here. The horse was bought at a sale under the Estray Ordinancesome time ago and the purchaser resold the horse to Gunderson. Later the original owner turned up and sued Gunderson for the horse. It turned out in the evidence that the sale had not been in conformity with the proper legal requirements and the result of the case was that the horse was ordered to be returned to Symonds. It seems hard lines on purchasers that they should suffer in this way.

"I feel it my duty to testify to the benefit I have received from the use of Psychine. While travelling in New Ontario conducting special meetings I contracted a very bad cold, which gradually developed into Bronchitis of the worst form. I was advised to try Psychine, which I did, and after using but a few bottles I was completely restored to health. I recommend this wonderful remedy to sufferers from Bronchitis and other troubles."
Later: "I wish to add that my voice, since using Psychine, is stronger and has much more carrying power than it had before I had bronchitis, and the vocal chords do not tire with speaking."

BURNING ITCHING ECZEMA CAUSED MANY SLEEPLESS NIGHTS.
Miss Mabel Knapp, of 247 Wolfe Street, Peterboro', Ont., says: "Eight months ago small white blotches and pimples broke out on my hands. To keep from rubbing and scratching was impossible as the the itching was intense. This caused the pimples to break forming mattered sores between my fingers and spreading to the joints of my fingers. My hands were actually in a raw state. I suffered cruelly lying awake night after night with the burning, itching wed. For months I could not bear my hands in work about the house. Various remedies were ecked and I was now almost discouraged when a de by some person who had been cured of a similar attention. I obtained a box of Zam-Buk brought great relief. It checked almost instantly the burning and itching and soothed the pains, and soon banished all inflammation and swelling and in about three weeks from commencing with Zam-Buk, I was cured of this dread disease."

Sermon to Sons of England.

On Sunday morning, May 24th, a sermon was delivered in St. Barnaba's church, by the rector, the Rev. Wm. Nicoll, to the Local Lodge of the Sons of England. The pulpit was decorated with the Union Jack.

In opening, Mr. Nicoll said that one of the brightest of all signs of the times was the zeal with which fraternal organizations were coming to recognize religion outwardly, by attendance at church.

The objects of the order which he now addressed, were stated to be the bringing together for mutual benefit and support, of members of the English race and their descendants, and the maintenance of the Imperial connection. The local branch was but of recent formation, but if he were to narrate the number of cases of death, of sickness, of want, that came under his notice, cases where the only attendants on the sick or dying were the nurse and clergyman, his hearers would appreciate the wonderful work that could be done by a fraternal society of this kind. In a new country such as ours there must necessarily occur cases, where, through no fault of their own, men were "down upon their luck." And it was the object of this organization to extend the universal hand of charity, in fulfillment of the command of our Lord Jesus Christ.

It might be said that the Sons of England society aimed to secure the welfare of its members, not only socially, but spiritually, since it demanded of them a certain moral standard, and all must abide by the rules.

Passing on to speak of the second object of the society—the sustaining of the ties of Empire—the rector said that perhaps the Church of England was peculiarly representative of the loyalty which it was also the aim of the Order to inculcate—the loyalty which cements the peoples of various races and languages in attachment to one common tradition of empire. While in this country there was little to bind us to the motherland but the sentimental and nominal attachment to the Royal Family, the Anglican church, perhaps especially, represented our country and our patriotism.

We were proud to belong to the greatest empire of the age. The Church and the Order in common, would do all in their power to sustain the bond between our adopted country and the motherland.

What the future might bring forth he did not know. Nevertheless, it was our duty, as long as we might be able, to retain the connection. In time—and some of us did not like to think this possible—Canada might become an independent state. Such was the law of nature, such was the law of nations, as it was the law of the family. In infancy members of the family were under the protection and care found beneath the parental roof. The time came, however, for the youth, now reaching into manhood, to leave his father's house, but without pangs, not without bitterness to his parents. Such might be the destiny of the young virile nations of the empire. "I believe, however," said Mr. Nicoll, "that never, at all events, will Canada become a separate nation, though it might become so in practice."

There was a need in this new land for the development of the powers of adaptability; this was required of all the races which were building up the country. Most of us came from places where the influences of tradition and history were great. We came to a country of equality; where no man was better than another, except for the differences which riches made. It behoved us to ever remember the equality of all men in the sight of God. No matter where we came from—Germany, America, England, before God all were equal.

And in this country our freedom was of such a nature that we must be very careful to avoid its abuse. It was the glory of the English nation, that her sons were ever prepared to do their duty. Therefore it was that we were held in such high esteem for our colonizing powers. It was this sense of duty that inspired our brothers to fight so nobly for their Motherland, in the late South African campaign.

We must fulfil our duty to God and our duty to our neighbor, not forgetting that marvellous passage in which our Lord commands us to feed the hangry, to give drink to the thirsty, to bury the dead, to visit those in prison, and, above all, to preach the Gospel of the Kingdom to the poor.

In conclusion the rector exhorted his hearers never to forget the cross in the flag which they saw before them. Nor that this flag was symbolical of the unity which is strength.

WANT TIME CHANGED.

The general superintendent's office of the C.P.R. at Winnipeg, have been requested by the Moose Jaw board of trade to take up the matter of the consideration of a change from mountain to central time. A representative committee has already taken up the matter with Supt. Taylor, of Moose Jaw, who will take the matter up with General Supt. Jamieson, of Winnipeg. Mr. Taylor pointed out that if the change were made it would have to be permanent, as the company could not possibly change the central time for the summer and the mountain time for the winter months, owing to the fact that all the time tables over the continent would be affected. If the change is made it will probably take effect on June 15, when the new summer schedule becomes effective.

Fasting a Week.

Finishing on Saturday evening at seven o.clock two young male students at Alberta College completed a course of seven day's fasting. For one whole week they have eaten nothing. Their diet during that period consisting of an occasional tumbler of clear, cold water. In the way of solid food they have consumed nothing, not even a peanut.

The extreme of dietic restrictions under which these youths have been laboring have been brought about by no penalty imposed upon them, for any possible diabolical feats they may have perpetrated. Nor do the youths plead guilty to any religious fanaticism. They are faddists, pure and simple, physiological faddists. Devoted disciples of Barnard McFadden.

It was not so very long ago that the two students stumbled upon Mr. McFadden's "Fasting, Hydropathy and Exercise." They persued the book in their leisure moments. They sat up late at nights reading it. They read how the author had cured himself of illness through protracted fasts. They read his experience with a seven day fast, how he ate nothing for a week, how he got stronger every day, how at the end of his fast he could lift a 100 pound dumbbell into the air.

This looked like a good thing to the students. Perhaps after all this three meal a day business was a huge mistake. And so they became ardent admirers of Mr. Macfadden and his teachings. They surrounded themselves with his literature. They read his books on overeating, and how too much food dulled the brain. Over their beds they hung thestrange device, "Plenus venter non studet libenter," "A filled stomach abhors study."

Then the youthful gentlemen decided to try the seven day fast for themselves. On Saturday week they did not appear as usual at breakfast nor dinner nor supper. They informed the other students how it was. They pointed out to them the foolishness and actual sin in eating to the extent of three meals a day. They produced convincing arguments to show how greatly the intellect was strengthened by abstaining from food. They even succeeded in inducing several others to follow their example—for a day or two. And while their fellow students eagerly crowded into the dining hall at the meal hour, blissfully unconscious of the terrible truth that they were gradually declining into a generation of dyspeptics, as a result of the inherent inclination to consume three square meals per day, these hero worshippers of Macfadden were indulging in such feasts of reason, and flowing of soul, as it is rarely the privilege of humanity to enjoy!

Well, the seven days came to an end. When asked if he could handle the 100 pound dumbbell, one of the youths confessed that he felt strong enough to lift a seven story building. A short time afterwards one of his fellow students discovered him in the upper corridors vainly attempting to toss a French grammar into the air.

Yes, the boys are doing well. They were able yesterday, to sit up and take notice. Today they will appear at breakfast for the first time in a week. During an interview, they for got to tell the reporter the date upon which the next fast would commence.

THAT DOLLAR BILL.

A farmer out in Kansas,
About five years ago,
Went into town one day to spend
Some of his hard earned "dough,"
"And in a merry jest," and just
To show his printing skill,
He printed his initials on
A brand new d-o-l-l-a-r b-i-l-l.

He spent that dollar that same day
Down at the village store,
He thought 'twas gone forever then,
And he'd see it no more.
But long before that year rolled by
One day he went to fill
A neighbor's order, and received
That same one d-o-l-l-a-r b-i-l-l.

Once more he spent that dollar bill
In his own neighborhood,
Where it would do himself and friends
The most amount of good.
Four times in two years it came back,
As some bad pennies will,
And each time he'd go out and spend
This marked one d-o-l-l-a-r b-i-l-l.

Had he been wise that dollar might
Be in his town today.
But just about two years ago
He sent it far away.
The people who received it then
I know have got it still.

SPECIAL STAMPS TO AID CONSUMPTIVES.

Ottawa, Ont., May 25.—The post office department, has under consideration the taking up of a scheme which has been tested in Denmark, Norway and Sweden and found to work out successfully. This is the issue of a special postage stamp for use during two or three weeks around Christmas, part of the postage of which could be used to assist in the fight against tuberculosis. The stamp has a special value of say five cents, while the value of the ordinary stamps is two cents, the difference of three cents in each stamp going to hospitals for consumptives. People are not obliged, in any way, to buy these stamps, but it has been found in countries where it has been tried, that everybody is anxious to have these stamps on their parcels and letters, and large sums have been collected in this way. The plan was to have been tried last Christmas, but other things intervened. It is likely, however, that next Christmas will see these special stamps for sale in every post office in the Dominion.

CIRCUS COMING.

Campbell Brothers Consolidated shows will be in Medicine Hat on July 2nd, and today these shows take their place as the leaders. Money time, patience, perseverance and travel have all been devoted toward placing their circus, beyond competition. New and startling features have been added to every line of their entertainment; and in the rings on the stage, in the air, and all above you new and wonderful feats are performed by trained experts in their various lines. Hundreds of horses have been added, all decked out in their glittering harnesses, numberless artists in magnificent costumes, trained elephants, funny clowns and in fact everything that is new will be seen when Campbell Brothers Consolidated Shows exhibit here on July 2nd. A big street parade at 10 a.m. and two performances will be given at 2 and 8 p.m. under water-proof tents rain or shine.

C.P.R. Will Not Join With the West.

Montreal, May 27.—Mr. Ackland, the secretary of the labor department at Ottawa, who was in Monboard at Winnipeg, have jurisdiction treal in an effort to reach arrangement by which the C.P.R. management would agree to arbitration over the eastern part of the system, as well as west, has returned to Ottawa, not having been able to accomplish anything, the C.P.R. being unshaken in its determination that the east shall not, if possible, be dragged into the dispute with the west.

Regarding the closing down of the shops at McAdam Junction the officials of the company say that these shops will be re-opened at the beginning of the next month, and that the temporary closing down was caused simply because of the big drop in receipts, which necessitated the most rigid economy.

It was pointed out this morning that the cutting down of expenses was not confined to the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk, owing to continued dropping in traffic earnings, having continued short time all winter and spring in the shops at Montreal, the men averaging only forty hours per week. In addition to the shopmen the company also dispensed with the services of all extra clerks.

Correspondence.

The Editor is not responsible for the opinions of his correspondents, nor does he always agree with them.

A correspondent from Seven Persons writes corroborating the word of several people who have commented to The Times on the report of the Zimmerman—Schneller affair at the recent dance in Seven Persons. He states that there was an old feud between the two men. Zimmerman had driven his family to the dance and after unloading at the door, put his team away and passed Mr. Schneller at the door going in. They did not speak but in a few minutes he was ordered out by Schneller, who gave him five minutes to get out. Zimmerman, as a shareholder in the building, did not think he could be put out and when Schneller came at him later with a club there was a scuffle, three men putting Zimmerman out. The latter came in again, however, and after another tussel the police were called. Con. Chalkley tried to put him out but failing secured the assistance of Mr. Olson. Zimmerman wanted to explain but his withdrawal was demanded, whereupon he threatened to resist more strenuously if he were touched again. After that he was left alone.

As the case is on for trial at a coming court, the letter could not be published in full, but the statement of events as given by the correspondent is as above. The case seems to centre around the fact that Schneller though he owned the building as contractor, and Zimmerman considered he had a right there as a shareholder in spite of Schneller's wishes.

The Man on The Street

Emperor William is again kicking about his pay. He gets only $4,000,000 a year, and hasn't yet joined the union, so it is probable there will be no sympathetic strike to enforce a raise.

A man in Owen Sound recently killed two step daughters. How much braver a man is with his step-daughters' than with his mother-in-law.

An Ottawa despatch says the Canadian government is determined to bar all undesirables. The hours of that bar will be more limited than those of the kind that dispenses desirables.

"The Great Unwashed" are identified by their friends since the water came on last week.

It is suggested that the flood on Esplanade and Main streets was caused by the lack of sewer accommodation for the ablutions of the hill-climbers when they got a chance to wash up.

Winnipeg said a few days ago that it has a population of 118,000. And no report has yet come from Calgary of a larger population. Wake up, Calgary. You're not reading the papers.

When the government has a specially obnoxious measure to put through they bring on supplies in the middle of it in order to endeavor to throw the Opposition into disrepute if they oppose it by blocking supplies.

Men in London, Eng., are living on three cents a day. Pooh! I know men in this city who do it on less. They don't pay for anything.

Carrie Nation is doing some more smashing. How'd you like to be Mr. Nation?

An ordinary two legged man is suing the C.P.R. for $10,000 for a leg. It ought to be easy to figure out the value of a man from that.

"Prof. Blank has asked me to call on you to see if you would allow him to enlarge a picture of you for your wall. He is going to open an office in Medicine Hat; and he is selecting only a few of the very best people." Does it sound familiar.

If you meet a frock-coated, silk-hatted, gentlemanly looking fellow on the street, you can't be sure that he is a confidence man. He may be a Methodist minister attending conference.

There was a meeting of some of the members of St. Barnaba church in the parish hall a week ago Saturday evening for the purpose of organizing a tennis club in connection with the court which has been made at the side of the parish hall. Mr. A. Peard was elected chairman and the meeting proceeded to organize for the coming season. A president and executive committee and secretary were appointed. The fee for gentlemen was placed at $2.00; for ladies, $1.00.

Arrangements for Dominion Exhibition---Medicine Hat Receives Better Offer for Debentures than Lethbridge---Water Extensions Needed

The adjourned meeting of the council was held on Tuesday evening last at eight o'clock. Present: the Mayor Alds. Baker, McKay, Morrow, Spencer, Forster, Huckvale.

Commissioner Hall wrote formally requesting the use of the council chamber on the 18th, 19th and 20th of June, for the Associated Boards of Trade convention and for a smoking concert to be given in connection. The Board of Trade agreeing to defray all expenses. Request granted. The communication further stated that the Board of Trade had an outline of a plan for an exhibit at the Dominion Fair. Filed and committee appointed to meet Board of Trade.

A suggestion of Dr. Smith's, that the Board of Trade should give an entertainment of gymnasium pupils was spoken of.

Commissioner Hall sent in receipts and expense account in connection with the bridge opening. This showed receipts amounting to $502, expenditure $495.77, leaving a balance on hand of $6.23.

A petition from Rev. John Silliak for water and street lamps was referred to gas and water commissioner.

A delegation from the Board of Trade waited on the council in reference to the plans for the Dominion fair exhibit, and requested that the responsibility of the expenses in connection with the same be borne by the council. A suggestion had been made by the Fairbank Co.'s agent, that small pump and irrigation system be installed, to be operated by natural gas.

Ald. Baker thought it would be advisable to send one of the city's officials if tanks of natural gas were to be utilized at the fair. Therewere four drums now on their way from Winnipeg.

C. S. Pingle addressed the council, stating that arrangements had been made with the agricultural society as to the grain exhibits and expenses in connection therewith. Thus the only expense would be thefreight on the gas tanks. The railway would charge a rate of 59c on a full tank and 20 on empties.

The delegates pointed out that $2,000 had been voted by Lethbridge for their exhibit.

Ald. Spencer moved that the council grant $500 towards an exhibit. Alds. Baker and Forster and the mayor thought it would be advisable first of all, to get a detailed statement, and it was decided to wait until such was forthcoming before making a grant. Ald. Huckvale pointed out that it would be a good plan for the B.-O. T. to work on the basis of $500 and see what could be done with this amount.

A petition for water extensions to Roy street where there would be six services, was referred to the engineer for a report.

The Hospital Ladies Aid requested the use of the council chamber for monthly meetings held on the first Thursday in each month in the afternoon. Filed and request granted.

A. B. LeBlanc wrote regarding accounts against city employees. These men, he said, refused to pay; he had tried to garnishee their wages, but the treasurer refused to serve a garnishee. Mr. Le Blanc was referred to the city solicitor.

Wood, Gundy wrote offering 91½ and accrued interest for the whole or any part of the $75,000 debentures. They would take a part on condition that they be given an opportunity to purchase the balance before the offer of any other firm was accepted. The price they offered was equivalent to 103 for 6 per cent. debentures. Alternatively this firm would give 92 and interest net on an option for thirty days.

Wood, Gundy's representative was present and addressed the council. He thought the offer a particularly favorable one. They were getting as good a price as was likely to obtain during the next three months, and perhaps during the rest of the year. The bond market fully anticipated good crop prospects. Ald Huckvale thought it might be possible that a higher price might be obtained by holding the debentures. The brokers' representative maintained that such an eventuality was improbable. The holiday season, July to September was a quiet one for bond sales. Lethbridge and Medicine Hat debentures sold on pretty much the same basis; and he had just negotiated a purchase of the former city's bonds at 90½. Calgary had sold her 4½ per cent. debentures at 92.55 London terms, which was equivalent to 91 Canadian terms.

The Mayor expressed himself as in favor of accepting Wood, Gundy's offer. Ald. Forster said the finance committee had not had an opportunity before the meeting to get together and discuss the matter. Referred to finance committee with power to act.

Mr. Tom waited on the council to ask to be allowed to retain his barbed wire fence pointing out that it did no harm at his place, and that a smooth wire fence would be useless to him. Ald. Baker thought the best plan would be to pass a resolution telling the chief to let by-law remain in abeyance for this year, and after that to enforce. He did not think it would be fair to make fish of one and fowl of another. Ald. Forster thought the council had not power to suspend the bylaw. He suggested that the by-law should be amended so as to define limits outside which barbed wire fences might be used. Notice of motion was given by Ald. Spencer of such amendment to by-law.

Mr. Donaldson requested the use of water on Braemar street for building purposes. Referred to water commissioners.

Discussion of engineer's report was left over till Monday night.

Ald. McKay gave notice of motion regarding introduction of bylaws for issue of $70,000 for sewers and for fire hall to be built north of the track.

Ald. Foster gave notice of by-law regarding use of water for lawn services.

The clerk pointed out that there were no penalties stated for infringements of the theatres by-law. Notice of motion on the matter was given.

Montreal, May 22.—According to reports from headquarters, the C.P.R. is preparing to fight to a finish against the demands made by the mechanics and mechanists in their employ or reinstate the schedule of wages which was in effect up to May 1. The men are delighted at the decision of the board of arbitration in Winnipeg that its jurisdiction covers the whole system, and eastern men are preparing to enforce their claims on the company so that all may stand or fall together.

David McNicoll, general manager of the C.P.R., returned from Toronto today but refused to say anything of the company's policy in the matter. The decision was unexpected, and the officials, it is assumed, though knocked out for the time being, intend to come back with a heavier blow. Eastern men claim they don't want to strike but they will stick to the western men and do all in their power to have the affairs of both sections settled at the same time on the same basis.

Almost a Record

South Saskachewan Overflows Flats

On Sunday the river reached a mark within three or four inches of the great flood of six years ago. For days Southern Alberta around Macleod and Lethbridge has been experiencing a flood, and this, added to the heavy rains at Calgary and in this district raised the South Saskatchewan as it flowed through this city, fully ten feet on Saturday and Sunday morning.

All day Friday the water was slowly rising, and on Saturday morning had reached the top of its banks above the bridges. Saturday saw no interruption in the flood and at night it commenced to flow over the flats around the Canneries. At midnight a number of families in the vicinity had to move out, and early in the morning the cellar of the Canneries was filled. Without a pause the water rose until about four p.m. Sunday when it was within a few inches of the 1902 record. Very slowly it fell until it was only a foot lower on Monday morning.

All day Sunday hundreds of people watched the flood from the bridges and in the flats. Logs, trees and boards kept coming down, and the swift current tore away the banks all along the city side. The power house was flooded to a depth of seven feet, but the pumps kept working under water, and until a part of the big pump broke a pressure of fifty-eight pounds of water was kept up but was taken up by the C.P.R. or somewhere else before it reached the hill. The gas engine at the power house was also out of sight and business. The C.P.R. pump house stopped work early in the morning before the day was over there were ten feet of water in the pit, and the house had to be cabled to the shore to keep it from washing away. The isolation hospital stood in the centre of the flood. From Dr. Hawke's to the river, all was under waterand in a line from his house at an angle of sixty degrees across the flats all the houses partially submerged or cut off by the stream. Huge trees rushed around the corner of the Canneries and another current cut off 200 yards of the shore for over half a mile. Some parts of streets were under three feet of water.

Wm. McKie's house near the Indian encampment was under water to the window sills. The Indian tents were all in the water, the Indians moving to the hills. A tent across the river above the bridge was in two feet of water before it was pulled out.

The bridges stood the strain perfectly. The water was within eight feet of the traffic bridge and within six feet of the railway bridge at the end. As there was danger of the earth washing away around an end pier, five cars of cinders were dumped there. The C.P.R. Seven Persons bridge had to be ballasted. Strathcona Island bridge broke up at 9 p.m. Saturday and went out breaking the anchor ropes like thread. The water flowed across Police Point, but very few live trees were destroyed there, or came down the river.

It was a weird sight Saturday and Sunday nights to see gas lights shining out from the middle ofponds and swift currents, as drays andmen rushed back and forward with furniture from the houses in danger.

The rate of rise of the water was surprising. On Sunday morning at one time it was coming up about a foot an hour and for several hours maintained a rate of four to six inches.

Very little damage was done beyond the mud in the houses on flats as everyone had time to get their effects to safety. One family camped out on the cut-banks for two nights.

The Crow train has been unable to get through since Thursday as there are two bridges down and several mud slides and washes. The C. and E. between Calgary and Macleod was in as bad a condition. The Spokane Flyer was kept here over Saturday and sent out on Sunday by way of Calgary.

It is reported that the shacks of the bridge gang at Taber were carried away, including a piano belonging to Mr. Symons.

Terrible Fatality

Woman Burnt to Death North of Bow Island

The wife of A. J. Olson, a farmer living some seven miles north of Bow Island, met with a horrible death yesterday week, the 1st inst. Mr. Olson had been working during the afternoon on a new building. As the supper hour approached, Mrs. Olson, who had been outside with her husband for some time, went into the house to prepare the evening meal. The stove required to be lighted, and to do this coal oil was used, from a can with a large spout —three quarters of an inch in diameter. In some way the flame from the new kindled fire must have shot out and seizing hold of the coal oil in the can an explosion occurred. From without Mr. Olson heard a report like that of a shot gun, and rushed towards the house, noticing that the whole interior appeared to be on fire. Pushing open the door he found his wife on the inside vainly attempting to escape, In the terrible condition in which she found herself, her clothes saturated with burning coal oil, must have found it difficult to unlatch the door to obtain release. Had the door been opened at the time of the accident, there is every probability that she would have been saved.

Mr. Olson carried his wife out of the building in his arms, severely burning his hands and face, and rolling her in the grass, extinguished the flames. Meanwhile, Michael Peterson, Mrs. Olson's father, who had been milking in one of the barns, rushed out on hearing the report, had come up, and with a pail of milk bathed the woman's terrible wounds.

Dr. Smyth was immediately wired for and reached the farm about one a.m. (the accident occurred between 6:30 and 7:00), to find the woman still alive though suffering terrible agony. The fire had so burned into the flesh of her face as to make her features unrecognizable. Her legs were black and her whole body blistered in a fearful manner. The doctor thought there might be some chance of saving her life if she could be taken to the hospital at Medicine Hat and accordingly the party set out for the village station placing the suffering woman on a wagon. Before Bow Island was reached, how ever, life was extinct.

The sad party returned with the corpse to the farm, where the interment took place on Friday last.

Mr. Olson was in the city last Tuesday, and was himself severely suffering from his injuries. He was the first settler to take up a homestead north of the Island.

Strange to say the house was not destroyed, the fire burning itself out in the interior.

The Y. M. C. Gymnasts

Good Entertainment Put On

In defiance of Jupiter Pluvius who poured forth the vials of his wrath on Friday evening, a large audience assembled in the Opera House, wading through seas of mud to witness the first exhibition of the season of the Y. M. C. And they were well repaid for their pains, for, with less than three months training the boys were able to stage a show which it is admitted by old-timers, compared favorably with the performance given in the city in the pioneer days. And it is something to obtain such an admission from an old-timer.

Throughout the evening Leonard's orchestra rendered selections, adding greatly to the enjoyment of the show, and preventing the possibility of that feeling of monotony which falls upon the lay mind during a purely gymnastic performance.

The proceedings was opened by the Mayor who in a few apt remarks commended the cause of physical development and other objects of the club. In the first event—dumb bell exercises by the juniors, the youngsters proved themselves a well disciplined and efficient squad. Flying rings, parallel and horizontal bar work by the seniors followed, each with its own peculiar test of strength and agility, exciting the admiration of the audience. Keen appreciation of Mr. Stewart's Indian Club work was shown, as it was of the double trapeze stunts byT. Gawley, Dr. Smith and Wilbur Cory. Kid Cory was generally considered one of the star performers of the evening, his cool, matter-of-fact manner of going through his part of the programme greatly taking the fancy of the crowd.

The wand drill by the ladies, too, proved one of the most popular features, and it was evident that the little breaks which were made were largely due to nervousness.

As relaxation from the tense following of the feats of strength of our local votaries of Appollo, the marvellous doings of the clowns, (Wm. Fryer as Signor Spagehtti au Gratin) and Jack Legh as (M. Pate de Foie Gras), were heartily enjoyed, and the audience showed its appreciation by frequent applause.

The sketch with which the performance came to a close was provocative of much merriment, and Charlie's aunt—or rather Samanthia—was the favorite here.

Altogether great credit is due to the organizer, Mr. Cawley, and to Dr. Smith, that after so brief a period of training they were able to stage so creditable a show. Mr. Gawley has spent a great deal of time and trouble on the boys and with the assistance of Dr. Smith, a performance was put on that equalled in interest any seen in the city.

There is talk of another performance when the Board of Trade Convention is here.

Victoria Old Boys Annual

Banquet of University Last Week

To the University man there is nothing more refreshing than to meet his old college mates. The Victoria University Old Boys Association, which meets at every Methodist Conference,held its annual banquet in McKinnon's lunch rooms on Friday night. Thirty-five, of whom all but half a dozen were Methodist Ministers sat down to lunch and spent the evening in good, old, reminiscent time that the college boys who see each other but seldom, always spend. The local college men present were Rev. A. C. Farrell, Mr. Webb a nd W. Lacey Amy. Among the others present were Dr. Briggs and Rev. T. E. Shore of Toronto, Dr. Riddell of Alberta College and Rev. G. W. Kerby of Calgary.

After the hour of lunching and recapitulation of old college jokes, and pranks, Rev. R. Pearson ("Bob") opened the toast list. The first after "the King," was "Canada" proposed by Dr. Stewart and responded to by W. Lacey Amy. "Alberta Conference" was coupled with the names of Revs. Marshall and Perry; "Alma Mater," with Dr. Riddell and Rev. T. E. Shore; "The Ladies," with Dr. Briggs and Rev. C. W. Bishop.

The old college enthusiasm found vent in the college song, but the college yell was omitted on account of the death of a Victoria boy, whose remains then lay in the undertaker's parlors in the city.

Our Dominion Fair Booth

Elaborate Arrangements Made for Msdicine Hat Display

Board of Trade.

A meeting of the Board of Trade was held in the Council chamber on Thursday evening for discussion of matters relating to the general convention of associated boards and the Dominion fair. The inclement weather was responsible for there being a very meagre attendance.

Speaking on the first resolution, Ald. Huckvale said that he noticed from the map in the land agents office in the city that the whole of the country within fifteen miles of Medicine Hat was a solid block of red. This indicated that all the land had been taken up. Yet the country was by no means solidly settled, and there must be a large number of homesteads on which duties had not been performed. The speaker also thought the Dominion government should not leave the cancellation of such homesteads to incoming settlers, to whom much trouble and delay was caused. An official should be appointed who would inspect all homestead lands and cancel all in which the necessary improvements were not being made.

The secretary stated that there were many other resolutions which would come up at the convention, from outside sources, which it was unnecessary for the board to endorse.

Seventy-five to eighty invitations had been sent out for the convention and the following places had already accepted:

Messrs. Price, Bury, Lawrence, Halstead of the C.P.R. were also invited and officials of the Canadian Northern. Secretary Hall figured on there being present one hundred delegates, to whom the railway would grant the return trip for single fare. Mr. Lawrence was looking into the matter of providing a special sleeping car for the use of the delegates.

The following were elected delegates to the convention.

Messrs. Cousins, Huckvale, Pingle, White Crawford, with Messrs. James Watt, Forster, Whiffin and Hutchinson as alternates, to vote in the absence of regular delegates and so Medicine Hat up to full voting strength. The secretary pointed out that any member of the Medicine Hat Board was entitled to attend the meetings, but only the delegates might vote.

The Vice-President threw out hints to all owners of flags in the city to display them for the occasion, and also that the business districts of the city should be lit up with every available gas jet, as nothing gave so good an impression to strangers.

The Mayor thought the delegates ought all to be in bed before dark. (Laughter).

Mr. Whiffin said the advance agent of the Kilties band of Toronto, had been in the city to make arrangements for the holding of a concert here. It was an inconvenient day for his meeting the board as the court of revision was in session. It had been agreed that the bandwould visit the city on June 24th and hold concert under the auspices of B. O. T.—this if the latter accepted the offer at their first meeting. The first $850 would go to the Kilties and the first $100 after that to the Board of Trade, who would be put to no rxpense in the matter. Mr. Whiffin requested the board to endorse this arrangement and use every endeavor to make the concert a success. If the Mayor would declare a half holiday for the school children he would be well satisfied. The concert would be held in the roller rink which would be put in better repair for the event. Joe Leonard was looking after the Kilties arrangements in the city. Endorsed.

The question of the appointment of a locator to direct intending homesteaders was brought up. Secretary hall had written re this matter. Mayor Cousins thought there was certainly something wrong when according to the department there were no homestead open for entry within thirty miles of the city.

On Mr. Miller's motion the secretary was instructed to write the department of the Interior in regard to the placing of an emigration hall in Medicine Hat.

Speaking on Dominion Fair exhibit the secretary stated that he had written for extra space as he found the space originally taken inadequate for requirements of exhibit Messrs. Price and Lawrence of the C.P.R. had shown great kindness in supplying the city with four new tanks specially constructed for use. These were being tested by Mr. Winters. The Fairbank-Morse people were installing a small gas engine and pump to work a model irrigation system. The grain and flour exhibit would fill up the centre of the stand. Mr. McNeely was making a large exhibit and it was principally on his account that the extra space was asked for. After dark the booth would be brilliantly lighted by natural gas. Mr. Winters would be there as an expert man to look after the plant, and a Fairbanks-Morse man would also be present. The agricultural society would look after the grain exhibit. The use of natural gas for domestic purposes would be illustrated by a smallstove in which cooking would be done, showing the cleanliness and convenience of our product in the household. A large quantity of printed matter would be sent up, and Kipling's article on "The Town that was Born Lucky" reprinted with illustrations shewing the principle places and persons referred to.

On Mr. Williams motion a resolution of thanks to the C.P.R. for their courtesy shown in supplying the city with gas tanks was passed.

Mr. Whiffin said it was also intended to show views of the city and district.

Mr. Miers stated that he had seen some very fine fruit on the northside of the city. He proposed taking photographs of this and of Ald. McKay's apple blossoms and fruit. The photos would be displayed along with views of the city in a case at the booth.

The secretary was instructed to write the Minister of public works and the minister of militia respectively, asking that the proposed reformatory be located here and that next year's military camp be held in this district. It was pointed out that our district was the best in the province for the manoeuvres—far better than Calgary.

Commissioner Hall stated that a set of model tools such as are used in the roundhouse for lighting of engines, etc., would be added to our fair exhibit.

THE HILL-CLIMBER'S REVERY

(Craving the indulgence of the Women's Literary Society.)

To wash or not to wash; that is the question:
Whether 'tis the braver man to suffer
The gibes and jeerings of unregulated youths,
Or to rise the slime and filth of moistened mud,
And by washing dirtier be? To wash but once;
No more; and by a wash to say we end
The accumulations of a fortnight's abstinence,
That all flesh gathers, 'tis a consummation
Devoutly to be wished. To wash but once;
To wash, perchance to cleanse; ay, there'd be rubs;
For in that wash with mud what streaks may come,
When we've applied wet mud to hardened dirt,
Must give us cause; there's the respect
That makes calamity of a present wash;
For who would bear the whips and scorns of boys
Who live upon the flats, where cleaner water flows,
The cleansed man's scorn, the sight of skin,
The carelessness of Council, or the sneers
That patient soliness of the hill climbers gets
When he is doubtful of the merits of
The water given him? who would soiled be,
And swear and sweat under a dirty face,
But that the dread of something after bath,
The undiscovered thickness of the mud
In water pumped to us, puzzles the mind,
And makes us rather bear the dirt we have
Than risk the other that we know not of?
Thus doubtfulness makes cowards of us all;
And thus the native wish of cleanliness
In sicklied o'er with the pale cast of doubt,
And moisture that is needed much by all
Is set aside to filter till the water clears
Enough for washing.

City of Medicne Hat Sinks

No One Seriously Injured

Capt. Ross has Narrow Escape

(Special to The Times.)

Saskatoon, Monday, June 8.—The steamer "City of Medicine Hat" is lying in port side a third under water with bottom piloted up against concrete pier of new traffic bridge here about 200 feet from east bank. The pilot house is crushed to match wood, and water is constantly rising, flooding into steamer. Nobody is hurt but Capt. Ross had a narrow escape being in the wheel house when the steamer struck. He jumped in time to save his life by catching bridge girder when the boat keeled over, Engineer McKeown jumped into the water and clambered out. It happened about nineteen o'clock, Sunday. The steamer reached town Sunday a m. and had to unship her smoke stack to get under the G.T.P. bridge. The next bridge was the C.N.R. which it cleared by a few inches. Emerging from latter a lot of telephone and telegraph wires were in the way and as the steamer plowed through the wires became entangled in her rudder and steering gear. The boat became unmanageable. The traffic bridge was four hundred yards away and owing to the high water it was seen that the steamer could not clear. Full speed astern was tried in order to run the boat on land, but the current was too strong i n the boat's disabled condition and she rammed into the steel girder, between the fourth and fifth piers. She swung to the right pier and for a few minutes remained upright, but the strong current brought herdown and she keeled to an angle of 75 degrees. The crew scrambled for the bridge pier, but Engineer McKeown took to the water, landing some distance below amid the cheers of the crowd who watched from the bridge.

Of four Medicine Hat passengers none were on board at the time of the accident, having got off above the Grand Trunk. These passengers were H. O. Yuill, W. B. Marshall, A. Hunter and Thos. Tweed. They leave tomorrow for the Hat.

When the boat struck the coal tender broke away and went over, throwing fifty tons of coal into the water. The tender was snubbed a quarter of a mile below the C.P.R. bridge. Efforts are being made to pull off the steamer by means of block and tackle from the bank. It is not known how serious the damage is, but it may be heavy.

Capt. Ross will refit her and continue his journey. The rising river is causing anxiety because of lifting the boat further against the pier and bridge. The water is now getting higher in the machinery. The boat is pitched up on copper dam used in bridge construction and fear is felt that not sufficient power can be put on her to get her off. Considerable of the bedding and furnishings have been saved. The boat is uninsured, except against fire. An attempt to pull her off is to be made tomorrow afternoon.

Does It Pay?

Last week The Times let every room on its list and had enquiries for a dozen more. There were three applications for the position of stenographer. A lady lost a coat and naturally turned to The Times to find it for her. As was to be expected, the coat was found in two days.

Every want ad that is not deadhead annears in The Times. People read the classified ads as they do the news items in the paper.

It only costs 25 cents for twenty words, or 50 cents for four insertions. Cash must accompany order.

A. P. Burns will deliver builders' materials for the following prices: Wood fibre, $21.00 a ton; plaster of Paris, $1.25 a bag; lime 50c a bushel; cement $4.25 a bbl. The cheapest place in town for sash and doors.

A celebration is being arranged for July 12th by the local Orange lodge Excursions will be run from Swift Current, Gull Lake, Maple Creek, Taber and as far west as Langdon. Swift Surrent and Gull Lake may bring baseball teams.

The School Board

At the meeting of the school board last evening two enquiries for debentures were received.

Miss McBean and Miss Best and Miss Morrison, of Elkhorn were engaged on the public school staff.

Miss Jessie A. Fraser was offered a position on the high school staff at $1,000 a year.

C. W. Webb applied for increase in salary to $1,200 a year.

Application for increase in salary was also received from Miss Morrison. Referred to committee on salaries.

Committee on school buildings recommended that two additional rooms be obtained for Toronto St. school after the holidays, that a frame building be erected for temporary use; that this building be completed by July 15. Adopted.

Committee on manual training reported forty-five pupils ready to take up the work. Cost about $540.00. Matter is left in abeyance for time being on account of expense being incurred in connection with high school and public school extensions.

Decided that languages be taught next session and principal devote a portion of his time to public school supervision.

Resolution was received from city teachers asking for increase in schedule on account of increased cost of living. Laid on the table and the Messrs. Milne and Kennedy appointed committee to obtain information as to salaries paid in Lethbridge, Macleod, Strathcona, Red Deer and Wetaskiwin.

Mounted Police Notes.

On Tuesday afternoon J. T. Bell and Tom Bell were committed for trial on a cattle stealing charge. Among the witnesses called were Constable Chalkey, Frank Skidmore, Bell's hired amn; Reddy Houghton, and Ben Webb, range drivers; A. A. Linquist, rancher and A. Desbrisay.

Mr. Desbrisay testified that the animal taken from Bell by the police bore his (Desbrisay's) brand.

W. S. Currie gave evidence that that the steer in question was bought by him at Qu'Appelle and sold to Mr. Desbrisay when a one-year-old.

Both accused were committed for trial reserving their defence.

The court was in session for six hours. The accused were released on bail. Corporal Jenkyn prosecuted, D. G. White appearing for the defence.

Jasper Demerais, who was sentenced to three months imprisonment in connection with the Porter burglary, was released on Wednesday last, twenty-six days having been remitted from his sentence for good conduct.

Londer was adjudicated insane by the Magistrate after examination on Thursday and Friday. Lander has for some months been paying undesired attentions to a local lady and making himself generally a nuisance. He is now in the mounted police barracks awaiting the pleasure of the attorney general.

Christ Lentz was fined the costs of court for obstructing the thoroughfare with his wagon.

ATHLETICS

MEDICINE HAT RIFLE ASSOCIATION.

Sarurday June 6th was the first of the four Canadian Rifle League matches for teams consisting of ten men from any Rifle Association in Canada, the highest ten scores of the members shooting on the dates assigned for the matches are counted for each match and the grand total of the four matches decides which of the many teams competing shall win the prizes.

On the local ranges it was a very poor day for shooting, the heavy downpours of rain at times making it almost impossible to see the targets, and spoiled a number of chances for high scores, the total of the ten highest scores was 733 or an average of 73¾. The dates of the matches are: June 20th, July 4th, and July 18th.

"FIRE BRIGADE VS. C. P. R.

The hitherto victorious C.P.R.'s got their bumps on Tuesday in a weird game with the Fire Brigade. The game was a record breaker for runs, hits, errors, stolen bases, passes and with one or two exceptions the boys were all badly off color. Krauss on second, for the Fire Boys played the best game on the field with nine chances and but one error. Switzer supported him well but pulled off three mistakes.

The C.P.R.'s were without Lemieux and Douglas and made the big mistake of not trying to help themselves when Ardell kept losing the game for them. His wildness was terrific. In the first innings he hit two, walked two, let two runs in on wild pitches. In the five innings he pitched he passed eight men, hit six runs in on wild pitches, hit two men allowed twenty-one stolen bases, made four errors and gave 8 hits. It is with an idea of improving the game that The Times expresses the opinion that Ardell's future on Tuesday is good for the game. His dangerous swift ball would kill amateur baseball, as terrific pitches aimed any old place towards the batter make the latter unwilling to risk getting killed. Had the C.P.R. pulled Ardell out after the first innings the story might have been different. Ardell plays a good third and certainly Andrews is the pitcher.

It was an interesting game to watch only because it was fairly even—evenly bad. Both teams batted hard, the C.P.R. hitting Fairman up 18 times, one a 2-bagger and three two baggers. Krauss secured a home run, a three bagger and a single. He also made a double play unassisted. Buchanan had four hits to his credit.

The score.

CITY VS. FIRE BRIGADE.

One of the best games of the season was played on Friday night, when the Fire Brigade took the measure of the City team by 18—10. Up to the fifth innings the game was fast and a good article of ball played, with the City having the best of the argument. But after that they went all to the bad and played poor ball. Both pitchers played good games. Barefoot the new city pitcher showed up well and with fair support will make the best of them go some. The City have a good team, but are badly in need of practice, and with a few practices will make the rest of the teams go to beat them. The score:

Ringing His Own Alarm.

Local Fireman Scares Himself and the City.

Did you ever hear of a fireman ringing an alarm in, and then running to the fire hall like mad to find out where the fire was, and to be on hand for the fight?

Well that's what happened last Tuesday. You'll remember the fire alarm at two-thirty p.m., and the explanation in The Times that the alarm box glass was not broken, so that it must have been wire trouble Well it was that all right. A certain local artisan who is also a fireman was operating at his trade in a house where there is a direct fire alarm connection with the fire station. In the course of his work he had to move the alarm box. Just as he was in the middle of it the blame thing went off, and so did the man. He heard the alarm: twenty-three'd to the fire hall, and found the number rung in was 23! Leaping on the hose waggon he was soon away out at 28, near the flour mill.

Nothing doing.

When he got back he was explaining to the boys the quick work he had done in getting to the fire hall. In graphic language he depicted his daily task, how, strange to say, he was taking down the fire alarm box in the course of his work, when the alarm rung in, how he had dropped everything and made a record to the hall.

Just then some one heaved a nozzie at him, and in about three minutes he was chasing himself around the fire hall trying to get at himself for playing a trick on himself. He had crossed the wires in removing the box, and the number 23 had happened to ring in as a result.

The fire boys blotted the record of the run off the books and the man who fooled himself had to put up the ice cream.

Now he won't go near a boxstall or a boxing match for fear it is the kind of a box that rings if monkeyed with.

Notice to Land Owners

I will have a good many people up from North Dakota this month, that will want to buy land, and I would like you to mail me the description and your net price, and terms, on what land you have for sale. I will price the land high enough above your net price to cover my commission. None but the very lowest price will be considered.

A TALK ON ADVERTISING

Advertising and news are first cousins.

The railroad and the stage coach are grandchild and grandfather.

Four out of five advertisers still use stage coach methods. The agency that distributes news has the quickest, cheapest and most effective machinery for distributing advertising. This agency is the newspaper.

The man who is passing your shop window is going somewhere. He is on some other errand. If you want to catch him when he is not in a hurry put your shop window in the newspaper, a few articles at a time. You can make a hundred and fifty thousand people look at this every day, and with much better selling results than if that hundred and fifty thousand walked by your shop one by one.

I knew a retail store in one of our large cities, a branch of an English house, which until the autumn of 1906 was managed by an Englishman; austere, conservative, dignified; a man who would have been shocked to see his shop advertised in an American newspaper. He had an exclusive trade, and the shop has an excellent street location. His net profits amounted to about $20,000. The Englishman died. His assistant, an aggressive young American, took charge. He advertised; advertised continually in the best local newspapers. Last year this exclusive shop made a net profit of over $80,000.

This is a complete case the facts of which I personally know. The Englishman depended upon the quality of his goods, and his beautifully erected stationery, and his attractive shop window, and his perpendicular-backed dress-parade clerks; all of which were above criticism. The young American put the whole show into the newspaper, admission free.

Show me ten shops which advertise regularly in a newspaper, and I will show you nine that are making money. The failure of the tenth is probably due to bad management of some sort.

Some people value goods by the price they pay; others by the shop in which they buy; others by the effect the goods have upon their neighbors. It is only the common work-a-day sensible people who value goods by the goods. If you want all four classes as customers it is your business as an advertiser to make the cap fit.—Ex.

METHODIST CONFERENCE

THE BUSINESS OF THE CHURCH FOR THE PROVINCE CARRIED OUT LAST WEEK—A WEEK'S HEAVY WORK

The Methodist ministers and laymen had the city for a week. A full attendance is reported, and the work of the conference was handled in an enthusiastic and business like manner. With sessions starting at 9 a. m. and lasting until after ten p.m., with only three hours intermission, the week's work is a hard strain, and the few hours of relaxation snatched from the conference tasks were thoroughly enjoyed by the delegates.

On Tuesday afternoon, at the school of theology, very interesting papers were given on "The Wisdom of the Old Testament in its Relation to Religion," by the Rev. C. S. Laidman, B.A., B.D., and on "Study of the Book of Revelation" by the Rev. E. S. Bishop. An interesting discussion took place on each paper. In the evening the Rev. C. H. Huestis, M.A., of Red Deer, delivered an address on the church and the Life of the People," here published in a condensed form:

The old question of John Baptist, "Art thou He that should come and take me for another," is being pressed upon the church today. Is the church competent to save the world? Men want salvation in the largest sense, ethical, industrial, social, religious, but many doubt whether the church is able to mediate this salvation. It is said that the church has lost its grip upon the people—especially upon the men of today; the preacher deals in platitudes in many instances; men go to church to satisfy the conventionalities of life; people in the church are ready enough to accept the dogma of the church, but they do not so readily square their lives with the ethics of Jesus.

"More than this—many men and women of our day who are intensely in earnest about social betterment turn from the church. The aim of Socialism today is to afford a substitute for the church in affairs unto social and industrial justice, and a relief from intolerable burdens.

"Whether or not this arraignment of the church is founded upon truth, the facts are evident that the church has not the power over the life of the people that she had in the past. The newspaper, which is supposedly a reflector of public opinion, either does not give much attention to church affairs or treats them with conventional politeness. How has this state of things come to pass? Because the church has failed to sympathize with the people in all the phases of its life. When the church does this, men turn aside from the church and pour the energies of their lives into other channels. If in a scientific age or a social age the church does not manifest sympathy with science or social aims, then it must lose its hold upon the life of the people.

"What then is the duty of the church? To minister to the whole life of the people, and thus build up the Kingdom of God in the lives of living men.

"But the church must remember there are other builders of the Kingdom. Literature, art, industry, education, the home, politics, commerce, all these are all or should be builders of the kingdom. What then becomes the chief function of the church? To set ideals. If the church finds in a commercial or a social age that the ideals of Socialism or commerce are not those of the Kingdom of God, then it is the business of the church to rebuke false ideals and cause true ones to live and grow. She must thus make her influence felt in every department of human activity—not only in the religious sphere. Especially must the church take a larger part in political and civic affairs in this western land, so that the empire of the west may be established in righteousness. This western land must be made to feel the great truth of the patriarchal age of the Old Testament that while men can breed cattle, only God can breed men.

"Then too, the church must teach these ideals, not in the language of New Testament times, but in the language of living men today. Lastly, it is the business of the church to keep burning in the hearts of the people the fires of spiritual life. Without these fires all effort at human betterment will be in vain."

The Rev. G. W. Kerby, M.A., gave an address on "The Church and its ministry."

On Thursday afternoon the Rev. Dr. Briggs, secretary of Canadian Methodist book room, gave his report, delivering at the same time an inspiring address on the work of his department and on the future and mission of Methodism in Canada. This is Dr. Briggs' first visit to a Western conference and the first time that many of the delegates have been privileged to hear him. To what might have been in other hands a dry-as-dust report he imparted an intense interest by his racy humor, a humor which is insufficient to conceal the vein of high moral earnestness.

"What a host of hallowed memories," said the speaker, "gather round the word 'Conference.' It was the hub of the Methodist wheel, the heart of the Methodist body politic, meaningless to untutored minds, but pregnant with meaning to those who bore affection for the church. The history of Methodism was made up from the field notes of a continuous campaign. It had stood the test of adaptability and would go on from victory unto victory.

One of the earliest official departments of the church in Canada was the book room, founded in 1829 with a capital of $2,000 taken out in a hundred $20 shares. Thirty seven formed the conference, each member taking shares. They had builded better than they knew. Today the department was worth between four and five thousand—the largest printing and publishing establishment in the Dominion. During the past year the profit from the Guardian had shown a decrease, this largely because two columns of advertising matter had been given up.

Last year $15,000 was given to the superannuation fund out of the profits. Between 1880 and 1900, $124,000 had been contributed to this fund as compared with $4,000 between 1859 and 1879. In all $229,000 had been given by the book room to this most worthy movement.

In seconding a vote of thanks moved by Mr. Kerby to Dr. Briggs, Dr. Riddell made a number of suggestions which he thought might make for the higher efficiency of the department. He thought the book-room should provide a series of tracts, virile, manly, without the taint of sentimentalism. There was today a feeling of great unrest in regard to Sunday School papers. It was felt that these were not gripping the children as they ought to do. In consequence much foreign literature was coming in. The speaker thought the Guardian ought to give the greatest attention to this Western Country.

The Rev. Dr. Chown, secretary of the Temperance and Moral Reform League was the next speaker. In an eloquent and powerful address he traced the progress of the movement from Bermuda to British Columbia.

There was today, he said, a great agitation going on throughout the world for temperance and morality legislation. The governments of the world were devoting much time to these problems. In France a few months ago, he had seen government notices warning the people against the use of alcoholic beverages. Mr. Llef Jones of the United Kingdom Alliance and leader of the forces of temperance in the British house, had told the speaker that his party was looking to Canada for ideals. The government of Great Britain was today staking its life on a temperance measure. The American Democratic party had by a majority of 500,000 turned down the "personal liberty" plank which was brought forward and inserted in the prohibition plank.

In Bermuda a distinct advance had been made and the most advanced legislation ever known had been recently enacted. In Prince Edward Island, prohibition was obtained everywhere, and there had recently been a day there on which the flags were flying over every prison in the province—there was not a single prisoner in the jails. In Nova Scotia, Dr. Chown had asked the government for provincial prohibition. He had been informed that they would rather resign. The temperance people, however, hoped to force the hands of the government at the next election. New Brunswick conditions were similar to those of Nova Scotia. In Quebec Archbishop Bruchesi and the Catholic Church were waging a fierce war upon intemperance. Ontario had cut out 120 bars on the first day of last month; and these were today only 2,000 as compared with 6,000 a year ago. The government was pledged against increasing the number of licenses in New Ontario. In Manitoba the government had adopted every plank in the temperance party's platform except one. The Saskatchewan government had promised a local option law on a straight majority, the question to be submitted on demand of twenty-five per cent. of the electors. After January 1, 1909, no liquor would be sold in clubs in Saskatchewan. In Alberta there was little likelihood of concessions being granted to the trade, and the outlook generally was bright.

But the province in which the social conscience had been most aroused was British Columbia. Until recent years B. C. had lagged behind the rest of the Dominion. But of late a large influx of settlers from Manitoba, from Saskatchewan and from Alberta had taken place. These were the leaven which was leavening the whole lump. The settlers from these prairie provinces were of the best class, the class which made for the moral uplift of the province. And now the Okanagan Valley was ready for local option.

Cigarette suppression was next touched upon, the speaker entertaining bright hopes that drastic legislation would ere long be on the statute book, that the sale of cigarettes at any rate to youths under sixteen would be prohibited. He would prefer that the age limit be raised to twenty-one years.

He was pleased to announce that the Chinese were themselves taking up the fight against opium. Anti-opium leagues were being formed at the coast. It was hoped that ere long the importation of this drug would be prohibited.

There were other phases of the League's work. They were endeavoring to make the teaching of good citizenship a part of school curriculum, that the sacredness of the ballot be guaranteed and the foundations of democracy and empire be laid in the cement of righteousness.

They wanted a chair of sociology in the theological colleges. Already economics was taught. This, the science of "does it pay?" should be supplemented with the science, "Is it right?" It was a regrettable fact that the present tendency in college training was to turn out "minature theological professors." None of the theories as to the atonement had more than an intellectual value. The simple, essential truth was that, in some mysterious way, the death of Christ was necessary to the forgiveness of sin.

"And in this Western Land," said the Doctor, "is God's last opportunity to build up a nation of Christian principles."

Advising all ministers to devote themselves to a study of sociology, and especially of socialism, Doctor Chown outlined a course of study, which would give an insight into these industrial and social problems from all sides. Among these were: "Orthodox Socialism," written in a critical spirit by Rossignol, a non-Socialist," "Socialism, what it is, and what it aims at," in a more sympathetic tone by John Spargon. "Christianity and the Social Crisis" by Rauchenbusch.

For his own part the speaker did not care whether Socialism was established or no. If men would only play the game fair, he thought the evils of present day society would disappeared. The age needed the man who did not care for money for its own sake.

As he went about the country he found in the churches men who might as well be women. He desired to particularly emphasize the fact that religion must be in its manifestation, not only feminine, but masculine also.

"We have created the chasm that exists between the church and labor men, and others who are not labor men but striving for social justice." was one of the striking utterances with which this speaker's address was studded.

Rev. G. W. Fortune in reviewing the work of the league in Alberta, said that a short time ago he thought fifteen years was the period during which the agitation would have to be carried on before prohibition became an accomplished fact Now he was satisfied that five years might see the abolition of the liquor traffic throughout the length and breadth of the province.

The election of Conference officers on Thursday morning resulted as follows:

Rev. T. B. Buchanan, president; on third ballot, Rev. H. E. Gordon of Lacombe, Secretary; assistant secretaries, Revs. A. R. Aldridge, B. A., Vermilion; Rev. E. J. Hodgins, B.A. Ardine; statistical secretary, Rev. W. J. Conoly, B.A.; Journal secretary, Rev. E. S. Bishop.

On Friday afternoon the Rev. T. E. Shore, secretary of the foreign missionary society of the church, gave his report in a speech of high oratorial merit, reviewing the work that has already been accomplished, and revealing endless vistas of ungathered fruit in the Master's vineyard, which but await the coming of the laborers.

Home and foreign missions, the speaker said, should not be looked upon as separate branches of the work. Properly, they were one, since the Kingdom of God was an unit. He was glad to hear of the noble work that was being carried on in connection with the Indian department—work productive of heroism as great as any known upon the foreign field. The case of the Rev. Barner of the industrial school at Red Beer might be instanced. This brother had passed by the wisdom of God, through an ordeal testing to the utmost his intrepedity. He had succeeded in initiating what would eventually prove nothing short of a revolution in the lives of his Indian pupils, drawing forth their manhood, their character, subjecting himself in many instances to the keenest humiliation. In one case where insubordination had been rife in the school and all attempts at suppression had proved of no avail, Mr. Barner, deciding that someone should be punished, had called out one of the most stalwart of the lads and giving the cat-o-nine tails into his hands, had commanded him to deliver the blows of expiation, bearing on his own body the punishment and showing to his pupils his own powers of endurance. (Applause.)

I believe, said Mr. Shore, we shall see builded up in this Canada of ours a noble monument of Christian civilization to the world. We must keep our ideals as rich as our resources, our purpose as lofty as our towering mountains.

We must, however, have an objective and ideal beyond the limitations of our borders. We should fail in our efforts to teach immigrants unless we could show a Christianity which was a Missionary Christianity.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement made as an objective the evangelization of the world in this present generation. This was an enormous task. There were a thousand million unevangelized people in the world. Nine tenths of the missionary labor devolved upon the Anglo-Saxon countries—Great Britain, the United States, Canada. Of this work Britain was doing more than half.

In Canada a third of the Protestant communicant church membership was Methodist. If this church did not bear its burden of Missionary responsibility, no other church could. The share which rightly fell to their lot was the conversion of 13,000,000 of the heathen.

Japan would be one of the most important spheres of labor. That country, with a population of 60,000,000, had 45,000 Protestant Christian souls. Marquis Ito had said with regard to his country, that with the income of wealth and of Western civilization there had not come to the youth of that nation that moral restraint which could alone save it from ruin.

"We shall have to fight out our own progress, with China and Japan," continued the speaker. While not in favor of unrestricted immigration, he could not believe that the Orientals could be permanently kept out. The vacuum of our

Some Facts.

Medicine Hat (as far as the hill section, at least, is concerned) is on the ragged edge of uncertainty as to its water supply from hour to hour. "Now you see it, and now you don't" suits the situation.

And when the pumping station favors the citizens with a fleeting supply of water, it is a matter of discussion whether it is better to go without water or to use the moistened mud forced through the pipes.

The hill climbers were without water entirely for a couple of weeks; now it varies between no water and mud.

The citizens pay hard cash to the extent of $24,000 for an elaborate filtration plant to clean the dirty water of the spring freshlets and now when the water is dirtiest we get no use of it.

There is an engine specially for pumping into the filtration plant, and a pump can force this filtered water direct into the mains. But there is no clean water.

Just when the standpipe was needed most it was shut off to allow the men to clean it out. Then the muddy water of spring is pumped into it immediately afterwards, so that it is a pretty safe wager that it is as bad as ever at the present moment.

The water is shut off without warning at the most needed hours of the day, supposedly for repairs.

Filthy water is then pumped through the pipes with two results—it is too muddy for any purpose; and it clogs up the pipes and reservoirs, so that a plumber has to be called in every few days to keep the pipes clear.

The water in the houses is unfit for man or beast. A cup of water, allowed to stand will deposit a half inch of pure mud.

In three weeks Medicine Hat is having four conventions with about five hundred visitors. These conventions are supposed to be a fine ad. for the city, but all the delegates can talk about is the dirty water.

Water-mains are bursting all over the city.

The culverts and ditches were carefully cleaned after the heavy rain of two weeks ago.

At a fire in the city a couple of weeks ago, a stream like an atomizer's had to do the work.

Many citizens are complaining of the thumping of air in their house pipes.

The C. P. R. can use the water when the citizen's can't. It is said the C. P. R. can get water whenever they like without notifying the city.

There have been several accidents at the pump-house, without any serious attempt on the part of the Council to place the responsibility and meet out punishment accordingly.

Other western cities have found it necessary to overlook personal popularity or "belonging to the same lodge" of civic officials" and the aldermen have done their duty. Calgary fired its engineer; Edmonton has just fired its City Commissioner and Engineer claiming that thousands were lost to the city through their mismanagement; Fernie has dismissed its Chief of Police. Nothing can take the place of their duty to the honest Aldermen. They delved until they placed the responsibility and then acted.

No satisfactory explanation of these incidents have been offered the citizens, the Council thinking it unnecessary to satisfy either themselves or the ratepayers. Of course there are explanations for everything. Air got into the pipes, the intake pipe was broken, there is mud in the pipes, one of the engines ran out of order. Those are explanations but what we want to know and what the Council should find out for us is who is responsible for these things, and why do they happen.

The arrival of the new pumps will stop all this for a time, but, the evidence of incompetence proves that the same things are likely to occur any time.

Fake Homesteads.

The meetings of the Board of Trade have been very far apart since the first of the year. But there is a lot of work for them to do all the time, and some of these tasks were tackled at last week's meeting.

The matter of homesteads in this district was the most important. According to the map in the land agents office there is scarcely a homestead available within thirty miles This is ridiculous as we all know, and as the government and its local officials should know. While most of the marked homesteads may have been taken up, there are scores of them within thirty miles which have never been proved up, and many have never been touched. This is evident to anyone who lives here, and the government map and land office should recognize only homesteads properly taken up. The covering of a map with red marks leave a big opening for political favoritism and this should not be at the disposal of any government.

Not only are there scores of homestead plots within thirty miles, but there are a great many within ten miles, that should be free for homesteading. Any homesteader who looks carefully into the proving up of the claimants, and goes about the work in the best way can secure a homestead within a few miles of the city. Naturally it is difficult for them to detect numerous cases where the land is unlawfully held, and they must depend upon the land agent's map for their information. When this map is so far from correct as the present one there is something very wrong. The suggestion of the Board of Trade that the Government appoint inspectors to look after the proving up of homesteads, "is a good one."

We want these lands occupied, not held by men living in the States or in Eastern Canada, not kept for political purposes.

EDITORIAL NOTES

A prominent local railway union man recently expressed himself in no measured terms concerning the Railway Act brought in by the Liberal Government. "Mr. Simmons," he said, promises us everything, but we can see the politician in it all. He has even brought up an amendment in the local house. Just as if he expects us to believe he or the local government would do anything serious to what his own party government brought in, and are enforing. We are respectable men, and we object most strenuously to being forced into jail for what may be a slip of memory or a misunderstanding of orders, especially when we have perhaps a dozen of them to keep in our minds at the same time. Do they immediately imprison (without trial) the doctor who makes a mistake? Do they treat the stationary engineer as they do the locomotive engineer, if the engine of the former blows up and kills someone? We may be perfectly innocent, but that does not keep us out of jail, as we are rushed there without trial. And then our children are twitted about their jail-bird father. It is the rankest injustice and class legislation. You can count my vote against the Government that will place such a law on the books."

The request of the Board of Trade for flags to be displayed during the Board of Trade convention next week should meet with the approval of the citizens. We want our city to look gay for the occasion, and this is a cheap way to do our share.

W. C. Simmons, the Liberal candidate for this riding is in active campaign. He will speak around Irvine this week, and, we suppose will try to show how much the Liberal Government has done for the west. He may have the support of a number of German settlers who have been receiving $4 a day for an excuse at road building, carried on purely for election purposes and without any thought of the amount of work accomplished.

But the thinking German farmers, of whom there are a great many, men who are taking a real interest in the country, would like to hear Mr. Simmons try to explain how he can expect them to support a government at the back of the land steals, the timber grants, the Burrows Personal Emolument Combination, the fishery frauds, the town site scandals, the Arctic and Montcalm grafts, the North Atlantic Trading Company, the Japanese immigration, the Ross Rifle contract, the Civil Service contract, the election frauds in West Elgin, West Huron, St. James (Montreal), Hastings and London, "the thin red line" swindle and a few dozen other more or less well known acts of the present Liberal administration. All of which have been openly proven in the House.

Half-Hour Gardening

Many of the nicest herbs for seasoning as so ornamental in their growth that they are not at all out of place in the flower beds. So the amateur gardener will do wisely to plant some, even if there is to be no vegetable garden at all.

There is savory for instance. One variety is an annual, known as summer variety. It requires simple seeding down in light, fairly rich soil, and when it comes up, it can be picked as wanted, or the whole plant can be plucked when it is in flower and hung away to dry and keep.

The other variety, winter savory, can be sown now. Pick the leaves and tips as wanted, and cut the plant down to the ground in the fall. It is a perennial, and a bed of winter savory will continue to produce for about three years.

Mint comes in three varieties—spearmint, peppermint and Japanese mint. Spearmint is the finest for kitchen use, and makes the most delicious mint sauce, whereas, peppermint is better adapted for confectionery and other things where strong flavoring is desired.

The method of culture of all three is the same. Any good garden soil will do, especially if it is moist. It can be sown down in beds and permitted to spread at will, and in this form will make a decidedly pretty part of the garden.

Sow the seeds about an inch deep, and cut off leaves as you want them. They need no winter protection, and plants can be taken up and will continue growing throughout the winter in the house.

The same treatment may be given to port marjoram, which is very useful for seasoning and is quite hardy. Sweet marjoram is not so hardy. Though it is a perennial, it needs no re-sowing every year as a rule.

Tarragon is another herb worth having. It is a perennial, and its leaves are excellent for flavoring salads. It is usually kept dried to serve through the winter.

Another delicious salad flavoring is furnished by Sweet Cicely or sweet-scented chervil, whose leaves have a strong aniseed taste. The French people make a soup from the roots.

Tansy is a most showy plant when in bloom. The curled variety is the better. It makes handsame garnishing, among other uses. For use as herbs, only a few plants are needed, as it grows wonderfully rank and lush.

Thyme makes a very pretty edging. It is a perennial, coming in two varieties—the common and the lemon thyme. The latter is a creeper only a few inches high.

Sage is beautiful with its blush-white flowers and silver leaves. It will survive ordinary winters with protection. It is, however, only half hardy. There are several varieties. The broad-leaved green kind is the best. They are best when used fresh. Do not cut them too heavily the first year. One cutting is as much as they can stand. After the first season they may be cut two or three times.

To save herbs for winter use, cut the leaves just once before frost, tie them in loose bundles and hang them in a fairly warm place to dry. When you want some, crumble the dry leaves between the fingers. During the winter store them in a tight box or some other place where the air cannot get at them so freely as to take away their strength.

If you are behind hand in your garden making and the end of this month catches you without enough plants growing from seed, the following may be set out from pot-grown plants, which can be bought cheaply anywhere. All these are June flowering.

For the edging of a flower bed, set out blue ageratum. It is a plant that grows about eight inches high and furnishes blue bloom through June, July and August and September. It will accommodate itself either to sunny places or those that are half shaded, work the soil up so that it will be very light and fine.

To set just behind this edging, plant the common annual phlox (the variety known as phlox Drummond). It has blossoms that come in many different shades, all very delicate and pleasing. If the fading flowers are removed promptly, it will furnish bloom for about three months, beginning next month. Each plant will bear lots of blossoms. It grows about a foot high and likes

Make It Yourself

Tells Our Readers How to Mix Best Rheumatism Cure.

A well-known authority on Rheumatism gives the readers of a large New York daily paper the following valuable, yet simple and harmless, prescription, which anyone can easily prepare at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in a bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so-called rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists here will mix the prescription for our readers, if asked to.

The Strength of Wheat

Strange as it may seem the article of food which is by far the most common—namely, flour, is one about which there is waged continual war. Analysts are not agreed, millers are not agreed, bakers are not agreed and the public are not agreed on many questions, and the result is a controversy. Fortunately for our lives' sake, whether we eat white bread or brown we continue to live on, unconscious of any serious injury to health or digestion. However, to argue from this that the whole question is purely an academic one would be a false conclusion; it would be tantamount to discrediting science, its efforts and achievements. Rather should we feel grateful in the extreme to those who in all earnestness seek the truth and who give us the result of their poorly requited labours.

The literature of wheat and flour received a valuable addition by the paper which was read by Messrs. Julian L. Baker, and H. F. E. Hulton before the Society of Chemical Industry at its recent meeting in Burlington House. The subjects of the paper was "Considerations Affecting the Strength of Wheat." It is presumed that there are enough people sufficiently interested in the general conclusions of this paper to warrant the publication of a brief synopsis of it; and some reflections born of the occasion.

The Romance of Wheat.

So keenly occupied is the average man with his own affairs that he is not even curious concerning the development of those things which play so large a part in his life, making for his comfort, his well being, his pleasure, or his ease.

And yet the stories of the common things of everyday life are romances of achievement, of progress, or ceaseless effort for something better, in which tragedy and triumph are inseparably mingled. The story of wheat is no exception; indeed, it has a romance peculiarly its own, for wheat, with the bread which it typifies, is the primary object in the struggle for existence. The story of wheat, of its cultivation in early times, in mediaeval times, and in modern times, of its milling, from the rough stones of a primitive age to the magnificently equipped mills of today, with their enormous capacities; of its marketing in Great Britain, the world's great wheat mart and the arbiter of prices, and with the occasional spectacular and futile attempts of American manipulators to "corner the markets"—such a story has few equals for gripping interest and instructive incident. One would fain dwell on phases of this fascinating story of wheat, of its conversion into flour and into bread for the substance of nations, but such discussions may not be indulged into any great extent at this time, and in this place. Yet it is needful to speak of wheat in its relation to flour of the best kind, and of the process by which it is milled.

The Influence of Sun and Soil.

It must be very clear that not all varieties of wheat possess equal milling value; the differences in this respect are very great—soil, climate and country all combining to give character to the wheat berry. The growth of the wheat-plant from seed to maturity is one constant series of chemical changes. The various food elements in the form of mineral matter, such as potash, lime, and magnesia salts, together with the water and nitrogenous salt compounds, are taken from the soil, while the carbon is obtained entirely from the air. The leaf is the manufacturing plant or chemical laboratory where all the various changes take place; and where the different compounds, including starch, gluten, and oil, are elaborated. The materials that are produced in the leaf are finally stored in the seed as nourishment for the future wheat-plant.

Wheat grown on fertile soils, in northern latitudes, with a short but forcing season of growth, develops more glutinous matter and less starch than wheat grown on poorer soils and in latitudes where the period of growth is prolonged. The same general laws which influence the growth and development of animal bodies are also noticeable in the growth of wheat.

The scientific cultivation of wheat, the development of new varieties is a comparatively recent thing, and may be said to be due to the strike among millers to produce a superior flour. This has led to a blending of wheats, so that the deficiencies of one variety may be supplied by another variety in which the essential requirements are present in goodly measure. Thus it will be perceived that milling does not consist merely in extracting from the wheat kernel its flour and this in the best way, but also in knowing what is the perfect flour, chemically considered, and best from the baker's or consumer's point of view. Having found the wheats which meet the approval of the analyst and the bakers and eaters of the bread made from it, it then becomes the ambition of the miller to produce the flour which such wheats yield in its most perfect form. Thus the milling process becomes of the highest importance in the manufacture of flour.

Flour Facts.

Flour, as generally used by the baker, consists of the finely ground inner portion of the wheat grain. The gluten is situated under the bran, and as the finest flours are derived from the more central part of the grain, they do not contain so much gluten as the whole meal or the coarser flours. The gluten layer is the richest in fats and salts. Ordinary flour contains practically none of the albuminous and fatty constituents which comprise the germ. "Germ" breads and breads of kindred character are made from flour containing more or less of the germ. Many authorities have insisted that whole wheat flour and seconds should be used in preference to the finer kinds of flour. There is, however, the very important fact to be remembered, that although these coarser flours contain more nourishment—such as gluten, fat, and salts—these are digested and absorbed into the system with considerably greater difficulty than the finest flours, and hence they do not possess the full advantages that a chemical analysis would indicate.

The essence of the whole brown-bread controversy is just this: what really counts in food value is what is assimilated, "not that which goeth into a man defileth or nourisheth him;" in other words, it is what remains that tells, and if a food showing a greater proportion of nutriment substances is less well digested and assimilated, an apparently poorer one which is wholly utilised has the greater value.

The Element of Strength

Few flours at present on the market are all English in origin. Mr. A. E. Humphries, past president of the National Association of British and Irish Millers, defines "strength" in flour as "the capacity to form large, (shapely or well-piled) loaves." For reasons at present obscure, many foreign flours are "stronger" than English, and to obtain the requisite "strength" resource has to be had to blending foreign with English. It must not be thought that this implies deterioration in English wheats, but with the available sources at present open to the English miller the standard of what is expected has been raised, and he is therefore compelled, however patriotically minded, to enhance the "strength" of much of the home grown article by blending with foreign flour.

Great Britain requires thirty-two million quarters per annum of wheat of which about 2 per cent is home-grown. If one of these "strong" foreign wheats be grown in this country, it is found almost invariably that it soon loses its character for "strength" that it originally possessed. There is only one exception to this, a wheat known as "Fife" which it is believed has been continually grown in this country for over ten years.

It has long been the object of chemists to find out in what exactly consists this mysterious property of "strength" and to find means of determining definitely in advance in the laboratory what will be the behaviour of the flour in the bakehouse.

Professor T. B. Wood, Reader of Agricultural Chemistry in the University of Cambridge, has done valuable work in the direction, and Messrs. Julian L. Baker and H. F. E. Hulton have carried out a lengthy series of investigations bearing on this problem, and their results tend to prove that "strength" is a result any of many factors, prominent among these being the enzymic activities of the flour. Enzymes are nitrogenous substances which possess many of the properties of living matter, the principal among these being the capacity they possess for profoundly altering the composition of substances like starch and proteids. There seems little reason to doubt that the enzyme which effects starch decomposition is one that has a most important bearing on the problem in question. The deficiency or excess of these ezymes appears to be closely related to the quality of the flour.

The Conservation of Strength.

The question suggests itself—Can the property of strength be enhanced in the milling of the flour? It is manifest, of course, that milling can not add to the wheat any property which it does not contain intrinsically; but milling can take away. Indeed, the business of milling is to take away, to remove, in order to render wheat fit for human consumption in an easily assimilated form. If the milling process cannot add to the strength of flour, neither must it take away from it; it must conserve the inherent strength. It is this ability to get out of flour the strength contained in the wheat which differentiates some mills from others, and which has won for certain mills an enviable name.

Wheat For the Mill.

Before dismissing entirely this subject of wheat and its flour or milling values, it may be said that soil and climate and varieties are not the sole things for the miller's consideration. Soil and climate and the variety itself may be all that can be desired, yet the wheat when it is offered to the miller may fall far short of his requirements. It may have suffered from drought, from frost, from disease, it may have become mildewed, or "heated" or otherwise damaged in its garnered state. Wheat is subject to a wide variety of accidents, any one of which, if not entirely rendering it unfit for conversion into flour, at the same time may rob it of its perfection, with the result that the flour which it will produce will be of poor quality or color. To protect himself from inferior or damaged wheat, the miller must ever be on the alert; he must have a moral courage to reject many tempting offers; and a financial courage to enable him to refuse to use wheats which he may already own, but which he subsequently discovers to be below his own standards. And here it may be said with respect of white flours that if the flour be dark it argues an inferior blend or a damaged wheat or a poor mill. The best wheat produces white flour of a beautiful clear, creamy colour, and to obtain this colour or appearance is the aim of all millers of the best class.

Suspicion Attends Perfection.

Singularly enough, there is a widespread conviction that if flour be too white, its strength is impaired. That is, perfection comes to be regarded as imperfection. It is interesting to consider how much fallacies arise. Doubtless the belief that an ultra-white flour is not so strong as a flour of darker colour, is due in part to the favour which is bestowed in such generous measure at the present time upon wheat meals and brown flours, which, by their very nature, are far removed in point of colour from the best examples of white flour. Besides this, there is to be seen that tendency to cling to the past, that habit of thought which most of us possess, which leads us to see in the good old days of our childhood, or parents or grandparents, a better state of things than is to be found today. When flour was produced by millstones it was impossible to achieve the colour which is obtainable today by the process known as the roller system. Notwithstanding the efforts of the millstone millers to produce a flour which would be devoid of the specks, or which would be as white as the wheat kernel itself, thus setting for themselves a standard of ideal whiteness, the imperfect product of this class of mill has itself become a standard since the advent of the roller mill, with its power to make a flour equal of which no former time ever knew. Strength in flour does not consist in colour, in the presence of dark specks; rather in strength found in the flour itself, in its ability to produce a perfect loaf.

The Advent of the Roller Mill.

The substitution of rolls for millstones was the most radical advance ever made in the science of milling, and the manufacture of flour as it is understood in its largest sense today is really a new industry. This revolution in milling science dates back to less than forty years ago. The great change was inaugurated by the advent of the purifier, to be followed soon after by the substitution of chilled iron rolls for the millstones of ancient fame. The results were instant and tremendous. Not only was an incomparably better flour possible but the potential output of mills became enormously increased.

The "purifier" is a device for separating middlings and flour. It is an invention credited to a Frenchman, one Edmund Le Croix, unaccustomed to business ways and lacking a knowledge of the English tongue. The poor man received nothing but the honor and credit of his invention. Had he been shrewder and more suspicious he would not have allowed the fruits of his labor to escape him, and he might have obtained some of the millions which went to others as a result of his experiments. The history of the "purifier" is an unwritten industrial romance. Fragments of it have been told, but the entire story is a trade legend abounding in dramatic facts rivalling fiction, which awaits the coming of a comprehending novelist to weave into a tale of absorbing interest.

The Passing of the Millstone.

The coming of rolls instead of millstones for grinding the wheat wrought a resolution of far-reaching effect. The reform in the methods of milling by the introduction of the roller system was destined to sweep everything before it in its sudden and unexpected onslaught. Opposition to it was not only idle, but ruinous. Those who caught its spirit made fortunes. It made possible new trade conditions. It opened up new wheat growing areas. It led to the building of railways and of ships to carry the grain from distant countries to European ports. It gave the peoples of the world a better and cheaper bread than they had ever known before. The millstone is still to be found here and there, but it is no longer a factor in the milling of wheat, commercially considered.

Following the purifier and the roll came a train of useful inventions, which were incorporated into the roller system of milling—dust-collectors, scourers, separators, sifters, and other machines, all of which have as their ultimate object the perfecting of the finished product. So ideally perfect has the system of milling become that improvement seems almost impossible, and yet the lesson of history is that finality is never or rarely reached. Among millers themselves the struggle for supremacy, as represented by flour quality goes on endlessly. For a time the belief was prevalent that the best flour was Hungarian, but a few years ago a firm of British millers wrestled the coveted honour of producing the best flour in the world from their Hungarian rivals. Their triumph was complete. Not only was the flour found by impartial judges in an open competition to be superior, but the resultant bread sustained the verdict.

The Cheapest Loaf.

There has always been a disposition in England to resist any measure which threatens to tax food. Often, however, those who are loudest in their protests against any tariff legislation are unmindful of the extravagance which is the result of using an inferior quality. Cheapness and economy are by no means identical terms. Unfortunately, there is a tendency, particularly among the poorer classes, to think that the cheap loaf is the great desideratum. The demand for the cheap loaf has inevitably led the baker in many instances to furnish the cheap loaf, and this has meant of necessity the use of cheap flour. If any class of the community should have the best bread possible to produce, it is the poor, for bread constitutes the major part of their daily fare. Human life is the most valuable asset; it is the thing of greatest value to the individual; to shorten life is to rob the nation; to prolong life is to enrich it. And so it becomes the concern of statesmanship to protect life from every peril which threatens it. One is glad to know that British statesmanship recognizes its high duty, and that it is doing much to safeguard the health and longevity of the British public by Acts of Parliament, by education, by the encouragement of science, and by various other means. But statesmanship to realize its purpose and ideal requires the co-operation of the individual, without which it can accomplish little or nothing. It is for the people, whether rich or poor, to respond to the efforts made in their behalf, and as these relate to food, to study food values and to consume that which in the final analysis means truest economy.

That there is a disposition on the part of the public to acquire the knowledge which "lesses him that gives and him that takes" is proved in a thousand ways. Never before, not even in the days of the Renaissance, was the passion for learning, the yearning for useful knowledge, so great as it is today. Schools and students were never so numerous, and the aids to the acquirements of an education offer on every hand. The uplift in ideals, the impulse to purpose, the rewards of application, are matters of common remark. Men talk of England's retrogression and predict her downfall from her present high station among the nations of the world, but such men forget to reckon with the great force of education which is to be seen everywhere at work, and which has concrete expression in the founding of new universities and technical schools, where applied science claims an ever-increasing number of students.—From the London Daily Mail.

ONLY A Common Cold
BUT IT BECOMES A SERIOUS MATTER IF NEGLECTED. PNEUMONIA, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CATARRH or CONSUMPTION IS THE RESULT.
Get rid of it at once by taking
Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup
Obstinate coughs yield to its grateful soothing action, and in the racking, persistent cough, often present in Consumptive cases, it gives prompt and sure relief. In Asthma and Bronchitis it is a successful remedy, rendering breathing easy and natural, enabling the sufferer to enjoy refreshing sleep, and often effecting a permanent cure.
We do not claim that it will cure Consumption in the advanced stages, but if taken in time it will prevent it reaching that stage, and will give the greatest relief to the poor sufferer from this terrible malady.
Be careful when purchasing to see that you get the genuine Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. Put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark.
Mr. Wm. O. Jenkins, Spring Lake, Alex, writes: "I had a very bad cold settled on my lungs. I bought two bottles of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup but it only required one to cure me. I have never met with any other medicine as good."

WINNIPEG EXHIBITION.

The Winnipeg Exhibition, July 11—17 will be the best in its history. The entries already indicate an exceptional success and the program of entertainment provides further assurance.

The Light Agricultural Motor competition, the first of its kind ever held on the continent will be of supreme importance to the farmers of Western Canada.

Motors from Canada, Europe and the United States will compete in practical soil cultivation on the Exhibition Ground, and will afford the farmers of Western Canada a practical opportunity of seeing the progress of the motor as a factor in farming, under conditions which it is believed will revolutionize the farming industry in a prairie country

The live stock exhibits will be better and greater than ever. The prize list which has been revised and the amounts in many cases increased indicates the main purpose of the Exhibition—the best interests of agriculture and stock raising in Western Canada. Valuable medals and increased prizes in almost every one of the various live stock classes such as Clydesdales, Percherons, Shorthorns, etc., will assist in making the coming Exhibition, the great Exhibit for the farmer.

The entertainment and race programs are better than at any Exhibition ever held in Western Canada, greater effort having been made and more money expended to make these features of extreardinary interest to visitors.

To music lovers, especially of band music, there will be held one of the greatest band tournaments ever held in the Dominion, competing bands from all over the country having entered.

The world famous Innes Orchestral band of Chicago, one of the greatest musical organizations in the world will be present and play daily during Exhibition week.

What with this magnificent band, there will be also present the 91st Highlanders and the Iowa State Band, two of the best musical organizations on the continent.

With the great Band Competition, the presence of great bands, the spectacular Tattoo, with its unique musical features and "The Siege of Suragossa" with accompanying magnificent fireworks, the Winnipeg Exhibition, July 11—17, will be the most attractive ever held in Western Canada.

CONSTIPATION.
Although generally described as a disease, can never exist where some of the organs are diseased. Which is generally found to be the liver. It consists of an inability to regularly evacuate the bowels, and as a regular action of the bowels is absolutely essential to general health, the liver regularly should never be neglected.
DILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS
have no equal for relieving and curing Constipation, Biliousness, Weak Stomach, Heartburn, and all Liver Troubles.
Mr. A. E. Burton, Vancouver, B.C., writes:—"For many years past I was troubled with constipation and biliousness, and after I tried nearly everything but only got temporary relief. A friend advised me to try Laxa-Liver Pills, and they cured me completely. Price 25 cents per box, or 5 boxes for $1.00, all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price.

CHILD BADLY BURNED BY FLAT IRON.

Mrs. Thos. Allen, of 156 Walter Street, St. Mary's, Ont., says:—"My little daughter, Mildred, four years old, was severely burned a few months since by sitting on a hot flat iron. She received three burns in all, one on her thigh, another on her heel and a third on her instep. At the time of the accident I used oils and then one preparation after another, yet nothing seemed to take out the inflammation or heal up the open wounds. Finally we heard of Zam-Buk and obtained a box. I began applying this balm and was agreeably surprised when in the course of a few days the wounds were not so inflamed and the child rested easier. I preserved in using and gradually the sores on heel and instep healed over, but the wound on thigh took a much longer time. However, new skin formed over this as soon as all inflammation and soreness was drawn out. Now only a small mark remains to show where the burns had been."

Zam-Buk is healing, soothing and antiseptic. It is the home "first aid," and no mother or home should be without it. Of all druggists and stores, sell at 50 cents a box.

We are not going out of Business

We don't blame you for thinking so when you see our goods and hear the prices. You ask how we can sell at these prices. We were very fortunate in securing a consignment of Scotch and English Tweeds and Worsteds which were sent to a Western concern, who could not handle them owing to hard times. Rather than have the goods shipped back the manufacturers have agreed to let us have them at a great big discount. So it is

An ill wind that blows nobody good

We have the goods and you know the reason why. It is up to us to sell them quick and cheap. This is the point which we feel sure will interest you:

The Hound of the Baskervilles

Another Adventure of Sherlock Holmes.

BY A. CONAN DOYLE.

Author of "The Green Flag" and "The Great Boer War"

Copyright (1902) by A. Conan Doyle.

"Within the last few months it became increasingly plain to me that Sir Charles's nervous system was strained to the breaking point. He had taken this legend which I have read you exceedingly to heart—so much so that, although he would walk in his own grounds, nothing would induce him to go out upon the moor at night. Incredible as it may appear to you, Mr. Holmes, he was honestly convinced that a dreadful fate overhung his family, and certainly the records which he was able to give of his ancestors were not encouraging. The idea of some ghastly presence constantly haunted him, and on more than one occasion he has asked me whether I had on my medical journeys as much as ever seen any strange creature or heard the baying of a hound. The latter question he put to me several times, and always with a voice which vibrated with excitement.

"I can well remember driving up to his house in the evening, some three weeks before the fatal event. He chanced to be at his hall door. I had descended from my gig and was standing in front of him, when I saw his eyes fix themselves over my shoulder, and stare past me with an expression of the most dreadful horror. I whisked round and had just time to catch a glimpse of something which I took to be a large black calf passing at the head of the drive. So excited and alarmed was he that I was compelled to go down to the spot where the animal had been and look around for it. It was gone, however, and the incident appeared to make the worst impression upon his mind. I stayed with him all the evening, and it was on that occasion, to explain the emotion which he had shown, that he confided to my keeping that narrative which I read to you when first I came. I mention this small episode because it assumes some importance in view of the tragedy which followed, but I was convinced at the time that the matter was entirely trivial and that his excitement had no justification.

"It was at my advice that Sir Charles was about to go to London. His heart was, I knew, affected, and the constant anxiety in which he lived, however chimerical the cause of it might be, was evidently having a serious effect upon his health. I thought that a few months among the distractions of town would send him back a new man. Mr. Stapleton, a mutual friend who was much concerned at his state of health, was of the same opinion. At the last instant came this terrible catastrophe.

"On the night of Sir Charles's death Barrymore the butler, who made the discovery, sent Perkins the groom on horseback to me, and as I was sitting up late I was able to reach Baskerville Hall within an hour of the event. I checked and corroborated all the facts which were mentioned at the inquest. I followed the footsteps down the Yew Alley, I saw the spot at the moor-gate where he seemed to have waited, I remarked the change in the shape of the prints after that point, I noted that there were no other footsteps save those of Barrymore on the soft gravel, and finally I carefully examined the body, which had not been touched until my arrival. Sir Charles lay on his face, his arms out, his fingers dug into the ground, and his features convulsed with some strong emotion to such an extent that I could hardly have sworn to his identity. There was certainly no physical injury of any kind. But one false statement was made by Barrymore at the inquest. He said that there were no traces upon the ground round the body. He did not observe any, but I did—some little distance off, but fresh and clear."

"Footprints?"

"Footprints."

"A man's or a woman's?"

Dr. Mortimer looked strangely at us for an instant, and his voice sank almost to a whisper as he answered:—

"Mr. Holmes, they were the footprints of a gigantic hound!"

CHAPTER III.

I confess that at these words a shudder passed through me. There was a thrill in the doctor's voice which showed that he was himself deeply moved by that which he told us. Holmes leaned forward in his excitement and his eyes had the hard, dry glitter which shot from them when he was keenly interested.

"You saw this?"

"As clearly as I see you."

"And you said nothing?"

"What was the use?"

"How was it that no one else saw it?"

"The marks were some twenty yards from the body and no one gave them a thought. I don't suppose I should have done so had I not known this legend."

"There are many sheep-dogs on the moor?"

"No doubt, but this was no sheep-dog."

"You say it was large?"

"Enormous."

"But it had not approached the body?"

"No."

"What sort of night was it?"

"Damp and raw."

"But not actually raining?"

"No."

"What is the alley like?"

"There are two lines of old yew hedge, twelve feet high and impenetrable. The walk in the centre is about eight feet across."

"Is there anything between the hedges and the walk?"

"Yes, there is a strip of grass about six feet broad on either side."

"I understand that the yew hedge is penetrated at one point by a gate?"

"Yes, the wicket-gate which leads on to the moor."

"Is there any other opening?"

"None."

"So that to reach the Yew Alley one either has to come down it from the house or else to enter it by the moor-gate?"

"There is an exit through a summer-house at the far end."

"Had Sir Charles reached this?"

"No; he lay about fifty yards from it."

"Now, tell me, Dr. Mortimer—and this is important—the marks which you saw were on the path and not on the grass?"

"No marks could show on the grass."

"Were they on the same side of the path as the moor-gate?"

"Yes; they were on the edge of the path on the same side as the moor-gate."

"You interest me exceedingly. Another point. Was the wicket-gate closed?"

"Closed and padlocked."

"How high was it?"

"About four feet high."

"Then anyone could have got over it?"

"Yes."

"And what marks did you see by the wicket-gate?"

"None in particular."

"Good Heaven! Did no one examine?"

"Yes, I examined myself."

"And found nothing?"

"It was all very confused. Sir Charles had evidently stood there for five or ten minutes."

"How do you know that?"

"Because the ash had twice dropped from his cigar."

"Excellent! This is a colleague, Watson, after our own heart. But the marks?"

"He had left his own marks all over that small patch of gravel. I could discern no others."

Sherlock Holmes struck his hand against his knee with an impatient gesture.

"If I had only been there!" he cried. "It is evidently a case of extraordinary interest, and one which presented immense opportunities to the scientific expert. That gravel page upon which I might have read so much has been long ere this smudged by the rain and defaced by the clogs of curious peasants. Oh, Dr. Mortimer, Dr. Mortimer, to think that you should not have called me in! You have indeed much to answer for."

"I could not call you in, Mr. Holmes, without disclosing these facts to the world, and I have already given my reasons for not wishing to do so. Besides, besides——"

"Why do you hesitate?"

"There is a realm in which the most acute and most experienced of detectives is helpless."

"You mean that the thing is supernatural?"

"I did not positively say so."

"No, but you evidently think it."

"Since the tragedy, Mr. Holmes, there have come to my ears several incidents which are hard to reconcile with the settled order of Nature."

"For example?"

"I find that before the terrible event occurred several people had seen a creature upon the moor which corresponds with this Baskerville demon, and which could not possibly be any animal known to science. They all agreed that it was a huge creature, luminous, ghastly, and spectral. I have cross-examined these men, one of them a hard-headed countryman, one a farrier, and one a moorland farmer, who all tell the same story of this dreadful apparition, exactly corresponding to the hell-hound of the legend. I assure you that there is a reign of terror in the district and that it is a hardy man who will cross the moor at night."

"And you, a trained man of science, believe it to be supernatural?"

"I do not know what to believe."

Holmes shrugged his shoulders.

"I have hitherto confined my investigations to this world," said he. "In a modest way I have combatted evil, but to take on the Father of Evil himself would, perhaps, be too ambitious a task. Yet you must admit that the footmark is material."

"The original hound was material enough to tug a man's throat out, and yet he was diabolical as well."

"I see that you have quite gone over to the supernaturalists. But now, Dr. Mortimer, tell me this. If you hold these views, why have you come to consult me at all? You tell me in the same breath that it is useless to investigate Sir Charles's death, and that you desire me to do it."

"I did not say that I desired you to do it."

"Then, how can I assist you?"

"By advising me as to what I should do with Sir Henry Baskerville, who arrives at Waterloo Station"—Dr. Mortimer looked at his watch—"in exactly one hour and a quarter."

"He being the heir?"

"Yes. On the death of Sir Charles we inquired for this young gentleman, and found that he had been farming in Canada. From the accounts which have reached us he is an excellent fellow in every way. I speak now not as a medical man but as a trustee and executor of Sir Charles's will."

"There is no other claimant, I presume?"

"None. The only other kinsman whom we have been able to trace was Rodger Baskerville, the youngest of three brothers of whom poor Sir Charles was the elder. The second brother, who died young, is the father of this lad Henry. The third, Rodger, was the black sheep of the family. He came of the old masterful Baskerville strain, and was the very image, they tell me, of the family picture of old Hugo. He made England too hot to hold him, fled to Central America, and died there in 1876 of yellow fever. Henry is the last of the Baskervilles. In one hour and five minutes I meet him at Waterloo Station. I have had a wire that he arrived at Southampton this morning. Now, Mr. Holmes, what would you advise me to do with him?"

"Why should he not go to the home of his fathers?"

"It seems natural, does it not? And yet, consider that every Baskerville who goes there meets with an evil fate. I feel sure that if Sir Charles could have spoken with me before his death he would have warned me against bringing this the last of the old race, and the heir to great wealth, to that deadly place. And yet it cannot be denied that the prosperity of the whole poor, bleak country-side depends upon his presence. All the good work which has been done by Sir Charles will crash to the ground if there is no tenant of the Hall. I fear lest I should be swayed too much by my own obvious interest in the matter, and that is why I bring the case before you and ask for your advice."

Holmes considered for a little time.

"Put into plain words, the matter is this," said he. "In your opinion there is a diabolical agency which makes Dartmoor an unsafe abode for a Baskerville—that is your opinion?"

"At least I might go the length of saying that there is some evidence that this may be so."

"Exactly. But surely, if your supernatural theory be correct, it could work the young man evil in London as easily as in Devonshire. A devil with merely local powers like a parish vestry would be too inconceivable a thing."

"You put the matter more flippantly, Mr. Holmes, than you would probably do if you were brought into personal contact with these things. Your advice, then, as I understand it, is that the young man will be as safe in Devonshire as in London. He comes in fifty minutes. What would you recommend?"

"I recommend, sir, that you take a cab, call off your spaniel who is scratching at my front door, and proceed to Waterloo to meet Sir Henry Baskerville."

"And then?"

"And then you will say nothing to him at all until I have made up my mind about the matter."

"How long will it take you to make up your mind?"

"Twenty-four hours. At ten o'clock to-morrow, Dr. Mortimer, I will be much obliged to you if you will call upon me here, and it will be of help to me in my plans for the future if you will bring Sir Henry Baskerville with you."

"I will do so, Mr. Holmes." He scribbled the appointment on his shirt cuff and hurried off in his strange, peering, absent-minded fashion. Holmes stopped him at the head of the stair.

"Only one more question, Dr. Mortimer. You say that before Sir Charles Baskerville's death several people saw this apparition upon the moor?"

"Three people did."

"Did any see it after?"

"I have not heard of any."

"Thank you. Good morning."

Holmes returned to his seat with that quiet look of inward satisfaction which meant that he had a congenial task before him.

"Going out, Watson?"

"Unless I can help you."

"No, my dear fellow, it is at the hour of action that I turn to you for aid. But this is splendid, really unique from some points of view. When you pass Bradley's would you ask him to send up a pound of the strongest shag tobacco? Thank you. It would be as well if you could make it convenient not to return before evening. Then I should be very glad to compare impressions as to this most interesting problem which has been submitted to us this morning."

I knew that seclusion and solitude were very necessary for my friend in those hours of intense mental concentration during which he weighed every particle of evidence, constructed alternative theories, balanced one against the other, and made up his mind as to which points were essential and which immaterial. I therefore spent the day at my club and did not return to Baker Street until evening. It was nearly nine o'clock when I found myself in the sitting-room once more.

My first impression as I opened the door was that a fire had broken out, for the room was so filled with smoke that the light of the lamp upon the table was blurred by it. As I entered, however, my fears were set at rest, for it was the acrid fumes of strong coarse tobacco which took me by the throat and set me coughing. Through the haze I had a vague vision of Holmes in his dressing-gown coiled up in an arm-chair with his black clay pipe between his lips. Several rolls of paper lay around him.

"Caught cold, Watson?" said he.

"No, it's this poisonous atmosphere."

"I suppose it is pretty thick, now that you mention it."

"Thick! It is intolerable."

"Open the window, then! You have been at your club all day, I perceive."

"My dear Holmes!"

"Am I right?"

"Certainly, but how——?"

(To be Continued.)

"I might go the length of saying there is some evidence that this may be so."

a rich soil, plenty of moisture and plenty of sunlight.

For the rear of a bed, monkey flowers, shirley poppies, wall flowers and snap dragon will furnish a great variety of bloom and color.

Of course the most artistic gardening design is to mass just one kind of flower of one color; but all of us, whether we are beginners or not, have a fondness for many different kinds. So, while it is a truly barbaric thing to have clumps of red alongside of purples, or screaming yellows near bloom that are delicate in tint, there is no such objection to a sensible and reasonable mixture in which there shall be no pronounced mass of color to make a noisy contrast with another mass. If the back of a bed is planted deliberately to furnish a true mixture, it will make a very handsome variegated garden, which is often quite as artistic as the garden laid out in correct mass effects.

Monkey flowers come in various colors. They grow about three feet high and bloom for about six weeks. They love rich, moist, shady places. Shirley poppies grow about two feet high. An objection to them is that, though they are among the most beautiful of our common garden flowers, they bloom only two weeks. Snap dragon comes about two or two and one-half feet high, blooms through almost three months, and likes rich, moist, sunny ground. The wall flowers grow one and one-half to two and one-half feet high and like dry, sunny places.

In planting shrubs for the permanent beautifying of grounds, large or small it will not pay to select shrubs mainly with a view to the blossoms. With the exception of a comparatively small number, many of our most beautiful foliage varieties have blossoms for only a few weeks or no blooms at all worth mentioning.

They mak? up for it by displays of magnificent foliage that lasts almost the whole year, and a shrubbery depends on foliage and not on flowers.

One of the most glorious plants a plant so beautiful that a good specimen looks like one blazing yellow flower is the golden elder. No green shrubbery should be without one specimen of this, set well in, so that its golden yellow will glow through the greens. It is one of our most satisfactory shrubs, having few insect enemies and few diseases. In fact, the writer has never found either on the golden elder, and he had half a dozen great shubberies at one time, consisting entirely of this plant.

Cut back sparingly, but frequently and its wonderful yellow seems to grow more and more golden. It will often grow ten feet high in a single season, especially if it is watered plentifully. Twelve feet in height is the average for good specimens.

The purple berberry, a plant full of purple foliage, and growing in a most graceful shape, sending its thorny branches out laterally to a great extent, is a shrub that will make a splendid group to stand at the front edge or sides.

Japanese maples and Japanese sumachs, with foliage ranging in red-ish and purple shades from deep maroon to blood-red, are dwarf-growing forms that make magnificant parts of a group. The sumach in especial is often remarkable, providing one is fortunate enough toget an extra good plant. A fine specimen will grow so low and full that after it is in full foliage it looks like a rounded rock covered with flaming tints.

The native sumach is by no means far behind. It has full, good leafage all summer, changing in the autumn to a magnificent crimson, the American sumach being one of the finest of our autumn show in the woods.

In the dense, heavy masses of leaf, the tamarisk shines with its tender, asparagus-like leaves like a green fountain.

Then there are the evergreen shrubs, such as mountain laurel, rhodondendron, etc., which are a beautiful part of the group in summer, and in winter glow green among the naked branches of the rest.

All these shrubs are hardy.

Hardy grasses, too, make a permanently beautiful part of a garden that becomes more and more pleasing as time goes on. The eulalias, erlanthus and arundas are all charming when grown in large clumps. It must be remembered, however, that to get their maximum effect, they need broad treatment. They must be planted on a generous plan.

OFFICIALS FIRED.

Edmonton, June 1.—At a secret session of the city council Saturday it was decided to call for the resignation of City Commissioner Pace and City Engineer Kelly had to accept the resignation of Commissioner Kinnard. These men were severely criticised by the council, who claimthat thousands of dollars were lost to the city through their mismanagement. There is a possibility if this action is taken by the council, that the officials will carry the case to the courts in order to vindicate their position as set out in their defence presented Thursday evening.

CHIEF DISCHARGED.

Fernie, B.C., June 1.—At a session of the police commission this evening, Chief of Police Pennycuick was discharged for non-performance of duty. W. C. Bryan of McLeod, has been offered the position and will doubtless accept. Bryan has just finished a service of twenty years in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police and has a splendid record.

THE CITY FATHERS

The regular meeting of the council was held on Monday, June 1st at 8 p.m. Present, the Mayor, Alds. Baker, McKay, Spencer, Forster, Huckvale, Penhale.

F. J. Marshall wrote applying for a license for opera house for three months, in the name of Willis and Cosgrove. Notified that a license will be granted when by-law is complied with, the requirement that the seats in the auditorium be secured to the floor not having been met.

Hugh R. Cameron wrote calling attention to the Pioneer Fire Insurance Co., as an essentially Western concern, and asking for support. Filed.

City solicitor wrote re the Roseries contract. The original company had not fulfilled their part of the contract and should be notified that the city would take action to cancel the agreement unless the company would cancel same without action. They should be informed that they were trespassing and asked what arrangement they intended to make with regard to buying the land. The solicitor was instructed to take the necessary steps to protect the city.

The Fire Brigade wrote complaining of nuisance caused by howling and brawling in the pound duringthe night, and asked what action the council would take in the matter. They stated that people living within a radius of a block were also seriously annoyed. Ald. Spencer said that it would be useless to move the pound outside the city, as there would be the danger of people breaking in and releasing their animals during the nights. Ald. Huckvale stated that he had suffered no inconvenience in the matter. That it would be a difficult matter for any one to prove damage if any action were brought against the city for permitting a public nuisance was the opinion of the solicitor. Ald. Penhale jocularly suggested that instead of moving the pound, the firebrigade should be moved. Communication was filed.

J. T. Bell asked permission to move a shack used as an office on lot 30, block 6, to the back of the lots. The solicitor stated there was nothing to prevent him doing so if he did not move it to within two feet of another building. Notified that the building could be moved in accordance with by-law 130.

J. W. Watkin wrote complaining of the conduct of the police chief to him that afternoon, when he called to see him about a dog tax Mr. Watkin had taken out a license in January, which he had been told was valid till May. He understood that he meant till May 31, but it appeared it was only of use up to the end of April. On the writer's attempting to explain this to the chief, the latter had called him a liar, and on his protesting had repeated his offensive epithet thrice. Mr. Watkin's dog had been placed in the pound and he thought the 75 cents he had paid to get it out should be deducted from the amount of the license fee, which he was willing to pay when he understood how matters stood. The writer would begiad if the chief were severely reprimanded and ordered to be more polite to the citizens and ratepayers. He was not the only one in the city who was complaining of the chief's incivility. Ald. Penhale said he had heard that Mr. Watkin had accused the chief of stealing his dog. Moved that the communication be filed. On Ald. Baker's motion the matter was referred to the police committee.

Petition was received for the grading of 6th Avenue between Montreal and Brasmar streets, and the filling in of Ottawa. Mr. Trimble addressed the council, and was followed by Mr. Ansley, who spoke at considerable length on the matter, urging that that part of the city had not received fair treatment at the hands of the council. Mr. Ansley also complained in regard to the supply of water on the hill during the recent trouble. The C.P.R., he said, had been using the city's water at seven cents per 1,000 cubic feet, and causing ratepayers on the hill to be without water in consequence. He considered it unfair that the railway should be allowed to draw on the city supply when ratepayers were unable to get sufficient for washing and drinking purposes. The Mayor said he understood the C.P.R. could break in on the city supply without the men at the pump house knowing it. Ald. Penhale delivered a homily to Mr. Ansley on his conduct in daring to complain about the water trouble and not having patience with the cityjin its efforts to get the pumps installed. He thought that Mr. Ansley "had no right" to complain Mr. Ansley replied in impertinent mood, saying that he would be willing to put up with a little inconvenience if it were caused by trouble with the pumps alone but when the railway was using water heavily while the hill climbers remained in the arid belt, he thought the complaint was well grounded. The Mayor thought Mr. Ashby's stand well taken. The C.P.R. should be notified that they must notify the city when they wished to draw on its supply. Ald. Spencer thoughtthe railway could take water any old time they liked.

The Mayor attempted to say something but Ald. Penhale broke in.

The Mayor—"May I saeak now, Mr. Penhale)"

The Alderman continued his address unabashed. When at last he came to a conclusion the Mayor announced that he had forgotten what he had intended to say.

Ald. Baker read recommendation of the gas committee that all tenders for gas well be rejected as not complying with conditions of contract, and that new tenders be called for. The Alderman went on to say that the gas tanks for the fair had arrived and would be tested before being turned over to the city.

A long discussion took place on the question of the new gas well. It appeared the city would have put the work through themselves, but had been unable to obtain a boring outfit. Ald. Forster suggested advertising through papers in the Ontario gas districts. On Ald. Baker's motion it was decided to call for fresh tenders, advertising in Eastern as well as Western papers, the gas committee to be consulted re specifications.

Application for gas was received from residents along the line between Elm and Bridge streets, from the lane east of the road allowance to Washington Avenue. Referred to gas commissioners.

Ald. Baker stated that fifty street lamps, fifty meters and 1,000 mantles were urgently needed. The Mayor stated that permanent work could not be taken up at the present juncture. The repair work only could be done.

Ald. Spencer had a complaint to make with regard to the turning down of all the hardware tenders some weeks ago. He thought the contracts should have been discussed and one of them accepted. There were bills of four and five hundred dollars a month being paid out to Jas. Rae. He thought a great mistake had been made. If the tenders had been rejected because they were too high, how was it that we were paying such a high price now. He did not think the city's affairs were being conducted on a business like basis. Ald. Baker thought in the case of many contracts it was advisable to see the class of goods to be supplied before a tender was accepted. He did not believe in accepting the lowest contract in every case. Quality should be taken into consideration.

The Medical Health Officers report showed that there had been one case of iphtheria in the city during the month, brought in from the country and quarantined. One case of scarlatina broke out near the flour mill, but there had been no fresh cases, and not a house in the city was in quarantine at the present time. With regard to the specimen of suspected water from the well across the track the following telegram had been received, "Water sample suspicious, high chlorine, low in bacteria, definite interpretation requires additional study. A. Bowens."

The solicitor stated that it would be necessary to appoint three ratepayers for a board of health. Names being called for, Ald. Huckvale suggested Mr. Fatt. Ald. Forster suggested Mr. Lean. Ald. Spencer suggested Dr. Woodland. The ministers of the city were also mentioned.

A prolonged discussion on trouble at the pump house took place. It appeared Mr. Mellor, a C.P.R. employee, had been called in to help to fix some valves. He had instructionsfrom Mr. Morrison to do some further work and on his returnfound that the valves had been altered. The chairman of the water commissioners ordered Mr. Mellor to quit the work he was doing, and John Rutherford was sent for to do the necessary repairs. Ald. Baker did not think any alderman had a right to act as Ald. Penhale did in this matter. A discussion as to the qualifications of the pump house engineers ensued. Ald. Penhale had left before these questions came up, so the proceedings were robbed of half their interest.

Rev. John Sillak applied for water, lamps and grading along Maple Street. Filed.

Not a Miracle But Medical Science

Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Gentlemen:—

"Some time ago I began to lose flesh and failed every day until I had to quit work. My physicians and all my friends said I had contracted consumption. I failed from 165 pounds down to 119. I was advised to go to the Rockies or to the coast. I went to both places under heavy expense. I continued to fail, and was advised by the doctors to come home as nothing more could be done for me. Hope seemed to have left me.

"I tried Psychine and since starting its use I have gained from 119 to 141 pounds. I have used $10.00 worth of the medicine. I am a well man and I cannot say too much in praise of Psychine. The strongest recommendation would be weak in view of the fact that I believe it has saved my life. It is without doubt the best remedy for run-down conditions and weak lungs.

"I sincerely hope and trust that you will continue your good work of saving run down people and consumptive from the grave. Wishing you and Psychine continued success, I remain, one of Psychine's best friends."

ALEX. McRAE,
Sault Ste. Marie, Ont.

Almost every mail brings us letters like the above. Psychine will repeat this record in every case. It is the greatest medicine known. At all druggists, 50c and $1.00, or Dr. T. A. Slocum, Limited, Toronto.

unpeopled prairies was drawing them on. We might build fortresses against their agression—but the nation which was merely upon its defence could accomplish little even in safeguarding its own shores. The ancient battlements and castles which were to be seen in Europe were monuments of defeat. And so must such ever become.

Today no one was more welcome in the Chinese Empire than the missionary. The Empress Dowager had declared the Christian Sabbath a national holiday. The governors of two important provinces had made the New Testament a text book in all schools, in the territory under his jurisdiction. An avowed Confucian had expressed his opinion that the only hope for China was in Jesus Christ.

There would be no Methodist church established in China, nor Presbyterian nor Baptist, nor Anglican. They were going to have a Chinese Christian church.

Mr. Shore went on to give an inspiring account of the way in which Methodism down east was loosening its purse-strings in behalf of this movement. To quote one instance, the Metropolitan church in Toronto which raised $4,500 last year had this year raised $9,000 and was practically pledged to $15,000 for next year. The same spirit was manifest in all the churches around Toronto. The spirit of missions was catching the heart and i agination of the people.

The Rev. Mr. Kerby speaking to a vote of thanks to Mr. Shore, spoke of the increased interest in mission work shewn by his church in Calgary. From $1,440 last year they raised the amount to $5,000 this year. There was a small band of young men, ten in all, who had clubbed together to support a missionary at Athabasca Landing at a cost of $900 yearly.

Mr. Kerby went on to move a resolution in regard to the Japanese colony being planted on the irrigated lands near Calgary. The Japanese had asked to be taken under the wing of the Methodist church. About 50 had already arrived and their families would follow later. Mr. Kerby moved that the executive committee or local sub-committee be memorialized to take this colony under their ministerial care.

Seconding the resolution, Mr. Huestis stated that his belief that these fifty Japanese were the vanguard of a vast host of people. These Japanese were shut out from every other portion of the world. Their own portion of the world. Their own ada was the one field open for their enterprize. Mission work commenced among these fifty men was going to mean great things in the days to come.

The conference sermon was pteached on Sunday morning by the Rev. Dr. Briggs, who took as his text, John 4—4. "And he must needs go through Samaria."

One of the most remarkable facts of history, said the Doctor was the immense superiority of the character of Christ. He was the greatest moral worker of the ages. Since his day society had advanced. Philisophy had been ennobled and purified.

In the times of the Saviour, the partition walls between Jew and Samaritan were very high and very strong. Hence Christ's going through Samaria had an important moral aspect. It illustrated the teaching and practice of his whole life, which were ever opposed to the unwarrantable distinctions of men. The life of Christ inaugurated a new era for the masses.

But His message was an individual one. Unlike the popular preacher, he put forth his sublimest efforts for an audience of one. For though the abstruse parable might do for the unbelieving multitude, the deep things of the Kingdom were reserved for single souls. Christ, then, was the first to teach the value of the individual soul.

And further, the Master by his example by the waters of Samaria taught his followers how to win souls. And it was for this purpose that the church existed today. All else availed nothing unless souls were being saved. The church which was beguiled into becoming a mutual admiration society, was a failure. The church which valued too highly its ecclesiastical machinery, efficient organization as an end and not a means, was a failure Methodism erected no monuments where she saved no souls. Not education, not culture, not development, but Salvation, was the never ceasing, ever flowing burden of the Gospel.

Christ's conversation with the woman of Samaria was a lesson in methods for personal work. There could be no such thing as saving the masses at long range. If the masses were to be saved at all the church must go to them.

But a touch of the theatre in the preaching, a touch of the opera in the singing, these things would not cause men to turn from their sin. Add Conference.

NEWS OF THE DISTRICT

(From our own correpondents.)

What Wideawake and Reliable Correspondents throughout This District Find Worthy of Recording for Publication in their Home Paper.

Irvine.

The heavy rains of the past week have put the crops in this district in fine shape, and with not toomuch sunny weather, should place them far in advance of any crops in previous years.

Miss C. McLeish has taken a position in a school near Innisfalls. She left for that place on Friday evening's train.

Messrs. Fred. Weiss, Carl Beny and George Schaller were up in Medicine Hat on Wednesday, when we understand that Weiss and Company of Irvine sold out their interest in their store here to Fred. Weiss and Son. The style of the new firm is not yet public; but we will know in a very short time.

When are the authorities going to hand over the Post Office to the new postmaster?

The dance given by the benedicts of Irvine, was held in the Irvine town hall and proved the best dance of the season, despite the heavy rains that prevailed during the latter part of the afternoon and early in the evening, and thanks are due the committee for the way in which they had things conducted and for the success of the dancing program, and more especially, Mrs. E. G. Benwell for the way in which she had the very tasty supper laid out. There were about one hundred and fifty persons in attendance at the dance, the music being ably supplied by Messrs. L. H. Dawson, Ned Roman, Walter Copper and L. Marshall, and dancing was kept up until the early hours of the morning.

Mr. J. Irving, manager of the Massey-Harris Co. was in townfrom Lethbridge on Friday, and he reports crops to be the best for years in his district. He thinks that there is a little too much rain.

Mr. and Mrs. William Pollock of Maple Creek were in town on Friday

Will Hawke, V.S., from Medicine Hat, was a visitor to Irvine on Friday, taking in the dance.

The trail leading out to the settlements in the south country will be a great improvement when completed. We see that Mr. Vaser is rushing the work as quick as possible, which when completed, will enable the farmers to haul twice as large a load, as they have been able to do in the past, and will mean that quite a number of farmers who have gone into Medicine Hat in the past will now come into Irvine.

It is rumored that the Irvine Livery stable is about to change hands again, and that the present proprietor intends to go into the general store business.

What about that Chemical Fire Engine?

Mr. J. Kalmback is having erected a residence on his property on the north side of the track, which when completed will make quite an improvement to the land, which atthe present time is steadily increasing in value.

The meeting of the adjourned annual Easter Meeting of the Parishioners of Saint George's Parish of Irvine, Alberta, held in St. George's Church, Irvine on June 2nd, at the hour of eight p.m. Present:— Rev. Percy Jerrold; W. J. Corbett, Vicar's Warden; H. S. Newby, People's Warden and Secretary; and Parishioners, Rev. Percy Jerrold presiding.

Moved by J. A. Strong, seconded by W. J. Corbett, that the minutes read for a second time dated January 26, 1908, be accepted as read. Carried.

Moved by E. J. Benwell, seconded by W. J. Corbett, that in amendment of Clause A.A. in the minutes of January 26, 1908, to read as follows, that no guarantee stipend be fixed, but a voluntary subscription be offered, and as much as possible raised in each year. Carried.

Moved by E. J. Benwell, seconded by J. A. Strong, that the financial report presented by the Warden be accepted as read for the past year. Carried.

Moved by E. J. Benwell, seconded by J. A. Strong, that Herbert Sut. Newby be Peopie's Warden for the ensuing year of 1908. Carried.

Moved by L. Harris, seconded by H. S. Newby, that Messrs. E. J. Benwell, J. A. Strong, Ed. Nicholson, L. V. B. Mais, F. Hawkins F. Crew, H. E. Price, Chas. Calkins, shall be the vestrymen appointed for the ensuing year. Carried.

Moved by J. A. Strong, seconded by Ed. Nicholson, that this meeting thanks be extended to Mr. L. Harris for his kindness in officiating as Church Organist for the past year. Carried.

Moved by E. G. Benwell seconded by J. A. Strong, that the note coming due in favor of Mr. T. McIntosh on June 5, 1408, be met as near as possible,and if we cannot pay same in full to ask him for an extension on said balance that may be unpaid, for a convenient period. Carried.

Moved by E. G. Benwell, seconded by W. J. Corbett, that a vote of thanks be extended to St. George's Woman's Auxilary for the kind services rendered during the past year.

Moved by J. A. Strong, seconded by E. G. Benwell, that a vote of thanks be extended to all kindfriends that have very kindly subscribed towards the building of both Church and Vicarage here in Irvine.

Moved by E. G. Benwell, seconded by Ed. Nichplson, that this meeting be closed. Carried.

The treasurer's report showed receipts of $2,719.66, and expenditure of $2,685.55.

Walsh

Billy Wilson shipped a car of horses to Saskatoon last week. Mr. L. Sinclair went in charge and returned on Wednesday greatly taken with that part of the country.

Isn't that name given the hotel a mistake in spelling?

Mr. Simmons, the Liberal candidate for the commons for the Medicine Hat district was giving the inhabitants of this 'bur- the glad-hand on Tuesday last. James Rae and M. S. Campbell did the escorting act. Mr. Simmons gives every indication of being a first rategentleman—but oh, heaven!—what a bunch he has got in with, viz., that collection of wind jammers and gratters at Ottawa.

Messrs. Schroder, Haering, Grant, Fraser, Beatty, were amongst the visitors to Medicine Hat the last week.

Ed. McCorvie has returned from a short visit to Lethbridge.

The hotel possesses a distinctly improved appearance with its new coat of paint.

Henry Vockeroth has purchased 2 lots from Jack Flood and is putting up a house on one of them.

Very Welcome rain has fallen the past week. It will do great good—would, however, it had come sooner.

Ex-Mayor Trent and Ed-Alderman Wilson of Graburn were welcome visitors last week.

Mr. W. Mullins has returned home from a lengthy visit to North Dakota and Medicine Hat.

Mr. Charles Seymour who has been in Australia for the past year looking after his rancning interests, returned on Sunday.

The Benedicts ball at Irvine on Friday night drew quite a gathering from here. Everyone spent a most enjoyable evening and voted the Benedicts the best of entertainers. Amongst those present from here were Mrs. C. Beatty, Mrs. J. Nesbitt, Mrs. T. Stephenson, Misses Nesbitt and Robinson, and Messrs. Nesbitt, Marshall, Flood, Grant, Fraser, Crockett and McCaig.

Newburg

(Too late for last week.)

The rain which fell this week is worth thousands and thousands of dollars. The fields are all green now and the grain is nice. The breaking is going good and there is about six inches of wet in the ground.

The new Methodist church which is in the Newburg district is pretty near finished. The windows are in; just the floor to

Rev. J. Damn will be at Newburg on the 20 inst. again. We wish him a successful time.

The people in Newburg are working on the road, starting this week and are working on the Cape Town creek, which will be a good road.

not be educated, they could not be commanded out of their sin. Love alone was all-powerful to create in them a clean heart and a right spirit.

Christ did not speak to the woman of Samaria in tones of condescension. His method here, yea, His whole life, was a rebuke to the spiritual superior person. Nor did He devote Himself to the discussion of theological problems. "We find those today," said the Doctor, "who are more ready to talk of the latest theories from Jena, than of the essential truths of personal Salvation. Christ's method was to go to the heart of things; to reveal the well of living water springing up into eternal. "Let us" concluded the Doctor, "reverently present the request which this woman of Samaria made' 'Give us this living water.' "

At the close of the service the newly appointed ministers were ordained—the Revs. F. J. Wood, B.A.; A. M. A. Lythe, R. J. Hardman, R. A. Davis.

Died Far From Home

On Thursday morning, A. G. Stacey, who has been engaged on a large survey south of the city near the International boundary, passedaway at the General Hospital. Three weeks ago The Times mentioned his departure from the city on his big task of laying out twenty-four townships. Only a couple of weeks after the commencement of his work Dr. Smith was called by telephone to the ranch of Mr. Archer, seventy miles south to attend to Staceywho was ill at the ranch. The Doctor autoed out, found a bad case of typhoid fever and ordered the patient brought to the hospital. For almost two days Mr. Archer drove the sick young man in a wagon arrivinghere a week ago Saturday.

Since then Stacey was conscious for a short time only. On Thursday he died, with Rev. A. C. Farrell, an old college friend at his bed-side.

The Methodist Conference which met here last week included a great many college men—Victoria University men—who had known Stacey in Toronto and the Victoria Old Boys' Association took entire charge of the details of the funeral. Rev. Farrell conducted the service in the undertaking rooms of W. H. Patterson & Co. and 40 Victoria old boys were present. Mr. Farrell spoke of the last minutes of the young man—his perfect faith in the future, his perfect calmness at the end, his orderly straightening up of the last few details of his life.

Rev. Mr. Colter, an old College chum, spoke feelingly of the staunchness and manliness of the dead comrade. "It was a tribute to Stacey that in all his wanderings on survey work he had never forgotten his God.

The pall bearers were E. S. Bishop, J. H. Johnston, C. W. Webb, W. L. Amy, J. Colter and Mr. Wickett. All but the last named, who had been brought up near Stacey's home were university mates of the deceased. The Victoria old boys marched to the station and as the remains were placed in the express car sang: "Shall we Gather at the River."

While the small tribute paid A.G. Stacey in these lines may reash the eyes of no more than half dozen who knew him, it is fitting that the death of a good, strong, manly young man should not go unrecorded because he died far from home. The writer knew him at college, and in everything poor Stacey entered, his enthusiasm was with him. His love for his college, his enthusiasm in athletics, his interest in religious work were features of his college car eer that impressed his personality on all his friends.

It was a joy to his old mater that at the last they could care for him, that Stacey had not died among entire strangers. To the writer it is a pleasure to know that Stacey's death can receive some more consideration in the town in which he died, than the usual newspaper notice.

BAPTIST CONVENTION

Baptists Have Their Week in the City Last Week

THE ALBERTA CHURCH MEETS

If the first week in the month was a Methodist week, the second was a Baptist. Delegates from all parts of the province gathered in the Baptist church on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, to discuss the church progress of the past year and formulate plans for the future, and though the members were not so many as had been anticipated, owing largely to the long distances many of them would have had to travel, a very profitable Convention was held.

The first meeting of the Convention took place on Tuesday evening when an address by the Rev. Wm. Reid was delivered, on "The Bible and Christian Living." The associational sermon was delivered by the—Rev. B. Goodfield. The Rev. H. Bryant, retiring moderator, occupied the chair.

On Wednesday morning an address was given on "The Divinity of Christ and Christian Living" by the Rev. M. C. Habershon of Ponoka, who was until recently a solicitor in London, England. Delivered in a quiet, earnest tone, this speaker's remarks, which he based on the text. "What think ye of Christ," made a deep impression on the audience.

An important feature of the mornings programme was the reading of the various church letters. Thirty-one reports were presented by Rev. D. G. Gunn and the Rev. H. Proctar of Calgary. In spite of the financial stringency it was surprising how money was being contributed to home and foreign missions. The reports showed that a number of the churches in the province are pastorless. The Albertan Baptists have a splendid staff of Scandinavian and German pastors who are doing excellent work, but the demand continues, greater than ever, for pastors in the English-speaking districts.

The Sunday school statistics were especially encouraging, showing how great has been the forward movement in this branch of church activity during the past year.

Two important addresses on the past and future of the church were omitted owing to the absence of ministers who were to have spoken on these subjects, and the rest of the morning was accordingly devoted to the introduction of new pastors and visitors. Among these were the Rev. T. J. Bennett of the Heath church, Calgary, Rev. D. A. Gunn, Rev. D. Dack of Westbourne church, Calgary.

On Wednesday afternoon whichwas fine and bright, a goodly number of delegates and visitors assembled in the body of the church. The Rev. A. J. Darroch of Medicine Hat, the first speaker, devoted himself to an edifying exposition of "The Atonement and Christian Living." It is, he said, the motive which prompts our every act which determines its value. Unless the life be lived to please Christ, no man can rightly claim to be a Christian. Much Christian service is performed with other motives than the love of Christ. This is not of value in the eyes of the Master. Dying to self and living to Christ—that is Christian service. How, the speaker enquired, does it come about that Christ exercises authority over our lives? His authority in some mysterious way is connected with his death. Apart from the atonement, Christian living is impossible. Even as the world had no fascination for Jesus of Nazareth, so the Christian must be free from its charm. The cross has a great attractive power. It fires the heart with a zeal for service that cannot otherwise be obtained. A true idea of the atonement means the conquering of sin in this life. It also results in a refreshing assurance for the believing soul.

At the conclusion of this address, the Rev. H. Proctor suggested a number of questions for answering.

Rev. W. G. W. Fortune, secretary of the Alberta branch of the Temperance and Moral Reform League spoke on the great movement which is sweeping over the Dominion, even as it has swept so many of the states in the Republic across the line. Speaking on the prohibition question, Mr. Fortune said he did not believe the province was as yet educated up to the point where such legislation could be made a success. The western prairie was a goodplace for mixed farming. Its inhabitants were not ambitious enough to produce "blind pigs." In five years' time the province would have reached the point where prohibition legislation could be enforced. Mr. Fortune was convinced that there was throughout Alberta a great demand for an anti-treating law. Ninety-nine per cent of the drinkers themselves wanted it. The time was coming and coming quickly, when employers would have no use for men who drank alcoholic liquors—no regularly or immoderately. Railroad workers were entering the temperance movement in self-defence.

The Rev. D. Dack delivered a thoughtful and suggestive addresses on "The Church of the Future," confining his remarks more especially to the field of the Sunday school. There was probably to be, said Mr. Dack, a great change in the future, both in the government and doctrine of the church. Who could tell? The future would greatly depend on circumstances. But the all-important thing was for us to realize the value of our boys and girls. The Sunday school teacher should be a pilot to guide the children through the rapids of present day cross-currents and shoals. Psychology, continued the speaker, should be studied by the pastorate and by the Sunday school workers. It was more important to his mind, that a minister should be well grounded in psychology, than in systematic theology.

On Wednesday evening the Rev. A. P. McDiarmid, of Brandon college, delivered a powerful address on education, which he urged must ever follow evangelism. Education so wide in its application, embracing all that makes for a fuller, larger life, must embrace the moral and spiritual idealism which the Christ spirit would fost)r. Christ's ideas of relative values must become the ideas of the cultured world. It was the duty of the church to supplythis idealism.

The fourth address in the series on Christian living was given on Thursday morning by the Rev. T. J. Bennett, after which reports of committees were received. The Convention pledged itself to stand by the Temperance and Moral Reform League. A vote of thanks was passed to the Medicine Hat church for hospitality extended to the delegates and speakers. The B. Y. P. U. is to be recognized in the next year,s programme.

The officials for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

Moderator—Rev. B. Goodfield, Red Deer.

Vice-Pres.—R. W. Sharp, Edmonton.

Second Vice-Pres.—P. L. NeUrcombe, Calgary.

Secretary—A. W. Ward, Calgary.

Treasurer—Mr. Miers, Medicine Hat

Preacher of annual sermon, Rev. D. Dack, Calgary.

Addresses were then given by the Rev. T. J. Bennett of Heath church, Calgary, and by the Rev. J. E. Tiner on "Christian Stewardship," showing the property rights of God in man, that the wealth, talents, heart of every man were not his own but lent by the creator, to be used for the advancement of the Kingdom.

The Rev. J. T. Hunter of Pincher spoke for half an hour, reviewing the church's work in the past.

Mrs. (Rev.) H. Bryant occupied the chair in the afternoon, when the annual meeting of the Ladies Association was held. After the devotional exercises, which were conducted by Mrs. M. J. Habershon, three interesting papers were given by Mrs. Morrison on "Home Mission," by Mrs. Ingram of A. B. M. U. on "An outline of our Religious and Educational Work in Burmah." In Miss Helen Sharpe's absence, her paper on the progress of Missions in Foreign Lands," was read by Mrs. Darroch. The writer showed the noble work that is being done in China, both by the government and the missionaries, to stamp out the opium evil, which today has victims in almost every hamlet in the Celestial Empire. In Japan great missionary work was being done by all the denominations, even the Mormons were now there.

Mrs. Ingram, who has exerience of the missionary life among the Burmese hill tribes, spoke most interestingly on the customs and character of these people of the Eastern Empire, and of the difficulties and encouragements of the Christian worker. The medical missionary, she said, had now a hearty reception wherever he went in Burmah, and second to his reception in its cordiality was that accorded the missionary-educationist. God had in a very special way given Burmah to the American Baptists.

Considerable amusement was caused by Mrs. Ingram's description of the Burmese reception of a missionary—the long critical examination to which the curious white man was subjected, the clothes he wore, the utinsils he used, the gold fillings in his teeth, being objects of wonder to the primitive people. "If any man here," said the speaker, "thinks he doesn't receive special attention, I should advise him to go to Burmah." (Laughter).

The women of Burmah were far superior to the men—this because the former did most of the work, while the men lived a life of idleness.

In an illuminative and withal humorous manner, Mrs. E. L. Hill answered the question which had been dropped into the question drawer.

The enjoyment of the afternoon service was greatly enhanced by the musical features which were interspersed throughout the programme. These included a trio by Mrs. Miers, Miss. Lean and Miss Sinclair; duet by Miss Miers and Miss Lean, a solo by Miss Sinclair; and a solo by the Rev. Mr. Bryant.

Pres.—Mrs. W. J. Budd, Calgary.

Vice-Pres.—Mrs. (Rev.) H. Bryant.

2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. F. W. Patterson, Calgary.

3rd Eice-Pres.—Mrs. J. H. McDonald, Strathcona.

Secretary—Mrs. A. W. Ward, Calgary.

Treasurer—Mrs. (Rev.) A. J. Darroch, Medicine Hat.

The Convention came to a close on Thursday evening, when an inspiring address on foreign missions was given by the Rev. A. M. McDonald. The president elect was afterwards introduced, and "Last Words" were delivered by the Rev. C. C. McLaurin.

The Elk's Smoker

G. B. P. O. E. Entertain Their Friends

The Best People On Earth invited a number of friends in on Friday night to a smoker and provided a night's entertainment that will make their next smoker a thing to waich to look forward.

There were about seventy-five present and a score of clever entertainers kept the boys in good humor until midnight. Among the performers, who told amusing stories, was Messrs. Nolan, Hansuid and Patterson, the former giving a very funny sermon on "Old Mother Hubbard" in "Paddy's" own style. The musical artists were; Messrs. Halworth, Green, Phillips, W. Johnston, Simmonds, Waters, Charlton, Crawford, and Frier. Messrs. Leonard and Frier were pianists and Mr. Chapman accompanied himself on the guitar.

Refreshments were served during the evening. It was one of the best fun evenings Medicine Hat has had. It is the intention of the Elks to hold a smoker every few weeks. The lodge is now getting into fine shape and by winter will be one of the most popular in the city.

Education and Citizenship

Principal of Brandon College Speaks

In an address of slightly over an hour's duration, on Friday evening, the Rev. A. P. McDiarmid, principal of Brandon College, presented that broader, that nobler and higher conception of education, which, in commercial and utilitarian age, we are liable to lose sight of, the conception of education not merely as a preparation for the industrial struggle but as a training in the highest duties of citizenship.

The modern tendency to an exaggerated individualism, said the lecturer, it should be the function of education to correct. Citizenship was not a matter of choice. No person in a community could escape his social obligations. But it was a long cry from the citizenship of a Gladstone to the citizenship of a hobo. As in the human organism any part which received nourishment without serving a useful purpose in its turn, became a menace to the whole, so it was with the individual in the social organism. The man who refused to fulfill his duties as a citizen—actively—not merely in the negative sense of conformity with the laws of his country, but in a positive effort to better the conditions of his fellows, became, like a dead sea, a centre of death and decay.

Today each individual life was touched by other life, and that other life of the community, by individual life, in a manner unprecedented in the world's history. It meant more to live today than ever before. We were approaching the great brotherhood of the nations. And so the highest aim of education should be the development of theindividual life in relation to the social life—in a community, in a world.

Between the various branches of education an universal interdependence must be recognized. The physical, the intellectual, the social, the moral were all to be regarded, not as distinct or separate needs, but education in all its phases should work to one end—the upbuilding of character. The great thing was not furnishing of the mind with knowledge (the pedagogic conception) but training. This was the true reason for manual training being given a prominent place in the modern curriculum, although as yet, the speaker regretted, it had not been given the place it deserved. It was not the teaching of a trade to the boys, of the principles of domestic science to the girls, that was of chief importance. Modern educationists had come to recognize the intimate connection between the hand and brain. Manual training was mental discipline.

Speaking of the higher mental culture, of the stage of mind tnvelopment when "thought thinks upon thought, till the thinker is constrained to exclaim, "What is man that thou art mindful of him.

Thou hast made him a little lower than God," till he realizes that he is a being endowed with power to followin the footsteps of the Creator of the universe," Mr. McDiarmid said, "I want to plead tonight for the highest possible intellectual training that a student is prepared to receive." (Applause). "Do we appreciate as we should," he asked "the value of intellectual culture in the body politic."

And here he would attempt to answer the objection to higher education raised by the super—democrats—the objection that since only a few could enjoy its advantages, it was unfair to the rest. The benefits of natural gas enjoyed by all in this community today were only possible because of the superior knowledge possessed by its discoverer and the superior, special knowledge possessed by the men who first tapped the supply and made it of use in the household of every citizen. So the man of superior education was able to realize the great truths of existence and impart his discoveries for the enlightenment of the many.

Of religion in the schools Mr. McDiarmid's pronouncement was significant, "I do believe in religion in the schools, but I do not believe, under the present conditions of society and of the state, in the teaching of dogmax. Religion is a matterwhich is entirely voluntary and must beleft to the human will."

In closing his address, which was delivered throughout with a fervent earnestness, the speaker appealed for education in the interests of our democratic institutions. In the days of autocracy and aristocracy, general education was not essential to good government. Now that the people themselves were rulers it was the only safeguard against national calamity. When true education became universal we should have done with corruption in politics—that great blot upon our civilization—for men would not sell in the shambles, for the sake of a few paltry dollars, what they realized to be the noblest and grandest in their make-up—human personality.

Mr. Sansom introduced the speaker, explaining the educational position in the city—the necessity of increased accommodation, and proposals for dealing with present congestion and the additions to the curriculum to be made during the coming term.

Referring to Mr. Hav's impending departure from the city to take up his new appointment, Mr. Sansom said this would be a distinct loss to the city schools. He had filled his position in a most efficient and able manner, and now left the city with the best wishes of the staff. The remark had been made that the schools in this city could not be expected to be as good as the schools in Calgary because of the smaller population. He could not accept that view. Rather he believed that we might have here as good schools as there were in the province. If they were not so good today he must get down to the root of the matter. If it were that the salaries were not high enough to induce the best teachers to enter the board's service, better salaries must be paid.

Other speakers were Mr. Brotherton and Mr. Farrell. The latter proposed a vote of thanks to the principal speaker, Mr. J. H. Collier seconded the motion.

On Wednesday Mr. Harris Garlough and Miss Mabel Dempster both of Eagle Butte, were united in marriage by Rev. J. W. Morrow of Medicine Hat. The groom was assisted by Mr. W. Mudie. After ceremony an enjoyable dance was given by the bride's parents. Both of the contracting parties are well and favorably known locally.

FORSTER—KENNEDY

On Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. by the Rev. A. C. Farrell, Mr. H. F. W. Forster and Miss Augusta Kennedy, daughter of Mrs. J. Kennedy, were married in the Methodist church. The bride wore a blue travelling suit and carried a bouquet of roses and carnations. Only a few relatives were present, the party sitting down after the ceremony to a wedding dinner served at the home of Mr. N. Spencer, the bride's brother-in-law Mr. and Mrs. Forster left for a wedding trip to the Kootenay.

(Miami News Record, May 27.)

John J. Wannop and Miss Anna M. Donk were married yesterday at 3 o'clock at the Presbyterian manse, Rev. W. W. Faris officiating. Only a few intimate friends of the bride and groom witnessed the ceremony. Mrs. Wannop is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Donk who have been residing at Buena Vista about three years. She has made many friends in Miami, and is Known as one of the most charming young ladies in this vicinity.

Mr. Wannop is the owner of much property in Canada and lives at the thriving town of Medicine Hat on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is also an official of that railway, and he is well known in all sections of Canada.

Following the wedding ceremony at the manse, the bride and groom went to the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Donk at Buena Vista and leave this morning for Washington, D.C., after spending three or four weeks in travelling, they will go to Medicine Hat, where they will reside in future.

Board of Trade Convention

Programme of Meeting

Messrs. Hopper, Crawford, Fewings, Kealy and Hamilton, the reception committee will meet the incoming delegates and tomorrow evening them to the Board of Trade ceive their badges. Thence they will ening and Thursday morning and building for registration and to rebe billeted to their various hotels.

On Thursday morning the associated boards will meet for organization and to receive an address of welcome, which will be replied to by the president, Mayor McAra of Regina. Committee on credentials will then meet to examine the credentials of each delegate, as to voting power, etc. Boards with a membership of not less than 60 are entitled to five votes, not less than 40, four votes, not less than thirty, three votes, not less than twenty, two votes, less than twenty, one vote.

On Thursday morning also cards of invitation will be in to all the delegates from the Cypress Club.

The afternoon session will be opened by an address from the president, Mr. P. McAra, after which the committee on credentials will present its report. Committee on resolutions will meet to amalgamate resolutions to prevent redundance. The secretary-treasurer for 1907-8. H. W. Wallace of Prince Albert, will read his report of receipts and expenditure, and an auditor will be appointed to certify to the treasurer's statement. A general discussion on resolutions will follow.

Thursday evening there is a ball game at 6.30.

Friday morning's session will be from 10—12. A group photo will be taken by Mr. Miers. The convention will resume at 2 o'clock, till six.

A gymnastic exhibition will be given in the evening by the Y.M.C.

Election of officers will probably take place Saturday morning.

It is desired that all local members should wear their badges during the convention, and make a point to remember that "It is the duty of local members to see that visitors to the city enjoy themselves. Stores and representative business establishments generally are requested to make as brilliant display as possible, having every availablelamp burning, as nothing is likely to give a better impression of the city (with the single exception of a decent water service).

Boat Cracked Open

Only Machinery to be Saved

(Special to The Times).

Saskatoon, Jan. 16.—The steamer City of Medicine Hat looks like a complete wreck, as the water recedes. She is shown to have split near the centre. When the waterrose the sand poured in and the weight as the water went down has proven too much, pulling down at each end.

Plans were being made to have the boat pulled out and repaired, but the latest development calls for a change and it is possible that little effort will be made to save more than the machinery, which, it is reckoned, may be fixed up for further service.

Capt. Ross has expressed his intention of constructing another boat in which he expects to be able to use the machinery of the Hat.

THE CITY FATHERS

The regular meeting of the council was held last evening in the city hall. Present, The Mayor, Alds. Baker, McKay, Spencer, Larter, Tweed, Huckvale.

The Southern Alberta Land Registration wrote giving notice of caveat re Rosery Co. Referred to the solicitor.

Wood, Gundy Co. wrote requesting that bonds be made payable at Bank of Montreal in Toronto and Montreal as well as in Medicine Hat, also requesting that the interest be made payable half yearly. A by-law being required to comply with these requests, notice of motion was given by Ald. Forster later in the session.

R. W. Smith wrote asking that a license fee be imposed on bill kosters Referred to license and police committee.

E. R. C. Clarkson and Son wrote agreeing to allow three months credit on meters. Filed, and clerk instructed to order.

Dan Williams wrote asking that he be allowed to pay his gas arrears at the rate of $10 per month.

Mr. Williams household supply had been cut off. A prolounged discussion followed on this and other cases of delinquency. Ald. Baker thought the cutting off of Mr. Williams' gas on account of arrears incurred in another building, was unwarranted, and on the same Alderman's motion it was decided to accept Mr. Williams' suggestion and to instruct whoever was responsible to turn on his supply at once. Other delinquent cases came up for discussion. It appeared that gas accounts could be collected from the property owner, in case of the tenant's failure to pay. On Ald. Tweed's motion itwas decided that Mr. Porter be furnished by the treasurer with a list of delinquents at the end of each month a copy for the chairman of the gas committee and one for himself.

E. A. Earl wrote asking the council to sell 60 ft. cement sewer pipe for local improvement district 6 B 4, township 10, range 4. Moved that he be supplied with pipe at a price to be fixed by the engineer.

Ald. Baker brought up the matter of the pipe for gas well. He stated that the 10 inch pipe that had been tendered for was not of the slightest use for the purpose. The joint was made by means of a sleeve with right and left hand thread tapered pipes, and the whole strain came upon the threads, since the ends of the pipes would not meet. This arrangement was unsuitable for a shaft on which the strains would be vertical. The ends of drive pipe met, making a long shaft one continuous pipe, there being no strain on the threads. And the alderman was also of the opinion that a 6 inch well would be adequate for the year's requirements and much cheaper. The mayor agreed with Ald. Baker; two six inch wells gave a better supply than (to give a proportion) one and a half eight inch wells. Engineer was instructed to call for tenders for six and eight inch well.

The Mayor brought up the matter of escaping gas on the pipe line to Pruitt's brick yard.

The finance committee recommended the payment of the following accounts:

T. J. Fleager, $67.50.
W. D. Larter $2.40.
F. W. Brown $27.60.
C. P. R. Telegraph $7.15.
Jas. Rae $59.85.
W. Barrie, $4.60.
Capt. Ross $111.00.
L. H. Prutt Co., 914.40.
Medicine Hat Milling Co. $26.25.
Reid and Ross $11.55.
J. H. Collier, $27.00.
The Royce Carriage Co., $17.60.
T. Morrey $4.50.
Treasurer's petty accounts $33.06.
L. B. Cochran, $3.35.
T. J. Sheppherd, $1.00.

By-law to raise debentures for fire hall across the track was discussed in committee which after a three quarter hour's sitting, rose and reported progress.

Petition from Central Park property owners laid on the table.

Ald. Tweed moved that J. J. Mahaffy be tendered the position of city solicitor at a salary of $400 a year for the balance of the year. Ald. Forster moved in amendment that the appointment be offered to the legal gentlemen in the city in the order of their seniority. Ald. Morrow thought this would be equivalent to hawking the position. Two aldermen voted for the amendment, which was accordingly lost and the original motion carried.

Ald. Baker moved that the hours during which water might be used, for gardens, etc., be advertised in the papers. He had come across one or two instances where criminal waste had been going on in defiance of the by-law, and had himself warned the persons concerned. Carried.

The clerk asked if any reduction would be made in the water bill on account of the failure of the supply. Ald. Baker thought the consumers should be charged double for the trouble they had been giving the city (laughter). No motion was made in the matter. Ald. Baker also brought up the question of lamps on the hill which required renewal. These, he said, the engineer had been instructed to fix up some time ago.

Council adjourned till Monday next.

FATAL ACCIDENT

Young Brakeman Fell from Train and Died from Injuries

It was with great sorrow that the railroad men of the city heard of the tragic death of brakeman J. McReady, on Saturday last.

Mr. McReady, who was on the first section of Friday's No. 1, fell off the caboose at Shepard, near Calgary, at about 9.30 Thursday. His fall was unnoticed until the second section came along, when he was found lying senseless by the track. First aid was given by a doctor on the train, who accompanied the injured man to Calgary. Except for a slight leg wound the injuries were entirely on the face and head; a severe fracture of the skull was sustained. Consciousness was never regained and McReady passed away in the hospital at Calgary early on Saturday morning. The body was brought up to Medicine Hat, where the young man lived with his brother-in-law, Mr. C. Reid) on Saturday's No. 3.

The deceased who was only 22 years of age, came to Medicine Hat from Scotland about eighteen months ago, and was for a time engaged as a carpenter in the city. He had been working on the line about nine months. His cheerful disposition had gained for him many friends in the city, and he was well liked and highly respected by all who knew him. He was connected with the Royal Templars of Temperance and an active soldier in the Salvation Army.

The funeral took place yesterday afternoon, to the Hillside cemetery.

ATHLETICS

THE TIMES B. U. BALL PRIZES.

To encourage good ball The Times offers any $2.00 shirt in the city to each of the following:

1. The player with the best batting average.
2. The player with the most extra bases to his credit.
3. The infield player with the best fielding average.
4. The outfielder with the best fielding average.
5. The player making the first home run.

To allow the players time for striking their gate, scoring will count only from June 8th.

Players must play in three out of the five games played by their team.

The correct scoring, which appears in The Times, to be taken as final.

BACHELORS VS. C.P.R.

The game on Tuesday between the above teams was ragged. There were good and bad patches with the latter predominating, especially among the bachelors. Forbets took charge of the balls and strikes indicator and not a kick was coming. Gilroy handled the bases. Johnston pitched for the Bachelors in the absence of Squance, and not only threw the sphere well but fielded his position in great style. The C. P. R. secured 14 hits off him—less than they have pulled off in most of their other games. Hood and Andrews both wrenched their legs, the former having to retire. Andrews pitched on, but was touched up rather freely giving eight hits in the last two innings. Bennett appeared in uniform for the Bachelors for the first time, but was out of his place on third. Deane of the C.P.R.'s went to centre to replace Hood for the Bachelors. The score:

BACHELORS VS. FIRE BRIGADE.

It was a fine interesting game of ball put up by the above teams on Friday. While the score was big, one innings for each netted fifteen of the total 27 runs. The Bachelors played snappy ball and but for Phillips made very few errors. The Fire Brigade were without the services of Buchanan. T. Finlay went in to pitch for them and did very well until the disastrous sixth, then every Bachelor crossed the plate. In the previous five innings only one hit an innings was allowed. Fairman replaced him in the seventh and kept the batting down. Squance demonstrated that he is one of the best pitchers in the league, striking out ten men.

Forbets had no protectors and had to stand back by the grand stand to give his decisions; some of them were wonderful. In the ninth the Fire Brigade changed their batting order, but the Bachelors made no complaint until after the innings was over. They then played the last innings under protest, but secured the run needed to give them the victory. The correct score:

A TALK ON ADVERTISING

Advertising and news are first cousins.

The railroad and the stage coach are grandchild and grandfather.

Four out of five advertisers still use stage coach methods. The agency that distributes news has the quickest, cheapest and most effective machinery for distributing advertising. This agency is the newspaper.

The man who is passing your shop window is going somewhere. He is on some other errand. If you want to catch him when he is not in a hurryput your shop window in the newspaper, a few articles at a time. You can make a hundred and fifty thousand people look at this every day, and with much better selling results than if that hundred and fifty thousand walked by your shop one by one.

I know a retail store in one of our large cities, a branch of an English house, which in the autumn of 1906 was managed by an Englishman; a austere, conservative, dignified; a man who would have been shocked to see his shop advertised in an American newspaper. He had an exclusive trade; and the shop has an excellent street location. His net profits amounted to about $20,000. The Englishman died. His assistant, an aggressive young American, took charge. He advertised; advertised continually in the best local newspapers. Last year this exclusive shop made a net profit of over $80,000.

This is a complete case the facts of which I personally know. The Englishman depended upon the quality of his goods, and his beautifully erected stationery, and his attractive shop window, and his perpendicular-backed dress-parade clerks; all of which were above criticism. The young American put the whole show into the newspaper, admission free.

Show me ten shops which advertise regularly in a newspaper, and I will show you nine that are making money. The failure of the tenth is probably due to bad management of some sort.

Some people value goods by the price they pay; others by the shop in which they buy; others by the effect the goods have upon their neighbors. It is only the common work-a-day sensible people who value goods by the goods. If you want all four classes as customers it is your business as an advertiser to make the cap fit.—Ex.

A Minister's Indictment

Dr. John Pringle before the Presbyterian Assembly at Winnipeg

The True Words of a True Man—One of the Rankest Government Scandals

The foulness of the Yukon and its administration has been a live topic at Ottawa, but like the other scandals of the present government has been choked off until it is only by the stubbornness and courage of men like Dr. John Pringle that it continues to exist.

Dr. Pringle has made his charges. He has been sat upon and squelched by the authorities in a manner that would seal the lips of the ordinary man; but he came all the way from the Yukon to solicit the aid of the Presbyterians of Canada—aid denied him by the Government.

Before the Assembly at Winnipeg, Dr. Pringle rose in the just indignation of the clean man who had forced to witness the horrors of the Yukon. In part his address ran:

"In 1902, six months after I reached Bonanza, I wrote to the government at Ottawa, and I must saythat I am a Liberal, in principle, I wrote to the government at Ottawa. I sent a letter dealing in a general way although here and there I was specific, as to the way in which affairs were being conducted in the Yukon territory. I knew that the administration of the Yukon was directly under the control of the department of the interior and was controlled by the minister of the interior.

Wrote to the Ministry

"I therefore wrote to the minister. It was a strong letter. Mr. Smart, the then deputy minister, said it was the strongest thing that had ever come into the department of the interior. It was hot I just simply tell you. I don't know whether that was immoral. I don't think I have more grace than my brethren, but there is a kind of temperament which when it feels things strongly must act about them strongly. I don't give way to anger. I am self-controlled as far as my temper is concerned, but I can speak out what I think, and so when I wrote that letter it was hot.

Marked it Private.

"I marked the envelope 'private' that it might get to the ministers. Each cabinet minister got a copy of it, as did also the late commissioner of the territory, James Hamilton Ross, the best commissioner we ever had in the Yukon Territory. No one else has had a copy of it from me, except Dr. Warden, to whom I sent it that he might see the action I had taken. What was the result? Absolutely none, except this, that that the letter was sent back to Dawson or allowed to be copied and sent back to Dawson, and I, on the face of the letter I had written in the public interest was vilified as Dr. Gordon and Dr. Shearer and other ministers in this city have never been vilified, both in the public press and other anonymous sheets scattered through the territory. There were no other results whatever. In the autumn of 1902 the letter was written in May, the deputy minister, Mr. Smart, came into the territory. I waited upon him in the administrative building and talked with him in the correspondence room.

Shame of the Nation

"I have a good memory for these things, and I talked to him in the correspondence room of the administrative building in Dawson. I told him the thing could not stand. I told him Nemeses would follow the government for permitting such things to exist. I gave him one illustration. I said, 'Do you think, Mr. Smart, that we are going to stand that two officials, going to outlying posts, leaving the saloon, with other prominent officials, one of whom I recently attacked, and who is now out of office in Yukon. The party came from the Aurora saloon and came to the deck of the steamer and hence up the Stewart, where they were met and surrounded by a bevy of prostitutes and in the presence of the public gathered on the wharf these put their arms around the neck of the officials and kissed them in open daylight." (Cries of "shame.")

Decency Cries Out

"Do you wonder that a Presbyterian minister and anyone who had a sense of public decency should speak out, and speak right out, when he knew of cases like that? In 1904 I was out on the Good Samaritan hospital business. I was at Ottawa and had to see the ministers on other charitable work in the Yukon, but especially on the Good Samaritan hospital business. The people at Ottawa seemed quite indignant about it, but did not say: Tell the people of what happened. I called upon my leader, the leader of the people at Ottawa, and spent almost two hours with him in his office.

Told Story to Ministers.

"I spent two hours with the minister of the interior, two hours with the postmaster-general, and saw other ministers very often in their own rooms in the Russell house. I told the story to them, and said: 'You cannot elect any Liberal candidate in the Yukon unless you clean things up. I said the people there are moral. The men in the creeks are almost all young men, and are the most moral men I have met in Canada. What I deplore is our administration up there, and I am prepared to prove what I have stated. I am not a kid now any more, I am an old man and do not speak on impulse. The thing I deplore is that the administration, practically under the control of the federal government that has the enforcement of the criminal law, has been straight along, up to the day I left Dawson for this assembly, in the interests of the lust element of our social life. That is my contention.

"Now, I saw these men, I told them how it would be and I told them more than that. I told them other things. I told the minister of the interior to his face. I said:

"You cannot do this kind of thing and get your man elected in the Yukon, and more than that, I said my moral sense will drive me to the public platform and I will help to defeat your candidate if it were my own brother.

"Things went from bad to worse and we got to work and we snowed their man under. Though he had been the commissioner with all that immense patronage behind him and with the influence of the tremendous majority at Ottawa, we snowed him under. I will touch on that matter a moment later, because there is a tail to that story.

"Well, in 1904 the election was over, I am not a politician living in Nova Scotia or somewhere else, or in the Brandon constituency who has never been in the district or if he had gone in there was looking simply for something to ensure political success. I am simply a minister of the Presbyterian church. I have no claims in the Yukon. I sold my cabin and furniture before I left for $25 and had it not been for the kindness of the people I would not have had enough money to bring me to the coast. I wrote again in January, 1905. That was considered a hotter letter than the one of May, 1902. I said practically, I told you so, and

Brought Out Facts

"I told them in the letter why it was so. I told them of the immoralities of the country, because we have only one immorality in the Yukon. A man may steal a thousand dollars from a till or $50,000 from the government treasury, but still they will not say he is immoral, unless he is lustful, he is not immoral. That is the only immorality we know. I told them these things. I told them to clean things up. I said in that letter, clean things up, to then continue in the good work and get rid of immoral officials. Only six of the fifteen ministers thought it worth while to acknowledge the receipt of my letter. Having failed to get any redress or any reformation. I then wrote to the governor-general of Canada.

Would Appeal to People

"I sent him copies of my two letters and told him that in the event of nothing being done I would appeal to the people of Canada themselves.

"I have the letter of the governor-general acknowledging the receipt of my communication and saying that at the first meeting of his council he would lay these letters before his council. I have never heard a word about it from that day to this. Whether he did so or not I cannot tell—at any rate I hear nothing about it.

Sin of Sins

"In July, 1907, this is the sin of sins that I have committed; I wrote to the prime minister, the governor general, by the way, the minister of the interior, and other ministers, and I said to them, I made these specific charges against two of the officials, and told them in plain English it was the end as far as I was concerned if the government would not do what was right I would ask the people of Canada to do what was right. (Applause.) Prior to that I had written about the dance halls.

Orders Investigation

"I will deal with them later. But an investigation was ordered then, I did say, and probably it was a nasty thing to say, I would appeal to the people of the east, where the vote was. An investigation was ordered, with Mr. Henderson as commissioner, who was instructed, so I learned from himself, in a letter to investigate and call upon Dr. Pringle to substantiate his charges. They put me in the position of a public prosecutor, when my complaints had been made to the leaders of my people who should have investigated it without this being necessary. That is the way they do it on the other side.

"The secret service did it there, and private citizens had not to go into it at their own expense as I had to do. When I got a note from Dr. Henderson I went to his office and asked him if he had the power to subpoena witnesses and he said he thought he had, I said he had announced Monday at 3 o'clock for beginning the investigation. He drew up a form of summons for witnesses in my presence. I know nothing of legal forms, and had never been in a legal fight before. Right while the investigation was pending a writ for libel was filed against me for $5,000.

Tampering With Witnesses

"I had just $50 in the Bank of North America. It was great fun for me. (Laughter.) I asked Mr. Henderson if I should have a lawyer. He did not think so. He would ask the questions I wanted right straight on. Everything was right. I would not give the names of the witnesses, because I have friends very near the others, both there and here.

I learned that they were tampering or trying to tamper with the witnesses, and so ran down on Friday afternoon, three days before the investigation, and dropped into the office of a friend, a good Presbyterian from Ottawa. He said, "Are you sure the commissioner has power to subpoena witnesses?"

Fears Consequences

"I said yes, because Mr. Henderson whatever his views may be, would not do me wrong. He said I am not sure, and if he has not the power you are going into a trapand hostile witnesses will be told by a lawyer they need not testify if they do not want to, and your friendly witnesses would be liable to an action for slander as they have not the protection of the court.

"I said I was sure about it, but would take legal advice, and took advice from an old lawyer at Winnipeg, who knows a lot of law, and he said, 'I do not think, I believe, that there is no power to supoena witnesses over there.' I said 'What am I going to do?' and he said 'Go right over and tell him you have taken legal advice, and ask him if he has power, and if he says yes, ask him to show his authority.' I went right over and asked him if he had the power to subpoena witnesses in the investigation.

"He said, 'I don't think I have.'

To See Instructions

"I said, 'Let me see your instructions.' They were from the minister of the interior, telling him, just as a wholesale goods house in the city would instruct an agent in Dawson or Prince Albert to look into the character of someone wanting to who find life a burden, can have health and strength restored by the use of

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills.
The normal proportion of women and men have more than their share of misery. Some is in appearance and palpitation, with shortness of breath, dizzy and fainting spells, while with others there is a general collapse of the system. Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills tone up the nerves, strengthen the heart and make it beat strong and regular, create new and blood corpuscles, and prevent that sense of hopelessness so far-common with the weak of nervous mental and physical abuse.
Mrs. R. G. Broughton, Oshawa, Ont., writes: "For over a year I was troubled with nervousness and heart trouble. I doubted to give Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills a trial, and after using five boxes I found I was completely cured. I always recommend them to my friends."

The Sweep of Fate.

A heavy gain for the Conservatives in both Ontario and Quebec in the recent provincial elections cannot be explained except by the waning power of the Liberal Party. All other explanations carry a hollowness that rings to every reader. The greatest credit is due Whitney in Ontario for having given the people a clean rule of four years. After Ross' regime the businesslike and fair government of the Conservative government stood out in sharp-cut contrast and Ontario showed its appreciation.

But the imminence of a Federal election overshadows a Provincial election so that the decision by both parties is taken as a Dominion expression. This was admitted by the Liberals before the New Brunswick elections and must have been more in evidence in the elections of last Monday.

The value of these elections as a thermometer of public opinion is enhanced by the fact that one of the Provinces had previously returned a good Conservative majority, while the other hand been even more decidedly Liberal. And in both cases was the Conservative standing improved.

Ontario had returned 74 Liberals and 23 Conservatives in 1904; this time, with eight new seats added, the score was 87 to 18. Quebec has stood 69 Liberals and 5 Conservatives; now it is 58 to 16. In all the Conservatives won 24 seats.

In addition almost all the Conservative majorities were increased. Gouin the Quebec Liberal Premier was defeated by Bourassa in Montreal, Rev. D. C. Hossack a turncoat ministerial candidate was turned down very abruptly in Toronto.

There is not the slightest opportunity for the Liberal party or press to make any deductions from the elections, but that it is a blow to their party. In one Province that was Conservative, the Conservatives majority was increased; in the other Province that has always been Liberal, the Conservative standing is improved by over two hundred per cent. In every election for the past year the Liberal power has waned. Undoubtedly the scandals that have been exposed in the House have shown the intelligent elector that he is paying for a colossal graft game, which is making a few score of Liberal leaders wealthy.

The Federal government still assures itself that it is safe. Judging from the recent elections its safety is in its own mind only.

Poor Mr. Simmons has chosen a bad time to stump this section.

The Times' Service.

Last week The Times contained more special telegraphic news than has ever before appeared in a Medicine Hat paper. We think we are safe in saying there was double any previous amount. But this is not a new move for The Times. It has always for the past two years led in the amount of special correspondence telegraphic news, and special illustration work as well as in local news.

Last summer during the baseball season The Times received special daily telegraphic accounts of every game, from the first game played. In fact, for two weeks at the beginning of the season it received the only telegraphic news of the games, that came to the city.

Last fall The Times ran a series of farming scenes of this district that represented an outlay of seven dollars an illustration.

And these are only a few of the examples of the work The Times is doing to produce the best weekly paper in Alberta—best in brains, not in pulp.

Of course two columns of telegraphic service costs money and for a weekly paper is most unusual; cuts at seven dollars a piece also make up a big bill.

But The Times thinks it has paid to supply the special service it gives. It is on such features as this that it has built up its present extensive paid-for circulation. It is this special service that gives the paper such a welcome reception among its many readers. A reader who does not care for The Times is a novelty. If such an one orders the papers stopped it is promptly stopped, unlike some other papers which you can't stop with a shot gun. We figure that any man who does not think enough of the paper to pay for it is no use to the paper, and, as we are not basing our claims to advertising on circulation alone, his name is cut off.

It is the "liveness" of the circulation of The Times that brings advertisers in its columns such good results.

EDITORIAL NOTES

Water! Water ! ! Water ! ! !

Of all the great fiascos and muddles that were ever imposed upon a long-suffering public commend us to the Medicine Hat water system as it is now. And there is not the least doubt in the minds of the citizens that the whole thing is due to errors that need never have happened. For days the hill has been without water again this week. It will be about three months before the new pumps are installed, and we must suffer this state of affairs until then. And we are beginning to feel that new pumps will not ensure good service. The present condition is not entirely due to the pumps by any means.

It would be interesting to know what that pipe line to the stand tank is costing us. There are workmen on it almost all the time, the latest stunt being to dig up every joint in that line. Here is one of the features of that line that appeals to any reasonable man as a horrible mistake; the same pipe that pumps the water in lets it out to the system. Any water that comes from the tank has to flow down to Toronto Street before it enters the pipe system. The water must drop thirty or forty feet before it enters the mains and then the hill gets it after the entire lower city is supplied. When the tank is being filled, the same pumping is feeding the houses direct.

What is the Council doing to enforce an explanation from its employees? It is told that the pump is out of order, that some condition was imperfect in the laying of pipes, that air is in the pipes, etc., etc. but what the Council should know, and what the people want to know is why these things happened. Are they like the grading and sewer digging of Toronto street at the same time? Are they like the huge elevation of Toronto Street with mud from cellars, when a gravel top is supposed to be laid. Are they like the wonderful ditch digging after the storms are over? Are they like the elevations of the sewers in some places? Are they like a hundred other expensive and foolish works which this city is being forced to bear every day. Some day the people will rise and demand an explanation of these things, and the explanation which is evident to many now, will be made more public.

The council is doing little to let the people know what is the trouble. It is owing to the Mayor to give him credit for striving to get to the bottom and to hold someone responsible. But there are too many of the Aldermen working overtime to shift the responsibility of individuals unto fate, or Providence, or luck or any old thing that relieves them of the responsibility of criticising any city employee.

How long, Oh Council, how long?

Saskatchewan is bringing in some very advanced liquor legislation. One of the regulations is to do away with club liquor licenses, and another to close all bars on holidays. Along the same line a man in Spokane suggests that every man who drinks must have a license, as well as the hotel that sells it.

Governor Henderson of the Yukon says that Dawson is as clean a city as any Western city. Then in the same interview he complains that Dr. Pringle "will not assist him in his efforts towards the betterment of the country." If the Yukon is so good, honest man Henderson should need no assistance.

Alfred Harmsworth of the London Daily Mail: "I believe the public does not care one iota about the size of a paper. If anything, a small paper is preferable to a large one."

It is most amusing to see such good Liberal papers in Alberta as the Calgary Albertan, the Lethbridge Herald, the Red Deer Advocate decrying any guarantee of bonds of the C.N.R. by the government, and arguing that if the government would guarantee the bonds it should build the line itself. What party was it brought the G.T.P. into existence, and what were the advantages given by the government?

School Trustee Niblock has succeeded in getting it into the heads of his fellow trustees that languages in the High School course are advisable and necessary. His friends regret very much that he could not accept the aldermanship which would have been his had he run in the elections last winter. Had Mr. Niblock and a couple of other fighters been aldermen, we would not now have our waterworks and other public works in their present condition. Someone would have been forced to explain the present chaos, and, more than that, would have remedied it or been sent about his business.

One of the significant features of the recent Ontario elections was the unmistakable refusal to accept Socialist candidates. There can be no doubt about the standing of Socialism in the older Province, when not one socialist candidate even saved his deposit. The general public is quickly grasping the fact that while many socialists are striving honestly with high aims the leaders are, almost without exception working schemes for personal advancement. The rank and file may be honest, but the leaders are merely running them for their own ends. That Alberta leader, Lahaney, after all his protestations went the way of all of them when he joined that most undesirable class of citizens, the anarchists.

One of the daily exposures in the House of Commons last week was the fact that Dr. Reid, Liberal M. P. for Grenville, has been having his private yachts repaired in the government yards at the expense of the country.

Another example of the daring of the Government in defeating justice was the destruction of the ballots in the Standstead election, after a petition against the return of the Liberal member had been filed. When the case was up for trial, the box supposed to contain the election papers, and instead of the papers necessary for the trial there were found only the old papers of 1904, although the envelope on the top read "Bye-election, January, 1908, Stanstead." No explanation has been forthcoming that removes the clearest evidence that the papers were deliberately destroyed by a Government employee.

Recipe is Easily Prepared at Small Cost, and Many Swear By It.

Mix the following by shaking well in a bottle, and take in teaspoonful doses after meals and bedtime:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. A local druggist is the authority that these simple, harmless ingredients can be obtained at nominal cost from our home druggists.

The mixture is said to cleanse and strengthen the clogged and inactive kidneys, overcoming Backache, Bladder Weakness and Urinary Trouble of all kinds, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Those who have tried this say it positively overcomes pain in the back, clears the urine of sediment and regulates urination, especially at night, curing even the worst forms of bladder weakness.

Every man or woman here who feels that the kidneys are not strong or acting in a healthy manner should mix this prescription at home and give it a trial, as it is said to do wonders for many persons.

The Scranton (Pa.) Times was first to print this remarkable prescription, in October, of 1906, since when all the leading newspapers of New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Pittsburg and other cities have made many announcements of it to their readers.

Hoot! mon, the Kiltles are comin'.

Don't Neglect a Cough or Cold
IT CAN HAVE BUT ONE RESULT. IT LEAVES THE THROAT or LUNGS, OR BOTH, AFFECTED.
DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP IS THE MEDICINE YOU NEED.
It is without an equal as a remedy for Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Sore Throat, Pain in the Chest, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Quinsy and all affections of the Throat and Lungs.
A single dose of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup will stop the cough, soothe the throat, and if the cough or cold has become settled on the lungs, the healing properties of the Norway Pine Tree will proclaim its great virtue by promptly eradicating the bad effects, and a persistent use of the remedy cannot fail to bring about a complete cure.
Do not be humbugged into buying so-called Norway Pine Syrups, but be sure and insist on having Dr. Wood's. It is put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees the trade mark, and price 25 cts.
Mrs. Henry Seabrook, Hepworth, Ont., writes: "I have used Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup in our family for the past three years and I consider it the best remedy known for the cure of colds. It has cured all my children and myself."

Rifle Shooting as an Amateur Sport.

Capt. C. N. Mitchell, R.O., delivered the following lecture in the drill hall in connection with the series on rifle shooting:

There is one predominating feature of the Anglo-Saxon race, the love of sport, by the intermingling of blood and change of condition pure sport has in many cases become corrupted into games devoted more to gain than glory, the professional has too often supplanted the amateur until by force of circumstances, and selection of the fittest, the pastimes that were indulged in by many have become monopolized by the few, and thus, clean, healthy games enjoyed by everybody are doled out at fifty cents a head by clever combinations. The best of amateurs are being absorbed by the love of gain and thus health giving and friendly exercises are rapidly coming under the influence of the illusive dollar.
