SUPREME COURT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-291, an Act to amend the Supreme Court Act (references by a Lieutenant-Governor in Council).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment to the Supreme Court Act in an important respect. The Act now provides for references to the Supreme Court of Canada for interpretation of Bills, but under the Act they can only be made by the federal Government.

The purpose of the amendment is to open the door so that provincial Governments can also refer questions to the Supreme Court of Canada. After all, if the Supreme Court is the arbiter between the two levels of government, both levels should have equal access to it. This is extremely relevant these days, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the Bill will commend itself to all Members.

Mr. Speaker: I suppose we can say we certainly received the message.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-51

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by a number of constituents from the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and from the riding of Stormont—Dundas.

These Canadians ask that the Government move ahead expeditiously with Bill C-51, which is aimed at reducing the number of Canadians who die from cigarette smoking.

OTTAWA-MONTREAL CN LINE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition signed by a number of constituents, again from the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

These constituents are protesting plans by the Canadian National Railway to shut down the Montreal to Ottawa rail line through my constituency. They ask the House of Commons to protest, in order to ensure that this rail line which the Government and CN want to shut down remains open for the benefit of the citizens of the great riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

I totally support their petition.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and honour to present a petition on behalf of approximately 3,100 people from the lower mainland of British Columbia.

The petitioners are asking this House to protect the rights of the unborn through appropriate legislation.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present this morning. The first one, pursuant to Standing Order 106, has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

It deals with the concern of residents of the community of Atikokan in my riding because they have been left off the eligibility list for the northern residents' tax deduction. They point out that many of the communities left off the list, like theirs, share identical environments. Because they are northern isolated communities they pay increased costs for food, fuel, and housing, and the tax deduction was designed to alleviate the added costs of living in these isolated communities.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to declare the Township of Atikokan and the surrounding area to be eligible for the northern residents' tax deduction. There are approximately 240 names on this particular petition.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, the second petition is one of many that I have tabled in this House over the last year. It is certified correct as to form by the Clerk of Petitions and is signed by residents of the Thunder Bay—Atikokan riding and the Thunder Bay—Nipigon riding.

The petitioners call upon the Parliament of Canada to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

FEDERAL LANGUAGE TEACHERS—NECESSITY TO OBTAIN TIME FOR PREPARATION OF COURSES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, it is my duty to present to the House a petition signed by many Canadians, most of whom are public servants working for the Government who care about official languages and who teach Canadians the second language. The petitioners humbly state that the Government of Canada, represented by the Treasury Board, has not recognized the principle of fair and reasonable course preparation time for federal language teachers and that this situation is seriously undermining the policy of bilingualism in Canada.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, ask Parliament to mandate the Treasury Board to negotiate a collective agreement with the federal teachers in the ED group that will provide 15 hours a week of course preparation time for language teachers.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions, pursuant to Standing Order 106.

The first is signed by a number of people in my constituency. It says that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

The second petition is similar and is signed by residents in Winnipeg. It says that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and, therefore, they pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

ABORTION—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA DECISION

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour and privilege today to present a petition containing the names of 39,894 New Brunswickers. They ask that the House of Commons consider the tragic effects of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada and take immediate action to protect, defend, and respect the rights of unborn children.

The petition contains names from all over the Province of New Brunswick: 2,841 from my constituency of Moncton, over 11,000 from Madawaska—Victoria, over 3,200 from Gloucester, and over 1,600 from the constituency of Westmorland—Kent, as well as all other ridings represented by the signatures. The total petition represents over 5.5 per cent of the total population of the Province of New Brunswick.

The New Brunswick Right to Life Association, the sponsor of this petition, calls upon all legislators to respond to the wishes of the majority of Canadians by enacting legislation to protect the basic rights of the unborn child.

REVIEW OF MERGERS

Question No. 322—Mrs. Collins:

1. Since the passage of Bill C-91 in June, 1986, have any mergers been reviewed by the Director of Investigation and Research and, if so, what number (a) have been reviewed (b) have been referred to the Competition Tribunal for resolution (c) are still pending?

2. Is the main focus of the Director's review on compliance?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs):

1.(a) Throughout the period from June 19, 1986 to March 31, 1988, the Director of Investigation has examined 186 merger transactions in a significant fashion (defined as two days or more of examination). As of March 31, 1988, examinations were continuing on 25 of these transactions.

(b) The Director has made application to the Competition Tribunal in three instances since June 19, 1986.

(c) As of March 31, 1988, two applications before the Tribunal were still pending.

2. The Director takes a compliance-oriented approach in the administration of all the provisions of the Competition Act and in particular to his review of merger activity for which the compliance approach is particularly well suited.

The new legislation has encouraged parties to a merger to co-operate with the Director in resolving concerns he may have on the competitive impact of a particular merger. Equally, timing constraints are a factor both for the parties, who typically face a narrow window of opportunity for the purchase or sale of the assets or shares in question and for the Director, whose assessment of the impact of the proposed merger must be completed in a rather short time frame.

The objective of the Director's compliance approach is to offer a broad spectrum of alternatives to ensure that every reasonable opportunity is provided to business persons to structure their affairs within the parameters of the law.

The Competition Act provides the Director with broad discretion in the resolution of merger matters. There are six mechanisms, or compliance instruments available: advance Ruling Certificates (ARCs); advisory Opinions under the Program of Compliance (which may in certain instances be given in relation to a restructured transaction); monitoring (as allowed for by the three-year statutory period in which a merger may be challenged); undertakings; applications for Consent Orders; and contested applications before the Tribunal.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I had assumed that there would be someone from the Government leading off this debate on the Excise Tax Act. If that is not the case, then I would like to say a few words.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We have to dispose of the concurrence motion, and then we can go into debate on third reading.

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it. The motion is agreed to on division.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, Bill C-117 contains the requisite provisions to implement the changes in federal sales tax and excise tax announced by the Minister of Finance in his respective Budgets on February 18, 1987 and February 10, 1988, in the White Paper on Tax Reform on June 18, 1987 and the document on tax reform on December 16, 1987.

The Bill contains a number of important measures whose purpose is to increase tax revenue and deal with certain technical aspects of the legislation. Most of the provisions for increasing revenue are part of the Government's tax reform program. These changes and the changes in corporate income tax will be used to offset the short-fall in revenue from personal income tax as a result of tax reform. Madam Speaker, as you know, it is imperative to adopt Bill C-117 as soon as possible, in order to amend federal sales tax legislation and remove certain inequities it contains. Madam Speaker, I would ask the House to adopt this Bill as soon as possible.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this morning on Bill C-117, whose purpose is to legislate a number of historic tax increases. The Parliamentary Secretary said earlier that he would like to see this Bill pass as soon as possible. I may remind him, and I may remind this House, that we are talking about the tax increases announced in the February 1987 Budget. That Budget contained the 12 per cent tax on snacks, candy and ice cream, which became effective on July 1, 1987, and this means the Government is going to take the following amounts out of taxpayers' pockets: In 1987-88 it will be $60 million, in 1988-89, $80 million, and so on. The same budget announced a 4 per cent increase in the excise tax on cigarettes and tobacco, effective the day the Budget was brought down, on February 19, 1987, and this will take $70 million out of taxpayers' pockets in 1987-88 and another $7 million in 1988-89, and so forth, Madam Speaker.

The same budget provides for a $4 increase in the air transportation tax, effective on May 1, 1987 and estimated to raise $45 million for the Treasury by August 1, 1987 and $50 million in 1988-89 and following years. The same budget raised the sales tax on leaded gas to the same level as for unleaded gas, effective April 1, 1987, which means another $30 million annually for the Treasury, taken out of taxpayers' pockets!

And so this Bill keeps increasing taxes. After a long wait, after many promises, the Minister of Finance finally tabled his White Paper on Tax Reform in June 1987. At the very moment the White Paper on Tax Reform was tabled, this document on which Canadians were asked to consult, in June 1987, the Minister—and he did it again in December 1987—raised taxes again. He introduced what was referred to in English as "the talk tax". There is now a 10 per cent tax on long distance calls. Imagine, Madam Speaker, people who live in rural areas, farmers who have to make long distance calls whether they like it or not, and now, since 1987, they have to pay this tax. Add to this a 2 per cent increase in the tax on cable TV, from 8 to 10 per cent during the 1987 tax reform, which became effective on January 1, 1988. This adds up to $870 million taken out of taxpayers' pockets by the Conservative Government for 1988-89 and $945 million for 1990 and $1 billion for 1990-91.

The number of taxes this Government is dumping on Canadian taxpayers is outrageous! Imagine, the elderly, the handicapped and all other groups, including farmers, who now have to pay a tax on long distance calls they cannot avoid. It's not like living in the city where you can . . . And even in urban areas, and I am thinking of Montreal East, in Rivière-des-Prairies, the present riding of Mercier and in the new riding of Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies, people still pay long distance rates if they call Laval, which is right next door, across the river. And in addition to being penalized by having to pay long distance rates within an urban area, they are penalized even more by this tax.

As part of the same tax reform, before the consultation process was complete, the Minister of Finance increased the tax on paint and wallpaper from 8 to 12 per cent, effective January 18, 1988, which increased the Government's revenue by $60 million per year. As part of the same tax reform, with a little creative accounting the Minister of Finance produced something like $1.6 billion which, in fact, does not mean a thing, because it does not apply to all the other years, but he wanted to cook the books to give Canadians the impression that his deficit was gradually diminishing. He just changed the rules of the game, and he said:

From now on, employers, the people who create jobs, will pay the Government every two weeks instead of every month, and in this way the Government will get the money faster and the money will be coming in every month although at year end it boils down to the same thing, except for this one-time gain of $1.6 billion. This has definitely changed all the rules and skewed all the figures, and that is why the Minister claims he reduced the deficit, although if we look at the national debt and the annual deficit, there has been an increase instead of a decline.

Madam Speaker, the same rule is now being applied to federal sales tax. Remittance of the tax has now been accelerated. And for the deductions at source, the Minister has used an accelerated payment system which, according to him, was only for big business. But in his calculations, he forgot that such a measure also applies to small business. The construction contractor who has 20 employees in the Province of Quebec is affected by this measure because he must remit every 15 days these payroll deductions and this creates an unacceptable cash flow problem.

If we consider the effects of such a measure on municipalities, if they have cash flow problems, if this measure reduces their revenues, who will pay at the end of the year? Why, the taxpayers, of course! Through this accounting measure that the Minister of Finance wanted to implement in his tax reform, in his 1987 Budget, he has again indirectly increased taxes and created another hidden tax.

In the tax reform of June and December 1987, the Minister of Finance also raised the tax on alcohol and tobacco by 15 to 18 per cent. Here again, it is more money for the Government, but the extra $175 million a year must come from the taxpayer's pocket.

Madam Speaker, we have seen accelerated tax increases since this Conservative Government took power in September 1984, and it still goes on with every budget and every ministerial statement. For example, in the February 1988 Budget, there is another cent a litre excise tax on gasoline that took effect on April 1, 1988 and yielded $225 million right away, for the 1988-89 fiscal year, and $300 million a year thereafter.

Madam Speaker, gasoline taxation is something that affects everybody. It involves our communication system, public transit, everyone's car. People need gasoline to go to work, home, to the doctor or the hospital. So it is very important and every time we tax gasoline, it affects everybody. This Government is always dipping into the taxpayers' pockets.

So when the Parliamentary Secretary tells us that it is in Canadians' interest to pass this Bill C-117 immediately, I would like to say first of all that these taxation measures, these unacceptable tax increases, were announced in the February 1987 Budget, more than a year ago, since we are in May 1988. So it is definitely the Government that has taken more than a year to pass Canadian legislation. Secondly, I do not see why it is urgent for Canadians to pay this tax.

As you see, Madam Speaker, this Government is pushing through all those measures before the election, in the hope that Canadians will have forgotten them when the election comes. Of course, Madam Speaker, on behalf of this side of the House I can assure you, I can assure this House and Canadians that as soon as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) calls for an election, we will make sure Canadians are aware of all those billions and billions of dollars this Government pocketed in taxes while in office. Of course we will remind Canadians that the Minister of Finance, the former finance critic of the then Opposition, stated he was committed not to increase taxes. Increasing taxes was no good. But the first thing he did, his first step as Minister of Finance was to increase taxes, Madam Speaker.

If we were to list all the hidden taxes this Government imposed on Canadians, in the social area, in the area of immigration—when a Canadian for instance applies to have a relative come to Canada, he must make a deposit, make a contribution to Canadian citizenship. When we move, for instance—let us look at Canada Post Corporation. How many increases have there been? And no later than this morning, Madam Speaker! They are digging into our pockets!

Up till now, the concept has been that to err is human. The Canada Post Corporation is now suggesting in its five-year plan this is no longer so. Starting from April 1st, 1989, it is no longer human. If you use the wrong postal code on a letter, you will have to pay 10 cents. The letter will be sent back to you and you will have to pay a 10 cents penalty. And if you want to know what your postal code is or to correct your postal code, you have to buy the postal code directory from the Canada Post Corporation. But that directory costs $10. And it changes every year. This is how they go about it, not only through direct taxes we find in each and every budget and Minister's statement, but through indirect taxes from all Crown corporations where the Government can get after the money. Let taxpayers pay!

I would simply like to mention the direct taxes announced in the Budget presentation to the House—never mind all the other hidden taxes the Government has been pocketing since 1984—and make a brief summary, a short list. There is more to it than that of course, but I simply want to remind my colleagues that we do have indirect taxation. The sales tax went up from 9 to 10 per cent on October 1 and the Government got an additional $1 billion out of that. Another sales tax increase—again an indirect tax—from 10 to 11 per cent on January 1, 1986 yielded $1 billion more to the Government. Still another sales tax increase from 11 to 12 per cent on April 1, 1986, again another $1 billion for the Government. And of course there was the tax on candies, soft drinks, snack foods, anything the Government could tax. They even tried to slap a tax on food under their tax reform.

So the Liberal caucus got into the act and my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) hit the road and had people sign a petition. That was when the Conservative Government decided to backtrack, Madam Speaker, because it soon found out that people simply would not accept a tax on food. There was another sales tax increase—from 8 to 12 per cent—on paint, wallpaper and toys which took effect on January 1, 1988 and has brought in $60 million. The excise tax on a litre of gasoline went up 2 cents on September 3, 1985, up a cent on January 1, 1987, up a cent on February 19, 1987, and again up a cent on April 1, 1988.

If we add them all up—$900 billion, plus $450 million, plus $450 million, plus $300 million—we can hardly believe the Conservative Government and the Minister of Finance have been siphoning that kind of money from the pockets of the taxpayers. I repeat, Madam Speaker, especially the tax on gasoline which has become a necessity because people do more than drive around, they take their car to work, they drive to the hospital, they drive their kids to school. These taxes on essential things give you an idea just how much money this Government takes away from taxpayers.

On April 1, 1987 the sales tax on gasoline again went up and cost taxpayers an additional $30 million. There was a gradual tax increase on air transportation on May 1, 1986, $340 million. Higher taxes on alcohol and tobacco, first increase of $340 million on May 24, 1985; second increase of $150 million on February 27, 1986; third increase of $70 million on February 19, 1987; and fourth increase of $175 million on January 1, 1988. These are millions of dollars Canadian taxpayers have to pay every day in sales taxes. This commodity tax is not a luxury tax, but a tax on day-to-day necessities.

On top of the $945 million tax increase starting January 1, 1988, there is the 10 per cent tax on long-distance phone calls. What a shame, Madam Speaker! Slapping a 10 per cent tax on long-distance phone calls, especially in rural regions. But this is just a short list. There will also be a long one apart from all the other taxes which the government will impose through fees and permits and also through Crown Corporations. And I am only talking here about indirect taxes.

Let's now turn to direct taxes. On January 1, 1986, the government deindexed family allowances, personal credits and tax tables, bringing in 635 million dollars. Imagine what would have happened, Madam Speaker, if we had not succeeding in stopping the government from deindexing old age security pensions. Imagine the money the government would have siphoned from the pockets of taxpayers and our senior citizens who had to endure such an insult from this government. Still in the realm of direct taxes, on January 1 1986, the government eliminated the tax abatement, which has brought in $650 million dollars. On May 22, 1985, it eliminated the deduction for Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan, $105 million. From July 1, 1985 to December 31, 1986, it imposed a temporary surtax of 5 to 10 per cent on highly paid individuals, $500 million. On July 1, 1986, it imposed a permanent surtax of 3 per cent on all taxpayers, $1.2 billion. On January 1, 1986, it changed the taxation of dividends, $300 million. On January 1, 1986, it changed married people's exemptions, $20 million. And so on and so forth, Madam Speaker.

When you look at that list, which is a short list, and realize the billions involved in these increases, you wonder: My God, how can there still be a deficit? How can there still be a national debt? And yet, despite all the accounting tricks which the Minister of Finance has used, the deficit remains above $30 billion a year.

Since this Tory Government came into office, our national debt has risen by as much as 40 per cent, in spite of all the tax increases. If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), together with his Cabinet and other Conservative Members, thinks that with this legislation brought in before an election, Canadians will forget about these tax increases, I have news for him, Madam Speaker. He will realize that Canadians have not forgotten and we will make sure they do not forget that Mrs. Denis insisted on saying: You deceived us, Charlie Brown, and we will not forget it. Canadians will certainly not forget it, Madam Speaker.

When I consider the tax reform which was supposed to create an equitable system where everybody would be treated fairly—what do I find? That the Government will carry out this tax reform in two stages. During the first stage where small adjustments were made in an effort to convince Canadians with a few goodies before an election, to forgive its major tax increases of the past four years. But even that has failed.

Take the case of a major industry: small businesses. Everybody agrees that this industry is responsible for creating most jobs. Small and medium size businesses have created between 75 and 80 per cent of our new jobs. That is great! The Government should encourage our businessmen. How should it go about it? Except for the programs which it has implemented, even in the tax area, it should have favoured these people with a lower tax rate. But it did the opposite! The only industry which will be faced with a tax increase under the tax reform is the small manufacturing industry. Once this tax reform is implemented how do you think manufacturers will be able to compete with U.S. manufacturers within the framework of the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement? How do you thing our small businesses will be able to compete with this 2 per cent tax increase? How will they be able to compete? Is this how they will make the U.S. market accessible to our business corporations? The first thing they do, even before the free trade agreement is implemented, is to increase the tax rate. The only initiative put forward by this Tory Government for small businesses was indeed to increase the tax rate.

Still in the area of tax reform, Madam Speaker, we find that the second stage is somewhat forgotten or put aside—they are negotiating with provinces, they are referring to multiple, value added tax, a national federal sales tax, negotiations are going on, but all this takes time. In the meantime, he suggests they have to find new taxes. Before the process is completed taxes must be raised. And all of a sudden he creates a new tax, without implementing or completing tax reform. Because we do not yet know where we are going with the sales tax and tax reform. Everything is put into question.

The Minister says: Let us be realistic, we need money. But since an election is coming, we cannot impose a sales tax across the board, especially on food. We will try doing it sector by sector, but we have to find a way to increase Government revenues, create a new sales tax indeed on marketing. Now a manufacturer, once he has priced his product, must add to that price, in order to evaluate the sales tax, by including his promotion and marketing cost. In this Bill, the Minister of Finance completely neglected to include a definition of "promotion costs, marketing costs", or perhaps he does not even know himself. So everyone is left in the dark and companies definitely are seriously concerned with that unrealistic, incomplete legislation that will create a red tape monster.

Moreover, two or three years down the road, when an auditor from Revenue Canada's Sales Tax Branch makes an audit, a difinition will then be issued, if there is a definition at that stage, and this will be arbitrary—what is a marketing cost? What is a promotion cost for a manufacturer? This is why a multitude of companies and organizations appeared before the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, suggesting: In the name of God, stop that! This is a sheer madness, its makes no sense! Let us not get into that! We do not know where we are going, we do not know how much to charge because the sales tax cost is part of the pre-retail sale cost, and there is a danger two or three years down the road that we will be assessed by the Government— Therefore we have discouraged entrepreneurship instead of promoting and encouraging our manufacturers and our industrialists to become more active and innovative in producing and selling. They are discouraged because they are dealing with an uncertain tax system and they do not know how to proceed.

I should like to refer to a single case, that of furniture manufacturing in Quebec, a vital industry which will have to compete against Americans if the market is opened up. There is a problem and I should like, Madam Speaker, with your consent, to read from a letter which I received from one of my constituents, a company in my riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou, by the name of Les meubles Valentino, which says:

> We should like to bring to your attention the representations made by the Quebec Association of Furniture Manufactures to the minister of Finance, Mr. Michael Wilson, in connection with the new computation method of the federal sale tax to be implemented on November 1,1988.
> As an employer and as a member of that organization, we should like to support its action and ask you to be kind enough to demand from the government the withdrawal of that new measure.
> As you will appreciate after reading the enclosed brief we have good reasons to oppose this new measure. Suffice to mention:

They mention six points in their letter, and again I quote:

> (1) The measure adding $34 million a year in taxes on the furniture industry.

I did not refer to this measure a moment ago when I listed the tax increases, but it means the furniture industry alone must pay an extra $34 million. You can imagine how much money this unrealistic and discriminatory measure brings in!

Again I quote the letter:

> (2) The measure will not narrow the gap in favour of imports, on the contrary it will make it even worse in most cases.
> (3) The administrative complexity of the measure will entail huge additional costs.

Just think of the small businessman having to cope with this mess and figuring out how much more he will have to spend on distribution and advertising to sell his products. How can he be expected to do that when the measure does not even define what constitutes an advertising or distribution expenditure?

I continue the quotation:

> (4) The measure will be harmful because of uncertainty concerning the amount taxable.

How will that be defined, how will the 25 per cent be added, and two or three years later in comes an inspector or an auditor who says: No, you know, such or such item must be included. For example, take a small firm where the president of the company or the owner happens to be the production manager, the salesman, the clerk, the accountant, he does everything, so where does his salary come from? How is his salary accounted for? What part? Is it part of the distribution? The gentleman or the lady also makes deliveries? What part of the salary will go under advertising? That is how far this Government has gone in its never-ending quest for money.

Fifth, he says, and again I quote:

> (5) It is unfair to make the furniture industry pay for the actions of other industries.

What is the meaning of the fifth point? There was a case before the court and they said a few companies took advantage of the situation and tried to get secrets, an advertising company with a separate branch for distribution, they boosted their products and their affiliated firm did not have to advertise, this way they could cut costs and therefore on the basic cost the tax was lower. The court ruled for the plaintiff. There were other ways of solving the problem. The Minister of Finance could have brought in regulations which, as is done for small business deductions, define allowable relationships between corporations and forbid corporations which are not at arm's length from claiming certain benefits.

The Minister decided instead to use the opportunity given to him by the judicial system to get additional amounts, unconcerned about the problems such a system would create for business.

Furthermore, the sixth point in the letter states: "The timing is bad for such a radical change!" Indeed, Madam Speaker. The government wanted Canadians to believe that its tax reform package would simplify things—and everybody agrees that the Income Tax Act needs simplifying.

All Canadians were therefore hoping that, through tax reform, their annual tax form would be clearer and simpler, that businesses would enjoy more harmonious relationships with the government as far as tax collection is concerned.

This has not been achieved during the first phase, in fact things have only become more complicated—and I invite you, Madam Speaker, and all my colleagues just to look at the tax form. Did you know that, on July 1, the first phase of tax reform goes into effect? All we need is to take the form—Members have to complete it as well —to determine the exemptions which are now credits. However, if we look closely, it is even more complicated than our annual income tax return. This is supposed to be a simple form that tells the employer how to deduct taxes from his payroll. And it turns out to be more complicated than an income tax return! Tax reform was supposed to simplify matters, but it seems to be making them more complex.

Phase two of the tax reform has yet to be implemented, but the Minister has started to announce new measures. If he needed money, he could have raised taxes. No, he couldn't do that, because raising taxes is a political no-no. We are right in the middle of an election campaign, so we can't raise taxes. We have to get the money somewhere else. So we create a new tax, a new way to calculate it, just like that, and nobody has a clue how they should calculate this tax and what kind of responsibility is involved.

Considering all the people who contributed to the discussion, all the businesses and industries that appeared before the committee, I hope the committee on finance will recommend that the Minister get rid of these new federal taxes and give businesses a breather so that they can get on with their work and create jobs.

Madam Speaker, we see here a Government that was elected on the basis of promises made by its Minister of Finance who was not supposed to raise taxes, because taxes were already too high. They would concentrate on bringing expenditures down through better management, in order to balance government spending and government revenues. Today, however, when we look at the results—as of March 31, 1984, we had an annual deficit of $32 billion. Today, we have an annual deficit of about $30 billion, which means only $2 billion less. However, during that period, income tax and other taxes increased by $22 billion. If we add to that the $1.6 billion and $1.3 billion worth of creative accounting the Minister of Finance has done on sales tax and remittance of payroll deductions, we could say that without the accounting changes and the disastrous increases in sales tax, we would have an annual deficit today of $34 billion, which means an increase of $2 billion.

That is what the Conservative Government has accomplished, a Government that promised it would not increase taxes, a Government that promised a simple tax system that all Canadians would be able to understand. Now we have a national debt that has increased by 40 per cent. We have a deficit that didn't go down, and especially, if we adjust all the creative accounting entries—we have a taxation system that will come into effect as of July 1—it won't be long now—and all employers have received these exemption forms for the changes in payroll deductions, and it will take them ages to complete these forms. This is an untolerable situation.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary thought this morning that we would approve this Bill in a matter of minutes, I think he failed to realize that Canadians don't agree with this Government. Not long ago, in fact it was early this week or on the weekend, a poll showed that 50 per cent of Canadians were not satisfied with the Conservative Government. If we consider all these taxes and everything they involve, Canadians are definitely disappointed in a Government that was elected on a promise of good government and a commitment not to raise taxes. And I am sure that as soon as the Prime Minister can screw enough courage to call an election, Canadians will remember this and send the Conservative Government to the Opposition benches.

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, it is a real pleasure for me to say a few words on Bill C-117. We know that the Bill contains legislative amendments required to implement the changes made to the federal sales tax, the excise tax announced by the Minister of Finance on various occasions like the February 18 Budget, on February 10, in the White Paper on Tax Reform on June 18, 1987, and the December 16 paper on tax reform.

[English]

I move:

That this question be now put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. Clinch, seconded by the Mr. Hawkes, moves that this question be now put.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I want to raise a point of order and then, hopefully, go on to debate. Yesterday, somewhat in heat because of some tactics being used by the Government, I made some comments about the Chair which I wish to withdraw and apologize for. I think you, Madam Speaker, realize that the next few weeks are going to be difficult for the Chair, as they will be for all of us, if the level of debate and perhaps the partisanship among the different Parties rises in view of the forthcoming election.

However, I apologize for my remarks which may have suggested the Chair was not acting fairly. I recognize that even if we may have been uncomfortable about the different procedures being used at that time, they were in fact within the Government's right to bring forward. That was my point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member. Resuming debate.

Mr. Cassidy: I believe debate is now on the motion that this question be put, but effectively it allows the debate to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the Hon. Member seeking the floor?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, I am.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I think there was discussion in which it was suggested that it would be possible to end this debate at the end of today. I do not know where those negotiations are at this time, but I am not quite sure why the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader thought it necessary to bring forward that particular motion, because it would seem to me that, if anything, it might interfere with our ability to discuss these things—

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, to the best of my knowledge, outside Routine Proceedings, I have not risen in the House today, so I do not know if I could have put a motion.

Mr. Murphy: It was some other guy. Don't worry about it.

Mr. Hawkes: Perhaps my hon. friend erred accidentally.

Mr. Cassidy: I acknowledge, Madam Speaker, that the vividness—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order. The Parliamentary Secretary was named as seconder to the motion moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Clinch).

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I would say that the Hon. Member by his dress is identifying himself as, shall we say, a purple Tory, not quite a red Tory but certainly—

Ms. Copps: You are colour-blind. That is maroon.

Mr. Cassidy: Is it maroon? The vividness of his coat of many colours should remind him that it was his colleague behind him who moved the motion.

I would like to speak with respect to third reading of this particular Bill. The purpose of this Bill is to sock it to Canadians once again in terms of raising revenue from the sales tax. It certainly raises the whole question about the fairness of the tax system which has been put in place and developed by the Progressive Conservative Government since it assumed power back in 1984.

You will recall, Madam Speaker, that in the 1984 election campaign, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated: "The rich will pay and pay handsomely under a Conservative Government". Perhaps he was referring to the contributions he expected his Party to receive from wealthy Canadians in gratitude that they are the only group of Canadians who have wound up paying less taxes in 1988 than they were paying prior to the present Government coming to power in 1984.

I think it is instructive that the American Government under President Reagan, the British Government under Prime Minister Thatcher, and this Government here have all seen fit to sharply cut taxes on the wealthy. I guess it is also worth noting that if there was a role model to follow, instead of President Reagan and Prime Minister Thatcher, it would have been that of the previous Liberal Government which also saw as a priority the cutting of taxes on wealthy Canadians in a very major way.

I was reading this morning some notes which referred specifically to the question of where the deficits have come from. What has been the source of the deficits which we have experienced in this country over the course of the last 10 years and which have risen monumentally since the early 1980s, the time of the recession? Would that that could enter into the record, the strip-tease being done by the Hon. Member in front of every Member of the House.

Since the 1970s, the study indicated, it is not so much increases in spending which have driven the deficit of the Government of Canada to levels with which every Party, including mine, is uncomfortable. It is the amount of tax expenditures. It is the amount of reductions in tax which have been given to corporations, and particularly to wealthy Canadians, which has accounted for something like three-quarters of the current level of the deficit now running at some $29 billion a year.

I think it is instructive, as well, that the present Government, which did have an option in terms of taking away those tax privileges from corporations, failed at that job. Rather than taking those tax privileges away, it has in fact continued to allow them to exist. In certain cases it has increased them such as was done with the half million dollar exemption on capital gains.

Capital gains were always treated very tenderly by the previous Liberal Government. The present Conservative Government has done it in spades by putting in the $100,000 and the half million dollar exemption on capital gains. At the time it was introduced it meant that people who dabble in the stock market in a serious way, people who flip houses in hot real estate markets such as Toronto, Vancouver, or Ottawa, people who made money in that way, would be able to have tax-free an amount of money equivalent to what a Newfoundland fisherman or someone who is farming in New Brunswick would hope to earn during an entire lifetime.

I raise that because what Canadians say to us when we have talked to them—and we have spent a lot of time thinking about the issue of taxation in the course of the last three years—is: "We are looking for the tax system to be fair". It seems to me that one of the primary standards on which the present Bill increasing the sales tax and other taxes has to be judged is whether or not the tax on goods put in by the Progressive Conservatives is fair. I think one has to come up with an answer which is to the contrary. It is not fair.

In fact, Canada is the only remaining industrial country in the world with a sales tax at the manufacturers' level. That sales tax now collects more revenue from goods and services—and it amounts to some 35 per cent of total revenue—than most countries in the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development collect, which is about an average of 29 per cent.

There has been an increasing bias away from corporate taxes and toward sales taxes and personal taxes by the present Government. This is something which we inherited from the Liberals, but Liberals and Conservatives alike have seen nothing wrong with increasing sales taxes in all kinds of ways in order to increase an inequitable and a regressive tax as opposed to taking tax revenues from progressive sources.

My Party has argued for a long time that we should be looking for tax fairness. It is not fair if the same proportion of income is taken from people in a low-income bracket as is taken from people in a high-income bracket. Yet that is the effect of these constant increases in sales taxes.

If someone who is not well off goes today to buy some chips or food for the kids, some pet food for the family dog or cat, or even goes to buy candy for the children, then those products are taxed. The sales tax on candy for kids is the same whether the family's income is $15,000 or whether it is $150,000 per year. Perhaps that illustrates graphically what I mean. There is something unfair when poor kids are paying as much tax as rich kids pay on those few things that they can buy in order to have some pleasure. This is true when we talk about poor families and rich families as well. It seems to me that this is a fundamental unfairness. It is why it makes more sense to have the bulk of personal income taxation coming through the income tax system rather than constantly trying to cut the income tax system, and saying: "We have to do it because there are some states in the United States which have a lower tax rate than those which happen to prevail here in Canada".

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has spent a fair amount of time looking at the whole question of a manufacturers' sales tax and the whole question of Phase 2 tax reform. We have been looking at some of the proposals which were made in Bill C-117. We have also looked at some of the proposals that the Government was making with respect to Phase 2 tax reform and the proposals being made for an adjustment to the manufacturers' sales tax, a kind of quick fix which is meant to last for a couple of years' time.

As you know, Madam Speaker, the proposal is extremely complicated. It is somewhat like a skill testing question one has to answer in order to collect a lottery prize which one gets in one's cornflakes or some other product some manufacturer is trying to promote. One has to take away a certain portion of the cost of the good in order to make some allowance for marketing and distribution costs. Then one has to add back a certain amount.

The hope is that this will create greater fairness between domestic manufacturers and importers of foreign goods who, right now, have some benefits because of the present sales tax system. In fact, we are increasingly hearing evidence in the system that it does not work. It will not work until we get to a system which is fair and modern and which probably hits at every level up to the retail level so that the disparities that now exist, depending on the way in which manufacturers or importers do business here in Canada, can in fact be brought to an end.

For example, right now there is discrimination as to whether a manufacturer sells directly to retailers or whether that manufacturer sells through wholesalers. Roughly half the goods sold by manufacturers in Canada today are sold directly to retailers. This creates all kinds of problems under which the base of tax for the purposes of the tax has to be attributed in some way so that there is not too much loss to the Treasury.

It has also been pointed out that for our export industries the present tax is quite unfair. It is estimated that something in the order of 42 per cent of federal sales tax revenues has been collected on intermediate and capital goods, or are therefore being charged in various ways on production which is for export. We are disadvantaging our exports at the same time that we advantage importers and imports in terms of their ability to compete in the Canadian market. That is not fair.

There is something more fundamental that is not fair. This goes right to the heart of what we have talked about when we talk about tax fairness for average families. It is this. Since 1984 the Progressive Conservative Party has consistently raised the sales tax and the excise tax burden on average families. It has done it year after year after year, to the point where there is now a total increase on the average family earning $35,000 per year of some $1,074.50. That is what we calculate has been the increase of tax over the course of the last four years under a PC Government that said it would make the rich pay and not that it would make average Canadians pay. That is a great deal of money, more than $1,000. It is not compensated by a cut of perhaps $300 or $400 in the personal tax burden which people are meant to get under the tax reform when it comes into force in July of this year.

The partial deindexing of the system will mean that any income tax benefits that come from tax reform will very quickly slip away. In a couple of years that benefit will have gone as well.

I know, Madam Speaker, that you would be interested in what some of these figures show average Canadians are now having to pay. In 1984 the Government took measures that led to an increase in oil and gas prices that was worked out to about $100 for the average family. The increased unemployment insurance premiums amounted to the equivalent of $102 for the average family. The Government put into place a Liberal tax increase which it had opposed when it was in Opposition. How things change when it moved to government. It put in a sales tax increase equivalent to $150 for the average family, for a total increase in the November 1984 mini budget of $352.

Then, in May of 1985 it did it again. It eliminated the federal tax reduction on average families. That amounted to $100. It modified indexing on average families. That amounted to $115. It cut family allowance payments—a cost of $22.50 to an average family. It increased the tax on cigarettes and alcohol. That amounted to $75 extra. It broadened the sales tax, which amounted to $150 for the average family. It increased the gasoline tax by the equivalent of $50. That was an increase of $512.50.

In June, 1985 the Conservatives went at it again with a 1 cent per litre increase in gasoline to pay for indexing the Old Age Security, something the Conservatives have tried to sneak through and eventually were compelled not to do. That was $50 for the average family. In February, 1986 a surtax of 3 per cent was added which cost the average family $170. Another sales tax increase, $150 more for the average family, and an increase on the tax on cigarettes and alcohol amounted to a further $200. In February, 1986 that was a total of $340 extra.

I keep on asking: "Is that fair?" What about the fact that at the same time capital gains were exempted from tax? That was not capital gains for farmers or small businesses, but capital gains for people who speculated in the stock market, people who were flipping houses, or people who were investing in condominiums in Florida. Those capital gains were totally and completely tax-free. That is something that did not affect the average Canadian.

In 1987 the Conservatives went back at it again. Gasoline went up again by one cent a litre, which amounted to $50 for the average family. The sales tax was broadened again, which amounted to $15 for the average family. Cigarette and air ticket taxes went up by $35, for a total of some $80 per family depending on the category. In June, 1987 tax reform brought in a $300 tax cut for the average family, so my figures are already incorporated in that.

In February, 1988 there was a gasoline tax increase of one cent per litre, worth $50 for the average family. I do not have the costing, but the 10 per cent on telecommunications services will raise some $870 million per annum. If that is taken down to perhaps 10 or 11 million families across the country, one is talking about another $80 or $90 per family that the Conservatives will collect.

I would like to point out, Madam Speaker, that I do not know how many times we New Democrats have tabled in the House our calculations on the tax increases imposed by the Progressive Conservative Party since it took power in 1984.

Madam Speaker, the Government has never denied these estimates. We do not have the exact figures because we do not have the resources of the Department of Finance or of National Revenue, but we tabled them in the House many times. And the Government has never denied these figures showing that for an average family with an annual income of, say, $35,000, the tax increases over three and a half years now amount to some $1,400 a year. And now tax reform provides a temporary tax reduction of $310 a year for this family with a $35,000 income.

Madam Speaker, on average, this means an increase of around $1,100 a year for the average family with an annual income of $35,000. And I wonder whether this is really fair. Why, when I met my constituents in recent weeks, going door to door in my riding, do they all comment that they pay more and more every year on their tax return, that every year when they file their tax return, they have to pay more? The reason for that is deindexation and the tax system imposed by the Conservatives. The reason is the income tax increases imposed on average families by the Conservatives. The reason people's real income and purchasing power is going down is that the Conservatives have imposed tax upon tax upon tax, so much so that people are less well off, less able to afford the necessities of life and even the small luxuries that they could afford previously, because of what this Government has done.

[English]

I raise these matters at this point when we are talking about Bill C-117. A number of the details have been discussed at second reading and during the course of committee stage and report stage of this particular Bill. However, I wish to raise one specific question that particularly affects Canadians in northern Canada. As a member of the finance committee, I wish to say how disappointed I am that the Progressive Conservatives were so unfeeling and unfair when it came to northern Canadians and the particular problems that they face under this new telecommunications tax.

If one lives in the North and wishes to keep in touch with neighbours, let alone with people in southern Canada, one inevitably has to make long-distance telephone calls a great deal. A person living in the North can easily have a long-distance telephone bill of $75 to $150 per month. That 10 per cent tax will apply to all those long-distance charges. Whereas a person living in Ottawa can communicate by telephone with one million people without paying any of this tax because it is all a local charge, people who live in the Holman Islands, people who live in the Mackenzie Valley or in other remote communities, cannot do that.

The finance committee strongly urged that there be a cap on the tax on residential telephone subscribers of $3 per month. In other words, if a long-distance telephone bill exceeded $30 a month, no extra tax would be required to be paid. That would have been fair to people who live in isolated communities and have unduly high long-distance telephone charges because of their isolation and their need to keep in touch. Unfortunately, that was ignored.

I see that my time has ended. I thank you for your attention, Madam Speaker. I will consult with you privately on those figures, but I know that they are correct because not once have they been denied by the Progressive Conservatives. A tax increase of $1,000 in three and a half years on the average family, including this recent sales tax increase and the other measures contained in Bill C-117, is just not fair.

Mr. Nunziata: I find it amusing that the finance critic for the New Democratic Party should be critical of certain policies of the previous Liberal administration. The Hon. Member is justified in criticizing the present Conservative administration.

The New Democratic Party has a track record in government with regard to economic policies. A few short weeks ago the people of Manitoba defeated the New Democratic Party in a devastating and resounding fashion, to a large extent because of the economic policies of the New Democratic Government in Manitoba. The people of that province said that enough was enough, that they were fed up with the incompetence of the NDP Government, and they turfed out the last remaining NDP Government in Canada. A short while ago the people of British Columbia were fed up with the economic incompetence of the NDP Government there, and turfed it out.

Mr. Cassidy: That was in 1975.

Mr. Nunziata: The Hon. Member states that that was in 1975. That is correct, and never again will the New Democratic Party in the Province of British Columbia ever see the light of day or ever be a government because of its incompetence in managing the financial affairs of that province, and the same applies in Saskatchewan.

My question to the Hon. Member is the following. How can Canadians have trust in the economic policies of the New Democratic Party when that same Party mismanaged the economies of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia? Can the Hon. Member, the finance critic for the federal New Democratic Party, explain why the electorate in those three provinces turfed out those governments to a large extent because of their economic policies? Can he explain to the people of Canada how the federal economic policies of the New Democratic Party would be any different from the economic policies of the provincial NDP governments that were defeated?

Mr. Cassidy: It is trust. It seems to me—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member speaks of trust. It seems to me it was just the other day that I was at a meeting of the Riding Association of the York South New Democratic Party, which was attended by the man who is presently the Hon. Member from York South and represents the Liberal Party. It seems to me it ill behoves him to speak of such things as trustworthiness when we do not know from one day to the next which Party he is with, whether he is behind his Leader or trying not to stab his Leader in the back.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, I have a point of privilege. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is suggesting that I was in attendance at some meeting of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes.

Mr. Nunziata: I hope he will check the record and extend an apology because that is an absolute falsehood and a lie. For the Hon. Member to be so irresponsible as to make such allegations is not surprising in his case, but for the record I would hope he would be a little more honest.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. First, I would like the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) to put some nuance into the accusation that he has just put. The words that have been used are not parliamentary—

Mr. Cassidy: Withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): —and the Hon. Member knows that. I would like him first to correct that and then we will deal with the other situation, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has uttered an absolute, unequivocal, and complete falsehood. Until he withdraws that falsehood, I do not intend to withdraw my comments about his dishonesty.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) have any comment?

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) used unparliamentary language and he should withdraw it. I am quite prepared to deal with the issue of facts. The issue of fact is that the Hon. Member was a member of the New Democratic Party. He ran on the NDP ticket when he ran for alderman in the Borough of York. It was just the other day, around the same time that the NDP Government was defeated in Manitoba, and that is why I said it was just the other day that I attended meetings where he was involved with the New Democratic Party in the provincial riding or the federal riding of York South.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Chair to look at the "blues" later this day to read what was said by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I was here and I heard the language used. I do not want to pass judgment on that language. I do not think the Member said that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) was an unparliamentary word but I did hear him say that the statement made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre was not very truthful. Maybe the Chair would like to look at the "blues" to make sure that nothing has been said here that was not parliamentary. I am sure the Hon. Member for York South—Weston would not want at any time to be against the practices or the rules of this House. If the "blues" are exact, they will show that he was right and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre was wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair wishes to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

[Translation]

As usual, his comments, his suggestions are almost always of great wisdom—

An Hon. Member: Not always.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Almost always, I know, in helping the Chair and in helping the Members of this House act as they should. I will take the Hon. Member's advice and we can, if necessary, come back to this subject a little later today. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) had the floor during the period for questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I do hope you will look at the specific comment made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston. He accused me of a lie. I do not believe that that is parliamentary language. I think that should be withdrawn. You will look at the "blues"—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I said a few moments ago that this was exactly what the Chair meant to do over the next few hours. I should like now Hon. Members to resume debate on the issue we are dealing with. Agreed?

Mr. Prud'homme: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: If I may, madam Speaker, I should like to ask you to be a little more explicit. If the NDP Member says that a Member of the Official Opposition did this or that, was at such or such a place, and that the latter states that it is a lie, what he really means is that it is not true. It is either true or not true. It cannot be half true. One cannot be partly somewhere. I submit therefore to the Chair that the Hon. Member should stick to the point, because it is not the first time that he came to Quebec to make statements which are exactly the opposite of what he said in other provinces. We just let it go. But if he keeps it up, we are going to raise points of procedure all morning and, if necessary, all afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). Although I tried, my comments obviously were not clear enough, therefore I shall repeat. Following the advice of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, I said in the House that I would look at the blues as soon as they are typed, that we could return to this later if necessary, and that I was willing to let things stand for the time being. I asked the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to resume debate on third reading of the Bill before the House and I interrupted him when he failed to continue with the debate, preferring rather to return to the unfortunate incidents of a few seconds ago. I therefore urge again the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to address the issue before us. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I will comment very briefly on the comments made by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston who was critical of the record of New Democratic Party Governments in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia. In Saskatchewan the NDP governed for decades without plunging the province into deficit, but since the current Conservative Government under Grant Devine has taken power that province has seen monumental deficits such as Saskatchewan had never known. They amount to $3.2 billion. Through the 1981-82 recession the unemployment rate in Manitoba, which had an NDP Government, remained at the lowest level of any province in Confederation.

I happened to have a cup of coffee this morning with the Government Leader for the Yukon, my friend Tony Penikett. In the Yukon, just a few days ago, the Yukon NDP Government's economic strategy for the next 15 years called "Yukon 2000" was adopted unanimously by the legislature of the territory with the full support of both Liberal Party Members and of Conservative Party Members.

Those are points which seem to me to point to the kind of sound, sensible economic management that our Party has given in western Canada. We have made mistakes from time to time. Every Party does, but the sound, over-all management we have given to western Canada I believe we can now give as the national Government of Canada after the next election.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) a question. We heard the spokesperson for the Liberal Party criticize the Conservative Government because of the large increases in excise, sales, and other taxes as if the Liberals, when they were in power, did not do so.

Would the Hon. Member confirm that one of the last recommendations made by Mr. Lalonde when he was the Liberal Finance Minister was to increase the sales tax by 1 per cent, which increase was permitted to be imposed by the present Conservative Government?

• (1240)

Is it not a fact that the biggest part of the reason we have such a deficit is the kind of give-aways that Liberal Governments started under the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was the Minister of Finance? The Conservatives have continued this, so that 60,000 corporations pay no taxes at all. In 1986-87 some of the largest corporations like Alcan, Hudson's Bay, and Bramalea paid no corporate taxes at all.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, my friend from Winnipeg North has a good deal of reason. In fact, as he points out, I may have been unfair, in the heat of partisanship, to the Progressive Conservatives when I read through that list of tax increases which occurred under the Conservatives.

The first increase in sales tax equivalent to $150 for the average family was in fact a Liberal tax increase, not a Conservative tax increase. The Conservatives simply borrowed it from the Liberals.

We talk about unfairness in the tax system and about the fact that there are all these loopholes and tax privileges for wealthy Canadian individuals and corporations. That tradition was not begun by the Progressive Conservatives; it was begun by the Liberals.

Of course, the Liberals talk like New Democrats in opposition but they act like Conservatives when in government. There is an ample record to prove that point, and I would hate to see that Party back in government because it would give it a chance to show that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a patsy. Liberals can do just as well at favouring rich Canadians and corporations at the expense of average Canadians.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I want to ask a question of my distinguished colleague. I wonder what the present policy of the New Democratic Party is on the taxation provision of flow-through shares. I would like to know the position today as opposed to the one of yesterday or the one of the day before, which presumably were all different because they always are.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, the short answer to the question of my hon. friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for whom I normally have a great deal of respect is that the policy today is the same as it was yesterday, the day before, and the day before that. We have argued that when a tax concession has had proven results and is proven to be of significantly greater benefit than cost, it is worth considering.

The fact that some 60 mines, I believe, have been opened in Canada in the last three or four years as a consequence of the flow-through share provision is a sign of the benefit of this particular provision. When it is used as a tax loophole—

Mr. Gauthier: A Liberal provision, by the way.

Mr. Cassidy: The Hon. Member talks of a Liberal provision. Another example of a Liberal provision which was a disaster across Canada to the tune of some $2 billion was the scientific research tax credit. The interesting thing is that the Conservatives continued that one along to the point that more money went out the door of the Treasury from the Conservatives continuing that provision than had actually gone out the door during the time the Liberals had that particular provision in force.

I have questions about flow-through shares and the way the Government was dealing with the issue in 1986. However, our Party is one which is able to consult and to listen. We have talked to northern Canadians.

[Translation]

We have talked to prospectors, to people in the mining industry, to residents of Northern Quebec communities.

[English]

We have seen the benefits of the program and we have said that we should keep it, focus it, and ensure that it is not used by Falconbridge, Inco and other large corporations like that. Let us ensure that it encourages the junior mining companies and that it gets genuine activity into smaller northern communities. On that basis we think it has a great deal to be said for it. Our policy has been to support it, and that is our policy today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired.

[English]

Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make submissions on Bill C-117. Before I get to the merits of this particular piece of legislation, let me say a few more words about the New Democratic Party.

For far too long the New Democratic Party has been treated with kid gloves when it comes to its economic policies.

Ms. Copps: What economic policies?

Mr. Nunziata: What economic policies? I will be getting into some of the New Democratic Party economic policies, but for far too long members of the NDP have occupied their little corner on the left side of the House, knowing that they will never form a government, and have made all kinds of different promises and espoused all kinds of different economic policies. However, when one scrutinizes the NDP policies, whether they are on NATO or on the economy, the true colours of the New Democratic Party come out.

It seems to me that the NDP members have mastered the art of hypocrisy. They say one thing in one part of the country to cater to one particular region of the country, and the NDP finance critic is a master at that. He will say one thing in one part of the country to try to curry votes, and then his Leader will say something else in another part of the country.

Mr. Boudria: Like the frigates.

Mr. Nunziata: Like the frigates, like Meech Lake, like the nationalization of certain companies. Let us examine the NDP economic policies and the NDP socialist philosophy. Members of the NDP believe that the Government has to play a very significant role in the economy. It has to intervene here and it has to intervene there. It is NDP policy that once elected, if ever elected, they will nationalize banks. Think of the absolute naivety of that particular policy. Let us examine that policy which is a policy of the New Democratic Party and is in the policy handbook.

The New Democrats say that they will nationalize banks. What does that mean? That means that the Government of Canada will expropriate, let us say, the Royal Bank. From where will the Government of Canada and the taxpayers of Canada obtain enough money to buy the Royal Bank? Is the NDP suggesting that the Leader of the NDP and the NDP Government will walk down Bay Street, get into the elevator at the Royal Bank Tower, and take over the meeting of the Board of Directors of the Royal Bank?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know that you would like to enforce the rule of relevance. I enjoy this ex-NDPer, this ex-supporter of the socialist movement in Canada, this ex-activist in the NDP, when he speaks, but I am glad he is with the Liberals. However, there is a rule of relevance, and I am sure even the Liberals would appreciate talking about the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that if the Hon. Member shows a little bit of patience, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston will make the link somewhere along the line.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You are quite correct that I fully intend to—

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure all of us are very sad to see a marriage break up, and I would like to offer my services as a marriage counsellor to try to get the two Parties back together again.

Mr. Nunziata: Fortunately, Madam Speaker, there is absolutely no prospect of reconciliation, absolutely no prospect. Yes, I admit that in my youth I was a member of the socialist movement, the New Democratic Party, but I saw the light.

Let me tell you the reasons why I tore up my membership in the New Democratic Party, why New Democrats across the country are tearing up their membership cards, why people like Maud Barlow, Chaviva Hosek, and Patrick Johnson have said no to the New Democratic Party. It is because of its policies. It is because the New Democratic Party is completely, absolutely, and unequivocally out of touch with mainstream Canada.

Yes, I was 12 or 13 years old and I joined the New Democratic Party. However, it did not take long for me to find my rightful home.

Let me return to some of the economic policies of the New Democratic Party. It behoves the NDP to criticize the economic policies of other political Parties because when Canadians are given the opportunity, in the light of day, to examine New Democratic Party economic policies, they will see that the New Democrats want to take over the Royal Bank, the Bank of Commerce, and the Bank of Montreal.

The Leader of the NDP and all his socialist followers are going to get in the elevator at Commerce Court, go up to the board of directors and say: "Sorry, guys, we are taking over." That is absolute naivety but that is NDP policy. They are going to nationalize the cable companies and the banks. Shareholders should beware because if the NDP is elected, Heaven forbid, it will take over those companies.

I could go on and on about NDP economic policies but Canadians are not fooled. They know the NDP is very seriously lacking in credibility, whether it is on the economic or any other front. Therefore I should, in the few moments remaining, speak about Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act.

The purpose of the Bill, as you know, is to implement the many sales and excise tax increases announced by the Conservative Government. It is now the Government's turn. It is as deserving of criticism as the NDP, if not more. The Conservatives, under their Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), are seriously lacking in credibility, and when the election is called, whether it is September or October of this year or the spring of next year, the key issue in the minds of Canadians will be the honesty, integrity, and credibility of the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government.

Mr. Boudria: Or lack thereof.

Mr. Nunziata: Or lack thereof. The Conservatives made a lot of promises and my hon. and distinguished colleague from the federal riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has duly documented each and every one they made in their thirst for power in the summer of 1984.

His book has a number of columns, one of which is entitled "The Promises". The next column is entitled "The Broken Promises". Surprisingly, the columns match. For almost every promise made there is a broken promise. If any Canadian wants a copy of that book put together by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, all they need do is write to him postage free and he will send them a copy. It is called The Book of 338 Tory Promises and is very interesting.

In the book the Hon. Member quotes some of the statements made by the Prime Minister and members of the Conservative Party during the election. One of the statements the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was: "We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes which are already too high." Let me repeat that just to be absolutely clear. This is the Minister of Finance who has taken charge, if you will, of the finances of the nation over the last three and a half years. He made this statement on March 6, 1984, here on the floor of the House of Commons: "We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes which are already too high."

That is a promise of sorts. If you believe what he said when he was in opposition then one would expect that he would deliver on that promise, that is, to refrain from increasing taxes. What did he do when his Party came to power and he was appointed Minister of Finance? He proceeded almost immediately to increase taxes. Canadians will never forget that very first Budget, that very first attempt at managing the finances of the country. Canadians will never forget the attempt by the Government to deindex senior citizen pensions, notwithstanding the promise made by the Prime Minister of Canada when he was Leader of the Opposition, when in Quebec he said to the senior citizens: "Elect me, Brian Mulroney, and I promise that your pensions are sacred trust". What happened to that sacred promise about sacred trust? In the very first Budget handed down by the Minister of Finance the Government tried but failed to reduce the deficit on the backs of senior citizens.

While the people of Canada might have been hoodwinked during the election campaign, they were not going to put up with that. There were protests across the country. Senior citizen groups from one great coast to the other started to complain, demonstrate, and write letters. Eventually the Government and the Minister of Finance had to back down on that ill-conceived, unfair, inequitable tax measure. What made matters worse was that after saying senior citizen pensions were a sacred trust and they would not increase taxes, they did a complete about face.

That is not the only example of the Minister of Finance breaking a promise. As you know, this legislation we are debating today will implement a number of sales and excise tax increases announced by the Government in the February, 1987 Budget, the June, 1987 Budget, the December, 1987 tax reform proposals, together with the February, 1988 Budget. If one examines not simply the Budgets I have just referred to and the tax reform proposals but also the record of the Government over the last three and a half years on tax increases, the statistics are absolutely staggering.

Let us just examine what this Government has done from 1984 to fiscal year 1988-89. It has increased taxes by $32.4 billion, a 46 per cent increase. What taxes were increased? The Government not only broke its promise not to raise taxes, it broke its promise to practise equity and fairness in the tax system. The Government increased personal income taxes by 55 per cent in that period of time while at the same time it increased corporate taxes by only 28 per cent. Individuals were ripped off to the tune of 55 per cent, but corporation taxes were increased by only 28 per cent. Not only did the Government increase personal income taxes, and the income tax system is somewhat regressive or not as progressive as it ought to be anyway, but it increased sales and excise taxes by 77 per cent. Canadians have been asked to pay over the last five years an additional $10.6 billion in sales and excise taxes.

I note that it is one o'clock and I would appreciate the opportunity to continue my remarks at three o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There will be six minutes left for the hon. gentleman to continue his remarks.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—OPINION POLL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to show Canadians just how irresponsible the Government's defence policy actually is. This very week President Reagan arrives in the Soviet Union for talks with Soviet General Secretary Gorbachev. Also, the American Senate is on the verge of ratifying the INF treaty signed between the superpowers last December.

Meanwhile, back in Ottawa, what is Canada doing? It is proposing the most irresponsible defence initiative in Canadian history, that is, the acquisition of 10 to 12 nuclear powered submarines. Not only does this go against the trend toward peace, but yesterday we discovered how unhappy Canadians truly are at having nuclear powered submarines.

According to an Environics poll conducted between May 3 and May 17, 59 per cent of those questioned oppose the purchase of nuclear powered submarines. The picture is clear. The world does not want proliferation in arms and neither do 59 per cent of Canadians. It is only a Conservative Government locked in the 1950's cold war rhetoric that continues to push this irresponsible initiative.

ABORTION

FREE VOTE ADVOCATED ON ISSUE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, since the Supreme Court decision overturned the abortion law Canada has become the only civilized nation in the world without legislation protecting the unborn child. The question of abortion is a moral issue, not a political issue, and should be treated accordingly. For this reason a free vote should be held to allow Members of Parliament to follow their consciences and express their personal views by choosing the option they believe is proper.

A recent poll shows that 60 per cent of Canadians believe that restrictions should be placed on abortion. That is a 7 per cent increase since February. Clearly, the Canadian people find the present situation unacceptable and expect this House to pass a law which is fair and responsible to both the mother and the unborn child.

We as parliamentarians must have the strength to face this issue and not seek to hide behind the guise of party politics. The question of rights for the unborn is far too important to be treated irresponsibly.

MARINE SAFETY

EPIRBS—CALL FOR INSTALLATION ON VESSELS 10 METRES AND OVER

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on May 31, 1989, the Department of Transport will make it mandatory for all vessels over 20 metres to be fitted with an EPIRB or electronic beeping device. But why not all vessels over 10 metres as it planned to do last year?

The change in vessel length means that a large percentage of vessels will not have this protection for their crews. Pressure was brought on the Minister because of the cost in dollars, neglecting the cost in human life.

EPIRBs should be mandatory on all commercial vessels. It has been estimated that the cost of the search for the Scotia Cape, at approximately $10 million, could have placed EPIRBs on all West Coast commercial vessels.

A Victoria company, Modern Products Inc., has developed a 406 megahertz system for EPIRBs. The company was given a guarantee that they would be mandatory on vessels 10 metres and up and had planned its production accordingly. It feels that this is one more case of a small Canadian company, which is a world innovator, getting the shaft. The Government should revert to its original plan and have EPIRBs mandatory on all vessels 10 metres and over.

THE ADMINISTRATION

RECORD OF ACCOMPLISHMENTS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the Progressive Conservative Party's election platform was based on four major pillars; national reconciliation, economic renewal, social reform, and renewed internationalism. Have we delivered? The answer is a resounding yes with the Meech Lake Accord, various regional diversification initiatives, the lowest unemployment and interest rates in years, day care, capital punishment, abortion, a better than ever defence policy, and over 220 individual pieces of legislation passed.

The Government has delivered in the areas that it promised it would. Now, with the free trade agreement, prosperity for all Canadians is at hand.

As we near the next federal election, Mr. Speaker, I ask Canadians to compare this record of accomplishments with that of the previous Government or, for that matter, any previous Canadian Government.

FERRIES

SERVICE FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—CONSTRUCTION OF TWO VESSELS URGED

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House today a serious situation which is developing in the line of transportation to and from Prince Edward Island.

Three years ago, when the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) was Minister of Transport, he announced that they were very close to making a final announcement with regard to two new ferry vessels for Northumberland ferries to travel between Wood Island, P.E.I., and Caribou, Nova Scotia.

The next Minister of Transport, the present Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), stated a year and a half ago that construction of these ferries would proceed in a matter of days.

This is May, 1988, and there is still no construction. I ask the current Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to proceed with the announcement of the construction of two new vessels for Northumberland ferries. We rely totally on agriculture, fishing, and tourism in the Province of Prince Edward Island.

The Northumberland ferries now in place at Wood Island and Caribou are over 30 years old. If they are not replaced within the next year, they will have to be decommissioned. It is urgent, and I ask the Government and the Minister to make this announcement immediately.

ABORTION

SANCTITY OF HUMAN LIFE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, one of the most misleading statements by pro-abortion activists is: "Before abortion on demand there were 30,000 or 40,000 women dying every year as as result of botched-up back alley abortions".

This false statement is intended to create an unjustified fear by suggesting that only abortion on demand could prevent such tragedies. There may have been an occasional death, but 30,000 or 40,000 is false and without any valid statistical foundation.

Before we vote on this matter let us be sure to separate the facts from the fiction. Surely the only scientifically honest new law that can be passed is one that recognizes the truth of the existence of a new human person from the moment of conception, and then proceed to protect that person from those who would seek to destroy him or her. Let us recognize the sanctity of human life.

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—OPINION POLL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the flagship of the Conservative White Paper on Defence, a plan to buy 10 to 12 nuclear powered attack submarines at a cost of at least $8 billion, is sinking fast.

A broad range of defence analysts and Maritime experts have questioned the wisdom of such a plan, especially given that the budget of $8 billion to be provided by the federal Government may actually be only half of what will need to be spent by the time the cost of construction in Canada and the total costs of an extensive training, servicing, and environmental monitoring infrastructure are added.

Now a new poll published by the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament shows that 59 per cent of the Canadian public disapprove of spending even $8 billion to procure these militarily destabilizing and environmentally dangerous submarines. Even half of those who identified themselves as Tories are against these submarines.

A spokesman for one of the firms in the race for the contract dismisses preoccupations with cost, wanting to stick instead to what he calls simpler premises.

Canadians are concerned with the outrageous price tag attached to this program, especially since the Government itself has admitted that it has no accurate figures. The real cost of this program can go nowhere but up as consensus for nuclear powered submarines sinks lower and lower.

EQUITY IN EMPLOYMENT

TROPHY AWARDED TO GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government made a promise to Canadian men and women concerning employment equity, and it is taking steps to live up to this commitment.

Our Government has been urging industrialists and employers to support and promote employment equity. With that in mind, every year the Department of Employment and Immigration gives an award and a trophy to the firm which pays particular attention to equity in non-traditional jobs.

During the recent Salon de la femme at the Montreal Vélodrome, a company with a plant at Bromont in my riding of Brome—Missisquoi, Canadian General Electric, was awarded the "Equal Opportunity" trophy.

Mr. Speaker, this company has been innovative and took the lead in this field. Women hired by General Electric can expect to perform the same kind of work as men do, and they have been quite successful. Like men, they can just as well be assigned to manufacturing as to automated operations.

Thanks to our incentive policies other firms like General Electric made special efforts to reach the same objective even though they did not have to do that.

I thank and commend General Electric, I congratulate the director of Cowansville's manpower centre for submitting that company's name and, finally, I say well done to women who face up to challenges whenever they are given an opportunity.

RECOGNITION OF ERRORS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Post Corporation had decided to penalize Canadians who by oversight put a wrong postal code on a letter or who did not put it in at all because they did not know what it was.

This measure would have been unfair. Imagine its effect on senior citizens, the disabled, the small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to learn that finally the Canada Post Corporation recognized that it was a mistake. It is human to err, Mr. Speaker, but up to now the Canada Post Corporation refused to acknowledge it.

In the same spirit, I hope that the minister will bring pressures to bear on the Canada Post Corporation to make it also admit that setting up supermailboxes and closing rural post offices were other mistakes. The mandate of the Canada Post Corporation should be entirely altered to make it clearer and more specific, its essential service being the delivery of mail to all Canadians without discrimination and such should be the Corporation's mandate. It should not take the first opportunity to try to make money and to give an unequal treatment to Canadians.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

PRICE OF DRUGS

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago opposition Members, looking for headlines, claimed that drug prices in Canada were rising at more than double the inflation rate. What a flagrant misrepresentation of the facts. I want to set the record straight.

An independent study by the Peat Marwick Consulting Group has demonstrated that drug prices have stayed well within the inflation rate since Bill C-22 established the Drug Prices Review Board in December, 1987. Eighty-three per cent of prices for prescription drugs did not increase at all during the last six months, and 96 per cent showed price increases of less than the average Consumer Price Index of 5 per cent.

The Opposition is slow to recognize the substantial benefits, including Canadian made products for medical and health care, thousands of high-tech, high quality jobs, and sizeable investments being made across the country, as a result of the passage of this Bill.

The good news announcements come every week. This may mean little to the Liberals and the New Democratic Party, but it sure matters to the people finding jobs in my riding of Lachine. Let us keep the record straight.

HEALTH

BENZOYL PEROXIDE—DEPARTMENTAL STUDIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, a number of issues have drawn attention to the sluggishness of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Mussels and AIDS are two examples. We can now add Benzoyl Peroxide.

Benzoyl Peroxide is a chemical used in acne medication. For three years evidence has been mounting that it causes skin cancer. Two years ago a committee of specialists studying the issue felt more study was necessary before a final decision could be made, but it recommended a ban on over-the-counter sales of Benzoyl Peroxide in the interim. Nothing happened.

I wrote to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) a year ago. His answer was: "The matter is under review. We will have a decision soon". I wrote to the Minister again in March of this year, after a year of silence and inaction and the accumulation of yet more evidence of danger. His answer was: "It needs more study. We will have an answer soon".

The Department of National Health and Welfare has done nothing to restrict over-the-counter sales of Benzoyl Peroxide products. Indeed, so complacent is the attitude that a senior toxicologist at the Department of National Health and Welfare resigned his position in protest over the Government's lack of action.

Where are the results of the surfeit of studies? Is the Government going to study the issue to death, the death of Canadians still in the dark about the dangers of Benzoyl Peroxide?

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, Canada's first National Access Awareness Week for disabled persons will be held May 29 to June 4. National Access Awareness Week is designed to encourage the active participation of communities, organizations, businesses and governments in improving the quality of life for disabled Canadians. It is being organized in co-operation with representatives of disabled persons, organizations, labour, business, government, and rehabilitation organizations.

• (1415)

The goal is to develop "five star" communities, where five elements—housing, employment, transportation, recreation, and education—are available to everyone who lives there.

Communities across Canada are being asked to celebrate what has already been accomplished by persons with disabilities; assess the accessibility of services and facilities in their community; and plan practical improvements and set goals by which progress can be measured over several years.

This is an excellent program that merits the support of everyone.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

STORAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS IN FORT ROUGE YARDS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, last week in the CNR Fort Rouge yards a very major mishap took place when a tanker car containing lethal gas sprang a leak. Officials worked eight hours on the particular tanker car without informing residents who live within 1,000 metres of this particular location.

I draw this matter to the attention of the House because it is a disaster waiting to happen. I want to urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) strongly, or his representatives, to inquire into and investigate the problem of the storage of dangerous goods in the CN Fort Rouge yards because it represents a serious potential threat to thousands of residents who are in close proximity to the yards.

In fact I suggest that the CNR should be responsible for removing all goods of a dangerous nature that are stored in those areas, and provide major barriers to protect the citizens of that region.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—BENEFITS FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, free trade, as a Canadian woman, what's in it for me? As a business woman, free trade means economic expansion and jobs, particularly in the retail and wholesale, trade, commercial, personal care, and business services. It looks like some good opportunities there to make my future more secure and prosperous.

As a mother, not only are there jobs but more highly skilled jobs to secure my children's future. Free trade will create a firm financial foundation to secure our social programs too, such as child care and health care.

As a consumer, listen, I count my pennies. When tariffs are removed those pennies will grow into dollars. In fact, I will probably save about $1,000 per year in my household.

As a woman in all my roles, free trade is for me!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION—POSITION OF PREMIERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. He will know by now that a number of premiers have said that the Bill on trade that was tabled in the House this week is an unacceptable intrusion into their provincial jurisdiction. The only explanation we have had back from the Minister is: "The Americans made me do it". He counters them with a threat of: "Take me to court".

That is no way to run a country. Canadians expect a more constructive and positive response on the very important impact this trade Bill will have on federal-provincial relations.

I wish to ask the Minister this question. What is he going to do about the major confrontation that is now building up with the provinces over the trade Bill? Will he withdraw this offensive Bill and rework it so that we will not put in danger the important balance of federal-provincial relations? Will he take a reference himself to the Supreme Court to get a proper ruling before we engage in open warfare with the provinces over a deal that does not do much for this country at all in any event?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question shows just how far out of touch he is, and how anxious he is to try to damage the free trade agreement for which he or his Party has no alternative.

As an example of how inaccurate the hypothesis of his question is—and I don't know if it had an hypothesis, I don't know if it had anything actually—here is the latest information on Saskatchewan Premier Grant Devine who said today that he does not believe that the proposed federal free trade legislation affects his province's rights. I can quote, of course, a number of other premiers.

The reaction of the premiers has been most positive because they recognize that it is only by the exercise of our trade and commerce power, and it is only by our having the limited authority given us in Clause 9 to deal with Ontario, which is out to block the benefits of this agreement for the rest of the country, that we can proceed with the free trade agreement, which was negotiated freely and in consultation with the provinces with the United States of America.

HEALTH CARE SYSTEM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, by that answer I presume we can expect the Premier of Saskatchewan to be receiving another major grant for his province within 24 hours.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister is ignoring the statements made by the Premiers of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, Alberta, and others.

• (1420)

I wish to cite to him the study released by the Attorney General of Ontario that clearly points out that this trade deal will put in danger the operation of health clinics, blood clinics, and the practice of medicine and health care in the Province of Ontario, and open the door to profit oriented businesses to distort that system totally.

In light of that clear evidence of the way in which this trade Bill will have a serious impact upon the health care system of the country, will the Minister withdraw the Bill? Will he not admit that the price that he is asking this country to pay for the trade deal is far too high? Canadians do not want their health care system ruined by this trade deal.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it will not be long before Canadians will be warned that there will be an invasion of killer bees because of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, or that American typhoons will come up and wipe out Canada. The Canadian people are not buying the cry wolf stuff.

Might I refer to something that was said by the Honourable Donald Macdonald. He said that the deal signed by the Tories with the U.S."is consistent with the policy of the governments of which Mr. Turner and I were members." The Government "has taken great care to respect the jurisdiction of the provinces," and "it has made every effort to ensure compliance with the agreement in a manner that is both consistent with federal jurisdiction and also respectful of provincial concerns".

That was stated by a Liberal, an impartial and truthful Liberal, not now in active politics, prostituting himself as the Hon. Member is.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, that is a strange and curious observation from a Minister of the Crown on politics, a profession that he has practised throughout his entire life. I would say to him, Sir, that it does not speak well for a Minister to cast aspersions on all Members of the House in that manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

EFFECT ON CANADIAN LAWS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I wish to ask the Hon. Minister the following question.

Section 8 of the trade deal clearly indicates that the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement will prevail over all laws passed by this Parliament. At the same time, the U.S. Congress yesterday decided that the trade agreement with Canada will be subservient to U.S. law.

Why is it that the U.S. Congress states very clearly that the trade agreement does not override its laws, but that Canada is prepared to make a totally different decision and have the trade agreement supersede all the laws of this Parliament? Why the imbalance? Why the distortion? Why are we caving in to those types of American demands? What is the Minister going to do about that major disparity between the two pieces of legislation on either side of the Canada-U.S. border?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): There is a simple explanation. The Americans have their statutory draftsmen, we have ours. We have our legislative precedents, they have theirs.

In the United States legislation there is a clause that states that its legislation implementing the free trade agreement will override every inconsistent piece of state legislation. The hon. gentleman did not cite that. Would he like us to have that in our Bill, overriding every inconsistent provincial legislation? No, of course not, because the Hon. Member is now trying to pretend that he is for provincial rights when he was one of those who imposed the national energy policy on western Canada in an attempt to crush Alberta and the rest. He is a Johnny-come-lately to the provincial rights league. Well, you better come over and join us.

Mr. Axworthy: No, that's your trick, John. You crossed the House, not me.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—BILL C-130—PROVINCIAL JURISDICTION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade, and I want to say that although he insists on denying that Bill C-130 does not impinge on areas of provincial jurisdiction, his denials do not change the facts. The Premier of Quebec said there was an impingement on provincial jurisdiction. The Premier of Ontario said so, and some of the other provinces have expressed reservations. However, what I fail to understand is why the Minister included Clauses 6 and 9 in Bill C-130, although he had been warned that the provinces did not agree. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister whether he would confirm that two weeks ago, the Government of Quebec specifically asked him to withdraw Clauses 6 and 9, and I also want to ask him whether he would confirm that other provinces also disagreed with the presence of these two clauses. Finally, would he also confirm that in response, he said he could not withdraw the clauses because the Americans wanted them in?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentlemen when they were in power checked all their legislation with the provinces to see whether the provinces agreed with every clause they had in their legislation? They didn't do that with the national energy legislation which they later had to divide into eight sections because of its violation of the rules of this House.

What does the Premier of Quebec say? Quebec continues to support the free trade agreement. Quebec's objectives have, by and large, been achieved. The Premier of Quebec says that Quebec will proceed to legislate to protect provincial jurisdiction of with respect to wine and distilled spirits, so that Clause 9 will not need to apply to Quebec. This is the role and position which the Premier of Quebec has taken—most sensible, most conciliatory, and most disappointing to the hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. Speaker.

BILL C-130—REQUEST THAT MINISTER DELETE CLAUSES 6 AND 9

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is skirting the issue, because he knows perfectly well that he consulted the provinces and that they told him quite clearly not to include Clauses 6 and 9 in Bill C-130. That these clauses impinge on areas of provincial jurisdiction is clear, since the Premier of Quebec has to table legislation in the National Assembly to prevent the federal legislation from doing just that.

Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is this: Now that we have nothing more to add and the Minister is aware of provincial objections to these two clauses, will he do the sensible thing and withdraw these two clauses?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can reassure the hon. gentleman right here and now that we are not withdrawing Clause 9 which is made more than necessary by the dog-in-the-manger attitude of the Premier of Ontario and his Government. We are not going to withdraw it, Mr. Speaker. There can be no Canada-U.S. FTA without Clause 9 in the Bill. Nor are we going to withdraw Clause 6 which is a declaratory clause, as Premier Bourassa has said, that maintains our rights.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Your American masters would not allow you to do that.

Mr. Crosbie: The Premier of Quebec said this and I quote him from yesterday "We discussed the situation"—that is he and I— "and we would have preferred another approach". If there could have been another approach, we would have preferred it as well, but I must say—

Mr. Axworthy: The Americans would not let you.

Mr. Crosbie: He said "The Quebec Government's position on this type of federal decision is no different from the one taken by successive governments for 40 years".

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Members don't like to hear this. It is long past time.

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have questions for the Minister and I will do my best to ask them devoid of rhetoric and I hope the Minister will reciprocate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I will try, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: I will try again, Mr. Speaker.

The Government clearly believes that with this proposed law it has the authority to pass regulations in the area of the regulation of wine and spirits traditionally in the constitutional domain of the provinces. I see the Minister nodding in agreement, that that is what they believe their constitutional right is in the circumstances.

If this is the case, does the Minister also believe that when the Government sits down with the United States, to discuss, as it plans to, what constitutes a subsidy, the federal Government will also have the right to act independently to amend provincial legislation enacting social and regional development policies, for example, that the federal Government considers to be inconsistent with the agreement it has negotiated with the United States? That is a factual question, and I would appreciate getting the Minister's clear, factual understanding of the Government's position on this important matter.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I welcome a question from the hon. gentleman that is devoid of rhetoric. It was also, of course, devoid of much sense. Nevertheless, I will attempt to deal with it without rhetoric myself.

I do not at the present time know of any social policy or regional development policy of this Government or of a province that is inconsistent with the free trade agreement. That is our position. If any of them are challenged in the United States, either before the FTA goes into effect or after, we will be protecting our right to have these kinds of policies in our own country, as we have in the past.

As to what may be a subsidy or not, that is a question for dispute and argument. It is not yet settled. We have our strong views on what is a proper subsidy, and there are certain GATT rules understood. This process we hope to expedite as quickly as we can, and have a definition that is as reasonable and as sensible as is possible to achieve.

POWER OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the last half of the Minister's answer is, of course, what I was asking about. The Minister knows that the next five to seven years are precisely the period in which what constitutes a subsidy will be negotiated.

Since the Government is resting its case on the use of the federal Government's trade and commerce power as justification for legislating within the provincial domain in wine and spirits, is it not, by inserting in Clause 6 the override power, claiming well in advance, in negotiating what constitutes a subsidy in the years ahead, that it will have the authority, quite clearly and unilaterally, according to the federal Government, to pass regulations for social and regional development policies if, in negotiations with the United States, these are regarded as subsidies? If so, will he also admit that what this constitutes is a profound shift in constitutional power, going right from Regina to Ottawa to Washington? Will he acknowledge that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will not acknowledge something that is completely wrong. Premier Bourassa has a complete grasp on this subject. This is what the Premier of Québec said yesterday, and he of course is very conscious of provincial rights. He said that Clause 6 is declaratory, it is more political than legal.

What Clause 6 does—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If I might be permitted to answer, Clause 6 says that the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, reserves its right to legislate in the future in connection with the free trade agreement if it deems it necessary in the future. It does not give the Government of Canada any additional powers because this Parliament cannot give the Government of Canada any powers beyond the legislative jurisdiction of the Government of Canada. Surely that is obvious.

Premier Bourassa went on to say that if the federal Government acts in a way in the future which affects provincial jurisdiction, Quebec has options, including going to court or passing provincial laws. It has been that way since 1867. Why do members of the Official Opposition and of the New Democratic Party want to twist this obvious proposition?

UNILATERAL CHARACTER OF CERTAIN GOVERNMENT DECISIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question was put very seriously, without rhetoric, and I am confident about the substance. My last question is this: According to the Premier of Quebec and his responsible Minister, according to the Premier of Prince Edward Island, according to the Premier of the Province of Ontario and his responsible Minister, and according to many constitutional experts, the federal Government is out to change constitutional powers unilaterally. My question is just this: Why this unilateral action by a Conservative Government?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, why is there a debate in the country about the so-called Meech Lake amendments? One can only change the Constitution if one does it in a way that accords with the Constitution, the BNA Act and the Constitution Act of 1982.

Neither this Government nor this Parliament could unilaterally change the Constitution, and the only powers that we are asserting in our Bill are federal powers that have been federal since 1867, under the trade and commerce power, because we cannot be a nation, we cannot enter into commercial arrangements with other nations, unless we have those powers. Normally, Ontario is one of the greatest supporters of these kinds of powers for the federal Government. We are doing nothing that the Constitution does not permit us to do, and if we are, the courts will strike us down.

OPPORTUNITY TO REVIEW CERTAIN DECISIONS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Canada Post decided to penalize Canadians who omit the postal code or make mistakes in it. Today, as a result of pressure, Canada Post recognized that this decision was a mistake and withdrew the proposal that had been accepted by the Government. Will the Deputy Prime Minister recognize that installing supermailboxes is also a big mistake and that Canada Post should reintroduce home mail delivery immediately?

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post's decision is known. This morning, the President of Canada Post issued a press release in which he admitted having made a mistake and it is over.

As for the Hon. Member's last question, he must remember that Canada Post wants to increase service, Mr. Speaker, and not decrease it, and I would like to remind him that by the end of its plan, Canada Post will have increased the number of places where stamps can be bought and letters mailed to 7,000. This will be very good in providing more service for Canadians.

COST OF POSTAL CODE GUIDE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, now that the Government and Canada Post have admitted that they made a mistake, can the Government ask Canada Post to make available the postal code books at every post office at a minimum cost and not at the excessive cost of $10? If they want Canadians to use the postal codes, they should give them the possibility to find the postal codes.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, obviously, Canada Post must do everything to encourage Canadians to put the postal code on their mail so as to help them make it easier to deliver the mail and minimize the delays in sending it.

WESTERN DROUGHT—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and is with regard to the drought relief proposals he made outside the House yesterday to the press. He said he would be moving water to livestock, moving feed to cattle, moving the cattle to pastures, monitoring livestock prices against overselling, and providing crop insurance where it is too dry to put seed in the ground.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: Can he tell us how the no seeding necessary to collect crop insurance scheme will work, and is it in effect at this moment?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that my hon. colleague is using some misrepresentations in reference to the conversations I had outside the House yesterday. I was not announcing details of a drought assistance program but simply carrying out a reasonable, common sense conversation with the interested members of the press about things that we would have to consider, common sense and logical things, aspects of a program that we would have to consider as a federal Government, as would our provincial counterparts, if indeed the situation developed into a full-blown drought.

MONITORING OF LIVESTOCK PRICING

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the monitoring of livestock pricing, can the Minister tell us what action if any will accompany this price monitoring system? Will the Government begin buying to hold the price up, and what has been the reaction of feedlot operators to this proposal?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, again I think the Hon. Member is putting the cart before the horse. We will have to consider all these aspects. We will not consider them in isolation. We will not act unilaterally. Rather, we will follow the same pattern we have followed since early February.

Matters of this kind will be worked out in consultation with our provincial counterparts and members of the drought committees. In fact, at our meeting in Calgary on Tuesday, during which I hope to schedule time to go out and view some of the affected areas, I am insisting that we have representatives of livestock groups and producer groups there.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

THINNING OF OZONE LAYER

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Is it true that Environment Canada has discovered a very substantial and significant thinning of the ozone layer over the Canadian Arctic? As well, can the Minister assure the House that the ozone layer treaty will be on the agenda of the economic summit meeting in Toronto next month?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that Government of Canada scientists and others have expressed great concern about the thinning of the ozone, both in the area the Hon. Member referred to and elsewhere. For example, there has been something like a 2 per cent to 3 per cent thinning in the ozone layer over the city of Toronto from 1976 to about 1983, the last year for which we have data in that particular case.

The Government of Canada will be raising at the G-7 summit, through the Prime Minister, the question of ozone depletion. In particular we will be urging the G-7 countries to ratify the Montreal protocol. We ourselves want to do so beforehand but are being prevented from ratifying because Liberal members of the Senate are holding up the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. Until the Senate acts expeditiously, as the House of Commons has done, we are prevented from taking world leadership on a most important global problem.

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE BY CANADA OF NUCLEAR SUBMARINES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday, we learned that 59 per cent of Canadians oppose the purchase of nuclear submarines. After more than a year of propaganda, the Conservative Government has not been able to convince the people that buying these submarines is a good deal. Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared today to listen to the voice of the people and give up this ill-conceived policy?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is quite a discrepancy in polls taken in the country these days. I have a poll here conducted by Angus Reid which indicates in April, 1988, 47 per cent supported the idea and 47 per cent opposed it. On April 20, 1988, Decima Research showed 42 per cent in favour of the initiative. When asked whether Canada should rely on the U.S. submarine force to provide security under the ice in Canadian waters, only 10 per cent agreed.

I think one must look at the polls in their fullest context rather than simply singling one out, because there are discrepancies from time to time.

COSTS OF ACQUISITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear from the figures just given to us that, despite the efforts of the Government, successive polls have shown more and more people are opposing this venture as they become aware of it.

I want to remind the Minister that the proposed submarine program is supposed to cost $8 billion. That figure does not include the cost of maintaining the fleet or providing refuelling facilities. Will the Deputy Prime Minister come clean with the Canadian people and give us the cost of this program? Is he ready to admit today that the total cost will run into the tens of billions of dollars?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member was in the House on a number of occasions when the Opposition challenged the figures with the Minister of National Defence. I think he made very clear and precise what figures were allocated to the purchase of the nuclear submarines.

May I simply remind the Hon. Member and the House that this Government produced a White Paper on National Defence, the first one in 16 years, which clearly outlined Canada's defence policy. We committed ourselves to a three ocean defence policy, as well as to the ongoing commitments to NATO and NORAD. We also committed ourselves to the domestic revitalization of our regular and reserve Armed Forces. I think it is quite obvious that the White Paper in total has been very well accepted by Canadians.

NATURAL RESOURCES

POSSIBLE DIVERSION OF WATER FROM SOUTH SASKATCHEWAN RIVER INTO SOURIS RIVER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. His Department and the Province of Saskatchewan are engaged in a study, a copy of which I have in front of me. The study speaks of the possibility of diverting water from the South Saskatchewan River and the Qu'Appelle Valley River into the Souris River to meet the needs of a dam which the Premier of Saskatchewan insists should be built on the Souris. The Souris River also flows into North Dakota.

Can the Minister give us the assurance that his Government would never approve diverting water from the South Saskatchewan or Qu'Appelle River Basins into the Souris River to be exported to the U.S?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am a little puzzled by the last part of the question where he talks about water exports. My understanding is that the purpose of the project in question is not to export water in the sense that term is used in the federal water policy. Indeed, if that is the purpose, and I do not think it is, it would be in violation of the federal water policy we articulated in great detail some months ago.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GOVERNMENT WILL NOT APPROVE DIVERSION OF WATER

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the federal water policy is opposed to any inter-basin transfer. Yet this study talks about an inter-basin transfer. Let me quote:

> The available draft in the Souris River is not sufficient for projected long-term requirements. The future development of the Qu'Appelle River to the Souris River diversion therefore appears to be a viable source of supply.

The director of the study was canned by the provincial Government because he embarrassed the provincial Minister by mentioning there was not enough water in the South Saskatchewan River to meet the needs of the Souris River.

Again, can the Minister give us, and especially the farmers of southern Saskatchewan who are experiencing short-term drought and the possibility of long-term drought, the assurance that his Government will never approve diverting water which could eventually be exported to the United States? Give us that clear assurance.

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is excelling himself in confusion. We are talking about an international waterway which covers at least three jurisdictions, two of them Manitoba and Saskatchewan, and two countries. The federal Government has an obligation to satisfy itself that every environmental consideration is being factored into the equation because we administer the International River Improvements Act.

The permit has been applied for by the Province of Saskatchewan. I received it in January. Every due process is being followed, and I am honoring my obligations as a Minister of the Crown in that respect.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT— CANADIAN WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. A couple of days ago in this House his Parliamentary Secretary, in answer to a question on the trade deal and export of water, consistently made reference to bottled water in relation to Item 2201 of the tariff schedule.

If the Minister reads the tariff schedule carefully he will see that the term "bottled" is only in the mind of the Parliamentary Secretary. There is not one reference to "bottled" on that page.

Therefore, would the Minister for International Trade tell this House why, if water was not intended to be in the deal and the legislation, there is no reference to the exclusion of water in both documents in order to give this reassurance to Canadians from coast to coast?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have repeatedly stated the fact that there is absolutely nothing in the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement which compels Canada, forces Canada, or directs Canada to sell water to the United States of America. As a matter of fact the Minister of the Environment has announced the Government's policy which, although I do not have the exact wording before me now, is not to permit large-scale diversion of water to the United States or any other country.

That is in contradistinction to what the Leader of the Opposition, in his book in 1968, Politics of Purpose, said at page 183, about water:

> And if someday we can agree to the sharing of this continent's water by offering some of our water for export, we might want at that time to insist that if water is to be considered as a continental resource, markets should also be considered on the same basis. We might wish to export water not for money—but in return for access to your markets.
> That, as I see it, must be our position. I don't want to sound tough.

He certainly didn't sound tough in those days. The Member should be taking this matter up with his Leader. He should be concerned about his policy.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, it would be a sad day if the policy of the Government of Canada in 1988 were to be inspired by a statement made 20 years earlier.

TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade has to clarify in this House why there is a reference to sharing of natural resources under Section 409 of the trade deal. If the Government found it necessary to exclude explicitly beer, unprocessed fish, and logs, why was water not included in that list?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will come back to the words of the Leader of the Opposition, who is now in a position of some considerable power, although we all realize that the hon. gentleman asking the questions does not want him there. He is one of the dissenters.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Have the guts to answer the question directly.

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition said:

> Water will occupy the best minds—

—so you can forget it, Herb—

> —of our two countries for the next generation. It will be a constant topic of discussion over our neighbourhood fence. I am sure that we will be able to resolve the future use of the water of this country in a spirit of realistic friendship.

That is what the Member's Leader wants to occur.

Mr. Axworthy: What do you want? You want to sell hot air.

THE ENVIRONMENT

GRANT MADE TO NORANDA COMPANY FOR CONSTRUCTION OF POLLUTION EMISSION TREATMENT PLANT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Environment is about the $41.6 million paid to Noranda, supposedly to build a gaseous pollutant recovery plant.

Could the Minister indicate to the House whether this amount is considered as a loan or a subsidy for accounting purposes? Is he willing to table in the House the Quebec-Canada-Noranda Agreement?

[English]

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any secret about this. The company in question accounts for something like 45 per cent of the acid rain causing emissions in Quebec. The Hon. Member will know that Québec and Ontario account for about 80 per cent of the total domestic emissions relating to acid rain.

The Government of Canada worked very closely with the Government of Quebec and, through the Government of Quebec, with Noranda to finance the building of a sulphuric plant to address the problem directly.

The negotiation was conducted, in very large measure, by the Province of Quebec. It was, in effect, their deal to negotiate because it was within provincial jurisdiction. Our role was one of supporting that province and helping with the funding.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DOCUMENTS RELATING TO AGREEMENT AND ANALYSES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister.

Could the Minister table in the House all relevant documents, not just the agreement, but also the analytical reports showing that this agreement respects the polluter pay principle whereby pollution clean-up costs should not be paid with Government subsidies?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that the New Democratic Party should criticize the Government for trying . . .

An Hon. Member: Let him answer, we do not need dummies!

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I find it strange that members of the NDP, Canada's uncompromising party, should object to the Goverment taking steps to protect Quebec's environment. It is my first comment.

As to the disclosure of the terms of the contract, I must say this is a contract between the Government and a private corporation. We know what the Socialists think of private enterprise, but as a rule there is no disclosure of the terms of such a contract because this could affect the competitivity of the company.

DISASTERS

INVESTIGATION OF GANDER AIR CRASH

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and is concerning the Gander air disaster. Several members of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board have signed a report rejecting the air crash investigators' theory that icing was the cause of the crash that took the lives of 256 people in Gander, Newfoundland.

In view of the fact that half of the Board members are complaining that they were restricted in their review of the investigators' finding, coupled with the fact that eye witness reports have been rejected as irrelevant, will the Minister now assume his responsibilities on behalf of the Government?

Will he make available to the Canadian Aviation Safety Board all the information that the investigators have on hand? Will he personally ensure that all members of the Board are provided with all of the information?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is an autonomous body set up by this Parliament in 1983. He may recall that it was set up with unanimous agreement.

The investigation is ongoing. At the present time a draft report of this accident has been issued to interested parties which are responding. We are awaiting a final report. Until such time, I think it would be premature to judge the final outcome of this investigation.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, as interesting as that may be, that is not the question that I asked.

REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO ALL INFORMATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to ask the Minister of State (Small Businesses) a straight forward question: Why did the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and its members not get access to all information? We have here, Mr. Speaker, a foot of information. And some is missing! Why was this information not given to members of the Bureau to make sure that everybody would know all about that terrible accident? Why not make all information readily available? Is the government hiding something?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, we have said, and will repeat again, that the results of this entire investigation will be made public. I repeat that the Minister will be receiving a report from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and the Minister will have 90 days to respond. This investigation will be completed with the well-being and safety of all air transportation in Canada in mind.

Mr. Boudria: There is interference.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO MANITOBA

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Fund, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week the Conservative Premier of Manitoba confirmed what we had claimed weeks ago, that in fact Manitoba received virtually none of the funding from that fund while tens of millions of dollars have gone to British Columbia and Saskatchewan. When will the Government get its act together to see that Manitoba gets its fair share of the funds?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that in Manitoba approximately 350 applications have been received from a variety of sources. To date, 35 projects worth about $12.6 million have been approved for Manitoba. Details will be announced shortly.

Mr. Broadbent: He just happened to have them with him.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is right, I just happen to have them. I guess that is good anticipation, Mr. Leader of the New Democratic Party.

I think it is most unfair when one does these periodic comparisons, because the response to the western diversification initiative has been overwhelming. There have been some 55,000 inquiries and a number of applications. The fact that it is a new initiative means that we have had some growing pains. However, I think that quite clearly applications are being processed in a much more expeditious manner and announcements are being made. I am sure my hon. friend will welcome that. I am sure Manitoba will be well looked after in the process.

DECISION MAKING PROCESS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that Manitoba has not received its fair share. One of the major claims about this fund was that decisions would be made at a regional level. The Premier of Manitoba claimed last week that many of the decisions are tied up in the bureaucratic mess in Ottawa. When will the Government gets its act together and let the regions do the things they are prepared to do?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that has clearly been the intention. As I said, the response to the program indeed has been overwhelming. There have been tens of thousands of applications submitted, and many inquiries. There has been a pipeline to fill and I think my hon. friend will see that in the next short while the approvals will be announced in a much more expeditious manner. As I said earlier, I am sure that Manitoba will be receiving its fair share.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period.

RESEARCH

FUNDING OF UNIVERSITY RESEARCH

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of State for Science and Technology I will put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. From the time the Government took office it has cut funds for research, science, and technology, and done its level best to drive scientists out of the country. In January a board set up by the Prime Minister and chaired by him recommended a 100 per cent increase over two years in funds for university research.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify a 7 per cent annual increase which rejects the advice of a board chaired by the Prime Minister and which will drive more scientists out of the country?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I find it quite appalling to listen to the Liberal Opposition. Instead of congratulating the Government for having injected more than $520 million in our universities for research and development, they complain that this is not enough. The Liberal Party should remember that during its many years in power it never gave the field of science and technology the attention it deserved. Instead of complaining today, the Hon. Member should congratulate the Prime Minister and the Conservative Government!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, under the Centres of Excellence Program announced yesterday, many universities will not even be able to apply for funds because the Government refuses to fund research costs fully. Will the Minister explain why the Government has rejected another critical recommendation made by the board chaired by the Prime Minister to fund fully the cost of university research?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Once more, rather than complain in the House the Liberal Party spokesman in this area should congratulate the Government for what it has done for university research. Of course, when the previous Liberal Government totally neglected R and D in Canada, we will not be able to correct the situation in a matter of a few months. It is good solid progress that is well received by universities all across Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Deputy Government House Leader give us the statement of business for the coming week?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon we will resume debate on Bill C-117, the Excise Tax Act. There is an understanding among the Parties that the debate will be concluded at or before 5 p.m. today, and a division will take place at that time.

Tomorrow, between 10 a.m. and 11 a.m., we will resume debate on Bill C-126, the Bretton Woods Act. It is the understanding between the Parties that there will be a division before 11 a.m.

Subsequent to Routine Proceedings tomorrow, we will continue debate on second reading of Bill C-129, the Air Canada Privatization Act, until 2 p.m. There is also an understanding among the Parties that there will be no motion under Standing Order 9(4)(a).

It is our intention on Monday to commence what might be called the procedural debate on Bill C-130, the free trade legislation. It is our intention to call the legislation. I do not think there is any secret that my colleagues opposite may wish to put some questions to the Chair. Naturally, we are in a position to respond. There will be no effort to proceed with the motion being put and the debate ensuing on Bill C-130 in order to give Your Honour an opportunity to reflect upon the procedural matters.

We will then follow that with continuation of debate on Bill C-129, unless it should finish tomorrow.

There is a tentative agreement that I am reasonably sure will go ahead, that on Tuesday we will recommence debate on the Meech Lake Accord. On Wednesday we will resume debate on Bill C-129, the Air Canada Privatization Bill, unless it should pass second reading either tomorrow or Monday.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has told the House that the Government does not intend to use Standing Order 9(4)(a) tomorrow on Bill C-129, will the Minister give us an undertaking that he will utilize no rules in the book that could extend hours, including Standing Order 69?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, when I discussed this matter with Members opposite and officials of their Parties, I gave my word that there would be no effort to extend hours. I am not completely au courant with Standing Order 69. I can make myself au courant.

I assure my colleague that there is no intention to extend hours tomorrow.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have three brief points. I am in full concurrence with what the Government House Leader has just said—not the Government House Leader but the guy who controls the shop over there.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member might at least say the honourable guy.

Mr. Nystrom: I just want to concur with the list that has been given to us by our friend across the way. He gave us his word that there would be no move to extend the hours tomorrow on the Air Canada debate.

There is something that I want to clarify for the record publicly. It is my understanding that if we debate the Meech Lake Accord Tuesday, in all likelihood it will be a Leaders' day if the three Leaders are available.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have made every effort to co-operate with the Opposition Parties in order that we could arrange what might be called a Leaders' day. Until we have an opportunity to confirm this with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he gets back from Europe, I do not want to say it is a firm deal as of yet.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the third time and passed, and the motion of Mr. Clinch (p. 15788).

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to conclude my remarks on Bill C-117. As you will recall, Madam Speaker, prior to the luncheon adjournment I was indicating how dishonest the Government has been with respect to its position on tax increases.

For example, on March 6, 1984 the Minister of Finance, a member of the Conservative Opposition at the time, said: "We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes which are already too high". The Prime Minister himself said on November 29, 1984: "Canadians pay a good deal of money for government services. They are already paying quite enough". However, the moment this Government was elected to office it systematically, in each subsequent Budget since the election of 1984, increased taxes. The record shows that from 1984 to fiscal year 1988-89, taxes have increased by $32.4 billion. This was done by a Government which said: "We will refrain from increasing taxes. Canadians are already paying quite enough". The Government has increased taxes by $32.4 billion, an increase of 46 per cent, in three and one-half years.

If one analyzes where those tax increases have occurred, one sees that personal income taxes have risen by $16.1 billion, an increase of 55 per cent. Corporate income taxes have only gone up 2.6 per cent, an increase of 28 per cent. Sales and excise taxes have gone up 77 per cent in four years. That is what Canadians are being forced to pay as a result of the economic measures of the Government.

The Government, through the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister, and other members of the Cabinet, indicated it wanted fairness in taxation. If that was their goal and if they were being honest and forthright with the people of Canada, why would they then increase personal income taxes by 55 per cent while at the same time only increase corporate income tax by 28 per cent? Individuals throughout the country are being forced to pay $16.1 billion more in taxes while corporations are only paying $2.6 billion more in the three and one-half years the Conservative Party has been in power.

Where is the fairness, equity, or economic justice with respect to the economic measures of this Government? Is it any wonder the people of Canada have lost complete trust and faith in the Government? Is it any wonder the Prime Minister has lost his moral right to govern?

After saying that Canadians were already paying too much and that it would not increase taxes, the Government started out in 1984 by attempting to deindex senior citizens' pensions. It increased the sales tax from 9 per cent to 12 per cent, a very regressive tax measure. On October 1, 1984 it went up 1 percentage point, again on January 1, 1986, and again on April 1, 1986. The Government extended the sales tax on candy, soft drinks, fast food, and snacks on July 1, 1985 and again on July 1, 1987. What a birthday present for the people of Canada.

There was a sales tax increase from 8 per cent to 12 per cent on paint, wallpaper, and toys on January 1, 1988. I am sure the Minister for International Trade was very concerned about the increase in the sales tax on toys. There was an increase in gasoline excise tax of two cents per litre on September 3, 1985 another cent per litre on January 1, 1987, another one cent per litre on February 19, 1987, and another cent per litre on April 1, 1988, for a total of five cents per litre since the conservative party came to power three and one-half years ago. the list goes on and on.

The bottom line is that both the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister misled the people of Canada when they said they would hold back increases in taxation by indicating to the people of Canada that taxes were already too high. This particular piece of legislation, Bill C-117, is an attempt to increase further excise taxes which have already risen a significant amount since the Government came to power. They have gone up 77 per cent which amounts to $10.6 billion. This legislation only exacerbates the already serious problem the Government has with credibility.

I urge Hon. Members, considering of course that the Government holds a substantial majority, to look at themselves in the mirror and ask themselves if they are being truly honest with the people of Canada with respect to Bill C-117.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, I had the distinct pleasure and honour of listening to the remarks made by my colleague, the Hon. Member of York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata). I want to congratulate him on an excellent speech. I am sure I speak on behalf of all Members, even the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), when I do so.

I want to ask my distinguished and learned colleague if he is aware of the fact that in Bill C-117 there is a measure that will tax long-distance telephone calls to the tune of 10 per cent. I wonder if my colleague is aware of the negative impact of such a measure on rural Canadians?

Rural Canadians often have to make long-distance telephone calls to contact the doctor, hospital, as well as friends and relatives. I am sure you know that, Madam Speaker, because there is a rural component in your constituency as well. Does my colleague not agree with me that this is a reprehensible tax measure designed in a discriminatory way and is unfair to rural Canadians of the constituency of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and elsewhere?

Mr. Nunziata: Absolutely, Madam Speaker. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) asks me whether I was aware of this regressive tax measure. How can any Canadian not be aware of a regressive tax measure such as the 10 per cent tax on long-distance telephone calls which came into effect January 1, 1988, as well as the tax increase on cable television from eight per cent to ten per cent?

This tax measure might be understandable and reasonable to people living in larger urban centres who have the ability to make local calls in order to communicate with their friends and families. Where the inequity arises is when those who live in rural communities in northern Canada do not have the opportunity to make local calls in order to keep in contact with families and friends. It is these people who are being hit the most in terms of this regressive tax measure.

Notwithstanding the fact that the Finance Committee, which includes members of the Progressive Conservative Party, recommended that there be a cap on the level of taxation on long-distance calls, the Minister of Finance refused that very reasonable request.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I want to raise one point which perhaps relates a bit to an exchange that the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) and I had before lunch. It seems to me that there was alderman of the same name as his who stood and was elected as a New Democratic Party candidate to the municipal council in the Burrough of York back about 10 years ago. Am I confused or was that not the same gentleman who now represents York South—Weston for the Liberal Party here in the House of Commons?

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, as always, the Hon. Member is confused. We did have an exchange earlier. I told the Hon. Member that he was being dishonest with Members of the House. He is being dishonest again.

Mr. Cassidy: Answer the question.

Mr. Nunziata: It is absolutely not true. I was never elected as a New Democrat alderman. I would ask the Hon. Member to check his facts. On more than one occasion he has deliberately misled the House and misled the people of Canada—typical NDP crap.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East was seeking the floor.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, thank you for recognizing me. I ask Your Honour for your advice. To accuse another Member of deliberately misrepresenting, I believe, is unparliamentary. I would appreciate a ruling on that. If it is unparliamentary would the Chair ask the Hon. Member to retract his comment?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands was seeking the floor?

Mr. Manly: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): At this point in time the Hon. Member for York South—Weston, I must agree albeit in an amusing way, or in a light tone, has used words that should not be used in the House of Commons. I am sure that he will find a way to withdraw.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, yes, I will withdraw the word "crap" as perhaps not being parliamentary. However, the Hon. Member made the statement that I was an NDP alderman. That is a falsehood. It is a lie. It is a misrepresentation. I refer to that statement. I am not calling him a liar or someone who might spread falsehoods or misrepresentations. The fact that he made the statement speaks for itself.

Mr. Crosbie: Shameless piece of pettifoggery.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I do believe that you asked the Hon. Member to withdraw some other words. Perhaps that could be dealt with now.

Ms. Copps: Why don't you withdraw your falsehood?

Mr. Cassidy: If he wishes to intervene again, he can indicate whether or not he was ever a member of the NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair feels it is a sad case that we would have returned this afternoon to the subject which I had hoped would be closed after the exchange this morning. When the hon. gentleman for Ottawa Centre was recognized on a question I would have thought that we would be staying within the relevant elements of the Bill at hand. However, I wish that the Hon. Member who has spoken about misleading the House will please withdraw.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, I do not want to waste the time of the House of Commons. I think the people of Canada will understand what has occurred here in typical NDP fashion. However, for your sake and for your sake alone, Madam Speaker, I will withdraw whatever you consider to be offensive and unparliamentary. As they say in Latin res ipsa loquitur.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I actually had a question for the Hon. Member relating to a previous subject. It is amazing how members of the NDP have such incredibly thin skins. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) was not satisfied to spread false statements this morning; he had to come back and repeat the same falsehoods this afternoon. When challenged he hid behind the shroud of parliamentary decency to claim that there is a withdrawal. Do Hon. Members hear the Hon. Member stand up and say: "I am wrong. I am sorry. I falsely accused the Hon. Member"? No, he hides behind the so-called parliamentary practice: "Yes, I cannot call anybody a scoundrel. I cannot call anybody a scalawag. It is okay if you call them any other kind of 20th century name".

In any case, my question relates to the question of long-distance telephone calls.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: There is one issue that I do not wish to remain on the public record. My friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), was perfectly correct when he said that the imposition of a 10 per cent tax was a tax on rural Canadians. However, he may also be aware, and this is one thing I wanted to point out to my hon. friend from York South—Weston, that not only does it discriminate against rural people; it also discriminates against Canadians living in suburban communities.

For example, I have a sister living in Dundas. The area around Hamilton is not even as large in circumference and population as is Ottawa. However, if one is living in Dundas and wants to phone one's brother in Stoney Creek, one has to pay a long-distance charge. That is different from the City of Toronto where one can call 2.5 million people without using long distance. However, in many suburban areas and other communities long distance must be used.

Does the Hon. Member not agree that not only does this measure discriminate against rural Canadians, it also discriminates against those Canadians living in communities such as Dundas, Stoney Creek, and in the Niagara region?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A short answer from the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: How can I help but not agree with the statements made by my friend and colleague from Hamilton East? She is quite correct. This regressive tax measure ought not to be in place. It discriminates against people in the North. It discriminates against seniors. It discriminates anyone and everyone who uses long distance.

Ms. Copps: Not in Toronto.

Mr. Nunziata: In Toronto as well, we make long distance calls as well.

The point is that the Government misled the people of Canada when it said that it would not increase taxes. It has increased taxes right across the board. It is patently unfair. All those Tory Members across the way should hang their heads in shame.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, it is good to get some relief—

Mr. Nunziata: Comic relief.

Mr. Keeper: —from this partisan bickering which has been dominating the Chamber for the last little while. I hope that "partisan bickering" is not an unparliamentary phrase. I would not want to get immersed in what has just been taking place over the last few minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair also hopes that this is not contagious.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I thank you for your assistance.

Some of those people who are watching may be surprised to know that the piece of legislation before the House is an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and that it has to do with sales taxes. I just want to mention a few of the things with which these increased taxes have to do.

There is a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services, telephones, telex services. There is an increase in the telecommunications programming tax on cable and pay-television services. There is an increase in the sales tax on paint and wallpaper products. There is an acceleration of federal sales tax and excise tax remittances. There is an increase in the federal sales tax on beer, spirits, wines, and tobacco. The list goes on and on.

These increased taxes did not come about as an act of God. They came from a series of Budgets that the Conservative Government imposed upon Canadians. The Acts that we are dealing with today concern the Minister of Finance's Budgets of February 18, 1987 and February 10, 1988; his June 18, 1987 White Paper on tax reform, and his December 16, 1987 tax reform paper.

What we have here are a series of tax increases coming out of papers that the Government called "tax reform". In a nutshell, that is what this debate is about. It is the Mulroney Conservative Government imposing tax increases upon Canadians in the name of tax reform. In the next few months, by sleight of hand, the Conservatives hope to create the opposite impression from what they have in fact been doing. We all know that in July people will be receiving some small measure of tax relief. When one looks at the over-all balance of things and takes into account all of the increases in tax burden that the Conservative Government has laid upon the backs of ordinary Canadians, the tax relief that will be delivered this summer is but a fraction of the tax increase. The over-all balance will mean tax increases.

In sum, Madam Speaker, tax reform to Tories spells tax increases. As a result of the Conservative Budgets over the last few years the average family is facing an increase in tax burden of $1,500. This might be justifiable if everybody else had been required to bear the same burden, or the money was being spent so wisely that it was evident to every Canadian that a tax increase was necessary.

Let us look at the first aspect of that proposition. Is everybody else carrying their fair share of the burden? What about corporations? What about large, profitable, powerful multinational corporations in Canada that make millions of dollars in profits and end up paying no taxes? In 1987, Xerox Canada made millions of dollars of profits and paid no taxes. The same holds true for a whole series of large and profitable corporations. Not only did those corporations pay no taxes and therefore set the tax burden that ordinary Canadian families have faced as a result of Tory policy in an unfair context, but many of those corporations received tax credits. They received dollars from the taxes of ordinary Canadians. In some cases, large corporations which made hundreds of millions of dollars in profits received tens of millions of dollars in tax credits as gifts from the Conservative Government of the day.

I do not wish to be overly partisan and say that this idea was originated by the Conservative Party, because I am aware of the fact that this trend was started under previous Liberal Governments. This policy of going easy on profitable corporations and going tough on ordinary Canadian families was started by the Liberals.

When Canadians voted for change in the last election, it is unfortunate that they did not receive real change. They did not get a government that was going to bring about real tax reform. Instead, they got the same old Liberal policies under a new partisan label. They got tax reform that translated into tax increases.

Mr. Redway: Pass it and we will get some tax reform.

Mr. Keeper: How can the Conservatives justify the fact that they have increased the tax burden on the ordinary family by some $1,500 over the last three years? Have they asked everyone in the country to pay their fair share? Clearly they have not had the courage, the will, or the intention to ask corporations to do that, not just any corporation, but profitable corporations. What about wealthy individuals? There are people in this country who make more than $50,000 and $100,000 in personal income and who, because of tax write-offs pay no taxes.

During the last federal election the then candidate for Prime Minister, now Prime Minister, (Mr. Mulroney), promised a minimum income tax, after he was prodded in that direction by the Leader of our Party who was calling for real tax reform. In the televised leadership debate the now Prime Minister then stated that he would bring about a minimum income tax. Once he got into office he moved as slow as a snail, as quick as a turtle, and eventually did bring forward some form of minimum income tax. At that time we welcomed the fact that he was taking action. But we also wanted to take some time to see whether or not this tax was going to bear fruit.

What studies and commentators have found is that the minimum income tax on wealthy individuals introduced by the Conservative Party is having a marginal impact. Because of exemptions, many of those wealthy individuals continue to pay no taxes. How can the Conservatives ask the ordinary Canadian family to pay more taxes, while many wealthy individuals who earn $50,000 or $100,000 pay no taxes? The whole question of taxation is one that leaves the ordinary Canadian with a sense of unfairness, that they are being asked to pay more while others are getting a free ride.

I would like to address the matter of tax reform and this matter of the continual pattern of tax increases by the Conservative Government from another perspective, that is, from the perspective of revenues, and what revenues could be collected if we asked those people who are getting a free ride now to pay taxes.

For example, in his annual report the Auditor General has identified $30 billion to $40 billion of tax write-offs which he says are questionable; there are serious questions about whether or not these tax expenditures achieve the public purpose objectives for which they were put in place. I am referring for example, to incentives for investment to create growth and employment. The Auditor General, who is an objective officer of Parliament, has stated that these tax write-offs do not achieve the objectives for which they have been established. Those are tax expenditures, forgiven taxes in order to achieve certain objectives, and the Auditor General says we do not know whether those objectives are being achieved and there is no basis upon which we can confidently say that they are being achieved.

We are giving up revenues. Instead of giving up those revenues for questionable purposes and collecting them we could provide some tax relief for the ordinary families. I want to assure you, Madam Speaker, that, based on my experience of talking to hundreds of citizens in my own riding of Winnipeg North Centre, the average family today is feeling the burden of taxation. People are fed up with this burden and they are angry that they are continually being asked to pay more and more and more. We allow these tax expenditures of $30 billion or $40 billion to leak through the tax system sieve. If we collected those revenues, a portion of them would provide the money for some tax relief for ordinary families who would not have to face such a heavy burden of taxation.

Now, $30 billion or $40 billion is a significant amount of money. Not only could we provide tax relief with it but we could also use it to attack some of the most glaring social problems in society. Canadians are compassionate. We have a sense of justice and a sense of fairness. It is shocking that we have people who are homeless and that there are children who do not have a roof over their heads. Some families do not have enough to eat. There are extremely acute social problems which could be attacked if we collected the tax revenues which are now being expended in a questionable way, according to the Auditor General. What about the tax increases which the Conservatives have brought about? We ought to look at revenues which the Conservatives are allowing to slip away. People who are getting a free ride in our society, the powerful and the wealthy, should pay their fair share, then we could give some relief to the ordinary family and take action on some very acute problems such as those of the homeless and hungry.

I want to approach this question of Tory tax increases, so-called tax reform, from another perspective. What are our priorities for the revenues once we collect them? If we are increasing taxes, the Government must have a purpose for the money which is being taken out of the pockets of ordinary Canadian families.

This Government has embarked on a program of having nuclear submarines. Estimates of the cost of this program are in the neighbourhood of $8 billion. When I consider that, I have serious questions about the Government's judgment that it has to increase the taxes for ordinary Canadian families. Is the reason for increasing taxes that the Conservatives want to play this macho game of nuclear submarines, spending billions of dollars to purchase them so they can play in the big leagues with the Americans and Soviets? Could they not find an effective, more modest and realistic way of achieving the security objectives of Canada without wasting the money of hard pressed families on the purchase of nuclear submarines?

It is ironic that we are embarking on the possibility of purchasing very expensive subs from France, for example, a country which is giving us such a hard time with the fishery in Atlantic Canada. Why are we offering to give billions of dollars to a country that says it does not care what happens to our inshore fishermen and does not care about negotiations because it is bigger, more powerful and more significant on the international stage than Canada? Why are we taxing ordinary Canadian families to give bushels of money to a country that is pushing us around when it comes to the fishery? Fundamentally I do not think the Government can justify the tax increase on ordinary Canadians by $1,500 over the last three years. I do not think the Government can justify that, given the priorities it has established on spending and given the fact that the Government wants to use so much of this money to purchase nuclear submarines. I believe the majority of Canadians would reject this nuclear program out of hand. It is a program about which Canadians have not been consulted in any effective way. If they were, I am sure they would say no to it. The Government is wasting money when it comes to expenditures. Money could be saved and the Government could take a more modest and yet effective approach to them.

The Government is allowing revenues to go uncollected. The Government is allowing a whole series of tax write-offs to continue to exist for which there is no documentation. Billions of dollars of revenues are flowing away. A recent study was done by an economist from, I believe, Newfoundland in which he indicated that for every dollar of tax revenue that is given up only 21 cents of new investment is generated. That raises the question of the effectiveness of tax write-offs when only 21 cents of investment is generated each time a dollar is spent. That does not sound like a very economical approach to me because every time you go down that road you lose money.

The legislation before the House today to amend the Excise Tax Act is a series of tax increases. It is from a number of Budgets, a couple of which have been called tax reform papers, but when it comes down to it what tax reform means to Tories is tax increases. The burden on the ordinary Canadian family has increased over the last few years since the Conservative Government has taken office and this legislation is implementing that policy. There is no way you can justify tax increases without first indicating that everyone is paying his or her fair share. We know that profitable corporations in Canada are getting away with paying no taxes. Corporations that make profits and pay no taxes end up getting tax credits and are walking away with the money of ordinary Canadian families. That is unfair. It has to stop and the way to do it is to throw those chaps on that side of the House out of office. That will happen in short order, just as soon as the Prime Minister gets up enough courage to call the next election.

I wish that the Conservative Government would own up to the fact that when it says tax reform, it means tax increases. At least then it would have the virtue of honesty and frankness. It should back away from the policy and give some tax relief to ordinary Canadian families.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I wonder if I could pose a short question to my hon. friend. He railed on about taxes and tax increases. Yet his Party, in supporting the National Energy Program, supported the biggest tax transfer from western Canada to Ottawa ever perpetrated on any region of this country in the history of Canada. I wonder how he can square that.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, my understanding of the facts is that we voted against the National Energy Program. The Hon. Member should acknowledge that rather than try to lay on the New Democratic Party the sins of the Liberal Party.

At the same time, I want to challenge the Hon. Member to live with today rather than with the past. Will he explain to the House how he can justify the fact that his Government has increased the tax burden on ordinary Canadian families at the same time as it leaves profitable corporations paying no taxes whatsoever? How can he justify those tax increases while giving a free ride to profitable corporations?

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, it is true that the NDP did vote against the National Energy Program, but I would refer my hon. friend to House of Commons Debates of October 23, 1981, when the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who was the energy critic for the NDP said:

> Today I want to begin the debate on the Canadianization parts of Bill C-48. These clauses of the bill lie at the heart of the National Energy Program. They are the ones under a barrage of unparalleled criticism from our American friends.
> I want to tell the government on behalf of our party, and indirectly the United States government, that the objectives of the National Energy Program will get our support, and I think public support, provided the legislation is tightened up to fully reflect that . . .
> I regret to say there has been evidence in the last few days that the Canadian government is backing off the National Energy Program and its objectives under American pressure.

It is obvious that although the NDP did vote against the National Energy Program, it was not because NDP Members disagreed with it but because the Liberal Government, they said, was not going far enough. How does he square that or what does he mean by that?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I am glad that my hon. colleague acknowledged the fact that this Party voted against the National Energy Program. After he did that, my hon. colleague engaged in a time-honoured parliamentary ploy which is to take a speech from many years ago, find a quote and seek to embarrass someone. We see that going on in the House every day. Someone on this side reads a statement of a Minister on that side made when he or she was in Opposition, someone on that side reads what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said when he was in such and such a position. This goes on all the time.

While the Hon. Member is engaging in this game, I will point out one thing about the quote that he read to me, and that is, that the quote was qualified. There was a specific reference to the phrase "provided that". Obviously when my hon. colleague was speaking at that time, there were some conditions attached to what he was saying. I do not claim to know the contents of all of the speeches of all of my colleagues back throughout history.

I would like my hon. friend across the way to deal with the fact that his Government has increased the tax burden on ordinary Canadians over the last three years by some $1,500. How could he do that at the same time that he allows profitable corporations to get away with paying no taxes whatsoever?

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, while one cannot expect the Hon. Member to remember all the speeches given by his colleagues, surely Canadians should be able to expect that members of the NDP remain consistent in every regard with regard to their national policy. I do not want to get into another battle with members of the NDP and their inconsistencies and hypocrisies. I want to ask the Hon. Member a question.

I listened to the Hon. Member's speech very carefully. I wonder if he could comment on the smoke and mirrors used by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the accounting trickery used by the Conservative Government with regard to the deficit. The Government likes to boast about the fact that the deficit has decreased over the last several years, but I am sure the Hon. Member will agree with me when I say that, to a large extent, it is all smoke and mirrors. It has all been done very surreptitiously, using accounting tricks.

One such trick is the acceleration of employer remittances. As the Hon. Member knows, up until this pseudo-Government came to office, employers were required to remit income tax, UIC and CPP payments once a month. As a result of an accounting trick and in order to reduce the deficit by over $1 billion, the Government has required employers to make those remittances, first, every two weeks and, I understand, now weekly, to give the impression that the deficit has been reduced when in fact it is all tricks and smoke and mirrors. The deficit really is not reduced by the figure $1.6 billion; it is just reduced for a period of a week or two weeks in order to make the Minister of Finance look good. In so doing, the Government is affecting the cash flow of many small businesses. I wonder if the Hon. Member has any thoughts on that.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I find it interesting that my hon. colleague from the Liberal Party applies a moral standard to the NDP that of course no one would even try to apply to the Liberal Party, and that is consistency. If there is any Canadian who believes that Liberals hold consistency to be the highest principle, then I will seek to answer the question the Hon. Member asked about consistency.

Clearly the Government is engaged in smoke and mirrors with the deficit, but it is also engaged in something else. It is pursuing a policy that was started by the previous Liberal Government, in particular a policy that was started by the Hon. Member who is now the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), and that is the policy of giving a free ride to profitable corporations.

If the Conservative Government and the previous Liberal Government had required profitable corporations to pay taxes, then there would be revenues so that the books could be balanced. There would be a way to reduce the deficit significantly and at the same time provide tax relief for ordinary Canadian families.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, I am most happy to be able to speak to this issue. I cannot believe the statements coming from the mouths of NDP Members in the House of Commons today. We hear the Hon. Member talking about tax burdens and corporate tax rip-offs. When members of the NDP saw the effectiveness of the flow-through shares that were introduced by the previous Liberal Government, that so-called tax loophole, they did a quicker flip-flop on that issue than we have seen in a very long time. They do not mind standing up and preaching "no tax loopholes" except when it is a tax loophole that happens to be working.

• (1600)

Mr. de Jong: That makes sense.

Ms. Copps: We do not mind people on either side of the House saying they are going to close off all tax loopholes, but please do not try to have it both ways. The NDP House Leader was actually wearing a button which said "save the flow" at the same time as the NDP finance critic was standing up in the House blasting away at corporate tax exemptions.

Mr. Nunziata: What hypocrisy.

Ms. Copps: I think the NDP owes this House an explanation. I hope for goodness' sake that when they talk about consistency they do not follow the pattern of their socialist colleagues in New Zealand who were the first in the western world to impose a tax on food. The socialist Government of New Zealand imposed a tax on food, and that was defended in this House. I am glad the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) is here because he will recall that when I asked him whether his Party, if it were the Government, would follow the example of the Government of New Zealand, he defended that socialist Government and its imposition of a tax on food.

Mr. Cassidy: I did not defend the tax on food and would not do it now.

Ms. Copps: As a matter of fact, if the Hon. Member with thin skin will look it up in Hansard, he will find that I asked him what he thought of this move by the socialist Government of New Zealand. He thought that Government had its own political agenda, and he was not prepared to criticize, God forbid, that socialist Government.

That is not what we are dealing with in this legislation but I think it has to be dealt with in the over-all context of tax reform because it is very easy for the NDP to stand up and rail away at what past Liberal Governments have done and the general tax propositions of the current Government. However, it is also transparently obvious to taxpayers that the NDP wants to have it both ways. They cannot because they have to be consistent in their tax policy.

Also on the question of consistency, there is one inconsistent spokesperson for the Government whose public statements boggle the mind. I refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). On November 29, 1984, he said that Canadians pay a good deal of money for government services and feel they are already paying quite enough. Both he and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) campaigned on a promise that they would not raise taxes. Here is a direct quote from the Minister of Finance on March 6, 1984: "We will reduce spending. We will refrain from increasing taxes which are already too high." Instead, we have a Government which has increased taxes in probably the largest amount of any government in the history of Canada.

In January, 1988, the Government imposed a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services, that is, the telephone. We have already heard the very articulate Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) point out how inconsistent that tax measure is because it penalizes in particular those Canadians who must, by virtue of where they live, use long-distance to communicate with family, friends, doctors and others. It is basically their lifeline to the community. Yet the Government implements a 10 per cent tax on telecommunication services.

We had an increase on tax on telecommunication programming services; an increase in the sales tax on paint and wallpaper products, and acceleration of federal sales and excise tax remittances, a scam which was just referred to by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata).

The Minister of Finance stands in his place and says the Government is paying down the deficit. What it is doing is robbing the cash flow of small Canadian companies already living on the edge, scratching by their fingernails for mere existence. Instead of being able to collect their receivables and pay their payables, in many cases they have to pay the Government before they even receive it themselves. This accelerated payment is actually costing hundreds of millions of dollars in lost cash flow for small Canadian businesses, which are the life-blood of this country. It is not the large corporations which have created jobs in the 1980s. It has been the small businesses, in particular those started by women. Those businesses are being gouged by a Minister of Finance who claims he is paying down the deficit when in fact he is merely speeding up the collection process which robs the cash flow which is so crucial to the life of many small businesses.

We also see further increases in excise taxes on tobacco products, beer, spirits and wine. There is an air transportation levy. That tax discriminates against northerners and those who, by virtue of their distance from major centres, have to use air transportation to visit hospitals or doctors. There is an increase in the excise tax on gasoline and aviation fuel.

The amount of money the Government has raised in tax measures over its years in office is unbelievable. There has been a 46 per cent tax increase from 1984 to 1989. If you take into account personal income tax increases amounting to 55 per cent, a 77 per cent increase in sales and excise taxes which the Minister stated were job killers, and an increase of 16 per cent in other taxes, the total increase is 46 per cent from a Government which promised no tax increases.

Who is paying these taxes? Is it wealthy Canadians who are in the best position to pay? My Leader pointed out only a few days ago in the House that the only group who seemed to be getting a break by way of a reduction in tax burden are those earning over $100,000 a year. The Minister of Finance wants to slap a tax on people earning $15,000 a year and less, but he does not mind giving out $500,000 in capital gains exemptions. That was reduced finally to $100,000 in the last Budget, but it is an indication of government priorities. He is prepared to tell a single parent earning $15,000 a year that he or she should pay taxes, yet if you happen to be in the top 2 per cent of income earners you can have a $500,000 capital gains exemption. Most people in my riding do not even know what a capital gain is. Yet the top 2 per cent are getting a $500,000 tax write-off from a Government which claims it is not going to increase taxes. Well, it did not increase taxes for that group, but for most Canadians the effect of the Government's tax policies has been a double whammy.

The 77 per cent increase in sales and excise taxes in particular is damaging to those with low and moderate incomes. That is obvious. If I happen to be earning $70,000 a year and a waitress in my community happens to be earning $17,000 a year and we both decide to wallpaper our living room, the cost in excess taxes to that person is going to be the same as it is for me. Is that fair?

I submit that when the Minister of Finance said that sales and excise taxes were the silent killers of jobs, he was in fact speaking the truth and that, unfortunately, in his quest to help wealthy Canadians get richer by applying the capital gains exemptions, in his quest to show on paper that he is reducing the deficit, he has decided to penalize Canadians who are in the weakest position to fight back, those being, in particular, low and middle-income Canadians.

Many people in my own riding who have just filed their income tax were shocked and have written to me. They did not realize that over the tenure of the Government, the last four years, the Government has been silently chipping away at their earning power. They were surprised and shocked, when the time came to pay their income tax, to find that their tax bill was up to $1500 more than what it had been under previous Liberal Governments.

Look at the tax grab of major tax increases for individuals introduced by the Conservative Government. It picked up $1 billion in 1984 with a 1 per cent increase in sales tax. That was the first whammy. It picked up another $1 billion with the second increase of 1 per cent in sales tax in 1986. A third increase in 1986 picked up another $1 billion.

A two cent a litre increase in gas resulted in $930 million in excess revenue to the Queen's coffers. The second increase on gas earned $450 million, and the third in 1987 earned $450 million, for a grand total of $1.830 billion in gas tax increases alone.

The equalization of sales tax on unleaded and leaded gasoline in 1987 resulted in an extra $30 million coming into the federal coffers. The kiddy tax on candies and soft drinks and the sales tax on pet food earned $400 million. The extension of sales tax on snack foods earned $60 million.

The first increase in cigarette and tobacco taxes earned $320 million. The second increase in the so-called sin taxes resulted in a $150 million increase in tobacco and alcohol taxes. The third increase in 1987 amounted to $70 million.

The elimination of the RHOSP has to take the cake. I congratulate the Member from Toronto who is decrying the cost of housing in Toronto and would like to see a Toronto based Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan launched. Where was the Member when, in the Government's first Budget, it eliminated the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan and the Liberal Party in Opposition demanded that the Government reinstate it? Where was he when the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation doubled the cost of guaranteeing the purchase of a home, which effectively added $800 to the price of a new home anywhere in Canada?

Where was the voice from Toronto when the Government decided to pay down the deficit on paper on the backs of working Canadian men and women who are trying to be in a position to own their own homes?

Where was he when his own Finance Minister, from his beloved City of Toronto, the same city that does not warrant designation as a financial centre, increased the tax on building supplies and materials, which added a further $400 to $800 to the average cost of a home anywhere in Canada? The RHOSP would have potentially given tax breaks of $1,000 per year per person, $2,000 per year per family which, over 20 years, amounts to a tax break of $20,000.

Now that they are going to have some kind of international economic summit in Toronto the Member jumps on the bandwagon and claims to be fighting for working men and women in the City of Toronto when he sat in his seat silent for three and one-half years while the federal Government did everything it could to try to increase the cost to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation by eliminating the RHOSP, by increasing building supply materials, and by standing back and allowing the burden and responsibility for a national housing strategy to fall back on the shoulders of provincial Governments.

The elimination of RHOSP was another $105 million benefit to the federal coffers. The deindexation of the tax system earned $635 million. The elimination of the federal tax reduction amounted to another $650 million. Changes to marital exemptions saved the federal coffers $20 million. The general 3 per cent surtax of 1986 amounted to $1.2 million. The general temporary 5 per cent and 10 per cent surtaxes of 1986 amounted to another $500 million. The 10 per cent tax on long-distance calls of 1988 earned $945 million. Increases on other sales taxes amounted to $370 million. This list, long and complete though it may be, does not include the new federal sales tax imposed on June 18, 1987.

As soon as the Prime Minister got elected on a platform of no tax increases, on a platform of protection of senior citizens, on a platform of protection of universality, he immediately waged a campaign to increase taxes, to cut back on senior citizens' pensions and to damage and destroy universality.

Is it any wonder that the Canadian taxpayer is getting a little bit cynical about governments? Is it any wonder that when the Prime Minister stands up to give a speech, people ask themselves whether this man can be trusted to keep his word? He campaigned in 1984 on a simple promise that he was not going to increase taxes. Yet he has increased taxes more quickly and more unjustly than any Prime Minister since Confederation.

I do not believe, Madam Speaker, that Canadians can trust a Prime Minister who during the election campaign claimed that he hated tax increases, whether on personal income or on direct taxes like the sales tax, because we can see very clearly that even before the election, he was claiming that there would be no tax increases, but once he was elected, since his Government took power, we have had specific tax increases: a 55 per cent increase on personal income, a 28 per cent increase on corporate income, a 77 per cent increase of sales taxes, Madam Speaker, between 1984 and 1989, and a 16 per cent increase on other income, for a total average tax increase of 46 per cent; this from a Government that claims it does not want to increase taxes for Canadians.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, we must consider the fact that the most affected, those who suffer most from tax increases are the least wealthy because, if one looks at the figures, the greatest tax increase is for the sales tax and the excise tax that we are now discussing; the poorest are the hardest hit. For example, someone who needs to buy something to repair his house pays the same tax, whether he is a millionaire or poor. That is why the Minister of Finance claimed that the sales tax kills jobs. Indeed it does. But why did the Government and the Prime Minister take office promising Canadians that they would not increase taxes? But since they have been in power, Canadians have had the biggest tax increases since Confederation. People are wondering, Madam

Speaker, and I think that Canadians will reject this Government once the Prime Minister has the courage to call an election.

[English]

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I was fascinated by the Hon. Member's comments, particularly as they refer to myself. I was particularly interested because I was not aware that the Hon. Member even knew that I was in the House these days. However, I seem to have hit a nerve. As a result of that, I would like to pose a question or two to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member referred to a number of items in her comments. She knows that Canada faces a lot of problems, many of which were created by her Party when it formed the Government.

One of those problems in particular is the deficit. Many of the comments she made obviously referred to efforts of the Government to deal with the deficit, which would be approaching some $40 billion a year at the present time if action had not been taken by this Government. The deficit has been reduced by some $10 billion a year.

Does the Hon. Member and her Party want to see the national annual spending deficit of Canada reduced? If so, is it her position and the position of the Liberal Party that that deficit should not be reduced by raising taxes? Is she prepared to say now that the Liberal Party would not raise taxes if it formed the Government?

In conjunction with that, is she prepared to say specifically what expenditures would be cut back by the Liberal Party—if in fact it is interested in reducing the deficit—in order to reduce the deficit by $10 billion as it has been reduced on an annual basis in the last three and a half years?

Will the Hon. Member answer those questions? Does she and her Party support deficit reduction? If so, will she give us a commitment today that if and when her Party forms a government again in this country they will not raise taxes, unlike her provincial colleagues in Ontario where she served previously? Will she also tell us specifically what government expenditures would be cut by the Liberal Party in order to reduce the deficit by some $10 billion a year?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, herein lies the difference between the Conservative and Liberal Parties. The Liberal Party is not prepared to make promises that it cannot keep.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: During the 1984 election, the Leader of the Liberal Party, who has integrity and is accepted as an honest person across Canada, did not travel from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Chilliwack, British Columbia and tell people that he would keep taxes down and reduce the deficit at the same time.

The person who made that promise was the Leader of the Conservative Party. He tried to talk out of both sides of his mouth.

In fact, the Leader of the Liberal Party said quite bluntly that if the deficit is going to be reduced, he cannot make the promise that taxes will not be increased.

Consider the situation in the City of Toronto from the point of view of the Minister of Finance. The Government is telling Canadians that it is introducing fairness in tax measures. Yet for the first time it is slapping a tax on a single mother living in the Jane Finch area who is earning $15,000 a year. She is paying tax for the first time, while those wealthy enough to be in the top two per cent of the population and can accrue $500,000 in capital gains can get a tax holiday. Most of my constituents do not even know what a capital gain is.

The Government talks about tax fairness. Where is the fairness in a policy that offers a write-off to someone in the top 2 per cent of the population while telling a mother in the Jane Finch area that she must pay taxes?

The Member stood up in response to my direct challenge to him, but he did not answer my question. While I say, more power to the Member for calling for reintroduction of the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan just in advance of the economic summit, and only in the City of Toronto, where was he when the opposition Parties were in the trenches fighting the Government's decision to withdraw the RHOSP? Where was the Member when the Government doubled the guarantees that were forced on home owners who want to get CMHC insurance? The Government introduced successive Budgets in the interest of so-called deficit reduction, which did not translate into actual dollars. Where was the Member when the Government increased the sales tax on building materials that directly translates into increased cost of housing in Toronto?

The Hon. Member was standing on the sidelines, telling the Minister to go ahead and reduce the deficit on the backs of poor Canadians so that wealthy Canadians can get a half a million dollar capital gains write-off.

If the Member is serious about his intent to see a reintroduction of the RHOSP, he should throw off that Conservative yoke and join a real Party that will fight for working people, instead of the hypocrisy of the Conservative tax policy.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, the Hon. member criticized the Conservative Government for the increase in taxes it has imposed on most Canadians. There are two groups of Canadians whose taxes have not been touched.

One group is that of wealthy individuals. There are over 5,000 wealthy Canadians who earned more than $50,000 last year and paid no income tax. There are 250 Canadians who had incomes of over $250,000 and paid no income tax. Is that not the same situation as existed in all the years the Liberals formed the Government?

We know that some of the largest corporations in Canada paid no corporation tax, including Alcan Aluminum, Brascan, Hees International, Power Financial, Xerox, Wardair and Union Carbide. They paid no corporation income tax in 1986 and in 1987, neither did the Hudson's Bay Company, Bramalea and Cadillac-Fairview.

Is that not the same situation as existed in all the years the Liberal Government was in office? In fact, the biggest giveaways were instituted when the present Leader of the Official Opposition was Minister of Finance.

Why should Canadians believe the Liberal Party now when it criticizes the Conservatives for doing exactly what the Liberals did for so many years when they were in government?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I cannot believe what I am hearing. The Member talks about what the Leader of the Liberal Party did as Minister of Finance. The senior citizens of Canada will be very surprised to hear that the New Democratic Party does not support the indexation of senior citizens' pensions.

Mr. Orlikow: Who said anything about that?

Ms. Copps: The NDP should be aware of the fact that the then Minister of Finance, the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), introduced indexing because the Liberal Party believed that the poorest of the poor should have a quarterly increase in their income which was equal to the Consumer Price Index.

It was the introduction of Conservative policies which cut back on that indexation.

Mr. Orlikow: Answer the question. Talk about the corporate hand-outs.

Ms. Copps: The Member says that I am avoiding the question. The Member wanted to talk about what our Liberal Leader did when he was Minister of Finance. He introduced a policy to protect the incomes of the poorest people in our society. I am very sorry that the NDP is opposed to that policy. I am very surprised that the NDP does not believe that senior citizens' pensions should be indexed.

The ultimate in hypocrisy is when the Member talks about corporate taxes and corporate write-offs. The absolute hypocritical flip-flop of the New Democratic Party on the flow-through shares issue is an indication of how phoney it is.

Mr. Orlikow: Why don't you answer the question?

Ms. Copps: I suppose the Hon. Member has not heard of the flow-through shares. The flow-through shares are that corporate tax rip-off which the New Democratic Party is supporting by wearing buttons in the House, and is supporting because those Members recognize, through representations by the mining industry and by other industries, that flow-through shares was a corporate tax loophole which was supported not only by the Liberals, obviously not totally by the Conservatives since they have cut it back, but by the New Democratic Party.

The NDP House Leader was wearing a button in the House supporting this corporate loophole. So could the Member explain to me which loopholes he is in favour of now and which ones he is against? Is he in favour of the loopholes when people visit him? When the NDP received a visit from the Canadian Mining Association, it did an absolute about-face. The week before it was against flow-through shares. After the industry showed it that flow-through shares have resulted in exploration of young and new mines and the creation of jobs in northern Canada, the NDP changed its position completely. Could those Members give me a list of which corporate loopholes they are against and which they favour?

Mr. Prud'homme: We are waiting for the answer.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The questions and comments period is now over. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) on debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, it was with interest I heard the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) expounding on the virtues of the Liberal Party and its history when it comes to tax reform. One Liberal attempt at tax reform in response to the Carter report was quite quickly shot down. I must say in all honesty that I think it was shot down because the Conservatives at that time, representing the vested interests, led quite a concerted attack against Carter's proposals, and the Government did back down.

Then we had the 10-year period when the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Minister of Finance in the Liberal Government. In fact, there was quite a turn-around in government policy during the rest of the 1970s. Many of the tax loopholes which now exist in the Income Tax Act, particularly those affecting the large corporations, were introduced at that time.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East asked us what sort of loopholes we would close. I could mention to her that we would certainly have closed the loopholes that existed in 1982 which allowed the Royal Bank of Canada—and it was not the only one—to rack up some $360 million in profits and not pay one cent of tax, in fact, receive a tax credit of some $20 million. A woman working as a teller for the Royal Bank in 1982 would have actually paid more in taxes than the Royal Bank of Canada. That was in 1982. It was a result of the Liberal tax policies which allowed the Royal Bank to make a profit of over $360 million and not pay one cent of tax.

We would have closed down or never introduced the type of loophole that the Hon. Marc Lalonde introduced in 1983 to encourage research and development. That resulted in a loss of public revenues of close to $2.5 billion in less than six or seven months. That loophole became such a sham that when the Tories came to power, they recognized the type of abuse that was occurring and attempted to shut it down in October of 1984. However, in shutting it down they left the door open for those schemes that had been thought out, and so they introduced a grandfathering clause, and about one-third of the $2.5 billion lost in public revenues were lost in the period of time the Tories were in government.

Finally, the Tories themselves recognized they had not shut down this loophole tight enough, and in May of 1985 they shut it down completely. Of course, they should have done that in October of 1984 and would have saved the public Treasury well over $1 billion. That is the history of tax reform in this country. Unfortunately, we have never had proper tax reform. We have never accepted the notion that a buck is a buck, which was presented by the Carter Commission on Tax Reform. We continue to see inequities in the tax system which allow large and very profitable corporations not to pay any income tax whatsoever. We see inequities that allow high income wage earners in Canada to pay little, if any, tax, and inequities that see middle and lower income wage earners increasingly carrying the tax burden. That is true whether under a Liberal Government or under a Conservative Government.

The tax burden has increasingly fallen on middle and low-Canadian income earners. I think it is fair to say that in the 1950s, roughly half of public revenues came from the corporate side and half came from the individual taxpayers. Now, through successive Liberal and Conservative Governments, we find the proportion roughly to be 20 per cent, 25 per cent being paid by the corporate sector and some 75 per cent or 80 per cent being paid by individual Canadian taxpayers. That is the imbalance that has occurred over the years. Certainly, when we deal with the present legislation, Bill C-117, we can see it is just one more step in the road to extending the tax burden on ordinary Canadians.

This Bill brings together various budget proposals we have had placed in front of us in the last number of years. In fact, it seems that every time the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stands up to make an economic statement, present a White Paper or introduce a Budget, there is invariably an increase in sales tax. Either the base is broadened, meaning that new items are now being taxed, or the rate has increased.

We can go down the list of all the various items the Government has introduced which increases the tax load on ordinary Canadians. There are such items as the 10 per cent tax on long-distance telephone calls and on paid television services. This will net the Government some $870 million a year. There is a sales tax on paint and wallpaper products, which has increased from 8 per cent to 12 per cent. It is estimated that this will bring the Government in an extra $60 million a year. Then there are taxes on beer, spirits, wine and tobacco products, which were previously announced, but not all in this Bill, which will bring the Government some extra revenue of $240 million a year.

One of the major increases the Minister of Finance, particularly, this Government, seems to like, is to increase the sales tax on gasoline. Since the Government has been in power it has raised the price of gasoline by some 23 cents a gallon. That is over and above what the Canadian taxpayers were paying before the Conservatives were elected. That is 23 cents a gallon extra going to the Federal Treasury.

We can discuss at some length the merits of the sales tax as opposed to other ways of gathering government revenues. I am certain there will be differences of opinion among all Members of the House as to whether the Government should raise its revenues more directly through the income tax and the corporate tax or whether it should do it through things like the sales tax. There are arguments in favour of having a sales tax. Most industrialized countries in fact do have a sales tax. It ensures that those individuals who pay little, if any, income tax, and I am referring to those higher income Canadians, at least pay some tax. In other words, the tax man stands in front of your pocket as the money leaves your pocket rather than as in the case of income tax which is taken before the money comes into your pocket.

Certainly, having a sales tax ensures that all those who spend money will be paying some tax. There are, of course, arguments against the sales tax. One of the major arguments is that it is regressive. That means that we are being taxed not on our ability to pay tax but on our needs. A person who has an income of $8,000, $10,000, $12,000 or $15,000 a year still needs to buy a gallon of milk and a loaf of bread. He must use the telephone. Perhaps he has a television set and is hooked into a cable company. He has to buy shoes and clothes for his kids. He has to buy a house or rent an apartment. He has to have a car. On all these items there will be, in some form or another, sales tax. He or she is being taxed at the same rate as the person who has an income of $100,000 or $1 million. Of course, those earning $100,000 or $1 million will be spending more and therefore will be paying more tax. However, on the basic necessities very often the low-income Canadian person will be paying the same amount of tax as the higher income Canadian person. That is not fair. It is regressive. It is one of the aspects of the sales tax that I find unacceptable.

The Government has said, and points out with some pride, that it has introduced the sales tax credit. It is supposed to compensate those with low incomes the money they have spent on sales taxes. But of course the sales tax credit is nowhere near what people are paying in sales taxes. The sales tax credit introduced by the Government does not touch the increases in the sales taxes that people will be paying because of various Tory Budgets. As with most other Canadians, they are paying more in tax but they are getting a little bit of it back now.

As well, the Government has failed to make a commitment that the sales tax credit will be indexed to inflation. That is something that the Government has to do as it increases its revenues from sales taxes. It has to guarantee to lower and middle-income Canadians that as the sales tax increases, either through increasing the rate, the base or through inflation, low-income and middle-income Canadians will not be hurt any more, and that the sales tax credit will be indexed to ensure that they will get back the increases in taxes that they will be paying. Unfortunately, the Government has failed to move in that area.

There are some thorny issues dealing with sales tax in Canada. We have one of the most antiquated sales tax regimes in the world. I think everyone will admit that the present system is not a good one. I will now outline some of the various problems that we have.

One area with which we have difficulty in terms of the present sales tax regime concerns the difference in sales tax burden. The federal sales tax is levied on the manufacturers' selling price. However, the selling price may vary for the same product depending on whether the manufacturer sells it to a wholesaler or to a retailer. Selling to a retailer brings to it a higher relative tax burden. When a manufacturer sells his or her product to a retail outlet, higher costs will be incurred than if the product were sold to the retailer. In other words, what the present sales tax system does is to create distortions within the market-place. Therefore, some manufacturers who have set up their operations to sell directly to retailers will be paying one level of taxes, or taxes on a certain number of activities, whereas in another system of operating the business where the manufacturer sells to the wholesaler and the wholesaler sells to the retailer, one saves a significant amount on taxes.

In 1977, it was estimated that fully 44 per cent of taxable manufacturers' sales were directly to retailers. To reduce this discrimination there is now an extensive list of what are called notionable values which are used to discount the price at which a manufacturer sells a product to the retailer to the price that would have been paid by the wholesaler. But introducing notional value creates a lot of distortions within the system. The Federal Court has found that using notional value is discriminatory. It means that the Department of Revenue is able to place notional value on some goods. It is arbitrary. The court has found this to be unconstitutional. I would tend to say rightly so. That is one of the problems that we have with the present sales tax regime.

The other problem that we have is that the Government taxes the production of goods. In other words, those who produce capital goods have to pay the sales tax. There is no other country in the world that really taxes its capital goods. When purchasing intermediate goods to be used in the production process, the manufacturer inevitably ends up paying hidden sales taxes on some goods. It was estimated recently that 42 per cent of federal tax revenues were collected on intermediate and capital goods. What is particularly harmful about this is that in those industries that export their goods part of the export price includes the sales tax on the capital costs. No other country in the world puts a sales tax either directly or indirectly on the goods that they manufacture for export. But in good old Canada we do. There is something quite dumb about this.

Another area with which we have difficulty in our present sales tax regime is that it gives an advantage to importers. In other words, while we are taxing our exporters, we are giving advantages to importers. Canada does not include the cost of transporting goods to Canada as part of the cost base for the calculation of federal sales tax. Consequently, those imports competing with domestically produced goods often pay less tax than goods produced in Canada. Again, it does not really make much sense.

Another area with which we have concern is with respect to the complexity of the sales taxes. The licensing requirements on manufacturers and the documentation that this entails, the special exemptions for certain goods, the system of notional values, all tend to make the federal sales tax administratively very burdensome and unnecessarily complex. As a member of the Finance Committee I can say that we have been dealing with the Government's attempt to fix the present tax regime and some of the anomalies in it. There is a recognition on the part of the Government that taxing our exporters and giving advantage to the importers is something that the Government has to deal with.

As we have been going through the proposals and meeting with the manufacturers and the producers of many goods and services, we hear over and over again that what the Government is producing is even further complexity. As well, it is making the unfairness even more so. The difference between the imports and the exports and the unfairness there will be extended further with the proposed legislation that the Government is introducing. Again, it seems clear to us that the Government has no precise notion of what it wants to do with some of the inequities and some of the problems that exist in the sales tax regime.

One can go on as well about the extent to which the Government has relied upon the sales tax. As I mentioned before, the sale tax is essentially a regressive tax. It is unfair to low-income Canadians. However, it is also unfair to people living in remote communities. In fact, I would say it is unfair to those in all rural communities.

I see that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine (Mr. McKenzie) is in the House. He represents a district of many small rural communities. He surely must be concerned on their behalf at the type of increases in the sales tax. For example, there is the 10 per cent tax on communications. He knows and I know that when those people use their telephone it is often for a long-distance call.

I note that you are indicating to me, Madam Speaker, that my time is up. I wonder if I could just complete my thought on this and then there might be some questions that Hon. Members might wish to pose.

The point I want to make is that all of us who represent wholly or in part rural districts must be concerned with increasing sales taxes because they have such a negative effect on rural communities. People in rural communities use long-distance telephone calls much more than city dwellers. A doctor may be in the next town. A cousin, mother or aunt perhaps lives down the highway and to call him or her requires a long-distance telephone call. People in rural communities are being taxed, not city dwellers.

• (1650)

The increase in the cost of gasoline means that if one is driving to the next town, more gasoline is being used. The cost of bringing in foodstuffs to the local store will be higher because of the increase in the gasoline prices that a trucker will have to pay. Sales taxes discriminate against those people living in rural and in remote communities.

Therefore, I urge those Conservative Members who represent districts with many rural areas to oppose this legislation.

Mr. Redway: In his remarks, the Hon. Member spent a good deal of time dealing with the unfairness of sales tax. I am aware, and I know the Hon. Member is aware that socialist Governments representing the same philosophy as the NDP, for example, the Government in New Zealand, imposed a sales tax on food and groceries. In Sweden, the socialist Government with the same philosophy as the NDP also imposed a sales tax on groceries and food products. I am not aware of the rate of tax in New Zealand, but I am aware that there are different rates of sales tax in Sweden, and that groceries are taxed at the highest rate.

In the event that the Hon. Member and his Party ever formed a Government, or if he and his Party had the balance of power in a minority government, would the NDP Members in Canada, like their colleagues whom they support regularly in Sweden and New Zealand, impose a sales tax on food?

Mr. de Jong: That is a fair and honest question. I was with the Finance Committee when we visited New Zealand, and saw the operation of its sales tax. When the Labour Government in New Zealand introduced tax reform, it did it quite differently than tax reform in Canada. First, changes were introduced to the sales tax, to the income tax, and to the corporate tax. That Government also increased its subsidies or programs to help middle and low-income families. This was done at the same time, as opposed to what the Minister of Finance is doing and stretching it out.

When socialist democratic governments throughout the world introduce a sales tax on all goods and services, they guarantee that low and middle-income citizens are fully compensated. One might make a theoretical argument in favour of having a universal sales tax, but that can only be done when there is a full guarantee that low and middle-income citizens are fully compensated. For that, citizens have to be able to trust their government to do that. The problem that I have is that I do not trust the Government.

After promising senior citizens that they would not have their pensions deindexed, the Government attempted to deindex their pensions. The Government deindexed family allowances and many social support systems. If there is not full indexation on the sales tax credit, then low-income Canadians will eventually lose. There can be a sales tax credit to fully compensate them this year, but if it is not fully indexed, next year it would be a little less, and the year after that a little less.

In part, Madam Speaker, it is a question of trust. Do you trust the Government to index fully the compensation that low-income people will receive? I do not trust the Government to do that. Therefore, I would be opposed to the Government imposing a tax on food and other basic necessities.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question? The question is as follows: Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre), seconded by Mr. Jelinek, moved that Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be now read the third time and passed, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Clinch, seconded by Mr. Hawkes:

That this question be now put.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

And the ringing of the bells having stopped:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As requested by the whip of the official Opposition, the vote is deferred until 6 p.m. today and shall be held following the other vote deferred yesterday until the same time.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

SUGGESTED REPEAL OF SECTION 17

Mr. Alan Redway (York East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted, each year, to Parliament for approval.

He said: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity of speaking in support of this motion which you have read calling upon the House to consider the advisability of asking the Government to repeal Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, and to require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted to Parliament for approval each year.

The basic principle underlying all tax law is that it will apply equally and fairly to all Canadians regardless of who they are, where they live, or who they know; whether they be rich or poor, whether they be famous or notorious. The basic principle is that these laws should apply to everyone equally and absolutely. I would hope that that principle means, and I believe that it does, that each tax law will apply the same way to my neighbour next door, my neighbour across the street, or my neighbour in another part of the country in the same manner as it applies to me, and that I can expect that there will not be any favouritism offered to one person or another person.

That begs the question in my mind, and I hope in the minds of everyone in this House, as to whether the tax laws in Canada not only are supposed to apply that way equally to all but they actually do. In that respect I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you should take a close look at Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act of Canada. That Act has a number of provisions which cause me concern. I would suspect it would cause you, other Members of this House and all Canadians concern.

Section 17(1) of the Financial Administration Act states:

The Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty.

That means he can forgive it, he can make a gift of it, he can make sure that it is not paid, that is if he considers it in the public interest. I am not certain as to how this process actually works in Parliament. I would assume that if a member of the bureaucracy draws up a list and provides on that list all of the people who are taxpayers who should have their taxes wiped out, then that list is submitted to the Governor in Council and the Governor in Council puts a stamp of approval on it and it is done. I do not know who is on that list particularly, Mr. Speaker. I do not know whether you know who is on that list, but apparently from time to time each year and every year the Governor in Council, through some process like that, forgives some people their taxes. Of course, other people in exactly the same circumstances may actually still be having to pay taxes. I would not suggest that it happens that way. There is the availability and there is the possibility in Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act for that sort of abuse, the kind of abuse where somehow or another, as a result of who you know or what you know, you may have your taxes forgiven and I may not, even though we are in the same circumstances or, for that matter, I may have my taxes forgiven and you may not, Mr. Speaker. I think this is a matter of serious concern and should be to you and all Canadians.

Subsection (3) of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act goes into some detail as to how the Governor in Council can go through this forgiveness of taxes, or remission of taxes as it is called. It talks about not proceeding with a suit to recover those taxes. The Governor in Council might levy the tax but then decide not to pursue the recovery of it. He could delay or discontinue any proceedings to recover those taxes that are already commenced on the part of the Government. He could not enforce, or abandon any effort to collect those taxes, which is another provision in Section 17. Another one is to just write in the books that the tax has been paid, that it has been satisfied and that there is nothing owing on that particular tax. Another provision is to pay back money that is already paid. If somebody paid his taxes to the Government, to the Receiver General, there is the right in Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act to take the money and send it back saying "Thanks anyway. We don't need your money. Forget about it. We are sending it back". This is the sort of thing that Section 17 provides for.

I wonder how many people in this House and across Canada realize that there is in Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, the authority to forgive somebody's taxes and not have to seek the approval of Parliament first in order to do it. In other words, Parliament has already given the Governor in Council that authority not to do it once in a particular case but to do it time and time again, day after day, month after month, year after year. That is what Section 17 has the effect of doing.

Does the Government ever act on this authority in Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act? It certainly does. But it has been very difficult to know about the action which the Government has been taking. You may know, Mr. Speaker, that every year in the fall the Government publishes something called the Public Accounts of Canada. It comes out not as a single volume book but it is in four separate volumes at the moment. I suppose that as the complexity grows there may be five and six volumes, whatever number, but it is a lot of paper. I am not sure how many people ever sit down and read through it all.

I tried to find the material on tax remissions in the Public Accounts of Canada a few months ago and had to seek assistance from the Library of Parliament because I could not find it in the Public Accounts when I looked. The reason I could not find it is that it is in Volume II, Part 2 of the Public Accounts of Canada under something called Additional Information and Analysis. Section 3 in the middle says "Supplementary Information Required by the Financial Administration Act". Section 3 is 36 pages of tax remissions or tax forgiveness of one sort or another. It is 36 pages of the Public Accounts of Canada hidden under the title Supplementary Information Required by the Financial Administration Act.

You would not only have to get a Philadelphia lawyer or a parliamentary expert, you would have to be the Auditor General to figure out where this information is in the Public Accounts of Canada. There are 36 pages in the last Public Accounts which were for the fiscal year 1986-87. Another financial year has gone by now and we do not know how many taxes have been given away under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act since that time. But in the 1986-87 fiscal year there was almost $1 billion worth of taxes remitted under the authority of sections like Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. An amount of $914,278,119 was given away, tax money that was levied under the tax laws of Canada. Everybody is supposed to be treated equally under those laws, but $1 billion was given back to people who were supposed to be paying taxes under those provisions. That is just for the fiscal year 1986-87.

Back in 1986, the Public Accounts Committee of this House took a look at one particular tax remission. It dealt with Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited and Dome Petroleum Limited. It was found that a remission order had been issued pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act in February, 1985, to Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas, a subsidiary of Dome Petroleum Limited. Over a 10-year period Hudson's Bay was authorized to deduct for income tax purposes the financing costs that Dome incurred in acquiring it. This is actually the cost of one company acquiring another. This was forgiven under one of these provisions of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. The value of that remission order was considered and estimated at the date of this report back in 1986 at some $400 million. This $400 million was given back under the provisions of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. Parliament's permission was not required.

These tax laws would have applied the same way to other companies, but other companies would not have got a tax gift of $400 million. Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company, however, got this tax benefit. This expenditure never came to Parliament for consideration or approval whatsoever.

In the report of the Public Accounts Committee dealing with that one tax remission, the Public Accounts Committee suggested that the Government should give consideration to amending the Financial Administration Act to require: first, the tabling in Parliament of all income tax remission orders; second, the preparation of an explanatory note to accompany each remission order so tabled outlining why the remission order is in the public interest; third, the reference of all remission orders so tabled to the appropriate Standing Committee; and finally, the prior approval by Parliament of all income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million in value.

The thrust of my motion is not just that tax remissions exceeding $20 million should be approved by Parliament, but in fact that all tax remissions should be approved by Parliament. I am not suggesting that we should spend the entire parliamentary year debating tax remissions. It may be that the vast majority of them, and maybe all of them, flow from rational and understandable decisions on the part of the Government. If the facts were placed before the House, perhaps we would all agree to them without question.

My suggestion is merely that we devote some limited time of the House to allow a little debate each year and to actually pass an approval motion so that it just does not happen behind curtains, behind closed doors or under the veil of secrecy where the Privacy Act and the Access to Information Act do not apply. We should be getting these things right out on the floor, making sure that we understand and know why these tax remissions are taking place, and not only those for $20 million but all tax remissions. If it makes sense, sure, we will approve them in short order, and that will be the end of it.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) responded to the report of the Public Accounts Committee in a letter addressed to the Chairman of the committee on March 9, 1987. I would like to quote certain portions of the letter. The Minister of Finance wrote:

> Before dealing in turn with the specific recommendations in the report I should note that I share some of the committee's concerns respecting the remission order process. My responses to some of your recommendations reflect my commitment to improving the process.

The Minister of Finance went on to say:

> As you know most remission orders are currently published in the Canada Gazette within 23 days from their passage by the Governor in Council.
> In response to your recommendation that all income tax remission orders be tabled in Parliament, I propose that they all be published in the Canada Gazette and that the orders above a $20 million threshold be tabled in Parliament on a regular and timely basis. Secondly, I propose to present to Parliament periodic reports of all remission orders. These periodic reports will contain all information that is currently available in the annual public accounts reports, namely the registration number, date, nature and amount of remission (where an amount is available).
> These reports would also contain information that is not currently required for public accounts purposes. In keeping with your recommendation 7b and 17, the proposed reports would include an explanatory note setting out the reasons for the order and, where an amount is not specified in the order, an estimate of the amount to be remitted where an estimate is practicable.
> Your Committee's principal recommendation is that all income tax remission orders should be approved by Parliament.

That was not really the thrust of the recommendation. It was only that those over $20 million be approved. The thrust of my motion, however, is that all of them be approved by Parliament. The Minister went on to say:

> While I recognize that Parliament needs to be fully informed with respect to remission orders, I believe that the power to grant remission orders was given to government for valid reasons that continue to exist. Indeed, it is desirable to maintain the capacity to respond swiftly, effectively and unequivocally where it is necessary to rectify anomalies, unintended results and injustices in the tax system. To require Parliamentary approval of all or some remission orders could seriously impair the effectiveness and timeliness of remission orders and would limit considerably the flexibility of our tax system.

The Minister went on to say:

> One recent example was the remission order granting withholding tax relief for interest on government and long-term corporate debt pending the necessary changes in tax law. Thus, my response to this recommendation is the same as my response of the Eighth Report of the Joint Standing Committee on regulations and other statutory instruments concerning the use of general remission orders. That is, while I have and will continue to avoid the use of remission orders to implement government policy I believe that such orders are an appropriate method for the government to use to grant timely relief.

In effect, the Minister said two things. He said first that he thinks Parliament should have more information about these tax gifts, but he said as well that he does not think that Parliament should have the right to approve them because it is more expeditious for the Government to deal with them.

In fairness to the Minister, just a few days ago, I received a report to Parliament on remission orders approved in the six-month period ending March 31, 1988, and that indicates that it is in response to the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee in connection with remission orders. It indicates as well that the Minister has decided to table semi-annual reports in Parliament on these tax gifts and that such reports will be for a six-month period ending March 31 and September 30 each year. We will get one of these reports and it will set out some explanations about what it is all about and how much the tax gifts have been and that sort of thing.

In fairness to the Minister, he has proceeded with that, but in my view, the Minister misses the point, which is, that it is not necessarily necessary to curtail the authority of the Government to make tax remissions for these wonderful purposes that he outlines here, including correcting anomalies and injustices. It is not necessary to curtail that, but surely it should be necessary for us as a Parliament to approve them, to have this information before us and to be able to ask questions about whether or not everyone is being treated fairly, and to be assured that they are before we actually approve them and enshrine them, whether retroactively or before the fact.

One of the things that bothers me is something that was reported in today's Globe and Mail. One of our colleagues, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer), raised the question of tax remissions to the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co. There was a report in The Globe and Mail today, as reported in Quorum, dealing with this issue. Part of the end of the article reads:

> Gerald Wright, senior policy adviser to Mr. Hockin, said it has not been decided whether Ottawa will help Goodyear Canada. Any federal aid would be extended through a duty remission program for tire manufacturers.

That certainly was not the purpose of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, but that in effect is what it is being used for. Surely Parliament should have the right to approve these tax gifts and giveaways to ensure that every Canadian is being treated exactly the same way and to provide that because of something that goes on behind closed doors, one may not be getting a break that no one else gets.

I hope that the House will approve this motion and that we can get on with repealing Section 17 and getting financial control back in the hands of Parliament and out of the hands of the bureaucracy.

• (1720)

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate on the Hon. Member's suggestion to repeal Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and "require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted, each year, to Parliament for approval."

This is a motion, not a Bill, and so the language is not perhaps the same as it would be in a Bill.

Mr. Belsher: No doubt in my mind.

Mr. Boudria: There is in mine. The phrase about submitting "each year to Parliament for approval" means to me that it would have to be submitted for approval prior to the remission actually taking place. If that were not the case, it would not be approval per se.

If that is what the Hon. Member intends, I have some difficulty with it. Remission of penalties, fines, fees of all kinds sometimes has to be done simply because they were collected erroneously to start with. Of course, that is the reason that it is sometimes necessary to remit taxes, fees and penalties to the person who paid them in the first place.

The Hon. Member referred to these remissions as tax gifts to Canadians. That could very well be true in a number of cases. However, not all remissions are tax gifts. If an amount were erroneously collected, then it is not a gift, it is simply reimbursement.

I would however like to commend the Hon. Member for having brought to our attention this matter of some importance since it is obvious, as he has noted, that when these policies on tax remissions were established, when the House, by way of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, empowered government to make such tax remissions, it was not the legislator's intention to grant Government the power to use the back door to hand out grants. And this is indeed happening in certain cases.

My colleague has just given us a concrete example, that of Goodyear, where federal Government officials, speaking for the Minister of State (Finance), have indicated that if a grant was to be made, it would be made by way of tariff remissions.

In that case, Madam Speaker, I have to agree with the Hon. Member that when a remission is in fact used in lieu of a grant, then Parliament certainly has the right, and the duty as I see it, to have a say on the establishment of the program.

[English]

However, we should note that the Standing Committee on Public Accounts did not ask for exactly what the Hon. Member is suggesting today. I think he recognized that when he said a little earlier that he was going beyond the request made by that committee, of which he is a member.

The committee asked that all income tax remission orders be tabled in Parliament. It said nothing about remission orders other than those dealing with income tax. The committee asked also for a preparation of an explanatory note to accompany each remission order in order to explain to legislators why the amount was remitted to start with. That is entirely reasonable. The committee also requested that there be a reference of all remission orders tabled in that way. In other words, the remission orders relating to income tax would be referred to the standing committee. That did not apply to duties or penalties or anything else, just those related to income tax.

As well, the committee asked that there be prior approval by Parliament of income tax remission orders exceeding $20 million. In other words, with respect to amounts less than $20 million, the remission orders would be tabled in the House, but not to obtain approval. We could review them as we review Order in Council appointments, perhaps. However, the House would have a say on whether or not amounts in excess of $20 million would be remitted. That is far narrower, as I understand it, than what the Hon. Member has suggested today.

When the committee made this recommendation to the Government, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) replied that the committee's principal recommendation is that all income tax remission orders should be approved by Parliament. Obviously he misunderstood what was in the committee's report. The committee said it wanted all income tax remission orders to be tabled in Parliament, but that only those involving amounts greater than $20 million would require approval. I do not think the Minister's reply was adequate, but that was so because he did not seem to have understood what the committee was asking. In any case, the Minister made his response and concluded with several remarks to the Chairman of the committee. Basically we are not very much further ahead than that today, except that certain documents are now being tabled in the House.

We have a request made by a committee of Parliament which was misunderstood by the Minister. He of course then arrived at the wrong conclusion. On the other hand, we have a Member asking that we go well beyond what the committee requested and that we seek parliamentary approval of all remission orders.

There are questions that beg to be asked. I do not know whether it was the intent of the Member to go this far, probably not, but I pose the following question. Under the suggestion he has brought to our attention, would the gasoline tax which is remitted to farmers have to be tabled in the House prior to being remitted? As I read his motion I would come to that conclusion. I do not think that is what he wants because it is a remission of taxes—

Mr. Redway: There is legislation authorizing it.

Mr. Boudria: That is true, but I read here, "All remissions of taxes, fees or penalties"—

Mr. Redway: Under Section 17.

Mr. Boudria: He now says "Under Section 17". Of course that narrows it down. The motion is to repeal Section 17 and says that all remission of taxes globally, not only those collected under Section 17, be approved by Parliament. I hear the Member saying now that that is not really what he wants. This would create something a little onerous, even with the further explanation now offered by the Hon. Member. I have some difficulty supporting this proposition.

• (1730)

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to respond to the proposal in this motion to change the existing procedure for granting remissions of taxes and tariffs.

Madam Speaker, I think it is fair to say that there is a rather low level of public understanding of the workings of the tax and tariff remission system. Therefore I hope that this debate can shed some light on the subject and focus attention on the important issues that are involved, and that my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) will be able to follow the debate and fully appreciate the nature of the problem.

As the House is aware, the Standing Committee on Public Accounts has concerned itself with the question of tax and tariff remissions. The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), sponsor of the motion before the House, has taken an active role in the committee's discussions. Madam Speaker, the motion deals with one of the issues that were discussed in the committee—that of the approval process for granting remissions. But the committee was also very much concerned with other remission issues, and notably the need for greater accountability and openness by government in advising Parliament about remission orders that have been made. I would like to deal with that aspect of the matter in my opening remarks because of its importance.

The accountability of government to Parliament for its actions is of foremost concern to all of us. In the area of tax and tariff remissions, I submit that this Government has made a major advance in ensuring a high degree of openness and accountability for its actions. In March of last year, in response to concerns expressed by the Public Accounts

Committee, the Minister of Finance took three major commitments: first, to publish all income tax remission orders in the Gazette; second, to table all income tax remission orders involving more than $20 million; and third, to implement a new reporting process to Parliament covering all new remission orders.

In carrying out his undertaking, the Minister is taking steps even beyond those commitments. All remission orders, and not just those for income tax remissions, will be Gazetted. Similarly, the promise to table in Parliament orders involving more than $20 million will also apply to tariff remissions as well as those for income tax. These steps have already been implemented. The third step—to put in place a timely and practical process of reporting to Parliament all new remission orders—will be implemented in the very near future. This will involve a report after every six months on orders issued during that period. It will provide all of the information now given in the annual Public Accounts, and also set out the concise reasons for making the order and, where possible, the amount of tax or tariff being forgone or an estimate of the cost to the Treasury.

These measures will be a large improvement on the former practice. Most orders have in the past been listed in the Gazette although some were not—those affecting an individual or orders not of a continuing nature. Now all orders will be published. Moreover, publication in the Gazette did not provide very easy accessibility to Members. Nor did it provide important information that Members should know. The new system demonstrates the real concern of the Minister of Finance in bringing greater transparency to the remission process and creating the basis for real accountability by governement for its actions in this area.

Madam Speaker, I should add that this new reporting system is only part of a much broader approach by the Minister to opening up the process of budget making and tax reform. In his first budget in 1985 the Minister issued a paper setting out proposals for improving the budget process. That process has involved very broad consultation with the public on potential new tax measures prior to every budget since then. The consultation process showed its value particularly in developing the important measures of tax reform which were announced last year. The widest possible range of interested individuals, groups and associations were consulted and had an opportunity to make their views known. The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs also made important contributions in the process of consultation.

So what is being done in relation to tax and tariff remission orders is in keeping with the government's overall approach to greater openness and accountability.

The Public Accounts Committee and the Auditor-General were also concerned about the need for evaluating remission orders and ensuring that they do in fact achieve their purposes. Here too the Government has taken action. A new Tax Measures Evaluation Division has been set up in the Department of Finance. Its purpose is to evaluate not only tax measures but also the more significant tax and tariff remission programs. This new division was itself a response to one of the concerns of the Public Accounts Committee.

So it is very clear, Madam Speaker, that the Minister of Finance shares many of the concerns of the Public Accounts Committee and has been responsive to them. He has not, however, supported the kind of approach proposed in the motion by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). There are good and valid reasons for the position taken by the Minister.

First, however, I should comment on the specific proposal that is embodied in this motion. It would do away with the remission process provided under section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. In its place, it proposes an annual submission to Parliament, for its approval, of all requests for remissions of taxes, fees or penalties.

I should note that the Financial Administration Act remission system applies only to tax remissions. Since January, tariff remissions have been provided under the Customs Tariff and thus would be outside the scope of this motion. The House should know that about 95 per cent of the amount of all remissions involve tariffs.

In considering this motion, however, the important point is whether it would serve the public interest. I submit that it would not, Madam Speaker. And one has only to look at the nature of the great majority of remission orders to realize that a system that requires prior Parliamentary approval would be quite inappropriate.

The large majority of remission orders, for either income tax or tariffs, are granted for reasons of equity—cases, for example, where there has been over-payment of taxes and duties and the letter of the law does not permit a refund or other relief. There are plenty of examples in the remission orders that have been made public. Cases like that of a mother with a claim for $654 in tax refund in respect of child tax credits for 1979. Because she had not filed her claim within the deadline required by law, as you would know, Madam Speaker, there was no way legally to pay the refundable child tax credit which she very much needed. The only recourse was through a remission order.

Another example involved a fairly new product on the market—beer coolers—and the Government decision to remit the excise tax payable on wine that is blended with beer in a brewery. Without that remission there would have been double taxation: the excise tax paid on wine purchased by the brewery to make its beer cooler, and a further excise duty paid on the end product shipped from the brewery. A remission order was the only, the quickest and most direct way of correcting this inequity created by the advent of a new product. The brewery needed relief from a double tax situation that could not have been foreseen when the excise tax and duty legislation was written. Of course, the legislation could be amended, and this no doubt will be done if the situation persists.

But as Members know, changing legislation is a time-consuming and costly process. And in the meantime it could not help the brewer who wants to develop a market for this product now, not in six months or a year.

This requirement for prompt relieving action is a common thread running through most remission cases. The Public Accounts Committee has also been concerned that relief in remission cases should not be delayed.

The Government's position was well summarized by the Minister of Finance in a letter dated March 8, 1987 to the Public Accounts Committee in response to a committee report. Allow me to quote from that letter: "While I recognize that Parliament needs to be fully informed with respect to remission orders, I believe that the power to grant remission orders was given to government for valid reasons that continue to exist. Indeed it is desirable to maintain the capacity to respond swiftly, effectively and unequivocally where it is necessary to rectify anomalies, unintended results and injustices in the tax system. To require parliamentary approval of all or some remission orders could seriously impair the effectiveness and timeliness of remission orders and would limit considerably the flexibility of our tax system."

Madam Speaker, the Minister was referring to the great majority of remission cases which involve situations of inequity, hardships and injustices. And I am convinced, Madam Speaker, that my colleague from Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) would not condone unfair taxation.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yet this is what you are doing.

Mr. Vincent: In addition, as Members know—and I hope they know, Madam Speaker—there are a relatively small number of tariff remission cases, usually involving quite substantial amount, which are more in the nature of industrial programs. They are usually conditional on the industry carrying out specific undertakings or performances such as major investments.

Under the tax system, such cases will be reported promptly to Parliament. And like any government action they will be open to questioning and challenge. That is the essence of government accountability, which is fully supported by the Minister. This Government will not be making any remission orders that it is not fully prepared to explain and defend in Parliament.

Members should be aware, however, that the number of such so-called duty remission programs will substantially decline. That is because of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The Agreement specifically provides that no new or expanded tariff relief provisions which include performance requirements by an industry shall be introduced after next June 30 or after congressional approval of the agreement. Such remission programs that are now in effect are to be terminated before the end of the 10-year term of the agreement January 1, 1998.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I submit that we should not adopt the major change to our remission system proposed in the motion before us. The present system is a good and workable one, improved as it has been with the recent changes ensuring much greater openness and answerability to Parliament by the Government for its remission orders.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I am glad the Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has raised this particular issue. While I have reservations about the specifics of his proposal, his effort to bring greater openness, open government, and accountability on the question of tax remissions is very desirable.

I respect the kind of quixotic way in which he continues within the Conservative Party to carry on this campaign. However, after three and a half years in the House, I think he should have realized that the Conservative Party, like the Liberals before it, is beyond repair, and he should either join his colleagues on the independent benches on this side or come over to the New Democratic Party.

I believe the whole question of openness is fundamental to many Canadians in terms of their sense of whether or not the tax system is really fair. The Hon. Member for York East cited the case of Dome and the remission order of Hudson's Bay Gas which involved the forgiveness of some $400 million.

The Government is saying that in the future, remissions that have a value exceeding $20 million will be reported in some way or another to the House of Commons. I suppose that represents some progress. I am unaware of the mechanism to be established and, as finance spokesperson for my Party, I have yet to see any of these reports about how taxpayers' money is being spent through remissions under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act.

There are several questions with which we must deal. For example, should Section 17 be repealed? Section 17 is exceedingly broad. I will read a couple of paragraphs into the record. Section 17(1) states:

> The Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty.

For example, if the Cabinet decrees that returning all the income tax to people who are registered members of the Rhinoceros Party or other political Party is in the public interest, it can do so. While there may be some criticism from the public, it has that power.

Those orders are rather frequently gazetted in the The Canada Gazette which is a publication of mind-stupefying complexity and opacity. It is very difficult to understand in order to know what is happening.

The Canada Gazette in February, 1988, contained a lengthy amendment order under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, dealing with commercial vehicles. It is apparently justified because of the need to ensure consistency with the new customs tariff. Perhaps there is no specific value to that because the new order has the same value as the old order. However, the point is that, apart from gazetting, the House of Commons was not consulted or informed.

On the other hand, in 1973 and 1974, a number of trade union members on the Victoria Colonist were on strike and set up a union paper during the period of the strike which I believe was known as the Victoria Express. They were compelled to pay tax and, for various reasons which are not spelled out, the current Government decided to remit the tax that was either owing or had been paid by those trade union members. Patricia Turnbull is gazetted as receiving $1.14 for tax paid for the fiscal year 1973 and $40.60 for 1974.

I believe the Hon. Member for York East would agree that a few tens of thousands of dollars in taxes remitted in this particular case is somewhat small for the House of Commons to deal with by means of a vote or legislation. On the other hand, I think he would also agree that stating that only those remissions worth more than $20 million would be studied is a little too large an amount.

For example, I do not know the value of the remission cited by the Parliamentary Secretary, which he said was to avoid double taxing, where wines are used for wine coolers and are mixed in various ways with beer. That is something I would welcome right now. That is not a relevant comment, but it may be appropriate at the end of the day.

Mr. Dorin: A point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: There are no vineyards in Alberta, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Dorin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member continues to suggest that this information and these various amounts are not available. In fact, all of these amounts, not simply $20 million, are listed and published in a report provided by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the House of Commons every six months. The latest report is one ending March 31, 1988, to which all Members have access. It gives an indication of the scope and reason for the order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that it is debate. There are three minutes left to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I think you will agree that the intervention by my colleague on the Finance Committee, while totally out of order, was in fact a helpful intervention. I am glad to learn about that. It illustrates the complexity of the issue.

Should Parliament have the right to review major remissions? In my opinion, the answer is yes. I believe we must go beyond that and look at the whole question of tax expenditures, which include these remissions and far beyond.

The Auditor General pointed out in his 1984 report that the federal Government now spends about 30 cents to 50 cents through the tax system for every $1 of government spending. The Nielsen Task Force in 1983 estimated that 1983 tax expenditures totalled $36 billion compared to direct expenditures of $57 billion. So if we are now getting a report every six months from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of the value of all remission orders, that is just a very small start to the kind of openness I believe we should be looking at.

In the minority report which my colleague from Regina and I submitted on the question of tax reform, we urged that every tax expenditure should be reviewed first by the relevant Department, so it could be looked at with respect to alternative policy instruments. Then there should be an appropriate tax expenditure analysis presented annually, along with the spending Estimates in the budget of the Public Accounts, and tax expenditures of all kinds—and we are talking about $40 billion or $50 billion a year—should be integrated with the spending envelope system and, therefore, subject to cabinet committee control. Finally, they should be subject to the approval of Parliament.

I note, and this is a sign of the kind of weakness of the system, that the Nielsen Task Force, which my Party criticized because of the way it handled this question of public spending, was looking at the trees and not at the forest and in fact spent a total of about 3 per cent or 4 per cent of the number of pages they produced in commenting on government expenditures, commenting on tax expenditures, which amount to some 30 per cent or 40 per cent of tax expenditures. It would certainly amount to far more than that when one looks at program expenditures.

While I have questions about eliminating Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, I believe that the thrust of the argument of my friend from York East is an appropriate one. If he will join with us in bringing about greater accountability and openness, if he will go beyond this question of the remission orders under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act to the whole question of tax expenditures in general, and if he will join us in trying to ensure that all tax expenditures are voted upon every year, then regardless of whether or not he joins the NDP caucus, I know on this issue we can work solidly and very positively together.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Madam Speaker, the Government welcomes this chance to consider remission orders in the context of the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). It has been, and continues to be, this Government's objective to increase openness and accountability in the tax and tariff system. Let us look first at the budget process. Members will know of the steps we have taken specifically to open up the budget process as far as possible and to have widespread consultation and examination of potential tax measures. In line with these objectives, in our very first Budget in 1985 we presented a paper entitled The Canadian Budget Process: Proposals for Improvement.

Our approach was also illustrated in the tax reform process. Before undertaking reforms, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made himself and officials available to a large number of groups covering most social interest groups, the business community, volunteer organizations, economists, representatives of small and medium-sized businesses, unions and so on. After the proposals were published in the White Paper, the Minister again undertook to meet representatives from affected sectors who had things to say and representations to make.

Next, the proposals in the White Paper were examined in the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, which was chaired by the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), the committee on which I am happy to serve. This committee traversed the country and held hearings. Almost every imaginable group was heard from. The report of the committee contained 81 recommendations, to which the Minister of Finance in turn responded.

We have said that this process of tax reform has been one of the most open in the history of the federal Government. All affected individuals, taxpayers and citizens had several opportunities to speak with decision-makers. The process followed on tax reform also is a good example of how the Government's policy of widespread consultation interacts with the wider powers given to committees of this House.

With respect to remission orders, the Public Accounts Committee in its first report was extremely critical of the remission's process in an income tax order concerning the acquisition of Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas by Dome. This was an order passed by a previous Government. In responding to the committee on behalf of the Government, the Minister of Finance indicated that he also had concerns about accountability in the remission process. The Government immediately took steps to open up the process and make it more accountable. It specifically undertook to publish all income tax orders in The Gazette, to table in Parliament all income tax orders over $20 million, and to report periodically to Parliament on all new income tax remission orders and to give as much information as possible on their costs and rationale.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) reported to the House a few moments ago, one of these six month reports to Parliament on remission orders is available to all Members of Parliament. It was specifically in response to the recommendations of the Public Accounts Committee.

In the course of carrying out these commitments, it was realized that any report on income tax remissions would be a pretty slim report. A review by the Office of the Comptroller General indicated that income tax orders, for instance, comprised less than 5 per cent of the value of all remission orders. It was also hard to see why other remission orders should not get the same open treatment as income tax orders. The Government, therefore, decided to table all remission orders worth $20 million or more in the House, to publish all remission orders in The Gazette and to issue a six-monthly report on all new remission orders to the House.

Let me say in conclusion on this point that the Government can claim credit for making the remission process more accountable, for promptly responding to concerns expressed about this process in a committee of this House and, indeed, for going much further than its original commitment to Parliament to make the remission process more accountable. Instead of just having an open process for income tax remission orders, all remission orders, including tariff, excise and sales tax orders, are now included in a more accountable process.

Placing the remission order process in a wider context, this is only one of the steps the Government has taken to increase accountability and openness in the tax and tariff system. Other steps include increased and wider consultation and the increased role of committees of the House.

It is important not only to be accountable but to be seen to be accountable. In the latter respect, the Government has also been increasing its efforts to make information on remissions accessible to Members. I have already remarked on some of these efforts such as the six-monthly report on new remission orders and the tabling in Parliament of all orders over $20 million. At the same time, efforts have been made to increase the usefulness of information in the annual Public Accounts.

For instance, these accounts will now give the annual amounts remitted under an order for the duration of its life. Some information will also be excluded to make the accounts more meaningful. Thus, a recent order remitted some $60,000 of tax paid on strike benefits to 298 members of a union. Previously, the Public Accounts would have listed all these individuals and the amounts they received. This information will still be available at Revenue Canada for any member of the public who wants to inquire about the order, but the Public Accounts will not list the individual beneficiaries of this order over several pages.

In conclusion, emphasis has also been put on increasing the meaningfulness of information in the Public Accounts without sacrificing public access to information.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

BRETTON WOODS AND RELATED AGREEMENTS ACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-126, an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Skelly:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> "Bill C-126, An Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose on Wednesday, May 25, 1988 there were nine minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly). I see that the Hon. Member is not present. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, the Bill before us today, Bill C-126, is an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act. It provides for two amounts, one of $550 million and one of $250 million. The terms of the loans are favourable but will be used mainly to service existing debts. Third World debt, as many Canadians know, is over $1 trillion and rising. In 1987 Third World countries paid the IMF $5.9 billion more than they received and commercial banks now take more than they lend, a situation that has been going on for some time. Development assistance is drying up and, despite what our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) promised, which was to reach .7 per cent of our Gross National Product by 1990, that goal was moved to 1995 and has now been moved on into the 21st century, a promise which the Government of Canada should clearly have met. Stephen Lewis, our Ambassador to the United Nations, said in an interview with the Vancouver Sun on May 9:

> The West is betraying the African continent.

The debts of sub-Sahara and African countries are not as large in absolute numbers as those of, say, Brazil or Mexico, but when expressed as a percentage of their Gross National Product or their debt service to export ratio, the debts are devastating. The IMF imposes structural reforms on these nations, and as one official put it, "cheaper money for stricter policies". These social costs of adjustment are borne most heavily by the very poor. The policies that were passed by my Party at its most recent convention deal directly with the social problems that were created by the coercion of the IMF and of developed nations on Third World nations. Our Convention Policy, B.3.2, reads in part:

> . . . The IMF, in pursuit of monetarist objectives has imposed conditions upon Third World countries which have led to drastic devaluation of currencies, reduction of already low wage levels, elimination of food subsidies and cut-backs in social services. Enforcement of these unpopular policies has required repressive internal security measures which are directly counter to development . . .

It goes on to call upon the Canadian Government to respond positively to Third World proposals for immediate debt relief such as the repayment of a rate equal to a ceiling of 10 per cent of export earnings proposed by Peruvian President, Alan Garcia.

Specifically, we oppose tying a debt to domestic export development. What developing countries need most is a commitment from countries like Canada to long-term infrastructural development assistance of the kind that will allow a broad based and self-sustainable economic and social development in the recipient countries. That was put on the record some time ago, in fact on September 10 of last year, by our House Leader from Kamloops—Shuswap.

The IMF is not a neutral economic instrument, benevolently assisting Third World nations in a disinterested fashion. Voting on the IMF executive board is weighted by size of contribution, meaning that the United States has a predominant influence, and hence the emphasis on structural reform meaning a tax on social programs, on local self-development and so on. This Government has not opposed the use of the international banking system for right wing purposes, as we saw with the refusal of loans to Nicaragua.

It is time to develop a new system of international credit. The Bretton Woods agreement no longer works. It was developed in 1944 under very different economic conditions. The United States was the mainstay of that system. It had a commitment to multilateralism and the U.S. dollar was the unassailable basis of world currency. However, the U.S. no longer operates on a truly multilateral basis. Instead, multilateral institutions are seen under the Reagan administration as an extension of domestic policy. The U.S. dollar no longer serves to stabilize and facilitate the world economy. The current function of the market system serves to drive down world commodity prices, worsening Third World Governments' balance of payment problems.

An example is one of the areas hardest hit, as pointed out by Stephen Lewis, and that is the sub-Sahara of Africa and certainly the whole of the continent of Africa. We have seen a fall in commodity prices there. They fell from a base of 100 in 1980 to 61.1 by 1986, and the fall continues. The solution of export-driven development simply serves to increase problems.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), who has done a great deal of work in relation to CIDA and Third World problems for our Party, has said:

> When prices drop for Third World countries they often respond by producing more. Our whole economic system is based on the fact that in order to compete people have to produce more.
> When everybody produces more it creates a glut on the market and, as a result, commodity prices fall further.

The Bill before us today, Bill C-126, provides funds in two different ways to a particular section of the IMF with which I will deal in a moment. Canada's record is not good in this area. As I said, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not been able to get the assistance of his Cabinet colleagues on the Treasury Board to move forward with a more substantive role in dealing with the debts of the Third World. While our record in that area is not good, it is still better than that of most industrialized countries. There is clearly a need for a new international economic order, and I am saddened that this Government and this country have not taken more seriously, either in terms of within Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the discussion that is taking place on the floor is very important, but it is getting a bit noisy, and the Chair wishes to hear the Hon. Member who has the floor.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. That was very helpful.

Many Canadians were hoping that the Government would take more seriously the recommendations of the World Commission on the Environment chaired by Prime Minister Brundtland which brought forward in a very real way the problems of the globe as a whole and why we need to move more vigorously toward the concept of sustainable development, not only within Canada but around the world. One of the problems faced on the African continent and in other Third World countries is the fact that the nature of the IMF loan process does not allow for or promote the concept of sustainable development.

Bill C-126 provides a loan base up to $550 million to the Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility, known as the ESAF, of the International Monetary Fund. ESAF was initiated at the 1987 Venice Summit of the G-7. It called for an increase to $10 billion, more than double the amount that was sought in 1986.

Second, Bill C-126 provides for a grant of up to $250 million to the same body. The $550 million in the first part of the Bill is a loan that can be made through the ESAF at market interest rates and then the money is loaned by the IMF on concessional terms. This money is for the highly indebted and poor countries, largely in the south Sahara of Africa. The money is used to support structural adjustment programs aimed at restoring the balance of payments and promoting economic growth.

It is good to provide help, but often the structural adjustment programs are too stringent or promote developments that are overly export oriented and not sustainable and provide little if any real benefit to local populations. As we have noted in many countries around the world, the local populations in fact have to give up wages, housing conditions and even food in order to meet the structural adjustment programs imposed upon them by the IMF.

Canada's expense in relation to the Bill is the difference between the loan rates of, say, .5 per cent in terms of the loan to a Third World country and what would have been received commercially, and that will work out to about $30 million per year to be added to our $2.7 billion foreign aid programs.

I would like to spend a moment dealing with what some of those so-called foreign aid programs are. They are often raised by my constituents, and I know in the past, they have been raised by Members of the House. Canadians generally support very strongly the provision of assistance, whether through funds like the one before us today or through our foreign aid programs.

On November 10, 1987, I received a letter from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, which reads:

> Dear Jim:
> Thank you for your letter of October 15, 1987 requesting a complete summary of all federal government funding to forest and/or mining ventures outside Canada from September 1984 to September 1987.
> I am enclosing a list of Export Development Corporation, CIDA and PEMD financial projects. I hope you find this information helpful.

I am sure Hon. Members will find it helpful, because I think many know what was supposed to occur within Canada. I see that the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) is here. He was one of the great promoters of a full Ministry of Forests in Canada. Forestry is our largest industry. More than one million Canadians are directly or indirectly employed in the forest sector. I think it is worth taking a look at what kind of assistance the Government is providing outside Canada that it refuses to provide inside Canada.

Let me deal first with the funding provided for mining. Funding is going to Chile, to the Chuquicamata copper mine. A very substantial amount of money is going there. Funds are going to New Guinea, again to Chile and to Brazil. Under the CIDA projects, there is funding going to Botswana for mining, Botswana for training of diamond drillers, Ivory Coast and Ghana for gold mining.

There has been a fair amount of coverage in Canada and in North America generally about the problems that are being found in Brazil through this particular kind of funding, funding provided for small-scale gold exploration and for the training in mineral exploration by the Government of Canada to Brazil. There has been rather notorious coverage given to the fact that there is wholesale slaughter and murder of the indigenous populations in Brazil in the midst of the gold rush in that country. In fact, experts on the impact of these kinds of projects on the forests and on the indigenous people were here in Ottawa just a few weeks ago, pointing out how terrible the impact is on the indigenous and aboriginal populations in South America of some of the kinds of so-called booms that are going on. It is extremely short-sighted of Canada to be involved in funding projects which are part of the murderous slaughter of aboriginal people in South America.

Many Canadians would also be interested to know that the Government of Canada is funding a geochemical survey and various forms of technical assistance in Jamaica on the impoundment of bauxite tailings and metallic mineral surveys. Many, if not most, Canadians know that Alcan and others are the principal beneficiaries of bauxite mining in Jamaica. The Government of Canada, through so-called foreign aid, is doing what Alcan and others would like to see done in terms of such developments.

With regard to the problems which Third World countries are having in meeting their loan payments, as I said, Third World countries paid the IMF $5.9 billion more than they received last year with commercial banks taking more than they loaned. Let us look at the kinds of projects Canada has been funding in some of these countries.

In the Asian region, on forest projects alone, Canada has supplied $98.766 million in funding, a very substantial amount of money. Some of the funded projects are good and I think all Canadians would support them. For example, $46.250 million was spent in India on social forestry.

The harvesting of wood and the over-consumption of plants by various ungulates, whether goats, cattle, or whatever, has created a serious problem of desertification in many areas of the world. I am sure all Canadians support programs which lead toward soil conservation, the redevelopment of forest bases, and all that comes with them in terms of genetic diversity and so on.

Many Canadians scratch their heads when they realize the level of funding being provided by the Government for programs for the training of forest industry workers outside of Canada, which programs are also needed in Canada but are not available here. Let me give some examples of that. In Indonesia we fund a forest industry vocational school as well as programs in fire management, forest management, and rural development and forestry. As I said the funding for that amounts to over $98 million at the present time. In Anglo Africa, Canada is providing $19.4 million for forest equipment credit, agriforestry nursery and extension in the Sudan, and institutional buildings and training in Rwanda.

In Francophone Africa the region total is $139.45 million. In the Cameroun, for example, we provide a forest equipment credit of $12 million. In Zaire we fund charcoal production technology as well as professional forestry training at $3.2 million. Institutional buildings are being constructed in Niger at a cost of $12.1 million.

It is quite proper that we are providing this program funding to Third World countries which require this assistance, but it is amazing that in our country our largest industry does not have a national Minister of Forests. In fact, the Minister of Forests has been delegated responsibilities for mining, and the Canadian Forest Service has been much downgraded since the Government took office.

Funding in the Americas and the Caribbean total $68.365 million. An example which drew my attention is the funding going to St. Lucia, an area about one-tenth the size of South Moresby. This year, $5.5 million is being provided for management and conservation of forests there. That is an interesting expenditure when various regions of British Columbia have been asking for program funds for post-secondary institutional training for forest workers and cannot get it. We have been looking for funding for dealing more extensively with what is known as the not satisfactorily restocked backlog and cannot get additional funding for that.

Nine of the ten federal-provincial agreements are coming up for renegotiation. It appears that the Government is not planning to carry on that A-base funding for five-year commitments to reforestation in Canada but seems to be able to find hundreds of millions for outside of Canada.

In Honduras $12.3 million is being provided this year for tropical forest development and management. In Peru $3.85 million is being provided for forestry university buildings. Peru is being given an equipment line of credit of $26 million and $6.1 million for forestry technical schools.

It is interesting that the Government provides funding to institutions outside of Canada for post-doctoral studies in forestry and does not provide it to a single university or college in Canada. It is a very interesting concept that many kinds of post-secondary educational development is fully funded by Canada outside our country but is not provided to Canadians unless they want to leave Canada.

I think Canadians would be interested in hearing about EDC financing. Let us keep in mind that the Secretary of State for External Affairs and others in the Government of Canada cite $2.7 billion as financing for foreign aid programs in Third World countries.

As an example, $19 million is going to Compania de Carbones of Chile for the construction of an open-pit mine and a bulk loading marine coal terminal. In addition, they are getting $874,000 for coal handling and ship loading, $79,000 for six 120-D and seven 35-D rear dump trucks. Millions of dollars are being spent on electrostatic precipitators, hydraulic rock breakers, mobile rock breakers, coal mining equipment, traction thickeners, flotation mechanisms, and two sag mills with liners. The list goes on and on. Seventy-six million dollars is being spent on mining equipment for the BAO coal project in China.

We must keep in mind that this funding is called foreign aid. Which Canadian companies are getting the foreign aid? Spar Aerospace is getting $765,000 to put in satellite ground station equipment in China. De Havilland is getting $1.6 million for Twin Otter aircraft and spares to go to China. Euclid is getting foreign aid which is going to the United Mizrahi Bank in Israel to acquire seven 100 ton rear-haul dump trucks. The Bank Hapoalim, again in Israel, is getting funding for wire screening line. The lists go on and on. Millions and millions of dollars are going to all kinds of Canadian companies to assist the borrower to buy equipment which will quite often, particularly in the mining sector, go into direct competition with Canadian operations.

Another example is Timberjack which is getting funding to provide seven Model-380 Timberjack log skidders to Chile. That is interesting in light of the human rights allegations our own Secretary of State of State for External Affairs has made against Chile.

I will conclude with just one more example. I know that the Minister of Science and Technology is interested in this because he used very similar information in boondoggling the Liberals in British Columbia prior to the last election. I will just remind the Minister that $900 million of the record profits two years in a row of MacMillan Bloedel is going to Tasmania to open a pulp mill.

The Government is putting no new money into reforestation, silviculture, post-secondary education or anything else in British Columbia. Where are the great promises of the Government to provide at least the the kinds of programs and assistance to post-secondary education within Canada which it provides so glowingly to countries outside of Canada?

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, while listening to the Member's remarks I wondered whether there is any limit on irresponsibility or unfairness for Members in this House. The Member and I went to the same school together many years ago, although he is much older than I. To hear that kind of piffle makes me wonder whether he even read the Brundtland report. I put it to him that based on his remarks it is very doubtful that he has. If he had, the nonsense and irresponsible extremism that he was muttering in this House would not have been muttered. Can a Member get up and say anything with no sense of responsibility or knowledge and no sense of the developing world? As a westerner it makes me wince to think that he would get up as a western Member and utter the kind of gibberish he was uttering.

To take one example of his nonsensical speech, he seems to criticize CIDA for giving aid to Zaire. Maybe he does not like projects going to French-speaking Africa, maybe that is the root of his problem. However, I would point out to him that one project CIDA is funding, which I had occasion to visit, is creating jobs for between five and six hundred citizens of that country. We are providing schooling for children in northern Zaire. What that, may I say it, idiotic Member is suggesting is that Canada should not be giving aid to any part of the world.

I put it to him, and hope he will have something sensible to say in reply, that he should just give a little bit of thought before he gets up and sounds like a cannon going off in the atmosphere of this House.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I guess we have just heard from John Turner's brother-in-law.

Mr. Prud'homme: Don't—

Mr. Fulton: That is the kind of idiocy we have come to expect from that Member.

Mr. McDermid: Get out of here!

Mr. Fulton: I challenge the Hon. Member to get up and say that he has read the Brundtland report from cover to cover, because I have.

Mr. Kilgour: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I did a review of the report and I assure the Hon. Member it is not very easy reading. His Grade 8 mentality would find it even harder. I did a review for a Foreign Service officers publication called Bout De Papier.

Mr. McDermid: Have you read it, Jim?

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I would just like to kindly ask my friend to leave family matters aside when we debate issues of major importance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Mailly: Typical NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall we return to debating whatever is at hand here? The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) wanted to continue his answer.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) has proven once again to be a rather foul-mouthed and narrow little person.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Oh, oh! Unlike the Hon. Member, I have read the Brundtland report. In fact, just a few weeks ago I sat on a panel at the University of British Columbia—

Mrs. Mailly: You sat on it all right.

Mr. Fulton: —with a Member from Vancouver who happens to be quite knowledgeable about it. I would be interested in knowing why the Government of which the Hon. Member from Edmonton is a member has done nothing to implement the Brundtland report in Canada. It has been publicly endorsed but there is no funding and no movement toward implementing sustainable development. The tone of my remarks was in relation to the fact that if we are going to move toward the very thoughtful, important and globally required recommendations of the Brundtland Commission, we need to have some kind of realistic and sustainable funding. The Government, albeit it speaks glowingly of the marvellous Brundtland report, does not put forward any funding or any kind of institutional development to actually implement it.

The reason I made the remarks I did in relation to what the Secretary of State for External Affairs provided to me was because the Hon. Member's own colleagues during the last election campaign made wide use of the very same sort of information. I think it is important that accurate information be put on the record as to exactly what the levels of funding are, what projects are good, and what kinds of problems Third World countries, particularly those in the sub-Sahara, are finding with some of the strict requirements placed on them by the IMF where they have to give up all kinds of existing operations, even those that provide them with food.

One example that I gave was in relation to Brazil. If the Hon. Member had read the Brundtland report, he would know about the very good example provided in that report which dealt with the forest management planning going on in Brazil. The tropical forests are being cut down and palm-oil plantations are planted. As the Brundtland report pointed out, a particular vine that grows naturally in the tropical rain forest can and does provide a better quality oil in larger quantities per hectare in its natural growing state than you get after you harvest those same hectares and plant palm-oil trees.

Many of the assistance programs offered through the IMF and from a country such as Canada have proven to have had a negative and deleterious effect not only on the forests of Brazil and other countries, but in particular on the economies of those indigenous people who have made use of those areas for so long.

The Hon. Member would like to paint my remarks as somehow being against the provision of funds for certain projects in Zaire and so on. Nothing could be further from the truth. He certainly did not sustain any kind of argument. He just popped up out of his seat and said the Hon. Member for Skeena is opposed to funding in Zaire. What hypocrisy. The facts of the matter are that his Government has not moved realistically to establish even the very limited target put forward by the Secretary of State for External Affairs of .7 per cent of GNP. Now that Minister says maybe sometime in the 21st century we will start to approach .7 per cent of GNP. Push it off five years. Push it off 10 years. Push it off 15 years.

I think what Stephen Lewis had to say, that the West is betraying the African Continent, is true. I would like to hear the Hon. Member get up and sustain some kind of logical and harmonious debate in this House about why his Government has done nothing about Brundtland. It has not been able to achieve even .7 per cent of the GNP. It has not been able, either through CIDA or EDC or any of the other forums that we participate in, to actually get some movement on sustainable development. I think the Member got up and shot off a bunch of hot air without knowing what he is talking about.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Further questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Madam Speaker, we are discussing an Act to amend the Bretton Woods and Related Agreements Act. The contribution I would like to make to the debate concerns the effect the arms race has on economic policies and conditions in both developed and underdeveloped countries. It is important to point out, particularly to Canadians who feel they do not contribute very much to the arms race, that that is not true. We are almost like prisoners of war because of the arms race. Our standard of living has been reduced because of the arms race.

The world spends well over $1 trillion a year on arms. It is estimated that in the U.S. over $500 million a day is spent on arms production. You cannot take $1 trillion out of the world's economy without reducing everyone's standard of living. Let me illustrate how we in Canada pay for the arms race and because we do we are economic prisoners of war.

Normally interest rates are generally one or two points above inflation. We now have an inflation rate of approximately 4 per cent and interest rates should be around 6 per cent. Indeed, a 6 per cent interest rate on mortgages, government debt, and farm debt, would alleviate much of the hardship that working men and women, including farmers, in Canada experience. Certainly a 6 per cent interest rate would make mortgages much less expensive. Today, families often require two income earners in order to provide the basic necessity of a roof over one's head, when only one income earner was needed in previous generations.

Why are interest rates so high? I maintain that it is because of the arms race. The deficit in the United States is so large that interest on that deficit requires 90 per cent of total U.S. savings, including individuals, corporations and businesses, just to service that debt. The United States must have a strong American dollar to provide for its capital needs and therefore must have high interest rates to attract international capital. Of course, Canada's interest rate is directly tied to the American interest rate. We also need a higher interest rate to maintain capital at home and attract capital from abroad. For that reason, our interest rate is substantially more than the 2 per cent or 3 per cent over the inflation rate. That is the way in which Canadians pay for the arms race. If it was not for the arms race, our mortgage payments would be less, debt payments for farmers would be less, and the debt payments of the Government would be less. It is estimated that for every one percentage drop in interest rates the public treasury in Canada saves $1 billion. The arms race affects us all because it costs money and reduces our standard of living.

We live in an age of unprecedented abundance, with a technological ability to produce that is unparalleled in the history of the human race. Yet we live in an age of scarcity, when there is not enough money to provide decent housing, medical attention, educational facilities, and old age facilities for our society. We cannot afford to provide decent health care or decent housing for our old and our infirm. We cannot look after our mentally disabled because the Government says it does not have the resources in an age of cut-backs and restrictions. The poor and disabled of society are the ones who suffer the most. Why do we live in an age of scarcity when we should be enjoying the benefits of abundance? Again, it is because of the arms race. The arms race sucks wealth from every country and channels it into the most useless form of production—arms production—at the expense of our farmers, home owners, our sick, young and disabled.

One hopeful result of the stock market crash last year is that perhaps the superpowers began to realize the economic limits to the arms race. That crash occurred because the arms race caused the United States to become the greatest debtor nation in the world. It could no longer continue to borrow money without international lenders realizing there was a limit.

The crisis of that stock market crash has not been resolved and the world economy stands on the brink of a major recession, if not a depression. It is more than a question of confidence, it is a question of how much longer the superpowers can continue spending so much money on arms production. I believe they have reached the limit. Certainly the Soviet Union has realized it has reached that limit. The Soviet Union spends about as much on arms production as the United States but has half the gross domestic product. It can even less afford the arms build-up.

I suggest that if we are really interested in arms reduction and disarmament agreements, rather than send generals and diplomats to the negotiations, we should send officials from the Department of Finance and Treasury Board to determine how to reduce arms expenditures. I think people from the Finance Department and Treasury Board could find ways to reduce the arms expenditures that generals and diplomats have difficulty determining.

The Government has taken another step in human folly and stupidity with its venture into the big league by ordering nuclear submarines. When the world is beginning to realize the economic limits to the arms race, the Government believes it can afford $11 billion or $12 billion for nuclear submarines to patrol our Arctic. That is insanity.

I appreciate this opportunity to link the arms race to the problems not only in Third World countries but in western industrialized countries as well. I appreciate this opportunity to talk about the cut-backs and restrictions that are taking place during this age of abundance. I realize the road to disarmament will be long and rough. Yet perhaps it is economic necessity that will force us down that road and I believe that once we take that step there will be some very hopeful signs for the human race.

We have the potential to produce enough for every man, woman and child so that we can provide clean water, decent health facilities and decent housing. We have the potential to overcome pestilence, disease and hunger. We only need to redirect that wealth away from the death machine and its production of armaments into what I call the human machine, the human race stands on the brink of a marvellous future.

I sincerely hope that this Parliament and Canada will play its part in helping humankind find a new and better direction.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I want to compliment the Hon. Member on his speech. He referred to the Government's plan to buy nuclear submarines. Clearly, this is a very ill-advised policy and many questions must be asked in relation to this unbelievable project. Will the Hon. Member comment a little further on this policy? Can we afford them, and more important, why do we need these submarines?

As the Hon. Member knows, the Conservative Government is taking a very sharp turn from the traditional direction of the Canadian Government in this regard. Therefore, will these submarines undermine Canada's stance against the threat of nuclear arms? How can the Government justify such an action at this time when the world is talking about disarmament? We see the President of the United States and Secretary General Gorbachev meeting in an effort to bring peace to the world. How can our Government go in a different direction?

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, I totally agree with my colleague. It is insane. The rest of the world, hopefully, is moving in the direction of disarmament, of lessening the arms race, in large part forced by economic necessity. The deficit in the United States is so high it just cannot continue with the arms build-up. It is, as are the Russians, being forced to sit down and begin negotiations to cut back. Meanwhile we are going way out in some strange field and buying these submarines as if we can afford them.

Every night in the City of Regina there are kids who go to bed hungry. Hospitals are being shut down because there is not enough money to keep them in operation. University programs are being cut back because there is not enough money for them. And we are spending billions of dollars for nuclear submarines. It is obscene. Of course, we cannot afford it. Of course, our priorities are totally out of kilter. Future generations and civilizations will look back at us and scratch their heads and wonder what our priorities were all about.

Here we are spending billions of dollars on nuclear submarines and on this dangerous technology in order to defend ourselves, yet what we are defending is decaying within because we do not have the resources to feed our hungry, to look after our needy and to do the basic human Christian things which are what a good society is all about. So we are protecting ourselves at the expense of what we feel we are really all about. There is some strange logic in that.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague from Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and my colleague from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) for their good acting talents. They speak with much emotion about very complex issues, in a very simplistic way, and it is very easy then to get an audience's attention. But the fact is that a country like ours does not live in a vacuum, all by itself. It is part of the world community and pious wishes cannot solve the problems. We should consider some facts that the Hon. Member for Regina East did not mention; for example, our Government cancelled Third World debt at the Francophone Summit. We finally had a Francophone Summit. We managed to make peace between France and Canada on our role in the French-speaking world and at this second Summit held in Quebec City, we reached an agreement to cancel Third World debt. This is something much more practical and it does much more to ease poverty in the Third World; it also gives an example to the world community of something practical to do, rather than make passionate speeches in the abstract, quite comfortably in this beautiful Chamber. Problems are solved out in the field.

So I find it most unfortunate that on such a major issue of practical importance, Hon. Members choose to play petty politics where the needs are so great.

They talk about poverty as if it were a soap opera. They talk about aid for the Third World; they talk about nuclear submarines as if it were a Rambo movie. It is really regrettable that for the past few minutes, they have lowered the level of this debate on such an important issue by petty politicking. So I would ask my colleague from Regina East (Mr. de Jong) why he forgot to mention in his presentation that we, the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada, took the first step to cancelling the Third World debt. We converted the loans to grants and that is what the Third World was asking us to do, because we believe that we should give people what they want and not what we want to give them.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, unfortunately, I understand there is a House agreement that very soon the question will be put. Therefore, I do not think I have the full time to answer the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member. Let me just say, however, that if the Hon. Member thought I was dealing with the issue in a petty and partisan way, I apologize, because I really attempted not to do that. I think the issues with which we are dealing today are way beyond partisan or ideological politics.

In my remarks I tried to remain very balanced in terms of the insanity of both the left and the right with respect to the arms build-up. The Member accuses me, perhaps, of being over simplistic. I agree that in many ways these are very complex issues. Yet at some stage we must surely be able to draw some basic, general conclusions and ask the question, is this right or wrong?

We are spending these billions of dollars on nuclear submarines, a technology which is very questionable, and I know in my City of Regina there are kids who are going to bed hungry tonight. Is this right? It might be simplistic, yet I feel I would be remiss if I do not ask that question on behalf of those kids who are going to bed hungry. I think it is a question of priorities. Perhaps is is simplistic, but surely the basic priorities are what set the agenda and, as such, I cannot agree with the government's agenda.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, we will have time for the question. Debate. It is not eleven o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis on debate (Mr. Prud'homme)?

Mr. Fennell: Come on!

Mr. Prud'homme: If you keep talking, you will not get your agreement. You will get your agreement. I wanted to participate in the debate. I regret that the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) took the floor and started the debate again. I will sit down, but I wanted to participate in the debate in a positive way, not to reduce the debate to the level she did earlier. I wanted to enhance the debate, to participate, and to follow the good agreement that took place.

I will follow the rules. We agreed to vote before eleven o'clock. We will vote before eleven o'clock. But I want to be on record that I disagree with the second-last intervention of the Hon. Member for Gatineau who reduced the level of this debate that we wanted to enhance.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On division?

S. O. 21

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Carried on division.

Mr. Hawkes: Point of order?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The amendment was negatived on division.

Amendment (Mr. Skelly) negatived.

• (1100)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF ESTABLISHMENT OF REPUBLIC OF ARMENIA

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is May 28, the day that marks the seventieth anniversary of the establishment of the Republic of Armenia. This will be a day of celebration for a nation whose resilience and cohesiveness endure in spite of the tragedies which it has encountered.

I thank Hon. Members of the House in all Parties who attended a meeting yesterday with members of the Armenian community of Canada. It was the best attended meeting we have ever had over the years. I was asked by members of the Armenian community to thank Hon. Members for having attended their meeting and to remind them that tomorrow will be the seventieth anniversary of the celebration.

I also wish to remind Canadians that we are very proud to have among us in Canada close to 50,000 Canadians of Armenian origin who have helped us to build a new country in which everyone feels secure and equal,

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK

PROGRAM OF EVENTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, next week is National Environment Week, a chance for Canadians to reaffirm their commitment to "our common future", a chance to explore our natural heritage and work together to conserve and protect the environment.

In Parkdale—High Park, National Environment Week provides a focus for concerns over the water quality of Lake Ontario and the Humber River, pollution of the Western Beaches, and environmental safety in the Junction Triangle, while underscoring our commitment to a comprehensive clean-up.

Across Canada hundreds of activities are planned from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Dawson City, Yukon. Canadians will plant trees, clean up litter, attend films and lectures, meet fellow environmentalists, and take the time to enjoy nature—by bicycle, boat, or on foot.

National Environment Week provides a chance for everyone to take an active role. It is up to all of us—federal, provincial, municipal Governments, and concerned citizens—to work together to preserve and conserve our environment.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONTENT OF IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, just when it was safe for Canadians to go to bed again, just when we were beginning to feel safe about walking the streets again, it happened. Canadians were just beginning to relax, content in the security of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) promise that our country would not be sold out to the Americans, that we would not become the fifty-first State. Then it happened. The legislation was tabled.

I was going to send a copy of the legislation to some of my constituents who are particularly interested in this matter. Thus I was browsing through it the other night to make sure that there was nothing that would disturb them unduly. And then I saw it, page 99: "every reference in those provisions to Canadian shall be read and construed as a reference to American." I could not believe it so I read on: "every reference to—Canadian-controlled shall be read—as American-controlled." The Prime Minister's promise began to dim.

It went on: "the reference to Canada shall be read and construed as a reference to the United States." The real purpose of the trade deal began to crystallize.

Then, finally: "Where two persons, one being a Canadian and the other being an American, own equally all of the voting shares of a corporation, the corporation is deemed to be American-controlled."

I finally understood what the Americans had accomplished with this trade deal. It is summed up in the old adage: What's yours is mine, and what's mine is my own.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

CENTRES OF EXCELLENCE—ASSISTANCE FOR UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the federal Government will be spending an additional half a billion dollars over the next five years to nurture and enhance research and development in Canadian universities.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) announced Wednesday a $240 million program to establish Centres of Excellence, and a $200 million increase in the base budgets of the university research granting councils.

The Centres of Excellence will encourage a partnership between the universities, industry, and government, a partnership in world-class research and Canadian competitiveness, a partnership in progress.

New federal funding for the Natural Sciences and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council, and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council is welcome support for research and training in Canadian universities.

These two new federal government initiatives are good for the universities, and good for Canada, for it is in our Canadian universities where new ideas are developed and where the skills of young Canadians are honed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AFGHANISTAN—LESSONS OF HISTORY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, it is a great relief to see that Soviet soldiers have finally started to leave Afghanistan. For too long, the Soviet Union tried to support the Communist regime in Kabul.

As in the case of U.S. intervention in South East Asia during the sixties and seventies, the Soviets became involved in a brutal, senseless war.

After tens of thousands of Soviet soldiers were wounded or killed, it finally became clear the situation could not go on.

A captain in the Soviet army recently wondered why this had to happen. The question may never be answered, not in Vietnam and not in Afghanistan.

Secretary General Gorbachev is to be commended for his decision to withdraw from Afghanistan, and we hope the Soviet authorities have learned a lesson from this unfortunate experience.

Yesterday Vietnam, today Afghanistan. Let us hope the superpowers will understand they should influence the peoples of this world through their outstanding achievements in science, medicine and the arts, not with bayonets.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada now provides over half a billion dollars annually to the university research granting councils.

The day before yesterday the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret) and the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) announced a $200 million increase in the base budgets for these councils. Moreover, they also announced the details of a $240 million program for the establishment of the National Network of Centres of Excellence. These centres will promote university-industry partnership to enhance world-class research, and to support Canada's long-term international competitiveness.

When it comes to supporting Canadian research and development, the Government is deadly serious. It is backing its commitment with hard cash.

NATIONAL PARKS

RIDING MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK—LACK OF STAFF TO CONDUCT SCHOOL TOURS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I was phoned by some school children from my riding who live in the community of The Pas. Two groups of 75 children wanted to drive the six-hour trip from The Pas to Riding Mountain National Park.

They asked Parks Canada officials if they could have a staff person to travel with them and to guide them through the park, a service which used to be provided. However, the regional office told us that as a result of cutbacks the regional office told us that the Government has taken away all the staff previously available to do school tours.

I call upon the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to look into the situation and to ensure that in our national parks across the land our school children can get a guided tour. I think that is very reasonable in this country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, most analysts agree that the free trade agreement will benefit western Canada. For the past four years the Canada West Foundation, a non-profit western based research institute, has done extensive research on the free trade issue. Its study confirms what others have said, that is, the free trade agreement is good for western Canada.

The study indicates that 15.3 per cent of the labour force will benefit directly from the free trade agreement. However, the importance of this is shown by the fact that these sectors represent 25 per cent of the combined output of the Gross Domestic Product of the four western provinces. Only 1 per cent of the sectors are negatively affected.

The biggest winners will be agriculture and energy. Livestock producers in western Canada are regarded as the clear winners. In energy, oil, gas, and electricity, producers support the enhanced access to and secure market of the U.S. Easing National Energy Board export regulations under the free trade agreement is a positive development for the western Canadian economy.

In my own province of Saskatchewan sectors directly benefiting from the free trade agreement account for 20 per cent of the provincial Gross Domestic Product, and only 1 per cent of the industries will be adversely affected.

I urge people of western Canada to get a copy of this report and read it. It is very informative, and I think it spells out the major advantages of what the free trade agreement will accomplish for us in the West.

EMPLOYMENT

GOVERNMENT PLACEMENT OFFICERS ON CAMPUS—REQUEST FOR MAINTENANCE OF SERVICES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know whether, the Government, through the Minister of State (Youth) (Mr. Charest), will finally impose a moratorium, so that Quebec campuses and CEGEPS can expect placement officers with Canada Employment Centres will continue to provide the same service.

So far, representations have been made and a reassessment of the service is planned, and I agree with that reassessment, except that I don't want this to lead to a decline in the quality of service.

In recent years, placement officers have spent less time on campuses and in the CEGEPS, so that this year, I wish the Government would impose a moratorium to prevent a further decline in service.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—IMPACT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, we in British Columbia often like to ask the federal Government: "What have you done for us lately?" I am proud to reply: "The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement".

This has recently been confirmed by the prestigious Canada West Foundation's report on the impact of the free trade agreement on the West. In that report, the Foundation found that in British Columbia the sectors directly benefiting from the free trade agreement account for 18 per cent of the province's gross domestic product, while those which might be adversely affected account for only 2.4 per cent.

In that report it is also pointed out that secure access to U.S. markets should facilitate investment, production, and job growth in forestry products, natural gas, minerals, precious metals, and in other sectors.

While all regions of the province will benefit, Vancouver can particularly expect to gain as a result of its proximity to the large U.S. Pacific markets and its excellent range of transportation services for exporters.

I have not even talked about the potential new capital investment that will be attracted from the Pacific Rim. What it all adds up to is that this free trade agreement creates the prospects for British Columbia to fulfil, not only its natural resource potential, but the resource of its people.

What is my advice? Go West, young men and women.

DROUGHT IN SOUTHERN PRAIRIES—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it has been another dry week on most of the southern prairies. According to a PFRA water supply update, conditions are so severe that the South Saskatchewan River at Medicine Hat, Alberta, is flowing at a rate of 31 cubic metres a second. Historically it moves at a minimum of 133 cubic feet a second and up to 435 cubic feet per second.

Shallow wells are going dry in southwest Saskatchewan and southeast Alberta. On-farm water supplies are low. Shallow wells generally provide the best drinking water; towns and villages are watching these sources disappear.

The situation is particularly crucial for ranchers who are having to truck water and feed to livestock. Cattlemen in the British Columbia interior are also affected.

The area was hit by a drought in 1981, 1984, 1985, and again this year. After the 1985 drought the federal Government gave $150 million to producers of grain and forage, plus $48 million to livestock producers. Given the odds, Canada will have to find at least another $200 million this year to provide assistance with water and feed.

THE STANLEY CUP

EDMONTON OILERS' SECOND CONSECUTIVE CHAMPIONSHIP

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, on occasion an Hon. Member will stand in the House and extol the virtues of one or more of his or her constituents. Since the Northlands Coliseum is in my riding of Edmonton East, I would like to say a word about 20 of my own constituents who work at Northlands. Of course I am referring to the Edmonton Oilers, who last night captured their second consecutive Stanley Cup, and what a feat!

I could go on and on about Sather, Gretzky, Messier, Fuhr, and the rest of the boys. Instead, I would like to say a few words about Edmonton, the City of Champions.

I suppose that Edmontonians can no longer claim that we are not getting our "fair share". Along with the Oilers' four Stanley Cups in the past five years, the Edmonton Eskimos have long been a CFL powerhouse, and their 1987 Grey Cup win over Toronto proved that Canadian football is as exciting and viable as any sport anywhere.

Let us not forget Edmonton's Pat Ryan, whose rink last year captured the Canadian Brier, Canada's National Men's Curling Championship.

I trust that Canadians will not begrudge Edmonton for commandeering so many of our treasured national sports titles.

I hope that they recognize the Alberta capital for what it consistently is—the City of Champions!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPOSITION TO PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, more than two-thirds of Canadians are opposed to the Mulroney plan to purchase nuclear submarines for Canada. The price tag will run to at least $16 billion and Canadians oppose both the purposes and the price.

On Wednesday of this week we learned of the fact that on at least 63 occasions warships and submarines carrying nuclear weapons visited Canada. Federal government records show 18 such visits at Halifax during 1987, 11 visits at Nanoose on Vancouver Island, 10 visits at Vancouver, and 24 at Esquimalt.

The United States is violating Canada's sovereignty in our ports, and it is violating the spirit of Canada's position of not having nuclear weapons on our territory, by bringing nuclear weapons into the downtown areas of some of our major cities.

The nuclear arms race at sea is accelerating. By the end of 1987, 1,101 ships and submarines, and more than 3,250 aircraft could fire, transport, or service nuclear weapons.

Do Canadians want to join in the race to Armageddon or to peace? Two-thirds of Canadians think that the purchase of nuclear submarines is wrong. Canada's Arctic, and all of the Arctic, must become demilitarized and denuclearized.

Our tax dollars would be better spent on a peace institute and serious moves to disengage constructively from warlike activity and development.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CANADIAN WATER RESOURCES

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Liberals' policy making agenda is set by whatever they happen to read in the morning newspapers or can dig out of weekly magazines. The latest example of such an approach is the completely unfounded claim that Canada's water resources are a part of the free trade agreement. This unabashed exercise in disinformation and fearmongering cannot go unchallenged.

Canada's water resources are not—repeat not—included in the free trade agreement. Furthermore, the Liberal logic suggests that, since water resources are not explicitly excluded from the free trade agreement, therefore, they are implicitly included. That is tantamount to arguing that the sun, moon, and stars are also in the free trade agreement.

It is a measure of the bankruptcy of the Liberal Party that, for no other reason that crass political expediency, it will attempt to mislead the Canadian people on a matter so fundamental to this country's socio-economic well-being.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Justice Department in the United States, together with the Chief General Counsel in the U.S. Trade Representative's Office has now concluded that the dispute settlement mechanism as it is constituted in the implementing legislation in the U.S. Congress is unconstitutional and unworkable.

In fact, Miss Judith Bello, the Chief General Counsel in the U.S. Trade Representative's Office, has stated that the first time there is a case before the trade dispute mechanism it will go to the Supreme Court and will lose.

How can this Parliament go ahead and implement the trade legislation, the keystone of which is this proposed dispute settlement mechanism, when the U.S. administration itself considers it to be unworkable and unconstitutional? Does that not simply mean that the entire trade Bill is null and void, and will not do the job that the Government says it will do?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is another instance of the hon. gentleman crying wolf. On everything that occurs in the United States, every opinion of any person that could cause any difficulty, he is on his feet trying to spread it around and cause alarm.

• (1120)

The U.S. administration has not said—let us be very clear on this—that the dispute resolution mechanism is unworkable or that it is unconstitutional. I have seen legal opinions from very respected U.S. lawyers of my own—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Not of my own.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I don't own a lawyer by the way, Mr. Speaker. They are too expensive. And they won't stay bought—not only are they too expensive—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I have seen opinions of other eminent lawyers to the exact opposite effect. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he not be alarmed by this.

Certainly if the U.S. administration advises us of this problem then we hope that administration can find a way to resolve it, because the Americans have entered into an agreement with Canada and we expect them to live up to it.

U.S. LEGAL OFFICER'S OPINION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the people who are offering these opinions are not some trifling lawyers. Miss Judith Bello, Chief General Counsel to the U.S. Trade Representative's Office, has said specifically that unless the U.S. Congress gives presidential powers of discretion which would totally politicize the whole impact then it will be considered to be unconstitutional and will be struck down by the Supreme Court the same way the Gramm-Rudman Act was struck down.

That is the comment of the chief legal officer of the U.S. Trade Representative's Office. It would seem to me that this Minister should give some countenance to that kind of opinion coming from a senior legal official in the U.S. administration.

What is the Minister going to do about this? What kind of examination, interpretation, investigation will he give to this kind of assertion made by the U.S. administration? Will we be faced with another cave-in by the Government and an agreement that, in the future, the President of the United States will have the power to intervene in the dispute settlement mechanism? Will the Canadian people end up facing a repoliticization of the whole dispute settlement mechanism?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The hon. gentleman gives an opinion that he has come across of some lawyer in the United States. I have not seen the opinion. It is about U.S. constitutional law and it is about a U.S. problem as to whether the Americans can implement or carry out the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. That is a matter for the U.S. Government to deal with. The Americans have advised us that the dispute settlement mechanism is in order as far as they are concerned.

The hon. gentleman asks me what am I going to do about this. I am certainly not going to reprimand Miss Bello. Presumably this is her opinion.

I will make an inquiry, of course, of Mr. Yeutter, and tell him that the hon. gentleman is concerned, and is worried that the free trade agreement may be in jeopardy, and that he wants reassurances on this point. I will ask Mr. Yeutter to see if I can calm down the affairs of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we know the Minister takes orders from Mr. Yeutter. Perhaps while he is getting his daily instructions he might find out a little bit more about this particular matter. It is a terrible admission for a Minister to make that he sort of jumps to the tune of Mr. Yeutter on a daily basis.

Mr. Crosbie: You asked me to check.

PROCUREMENT REVIEW BOARD—CONTRACTS AWARDED TO ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a second supplementary question for the Minister. It has to do with the proposed government procurement review board in the legislation. It is clear in reading the Bill that this new government review board will preclude any Canadian Government from using procurement as a tool of regional development.

In September, 1987, the Department of Supply and Services stated its policy on Atlantic development as follows: the Government has set as a target for the Atlantic Opportunities Program to raise its level of contracting in Atlantic Canada by $600 million.

How can the the Government on the one hand make that kind of a claim when it is now introducing legislation that will totally and completely prohibit the Government of Canada from using any preferential contracting or procurement to help Atlantic Canada, northern Ontario, or western Canada? In other words, why are you once again contradicting yourself in your claim that regional development is not touched by this Bill when clearly it is?

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to address each other through the Chair. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the first part of the Hon. Member's question I suppose it was, he queried why I would contact Mr. Yeutter. The Hon. Member advises me that a lawyer to Mr. Yeutter in the U.S. Trade Representative's Office has given an opinion and he is alarmed about it. When I said I would contact Mr. Yeutter, the Member tried to make fun of this and that I am somehow beholding to Mr. Yeutter. It is Mr. Yeutter's lawyer about whom the hon. gentleman is concerned. I am not a Yeutter fighter as the hon. gentleman is, so I will inquire of Mr. Yeutter. When I have inquired of Mr. Yeutter, I will advise the hon. gentleman.

With respect to the procurement question, again it is a totally false impression which the hon. gentleman tries to give. The procurement rules are only for procurement of a certain value between certain limits.

It does not apply to the Department of Transport, it does not apply to procurement in Fisheries, it does not apply to Crown corporations. We would prefer to have a much more extensive procurement provision because we would then have the right to compete for U.S. procurement to all of their government agencies, which is what any sensible person would want.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that our policies to favour the regions with respect to procurement still remain in effect. This is a new departure, about which the hon. gentleman did not worry when he was in government a few years ago.

BILL C-130—PROTECTION OF OUTLYING REGIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pursue the same matter and ask the Minister whether he is trying to give us the assurance that the Government will still be able to provide support to outlying regions through its procurement policies. Could he explain to the House why Bill C-130 contains provisions that specifically allow U.S. companies to appeal to a Procurement Review Board if they believe they have been denied equal access? The Minister says one thing but the Bill says the exact opposite. Why did he create a board whose specific purpose is to protect American companies, when we want to protect outlying regions?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is asking a question about Bill C-130 which will be debated in the House and will then go to a committee of this House.

The procurement position is that, under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, American citizens will have certain rights to attempt to be successful for procurement to certain government Departments here in Canada. We will have the same rights in the United States. There will be an appeal procedure for them. Under the wording of the clauses in the Bill, as I recall it, the same procedures will be available to Canadians so that they can appeal decisions in connection with procurement and have the same kind of opportunities and rights as American citizens will have. I trust that answers the gentleman's question.

Mr. Axworthy: It confirms it.

QUERY WHETHER CERTAIN PROVISIONS ARE NOT FAVOURING AMERICAN CORPORATIONS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, his answer may have been very clever, but the Minister admits that a number of provisions in clauses 9 to 16 in this legislation—there are five or six—give U.S. suppliers the right to appeal to a board that may reverse decisions made in Canada, thus deciding in favour of U.S. companies and giving them access to Canadian markets. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister to admit he is giving U.S. suppliers special treatment and is putting at risk this country's previous policy aimed at providing support for our developing regions by giving them Government contracts, as the government sees fit.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Members opposite are so one-sided in their prejudices and in their terrible anxiety to stop the free trade agreement.

Under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement our Canadian exporters will have the right to compete in American procurement situations to sell their goods and services to agencies of the U.S. Government. In return they are given the right to compete with respect to certain agencies of the Canadian Government. It is too bad that these provisions are not much broader than they are. There are certain limits—I do not have the exact limits here before me today—in value where you can do this.

The legislation will give an aggrieved American supplier the right to go to a procurement appeal board. It also gives an aggrieved Canadian supplier the right to go to the procurement appeal board. Canadians, of course, will have reciprocal rights in the United States of America.

U.S. CONGRESSIONAL COMMITTEES—PLYWOOD ISSUE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister for International Trade. As the Minister is aware, two congressional committees in the United States have agreed on some items to be in the American implementation legislation. These two congressional committees are calling for a number of changes, and one is about plywood. They want to change the deal as it affects plywood, as the Minister is aware, and I know that the Minister has protested this possible change on behalf of Canada.

What will the Minister do to make sure that the Canadian position is protected? Does the Minister consider this to be a violation of the free trade agreement as drafted?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think I had already made it clear to the House that the proposal of the Senate Finance Committee with respect to plywood, which I believe the administration is assisting them with, is in our view a violation of the terms of the free trade agreement. We have sent a protest note pointing that out. I have pointed it out myself orally on several occasions to Mr. Yeutter, and it has been pointed out to other persons as well.

Yes, we regard it as being contrary to, inconsistent with, the free trade agreement. I have told the House, and I repeat again, that if Congress persists, and that provision stays in the legislation and is enacted by the U.S. Congress, then we will take the necessary action to counter that ourselves when the free trade agreement goes into effect. We will certainly not accept it, because we think it is inconsistent with the obligations the Americans undertook in the free trade agreement.

The conference between these two committees has just finished. We have not seen their final report yet. The administration will then have to decide what Bill it finally puts to the Congress in June, so until all that occurs we do not know what the final result is.

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES—ENERGY INVESTMENT—CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, yesterday there were also reports of other items the Americans want changed in the free trade agreement. For example, they want to eliminate the exemption we had negotiated for Canadian cultural industries, and they want to eliminate all kinds of screening possibilities for investment by Americans in the Canadian energy sector.

I want to know whether or not the Minister will admit that the Americans are now putting us on notice that they intend to hammer us in the second round of negotiations. What does he intend to do to stand up for Canada?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the first question one must ask oneself if one wants to take a reasonable approach to the situation is: "what is the alternative to the free trade agreement that we are proposing with the United States of America?" If we adopt the course of the hon. gentleman opposite, we will be defenceless next year before the protectionist sentiments and impulses of individual Senators and Congressmen.

The references the hon. gentleman makes are to individual Congressmen proposing everything under the sun. They want x, they want y. Why are they doing this? Because they want to go home and get re-elected. That is presumably why the hon. gentleman gets up with this kind of nonsense in the House, because he wants to go home and get re-elected.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, with respect, these are not individual Congressmen, these are two very important Congressional committees which form an important part of the American governmental administration. The Minister knows that.

The Minister has now said that there is a violation relating to plywood. They are now calling for the elimination of exemptions for energy and for cultural industries. The Minister of State for External Affairs has also said in the House there has been a violation of the agreement relating to agricultural subsidies and exports to third countries.

What does the Canadian Government intend to do when the Americans violate the trade agreement which has not even been implemented yet? If they continue to violate the trade agreement, what are we going to do about it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman finally came to an important point. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is not implemented yet, and to be implemented the Congress has to pass legislation which we find to be satisfactory with respect to the U.S. administration carrying out its obligations. This Parliament has to pass legislation, and then on January 1 it has to be implemented.

If at that time the Americans have violated the provisions of the agreement concerning plywood, we will initiate a dispute. We will start the dispute resolution mechanism going, or we may also take steps ourselves to counter whatever action they take. If they do not reduce the tariffs on plywood, we will take a counter action ourselves.

This is all problematical. This agreement is not in effect yet. Hon. gentlemen opposite are doing everything they can in their frenzy to stop it from going into effect. How can they complain about it already when they do not even want it to go into effect?

AIR SAFETY

SHORTAGE OF AIR CONTROLLERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister, whomever that may be. Canadian air travellers were shocked to read this morning that close call incidents in the air have quadrupled since 1983. There were 42 in 1983, and 173 incidents in 1987.

According to the President of the Air Traffic Control Association, this is principally due to increased traffic in the air and a serious shortage of controllers. The President said today that we are 41 controllers short in Toronto, 27 short in Gander, 11 short in the Moncton region, and 21 short in the Montreal region, which makes a shortfall of 30 per cent. This is due to the cuts made by the Minister of Finance in 1985.

For the sake of safety in the air, will the Government order an immediate change in this policy and announce an expanded recruitment and training program for air traffic controllers right now?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we do not have to announce an expanded program of training for air traffic controllers right now because we announced it months ago, and because the program is already under way. What happened, as the hon. gentleman knows, is that air traffic unexpectedly declined, or did not increase at the rate forecast, for three or four years. He will remember from his Mirabel experience how that affected government policy. It was decided that a certain level of training for air traffic controllers was necessary, because at that time there was a surplus.

Now, unexpectedly, air traffic has increased tremendously in the last two or three years and there is a scramble to catch up again. We are in that process.

With respect to near misses, this is a technical matter—

Ms. Copps: Shut him off.

Mr. Crosbie: This is supposed to be a serious question, and I hear heckling from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East who does not have the good grace to be a little quiet while the subject is being responded to.

NEAR MISS INCIDENTS—PROTECTION OF AIR TRAVELLERS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, this is what happens when we have a doctrinaire Conservative Government that makes across the board cuts without concern for safety and health.

Just recently, after several years with no training program, the Government introduced a program for 200 air traffic controllers, but it takes from two to three years to train an air traffic controller and the success rate is only 30 per cent. That means that after two years there will only be 60 air traffic controllers when we are short nearly 200 right now.

What will the Government do to protect Canadian air travellers right now in the interim, in these years when the shortage is in place? For the Minister to make light of 173 incidents last year is ridiculous. This is an important and serious matter for Canadians.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman were seriously concerned, he would go to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport and have it call in an Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of this whole area and a serious discussion on the facts could be presented, not the alarming position the hon. gentleman tries to take.

With respect to cuts, what about the cut of $1 billion the hon. gentleman's Party was trying to make in the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency legislation? You voted against it in the House to save $1 billion. How dare you talk about cuts, you hypocrite.

RURAL DIGNITY CAMPAIGN—ATTENDANCE OF MANAGEMENT EMPLOYEES AT MEETINGS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Yesterday Canada Post, in its hasty retreat from the postal code debacle, said: "We have become a service oriented organization and we are sensitive to our customers". Yet Canada Post continues to tail the Rural Dignity caravan whose sole purpose is to protect rural post offices.

• (1140)

Does this Minister consider this harassment of Rural Dignity by the bully boys of Canada Post to be "sensitive to our customers"? How much is this program of sending management employees to every meeting of Rural Dignity costing, and would it not be more "sensitive" to use that money to help keep open at least one rural post office?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about Rural Dignity, which is another name for the Postmasters' Union which is sponsoring them. I wonder about the dignity of the untruths and misinformation they are spreading around the country. How do they justify that?

However, the Hon. Member's question gives me an opportunity to make a point about some changes in postal service in rural Manitoba which were opposed by the hon. gentleman's Party, the Postmasters' Union, and so on. Wordsworth Communication Services did a survey of the people affected where changes were made in the rural communities of Blumenort, St. Francois-Xavier, and Aubigny, and found that 85 per cent felt that the service was now better or the same.

The changes are improving the service according to the people affected, which is not what Rural Dignity is claiming. They are just spreading false information. They are telling lies about what the Post Office is intending to do, and Post Office officials are out there talking to the press so the people are not misinformed.

ALLEGED HARASSMENT OF RURAL DIGNITY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister prepared to put all the facts on the table?

The Minister did not answer my question about the harassment of Rural Dignity by Canada Post. Is the Minister aware of the fact that Canada Post held up Rural Dignity's mail, not for three days, as I said the other day, but for ten days? Now will the Minister investigate the harassment of Rural Dignity by Canada Post?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member again stands up and says that mail from Rural Dignity was delayed for 10 days. The spokesman for Rural Dignity said it was delayed for 36 hours. That is what the spokesman said, and the Hon. Member stands up and says it was delayed for 10 days. It is that kind of harassment through the lies being told by the Hon. Member and others that is at fault here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Minister will of course withdraw that last remark.

Mr. Andre: Of course, Mr. Speaker. I recognize that is unparliamentary. There are a number of things in Beauchesne's that I recognize ought to be done with respect to Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Andre: Let me tell the Hon. Member that it is not at all helpful for misinformation to be spread around the country. The harassment that Rural Dignity is engaged in now is contrary to the best interests of Canadians in general.

SUBSIDIES PAID TO CANADIAN AND EUROPEAN FARMERS

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Wheat Board. Over the past two days a number of statements have been made about comments the Prime Minister made regarding support for Canadian farmers in comparison to what highly subsidized European farmers receive for their products.

We in western Canada, indeed farmers across Canada, are under the impression that our assistance does not compare favourably with the Europeans whatsoever. I ask the Minister to clarify the situation.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important issue. Unfortunately, subsidies have become a major part of agriculture production and trade in the last number of years and this has led to some pretty large surpluses in the European Community. As a result, they have been dumped on world markets.

It is a favourite ploy of the Europeans to talk about numbers and use percentages. People should be aware of the facts and I will just give three examples to the Hon. Member.

A Canadian wheat farmer now receives about $2.91 a bushel. The European farmer receives $7.13 a bushel.

A Canadian farmer receives about $1.10 for a bushel of Canadian Wheat Board barley, although the off-board market is up a little bit. The European producer receives $5.42 a bushel.

Canadian farmers receive almost $7 a bushel for soy-beans, but in Europe it is about three times that amount.

We should look at the real numbers and compare what a European farmer gets as opposed to what a Canadian farmer gets, and get away from percentages and the kind of games the Europeans like to play. If we do that, we realize that the Europeans are being subsidized substantially more than Canadians.

What we really want to do is encourage the Prime Minister to bring about a resolution of this nonsense going on in Europe. That is exactly what he is doing and he deserves credit, and is supported by all farmers in his efforts to do so.

DISASTERS

GANDER AIR CRASH—MINISTER'S LETTER TO CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport and pertains again to the Gander air crash which resulted in the deaths of 250 people.

It is now known that we have serious disagreements between members of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board about the causes of the accident. The former chairman of the board resigned over the dispute. The Minister of Transport appointed his own person to take over, and then sent a letter to other members of the board telling them that they were expected to obey the new chairman.

Is it still the position of the Government that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board is an independent, autonomous body, as two Ministers have been saying over the last few days in this House? Or, does the fact that this letter was sent to members of the board not make a mockery of the whole system?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is pursuing his natural bent for distortion and misinformation. It is no secret that among the former members of the board there was a less than harmonious relationship.

When the new Minister was appointed he wrote to members of the board, as is his right, encouraging them to work together. Obviously the Hon. Member does not believe that should happen. However, the letter to which he refers says: "Every effort must be made to ensure the board functions well and co-operatively." Obviously the Hon. Member does not want to see that happen.

The Minister said: "I trust you will support Mr. Thorneycroft and your fellow members in the fulfillment of your important collective responsibility to advance aviation safety in Canada". Obviously the Hon. Member does not want to see the advancement of aviation safety in Canada and I think that is a real shame.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the letter says: "As a board member you are expected to give your full and unqualified support to Mr. Thorneycroft". Would such a letter have been sent to a Supreme Court judge working in a similar manner? Is it not obvious that the Government is interfering with the process? Is it also not obvious that the real reason that letter was sent was to stop the dissenting report from coming out? That report of course totally contradicts the information which the Government has permitted to come out publicly thus far.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member cannot read or hear very well. I ask him to consult yesterday's Hansard where the Minister of State for Transport told him that the report would be made public. It is there. The Hon. Member should listen to what is being said occasionally, and not go off on wild goose chases which do nothing for his reputation or for the House.

THOMPSON, MAN.—SERVICE FOR TRAILER COURT RESIDENTS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post, the corporation which describes itself as service oriented and sensitive to its customers.

Some 378 families in Thompson, Manitoba, are being moved from one trailer court to a new one three or four blocks away because the old one is being closed. There has been no increase in staff, no increase in cost, but Canada Post refuses to provide those same people in the same trailers with postal services. Can the Minister explain why they are going to lose their door-to-door postal service?

• (1150)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in 1981 when the Canada Post Corporation Act was passed unanimously by this House with all-Party agreement it was on the basis of convincing arguments presented by the unions and representatives of the New Democratic Party that it was a mistake to have political interference in the day-to-day operations of the Post Office.

The Hon. Member now stands up and asks me about what is happening in some trailer court in Thompson, Manitoba, and expects me to respond to that. That is a ridiculous waste of the time of the House.

POSITION OF CORPORATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that Canada Post said the reason it cannot provide this service is because of the government directive to it.

Again I ask the Minister, why is the corporation being too iron-clad, too stubborn, and too insensitive to provide those people, who have been forced to move a few blocks, with daily delivery which they have had for the last 25 years?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not want to write to Canada Post to ask why this is happening, perhaps he could telephone.

Oral Questions

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
COMMERCIAL BLOOD BANKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. Throughout the trade sell-out we have heard the Government insist time and again that it has absolutely nothing to do with the social fabric and social customs of Canada. We know, however, that in Canada, until this past year and until this Government arrived, we did not sell blood for profit. Yet in many States in the United States the selling of blood is a commercial enterprise.

If in fact this trade deal has nothing to do with the social fabric of this country, why is blood banking included under commercial operations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to reassure the House that the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has nothing to do with blood. Whether people wish to sell their blood for profit or not is, I suppose, up to the individual. Some Members here don't even have any blood to sell.

MARKETING OF BLOOD—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. It is obvious that we are being sold out to the Americans, when the Minister for International Trade says there is no harm in selling your own blood. That is U.S. policy, it is not this country's policy. It is the policy of the Conservatives who last year in Montreal started the first private Canadian blood bank, where you can buy blood and pay $2,500 to get enough blood for a heart operation. Is that the universality of Canada's health policy?

I would like to ask the Minister why, since he claims blood banks are not involved in the Canada-U.S. FTA, Annex 1408 includes blood banks under the commercial services group. And why is the Minister of National Health and Welfare holding a briefing session at the Chateau Laurier today on the subject of marketing blood under the FTA?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is scraping the bottom of the barrel with this kind of nonsense. Let me assure the House that the Canadian Red Cross Society will continue in operation in Canada. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement to stop it. There will be free provision of blood for those who need it. The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has nothing to do with it. No one can force a person to sell or to give their blood. That is a voluntary action.

Ms. Copps: Why is it in the annex?

Mr. Crosbie: Yesterday the killer bees were going to come to Canada; now the vampires and Dracula are coming to Canada. The Hon. Member should find a different vein to try to mine.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FAMILY CLASS IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister will know that last summer the Government announced changes to the Immigration Act which would expand the family reunification category to include unmarried children over the age of 21, and give 15 bonus points for assisted relatives in the point assessment procedure.

To date these changes have not been implemented, causing considerable confusion, frustration, and anger. Can the Minister tell the House and Canadians why the announced changes have not been implemented and when the Government intends to make these anxiously awaited changes to the Immigration Act?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly glad the Hon. Member brought that up. Today at noon we will be tabling the new regulations regarding the family class and assisted relative class.

I would like to commend my colleague, the Member for Dollard, who first broached this issue in this Chamber about a year ago. We have now followed up on it after 20 years of Liberal neglect. I was interested to see that The Globe and Mail said this morning that they had wanted it for 10 years.

The amendments will make residents of Canada able to sponsor the admission of their never-married sons and daughters over 21 in the family class.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister, I know, has a certain amount of enthusiasm for extending this answer. However, I really think it is getting into the realm of another procedure.

VICKERS HEIGHTS POST OFFICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister whom the Prime Minister made responsible for Canada Post. In his answer to my colleague earlier he talked about the misinformation which Rural Dignity was providing the people during its tour.

What does he think about Canada Post calling a meeting of the community of Vickers Heights in my riding to review their options with regard to replacing the postmistress when, in fact, it had no desire whatsoever to review the one option which the residents wanted, that is, the continuation of a staffed post office in their village?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the policy in terms of changes in rural Canada is that the local Member of Parliament is to be given at least 90 days' notice and there is to be consultation with the community. This is frequently done by calling a meeting with the community and discussing the options.

The Hon. Member seems to be condemning Canada Post for calling a meeting and having these discussions. If the facts are as he said, the people there were able to communicate their options. That will be examined by Canada Post, and Canada Post will ultimately make the appropriate decision.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT SEEK SERVICE AS PRIORITY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the residents did let them know what they thought. They let them know by walking out when it was clear that Canada Post was not prepared to accept the one option which the residents desired, that is, the continuation of a staffed post office in their community.

When will the Minister and the Government take their responsibility, amend their instructions to Canada Post and tell them that they want service as the priority, not cut-backs in service to rural communities?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office informed me, in terms of Vickers Heights, that in fact it intended to maintain a postal outlet that would be open more hours. The Hon. Member and some of his friends insisted that this be a union position, subject to union rules of so many hours a day. The Post Office said it would be open more hours for the public if it contracted it out through franchising to a private operation. There would be better service.

That offends the unions which pay for the Hon. Member's campaign expenses, but the public will get better service.

Mr. Angus: That is not true.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

COST OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Yesterday the Deputy Prime Minister, in answering a question, indicated that the Minister of National Defence "made very clear and precise what figures were allocated to the purchase of the nuclear submarines".

I have here a Canadian Press clipping which indicates that the Minister of Finance told a news conference in London while en route to a meeting in Paris of the OECD, the following: "Although the Government has some general parameters as to what they are going to cost, it would likely be two years before an exact figure is available". Is the Minister of Finance in a position to tell us whether these submarines will cost $8 billion, or $15 billion as the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament has tagged it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that information was provided initially in the Defence White Paper which was released about a year ago. Further work is being done.

As I indicated in London, much of this work to make sure that we have the precise numbers on the cost of the submarines will be done once we have chosen the country of origin of the submarines. That decision is yet to be taken and that work will flow from that decision.

Mr. Ouellet: I thank the Minister for his honesty in indicating clearly to us that we do not know yet how much it will cost.

ALTERNATIVE ACQUISITION PROPOSAL

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Since the evaluation is that the price of the 12 nuclear submarines could double the earlier price estimate indicated by the Minister of Defence, the Canadian Centre for Arms Control and Disarmament has suggested a much more intelligent alternative. It is a balanced mix of six extra naval frigates and six conventional submarines at a price tag that will be half of what the Canadian Government is ready to spend.

Surely the Minister of Finance should consider this a much more responsible fiscal decision. Why is he not insisting on his Government following this suggestion made by the Centre?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are now getting into an area of policy that is more the purview of the Minister of National Defence than the Minister of Finance. Obviously there are different approaches and different philosophical attitudes as to how we should conduct our defence efforts. Our approach has been set out very clearly in the Defence White Paper.

The role of nuclear submarines has been clearly identified in the Defence White Paper. I think that probably answers the particular question posed by the Hon. Member.

As an aside, I should indicate that the exaggerated numbers the Hon. Member tried to give in reference to my first answer are not well founded.

Point of Order—Mr. Keeper

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question of Question Period. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

RIDEAU CANAL—PROPOSED NEW BRIDGE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment, of which he has notice. Is the Minister aware that early next week the Ottawa-Carleton Regional Council will be considering the approval in principle of new collector lanes alongside the Queensway in downtown Ottawa as part of its regional official plan? Is the Minister aware that this project entails building a major new road bridge across the Rideau Canal and therefore must have federal government approval in order to proceed?

In view of the environmental impact on the canal and the capital area, what is the Government's position on this proposed encroachment on the NCC parkways and Rideau Canal? Will the Minister advise the region prior to its meeting next week that this project does not have federal approval? Will he recommend that it not be approved in principle to the regional official plan at this time?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very familiar with the interest on the part of the regional municipality in the project which the Hon. Member has raised. It will be subject to a rigorous environmental assessment.

I think the Hon. Member knows that my Department administers the Rideau Canal not because we are in the business of transportation routes, utility corridors or any other utilitarian installations, but because of the heritage values at stake concerning the Canal.

If the Rideau Canal is to be encroached upon by municipal expansion or development, it does not make sense to have the Rideau Canal under the administration of the Department of the Environment. With that in mind, I shall be applying the same high standards of environmental scrutiny to this question that we try to apply in every other area of public policy in our domain.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister communicate his concerns to the regional municipality before it considers adding these collector lanes to its regional official plan at its meeting earlier next week?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think I can. I do not want to prejudice the outcome of the issue because it must be subjected to a non partisan, neutral and objective environmental assessment process.

I can say, however, that the onus will be on the municipality to demonstrate to the Government that the project in question does not violate park principles. It is not the other way around. I shall be so communicating to the regional municipality.

POINT OF ORDER

TABLING OF DOCUMENT CITED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, could I have an assurance that the public opinion poll the Minister responsible for the Post Office quoted during Question Period will be tabled in its entirety and made available to the public?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will check the "blues". I believe the Minister was referring to notes in his own handwriting, but I will check to see exactly what he said and, if necessary, will get back to the Hon. Member.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, during the exchange in Question Period between myself and the Minister responsible for Canada Post, the Minister used words that would suggest that my motives for fighting on behalf of my constituents were based on financial support from a union. While he did not say "union", based on previous comments in the House the inference was the Rural Postmasters Union.

I would ask you to check the "blues", Mr. Speaker, to see exactly what was said and whether the Minister did impugn motives. If so, I would ask you to direct him accordingly.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister very well. I am sure he would never for a minute suggest that any New Democratic Party Member was supported by unions financially or otherwise. This would never enter his mind. However, we will check the "blues" and, if necessary, the Hon. Minister will reattend the House.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I regret the attitude that has been taken by the Minister responding. First, we gave the Minister responsible for Canada Post notice that he would be referred to in a question of privilege and a point of order. He said that he could not stay.

He has an obligation to be in the House. He also has a practice in Question Period of being very insulting to Members of the Opposition who are asking questions on behalf of their constituents. If he is going to take that approach in Question Period, he should have the decency to stay in the Chamber to respond to points of orders and questions of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: It will be of no surprise to Members of the House or the public that Ministers often have to do other things than be in the House, just as do Hon. Members. Second, the matter has been raised and I have heard the interventions. I will look carefully at the "blues" and, if necessary, report back to the House with an appropriate comment.

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I was wondering whether the Speaker was satisfied with the withdrawal by the same Minister when he said that people were stating lies and the rest of it in the House of Commons. I thought it was a very mealy-mouthed withdrawal on the Minister's part.

Mr. Speaker I can tell the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that I took it that the Hon. Minister was accepting completely my admonition and was withdrawing the comment. I think we all have heard, at times, withdrawals that may have been less than effusive admissions of guilt. However, I accepted it as a withdrawal and I hope Hon. Members will also accept it as a withdrawal, and a complete one.

TABLING OF FAMILY REUNIFICATION REGULATIONS

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour to table in both official languages the new regulations concerning family reunification.

• (1210)

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that during Question Period, a government Member asked a question of the Minister in order to give her a chance to elaborate on the document she just tabled. There is a long established practice and, indeed, at the time of the study of the reform of the rules of the House, the McGrath Commission proposed a way to allow and facilitate Ministerial statements. I want to point out to the Government House Leader that in courtesy to all Members of the House of Commons, the Minister today should have availed herself of this opportunity to make a ministerial statement. I regret it very much. I hope in the future members of the Cabinet will know better the rules and use them to the interest of all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) for his comments. I am sure Hon. Ministers will consider his comments in the helpful way in which they were meant.

I also remind Hon. Members that when the Hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) was answering the question asked of her, the Chair did interrupt the Hon. Minister because the Chair is conscious of the very point the Hon. Member for Papineau raised. There are, of course, appropriate ways for Ministers to make statements, especially when they have information which they very much wish to extend not only to all Members of the House but, apparently, to the country.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to inform my hon. colleague of two things, first, I am advised the Hon. Minister did give an advance copy of the regulations to the critics, as is the custom. I wish I had it on my desk. We in the Government have tried very hard to ensure that ministerial statements are made in the House. I think the average versus the last Government, of which my hon. colleague was a member, is about ten to one in our favour. I can provide him with those figures.

Mr. Ouellet: That is not a fair comment.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is not going to comment on the number of statements made by one Government as opposed to another except, of course, to say that Ministers have, of course, been using extensively the vehicle of Ministers' Statements. The Chair can only say that ought to be encouraged.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I would like to check the "blues", but in part of your response, I think you dealt with the Question Period itself. I know I have some responsibility for that in relation to our Members. There were words "newspaper stories" this morning, and "on the front pages of the newspapers", about the issue the Hon. Member suggests could have been a ministerial statement. When things break in the public press, they are very frequently the topic of Question Period regardless of what else might follow, including the tabling of regulations and ministerial statements. If there is something in the "blues" which indicates that because they are to be handled in a different way later that day, they are inappropriate for questions, I would like to reserve my right to argue, perhaps.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but comment on the last statement made in the House. Indeed, if the Government leaks documents to the press and uses that to have questions asked in the House by its own Members and, therefore, short circuits the well established method of making statements, which is the result of reform, I remind the House, reform that was adopted unanimously by the House, then, of course, the Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot leak it to The Globe and Mail in the morning or the night before and then have justification for a question being asked on a document that it itself had leaked. Let us be honest. It cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the same subject. I was ready to give the Government the benefit of the doubt because, in any event, we are supposed to be honourable people in this House and we should take those who inform us at their word.

So I was prepared to take the Government word and give them the benefit of the doubt. But the previous speaker has just confirmed for us that they were very disappointed that we had no questions to ask about this document, which was definitely released to the press in time for the morning news in the hope that we would swallow the bait and ask questions about it. But that is contrary to the rules of the House. If we want the House to be orderly, we must proceed in an orderly manner.

Mr. Speaker, it seems very clear to us that the Hon. Minister, seeing that no question was coming from this side of the House, decided to ask one of his troops to put a question or a half-question.

Mr. Speaker, I think that you should once again tell the Cabinet and the House that such conduct should not be accepted here. Otherwise, order is impossible; it would be a circus! And if people want this to become a circus, I can tell you that I personally do not like taking part in such a free-for-all! And I think that if this were to become the general pattern, we would join in . . . But I warn you that not much would get done in this House.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members I think have made their feelings quite clear. I want to respond to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I do not think the Chair was suggesting that just because a question comes from a government Member to a Minister that that in itself is in any way improper, not at all. It may well be that the question is asked with respect to some information that has just very recently been made public. That in itself does not make it improper.

The Chair interrupted the Hon. Minister this morning not because the Hon. Minister was answering the question but because the Hon. Minister was extending that answer with extensive detail in a way which is more appropriate for a Minister to make under the proper rubric of Routine Proceedings for Ministers statements. That, of course, is what the reform exercise was all about.

I want to assure Members on both sides that the Chair, I think, can recognize legitimate questioning when it is there. The Chair can also recognize, and this will come as no surprise to Members on either side of this House who have on other occasions been on a different side, when a question is asked to illicit a statement from a Minister that might very well be more properly put in a different way. So I do ask for the co-operation of all Hon. Members and I know we will receive it.

Presenting Reports from Interparliamentary Delegations—

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Tabling of documents.

Mr. Speaker: I want to assure the Parliamentary Secretary that I was trying to get to him.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

MANAGEMENT AND MEMBER'S SERVICES—REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, we shall try to end the week on a joyful, optimistic note.

And a chairman is always pleased to be able to table the budget voted by his committee and not rely on the clock, or deadline that implements the budget automatically if the estimates were not voted on in time. It is a very bad principle in the British system . . .

• (1220)

[English]

In the British parliamentary system it is very bad to say that if one does not have time to vote one's Estimates, they are automatically voted after a certain date. It is with great pride that I inform the House that the Standing Committee on Management and Members' Services, which I have the honour to chair, saw fit, Mr. Speaker, to make the House very happy and to get a nice smile from Your Honour by informing the House that we had the honour of voting your Estimates. You are all right, Mr. Speaker, until March 31, 1989.

I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Estimates of the committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair of course would want to express its appreciation to the Hon. Member for Saint Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and to all members of the committee, and to again thank the committee for its warm and courteous reception just the other day.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—NINTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the ninth report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, in both official languages. The committee has reviewed the Estimates that are under its jurisdiction and has voted them in. It is a pleasure to present this report.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REVISED EDITION OF STANDING ORDERS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I have a motion which has been discussed with the other Party House Leaders. I think Your Honour will find that there is consent to receive the motion and to put it immediately. I move:

> That the Clerk of the House be authorized to re-order and renumber the Standing Orders, and after consultations with and concurrence of a staff member designated by the House Leader of each Party, to print a revised edition of the Standing Orders and to make such changes as may be required to the Order Paper and Notices.

Mr. Ouellet: What is that?

Mr. Nystrom: The Hon. Member for Papineau said, "What is that?"

What has happened is that there has been a House Leaders' agreement to put the Standing Orders in a more clear fashion in a book. That was agreed to unanimously by the House Leaders, which is what I wanted to say publicly.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion presented by the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITION

VICKERS HEIGHTS POST OFFICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I have a group of petitions to table this afternoon. They have been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 106. They represent well over 50 per cent of the residents of the community of Vickers Heights, which is located within the City of Thunder Bay.

These residents signed the petition because of their concern over the future of their small post office. They point out that a meeting called by Canada Post to review the options with the residents of the area was a complete sham, and that Canada Post refused to review the option overwhelmingly supported by the residents, that is, to retain the post office.

They call upon Parliament to demand that Canada Post retain Vickers Heights Post Office as requested by the residents, and that it review all options in its consultation with residents and stop patronizing residents with the arrogant and hypocritical approach it takes at present.

SANTA CLAUS LETTER WRITING PROGRAM

Question No. 323—Mr. Daubney:

> In (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 did volunteer Canada Post employees respond to children's letters written to Santa Claus and, if so, what number of responses was sent out?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Yes.

2. Prior to 1982, letters from Ole' Saint Nick were ingeniously crafted by a wide cross-section of CPC volunteers from across the country. In 1982, Canada Post Corporation introduced the annual Santa Letter Writing Program which is actively supported by both current and retired employees of Canada Post, senior citizen groups and various community associations. Together this national team of volunteers answers thousands of letters from children in Canada and around the world.

The statistics below clearly indicate the program's growing popularity with children—and their parents: (a) 1984—557,782; (b) 1985—597,000; (c) 1986—664,591; (d) 1987—775,351.

PERCHLORETHYLENE TESTS

Question No. 333—Mr. Caccia:

1. Does the Government test olive oil, chocolate and cocoa products for perchlorethylene content and, if so (a) with what frequency are such tests conducted (b) what are the dates of the three most recent tests (c) who conducts such tests?

2. To the knowledge of the Government, is there a permissible level of perchlorethylene, in Canada and the United States, for olive oil, chocolate and cocoa products and, if so (a) were such levels ever exceeded and, if so (i) when (ii) by whom (b) what action is taken when permissible levels are exceeded?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. (a) (b) and (c) The Health Protection Branch is not testing olive oil, chocolate and cocoa products for perchlorethylene content. Analyses conducted in April, 1988, by the United States Food and Drug Administration, have all been negative. Staff of the Health Protection Branch are regularly in contact with the Food and Drug Administration officials and will be informed if any positive results are found.

2. (a) (i) (ii) and (b) There are no permissible levels for perchlorethylene in food in Canada or in the United States.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, May 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate for a number of reasons. First, the constituency of Brampton—Georgetown is adjacent to Toronto International Airport. Therefore there are a great many employees from Air Canada who live in my constituency. Over the years these employees have made representations to me, as have various committees that have been formed by the staff and the unions, to discuss the issue of the privatization of Air Canada. Members of the union leadership have been into my office to discuss the privatization of Air Canada. They have expressed concern with respect to it. However, many of the workers who have come in to see me or who have met me on the street in my riding have informed me that in no uncertain terms they are very pleased with the actions of the Government in proceeding with the privatization of Air Canada under Bill C-129 which we are debating today.

I must say that I am very pleased at the action that the Government has taken as well. I think most Members in the House would agree that as Members of Parliament we do a fair amount of travelling and that we have the opportunity to travel on many airlines throughout the world. In my capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and now in my capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade I have had the pleasure of representing Canada around the world. I consider it a privilege to be able to travel on many airlines.

I am a great comparison shopper. I am pleased and proud to say that Air Canada competes with the finest airlines in the world. There is no question about it. The quality of service, the staff, the attitude and the leadership in aviation shown by Air Canada are all unquestioned. Thus I am standing with a great deal of confidence in knowing that the management of Air Canada is perfectly capable of competing in the world, in the private sector, in the air transportation business. I believe that management is extremely pleased with this decision as well.

At one time Air Canada served a public policy purpose in Canada. I believe that Canada is one of the toughest countries in the world to govern because of the vast distances between centres of population and because of its vast size. Thus transportation is very important. As the airline industry grew, various airlines in this country grew and matured. At the beginning we had to ensure that good, safe, and competent services were provided for all areas and regions of the country. In the beginning, and for a number of years, Air Canada was the tool that we used to achieve that.

Today the industry has matured tremendously. We as Canadians can be very proud of the various airlines that we have, and Air Canada is one of those. It is time that Air Canada competed on an equal basis with the other airlines in Canada that have developed and matured over the years. Because of the maturity of the organization, the public policy purpose for Air Canada no longer exists. Needless to say, I am very pleased to participate in this debate and support the Bill wholeheartedly.

There is not only great support from the staff of Air Canada, but generally I believe the public is supporting this move. Simply stated, the privatization program of the Government of Canada is if it does not serve a public policy purpose, then it should not be in government hands.

The success stories of those companies that have been privatized are nothing short of spectacular. De Havilland is one such example. For the period of time we debated in the House the privatization of de Havilland, we heard the Liberal Member who represents that area say how disastrous that it was going to be. He stood out in front of the plant and handed out pamphlets that stated that this was the demise of the company, it was going to be terrible, and what a terrible fate was ahead for the group of workers at de Havilland.

As it turned out, I believe there are 1,200 to 1,500 more employees at that plant. The plant has been modernized and streamlined. A few day ago I met with the president and he was excited and enthusiastic about what is going on. They are designing a much larger Dash-8, their sales are tremendous, and the prospects for the future are great. One can look at some 14 other privatizations that have taken place. They are all success stories. I have no doubt whatsoever that Air Canada will also be a success story.

We want to get this debate into committee in order that the committee can examine how the privatization will be carried out, hear representations from the public on their thoughts. Because this is such an important item and because the Government places such a priority on it, and because the Opposition is not very enthusiastic in its opposition, if the truth were known, I think that the Opposition would support this wholeheartedly, especially my friends in the New Democratic Party. If they talked to those ordinary Canadians whom they are always preaching about over there, if they talked to the people who handle the baggage, who take the reservations, the air crew, pilots, and so on, they would find out that the staff is very much in favour of this and looking forward to actively participating in the operation and the share ownership of that company. Because it is so wanted throughout the country, not only by staff but also by the general public, I move:

That the question be now put.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Mr. McDermid seconded by Mr. James moves that the question be now put. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, my colleague wishes to know if I need a minute or two to finish my lunch. I do not feel the least bit embarrassed about that. I am willing to give up my lunch if we can put the brakes on the Government when it comes to the selling out of Air Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: It is not selling it out.

Mr. Keeper: I hear a little protest over there. I hope that means that the Government will pay close attention to what I have to say, because there are some very important issues that have to be faced in this privatization of Air Canada.

The Hon. Member who has just spoken stated that there was no longer a public policy purpose to having Air Canada owned by Canadians, owned by the public sector, and while it was useful and nice to have Air Canada in the public sector when it was being established and growing that now it is a mature airline, poof, the public policy purpose for having Air Canada has disappeared.

The fundamental question is whether there is a public purpose for having a publicly owned Air Canada or, as the Hon. Member has stated, whether the primary concern has to be with the fairness of the competition between Air Canada and the other airlines in the country. The Hon. Member emphasized the point that now that Air Canada is mature it is time to ensure that Air Canada is competing on a fair basis with the other airlines. Therefore, the Hon. Member is putting his priority on concern about whether there is fair competition between Air Canada and other airlines, and has set aside the long established concern about why we have an Air Canada and what public purpose it serves. That is now a secondary consideration.

The public policy reasons for the creation of Air Canada still exist today. The fundamental reason why I am raising this question about whether there continues to be a public policy reason for having Air Canada is because we want to ask the question: "Why is the Government selling off Air Canada?" One of the crucial questions is whether the Government is correct when it states that there is no longer a public purpose for having Air Canada owned in the public sector as a public utility.

The original reason for the creation of Air Canada, which is still valid today, is that there was a need for transportation in this country. There was a need to tie and knit this country together. This fundamental purpose and reason applies not only to air transportation and therefore to the existence of Air Canada, but it also applies and has applied throughout Canadian history. It applied when the Trans-Canada Highway was built. When the time came to build the Trans-Canada Highway we did not ask if this could be done by the private sector, or if we build a highway from one coast to another would we be competing unfairly with the private sector railroad by building a highway on which trucks could run? We did not say that. We said that it is important to tie this country together. It is important to have a Canada. One of the ways we can build Canada is by having good transportation and communication systems.

The public purpose for having an Air Canada is to tie this country together, not only the big cities but also the small and remote communities. We want to tie those communities together through modern transportation means, air transport. This reasoning convinced Governments in the past, as it should convinced the Government today.

One of the ways we created Canada was by building a railroad to tie the nation together from coast to coast. Not only did the vast majority of Canadians accept the persuasiveness of the argument that there is a public purpose to having a railroad and a transportation system to knit the country together, but the Conservative Party of the day, the political ancestors of the dinosaurs that we have across the way now accepted that reasoning. In fact, it was Sir John A. Macdonald who articulated the dream and said that we want to give birth to a new country in the northern half of the North American continent. One of the crucial instruments for the building of the nation was a transportation system. In that day it was the railroads, but Sir John A. had the foresight and vision to see that there was a job of nation building to be done and that that job was a job for the public sector. That fundamental reason still exists today. It applies not only to railroads and to highways but to airlines and air transportation.

This Government has embarked on the Americanization of Canada. It is trying to reduce the nation to a market-place, to a bazaar, to a shopping centre, to a pale reflection of the American dream. The Government has abandoned the Canadian dream started by the Conservative Party and by Sir John A. Macdonald. It is not enough to be simply concerned about whether there was fair competition between this airline company and that airline company. That is a legitimate concern. Nobody wants unfair competition, a concern which the Minister expressed. It is also necessary to be concerned about public purpose, about nation building. That is where our Party stands. Our Party is concerned about the building of Canada, about the holding together of the country, about people in small communities who are a part of this nation as well as those who live in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. We are concerned about nation building.

We say that Air Canada like the railroad and the Trans-Canada Highway has been a part of the building of this country. This successful public enterprise ought to continue to be a part of that. We should not put a price tag on everything. We should not say that you can only have service if you have enough dollars in your pocket, that your community will be a real part of this country as long as it can pay its way. We are all Canadians. It is reasonable and necessary that we have a national air transportation company that can use some of its profits from the populous areas of the country on the lucrative air transportation routes to subsidize transportation to some of the more remote parts of Canada. All Canadians should share the burdens and costs of providing communications.

The reason for establishing Air Canada was to knit the country together, to play a part in nation building, and that reason continues to exist today. To abandon Air Canada suddenly just because the Conservative Party has abandoned its own philosophical roots and has chosen to go down the route of American conservatism, down the road of worshipping the market-place above all else, is a mistake. The fundamental conclusion we come to is that there is a purpose in nation building for having Air Canada in the public sector. If there is a public purpose for having Air Canada so that air transportation can contribute to the strength of this nation, why is the Government seeking to sell Air Canada? Is it because there is a public demand for it? Have citizens from one coast to the other risen in unison to say "Sell Air Canada"?

The other day the Government managed to dig out of its files some place one public opinion poll which seemed to indicate that the majority of Canadians would favour the sale of Air Canada. Let me point out that I have read numerous public opinion polls reported in the daily press in Canada which indicate that a majority of Canadians favour Air Canada remaining in the public sector. I see no evidence of a public demand for the sale of Air Canada. There is a public purpose for Air Canada to stay in the public sector. There is no clear evidence that Canadians as a whole are beating on the doors of the Canadian Government saying "Sell Air Canada". Probably a majority of the evidence shows that most Canadians would like Air Canada to stay the way it is as a public utility, as a successful enterprise, which can serve a public purpose rather than being transformed into a purely commercial enterprise whose only purpose can be to make a dollar.

There is nothing wrong with making a dollar, Madam Speaker, but we also have to serve the public purpose and build a nation. We already have airlines in Canada which are dedicated to making a buck and making a profit. We are content to allow that to happen. That is legitimate, but why must all airlines in Canada have as their primary purpose the making of a dollar as their top priority? Why can we not have at least one airline whose purpose it is to knit the country together and help build the nation? I ask again, why is this neo-Conservative Government, this conservative Party which has abandoned the Canadian notion of Conservatism to adopt an American notion of the market-place, selling off Air Canada? Why does the Government insist on selling Air Canada? Is it as a public enterprise unsuccessful? Is it as a public enterprise draining the public purse and not making a profit? The answer is absolutely not. Air Canada over the last couple of decades of operation has made a profit in all but two years. Over-all the profits, if I remember correctly, total something like $300 million.

Air Canada is a successful enterprise that serves the public purpose, helps to build our nation, and most people would like to see it remain as a public utility. It is a successfully run corporation. Why fix something if it is not broken? Why sell it off if it is functioning well as a public enterprise? I have no satisfactory answers to those questions. I would challenge Members opposite to rise to give some rational reasons for selling off Air Canada.

In addition, I want to say something about how the Government is selling off Air Canada. It is not only Members of the New Democratic Party, us of the social democratic persuasion, who are questioning the Government's action. Some business people are questioning it. Sir Colin Marshall has expressed skepticism about the approach the Government is taking to the sale of Air Canada.

I see in today's Globe and Mail that Sir Colin Marshall, the Chief Executive of British Airways, has said that he questions the way the Government is privatizing Air Canada. He is essentially saying that it ain't going to work. The Government is partially privatizing Air Canada and Sir Colin Marshall is saying that if the Government of the day is to be successful in its aim, an aim we do not share, then it has to go all the way.

Either this partial privatization effort will be a complete failure and will not raise the moneys the Government hopes it will raise or else the assurances the Government is giving Canadians that it intends to maintain control so that public policy objectives are pursued are false assurances.

Perhaps this is the first step of a two-step process, and the Government is sort of sneaking in full privatization under the blanket of partial privatization.

The Government's action has been criticized by a chief executive officer from the private sector in Britain who has been involved in a privatization scheme that worked, at least from that philosophical perspective. I wonder why the Government is seeking to sell off Air Canada. I have to conclude it is because the Conservative Party has adopted a new American philosophy of conservatism, a philosophy that puts the market-place above all other considerations, that puts making a buck above building a nation and that puts more emphasis on profit than on service.

I think the Government is doing this for ideological reasons rather than for practical, understandable reasons. As I said before, Air Canada works. It provides service and decent employment and it makes a profit. Why not leave it in the public sector?

I want to be a bit parochial for a moment. I would like to shift my concern specifically to Winnipeg and to my riding of Winnipeg North Centre. The people of Winnipeg are concerned about what will happen once Air Canada is privatized and starts to move away from the fleet it presently has to perhaps airbus. They are concerned about whether or not there will still be a place for Winnipeg in the aerospace industry.

Winnipegers have already had the experience of being robbed of our place in the aerospace industry. We are afraid that the pattern will repeat itself. We are afraid that once the airline is privatized, it will be possible and even likely that the Government will reduce the air maintenance work that takes place in Winnipeg. We would like to have some real assurances from the Government that Winnipeg will have a place in the aerospace industry.

I see that you are signalling that my time is almost up, Madam Speaker. Air Canada is making a profit and providing a service. It helps knit Canada together. It also reassures the people of Winnipeg that there will be a role for them in the aerospace industry as long as Air Canada remains in the public sector.

Why is the Government seeking to sell off Air Canada if it is not to reduce the workforce in places like Winnipeg, if it is not to find a way to reduce services to remote communities or if it is not simply to ride its own ideological hobby-horse? Air Canada has played a role in the building of the nation and it ought to remain in the public sector. Saying that Air Canada has lost its public purpose simply takes the narrow view of Air Canada, the view of a commercial enterprise, and forgets about its nation-building role.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about Sir Colin Marshall's criticism of the sale of Air Canada. His criticism was that we should be selling all of Air Canada. He was not criticizing the actual privatization or the philosophy of privatization.

Is the Hon. Member saying that the Government should have privatized the whole thing? If he agrees with Sir Colin Marshall, that must be what he means. Is the Hon. Member aware of the Bill which allows for the partial sale of British Telecom and what a successful issue that was? Why is he criticizing this partial sale? He is in essence comparing apples and oranges.

I thought that Members of the NDP had got away from this, but obviously they have not. After listening to the Hon. Member, I realize that they still think that profit is a four letter word, a dirty word. I gather the Hon. Member is back attacking these terrible companies that earn a profit and saying what a terrible thing it is. That is still the philosophy of the NDP, the type of doctrinaire that NDP Members spout off as we heard the Hon. Member do today.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I will deal with the second question first. One of the reasons for our belief that Air Canada ought to remain in the public sector is in fact that it is making a profit. We believe that profit is worth while—

Mr. McDermid: That isn't what you said before.

Mr. Keeper: Well, I see heads shaking. I acknowledged in my speech very clearly that it is important to have airlines that are capable of making a profit. I just said that I did not think that every airline in Canada should have that as its top priority. There ought to be an airline whose purpose it is to knit Canada together, to serve as a communication link and to help to build the nation. There is more to building a country than simply meeting cash register objectives.

Second, I was asked about my comments on Sir Colin Marshall. He is criticizing the Conservative Government's approach to privatization. He is saying, based on his experience with privatization in Britain, that going half way will not do the job. That comment by this gentleman who has some experience in these matters suggests to me that the Government is incompetent and is going to botch the job again. Canadians have seen it botch so many things.

Mr. McDermid: Like de Havilland, Telecom, Canadair, and Canadian Munitions?

Mr. Keeper: Either that, or its assurance to Canadians that it will maintain a hand in Air Canada for public policy purposes is misleading and false. The Government says it is going the partial privatization route and maintaining service to remote communities, but it cannot have it both ways. If it intends to privatize Air Canada, then it will deprive remote communities of service. If the Government really wants to provide assurances of service to those communities, then it ought to leave Air Canada where it is, in the public sector.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I do not want to beat this to death, but I think the Hon. Member should be fair to Sir Colin Marshall. He did not say it would not work. Here is the quote:

> You have to be one or the other, and I am for airlines being totally free.

What he is saying to us is that we should privatize the whole thing. He was in Toronto at the time the statement was made, trying to sell shares in British Airways, for heaven's sake. The article says:

> Riding a wave of record profit, Sir Colin Marshall, Chief Executive of British Airways PLC, swept into Toronto as part of a North American blitz of financial analysts to sell the company's shares.

I will quote further from the article in The Globe and Mail by Cecil Foster:

> Sir Colin is the latest airline official to indicate an uneasiness with the Canadian Government's decision to sell Air Canada gradually. Ottawa plans to sell a 45 per cent stake by asking Air Canada to issue new shares.

That is what he said, so do not misrepresent the man. His only criticism is that we are doing it gradually. Yet the British have done it gradually, too, with the British Telecom privatization. That involved a partial share issue and it was very successful. So when the Hon. Member gets up, I wish he would be accurate.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I guess more than one person can read an article. Sir Colin Marshall, this British entrepreneur with experience in the privatization of airlines, said:

> You have to be one or the other—

In other words, you have to be a public airline or a private airline, and if you try to be both it is not going to work. What I am saying to the Government is that the plan it has announced is a mixed plan, and according to Sir Colin Marshall you cannot be both; you have to be one or the other. That means the Government has announced a plan that will not work. It will not raise the revenue it claims is needed and will not assure people that service will remain in their communities. The shares the Government will hold will not assure a public policy purpose.

If what the Minister is saying is that the plan is the total privatization of Air Canada, then he has to admit that any of the assurances he has given that service will be maintained in remote communities, or that there will be bilingual service, cannot be sustained.

Mr. McDermid: Name a remote community that Air Canada serves now.

Mr. Reimer: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) was berating the Government for saying that this action is a symbol or sign of the Government operating according to its ideological hobby-horse of privatization.

There is no question that the Conservative Party and the Government clearly believe that wherever the national need or public interest does not require government intervention, it is far better that the private sector do it. If the private sector cannot meet that need or requirement, then of course the Government has to do it. However, in this case it is obvious that it can be done by the private sector, and perhaps better.

I suggest to the Hon. Member that surely what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander. If the Hon. Member wants to say that the Government is on its ideological hobby-horse of privatization, then is it not equally true that the Hon. Member is on his ideological hobby-horse of socialism, government control, and government ownership?

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I will be frank. I am on a hobby-horse. The hobby-horse is nation building.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Air Canada has a purpose, that is, to knit Canada together. It is our transportation and communication network that helps keep this country one. That is a policy objective that was recognized by none other than Sir John A. Macdonald. Therefore, I ask the Hon. Member why his Party has abandoned the principles and vision which originally motivated it? Why has it abandoned the project of nation building? Why, all of a sudden, are they only concerned about whether or not someone makes a profit or whether or not a company can compete against another company?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

• (1310)

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, I cannot say that I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate, because when we consider why this Bill is before the House today, the only answer to that question lies in the ideology of the Conservative Party, of the hardline Tories and of this Government, who want to get rid of this country's Crown corporations at any price.

It is an obsession with this Government. Some of our Crown corporations which have outlived their usefulness can be sold, but when it comes to selling a Crown corporation which has its place in this country and which is absolutely necessary, given the peculiarities of our economy and geography, I think the Government's policy is regrettable.

As I see it, Air Canada is an indispensable adjunct to the economy of this vast country whose population is spread out from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Many outlying areas and small communities would be unable to get certain services or food supplies, and people would not be able to leave their communities without air transportation.

The Government of Canada created a Crown corporation to provide air transportation for all Canadians, wherever they happen to live, and I think the reason was valid at the time and is still valid today and will remain valid and essential for many years to come, because we still have a very low population density in this country.

However, there is another reason why we are considering this Bill today. I am referring to the fact that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his Treasury Board colleagues have refused to guarantee Air Canada the loans it needs and would normally contract in order to proceed with the renewal of its fleet. Previous Governments always helped Air Canada get the best possible terms and financing to achieve its economic goals. Now for the first time, Air Canada is faced with a Government that has put it on a starvation diet by refusing to support its plans for expansion and development. Obviously, the Government cannot let a corporation as popular and as useful as this one go down the drain. The only alternative was to let Air Canada be privatized, thus making it possible for the Corporation to obtain the hundreds of millions of dollars it needs to upgrade its fleet. I think this is very sad, because if we Canadians lose our collective ownership of this corporation, which is our pride and joy, it will be because of the lack of support and the irresponsibility shown by the Canadian Government.

On the fiftieth anniversary of Air Canada, the Liberal Party of Canada issued a press release to emphasize the major role played by the corporation in developing our country. I would like to take this opportunity to quote from that press release, which said: "In response to a persistent rumour that the Conservative Government is about to privatize Air Canada, Liberal Members want to recall the raison d'être of our national carrier. From the date on which it was founded, Air Canada has provided passenger transportation services from one end of the country to the other, while reflecting the federal Government's commitment to the principles of bilingualism, employment equity and regional procurement. Once it is privatized, Air Canada will no longer fly to communities on less profitable routes. Thus, providing passenger air transportation services accessible to all, the reason why Trans-Canada Airlines was created in the first place, will no longer be feasible".

I personally wanted to stress that Air Canada has played and should continue to play a major role in connection with the deregulation of the air transportation industry.

Indeed, as the Conservative Government has just passed Bill C-18 that will completely deregulate air transport, we should ask whether it is wise and necessary to privatize Air Canada at this time. On behalf of our Liberal colleagues in this House, we rejected the partial privatization of the company in a press release on April 10, 1987. We said that such a policy would mean that the company would cease to be a Crown corporation under the Financial Administration Act. The power to issue directives, now held by the Governor in Council, would be lost. Now we see that this is exactly what the Government has done.

It carried out a partial privatization, trying to make the Canadian public believe that it would continue to control this Crown corporation which no longer is one; under Canadian corporation laws, it must now be a private company because the majority shareholder does not have the right to make decisions that would be detrimental to the minority shareholders. The Canadian law protecting minority shareholders says this very clearly. So we will have an absolutely crazy situation where the Government will still own 55 per cent; it will be the largest shareholder, the majority shareholder, but it will have no say and will be powerless to act. The minority shareholders will control the company and most important, the Government will abdicate its power to issue directives to the company to maintain essential services in remote areas or to continue to serve some lines considered important for the national interest.

As the previous speaker was saying, we are wondering why the Government is so determined to undo something that was working so well. You do not take apart what is going well unless you are a Conservative Government. And this is not the first good company that the Government is destroying. We see what it is doing with Canadian National. We see what it has not been able to do despite all the promises to VIA Rail and we wonder what will happen with this hybrid decision that sooner or later may harm Air Canada's viability and efficiency. In reality, if no one buys these shares that will be put on the market, if this half-sale is not successful, Air Canada's whole future is threatened.

For Air Canada's fiftieth anniversary, we wanted to emphasize that it is one of the world's most profitable airlines, that it is very well managed and that it has won international awards. The most recent was the award of excellence for best passenger service given by Air Transport World.

In rejecting the argument that Air Canada must be privatized so that it can renew its fleet of aircraft, we asked the Government then to stop undermining the public's confidence in their national carrier.

We had suggested a much wiser and much more realistic alternative, and that was to change the Air Canada debt to equity and make sure it could secure loans at preferential rates to renew its fleet as was done in the past.

We had also suggested that the Conservative Government should be committed to maintain the unwritten rule whereby, as we did before, Air Canada would be given certain advantages with regard to international and transcontinental routes as compensation for maintaining service to nonprofitable Canadian communities.

Quite clearly the Government chose to ignore this suggestion made by the Official Opposition, by the Liberal Party of Canada. Today we are faced with a Bill which most unions representing Air Canada employees find unacceptable.

Perhaps I might just read this newspaper article, and I quote:

• (1320)

"Three Air Canada unions begin campaign to halt privatization". The article states that unions representing two-thirds of Air Canada's employees have launched a campaign to stop the planned privatization of the Crown owned airline and to defeat the Conservative Government in the next federal election.

"You propose to sell out not only our members but all Canadians in disposing of our national asset", said representatives of the International Association of Machinists, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, and the Canadian Autoworkers Union in a letter which was recently sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

"We will do our best to educate all Canadians in the true meaning of your duplicity so that you receive your just political reward in the next election", the three-page letter concluded.

I think the spokesmen for the employees are justified to use such harsh words about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). As everyone recalls, not long after the last elections the Prime Minister of Canada went to Montreal to see his close friend Louis Laberge to discuss various issues, particularly the future of Air Canada. At the end of their meeting, union boss Louis Laberge told newsmen in the presence of the Prime Minister who could have denied everything had it not been true: "The Prime Minister has just assured me that Air Canada will not be sold! Air Canada is not for sale! Canada needs a national airline", said the Prime Minister.

Well, like in the case of so many other unkept promises, we realize today that if the Prime Minister says something the contrary is bound to happen.

I see that the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) is getting all worked up and taking upon himself to tell me that this quote of the Prime Minsiter is not complete.

The Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister have invented remarks to justify the sale of Air Canada. Louis Laberge was not told half of the sentence when he met the press in Montreal following his meeting with the Prime Minister. He did not tell the people: "Half of Air Canada will be sold". He told them: "The Prime Minsiter has assured me that Air Canada is not for sale!". These are the facts and it is not the Hon. Member for Brampton-Georgetown who will convince me that Louis Laberge does not know what he is saying. The reality is that the Prime Minister had said that Air Canada would not be sold. In line with many other promises which the Prime Minister had made and not kept, Air Canada will be sold because of this bill, and the Tory Government will be held fully accountable for that.

Air Canada is a most successfully run corporation which has greatly contributed to the Canadian economy, which has enjoyed record economic growth, which has A-1 employees, very competent officials who administer it in a remarkable fashion and which is second to none as a national airline. Air Canada is one of the best airlines in the world. Because the Tories do not want to finance the loan which this company needs to renew its fleet, they want to sell it off and make it possible for foreigners, probably Americans, to take over through this minority participation full control of the company. The reality is that this airline of which we were all very proud will eventually become partly the property of foreigners and will probably fall within the next few years in the hands of the major conglomerates which will control the air transport industry in Canada.

Because the situation we are living now is a small scale replica of what is happening in the United States. Ever since the deregulation of the airline industry, we have witnessed an undue concentration of the airline industry in the United States at the expense of workers, at the expense of the services in less profitable areas and, especially to the benefit of a few tycoons who are about to take complete control over the air transport industry in the United States. I can foretell that the deregulation in Canada will bring about the same results.

This whole exercise means that within the next few years, because of the various schemes of this Tory Government, out of our two major national airlines, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific, in addition to five or six major regional carriers operating in the Maritimes, Quebec, Ontario, and Western Canada, only one or two will survive. All of them will end up in the same bag, to the great satisfaction of the Tories and their very affluent friends, who will completely dominate the air transport industry, not in the interest of Canadians or the travelling public, but in the interest of a few friends of the Tory Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has the floor.

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, when Canadians listen to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), I suggest they remember this is the same Member whose team was involved in the Mirabel question, when any number of scandals came to light and thousands of farmers were expropriated, and now Canadians have to pay for these mistakes.

This is the same Member who poured billions of dollars of taxpayers' money into Canadair. The same Member was involved in the question about de Havilland, a company we decided to sell. These two companies are now making a profit and hiring more workers.

When the Hon. Member for Papineau said the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) didn't want to advance funds to renew Air Canada's fleet, he was right. This Government will not advance any funds to renew Air Canada's fleet because it believes in private enterprise. This is not a socialist government that will soon be part of a coalition. This Government believes in private enterprise and wants to give Air Canada a chance to take advantage of the privatization process and the private sector a chance to purchase Air Canada shares.

The Hon. Member for Papineau doesn't want us to privatize Air Canada, but since he is so knowledgeable about the transportation industry, I would like to ask him today how many airlines in the world are government-owned? I wish he would answer me here in the House. Out of 155 countries, how many have state-owned airlines? Let him explain to Canadians why we should be among the very few to have a national airline.

Finally, Madam Speaker, and I am about to conclude, it is a matter of philosophy. For decades, this Party decided to add to the Government's social and supportive role, letting it substitute for the private sector in 335 different corporations. As a result, Canadians today have a national debt of $262 billion. This means that 30 per cent of our taxes go to paying the interest on loans contracted by the Liberals who, in many cases, were supported by the socialists, because those were the kind of measures they liked.

I wish you would answer this question: How many airlines in the world operate today as Crown corporations?

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine), who has notes prepared for him from time to time so that he can say stupid things in this House, that the big national airlines in Europe are state-owned.

Mr. Fontaine: Which ones?

Mr. Ouellet: The French, the German.

Mr. Fontaine: Which companies?

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I am telling him that Air France belongs to the French, Lufthansa belongs to the Germans. And if it is good for France and Germany, it is also very good for Canada.

Secondly, I would like to say this about Mirabel. When the Mirabel Airport development project was conceived, officials in the Department of Transport had planned to make this airport the port of entry for international trade to America. The airport of entry would become Mirabel. Today, if you have read a little about air transport, you will realize that Mirabel remains the only airport open 24 hours a day. It is the best port of entry to America for all international traffic from Europe.

The colleague of the Hon. Member for Lévis, who is a Minister and represents the riding next to Mirabel, must be very nervous on hearing the Hon. Member for Lévis call into question the reason for Mirabel's existence. This airport may be too big in the eyes of the Hon. Member for Lévis, but I can say one thing: since the Conservatives took power, they have spent more time doing favours for their friends than building an expressway between Mirabel and Dorval or creating a rapid rail link between Mirabel and Dorval so that travelers arriving in Mirabel can catch a domestic flight in Dorval.

Despite the Conservatives' promises, this Mirabel/Dorval issue that they planned to settle has not yet been settled.

Finally, I would like to say, because he asked me several questions . . .

Mr. Fontaine: Only one is important.

Mr. Ouellet: . . . that the money Canadair cost the Government of Canada was well spent. Hundreds and thousands of jobs remained in Canada because the then Liberal Government had the courage to rescue this company which was on the verge of folding up, and to keep here in Canada the technology and know-how in the field of aeronautics and aviation. Had the Canadian Government failed to intervene at the time, Canadair would no longer exist and with it would have gone the highly paid jobs which keep Montreal among leaders in air transportation. I do not hesitate for a moment to defend the steps taken by the previous Government to save these jobs in Montreal and keep Canadair going. In conclusion I would say to the Hon. Member for Lévis that at any time I am prepared to open a debate with him about the various airlines which operate worldwide. Give me more time and I will continue to tell him about the many countries of the world which have the decency to maintain their own national airlines, at a time when our own Government is about to sell off a chunk of Air Canada to foreigners and friends who can hardly wait to merge it with another company and make sure that this jewel in the sky will disappear for ever.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I have two or three points I would like to make. First, I would like to thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) for appointing the Hon. Member co-campaign manager for the next federal campaign. It has brought him to life. We thought we would be writing an obituary on him. In the last three and a half years he has hardly been on his feet at all in the House. Obviously, this has given him a new shot of inspiration, and we are pleased to see him back again. It is certainly going to help us, I can tell him that.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member who is bragging about Lufthansa Airlines. Lufthansa happens to be partially privatized. It is not entirely state owned, just to let the Hon. Member know. The airlines that are totally state owned are Aeroflot which not only has an airline but builds planes. It is a totally integrated company. The New Democratic Party would love that. But its safety record is not one we would envy. The Hon. Member knows that, having been a former Minister of Transport. The Portuguese, Saudia Arabian, Air-India, El Al, Olympic, and Pakistan airlines are state owned.

The following are committed to privatization, and the Hon. Member will be interested in this: Aer Lingos, Air France, Air New Zealand with a socialist Government, Austrian Airlines, Iberia, Thai, Qantas, Australia, with a labour Government.

I would like to draw another point to the Hon. Member's attention. He says a Crown corporation is necessary in order to ensure services in remote areas. Air Canada does not fly anywhere in the territories. In fact, Air Canada serves 28 domestic points. Canadian Airlines, that terrible private sector one—and I know the Liberals do not like this—serves 70 domestic points.

I want to ask the Hon. Member, when he stands here and gives a great "fear" speech about the airline going into foreign hands, Canadians not being good enough to run it, and it being taken over if the Americans want to take over our airlines, why have they not done it by now? It is because Canadians have faith in their own airline companies. Look at CP. CP was foreign owned and Canadians bought it back. Look at what Max Ward has done with his terrific airline, Wardair.

The Hon. Member has no faith in Canadians. Only the Government can do it. That is the Liberal line. That is what we heard in the whole of the Member's speech, that only the Government can do it. Canadians, independent and free of Government, cannot do it. I can tell the Hon. Member that Canadians have proved him wrong over the last three and a half years. The private sector has created 1.2 million new jobs.

When the private sector is freed up to do the job, it will do it, but not under the grip of the Grits. Once the Grits get a hold, they want to intervene and run everything. They want to control everything with their little red-rump sisters over there. That is what happens in this country. Well, Canadians do not want that. Canadians can see, when we let the private sector go, what it can do. It is doing a great job in this country, and it will continue to do so. They are not going to buy the Liberal bunk anymore that only big brother can run Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments is over, but I will give the Hon. Member a short time to reply.

Mr. Ouellet: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I am not at all impressed by the rhetoric of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). He read a list of companies which could be privatized, including Air France, one of the most important in Europe. It is not because they could be privatized that they will. These companies are not privately owned, but state owned. It is not because Canada is about to make a mistake that these other countries will necessarily follow suit.

Also, I suggest to the Hon. Member that praising private companies operating in Canada is not at all inconsistent with our position in favour of Air Canada. Quite the contrary! Our Government had made it possible for private companies to take over a major share of the Canadian market, and the performance of Wardair, Canadian Pacific and other Canadian firms have all flourished under Liberal Governments. Since this Tory Government came into office, like by magic, all these companies have been purchased or merged in only one, and we have witnessed the disappearance of the regional carriers of which our various regions were very proud. The privatization of Air Canada, therefore, is a step towards the take over and amalgamation in the more or less distant future in one huge air transport company, and I say this is both dangerous and bad.

To conclude, Madam Speaker, I will ask this to the Hon. Member who would like everybody to believe that he is pleased to hear us, the very same Member who has just moved that the question be put meaning that he would like this debate to be over as soon as possible: Is he not aware that by moving this motion, he will deny all Hon. Members the right to move amendments to this bill? Which means that on second reading, after the Hon. Member for Georgetown rises to speak, no other Hon. Member will be allowed to move an amendment to this Bill. That is outright hypocrisy on his part!

[English]

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, this is certainly turning into an interesting debate. It is a little lively today. My friend from Brampton—Georgetown was beginning to look the colour of what he was describing the New Democratic caucus as being, he was getting so excited about the whole procedure.

First, I would like to comment on the motion that is before us. It is: "That the question be now put". We are roughly into six or seven hours of debate on Bill C-129, and I am only guessing with respect to the time. This is a fairly major piece of legislation. It is part of a trilogy that the Conservative Government has entered into since it came into office in September, 1984, that is, privatization, deregulation, and the trade agreement with the United States.

When we talk about changing the structure, the ownership of an air transportation company that the people of Canada have owned for over 50 years through the House and the Cabinet that have reflected the political make-up of the country, it is a fundamental debate. It is not one about which games should be played. It is not one in which the Government should, as it tried to do the other day, force extended hours so that we would sit well into the evening to disrupt the normal pattern of committee work and responsibilities of Members when they are here in Ottawa.

Today, it chose to put in place a procedure which basically means—and this is for those people who are watching—that the Opposition cannot move any amendments. The next decision that will have to be made will be on "that the question be now put". Of course the Government with its majority, should it decide to vote in favour, would see that happen and then we would have the vote on second reading of Bill C-129.

I just want to point out that we are seeing a Government that is becoming very frustrated, very antsy. It has a number of pieces of legislation on the table.

Mr. Fennell: We have lots of time.

Mr. McDermid: All the time in the world.

Mr. Angus: My colleague across the way says that we have "all the time in the world". Perhaps he would like to withdraw the motion that restricts us in terms of any amendments that we wish to make, not that we had planned that, Madam Speaker. We will get the legislation into committee—

Mr. McDermid: That is where the amendments should be made.

Mr. Angus: Of course the amendments that have been made did not deal with the specific wording of the Bill. The first amendment moved by one of my colleagues was to take the principle of the Bill and send it off to the Standing Committee on Transport, a committee of which I am a member, to study the whole concept of the privatization of Air Canada. The Government did not want that to happen, so it voted it down.

The second amendment was to delay further work on the Bill for six months, a period of time that is normally suggested by Members in this House. I am sure that government Members when they sat in opposition, did the very same thing. It gives the public time to absorb the ramifications of a Bill. It gives members of the public time to prepare briefs and to decide whether or not they agree with it so that when it enters the legislative committee they will be ready. Instead, we have a Government which once again has lost control of its own agenda and is trying to ram things through.

Let me turn to the substance of the Bill. At second reading we are here to talk about the principle of whether or not Air Canada should, initially, partially be sold to the public and then later, at the Government's whim, totally sold. I remind Members of the House that every Canadian man, woman, and child already owns a part of Air Canada, just like they own the CNR. In some provinces they own the telephone company or the hydroelectric company. In some communities such as mine the taxpayers own the telephone company and the hydroelectric distribution company.

Canada has had a history of this type of involvement in the running of our affairs and the provision of services, particularly in the field of transportation. When one looks back at the decisions made many decades ago about what this country was to look like, we see that at that time we had a Government which saw a danger in allowing an intrusion of rail lines from the south. It saw a future for our country disappearing from our grasp, so it arranged to have built a rail line to connect east to west.

Not too many decades ago a number of small railways were in financial difficulty. The Government pulled them together as the Canadian National Railway, totally owned by the taxpayers of Canada.

Over 50 years ago as air transportation developed and was seen as the tool of the future, the Government of Canada, with the support of the people of Canada, became involved in the airline business. It was not the private sector. It was not a forbear of Canadian Airlines International, or Max Ward, or the Deluce family from northern Ontario. It was the public sector that recognized the need and entered into the business of air travel.

Along the way the private sector finally realized, after Air Canada developed the markets, that perhaps there was a buck to be made and therefore it would get into that business. Also along the way the Government of the day decided that there needed to be rules and regulations that controlled the provision of services. In this public sector-private sector competition the Government of the day saw the danger that, while the public sector airline had a mandate to provide services, the private sector was more flexible and could target itself to the more lucrative routes, skim the cream off the top. We as a nation decided that tests had to be applied.

For example, the test of public convenience and necessity was the key one that stood the test of time for many years, until this Government came along and eliminated it. That test was designed to ensure that as well as servicing those lucrative routes—for example the Toronto to Ottawa to Montreal triangle many Members travel on a frequent basis, which is heavily utilized and very profitable—they would also be used to cross-subsidize the routes to the smaller communities.

The Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) refers to Canadian Airlines International serving somewhere in the neighbourhood of 70 domestic communities. Part of the reason it was doing so was that when the other companies—Pacific Western, Canadian Pacific, or some of the smaller feeder planes that are now partners—were applying to the regulatory agency for permission to travel some of the more profitable routes, they were told: "If we give you this licence here, you have to service these smaller communities". The network was expanded through a mix of public sector airlines, private sector airlines, and regulation to protect services.

Back to the trilogy. The first step in the plan of the Conservative Government for air transportation and for the future of Air Canada was deregulation, taking out that test of public convenience and necessity and turning it over to the marketplace. Therefore, the only test was to obtain a licence and insurance and have trained pilots and mechanics to do the work, and that is now the test, the test of the bottom line. Therefore, we were not surprised when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) reversed himself and finally indicated, through the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), that Air Canada was in fact for sale.

Let me mention some of the specifics of the legislation and the statements that have been made with regard to the decision by the Government to dispose of initially 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada. The rationale that we have been given is that Air Canada needed money for new fleets and new airplanes. The Government was not going to give it to them, so the only route to go was through some type of public share offering.

The amount of money that Air Canada needs is in the vicinity of $300 million. That may seem like a very large amount of money. If it came out of my pocket, it would be—

Mr. McDermid: You do not have a pocket that big.

Mr. Angus: —or if it came out of the pocket of any of us in this room. When one realizes that the same Government is prepared to spend, at the very least that we know about, $8 billion for some big toys for little boys, the nuclear submarines—

Mr. McDermid: Don't let the Navy hear you call them little boys.

Mr. Angus: Actually, I was referring to the Minister. I was not referring to the Navy. I have great respect for it. It also knows that we do not need nuclear submarines.

We can set aside the issue of whether it should be nuclear submarines, conventional, or whatever. The question is that $8 billion is readily available for that project, and the Government cannot find $300 million to allow Air Canada to provide the fleet additions it needs. That makes one wonder.

The other aspect of this deal that bothers me is that, on the one hand the Government is saying that the initial share offering will be 45 per cent. Of that 45 per cent no more than 25 per cent can be held by non-Canadians. That is consistent with international agreements or treaties to which Canada is a signatory, and the same rule applies in the United States. Because this is an initial share offering, at some point in time the Government could dispose of the remaining 55 per cent. Therefore, 100 per cent of the shares of Air Canada could be owned by other than the Government of Canada, which means that up to one-quarter could be owned by non-Canadians.

Second, there is a restriction that no individual can own more than 10 per cent. That applies to the initial share offering, so we are talking about 4.5 per cent of that 45 per cent. When 100 per cent is sold then we are back up to 10 per cent. Conceivably and eventually those shares could be—and I am not saying that they will be—held by a maximum number of 10 individuals. It probably would not happen right away. However, over time those 10 individuals could also be principals in other airlines, and two or three of them could be non-Canadians. Therefore we have a very dangerous situation for this company that has been owned by all of us and managed very well.

Over the last 10 years Air Canada's pre-tax profit was $379.3 million. I would say that it is a very good record but we are going to get rid of it, sell it off. The final problem is that following the initial offering of 45 per cent the Government will give total control to those who hold 45 per cent. The Deputy Prime Minister indicated very clearly that the Chairman of Air Canada will be instructed by the Government to vote with the majority of the members on the board representing the 45 per cent. In other words, if there are 45 directors—for easy mathematics— and 23 voted to close or stop serving Thunder Bay, the Government would have to vote with them even though it owned 55 per cent of the shares.

I realize that my time has run out. Let me conclude by saying that it is a bad deal, and there is no way that I can support it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved that Bill C-243, an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act (apparel industry), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, it gives me unusual pleasure to have an opportunity to speak in moving this Bill because it has been the product of a great deal of study and consideration by the men and women who are most concerned with the garment industry of Canada. I am referring to the companies, to the members of the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute who support this Bill, and to the International Ladies' Garment Workers' Union which represents some tens of thousands of workers in Ontario, some tens of thousands of workers in Quebec, and some tens of thousands of workers in other parts of Canada. Obviously as unions and company employers there are things they sometimes find to disagree about, but on this proposal they agree because they want to defend the existence of the garment manufacturing or apparel manufacturing industry in Canada. It is a proposal which they have put to Parliament. They have sent copies of the proposal to all Members. I hope it will be considered worth while by all here today to vote at the end of this hour to have the Bill referred to committee for further study.

Both the manufacturers and the unions, while they are supporters of this Bill, have pointed out to me that there are some details which need amendment and that they very much wish to come to speak to the appropriate committee of Parliament about this Bill when it is referred.

The purpose of the Bill is, in effect, to regulate the imports of garments, of apparel, into Canada. That is reflected in the explanatory note which says:

> Recognizing that measures to protect the apparel industry will benefit Canada, the purpose of this Bill is to impose quotas on imported apparel to encourage investment by Canadians and non-Canadians that would contribute to economic growth and employment opportunities in Canada.

In other words, this is to strengthen investment and modernization in the apparel manufacturing industry of Canada. Unless we are going to change the climate in Canada for a much warmer one, I think we need to keep a clothing manufacturing industry here.

There are three main proposals as shown in Section 2 in the Bill. One is that new import permits, in excess of those already issued at a certain date to be determined in the law, would not be issued to enterprises whose sole business is importing. The new import permits would be issued to manufacturers and issued to them in proportion as they have increased their production in Canada. When I first heard this, I was puzzled. As it was explained to me, the manufacturers already find it appropriate. A shirt manufacturer may buy some shirts overseas so that he can offer to Eaton, The Bay, Sears, or whoever, a package line, a variety, more than he is able to concentrate on making in Canada. It is proposed, therefore, to establish this practice and to recognize and support it in law to give the benefit of importation to the manufacturers so long as they increase their manufacturing, their production, in Canada accordingly.

There is also a caveat in Section 3 in the Bill that this would not apply to importations from the United States or from the European Economic Community. The reason is very simple. In the past decade or so the garment industry in Canada has found it necessary to seek defence, as has the garment industry in the United States, as has the garment industry in western Europe, against the importation of garments from countries where the wages and working conditions are extremely poor. The concept of competition, even as reflected in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade does not allow unlimited injury to go without defence. In other words, when our industry is being injured as it is, the GATT agreements allow us to defend ourselves.

I have a letter from the Canadian Apparel Manufacturers Institute, dated April 20, written to me in support of this Bill. It points out that the industry employs some 113,000 people in such centres as Montreal or Winnipeg and that it is responsible for 18 per cent and 17 per cent respectively of all manufacturing in these cities. The Institute wrote:

> However, we are an industry under considerable pressure from imports. Imports have captured 43 per cent of the Canadian market.

At the beginning of the 1980s imports captured only 31 per cent of the Canadian market but now they capture 43 per cent. That is what we have lost. The industry is asking that the haemorrhage be stopped. The letter continued:

> At present, 90 per cent of imported clothing comes from low-cost sources and the Multi-Fibre Arrangement (under GATT). This international agreement allows the exporting countries to control Canadian quotas within their jurisdictions. The Canadian industry's share of our own market has been steadily eroded. Canadian shipments have been shrinking by an average 5 per cent and considerable employment has been lost over the last decade.

I repeat, we are speaking here of countries which pay extremely low wages, often less than one-tenth of others, and which operate under environmental and labour conditions that would not be tolerated anywhere in Canada, western Europe, or the United States. The letter continued:

> Canadian manufacturers of apparel are increasingly importing some finished apparel. They use the imports to complement their production. They can rationalize and specialize, making what is best made in Canada and importing the rest to complete their product line; thus enhancing the marketability of the domestic product.

In the letter it is pointed out that this Bill:

> —would effectively bring control of part of the quotas, on low-cost goods, back to Canada.
> The Bill would also limit the increases in imports by retailers. For many years CAMI has promoted this type of mechanism under its quota control policies. We have done so because quota controlled in the hands of Canadian manufacturers can be used to increase Canadian production and employment while reducing costs to the consumer through the elimination of overseas quota charges.

There are many facets which would bear further study as to the application of the details. That is why I hope the Bill will be adopted in principle and go to committee.

I want to refer also to a couple of news stories in the same vein. On March 21 from the Kitchener-Waterloo Record:

> Large or specialized shirt manufacturers in Kitchener-Waterloo should be able to withstand the loss of a promised duty remission program, but 35,000 jobs could be lost in other segments of the Canadian industry, says the President of the Arrow Co.

I am not debating today the question of the import duties. I am pointing out the danger that is recognized by one of our major shirt manufacturers.

There is another story dated April 2, 1987:

> Women workers displaced by free trade will not be able to take advantage of the new job opportunities created by the pact, a panel discussion on free trade and women was told Thursday.
> It is both ludicrous and callous to suggest women—particularly those in the textile and other manufacturing sectors—will be able to make the necessary adjustments, said economist Marjorie Cohen.

I have from the union their brief that was written a couple of years ago but is still up-to-date in which they point out that the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade "permits importing countries to protect themselves from market disruptions and serious injury as a result of substantial imports. Article 19 of the GATT agreement permits global quotas where there is a serious injury to domestic production."

I want to take up another aspect of this matter which is relevant even though it is hidden. It is hidden in the sense that there is a general myth being put about Canada by certain interests to the effect that the garment industry is weak, inefficient, held up only by subsidies—that is to say, by protective tariffs—and therefore should be allowed to seek its own level, as it were, without any protection, even if that means that some or perhaps all of the garment manufacturing industry disappears from Canada.

I wish to object very strongly to the notion that the garment industry is peculiarly subsidized in Canada. I would point out that the garment industry in fact, along with other light manufacturing industries no doubt, subsidizes the petroleum industry, the mining industry, and the finance industry.

My basis for saying that is that for the years 1976 to 1979—and I do not think it has altered in principle since—the garment industry was taxed at the rate of 34.4 per cent; petroleum and natural gas industry, only 21.8 per cent; the mining industry excluding mineral fuels, 16.4 per cent; and the finance industry, 18.7 per cent. In other words, the garment industry was paying at least half as much tax again as the wealthiest industries in Canada. The women working for $5, $8, or $10 an hour on Spadina Avenue were subsidizing the oil companies, the banks, and the mining companies through their taxes.

I can refer it also to the matter of income tax deferred. During those years the petroleum and natural gas industries deferred over $5 billion worth of taxes; the mining industry, $1.8 billion; the finance industry, $2.5 billion; and the garment industry deferred $17.4 million in the year 1979. In other words, the loans without interest, which is the most modest way of putting this tax deferral, ran in the billions to the petroleum, mining, and finance industries, whereas the garment industry got a measly $17 million in tax deferrals.

I have estimated that between $3 billion and $4 billion would have accrued to the Canadian Government's Treasury if those industries, petroleum, banks and mines, had been taxed effectively at the same rate as the garment manufacturing industry. Therefore, I am asking that the Government take seriously the need for a continuation of the garment industry in Canada and not accept this myth that it is somehow too weak to be worth defending.

In fact, what the garment industry leaders have said, both the employers and the unions, is that they are not asking for financial hand-outs. They are asking to have an assured share, not the whole Canadian market, of the Canadian market so that they will know that they have some hope of recovering their investment as they continue modernizing the industry.

The world market is undoubtedly changing, and there are many proposals being made in Canada to respond to those changes. A country like Thailand has just in the last couple of years entered into the world market for garment manufacturing, and some of its product in the last couple of years have come to Canada, only 2 or 3 per cent. They are not satisfied. They hope to boost that to 10 per cent. But it is one of the countries in which wages are a tenth or less of the wages in Canada, in which young women are brought from the countryside—they are a country of 50 million people, twice the size of Canada in population—and housed in dormitories, in not very free conditions. It is a country in which government and employers have an agreement, a de facto understanding with each other, for getting rid of unions by physically eliminating union leaders. It is a country in which there is some amount of the use of child labour, or what would in our country be classified by age as the labour of children.

It is not reasonable to allow those practices which we have outlawed in Canada, in Britain, in western Europe, generations ago, to undermine the employment opportunity or the working conditions and wages of the working men and women of Canada. Certainly it would be unreasonable to decide that Canada should return to child labour simply because a country like Thailand makes use of it.

Another country which has already made inroads into the Canadian market is Mexico and the Maquiladora strip. Two years ago this month, Adidas announced its closing of a factory of 200 employees in Toronto. When I phoned the manager, I asked the reason for it. He said: "Well, our sales are down". When I inquired more widely, I found that sales from that factory had been allowed to decline because they had opened a factory in Mexico where the wages are about one-tenth of what they are in Canada.

Again it is not reasonable, it is not patriotic, it is not socially responsible to allow workers of Canada to be thrown out of work because we are taking advantage of a situation in Mexico or Thailand or whatever in which the workers are economically pressured to work for wages like 50 cents an hour.

What I am asking for is consideration of this Bill by the committee for two purposes. One, immediately to control the extent of injury to the Canadian garment or apparel manufacturing industry. It would not take away the rights of the present importers. It would simply stop the increase of importation by people who are not also manufacturers of clothing in Canada. In other words, it would enable the clothing manufacturers who still survive in Canada to continue their production, to invest further in modernization which has certainly been continuing in the past few years on Spadina, and to maintain a garment manufacturing industry in Canada.

Second, this is a proposal that moves in the direction of an orderly sharing of the world market. Instead of simple dog-eat-dog, this is an attempt to suggest that as new technologies develop, as new producers come on the market, and as new markets come into sight, there should be the development of international arrangements for sharing that market. This is a specific proposal from the employers and the representatives of the workers in one of Canada's large industries, the second largest manufacturing industry in Canada, the largest employer of women in manufacturing. This is their request, that Parliament allow them to come to our committee and work with us on the details of this Bill. I would ask Hon. Members to vote in favour of it today.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I have been sitting here for 20 minutes, and I am confused. I have listened to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party introduce his Bill which is before the House for second reading, Bill C-243, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act. He described its purpose as the encouragement of investment by Canadians and non-Canadians in domestic industries by setting limits on imported apparel. According to the Hon. Member, that measure would contribute to economic growth and increased employment in this country. Then, for 10 minutes, he knocked all these Third World countries, their employment record and methods of hiring and firing, their assassination of union leaders, and everything else.

This is where the confusion comes in. Everyone knows that the NDPers have to stick by their policy manual. They are committed to it. In their 1986 policy manual, Resolutions Reference, Resolution B.2.4 indicates that they would:

> Take the following measures to facilitate importation of manufactures from less developed countries:
> (A) Liberalize the generalized system of preferences;
> (B) Ease and eliminate the recent clothing import quotas;
> (C) Introduce no new import restrictions beyond the existing tariff levels."

That is Resolution B.2.4 in their 1986 policy manual, Resolutions Reference. They are also still committed to Resolution A.1.11 which says the opposite. It says:

> "The NDP will pursue—the immediate protection of jobs in the industry through import restrictions."

You cannot have it both ways.

Mrs. Mailly: They can. They always do.

Mr. McDermid: They try. They always try. The NDP do this all the time. When they are speaking to consumers or those with an interest in Third World countries, they say "Our policy as passed at the convention is to increase the flow of textiles and clothing from Third World countries to Canada. We have to help those Third World countries". Then, when they are speaking to manufacturers and workers, they say: "We will erect barriers to imports".

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I know the Parliamentary Secretary is a very able debator, and I wonder if he can tell the House from what he is quoting. There was no NDP convention in 1986. Is this one of the provincial sections of the Party? We would like to be enlightened on what section he is looking at.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order. It is a point that could be debated later on.

Mr. McDermid: Boy, they get nervous over there when you start quoting their policy to them. They get very nervous. I can understand why the Hon. Member is up on his feet interfering all the time.

As I was saying, when they speak to industry they say that they will erect barriers against imports from developing countries and that that is their policy. That is why I am confused.

The Hon. Member better talk to his colleagues who put these policies together at the NDP conventions which they have all the time, where they raise their little cards and support these things, because the policies are a direct contradiction of each other. Get your act together before you come into this House introducing a Bill to do something about textiles.

I believe the Government's continued commitment to maintaining a viable level of production in these vital industries has been made patently clear on a number of occasions. In the 1986 policy statement for the textile and clothing industries, a government policy statement I might add, the Government announced its plans for a broad trade regime with the primary objective of moderating the pace of clothing import growth to allow orderly adjustment in the Canadian industry.

A number of measures were set out in the statement to achieve this objective. Canada pursued international negotiations in 1986 for an extension to 1991 of the Multi-Fibre Arrangement, the international framework under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which governs trade in the textile and clothing sectors. That is one thing the NDP always forgets. It always thinks Canada can go off and do its own little thing that we are a little island on to ourselves, and that we should never mind the global economy and what is going on around us. In addition, in 1986 and 1987, Canada renegotiated bilateral textile restraint arrangements with some 25 low-cost supplying countries. Those were tough negotiations, but we accomplished it.

To complement Canada's participation in this internationally accepted regime for textile and clothing trade, the Government has taken an innovative approach in introducing other programs to boost the prospects of domestic producers. These programs, while offering major benefits to Canadian clothing industries, will carry with them none of the potential for an international backlash, especially from low-cost countries, as would the Hon. Member's proposed import quotas at roll-back levels. It would cause a major furore throughout the trading world, and it would also conflict with the NDP's policy statement.

One of the programs I am referring to has most recently been the subject of a major announcement by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the duty remission package for textile and clothing imports. The solutions offered by duty remission to the problems experienced in the clothing industry, and we do not minimize them, not for one minute, are particularly compelling. They have been under active consideration by this Government from the beginning.

We should remember the July 1984 campaign announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in Sherbrooke, Québec. He outlined the Government's agenda for the textile and apparel industry which would provide both stability through fair trade measures and adjustment in those sectors by promoting and reinforcing their strengths. A key area targeted in the announcement was rationalization of Canadian production through the use of duty remission schemes so that Canadian producers could work with instead of against low-cost foreign producers. They would serve to combine Canadian expertise in fashion, marketing, and financial techniques with foreign input to offer a full range of textile and clothing products to both the domestic market and markets around the world.

The desirability of pursuing duty remission programs to increase competitiveness of Canadian manufacturers was reiterated in the Government's 1986 textile and clothing policy. Based on proposals put forward by the industry, a pilot project for duty remission on shirts was introduced at that time to enable domestic shirt producers to import, duty-free, those product lines which would complement their own output. Thus, they were able to focus more on rationalizing their operations to become more competitive. On March 22 of this year the Government announced an enhanced three part program of tariff relief measures to meet the express needs of the textile and clothing industry.

Let me conclude by saying this. The garment industry in Canada is very good. Our designers are world class. I am wearing a suit today, a Warren K. Cook fashion made in Toronto. I give them a plug. They are a Canadian company and do a great job. They can sell around the world. They make quality garments. Our designers are winning international awards. It is interesting to note that the Americans, in their criticism of the free trade agreement, said that their textile and garment industry will lose out to the Canadian industry. That is what they are saying in the U.S.

We in Canada are good. We are very good. Our garment makers are terrific. They are fabulous. They are superb. Our designers are great. We are going to do extremely well with all the programs we have in place for the garment and textile industry. We are going to be able to compete in the areas where we are good. That is what it is all about.

Unfortunately, I must tell my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), that the Government must oppose his Private Member's Bill introduced today. However, we are greatly concerned about the future of clothing producers in Canada and have made what we believe is a very progressive move to develop a more streamlined and competitive approach, which will meet and even exceed the challenge of low-cost imports in a healthy and growing market.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to make a short intervention on Private Member's Bill C-243, introduced by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). At the outset, I have trouble with his proposal. As I understand it, he seeks to tie imports of apparel or clothing to 1983 levels. This would apply to importers of clothing and, as I understand his proposal, imports would be frozen at 1983 levels. There would be no way for importers to increase the imports of clothing.

On the other hand, domestic manufacturers would be entitled to additional imports and these additional imports would be tied to increases in domestic production. Therefore, those manufacturers that increase their production in Canada would be able to increase imports by an amount equal to their increased domestic production.

My general feeling is that this is too rigid. This is saying that only manufacturers can import, that those who are in the business of selling goods, those in the retail trade for the sake of argument, would not be able to import. I think this could lead to tremendous trafficking in quotas. That probably exists to a certain extent under today's system, but I think it would be seriously aggravated as a result of such a rigid provision.

The Hon. Member said that the Bill was also designed to move to an orderly sharing of the world market. I have trouble with that. I think it is well known that many Third World and developing countries have objected to attempts by industrialized countries to shut them out of their markets. The Multi-Fibre Arrangement is really an attempt by the industrialized countries to limit imports from developing countries.

It is somewhat of an anomaly in the sense that it is called a Multi-Fibre Arrangement because I understand it is imposed by industrialized countries against the will of developing countries which have no choice but to accept it. The Hon. Member talks about an orderly sharing of the world market, and I think there is danger in this proposal of discriminating against developing countries and inhibiting their ability to grow.

These are the kinds of concerns I have with this Bill. On the other hand, I recognize that the Member has raised some legitimate concerns. There are some clothing manufacturers in my constituency. I received a letter from one such manufacturer about a year ago, a manufacturer of sweaters and sporting or active wear. This manufacturer said that as an employer of 175 Quebecers he believes his company and others like his are being adversely affected by the lack of policies of the federal Government toward regulating the import of foreign made garments. He said that significant growth would not occur in his industry unless Canada reduced the indiscriminate quantities of imported goods into Canada.

I suppose that is a legitimate issue, to the extent that there are wide fluctuations and huge increases from year to year in any one category. However, my understanding of the present legislation is that this is not supposed to happen. Perhaps there is a need to enforce better existing legislation rather than pass new legislation.

I acknowledge that the Hon. Member for Spadina stated that another objective of this Bill would be the control of quotas here in Canada. That is a legitimate concern which I have heard expressed in the past. For some reason our present quotas are not controlled by Canadians. They are set by Canadians but, for some reason or another, we seem to have lost control over them. This matter certainly bears attention and study by this House.

I thought that the comments of the Parliamentary Secretary on behalf of the Government were somewhat defensive. He ought to be defensive, given the recent decisions of the Government with respect to the duty remission scheme which was rolled back and is a much less substantial scheme than that which was envisioned by the industry and which the industry was led to believe by the Government would be the case. I see that the Member is shaking his head.

Mr. McDermid: It's what they requested.

Mr. Berger: He says that that is what the industry requested, that they got what they requested.

Mr. McDermid: They didn't get what they requested.

Mr. Berger: I have spoken to a number of manufacturers, and I can only go by what I am told by these people whom I regard to be knowledgeable. They live and work in the industry. They make their living by spending long hours every day at it. They tell me that they did not get what they expected, that they did not get what the Government promised over the course of the past two years. They say that the Government backed down on the promises it made to the industry because of the pressure applied on it by Washington.

Through its actions in the textile and clothing industry with respect to the duty remission scheme, the Government has indicated that our policies are not being made here in Canada by the Parliament of Canada according to the needs and best interests of Canadians but are being made in Washington according to the dictates of U.S. industry.

In conclusion, while I have great difficulty with some of the provisions of this Bill, I certainly believe that the subject matter is worthy of examination. If there were some method by which the subject matter of this Bill could be referred to a parliamentary committee, before which we could invite clothing manufacturers and clothing importers to tell us of their concerns first hand, that would be desirable. That is what I, on behalf of my Party, would support.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I want to clear up some confusion that I believe may have inadvertently been left by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). He referred to New Democratic Party documents dated 1986, I believe, and pointed to what he felt was a conflicting position within those documents. The reference he used suggests to me that he was really looking at the resolutions that were to be submitted to convention.

Mr. McDermid: No. It was as reaffirmation of a 1977 resolution.

Mr. Angus: Again, not having seen the document referred to by the Hon. Member—

Mr. McDermid: It is your policy book.

Mr. Angus: Perhaps if the Hon. Member would let me finish explaining the process the NDP goes through. In advance of conventions, riding associations as well as some of the affiliated organizations will pass resolutions and send them to convention. At convention, every delegate will get a book of resolutions that have been proposed by the rank and file of the Party for consideration by convention.

We have a resolutions committee that will sift through the proposed resolutions, look at previous resolutions that had been adopted to determine if they are still relevant, and try to weed out any conflicts. We admit that from time to time there have been conflicts, in terms of the wording, which have only been discovered later on.

That committee reports to convention and indicates an order of priority of the resolutions for debate. That is debated as well, because sometimes people would like their particular issue moved up on the agenda.

Ultimately, some resolutions are debated at convention. We never have enough time to debate every resolution in the resolutions book. Hundreds of resolutions are submitted to our federal and provincial conventions.

The other point is that those resolutions which are not dealt with at convention are automatically referred to our federal council for consideration. For example, at our last convention in Montreal in 1987, a resolution that I had drafted and submitted from my riding association had not been dealt with by the floor. It was later referred to the federal council which, in turn, adopted it in a different form. I simply want people to understand the process.

We have provincial conventions that make decisions which are not necessarily binding on the federal Party or caucus until those policies have been adopted by the convention. Resolution No. 5 adopted by the federal council of NDP in 1983, reads:

> The immediate protection of jobs in the industry through import restrictions to ensure Canadian industry at least its present share of the domestic market until the removal of such restrictions is warranted by:
> (a) improved productivity and competitiveness of the Canadian economy as a whole; and
> (b) proven adherence of competitor nations to recognized standards of human rights and economic justice as adopted by the I.L.O. in the form of Convention and Recommendations.

That is the operative resolution by which we are governed.

I support my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), in his ongoing attempt to assist workers in the apparel industry. I know his interest in their ability to keep their jobs, as well as obtain decent pay, and to have some protection from the kind of competition we are seeing from other countries which are paying in a day what we do not consider legal pay for an hour's work.

The Hon. Member for Spadina has proposed in Bill C-243 that as a manufacturer expands his operation and requires additional materials from offshore he be allowed to do so in proportion to the amount of sales and manufacturing. I think that makes a lot of sense.

The Liberal spokesperson suggested that there may be some things wrong with the Bill but the general concept of it was worth pursuing. He hoped that there would be a mechanism to allow the substance of this Bill to be sent to a committee for further consideration.

I believe the Parliamentary Secretary also indicated the importance of this industry and of trying to enhance it. We may disagree on the direction we should take, but perhaps there is a willingness to consider transferring the subject matter to a standing committee. Perhaps members on the Government side will want to consider that option.

In conclusion, I support Bill C-243. I wanted to clarify the process of how the NDP develops its resolutions, and I wanted to caution Members not to mix resolutions proposed with resolutions passed.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, the speech by the Hon. Member who just spoke was interesting. I have taken the opportunity to check some of their resolutions, including Resolution B.3.1 of the New Democratic Party, Resolution B.2.2 from the 1977 convention, Resolution B.1.1. from the 1981 convention resolutions, and Resolution B.9.2. from its 1987 convention resolutions. According to those resolutions the NDP supported and is committed to eliminating trade barriers to manufactured imports from the Third World.

I find it most interesting that their latest 1987 convention states that they are committed to eliminating trade barriers to manufactured imports from the Third World.

I wish to take this opportunity to shed a little light on the current situation with regard to the performance of the domestic clothing industry in the face of import competition from low-cost countries. Perhaps an encouraging word on the moderation of the growth of these low-cost imports in recent years would cause the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) to reconsider the necessity of introducing import quotas that cut back levels, as he has sought to do through Bill C-243 to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

The provisions contained in this Bill would limit the issuance of permits allowing clothing imports to enter Canada to a level imported in 1983, with only domestic producers being allowed to import above that year's level.

The reason behind the suggested amendment to the Export and Import Permits Act to put these quotas into effect is a recognition that measures to protect the apparel industry would benefit Canada by encouraging investment and thus contributing to economic growth and employment opportunities.

However, I wish to demonstrate that the special measures of protection this Government has had in place for several years now are already proving effective in achieving a more stable market in which the domestic clothing industry can compete.

• (1450)

The priorities Canada has established for the textiles and clothing sectors were set out in the Government's textile policy announcement of July 30, 1986. They include a more moderate growth rate of clothing imports which between 1981 and 1985 had averaged 11 per cent each year in a market that grew by only 2 per cent annually. As a result of the growth of imports during those years, the market share held by Canadian clothing manufacturers fell from 69 per cent to 57 per cent. So we acted; the Government introduced its policy in July, 1986.

In addition, the Government adopted a stance of more rigorous application of Canada's rights under the international Multi-Fiber Arrangement and other international obligations, to ensure that the objective of reduced import growth was not derailed by surges in imports or by circumvention of controls through improper entry or misdeclaration of imports.

At the time that Canada announced its policy for the textiles and clothing sectors in July, 1986 it had 25 bilateral restraint arrangements in place, 22 of which were due to expire at the end of 1986. Consequently, negotiations were entered into with these sources to conclude arrangements for the 1987-1991 period. The negotiations were undertaken with a view to reducing the over-all import growth rate afforded in all the arrangements. However, it was recognized that the treatment given to less developed suppliers should be more favourable than that provided for in the agreements with major suppliers such as Korea, Hong Kong, and Taiwan, which together accounted for over 50 per cent of all imports from low-cost sources.

The negotiations were concluded in the spring of 1987, with new bilateral arrangements extending four years or five years in most cases. The over-all aggregate growth rate over the five years was frozen for the major suppliers. For the others, over-all annual import growth is in the 5 per cent to 6 per cent range. Accordingly, given the prominence of the major suppliers, the aggregate growth rate for all agreements is more in line with the recent historical growth of the Canadian market.

The "Report on Textiles and Clothing—1987" published by the Textile and Clothing Board provides an account of the performance of the industries in 1986, as well as an analysis of Canada's bilateral textile restraint arrangements negotiated within the Multi-Fibre Arrangement framework. The board has concluded:

> 1986 turned out to be a strong year for the Canadian textile and clothing industries. All indicators of activity were up: output, employment, capacity utilization, investments and profits, and textile clothing retailers had a prosperous year, the chain stores in particular.
> There was no indication of a slow down in the textile and clothing industries during the first months of 1987. All indicators were up with imports of clothing alone lagging at a growth rate of less than 2 per cent . . .
> In its appraisal of the Canadian bilateral restraint arrangements—the board concluded that, in general, more restrictive restraint arrangements have been negotiated with the 25 major exporting countries covering the period from January 1, 1987, to December 3, 1991. Such arrangements should serve to maintain a strong environment for the Canadian textile and clothing industries.

Although the new bilateral agreements have been in effect for only a little more than one year, they have already played a convincing role in moderating import growth. The reduction in maximum annual growth allowed under the 1987-1991 agreements is reflected in a much decelerated increase in actual 1987 imports compared with previous year over year growth. The level of clothing imports from all sources into Canada on a volume basis in 1987 was 277 million units, representing a rise of only 4 per cent over the 1986 level.

This trend has continued in the first three months of this year, with the January to March 1988 clothing import level showing an increase of only 4.6 per cent over the same period in 1987.

These percentages speak for themselves when it comes to assessing the stability of the trading environment within which the domestic clothing industry must compete. They also show that the current Government's policy objective of moderating import growth, as enunciated in the July 1986 policy statement, is being met. Therefore, I question the need for Draconian measures such as the import quotas proposed in Bill C-243.

While I do not pretend that clothing imports no longer present certain difficulties to Canadian producers, the introduction of excessive measures of protection seems unnecessary for a sector in which all indicators point to renewed vigour. I cannot support this proposal. I cannot say that it makes any sense.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Madam Speaker, after listening to the two excellent presentations by my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) and the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow), I feel little more needs to be said to explain the serious deficiencies and inadequacies of the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

What I think is noteworthy this afternoon is the fact that the New Democratic Party has once again shown its inconsistencies. With his usual sharpness, my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, identified the shortcomings in the Bill as compared with the New Democratic policies. I have noted that during the last 15 minutes or so members of the NDP in the House are having a little get-together to see what the problem is with respect to the Bill. There are obvious inconsistencies and they are shown up by those Members huddling together this afternoon to try to resolve it.

Having said that, let me say that I could talk at some length about why the Bill is not necessary because of the present policies in existence and the Acts we now have to regulate the industry. Let me just take advantage of the last minute by summarizing what is in existence now in Canada and why we do not need Bill C-243, which was proposed by the Hon. Member for Spadina.

At the present time almost all imports of apparel from low-cost sources are already subject to import controls and the Government is taking prompt action where new sources of disruptive imports emerge. The proposals in Bill C-243 are not in keeping with the current policy nor with the spirit of the provisions of the Export and Import Permits Act. The introduction of a fixed quota in the Act would introduce an unnecessary rigidity in the market-place, and there is no evidence that it would contribute to any more investment or permanent employment than is now the case.

Given the potential negative impact of a roll back of supply and the international repercussions which might ensue from Canada contravening its international agreements and obligations, the Bill is unwarranted and unnecessary.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

TIMING OF SECOND READING MOTION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is understood that later this morning we will have an opportunity to raise various points of order concerning the Bill to implement the trade agreement, Bill C-130, and it is my understanding that these points have to be raised prior to the calling of the motion for second reading of the Bill.

I want to make very certain that, through some inadvertence, we will not actually get to the point where the motion is called before the points of order on Bill C-130 are raised, thus making it impossible, in the light of various precedents, to argue these points of order.

I want to have an assurance from the Government House Leader that this will not be done as far as he is concerned, and that you, Sir, will be very vigilant to ensure that somehow or other the motion for second reading is not called before these points of order can be argued.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to give my hon. colleague the assurance that it is our intention simply to trigger the debate on the procedural acceptability of Bill C-130, if in fact my hon. colleagues have anything to raise at that the time, and the Government has no intention of actually calling the order today. Once there has been discussions on Bill C-130 at the procedural level only, I would expect—and I do not mean to anticipate your decision—that you might want to reserve and have an opportunity to consider the arguments.

As soon as the debate or discussion is finished, it would be our intention to move immediately to continuing debate on Bill C-129, the privatization of Air Canada. That would be the business before the House today.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that prior to getting to Government Orders of the Day, after we go through Routine Proceedings, the Deputy House Leader for the Government will rise to indicate the Government's intention to bring forward Bill C-130, and it would be at that point that you would entertain remarks regarding the appropriateness of this legislation in its present form.

Mr. Speaker: I am grateful for the interventions of Hon. Members and of the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). I might reply first to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The Chair, of course, always has a duty to be diligent that the points of view that are necessary for the working of this place be heard. In the circumstances, I think the Chair is assisted by the arrangements and the understandings, at least, that there are at the present time between the Government and the Opposition. I am answering the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) as well and the Minister of State in this respect.

I will proceed to call, at the end of Routine Proceedings, Orders of the Day. I will then wait until I see whether Hon. Members wish to rise. I am anticipating that that will be the case. I think it would be appropriate first to recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, and then I will recognize the Minister of State who will address the Chair with respect to the Government's view.

The Minister of State said that he did not want to anticipate my ruling, and properly so, and I appreciate that courtesy. However, I want to indicate to the House that certainly at the moment, it is not my intention to give an immediate response by way of ruling. It is my intention to consider very carefully what will be brought before me later on. I think Hon. Members can anticipate that, unless something quite extraordinary develops, the Chair will reserve and will return to the House at some appropriate time.

So far as the Chair is concerned, it would be completely inappropriate to proceed with debate on Bill C-130 until the Chair has returned to the Chamber with a ruling or we have, if necessary, some further argument or further questions.

In any event, I fully understand the importance of this matter to all Hon. Members, and I want to assure everyone that every diligence will be exercised. However, it is also important that Hon. Members and the public realize that this very important matter is proceeding in a manner, which is a credit to this place, as a consequence of an understanding so that we will have a debate under civil circumstances and the Opposition need not fear that something will be done in an impetuous manner or in any way to take the Opposition unaware. I am very aware of the situation and I want to assure Hon. Members of that.

I want to thank Hon. Members on both sides for the understanding they have worked out among themselves. That makes it much easier for the Speaker.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I noticed that you acknowledged the very distinguished parliamentarians from Windsor West, Kamloops—Shuswap, and the Minister of State. I presume those remarks did not mean that you would be excluding other Members who felt they had points of order or wanted to comment on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. My answer is of course no. I most certainly will hear some other Members if there is a desire on their part to contribute to the debate. It was in the interests of clarity, and so that we all know what we are doing and how it is going, that I indicated that that would be the order in which I would open the debate.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the fine City of Calgary, Alberta, as well as residents of Black Creek, Courtenay, Nanaimo, Cumberland, and Comox, British Columbia.

While they are different petitions, they deal with the same concern that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade deal with the U.S.

They believe that the deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to develop a society distinct from that of the U.S. Therefore, they ask Parliament to dissolve now to enable the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadians indicating their opposition to the Government's free trade arrangement with the U.S.

The petitioners believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade arrangement through a national general election.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to our petitioners, namely that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada without obtaining anything in exchange; that Canadian industries are still not protected against U.S. trade laws; that the United States has obtained everything it wanted in major areas, including agriculture, energy, the automobile industry, financial services and the investment industry; that the jobs of thousands of Canadians are being threatened, and that the Conservative Government has failed to provide any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers.

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to condemn this Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from Canadians living in places like Mississauga, Guelph, Cheltenham, Bramalea, and Etobicoke, all of which are in Ontario and around Toronto.

Since the Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S., since the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S., and whereas the trade agreement denies Canadians the promised secure access to the U.S. market, the undersigned petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present, on behalf of a number of constituents from the community of Shellbrook, a petition which suggests that the trade agreement threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty and our policy freedom to determine our own economic future and undermines our ability to build a distinct society.

Consequently, the petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement through a national general election.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of southern Ontario, particularly the City of Guelph, who protest that the Conservative Government does not have a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S.

• (1120)

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised later in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised. However, the trade agreement negotiated by the Government in fact threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities among the regions.

For these and other reasons these petitioners call upon Parliament to dissolve and give them the opportunity to reject the free trade agreement in a federal general election.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the understanding that we have, I now call Government Orders and recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

On the Order: Second reading and Reference:

May 24, 1988—Mr. Crosbie—Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I believe that a number of points should be made in order to demonstrate that Bill C-130 is out of order and cannot be considered by the House in the form in which it has been presented. However, I want to raise at this stage a point of order dealing specifically with the omnibus nature of Bill C-130. It is my intention, once argument has been made by myself and others on the omnibus nature of Bill C-130, to raise other points which I think are valid and deserve to be accepted by you, Sir, as Speaker of this House.

I refer specifically, although not exhaustively, to points which would include the fact that Bill C-130 intends to amend measures before this House which have not yet been adopted and also to the issue of whether or not Bill C-130 is a disguised and improper way of amending the Constitution of this country. However, at this stage I am raising a point of order specifically about what I submit is the unacceptable omnibus nature of this Bill.

I want to point out that Bill C-130 consists of 123 pages. It would appear to attempt to amend 27 existing federal laws and to compel all provinces and municipalities to make all their present and future laws consistent with it. It purports to be a measure that is presented to the House to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

The parliamentary implications of dealing with a Bill of the kind before us are very serious, both for the orderly consideration of the Bill itself and for future legislative procedure on similar Bills.

I submit that the starting point for your consideration, Sir, of the issue as to whether or not this Bill is of an unacceptable omnibus nature is the famous ruling by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux of January 26, 1971, in which he said:

> However, where do we stop? Where is the point of no return? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West, said that we might reach the point where we would have only one bill, a bill at the start of the session for the improvement of the quality of life in Canada which would include every single proposed piece of legislation for the session. That would be an omnibus bill with a capital, "O" and a capital "B". But would it be acceptable legislation? There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

I must say immediately, Mr. Speaker, that Speaker Lamoureux went on to rule that in the instance then at question that that point had not been reached. I also want to say immediately that it would appear that neither he nor any of his successors have as yet ruled that that point has been reached.

However, I submit that the principle has been clearly established by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in the precedent I just quoted. It is open to you, Sir, to decide that that precedent applies here and that the Government has gone too far, that it has passed that point where, to quote Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, "we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint".

I submit specifically that this trade Bill, Bill C-130, is exactly the kind of Bill Mr. Lamoureux had in mind when he said that there were Bills of an omnibus nature which went beyond the point of what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

The essential defence of an omnibus procedure is that the Bill in question, although it may seek to create or to amend many disparate statutes, in effect has one basic principle or purpose which ties together all the proposed enactments and thereby renders the Bill intelligible for parliamentary purposes.

The energy security Bill of 1982 is the last famous or, in the minds of some, infamous occasion when the matter as to whether a Bill is or is not of an unacceptable omnibus nature arose. The energy security Bill of 1982 included in its long title an exhaustive list of the statutes concerned. I will not take the time of the House to read that title. It is a matter of record as to what it says. I think I am entirely correct in saying that this long title laid out all the statutes that were to be affected by that Bill.

When the House looked at the energy security Bill of 1982, the argument was made by the Government that the entire Bill had to do with energy security and that, therefore, it was entirely appropriate to use the omnibus approach.

I want to say parenthetically that at that time the Opposition of the day had at its disposal an additional argument that arose from the requirement at that time that all Bills based, even in part, on a Ways and Means Motion were referred, not to a standing committee but to a Committee of the Whole, and that, therefore, under the procedure of the day would make it impossible to hear witnesses whose affairs were vitally affected by the legislation.

This is not exactly the case under the present rules. Bill C-130 will go to a legislative committee if it is ruled procedurally acceptable and adopted on second reading. We are, however, talking about only one legislative committee which could have as few as seven members. One cannot say at this time just how detailed the study of the Bill in that committee would be.

I want to recall to the House that the ruling on the question as to whether the energy security Bill of 1982 was of an unacceptable omnibus nature was made by Madam Sauvé, the Speaker of the day. I do not think it is improper for me to say that Madam Sauvé's ruling in that case was so brief as to be almost peremptory in its nature.

We know, of course, that that ruling was followed by what is commonly referred to as the bell ringing incident, when the bells rang for some two weeks because the Conservative Members of the House, on whose behalf the point of order about the unacceptable omnibus nature of the energy security Bill had been raised in the first place, refused to come into the House in order that a vote could be taken. I believe that the motion at that time was a motion that the House do adjourn.

The whole incident was ended by the Government proposing a motion to the House, which was adopted by the House, that in effect the legislation in its original form be withdrawn and be divided into several individual Bills.

What happened after Speaker Sauvé's ruling was not simply the disorder that ensued through what is known as the bell ringing incident but, more important, the concession by the Government of the impropriety of its course of action and the offering to the House of an order dividing the omnibus Bill into several Bills, which was accepted by the House. That provides strong evidence that from the point of view of acceptable parliamentary usage in Canada, Madam Sauvé's ruling should be found by yourself to be distinguishable from the present situation and to stand by itself in a way that does not mean it should be taken into account in the present case or any subsequent cases where the omnibus nature of a Bill is argued.

Let me point out that in her ruling Speaker Sauvé simply found that the Bill was not an unacceptable omnibus Bill in the light of previous precedents as she understood them, but she gave no analysis of the energy security Bill in comparison with other Bills to which previous precedents had been connected, and she gave no analysis of or answer to the lengthy argument on the point of order offered on behalf of the Official Opposition, the Conservative Party, by a Member of Parliament from Alberta who now sits in the House as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

She also said that it was open to the House, if it wished, to do something further about the matter, saying in effect that the House itself could deal with the matter.

I submit therefore that Speaker Sauvé's ruling should not be followed by yourself for two reasons. First, it clearly applied only to the one energy security Bill of 1982. It did not in any way attempt to set out any principle of general application on omnibus Bills that would be, if not binding as a precedent in future cases, at least helpful to Speakers like yourself who would come after Speaker Sauvé and have to deal with questions of omnibus Bills.

I repeat that Speaker Sauvé's ruling was so brief as to be almost peremptory in nature. There was no attempt to analyse the energy security Bill in light of other Bills on which previous rulings had been based. There was no effort at all to respond to the very interesting and lengthy point of order that had been argued on behalf of the Conservative Party.

I respectfully submit again without any disrespect to one of your distinguished predecessors, Madam Sauvé, that her ruling on the energy security Bill should be distinguished from this particular case, set aside, and looked on as something of a nature that applies only to the particular case under which it arose.

Second, let me say that if Speaker Sauvé's ruling has any application at all to the present case, it is with reference to what it said about the House dealing with the matter. I submit that the House did in fact deal with the matter when it accepted the request of the Government that an order be adopted withdrawing in effect the original energy security Bill and allowing it to be replaced by a series of individual Bills, because in effect the Government admitted that the original Bill was of an unacceptable omnibus nature.

I submit that the House, in dealing with the matter as it did, adopting the order it did to permit the withdrawal of the energy security Bill and its replacement by a number of individual Bills, created a precedent of general application that should apply and must apply to the consideration of the question of whether or not Bill C-130, the trade Bill, is of an unacceptable procedural nature.

In short, I am saying that therein you have a precedent which, taken together with the very wise and compelling words of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, must lead you to find that Bill C-130 is of an unacceptable omnibus nature and cannot be proceeded with in this House in its present form and, instead, must be withdrawn. If it is to come back to the House for consideration by this House, it must come back in a series of Bills reflecting the fact that it is intended to deal with as many as 27 different Acts.

I am also saying that this situation is one where it is clear that the point spoken of by Speaker Lamoureux has been reached, has been crossed, and has been transgressed so that it must be found by you, Sir, that Bill C-130 is of an unacceptable omnibus nature.

I want to make some additional arguments about the unacceptable omnibus nature of Bill C-130. First, let me deal with the matter of the umbrella of the Bill. It is a rather technical but important point because the umbrella of the Bill basically is that under which the drafters seek to include its various facets. Second, there is the matter of whether or not the implications that exist with respect to the omnibus procedure are harmful to the parliamentary process.

In the 1982 energy security Bill the drafters used what might be called the "kitchen sink approach" to the long title of the Bill. The title of the Bill creates the umbrella under which the drafters seek to include its various facets and is relevant as to whether or not the Bill is of an unacceptable omnibus nature. This also has implications for the extent to which the Bill can be amended.

In the present case the drafters have given Bill C-130 a very general long title. It reads: "An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America". They went on to combine it with a preamble that attempts to do the work of the long title by including the phrases:

> Whereas the Agreement applies generally throughout Canada;
> And Whereas it is necessary, in order to give effect to the Agreement, to make related or consequential amendments to other Acts;

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 703, bears directly on this aspect of the matter. It states:

> Although there is no specific set of rules or guidelines governing the content of a bill, there should be a theme of relevancy amongst the contents of a bill. They must be relevant to and subject to the umbrella which is raised by the terminology of the long title of the bill.

Beauchesne's goes on to say, in the same citation:

> Some of the constituent parts of a bill are essential; some are optional. The title is an essential part; the preamble is not.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 704, goes into more detail on the long title. It states:

> The long title sets out in general terms the purposes of the Bill. It should cover everything in the bill.

Citation 705 provides further evidence of the unimportance or even irrelevance of the preamble:

> The purpose of a preamble is to state the reasons and intended effects of the proposed legislation. Though a preamble is not necessary in a public bill, it is sometimes inserted in bills of great importance in order to place on record the intentions of the framers of the bill.

I submit that it appears that the Government has departed from accepted practice, even in the attempt to define the all important umbrella of its omnibus Bill. It has resorted to what I might call a two-punch vagueness, if one can combine vagueness with the concept of a punch. It has done so by adopting an excessively general long title and by attempting to insert an ill-defined reference to the real legislative purpose of the Bill in the preamble which is dispensable, which is not necessary, rather than in the essential long title where it properly and in a better defined manner belongs. In other words, this Bill is of an unacceptable omnibus nature because the Government failed to list in its long title all the statutes which Bill C-130 intends to amend or change.

By adopting this vague approach the Government has failed to provide a procedural justification for the inclusion in Bill C-130 of amendments or changes affecting upward of two dozen statutes. Thus, if the Government attempts to cite to you, Sir, precedents for its approach, I think you will find, in examining these precedents, that they refer to Bills in which the long title also included the Bills to be amended by the proposed Bill to which the long title was appended.

I also want to say that if the Bill is permitted to be proceeded with in its present form, that is, with its general long title referring only to the agreement and not to the amendment of Acts, the Government at some future point if debate on Bill C-130 is allowed to continue may try to argue that virtually all or any amendments to the Bill are beyond the scope of the Bill by virtue of the Acts not having been included in its title. If this argument is made, and if it is accepted, it would have the effect of making all proceedings during the detailed consideration of the clauses of the Bill irrelevant and even farcical.

What I have said in this regard leads to the procedurally relevant objection to the omnibus procedure, that the agreement and therefore the Bill by their very nature affect an extremely wide range of activities and issues going well beyond what one normally thinks of under the heading of "Trade". Such vital issues as investment policy, regional development policy, policy on financial institutions, policy on energy security—and I could go on and on—are included in Bill C-130.

In some cases the provisions of Bill C-130 represent a substantial departure from what has been the heretofore generally accepted policies in the form of statutes adopted by this House. I submit that it is very much in the Canadian parliamentary tradition that citizens affected by such radical changes be permitted to have the fullest possible input into the legislative process as it affects each and every one of these policies.

This is another reason that there should be separate Bills on each and every policy set out in the statutes adopted by this House which are intended to be changed by Bill C-130, because if there were separate Bills rather than this one omnibus Bill, Bill C-130, there would have to be separate committee stages carried out by legislative committees for each and every one of those Bills. This would give interested members of the public an opportunity which they would not have if this Bill were allowed to proceed as an omnibus Bill to present their views to the legislative committees studying the proposals in the separate Bills, which I submit should be before the House if two dozen or more individual statutes are to be amended.

I suppose in a way I am also asking you, Mr. Speaker, to use your authority in the famous Standing Order 1 of this House which was recently argued in another context, and I do not intend to repeat it at this time. Parliamentary tradition certainly must mean that the opportunities of not only Members of this House, but equally and perhaps more important, of members of the public, to have an input into each and every facet intended to be covered by Bill C-130 should not be abridged or lost by allowing the Government's intentions of adopting the trade deal with the United States to be carried through by an omnibus Bill in the form of Bill C-130.

As I have indicated, Bill C-130 is a massive Bill and will only go to one committee, a committee which will inevitably lack the breadth of expertise required for consideration of a Bill of such scope and size. Furthermore, the work-load of that committee, even if it is permitted by the government majority on the committee to undertake a proper examination of the Bill, will be so onerous as to make it difficult for it to give due consideration to all relevant opinion. I repeat that dividing the Bill into several components would lead to several committees constituted of more experienced members in specialized areas who would be able to give far more effective consideration to these matters. That also would make it possible for informed public input into each of the aspects covered by this Bill, which I think is consistent with our parliamentary tradition.

One should take note here of the sabre-rattling public statements of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who is sponsoring this Bill. He seems to be trying to establish the ground that he and his colleagues intend to use the Government's massive majority to prevent proper consideration of the Bill by the House or by whatever committee will be given responsibility for the Bill, if it is allowed to proceed in its present omnibus nature. This declared intention to run roughshod over the parliamentary process makes the Speaker's intervention on this matter essential in light of the importance of our parliamentary tradition. Again I repeat, Sir, that I think this is supported by the very clear words of Standing Order 1 of this House.

I want to put on record that neither Bill C-130 nor the trade deal which it is supposed to implement, has yet been submitted to even one minute of formal parliamentary consideration through debate in this House and in committee. That is the basis of our whole parliamentary system and which is clearly understood by members of the public to be the way in which the people they elect to represent them in Parliament deal with measures before the House.

It is not the fault of the Opposition if the Government has dithered for months and months before getting ready and tabling legislation in the House which attempts to implement this trade deal negotiated between our Government and the American Government. Arguments have been made outside the House—and they may be repeated in this procedural debate or in other forums offered by the House—that the trade deal has already been considered. I repeat that the consideration established by rules of the House on second reading, consideration and study in committee, consideration of amendments at report stage and debate on third reading cannot be argued to have been replaced by some discussion outside the House in a forum offered by a private sector group, even if it is a public forum. It cannot be said to have been replaced by a study by a parliamentary committee which completed its work before the full text of the deal was available and did not formally consider that text.

No matter how often there may have been meetings of business groups, labour groups, or social policy groups which considered this Bill, they cannot be said to substitute for or replace what is established as a fundamental feature of our parliamentary democracy: debate in the House and study in its committees of a measure as important as the measure to implement the trade deal negotiated between the Conservative Government and the Government of President Reagan of the United States.

This debate has not yet started, which is certainly not the fault of the Official Opposition. Under our rules the Government could have put down the legislation to implement the deal in its full terms any time it wanted and could have caused that measure to be debated any time it wanted. I hope that the Government will not be able to get away with an effort to paint any other kind of picture for the public.

Obviously this debate can begin in the forum provided for by our rules only if you, Mr. Speaker, decide that this Bill is not unacceptable on procedural grounds, either on the basis that it is an unacceptable omnibus Bill, along the lines that I have been outlining, or is unacceptable on other grounds that I intend to argue at a later stage.

I also want to ask—and this is perhaps a point that may be considered of an ominous nature by those studying the issue of being able to offer amendments to this Bill—what are the implications of the long title that I have been discussing previously? Amendments to a Bill must be relevant to and within the scope of a Bill. Erskine May indicates in several places that the long title is an important factor in determining the scope of the Bill. It is possible that in choosing the long title in the form that it presently exists the Government may be seeking to provide a basis for arguing later on that it will be able—and I think that if it does so it will be unacceptable and unjust—to limit the scope for offering amendments.

I wish to put before you, Sir, and the House at this point that Erskine May's Twentieth Edition also makes it clear that it is in order to offer amendments to the clauses of a Bill even if that Bill implements an agreement. Erskine May states:

> When a bill is introduced to give effect to an agreement or to confirm a scheme, the text of which is contained in a schedule to the bill, and the independent origin and status of which is described in an introductory provision in the bill, amendments cannot be made to the schedule, but the contents of the schedule can be modified or qualified by amendment to the clauses of the bill.

I want to say, by way of conclusion, that if one looks at Bill C-130 there is no doubt that it is of an omnibus nature. I want to say, by way of summing up, that it is open to you to find, Sir, that this Bill in effect is one which passes the point stipulated by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux as being of an unacceptable nature procedurally. This is buttressed by what this House decided as an outcome of the bell ringing incident of 1982.

I submit that the ruling of Madam Sauvé should be looked at as something limited to its narrow application to the energy security Bill, as she then saw it, in light of the absence of any argument or discussion in her ruling. It is open to you, Mr. Speaker, to apply the principles stated by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in light of the precedent created by this House in the order it adopted making it necessary for the Government to withdraw the energy security Bill and to divide it into several different individual Bills.

There are other points which I have made. I would just repeat one. It is that the title of the Bill makes the Bill defective. It cannot be accepted because the Bill has a title which does not include all the statutes that are intended to be amended.

Finally, I again want to say that what the Government is trying to do here is something which I think, if allowed to proceed, would undermine our parliamentary tradition and the effectiveness in future of the application of that tradition to the responsibilities of this House to debate properly, to study properly, and to hear properly the input of members of the public in order to allow it to make good decisions, the best possible decisions, on the important matters in question. We see here a procedure which the Government has already said it intends to use as part of a process for rushing through this measure without allowing either the House or the public to have proper and full opportunities to consider the measure, to debate it, to have input, and for the House then to make decisions based on that consideration, debate, and input.

For all the reasons I have given, Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that this Bill is of an improper omnibus nature. Therefore, Your Honour should not allow debate on second reading to proceed. Rather, you should rule that it cannot be dealt with in its present form and that therefore the Government must withdraw it and reintroduce it not as one omnibus Bill but as a number of individual Bills. This is consistent with what I consider, and I respectfully submit to be, the relevant precedents. This is consistent with the traditions of this House and, more important, the purpose of those traditions in terms of the relevance of this House to the life of the country now and in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, in the Standing Orders of the House of Commons the very first Standing Order indicates: "procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker—whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House".

Today, I rise on a point of order to argue that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, is procedurally out of order in its current form in that it combines more than one principle or proposition under the umbrella of a single Bill.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 411(1), states:

> Every matter is determined in the House of Commons upon a question put by the Speaker, on a proposition submitted by a Member, and resolved either in the affirmative or negative as the case may be. This proposition, called a motion, is a proposal moved by one Member, in accordance with certain well-established rules, that the House do something or order something to be done or express an opinion with regard to some matter.

Beauchesne talks of a proposition put by a Member, not about many propositions but a single proposition. Beauchesne goes on in Citation 411(2) to state that this method, that is, of putting a single proposition, "has been expanded into a system of rules whereby the judgment of the House may be ascertained with facility and precision".

It is a fundamental and long-standing right of Members of Parliament to be able to force the division of a motion that contains several distinct propositions. Citation 415(1) of Beauchesne's states:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether he should divide a motion.

If you refer, Mr. Speaker, to Journals, pages 427 through 431, for Monday, June 15, 1964, you will find an occasion when one of your predecessors exercised, just that prerogative, the power to force the division of a motion.

The issue before the House at that time was the great flag debate. When Speaker MacNaughton was faced with a single resolution that contained two distinct propositions, he ruled in favour of upholding the ancient and undoubted rights of Members of Parliament. He stated:

> I must come to the conclusion that the motion before the House contains two propositions and since strong objections have been made to the effect that these two propositions should not be considered together, it is my duty to divide them—

Here, Mr. Speaker, there is a clear and unequivocal affirmation of the Speaker's prerogative, as outlined in Beauchesne's, to divide motions that go beyond the normal practices of this House and combine more than one proposition into a single motion. So it is, in my estimation, with Bill C-130.

Bill C-130 is an omnibus Bill intended to implement the ill-conceived trade deal negotiated between this Government and the Government of the United States. It is important, however, not to confuse the objective of that Bill with the manner in which that objective is achieved. Even the most cursory examination of this Bill will show that it contains several distinct and separate elements and, I submit, my right as a Member of Parliament, to cast judgment in principle in each of these elements in a separate vote.

One of the principles in this Bill is the necessity of establishing a new trade dispute settlement mechanism. It was a fundamental belief of the Government that existing international trade dispute settlement mechanisms as established by the GATT were, in the case of the Canada-U.S. trade, insufficient vehicles for settling trade irritants between our two countries. That we should have this new proposed mechanism put to a vote in the House is not at issue. What is at issue is the fact that it is included as simply one of a number of many proposals and initiatives that leave us, as Members of Parliament, incapable of registering our vote on this fundamentally new and important issue.

There is also the whole question of the move toward a continental energy market which this agreement creates and this legislation attempts now to implement. This, as is recognized by all, is a radical departure from any previous government policy in this most critical resource sector. This is a fundamentally important issue, and this public policy decision of the Government should stand alone and be voted on separate from the other proposals included in the legislation.

There is also the whole question of establishing greatly liberalized investment rules between the two countries. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that the whole question of the extent and scope of the regulation of direct foreign investment in Canada has been a matter which has been on the public policy agenda of our country for 25 years to 30 years. Yet this Bill, if left in its present form, will deprive Members of Parliament the opportunity to debate in full, to amend, and to vote in principle on this fundamental change in our investment laws vis-à-vis the United States.

In recent days, Mr. Speaker, as you undoubtedly will be aware, several provincial Premiers, including those of Alberta, Ontario, Québec, Nova Scotia, and Prince Edward Island, have all expressed reservations about those clauses of this Bill that suggest that the federal Government will be allowed to trample on areas of provincial jurisdiction to ensure that the provinces comply with the terms of the agreement.

Surely this most delicate issue of the federal-provincial jurisdictional balance cannot be lumped together with these other matters in any reasonable way. This matter goes to the very heart of our federation, and any attempt by the federal Government to tamper with the jurisdictional boundaries between the two levels of Government must be seen as a most serious and potentially destructive initiative that Members of Parliament must be allowed to address independently of the other issues included in the Bill.

I have now listed what I consider to be at least four separate and distinct propositions brought together in Bill C-130. It is my contention that the tradition and customs of this House supported by Beauchesne's leaves you, Mr. Speaker, with the responsibility to uphold the rights and privileges of all Members of the House and to ensure that this Bill is broken up into its appropriate constituent parts.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, as you are well aware this is not the first time that the procedural acceptability of an omnibus piece of legislation has arisen in the House. On January 26, 1971, the then Hon. Member for Halifax-East Hants rose on a point of order to object to the introduction of Bill C-207, an Act respecting government organization. In his argument the Hon. Member stated, at page 2760 of Hansard for that day:

> If we were to pass Bill C-207 and it became an Act of this parliament, there would have to be 10 separate entries made in the index of statutes passed this session. There would have to be nine consequential amendments to seven additional statutes that are amended by schedule B of this measure, and these would also have to be indexed separately. I am suggesting we have a measure here that covers the waterfront.

Further in the argument on this particular point of order the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre, Stanley Knowles, offered the following insightful observation, as recorded at page 2762 of Hansard:

> —it is not a very giant step from this to one bill which would include the work of the whole session. The government could bring us here and while we were debating the address in reply to the Speech from the Throne a huge omnibus bill could be brought in for the improvement of life in Canada . . . So, I say that in terms of the operation of Parliament this point of order is very important. How far can government go in combining a host of different subjects into one Bill and ask Parliament to vote on them en bloc without any regard for the individual points?

That is a conversation that many of us have had in the last few days. Recognizing that if we were to proceed in the fashion that the Government is proceeding with regard to Bill C-130, presumably we could conduct all of the business of the Government of Canada within one large omnibus Bill. For that reason, we are very concerned in terms of the way the Government is proceeding at this point.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, in his ruling on this point of order later that day, made the following observation, as recorded at page 2768 of Hansard:

> —where do we stop? Where is the point of no return? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West, said that we might reach the point where we would have only one bill, a bill at the start of the session for the improvement of the quality of life in Canada which would include every single proposed piece of legislation for the session. That would be an omnibus Bill with a capital "O" and a capital "B". But would it be acceptable legislation? There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

I think that that is the critical point that is being made here. There is a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

Speaker Lamoureux was saying that indeed there can be Bills that are out of order because they are omnibus in nature. It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this point gave your predecessor much cause for concern. He expressed this concern in relation to Bill C-207 that sought to enact or amend 18 or 19 statutes. Bill C-130, which the Government wishes to call for debate at second reading today, seeks to amend a whopping 27 statutes. Mr. Speaker, if the scope of Bill C-207 gave Speaker Lamoureux so much concern, then I would suggest that Bill C-130 should cause much greater doubt in your mind as to its procedural acceptability.

Several years later on May 11, 1977, the Hon. Member for New Westminster rose on a point of order to object to the omnibus nature of Bill C-51, a Bill dealing with amendments to the Criminal Code, the Customs Tariff, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, and the Prisons and Reformatories Act. At that time he sought an order from the Chair, as permitted by Citation 415(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, to divide the Bill. In his ruling Speaker Jerome made the following observations, as recorded at page 5523 of Hansard:

> I think an hon. member of the House ought to have the right to compel the House to vote on each separate question.

Speaker Jerome then went on to argue that the then Standing Order 75(5), dealing with the ability to move amendments at report stage to delete certain clauses of the Bill, allowed Members effectively to isolate those sections that the Member thought ought to be voted on separately. However, without attempting to cast any doubt on the validity of the ruling, I would simply like to point out that at the moment we are about to commence second reading, which is debate in principle on the entire Bill. At this point Members are asked to cast judgment, not on specific clauses that they can isolate by way of amendment, but on the entire Bill.

On February 10, 1982, the then Hon. Member for Yukon rose on a point of order to object to the procedural acceptability of Bill C-93, an Act to amend the statute law relating to the certain taxes and to provide other authorities for the raising of funds. The argument advanced by the Member for Yukon at that time was that Bill C-93 unnecessarily joined together three separate Bills, two tax initiatives arising out of a Budget, and a traditional request for borrowing authority. During the course of his argument, Mr. Speaker, the Member made a most perceptive comment that I would like to repeat here today. At page 14865 of Hansard, the Member is reported to have said:

> What we have here is a continuation of the Government's practice of surreptitiously closing off and guillotining debate, not through the open invocation of Standing Order 75 or pure closure, but by means of a constant testing of the House and of the Chair with new legislative combinations. If one step works, then the Government goes a little further the next time. We are moving with slow and steady stealth in a direction the Government dares not openly avow or pursue.

The only difference between the Hon. Member's observations in 1982 and what we are seeing today is that this Government, rather than moving with stealth, is moving quickly and openly in its attempt to muzzle debate and crush the Opposition, and when it cannot do that within the scope of the rules as they exist now, it seeks to suspend these rules. It is quite simply, as I see it, government by force with the Opposition left to appeal to the Chair to ensure that an ancient and historic right to be heard is not tossed out in the Government's zeal to impose its will without adequate debate.

You will recall that on May 7, 1982, after some discussion between the three Parties, the Government finally realized it had transgressed the proprieties and customs of the House and, with consent, withdrew Bill C-93 and split it into two Bills.

Lastly, I come to what was perhaps the most infamous parliamentary dispute involving an omnibus Bill; that was, of course, the deadlock in this place over Bill C-94 in March, 1982, which was intended to implement the National Energy Program. You will recall that Bill C-94 sought to enact or amend some 15 statutes. On March 1, 1982, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) rose on a point of order to object to the Bill as having been introduced in imperfect form. During the course of his argument the Hon. Member from Calgary Centre suggested the following, as reported at page 15485 of Hansard:

> This Bill violates a number of those fundamental precepts of Parliamentary law. It is impossible to have a reasonable transaction of public business in an orderly manner when one has this kind of omnibus Bill to consider. It would be a travesty and a precedent of scary proportions to allow this type of Bill to go forward with so many disparate and different items collected together for no other reason than to obfuscate and confuse.

I would concur in full with that observation now as it applies to Bill C-130. In fact, Mr. Speaker, so concerned was the Hon. Member and his colleagues about the threat to parliamentary democracy posed by the omnibus nature of Bill C-94 that they closed down the House of Commons for over two weeks in protest. For many of us, that was a very sad day in parliamentary history in Canada. To make the point, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre and a number of his colleagues who stormed the Speaker's chair on that black day demanded that Parliament be closed down until the Government came to its senses. As you will remember, Mr. Speaker, the Government of the day did eventually see the wisdom of breaking the Bill into several different items. I hope this Government will exercise the same common sense and respect the rights of Members of Parliament by splitting Bill C-130.

However, recent comments made by my friend, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), leave me doubtful about the prospects for such an initiative by the Government. Indeed, the Minister has taken some delight in telling all who will listen just how the Government intends to ram this Bill through Parliament and, if necessary, impose some form of closure or some form that would limit debate.

Citation 1 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition reads, in part:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every member to express his opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time; to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse.

I submit that Bill C-130 is in violation of these long-standing precepts of parliamentary law. One of the obvious surprises when you begin to study Bill C-130 is the title at the very beginning. I just referred to Bill C-94, an Act to implement the National Energy Program. The title of that Bill included the names of all different statutes that would have to be amended if that legislation were to be enacted. In other words, the title of the Bill is to send a very clear signal quickly and clearly to all people in Canada on the general scope of the legislation.

In Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 704, it reads in part:

> Long Title—The long title sets out in general terms the purposes of the Bill. It should cover everything in the Bill.

By definition, the short title would not do that. The title of Bill C-130 is simply "an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America". That, I submit, fails to indicate clearly the full and complete scope of the legislation.

I think, if I may take one moment in closing, the title should clearly indicate and outline the entire scope of the legislation. It ought to mention those particular Acts that will have to be amended if the legislation is to succeed. They would include: the Special Import Measures Act; the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act; the Department of Agriculture Act; the Bank Act; the Broadcasting Act; the Canadian Wheat Board Act; the Copyright Act; the Customs Act; the Customs Tariff Act; the Excise Tax Act; the Export and Import Permits Act; the Canada Grain Act; the Importation of Intoxicating Liquors Act; the Income Tax Act; the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act; Investment Canada Act; Investment Companies Act; the Loan Companies Act; Meat Import Act; Meat Inspection Act; the National Energy Board Act; the Seeds Act; the Standards Council of Canada Act; the Statistics Act; the Textile and Clothing Board Act; the Trust Companies Act; and, finally, the Western Grain Transportation Act.

If the Bill were to be submitted in proper and acceptable form, its title ought to have included a reference to all those 27 Statutes that were to be amended by this legislation.

You, Sir, are the ultimate guarantor of the rights of minorities in this Chamber, and it is within your purview to force the Government to withdraw this Bill and bring it back as separate pieces of legislation. The precedent of 1964 which I mentioned in my opening comments clearly establishes your right to do just that.

You must act to preserve the ancient and undoubted rights of Members of Parliament, Mr. Speaker. You must act to ensure a respect for the customs and traditions of this place, and you must act to ensure that parliamentary democracy, as we know it, cannot be pushed aside for the sake of political expediency.

You, Sir, are the first occupant of that chair who owes his position to the direct will of all Members of the House and not simply the Government. This gives you a special responsibility and authority which is perhaps unparalleled in our history. You are truly the Speaker of the whole House. I ask you now to exercise that authority and responsibility, in the name of this House of Commons, so that we may not betray its past nor jeopardize its future.

• (1220)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join in this procedural debate. I noted that my hon. friend from Windsor West at first confined his argument to the omnibus nature of the Bill and then made reference to constitutionality, whether or not the committee would travel, and several other things. What I thought was interesting was that he then made the point that the Government should be calling the Bill for debate.

I suggest that what we tried to do with this morning's events was focus the debate on procedure. We feel it would be more appropriate to consider all the procedural matters at one time and then to allow you to retire and consider your opinions on the omnibus nature of the Bill, on whether or not there is more than principle, on constitutionality and the like, and then return to the House so that the business of the House could proceed.

I think that Canadians want the substance of the issue of free trade, the substance of Bill C-130, debated and discussed. They do not want a protracted procedural wrangle. I invite you to consider, as events wear on, whether or not you want to expand and to deal with all arguments at one time, something which I think is more appropriate in view of your time and the time of the House.

Having said that, I want to deal briefly with the one argument put forward by my learned friend from Kamloops—Shuswap which was not referred to by my friend from Windsor West, that is, the question of Mr. Speaker MacNaughton's ruling in the flag debate.

I would distinguish that particular incident by pointing out to the Chair that the flag debate was on the question of a resolution which contained two propositions, and the Chair in that case, Mr. Speaker Macnaughton, found that he had the authority and perhaps the duty to divide them. I would submit that here we are dealing with a Bill and the same precedent does not apply.

Much was made of the question of an omnibus Bill. That seems to be the main concern of my friends opposite, and I would like to take a moment or two to review some of the precedents and some of the comments that were made by my hon. friends. I think it should be pointed out that the fact that the Bill is an omnibus Bill is not in itself sufficient cause to have the Bill withdrawn and thrown out. Throughout the history of this Chamber, there have been omnibus Bills which have occupied the time of the House.

I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to two rulings which have already been dealt with. One is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on January 26, 1971, and one is the ruling of Mr. Speaker Jerome on May 11, 1977.

I notice that my colleague from Windsor West quoted one of the paragraphs from Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's ruling. I would like to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the preceding paragraph. My friend pointed out what he considers to be an abuse of a Bill that goes from one end of the spectrum to the other. Mr. Speaker Lamoureux did say the following:

> There is no question, without going further into details, that this is a long established practice. We have had this type of omnibus bill before the House on many occasions. The President of the Privy Council and the Minister of Agriculture have quite rightly argued their case that this is long established practice and that the government has followed past practice. That is their argument and it has to be respected. Certainly the Chair must take that into account because of the importance of the precedent in our system.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux recognized that there may be a point at which an omnibus Bill goes too far, but he declined, in that particular ruling, to take that authority upon himself.

Mr. Speaker Jerome was even more specific about his unwillingness to intervene and reject an omnibus Bill, and I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 5522 of Hansard of May 11, 1977, in which he stated as follows:

> I should emphasize as well that the remedy sought by the hon. member is not to divide the bill according to the separate statutes to be amended but by subject matter. Were that to be attempted, it would place before the Chair, it seems to me, questions of interpretation and responsibility for the drafting of an extremely complex order, which in my opinion the Chair ought not to attempt.
> I suppose there is no need to speculate on whether circumstances might arise in the future in which such a remedy might be available.
> However, I am certainly bound by the clear language of our precedent rulings and previous practices to reject the point of order of the hon. member for New Westminster, and I decline to make the order which he requests.

Even when my friend from Calgary Centre objected to the most infamous of all omnibus Bills, the energy security Act, he recognized the legitimacy of the omnibus concept. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to page 15482 of Hansard of March 1, 1982, in which he stated:

> I certainly recognize that in many instances omnibus bills are not only properly admissible, but, indeed are also the best way to proceed since the grouping of certain amendments or certain items aids in providing a coherence to the debate and discussion, and attempting to handle the subject matter by a different set of separate Bills would not only be wasteful of time but would also be confusing.

I submit that omnibus legislation is a well established means of conducting government business. Both of the two Speakers' rulings cited expressed concerns with respect to omnibus legislation and they commented that, because of the nature of this omnibus legislation, it was difficult for Members to demonstrate properly their support for or opposition to different principles within an omnibus Bill.

The rulings point out that there are avenues, in the case of a Bill, for Members to establish clearly their positions. For example, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux, at page 285 of Journals for January 26, 1971, pointed this out:

> One or two honourable Members have argued that there would not be an opportunity for Members to express their views by way of a vote on individual parts of the bill or individual clauses. That is perhaps not entirely correct. I am not here referring to the Committee of the Whole; I have made this distinction before now. For honourable Members to express their view in Committee of the Whole on a particular clause of the bill is not the same as being given an opportunity to express their views on a clause of the bill by way of a recorded vote.
> The House must note that there is a third reading stage of a bill. When a bill comes to the House at the third reading stage there is not one clause or one part of the Bill that cannot be brought into question by way of an amendment proposing that the particular clause or section be referred back to committee. I think this gives every honourable Member an opportunity to vote either for or against, or to express his views in the House either for or against, a particular clause or part of the bill, and to do so by way of a recorded vote. Accordingly there is still a measure of protection afforded honourable Members.

Mr. Speaker Jerome, on May 11, 1977, at page 5522 of Hansard pointed out:

> The use of the omnibus amending bill is well enshrined in our practices, and I really can find no reason to set aside my predecessor's very clear and sound reasoning for the practice. Nor can I find any authority which would support an order of the Chair at this second reading stage that the Bill be divided.

He went on to point out that there were remedies for Members to deal with this, that was, by a motion to delete at report stage pursuant to the Standing Orders. He stated that that had not been fully developed in the past but that the remedy was available to Hon. Members. He then completed his argument.

I argue that both these approaches are available to Members when we consider Bill C-130, and the way we distinguish the energy security Bill from Bill C-130 is this: that Bill would have been dealt with in Committee of the Whole House and that would not have allowed Hon. Members to have a recorded vote of the House on each and every clause. I submit that this Bill, in its present format and under our present rules, will give every Member the opportunity to vote, either at second reading, in committee, or at report stage if the proper amendments are put, on where they stand on the various clauses of the Bill.

I have referred specifically to omnibus legislation, and let me now just revisit some of the arguments, if I may. We have discussed Speaker Lamoureux's point that one can go too far and there must be a limit on what is done. I submit this Bill does not go beyond what has been suggested in keeping with the rules and practices of the House. On March 2, 1982, at page 15532 of Hansard, Madam Speaker Sauvé recognized the previous comments of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux with respect to authority and stated as follows:

> It may be that the House should accept rules or guidelines as to the form and content of omnibus bills, but in that case the House, and not the Speaker, must make those rules.
> Therefore, having heard arguments and having examined Bill C-94, I must now rule on the basis of existing precedents, which do not support the proposition that the Bill should be divided or struck down.

There have been suggestions that the House come up with rules for handling omnibus Bills. However, since Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's ruling, the House has not yet decided to take up that option.

To revisit a precedent that was not referred to by my hon. colleagues, I want to refer to the comments of the then Minister of Justice, now the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who introduced Bill C-150 in 1969 which covered in the ambit of omnibus legislation such diverse topics as abortion, lotteries, gun control, and breathalyser tests. Here is what my hon. friend said, as reported at page 4717 of Hansard, on January 23, 1969:

> HON. JOHN N. TURNER (MINISTER OF JUSTICE) moved second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

He went on to say:

> I speak this afternoon with the confidence that this legislation is the most important and all-embracing reform of the criminal and penal law ever attempted at one time in this country. The omnibus measure contains matters of deep social significance which, in the course of time, will affect the lives of most of us, perhaps each one of us, in varying degrees.

In 1977 another Bill was introduced, once again Criminal Code amendments of an omnibus nature, dealing with items such as wire-tapping, gun control, and dangerous offenders. In none of those cases was there a unifying theme which I suggest you will find in the legislation presently before the House, and that is the implementation of a specific agreement between Canada and the U.S. respecting international trade. I suggest to you that it is that single overriding principle which links all of the clauses of the Bill together. That was not the case when the energy security Bill, which I am going to get into a minute, was brought in and finally divided into 10 separate, distinct, and unrelated Acts. Here we have one unifying principle: implementation of the free trade agreement.

We anticipated that the comments of my colleague from Calgary Centre in 1982 might be brought forward today, so I want to try and specifically distinguish that Bill, if I may, in a little more detail. There are some very significant differences that I want to point out. First, the principle of the energy security Bill was complicated. I want to just read the title:

> Second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-94, an Act to amend and enact provisions related to the Petroleum Administration Act, the National Energy Board Act, the Foreign Investment Review Act, the Canada Business Corporations Act, the Petro-Canada Act, the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 and the Oil Substitution and Conservation Act; to repeal the Energy Supplies Emergency Act; to amend an Act to amend the Petroleum Administration Act and the Energy Supplies Emergency Act; to amend the Adjustment of Accounts act, and to enact the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, the Canadian Ownership and Control Determination Act, the Energy Monitoring Act and the Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act.

All of those were brought forward in that one Bill. However, I refer you to the Act we are dealing with today. In Bill C-130 the principle and title of free trade are clear and precise. It reads:

> This Act may be cited as the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act.

I suggest there is one unifying purpose in Bill C-130 to which all of those clauses relate.

Second, the energy security Bill contained a number of different elements capable of surviving independently. However, with the Bill before us, all of the elements are needed to achieve the purpose of the Bill, which is to implement the signed agreement between the two parties. Just to expand on that I will refer to the argument made by my hon. colleague on March 1, 1982. He divided his argument in dealing with it. He referred to Part A and the Petroleum Incentives Program Act, the new Canadian Ownership and Control Determination Act, amendments to the Canada Business Corporations Act, as well as amendments to the Foreign Investment Review Act. He went on to say that we then had Part B which refers specifically to energy monitoring, and Part C which was energy administration. There were four different parts which dealt with amendments to oil and gas production. Then there was the creation of the Motor Vehicle Fuel Consumption Standards Act. My colleague was pointing out that these were all separate and different, whereas in this Bill there is one principle, that of implementing the free trade agreement which is attached to the Bill.

I referred earlier to the fact that there was one difference. This Bill is going to a legislative committee. We will have full and ample debate at second reading. A legislative committee will then have a chance to hear witnesses and review the Bill clause by clause. Members will have a chance to vote at report stage if they wish, and third reading, and say that they like the Bill except for this part or that part, and then put forward an amendment to delete. That was not the case in the energy security Bill. It was going to Committee of the Whole House under the rules as they existed at that time. I suggest that is the difference.

I want to just take a glance at this Bill itself as I near the end of my argument. Members opposite dwelt on the omnibus nature of the Bill. I understand that. We knew that was going to be the main focus of their argument. However, as I have suggested, this House has in the past dealt with several omnibus Bills, and the question on the Bill before us is this: Does it have more than one principle and does it put Members in the position of having to vote on multiple principles at the conclusion of second reading? I suggest to you that the Bill before us contains one outstanding principle, and that is implementation of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. That is what it is entitled. I referred to Clause 3:

> The purpose of this Act is to implement the Agreement, the objectives of which are to—

Then it lists them.

The Bill itself is divided into four parts. The first is entitled "Implementation of Agreement Generally", under which there are some six clauses which provide for general powers to implement the agreement. Part II is entitled "Procurement Review Board". It establishes the forums, the duties, and the powers of the Procurement Review Board which is established subject to Annex 1304.3 of the free trade agreement.

Part IV is entitled "Related, Etc. Amendments". This covers some 120 clauses amending a number of statutes in accordance with the agreement. If you examine those clauses, Mr. Speaker, you will find that in many cases they focus on the agreement itself which, after all, is what the Bill is designed to do.

Part V is entitled "Transitional and Coming Into Force". That contains the provisions which are common to many Bills and is in no way a new principle. Finally we have the agreement itself, which is contained in the Bill as Schedule 1.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that nowhere in the Bill is there a clause or proposition which contradicts the free trade agreement. The Bill contains one clear, fundamental principle set out in the "purpose of" statement and reflected in virtually each and every clause of the Bill.

I would like to discuss for just a minute, if I may, the question of constitutionality and when Bills are tested in the courts. I am prepared to argue this at length at a later time. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that the House is responsible for what it deals with, and that it is the function of the courts to decide on the constitutionality of laws after they are passed by the House.

It is not up to the Chair to adjudicate on matters of law. That is not your position, Mr. Speaker, and I think that has been clearly stated in other cases. We have a clear division of responsibility in this country between the powers of the legislatures and the judiciary. I suggest to you—and if we have to argue this at length, I can bring out the cases—that it is the responsibility of Parliament to pass laws and the responsibility of the judiciary, when these laws are challenged, to review the laws, that is, the question of whether or not this Bill is constitutional.

There is also another question, that is: Who is to challenge the Bill? I think it is interesting to note that in the past week the provinces have not come forward stating that there will be legal challenges. In fact, Québec said that as the federal Government may appear to pick up some of the powers which Quebec reserves to itself, it will therefore legislate within its jurisdiction to come into compliance with the Bill.

The Province of Ontario which, it was suggested, was to be a major opponent of the Bill, has decided that in fact the federal Government has the right to bring this Bill forward.

We are prepared to argue constitutionality at a later date. We are fully confident that this Bill deals with one principle, that is, the enactment of the free trade agreement with the United States. We believe that it is not what might be called an omnibus Bill. In fact, there is no precedent of an omnibus Bill being thrown out. We submit that there is a difference between this Bill and the energy security Bill.

Having said that, I urge a good, solid procedural argument on all aspects of the Bill immediately, in order that we can have Your Honour's decision on its acceptability and then move on, as my friend from Windsor West invited us, to debate the issue. Surely Canadians want us to debate the issue of free trade.

We must allow for procedural argument, and that is why we initiated this way of dealing with it. This is the first time, in my experience, that it has been done this way. We brought it forward and said that we were not going to call it per se but were inviting procedural argument, which we hope can be packaged into today. Then Your Honour can reflect upon the arguments of my colleagues opposite and the arguments of the Government and decide. Pending approval, we can then proceed to the debate on the substance, which we are more than ready to do. We think Canadian people want us to get on with it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I doubt that I can raise a point of order at this stage, but I want to remind the Deputy Government House Leader that in opening my remarks I specifically said that I had a number of points of order relating to Bill C-130 but that, in the interest of orderly discussion, I intended to limit my remarks at that time to the matter of whether the Bill was an omnibus Bill of an improper nature. I reserved the right to argue the constitutional issue and some other issues at a later stage.

I hope it will not be taken that, because I did not include any comments on other matters that I consider to be relevant to whether or not the Bill is in order, I had waived my rights to raise them at the proper time.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to assure the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that the Chair certainly did not take it that he had waived any of his rights. Hon. Members will remember that in his opening remarks he made it very clear that there are some other matters which he wants to bring to the attention of the Chair, although I do not think he necessarily set them all out at that time.

With respect to the comments of the Hon. Minister of State respecting the fact that he is prepared to argue constitutionality and perhaps some other matters at a later date, I think the appropriate thing at the moment is for the Chair to keep that in mind and to carry on with any further argument on the matters which have been raised, attacking the Bill in its omnibus form.

I think the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) indicated to the Chair that he would like to intervene. I will hear the Hon. Member and then proceed to some other Hon. Members.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understood that the point of order which was raised just after Routine Proceedings by the House Leader of the Official Opposition was a point of order on whether or not the Bill was acceptable, whether it was admissible. Members may have different reasons for believing it not to be admissible, but it is my sense that as Members rise they should deal with the aspect of admissibility.

I heard the cautions, but surely all the arguments about admissibility will be made in the course of the process we are into in order that you, Sir, can reach a decision about admissibility. Surely we are not going to have a ruling on whether each individual piece has a relevance for admissibility. The House needs a procedural decision about the admissibility of the Bill in order that we can get on with the debate. If Members have arguments, they may choose to put them in series or at different points in time, but surely—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry. I did not mean to cut off the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. I do not think he had concluded.

Mr. Hawkes: I would like clarity on whether or not the arguments that we are all making here today are about the procedural admissibility of the Bill. Is it a Bill which the House should debate? If Members have different reasons for believing it should not be, or Members have different reasons for believing it should be, they have an obligation to put those as early as possible in the process, in order that you are in a position to make the basic ruling about the point of order on whether or not the Bill should go forward and be debated.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary who I think has appropriately addressed something to which we must, of course, pay some attention. However, at the moment I take it that there may be some further argument. I think that has been indicated, not only by the Hon. Member for Windsor West but also by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. It may be that at some later stage I may have to make an indication about whether or not a line of argument is even appropriate.

Perhaps we might be into a subject which is not for the Chair to decide. However, I think I will leave that until I hear what further points may arise.

It may well be that there is no particular need to argue further points after we get through this round, but I want the Hon. Member for Windsor West and others to know that I am conscious of the fact that Hon. Members may raise some other matters with me.

Returning to the point the Parliamentary Secretary makes, which is very important to the Chair, for now at least I want to hear arguments, both for and against, on the issue of whether or not it is appropriate for me to allow the Bill to be before the House. Of course, that is a very important matter for the Chair and for the House.

Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, I want to assure other Hon. Members that I notice they are indicating that they may have a contribution to make.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be addressed specifically to the issue raised by the House Leader of the Official Opposition concerning the omnibus nature of the Bill and whether that document should be considered admissible in the House.

I believe the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), the Deputy Government House Leader, has in part put his finger on the nub of the matter. He said that the real issue is whether this particular Bill enables the people of Canada, through their duly elected institution of Parliament, to have the fullest, broadest, and most extensive examination of what I believe we all agree is one of the most important legislative initiatives to come before Parliament since the Second World War, as stated by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie).

My comments are based upon the principle of what is the most effective way we in this Chamber can assure that Canadians will not only have but will be satisfied that they had the opportunity to be heard and to have their concerns responded to.

We know the old cliché about what is in a name. Simply calling this a free trade Bill does not make it exclusively a free trade initiative.

As one goes through the pages of this legislation, it is clear that it covers a much broader and more extensive range of interests than those one would normally consider trade interests. Normally, trade legislation deals with changes to tariff rules and occasionally ventures into non-tariff areas. However, the concept of trade has a very strict and fairly well defined generic use relating to the increase or reduction of those barriers between countries.

My argument is that this legislation goes substantially beyond the principle of free trade and into changes in areas that are very much within the domestic economy and affect a broad variety of sectors in this country. In fact, it affects our entire economy and social fabric.

Let me give one clear example. What does investment have to do with trade? The change in financial institutions is not a trade matter, but clearly a question of how one regulates the financial management of the country. Yet, that is contained in the Bill.

Clearly, the question dealing with Crown corporations, whether federal or provincial, is not a trade matter. Yet, it is an issue that is within the scope of this legislation.

Clearly, the matter of energy supply is not a trade issue. It very much concerns the control over basic natural resources in Canada.

I could go on to give examples from the annexes which deal with health services, the question of management of professions, education, the environment, and a whole host of matters which have enormous ramifications for this country. When one considers that this Bill affects virtually every Canadian, Parliament must be concerned about how and to what degree those Canadians will have an opportunity to make their case.

I was a member of the special joint committee in 1985 which was commissioned at that time simply to examine the principle of free trade. The hearings lasted more than two months and sometimes extended into the late hours of the night, listening to perhaps 25 representations per day, yet we were only talking about a principle and had not seen the enormous complexity of the Bill. Even at that point we barely touched the surface of interested parties who wanted to be heard.

We must take into account that the Minister for International Trade is saying that the Government will force this measure through by the end of July. If it is to force it through on the basis of an omnibus Bill, that means it will use its majority between now and the end of July, and it will be impossible for Canadians to be heard. It will be impossible for people in agriculture, in energy, in financial services, or in cultural fields to have an opportunity to make their case.

The only way for the Government to meet the timetable set out by the Minister this weekend is to have a number of Bills, each focusing on a specific sector. Then there could be a series of hearings in a variety of locations throughout the country, so that those who feel directly affected, whether it is in printing or the food processing industry, would be able to make their case in front of a select committee where there may be some expertise, as our House Leader suggested, and they could focus on those areas.

We must take into account the practicality of the issue. In order for Parliament to deal properly with such a massive initiative, it requires a series of separate legislative initiatives, focusing on each sector that will be affected in order to facilitate the matter.

I suggest that the Deputy Government House Leader made that very case, although I am sure he did not intend to do so. He pointed to the parallel between this and the energy Bills implementing the National Energy Program in 1982. It dealt with only one sector of the economy and it affected five or six different pieces of legislation.

When one turns to the back of this legislation, one sees that we are dealing with 27 different pieces of legislation, including the Broadcasting Act, Canadian Wheat Board Act, Canada Grain Act, investment Acts, Meat Inspection Act, National Energy Board Act, Textile and Clothing Board Act, Trust Companies Act, and others. Fundamental changes are being made to the operation of government legislation and regulation in each of these areas.

Incidentally, a close perusal of the Bill demonstrates that there is a massive transfer of delegated authority from Parliament to Cabinet in each of these areas. I suggest that this requires an even closer examination by Parliament before it transfers that authority. It is probably the greatest single delegation of legislative power to an executive in the history of the country. Surely that requires a very careful parliamentary examination before it is allowed.

The Deputy Government House Leader said that the energy Bill was complicated. What does he call this? This legislation is like a bowl of spaghetti, with more strands in it than one can wrap around one's fork.

The Government is making this an omnibus Bill and signing it because it says that there is an international agreement. Does that mean that if the Government of Canada signs an Act for the union of Canada and the United States—probably the next step in this procedure—it would simply call it that and introduce an omnibus trade Bill with which we would have to deal? I will continue my argument at three o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I will certainly recognize him this afternoon in continuation of his argument.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.01 p.m. the House took recess.

JOB LOSSES IN NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today once again to condemn the Government for its inaction concerning the erosion of CN jobs in New Brunswick. Over the last few years many communities have been severely affected, most notably Moncton, Campbellton, and Edmundston. Jobs were cut by the dozens and at times by the hundreds. Throughout all this the Conservative Government refused to intervene and review the actions of its Crown corporation.

Once again, cut-backs are being mentioned. This time it concerns the proposed transfer of the train dispatching offices from Moncton and Edmundston to Toronto. Another 39 jobs are at stake.

It is time for the Government to say no. It is time to say enough is enough. The New Brunswick economy has suffered enough from CN cut-backs. Workers have suffered enough from lay-offs and transfers. It is time for the federal Government to stop sitting on its hands. It is time to act.

MULTICULTURALISM

TRIBUTE TO BILL WEN

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last night I had the privilege of attending a banquet honouring one of my constituents, Bill Wen, a Canadian of Chinese origin recently appointed a Companion of the Order of Canada. Although Bill only came to Canada in 1953, he is in fact a third generation Canadian. Both his grandfather and his father came to Canada many years earlier, but because of the Chinese Immigration Act Bill Wen was not born here and was not even allowed to come to Canada until that Act was repealed in 1952.

As a teenager Bill worked fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, without pay in his parent's restaurant in Hay Lakes, Alberta. Today he still works fifteen hours a day, seven days a week, but now in his own world renowned Sai Woo restaurant in Toronto.

Bill is deeply involved in many charitable and community activities such as bringing the Giant Pandas to Canada from China. "Because we are so privileged to live in Canada, we have a duty to serve", says Bill Wen. With a philosophy like that, it is no wonder we are so proud of this Canadian.

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—DELAY IN SIGNING FINAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, just one year ago the House of Commons voted unanimously to set aside the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands as a national park reserve. The federal Government would provide compensation for those affected and ensure the continued participation of the Haida people in matters affecting South Moresby.

That was on May 14, 1987. By July a Memorandum of Understanding was reached and signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premier of British Columbia. A final agreement was to be signed today. Apparently the signing has fallen through over resource compensation and recognition of Haida rights.

Surely the unanimous vote and voice of Parliament must prevail. The rights of the Haida people in Haida Gwaii, in particular, in South Moresby, are undeniable. Why is the Government of Canada holding back on reaching an agreement with this First Nation and first citizens of South Moresby?

I call upon the good will of all Members in this House, in particular upon the Prime Minister, to direct that the title and rights of the Haida nation be recognized and affirmed. They have above all others called for the preservation of South Moresby. It is their home since time immemorial. They have proven to be caring stewards for the land.

• (1405)

Parliament voted unanimously, let Parliament now act.

ACID RAIN—IMPORTANCE OF INFORMATION IN MOTIVATING PEOPLE TO ACT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, today we Canadians celebrate the beginning of Environment Week. All this week concerned citizens across this great land will participate in organized events aimed at breaking new ground in finding solutions to environmental problems.

Our theme today, "Talk It Up", shows the important role information plays motivating people to action. Actions begin with ideas. By discussing issues of concern actions will result, actions to combat environmental problems, problems such as acid rain.

This Government more than any other Government has made people aware on both sides of the border about the seriousness of acid rain. This year's theme, "Our Common Future", shows how Canadians can continue to be world leaders in responsible environmental development.

I will be leading a parliamentary delegation to Washington next week as government and Leaders from both sides of the House will work with our American counterparts in an effort to make acid rain a thing of the past.

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO YOUNG HOCKEY PLAYER MARTIN GÉLINAS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, youth is often criticized, but today I would like to draw the attention of the House to the courage, determination and energy with which a young hockey player from my area has pursued his all-important goal: To become a member of the National Hockey League as soon as possible.

During the last few years, in the summer when most of us like to relax, this young man rode his bicycle 40 miles and did two hours of Nautilus training every day to improve his level of fitness and prepare for training camp.

Martin Gélinas from Shawinigan South, who is here today with his parents, has done everything he could to achieve excellence. It wasn't easy, but thanks to his strength of character and determination, and also thanks to the support of his parents and his trainers, the year 1987-88 was to crown more than ten years of constant effort and hard work to get to where he is today.

At their last dinner, the Quebec Major Junior Hockey League named Martin recruit of the year, and in the Memorial Cup tournament Martin was named Canadian Junior Hockey's star recruit.

I want to pay tribute to Martin, who plays for the Hull Olympiques. In a few weeks, Martin will be a first-round draft pick for the National Hockey League and certainly the first Quebec player to be drafted.

Good luck, Martin!

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

INDIAN SUBCONTINENT—ARMS RACE DEPLORED

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the Indian subcontinent threatens to become a flash point for a major confrontation. India is pursuing a massive armament program which has included the successful testing of a nuclear device, and a delivery system. It soon will receive a used Soviet nuclear powered submarine.

Pakistan, reacting to its neighbour's build-up, has embarked on its own armament program which has included the testing of a missile capable of carrying a nuclear device.

Canada is a major contributor of aid to these countries. I am concerned that Canadian tax dollars which are earmarked to aid the people will help indirectly to subsidize this arms race. Canadian aid will allow these two nations to be able to divert more of their own resources to either produce or acquire arms.

In light of these developments the Government must examine our aid to these two nations and all other nations which put armaments above the well-being of their people.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, this week is National Environment Week, but there is really no cause for celebration.

The federal Government has dropped the acid rain issue, and the clean-up of toxic waste in the Great Lakes was not even mentioned at the recent Summit, despite promises made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

The Canadian Coalition on Acid Rain has not had its funding renewed. The agreement on South Moresby Island which was supposed to be signed today has not been signed.

A closer reading of the so-called free trade agreement reveals that controls over our environment were bargained away. Even our precious non-renewable resources become goods on the market. Conservation as an objective becomes ever less likely.

Water, too, is a good, according to the agreement, so that once exports begin we will have to continue sharing this valuable resource.

The Government's water policy is not legislated, which it should be, but even that will not provide real protection, for the free trade agreement will take precedence over mere legislation.

The best way for the environment to be celebrated this week would be for the Government to call an election on the issue. Canadians want real action on the environment, not a token Environment Week with government controlled PR.

REQUEST THAT CANADIANS PROTECT ENVIRONMENT

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, this week, from May 30 to June 5, is National Environment Week, and the theme is: Our Common Future.

I think we all realize the threat to humanity today and that our survival depends directly on the concrete action that will be taken during the next decades.

This week is an opportunity for Canadians to express their environmental concerns and to make a personal commitment to protect our environment.

One of this week's themes is: "Talk it up!". Mr. Speaker, I hope that across this country, in our classrooms and our educational institutions, at our jobs and in the media, we will talk a lot about the environment this week.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all environmental groups, especially those in Abitibi—Témiscamingue, our environmental watchdogs, for their major contribution towards building a better and healthier world.

BOXING—LIGHT HEAVYWEIGHT WORLD CHAMPION DONNY LALONDE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Port of Spain a young man from the Fort Rouge district of Winnipeg successfully defended his light heavyweight world championship.

In this House many of us at times pay tribute to Canadians who have demonstrated exemplary prowess in various fields of endeavour. We all acknowledge the great accomplishment that Donny Lalonde has made on behalf of Canada.

There is a special case for paying attention to the accomplishment yesterday. Donny Lalonde has not only shown courage in the ring, but courage in bringing to public attention his own childhood experiences of abuse. He has since devoted his position to bringing other Canadians to understand the terrible scourge of that travesty that takes place with so many young people.

The best way for Members of the House of Commons to acknowledge the accomplishments of Donny Lalonde would be to devote our own attention and interest to the problem of child abuse which Donny Lalonde so eloquently and forcefully expresses on behalf of so many Canadians.

I hope that those of us who applaud his skill in the ring will also recognize that he has fought back from the terrible handicap of his childhood and now provides a real example of leadership to many other young people in this country who face a similar problem.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DEATH OF CZECHOSLOVAKIAN ACTIVIST PAVEL WONKA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on April 26, 1988, Pavel Wonka, a 35-year old human rights activist, died suddenly in a Czechoslovakian prison. The circumstances surrounding his death have raised grave suspicions.

Wonka was an associate of Charter 77, and attempted to stand as an independent candidate for the federal Assembly. He helped many of his fellow citizens who were unjustly or erroneously prosecuted, but in the end was unable to save himself.

He was arrested for so-called incitement to rebellion, detained for 12 months, and subjected to torture. When released, he brought suit against the authorities who had persecuted him, but was once again detained and sentenced to five more months in detention. Although he had no signs of any fatal illness, Wonka died in prison six days after his trial.

I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to join with other western leaders in demanding an independent investigation into the circumstances surrounding the death of this brave and determined champion of human rights.

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

TREATMENT OF KEEWATIN TRIBAL COUNCIL PROJECT PROPOSAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Nikani group of companies is a major economic development initiative of the Keewatin Tribal Council in my riding. The Keewatin Tribal Council represents 10 Indian bands.

The project was submitted and has been discussed for the past five years with Native Economic Development Program officials. It has not been approved. Seven different staff members of NEDP have handled this proposal. Several policy changes have also occurred.

Last month the Government again shifted its priorities without notice to the applicants, asking the Keewatin Tribal Council to revise its proposal yet again and face another long delay. This policy change occurred one month prior to the final submission.

I ask that the Minister responsible for NEDP take the necessary steps to ensure this native controlled economic institution is in place as quickly as possible, including the assignment of one staff member to see this project all the way through.

POLLS

PRIME MINISTER'S POPULARITY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, a CROP poll carried out for the newspaper La Presse between May 15 and May 18, 1988, indicated that in Quebec, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), according to Quebecers, was felt to be best qualified to be Prime Minister of Canada.

The Prime Minister alone obtained as many popularity votes as the two leaders of the liberal-socialist coalition combined.

Mr. Speaker, this is because Quebecers are grateful to the Prime Minister for Meech Lake and free trade.

Quebecers realize that only the Conservative Party and only the Prime Minister can get final legislative approval of the Meech Lake Accord and free trade, and that is why, when Quebecers go to the polls, they will say yes to Meech Lake, yes to free trade, yes to the Conservatives, and yes to Mulroney.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

BOY'S SALE OF FRUIT AND VEGETABLES—PROHIBITION ORDER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in these tumultuous times of robberies, rapes, and murders, isn't it nice to know that some enforcement agencies are worrying about the real important wrongdoings? Some of these do-gooders, taking care of real crime in society, work for the National Capital Commission. Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are in safe hands. The NCC is purging all the evil in our capital city.

Just the other day the NCC stopped Eric LeClair from running afoul of the law. Eric is a 14-year-old boy who was selling flowers and vegetables from a semi-rural property that his father rents from the NCC. So good is Eric at his job, or crime—depending on how you look at it—that he now hires two other kids to help him in these evil things. Now the NCC will put an end to all this, Mr. Speaker.

Surely the lemonade stands will be next. Aren't we glad we have the NCC to protect our society against all the wrong things that are going on? I suggest if the NCC and the staff who cooked up this crazy scheme have nothing better to do, then perhaps they should find a real job.

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE GALA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, last night at the National Arts Centre a moving, joyful event took place. To celebrate the first National Access Awareness Week, a gala, featuring the talents of disabled artists, entertained and enriched us. From the Rolling Thunder theatre group to the MacKay Centre dance troupe featuring wheelchair and deaf dancers, these entertainers exemplified the potential of the disabled.

That is what this week is all about, to identify and remove the barriers that separate the disabled from the rest of the community so that they, as Rick Hansen so often has said, "be the best they can".

Let us all be partners in community action with disabled persons so that we can all achieve the goal of this week's activities—"Independence—That's living".

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONGRESSIONAL DRAFTING INSTRUCTIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my questions are for the Prime Minister. We have now received a copy of the formal drafting instructions agreed upon by the U.S. Senate and the U.S. House of Representatives on the Prime Minister's deal with the United States. The Congress has formally decided, and I quote:

> In the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the free trade agreement, U.S. law shall prevail.

Those are the words of the drafting instructions.

In shocking and indeed ludicrous contrast to that, the legislation introduced in this Parliament says that in the event of any conflict between Canadian law and the trade agreement with the United States, the trade agreement shall prevail.

I would like the Prime Minister to answer this question. Why does the trade deal prevail over Canadian law and over Canadian sovereignty? Why indeed does it impede provincial jurisdiction while American protectionist law will continue to apply and outrank the trade deal? Why is no specific exemption given to us from United States protectionist law which will continue to prevail under the terms understood by the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have explained this matter now several times because of questions asked in the House. I am sorry the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has not understood the answers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Each country has its own separate—if you wish to answer, you can and I will sit down. But if I am being asked the question, Mr. Speaker, I will say this—

Mr. Broadbent: You weren't asked the question.

Mr. Riis: The Prime Minister was.

Mr. Crosbie: Are you going to say who is to answer on our behalf and who isn't?

Mr. Speaker: The Right. Hon. Leader of the Opposition has put a question. The Hon. Minister is attempting to respond to it. I would ask Hon. Members to give the Minister the courtesy so we can hear him.

Mr. Crosbie: Each country has its own statutory drafting and interpretation. In the United States, Congress prefers to have the wording to which the hon. gentleman has referred. If, of course, there are any U.S. laws that are inconsistent with the free trade agreement then the United States will either have to amend those laws or pay a penalty to Canada once the free trade agreement goes into effect.

In Canada, we use a different drafting technique. In the United States the Americans have a provision in legislation that any inconsistent provision in state legislation will be overridden. Would the Leader of the Opposition like us to include such a provision with respect to the provinces?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman already has in Article 6. He overrides provincial jurisdiction in any area in which the federal Government decides he has to fulfil the objectives of the agreement with the United States. Article 8 says that in the case of any conflict, the trade agreement will prevail over any other law of Parliament. The United States, on the other hand, can amend the trade agreement by any subsequent Act of the United States Congress. We have been taken for suckers here and the Minister has not caught on.

RESOLUTION OF CONFLICTS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this agreement is terrible! It is binding on Canada and it deprives us of our sovereignty, but it is not binding on the United States. The Prime Minister can't dodge the issue. The U.S. Congress has formally decided that in the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the free trade agreement, U.S. law shall prevail. However, in our case, in the event of a conflict between Canadian law and the trade agreement with the United States, the trade agreement with the United States shall prevail. There is an incredible double standard at work here. How can the Prime Minister expect Canadians to accept anything as preposterous as this agreement? How can he expect Canadians to accept this kind of double standard?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition thinks that somebody has been taken for a sucker. That seems to be the conclusion of his whole caucus with respect to himself, that they were taken for suckers two years ago. With respect to—

Mr. Rossi: Why don't you answer the question, you dumb no-no?

Mr. Crosbie: There is an intelligent comment. That is the first time I have ever heard the hon. gentleman speak in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

UNITED STATES DISCUSSION DRAFT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we should encourage the Minister to continue just as he is doing because he is becoming the best salesman against this deal. If I thought it my responsibility to caution him, I would say that Canadians do not like clowning around with a most important political item affecting this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In this discussion draft the United States Congress singles out, despite our agreement with the United States, specific attacks that will outrank the agreement in terms of its drafting priorities, attacks on programs for assisting farmers, our coal industry, our mining and smelting industries, our forestry, our fisheries, our poultry industry, the Crow's Nest rate, our auto parts industry, our energy and even our cultural industries. In terms of the legislation contemplated by the United States—

Mr. McDermid: Nobody believes you any more, John.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It's right in the document, my friend, it's right in the document. Go back to Brampton and consult a man who understood what this deal was all about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I will debate you there any time. Come on down again, John.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Americans, despite all of that, in this document intend to slam with heavy penalties any Canadian industries that grab a larger share of the American market than the U.S. trade representative thinks proper, right within the terms of the instructions for the American drafting.

This deal is worse than we thought. The Prime Minister did not have the guts to stand up to the Americans. I ask him, has he got the guts to stand up to Canadians and call a General Election so that Canadians can have an opportunity to—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would like to explain again the American governmental system. There is a separation between the executive and the legislative branch, and the legislative branch known as Congress does not trust the executive always.

• (1425)

The congressional drafting rule is that they do not wish to have any legislation that amends any other legislation unless they know specifically what has been amended. Although the U.S. administration suggested there be a clause in their legislation which would state that any possible inconsistent federal legislation should be overridden by this particular Bill, the congressional committees changed that recommendation back to their traditional practice.

I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, after he consults Legal Aid, that he go down and address his objection to the American congressional committees. We simply do not control them.

COMMERCIAL BLOOD BANKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister if he has the courage to respond.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member will want to put her question properly.

Ms. Copps: Last Friday, in response to questions about why commercial blood banks are included under the trade agreement, the Minister for International Trade stated: "Whether people wish to sell their blood for profit or not is, I suppose, up to the individual". I ask the Prime Minister whether that is the position of the Government.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has no more effect on the provision of blood and blood services in Canada than would a vampire bat down in Central America. No one in Canada is forced by the agreement to sell blood or have anything to do with blood. The Canadian Red Cross Society will continue with the blood service it now provides.

It is just like water. The agreement does not force Canada to sell or transfer water. It does not force us to charge for blood or sell any blood. The question is quite irrelevant. Why does the Hon. Member persist in this kind of footling nonsense?

MARKETING OF BLOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister why, if there is no connection between the free trade agreement and commercial blood banks, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and Dr. Denise Leclerc-Chevalier are now examining the agreement and its implications for commercial blood banks? And why did the Department of National Health and Welfare get a phone call this morning from a representative of an American company who wanted to know whether, under the terms of free trade, they could come here to purchase blood from Canadians for a price, and not, as has always been the case, on a volunteer basis? Can they come here and buy Canadians' blood and export it to the United States under the terms of the free trade agreement? And why is the Red Cross afraid that blood banks will be included in the free trade agreement, if, according to what was said by the Minister for International Trade this morning, the FTA has no connection with blood? And why would U.S. companies already be trying to come here?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, repetition does not make a statement correct. Here is the position. The agreement creates no new rights for the establishment of commercial blood banks in Canada. In Canada, as we all know, that function is carried out mainly on a volunteer basis by the Red Cross. The blood is distributed freely to Canadians. The FTA will have no impact on the operations of the Canadian Red Cross. It is a non-profit organization and is not affected in any way by the agreement.

Making this kind of allegation is a disservice to the people of Canada and is participating in a conspiracy to spread falsehoods about the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

REQUEST FOR GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He knows that the House now has before it legislation intended to implement the agreement reached between Canada and the U.S. on trade. He knows the Government did not receive a mandate in 1984 for such an agreement. He knows the opposition Parties would welcome an election on this issue and a large majority of Canadians have said they would like an election on this issue. Finally, he knows that he said on the weekend here in Ottawa that at some point the people of Canada would have an election.

Given all of the above would the Prime Minister explain to the House why the Government would prefer to force Parliament to debate this very important matter instead of going directly to the people of Canada and letting them have a say on this issue first?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because we had the responsibility of providing the national Government. Included in that, of course—

Mr. de Jong: You don't have the mandate.

Mr. Mulroney: I'll try to answer, Mr. Speaker, if the NDP will let me. Included in this is the responsibility to create new wealth, new prosperity, and new jobs for Canadians.

In an era of growing protectionism following 1984 and pursuant to a very excellent report submitted by the Hon. Donald Macdonald, the former Liberal Minister of Finance, pursuant to recommendations of that Royal Commission, we initiated discussions which have now produced great benefits for Canada and, according to the Economic Council of Canada, will result in 250,000 new jobs.

My hon. friend will no doubt support the move to ratify this in the House of Commons and indeed, at an appropriate time, Canadians will be able to decide whether they agree with this prosperity or would like to change with the Hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, as one says here, the Prime Minister did not answer the question. I want to ask him the question again in terms of the most basic democratic requirements about legislation which he himself has described as perhaps the most important bilateral arrangement between our two nations, if not in the history of the globe.

Since he himself and three of his senior Cabinet Ministers opposed this kind of deal in 1983, why will he not do the correct democratic thing and go to the people of Canada? If he gets his majority he will have a mandate. If he does not, we will not get involved in this complicated and undesirable arrangement with the United States.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it may be undesirable in the minds of the Leader of the NDP and the President of the CLC, but it is clearly very desirable in the minds of the Government of Canada and eight provincial Premiers representing political Parties from British Columbia to Newfoundland. It is clearly sustained by all objective data including the most recent report of the Economic Council of Canada which provides for a quarter of a million new jobs over and above those already to be created under the policies of the Government.

I know that my hon. friend clearly disagrees with free trade unless it is in automobiles, and with foreign investment, unless it is in Oshawa. However, we would like that prosperity for the rest of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is back in his usual high intellectual form of argumentation.

REQUEST FOR A GENERAL ELECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask the Prime Minister why, if he is so confident about his arguments, he doesn't leave it up to Canadians to decide one way or another?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I certainly am confident about our arguments, Mr. Speaker. I am also confident about the responsibility incumbent on our elected representatives to consider a document of this importance and to assess it in terms of our national interest and make the requisite value judgments. I would like to remind the Hon. Member, since he is raising the question, that for instance, as far as Quebec is concerned, since his question was along those lines, the Quebec Premier has endorsed the free trade agreement as being in Quebec's national interest; the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Parizeau, has done so as well; I may remind him . . .

Mr. Broadbent: What about producers, farmers, consumers and workers?

Mr. Mulroney: . . . and only the New Democrats . . .

Mr. Broadbent: Why not call an election?

Mr. Mulroney: . . . are against the agreement, while Alain Dubuc wrote in La Presse: "With the free trade agreement, Quebec has hit the jackpot". Canada and Quebec have hit the jackpot, and the Leader of the New Democrats is against it!

SOCIAL AND HEALTH PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question, as well, to the Prime Minister. He has just heard his Minister for International Trade say in the House that in his reading of the Bill there is nothing that will affect social or health programs. It is refreshing to note that someone in the Prime Minister's office has read the agreement and comes to a different conclusion.

Does the Prime Minister support the statement made by Mr. Jeff Norquay, the special adviser to the Prime Minister's office, who, in speaking at a forum in Kitchener on Friday, indicated that there is no guarantee that social and health programs will not be attacked under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement? In fact he went on to say that there is no absolute protection against such programs under this agreement.

Is the Prime Minister's special adviser speaking for the Prime Minister and the Government in saying very clearly that, contrary to all the assertions aside, in fact our social programs, including health clinics, blood clinics, and others, are included as part of the free trade agreement and will be subject to retaliation by the United States? Is Mr. Norquay right or wrong?

Right Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, without the free trade agreement programs can be attacked. It may be by someone in France, a person in Germany, a person in Canada, or a person in the United States.

Neither this U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement nor any agreement can guarantee Canadians that a particular social program will not be attacked. However, as long as this Government is in office they will be defended vigorously and will not be attacked successfully under the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement because the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement does nothing but promise to create more wealth for Canadians so that we can have more and better social programs. That is what the agreement will do for Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, we are not going to get much wealth if it is only a quarter of 1 per cent of growth per year as the Minister's own studies indicate.

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, now that the Minister for International Trade has admitted that social programs do not in fact gain any further protection under this agreement, let me ask him about another transgression on the integrity of Canadian programs.

Under Section 137 of the Trade Bill, the National Energy Board will now have complete and total subserviance to directives of the Cabinet. Under this Bill the Cabinet will have the power to compel the National Energy Board to issue export licences to U.S. companies, even during times of shortage or when we exhaust our own Canadian resources.

Keeping in mind that very clear abandonment of the rule and responsibility of the National Energy Board, how does the Minister explain the change in government policy which has taken away the independence of the National Energy Board and has, in fact, usurped for Cabinet total control over the regulation and management of energy resources in relation to trade with the United States? How does he explain the total and complete turnover of Canadian policy which has benefited the country for generations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I honestly do not know what the hon. gentleman is spluttering about. It is the Government of the country that sets energy policy. It was the last administration which entered into the international energy agreement with other countries under which we assumed certain obligations in connection with the supply of energy and sharing of energy in a crisis.

The National Energy Board will still exist after this legislation is passed but certain rules under which it operates will be changed. It is the right of the elected Members of this House—the hon. gentleman may not believe this because he goes by the unelected House—but it is the right of the elected Members of this House and the Government to set the policy for the National Energy Board, just as was done when the National Energy Program was brought in, trampled upon the provinces of Canada, and beaten over their heads by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues.

Oral Questions

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Multiculturalism. The Minister has just announced an election time increase in funding for multiculturalism. The last Liberal Government did something similar before the last election and increased it to $25 million.

Why did the Conservative Government allow the funding for multiculturalism to drop back toward $22 million after the 1984 election? Did the Government only discover the funding needs of multiculturalism as the next election drew near?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Government began making a strong commitment to creating a more equal opportunity society on September 4, 1984. It was this Government that established the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism. It was this Government that implemented Employment Equity, Bill C-62, which the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration brought in.

• (1440)

Mr. Weiner: Indeed, it is this Government that is bringing forward the first multiculturalism Act anywhere in the western world. It is backing that up with a firm policy and new directions.

REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council with which each of the caucuses met today has called for a great deal more than just funding for multiculturalism. Above all, it has called for a Commissioner of Multiculturalism.

Given the approach of report stage consideration of Bill C-93 in the House, is the Minister prepared to consider audit amendments to Bill C-93 which are required to facilitate such review of the Government's policy? Will he consider these amendments which were defeated by his colleagues in the legislative committee at a time when they knew opposition Members were not there to speak to these amendments?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the chairman of that legislative committee, the Member from Edmonton, has brought forward the recommendations of that committee. They will soon be at report stage and third reading in the House. Certainly you would not expect me to comment on what took place there.

I would simply say that I will be the active promoter. I see this as my role in the entire multicultural process. I, with the help of other members of the Government, will be helping monitor it in a cross-government commitment.

As I indicated, since September, 1984, we have continued to reinforce the strength of that commitment. In terms of ethnocultural appointments, there has been the recent appointment of a Supreme Court Justice coming from that very ethnocultural community.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—EFFECT ON LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The drought situation in western Canada has now reached the critical stage for the livestock producers. Many areas have had no precipitation since last August. There is no grass. Winter carryover of feed supplies are rapidly being used up to maintain the cattle herds.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House and, more important, the livestock producers of western Canada what new forms of assistance they may expect immediately in order to address this very serious situation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that the Minister of Agriculture is on his way to western Canada today. He and his Parliamentary Secretary, the Member for Brandon—Souris, along with the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds will be viewing the situation firsthand, visiting farmers and talking to them.

Tomorrow there will be a meeting of provincial and federal Ministers to talk about programs that can be put together in a co-ordinated fashion to address this very serious issue. We consider it to be a very serious issue and believe there is a provincial as well as federal responsibility.

The Prime Minister has acknowledged the responsibility of the federal Government. The Minister of Agriculture, indeed the Government, has responded in the past to the needs of agriculture and I am confident it will do so again.

I look forward to tomorrow's meetings hopefully producing a very positive and fruitful result.

HERD STABILIZATION PROGRAM PROPOSAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the serious drought situation that has already been described, is the Government of Canada prepared to put in place a herd stabilization program to end the uncertainty as to whether there will be assistance? Is it willing to provide funding as it has in the past to move feed into the drought areas, or to move the cattle, and put in place a herd stabilization program?

In view of the falling cattle prices and the fact that some herd owners are actually dispersing their herds, are the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government prepared to make an announcement this week to end this uncertainty in the agricultural field?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member acknowledges the fact that the Government has responded to these kinds of situations in the past. That stands in good stead for the fact that we will be responding on this occasion as well.

The points raised by the Hon. Member are indeed those which will be discussed with provincial counterparts. I am sure that a satisfactory solution will be found as a result of those discussions. Again, I believe the Hon. Member will be pleased with the fact that once again the federal Government has shown leadership in this area and will have responded to this very serious crisis.

Mr. Foster: The Deputy Prime Minister did not answer my question.

REQUEST FOR EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government would announce this week a herd stabilization program to end the uncertainty. We know of the dispute that arose last week between the Prime Minister and his officials. Western farmers want to know whether an announcement on this will be postponed until next month or even beyond the economic summit? Surely this matter is urgent enough that a decision and an announcement should be made this week to end the uncertainty in the drought areas?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can take it from the Hon. Member's question and comments that he is not criticizing the Prime Minister for standing up for farmers, particularly farmers who have been saddled with depressing prices as a result of a trade war going on between the EEC and the United States. I think the cattlemen clearly pointed out that the Prime Minister had a right to condemn the EEC. I hope that he agrees with the position of the Prime Minister in that regard. I see him nodding in the affirmative.

Mr. Foster: That is right. Are you going to announce a program this week?

Mr. Mazankowski: With respect, I did answer the question. I told the Hon. Member that these were the points that were going to be discussed with the provincial Ministers. As I indicated, this will be a joint program. There is a shared responsibility. Surely the provinces have a responsibility. We recognize our responsibility and we think we can address this issue more effectively together than individually. That is the purpose of the meeting.

Oral Questions

STATUS OF WOMEN IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. This weekend past, the Prime Minister claimed that his Government has done more for women than any previous federal Government. Yet today more than 60 per cent of female immigrants to Canada enter under the family class of immigration, which makes them ineligible for public assistance when they are in need, a situation that violates the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms since that guarantees to all residents of Canada equal rights to education, employment, and freedom of speech.

When will the Government recognize its responsibilities and assure to these immigrant women the same rights and privileges as other Canadian men and women have?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that as a Member of this Government and as a woman, I am very proud of what we have done and I support what our Prime Minister said yesterday.

We have indeed taken care of the economic, social and cultural situation of women. We have made great progress in immigration. Not everything has been done, because there was a lot to do. We are working on the corrections that still have to be made and I must pay him tribute for everything that has been done.

ACCESS TO LANGUAGE PROGRAMS BY WOMEN IMMIGRANTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question.

Immigrant women who do not wish to work outside the home upon their arrival do not have access to the language program for immigrant women. This contributes to the isolation of these women and prevents them from obtaining employment in the future.

Can the Government tell us when it will give free access to the language program for all immigrant women, whatever their status?

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must remind you that many women already benefit from integration and language learning programs. We also have several pilot programs in place. And as I said earlier, we definitely intend to leave plenty of room for creativity and to find what must be done as our society evolves.

MULTICULTURALISM

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSIONER FOR MULTICULTURALISM POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It concerns the Government's proposals for a multiculturalism Act.

As the Minister knows, many important provisions that should have been embodied in such an Act have been sorely ignored by the Government. One of these elements is the office of Commissioner for Multiculturalism.

Given that the creation of a Multiculturalism Commissioner was unanimously proposed by all three political Parties, and was unanimously endorsed by every witness and organization before a standing committee, will the Government now see fit to introduce and support establishment of an office for an official Multculturalism Commissioner as an enforcement mechanism, and allow that to achieve for multiculturalism what the Official Languages Commissioner achieved successfully for our policy of official bilingualism?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped the Member was rising to compliment this Government for bringing forward $62 million of new funding over the next five years for multiculturalism. I thought he was going to applaud the directions we were taking in racerelations and cross-cultural understanding, in community support and participation, in heritage, cultures and languages—

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. Marchi: After its four beleaguered and meagre budgets, I am not interested in a Government that is desperate enough to buy votes. I am interested in the facts and in the workings and actual provisions of the Government's legislation.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you admit new members to your association? You are pretty exclusive in your association.

Mr. Marchi: You have enough problems with free trade, John. Take it easy.

Mr. Crosbie: They are moving on Marchi.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Some Hon. Members: If he has one.

RECOGNITION OF MULTICULTURALISM

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I again address my question to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. It again concerns the proposed multiculturalism Act. Many groups, including the Ethnocultural Council, believe that the reference to multiculturalism in Bill C-93, as first a basic element and then a fundamental element of Canadian society, is a weak and undistinguished recognition.

Since the Government fondly promotes Canada as a bilingual and multicultural society, and since the Meech Lake Accord already recognizes the English-French linguistic duality as a fundamental characteristic, why is the Government unwilling also and equally to recognize our multicultural reality as a fundamental characteristic of this country? Why the double standard?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Because we have.

Mr. Marchi: You have not. Don't mislead the House. You have not.

Mr. Crosbie: "We're coming, Mr. Marchi, and we're 3,000 strong".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, the Member is a member of a Party that in 1971 announced a multicultural policy and did nothing for it practically for 15 years.

Mr. Gauthier: We want the real Minister, not you.

Mr. Weiner: This Government began to intensify our commitment to creating a more equal opportunity society, to ensure there is greater access for all members of this society—

Mr. Axworthy: Tell us about your refugee Bill.

Mr. Weiner: —so that we become a better and more productive society as a result of everyone's contribution. We do so by continuing to bring forward an Act, the multiculturalism Act, after considerable consultation. It is now before Parliament. Perhaps if that Member had attended the legislative committee hearings, his thoughts might have been on the table as well. But they are now in the amendment.

FARM SUBSIDIES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. During his meetings in Europe to prepare for the Economic Summit, the Prime Minister discovered if we use the American proposal to the OECD for measuring agricultural subsidies, Canada is in fact in the big leagues with 46 per cent of Canadian farm income coming from subsidies as measured by the producers subsidy equivalent, which is the American measurement, versus 49 per cent for the Europeans.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is the OECD measurement.

Mr. Althouse: It is the American measurement as proposed to the OECD, Sir.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): And accepted by the OECD.

Mr. Althouse: Given the obvious embarrassment for that briefing lapse, does the Prime Minister intend to continue advocating the American approach and philosophy, that is, to eliminate all subsidies from agriculture? If so, how does he expect farmers to survive?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): They are against the OECD.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for raising what is a very important question on behalf of Canadian farmers. I would draw to his attention a statement by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association further to my interventions on behalf of Canadian farmers in Europe. "The statistics being thrown around by EC officials are typical of the way the Europeans attempt to divert attention from their destructive and unfair export subsidy program", Morley Shepherdson said.

The Liberals, I know, take exception to the decision of this Government to protect and defend the interests of Canadian farmers and the family farm.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They used to say: "Why should we sell their wheat?"

Mr. Mulroney: There was a shoot-out going on between the Europeans, initiated by the Europeans, responded to by the Americans. It is causing great damage to Canadian farmers. We resolve to do two things, first, to try to bring about an end to this destructive war and, second, to defend the interests of the Canadian farmer while this war is going on until such time as a cease and desist can be brought about, because the Canadian family farm and the Canadian farmer must survive during this period.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, since it is important that not only farmers and Canadians know the Government's position with respect to these international negotiations, and since it is also important that the other countries know our position, will the Prime Minister enlighten the House and clarify his position? We had thought he was with the Cairns Group, but during his discussions in Europe he sounded very much to be in the American camp, yet the Europeans see some of his actions as being closer to the Japanese and European camps. What is our position? Can he state it clearly?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, let me tell my hon. friend that I am not in any way embarrassed, nor do I apologize for defending the interests of the Canadian farmer here or anywhere in the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When a Canadian wheat farmer receives about $2.92 a bushel, the European farmer receives $7.13 a bushel. A Canadian farmer receives about $1.10 for a bushel of barley. The European producer receives $5.42. The Canadian farmer receives about $7 a bushel for soybeans and in Europe it is three times that amount.

We began the process of putting agriculture on the agenda of the international summit. We have met regularly with Canadian farm leaders prior to these international meetings, and we have stated very specifically to the Americans and to the Europeans that their destructive subsidy war must end because Canadian farmers were getting blindsided and killed in the process, and we, Canada, Australia and the Cairns Group, were going to fight this because our farmers have made an enormous contribution to our national well-being and they must be kept whole while this war is being ended.

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—SIGNING OF FINAL AGREEMENT

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I understand that tentative arrangements had been made for the federal Government and the provincial Government of British Columbia to sign an agreement today for the establishment of the South Moresby National Park Reserve. Can the Deputy Prime Minister advise the House of the reason the signing did not proceed, and when we might expect the finalization of this agreement, so that the $106 million commitment of this Government for a national park and associated regional development activities can move forward?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, I am sure, there were very extensive discussions between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia with respect to this issue, which culminated in a Memorandum of Understanding which was signed by the Prime Minister and the Premier of British Columbia. It was a very generous offer that was provided by the Government of Canada, some $106 million for the national park and associated regional development activities, perhaps more generous than for the establishment of any other national park in Canada.

In the last couple of days or so, the Government of British Columbia has had some second thoughts about the issue and has wanted to renegotiate certain aspects of it. We believe the deal stands, that it is generous, and we would hope that the Government of British Columbia would reconsider and follow through with its commitment as it indicated it would do when it signed the Memorandum of Understanding.

MINORITIES

LINGUISTIC RIGHTS OF ALBERTAN FRANCOPHONES—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT AID

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

The Association franco-albertaine has taken a very reasonable position on the recognition of language rights of Francophones in Alberta and would like to see the Government of Alberta implement the vested rights recognized by the Supreme Court not long ago, arising from Section 110 of the Northwest Territories Act.

I wonder whether the Prime Minister would make a commitment in the House today to initiate action that is positive and generous. Will he offer to help the Government of Alberta implement an open and active policy that will allow Alberta's Francophone minority to survive?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member I would like to reiterate simply the fact that the federal Government has been on record, through the Prime Minister and myself, with respect to extending to the Province of Alberta assistance in a tangible manner concerning the question of minority rights in that province.

As the Hon. Member will know, the specific question with respect to minority rights in Alberta is a matter that has still to come before the Supreme Court of Canada. Even in advance of any adjudication of this matter by the Supreme Court of Canada, we have indicated our interest and, indeed, our willingness to give leadership in this area.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I heard on Friday that the Government will introduce legislation this week, without waiting for the Supreme Court to decide. I am sure that the Government is aware of the editorial in the Calgary Herald in which it stated that it is: "fatuous for the Tories to discuss publicly the prospect of Alberta becoming totally bilingual. No one is asking for that, not even the Francophones". The editorial goes on to support the Bill. It states that Mr. Getty should become very much more open, public, and state openly what he intends to do.

In the spirit of the Meech Lake Accord in which the role of the provinces and the Government is to support minority groups, will the Minister this time, rather than doing the Saskatchewan bit, come ahead and now openly tell Albertans and Canadians that the federal Government will be pro-active, offering the services now, today, and not wait until after the legislation is passed?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I tried to explain in my first response that, indeed, we have already commenced our discussions with the Province of Alberta.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations, has been in communication and has visited officials and Ministers in the Province of Alberta with respect to the best way in which the federal Government can provide assistance to obtain equity and justice for the minorities in the Province of Alberta.

Indeed, we are giving the matter leadership. We intend to work at that, even before there is any judicial pronouncement, or in spite of the fact that there may be a judicial pronouncement by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question, a single question by the Hon. Member for Skeena.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON FISHERY—PATROL ENFORCEMENT AND CONSERVATION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. Is the Minister aware that the budget cuts that he is forcing upon the permanent patrol vessel fleet and the seasonal patrol group in British Columbia mean that food, sport, and commercial fishing for salmon along large stretches of the B.C. coast will be closed this year and, as well, many runs will neither be protected from creek robbing nor counted for conservation purposes this year?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we are not cutting our funds and resources devoted to enforcement or necessary scientific research. These are commitments that I have made. I have given them in the whole context of reorganization of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans over the past two years. I intend to adhere to those commitments.

Mr. Speaker: We will now continue with the discussions that started this morning with respect to the procedural aspects of the Bill which is on the Order Paper. I will hear further from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

On the Order: Second reading and Reference:

May 24, 1988—Mr. Crosbie—Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the generosity of the Chair in allowing me to complete my argument on this particular point.

The summation I would like to make, and I think is important, is that the bill itself in its enormity, complexity, and coverage of so many aspects, requires Parliament to establish in a sense a working order that is appropriate to the measure in front of us. I will point out, by way of example, that when the U.S. Congress was commissioned to examine its implementing legislation on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, it transferred jurisdiction to the judiciary committee, to look at the dispute settlement mechanism; to the finance committee, to look at economic aspects; and to the agriculture committee, to look at areas of competence in agriculture. In other words, Congress on both the Senate and the House of Representatives sides has under its purview a series of segregated areas of examination and review. It was then brought back together in a report to the administration.

Under this system the Americans were able, therefore, to direct and focus public examination which was conducted by way of public hearings in different parts of the United States. We are simply saying that it would be only fair and proper that Parliament conduct itself accordingly under the same type of clear obligation to ensure that we have that kind of examination.

I simply go back to the precedent that I think we are arguing. It was established by Speaker Lamoureux in 1971. Where do we stop with omnibus Bills? That is the question he put. The case I want to make is that here is the place at which we can draw the line. Clearly, the enormity of the task and the requirement to respond to Canadian public interest in the Bill requires us to have a grouping of arrangements, several different pieces of legislation, that lend themselves to a clear division of responsibility.

If one turns to Bill C-130 one sees clearly that there is a grouping of areas dealing with finance, the dispute settlement mechanism, as well as with culture and with customs and tariffs. Thus this Bill would lend itself to four or five pieces of legislation in a natural way. That would allow the committee to work.

The point I now wish to make is an important point for Your Honour to consider. If an omnibus Bill is brought before a legislative committee, as the Government is talking about, of only seven members to deal with a Bill of this enormity, first, it is putting enormous burden on those seven members to come to grips with all the wide variety of points of view. Second, on a committee of that small size there is only one member from each of the Opposition Parties. That puts an impossible task on the Opposition Parties to give proper coverage to a Bill of this size and complexity. Therefore this argues the fact that we have a standing committee system in which there has been a well-developed sense of expertise.

There has been a commitment in the House for the last three or four years to give more accent and emphasis to the roles of committees. Here is a proper way in which we can show how the standing committee system and the committee system itself can be put to good use on behalf of the Canadian public.

Mr. Speaker, I go back to the words of your predecessor, Speaker Lamoureux, to say that we have in front of us now a clear place in which Parliament can take the statement that was made by your predecessor in 1971, and the clear precedent that was established during the 1982 debate on energy. In that debate there was an agreement by the House to split the Bill on one sector of the economy into several Bills, and we can now firmly establish the precedent by taking a Bill of this magnitude and requiring the Government to bring in several pieces of legislation to ensure, above all, that Canadians will have an opportunity to make their case and that Parliament will exercise its dual function as a forum of public debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): In making the points I would like in this debate, I keep in mind the Parliamentary Secretary's comments that what we are doing is not debating the legislation but attempting to offer to you, Mr. Speaker, some guidance, some suggestions, with respect to the issue.

My House Leader, this morning, put before Your Honour a very detailed outline of precedents which I will not attempt to repeat. The argument made by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux in his statements with respect to Bill C-107 were particularly important in relation to what I wish to contribute to your deliberations, Mr. Speaker.

In this case Speaker Lamoureux was dealing with a piece of legislation that sought to amend some 18 or 19 statutes, and he made these important points:

—where do we stop? Where is the point of no return? The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West, said that we might reach the point where we would have only one bill, a bill at the start of the session for the improvement of the quality of life in Canada which would include every single proposed piece of legislation for the session . . . . There must be a point where we go beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint.

There are three points which suggest that this Bill has gone very much beyond that stage. The point has been made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and I do not want to spend much time repeating it, but simply to make the point that a tremendous number of different pieces of legislation is being considered here. It is extremely difficult, in one legislative committee, to be able to cover that vast range of considerations; everything from the Meat Inspection Act to the Textile and Clothing Board Act which may or may not be in effect at the time we actually debate the Bill which adds to its complications. At this stage Bill C-110 is attempting to do away with the Textile and Clothing Board. There are those types of considerations which might at least be considered to be economic considerations. At the same time, there are also points which consider the Copyright Act and the Broadcasting Act, which certainly are much more within the realm of the people who have dealt with cultural matters within our Party.

I would not want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that it would not be possible for one person to handle these different vast areas which are being suggested for amendment from our Party on a legislative committee. The point made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is absolutely correct. It would be much more straightforward, more sensible, and more a reflection of the attempts to build an expertise in the House for us to see this split into segments and referred to standing committees which would be able to deal with those particular areas of concern.

That is what the United States has done with respect to its consideration of this agreement. By March it had nine committees which were actively hearing witnesses with respect to the vast set of different subject areas being considered in this legislation. Following that exercise at permitting those experts to testify, then permitting the experts on those committees who had some legislative experience in the area to make recommendations on that basis, it was possible to move to a smaller number of committees for final consideration.

There are two further points I would like to make. First, this Bill comes to us under a Ways and Means Motion.

As I look at the Bill, I have no question that there are parts of it that certainly relate to what one would expect in a Ways and Means Motion. However, there are vast sections of this Bill which one would not, under any circumstances, it seems to me, deal with in the context of a Ways and Means Motion, for example, sections of the Bill which deal with regulations and with different types of tribunals to be established and sections which deal with special import measure changes not related to the raising of finance and so forth.

It is crucial, if the House is to be able to consider those sections with full freedom, as opposed to some of the constraints under which it is necessary to operate in the context of a Ways and Means Motion, that the Bill be split for that reason.

Finally, I would like to refer to Part I, Clause 7 which states: "The agreement is hereby approved." That agreement has within it 22 chapters, a vast number of annexes, a set of definitions of different terms which exist, all of which will have an immense effect on the future of this country. As I interpret that single phrase, it will put us, as a House of Commons, in a position where it is impossible actually to make amendments to some of those sections.

For instance, let us look at the chapter which deals with services. There is an annex to that chapter of services which indicates that dozens of different segments of our economy which are considered to be covered services for the purposes of this Bill, yet an equally vast range of other services is not covered. Surely it is possible for the House of Commons to make suggestions in terms of amendments which in themselves would have the effect of changing one set of services from covered to non-covered services, and another set from non-covered to covered.

Yet within the Bill itself there is absolutely no reference to that, so any amendment to be made by the House would somehow, in the most difficult and bizarre mechanism possible, would have to attempt to amend Section 7 in such a way as to deal with one of these small points. The same thing could be said concerning small points in all sorts of other chapters within the trade deal itself. It might be, Mr. Speaker, that you feel this accord is not something which is susceptible to amendment, but in the United States there has been amendment after amendment put into the legislation which was transferred from the trade agreement itself. This is an executive agreement between two countries and explicitly requires the approval of both the Congress and the House of Commons. A whole set of amendments has been put into effect which will affect the legislation the U.S. Congress will face when it deals with this Bill.

Given that situation, it seems to me crucial that Bill C-130 not just be split into a series of parts that reflect the different segments in the Bill, but also that there be a reflection in the Bills that ultimately come before this House of the actual trade agreement itself. Otherwise, this House will not in a vast range of areas be able to move amendments, suggest changes, debate subamendments, and generally give this tremendously important piece of legislation its due attention. This I think could badly damage the freedom of the country in the future, because we will not be able to give the Bill its due attention without following that procedure.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me for a few minutes. I have been in this House now for almost 20 years, as you are aware, but not as long as the House Leader of the Liberal Party and a bit longer than the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre). I feel that I cannot, with a Bill of this sort which amends 27 statutes of the Crown, do my job as a Member of Parliament. I cannot, in a 20-minute speech, cover all its facets which I submit that you should take into consideration, Sir. It is impossible in 20 minutes to cover energy, subsidies, agriculture, fisheries, services, banking, the dispute settlement mechanism, and all things of that sort.

There are many precedents. The famous one was the energy debate in 1982. Our Conservative friends across the way made a big issue out of an energy Bill that amended some 15 statutes. They argued very strongly, through the ringing of the bells over several days, that the Bill be split because it dealt with different independent propositions at the same time under one umbrella or omnibus Bill.

I want to make four points other than the one I have already made. This morning, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) dealt with Mr. Speaker McNaughton's proposition. Going back a number of years in the House, Speaker McNaughton, when faced with a single resolution which contained two distinct propositions, ruled in favour of upholding the ancient and undoubted rights of Members of Parliament. He stated:

> I must come to the conclusion that the motion before the House contains two propositions and since strong objections have been made to the effect that these two propositions should be considered together it is my duty to divide them.

In response, the Minister of State said that this was a resolution with which Mr. Speaker McNaughton dealt. It was not a piece of legislation. It was not a Bill but a resolution. I want to argue for a few moments this afternoon that the principle is the same. It is a very important principle, whether it applies to a Bill or to a resolution. A good precedent was set here by Speaker McNaughton a number of years ago. Whether in a Bill or in a resolution, if there are two distinct propositions, Speaker McNaughton said, "—that these two propositions should be considered together it is my duty to divide them".

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill before us today is one that deals with several distinct propositions. I think it is incumbent upon the Speaker to consider very seriously dividing the legislation before us. Whether it is a Bill or a resolution, the principle is still the same in dealing with parliamentary business facing the people of this great country of ours.

Earlier today the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) in response to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, responded to a ruling which I believe was made by Mr. Speaker Jerome in 1977. He said at that time that when you are at report stage of a Bill you can move an amendment to delete a specific part of a Bill or a specific part of report stage. Therefore, if you are dealing with a smorgasbord or an umbrella type of Bill, an amendment can be moved deleting part A, B, C or D. Speaker Jerome said at that time that that was certainly possible, but that when you are dealing with second reading of a Bill you are debating a Bill in principle. Therefore it is not possible, in the rules of the House of Commons, to divide a Bill at second reading stage because we are at that time debating the principles of the Bill. Those principles are very important, and it is not possible whatever to deal with a Bill through amendments.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap mentioned a procedural debate a number of years ago that dealt with Bill C-207. I forget the year. Perhaps the Hon. Member can remind me of it, but Bill C-207 dealt with 18 or 19 different statutes. The then Member for Winnipeg North Centre was also involved. At that time the Speaker of the day recommended splitting the Bill. Since this Bill, Bill C-130, does not deal with 18 or 19 different statutes but with 27 different statutes, the same rule should apply.

Lastly, not only do we have this particular Bill before the House today to amend some 27 different statutes in the land, but very recently we have had the tabling of a motion on abortion. In that case, the abortion motion will suspend the rules of the House of Commons. In one case, on abortion, the rules will be suspended and in the second case, Bill C-130, a smorgasbord of legislation will amend 27 different statutes. I suggest that these two things taken together set a precedent that disregards the ancient customs, rules and traditions of the House of Commons.

I do know that if one of our Saskatchewan predecessors were here today, the former Hon. Member for Prince Albert, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, he would be extremely concerned about running roughshod over the rules and traditions of the House of Commons. When I first came here, Mr. Diefenbaker sat to the left of the Speaker, very close to where one of the Acting Speakers from Edmonton is now sitting today. Mr. Diefenbaker rose in the House of Commons many times to remind Members of Parliament about the traditions of this place and of the mother of Parliaments in Great Britain and about how important it was that we not suspend, run roughshod or ignore those rules just because a great majority might sit on one side of the House.

Of course, in those days, there was a Liberal majority with Pierre Trudeau as the Prime Minister between 1968 and 1972. Mr. Trudeau was re-elected in 1974 to 1979 with another majority. I can recall that during both those Parliaments, Mr. Diefenbaker on a number of occasions reminded us of the importance of respecting minorities in Parliament and respecting the rules and traditions of Parliament. I argue, with respect, that neither this Bill which amends some 27 statutes nor the abortion resolution which suspends the rules of the House respects the rules and traditions of the House of Commons.

I do not want to say anything that was said earlier this morning by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. It would be repetitive. The Hon. Member put before the House a number of things he was able to find to make the argument that in the name of democracy, parliamentary tradition and what this place stands for, in order to have a proper debate on behalf of the people of Canada and to represent ourselves well on behalf of the people of Canada, this Bill should be split up into its constituent parts. I know that if Members on the opposite side of the House were in opposition, they would be making the same argument.

I was here many times when John Diefenbaker, Ged Baldwin, Walter Baker and a gentleman I saw today on Parliament Hill, Bob Stanfield, made that argument. When they were on this side of the House, they made those arguments time and time again. I am sure that if Hon. Members opposite would take off their ideological blinders, they would be making these kinds of speeches once again in the House of Commons. The ghost of John Diefenbaker must be extremely angry about what he is seeing happening in the House of Commons today.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I will not try to pretend to be any kind of an expert on parliamentary procedure, but I want to begin by saying that I and my colleague from Yorkton—Melville were in this Chamber in January of 1971 when Mr. Speaker Lamoureux made the statement that is recorded at page 2768 of Hansard. At that time, he posed the question: "Where do we stop, where is the point of no return?" I will not repeat the quote; you have heard it several times.

If my memory serves me reasonably well, the atmosphere in the House that day and the tone of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux's remarks and the quality of his statement served as a stern warning and as notice to the Government not to exceed acceptable limits and the usual practices of the House. He chose not to rule on what was an acceptable limit.

For the next six years, we had no problems with omnibus Bills. There were a few complaints, but essentially there were no problems for the next six years. The Government behaved when it came to what went into omnibus Bills and how many there were.

You and I know, as well as all Hon. Members, Mr. Speaker, the way things work around here. This Bill amends 27 statutes. We know that in the practices of this House, with a Government in a majority situation, the rights and privileges not only of Members of this place but of members of the population of Canada will get abused or misused. Anyone who could even contemplate that the Government would allow witnesses to appear before a legislative committee or a standing committee with submissions and suggested amendments to 27 pieces of legislation has to be dreaming in Technicolor. I submit that that supports a phrase used a couple of times earlier today about trampling on the rights not only of Members of Parliament but of citizens of Canada.

We all know that the reality is that the committee and the House will get time allocation. Each of the 27 statutes to be amended will not receive, and in fact, after what the Minister has already said, cannot receive the time and attention that each one of those statutes deserves.

It is obvious that the normal and acceptable procedure in the House for many, many years has been that a Bill that is brought in by the Government can amend two, three, four, five or even a half dozen other statutes. My former colleague from New Westminster has been cited earlier today as speaking in 1977 when there were amendments to five statutes. Mr. Speaker Jerome would not accept that as being unacceptable, but I ask you, in the name of whomever—I will even try God if it will help—if it is acceptable to amend 27 statutes as this Bill does.

I hope you are Speaker in this place for many, many years. The Lord willing, your health permitting and your patience allowing, you will certainly have the support of the great majority of the Members of this place, no matter how you rule. You are the first one who does not rely upon the whim of some other person. You are in the unenviable position of having to set a precedent, depending upon how you decide. I know that that is an agonizing and difficult decision for you, Sir.

It seems to me, Sir, that you must decide now, not later, without leaving it to some other event in the future, whether or not the amending of 27 statutes in one piece of legislation is acceptable. If you should decide to rule, Sir, and I would respect your ruling, that it is acceptable to amend 27 statutes in one Bill, then this or future Governments not only can but will try to amend 29, 30, 35 or 40 statutes in one piece of legislation.

Sir, I submit with all respect that, for the first time, in spite of what has been said earlier today about precedents and practices, there has yet to be a ruling on what is acceptable or what is beyond the normal practices and procedures of the House. When I say "the House", that means all the committees, standing and legislative, and Committee of the Whole. That covers the entire operation of the Parliament of Canada, and particularly this House.

It seems to me, and I say this with all respect and regard, Sir, the time has now arrived for you to act upon that stern warning of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux. I say with all regard and sincerity that his calm attitude, his statesmanship, his niceness, reached its limits on that occasion in 1971. I wish that he had ruled on what was acceptable and what was not. He chose not to, and that was his prerogative.

I suggest, Sir, that you exercise that prerogative now because the time has arrived to act on that 1971 warning to the Government of the day. It is time, Sir, for you to act on that warning to the present Government and any succeeding Government by breaking ground, setting a precedent which can be used from now on, no matter what political Party is in power, to prevent a Government of any stripe from acting as though we were a one-Party state. I do not think, Sir, that my colleagues on the government side want to give even the appearance of acting as a one-Party state. Majorities come and go. Minorities come and go. However, the operations of this institution cannot just come and go. They cannot be left up to whatever happens to be the current situation. You, Sir, and all of us have to think about subsequent events. Therefore, Sir, I ask that you agree that the time has arrived for you to act upon that warning of Speaker Lamoureux. Whether or not I or anyone else likes your ruling is not the point. The ball is in your court and I ask that you decide and rule on what is acceptable.

I hope you will decide and rule that the amending of 27 statutes in one Bill goes beyond the normal and acceptable practices of this place and that it is not acceptable. I am not sure about the rules, and maybe my House Leader can help you, but I suggest that you could even request or order that each of these statutes to be amended shall be sent to the appropriate standing or legislative committee and dealt with separately and that the Bill will be broken up into certain logical and sensible sections, two, three, four or five, whatever you decide. However, I think the time to act is now.

It is your decision and I do not envy you that decision. Certainly I hope my pleadings were sufficient to bring tears to a jury full of bankers. I do not want to trivialize the case I and my colleagues have been trying to make, I just want to say that it is time for you to act now.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. I think perhaps we will hear from the Parliamentary Secretary for a few minutes.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are well into the third hour of Members providing helpful advice to you about procedure, which, I suggest, they are obliged to do.

Mr. Foster: You rang the bells for 14 days.

Mr. Hawkes: I think it is fair to say that Members of the House, whether in opposition or on the government side, feel strongly about the substance of the Bill. The Government believes it will indeed lower prices and create more and better paying jobs for Canadians. The Opposition believes the agreement should be torn up. Yet the importance of the Bill should not lead us to provide procedural advice to you in an extended manner. It is the importance of the procedure that should lead us to provide you with advice. I suggest that when Members start to get up and indicate that they personally are not sure about the rules, when indeed we are talking about the rules, we are perhaps in danger of abusing the rules by using House time, which could be spent on substantive debate about the motion, to argue the substance of the motion rather than the procedures.

If we go back to the beginning of today's interventions, the Government has been remarkably silent. I am only the second person to stand while six members of the Opposition have spoken. What the House Leaders asked you to do was to look at the first Standing Order, because it is indeed that order that gives you the power to decide procedural questions that are not dealt with in the Standing Orders. However, it requires you to pay attention to usages, forms, customs and precedents, primarily of this House but also of other Houses.

The Opposition has not been particularly clear, in my mind, as to what they are asking for. Different people may indeed be asking for different things in somewhat different ways. However, I would like to draw your attention to Hansard of May 11, 1977. I believe Mr. Speaker Jerome was in the chair and the issue was a motion to refer to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs Bill C-51, an Act to amend the Criminal Code. I picked this one, but there are many others. However, I believe its clarity could be helpful to the Chair. He said:

> —there can be no doubt that a motion containing two or more substantive provisions is quite distinct from a procedural motion or a motion which is generally described as having only the effect of dealing with the progress of a bill.

The Government is bringing forward the motion on second reading. It is the traditional second reading motion dealing with the progress of a Bill. The Bill is to give effect to a trade arrangement.

On that same page Speaker Jerome also deals with what I think is perhaps the second ribbon which comes from the opposition side. He says:

> I should emphasize as well that the remedy sought by the hon. member is not to divide the bill according to the separate statutes to be amended but by subject matter. Were that to be attempted, it would place before the Chair, it seems to me, questions of interpretation and responsibility for the drafting of an extremely complex order, which in my opinion the Chair ought not to attempt.

He goes on to say:

> —I certainly am bound by the clear language of our precedent rulings and previous practices to reject the point of order of the hon. member for New Westminster, and I decline to make the order which he requests.

We have done our homework. In the history of the Canadian Parliament no Speaker acting on his or her own initiative has ever ruled a second reading motion out of order and no Speaker acting on his or her own initiative has ever split a government Bill.

With that as precedent, and on the basis that your behaviour is bound by customs and precedent, it is difficult to imagine circumstances under which you should leap into the fray and take this new action.

There was, I think, the possibility of an argument on the finding of your behaviour which comes out of the terms "usages and forms", because usages and forms have indeed been changed by this Parliament. We have changed the Standing Orders. It is curious that none of the six members of the Opposition, including the two House Leaders, who have spoken have chosen to deal at all with the change in usages and forms which flow from our collective decision to change the rules of the House of Commons.

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? If our precedents and customs are so clear that the motion should be ruled in order and should not be split, why have they not dealt with usages and forms? I suggest that it is because the opportunity system provided by the reform of Parliament for Members to deal in other ways with the substantive content of their particular motion and this particular Bill would give you an even stronger basis than your predecessors have had for the rejection of the procedural arguments coming from across the floor.

We have had a traditional second reading motion to accomplish a single goal. There is no difficulty about Members voting on the principle of the Bill. It is a Bill to implement a trading arrangement. Passage of that takes the Bill to a committee. Each Party in the House of Commons is represented on the committee and can change Members at any time. The committee can call witnesses and hear evidence.

The job of the committee is not necessarily to determine whether or not the fine print of the Bill does what is best for Canada—in fact I think a second reading motion takes that out of their domain—but to consider whether or not the legislation and its fine print give effect to the trade agreement. They are to determine whether it is a faithful reproduction, in all of its words, of the agreement undertaken with another nation.

Various Members opposite have referred to the American system. This House of Commons set up a special committee to travel across the country before the agreement was finalized and to report back to the House on the principles of the agreement. The agreement was signed some six months ago. As a result of parliamentary reform, from that moment on 28 standing committees of this House could have examined its substantive provisions wherever and whenever they wanted.

Nine American committees did so. However, there has been no pressure from the Opposition for any of our 28 committees to do likewise. There is no committee report on the floor of this Chamber, some six months later, raising any question about this agreement in terms of the responsibilities, rights, and privileges of our standing committees.

The minute this Bill was presented to us at first reading stage, any of the standing committees of the House with an interest in the subject matter could have begun a process of investigation leading to reporting back to the House about the substance. To the best of our knowledge no committee chairman has been asked by a single Member of this Chamber to examine the substance of the Bill before us.

The opportunity systems are there. If we pass this motion as we have historically passed all similar motions, without any procedural wrinkles, the committee can amend it to ensure it accords with the agreement. When it comes back to the House there can be amendments proposed with regard to every single comma, every single word, and every single clause, by any Member of the Chamber. There is ample opportunity, through the legislative committee process alone, for adequate examination of this.

Let us assume that we split this legislation into 27 separate Bills with 27 separate legislative committees. The responsibility of those committee members would be to understand all the implications of that massive document before they could deal with the clauses designed to implement. It makes a great deal more sense to have, and Members can take a great deal more comfort from the knowledge that it will be, a single committee understanding the agreement in its totality and looking at the fine print of the clauses to see whether or not the clauses implement the treaty.

It is a single subject and a single agreement and must be conceived as a whole. It is a treaty born of discussion. Fifteen central advisory committees advised the Canadian Government on this as it went along. There was give and take on both sides. The agreement has been signed and it must be respected. The implementation of it is in Bill C-130. This is not to be a discussion about the agreement but about the implementation of the agreement as signed and previously approved by the House. That is much better done by a single committee which understands the nuances of the agreement and whose wisdom can grow as it advances the causes.

It is my strongly held belief, Mr. Speaker, after listening for the better part of three hours, that we have heard very little, in the last hour in particular, that would be relevant to the procedural argument itself. There is always a tendency to talk about the substance of this Bill, but this debate today is to deal with a procedure. I suggest that your hands are tied on the basis of precedent. It would not be a wise use of the time of the Chamber to continue with this argument when it is so clear that the procedure must be upheld. Failure to uphold the procedure would perhaps plunge the House into chaos.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take part in this debate at the procedural level. I do not intend to speak to the substance of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House consider this so-called omnibus bill to be totally unacceptable. In the few moments at my disposal, I wish to support what was said by my House Leader, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and many Opposition Members who raised some very good points this morning, and touch on two or three points which, I feel, are very important at the procedural level, for the debate in this House and consideration of the proposed legislation tabled by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, you are the first elected Speaker of this House, and from more than a year's experience, I would say that you are an excellent Speaker and take the Standing Orders of the House very seriously, especially S.O. 1, which may well be our most important standing order, which provides, and I quote:

> 1. In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

Mr. Speaker, as I see it, it is up to the Chair to protect the minority and to prevent the overwhelming majority on the Government side from ignoring our position and using the sheer weight of numbers to impose their preferences. We intend to have an attentive, serious and full debate on this Bill, but we want to do so in a spirit of common sense, and we also want it understood that we are considering one Bill at a time, not a mishmash of bills lumped together under the umbrella of an omnibus bill.

Mr. Speaker, in response to a petition I tabled in the House in March 1988, the Minister for International Trade at the time replied, with respect to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, that the enabling legislation for the free trade agreement would be tabled shortly in the House of Commons, and that all Members would have an opportunity, on behalf of all Canadians, to consider the agreement and to make their views known. The Minister went on to give me a fairly exhaustive reply, largely government propaganda about the excellent reasons for their initiative and why the Mulroney-Reagan deal was so important.

Mr. Speaker, I have two or three points I would like to raise today. The first one, obviously, concerns the comments of the Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) who is also the Minister responsible for the business of the House (Mr. Lewis), who told us this morning . . .

• (1600)

I took down verbatim what he said: "Opportunities for Members to vote would be there". My question is: When would we have the opportunity to debate the so-called measures involved in Bill C-130?

I am not telling you anything new, Mr. Speaker, when I say that the Bill consists of 123 pages and amends 27 federal statutes. Indeed, we believe that the Bill should be broken up into various Bills incorporating each and every one of the statutes under discussion.

I was impressed by an article in The Globe and Mail this morning, written by Hugh Winsor, in which he analyses the Government's strategy in dealing with the Meech Lake Accord, the abortion issue and free trade. He has a point well taken when talking about this new economic constitution that the Government is trying to pass on to Canadians. Let me quote from the article:

> On the free-trade enabling bill, International Trade Minister John Crosbie has made it clear that all he wants from Parliament is a rubber stamp, and he is prepared to use closure to get it. 'We're going to have Parliament make a decision. That's what parliamentarians are elected for: to make decisions.'

Mr. Winsor goes on to say:

> Really? If the only purpose of being a member of Parliament is to be a trained seal clapping for the decisions taken by Cabinet, we will be lucky if we can get a full slate of candidates for the next election.

He goes on to explain that it is important that debate take place and that it be thorough, democratic and allowed to take its course.

I was particularly upset with the proposal that no amendments to the deal are possible because that would disturb our American friends. The Minister also proposed this morning that indeed the committee will have the possibility to make amendments which can always be brought back to the House at report stage. I want to deal with that committee stage because that is the main purpose of my rising today.

Since the reform of the rules of the House, it has been the custom that legislative committees are made up of about seven members of the House. Standing Order 95(1) authorizes the striking committee, of which I am a member along with the Government Whip and New Democratic Party Whip, to name more than seven and up to a maximum of 30 Members to constitute a legislative committee.

Since the Government sets the number of members it will have on its committee, keeping in mind the proportions of representation in the House, it has been our response to have only one member of the Liberal Party and one from the New Democratic Party on most of these legislative committees. That makes it very difficult.

I want to ask the Government sincerely if we could not come to an amicable agreement in the striking committee for Bill C-130 where the Government would accept more members—indeed possibly raise it to 30 members—and give the Opposition a little more room and say in the committee with the intent of providing a thorough debate. Once this has been accepted as a modus operandi, I think it would re-establish a sort of trust between the Opposition and the Government.

It is quite possible to make amendments to the Bill in terms of the wording and the substance of the Bill. I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Standing Order 114(10) which is quite explicit. It reads:

• (1610)

> The Speaker shall have power to select or combine amendments or clauses to be proposed at the report stage and may, if he or she thinks fit, call upon any Member who has given notice of an amendment to give such explanation of the subject of the amendment as may enable the Speaker to form a judgment upon it.

There is a very important paragraph entitled "Guidelines for Selection". I want to read it because it is very important for this debate. It reads:

> The Speaker will not normally select for consideration by the House any motion previously ruled out of order in committee and will normally only select motions which were not or could not be presented in committee. A motion, previously defeated in committee, will only be selected if the Speaker judges it to be of such exceptional significance as to warrant a further consideration at the report stage. The Speaker will not normally select for separate debate, a repetitive series of motions which are interrelated and in making the selection, shall consider whether individual Members will be able to express their concerns during the debate on another motion.

The reason I bring this matter to the attention of the House is that it is the Chair's decision whether there will be amendments in the House at report stage, in many cases, because a lot of the amendments are repetitive. Indeed, if the Government has its way in committee, there would only be friendly amendments to the Government's legislation. No other amendments would be allowed because of the numbers the Government has and because of the pressure it puts on the single members of the committee who may be Liberal or New Democrat. Of course, the Government gets its way every time without any discussion and it carries the day.

Therefore, I am saying in this procedural argument that I think the Government must show some understanding of the need to increase the numbers on the legislative committee from the practice in the last couple of years of seven to possibly triple or quadruple that number.

I see the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is here and I want to address some of the difficulties we see with the omnibus Bill. I, for one, believe that Bill C-130 is a hodgepodge of some 27 statutes which conveniently were put together and grouped and will be presented in the House. Come any eventuality, the Government will have its way, even using closure, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has threatened. I want to quote from the debate in 1982. It may not be very relevant to say that the precedent created in 1982 should apply today. I was here in the House at that time. I sat in the Chair at night. The bells rang for two solid weeks. I think the House settled that issue when a compromise was reached to split the Bill into eight separate Bills. It was not the Speaker's decision. The House agreed to make that compromise.

In those days, the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre the present Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, was quoted in Hansard on March 2, 1982. He said about the national energy Bill: "It is an incredible hodgepodge and mismatch of disparate items". He went on to say: "There is no protection in this Chamber from the tyranny of the majority". He then topped all his statements by saying: "Wide-ranging pieces of legislation, so-called omnibus Bills, cannot be debated properly because they cover too many topics". That is the point. Omnibus Bills can't be debated properly because they cover too many topics.

If I had time and you had patience, Mr. Speaker, I would read the number of Bills which will be amended, starting with the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, Department of Agriculture Act, Bank Act, Broadcasting Act and so on.

The issue was well put by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) when he said all these Bills, which are as distinct from one another as night and day, are all grouped within this so-called omnibus Bill and are amended by Bill C-130. In fact, there are Bills listed which have not been passed by this House. I refer to Bill C-110 which just received second reading and was sent to a committee on April 28, 1988. That Bill has not been adopted by the House but is being amended by Bill C-130. One wonders what kind of game we are playing when even Bills which have not been adopted are being amended by Bill C-130.

I do not like the idea that no amendments can be brought forth. I do not like the idea of this omnibus Bill approach. I think it plays against normal democratic practices. I would hope that in your judgment, Mr. Speaker, you would rule the Bill unacceptable and would propose to the Government a course of action which would be more in keeping with democratic principles and thorough debate. I would hope the Government would see the light of day and come in with possibly a split—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): A split is not enough.

Mr. Gauthier: Perhaps my House Leader could meet with the Government House Leader and come to some kind of agreement as to what the Government can do. We are not opposing the Government's right to introduce legislation. Indeed, the Government can propose and we will dispose. However, we are asking the Government to come to terms with us, do the sensible thing, meet with the House Leaders and come to terms with respect to a compromise, a good compromise which would offer us a guarantee of debate and possibly ensure better legislation.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has attacked Bill C-130 on the grounds it is procedurally objectionable because it is an omnibus Bill. It has quoted Speaker Lamoureux from 1971 and the 1982 National Energy Program omnibus Bill as precedents. I would like to show, Mr. Speaker, that in my humble opinion they are wrong. To do so, I will focus my remarks on two points. The free trade Bill puts one clear question before the House of Commons, whether or not to approve the free trade agreement. Second, the free trade Bill is not only procedurally in order but also the best way to proceed.

Before I address those two points, however, I would like to speak briefly to two preliminary issues. The first issue is whether or not this Bill is an omnibus Bill. That is, in my view, not the issue here. It is a matter of semantics. We on this side think the Bill is not an omnibus Bill at all. However, even if it were, it would not, for that reason alone, be procedurally objectionable because not every omnibus Bill is objectionable. The Oxford Dictionary defines "omnibus" as "serving several objects comprising several items". This Bill serves only one object, to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It comprises only one item, the legislation necessary to implement that agreement. The fact it makes amendments to several Acts does not change the simple cohesiveness of the Bill.

Even if one accepted the Opposition's claim that this Bill is properly termed an omnibus Bill because it amends a significant number of Acts, that alone would not make it objectionable to this House. The issue is not whether the Bill is an omnibus Bill but whether it is out of order. As I will argue in a few moments, we are confident that not only this Bill is completely in order but that it is in the best possible form for discussion by the House.

The second point that I would like to dispose of at the beginning is the Opposition's demand that the Bill be divided. I will argue that there is no reason whatsoever for the House not to consider this Bill in its present form. But even if you, Mr. Speaker, were to find the Bill objectionable, it is clear from the rulings of previous Speakers that the Speaker will not order the Bill to be divided. I need only remind you, Mr. Speaker, of the 1982 precedent of Bill C-94, the Energy Security Act. At that time, members of my Party had argued vigorously and, in my view, with complete justification, that the omnibus energy Bill addressed too many disparate issues for the House to have a coherent debate and vote on it.

Your Honour will recall that that Bill was perhaps the clearest example of a procedurally objectionable omnibus Bill in our history. It created several unrelated new Acts, and made substantial unrelated amendments to several more statutes. When we finally agreed, by House order, to divide it, we had eight separate substantial Bills. Yet even in those circumstances the Speaker of the day could find no rule or precedent allowing her to divide the Bill.

The rules have not changed. A motion which contains more than one question is another matter, of course. However, it is clear that a Bill cannot be divided by the Speaker on the grounds put forward by the Opposition. It is up to the House to decide whether or not a Bill should be divided.

With respect to the main points, first, this Bill, the free trade Bill, puts a single question before the House. That being so, it clearly satisfies any test of procedural acceptability. The title of the Bill is not very long, however, it is abundantly clear. It is "an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America". That title sums up the purpopse and scope of this Bill eloquently and accurately.

The Bill is bulky. It does contain amendments to 27 existing Acts, but its single theme, its central and sole proposition, is this. The Government asks Parliament to approve and implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, period.

This is not a case where Parliament can pick and choose among the pieces of the Bill, or make substantial modifications to its contents. This is a Bill to give effect in Canadian law to a treaty signed with a foreign Government. If Parliament approves the agreement, the various amendments to existing legislation are a natural and necessary consequence. If we do not make all the amendments, the agreement will not be implemented by the United States, just as we will not implement the agreement if the United States does not make all the necessary amendments to its legislation. It is an all or nothing proposition that we are putting to the House—go ahead with the agreement, or do not.

Let me describe briefly the Bill in order to illustrate my point. It consists of five parts and two schedules. Part I approves and implements the agreement in general. Part II establishes the procurement review board, which carries out certain obligations in Chapter 13 of the agreement relating to government procurement. Part III amends the Special Import Measures Act, in order to establish the binational dispute settlement process called for by Chapter 19 of the agreement, and to reflect the agreement's provisions regarding emergency action. Part IV makes amendments to 26 existing Acts, the majority of which relate to imports and exports, agriculture and financial services. Every one of these amendments is required in order to meet our obligations under the free trade agreement.

Part V consists of transitional provisions, and the requirement that before legislation is brought into force the Governor in Council must be satisfied that the United States has taken satisfactory steps to carry out its side of the bargain.

Schedule I sets out the text of the agreement which was signed on January 2. It is included in the Bill for the purposes of convenience. Schedule II contains the Canadian tariff.

It will be abundantly clear to the House from this description that the Bill is in no way objectionable, procedurally or otherwise. It has one single unified purpose—to give legal effect to the free trade agreement. It does not create several new Acts. It makes amendments to a number of statutes, but the amendments are all directly related to the free trade agreement. The only matter of principle in the Bill is whether or not the free trade agreement should be approved. Once that is decided, the other provisions of the Bill follow as a necessary consequence.

My second main point is whether or not this Bill can be categorized as an omnibus Bill. It is being submitted to the House in the most appropriate form for consideration by the House. It satisfies every test of procedural acceptability.

Objections to putting omnibus Bills before the House generally speaking, are based on the fact that they contain unrelated amendments to several Acts, or enact several unrelated statutes. The fundamental reason that objection is taken to such Bills is that the House should not be denied the opportunity to express itself separately on each distinct proposal put before it. Where a single Bill contains several distinct and unrelated propositions, it is not possible, particularly at second reading, for a Member to vote in favour of one and against another.

A number of tests have been suggested over the years as to what is acceptable in an omnibus Bill. First, there should be a theme of relevancy among its contents. Second, the contents of the Bill must be relevant to the umbrella raised by its long title. Third, the form of the Bill must be such as to allow coherent debate and voting at second reading stage. Next, the Bill should not contain several distinct and unrelated propositions, such as the enactment of several new and unrelated Acts. Finally, a single vote on the principle of the Bill should be appropriate.

Where an omnibus Bill meets these tests it is well recognized that it may be the best way to proceed. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, put it well in the debate on the energy security Bill when he said:

> —in many instances omnibus Bills are not only properly admissible but, indeed, are also the best way to proceed since the grouping of certain amendments or certain items aids in providing a coherence to the debate and discussion, and attempting to handle the subject matter by a different set of separate Bills would not only be wasteful of time but would also be confusing.

One or two precedents should serve to illustrate this principle. In 1980, the House passed "an Act to Amend the Pension Act, the Compensation for Former Prisoners of War Act, the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act". This was an omnibus Bill in the sense that it amended a number of Acts. But there was clearly a single, fundamental principle, namely, the increasing of pensions to veterans and others affected by war.

A second example is the Canada Post Corporation Act which created a new statute and amended 14 other Acts to make them consistent with the new legislation. It is clear that grouping these amendments in one Bill was an aid, not a hindrance, to proper parliamentary discussions and decision.

The free trade Bill, whether or not it is an omnibus Bill, meets all the tests I have mentioned. The Bill in its present form is the most appropriate, convenient and logical way to present to Parliament the legislation necessary to implement the free trade agreement. Because there is only one question of principle, debate will be coherent, and a single vote at second reading is not only desirable but proper.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about the procedure before the House today, particularly following the comments of the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid). He has stated clearly that the proposition the Government is putting before us is that all it has to do with regard to legislative implementation of the free trade Act is to put before the House a yes or no proposition. Either we want to implement the free trade agreement or we do not want to implement it. That raises a fundamental question about the purpose of this place. The notion of consent of the Government is one that is appropriate to a plebescite. It is inappropriate to a notion of representative democracy.

Thus we have to ask ourselves what is the purpose of this place. Fundamentally, the purpose of this place is to breathe life into the concept of democracy. It is to put the meat on the bones of the principles of democracy. The discussion before the House today has centred on the legislation, on the fact that it is omnibus legislation. That is to say that it is legislation that covers a large number of items. The fundamental question as put by my House Leader earlier today was with respect to whether or not one principle can come under the umbrella of a single Bill. This is a very important question, Mr. Speaker, not only in the sense of debating the abstractions of parliamentary procedure, but also the consequences of the procedural decision you will have to make. What are the consequences of that decision for this place and for democracy in this country?

I wish to refer to a basic principle of parliamentary democracy from Beauchesne's Fifth Edition. Under the heading "Principles of Parliamentary Law" it states:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express his opinions within limits necessary . . .

The fundamental point of this basic principle of parliamentary law is that the majority has to have an opportunity to govern, and at the same time a debate must provide a real opportunity for there to be a consent of the Government. In other words, just because the majority has a majority in this place it cannot run roughshod over the minority whose purpose here is to raise questions about what the Government is doing.

I wish to look at the decision you have to make, Mr. Speaker, in that context. What are the implications of your decision with regard to this legislation in terms of whether it contributes to the capacity of Parliament to allow for the governing of the country, or its capacity to allow for the consent of the people to be expressed?

While there may not be conclusive precedents to say that the Speaker will split legislation, surely whatever form your decision takes, Mr. Speaker, it will contribute to whether the legislation to implement the free trade agreement comes before us as one piece of legislation or as several pieces of legislation. Fundamentally, what we are dealing with here is the impact of your decision, Mr. Speaker, on how many pieces of legislation we will be faced with.

If this legislation to implement the free trade agreement were to come before us as as several pieces of legislation, the consequences of that would be to increase the amount of debate on the free trade agreement. That would therefore mean that the public would be better informed about the free trade agreement before Parliament is asked to decide on it. By making a decision that contributes in that direction, Mr.

Speaker, you would be promoting the capacity of Parliament to debate and to inform the public, without in any way impairing the capacity of the Government to govern. Even if we were to deal with several pieces of legislation, rather than one piece, which would have the consequence of increasing the amount of time that the House would spend on this matter, even if it went to the extent that the Government felt that it could not pass this legislation before it had to have another general election, the consequence of such decisions would simply be that the people of the country, having been informed through parliamentary debate, would have a chance to make a decision on whether or not the country will adhere to the free trade agreement.

If the voters then decided that they approved of the action of the Government, then the Government would simply be returned with a renewed majority to implement its policies based on a mandate from the people. Therefore, the capacity of the Government to govern through this institution would in no way be impaired.

However, if we go in the other direction, if a decision is made that the legislation necessary to implement the free trade agreement shall come before the House as a single piece of legislation so that all we are asked is a yes-or-no question, then obviously the amount of debate that the free trade agreement will receive in the country will be very much restricted as a result of that type of decision. The people will be less well informed, and obviously the desire of the Government to treat matters in the House in what it feels is an efficient matter would be promoted, but at a great expense to the amount and quality of debate in the country.

The decision that you make, Mr. Speaker, is a crucial decision. It will affect the capacity of this Parliament to serve as an instrument for the consent of the Government, and, therefore, in the long run for the real capacity to have democratic government in this country. The legislation before us is unprecedented in terms of its range. One only has to look at the "Table of Provisions" contained in the back of the Bill which indicates all the Acts to be amended by this legislation. Even when one looks at it from the point of view of the legislation that will be amended, it includes the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, the Bank Act, the Broadcasting Act, the Copyright Act, the Customs Act, and a whole range of other Acts. Because of its range the legislation is unprecedented. It requires full debate in order to achieve the consent of the people.

The historic nature of this debate is underlined by all of the statements from the Government as it points out that the free trade agreement will affect every sector of Canadian society, whether it is cultural, investment, or natural resources. All segments of Canadian society are concerned about this agreement.

We in the New Democratic Party caucus met with a group this morning called the Pro-Canada Network. It is made up of citizens from the labour movement, the environmental movement, and the peace movement who are concerned about the implications of this legislation for the arms policy in this country. It also included agricultural representatives and businessmen. The whole nature of Canadian society is impacted by this legislation. The Government is seeking to bring forward in this Chamber the notion that all that is required is a simple yes or no, or "Do you want to adhere to the free trade agreement?" That is a proposition that is appropriate if one is attempting to fashion a plebiscite, which is one of the instruments of democracy that exists in a theoretical sense and certainly exists in actual practice in the State of California. This very procedure is what we have criticized the free trade agreement in substance of doing, that is, Americanizing Canada.

Where we are today is a parliamentary chamber. We live and function in a representative democracy. We do not have a plebiscitarian democracy. We have a representative democracy. The fundamental nature of a representative democracy is that debate by representatives of the people on substantive matters will inform the public. The informed public will then bring the pressure of its decision and conclusions about what is going on to the Government. That will determine fundamentally in how many pieces this legislation is split, and whether such legislation will ever get through the House. Your decision, Mr. Speaker, contributes to the capacity of this Parliament to effect its fundamental purpose, namely to give life to democracy in Canada.

I referred at the beginning of my remarks to Beauchesne and to the principles of parliamentary law which indicate, and I will paraphrase, yes, there has to be an opportunity for a Government to govern, for the majority to govern. But there also has to be an opportunity for the minority in the House to give expression to the concerns of the people. You have to balance the capacity to govern with the necessity of getting the consent to govern.

The proposition placed before you is to bring forward one piece of legislation which says, "Do you want the free trade agreement or not? Yes or no". That is insufficient. The consequences of allowing that procedure to be followed will greatly diminish the debate given to this historic policy question facing Canadians. The consequence of making a decision to encourage the implementation of the free trade Bill through several pieces of legislation would be to provide greater opportunity for debate, greater opportunity to inform the public and greater opportunity to have a real democratic decision, to have the consent of the Government. That is a matter to which I would draw your attention as you make this very difficult and historic decision.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops-Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have two or three points in wrapping up. I think in my presentation earlier today I referred to an incident where the Chair was stormed by members of the Opposition of the day. I think I mentioned that was part of the debate on the imposition of the National Energy Program. That was not the case. I ought to have known. That incident took place during a constitutional problem.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his correction. I also want the Hon. Member to know that your Chair who was then in another position, was not one of those who stormed the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: You are absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. The Chair was not one of those who stormed the Chair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I have two or three points to make before we complete this matter in sharing views on the appropriateness of the Bill before us. I do not want to repeat arguments but, in spite of what a number of interveners have said, this Bill does go beyond trade practices. We will be dealing with potential social programs, the ability or inability of the Government to enact comprehensive social programs. We will be discussing energy security for future generations, the future role of Crown corporations in Canada, the matter of investment and the role and changes that will result to financial institutions. These are issues that go beyond the trade implications of the treaty signed between Canada and the United States. For that reason, to debate each of these sectors properly, a separate Bill for each would be the most appropriate course to take.

On a more practical matter, if this Bill is allowed to proceed in its present form, which is extremely comprehensive and complicated and, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has indicated himself, is perhaps one of the most critical initiatives the House will debate since the Second World War, carrying horrendous implications when it comes to what the future of Canada will be, to be restricted to a 20-minute speech, as I and virtually everyone else in this House will be, makes it very difficult to reflect my constituents' views on such a wide range of issues. But that is what I am expected to do. If Hon. Members at second reading stage were simply to speak for 20 minutes, which is the maximum offered, that would come out to be 25 days of debate, let alone at committee, report stage and third reading. We need a sufficient amount of time to discuss this particular package. But to do it properly and break up the Bill would mean even more time. Canadians will understand that there is no reason to hurry a Bill of such importance, and we would we want to take perhaps a few months to examine it thoroughly.

I ask you to consider whether you feel that a Member of Parliament in 20 minutes would be able to reflect accurately the views of his or her constituents on all aspects of the Bill and then vote on the principle of it. What principle are we going to vote on, Mr. Speaker? Is it the principle of a binding settlement dispute mechanism? Members from all sides in this House have been calling for an improved dispute settlement mechanism when we get into trade disputes with our American friends. Perhaps some people would like to vote positively on that part of the Bill but against another which opens up Canada to increased foreign investment. Yet those alternatives will not be there.

I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to take the necessary step to enable Members of Parliament to do the job for which they were elected. The only way is to require the Government to break up the Bill into appropriate sections, so that to amend 27 different statutes will be done through a number of initiatives as opposed to one omnibus initiative.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring something to your attention which I do not think has been raised before. It has been argued that this Bill does nothing more than implement the trade deal and that is its unifying purpose. I want to say parenthetically that it was argued back in 1982 that the single unifying purpose of the energy security Bill was to implement the National Energy Program, even though a number of Bills had to be amended and other legislative enactments had to take place. This argument was not acceptable to the Conservative Party at that time. Having heard the arguments of the spokespeople for the Government in that regard I began leafing through the Bill. For example, there are explanatory notes on facing pages to each page of the Bill. If one looks at page 88 of the Bill and its facing page one will find the word "New" after reference to the clauses. In some other cases, at page 81a of the Bill the explanatory note with respect to Clause 103 reads:

> This amendment would implement, in part, Article 405 of the Agreement.

Let me return to what I was saying a few moments ago. If one looks at page 88a, the explanatory note with respect to Clause 118 is simply the word "New". If one looks at the explanatory notes for Clauses 119 and 120, one finds simply the word "New".

It seems to me that this could well mean that the Bill goes beyond simply amending an existing statute to conform with the requirements of the trade deal between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States. One sees in the explanatory notes in some cases words that suggest that the amendments would implement one article or another of the agreement. In other cases, one finds, by way of explanatory note, simply the word "New". I think this may well have some significance in responding to the words of the Government earlier today that Bill C-130 is totally different from the energy security Bill of 1982.

In any event, we are being asked to deal with changes to the established policy as set out in statutes adopted by this Parliament in a vast range of areas that go very far beyond trade, as that term is ordinarily used, and very far beyond the amendment of tariffs touching on trade between Canada and the United States. We are dealing with almosst the whole range of matters that the Government of Canada deals with as well as actually or potentially the whole range of matters dealt with by the provinces and municipalities.

Having said that, I want to say that when there are no others who wish to speak on the issue of whether or not this Bill is of an acceptable or improper omnibus nature, I will be ready to raise for your attention and consideration other points which I believe touch on whether or not Bill C-130 is acceptable in its present form.

Mr. Speaker: I am conscious of what the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has just mentioned, and it is consistent with some remarks made earlier today that there may be other points to raise. I think the debate we have had until now is of considerable help to the Chair and I would like to leave the matter at that while I reflect upon it. I just want to make the commitment to the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) and to the House Leaders that I will not come back into the House with this without giving ample indication of when I would like to rule.

It might also be helpful if the Hon. Member for Windsor West and perhaps the Hon. Minister and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) could meet with the Chair at our earliest convenience, just to discuss what other matters might properly be debated further. As I have indicated, if it is a matter of constitutionality, I have some very grave doubts as to whether as Speaker I am even authorized to hear those arguments. I wonder if I could ask the Minister and House Leaders to arrange with my office for a quiet discussion some time soon, perhaps first thing in the morning.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome that initiative on behalf of the Chair. I believe I indicated earlier that we are prepared to discuss all aspects of the admissibility of the Bill today, and we naturally spotted the two areas within which an omnibus Bill was acceptable, and, second, whether it should be divided in principle. It was our reading of the rules, although I do not want to foreclose argument on the part of my friend, that the constitutionality of the Bill was something which the Chair, on previous occasions, had refused to deal with, and I also mentioned in my remarks that the question as to whether or not a reference to the Supreme Court was in order was, in our opinion, not appropriate because we have no final law to refer to the Supreme Court and it does not want to deal with hypotheticals just as we do not.

I think we should compliment all Hon. Members who took part today. Their debate on the admissibility of the Bill was very complete, and obviously they have done a lot of preparation. I welcome your comments indicating that we should get together, since I think the subject has been exhausted as to whether or not there are procedural arguments.

As I indicated to you, I think it is in the best interests of those on either side of the question that we commence the debate on substance as soon as possible. Without speaking for my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap, I think he and I discussed it earlier and he had a feeling that perhaps we had exhausted the admissibility arguments, although I do not want to prejudge his comments. I would welcome such a meeting as soon as possible in order that we could deal with this matter and get on with the debate on the substance of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the remarks of the Hon. Minister of State. Without elaborating, I want to thank all Hon. Members for their contributions today. I also want to thank Hon. Members for obviously having exercised a considerable amount of hard work and self-discipline in directing their remarks to those issues which I, as your Speaker, have the obligation to resolve.

Just on a procedural point let me say that it is nearly five o'clock. I am in the hands of Hon. Members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we had indicated our intention to call Bill C-129, the Air Canada privatization Bill, but in view of the time, I suggest that we suspend the sitting until five o'clock.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Could the Deputy House Leader confirm the business he intends to call tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will be looking into that right away and I will get back to the House immediately.

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be appropriate to call it five o'clock.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the Government's response to twelve petitions numbered as follows: 332-4105, 332-4452 to 332-4456 inclusive, 332-4457, 332-4537, 332-4538, 332-4585, 332-4614 and 332-4641.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we shall take one more step towards genuine employment equity in Canada.

As you know, the Employment Equity Act was passed in 1986. Under this legislation, all federally-regulated businesses which have 100 or more employees are required to submit an annual report on employment equity. The first series of annual reports is to be submitted not later than tomorrow, June 1.

For the very first time we will have information on the occupational levels and remuneration of four groups designated under the Employment Equity Act: women, Native people, members of visible minorities and disabled persons.

Judging from the reaction of employers, it is clear they are spending quite a bit of time and money to comply with the provisions of the legislation. They are aware of the benefits of, and the need for, improved employment equity in this country.

Before I continue my speech, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), who played a key role in introducing and preparing the Employment Equity Act. Thanks to her efforts as Minister of Employment and Immigration, we can now enjoy the benefits of this legislation.

Under the legislation, all federally-regulated employers, Crown corporations as well as private sector businesses, are required to eliminate employment barriers, to adopt special measures and to make arrangements to accomodate certain differences. As a result, the designated groups will be able to meet the competitive challenge in the workplace. Until now, these groups have not been given a fair chance. Special measures are therefore necessary to help them close the gap.

Under the legislation, the employers concerned, mostly in the fields of banking, transportation and communications, must identify and remove barriers to the employment and promotion of women, Native people, members of visible minorities and disabled persons.

Employers must make an effort to achieve equitable representation in their work force. To that end, they must ensure that designated groups are represented in all occupations and at all levels of their organization. Their annual reports must indicate the rate of representation of designated groups according to occupational categories and salary ranges; they must also report on hirings, promotions and terminations of target group members.

Subsequently, we will verify, process and analyse these reports. They will be published and made available to the persons concerned across Canada. Later this year, I shall table in the House my first annual report on employment equity.

Mr. Speaker, our country was built on diversity. Nevertheless, the Abella Royal Commission showed us that there exists in Canadian workplaces a system that has always denied the very existence of such diversity.

As Rosalie Abella said in her report, "It is not that individuals in the designated groups are inherently unable to achieve equality on their own, it is that the obstacles in their way are so formidable and self-perpetuating that they cannot be overcome without intervention."

Systematic discrimination excludes members of certain groups through rules or employment customs that have nothing to do with the position or that are unnecessary for sound, effective management.

It is a fact that the unemployment rate for the groups covered by the Act tends to be higher than for other Canadians and many members of the target groups are underemployed. This situation well explains and justifies our action.

Employment equity programs do not restrain a company's growth, far from it. Making the most of the available skills and talents is a key to success.

The Employment Equity Act affects some 450 employers and more than 800,000 employees. The employers affected are required to develop and implement a complete employment equity program. In every region of the country, Employment and Immigration Canada has competent consultants who have helped them develop their programs and write the required reports.

We know that it has not been an easy task. Many employers experienced difficulties. But the worst is behind us. This first year will serve as a reference point. We are only beginning. I am sure that next June, employers will be better prepared. In the meantime, employment equity consultants from Employment and Immigration Canada can help them.

In 1986, to complement the Act, the Government created another employment equity program, for federal contracts, to encourage firms doing business with the federal Government to make their staff representative. Companies with at least 100 employees that wish to bid on government contracts for goods and services worth $200,000 or more must commit themselves to implementing employment equity. Furthermore, this commitment is part of the offer. So far, more than 1,000 firms have made this commitment.

The lack of contract compliance can result in the offer being rejected. In early 1987, as Minister of Supply and Services, I had to use this coercive power. Several companies had been asked to bid on a contract. They all sent their submission without the commitment to employment equity. Therefore, we refused to award this contract.

Employers who are awarded a contract can be audited on their premises by officials from Employment and Immigration Canada. Contractors who do not respect the signed commitment can be denied the opportunity to bid on other contracts. Employment and Immigration Canada consultants are also at their disposal to provide them with the necessary advice and assistance.

Government procurement is thus an important lever in implementing our employment equity policy. Through it, we can extend the principle of fairness defended by this program to areas of activity that it would have been quite impossible for us to reach.

Mr. Speaker, equity in the workplace will not be achieved overnight. It is a slow, sometimes painful process that takes patience and constant cooperation from all concerned. Nevertheless, I am convinced that thanks to the innovative employment equity programs launched by our Government, we will get there.

[English]

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that for the second time in two days the Government has come out with a wonderful flowery statement which has absolutely no validity in fact. I refer to the opening of Access Awareness Week yesterday. That from a Government which is building superboxes which are inaccessible to the handicapped. Access Awareness Week was launched by a speech from a municipal politician who told the disabled not to try to integrate their transit system because it would be too expensive and would never happen.

Now we have this wonderful statement on employment equity. Let us look at the reality of the so-called employment equity legislation which was passed by the Government. The legislation has all the power of a water gun. In fact, a water gun is perhaps more powerful than the legislation. It has all the power of an inflated balloon because there is absolutely no enforcement mechanism.

Let us look at what is happening with companies which claim they are responding to Bill C-62. The Maritime Employers' Association, in the name of employment equity, claims that it is following the provisions of Bill C-62. Some longshoremen who have been working in the business for 10, 15, or 20 years are losing their status. Some of them are being forced to take tests, supposedly in the name of employment equity. I do not see that many women working as longshoremen. The employers are actually using this Bill to compromise the employment status of current employees while not responding to the need to integrate women and minorities into the work force.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that it is a hard and rocky road. It is also true there have been a number of detours since this Government came to power, and I am referring specifically to the fact that in 1986, for the first time in Canada's history, the wage gap between men and women grew wider. Instead of narrowing because of the Government's efforts, it grew wider!

[English]

In 1986, for the first time since statistics were kept on this issue, the wage gap between men and women in this country became larger on a percentage basis.

The employment equity legislation could have had teeth and force if the Government had accepted the more than three dozen amendments proposed by the Liberal Party to try to give it some enforcement power. In fact, the Government brought in a shallow mechanism which has no substance. Even the Canadian Human Rights Commission, which is not a partisan opposition body, believes that the only way employment equity can really be enforced is if the Canadian Human Rights Act is given the teeth to force employers to pay women the same as men for work of equal value, something which does not exist at the moment.

While we appreciate the fine words and rhetoric in the same way as we appreciated the lovely concert on Sunday night which was going to make all things accessible to all Canadians, the federal Government has not directed a single penny toward municipalities which want to improve their infrastructure in order to make their streets and municipal buildings accessible. Not one penny of federal money has been directed toward access awareness on the ground where it really counts.

In the same way, this legislation has absolutely no possibility for enforcement because there is no penalty provided and no mechanism in place to ensure that employers go ahead with employment equity. That is why you see employers—

. . . like the Maritime Employers Association which claims to comply with Bill C-62 but tells its employees who have been employed for 10, 12 or 15 years that they have to take tests, and at the same time they don't hire minorities, women or visible minorities.

So why is this situation being tolerated? Mr. Speaker, it is being tolerated because the Government introduced a Bill, said it would do something to provide for employment equity, but failed to provide an enforcement mechanism.

[English]

This is like setting up a Criminal Code amendment and telling a bank robber that he is not allowed to rob a bank but if he does there is no penalty, take the money and run. How can you have an employment equity bill which has no enforcement mechanism, no penalty against employers who do not comply, and absolutely no structure in place to make sure that employers are complying? The only compliance requirement is that they report. They can report that they are doing nothing and that is fine, that is totally within the ambit of this phoney piece of legislation.

I am not particularly happy about this statement, Mr. Speaker. I am not happy about a series of statements which have come from the Government which are nothing more than flowery rhetoric. We should hang our heads in shame to think that in 1986, for the first time since statistics were kept, under this Government the wage gap between men and women got wider rather than narrower. If we do not do something by way of amendment to improve legislation, in 10 or 20 years from now we will be giving the same speeches in the House of Commons.

Yes, the road is hard and rocky, and it is a long road. We are nearing the twenty-first century, and nothing has been done because although the Government was willing to make some nice, impressive speeches, it did not want to act and use legislation to require employers to set up employment equity programs.

[English]

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I certainly cannot endorse this statement.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has made a statement on advances in employment equity as she sees them. She has spoken about the good things that will happen under the employment equity Bill. This is another case of rhetoric being put forward as the next election draws near to try to suggest to Canadians that a great deal has been accomplished when the reality is so very far from that. When those Canadians who are in the target groups; aboriginal peoples, the disabled, visible minorities, and women—to put them in alphabetical order rather than in order of the numbers of their groups—consider their situation and learn what the reports will tell them, they will know that the Government failed profoundly in Bill C-62 a couple of years ago in refusing to recognize the necessity of doing far more than calling for reports.

According to a Canadian Press report today, 70 per cent of the disabled are unemployed. The federal Government will discover those realities with respect to Crown corporations and areas under federal regulation upon which this legislation focuses, but what good will only having information about the shortcomings of employment do for those people?

The sad realities of inequity in employment in the past required far more action than is taking place. Of course, the Government tries to make much more of it.

The Minister said, and I quote:

> Under this legislation all federally-regulated employees, Crown corporations as well as private sector businesses, are required to eliminate employment barriers, to adopt special measures and to make arrangements to accommodate certain differences.

Actually, the legislation only requires employers to submit these reports. It does not require them to prepare a longer term strategy.

[English]

The most profound failure in this employment equity Bill is the Government's failure to require an action plan by employers. It is not for lack of attempts by the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Opposition to amend the Bill and strengthen it in ways that we see this end result.

The Minister praised her colleague, the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), who introduced the Bill. She stubbornly stood by the draft that had been put forward. While there were some minor amendments, the major amendments required to make this a genuine employment equity Bill were refused. The Minister's colleagues stood by that Bill and refused to make the required changes. Therefore, there is no point in joining the Minister in any praise for her colleague or in any great recognition of what the Government has done.

There is a great desire to make much of the reporting aspect and it would be very hard to top the Minister's statement this morning as a celebration of what reporting might achieve. We will learn what are the actual shortcomings and inequities and that this information will be rapidly digested and made available.

The Minister will make a statement and the reports will be made available throughout the country for people to buy. I only ask in passing how much these reports will cost lobby groups and those who wish to maintain the pressure. I hope the price will be quite low and that the information will be made available as quickly as possible so there will be no long delays that will enable employers to say that reports on their lack of progress toward equality are out of date. If there is too long a delay it will be too easy for employers to say that their circumstances have changed dramatically. There must be speedy action and abundant publicity about these reports to realize the potential the Minister has expressed about them.

There must be stronger provisions in the way of requirements on employers to take action. The Minister asserts that employers will take this action, but I am tempted to say this statement is in the long-standing Liberal tradition that by revealing the shortcomings of people they are motivated to correct them. Liberals have believed in that practice for too long, and it is distressing to see Conservatives practising the same short-sighted, indeed blind policy. People very often do not want to make a change unless they are compelled to do so.

Action plans must be required of employers so that they can stipulate the goals and targets they wish to achieve. Employers should be required to present their action plans to the agency that would actively monitor them to ensure that employment equity is actually achieved, as the Act claims it will do. Only if those steps are taken will those in the target groups and Canadians generally be sure that we will have more fairness in employment.

Another important aspect to consider is that the Bill is limited in its focus on Crown corporations and private enterprise under federal regulation. The Government has managed to keep itself clear of obligations to report and that refusal to take this responsibility is particularly regrettable. I believe employers who are facing these demands ought to be able to look to the federal Government to provide an example by revealing the shortcomings in employment in the federal Government and its institutions and then indicating targets and deadlines by which the situation concerning employment equity will be corrected.

I have seen figures for various groups setting limited goals and the shortcomings in information are quite obvious for a number of them. The statistics for the current situation in federal institutions are simply not available. The Treasury Board carried out a voluntary census among the various federal institutions. We cannot be sure how close those statistics came to revealing the true situation, but the need to be quite clear about the situation for various groups leads me to call on the Government this morning to practice the same principles internally.

Surely the Treasury Board can act on these matters and take to itself the obligation to work under the employment equity Bill and ensure that leadership is being given to employers in the federal institutions.

I suggested during third reading debate a couple of years ago that it would be five years after a report before a government would be ready to take action. The next election may change this because we New Democrats would love to have the opportunity to make real progress toward employment equity. However, there is the possibility that years may pass before there is stronger legislation to make the kind of real progress to achieve employment equity that the Minister is claiming this morning will be the result of the present rather weak Bill.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, this petition is from residents of 759 Victoria Park Avenue in the constituency of Scarborough West who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to them, in the certain assurance that this honourable House will provide a remedy.

The petitioners humbly sheweth that whereas the distinguished Justices of the Supreme Court have left Canadians without any law restricting abortions and nothing in the Supreme Court decision has established abortion as a right, and human life is a continuum from the moment of conception to the moment of death, these petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of those cases where an abortion is performed to save the life of the mother.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to present to the Honourable House of Commons. Whereas cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, and whereas secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year, and whereas Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers' Health Act.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of constituents, mostly from my riding of Willowdale and some from the Town of Thornhill. Your petitioners deplore the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada struck down Canada's abortion law leaving pre-born children without any legal protection. Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to quickly enact effective laws to protect the lives of unborn children from the moment of conception.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition on behalf of a number of constituents from Willowdale, Newmarket, Markham, Stouffville, Richmond Hill, Unionville, Sutton, Uxbridge and Scarborough. Your petitioners realize that schizophrenia is a major illness and biochemical brain disorder costing Canadian society over $3 billion annually in direct health and support costs. They are also are certain that a cure can be found. Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the Toronto area, some from Ottawa, Markham, Woodbridge, Bramalea and Scarborough. The petitioners point out that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for the deaths of 35,000 Canadians each year. Secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. Whereas Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions, one petition from the residents of Winnipeg and one petition from residents of Toronto. The petitioners say that whereas cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 deaths each year in Canada, and whereas secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year, and whereas Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians, therefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have both the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by 241 citizens, mainly of Calgary North but also from the ridings of Calgary West and Calgary South. The petitioners call upon the Government to enact a law on abortion. They say it is becoming increasingly common for abortion to be used as a method of birth control and abortion should not be tolerated by Canadian society. Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act upon the problem of abortion and restore to the system legislation which protects the life of the human foetus. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House. The first petition is from people in Winnipeg who indicate that cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year. Secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year. Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers. Wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers' Health Act, Bill C-204.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in my second petition the petitioners indicate that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but the trade agreement negotiated by the Conservative Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians and to equalize opportunities between the regions. Therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and, indeed, a privilege this morning to present two petitions. The first petition refers to the fact that Canada's major preventable health hazard is smoking and is responsible for 35,000 deaths each year in Canada. Another 500 people die from involuntary inhaling other smokers' smoke. Therefore the petitioners are calling on Bill C-204 to be passed by the Parliament of Canada as quickly as possible because Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which has been certified as correct pursuant to Standing Order 106. The petitioners indicate that the present federal Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that in the course of negotiations, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised that our sovereignty in Canada would not be compromised and in fact they believe it has. They also feel that the agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine Canada's ability to develop a society distinct from that of the United States. Therefore the petitioners are asking that Parliament now dissolve to enable the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two petitions. The first petition is from a group of citizens of the community of Shellbrook, Saskatchewan, who call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. The petitioners believe the said agreement does not give Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective of these negotiations, and threatens hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from a group of citizens from Kelowna, British Columbia, to Ottawa, Ontario. The petitioners feel that whereas cigarette smoking is the major preventable health hazard in Canada and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, and that Bill C-204 seeks to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers, therefore the petitioners call upon Parliament to enact the Non-Smokers" Health Act, Bill C-204, as quickly as possible.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

GRANTS/LOANS TO ORGANIZATIONS IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Question No. 274—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of the Solicitor General make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, to which ones and, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Between September 4, 1984, and February 26, 1988, the Secretariat of the Ministry of the Solicitor General gave the following grants in the Metropolitan Toronto area:

The Salvation Army (after-care services)	$ —	$ 90,000	$ 88,200	$ 88,200

* Note: In fiscal years 1984-85 and 1985-86, the Ministry Secretariat gave a grant of $3,750,000 to the Treasurer of Ontario for the implementation of the Young Offenders Act. As the Treasurer of Ontario's offices are located within Metropolitan Toronto, the Ministry's accounting system shows the money as having been given "within Metropolitan Toronto". However, it is only the provincial government that could provide a breakdown of where the money was subsequently spent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement Government Orders will be extended by 24 minutes beginning at 1 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

TOBACCO PRODUCTS CONTROL ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are 19 motions in amendment on the Order Paper to amend Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products. After deliberation, I am now ready to make a ruling with respect to their acceptability. All of these motions I find are in order.

Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 all deal with advertising and will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows. If Motion No. 1 is carried, the question will not be put on Motion No. 2. A negative vote on Motion No. 1 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 2. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 2 will obviate the necessity of a vote on Motions Nos. 3 and 4. Motions Nos. 5 and 6 will be voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 7, 8, 9, 11 and 12 all deal with promotion and sponsorship. They will be grouped for debate and voted on as follows. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 7 will obviate the necessity of a vote on Motions Nos. 8 and 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 7 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 8. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 8 will obviate the necessity of a vote on Motion No. 9. A negative vote on Motion No. 8 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 9. Motions Nos. 11 and 12 will be voted on separately.

Motion No. 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) is virtually the same as an amendment which was moved, debated and negatived in committee. Therefore in accordance with Standing Order 114(10), it will not be selected for debate in the House.

Motions Nos. 13, 14, 15 and 16 deal with reports, regulations, offences and punishments. They will be grouped for debate but voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 17, 18 and 19 dealing with the coming into force of the Bill, will be grouped for debate but voted on as follows. An affirmative vote on Motion No. 17 will obviate the necessity of a vote on Motion No. 18. A negative vote on Motion No. 17 necessitates a vote on Motion No. 18. Motion No. 19 will be voted on separately.

I will now propose Motions Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 to the House for debate.

Hon. Bill McKnight (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

Motion No. 6

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 5 by striking out line 17 at page 4 and substituting the following therefor:

"ness, at any time before January 1, 1989,".

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-51 with respect to the amendments. We have a number of amendments before us this morning. Some of them are housekeeping amendments, and some of them are more substantive. Let me get right to them.

The first motion is a very long and involved motion. Some aspects of it are merely housekeeping. I will not comment on those aspects of it. However, there is one part of Motion No. 1 which is not merely housekeeping. I am very concerned about it.

It is one that would change the wording: "No person shall advertise any tobacco product in Canada." to: "No person shall advertise any tobacco product offered for sale in Canada." This change in wording seems to indicate that one can advertise tobacco that is not for sale in Canada but which is for sale somewhere else. One might wonder why anyone would bother to do that if they cannot sell it in Canada. However, the result is that it is a promotion of tobacco and a promotion of smoking. It can have a generic effect of saying: "Tobacco is all right. It is even good for your health—nothing wrong with it".

This wording was much discussed in committee. The original wording was more along those lines, and we got rid of it. We changed the wording to close what would seem to be an inadvertent loophole which would permit advertising in Canada of products that are not for sale in Canada but nonetheless which would give the impression that tobacco products were just fine to buy. What we really need to get rid of is tobacco advertising, period.

We have to realize that in other countries loopholes have been used by tobacco companies. They have advertised lighters. They use the same logos and the same colours. By advertising lighters or matches, they are in effect advertising tobacco. Therefore, any loophole which is allowed in here can be a very serious one. I think we have to treat this as something that could weaken the impact of this much needed legislation.

My Motion No. 2 would restore to Bill C-51 the spirit that was approved at second reading. It changes the three year phase-in of billboards to a date six months later than the second reading of Bill C-51. Bill C-51 was better in its original version in this respect. It was watered down to allow for this three year phase-in. I am suggesting that we go back to the original spirit of the law and bring it in much more quickly. When we consider that 35,000 Canadians are dying every year from tobacco related diseases and that the death toll from involuntary smoking is certainly in the hundreds, we should not be gingerly phasing in this ban on tobacco advertising but we should be working promptly to see that this encouragement of taking up a habit that kills people is ended as soon as possible.

With respect to Motion No. 3, if we must have a phase-in of billboard advertisements, this would reduce the amount of money that could be spent on advertising from two-thirds to one-half in the second year. That is relevant to current levels. This is a practical amendment. I would rather get rid of it completely and do so promptly. However, if we are going to have a phase-in let us at least reduce the amount, put limits on it so that it is clearly a phasing out and not an opportunity for advertising to continue at current levels.

Motion No. 4 is similar to Motion No. 3. It allows in the third year of the phase-in period a quarter of current billboard spending. Again, it is in the spirit of let us get rid of it and let us have clear caps on the amount of spending that would be permitted.

Motion No. 5 comes from the Government. It is a good amendment. It would tighten the loophole that is given to merchants to advertise tobacco names in their shop names, for example, "Lynn's Tobacco Shop". This type of advertising would not be permitted in radio and television ads, although it would be permitted in signs. The second part of the motion is merely housekeeping, and we would support that.

Finally, in the first set of amendments is Motion No. 6. This is one of my amendments and it would restore to the Bill the original date in the second reading version for the removal of in-store advertisements. Here again the original Bill was better. As a result of a lot of pressure put on by this very profitable industry that is killing people in the process of making money, unfortunately one result was that amendments were brought in at committee stage which weakened the provisions of this Bill.

The health community is looking at this Bill. It does not wish to see further amendments. That was said very clearly at committee stage. The health community considers this a minimal measure. At the municipal level there is legislation for the workplace, and here the Government has brought in no workplace legislation whatsoever. This is a very minimal action for advertising and for sponsorship. It is not complete. It is not thorough. It will go a long way, but we do not want it to be watered down any further.

The whole purpose of the amendments that I have brought in is to deal with some of these matters where there was too much watering down at committee, and get the Bill back on track to where it should be. The health community is saying: "Don't water it down any more. Let us take Bill C-51 as it is and let us get it into operation". Let us restore the spirit of the amendments that we agreed on earlier at second reading and get on with adopting this important piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? On debate, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to express my absolute disbelief that the Minister is not present to speak to the legislation. I thought the reason we went through that ridiculous—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member does not need to mention whether the Minister is in attendance. The Hon. Member has been here for quite a while, so I would hope that she would just get on with the motion.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. We played political leap-frog yesterday because the Government in its wisdom saw fit to ignore a chance to finally put Bill C-204 into law. In that regard, I wish to congratulate the efforts of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), who has shown an incredible intestinal fortitude in pursuing her Bill in the face of constant thwarting, confusion, and disinformation on the part of the Government. The reason I am shocked that we played this political leap-frog yesterday was that I expected, of course, that the Government was going to move with the Minister today to expedite Bill C-51. Although I cannot comment on the presence or absence of Members, I am shocked. Parliamentary secretaries can be hard working and well-intentioned, but I would have liked to hear from the Minister.

If one reads Motion No. 1, Subclause (3) I believe that this amendment has been moved specifically because of the free trade agreement. That amendment reads:

> (3) For greater certainty, subsection (2) does not apply in respect of the distribution for sale of publications imported into Canada or the retransmission of radio or television broadcasts originating outside Canada.

What has changed between the original wording in Bill C-51 and this particular motion, which we cannot support, is the fact that the Government, in its wisdom, in the final wording on the free trade agreement decided that it would offer preferential tax treatment to American advertisers, in the same manner as is currently available to Canadian advertisers in magazines. One might say that that is totally unrelated to the Bill that is before us. What is being set up here by way of Bill C-51 is a limitation and a prohibition on advertising in Canadian magazines of Canadian tobacco products beyond a certain date.

Presumably, entrepreneurial American advertisers and tobacconists who may see the possibility of moving into the Canadian market in the near future as a result of the trade agreement could very easily receive preferential tax treatment to advertise American tobacco products in American magazines which are also available for sale in Canada. That particular issue was discussed in detail in committee. In fact, it was determined in committee that we did not wish to permit a situation where American tobacconists and American advertisers could bypass our law by attempting to target the Canadian market. The unanimous view of the committee was thwarted specifically by Subsection (3). Basically, that subsection is stating that it is carte blanche for Americans to come in with American magazines loaded up and targeted toward Canadians, for which they will get preferential tax treatment, and attempt to capture a larger share of the Canadian market.

If we are entering into a free trade agreement, and if we are saying to Americans that they can come in and trade in any number of commodities, the same legislation that will apply to Canadian advertisers should also apply to any American advertisers who may want to target the Canadian market. By virtue of Subsection (3) the Minister is prohibiting any action that might be taken by the Canadian Government to stop the bootleg advertising that could occur and, in fact, could be attractive to Americans who, as a result of the trade agreement, are getting preferential tax treatment, and who will also see the opportunity to come in and capture a market share which would be stabilized as a result of the Canadian decision to prohibit advertising.

This is a glaring loophole for American tobacco companies and American advertisers which should not be allowed to pass by way of this particular amendment. That is why we cannot support the totality of Motion No. 1. We see that particular amendment as an attempt to permit American tobacco companies and American advertisers to launch an assault on the Canadian market with preferential tax treatment in the manner that is currently being disallowed for Canadian advertisers and Canadian tobacco companies. That is not acceptable.

Therefore, in relation to Motion No. 1, we strongly urge the Parliamentary Secretary, since the Minister has seen fit to be elsewhere, to prevail upon the Minister to pull this subsection which is an assault on the integrity of the Bill, and by way of specific amendments to ensure that American companies will not be able to exploit a situation which will flow from the adoption of this legislation, and that is specifically as it relates to the rights of Americans to advertise American products targeting Canadian markets.

The Hon. Member is shaking her head. Perhaps she did not have the opportunity to read the position paper put forward by the Law and Government Division representative, Mr. James R. Robertson. He prepared a paper for the committee. It was his view that if preferential tax treatment were offered under the free trade agreement, there would be the potential of a threat from American advertisers who, in an indirect way, attempted to get their message across to the Canadian market-place.

Many people in my home town of Hamilton watch CHCH television, but many people also flick the television to U.S. channels and are very subject to the onslaught of U.S. advertising. In the spirit of the so-called trade agreement, surely the Minister should make provisions to cut this off at the pass and ensure that entrepreneurial tobacco companies will not be using border crossings, border magazines, and border broadcasts as a way to indirectly target the Canadian market-place. That is why this amendment cannot go through. It specifically prohibits the Canadian Government from taking action against these advertisers.

I was one who fought in committee to specifically change the wording so that instead of just referring to advertising in Canada, it would say "no person", so that a company in New York could not be hired to direct an advertising campaign out of the United States into the very populous market-place of southwestern Ontario, a place which is very subject to the onslaught of American advertisers. Unfortunately, the concerns of the committee have been watered down and in fact nullifed by this particular motion. That motion obviously cannot pass.

With respect to Motion No. 2, given that the Minister has taken much longer than had been anticipated in bringing Bill C-51 forward for final reading, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood realized that to move an amendment which would affect health signs posted before July 1 at this point would be rather moot. By the time the Bill gets Royal Assent, July 1, 1988, will obviously have passed and the Minister may want to look at changing that date or in some way modifying that. I find that at this point, Motion No. 2 is almost redundant, given that the Minister was so long in bringing the Bill forward.

Motions Nos. 3 and 4 obviously deal with grandfathering. The Minister did make a compromise which was a response to sports organizations and other cultural organizations that were concerned about the possibility of getting alternate funding. The motions that have been moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) basically cut in half and then in quarter the time allowed for grandfathering of sponsorship items. This reflects the recognition that sponsoring groups will have to phase out tobacco funding. These motions accelerate the process.

The Minister's own motion calls for a grandfathering clause which would permit unto infinity current funding levels for sports and cultural events that already exist. The amendment suggests that that be pared down by first one-half and then one-quarter. We think that is a good compromise, based on the concerns many people have, concerns which were very validly expressed.

We heard from Dr. John Read who has much experience in this, both personally in his own family as well as through his interests with the Canadian Ski Association. We heard from those who were concerned about sponsorships the fact that sponsorships are often used not simply as a humanitarian, philanthropic gesture, but also as a means of indirectly promoting and advertising. Obviously, if we are to be cutting off promotion and advertising, we should also be moving to cut out sponsorships. I believe Motions Nos. 3 and 4 accelerate the process without eliminating it completely. This heightens the recognition that sponsorships should phase out funding from the tobacco industry.

Motion No. 5 seems, upon reflection and review, to be a housekeeping motion. In fact, the wording of the original clause was unclear and rather wordy. Therefore, that motion should be supported.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the allegations made by the Hon. Member with respect to Motion no. 1.

The amendments to paragraphs 4(1) and 4(2) are simply technical changes that reflect the government's intention to prohibit only advertisements for tobacco products sold in Canada.

Furthermore, amending paragraph 4(3) and creating a new paragraph 4(4) cannot be construed as major changes. The amendments only specify that publishers, broadcasters and billboard advertising businesses may be held responsible for accepting money in return for tobacco advertising, while magazine distributors and operators of cable TV networks cannot be accused of violating these provisions.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is quite reasonable. We are talking about broadcasting, not publishing. As I see it, the Government is strictly specifying what it has said throughout the debate in committee.

As for paragraphs 4(5)(c) and 4(6), they are intended to clarify and simplify the wording of the Bill. Mr. Speaker, regarding motions 2, 3 and 4, these were extensively discussed in committee, and I believe that the position that was finally accepted was itself the subject of a lengthy debate. The purpose of these motions was to avoid undue penalties, and I think they are reasonable.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words about the matter of the possibility that sponsorship of events, I think particularly here of sporting events, will be allowed to continue. This question is of very great importance to Canadians. Our desire to discourage the young from smoking should, surely, be our goal. The Government has failed to follow through on this. The amendments proposed, particularly Motion No. 7 by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) dealt with that. While smoking is still being taken up by young people these days, and one could expand on that at some length, older Canadians recognize the dangers of it and are giving it up. Men especially are giving up smoking in recognition of its dangers. But teenagers and children at incredibly tender ages are getting addicted to tobacco and are suffering all of its consequences.

We should be concerned for their well-being and their good health. We should be concerned about the cost to society and the cost to employers resulting from this habit if continued over the years. We must be concerned about the consequences to our health care system in caring for smokers. We have been told that we will have to make brutal choices. Someone's addiction to tobacco will lead to discrimination against such a person obtaining medical treatment. What is the point, given what this person has done to himself or herself over many years, in providing medical care to such an individual. There in a few thoughts are some of the dangers. Surely we have a responsibility and the Government of Canada has a responsibility to limit the encouragement of smoking in society.

Soon after I was elected I became aware of the problem, serving as critic in the area of fitness and amateur sport. The Minister recognized the challenge. It was not an easy one with Macdonald Inc. having become involved in sponsorship of events, especially ski-jumping. It was not easy to tell the association and the athletes who were depending on the money about a ban. I attended a dinner in Thunder Bay. It was clear that very soon after the Minister imposed his ban, a prospective ban at some future date, the lobbying came from the association and local people. I remember a speech made by representatives of Macdonald Inc. left no doubt about their dislike of the ban, about their desire to continue sponsorship and to have the Macdonald name advertised.

The Government decided to cave in to that kind of pressure and allowed the Macdonald name to remain incorporated in one event or another. It may be one thing to have tobacco advertising for adults and one thing to have it for professional sports, if you will, but to see tobacco advertising for amateur sporting events involving young people surely should not be allowed. If the Government has caved in on this, we have just one more area of weakness in Bill C-51 that we are debating at report stage today.

Motion No. 7 moved by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood will put back in the Bill:

"6. No person shall employ the brand name or a trade mark of a tobacco product in any representation made to the public for the purpose of acknowledging financial or other support provided by a manufacturer or importer of tobacco products for an activity, event, publication or broadcast."

Surely the financial need can be met by reputable employers—and one can use that kind of a phrase when there are companies whose businesses lead to disease and death, but there must be companies whose business is conducive to a good life, long life, good health et cetera who have the means to come up with resources. One might say that some of the taxes raised from tobacco companies might be directed to fitness and amateur sport if one has to find resources through tax means, but let us get tobacco advertising removed and let us use this amendment and Motion No. 9 which would return to the Bill the second reading date as the cut-off point for sponsorship. These amendments go in the right direction.

I urge my colleagues, if they have any kind of concern at all, to have effective legislation for the good health of young people and if they have any kind of concern for employers who want to have healthy employees and if they have any kind of consent for themselves as taxpayers and the Canadian health care system, to pass these amendments, and not give them the kind of defeat I fear the Government will give.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, this is one time when I have to disagree with the position taken by the New Democratic Party. I am completely baffled as to the New Democrats' rationale. We just had a Member who moved a grandfathering clause in recognition of sporting events, not wholly grandfathering but partially grandfathering, namely, the amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Presumably the grandfathering amendment is recognizing that sports organizations will need some time to make transitional funding. But now we have another amendment that says that even though we have said in one amendment that will grandfather sponsorships, we want the sponsorships grandfathered with no brand name. We have already stated, and we have heard time and again in committee, that tobacco companies do not sponsor because they happen to be magnanimous and wonderful people, they sponsor because they want to advertise. If you endorse, which presumably you have in part by accepting an amendment which would grandfather sponsorships, you cannot realistically argue from both sides of your mouth, which is now being attempted. Either you ban grandfathering altogether or you allow grandfathering to continue in a limited or in a reduced way.

The motion moved on brand names is completely unworkable. If anyone has read the legislation, he or she will know that if du Maurier wants to run the du Maurier Special, instead of using the tobacco company name all it needs to do is incorporate a second company called du Maurier. The loophole to get around whatever legislation is brought forward is so wide, why not say: "We are grandfathering. We will continue with the current system for a prescribed period of time, in fact, reducing by half the amount of sponsorship dollars available". You cannot, Mr. Speaker, state on the one hand that you want to grandfather, which is what the New Democrats have done with the amendment just moved by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, yet expect the grandfathering to occur with no brand name.

I know the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has received correspondence, as have all Members, from sporting and cultural organizations. Presumably that is why he said what he did about the issue of funding, that he was happy that some kind of compromise had been reached even though it was not exactly what he wanted. Well, if the Darts Federation, for example, is not allowed to have a sponsor which uses a brand name, obviously the companies are not going to sponsor them.

These contracts are not written in stone. You either grandfather fully or partially or not at all. You cannot say you are going to do it and send a letter out to all the sporting organizations to that effect and then move an amendment two minutes later saying you do not want people using their brand name. Obviously the grandfathering is phoney. If you grandfather, you have to say that for a given period of time we are going to permit continued sponsorship based on a cut-back of 50 per cent of the funding available to sports organizations. That is the intent of the amendment. We will not have grandfathering at 1987 financial levels, but we will have grandfathering which will cut in half the amount of money available in 1987.

If you do have grandfathering you cannot move an amendment saying that brand names shall not be used because, first, it is so easy for a company to get around that. All they have to do is incorporate under the name du Maurier Special. Second, if they are not allowed to put their brand name forward, presumably they are not going to sponsor. The reason we grandfathered the sponsorship was in recognition of the fact it will take time for these sports and cultural organizations to get other funding. However, if we then say no brand name can be used the companies will yank their sponsorship tomorrow, and you are not responding to the need that was supposedly the reason for the grandfathering. Motion No. 7 is a total contradiction of Motion No. 3 and Motion No. 4. They are inconsistent, so we cannot support Motion No. 7.

Motion No. 8 and Motion No. 9 clarify the level of sponsorship and the cut-off point and also set out some guidelines with respect to grandfathering. They are supportable, but we cannot support Motion No. 7 which vitiates Motions. Nos. 3 and 4. I do not understand the NDP. If you do not want to grandfather at all, say so. That is legitimate. But if you do, do not say you are going to do it without the brand or trade name because it does not work.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I appreciated listening to the comments of the Hon. Member regarding what appears to be a conflicting set of motions. Perhaps I could respond by simply saying this. Motion No. 7 is one of the toughest of this set of amendments. The effort here is more than symbolic. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is simply trying to say, to the young people particularly, let us not have a major cultural or sporting event supported up front by tobacco companies. I do not think there is anything mysterious about that.

Other Members are saying the reality is that grandfathering is required. Contracts have been signed and so on. That needs to be recognized, but we have to remember that the Hon. Member has a particularly strong view on this issue. It is perhaps one of the strongest in the House. She is simply saying: "Let us send a very clear signal to everyone that we find it abhorrent that young people participating in recreational or athletic activities are being continuously reminded that the reason it is being held is because of a tobacco company".

In one way we have always appreciated the financial endorsement, but I find it somewhat puzzling as a father with two young sons involved in a variety of sporting events because I suspect they are wondering whether or not they should smoke. They see their peers smoking. They see the big tobacco companies of the western world advocating that if you ski well or surf well or do whatever well and have a cigarette at the end, that makes perfect sense. Of course it is totally illogical that anyone at all interested in athletics or sporting events would be a regular smoker. That is absolute folly. Any suggestion that this would be good for my two sons I find abhorrent. Anyone trying to encourage my two sons to participate in smoking or chewing tobacco or whatever else, I find to be repugnant. I do not think we ought to be encouraging that at all. We should be doing the contrary and discouraging it. I suspect, as a very famous football player yourself, Mr. Speaker, you know that to play football, the way you did and the way we like to see our teams play football we do not want people smoking a package of cigarettes at the end of the game or chewing a wad of Copenhagen or whatever.

A clause that says no person shall employ the brand name or trade mark of a tobacco product in any representation made to the public for the purpose of acknowledging financial or other support provided by a manufacturer or importer of tobacco products for an activity, event, publication or broadcast to me makes perfect sense. It is a tough position to take. I suspect the tobacco companies and importers would not like this amendment. I appreciate why from the traditional and obvious business point of view. However, for the best interests of our society, particularly our young people who are susceptible to both direct and indirect forms of advertising, an enthusiastic endorsement of this amendment would be the most we could do as parliamentarians to say that we want to do whatever possible to encourage our young people particularly not to smoke.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I want to address this group of amendments and clear up an apparent misunderstanding on the part of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Motion No. 7 is the motion we want. That says sponsorship cannot be used for advertising. No person shall employ the brand name or trade mark of a tobacco product in any representation made to the public for acknowledging financial or other support. We want to get rid of it because we know that so long as sponsorship is allowed, the opportunity will be taken by the cigarette companies to use that for advertising purposes. However, given all the pressure put on the Government and the fact it is caving in, we are not so sure Motion No. 7 will go through. If not, then we would like Motion No. 9. That would limit the sponsorship for contracts which have come in before April 30, 1987, at the time the Bill was introduced. We would at least have some limitation on these sponsorships. If we do not go the way I would like us to go, and that is get rid of them completely, let us at least limit them to the ones already in place and not encourage the tobacco companies to enter into new contracts for sponsorship and shift their advertising dollars into sponsorship and get their advertising that way. It is very important that we get that one passed.

Motion No. 8 would clarify the conditions under which tobacco sponsorship may continue. That is the Minister's motion and part of his weaker approach to say we are not going to get rid of it completely, we will allow some of it, and it simply clarifies the conditions. We would much prefer to get the stronger one.

Motion No. 10 would give the Government the right to prescribe the format and conditions of acknowledgement of sponsorship. Again, we would rather get rid of the sponsorship completely but if it is going to be there, let us have it clearly defined by regulation so that the companies cannot get around the law by having sponsorships and then having great massive kinds of acknowledgments. They are going to be allowed to acknowledge? How big is the sign going to be on which they can acknowledge their sponsorship? If the Government is going to capitulate and allow some sponsorship, let us at least define the terms of it very carefully.

Therefore, there is a logic to these, Mr. Speaker. They are not contradictory. We have an order of priorities and would like to get the best we can out of the Government.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, I just want to comment briefly on the matter of sponsorship. It is a subject that was discussed at length in committee. We received many requests from various groups financed by tobacco companies, in the field of sports as well as culture. After hearing their submissions and discussing the matter at length, we reached the conclusion as members of the committee that there was a case for avoiding any abrupt changes. I feel that the change provided with respect to the level of financing is the only one that does not radically alter the way activities are financed and that also provides for withdrawing advertising, because that is going to be regulated as well.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, the additional amendments made in committee, which are purely technical, as well as those presented before the House today, are all necessary and legitimate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 7 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion No. 7 (Ms. McDonald) negatived on division.

Motion No. 8 (Mr. Epp, Provencher) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 11 standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp, Provencher). Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Motion No. 11 (Mr. Epp, Provencher) agreed to on division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 12 standing in the name of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp, Provencher). Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 12 (Mr. Epp, Provencher) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next grouping is of Motion Nos. 13, 14, 15, and 16.

Hon. Bill McKnight (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

Motion No. 13.

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 10 by striking out line 10 at page 7 and substituting the following therefor:

"under paragraph 17(h), every manufacturer".

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 17 by striking out lines 28 to 36 at page 11 and substituting the following therefor:

"(c) prescribing, in respect of any tobacco product, the content, position, configuration, size and prominence of the health warnings referred to in paragraph 4(4)(c);

(d) respecting the determination of the value of contributions referred to in section 6;"

Hon. Monique Vézina (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 18

(a) by striking out, in the French version, line 32 at page 12 and substituting the following therefor:

"amende maximale de cent mille dollars et un";

(b) by striking out lines 1 to 3 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"(2) Every person who contravenes subsection 6(2) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable"; and

(c) by striking out lines 12 to 16 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"(3) Every person who contravenes section 14 or any regulations made under paragraph 17(i) is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars."

Hon. Tom Hockin (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

(a) by striking out line 17 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

"19. (1) A prosecution in respect of an offence under this Act, other than a prosecution under paragraph 18(1)(b), may"; and

"(3) No exception, exemption, excuse or qualification prescribed by law is required to be set out or negatived, as the case may be, in an information or indictment for an offence under this Act or under section 421, 422 or 423 of the Criminal Code in respect of an offence under this Act.

(4) In any prosecution for an offence referred to in subsection (3), the burden of proving that an exception, exemption, excuse or qualification prescribed by law operates in favour of the accused is on the accused and the prosecutor is not required, except by way of rebuttal, to prove that the exception, exemption, excuse or qualification does not operate in favour of the accused, whether or not it is set out in the information or indictment."

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like some clarification from the Parliamentary Secretary with respect specifically to Motion No. 15. In my reading of the groupings that we have put together in relation to the offences and applications, a number of the motions deal with improving the wording. However, I am unclear as to the rationale behind Motion No. 15 in that I found that the wording which existed in the legislation was quite sufficient. I do not understand why lines 12 to 16 at page 13 have been amended and I would like an explanation as to why that amendment was made.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment proposed in Motion No. 15 is to provide for technical changes that will make the wording of the penal clauses consistent with that found in other federal statutes. The changes also include renumbering clauses and paragraphs consequential on other amendments. These are technical amendments and merely clarify the text of the Bill.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I, too, would like to ask for clarification from the Parliamentary Secretary on Motion No. 15(a) which indicates "by striking out, in the French version, line 32 at page 12 and substituting the following". I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary would do us the kindness of explaining what necessitated that. I recognize it as a housekeeping amendment but it is still not clear in my mind why it was required.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, in the French text the paragraph has been corrected to indicate amende maximale de cent mille dollars et un instead of mille dollars. So this is in fact a correction . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Member can only speak once on these motions, we are not in Committee of the Whole. Can I get the consent of the House to allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to answer this question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the French text of paragraph 18(1) is corrected in the sub-amendment to indicate a fine not exceeding $100,000, instead of $1,000. A mistake was made when the text was retyped.

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I realize that this is not Committee of the Whole—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member realizes, why is she getting up?

Ms. Copps: Because the wording of the amendment is wrong.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member a question and allow the Parliamentary Secretary to answer if I can get consent.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Maybe we should move to start debating the clauses. The Member may have a point in terms of the exact wording of the amendment and it could be discussed with the Parliamentary Secretary. We could take it to a drafter. It is important to ensure that we have the wording correct.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has already spoken. We have already started debate on this and the Hon. Member did speak. We have to get unanimous consent every time either Hon. Member rises. Do I have unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) to debate these motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Copps: It's not to debate, I just want to get clarification.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That's fine, let's get your clarification.

Ms. Copps: If you look at the change it refers to the French version, line 32 at page 12, amende maximale de. That is changing it from $1,000 to $100,000 to bring it in line with the English translation. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Motion No. 15 (Mr. Epp, Provencher) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The next question is on Motion No. 16 standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 16 (Mr. Epp, Provencher) agreed to.

Hon. Bill McKnight (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 20 by striking out lines 27 to 30 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

'20. This Act shall come into force on January 1, 1989.'

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood) moved:

Motion No. 18

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 20 by striking out line 28 at page 13 and substituting the following therefor:

'July 1, 1988.'

That Bill C-51 be amended in Clause 20 by adding, immediately after line 30 at page 13, the following:

'(3) Clause 6 shall expire on January 1, 1993'.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate is on Motion No. 17.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I understand from your ruling that Motions Nos. 17, 18 and 19 are grouped for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is right.

Ms. McDonald: Therefore, I will address all three motions. I oppose the first motion and will speak in favour of the second two motions.

Motion No. 17, which is a Government motion, in effect would give greater grandfathering to the sale of facsimile products by extending the date which would permit these other products to be advertised for sale. We are opposed to this because it is simply another instance where provisions of Bill C-51 are watered down. I urge that Motion No. 17 not be accepted by the House.

Motion No. 18 would move the date forward by six months, to July 1, 1988. In light of Government delays, we obviously cannot get the Bill enforced as quickly as desirable. The proposed date is reasonable, and certainly people have had plenty of time to know that it is coming. It would put a realistic date on it without having this long phase-out period. I believe Motion No. 18 is a meaningful amendment to strengthen the Bill and, of course, is entirely in the spirit of the Bill itself.

Motion No. 19 is more substantive. It would put an expiry date on sponsorships using brand names and logos for cultural and sporting events. Again, while it is desirable to get rid of this completely, given the pressure of the tobacco industry to water down the Bill to make it less strong, and to allow some amount of sponsorships, this at least would give an expiry date on the use of these logos. It is better than nothing.

While I would prefer the much stricter approach of Bill C-51, not watered down, or the better approach still of my Private Members' Bill, Bill C-204 which would deal with it through the hazardous products route and would bring in regulations accordingly, let us at least tighten up the regulations and keep the loopholes as modest as possible, given the concessions that have already been made.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 17 deals with the coming into force of the legislation. Given that the Government has already delayed extensively in bringing the legislation forward, I do not think Motion No. 18 is possible considering the Royal Assent process and so on that must take place. I am satisfied to live with Motion No. 17.

Motion No. 19 is a critical motion because it deals with the issue of grandfathering of sponsorships. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) did not specifically understand my concerns about the NDP position. I was not concerned about the amendments that would cut out the brand name, I was concerned that by moving amendments which would include partial grandfathering, it would, on the one hand, accept the Government's position that there should be some grandfathering while, on the other hand, suggest it should be done without brand names. I do not believe that is consistent.

Therefore, I believe Motion No. 19 deals with the problem of recognizing the existence of sponsorship. While we believe it should be reduced and the dependence on tobacco sponsorship should be reduced, we will give it some time. Motion No. 19 would require that by 1993 organizations would have to seek other sources of funding. I believe that is a realistic target.

I understand that if the Hon. Member were the sole drafter of the Bill from the perspective of her Party that she would ban sponsorship altogether immediately. However, that is not the motion put forward by the NDP. I think Motion No. 19 is more consistent with an approach that recognizes grandfathering but states that it must be terminated within a certain period in 1993.

The inconsistency refers specifically to Motions Nos. 4 and 3.

Mrs. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 17 merely reflects the usual period of time allowed for obtaining royal assent and letting people get ready to comply with the legislation.

As for Motion No. 19, I would like to get back to what I said earlier about sponsorship. With the consent of committee members and even of the Opposition, the Government had agreed, in order to avoid any abrupt changes in the procedure followed by the various organizations, to freeze the level of financing. The result of this permanent freeze will be that over the years, these contributions will tend to decrease in value, so that if the organizations want to continue to be subsidized, they will gradually have to find other sources of financing. I think the formula chosen by the Government in this legislation is the only acceptable one.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

HOCKEY NIGHT IN CANADA TELEVISION CONTRACT

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, we learned this morning that the CBC may not be broadcasting Hockey Night in Canada this coming season. Instead, reports indicate, the CTV network will take over this 55-year tradition which began with Foster Hewitt broadcasting on radio in 1933.

Foster is no longer with us, but fully two generations of Canadians—especially those in northern and remote parts of Canada—will remember how Hockey Night in Canada provided an opportunity for families, friends, and neighbours in many an isolated village or reserve to get together to enjoy watching a truly Canadian event.

If the CBC cancels Hockey Night in Canada, those same Canadians will also remember this Government. They will remember that the Mulroney Conservatives promised to reach out to the regions of Canada when they sought office in 1984. Instead, the Government has cut back its support of the CBC financially, and more recently it has tried to scuttle the CBC all-news network.

It is unfair that Canadians who cannot afford the expensive cable services of northern Canada, or who do not even have access to cable, may no longer receive a most enjoyable sports program on the only network available in many communities.

I and my New Democratic colleagues call upon the Government to guarantee that the CBC will continue to broadcast Hockey Night in Canada. Foster Hewitt would, I am sure, echo those sentiments.

ABORTION PROGRAMS—COMPOSITION OF INTERVIEWEES

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on April 13 the CBC's The Journal broadcast one of the most grossly biased programs ever seen on the subject of abortion. The entire program consisted of interviews only with those who favour abortion on demand.

The name of the people on the panel were Jeannie MacPherson and Joan Wright, pro-abortion women counsellors; Phyllis Bowman, British pro-life activist; Vivianne Nathanson, pro-abortion member of the British Medical Association; Shiela Martin, pro-abortion Professor of Law, University of Calgary; and David Roy, pro-abortion member of the Centre for Bioethics in Montreal.

Each one of them made it clear that they do not support the rights of the unborn children from the moment of conception.

The CBC has no right at all to impose its own view of morality on the Canadian public. This program is a clear violation of its mandate to produce balanced programming.

I call upon the CRTC to censor the CBC by insisting that the CBC live up to its mandate for balanced programming, to include both sides of an issue, and not just the CBC's bias.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

HOSPICE PALLIATIVE CARE SOCIETY OF EASTERN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the efforts of the Hospice Palliative Care Society of eastern Nova Scotia. This group of dedicated volunteers work to help enrich the quality of life for the terminally ill in Cape Breton. They have dedicated this week as the annual Hospice Palliative Care Week.

This service is valuable to the residents of eastern Nova Scotia. It is the first and only comprehensive program for terminally ill patients and their families. It is a non-profit group which operates in both the home and the hospitals to provide care and compassion to those who have no hope for a cure.

The Society has a medical component which strives to give patients a pain-free existence for their remaining days. The Society also acts as a support system for the families involved. It works with the families to promote a peaceful death of the patient in the home environment. Although the Society has no religious affiliation, pastoral care is provided.

I salute all those involved in this compassionate program and wish them success in this most difficult endeavour.

SUPPORT URGED FOR ENVIRONMENTAL GROUPS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as you know, this is National Environment Week, a time when Canadians demonstrate that they care very deeply about our common environment and work to preserve it.

Taking care of the environment is a responsibility that we all share, federal, provincial, and municipal Governments, as well as business and private citizens of Canada. Individual Canadians can be particularly effective in protecting the environment when they join up with other like-minded people.

As Dr. Margaret Mead once said: "Never doubt that a small group of committed people can change the world. Indeed, it is the only thing that ever has." By getting involved in National Environment Week and by supporting environmental groups, we all have a chance to change the world for the better.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED NATIONS SPECIAL SESSION ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, like all Canadians I am my colleagues welcome the current superpower summit in Moscow between President Reagan and General-Secretary Gorbachev. In particular we welcome the growing understanding and co-operation this and previous summits encourage between the superpowers, particularly in the area of meaningful reductions in the nuclear arsenals of the two countries.

While we welcome these discussions we must also keep in mind that equally important discussions are currently taking place at the Third United Nations Special Session on Disarmament. Unfortunately, UNSSOD III has not received the attention it deserves, particularly on the part of the Canadian Government, which has not adequately outlined the positions it plans to take at the special session on such critical disarmament issues as the modernization of nuclear weapons in Europe, limits on Cruise missile development and deployment, reductions in strategic nuclear forces, and the creation of an international verification regime.

These and other disarmament issues are as critical to Canada's security as they are to the security of the superpowers. I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to tell the House and the Canadian people where his Government stands on these important issues. A ministerial statement prior to the Minister's address to the UN would be a welcome gesture.

MULTICULTURALISM

INCREASED GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the strength of the Government's commitment to recognize multiculturalism as a central feature of our identity.

Last December the Government tabled the historic new Multiculturalism Act, Bill C-93. Even before the Bill becomes law, the Government is reinforcing the policies and the ideals of the multiculturalism policy of Canada.

Over five years $192 million has been added to the annual multiculturalism budget, which means it will rise to $42.2 million by 1991-92. That is 80 per cent more than was spent in 1986-87.

This is not tokenism or half-hearted support. This is action. It is action that will extend this Government's priorities of social justice and national harmony into every segment of our society.

The new directions announced yesterday by the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Weiner) will strengthen race relation initiatives, and improve understanding among our many different cultures. They will help preserve and enhance our multicultural heritage. They will ensure equality of opportunity for all Canadians.

These new funds and the leadership provided by the Government will help make that ideal a deeply felt reality.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

END OF INDUSTRIAL AND REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow marks the end of the Industrial and Regional Development Program that has served the Province of Quebec so well in recent years. We know that the program ends tomorrow and that no other program to replace it has been announced by the Minister responsible. I feel that for the last six months, the Minister has been fooling around on a replacement program and Quebec industrialists and the various industrial commissioners are extremely concerned. We know that the Association of Industrial Commissioners made representations to the Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté) and when he was Minister, he did nothing because he was too busy with other matters and now the present Minister has not bothered with a replacement for IRDP either.

As a result, in view of the impact this program has in diversifying the industrial base of many regions, Quebec is being left behind as the poor relation in regional economic development and I trust that in the coming weeks, the Minister will finally bring forward a program that will meet the aspirations of Quebec companies and the needs of the Quebec economy as well as of some regions of Ontario.

We know that a byelection is to be held in Lac-Saint-Jean. I suppose that the Minister will try to buy his way and save the skin of the Secretary of State with a few million dollars from Regional Industrial Expansion. But I think now is the time to announce the program to replace IRDP which has served us so well and several regions will be neglected because of the Minister's negligence.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

LAURENTIAN FORESTRY CENTRE

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) came to Sainte-Foy to inaugurate the $15.7-million expansion of the Laurentides Forestry Centre. I wish to thank him sincerely for being present at this opening and for his constant support for this important project over the years.

This centre of higher learning carries out biological research to fight the enemies of our forests—insects, mushrooms, diseases—and concentrates on the genetics of trees to produce hardier species, on development and reforestation. This is very important for the Quebec City region and the province, because it contributes to preserving Quebecers' heritage: the forest.

The Minister took the opportunity to honour three individuals for their work: researchers Luc Jobin and Dr. Smirnoff and manager Normand Lafrenière, by awarding them plaques. The open house for the public was a great success.

I want to thank those responsible for their excellent initiative and to wish the researchers good luck also. This shows the interest our Government has in scientific research, in whatever field.

DUMPING OF INDUSTRIAL WASTES IN GREAT LAKES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, poisoned Ontario lake water has helped to kill off thousands of beluga whales in the St. Lawrence River estuary.

Last weekend a ship called the Beluga was sailed by Greenpeace to Toronto to remind us about the poisons in the same lake water that we drink.

Canadian and American corporations dump industrial wastes into our lake system that can cause cancer, damage our nervous systems, and damage our immune systems. For years the federal Government has known this and done nothing to stop it.

The federal Government is responsible, with the United States, for the Great Lakes water. Why is it neglecting its responsibility and allowing the fish, the whales, and us to be poisoned?

• (1410)

As well as taking action to stop the polluters and punish them if necessary, the federal Government must fund new water treatment systems. Our present water treatment systems were not built to remove poisons such as these.

The federal Government must employ Canadian men and women to design, make, install, and operate modern water treatment equipment that will give us clean, safe water to drink.

ABORTION

PROTECTION OF LIFE ADVOCATED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, what will we do next if the Parliament of Canada solves murder of the unborn by legalizing it? Making abortion easy during the first few weeks of pregnancy, even if we make it more difficult during the balance of pregnancy, may be opening the door to more hideous crimes.

If the life of an unborn baby can be destroyed because its birth may cause some mental anguish to the mother, how about the life of a husband or a wife who contracts the terrible disease of Alzheimer's, or the child who is crippled and impaired through an accident, or a youth with AIDS? Are they to be murdered too to relieve mental anguish?

The Bible states: "The Lord gave her conception". From that moment on, life is God's responsibility and not Parliament's. The decision of the Supreme Court has given Parliament the opportunity to show that Canada fears and respects God.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my concern for Canada's tourism industry in light of the ever widening gap between the price of gasoline in Canada and the price of gasoline in the United States as a result of the Government's taxation policies. Because of the sales tax and the excise tax increases put in place by this Conservative Government, the difference between the price of gas in Canada and in the United States has now reached alarming proportions.

I regret to say that the price of all grades of gasoline is now, on average, 60 per cent more expensive in Canada than in the U.S., and that is taking the exchange rate into account. In September of 1984, at the time of the last federal election, the difference in price was only 22.1 per cent.

The Conservative Government, as always, refuses to recognize the negative effect this price differential is having on the tourism industry in Canada. When we consider that 70 per cent of tourism travel coming from the U.S. to Canada is by automobile, the effect is surely great. The Conservative Government is threatening to make Canada's tourism industry uncompetitive. I therefore call upon the Government to review its taxation policy as it affects tourism.

THE LEADER OF THE NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, what is it that Vladimir Ilyich Lenin and the current Vice-President of the Socialist International, alias the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), have in common? The answer, Sir, is a love of chauffeur driven limousines.

According to today's Globe and Mail, Lenin had a Rolls Royce, whereas our poor friend, the Leader of the NDP, only has a Buick. Never mind, Sir. Come the socialist revolution, Ed and Shirley will undoubtedly get their chauffeured Rolls while the rest of us ordinary Canadians will be reduced to a bicycle pedalling peasantry.

FISHERIES

CHINOOK TAGGING PROGRAM—SIZE AND COST OF TAGS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I recently met with fishers from Vancouver Island about confusion in the new one-dollar chinook tagging program. Costing the Government 63 cents a piece, flown in from Brazil, landed in Winnipeg instead of Vancouver, the tags are too small to fit around the tails of the chinook which are headed after being caught. Attaching the tags through the fish as suggested by fisheries officials will reduce the grade of the fish and lower the price given for the salmon.

When the plan was first introduced, officials indicated the tags would be supplied free of charge to commercial fishers who would have paid at the end of the season for the tags used. Now the Government requires payment up front. Many trollers are hard pressed to come up with the money to purchase these tags.

Fishers will face fines for any untagged chinook landed. However, the Government has no plans to help them if they find themselves without the adequate number of tags once out on the grounds. They will be forced to head into port to purchase additional tags. Unless a solution is found we will see the off-loading of untagged chinooks before the catch is landed.

There is still time before the season opens to rectify these problems and to ensure fishers are not penalized due to the Department of Fisheries' inability to introduce an efficient, effective, and acceptable tagging program.

FINANCE

FLOW-THROUGH SHARES—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it never ceases to amaze me when the NDP goes to such great lengths to cover up its Party's policies and past statements. In fact, the leader of the socialists was up to rewriting the Party's text again just last week in Rouyn.

A little over a year ago the NDP Leader (Mr. Broadbent) was in the riding of Timiskaming denouncing flow-through shares as a tax loophole benefiting only the rich. This has been stated many times by his socialist colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). During the recent debates on flow-through shares both these Members saw the light and flip-flopped on the issue to gain some badly needed political points.

Now we hear another tune being sung by the Leader. Last week the Leader suggested in a neighbouring riding that the program announced by the Government was not a good one for the mining sector. He had returned to his original hymn sheet. It is not surprising at all, that given the many different positions of the NDP on this issue, that the NDP Leader's comments were greeted with laughter in Timiskaming and the mining community.

Canadians have started to recognize the NDP answers as No-named Day-dream Policies. With the New Democrats' performance on flow-through shares, is it any wonder?

TRADE

MONEYS ALLOCATED TO JOHN LASCHINGER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

It is outrageous that this Government has already spent millions of dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money on the Conservative Party's pre-electoral propaganda campaign on free trade. It is an absolute disgrace that the responsible Minister is now setting up a new propaganda team that will spend another $10 million dollars . . .

Mr. Boudria: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): . . . money that comes out of the pockets of Canadian taxpayers—and it is disgraceful that this important contract should go to a political organizer. The Minister had no second thoughts about appointing John Laschinger, his campaign manager for the Tory leadership campaign.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister how he can justify the fact that Canadian taxpayers will again subsidize this electoral propaganda machine, this time to the tune of more than $10 million. How much of this money will organizer John Laschinger receive? How many other Conservatives will be involved in this contract?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would pose the questions that he is asking today because just last week, on May 24, he complained in this very House given the importance of this deal, that important information had not been available to Canadians, professional groups, business groups, labour unions right across the country.

On August 18 last as reported at page 8163 of Hansard, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition again said:

—the Government has always refused to reveal any information contained in departmental studies on the impact of free trade—

On September 30, 1987, as reported at page 9485 of Hansard, he accused the Government of not coming clean in telling Canadians what the trade deal was all about.

On August 27, 1987, he accused the Prime Minister of refusing to bring forth basic documentation.

We are really responding to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Since the only thing the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition can offer is to tear up the deal, we are telling Canadians in a very clear and comprehensive way about the advantages of the trade initiative, about the positive benefits that will accrue to Canadians and Canadian industry, and he should be onside.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—
GOVERNMENT POLICY ON PROMOTION CAMPAIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows full well the failure of his Government to allow taxpayers and Canadians from coast to coast an opportunity to come before a committee of this House or to have committee hearings across the country on the basis of a firm text. The Government has deliberately kept the facts from the Canadian people and it now wants to convert that into a propaganda campaign with selective editions of what Canadians are to learn.

• (1420)

The Prime Minister promised to restore ethics to government. He promised to cut government propaganda. He promised to end partisan patronage. The Prime Minister has not only failed, he failed by choice.

Why is the Government trying to fool the Canadian people with another $10 million of propaganda money? What are John Laschinger's qualifications on trade? Do they consist of the fact that he was for five years the national director of the Progressive Conservative Party? Or that he ran Larry Grossman's leadership campaign in Ontario? Or that he ran Gary Filmon's campaign in Manitoba? Or that he was the campaign manager for the Minister for International Trade in the latest federal Conservative leadership campaign? Are those his qualifications, and which of them led the Minister to nominate him for a pre-electoral propaganda campaign which should be paid for by Conservative Party funds?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again I find it rather strange that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition complains about the inadequacy of information and inadequate public hearings. This House has been seized with this issue for the last two years. There have been hearings across the country. As the deal unfolded, the information was brought to the House immediately and debated.

We are talking about some very basic information. For example, basic documents released include the Synopsis of the Agreement, The Free Trade Agreement In Brief, the legal text of the agreement in English and French, the Canadian tariff schedule in English and French, the U.S. tariff schedule in English and French, Canada's Trade Statistics Handbook in English and French, The World our Market. There have been a number of consumer brochures, regional pamphlets for Atlantic Canada, Quebec, Ontario, the Prairies, British Columbia, Yukon and the Northwest Territories.

There have been issue pamphlets dealing with the automotive industry, agriculture, consumer interest, culture, dispute settlement, energy, fisheries, forestry, investment, key benefits, tariffs and women. There have been impact assessment studies which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has been calling for.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE CANCELLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what that statement really indicates is that the Conservative Government is morally disintegrating and wallowing in patronage. The hon. gentleman knows that we have known each other for a long time and I have great respect for him, and I ask him why he is carrying the can for the Minister and the Prime Minister on this issue. I would not touch it if I were he. Even Bruce Phillips, the director of communications for the Prime Minister, said "I don't know what the hell they're doing". I doubt whether the rest of the country does either.

The Deputy Prime Minister has an opportunity to prevail upon the Prime Minister and his colleague to bring this obscene $10 million contract for pre-election Conservative propaganda to an end. It is being subsidized by Canadian taxpayers when it should be subsidized by the Conservative Party as part of an election campaign.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the right hon. gentleman wants to show respect, he should first start by showing respect for this institution. Whenever he is on thin ice he resorts to patronage and cheap partisan politics. The Right Hon. Leader—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his answer.

• (1425)

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman, time and time again in this House, has asked for impact assessment studies. Well, impact assessment studies have been released and they form part of this on fisheries, the economy, agriculture, services, women, Canadian consumers, energy, metals and minerals, and forestry and industry.

The Member talks about the comments of Mr. Bruce Phillips. I want to have the attention of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition because he knows Mr. Bruce Phillips very well, probably better than I do. I suggest that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should give him a phone call to see exactly what he did say.

My understanding is that he did not convey the message which has been reported in The Toronto Sun. He indicated that he did not know all the details, that there was a new Minister. In response to the demand for more public information the Minister for International Trade has responded. He has, indeed, responded to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition who should be applauding us rather than criticizing us.

COST OF CAMPAIGN—FUNDING OF ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. At different times over the last several months we have asked questions in this House pointing out the fact that farmers in the Okanagan would be losing their farms now because of the free trade deal. The Government refused to respond. The grape growers in the Niagara Valley are losing their livelihood because of the Mulroney trade deal. The Government refused to respond to that. We asked about adjustment programs for workers and the Minister of Finance refused to respond.

How does the Government justify spending over $30 million of taxpayers' money to burnish the ego of the Minister for International Trade or to do a pre-sell for the election on the trade deal, and yet not be prepared to offer 5 cents, not 1 cent, for all the people in this country who are going to be damaged or destroyed by this trade deal?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is factually incorrect. He knows that there have been a number of adjustment programs that are part and parcel of the Ministry of Employment and Immigration.

Some Hon. Members: Name one.

Ms. Copps: False.

Mr. Mazankowski: A separate commission has been put in place to assess any negative impact in any sector in the economy, if there is any. The Member knows very well that the Minister of Agriculture is in the process of developing a program for grape growers and wine producers in this country. He should know better than to pose that question in such a false manner.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I think the adjustment programs are a figment of the imagination of the Deputy Prime Minister because the people who need them are not receiving them. That is the truth.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE TABLED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade has said that he expects to have the entire trade Bill completed in two months and intends to use the muscle of the Tory majority to get it through. Yet at the same he admits that he is going to be spending upwards of $10 million for Mr. Laschinger's contract.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House what Mr. Laschinger will be spending $5 million a month on? Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to table the work plan and contract of Mr. Laschinger to demonstrate what kind of service he is going to give the Canadian people for $5 million a month, when hundreds of people are being destroyed by the trade deal and do not get a red cent?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I suppose I could ask the hon. gentleman what kind of adjustment program he and his Government gave to western Canadian energy people and workers when they brought in the devastating National Energy Program. They gave them the finger.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Where was he when Trudeau said "Sell your own wheat"?

Mr. Mazankowski: It is amazing to see the hypocrisy displayed by Members opposite when it comes to this sort of thing.

It is very clear that a number of initiatives are going to be taken with respect to the promotion of the trade initiative as a national objective. Initiatives which are being considered are seminars and conferences which will bring trade commissioners and other exporters together to examine the benefits of the trade initiative, particularly for the workers.

The Hon. Member should be applauding this initiative. We have a tremendous record in terms of reducing unemployment and we believe very firmly that the trade initiative will bring unemployment figures down further. The Member should be very responsive to that effort on behalf of all Canadians.

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will likely recall that on May 3, 1982, the Hon. Member for Wellington—Dufferin—Simcoe, who is now the Minister of National Defence, moved the following opposition day motion:

That this House condemns the government—

—which, by the way, Mr. Speaker, was a Liberal Government—

—for its increasing use of Canadian taxpayers' dollars for self-serving advertising and—in particular, for spending millions of tax dollars for unnecessary advertising—

• (1430)

That was 1982. Now we learn that the Government will spend up to $30 million of taxpayers' money for obviously Conservative propaganda on the trade deal. If this was sleazy for Liberals to do back in 1982, will the Deputy Prime Minister explain why it is okay for the Conservatives to do it in 1988?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member would not want to mislead the House or the country when he suggests the Government will spend another $30 million. That is not correct.

Mr. Riis: Total.

Mr. Mazankowski: Some $14 million has been spent on the kinds of publications that I outlined for the Leader of the Opposition. There are a number of other initiatives that have to be taken in order to underscore the importance of the trade initiative and in order to ensure that all Canadians will realize and understand the benefits of this initiative, particularly from the standpoint of exporters and those people who will engage in new job opportunities.

I believe that a number of studies and initiatives being undertaken will not only serve the purpose of ensuring that all Canadians understand the trade initiative better, but, more important, will serve to underline to exporters, industry, and workers across the country the very many advantages that are contained in this deal.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, during the debate in 1982, the present Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) said: "We should scrap federal advocacy advertising. The time has come to draw the line and say this must stop". The former Member for Capilano said: "All this nonsense is being fed to the nation . . . Taxpayers have to stand there and see their money dribbled away on this garbage".

The Government decided to cut back on increases to family allowances. It said that it could not increase the amount of money set aside to help summer students obtain jobs for the last two years. Yet at the drop of a hat it can spend $30 million on this propaganda campaign.

If it was sleazy for the Liberals to do it in 1982, why is it okay to do it again today?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is really the same question. It just gives me an opportunity to add further to what is involved in this effort.

As I indicated earlier, a series of seminars and conferences which will bring together trade commissioners and other exporters in the trade field will take place to ensure that Canadian investors and businessmen are in a position to take advantage of the benefits of the trade initiative.

The Minister for International Trade put forward a number of initiatives, including 10 to 20 trade conferences to be held across Canada. A program of public information conferences will be held, with advertising to ensure that all the regions of the country and all Canadians will have a better understanding of it.

Those Members opposite criticize and condemn the trade initiative but they have yet to come up with an alternative. What would you be doing?

Mr. Riis: What we would do is keep Canada as Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT CALL GENERAL ELECTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, if the Deputy Prime Minister is so interested in conveying to the people of Canada what the Government plans to do in terms of the trade deal, let me make this suggestion. Why not save the taxpayers of Canada $30 million and call an election? Get out and explain your side of the trade deal and we will explain ours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, before the Member gets so bold, he better check with the former Premier of Manitoba, Mr. Pawley.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CHOICE AND QUALIFICATIONS OF MR. LASCHINGER—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it is further to the questions asked by previous speakers. The Deputy Prime Minister will admit it is outrageous to make out a blank cheque to the campaign manager for the Minister of International Trade, for the purpose of selling Government propaganda. I therefore want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why

Mr. Laschinger was selected and what his qualifications are, and also, if the public is entitled to this information, how much Mr. Laschinger will get out of this privileged contract for the Minister of International Trade? How much is in it for Mr. Laschinger?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just repeated a question that was already asked by his Leader. We know there is considerable discord within the Liberal Party, but I don't think this means they have to repeat the same question. The answer is the same as the one given by the Deputy Prime Minister. Members on the other side of the House have repeatedly asked that Canadians be given a chance to know the contents of the free trade agreement. We are now making sure that Canadians will have a chance to know the contents and the benefits to Canada of this agreement.

QUERY CONCERNING AMOUNT OF MONEY JOHN LASCHINGER WILL RECEIVE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs didn't answer the question. For the third time, how much will Mr. Laschinger get out of this privileged contract with his former candidate for the Tory leadership? How much?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister said earlier, Members opposite tend to exaggerate the Government's expenditures for promoting the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and ensuring that Canadians understand the contents of this agreement and its benefits for Canada.

An Hon. Member: How much?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Someone said: "How much?".

There are very real benefits, for Quebecers and for the rest of Canada, in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—DELAY IN CONCLUDING AGREEMENT WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. A year ago this month, this House of Commons unanimously passed a resolution to preserve South Moresby. A year ago the Prime Minister responded positively to the House and the national will to preserve South Moresby and honourably signed a Memorandum of Understanding with Premier Vander Zalm.

The Premier is now waffling on his part of the bargain and Canada is waffling on its duty to recognize and affirm the rights of the Haida people in South Moresby.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister use his good offices and those of the Prime Minister to get the Premier of British Columbia to honour the agreement he has already signed and to reach an agreement between Canada and the Haida people for their homeland?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing support for this initiative. The answer is yes, I am sure the Office of the Prime Minister, indeed, my office, will be used in attempting to encourage the Government of British Columbia to comply with the Memorandum of Understanding that was signed and agreed to about a year ago. I hope to do that in the next day or so, perhaps even in the next few hours.

EFFORTS TO CONCLUDE CANADA—HAIDA AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Minister of Justice and other senior officials have been working overtime to try to reach suitable wording with the Council of the Haida Nation on a Canada-Haida agreement.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that those efforts will be expedited because tourists from around the world are already arriving on the Queen Charlottes? There is a need to get on with the job both in terms of the agreement with the Haida people and in terms of developing the area for people coming from around the world.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions, and other offices of the Government have had discussions with the Haida Nation. We have offered to put in place management structures that would allow participation by the Haida people.

I have written to Miles Richardson and stated that those management structures, those park sub-agreements for the national park reserve, could be considered to be incorporated into a claims settlement when that takes place.

We have attempted to provide opportunities for participation of the Haida people in the national park reserve and will continue to do so.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MATERNITY BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO ESTABLISH TWO-TIER SYSTEM

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

In recognition of the excellent work pioneered by the Fathers for Justice of Kitchener, in particular Ron Sauve, in lobbying for changes made to the Unemployment Insurance Act in the John McInnis case, and in view of the fact that the Canadian Human Rights Commission, the "Equality for all Report", the Forget Commission, and the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration all recommended a two-tier system of maternity benefits, will the Minister amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to apportion the present 17-week benefit period to give: (1), an exclusive period of recovery for the mother; and (2), the parents the flexibility to divide the remainder as they so choose?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, before the changes were made to Bill C-116, no biological father was recognized and eligible for unemployment insurance benefits. Since these changes were made, if the mother dies or is unable to care for her child, we can recognize the biological father and he can receive unemployment insurance benefits. And I might add that a case was heard in Federal Court for the recognition of biological fathers in general. Once the decision is announced, we will consider it and take action.

AIRPORTS

CONSTRUCTION OF TERMINAL 3 AT PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PAYMENT OF HYDRO LEVY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Transport. It concerns Terminal 3 being built by a private developer at Pearson International Airport. The Government has honoured its commitment part way to make information public. We now know that the developers of Terminal 3 project will make a profit on equity of 33 per cent per year for the next 60 years. Will the Minister undertake that the developer will pay the hydro levy when that levy is assessed? It will be in the order of $3 million or so. Will he undertake that will be paid because the developer is a private developer, and not hide behind federal immunity or federal non-responsibility to pay municipal and hydro levies?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite impossible to give a specific response to that question because it really involves a lot of legal implications. I think the Minister of Justice may well have to give an opinion on that point. So I am unable to give a specific response today.

REQUEST THAT DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT DOCUMENTS BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a question the Parliamentary Secretary can certainly answer. Yesterday, on the direction of officials of the Department of Transport, the developers would not make copies of pages from the development agreement so they could be taken back by the media to their offices to digest, and they were very complicated documents. Will the Parliamentary Secretary change that decision and allow copies of these documents to be made public, consistent with the commitment that was made by the former Minister of Transport, presently the Minister responsible for international trade? he said these documents would be made available, but they are not allowing us to copy them.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true, though, that the Minister has released the documents that were within the purview of the federal Government to release. Documents that belong to a third party, under the Access to Information Act, of which my friend knows intimately well the details, we are simply not able to release without the consent of the third party. I notice in Mr. Stein's article that he pointed out that Huang and Danczky were more obliging and co-operative. It is just that they did not permit photocopies of parts of the documents to go. But the reporters were there for a number of hours and could make notes and comments on anything they wished.

ADVOCACY ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to return to the question of advocacy advertising and address my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. The record clearly shows that the Progressive Conservative Party appeared to object in principle to advocacy advertising in 1982. Given what it is now intending to do with respect to advertising of the free trade agreement, have the Government and the Progressive Conservative Party abandoned the principle they appeared to have in 1982? I wish the Deputy Prime Minister would answer that question instead of going on and on about what the money is being spent on. Would he address the question of the principle of whether the money should be spent in this way at all?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Well, Mr. Speaker, if providing information and ensuring that the Canadian people are well informed—

Mr. Benjamin: Before the legislation is passed?

Mr. Mazankowski: —not disinformed by the Socialist Party of Canada, which would do anything to kill the free trade deal, surely, Canadians are entitled to know the details of the agreement.

Mr. Althouse: Why don't you give them both sides, then?

Mr. Mazankowski: As far as I am concerned, we live in an age of access to information and freedom of information—

Ms. Mitchell: But to both sides.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why would any Government of the day—

Mr. Althouse: You only keep them half the story.

Mr. Mazankowski: —want to give important information like this secret? The Hon. Member would be the first person to complain if we did not come clean with all the information and all the ramifications of the trade initiative, and that is precisely what we are doing.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT CAMPAIGN

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the irony is that there are some 210 Conservative Members of Parliament over there, and people all across the country who are trying to get Tory Members of Parliament to come and defend the free trade deal can hardly get anyone to come to these forums.

Miss MacDonald: Are you kidding?

Mr. Blaikie: Now it is going to spend $30 million. I say to the Deputy Prime Minister that he has all kinds of Members over there. Why does he not use them, or are they ashamed of the deal? So I go back to the Deputy Prime Minister and I ask him if he personally, because he is someone who has been known in the past to have some respect for Parliament, abandoned the principle that the Government has no right to promote something which has not been passed in this House of Commons by the duly elected people of Canada? Has he abandoned that principle?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not ashamed of the trade deal that has been signed.

Mr. Blaikie: Your back-benchers are because they won't show up for anything.

Mr. Mazankowski: I find it appalling that the Hon. Member would take exception to the fact that here we are promoting international trade and attempting to secure a $200 billion trading relationship with the United States of America.

Mr. Rodriguez: It has not passed Parliament.

Mr. Cassidy: It has not passed Parliament.

Mr. Mazankowski: Surely Canadians are entitled to know what the deal contains, its positive effects, what it is going to do for every region, what it is going to do for every sector, and we intend to follow up with that.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

CDC LIFE SCIENCES INCORPORATED—TAKEOVER BID BY FRENCH STATE ENTERPRISE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister will know that on April 13 there was a hostile takeover attempt by the Institut Merieux, a Government of France controlled enterprise of CDC Life Sciences Incorporated. The Minister will also know that CDC Life is the holding company which owns Connaught Laboratories, the leading Canadian biological manufacturer and a world leader in the development of a number of important medical products.

What is the Government of Canada doing to ensure that this highly regarded research and development company stays in Canadian hands?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that the Director of Investigation and Research of the Competition Bureau was set to initiate an action before the Competition Tribunal when in fact the offer by Institut Merieux was withdrawn because of violations of provincial security Acts. But we were certainly prepared to take action to prevent the takeover under the terms that were made known to us at that point in time. It became unnecessary because of subsequent provincial action, but if anything else were to happen in this respect, my Department will certainly take action.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister and the House will realize that this particular company is a world leader in the development of a number of important medical products including polio vaccine, insulin, and penicillin production technology. In view of the Minister's previous comment, would he give an assurance and undertaking to this House that this particular company, a world leader, will remain in Canadian hands? Will he give a clear and unequivocal undertaking to all the Canadian people that it will remain in Canada for Canadians, doing research and development for world-wide interests?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I indicated that my Department was ready to act a few weeks ago when this first came up. I do not understand the Hon. Member's accusatory language. He is two or three weeks out of date. Had he been paying attention he would have realized that we acted when in fact it looked liked this very reputable and important firm was to be taken over by Institut Merieux. I do not know why he should make this accusation now as if we have been negligent. He should wake up to the fact that we acted three weeks ago. He is three weeks late with his question.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED FIRING RANGE FOR CF-18 AIRCRAFT IN SAGUENAY-LAC-SAINT-JEAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence and concerns the proposed F-18 firing range in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region. Given the strong and growing public opposition shown at recent hearings of the Bédard Commission and the position of the Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, who refuses to speak in favour of it, will the Minister finally announce that he will cancel this dangerous, costly project?

• (1450)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member mentioned in his question, there is a commission under way holding public hearings at the present time, sponsored by the Government of Quebec. This was requested by the Government of Quebec. The Department of National Defence is participating fully.

We know that the NDP is opposed to anything that will improve our capacity to defend Canada. This Government is not.

QUERY CONCERNING WHO SPEAKS FOR GOVERNMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. The Minister of National Defence is pushing ahead with the firing range project as he is pushing ahead with the folly of nuclear submarines, but his colleague, the Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, refuses to give his support to this project. My question for the Minister is very simple: Who speaks for the Government on this matter of the firing range, the Minister of National Defence or his colleague, the Secretary of State?

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Government's position is well known. The Government is continuing to participate in front of the public inquiry. What is much more confusing when one reads statements of the NDP is who speaks for the NDP on defence policy, is it the Hon. Member for Brant, or is it the Hon. Member who just posed the question?

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

FUNDING FOR UNIVERSITIES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced that the universities of Canada were to receive another $440 million over the next five years—$240 million was for the Centres of Excellence program, and $200 million was for the granting councils. This is in addition to the $80 million scholarship program.

I think that the universities of Canada are interested in knowing the answer to my question. Will the Minister say with respect to the $103 million for NSERC, the $61 million for MRC, and the $36 million for SSHRC, if any of the funds are earmarked, or are the councils free to use them as they wish?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful for the question. It was with a degree of satisfaction that we announced last week an increase in funding to universities amounting to $520 million.

Indeed, $240 million, as my hon. friend has indicated, is earmarked for the Centres of Excellence program, moneys to be spent in pursuit of excellence comparable to international standards.

Some $200 million to the funding councils is to be allocated to universities in the normal fashion. I assume of course that a large part of this money will go into fundamental basic research, which is so important as we put additional demands on universities to keep us equipped with highly qualified people and the expansion of our knowledge base.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

EFFECT OF BRITISH CAMPAIGN ON SALE OF CANADIAN FURS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Anti-fur lobbyists in Britain seem to be winning in their attempts to have the British Government pass a regulation which would not only discourage the sale of Canadian fur in Britain but which would destroy tens of thousands of Canadian jobs, many of them in the Canadian aboriginal community and other rural communities in Canada.

During his visit to Britain did the Prime Minister succeed in persuading Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her Ministers to back down on this issue? Or did he come away from No. 10 Downing Street empty-handed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's interest in this question, and trust that he and members of his Party will work with us and work with other Members of the House who have already indicated their determination to try to change the mind of the British Government.

The answer to the Hon. Member's question is that we have not yet changed its position. I raised the matter vigorously and at length in conversations 10 days ago with the British Foreign Secretary, Geoffrey Howe. It has been raised by my colleague, the Minister of Finance, and by a number of others.

We know how vitally important this is to the livelihood of more than 100,000 Canadians, but particularly to Canadians of Inuit and Indian origin, many of whom have no other means of livelihood.

What we have to do is make the British understand that what is at issue here is the livelihood of Canadians who have no alternatives, Canadians to whom we all owe a special obligation. I will welcome the company of the Hon. Member and his Party in making that case to the British Parliament and Government.

REQUEST FOR BOYCOTT OF BRITISH PRODUCTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I will pose another question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Given the fact that Canada's fur exports which amount to about $350 million annually and which involve, as he says, the jobs of about 100,000 Canadians, and the fact that these furs are primarily sold in Britain and other European markets, will the Minister take the lead in planning a boycott of certain British products as a means of retaliation to fight the proposed fur labelling regulation, instead of leaving it to the resource Ministers at the provincial level to do that job for him? Will he take that lead?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has proposed a specific means which I think may well turn out to be counter-productive. What I think is important now is that we continue together to make the strongest possible case to the British Government about the effect that this will have upon Canadians generally, but upon Canadian native people in particular. I think that that is a case that Canada can win, if we make it consistently and effectively. I think were we to divert ourselves to become involved in threats at this stage that may not be as helpful as the course we are now following.

With regard to territorial and provincial Governments, we are working very closely with them. I have been in touch with them. My colleagues in the Government have been in touch with them. We take this issue very seriously. I have appreciated the work of the Hon. Member for Yukon and others from other Parties who have joined their support to our efforts. I hope that we will continue to have that kind of consistent support from the Hon. Member and his colleagues.

Mr. Brisco: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West.

AIR CANADA

PROPOSED PURCHASE OF NEW AIRCRAFT—TECHNOLOGICAL BENEFITS OF OFFSET PROGRAMS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. This morning officers of Air Canada appeared before the Transport Committee with respect to their annual report. I want to say to my hon. colleague that I sorely missed him and the kind of questions he asked when he was transport critic for his Party.

I asked the officers of Air Canada whether or not the Government had requested them to give consideration in their negotiations for the purchase of new aircraft to the economic impact and technological benefits of offset programs. For example, the winning company could agree to subcontract work with companies in Canada for certain amounts over a defined period of time. I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister that the answer was no, they had received no such representation: "We are not taking it into consideration".

Will the Government and the Minister at this late stage make such a request of Air Canada before a decision is made on what aircraft it will purchase?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member missed me. I must say that sometimes I miss those transport committee hearings as well.

In regard to the economic impact offset program to which the Hon. Member refers, I can say to him that the airline responded in the proper fashion. It is the duty of the airline to determine which aircraft is best suited to meet the mandate or the mission that is required. It does it strictly on the technical basis, price, and the fulfilling of a mission. That policy is consistent with past practices.

The role of the airline is to ensure that it procures the best airplane suitable and capable of fulfilling that particular mandate.

POSITION OF AIRLINE

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, in a further question by my colleague from Thunder Bay—Atikokan this morning the chief executive officer of Air

Canada was asked if Air Canada was taking that into consideration prior to making a decision on what aircraft it will purchase. Mr. Jeanniot said "Wardair doesn't have to. Canadian Airlines doesn't have to. Why should we have to?"

Before Air Canada is even privatized—it is still a Crown corporation owned by the people of Canada and paid for by them—can Air Canada now say like the private airlines: "To hell with Canada"?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a bit surprised at the Hon. Member's question and his interpretation. The current Air Canada legislation provides that Air Canada should be run as a commercial operation in anticipation of profit and with the least amount of political interference.

• (1500)

I am sure that the Hon. Member would be the first one to pounce upon us if we were to impose new conditions and guidelines and interfere with Air Canada's decision on which aircraft to buy.

Mr. Benjamin: I did not ask that.

Mr. Mazankowski: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the airline is quite capable of determining which aircraft is best suited to fulfil a certain mission or mandate, and we leave that up to it.

The Speaker: One last question from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

NEPEAN BOY'S FLOWER SELLING BUSINESS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. The Minister will be aware that the National Capital Commission, in its quest for a pure and law-abiding society, has now extended the long arm of the law to stop a 14-year old boy, Eric Leclair, of Nepean, Ontario, from selling flowers in a semi-rural area on the grounds that the property in question is rented by the boy's father from the NCC.

Does the Minister of Public Works approve of this type of activity from the National Capital Commission?

If this is all that the NCC has to do, should it not find real work instead?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this Government encourages entrepreneurs, young and old. The National Capital Commission will ensure that this boy stays in business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ASSURANCE THAT BOY MAY CONTINUE BUSINESS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I know that the NCC probably would not be bothering this kid if he was doing such things as stealing cars or selling drugs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Can the Minister of Public Works give his assurance here and now that this kid will be able to continue that operation on the same property where he is doing so now? Will the Minister give this authorization today?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member needs tomato plants this weekend, I recommend that he visit the premises of this boy.

Mr. Boudria: I was there last night.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that Bill C-51, as amended, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think you would find there is unanimous consent in the House to move immediately to third reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to give unanimous consent to move on this issue also recognizing that immediately following, hopefully, a vote later on today on this important Bill will be another vote on the Private Member's Bill.

Mr. Epp (Provencher) moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I missed the other vote but since there will not be another vote, my name will not appear as having been here. I am very reluctant to be absent. I vote for this one.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, mine is a very pleasant task this afternoon. I will be brief because I believe most of the issues relating to Bill C-51 have been expressed in the House and in committee earlier.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If there are conversations, I wish Members would go behind the curtains or in the lobby. Order, please, if there are any conversations to be held, I would ask Hon. Members to go behind the curtains. This is very important legislation.

• (1530)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, as I said, I will not be very long but there are two or three things I would like to say this afternoon.

The purpose of the Bill is to provide a legislative response to a national public health problem of substantial and present concern. It is intended to protect the health of Canadians in light of conclusive evidence implicating tobacco use and the incidence of numerous debilitating and fatal diseases. It is also intended to protect all Canadians, especially young Canadians, from inducement to use tobacco products and consequent dependence on them. A further aim is to enhance public awareness of the health hazards of tobacco use by ensuring the effective communication of pertinent information to consumers of tobacco products.

The proposed ban on all tobacco advertising and most tobacco promotion is part of a wide-ranging anti-smoking policy that includes education measures, restrictions on public and workplace smoking, and financial assistance to tobacco farmers who wish to convert to alternative economic activity. This concerted government effort is aimed at promoting and eventually achieving a smoke-free society. These strong measures are an essential response to the pervasiveness of a man-made health problem which has reached epidemic proportions world-wide.

The most conspicuous triumphs of modern preventive medicine have concerned the control of infectious diseases, including smallpox, typhoid and polio. The most conspicuous failure has been in the area of tobacco-related illnesses, the leading public health concern of our time. Each year in Canada alone 35,000 middle-aged and older people die prematurely of tobacco-related illnesses, and thousands more suffer from tobacco-related chronic disabilities. These diseases, which cause one out of every six deaths in Canada, can be prevented. However, a new vaccine is not the answer. The solution has to come from society as a whole and our collective willingness to strip tobacco of its falsely alluring image.

That really is the essence of the Bill, so I am not going into its various details again. However, I received one piece of additional information which will possibly make the argument one more time to those who might be skeptical or those who say the tobacco industry and its advertising arm are not interested in inducing young Canadians to smoke. I have in my hand Maclean's magazine of May 30, 1988, and I do not think I can get any more current than that. In that magazine there is an ad for pipe tobacco with a clip-out coupon. The ad in this national news magazine says:

> New Amphora Cherry Cavendish. It's cool, smooth and easy-smoking. For a free pouch of Amphora Cherry, send the label from your regular tobacco or cigarette brand with this coupon to Delpro,—

It then gives the address. I had one of the young people who work with me call that company today at noon. They were asked what is required. They said, "Send a note with your name, address and phone number, and your name will go into a computer bank so we can send you our tobacco newsletter. Tell us which brand you smoke and we will send you your free pouch of pipe tobacco". There is no cost, there are no questions, and there was no reference to age. Anyone who can dial a number or fill out the coupon can do it.

You might say that most young Canadians might not want their first experience with tobacco to be pipe tobacco. However, the tobacco industry from day one has wanted to attract more people to their products so they could sell more of them. Anyone who denies that flies in the face of every piece of evidence. I say that in a country where we spend so much time protecting health, where we look for cancer cures and cures for heart disease, lung disease, and try to develop a better quality of life, it is time for this Parliament to speak.

It is a testimony to the tobacco industry that it is the only industry, with the exception of the 1908 law, with no restrictions on it by law. You tell me whether you can buy any consumer product on which there are not some restrictions. Tobacco has escaped.

People say, what about freedom of speech? The Charter of Rights and Freedoms is not a charter for companies, it is a charter for individual Canadians. Some people say there will be a challenge to this Bill with respect to the right to advertise. I say, "Challenge us. Challenge the Parliament of Canada. Challenge Canadians. At the same time, explain why you want to protect an industry responsible for more self-induced illness and death than any other in Canada today". Those are pretty strong words, but I mean them, not only as an individual but as Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The time has come where Ministers responsible for health cannot simply utter nice, comforting words about health. Action has to be taken. Therefore, I call on this Parliament to take that action. I also call on the other place to prove that it understands that Canadians of all ages expect it to look to their interests first, not corporate interests.

The last task I have today is to thank a number of people. I want to begin by thanking my Parliamentary Secretary who I think has exemplified, both in the House and in committee, the very best of parliamentary expertise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I want to thank my government colleagues in this House who have from time to time had difficulty with the Bill, not in any negative sort of way but over the question of what is the legitimate role of Government in the area of health promotion and changes in lifestyle. I want to thank as well members of the Opposition. Although we might tangle here from time to time, the fact is that on this Bill both Liberal and NDP Members have not only been co-operative but have taken the national interest to heart, and I thank them for it.

• (1540)

Third, I want specifically to thank the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). Without her personal tenacity on this issue this item may not have been brought to the point at which it is today. It is important, regardless of our partisan differences from time to time, to recognize the contributions of others on the other side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Finally, I want to thank health groups which, from time to time, are criticized for asking for greater fees or a high percentage of the health care funding. When I introduced Bill C-51 I said that the Bill would pass if health care groups really cared. I do not want to attempt to name all the groups and individuals because there were so many, but I would like to mention the Non-Smokers' Rights Association. I mention them because they have often used methods which were a little less than orthodox, and even got under some people's skin from time to time. However, it has been my experience that if you want to push health promotion you sometimes have to get under people's skin.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): So you understand why we put questions to you.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Yes, now I understand why the Opposition gets such fine answers from me to the questions which they ask me. Seriously, there have been a lot of people who have really pushed this legislation. I can say, and not because this is government legislation or because I had the opportunity to bring it in, that many people in the international scene see this as progressive legislation which I believe will again put Canada in the vanguard of health promotion. I thank everyone who has helped.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to join in thanking the Member for Broadview—

Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who brought this issue to the fore with a little political sleight of hand. Were it not for the Government's leap-frogging intention last night we would be here today debating and voting on Bill C-204. However, I am glad that the Government has finally had its bluff called and has come forward with Bill C-51. We are, of course, most happy to do everything we can to assist in its speedy passage.

The Minister has spent some time thanking health groups. The Canadian Cancer Society, the Non-Smokers' Rights Association, the Canadian Medical Association, the Dental Association, and the Canadian Nurses' Association have all contributed, and the list goes on and on. Frankly, many of us are breathing a sigh of relief because at one point in the discussion we thought that the perils and travails of Mr. William Neville and company were going to prevent this Bill from ever seeing the light of day.

The original Bill was certainly stronger. It has been watered down. In some cases there have been accommodations and in some cases unacceptable compromises in relation to the timing of certain parts of the legislation. However, I think the Minister came forward with what he considered to be achievable under the circumstances. I am hoping that he will move quickly to have Royal Assent were the Government to be in a position to call an election this fall, which frankly I doubt.

I have some concerns relating specifically to some of the Minister's amendments. He was not in the House this morning when I had a chance to speak to them. I would like to point out specifically my very serious concern in relation to Motion No. 1, subclause 4(3). In my mind that subclause draws an unfortunate link between the Free Trade Agreement, which has just been signed by the Government, and this legislation.

You will no doubt be aware of the comments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) who stated that free trade could stop Bill C-51. The Minister of Agriculture said that C-51 may be unworkable in a climate of free trade with the United States. He said on Monday afternoon that the legislation is flawed as it would stop domestic manufacturers from promoting their products here but would be powerless to stop American publications entering Canada from advertising American tobacco products.

I was distressed to see a specific amendment which, in my mind, offers protection to the Americans, specifically, Clause 4(3). The Minister himself introduced this amendment in committee and stated:

> For greater certainty, subsection (2)—

—which is the subsection relating to publication, broadcasting and dissemination—

> —does not apply in respect of the distribution for sale of publications imported into Canada or the retransmission of radio or television broadcasts originating outside Canada.

In the committee it was made very clear by myself, among others, that we should retain the right in this legislation to limit material, including magazines and television transmission, which may be coming from the United States but is specifically targeted to the Canadian market-place.

Interestingly enough, in a study prepared for the committee by our legislative researcher, the concern about advertising coming in from the United States as a result of the trade Bill was highlighted because in the final agreement signed between Canada and the United States the Americans will be given preferential tax treatment in terms of advertising in the same way as when it was previously restricted to Canadian companies. The famous Reader's Digest legislation which led to preferential treatment being given to Canadian-based magazines is now also going to be accorded to magazines which are published in the United States.

Therefore, notwithstanding Bill C-51 and the good intentions to limit advertising in Canada, there is nothing that prohibits an American company, by way of American transmission by television or American transmission via American magazines, from targeting the Canadian market.

In committee we left the door open by saying "no person" so that we would limit the potential of an American tobacco company or an American advertising company being hired in the United States with the express purpose of targeting the Canadian section of American-based magazines. Now that the free trade agreement has re-introduced preferential tax treatment we may once again see Canadian editions of Time, Newsweek, and other American magazines, which disappeared when the previous Liberal Government in Canada said that if you want preferential tax treatment you must advertise only in Canadian magazines. Therefore, the free trade agreement is opening a loophole for American advertisers potentially to get tax deductions to advertise to the Canadian market. I believe that Clause 4(3) which is being proposed by the Minister—

An Hon. Member: You're wrong.

Ms. Copps: The Member was obviously not in committee. He does not know the issue. I wish he would follow the issue.

Mr. Gormley: I know more about C-58 than you ever will.

Ms. Copps: More about Bill C-51. I understand that the Member is extremely knowledgeable.

Mr. Gormley: Bill C-58.

Ms. Copps: This particular Bill was discussed at length in committee. It was determined that we wanted to have as wide-ranging a motion as possible. When we are bringing forward a Bill which says that Canadian advertisers no longer have the right to advertise, surely we do not want to leave the back door loophole open for American magazines and American television transmissions to come in here, get preferential tax treatment, and be able to sell American cigarettes, thus giving them a greater inroad into the Canadian market-place.

That was exactly the dilemma pointed out by the researcher who suggested that the introduction of the free trade agreement would, in the short term, increase consumption of cigarettes in Canada.

• (1550)

I certainly support the Minister's intention in introducing the Bill, but I am against the restriction he applies in the amendment which states:

> For greater certainty, subsection (2) does not apply in respect of the distribution for sale of publications imported into Canada or the retransmission of radio or television broadcasts originating outside Canada.

Many of us live in border towns where we are certainly subject to the onslaught of advertising from the United States. It should apply if the intention of the advertiser is to bypass Canadian law and utilize American publications to sell cigarettes in Canada. For greater certainty, the Minister should withdraw this particular clause.

In fact, the committee was rather general in the application of the publication ban in an effort to deal with the doors that are being opened as a result of the free trade agreement. That is not only the statement of the Liberal opposition Member. I refer specifically to the comments of the Minister of Agriculture when he gave a speech in Tillsonburg and told the community that Bill C-51 may be unworkable as as result of the trade agreement.

Surely we do not want Bill C-51 to be unworkable. We want it to work in Canada as it relates to Canadian advertisers, but we also want to prevent the kind of exploitation which may occur if the tobacco industry in the United States sees a chance to make inroads into the Canadian market-place and actually do so by getting preferential tax treatment.

When one looks at the final draft of the free trade agreement, one can see that American advertisers and American magazines will be extended the same kind of preferential tax treatment as is currently the exclusive purview of Canadian magazines. Rather than a hypothesis on our part, it is a real threat that American companies can decide to get into the Canadian market-place by way of American magazines, setting up Canadian sections, and be free to advertise in a way that violates the spirit of the free trade agreement.

I understand that from the perspective of other foreign magazines, such as Paris Match or Stern, that are imported into Canada, it would certainly be unworkable to prohibit the importation of all magazines that include cigarette advertising. Quite clearly, though, tobacco advertising in Stern is not targeted to the Canadian market-place. It is also quite clear that the decision to ban advertising here in Canada opens a potential market for American advertisers who can come in through the back-door and sell Canadian editions of American magazines in Canada, essentially avoiding the regulations that were established to try to prohibit that kind of advertising.

I do not believe that is the Minister's intention. That is why I believe he should eliminate clause (3).

An amendment originally moved in committee would have included in the clause not only anyone advertising in Canada, but anyone who directly or indirectly applies to the Canadian market. That might be a way to amend the clause and close the loophole being created as a result of the trade agreement.

I see the loophole as a potential for growth of the industry in the tobacco sector. Furthermore, if the Americans will be allowed to advertise while we are restricting our Canadian advertising at the same time, the price of the commodity from the perspective of Canadian farmers will be driven down while their American counterparts will essentially have carte blanche to advertise indirectly through various media in the United States that we all know have daily contact with Canadians.

I believe a stricter interpretation of this area will clarify that the Government's intention is not only to restrict Canadian advertisers in Canada but to restrict Americans who may see the introduction of the free trade agreement as a chance to make inroads into a market that is facing very valid and supportable restrictions in Canada.

There are some 30,000 people per year who have either quit smoking or who lose their lives as a result of tobacco-related illnesses. They are not being replaced on the Canadian market-place. We assume that the Canadian industry will not grow, and that is why we supported this legislation. It is a long-term strategy to reduce and ultimately eliminate tobacco consumption.

However, if the Americans see that situation in the Canadian market on the one hand and, on the other, see an unfettered industry in the United States that will have access to the Canadian market-place by way of the free trade agreement, with the further preferential tax treatment which is now being accorded to American magazines that may choose to target the Canadian market-place, an entire new market will open up that they will be very anxious to enter. We should close that loophole before it has a chance to take hold.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we support the principle of Bill C-51, since its purpose is to eliminate, once and for all, the most dangerous threat to health in this century.

Many deaths and many diseases are caused by smoking. I don't think there is a Member in this House who doesn't know someone who either died of cancer or had an operation or a mastectomy because of cancer, and I think we all know there is a well-established link between smoking and cancer.

I just want to point out to the Minister, because we are always being told that the free trade agreement has no connection with our standard of living, that in his own motion, Motion No. 1, which is about the rules for prohibiting tobacco advertising in Canada, he says specifically, and I quote:

> (3) For greater certainty, subsection (2) does not apply in respect of the distribution for sale of publications imported into Canada or the retransmission of radio or television broadcasts originating outside Canada.

We do not support this motion, Mr. Speaker, because we believe it opens a tremendous loophole for American tobacco companies, when they see a legal vacuum has been created by the statement that there will be no more advertising in Canada. If they see that loophole—and according to the free trade agreement, there will be preferential tax treatment, specifically directed to American magazines, in the same way that now exists for Canadian magazines—American companies will say: Okay, we are going to try and sell Marlboros in Canada. Since there is no Canadian market because of the lack of advertising, let's expand and use advertising in American magazines to reach the Canadian market, because a vacuum has been created there and we want to fill that vacuum. By leaving this exemption in the Bill, the Minister is leaving a big loophole which may be used by the big American tobacco companies to enter the Canadian market and also by advertising agencies to conduct campaigns.

Mr. Speaker, it might not be a problem in certain remote areas of our country but I doubt it, because once when I was in Moose Jaw, I was able to watch the news from Detroit on TV because through cable TV, networks are able to broadcast just about anywhere.

Right now, the Americans have a voluntary ban on the advertising of tobacco on television, but if they decide to change their minds, there is nothing to prevent American companies from directing advertising specifically to Canadians.

We see this happening near my home.

[English]

Near my home in Hamilton it is quite obvious that the Buffalo television stations advertise to attract the Canadian market. They are very specific. They direct their advertising toward Hamiltonians and Torontonians. While there is currently in the United States a voluntary ban on the advertising of tobacco on television, if that ban were lifted we should still, by way of this legislation, reserve the right to restrict not only advertising that is originating in Canada but also advertising which directly or indirectly is targeted to the Canadian market-place.

• (1600)

Specifically in relation to magazines, I think we are opening here a potential can of worms with the clause which states quite clearly that this does not apply to any magazines coming in. If we do have magazines such as Time which decide to re-establish a Canadian base, particularly in relation to tobacco revenues, which at the moment constitute about 20 per cent of revenues for magazines in Canada, and if Americans decide that they are going to—

. . . filling that vacuum by publishing a Canadian edition, according to the free trade agreement they are given preferential tax treatment and on top of that, the Minister says they will not be affected by Bill C-51.

So I would like to ask the Minister whether he would withdraw this new amendment, Motion No. 1 or at least the third part which says publications imported into Canada will not be affected. Otherwise, I think it will give American companies and American advertising agencies a chance to make inroads into the Canadian market when they see this vacuum created by an Act of Parliament.

[English]

I think that the Minister's intention is obviously to reduce tobacco consumption, not to freeze off the market to allow another country to come in to fill that market. I believe that by changing the specific exemption that he has allowed for in clause (3), perhaps he will send a clearer signal to the industry, whether it be the Canadian tobacco companies or their American counterparts, that there is no way they will be able to get around this lobby. The intention is to restrict and prohibit advertising and to limit gradually sponsorships, and not to open a market for Americans to come in as a result of the trade agreement. Given the difference in tax treatment that is now being accorded to American magazines as a result of the trade deal, it would be extremely important for the Minister to make that clarification so that people know that this is not only going to restrict advertising in Canada but that there is no way that a company can come in through the back door via Buffalo or a tax loophole with respect to an American magazine and advertise to a Canadian market.

If that is dealt with, I think it will close what I see as a potential danger and a potential loophole as a result of the trade agreement. Certainly, the intent of the legislation in general is very positive. It is certainly legislation that will be supported by my Party.

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to clarify briefly my heckling of the Hon. Member. I indicated that I knew more about Bill C-58 than she ever would. That of course is the Bill that deals with the tax treatment of cross-border advertising. I know that she had interpreted me as thinking that I was referring to Bill C-51. However, Bill C-58 does some good things for communications, and Bill C-51 does some great things for the health community.

I wanted to clarify that for the Hon. Member in case it were indicated that I meant something else.

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, today is a historic day for the health of Canadians. We have in the House two important Bills which will be voted on, Bill C-51 at third reading debate now and my own Private Member's Bill, Bill C-204, which will be voted on this evening.

These Bills are complementary. I urge Hon. Members to support both of them. I thank Hon. Members in all Parties who are indeed supporting both of them and doing so very actively. I compliment the Minister for his work on Bill C-51. I hope to see his support on Bill C-204 at the appropriate time.

He will know that my Party is facilitating passage of Bill C-51. Indeed, we were vigorous supporters of Bill C-51, perhaps more vigorous than some members of his own Party. We are today facilitating moving directly through Bill C-51. The health of Canadians will be aided if both Bills achieve third reading today and move on to the Senate.

The two Bills deal with advertising. My Bill is a little bit more thorough than the Government's Bill C-51 in terms of not allowing any sponsorship of tobacco companies for sporting or cultural events. There is a limited amount allowed in the Government's Bill. I would like to have seen the Government more thorough in banning it. I would like to have seen the advertising ban come in more promptly. However, it is an important Bill. It is a step in the right direction. It will begin to turn the tide, I hope, for the young people who are starting to smoke, indeed, at the ages of 10 and 12.

We know we are not winning the battle. For those who take the view that we can sit back, that we do not need legislation or that one Bill will do it and we do not need anything more, I say that we are not winning the battle. Consumption continues to rise. Anyone who looks at the billboards will see a new wave of cigarette advertising using culture, sports, the outdoors, the environment, to give the impression that smoking is still good for us and that it is something that is part of the good life. This deception continues. Until this Bill is passed and is in force, or until my Bill is passed and is in force, there will be Canadians who will be deceived by the advertisers into thinking that smoking is all right.

Bill C-51 would begin to deal with this matter seriously. It would do something that my own Bill does not address, that is, the labelling issue. It would ensure that there is accurate labelling of the products of tobacco so that we would not just have the message go out. We would cancel the positive message going out that tobacco is good for one and, indeed, the negative message, the detailed message of the consequences, would be part of the information that would go to consumers. This is information that is terribly important for consumers, something which they have needed for all these decades.

We have the information as to the unfortunate consequences of smoking. We know what the statistics are—35,000 Canadians at least every year die directly from the effects of tobacco, from heart disease, cancers of various sorts and emphysema. We also know that the death toll is in the area of hundreds for those who die not from their own smoking but from having to breathe the cigarette smoke of other people in offices, homes or both. The number of deaths is in the hundreds in the case of people who are killed in fires caused by smoking. There are also perinatal deaths. We will begin to see this death toll diminish as consumption goes down.

We cannot directly control consumption. However, if we stop the advertising we can stop an inducement to take up smoking. We can aid the educators to put out their positive health message which gets cancelled if there are the billboards of the good life, if there are the magazine advertisements of the good life. Once we get rid of these the educational message will be very much easier to get out. It is extremely important that that happen.

For those who think that if we pass Bill C-51 all will be well and that this is all that is needed, let me be very clear as to the complementary nature of the aspects of my Bill. If both Bills are passed, Bill C-51 as a government measure will take precedence. My own Bill has been amended in committee to ensure that it will be the Government's Bill, the Tobacco Products Control Act, which will take precedence, and so that the Hazardous Products Act will not be used in that case. The Government has the right to legislate. My Bill had to give way to that.

However, Bill C-51 does not have those aspects that my Bill has with respect to transportation and a smoke-free workplace. Right now employees who come under Treasury Board guidelines are getting some protection. We hear the good news of that. People appreciate it. I have had public servants say to me that they feel a lot better at their place of work. They are not getting the same number of headaches. Efficiency is improving because of having a decent working environment.

However, that measure only protects those who come under Treasury Board guidelines. The great majority of people under federal jurisdiction are not public servants under the Treasury Board. All the people who work for the RCMP, whether they are officers or civilian staff, people in the Armed Forces, people in all the Crown corporations, Air Canada, the CBC, the transportation companies, VIA Rail, CN, CP, the banks, do not get protection by Treasury Board guidelines. They have been asked to act; some of them have, and some of them have not. Some of them have responded very inadequately and are providing very little protection to their employees. Employees only have the option of taking a grievance, which is very time-consuming and is not always successful. In the case of the RCMP, grievances have not been successful. The RCMP states: "Our policy is to allow smoking. If you don't like it, tough luck". Therefore, grievances have not worked. We would like to believe that under common law all people have a right to a safe working environment, but it has not been achieved. It seems to me unfortunate that a person has to go to a court of law to demand his or her rights.

Some improvements are needed on the Hill for employees. I spoke with a woman not too long ago who was pregnant on the job and was forced to work on the Hill in a smoking environment. That harmed not only her health, but the health of her foetus. We know that infants born underweight as a result of maternal smoking are at risk. More of them become ill. The rate of death of underweight infants is higher than for infants who are born of mothers who have not smoked and have not been subjected to other people's smoke.

For the protection of the health of our employees in all of those other agencies, apart from the federal Public Service, for people on the Hill or for people who travel, those aspects of my Bill were watered down in committee. I would have liked to have seen much stronger support for people in transportation. However, we are moving in the right direction. In my Bill there is a clause, and the Government can bring in the regulations, to increase access to smoke-free transportation in the airlines, in trains, and in buses. At least the framework is there. Whether or not it is used will be up to the Government, but I would think that the health community would urge action to bring in regulations consistent with protecting the health of travellers. That framework is in my Bill. I think that Canadians will want to see that.

We know that both Bills have the support of the vast majority of Canadians. Public opinion polls show this, and many Canadians have written to us directly. Members of Parliament will have received post cards, letters, and petitions that ask Parliament to pass both of those Bills.

I wish to refer to a list of organizations that have supported my Bill. I believe that all of them are also supporters of Bill C-51, and indeed there may be further supporters of Bill C-51 who are not on this list. At the risk of boring people, I would like all Members to know the very large number of important health organizations and other organizations that have given their support. The list includes: the Canadian Medical Association, the Canadian Nurses Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Lung Association, the Canadian Dental Association, the Canadian Council on Smoking and Health, the Canadian Hospital Association, Physicians for a Smoke-Free Canada, the Canadian Institute of Child Health, the Canadian Heart and Stroke Foundation, Alcohol and Drug Concerns, National Cancer Institute of Canada, the Royal College of Physicians and Surgeons of Canada, the Canadian Association of Optometrists, The College of Family Physicians of Canada, the National Federation of Nurses' Unions, the Alberta Association of Registered Nurses, the Ontario Nurses Association, the Canadian Association of Hospital Auxiliaries, the Canadian Association of Occupational Therapists, the Canadian Association of Pathologists, the Canadian Chiropractic Association, the Canadian Council of Cardiovascular Nurses, the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association, the Canadian Physiotherapy Association, the Cancer Treatment and Research Foundation of Nova Scotia, the Cancer Control Agency of British Columbia, the University of Alberta Cross Cancer Institute, the Hamilton Regional Cancer Centre, the Ontario Cancer Institute. These are major national organizations, universities, and regional bodies.

Let me mention some local bodies and provincial bodies: the Porcupine Health Unit, Ottawa-Carleton Regional Health Unit, Public Health Association of Nova Scotia, Manitoba Medical Association, Medical Society of Nova Scotia, Alberta Medical Association, British Columbia Medical Association, Ontario Public Health Association.

It is a very impressive list, and I am not yet finished. I think Hon. Members ought to know the quantity and quality of support of these major professional bodies that are supporting both Bills today. The list also includes: Allergy Information Association, Fort McMurray and District Health Unit, East York Health Unit, Northwest Territories Hospital Association, Ontario Thoracic Society, Central Kootenay Health Centre, South Peace Health Unit, Alberta Public Health Association.

There are also a number of labour bodies because employees are affected by my Bill. Major unions under federal jurisdiction are also supporters, including Canadian Labour Congress, Canadian Auto Workers, Public Service Alliance of Canada, Canadian Union of Public Employees, both the National Office and the Airline Division; and on the issue of a smoke-free workplace, ACTRA.

There are other citizens' organizations that represent millions of Canadians: National Action Committee on the Status of Women, Canadian Teachers' Federation, Canadian Home and School Parent-Teacher Federation, Ontario Federation of Home and School Associations.

A number of churches and individual religious leaders have written with their support for this legislation, including: Evangelical Lutheran Church in Canada, Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, the Salvation Army, the United Church, and the Presbyterian Church in Canada.

A number of Bishops have also written, including Reverend James MacDonald, Bishop of Charlottetown; Gilles Ouellet, Archbishop of Rimouski; Bishop Sotirios of the Greek Orthodox Church; and Cardinal Carter, Archbishop of Toronto.

Finally, a number of anti-smoking bodies, the National Program to Reduce Tobacco Use and Non-Smokers' Rights Association, have been organizations prominently involved in this struggle.

It is a long list, Mr. Speaker, but it is very important for people to understand the extent of support that there is for this Bill.

The Public Service Alliance of Canada has just sent a letter by hand addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), urging that Bill C-204 achieve third reading. The letter states: "On behalf of the 180,000 members of the Public Service Alliance of Canada . . . " and, after all they are a major sector of people who will be affected by the legislation " . . . I would urge you to support this Bill . . . ".

I can see that my time is running out. I would like to finish by reading a letter from Mrs. Betty Fox, mother of the late Terry Fox. The letter states:

> I am sure you can remember my son Terry's personal dedication to better health for Canadians through medical research on cancer. Our son Terry really wanted to make the world a better place in which to live.
> I am writing to you today to do your part to help carry out Terry's dream. I ask you to do all you can to support Bills C-51 and C-204 which are before Parliament. This will be a significant move to curb the curse of smoking-related cancer which the World Health Organization has pointed out is "fuelled mainly by intensive and ruthless promotional campaigns on the part of the trans-national tobacco companies".

Let's not waste precious medical research dollars on a problem that we can help prevent in the first place.

Let me say that both these Bills deserve our support today. I hope that all Hon. Members will achieve this historic day for Canada. The 35,000 Canadians who die every year, the hundreds of Canadians who are affected in many other ways by sickness and death in their families, count on Parliament to provide protection against this curse. Tobacco-related diseases are preventable. Today we have the opportunity with both Bills to take a step forward to protect the health of Canadians.

Mr. Chris Speyer (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I am compelled to rise today because I disagree with the philosophy of Bill C-51. My disagreement has been evidenced in committee, and many of the submissions that I have made have been in committee. Therefore, I am sure many people are aware of them, but it is important at third reading that the debate not conclude without stating a few of the matters on which I disagree with the Minister.

Let me say at the outset, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind as to the sincerity with which the Minister holds his views, particularly with respect to smoking-related deaths. I do not disagree with respect to the medical evidence that is available. Smoking causes illness, heart attacks, and death. To me, that is not the issue in this particular Bill.

There are essentially two points on which I am at odds with the Minister with respect to the Bill. The first has to do with the question of freedom. The Charter of Rights and Freedoms, to which the Minister alluded a few moments ago, states that "everyone has the fundamental freedoms of freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media".

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), on November 20, 1987, received from the former President of the Canadian Bar Association a long letter with respect to the legality of this Bill and whether or not it was an unwarranted intrusion on freedom of expression. I would like to read one paragraph of that letter, which reads:

Section 2(b) of the new Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees "freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression." Three Provincial Courts of Appeal have recognized that this guarantee extends to advertising (Manitoba, Quebec, and Alberta) and a fourth has confirmed that the guarantee protects all forms of expression (Ontario). Two Courts of Appeal, Quebec and Alberta, have indicated that total advertising bans never can be justified under the Charter.

There is absolutely no doubt in my mind that a blanket prohibition prohibiting the advertising of a legal product will be struck down. The challenge that was issued by the Minister when he spoke a few moments ago will certainly be taken up.

It is not only the former President of the Canadian Bar Association who has advised the committee with respect to this particular opinion. I am referring now to a cabinet document that was secured under freedom of information legislation. This was written by Martin Low, a scholar in the Department of Justice, who gives advice to all Governments with respect to the legality of certain legislation. He said:

On the assumption that commercial speech is protected by the Charter,—

And there is absolutely no doubt that it is. It goes on to say:

—I am of the opinion that a complete ban on tobacco advertising raises significant Charter concerns.

He goes on to say:

Blanket prohibitions severely restrict the exchange of information. They hamper on both the individual consumer's and society's interest in the free flow of information, particularly where the advertisements are neither misleading nor related to an unlawful activity.

Smoking is a lawful activity. Smoking tends to kill and it causes disease, but it is a legal activity. Certainly the individual who wrote this memorandum which was secured by the Brantford Expositor represented to the Government the problems the Government would have when this matter was challenged before the courts. I do not think there is any doubt about his conclusion. He says:

In conclusion, I believe that if a prohibition on tobacco advertising cannot be shown to affect tobacco use, a total ban on such advertising seriously risks offending section 2(b) of the Charter.

I sat through every committee hearing on the question as to whether or not there was a nexus between advertising on the one hand and reducing smoking on the other. There is absolutely no evidence that I heard that suggested that this would in any way reduce smoking. If someone could demonstrate to me that banning advertising would lead to the reduction of smoking, I would think again about this issue, but people are quitting smoking today for one reason, and that is, because they know that it is a serious health risk.

Let us look at the eastern European countries and at what is happening in Scandinavia where there are advertising bans. Read the evidence of what was said before the committee. If Hon. Members do not believe me with respect to this, they should read what Mr. Low said. He was advised, as indicated in this cabinet document, that the point of this Bill was that the advertising ban was for a purpose that was purely symbolic.

When the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) asked a question in May of last year of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) with respect to this, the Minister acknowledged at that time that it was only a symbolic gesture and that there was no real expectation that people would reduce smoking.

This Bill will have profound consequences on amateur sports and culture. The committee heard from cultural organizations such as the du Maurier Art Council which is against this Bill. The council told us what the effect would be on the cultural community. No one can deny that testimony. One can disagree with it and say that the Bill is far more important, but there will be some substantial effects.

We heard people from Tennis Canada, people from the Canadian Open golf tournaments and many advertisers. Let us make no mistake about it. There will be jobs lost as a result of this Bill, and I think it is thoroughly flawed legislation, from my particular vantage point.

I believe that one of the hallmarks of democracy is that we are allowed to choose even things which are not good for us. I do not doubt for a moment that smoking is bad, but one of the freedoms I think I have is the freedom to make that choice. I believe that it is far more intellectually honest to ban smoking than it is to ban the advertising of smoking.

Again, it may be my particular philosophy, but I also find that Government is far, far too intrusive into our lives. I am a little surprised at a Conservative Government that would bring in legislation such as this for only symbolic purposes.

I believe that in many ways, Bill C-204 is more intellectually honest than Bill C-51. It is one thing to say that people who go out for $100-dinners do not want others to ruin those dinners by smoking, and I really understand that, but it is another thing to ban the advertising of a legal product unless we can convince people that there will be a reduction in smoking as a result.

The fact is that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) made a very valid point and it was this: is this socially useful legislation? Sixty-six per cent of all the magazine advertising that comes into Canada is American. We will tell Maclean's magazine and other Canadian magazines that they cannot advertise smoking, but we will allow Time magazine, Sports Illustrated and Golf Digest to do it. They form 66 per cent of the market.

Let us talk about the social utility of this Bill. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East was quite right. If we thought we could ban advertising, if anyone in the House is under the illusion that this Bill will ban the advertising of smoking, I say that it is nonsense. Sixty-six per cent of the magazines we read come from the United States.

Let us talk about what has happened in Canada previously. There is no advertising of smoking on television, and that is by way of agreement. There is none on radio and we do not see it in the newspapers. We see it on billboards and on signs in corner stores. Where we see it most often is in magazines, and that is what we are banning. It is socially useless to say that Canadian magazines are cut off while allowing American magazines to advertise smoking. Again, it comes down to a question of symbolism, but at what cost? The cost will be jobs, and, most important to me, a loss of freedom.

There is no doubt in my judgment that to advertise a legal product does not offend the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We have the freedom to say what we want to say about legal products. I believe the legislation is flawed. I am troubled, because this is my tenth year in Parliament and in 10 years I have never voted against my Party. I have no tobacco farmers, to my personal knowledge—perhaps there is one—in my riding. There are no manufacturers of tobacco in my riding. There is no pressure within my riding from a political point of view to take up the cudgel with respect to this legislation, but I am annoyed by it because I think that it not only offends the Charter of Rights and the values I believe in, such as freedom of speech but, in addition, I think it is socially useless legislation.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer) on the position he has taken. I have listened to his speech very carefully and although I am a non-smoker myself and opposed to smoking, I agree with him that it would be more intellectually honest to outlaw smoking than to prohibit the right to advertise.

I agree with him that the position the Government is taking is directly contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I realize it was not easy for the Hon. Member to make his speech. As one Member of Parliament, I appreciate the position he has taken and the trouble and courage he took to make his speech.

I have one question for the Hon. Member. Concerning statistics on whether advertising does encourage smoking, could he tell us what he has found in his research in that regard?

Mr. Speyer: Mr. Speaker, first, may I thank the Hon. Member for the very generous comments he has given me. I am most appreciative.

With respect to answering the Member's question, it seems to me that the pivotal point with respect to this legislation is whether or not it will in any way reduce smoking. We asked every witness about statistics in other countries on the effectiveness of advertising to reduce smoking. It was absolutely clear to me on the evidence that I heard that there is nothing to justify that. Not only am I buoyed in terms of the evidence I heard but I do not believe the Government believes it. Why would you have a cabinet document which said it was only being done for symbolic reasons? Symbolic reasons are not bad reasons, Mr. Speaker. It may be you want to show that there is some sense of moral opprobrium against smoking. Being symbolic is necessarily not legitimate, but there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that the statistics to not warrant the conclusion that this legislation will reduce smoking by one cigarette.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. He is opposed to this legislation because he feels and said that advertising meant to promote smoking is ineffective and does not have any impact on whether people smoke or not. Why does he think that tobacco companies spend all the money they do on advertising if it is not to encourage people to smoke?

Related to that, the Member indicated he is opposing this legislation because of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What about the right to health? What about the right of the young person who will be induced to take up the habit of smoking as a result of advertising? What about that young person's right to health? What about the right of the public not to have commercial enterprises promoting a habit detrimental to health which costs the public purse because people develop diseases from smoking? What about the right of families to be free of suffering? What about the 35,000 people who die as a result of diseases caused by tobacco?

Mr. Speyer: I thank the Hon. Member for his question, Mr. Speaker. It is a perfectly reasonable one. The essence of what my friend is saying goes to smoking itself.

I listened to him articulate with some degree of force all the problems of smoking with respect to health and emotional concerns. As a result of that, he arrived at the essence of the question which is whether we should ban smoking itself. On the one hand, how can one say we are going to allow smoking and yet, on the other hand, say we will not allow the advertising of a product which is legal? That concerns me. If we were talking about a product that is illegal such as cocaine, that is different.

I acknowledge there are limits on speech. For example, defamation, libel and slander are limits on speech. There have to be some limits on speech. When you take a broad blanket and say there will be no advertising whatever with respect to a product I believe that you are intruding on a person's right to make a decision. Why doesn't the Hon. Member have the courage to sponsor a Bill to prohibit smoking? That is the point. It is not the advertising but the smoking itself. In brief response—

Mr. Keeper: Why do the companies advertise?

Mr. Speyer: May I be permitted to answer the Hon. Member's question?

Mr. Keeper: Why do the companies advertise?

Mr. Speyer: I would like to address that. There is no doubt, tobacco companies want to sell cigarettes. That is why they advertise. The evidence that persuaded me is that of market share. If the Hon. Member took a look at the eastern European bloc countries where there is really no advertising, the incidence of smoking is higher than we have here. If you take a look at what has happened in some Scandinavian countries, the incidence of smoking has not in any way decreased. Those countries have done something symbolic, which is what the Minister and the Government are trying to do. I do not agree to that. If we want to be courageous we should pass a ban on smoking itself, not the advertising of it.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have the opportunity today to address Bill C-51 and to speak in favour of albeit a very small step in the battle against tobacco addiction in this country. The short title of the Bill is the Tobacco Products Control Act, but I must say the short title is at variance with the long title. This is not really a tobacco products control Bill, it is a Bill of limited application. I believe it is of somewhat limited usefulness in the continuing struggle against tobacco addiction.

Nevertheless, a small step though this Bill will be, it is one that I and my Party support and a step that I believe all Members in this House should support. Bill C-51 has received the almost unanimous endorsement of health organizations in this country from the great national federations down to local clinics. It is a Bill that has received considerable public support. It has been the subject of a very targeted campaign against its passage by the smoking and tobacco products lobby but I believe there is no doubt that it is supported.

However, this sort of legislation must be seen in the context of other legislation that will be brought in, something I will return to later. What we have after all in the case—

[Translation]

As they say in French: le tabagisme est un fléau. It is indeed a plague that annually takes the lives of 35,000 fellow citizens.

[English]

That means that with some 30,000 to 32,000 people dying from smoking-related cancers and some 3,000 people dying from the effects of passive or side-stream smoking we have a loss in terms of the lives of Canadians that we cannot permit to continue.

• (1640)

The passive smoking problem is well-documented, much discussed and I will not comment on it in depth. However, I do believe the attention given to its effect is a clear indication that the social acceptability of smoking is declining. I believe that of course it must continue to decline and that any measure this House takes, even though it be seen by some as symbolic, is worth taking. I believe we will see a further decline in the social acceptability of smoking over the next few years. I believe it will soon come to be acknowledged that smoking in the presence, for example, of a child is a form of child abuse. I believe that society will recognize that smoking in the presence of one who does not desire to have the air polluted is indeed a form of assault. I believe that when it comes to workplace considerations, it can already be proven to be a civil tort if such a case were launched.

The Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer), who is perhaps now enjoying a coffee and cigarette, talked about free speech. He is a Member with enough experience and intellect, indeed he showed it in his speech, to recognize there are indeed limitations on the so-called freedom of speech in a free society. Any freedom exercised to the ultimate is mere libertinage. Any freedom pressed to its limits ends of course in the oppression of others. That is what happens on a daily, even hourly, basis, and even in these parliamentary precincts.

Let me talk about some of the limits on the concept of freedom of speech, limits which have come about in democratic societies as a response to the problems and antagonisms caused by licence instead of liberty in the exercise of free speech. So it is we have laws against incitement to hatred. We have laws against sedition. As the Hon. Member for Cambridge mentioned, we have laws against slander, libel, and defamation of character. We also have laws against conspiracy. We have laws against the publication of hate propaganda. We have laws against the promulgation of pornography, which so many of us see these days as being a little more than hate propaganda directed against women and children.

I have to say that the Hon. Member for Cambridge, in talking about tobacco as a legal product, is not conducting an adequate historical analysis before applying that judgment. I believe tobacco's legality today is nothing more than an accident. It is a result of the fact that tobacco smoking was widespread in this country before we realized and scientifically demonstrated the degree to which tobacco consumption affected health.

I see the legality of smoking as being nothing more than an historical accident. Yet I will concede that were we to talk of but a moment in time, the Hon. Member's arguments would have more credibility than in fact they do. In judging time by a moment we ignore the expanse of history. We ignore the actual process in society of which this Bill is but a part.

Another point that I must take up is the mention of choice in the consumption of tobacco. The fact is that talking of people choosing to smoke or choosing not to smoke ignores the very persuasive evidence that tobacco is an addictive narcotic. The fact that a person continues to smoke, and I think as a non-smoker this is something I have to remind myself of continually, does not necessarily reflect a choice. It reflects the fact that many people are addicted to the product. I think it is incumbent upon us as a society to be gentle with people but tough on behaviour. Therefore, as individuals we have to raise with those who offend, when they do so against the norms of those of us who wish to have breathable air, a defence not only of our civil liberty to breathable air but also our health.

As an asthmatic, I of course have a very strong personal stake in legislation, regulation, consensus or agreement which reduces the amount of smoke I am forced to inhale. Therefore, I have to support Bill C-51 on that ground.

In conclusion, I would like again to pick up the point I was making earlier about the place of this Bill in a continuum or ensemble of measures designed to reduce smoking. It cannot be seen as legislation that stands on its own. Indeed, I believe the Hon. Minister never intended this Bill should stand on its own but saw it as part of a sequence. In order to demonstrate that point I would like to quote from page 24:21 of the legislative committee hearing on Bill C-51 on January 25, 1988:

> In an additional effort to improve Canada's health-oriented policy on tobacco, further amendments will be introduced in order to update the Tobacco Restraint Act, which has made it illegal since 1908 to sell tobacco products to persons under the age of 16. At the report stage—and we have checked this with our lawyers and I would like to do it today but I cannot do it because of the scope of the bill—the government will seek the consent of Parliament to repeal the Tobacco Restraint Act and incorporate such provisions, updated so as to be relevant to the 1980s and 1990s, into Bill C-51.

It seems to me that that objective has fallen somewhat by the wayside, but I believe the intent of the Minister was very clear. While I, too, hold the value of intellectual honesty which the Hon. Member propounds, I have to ask: Does adherence to that value justify the sacrifice in lives and health which we as a society are allowing to continue? It is in that context that I believe Bill C-51 is worth-while, must be supported, and should pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Winegard: Mr. Speaker, I will not take long but I wish to comment on what the Hon. Member had to say because in his last few words he put the issue extraordinarily well and clearly. I also want to pick up on some of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer).

As a reformed sinner, with respect to smoking at least, I support the main thrust of this Bill, namely to reduce smoking. Used smoke now bothers me as well as other people, and I support the Minister in his attempt to promote our health and welfare and cause all of us to think twice about smoking. He is taking a direction that he and other Members of this House believe is right and appropriate, and generally I admire his advice, his integrity and great ability so much that I would automatically vote with the Minister. At the moment, however, what I cannot support is a complete ban on advertising of what is in fact at the moment, by historic chance or not, a legal and freely available product.

We are, I think, taking chances with our important concept of freedom of expression, but we may not accomplish our objectives, which is exactly what the previous speaker said. That is the trade-off in this debate. I think there are other ways to accomplish those objectives without jeopardizing the concept which, to me, is fundamental—the freedom of expression.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his very kind words in relation to my speech. I believe that if we were all to approach this legislation with the measure of thought which the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) has obviously brought to it, it would make for a very good debate.

I think many of us would like to have much more time to debate the principle of this Bill. I am still convinced of the correctness of my point. I am sure that those who feel afflicted by this legislation will seek a judgment in the courts regarding the applicability of the free speech provisions of the Charter of Rights to the commercial communication which, of course, the advertisers of tobacco would like to carry on unimpaired and unimpeded.

However, as I say, I believe that in a society in which people are responsible to and for each other, in which our laws are intertwined and interwoven economically and socially, we cannot, as a responsible society, pass up any measure which has the possibility of saving the lives and health of our fellow citizens.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to ask my colleague a question with regard to this legislation. It is basically the same question which I asked my colleague on the other side of the House a few minutes ago. What is the impact of the advertising which tobacco companies finance? Does the Hon. Member agree with Members on the other side of the House who seem to say that tobacco companies spend all this money advertising cigarettes without this advertising having any impact on people's behaviour? Does he really think that tobacco companies are stupid enough to waste their money in that way?

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I, too, cannot believe that these vast sums are spent without the idea of creating or persuading new smokers. Surely the fact is that they are spent in efforts to reinforce a climate of acceptability of smoking. Indeed, they are spent as well to get people to switch brands, but the overall message of the advertising campaigns of the industry is to try to ensure that smoking remains socially acceptable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Crowfoot (Mr. Malone) on debate I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mrs. Tardif: Mr. Speaker, I think that if you ask the House, you will find there is unanimous consent for allowing the debate on third reading of Bill C-51 to continue during the time normally set aside for Private Members' Business.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is the Private Members' motion of the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) which is to be debated. Is there unanimous consent to carry on debate past five o'clock?

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, it is not as though we have not thought about this debate at all. Private Members' hour does begin at five o'clock and I think we could conclude the debate and vote on this now. We are prepared to vote as quickly as possible. I say that we should get on with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It's not a question of a vote. A Member is rising to speak. If there is not agreement to allow the Hon. Member extra time, I will recognize the Hon. Member for Crowfoot on debate.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on what I think is an historic day, not only for Canada in terms of health measures and the improvement of the health of Canadians, but an historic day for Parliament and its processes. There is an opportunity for private Members to vote in accordance with their own research and individual judgments and, equally important, for private Members to reflect on the health and well-being of all Canadians.

I have only a few moments to take on a couple of the arguments which I have heard in opposition to this legislation which I think need be addressed. First is the notion of freedom. There is the argument that I have the freedom to smoke, that it may be bad for me, but that somehow I have the fundamental right to smoke.

The only way smokers can claim that they have the right and freedom to smoke is if they never breathe out. People who breathe into other people's air are contaminators. Research for more than four decades in 50 countries has clearly demonstrated that smoking tobacco is a health hazard.

It is also curiously interesting that those persons who would argue on the other side of the issue do not take the position that smoking is harmful.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since it is my Private Members' motion which is to be debated at five o'clock, I want to extend a courtesy to my hon. friend from Crowfoot. I do not want to curtail his comments and if he wants a few moments after five to round out his remarks I would suggest that we do not see the clock in order to allow him to complete his remarks, although I not agree to having more speeches.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we on this side would give unanimous consent to that, provided that it is understood that at the end of the remarks of the Hon. Member who had the floor we put this motion to a vote. Could someone on the government side, perhaps the Minister, react to this? I would like it to be well understood that this Party is not trying to hold up this piece of legislation and do not want a long drawn out debate on it. We would be willing to give consent, provided we take a vote when the hon. gentleman sits down.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I believe that that is acceptable. I think we all want a vote on Bill C-51. There is also to be a deferred vote later in the day. The Member has been very supportive of Bill C-51. However, we do not want to eat into the time of private Members. I thank the Members opposite for the courtesy they have extended.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed that after the Hon. Member for Crowfoot completes his remarks we will have the vote on Bill C-51?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank all Members of the House for the courtesy they have just extended. As soon as I have finished speaking every Member will want to vote on the Bill anyway.

There have been comments circulating with respect to the amount of tax dollars the Government of Canada receives from the tobacco industry. There has been a comment circulating throughout the duration of this debate trying to convince us that if we cut off or curtail tobacco advertising and, by implication, its sales, there would be a negative impact on the Treasury of the federal Government. The truth of the matter, Sir, which should be understood, is that if there were to be a cost recovery program for the use of tobacco the tax presently on tobacco would increase sevenfold.

• (1700)

If we take into account the clinic times, the hospital times, the deaths, the lost time from wages, all of which are related to sickness and illness from tobacco—

Mr. Halliday: And fires.

Mr. Malone: And fires, as the Member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) reminds me, if we took into account these costs, we would include in that formula seven times as much tax today to recover that cost to society. Even with 35,000 deaths per year directly related to smoking, and over 3,000 deaths from sidestream smoke, and the fact that the Treasury loses the billions of dollars it collects, there are still some who would argue that this noxious weed ought to be allowed to be sold freely to Canadians, as if this product could command the right to be advertised and promoted.

I want to go through the history of the tobacco industry. At one time its sales were primarily to males, promoting it as a male macho image. After the election of President Kennedy in the United States, who promoted the notion of a healthy America, the consumption of tobacco among males began to decrease significantly. The new thrust of advertising by the tobacco industry was for products like Virginia Slims. The message to females was: "You have come a long way, Baby". The theme was to capture a new market of female smokers.

More recently, when that market began to decline, it turned to young people. Now that it is being threatened by the activities taking place in the House of Commons, there has been a focus on Third World countries.

I have it from a very outstanding authority that Marlboro Country has gone to an African nation where their cigarettes are being promoted by people wearing white cowboy hats and white western uniforms while riding a white stallion and playing a banjo. They are given out to innocent people, cigarettes that have much higher tar content.

The World Health Organization will document the fact that they are moving their market increasingly into the Third World.

I do not believe those who suggest that tobacco advertising only shifts market brand. If that is true, why do Bell Canada or Alberta Government Telephones advertise their products? Why is there advertising in monopoly markets? The fact is that advertising does increase consumption.

It was most amazing to hear the advertisers try to convince the committee that their advertising is ineffective. I have never before heard any group or organization tell a committee that it is ineffective. Yet the theme of their submission was that they were only shifting the brand share from one to another. Even if one were to believe that, it does not give reason or logic as to why monopolies advertise their products.

There are those who believe that our freedoms are most important, regardless of the damage they do to society. They pretend that somehow freedom exists in isolation. There is no freedom except that freedom which is measured by an equal and corresponding set of responsibilities.

We have the freedom of speech, but that does not allow us to go into a theatre and shout "fire", just to watch people run. We have freedom of mobility, but that does not allow us to drive at any speed and on any side of the road.

The notion that freedom means we can smoke and blow it into the atmosphere knowing full well that some 35,000 people per year die from tobacco and another 3,000 die from sidestream smoke, does not make sense or provide an appropriate argument.

More than four decades of research and more than 50 countries has led to the conclusion over and over again that tobacco is harmful to our health. It has demonstrated that in some individuals the addiction to tobacco is as strong as the addiction to heroin.

Not only do those who deny the importance of that kind of research question the credibility of the medical and research profession, they place extreme doubt on the science itself. Science has compelling evidence to make us ask as a society to do what this Parliament has the opportunity to do. Let us move in the right direction to protect the well-being and health of our citizens.

We hear the argument that this is a legal product and cannot be banned. I suggest that if it were possible, this product might be made illegal. However, one-third of Canadians are addicted to it and they probably curse Sir Walter Raleigh for it. If it was an easy procedure, I suggest it might even be made illegal. Yet everyone knows that it cannot be done because one-third of Canadians are addicted to tobacco and we must gradually eliminate its use.

Let us consider the question of illegality. We cannot advertise prescription drugs, explosives or poisons. There are many products that may be legal but cannot be advertised. There is no justification to say that the product cannot be used on that basis.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for the time he has gracefully given to me to make some points. I want to thank all Parties for this opportunity to speak because I believe this is an important Bill.

While I wanted to go into some detailed analysis about job loss, suffice it to say that that argument falls pretty short when 35,000 people per year are dying. We do not need to be talking about some jobs lost here and there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it. Call in the Members.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.10 o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like an explanation. I think I heard Your Honour say "Call in the Members". Then I heard no bells, then I heard that the Bill had passed. Could I get a clarification?

• (1710)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I made a mistake. I did not see anyone rise. Therefore I changed my ruling.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Changed a ruling?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did not see five Members rising. Therefore I should not have called: "Call in the Members". I regret if that has disturbed the Hon. Member.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it is not that it has disturbed the Hon. Member. It is just that when Your Honour said: "Call in the Members" some Members who would like a recorded vote do not see the need to stand up because they have heard: "Call in the Members". To realize then that the Members are not being called in and that there is no recorded vote—

Mr. Baker: We want to know where those Members stand.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Some of us want to know where those Members stand on this Bill in this House.

Mr. Baker: Especially the Tories.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): The difference it makes when we hear: "Call in the Members" is that no one stands up.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my view the yeas had it. Therefore it was just as I said. I did not see anyone rising, which is why I called it that way. I regret if it causes the Hon. Member a problem.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. Are we now on Private Members' Business, M-143?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, we are.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a motion that has been put forward—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Resuming debate on M-143 with the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may be that the Standing Orders have been changed or not worth the paper on which they are written. However, according to the Standing Orders, if the Speaker says: "Call in the Members" there is to be a vote period. I would ask for a ruling on that point. That has been the time honoured tradition—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The only time I should have said: "Call in the Members" was when five Members were rising. There were not five Members rising.

Ms. Copps: The point is that the Chair said: "Call in the Members". According to the Standing Orders, that is the statement to call in the Members for a vote.

I understand the position of the Chair vis-à-vis the five Members not standing. However, the Chair said: "Call in the Members".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member does not see the position that the Chair is in right at this time. The Chair apologized to the Hon. Member. He did not see five Members. That was it. Therefore, it went on division.

Ms. Copps: There should be a vote.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. I wonder if the Chair could refer me to the Standing Order which permits a vote to be cancelled on the basis of an apology. I do not mean to be picky but it could be this issue or any other—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I would like to get a ruling from the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The vote can only be held if five Members rise. Five Members did not rise. Therefore, there was no vote. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre has the floor. I have made that ruling. That is it.

Ms. Copps: On a different point of order, Mr. Speaker. I would like to get a reference for the decision to nullify a statement made by the Chair vis-à-vis: "Call in the Members". I understand that five Members did not stand. Therefore—

An Hon. Member: That is the same point of order.

Ms. Copps: No, it is not. I would like to get a reference, if perhaps the Chair can reserve on advice to Hon. Members. I would like to know what Standing Order provides for a statement: "Call in the Members" which leads to a vote and then a nullity of that statement is made. I understand that the Speaker feels that he should not have said: "Call in the Members". But once Members are called in, the process is set in motion and Hon. Members must be called in by the traditions of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think that I will repeat it any more. I am just going to say this. When I did say that, I did not see five Members rise. I should not have said: "Call in the Members" because I did not see five Members rising. Whether I did or not, I retracted it. Therefore, I have ruled that the Bill has gone through on division.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise on a point of order because I was in the lobby on the telephone. I clearly stopped my conversation, looked at the monitor to see Your Honour clearly say: "Call in the Members". I therefore proceeded to continue my conversation. I thought that there would be an opportunity for Members to be called in and to be asked how they stand on this particular Bill. Therefore, I believe, with all due respect that I have for you and the chair, Mr. Speaker, that you needed to follow up on calling in the Members. Therefore I think it would be—

Mr. Benjamin: He could not, it was a slip of the tongue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This is the final time that I will say this. Five Members did not rise. I said: "Call in the Members" by mistake. I called it off immediately so that there was not a problem. Therefore, I will stick by that ruling. I will not hear any more points of order. I will ask the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to begin debate on Private Members' Business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on Motion No. 143 which was brought forward by my hon. colleague from Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and which—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques on a question of privilege.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to your last intervention and to explain that the privilege of some Members on this side of the House have been affected by the fact that Your Honour was saying that he made a mistake and withdraws, having said: "Call in the Members". Your Honour has to realize that it has had an effect on what Members on this side of the House would have done. If "Call in the Members" had not been said, some Members would have stood up to request a recorded vote. However, once the Chair said "Call in the Members" it was already done.

I would like to remind the Chair that one way to request a recorded vote is for five Members to stand up. There are other circumstances in which a recorded vote is called without five Members standing up. Sometimes the Chair is able to perceive that the House is in a mood to take a recorded vote. We have seen this for years.

I humbly submit that Members have to be guided with what is happening in this House by what the Chair makes by way of decisions. When the Chair says "Call in the Members" Members who are listening sitting in the House expect the bell to start ringing. They do not expect to have to stand and to yo-yo, and to request a second time that the bell be rung because there is already an order from the Chair.

The Chair may wish to withdraw that and to say: "I made a mistake". But the Chair has to realize that it changes what has happened in the House. It has an effect on what subsequently happened in the House.

I submit that if Your Honour is willing to recant and review what it has done, then certainly Your Honour is availing himself of the privilege to do it a second time. I am asking the Chair to put the question in the proper tradition and fashion.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre whose time I know we are using.

While it is the case that what we in Parliament refer to as the green book contains many rules and orders, there are rules and orders in that book that we presume take precedence one over the other. The one that I think would be very near the top of the level of precedence, and which it ought to be considered the most offensive for any Member of this Chamber to doubt or dispute, is to argue or to debate the ruling of a Speaker. I simply want to go on record, Sir, to say that whatever point of order a Member may feel he or she has, to dispute the Speaker on a matter such as this threatens Parliament itself. It is in you, your Chair, and in the symbol of the Mace that this place operates and functions, Mr. Speaker.

• (1720)

I submit that it is highly important that we proceed to Private Members' Business, that your ruling stand, now that it has been made, that it has to and must continue to be, and that we proceed with the business of the day without arguing with the authority of the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to thank all Hon. Members. I would like to say one more time that I must have been a little fast on the draw, but I did not see five Members rise.

In Erskine May on page 236 it states, "He", the Speaker, "prevents a division which in his opinion is unnecessarily claimed". The Hon. Member, who was a Chair officer himself, can look at the "Precincts and Organisation of Parliament" on page 236 and look at the ruling himself.

I regret that this has happened. It is unfortunate sometimes when we reach this time of the day that these things happen. We have had a great debate today, and I thought that everybody had agreed on the way these things were proceeding. I did not see five Members rise, and I claimed that the Bill went on division. That should be sufficient for the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) on debate.

Mr. Cassidy: I was fearing that my privileges would be jeopardized by being unable to speak to this particular motion.

Ms. Copps: Our privileges are jeopardized in reverse.

Mr. Benjamin: Just because you were asleep over there.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ADVISABILITY OF INFORMING DEPOSITORS WHEN DEPOSITS ARE UNINSURED

The House resumed from Monday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap):

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Perhaps I can say, while I am on debate, that last week I was a little hasty in criticizing the Chair when perhaps we made a bit of a slip-up in terms of what was happening at about the same time. Perhaps the Liberals' interventions were related to the fact that they intended to have five people stand and did not do so at the appropriate time.

The motion in front of the House right now is a motion proposed by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), asking that the Government, in conjunction with the provinces, establish a system whereby people who deposit money in financial institutions, and who are not covered by deposit insurance, be required to sign a waiver form to indicate that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured, in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

There have been a number of instances before the House where exactly that has happened. It happened in a number of cases where companies have played a bait and switch game with money that they have accepted from depositors. The depositors were led to believe that the money they were putting in was insured. They had been prudent in not putting more than $60,000 in a particular account with a particular institution. Yet, nonetheless, they found that they came up short, and in certain cases have lost all or a substantial amount of their life savings because of having put the money into an institution where it was not insured.

There is a very general problem that when there is insurance, people who put money on deposit, often some substantially in excess of $60,000, feel secure as a consequence of the insurance, and feel that as long as they spread their risk and do not put all the money into one institution, they do not have to worry and can go for absolutely the top rate of interest on their deposits without looking at the reputability or credibility of the institution.

Currently, steps are being taken to improve regulation of financial institutions. The Superintendent of Financial Institutions has received greater powers, new legislation, more staff, and has moved his locus of activities into the financial district in Toronto rather than being shut up here in Ottawa. Ottawa is the area that I represent and has many natural advantages, but perhaps it is a little distant from some of the things happening in financial markets.

The question of individual responsibility is a different question from that which I wish to deal with at the moment. I would not mind if a Government said that there should be a certain co-responsibility so that in the event of a financial failure the investor of over $10,000, bore a small proportion of the loss rather than being fully compensated, as is the case at the present time with insured deposits.

The present situation in which people put money into a trust company and believe that the money is an insured deposit, and then find out that there was no such insurance, because through one device or another the money had been put into an uninsured form of investment, creates tragic results. The purpose of this motion is to attempt to ensure that that does not occur.

The background is as follows: between 1923 and the late 1970s there were few, if any, financial institutions in this country that failed. Therefore, people who put their money into deposits, particularly after the advent of mortgage insurance, felt relatively secure. The only exception was the Atlantic Acceptance affair in the 1960s. I recall looking at that situation when I was a financial journalist with the Financial Times. In the wake of that, there was the deposit insurance which provided great deal of security. At the beginning of the 1980s that financial insurance was substantially increased in value in the wake of the Seaway and Greymac affair in Ontario, in which I was also involved as an MPP.

An increasing number of financial institutions have got into trouble. That is a product of a number of causes. For example, globalization of finance, the advent of new financial institutions, the entry of Schedule B banks into Canada, the creation of small trust companies, the growth of the credit union movement, and at times some difficulties experienced by credit unions together with their rapid and important growth, the collapse of the Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank in western Canada, a collapse that the Government was prepared to bail out. It was an indication of the difficulties that financial institutions have, and also of the difficulties of regionally based banks. It will be some time before we again see the emergence of regionally based banks, except those that are supported by large foreign banks such as occurred with the Hongkong and Shanghai bank acquisition of the Bank of British Columbia.

Not only have there been collapses, but also near misses. In many cases, these are covered by deposit insurance. However, we must be aware of the fact that there are a substantial number of investment instruments which are not insured. At the same time, there is a broader proportion of Canadians who, for various reasons, have funds to insure. There is an increasing number of Canadians who put money into RRSPs because they are self-employed, or because they are moving from job to job and can take out their pension fund from one employer and put it into an RRSP without a tax penalty, self-administer it, or give it to the trust of a financial institution, in order that they can keep in touch with it. In fact, in many cases people are encouraged to do so by the employer whom they leave, or are forced to do so because the employer that they left was shut down and no longer in business.

There are many investors who may not be very sophisticated. There are people in the agricultural community who perhaps are selling off their family farm, or a portion of it, in order to get a pension fund and are putting money into various type of investments in order to provide themselves with a retirement income. Perhaps there are people who regrettably are forced out of a job because of economic adjustment, forced by the trade agreement or other factors like that, who receive a sizeable amount of money and prudently put it into investments rather than spending it all. They find that they are looking at a combination of security and return, and one cannot always get both of those, yet people naively try to ensure that they get both.

The investment dealers hold about $3.5 billion in deposits from their clients and their customers, and the only insurance on that is what is called a national contingency fund. We know from the collapse of the Osler brokerage firm in Toronto that one such collapse can leave the fund empty. That contingency fund had about $20 million in credit and about $16 million in cash. The claims against it under the Osler bail-out exceeded, as I recall, the total amount it had on hand, and one particular client, in this case the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, has been left holding the bag as a consequence of that.

There are in addition hundreds of companies across Canada that offer financial services and fund their operations by issuing debt instruments which are totally uninsured. I think we have to find some balance. For example, for a debt instrument in the form of a bond of a company in the market, it would perhaps be wrong to have to require a waiver. We do not want to have paperwork where it is not necessary, but for an institution which is accepting deposits or deposit-like investments from the public and putting them into short-term and medium-term investments of at least up to five years, the argument of my friend from Kamloops—Shuswap is that if that money is not going into an insured form, the investor should be required to sign a waiver.

If the investor signs a waiver and then later, if the company goes bankrupt and the deposit cannot be repaid, says the company should have told him or her, there is not much we can do except to say: "We are awfully sorry, but you were told". If a person were led to sign a waiver through fraudulent action on behalf of a company, then he or she may wind up in the courts or may take action like that. Nonetheless, this particular proposal would, it seems to me, at least avoid some of the most egregious and difficult problems we have had, particularly with companies that are just on the borderline and just outside the frontier of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation or the provincial equivalent to provide deposit insurance to certain provincially-run institutions.

The resolution proposes that there should be co-operation with the provinces when dealing with those institutions that do not fall under federal jurisdiction directly. The federal Government should seek co-operation at the provincial level in order to make sure that shysters and fast-buck artists do not simply transfer their area of activities to the provincial level in order to avoid this measure being taken at the federal level.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret, but the Hon. Member's time has expired. I have given him a couple of extra minutes. Perhaps he would like to close off his comments.

Mr. Cassidy: I beg your pardon. I thank you for your attention, Mr. Speaker, and I hope very much that Members of the House will support this motion.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to rise to say a few words in connection with this motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), which is a request for the Government to consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

This is a very laudable motion. It deals, of course, with the question of consumer protection. That is something that I believe every one of us in the House can fully support. We support measures which will protect consumers, and particularly measures which will protect consumers of products of financial institutions.

All Hon. Members and all Canadians are aware that we have had problems in the recent past with financial institutions. I suppose the ones that come to my mind most readily are the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank, the Northland Bank and the Principal Group in the West. All of these have been high-profile items in Parliament and across Canada. Certainly they have had an enormous impact on Canadians, regardless of whether or not they had deposits in those institutions.

Hon. Members will recall the debates that ranged in this House with respect to the Government's efforts to assist depositors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and in the Northland Bank. Those efforts were in fact the sorts of efforts that seem to be represented in the motion that is before us today. They were efforts to protect the consumers of the services of financial institutions.

I was disturbed, as I am sure you were, Mr. Speaker, by the attitude of members of the Opposition with respect to those efforts of the Government of Canada to protect consumers, and in particular, the attitude of members of the Opposition with respect to the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Members of the Opposition, Members who are putting forward this motion and are supporting this motion and the concept of consumer protection for depositors in financial institutions, in effect took great umbrage at the Government's efforts to protect consumers in those cases, and in fact characterized those consumer protection efforts on the part of the Government as being efforts to bail out the big investors in the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. You and I, Mr. Speaker, know very well that that was not what was happening at all. In fact, the effort made on behalf of the Government, the successful effort, was an effort at consumer protection. It was an effort to protect the depositors in those banks.

While the depositors in those banks, to all intents and purposes, had huge deposits, those huge deposits represented the funds of a lot of little people. Those deposits included pension funds and deposits on behalf of credit unions. There were all sorts of large deposits which reflected the money of little people across Canada, the money of people who could not afford to lose their life savings if those banks went under. These people could not afford to lose their pension funds and the funds they had deposited in credit unions and institutions of that sort.

It was that effort on behalf of the Government to protect consumers in those cases that I personally believe was extremely laudable. I could not understand the attitude at that time of opposition Members in opposing those efforts and in trying to characterize them as some heinous crime rather than an effort to protect the average Canadian's savings through some sort of consumer protection for deposits in financial institutions.

In the case of the Principal Group failure, I also found it somewhat disconcerting to find that the argument of members of the Opposition had been reversed and flopped over. In that case, the Government clearly had a jurisdictional difficulty because the Principal Group was regulated provincially instead of federally, but now opposition Members were calling for exactly the opposite thing.

Instead of telling the Government that it should not help depositors, it was telling the Government that it should be rushing in to help with the Principal Group depositors, while in fact the Principal Group was a group of provincially-regulated institutions. It seemed inconsistent to me at that time. In fact, it seemed shocking to me that the Opposition would not want to protect consumers in the cases of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank but would want to have the Government protect consumers in the case of a financial institution which fell under provincial jurisdiction, not federal jurisdiction. That seemed inconsistent to me.

It seems even more inconsistent and inconceivable that here we now have a motion presented by the Hon. Member, laudable as it is, to protect consumers in this sort of a situation. While the principle is an outstanding one, and I certainly would be the last one to quarrel with it because I supported the Government in all of its efforts to protect consumers, I find it somewhat inconsistent and perhaps a little hypocritical to put forward this kind of a motion now.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, you know and I know that Canadians are interested not in buck-passing, not in seeing one Government say it is somebody else's fault—"It is not our fault and we will not do anything"—Canadians are interested in seeing some action, making sure that whoever is in office as far as a Government is concerned, federally or provincially, that it acts in their best interests and does everything to protect them as best it can. That is what the Government has been doing over the past four years or so since it took office in September, 1984.

The Government has introduced a number of measures to protect the consumer of the products of financial institutions, not only the ones to whom I have referred previously with respect to the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank, but it also issued a Green Paper in the spring, 1985, setting out some principles with respect to the regulation of financial institutions and the reform of the financial sector. Those principles, as you may recall, were as follows. First and foremost, it was to improve consumer protection; second, the strict control of self-dealing; third, to guard against abuses of conflict of interest; fourth, to promote competition, innovation and efficiency; fifth, to enhance the convenience and options available to consumers in the market-place; sixth, to broaden the sources of credit available to individuals and business; seventh, to ensure the soundness of financial institutions and the stability of financial systems; eighth, to promote international competitiveness and domestic economic growth; and ninth, to promote the harmonization of federal-provincial regulatory policies.

Embodied in those principles, first, is consumer protection, protecting the consumers of the services of financial institutions. As well, embodied in there is the principle of promoting harmony between federal and provincial regulatory policies. That, in effect, is the essence of the motion we are debating this evening. It is exactly that, and those are the principles on which the Government has been proceeding.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are signalling me that my time is running out. I wanted to point out a number of specific problems which this motion raises, notwithstanding that the principle is a laudatory one and one that I support, but I guess you are telling me that I do not have time to do so on this occasion. Perhaps Members of the House would give me unanimous consent to continue but if that is not the case, I will bow to your authority as members of the Opposition should have done a few moments ago.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would love to hear the Hon. Member carry on but I must recognize the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley)

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to speak on Motion No. 143 presented by the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I know I join Members on all sides of the House in applauding what I think is the general intent of the motion. The Hon. Member suggests in the motion that the Government of Canada, in co-operation with the provinces, establish a system where, in his words, individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event the institution goes bankrupt.

In the context in which the Member introduced this motion, it is a motion for which he should be commended. Obviously, for those of us in western Canada who have seen some considerable difficulties develop over the past few years and the resulting difficulties that depositors have suffered, this motion is well intentioned. As well intentioned as it is, does this motion address clearly both the problem and the solution?

When a Member of Parliament talks with a person who has literally been bilked out of his or her entire life savings, it is obviously the type of situation which evinces from all of us not only compassion and sympathy but more than a little outrage. Obviously a Member of Parliament is very concerned that the Government serves to protect the depositors and serves to protect those involved in financial institutions. This motion as it is worded does not first identify the problem and clearly does not move toward the solution.

I would refer Hon. Members to a couple of recent Bills which the Government has passed, namely, Bill C-42 and C-56, both of which deal with the financial sector. One deals with the issue of deposits. We should look at the role of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. This is the cornerstone of the system for protecting depositors. No one other than a member institution of CDIC can represent itself as being insured by CDIC. This was the case even before Bill C-42. But the Government went further, and in that Bill we improved the supervisory powers of the CDIC and added three further elements to clarify and extend the scope of the supervisory powers of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. I want to touch briefly on those three points, Mr. Speaker.

First, there was some question regarding the extent of the prohibition on people making an unauthorized representation that their institution was covered by CDIC. The reforms now clearly indicate that the existing ban applies both to an institution and to all persons acting as agents for an institution. There is some clarity now in terms of prohibiting unauthorized representations from being made. Second, the regulations in Bill C-42 now state that this, assuming an uninsured deposit, must be indicated in writing by the institution on the deposit contract. This is a new feature of the legislation. Third, Bill C-42 extended to all members of the CDIC the requirement that institutions which solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or other non-members of the CDIC must give notice to investors that such funds are not insured by CDIC.

Hon. Members will remember that during the debate on Bill C-42 we considered it in tandem with Bill C-56. Provisions of that legislation will help protect consumers who are not making conventional deposits but are, in effect, using deposit-like instruments. This Bill lays the groundwork for the creation of protection plans in the insurance industry. The Government is working with representatives of the industry to develop annuity and policyholder protection plans that will extend the type of protection CDIC does with the chartered banks.

The Government has been actively pursuing other avenues as well. We are all aware that the future of the financial sector is going to be very different from its past. New associations of companies and functions have already started to appear, and I think we all expect, as time goes on, that there will be more in the way of services being offered to consumers and more flexibility as both technology and regulation progress. New instruments inevitably will be found, some of which will be very much like deposits which may not be protected under CDIC guidelines. There should exist the type of vehicle that other deposit instruments are protected by. For that reason, it is of paramount importance that we continue to work along with the provinces and along with the specific industries to ensure that protection exists.

I want to speak a little about the need for this type of motion and question whether it is required at this time. The Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap, when he introduced the motion, and I quote from a Globe and Mail story dated March 1, 1988, said:

> As financial deregulation proceeds and competition for consumer deposits increases, the temptation to mislead consumers greatly increases—

I guess that goes to the fundamental view one has of not only the financial community but of life itself.

Members of the NDP say that as one begins to open up competition, particularly in the financial sector, this will somehow turn human beings into essentially law-breaking, evil people who will be compelled to take advantage of others. That grossly oversimplifies the financial community and human nature. I do not think that one can assume, as a result of the moving of the four traditional pillars, that financial institutions are going to be out bilking the aged and those who are less able to protect themselves. If you accepted that faulty premise, as the NDP has, would you then suggest that the alternative is signing a piece of paper, a waiver?

We all know about the so-called fine print. All of us, in getting something as simple as a car loan all the way up to more complicated contracts with banks and financial institutions, routinely sign certain pieces of paper. In fact, this is an argument we have all been following with respect to bank service charges where people are given notice of bank charges and they sign documents which indicate they are willing to accept the service charges. Yet there is controversy.

My point is that if there is great evil in the world and people will be encouraged to bilk widows out of their life savings, would they not do it even if you compelled them to sign a piece of paper? Clearly they would. The answer to the problem has to be a careful analysis of what we find in Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 through increased supervisory powers of the CDIC and increased opportunity to find methods to provide CDIC-like insurance for other types of investment instruments.

I want it to be clear that the kind of spirit with which all concerned Members of Parliament deal with aggrieved constituents, people who have indeed been misrepresented, leads us to be concerned to the extent that we move towards more progressive legislation. The Government has done that through Bill C-42 and Bill C-56. It also might lead Members, as the NDP has, to move to this signing of waivers.

In closing, I believe the way to go is to ensure that we have greater compliance, greater supervision, and while there might be a role at some point for this kind of approach, I do not believe it is suitable at this point. I think other Members want to speak on this issue and I will therefore yield to those who have some views on the usefulness of this type of motion and its place in the financial community.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to comment on this motion today. It raises a number of very appropriate questions about consumer protection and other aspects of the financial system, so I am happy to have this chance to speak. Nonetheless, I am not happy with certain assumptions it makes, and so I feel the House ought not to accept it.

This is now the third occasion on which we have had this motion before us, and Members opposite have ably expressed their opinions and not just about the subject of the motion. Their comments earlier in this debate are an attempt to criticize the federal Government for not exercising responsibility it does not have. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) wants the federal Government to assume an authority it does not have and intervene where it has no right to go. He wants us to take over the responsibilities of the Government which is responsible.

The previous Speaker referred to the Principal Group and comments in a newspaper article attributed to the mover of the motion. However, let us be very clear about this question of responsibility. Of the 127 different companies in the Principal Group, not one was federally regulated. Only one company, Principal Savings and Trust, was even a member of the CDIC. That Corporation moved quickly to discharge its responsibilities. In just over three weeks it arranged to pay out the insured deposits of 47,000 depositors through an agency agreement with Metropolitan Trust. Total pay-outs on that account have reached $116 million.

I have no trouble with the motion's call for co-operation between the provinces and the federal Government on consumer protection. Our reforms have set an example. We are proud of the work we are doing in this sector because we know that a new regime is necessary to ensure protection of the interests of depositors, borrowers and shareholders. Yet we cannot take responsibility for what is outside our jurisdiction. The federal Government has no desire to intrude on provincial jurisdiction. However, as a Government we hope the provincial authorities will study our regime carefully and work with us to ensure thorough and capable measures for all consumers throughout Canada.

I now want to turn to the reforms we have carried out already in the financial sector, reforms which have already strengthened the consumer protection regime. Bill C-42 and Bill C-56 made major changes to the regulatory framework in response to the demands of the institutions and the needs of consumers. We instituted the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and made important changes to the CDIC. We will be proceeding as quickly as possible with changes to the Trust and Loans Companies Act, the Insurance Companies Act, and other Acts to ensure that consumers are protected and the sector encouraged.

Even prior to these reforms, a non-member of CDIC was prohibited from representing itself as being insured by the CDIC. There has been a requirement for some time that uninsured instruments should be stamped as such. Bill C-42 added three important further elements to these measures.

First, it cleared up a question about the existing ban on unauthorized representations of insured status of member institutions or deposits received by them. This ban now clearly applies both to the institution and all persons acting as its agents.

Second, the Bill put into the Act a provision previously in the regulations. It is now a statutory requirement that when an institution takes a deposit which is not insured, this must be indicated in writing on the deposit contract.

Third, it instituted a new requirement that institutions, which solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or other non-members of the CDIC must give notice to investors that these companies are non-members and that such funds are not insured by the CDIC. The draft trust and loans legislation takes account of this by enabling the Governor in Council to make regulations imposing terms and conditions on the activities that companies undertake in the areas open to them. Similar provisions will be incorporated in the legislation governing banks and insurance companies.

I see that my time is running out. I was going to comment further on Bill C-56 but I will conclude with this. I believe that what is now in place, and those provisions now being implemented, will provide an appropriate degree of protection for consumers, that is depositors, borrowers and investors. I believe our approach to the question's federal-provincial dimension is also sound; we are not trying to impose our solution but are trying to work out a mutually agreeable solution. I am confident that our Government's approach is a good one.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wish to advise the House that tomorrow, immediately after Routine Proceedings, we will resume the procedural debate on the admissibility of Bill C-130, the free trade Bill. We understand that the Speaker may wish to reserve judgment and, therefore, we will not call the Bill. We will immediately move to resume debate on Bill C-129, the Air Canada privatization Bill.

Thursday, provided that the Air Canada privatization Bill, Bill C-129, is passed, we are trying to arrange progress on certain items of legislation under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight).

Mr. Speaker: It being 6.50 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.50 p.m.

HUMAN RIGHTS

DEATH OF PAVEL WONKA, CZECH DISSIDENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, today's events in Moscow lead me to raise again in this House the question of 35-year-old Czech dissident, Mr. Pavel Wonka, who died suddenly in a jail near Prague on April 26 last. The Governments of West Germany, Great Britain, the U.S., and France have requested the establishment of an independent group to examine the cause of his death.

Mr. Wonka was known as a supporter of human rights in Czechoslovakia. In 1986 he tried to run for public office, human rights groups report. He was arrested and charged with the offence of inciting a rebellion against the republic even though his election manifesto was said to be in harmony with the concepts of openness and reconstruction of the U.S.S.R. During his prison term Amnesty International adopted Mr. Wonka as a prisoner of conscience.

Glasnost is an encouraging concept but we have yet to see that it is truly practised. Let us hope that the events in Moscow this week will lead us to see concrete examples of improvements in human rights.

IMMIGRATION

SENATE DELAY IN PASSAGE OF REFUGEE LEGISLATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the events of the past week have shown again that unscrupulous individuals are prepared to take advantage of Canada's flawed refugee determination system. Bills C-55 and C-84 would correct this problem. Canadians should be aware that the Senate has continually refused to pass these Bills in the form in which they were endorsed by this democratically elected Chamber. Twenty-one hundred of my constituents have condemned this action.

I am disappointed in the Senate. However, I am more disappointed with the media for not challenging the undemocratic behaviour of the Senate.

• (1405)

Before 1984, as a private citizen, I would have thought that our free press would have been the first to condemn the continued obstruction of initiatives from the House of Commons. That has not happened, and I think that reflects poorly on all of us and is a source of sadness to everyone who cherishes democratic ideals.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—EFFECT ON FOOD PROCESSING INDUSTRY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, both the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and his predecessor say that the free trade agreement will not hurt our food processing industry. They are wrong.

On March 25, I reported that the Vice-President of McCain's Foods predicted 100,000 jobs would be lost in the agri-food sector in the next 15 years under the free trade agreement.

His boss, Harrison McCain, was quoted in the current issue of Maclean's as saying: "Don't dupe us in the food industry". He went on to ask Peter Newman that, if the deal is so wonderful, why are the company presidents across Canada not standing up and talking about doubling or tripling capacity?

Mum's the word for these presidents of these processing companies because they know they will have difficulty competing with cheaper U.S. raw material and cheaper U.S. labour, and they know they will have to close plants in Canada and make their expansions in the United States. They know the Mulroney-Reagan deal is bad news for Canadian agriculture, for its farmers and for its food processing workers. The Government is wrong to push this deal forward.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CHARLES NG—CALL FOR EXTRADITION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, Charles Ng, an illegal immigrant from Hong Kong who is wanted in the United States for committing 12 murders, is still sitting in a Canadian jail awaiting extradition. The State of California applied to have Mr. Ng extradited on February 17, August 26, and November 3, 1987. Each time his lawyers were successful in delaying his extradition by using the Charter and the fact that the State of California has a death penalty for murder.

Mr. Ng is an illegal alien and I feel he should not be accorded the same protection as Canadians. Further, these legal manoeuvres, especially since any decision will be appealed to the Supreme Court, will be very costly.

The Canadian taxpayers should not be footing the bill to defend, protect, and house an individual who is a cold blooded mass murderer and had no compassion for his victims. Canada cannot become a haven for death penalty fugitives.

I urge the Government to explore the possibility of having him extradited to a state that does not have the death penalty and let California obtain him through the American legal system. His victims deserve justice.

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS

TRIBUTE TO CARDINAL PAUL GRÉGOIRE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, when I went to the Sainte-Thérèse Seminary at the age of 13, I met Father Grégoire, who was then headmaster and father confessor. Later, when I studied law at the University of Montreal and became president of the law students association, our chaplain was someone who was affectionately referred to as Monsignor Greg. The students must have guessed that he was meant for great things.

The Pope has now appointed to the Sacred College this brilliant, humble and dedicated man, Paul Grégoire, Archbishop of Montreal. The appointment of His Eminence Cardinal Grégoire is an honour that reflects on Canada as a whole, an honour that is cause for rejoicing in Quebec and a source of great pride to the people of Montreal. We thank the Holy See and the Holy Father, and may Almighty God continue to guide, bless and protect my Archbishop and friend, His Eminence Cardinal Paul Grégoire.

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—PROPOSED DEFERRAL OF TAXES FOR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, western cattlemen are encountering serious drought related problems. Owing to lack of stock water and feed, some ranchers are forced to sell off their cows.

The cattlemen are the last group in the economy to ask for direct government assistance. What they do request is to be allowed to defer income tax when they are forced to sell their breeding stock as a result of adverse weather conditions. The sale proceeds would be set aside to be used to buy back into the market when the drought conditions end.

• (1410)

In central Canadian terms, these cows are the factory or plant that manufacture beef. The deferral of tax would enable the replacement of the ranchers' factory at a later date when there is adequate water and feed to sustain it.

Feed and freight assistance programs often distort market decisions. The tax deferral proposal is market neutral and costs the government Treasury nothing in the long run. This proposal deserves serious consideration.

VIA RAIL

REFUSAL OF REFRESHER COURSE FOR LOCOMOTIVE ENGINEERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it came to my attention on the May long weekend that VIA Rail had assigned two people who worked for VIA as switchmen in Winnipeg to Melville, Saskatchewan, where they were to begin immediately their work as locomotive engineers running passenger trains.

One of these men, for instance, trained as an engineer for CN in 1983, a freight engineer, and since 1984 has not run any kind of train at all—not even a yard engine. He has never run a passenger train.

CN, when it puts such people into service, gives them a two-week refresher course at Gimli, and other retraining. These workers asked for a similar refresher, but it appears that VIA cares less for the safety of its passengers than CN does for its non-human cargo. Property before people triumphs again.

I asked the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. St. Germain) to look into this early last week, hoping not to have to raise it publicly. But VIA is still refusing the refresher course for these individuals. It is satisfied that one of these men made one trip with a supervisor and then, now being retrained according to VIA's standards, is being sent out with another man with similar inexperience—exactly one less trip—so that the one can train the other.

Shameful! VIA should be hauled up into the Minister's office and made to account for this lack of safety practice and made to change the policy.

THE FAMILY

IMPORTANCE AND VALUE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, this week various groups are gathered here in Ottawa to a conference sponsored by Focus on the Family. The purpose of this conference and the focus of all the attending groups are to reinforce the importance and value of the family in Canada—indeed, in North America.

Clearly, history has revealed the strength of a nation is the family. The quickest way to destroy a nation is to destroy the family. Radical feminists have stated that thanks to their feminist movement the nuclear traditional family is a goner. What a sad commentary. Strengthening the family should not be a threat to equality for women. Every reasonable Canadian wants equality for women. This Government has made considerable progress in this regard.

I wish all those men and women attending the Focus on the Family conference a successful week.

HUMAN RIGHTS

CONDITIONS IN SOVIET UNION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, as the superpower summit draws to a close today in Moscow we are encouraged that human rights top the agenda.

Today, let Canada's voice of support for Soviet dissidents and refuseniks be heard along with that of United States President Reagan. We hope the Soviets soon deliver on their familiar commitment to increase religious freedom, and the right to immigration for Soviet Jews and others.

The Soviet leader this week called President Reagan's human rights interventions interfering in the domestic affairs of the Soviet Union. We hope Mr. Gorbachev will change his mind and respect the Soviets' signature on the Helsinki Accord through more concrete action.

As a sign of Canada's support, Canadian friends of these refuseniks and dissidents call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to direct our Canadian Embassy in Moscow to invite these people to cultural activities and celebrations inside the embassy on Canada Day. This action will be an example to the world of the freedoms that we in Canada enjoy, respect, and support world-wide for all peoples.

UPGRADING OF SEWAGE DISPOSAL FACILITIES ADVOCATED

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, in Environment Week let us be aware that a critical environmental problem is the way bodies of water like Lake Ontario are being polluted, very often by raw sewage. In many municipalities such as the city of Scarborough existing sewer systems are not enough to cope during heavy rains. As a result raw sewage is actually deposited in the lake.

To protect one of our most vital natural assets, upgrading sewage disposal facilities is imperative. Senior levels of government, along with municipal ones, should make this a priority.

PARLIAMENT

MEMBERS' SUPPORT FOR ANTI-TOBACCO CONSUMPTION LEGISLATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Canadians witnessed one of this Parliament's finest moments.

Most Members of Parliament work hard to make this place work, in the House of Commons, in its committees, and in those organizations associated with Parliament. However, there are special moments when Members rise to the occasion and demonstrate just how democratically and progressively our Canadian Parliament can perform.

One such occasion occurred on May 31, 1988, when Members of the House of Commons from all Parties from all sides of the House came together to support a Bill introduced by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald), and a Bill standing in the name of the Minister for National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) which together will dramatically reduce tobacco consumption in our country.

With the passage of these Bills Canada enters the family of progressive, caring, and thoughtful nations that have taken major steps to reduce tobacco consumption and thereby the deaths and the illnesses associated with smoking.

As a result of the actions taken by the Members of this House yesterday, Canadians will be healthier in the future and Canada will be a better place.

HOUSING

RESIDENTIAL REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—GLACE BAY TOWN COUNCIL REQUEST

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on May 27, 1988, the Chief Administrative Officer for the Town of Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, wrote to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) with respect to the Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program for his municipality.

In his letter the Chief Administrative Officer said: "The Residential Rehabilitation Assistance Program has benefited many low and moderate income citizens in rehabilitating their homes. Many seniors would not be able to stay in their homes without this type of help. Our RRAP allocation for 1988 is $255,000. This means that of the approximately 1,000 applications on file possibly only 35 will be processed in 1988. On behalf of the Town Council of the Town of Glace Bay, I ask that you take the necessary action to increase RRAP funding so that such a worthwhile program will not be in jeopardy."

I urge the Minister to listen to the advice of the Town Council of Glace Bay, and increase the Rehabilitation Assistance Program to help and to benefit the many fine citizens of that municipality as well as of the many surrounding areas.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OZONE LAYER RESEARCH—AWARD WON BY CANADIAN SCIENTISTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Canada's leading role in developing an international protocol to deal with chemicals having an attenuating effect on stratospheric ozone is well known. Depletion of the ozone layer, especially over polar regions, is of considerable concern to us.

What might not be quite as well known is that it was scientists in the Canadian Atmospheric Environment Service who developed the Brewer Spectrophotometer used to measure the amount of ozone or other gases in the atmospheric column, thereby making it an invaluable tool for atmospheric ozone research.

The receipt by those scientists of the "Excellence in Technology Transfer" award was extremely well deserved.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CANADIAN PATROL FRIGATE PROGRAM—PARAMAX ELECTRONICS—CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Supply and Services I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister.

The Minister of Supply and Services is responsible, on behalf of the Government of Canada and indeed, more important, on behalf of the taxpayers of Canada, for supervising the performance of contractors involved in the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program.

My question to the Acting Prime Minister is the following. Is the Minister aware of correspondence between Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd. and Paramax Electronics of Montreal indicating numerous defaults by Paramax in meeting its contractual obligations?

Has the Government instructed officials of Supply and Services to conduct regular audits to ensure that Paramax is and was fully in compliance with all government regulations as a major participant in the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Supply and Services is aware of the allegations raised by the Hon. Member.

The audit for 1986 has been completed. We are half way through the audit for 1987, and to date no irregularities or dissatisfaction have been uncovered. We are monitoring the situation closely. We are happy with the progress of the contract.

E. SYSTEMS CONTRACT TO SUPPLY RADIO SYSTEMS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, less than one hour ago I spoke with Sergeant Elwick of the RCMP Special Federal Investigations Branch to arrange to turn over to Sergeant Elwick, tomorrow morning at ten o'clock, internal documents which came into my possession late last night.

My supplementary to the Acting Minister is the following. Is he aware, and I believe he was the Minister of Supply and Services at the time, of a dispute between Paramex Electronics of Montreal and a U.S. sub-contractor, E. Systems, in which E. Systems attempted to earn 100 per cent profit of taxpayers' dollars on radio systems supplied for the Canadian frigate program? The dollar amount in question is in the millions.

Can the Minister answer that question?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to reply affirmatively or directly to that particular allegation, other than to repeat what I have said. We are auditing the contract, and to date no irregularities have been uncovered. The Hon. Member has brought a situation to our attention, and I will see it is pursued to ensure that we are on course.

AUDIT OF CONTRACT PERFORMANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a multibillion dollar defence contract. In the case of Paramex we are talking about a $1.25 billion subcontract. We are talking about more than fiscal year 1986.

The Minister just indicated that an internal audit is nearly completed and no irregularities have been found up until this time. Can he tell us when that audit is going to be completed? Will he make the information it contains available to the House of Commons?

Also can he tell the House whether or not in fiscal years 1984-85 and 1985-86 such audits were undertaken and whether or not the Government became aware of irregularities, many of which are noted in internal company documents I will make available to the RCMP tomorrow? They raise many questions of irregular practices.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Why are you holding them?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, a number of allegations have been made with respect to this contract for the last couple of years. When these matters are brought to our attention we investigate them. This is a sizeable contract and the Government accepts responsibility to continue monitoring and we will do so. The Hon. Member brought a situation to our attention and I undertake on behalf of the Minister to respond very soon.

Mr. Forrestall: Why is he hanging on to the documents?

DROUGHT IN WESTERN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The very serious drought in western Canada continues. Canadians all across the country are shocked by the images they see on television every night of dust storms, dry pastures, and cattle without feed.

The measures announced by the Minister yesterday for long-term well construction are appreciated and will be useful to the long-term supply of water. Can he say when he is going to announce a program for transportation of feed to the drought areas or movement of cattle out so as to stabilize a very uncertain situation for livestock herds in western Canada?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the tour of the drought area that my colleagues and I participated in Monday afternoon and evening was very useful. We saw it first-hand and of course there were no surprises whatsoever. My colleagues and I have been kept informed as well as our people in the field, primarily from PFRA. The meeting on Tuesday with farm leaders and our provincial counterparts was also very productive. The Hon. Member knows at that time we announced an additional $12 million to be used for the transportation of water supplies, the drilling of wells, purchase of pumps and pipes, as well as the hauling of water.

We have asked the drought committee to provide us with further recommendations within 10 days or two weeks to deal with what I like to term phase 3. That of course will be the response by both levels of government to deal with the livestock aspect of the drought.

PROPOSED CATTLE HERD STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1985 the Government made a commitment to establish a long-term disaster assistance program. It was very apparent to most people in western Canada that the drought was going to be very serious. Does the Minister really believe he can wait for another three weeks while more committee meetings take place before he announces a stabilization program for cattle herds? This might result in the dispersal of herds and a drop in prices, not to mention the uncertainty of livestock owners over whether or not they should disperse those herds because of the uncertainty over whether a program will be put in place and what the funding level will be.

I believe $50 per stock cow was provided in 1985 by the two levels of government. I hope the Minister could announce at least that much and perhaps a great deal more, because we are dealing with a drought in the spring of the year, not in the late summer.

• (1425)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must remind the Hon. Member that I did not say three weeks, I said a week, 10 days, or 2 weeks at the most. One thing we have to realize is that this is really at the request of the producers themselves. There is a good understanding between livestock producers and ourselves and a high level of confidence that they share with our Government because of the way in which we have responded to their problems in the past. We must recognize as well that decisions are already being made by producers based on their own particular situation.

Some producers in the Vulcan area have already decided to move liner loads of cattle from that area some 700 miles north to Peace River at a cost of about $1,500, many of which are cows. They will have to come back. If we have to get into phase 3, then everyone knows there will be retroactivity provisions anyhow.

People making those decisions today, who will make them tomorrow, and who made them yesterday, have made and are making them with the understanding that if we move in that direction obviously assistance will be retroactive.

Mr. Foster: Why wait?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PROPOSED CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade.

Since the U.S. implementing Bill on the trade agreement has now come from the two committees which had to handle it and since that Bill has, in fact, amended the agreement itself by references to moves against Canada in at least 12 economic sectors in the future, on everything from automobiles to oil and gas to zinc alloys, does the Minister himself consider it fair that the United States should, in effect, renegotiate this agreement while the Canadian Parliament is faced with a Bill which simply reflects the original signed agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought by now even the hon. gentleman would recognize that there is a considerable difference between the two systems of government in the two countries. One is the congressional system where the President is independent of Congress, and a Congress is independent of the President. The Americans do not have party discipline like in the New Democratic Party where, if the Leader says "bray like a donkey", then New Democrats all bray like donkeys.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In the United States the Americans do not have that.

What we have now are two key congressional committees, the Senate Finance Committee and the House Ways and Means Committee, which have resolved most of the differences between them. They have issued a press release with recommendations to the administration on what they feel should be in the implementing legislation.

The process has not stopped. The Energy Committee has to make its recommendations yet, but when they are all finished making their recommendations the administration will have to decide finally which legislation to introduce into Congress this month on behalf of the administration. Then everyone will have to vote straight up or down. But the Americans will vote, because in the United States they have not said that they will obstruct, try to hold up matters, or try to stop the majority from having their way. The Americans will do the democratic thing in the United States of America.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister that Senator Max Baucus, who is a member of this joint deliberation process, on CBC on Sunday morning indicated very clearly that the administration had been part of the process which had formed these recommendations and it intended to support them.

REDUCTION OF TARIFFS ON PLYWOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have the following supplementary. The Minister said that the Government protested against the decision to delay the reduction of tariffs on plywood, but the U.S. bill has maintained this decision. What is the Government doing now to protest this continuation?

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman knows that we sent a note of protest with respect to the plywood matter to the U.S. administration. The process is not finished yet. No formal, completed piece of legislation has yet been put before the Congress. The process continues.

I have protested to Mr. Yeutter. We have protested to Secretary Baker. We will continue to take the position that in our view the suggested plywood provision is inconsistent with the free trade agreement, and if they proceed with it we will take action under the free trade agreement to challenge it, or we will take some other action of our own that will penalize the Americans just as we feel they are penalizing us.

I must say that the Americans do feel that they have a grievance in connection with plywood standards. We cannot be blinded to the fact that the other side may have an argument, and they think they have an argument, but I am putting forward with all of the strength and conviction that I can muster our objections to these suggested provisions.

Mr. Langdon: God help us if there is that much strength and conviction being put forward that the Minister himself would suggest that the Americans actually do have an argument in this case.

LANDING RIGHTS FOR FISH CATCHES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, since the Government has protested against these other areas, why has the Government not protested against the provision in these Bills that allows the President and indeed requires the President to take action against Canada if we impose, as we promise to do, requirements for landing rights for western fish caught in Canadian waters? Why has the Government not made such a protest?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the first place the hon. gentleman has made an assumption that is not correct. Naturally we are protesting and we disagree with that language, but perhaps the hon. gentleman will read the clauses of the free trade agreement. I recommend this to the House.

I am initiating a $10-million campaign shortly so that Canadians will know of every facet of the agreement and how best to take advantage of the agreement. If, rather than opposing and obstructing, the hon. gentleman would look at the provisions of the agreement, he would see a clause in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement in which the Americans agree to the grandfathering of certain provisions with reference to the East Coast of Canada but reserve their rights to proceed under the GATT if they so wish in the future. That is a right that the Americans have that we cannot take from them, although we will strongly oppose any such action if they do commence any such action.

PROMOTION CAMPAIGN—CONTRACT WITH JOHN LASCHINGER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade and it concerns the juicy contract that the Minister for International Trade gave to his former leadership campaign manager, John Laschinger. The cost of running the trade office is somewhere in the area of $30 million. The previous ad campaign cost no less than $12.7 million. Now this new campaign with Mr. Laschinger will cost $10 million, for a grand total of $52,700,000.

How much of this latest $10-million goody contract will be going to the Minister's friend, Mr. Laschinger? Isn't that relationship just a bit too incestuous?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one has come to expect this kind of low-life behaviour from the Hon. Member. It was Thomas Carlyle who once said about Algernon Swinburne, after someone said he would like to introduce him to Swinburne, that he did not want to meet someone who was sitting in a sewer and adding to it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman is in the Swinburne category.

With respect to the question, we are planning a $10-million campaign so that Canadians will be better able to take advantage of the free trade agreement when it goes into effect. It will involve a series of seminars and conferences across the country. It will involve a series of studies of various industries to show them where opportunities lie for them in the United States market as the tariffs start to come off.

With respect to Mr. Laschinger's part in all of this, Mr. Laschinger is acting as a consultant. It is not a full-time job.

Mr. Boudria: Good justification there.

Ms. Copps: It's a part-time, $10-million job?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if I might complete my answer, it is not like the contracts that used to be handed out by the former administration.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps we should move to the next question and the Minister may be able to respond.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, am I ever glad that this is not a full-time job, otherwise it would cost a lot of money.

REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE TABLED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to ask the Minister for International Trade whether he is prepared to table the contract in the House today, so that Canadians will know how much it costs to have Mr. Laschinger as the Minister's campaign organizer.

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, Mr. Laschinger's contract will likely be for a period of three months. It could be extended and it might very well be extended. He is one of the ablest people in this business that one could find.

The contract is for an amount of $25,000 including expenses, not $5 million as was suggested by the Member from Winnipeg yesterday nor any of the other fantastic figures that were suggested. His qualifications include a Master's in Business Administration and four years as a senior official in the Government of Ontario where he was Director of Small Business Development and Director of International Trade Development, apart altogether from all his other skills, skills he has used to tackle the impossible. He assisted me in my campaign for the Party leadership.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CHILD CARE

NATIONAL CHILD CARE STRATEGY—COST-SHARED FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. According to media reports, the Government's child care strategy is delayed by funding problems. Would the Minister now recognize the real need for child care which he himself now admits will cost an extra $1.5 billion, money that he preferred before to put into tax measures? Will he reconsider his method of funding child care? Will he remove the cap from cost-shared funding so that the real cost of child care is shared more fairly with the provinces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the allegation that I have agreed to anything is absolutely wrong. Number one, I think the Hon. Member should know that.

Second, we said right from the beginning that we would show federal leadership with the program and that we would have certain objectives. Those objectives are being met. In fact, time after time the Hon. Member said that it would not work, the provinces would not co-operate and they would not agree. The very opposite is happening, and that is why we now have before us proposals that we are examining.

We will have final agreements with the provinces and the legislation will come forward. I hope that the Opposition for once will be more co-operative on legislation than it has been on this issue so far.

NATIONAL OBJECTIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that after four years of waiting there will be some federal leadership on this matter and some national objectives. I remind the Minister that the goal of 200,000 spaces over seven years will hardly respond to the needs of mothers, 60 per cent of whom are working mothers with children under 16. I would imagine most of them need child care.

• (1440)

The Minister referred to objectives. Will he establish, in the promised child care legislation, the national child care objectives as Meech Lake requires? Will these objectives cover funding for quality child care that is affordable and pays decent wages to care givers?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member again used the word "imagine". It seems to me that that is how most of her policies are put forward.

The point of the matter is that the plans that the provinces are putting forward and the plans that we put forward are solid plans backed up by federal leadership and money. As part of that operation wages and working conditions are improving as well, and thank goodness that is happening. That is part of the plan as well.

I am glad that for once the Hon. Member, who is nodding her head, recognizes that federal leadership is bringing the kinds of results which we always said it could.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PUBLIC SERVICE ALLIANCE OF CANADA—BAD FAITH BARGAINING DECISION

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. Last September the Public Service Alliance of Canada, on behalf of the Education Group which includes 2,300 language teachers, agreed to a settlement. They agreed to ratify it and then they bargained in bad faith, as was recently ruled by the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

This PSAC action is a disgrace and a betrayal of the collective bargaining process. I want to know what the Minister and the Government intend to do to resolve this outstanding matter on behalf of the language teachers who do not have a contract at this time.

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the decision by the Public Service Staff Relations Board is important because it does point out that the integrity of the entire bargaining process is at stake. It was very important that the PSSRB found bad faith bargaining on the part of the union in the case of this particular group.

With regard to what we are going to do, the Hon. Member knows that we are ready to listen to any constructive proposals put forward at this time. We are ready to resume negotiations at any time according to the provisions of the law governing labour relations.

DAY CARE

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S PARTICIPATION IN CREATION OF SPACES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He is no doubt aware that two days ago, the Province of Quebec submitted a request to his Department to create 60,000 day-care spaces in the Province of Quebec. He also knows perfectly that the Province of Ontario has already planned for 30,000 new spaces to expand its existing system. Could the Minister give the House the assurance today that these spaces will receive full federal funding?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee the Hon. Member, as I have right along, that the federal plan, along with the co-operation we are getting from the provinces, and the 200,000 quality spaces that we have projected in our plan will be delivered.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in other words the federal Government has slammed the door on the needs of millions of children who are not being represented in plans to expand child care spaces across the country.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Minister of Finance why the Treasury of Canada and the Prime Minister are slamming the door on the promise to Canadians that we would launch a national child care program.

Why will the Government not at least, in the House today, commit that it will finance, as promised in federal-provincial discussions, the 30,000 spaces proposed in the Province of Ontario, the 60,000 spaces proposed in the Province of Quebec, and the thousands of other spaces across the country for the children who are in need, the millions of children who are in need?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is slamming no doors shut. Frankly, that kind of stupid comment that is made so often by that Member adds nothing to either child care or debate in this House.

The point of the matter is that we are negotiating with the provinces. We do have a plan with the provinces. Obviously I am not going to put forward—

Ms. Copps: You're breaking your word.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am not breaking my word. Last Friday the Hon. Member said I was in Ottawa when I was in Alberta. She said I was doing things with regard to blood when I wasn't, I was on a drug strategy. That is how accurate the Member is, both here and everywhere else.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

PROPOSED BRITISH FUR LABELLING LEGISLATION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and is with regard to the question of British fur labelling. As the Minister knows, there has been a delay in the tabling of the fur labelling legislation in Britain but we do expect that it may come on very soon as an urgent matter.

We appreciate the efforts of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the representations that he has made on this issue to high level members of the British Cabinet. I have recently returned from the United Kingdom where I met with a number of British Members of Parliaments and Lords.

What is the Government doing to let British Members of Parliament and members of the House of Lords know about the position of Canadian parliamentarians regarding this fur labelling?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the support of the Hon. Member and her Party on the fur issue as it relates to Canadian hunters and trappers and their ability to maintain a way of life.

It is important to note that my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, has formally expressed the concerns of Canada. We have been able to participate in the British Museums Show to assist indigenous survival and to assist the aboriginal groups who are putting forward a very important message. I hope British parliamentarians and the British Government will take seriously the impact of this action on the ability of these groups to earn a living, to have an economic activity, and to maintain a recognized cultural pursuit.

The actions of the Commissioner, Mr. McMurtry, in delivering Canada's message, and continued pressure by the Member for the Yukon and other Members on both sides of the House to have Great Britain understand the importance of this industry to Canada's people are very important.

GOVERNMENT SUPPORT FOR INFORMATION CAMPAIGN IN BRITAIN

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we all know that the proposed British legislation is not only anti-trapping legislation but anti-fur legislation. It is, therefore, very important to act very forcefully.

Can the Minister tell this House how much money the Canadian Government has spent in Britain on an education campaign specifically directed to politicians? Some of the other organizations are directing such programs toward the public at large but my information is that there is very little information going to British politicians in general.

Could the Minister tell us approximately how much money been spent in the United Kingdom to counteract the anti-fur legislation?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, External Affairs has spent some $8.1 million on a program. Those dollars are being used to assist aboriginal and trapping groups, including the Canadian fur industry, in putting forward very forcefully the point of view that the Government and Members in this House have expressed.

I am pleased to have the support of the Hon. Member and her Party in this very difficult time when not only trapping but the fur industry in Canada are being threatened. I hope that support will continue. I would appreciate if she would keep her contacts up with her counterparts in Great Britain and attempt to convince them, as we have tried to convince the British Government, to act on behalf of this Canadian industry.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW BILL C-50

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last Thursday, I had the pleasure of meeting hundreds of early retirees from the Trois-Rivières area who object to Bill C-50, which will cut unemployment insurance benefits for older workers. Tomorrow, I will be in the beautiful riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, and I will meet the same people, hundreds of them, who feel it is totally unacceptable that this Bill should deprive them of their benefits. Could the Minister inform the House, considering the flexibility she has shown as the new Minister responsible for Immigration, whether she intends to withdraw Bill C-50 in order to eliminate this discrimination against older workers who, even if they lose their jobs and look for other work, are not entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits because they are drawing on their pension fund? Would she be prepared to amend the Bill to eliminate this discrimination?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have no plans to amend this legislation at this time. We are watching the situation very carefully.

As the Hon. Member knows, reasonable settlements were made with a great many of the people involved, so that we are really talking about a very few. We will continue to ensure that the legislation is fair for everyone.

[Translation]

DEMAND FOR EXPLANATIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister would do her homework, because there are still 40,000 cases, and tomorrow I will meet older workers in the area of Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean, and Mr. Clean, Mr. Bouchard is in trouble because of this Bill. How will the Minister explain to Canadians and to older workers that her Government wastes $30 million to sell its free trade propaganda, wastes huge sums of money on frigates, while workers who need help are denied benefits to which they are entitled and which they paid for out of their salaries? How will the Minister explain to these people that she cannot withdraw this Bill to give them a fair deal?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that some $137 million was paid as a result of the passage of Bill C-50. He also knows that the unemployment insurance account cannot be used as a form of supplementary income. Those funds belong to the people who paid into it from all across Canada. We take their payments into this as essentially being their own money and we do not use it as a form of supplementary benefit.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

ATTITUDES OF OTHER COUNTRIES—FORTHCOMING ECONOMIC SUMMIT IN TORONTO

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It concerns the fur issue.

Historically the indigenous people of Canada have relied very heavily on the fur industry. Within the next couple of weeks we will be host to an economic summit, with some 5,000 media world-wide in attendance.

Can the Minister seize the opportunity as a means of conveying to the world, including leading nations of the world, our concerns about policy and attitudes that have been expressed by some countries with regard to the fur trade?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, my colleague puts forward a very interesting suggestion and one I would like to explore with him and other Members of the House. I am aware of the excellent report of a standing committee of the House chaired by the Member for Wetaskiwin, co-chaired by the Member for Timiskaming, and on which the Hon. Member also served.

I believe there is an opportunity to explain to the media of the world, indeed to Europe, how opportunities will be denied, how pride will be denied, how a standard of living and indeed a tradition and culture of the indigenous people of Canada will be denied if this continues.

Another important concern is the fur industry which is very important right across the nation. I appreciate the Hon. Member's suggestion and would like to explore it.

ENERGY

BRITISH COLUMBIA HYDRO—EFFECT OF THERMAL PLANT ON AIR QUALITY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government is about to give permission to British Columbia Hydro to fire up its Burrard thermal plant in Port Moody, British Columbia. This is not for emergency power or load balancing, but for export of power to the United States.

Is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources aware that the air quality and ozone layer in the Fraser Valley in British Columbia are very fragile? Why is the Government about to give approval to this export of power? Why not put the interests of Canadians ahead of the interests of our American neighbours for once?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government will, of course, consider both the interests of Canadians and the interests of B.C. Hydro. In 1980, the utility requested permission for all units to be able to export energy. At the time, the Government refused to allow exports from the area where the Burrard thermal plant is located, since the plant had failed to obtain existing pollution control permits. Since then, the province authorized and granted the pollution control permits, and B.C. Hydro is now making a new submission to the National Energy Board, which has yet to reach a decision, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NOT APPROVE APPLICATION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will be aware that British Columbia does not have the highest requirements in terms of the environment, to put it mildly. Why does the Minister not tell B.C. Hydro that the federal Government will not approve this application? Otherwise, we will have to tell the old people in Fraser Valley that they will have to stay indoors this summer because of the pollution levels that will be caused in order to run American air conditioners in California. Stop accommodating the interests of the Americans and stand up for Canadians.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Parliament has adopted certain procedures, and I think it is the responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to abide by them. The request is now before the National Energy Board, and it is up to the Board to deal with the matter and make recommendations to the Minister, and then, and only then, will I make a decision, bearing in mind the interests of all concerned.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

WATER—SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA REPORT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Science Council of Canada once again brought to the attention of the public the Government's inability to deal with emerging water issues.

The Council says in the report released yesterday that Canadians must be made to realize that their supply of safe, clean water is seriously threatened and that governments have to recognize the threat and start spending more on water related issues.

Will the Minister recognize the error of his Government in cutting personnel and water related programs since 1984, and move immediately to reinstate such programs so as to deal with the emerging problems described in the Science Council report?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member will allow me to answer the question. We have every reason to be rather pleased with the report because it underscores and endorses the initiatives that have been taken by the Minister of the Environment and the Government. These initiatives are reflected in the federal water policy which was announced last fall.

The Minister is absent today because he is at McMaster University announcing a very exciting program which includes significant federal spending precisely in this area.

DEPARTMENTAL FUNDING AND STAFFING

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the initiatives to which the Minister is referring are not worth the paper they are written on unless there are people and programs and funds to implement them.

Does the Minister realize that in Environment Canada alone, over the last three or four years, some $70 million has been lost to inflation and over 300 scientists and technicians have been displaced because of the Government's fiscal policy?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, any objective observer comparing the record of the Minister of the Environment of the present Government with the Minister of the Environment of the former Government would obviously come to the conclusion that things are on track.

I told the Hon. Member that the Minister of the Environment is at McMaster University today to announce the establishment, together with the private sector and the university, of an industrial chair for industrial waste water treatment.

There are numerous initiatives like that, all of which are reflected in the Freshwater Act. If the Hon. Member would take the trouble to read it, I am sure he would be as excited as the rest of us with the prospects for the future.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BAND MEMBERSHIP LISTS—MONITORING OF TRANSFERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. It arises out of a concern expressed to me by the Chief of Sandy Lake, the largest of the 51 reserves in my riding.

The Government is presently compelling Indian bands which have taken over their membership codes to maintain two lists, one for the Department and one for those who are band members under their code. I would like to ask the Minister this. Since apparently the Department has no provisions to ensure that transfers are actually registered, how is it that a Department which is always crying poor and says that it cannot provide extra lands—nor can it provide enough money under C-31, the reinstatement law—can avoid double-funding situations if there is no mechanism to remove somebody from the list of the band from which they are being transferred?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the system of maintaining the memberships that have been transferred to band Governments, the proposition which the Hon. Member puts forward. I will check into it.

However, it is the responsibility of the bands now to maintain their memberships when they request that responsibility. The Member asks a question for which I do not have an answer at this time with respect to duplicate maintenance of membership. I will check into it and report back to him.

SELF-GOVERNMENT DISCUSSIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister who must be aware from press reports today of the frustration expressed by national Chief George Erasmus as regards the lack of progress on self-government.

Can the Minister tell us when the Government will be reopening talks on self-government? Particularly in view of such concerns as double membership lists, can he assure this House that those talks will be about genuine self-government and not simply about the delegation of administrative powers?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the matter of self-government, we have had discussions with representatives of the aboriginal groups with a view to reinstituting serious discussions. Unfortunately, the AFN was the only aboriginal group that did not agree to proceed with a plan which would have involved us going together to canvass with the provinces the prospects of a legitimate and serious reinstitution of these talks.

If the Hon. Member has any influence on Mr. Erasmus, now that his election is over, will he ask him to please get on board with the other aboriginal groups? Let us get on with this task.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hour this will be the last question. The Hon. Member for London East, a single question.

PORNOGRAPHY

BILL C-54—REQUEST FOR SECOND READING DEBATE

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. The Minister well knows that he has had overwhelming support for his pornography Bill, Bill C-54. Yet it seems stuck at first reading.

Can the Minister tell the House when he might expect Bill C-54 to come forward for second reading and be allowed to go to committee so that Canadians can have an opportunity to make some input to the Bill?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the Hon. Member's great interest in this very important topic. Unfortunately, in some ways the Opposition must not want this matter to get to committee but insists on filibustering the situation.

When we are trying to bring in legislation which in effect gives protection against exploitation of children, and which gives protection against the degradation of women, I think the people of Canada agree with the Hon. Member and will say to themselves: "Thank heavens we have Members like the Hon. Member for London East who have pressed this matter forward".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances I will take a single question from the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

STATUS OF MEMBER FOR ROSEDALE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, after that answer I was tempted to ask the Deputy Government House Leader when was the last time he called Bill C-54. We cannot filibuster a Bill that the Government does not want even to try to bring before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I do want to ask the Deputy Government House Leader this question. If, as stated in the Order in Council issued March 31, 1988, the former Secretary of State and Hon. Member for Rosedale was to start today as a commissioner to inquire into and make recommendations regarding the future of the Toronto Waterfront, I would like to know when that Member resigned his seat as the Hon. Member for Rosedale. If he resigned his seat either yesterday or today, why has the Government not called immediately a by-election to fill the vacancy as was done when Lucien Bouchard was named Secretary of State and the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean resigned his seat forthwith and a by-election was called forthwith?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly inquire as to the whereabouts of the exact letter of resignation in order that I can satisfy my friend's curiosity. We would want to give my hon. friend the same opportunity to find a candidate as he had in the last by-election.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We have had one nominated for a year.

Mr. Lewis: I know there was a great deal of difficulty in finding one.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think Your Honour would find that there would be unanimous consent to bring forward at this time and introduce the Bill which is on the Notice Paper in the name of the Minister of State for Transport (Mr. St. Germain) entitled an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (for the Minister of State (Transport)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and honour to present a petition on behalf of a number of petitioners from western Canada who are concerned that the federal Government lacks a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade deal with the United States. They believe that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of our political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership. It removes the power of the Canadian Government to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canadians. It certainly eliminates our ability to equalize opportunities between the regions of Canada.

They believe that this agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and it undermines our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve now to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

• (1510)

EQUALITY OF CHOICE IN CHILD CARE

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a lengthy petition signed by 4,712 Canadians from Victoria to Quebec; 24 towns and villages in Alberta, eight in British Columbia, three in Saskatchewan, two in Manitoba, 15 in Ontario, Cap de la Madeleine and Trois Rivieres in Quebec, and Whitehorse in the Yukon.

This petition was designed and brought forward by Kids First, a 1,200 member organization. It was started by two Calgarians, Teresa Del Frari, who has a Bachelor of Commerce degree and is a chartered accountant, and Brenda Ringdahl, who has a Bachelor of Science in Nursing, and is a registered nurse.

This petition states: "It is becoming increasingly common to learn of accounts of government encroachment upon the parental responsibility of child care decision-making; and government child care incentives do not consider the validity of parental care as a viable alternative to out-of-home child care; and parents are in the best position to determine what is the most appropriate and beneficial form of child rearing; and a considerable number of Canadians believe that the state, and their tax dollars, have no place in the area of child care which is a parental responsibility, except in cases of demonstrated financial need."

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act upon the problem of this limitation in choice for child care, and restore to the system fairness and justice, by opposing any form of national child care policy that does not provide equality of choice, thereby leaving the child care decision-making process with the parents where it belongs. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present to the House two petitions. One petition is from members of the communities of Shellbrook and Holbein in my constituency who call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the free trade agreement during a national general election. The petitioners state that the Government did not have a mandate to proceed with the agreement, and it compromises the sovereignty of Canada.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from a group of residents in my constituency who call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will, in the future, be commensurate with the seriousness of the illness in Canada.

The petitioners point out that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada, affects a large number of people, and that only minimal support is given to it.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadians who indicate that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised.

The trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to effectively control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

Therefore the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition signed by more than 100 Canadians from Airdrie, Crossfield, Calgary; and Ottawa, Limoges, and Gloucester in Ontario, which call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

IMMIGRATION—INCLUSION IN FAMILY CLASS—SPONSORING OF PARENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the constituency of Spadina and adjacent constituencies. The petition covers two points, one of which has already been addressed by the Minister. It is the matter of the inclusion of unmarried children of any age in the family class.

The other point that these petitioners have asked for has not yet been addressed. Two years ago, the then Justice Minister promised to eliminate the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents who have been here for three years or longer in order that people of either group would have equal right to sponsor parents of any age. This promise has not yet been addressed during the past two years. Therefore, the undersigned citizens and residents of Canada call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfils its promise now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition signed by a number of residents of Spadina. The petitioners are concerned that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has undertaken to negotiate with the President of the United States a so-called free trade agreement for which he has no mandate from the people of Canada. They point out that this will interfere with Canadian decisions by Parliament or others to develop our energy resources and to equalize the development opportunities between different regions. They also point out that the goal of the agreement stated by the Prime Minister was to secure guaranteed access to the United States market, and that that goal has failed. Therefore, the petitioners request that Parliament dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject this proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

IRRADIATION OF FOOD

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise and present petitions from the people of Chatham and Kent County. Approximately 600 people have attached signatures to these petitions, which have been properly certified for presentation.

The petitioners humbly pray that food irradiation not become part of food processing in this country, and that unbiased agencies and scientists complete studies of the safety of consuming food that has been irradiated. In the event that any food irradiation is permitted, it should be clearly labelled "treated with ionizing radiation".

NATIONAL FILM BOARD—BILLY BISHOP FILM

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of 35 constituents from a number of communities in the southwest Miramichi area of my riding.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to urge the Government that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) instruct the National Film Board to take action to have the National Film Board production of The Kid Who Couldn't Miss removed from distribution because it defames, without proof whatsoever, Billy Bishop, V.C., Canada's most highly decorated serviceman. As in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

BLOCK AVERAGING OF INCOME

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition from my constituency of Mackenzie. The petition is from farmers and fishermen who are worried about the change in their income, and humbly pray and call upon Parliament to take the necessary steps to retain block averaging for farmers and fishermen, as recommended by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs in its report on the White Paper on Tax Reform stage one.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and pleasure to rise and present a petition which contains more than 1,300 names from residents of Niagara Falls and Niagara-on-the-Lake, gathered in the parishes of Saint Antoine, St. Thomas More, St. Vincent de Paul, and Our Lady of the Scapular.

The petitioners state that because the Supreme Court of Canada has stripped all legal protection from unborn children, and believing as they do in the sanctity of all human life, they call upon Parliament to immediately enact a new law to protect human life in all its stages, and with those sentiments I completely agree.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Hon. Sinclair Stevens (York-Peel): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two identical petitions on behalf of residents of Newmarket, Aurora, Stouffville, Richmond Hill, and surrounding areas. The petitioners request that the Parliament of Canada ensure that research efforts related to the illness schizophrenia will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a petition signed by nearly 150 residents of the electoral district of Laval-des-Rapides who call upon Parliament to reject Canada Post's corporate plan and urge the Corporation to deliver priority post, registered mail, certified mail and parcels to 550 Henri-Bourassa Boulevard.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this petition is to prevent the closing of the local post office.

ARREST OF STUDENTS IN HONDURAS

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present three petitions to the House on behalf of constituents of mine. The first petition concerns students in Honduras who were recently arrested by Honduran security forces. Because Canada provides aid to Honduras, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the Government to denounce the use of torture during the interrogation of suspects. They demand that the physical integrity of the person being interrogated be respected, that internationally recognized legal procedures be used to determine innocence or guilt, and that human and civil rights be respected in that country.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Peter Peterson (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the other two petitions are from constituents of mine who would like to point out to the House the seriousness of an illness called schizophrenia. They would like the Government to increase research efforts to the point where it is commensurate with the seriousness of the illness in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM OVER NORTHERN CANADA

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by residents of Toronto, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and the Northwest Territories, concerning the agreement between the United States and Japan on the transportation by air of plutonium over Canada. The petitioners are concerned that should this take place it will represent a severe environmental threat and, should the plutonium fall into terrorist's hands, the threat of nuclear proliferation. The petitioners are extremely concerned about this issue and call upon the Parliament of Canada to recognize and speak out strongly against the dangers of such flights and say no to the transport of plutonium over northern Canadian territory.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege pursuant to Standing Order 106 to present a petition signed by some 90 residents of the communities of Kenora, Keewatin, Longbow Lake, and Redditt. The petitioners call upon Parliament to designate all communities in tier 3 ridings as eligible for the Northern Residents Tax Allowance.

PROHIBITION WITH REGARD TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present on behalf of quite a number of my constituents who live in the downtown area of Vancouver their concerns about the high incidence of crimes, including murder, robbery and sexual assault, committed with knives. It has been established that this is on the increase in all major cities across Canada. They call upon Parliament to amend the Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places with the exception of those who use a knife for legitimate work or who carry it for religious reasons such as the Sikhs.

CANADA POST CORPORATION RATES OF PAY

Question No. 315—Mr. Dorin:

1. Are the staff of Canada Post Corporation divided into occupational levels and, if so (a) what are they (b) for each level (i) how many employees are there (ii) what is the average salary (iii) what is the average salary for the comparable industrial level?

2. What would be the cost of extending door-to-door delivery to all Canadian households?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Canada Post Corporation informs me as follows:

1. (a), (b) (i), (ii) and (iii) See below.

2. Canada Post Corporation conducted a study to determine the cost effectiveness of providing nationwide private door-to-door mail delivery service. It has been estimated that it would cost the Corporation approximately $1.3 billion, over a five-year period, to convert 3.6 million points of call and extend door-to-door delivery across the country.

Note: Regular hourly rates are converted to FT annual salaries by multiplying the rate per hour by regular annual hours for each job classification.

Current information with respect to CPAA population distribution by job classification is not available, therefore consolidated average wage rates are specified.

A tentative agreement with IBEW will result in a 3 per cent wage increase effective September 16, 1987, and a further 3 per cent increase effective September 14, 1988.

PRB average wage rates for labourers are used for comparison with CUPW, LCUC, and CPAA job classifications.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 29(1)

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY—CAMPAIGN ON SALE OF CANADIAN FURS

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise Hon. Members that I have received two applications for an emergency debate under Standing Order 29(1) with respect to the action of anti-fur lobbyists in Europe and the intentions of the British Government. The first application is made by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and I shall hear him, and then hear the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McDougall) on the second application on the same point.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I rise today under Standing Order 29 to ask for an emergency debate on a subject which affects all parts of our country. The Canadian fur industry is being jeopardized by recent happenings in Europe and Britain. The anti-fur campaign has mounted an aggressive assault on our industry. European boycotts, called for by animal rights groups, seriously threaten Canadian trappers across our land, particularly our native people who harvest fur-bearing animals for their livelihood. Currently the British Government is considering harmful legislation requiring fur products to be tagged with labels in an effort to stop retailers from selling furs and the public from purchasing them.

As you know, in December, 1986, The Fur Issue report called for the Government to play an active role, along with the industry and its representatives, in supporting and promoting the industry, its trappers, and the aboriginal harvest activities. The Government was called upon to promote the industry in overseas posts and assist it in countering the threat posed by the animal rights campaign.

In writing that report a lot of hard work was done by Members on both sides of the House. Clearly this is a non-partisan issue, one that we as representatives must work on together to maintain the fur industry for not only the economic implications, but more important for the cultural continuity of our native and northern communities.

The economic importance of trapping and the fur trade to Canadians cannot be doubted. The fur industry is worth approximately $600 million annually, with a spin-off of $200 million to allied industries. For the last two to three years Canadian fur exports contributed approximately $350 million annually to Canada's balance of payments. It is estimated that 105,000 Canadians earn all or part of their income through the fur industry. Approximately 100,000 are trappers, half of those being aboriginal people. There are approximately 3,000 Canadians in the manufacturing end, and more than 80 per cent of retail fur sales in Canada are made through privately owned, family run, one store businesses.

Trapping and the fur industry are vital not only to Canadians whose livelihood depends upon them, but the country as well. To native people trapping involves more than simply trying to earn cash income. It implies a unique social, spiritual and cultural relationship with the land and its resources.

In closing, Canadians have been busy trying to resolve this problem, but I raise this issue today because I feel it is extremely important at this time to send a strong message to the British and European Parliaments and public. In this time of need we as Canadian parliamentarians must be active. We must remain steadfast in our support for the fur industry, our support for trappers across the country, our northern communities, and in support of our native communities and peoples for whom the fur trade is an integral part of their lives.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 29 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing the impending disaster facing the Canadian fur industry.

The proposed fur labelling in garments which is being proposed by the British legislature which will say, in effect, that furs may have been caught by leg-hold traps will have devastating effects on the Canadian industry. There is an urgent and pressing need to discuss this issue now because the Order which was postponed on May 20 will certainly be coming forward within the next week or two.

Further to that, Mr. Speaker, in my discussions with the British Trade Minister about this issue he clearly sees it as what he calls a minimal measure in response to the lobby. Those people who followed the seal issue and other Members who were here at that time will know exactly what the effects of such "minimal response" can be on an entire industry.

I feel there is a good case for this matter to be an urgent issue not just for northerners because this issue affects people from all provinces as well as the northern territories and it affects those in the industry, those who trap and farm furs. No one is under any illusion that this is not anti-trapping legislation being discussed here, but anti-fur legislation. I can assure you that in my conversations with British Members of Parliament they are clear on this. It is absolutely essential we now send a very strong message to British parliamentarians about the views of Canadian parliamentarians.

Over the past weekend I had the opportunity to speak to many trappers, aboriginal trappers and others, who are out now that spring is here cutting sections for their trap lines. They are devastated by this proposal and it is causing panic among trappers and those in the industry. They feel that their life-style and economic development will simply be wiped away. This is a particularly important issue to those people in Canada who do not have a number of economic opportunities available to them, especially people in rural areas for whom this is an extremely important activity. It is the harvesting of a renewable resource which should be supported by this House.

Therefore, I urge you, Mr. Speaker, to consider this request so that we may send a strong message to British parliamentarians.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Liberal Opposition I want to indicate the support of my Party for these two applications for an emergency debate.

The entire fur industry is threatened. Threats are centred in our markets abroad, Europe and the United Kingdom, and are based mainly on misinformation which is reinforced by misdirected emotions propagated by those who espouse animal rights, that is, equating the rights of animals with the rights of human beings. Some people believe that animals should be protected by a Charter or a Bill of Rights. These people should clearly be differentiated from those who support Humane Societies working to protect animals from cruelty. But humane trapping has been developed and is used more and more in Canada.

When threats such as those which mostly affect the indigenous or aboriginal peoples of Canada, their livelihood, their well-being, the small degree of economic independence they presently possess and when a part of these threats come from Westminster, the Mother of Parliament which, when our Constitution was being patriated expressed deep and abiding concern for Canadian native people, I believe it is time for this Parliament to express clearly and unequivocally its support of the legitimacy of Canada's fur industry.

Therefore, I and the Liberal Opposition support the application presented to you, Sir, by my two hon. friends and colleagues from Timiskaming and Yukon.

Mr. Speaker: The disposition of the House is, I think, quite clear. Therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 29(8) this matter will be considered this evening at eight o'clock p.m.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

On the Order: Second reading and Reference:

May 24, 1988—Mr. Crosbie—Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It was understood when we completed the procedural arguments on the point of order on Monday that if there are other points of order about the acceptability of Bill C-130, to implement the trade agreement with the United States, that these points of order could be raised today. Therefore, I am rising to raise the first of two separate points that I want to bring to your attention.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member could excuse me, I want to be sure that the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) is here. Could we have the Minister of State back in the Chamber for just a moment?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I very much appreciate the courtesy of the Minister of State. I just want to be absolutely sure for the record that the Hon. Minister of State expects this discussion to take place at this time and is in accord with it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there was no intended discourtesy to my friend. I was called to the lobby. It is our intention, as my hon. friend said, to complete the debate on the procedural admissibility of Bill C-130. I will naturally be listening to my hon. friend and will be replying.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister of State. I now recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on continued discussion with respect to the admissibility of the trade Bill.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-130 has a transitional section. It purports to amend not only statutes or Acts that have been adopted in the present session, which is quite normal, but also it purports to amend Bills which are currently before the House, which have not yet been adopted and which have not yet become statutes or Acts.

If you look at Bill C-130 you will note that Clause 149 seeks to amend Bill C-60 dealing with copyright and Clause 150 seeks to amend Bill C-110 on trade tribunals. I submit that this procedure, that is, to use the transitional section of Bill C-130 to amend Bills which are still under consideration by this House is something which is not in order. I submit the proper thing for the Government to do would have been to amend the Bills in question directly. There are opportunities for that through the committee stage of consideration and the report stage. It could be, although it is more difficult I admit, that under certain circumstances amendments would be possible on second and third reading.

To the extent that the Bills in question have not yet received Royal Assent and become statutes, it would be more proper to amend them directly rather than through the transitional section of Bill C-130.

Therefore, I challenge the acceptability of Bill C-130 because I submit that its Clause 149 attempting to amend Bill C-60 and its Clause 150 attempting to amend Bill C-110 are improper and taint the entire Bill. This is the point of order I wish to raise on the matter of the improper use of Bill C-130 to amend Bills which are still under consideration and have not yet themselves become statutes.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). I think I have the point. It is a succinct one. I of course will consider it, but I would like to hear from the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) and it may well be that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) or others may want to comment.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, with specific reference to my friend's point, he suggested that certain parts of Bill C-130, through the transitional section, are not in order because they amend Bills presently before the House. I would draw the Chair's attention to a ruling made by Mr. Speaker Lamoureux on April 20, 1970, recorded in Hansard of that day at page 6047 and 6048. The Speaker said that while the argument is not without merit, it is somewhat premature. If the Bill receives second reading and is referred to committee, it would then be considered by a committee of the House along with the other two Bills and it would be at the third reading stage that the argument could be presented with much more force and at that point should be considered very seriously.

Another ruling of Mr. Speaker Lamoureux appears at page 3712 of Hansard for February 24, 1971. The ruling dealt with the same question, can the House proceed with the second reading of a Bill that contains provisions related to another Bill not yet adopted. The decision was yes, the Bill was properly before the House and the question for second reading could be put. The Speaker said that the House should not be put in a position where contrary decisions could be taken in respect of similar Bills in the same session. In that case, as no final decision had been taken on any particular clause of either Bill, there was nothing procedurally wrong in having before the House at the same time concurrent or related Bills which might be in contradiction with one another, either because of the terms of the proposed legislation itself or in relation to proposed amendments.

I submit that these cases are on point and that the House is able to proceed with debate at second reading stage of Bill C-130.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too want to address first the point raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). He mentioned that Bill C-130 involves legislation that is presently before the House.

Bill C-60 and Bill C-110 are complex Bills, and there is a good reason to question whether or not these Bills in their present form will be completed within this Parliament. It makes it very difficult for us to proceed with Bill C-130 because of the incredible complexity of that Bill and the fact that, as we said earlier in the week, when dealing with the various clauses of this omnibus Bill, we will also have to consider legislation that is presently before the House that is not moving particularly expeditiously. That simply makes it that much more difficult. If it does make a case, it would only make the case that once again, we should consider breaking up this legislation.

I would like to take a moment, while I am on my feet, to revisit two or three of the arguments put forward by the government House Leader on Monday in defence of the Bill and argue why I believe you should not be persuaded by the arguments he put forward in a most articulate fashion.

At page 15887 of Hansard, the Minister referred to the case that I cited during my argument in which a Speaker did in fact cause a motion that was before the House to be divided. The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) said:

> I would distinguish that particular incident by pointing out to the Chair that the flag debate was on the question of a resolution which contained two propositions, and the Chair in that case, Mr. Speaker McNaughton, found that he had the authority and perhaps the duty to divide them.
> I would submit that here we are dealing with a Bill and the same precedent does not apply.

The issue that was finally decided by Mr. Speaker McNaughton on that day in 1964 was whether or not the Chair had the authority to divide questions that were before the House. If I may, I will turn to the Speaker's ruling of that day. He said, according to Journals for Monday, June 15, 1964, the following:

> I must come to the conclusion that the motion before the House contains two propositions and since strong objections have been made to the effect that these two propositions should not be considered together, it is my duty to divide them . . .

Bill C-130, as I have argued, contains more than one proposition just as the flag debate resolution did in 1964. In that sense, there is absolutely no difference and it is not correct for the Minister of State to argue that this precedent cannot be referred to in this case. It is a precedent and it buttresses Beauchesne's Citation 415(1) which states:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately. The Speaker has a discretionary power to decide whether he should divide a motion.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that if you read carefully the Minister's intervention, you will find that it is implied that there is almost no circumstances at all in which one could conceivably envision the Speaker being in a position to be able to intervene and order a piece of legislation to be split into its constituent parts. If that is the case, then Citation 415 of Beauchesne's should be struck out as being no longer applicable. I would suggest that quite the contrary is true. Although this power should be used with some degree of prudence, Citation 415 is still operative and can be invoked by the Speaker to restrain a Government's procedural excesses, and in this case, we have seen government excesses par excellence.

I would also like to respond to the argument of the Minister of State which was first made in Mr. Speaker Jerome's ruling of May 11, 1977, that the ability of Members of Parliament to bring forward report stage motions to delete certain clauses of an omnibus Bill allows those Members to effectively isolate those separate propositions or principles in a Bill and force a vote on them separately. There is no question that this may indeed be possible at report stage, but as the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made clear in his intervention on this point the other day, we are now about to commence second reading, not report stage.

Beauchesne and Erskine May describe second reading stage as the most important stage through which a Bill must pass. It is approval in principle of the whole Bill, not a clause-by-clause consideration but approval of the whole Bill. How can we give approval in principle to a Bill that contains more than one principle? We cannot isolate these principles at this stage. It is at this stage first and foremost that the Bill must be split into its constituent parts so that we can cast judgment on these individual principles. That is a fundamental right of Members of Parliament and it is rooted in history. It is fundamental to the operation of this place and cannot so easily be tossed aside.

Last, the Minister argued that unlike the Energy Security Bill of 1982, Bill C-130 has no elements which could stand apart independently of the entire Bill. With all due respect to my hon. friend and colleague, that appears to be untrue. The four principles I enunciated in my previous intervention could surely stand alone in separate Bills.

I do not want to unnecessarily prolong this debate. It is my belief that the 1964 precedent in combination with Citation 415 of Beauchesne's and buttressed by the four separate principles in the Bill presently before us can all lead to only one conclusion: in the interests of parliamentary democracy and the traditions and customs of the House of Commons, the Chair must exercise its clear and undisputed authority to divide the Bill so that we as Members of the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada are not faced with having to vote on several propositions at one time. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to intervene.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) has a short intervention.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I was not here when the argument was made previously. Briefly, I had the experience of being involved in the bell ringing episode in a unique way. When the National Energy Program was introduced in one Bill, the bells were rung by the Official Opposition. Members of the Official Opposition did not show up for the vote and there was a parliamentary crisis.

I was involved in the negotiations for the settlement of that crisis along with Ian Deans, the then House Leader for the NDP, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young), the now Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), Mr. Erik Nielsen and for the Government, Marc Lalonde and Yvon Pinard, the then Government House Leader.

We were faced with the problem of what to do with a huge Bill. It was proposed that it be broken into, as I recall, 15 or 16 parts. We finally resolved to break it into eight Bills, I believe. The principle we applied was that of what parliamentarians would digest. You may call it digestibility. Could we digest the whole thing or did we have to break it into parts?

The energy committee considered all eight Bills. We did not have legislative committees then so the situation was a bit different. The solution we came to was to break the Bill into eight parts, to debate the eight parts together, and to refer them to one committee.

I do not think that is a legal precedent, but I thought I should bring my experiences forward to you, Sir, because your decision is obviously a very important one for the history of this House and the history of this country.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have a chance to make a short intervention today although I have not usually taken part in these debates on points of order except when they touch me directly because I have high confidence in our House Leader, others of our caucus, and yourself to resolve these matters. However, this one strikes me as of extraordinary importance.

I am concerned on the basis of the principle that has been referred to, Citation 415 of Beauchesne's, which reads:

> A motion which contains two or more distinct propositions may be divided so that the sense of the House may be taken on each separately.

I am concerned that what we have here is not only many separate propositions but, worse than that, propositions of two or three significantly different kinds. There are obviously propositions amending a couple of dozen existing Acts or Acts which are under consideration. They are as different as, for example, as referred to in Section 48, the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act and, the Bank Act as referred to in Sections 50 to 52—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but, in fairness to all other Hon. Members in this place, it was my understanding that we would continue this discussion this afternoon in order to raise some matters that had not been debated previously. Hon. Members and the public will know that the entire day on Monday was set aside for argument. The important matter which the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is addressing was addressed very fully and very capably at that time. Those interventions were of great assistance to the Chair.

My difficulty now is that in recognizing a number of Members who may very well like to say something, and were not here or were not recognized on Monday, I may be slipping into an error whereby I will be allowing something to take place which was not in the contemplation of the House Leaders when they had discussions with me and we arrived at a working arrangement. I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Minister of State on my concern.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on reflection I do have to say that your point is well taken. I certainly do not want to impede other Hon. Members who want to contribute to the very important issue that you are being called upon to consider. However, I do have to be fair and say that it is my understanding, as a result of our consultations, that today was to be used for arguing points of order other than the one that was raised last Monday.

Of course, I am not saying this in any way intending to cut off other people who want to bring things to your attention, but I do have to be fair and state what my honest recollection is as to the understandings of the purpose of the discussions today on the acceptability of Bill C-130.

Mr. Heap: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I certainly do not want to obtain a disruption of what was agreed to on Monday. I was about to come immediately to my second category of points. I do not know whether this was fully addressed on Monday or not and I stand to be corrected.

There is a difference of kind between the changes to a couple dozen of the Acts, to which I made a brief reference, and the transfer of powers as in Section 8 from Parliament to Cabinet in a generic way. As I understand it, Parliament would no longer have the right to debate all the matters referred to there. They would all be matters exclusively for Cabinet consideration by way of regulation.

This seems to me quite different from amending the Canada Agricultural Standards Act, the Bank Act, or whatever. It was this point upon which I wished to rise. I mentioned the others by example in order to set the contrast between, as I said, the amendment of a particular Act and a general principle of removing from Parliament the right to consider, debate, and vote on certain matters which is what seems to me would be enacted by Section 8 and perhaps also by Section 9.

As a sort of a third class, in addition to the Acts specified for amendment, with all future action relating to those apparently reserved to Cabinet only, the wording of Section 8 seems to me wide open in the sense that Acts which are not mentioned here for amendment may be, in effect, amended simply by Cabinet regulation without any opportunity of parliamentary consideration.

That seems to me an extraordinary departure from normal peacetime practice. It is almost like the War Measures Act. During war, and especially under conditions of secrecy, this sort of thing would be accepted. We discussed that in Bill C-77.

However, it says here: "Notwithstanding anything in any other Act or law, in the event of any inconsistency or conflict between" this Act and any other provisions the other provision "is inoperative and of no force".

We have very limited opportunity at this point to consider what Acts that might be considered to affect. It might be something quite unthought of even by the Cabinet or the American legislature but would come up two or three years from now, raised in the United States, brought to our Government, and dealt with by our Government simply by regulation with discussion behind closed doors, as is normal within Cabinet. Members of Parliament would be deprived of any opportunity to debate that, let alone to discuss it with interested members of the public, either by personal meetings, correspondence, or our committee process.

Therefore, I believe that at the very least Part I, Implementation of Agreement Generally, should be separated from the other parts because it is of a much more far-reaching and undefined nature.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) and I thank other Members for their patience. Keeping in mind the understanding upon which we came back to the House today, I must ask Hon. Members for their co-operation, not only with the Speaker but with the arrangements that were made in the House. I want to assure the Hon. Member for Spadina that the point he raised is not one which has completely escaped the Chair but I will consider very carefully the remarks he has just made.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address to you some brief remarks with respect to the alleged precedent brought to the attention of this House by the Deputy Government House Leader. After he raised the precedent it struck me as being so interesting that I got the book and read it myself. I want to point out that the book in question, entitled Selected Decisions of Speaker Lamoureux, is really a series of précis of the actual rulings in question.

• (1600)

The précis with respect to the ruling cited by the Deputy Government House Leader under the heading "Background" says:

> On February 19, during debate on the motion for second reading of Bill C-224, an Act relating to ambient air quality and to the control air pollution, Mr. McGrath (St. John's East) raised a point of order to claim that the bill was not properly before the House because certain provisions were consequential upon Parliament passing Bill C-207, an Act respecting the organization of the Government of Canada, presently being considered in the Committee of the Whole. Bill C-224 defined "the minister" as the Minister of the Environment while Bill C-207 contained a clause proposing the creation of the Department of the Environment.

I have not had time to look at the actual decision as transcribed in Hansard but assuming that this précis under the heading "Background" is accurate, I respectfully submit that the ruling of Speaker Lamoureux dated February 24, 1971, is not relevant to the current situation which I have raised. It would appear that the point of order on which Speaker Lamoureux ruled in February, 1971, dealt simply with the matter of one Bill referring to something which had no meaning unless one took into account another Bill which was before the House at the same time.

There is no suggestion in this précis that one of the two Bills had a clause in it which attempted to amend a clause of the other Bill before the House. If that is the case, then the precedent in question is clearly distinguishable and in my opinion is not in any way relevant to the case we are considering.

I have argued that what is wrong with the trade Bill, C-130, is that it attempts to formally amend another Bill which is still under consideration before the House. Therefore, my point is that in order to amend another Bill before the House, that latter Bill itself has to be amended and it cannot be done in another Bill. My point is not that one Bill cannot be passed because it refers to something in another Bill which has not yet been dealt with by the House. That is the point dealt with by Speaker Lamoureux, but that is not the point I raised earlier this afternoon in the House.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that there is a short intervention by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to refer to the point raised specifically by the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) with respect to Bill C-110. I have been a member of the legislative committee that has now completed its work. The Bill itself has been amended in the process of that legislative committee in such a way that it is not consistent with the various amendments which are suggested here within this part of the Bill dealing with it. For instance, there is a suggestion on page 120 that Bill C-110 be amended to make reference to "Subject to Section 59". However, the legislative committee made a decision to strike out Clause 59 from the Bill itself.

I suggest this adds force to the fact that we are dealing with a situation that is becoming far too complicated by trying to draw in Bills which not only have not been passed but are in the process of amendment and may, in fact probably will come back to the House before such time as the trade Bill itself is discussed. At that point the reference will not make sense according to the changes which have been agreed upon by the legislative committee.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I now want to raise a separate point of order. It is for that purpose that I want to draw your attention to Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130. Clause 6 of Bill C-130 states:

> For greater certainty, nothing in this Act, by specific mention or omission, limits in any manner the right of Parliament to enact legislation to implement any provision of the Agreement or fulfill any of the obligations of the Government of Canada under the Agreement.

Clause 9(1) states:

> The Governor in Council may, where the Governor in Council is of the opinion that, for the purpose of giving effect in a province to Chapter Eight of the Agreement, regulations are necessary in relation to any matter dealt with by that Chapter, make regulations for that purpose including, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, regulations requiring or prohibiting the doing of anything in relation to which a regulation may be made under this subsection and prescribing penalties for the contravention of or non-compliance with any such regulation.

Clause 9(5) states:

> A regulation made under subsection (1) in respect of a province is binding on Her Majesty in right of that province.

Clause 6 implicitly, and Clause 9 explicitly, propose amendments to the authority of the federal Parliament and Government with regard to the jurisdiction of the provinces under the Constitution Act. The Constitution clearly provides that amendments to the federal-provincial division of powers require a special procedure, that is to say, not an ordinary Bill but parallel resolutions of both Houses of Parliament and of a specified number of the provincial legislatures.

While the citations are many and clear that the Speaker cannot be called to rule upon questions of law, including constitutional law, there are procedural aspects of the Constitution that Speakers can and do rule upon.

An example of this relates to the financial initiative of the Crown. This relates to the principle that no measure to create an expenditure or to impose or alter the instance of a tax may be initiated by any Member other than a Minister.

While certain Standing Orders exist with regard to royal recommendations and to Ways and Means notices in order to assist the Chair with these matters, the fact remains that the financial initiative of the Crown is a constitutional principle. The Speaker is frequently called upon to rule on this constitutional principle and his rulings require a considerable degree of discretion and interpretation on his part.

The Standing Orders that flow from the Constitution, Standing Order 82, Standing Order 84 and Standing Order 86, provide only the bare bones for procedural rulings. Successive Speakers have been called upon and have answered the call to interpret these essentially constitutional points by defining and applying definitions as to what kind of proposals constitute expenditure for taxation.

As the House will recall, Standing Order 82 deals with the matter of Supply motions, Standing Order 84 deals with the matter of Ways and Means motions, and Standing Order 86 deals with the matter of the requirement that there be what is called a royal recommendation in order for the House to consider and adopt any matter that would call for expenditure. I submit that Standing Order 86 is basically a restatement of something which is set out very explicitly in our current Constitution, that is, that there cannot be any measure considered and adopted by this House unless it is preceded by the royal recommendation.

I have said that these Standing Orders provide only the bare bones for procedural rulings. I pointed out that successive Speakers have been called upon and have answered the call to interpret these essentially constitutional points. I repeat this because I think it is important.

I also want to say that these rulings often dwell upon extremely fine constitutional points, and the Chair's involvement in such matters clearly qualifies the general precept that the Chair does not involve itself in interpreting constitutional law.

Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130 present similar cases in that here in the point of order that I am making with regard to Clauses 6 and 9, the Speaker is not being asked by me to rule on the constitutional legality of the clauses but, rather, on the procedural propriety of the Government in attempting to amend the Constitution by this method with another distinct procedure. I submit the more appropriate and correct procedure is set out in the Constitution Act.

In asking the Chair to rule that Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130 make it impossible for the House to proceed with Bill C-130, I am not asking the Speaker to rule on the constitutionality or legality of these clauses. Instead, I am asking the Chair to determine that these clauses do in fact attempt to amend the federal-provincial division of powers set out in the Constitution, and as such require the special procedure for such amendments set out in the Constitution Act.

In this regard I want to stress that there is an alternate means of accomplishing what the Government wants to accomplish through Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130. However, that alternate means is through the procedure set out in the Constitution Act. That is to say the adoption of resolutions by this House and the other place, and the adoption of resolutions by the appropriate number of provincial legislatures. I submit that the Government in not adopting that course of action is doing something which is procedurally wrong and which makes impossible the acceptability of Bill C-130 for second reading debate and its subsequent stages.

I repeat that in asking Your Honour to rule along the lines that I have just argued I am not asking Your Honour to delve into the matter of constitutional law which Speakers have hesitated to get into in the past. Rather, I am asking Your Honour to rule in the kind of area Speakers have made rulings upon on many occasions in the past, areas arising out of our Standing Orders 82, 84 and 86, all of which deal with the financial initiatives of the Crown, a definite constitutional principle. In fact, when it comes to Standing Order 86, that Standing Order reflects and is based on a specific clause of the Constitution Act. The other Standing Orders 82 and 84 arise out of a well-established constitutional principle with respect to orders for Ways and Means and orders for Supply.

Speakers have not hesitated to rule on issues arising out of those Standing Orders simply because in some way they deal with constitutional matters. Thus I am saying by analogy, or in like case, that you, Mr. Speaker, have the authority to rule, and I think that you must rule, along the lines I am submitting. Because Clauses 6 and 9 deal with the division of powers between the federal Government and the provinces, this Bill is not acceptable and instead must deal with what the Government intends to accomplish in Clauses 6 and 9 through the procedure for constitutional amendment set out in the Constitution Act.

I point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that it is a generally accepted principle followed in our courts that when they rule on the law they do not look behind the law at the procedure followed by Parliament in enacting it. They are not inclined nor do they accept arguments that a law should be struck down because there was some flaw in the procedure in adopting it in Parliament or a legislature. Therefore, Sir, I submit it is very much the responsibility of the Chair to ensure that all the procedural proprieties are followed. It is definitely incumbent upon the Chair to take up the point I am making at this time and to consider it on its merits.

In order to save the time of the House I want to raise a concern in the form of a point of order with respect to Clause 8 since I think that in relation to that clause there is something that I would say is a constitutional point of a procedural nature in that Clause 8 gives Bill C-130 pre-eminence over all other federal legislation. Clause 8 states:

> Notwithstanding anything in any other Act or law, in the event of any inconsistency or conflict between
> (a) this Act, or any regulation made under this Act, or the Agreement, and
> (b) a provision of any other Act of Parliament or of any regulation within the meaning of section 2 of the Interpretation Act, other than a provision as enacted or amended by Part III or IV of this Act or any regulation made under a provision as so enacted or amended, the provision is inoperative and of no force or effect to the extent of the inconsistency or conflict.

Then there is a rather strange subclause (2) which states:

> No person shall, in the purported performance of duties or functions under any law of Canada, do any act, exercise any power or carry on any practice that is inconsistent with or contravenes this Act or any regulation made under this Act, or the Agreement.

I would argue that Clause 8 gives what might be called a constitution-like cast to the Bill, and has some grave implications for other legislation which I would say might be described as being of a quasi-constitutional nature, including such matters as the Official Languages Act, the Canada Elections Act, for example, dealing with election advertising, and many, many more statutes that are of a fundamental and organic nature and have what I might describe as a quasi-constitutional cast to them.

Also, there is a very serious problem with respect to Clause 8 in that it purports to give the Cabinet the power to amend other legislation. There is nothing in this clause giving Parliament any role in debating or passing upon the amendments that could be carried out under Clause 8. There is no way of defining or stating the extent to which under the exercise of this power the federal Cabinet would render a provision of another statute to be inoperative and of no force or effect.

Furthermore, if we look at subclause (2) we see that a person is forbidden, in the purported performance of his or her duties or functions under any law of Canada, to do any act, exercise any power, and so on, that is inconsistent with or contravenes this Act or any regulation made under this Act, or the agreement. People are put at risk not only of discipline within the Public Service, including the losing of their jobs, but also of possible criminal prosecution without being able to know exactly what it is they are not being allowed to do.

I can see a situation—and I hope it never arises—if this Act is passed of a public servant acting in good faith being deemed by his employer to be operating contrary to this subclause (2) and facing not only discipline up to dismissal but a possible criminal charge. It may be argued that there is nothing in this Act as such imposing criminal penalties for its breach. But if I am not mistaken there is a section in the Criminal Code imposing penalties for the breach of that section which creates a general offence of acting contrary to a federal statute.

Therefore, I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that what is stated in subclause (2) of Clause 8 may well be contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I do not think it is appropriate for the House to put hundreds of thousands of people in jeopardy through the vague wording which creates vast, unspecified, and undefined powers given to the federal Government.

With respect to the duties and responsibilities of the elected representatives of the Canadian people, it is not proper to have Clause 8(1) in effect which would take away from Parliament and give to the Cabinet the vast powers it would appear to do to amend and change any present or future Act of Parliament without the public being aware of what will be done, and without giving the House of Commons and the Senate, on behalf of the Canadian people, the authority to debate these changes and say yes or no to them.

There are grave problems of what I call a constitutional procedural aspect with Clause 8, subclauses (1) and (2). I make my comments with respect to Clause 8 at this time in order to save the time of the House. I ask you to consider what I have said with respect to Clause 8, subclauses (1) and (2), quite apart from the distinct arguments I have made with respect to the clause in the Bill arising out of what is purported by the Government to be carried out by Clauses 6 and 9.

There is always a problem with respect to our parliamentary system created, on the one hand, by the desire of the government of the day to exercise all the powers that it feels it needs to carry out its mandate, and on the other hand the desire, not only of the Opposition, but of Members generally to ensure there is some appropriate system of checks and balances upon the full and possible arbitrary exercise of that power. The problem is very much highlighted by the language of Clause 8, and also Clauses 6 and 9.

Speaking generally, Clauses 6 and 9, and Clause 8, perhaps as much as the omnibus nature of the Bill itself which was argued on Monday, create grave concerns about the proper operation of our parliamentary system and the ability of elected Members of Parliament, especially those who are not on the government side, to carry out their duties, to properly scrutinize legislation, to attempt to amend it, and see it is adopted, if it is adopted, in the best interests of the Canadian people, and generally of the rights of Members of Parliament, especially those in opposition to the Government of the day, to act in a manner that provides some appropriate system of checks and balances and enables them to hold to account the Government of the day.

The balance between the normal and understandable desires of the Government and the normal and understandable role of Members of Parliament, particularly those in Opposition to the Government of the day, has been tilted in a questionable and improper manner by the way this Bill has been drafted and presented to the House. That should be taken into account not only by you, Sir, but by the House and the people of the country in passing judgment on this Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in brief reply to my hon. friend's interesting argument, with respect to Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill

C-130, I appreciate that my friend was attempting to argue that when the Constitution is amended, it should be amended through the formal procedure that exists under the British North America Act or the Constitution Act. With respect, Mr. Speaker, that was another way of attempting to argue the constitutionality question. I refer to Beauchesne's on page 38 in Article 117(6) which states:

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law, though the same may be raised on a point of order or privilege.

I submit that my hon. friend called for a formal constitutional amendment. Although it is not part of a procedural argument, I would submit that there is sufficient support among the provinces to indicate tacit support for the free trade agreement. I submit that we are not changing the Constitution through Clauses 6 and 9.

With respect to the argument on Clause 8, I would submit that it is often the case that clauses in Bills are challenged as to acceptability. If there is to be a challenge, it should be a formal court challenge at some later date on some specific question of law. Our position as legislators is to debate the law in its substance and to decide. We believe that this law has one principle, that is, to implement the free trade agreement. I am satisfied that the drafting of the Bill has been done in such a manner that it does not offend the constitutionality, although I submit it is not your position to rule on same, and that Section 8 will be found to be in order.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing us to debate this procedurally. It has been a very useful exercise in which we have been pleased to participate. I appreciate that you will wish to reserve judgment, Mr. Speaker. We are anxious to proceed with the debate on the substance of the issue and look forward to the results of your deliberations at your earliest convenience.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I see the House Leader for the NDP entering the House. He may have some comments to make. While the Hon. Member is taking his seat, I wonder if I could bring one point to your attention, Mr. Speaker. The Deputy Government House Leader has stated if I am correct in stating that the action contemplated by the Government in Clauses 6 and 9 of Bill C-130 must be undertaken by way of constitutional amendment, that is already taken care of by the fact that there is tacit support by most of the provinces. I respectfully submit that even if that is correct, and I question it, that cannot be the same as a formal action required of provinces as set out in the Constitution Act, if there is to be a constitutional amendment.

The Deputy Government House Leader in expressing his opinion of the views of the provinces on the subject matter of Bill C-130, even if these views are in the form of tacit support, cannot be considered to be the formal action that is required in order to amend the Constitution as set out in the Constitution Act.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have no further comments to add to the procedural debate. I do wish to indicate, Mr. Speaker, as you made clear earlier, we do reserve the right to intervene on procedural matters as the Bill is proceeding through the various stages, but at this point I have no further words to add.

Mr. Speaker: I do wish to close off debate, but I wish to reply to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). He may well be referring to events that may or may not take place. I do not wish anyone to presume what course the debate may or may not take on a Bill when the acceptability of that Bill is the very issue in front of us.

Mr. Axworthy: I wish to provide a citation in considering the point raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor—West (Mr. Gray). It is contained in a document that would be useful for Your Honour to consult. It is the impact of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, a legal analysis that was tabled in the Ontario Legislature by the Attorney General for Ontario. I will not take the time of the House to go through all the argumentation, Sir, but it would be very important to deal with the conclusion where it states that the impact of the Bill tabled in the House has a severe limitation on the capacity of the provincial governments to govern, according to the present constitutional arrangements, and that this is a form of unilateral assertion of constitutional change.

I suggest to the Chair that this legal analysis of the Bill is an important substantiation of the argument put forward by my colleague that if we are going to change the Constitution, and certainly the federal Government has the right to do so, then it must be done under the laws prescribed in the Constitution and not by way of a Bill such as Bill C-130.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. Orders of the Day.

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Friday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. McDermid (p. 15859).

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to continue my contribution to the debate. I understand I have only about four minutes left.

Mr. Nowlan: Too long.

Mr. Angus: The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport says that this is too long. Perhaps he would be interested in hearing the results of the discussion we had this week with officials from Air Canada. We talked not about privatization per se but about replacement of some of Air Canada's aircraft.

One of the questions my colleague from Regina West asked was whether the Government gave instructions to Air Canada that when it selects a supplier for new aircraft there be Canadian content or Canadian job requirements. Air Canada has said no, there had been no such request. I then asked whether Air Canada, in its search for new equipment, required the successful bidder to ensure that jobs were created in Canada, parts were purchased in Canada, and that other benefits be included which would assist Canadian workers and the Canadian aerospace industry in particular. Air Canada replied no. Wardair does not have to do it, Canadian International does not have to do it, therefore Air Canada does not have to do it. Yesterday in this House the Deputy Prime Minister, when asked a series of similar questions, indicated that the Government always wanted Air Canada to operate as if it were in the private sector.

That is why we on this side oppose the sale of Air Canada in any form. Since deregulation of air transport in particular, we have removed the principle of public convenience and necessity and replaced it with a market-place philosophy that the greater the volume, the greater the service, or, conversely the lesser the volume, the lesser the service. That was the first step. Now, by taking Air Canada out of the control of the Parliament and taxpayers of Canada, we have lost that additional advantage where the duly elected Government can issue instructions to a national airline to provide service or ensure that when contracts are placed, whether it is for new equipment or goods and services for ongoing operations, benefits have to come to Canadians.

We believe Air Canada should remain owned by Canadian taxpayers. They already own it, in fact. Therefore, we will continue to present our case to ensure that at the very least the public is aware of the ramifications of this particular piece of legislation. They will understand they are not getting a bargain. They are losing control, even under partial privatization, of an airline they built over the last 50 years.

Let me also remind you that under the provisions of the Bill before us, which the business community says is not going to work, we are allowing people out there to purchase 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada. Yet at the same time the Government is going to instruct its representatives on the board of Air Canada to take their instructions from that 45 per cent ownership group.

I realize my time has expired. I look forward to the opportunity to participate along with my colleagues in continuing to point out the error of this approach by the Conservative Government when the Bill goes into committee. I really do hope that either an election will be called that will prevent this Bill from passing or that the Government will reconsider.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, first I have a comment, and I will conclude with a question for the Hon. Member.

He is of course aware that yesterday morning I had the privilege of chairing the Committee on Transport, and that Mr. Jeanniot of Air Canada appeared before the Committee. Mr. Speaker, I think it was all very clear. The Government and the Opposition Parties may have their differences in this respect, but Mr. Jeanniot made it quite clear before the Committee that ever since the seventies, 1975 and 1980, and especially considering the new regulatory reform in the transportation industry, commonly referred to as deregulation, that it was important to them that Air Canada be able to compete with the other airlines.

[English]

It was clear from the answers Mr. Jeanniot gave that for Air Canada to compete in the market, whether it be with Canadian International Airlines, Wardair or others, it must have exactly the same flexibility. The question is about flexibility. Perhaps 45 per cent is not enough. Speaking as a member of the Government, hopefully we will go somewhere down the road to 100 per cent. It is not a question of lesser service for Canadians. It is a question of not costing Canadians more money.

We on the government side want Air Canada to continue to be a national air carrier. We want it to have the flexibility at arm's length from the Government so we do not have to worry about cheap political decisions, whether NDP or Liberal. We will not do that, Mr. Speaker. By privatizing Air Canada at 45 per cent, Mr. Jeanniot, President of Air Canada, said that a large majority of employees want to buy shares. It seems ridiculous to me that the Opposition would say, "Let's not do it".

• (1640)

The question of new aircraft was explained to us yesterday. Why buy 727s instead of DC-9s? With the experts Mr. Jeanniot had with him, he explained exactly. With 727 aircraft, Air Canada figures, even now as a Crown corporation, that it will be more economically feasible and will offer a better product to the consumer, rather than replacing the DC-9s, which have already been refurbished to provide a longer service of this aircraft. There was no argument there about what was going to happen.

Perhaps I might speak out of place a little bit—I would never want to speak out of place on behalf of the Government—and explain to my colleague from the New Democratic Party who wants to keep everything for the Government—

New Democrats do not want any Crown corporations or any big business or anyone to work—who in the heck will pay? We do not know. It has been proven and stated publicly by the administration of Air Canada, by the employees, with one exception—perhaps union leaders—that they are in favour of privatization of Air Canada.

I conclude my remarks and thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. Let me ask the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) that with everything Air Canada has said in the past and what Mr. Jeanniot said yesterday regarding 727s and DC-9s and with the implication of the workers who want to buy shares, the same airline will exist as Air Canada and it will continue to be the great carrier it has always been. So why would the Hon. Member ever be against 45 per cent privatization?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his questions. Let me ask rhetorically how many shares he expects the Air Canada employee who makes $6.79 an hour to buy. The current valuation of the shares which the Government of Canada holds is $1,000 a share. Not many, I would suggest.

The Member spoke about competitiveness, flexibility and arm's length. Mr. Jeanniot in his remarks to us yesterday, indicated Canada has the flexibility. When Canadian Airlines offers a seat sale, within 24 hours Air Canada offers that seat sale. Where he indicated that there was less flexibility was in terms of capital. He indicated to us that even though the share values in the name of the Government of Canada were something in the neighbourhood of $750 million, the amount the Canadian Government has provided is somewhere around $330 million—which is a major shortfall. Mr. Jeanniot said that he has asked and asked and asked this Government and the former one to advance the full value Parliament approves but has been refused.

We have an airline company that has made in excess of $300 million profit in the last nine years. In fact, every year but two were profitable years. There is no question that Air Canada is an excellent company. It is owned by the people of Canada. Canadians should have the right to receive the profits and a return on their investment as shareholders. There are 25 million shareholders in the company right now. I do not think that that should be sold out from under them.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, not only do the people of Canada have a right to the airline but they have a right to expect service. One of the strengths of Air Canada historically has been to serve remote areas where no other company would go.

What happens to that mandate or policy decision under privatization? If the bottom line is profit, then surely there is not the same compulsion on the part of Air Canada to continue that policy in the past of serving remote areas. I know of routes in my own province, for example, where only Air Canada flew and the flights were never full. Canadians deserve air travel. They needed it and they got it from Air Canada. Under privatization my fear is that this will change. If the bottom line is profit and you fly only where you have load factors, where there is a lot of traffic and lots of people, that precludes those who live in small communities and remote areas from travelling and from service. It precludes business in those areas from doing the kind of business that would be done in other parts of the country.

There is a fear that the mandate of Air Canada, the mandate it has historically had and has followed, will change under privatization. That is the question I pose.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. Air travellers in Canada are getting hit with a double whammy—deregulation and privatization of Air Canada. The Hon. Member is right about the quality of service. Briefly I will give one example. My community is served by both Canadian Airlines and Air Canada. Two flights leave in the morning from Thunder Bay to Toronto. The one at seven o'clock is Canadian and the one at 7.40 is Air Canada. At 10 minutes to seven o'clock the Air Canada counter is already staffed, even though its plane does not leave for an hour. Canadian Airlines staff is assigned to show up about 6.30 a.m. for a seven o'clock flight. There are long line-ups at the Canadian Airline counter, whereas Air Canada easily clears all its customers. It provides adequate service and staff to ensure customers are treated properly. Canadian Airlines dealing with the bottom line as its prime motive does not provide the staff or service. This ultimately results in delayed flights and poor quality treatment, an excellent example of the lower level of service provided when priority is profit as opposed to service. Air Canada's tradition has been service over the years. Unfortunately, under this Bill that will change.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), who is in the Chair, for recognizing me.

The issue before us today is not as much an issue of theology as it is an issue of maturity of the Canadian economy and the Canadian transportation system. It is quite clear that the original mandate of Air Canada, which was put in place some 50 years ago, has altered somewhat due to the circumstances of our country. Fifty years ago our country had virtually no air links save charter links which were ad hoc and usually done for mercy purposes. There has, however, been a remarkable evolution with the birth of what is now Canada's third airline which originally was a bush pilot operation. I am very pleased to say the founder of that airline is a distinguished resident of my own constituency, namely, Mr. Max Ward. We have had over the last two or three years a tremendous growth in service not only of the three trans-Canada airlines, if I may use that expression, but also of the affiliate airlines, the so-called feeders which go into the North, into the lower traffic areas and into areas where there are short runways. Indeed, I had the opportunity the other evening to visit here in Ottawa with two employees of Air Canada, both of whom have distinguished records of service, and both of whom are interested in this very debate which is going on today. Unfortunately, due to the sometimes unpredictable course of House business, they were not able to stay today to follow this debate. However, they had in fact journeyed to Ottawa for that express purpose.

We carried on a debate of our own over dinner and we examined the issues that are now before us. I was asked a number of questions by these two women employees of Air Canada. They had quite a well-thought-out line of interrogation, and it went something like this: "Why would the Government of Canada want to sell shares in a Crown corporation when we already own it?" So I asked them: "What is the test of ownership, is it not the test of the alienability of the property itself?"

In other words, if one says one owns Air Canada or a portion thereof, is one able of one's own volition to dispose of it as a citizen of Canada? The answer, of course, is no. However, with this partial privatization measure, those 45 per cent of the shares which will in fact go into the hands of individual Canadians, among them employees of Air Canada and other citizens of Canada, will become alienable and will be capable of being traded on the market. They truly then will become the property of those people of Canada.

The next question which was posed to me was the question of the elongation of Air Canada's operation; that is to say, would Air Canada, with privatization simply go for the long routes and avoid the shorter routes? Would Air Canada neglect service to smaller communities? My response was that I think not, and I think not because there are a number of shorter routes which are economical. For example, the Rapidair routes between Ottawa and Toronto, between Ottawa and Montreal and the triangle back to Toronto from Montreal are very satisfactory routes for Air Canada to serve, and they are not elongated routes.

However, these employees pressed the question further, and quite properly. They asked about routes in western Canada, for example, service from, say, Regina to Edmonton. I suggested to them that those routes would probably not be dropped, and I cited the example of Canadian Airlines International, which is truly a private corporation and which has chosen not to drop many of those smaller routes.

Indeed, in many ways, Canadian Airlines does a remarkable job of serving northern and northwestern Canada and indeed Atlantic Canada with short-hop service and service to low-traffic areas. It has managed its operation in such a way with its equipment, and in some cases with downscaled equipment, so that that service continues. Indeed, with the addition of some other feeder operations, there is the possibility of serving communities that have not up to now had regular airline service. If one consults the timetable of either of Canada's two major airlines, one will find destinations such as Nanisivik, Kuujjuak, Iqaluit and many others which would not normally, one would think, be revenue destinations. However, that service exists and it is provided by privately owned airlines.

The next question had to do with the treatment of the employees. These were two Air Canada employees who were interrogating me, one of them a long-serving and distinguished union official. I drew their attention to the record of the Government of Canada in the field of privatization, our record over the past almost four years of the privatization of the dozen or so Crown corporations that have gone to the market with considerable success. I drew their consideration to the de Havilland example in Downsview, Ontario. Now, with the world-wide mandate through the connection with Boeing Corporation, de Havilland has a window on the world. What is the employment record at Downsview? I believe that staff members have been added. Certainly there has been no adverse impact on employee relations, employee benefits, job security or things of that nature.

Then they said: "What about British Airways? They went ahead and privatized and they laid off tens of thousands of employees". Well, the fact is that that occurred before the privatization of British Airways. The airline was badly in need of some rationalization and that rationalization took place before shares in British Airways were offered to the market.

According to the President of Air Canada, Mr. Jeanniot, and the Chairman of the Board, Mr. Taylor, who incidentally is immensely well respected within the ranks of Air Canada employees as one who has worked his way up and has proved his worth, Air Canada has shown its mettle. It has shown that it is a world-class airline because of the commitment of its employees. Therein, in a service industry, lies much of the strength of any airline, the quality and commitment of its employees. That will not be changed.

One might say, as my friends did say to me, why then bother, why change things now, isn't this just some kind of Tory knee-jerk, ideological reaction? My response is, of course not, of course not.

Mr. Nunziata: Who are you calling a jerk?

Mr. Edwards: Careful, it might happen. An opportunity is being presented to the people of Canada and to the passengers of Canada. Most important, an opportunity is being presented to Air Canada to expand and become competitive and to be truly a continuing force within the airline domain of Canada and indeed across the world as one of our Canadian flag carriers.

The next concern put forward to me was an interesting one coming from a couple of Albertans. They said: "We believe that in many ways, Air Canada is an instrument of national policy in terms of being a vehicle for continuing the bilingual objectives of the people and the Government of Canada, and wouldn't that undergo some erosion?" I think not, and I think not because there is a demonstrated record among major Canadian corporations doing business from coast to coast to the 49th parallel and beyond that shows that those corporations, which are truly Canadian in their commitment, do maintain those objectives and maintain them rather well.

I appreciate this opportunity to address a few words in debate on this particular Bill. As one who, like yourself, Mr. Speaker, from time to time has the occasion to use Air Canada, I have nothing but admiration for the quality of the people, for the safety standards and for all the wonderful service that this airline has delivered to Canada over the past 51 years. I am sure it will do so well into the next century, with the assistance of this Bill and the bringing up of capital so that the investment will be there for Air Canada to expand its fleet and to be a truly distinguished airline.

Mr. Minaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards) in regard to services to the northern part of Alberta provided by different airlines, either now or in the past. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) and, I believe, the Hon. Member for Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) seemed to imply, when they made their comments, that Air Canada was servicing all the remote areas and that when the company was privatized this service would fall off.

• (1700)

In my Province of Manitoba the airline that was covering the remote areas like Thompson, The Pas, and Gillam many years ago was TransAir which became Pacific Western Airlines and which we now know is an integral part of Canadian Airlines. I believe that that company is servicing the remote areas. In fact, Air Canada was primarily servicing the main areas like Thunder Bay, Toronto, Montreal and so on.

I would like to ask the Member for Edmonton South, who serves the remote areas of northern Alberta at the present time? Is it Air Canada or other airlines?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I am happy to advise my friend that it is indeed largely the investor-owned airlines which serve northern Alberta. That is partly due to historic circumstance. Others who remember the bush pilot era would say that it is partly due to historical circumstance.

However, the fact of the matter is that Canadian Airlines International, as the heir of Pacific Western Airlines, has regular Airbus service to Fort McMurray out of Edmonton. Canadian Airlines International flies as well into certain parts of northwestern Alberta to such destinations as Grand Prairie and into the Peace River block of northeastern British Columbia to Fort St. John, Dawson Creek, and Fort Nelson. In fact, Fort St. John has become something of a mini air hub, with the routes from Edmonton northwest and Vancouver northeast intersecting there with flights from both cities continuing on into White Horse.

It is true as well that Edmonton, being historically and presently the gateway to the North in an aviation and a shipping context, still maintains that claim with regular flights by such airlines as Canadian out of Edmonton International and Edmonton Municipal, in some cases, to the North, notably to Yellowknife, Cambridge Bay, Resolute, and other northern destinations.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct several questions to the Hon. Member. The suggestion by Conservative Members of Parliament who are supporting this Bill is that the opposition which comes from New Democratic Members is based on our ideological belief in the value of public ownership as opposed to private ownership.

Certain people in the industry are very critical of this particular Bill. For example, in The Globe and Mail of May 27 there is a news story quoting Sir Colin Marshall, chief executive of British Airways which, as the Member knows, was privatized by Mrs. Thatcher. The article says:

> In reference to the federal Government's decision to partly privatize Air Canada, Sir Colin indicated he doesn't like Ottawa's method very much.
> British Airways would never have achieved the outstanding financial results of the past year if the British Government had continued as the majority shareholder, he said.
> "It obviously depends on the local situation, but as a general philosophy I believe you can't be both (government and privately owned), he said—

I would like the Member to comment on that and also on the financial analyst in Toronto specializing in airlines who, the day after the Minister tabled this Bill, criticized this proposal. He said that if the privatized company has to follow the provisions in the Bill, if the headquarters must remain in Montreal, if it must continue to be bilingual, and must maintain its maintenance bases in Toronto, Winnipeg, and Montreal, it would take away from the ability of the partially privatized company to make decisions based on efficiency and profitability.

This analyst, whose name I do not have in front of me now, made the same point as the head of British Airways. Even though they believe in the privatization of Air Canada, they say that what the Government is proposing to do is bad in a business way. I would like the Member to comment on those points.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, as always the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, with his immense fund of general knowledge, is able to ask some very pertinent questions. He has never let us down.

On the question of ideology, I was not suggesting that the New Democratic Party had a particular ideology and that his opposition to this particular move was based on ideology. I was saying that the Government's move in this regard is not based on ideology.

Mr. Orlikow: It's not based on good, sound business sense.

Mr. Edwards: It's based on good, sound business sense. I thank the Hon. Member for that phrase.

In response to Sir Colin Marshall's comments which I, too, read, the Hon. Member was honest enough to quote Sir Colin when he said "It obviously depends on the local situation". The British situation is not the Canadian situation.

Thatcherism and Thatcher's objectives are not necessarily the objectives of the Government of Canada. The objectives of Mrs. Thatcher, as I understand them, were to conduct a total revolution of British society and the British economy. Such is not the objective of the Government of Canada.

The objective of the Government of Canada in this case is to deal with a Crown corporation which has, as I have already indicated, a marvellous record of service and splendid employees but which history has bypassed in a sense in the context of its having a national policy objective of the Government of Canada for which it was put in place initially in 1937.

As to whether there should or should not be a hybrid with some state ownership or some investor ownership, I think we have had some remarkable examples of success in that regard in the recent past. I point to some examples carried out by the current Government of Alberta. I point with some knowledge—and I am sure the Hon. Member has far deeper knowledge than I—to the hybrid corporations which exist in that marvellous democratic socialist state of Sweden.

However, I do not think it is necessarily the intent of the Government of Canada always to maintain a 55 per cent stake in Air Canada. We do not know what the future holds. The purpose of the Bill before us today is to enable the people of Canada to acquire 45 per cent of the shares.

Finally, with regard to the comments of the financial analyst, I read those as well. I am aware that there were proposals made by many financial houses in Toronto, and perhaps elsewhere, as to the best method of the privatization of Air Canada. I do not wish to suggest that these comments were made by a disappointed consultant, but that indeed is the possibility. I believe there were 10 or 11 houses which were offering proposals. If only one proposal was embraced, naturally nine or ten would have been embarrassed and disappointed.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in this debate although I wish we did not have to. I want to begin by citing a little bit of history, for the benefit of my colleagues who may not be aware of it, about the development of a national airline in Canada. It was called Trans-Canada Air Lines when it started. Between 1935 and 1937, C.D. Howe, the then Minister, approached Canadian National Railways and Canadian Pacific Railway to join in a tripartite partnership in the formation of a national airline. There was much negotiation and discussion but Canadian Pacific said it would not do it.

• (1710)

The offer was for the federal Government eventually to get out of the three-way ownership so that the airline would be owned by both railways. However, CPR said no, and the Government of the day went ahead to form Trans-Canada Air Lines with capital investment by both the Government of Canada and Canadian National Railways.

Trans-Canada Air Lines began flying in 1937, and obviously in the late 1930s and early 1940s it lost a bundle. The free enterprisers pointed their finger at how a Crown corporation did not work and that the free market forces should prevail.

In the late 1940s, Canadian Pacific began an airline with scheduled routes. To its credit, it flew to remote places as well as the larger centres.

When Trans-Canada Air Lines began making a profit, the hue and cry became louder. When it was losing money, Trans-Canada Air Lines was evidence of how public ownership did not work. However, when it began to make money, the private enterprise, free market forces people, reversed their stance and said that a Crown corporation should not make a profit, because that should belong to private enterprise.

Where were these free enterprisers and free market forces boys when the country needed them? If they could not make a bundle, to hell with Canada, they would not do it. The bottom line syndrome takes priority over everything else. They would run over their own mothers if they got in the way.

The taxpayers of this country made the investment. Trans-Canada Air Lines built the routes and the market. As soon it began to make money and taxpayers began getting a return on their investment, those who support free enterprise began asking for a piece of the action. They said: "We want some gravy off the top".

I can only call the private enterprisers and free market forces types a bunch of freeloaders. They are not prepared to take the bad with the good.

How many times have the advocates of free enterprise and free market forces asked to be left alone? How many times have we had to bail out free enterprise in the last 10 years? Who came running to the Government for a hand-out and bail-outs? It was not the poor people of Canada or the unemployed; it was the banks, Chrysler Canada and Massey Ferguson. Taxpayers are as much entitled to a return on their investment as any individual private investor.

I have yet to hear someone give me a rational explanation of why someone should buy shares in something they already own. If this chance for Canadians to buy shares in Air Canada is such a good deal, why does the Government not take up the balance of the authorized shareholdings, $750 million, as it is authorized to do by legislation of this House? It would make sense because Air Canada is a profitable corporation and ranks in the top 10 airlines in the world. Currently, the Government of Canada has $329 million in authorized shareholdings on behalf of the taxpayers. Air Canada says that it needs some $300 million to $400 million in initial funding for the purpose of purchasing new aircraft.

No one disputes that Air Canada is a good and profitable company. Why should the taxpayers of Canada not finally receive a return on the tens of millions of dollars they have put into that airline since 1937?

Air Canada had a net profit of $47 million last year. Yet it did not pay a dividend. According to my limited understanding of private enterprise, a board of directors of a private corporation that would not pay out a dividend on $47 million would soon be replaced. One must wonder about the competence of the board of directors of Air Canada.

A $10 dividend on a $1,000 share would represent a dividend of some $4 million on 329,000 shares.

Canadian National Railways has paid almost $150 million in dividends to the Government of Canada in the last several years, which is only proper when it makes a profit.

We can correct the fact that the board of directors of Air Canada did not give a dividend in 1987. It still makes economic and social sense for the Government of Canada to take up the remaining $421 million of authorized capital stock remaining on the books of Air Canada. The Government and Air Canada tell us that they need the money to purchase new aircraft. Under Air Canada's corporate plan for 1987-1991, and the amended 1987 capital budget, the only place in which there is a mention of privatization is where it states that "this plan assumes no change in the ownership status of the corporation and no equity infusion or debt conversion by the shareholder", the shareholder being the Government of Canada. The corporate plan assumes no change.

• (1720)

Further on in the corporate plan it is stated that profitability will improve throughout the plan, as does the debt equity ratio because existing debt is retired and additional debt is not required. By 1990 the return on equity will achieve the corporate objective.

In a press statement of April 12 Air Canada stated: "with respect to its annual report that it will proceed with fleet renewal to take advantage of operating efficiencies available through new aircraft. The funds required for this multibillion dollar investment will come largely from internally generated funds". That means that they will come from operating revenues and from borrowing. There is no mention about equity investment in shares from the sale of shares. That tells me that the real reason for the Government wishing to sell 45 per cent ownership of Air Canada is to provide a better debt equity ratio, to retire more debt, in order to make its share more attractive on the stock market.

Something else that bothers me about this measure is that we continually hear statements inside and outside this House, and we continually read reports in the financial pages, about Air Canada's subsidy, or Air Canada being provided with money from the Government, by the taxpayer out of the taxpayers' pocket, the bottomless taxpayers' pocket. That is mythology. That has been mythology for the last 26 years. There has not been a nickle of subsidy paid to Air Canada since 1962—not a nickle.

Some 11 years ago, in 1977, was the last time Parliament and the Government provided equity capital for Air Canada. They did not put up anything. All they did was to take a portion of Air Canada's debt and convert it to equity shares. Air Canada got no cash out of it. It just made its balance sheet look better, and it reduced its debt.

The airline has been able to operate and operate profitably as one of the 10 best airlines in the whole world without government funding. When we hear Wardair, Canadian Airlines and others crying and complaining about the great advantage Air Canada has over the rest of them, that is just more perpetuation of the mythology. Air Canada has been functioning under the same rules and the same conditions. It cannot operate any differently than can Canadian Airlines or Wardair.

I am not saying that Air Canada is perfect. I am not saying that it does everything exactly the way we would all like to see it done. There is not any outfit in the world that is run by of human beings that is perfect. There never has been and there never will be. It has done some things about which I am very distressed. For example, it paid not a nickle into the employees' pension plan in 1986. It used surplus earnings in the pension plan to make up the money that it should have been contributing under that year's operations. In my opinion while it was not illegal it was certainly highly immoral. Every dollar in a pension plan belongs to the pensioners and to the current employees and to no one else. Our stupid laws in this country allow corporations, public or private, to raid a pension plan and to take money that does not belong to them.

Sir, even Mrs. Thatcher and her Government in Britain in their privatization of British Airways were smarter than this Government. One thing we found out on the Transport Committee's trip to Europe last fall was that the British, the West Germans, the Dutch and the French look on privatization in a different way than we do. Those countries carry it out in a different way than we do. However, in the case of British Airways, during the course of the privatization the British Government kept what is called the golden share. Even if British Airways is 100 per cent owned by private shareholders the golden share has priority. That one golden share has priority over all the other shareholders.

The Government of Great Britain can intervene at any time it wants on any matter it wants having to do with the operations of British Airways. It kept full and final authority over British Airways. What does this dumb Government do? It did something that I am sure if it were done in a corporation on the Toronto Stock Exchange one would be under investigation so fast that one's head would swim.

Mr. Redway: Don't give Toronto a hard time.

Mr. Benjamin: I could not believe my ears listening to the Deputy Prime Minister's statement in the House when he said that the Government will instruct the members of the board of directors who represent the majority shareholders, who represent the 55 per cent, to vote with those who represent the minority shareholders. I have never heard of such a thing in any private corporation. I am sure that that would be grounds for an investigation by the Securities Commission of Ontario. If we had one that was any damn good operating out of Ottawa then it would be subject to an investigation. The RCMP would be seizing the books and everything else.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, how you would like it if you were a majority shareholder and your representative on the board of directors in a company in which you had the majority of shares—

Mr. Redway: Non-voting shares.

Mr. Benjamin: No, no. These are voting shares.

Mr. Redway: They cannot be.

Mr. Benjamin: —was instructed to vote for anything that the minority shareholders decided that they wanted to do. There is supposed to be a theory about people's capitalism—

Mr. Redway: Oh, come on.

Mr. Benjamin: Why don't you get up and make a speech instead of sitting there.

There is a sick calf here. I wonder if Your Honour would arrange to have it taken out.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the Hon. Member would speak to the Chair rather than speaking to anyone else in the House. The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) has one minute left.

Mr. Benjamin: This is a dumb move by the Government. It is not deserving of the confidence of the people of Canada, or of the employees of Air Canada. While the Government wants the employees to buy shares in Air Canada, and some of them are willing to do so, I wish to remind them of what the Government and Air Canada did to their pension plan in 1986. Air Canada raided their pension plan and did not put a nickel into it. It used surplus funds in the pension plan to cover the money that Air Canada was supposed to pay into it. Now it has the unmitigated gall to ask the employees to buy shares in an operation like that. I hope that Air Canada employees will not be fooled by that type of corporate chicanery.

I hope that the House and the people of Canada will make every effort to see to it that Air Canada is not privatized wholly or partially, because it is neither necessary nor desirable, and certainly public opinion states that the people of Canada prefer it as it is. All we need to continue a good, sound investment with good sound business practice is to increase the equity shares that the people of Canada have in Air Canada through the Government of Canada, and we will still have a good deal and one of the first-rate airlines of the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Minaker).

Mr. Minaker: I would like to ask the Hon. Member a couple of questions. In his comments he stated that when a private company makes a profit the board would be fired by the shareholders if it did not distribute some of that profit to the shareholders, and for that reason this was a bad idea.

Is the Hon. Member opposed to the idea of Air Canada employees buying shares? Many employees want to buy shares. The largest percentage of the employees at Air Canada want to have the opportunity to buy shares in the company, and rightly so in my opinion, because it is an excellent company, one of the best airlines in the world. If the employees buy the shares and the company makes a profit, is the Hon. Member opposed to the employees being paid a profit on their shares? In other words, each year receiving an equity cheque from the profit made by the company? Is the Hon. Member opposed to that? If the Hon. Member is opposed to that, I would then presume he is opposed to the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. It makes a profit every year, and to my understanding it has done so for many years. It pays a cheque to the farmers who have control.

If the Hon. Member is opposed to Air Canada employees being paid a profit on their shares, then he must be opposed to the concept of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. It makes a profit and pays it back to its shareholders. The Hon. Member implies that if someone owns a share in the company it is wrong for them to get a profit paid on it. Therefore, it is wrong for Air Canada to be privatized.

Does the Hon. Member not realize that Air Canada employees can transfer their proxies? I would presume that they will have many members on that board because they can do it individually. It is stated that an individual or an association cannot own, but there is nothing stopping an Air Canada employee, if he or she can get enough support from his or her colleagues, receive their shares and their proxies, that they will be on the board. The employees will have a major part of the control of that board.

I would like to hear the Hon. Member's answers to those questions.

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend was not listening so I will run it by him again and hope that it sinks in. What I said serves as a caution to Air Canada employees. With a $47 million net profit last year Air Canada paid no dividend to the present shareholders. Therefore, I caution Air Canada employees. If they are going to buy shares, that is their business and their own private decision, it is not mine.

Second, the experience of employees who bought shares in airlines in the United States, for example, Eastern Airlines,

Texas Air, and all those pirates down there, ended up having to give wage concessions. For the shares the employees bought, they lost anywhere from $1 to $4 an hour in pay. They were loyal employees, helped the company survive, invested money in it, took less pay, and what happened? Eastern Airlines is still on the verge of bankruptcy, Texas Air took over Peoples' Express, where the employees invested millions. Again, I caution the airline employees of Air Canada.

If one turns a good airline like Air Canada over to those so-called free market forces and private enterprise operators, I would not call that too safe an investment.

For my hon. friend to compare a private enterprise corporation with a co-operative tells one that he knows nothing about a co-operative. Having been a member of a co-operative and a credit union for the last 37 years, including serving on boards of directors, I think that I know a little about it. The membership has control and it decides whether there will be dividends. It is not a board of directors in a boardroom in Toronto or in Chicago that make the decisions; it is the members who decide. A co-operative is the most democratic form of enterprise in existence, and I remind my hon. friend of that.

What say did the taxpayers of Canada get as to whether or not there is a dividend on Air Canada's profits last year? We had no say, and the Government puts dummies on the board of directors who did not allow a dividend to be paid.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) would like to ask the Hon. Member a question.

Mr. Keeper: I would like to ask my colleague a question. It has to do with Air Canada's workers in Winnipeg. My colleague has been a critic in the area of transport for many years, and he knows that a number of decades ago Winnipeg lost a good part of its aerospace industry to Montreal when Trans-Canada Air Lines was in existence. Now with Air Canada, what I hear from workers in Winnipeg is concern about whether this privatization will endanger the work that Air Canada does in Winnipeg, and therefore their jobs. They feel there is a threat to the aerospace industry in Winnipeg. Is my colleague informed on this matter, and can he comment on it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West has two minutes.

Mr. Benjamin: I appreciate the concern of my colleague. The employees should be concerned at all three maintenance bases in Toronto, Montreal, and most particularly in Winnipeg, because while Air Canada assures us there will be a maintenance and repair centre kept in Winnipeg, that centre is suitable for maintaining present generation aircraft, for example, DC-9s, 727s, DC-8s, and 747s. If Air Canada decides to buy an aircraft of a completely new generation from a different manufacturer of aircraft than what it presently owns, then the people in Winnipeg should be worried. Unless and until we receive a guarantee that no matter which aircraft Air Canada purchases, a guarantee that a proper apportionment of repair, maintenance, and overhaul will be carried on in Winnipeg, then I would suggest that the people in Winnipeg continue to worry and continue to fight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to this important piece of legislation that will lead to the privatization of Air Canada. We have to ask ourselves how we reached the point where this Government wants to get rid of a Crown corporation, a corporation that has played a major role in the development of this country, from east to west and from north to south. We can be proud of Air Canada. Air Canada is a corporation that has played a major role in bringing communities closer together from coast to coast. Thanks to Air Canada, we can travel quite easily from place to place, because Air Canada has a network that connects a considerable number of communities. Air Canada provides these communities with a competitive service and ensures them a place in the regional development of this country, because when we talk about regional development, we automatically talk about transportation, and of course air transportation. And in this respect, we can say that Air Canada has played its role admirably.

The corporation was created in 1937, fifty-one years ago, as Trans-Canada Air Lines, and throughout that time, it has provided Canadians with reasonable services at reasonable rates. From the outset, we have had a service that is truly Canadian. In Air Canada's annual report for 1987, we read that it is truly a national carrier. On the first page we read the following:

> Air Canada is the largest Canadian air carrier providing scheduled and charter air transportation for passengers and cargo. Air Canada's route network offers scheduled services to 35 North American cities. Through its domestic connector partners, another 66 Canadian communities and 13 cities in the United States are linked to the Air Canada system.

But that is not all. Air Canada is also recognized internationally. Air Canada provides services to many parts of the world, and again, we read in the annual report:

> Internationally, the Corporation added new routes, increased services and achieved strong growth within established markets. The inauguration of service to Vienna along with Express Air Canada Cargo's growing international presence, emphasized the airline's expanding global operation.

A little further, it says:

> Air Canada is now the preeminent Canadian carrier to much of Europe and the Caribbean countries. The airline also acquired Canadian rights to the Middle East, and much of Asia including India, Pakistan, Sri Lanka, and Burma. And, for the first time in its fifty year history, the Corporation will be able to operate transpacific flights to Malaysia, the Republic of Korea, the Philippines, and Singapore.
> Within the next two years, Air Canada will inaugurate service to Nice, France; Madrid, Spain; Lisbon, Portugal; Athens, Greece; and Cairo, Egypt.

Charter operations to Venezuela and Ireland will be converted to scheduled services.

We can truly say that in its short fifty-year history, Air Canada has offered Canadians quality service, not just nationally but also internationally. Air Canada also provides employment for more than 22,000 people. We really have reason to be proud of it.

And, Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) himself said on April 12, 1988, "As one who has had the honour of serving as Canada's Minister of Transport, I have had the responsibility of being accountable to the House for Air Canada. I am thus particularly aware of the pride and expertise required of Air Canada's more than 22,000 employees necessary to achieve yet another successful year in providing safe and efficient air services to Canadians. Air Canada's accomplishments are all the more impressive when the strong and competitive nature of the Canadian airline industry is considered. Air Canada has not operated under the protection of government regulation for several years. Indeed, the entire industry responded admirably to the inevitability of a freer market environment long before the National Transportation Act was passed."

So I come back to my question: Why are we privatizing Air Canada when we realize how successful it is? One can also wonder, in light of what the Prime Minister himself, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, said:

[English]

Air Canada is not for sale. Canada needs a national airline. There is a possibility that shares in Air Canada will be sold to the public but the Government would certainly retain a majority interest.

[Translation]

Why privatize, why sell Air Canada? Well, maybe the Government was caught short; in the past three or four years, our obligations to this company have really been neglected. But now we are told that Air Canada must modernize its fleet. Air Canada must buy new aircraft. We need some $300 million in the short term to buy airplanes. We heard that they would almost certainly be Airbuses, but it seems that the decision has not yet been finalized. So one must wonder.

To get these $300 million needed to make the first payment for renewing the fleet, it was decided to sell to Canadians what already belongs to them. To begin with, 45 per cent of the shares will be sold to them and it is expected that these 45 per cent will bring in enough for the corporation to start modernizing its fleet.

But one must also wonder what will happen to Air Canada once it is privatized. Air Canada will then have to act like any private corporation or any business. Of course, all private companies want to make money. Making a profit means maximizing profits, because one is answerable to one's shareholders, and the more dividends shareholders get, the better they like it and the better they like the board of directors. The people at Air Canada will have to act like all the other companies.

I am afraid that in this push for bigger and better profits, Air Canada will have to make certain decisions. I am afraid that Air Canada will abandon certain routes, especially the less profitable ones, because from now on, the Goverment will no longer be there to oblige the corporation to provide services to the communities on those routes. Certain facilities will also be abandoned, Mr. Speaker, if they are found to be less profitable. Operations will certainly be centralized.

In this connection, I think we could look at the example of CN and I have made this reference many times before. Instructed by this Government to make its operations profitable, CN embarked on a rationalization program. This meant scrutinizing all operations with an eye for profit, as opposed to the public interest or the interests of the communities concerned.

In New Brunswick, rationalization has meant the loss of more than 1,000 jobs, in not just one but several communities, and this is continuing. It is continuing for the simple reason the Government has decided not to intervene. In fact, it would be difficult for the Government to intervene at this point because it was the Government that gave the instructions in the first place.

So what will happen to Air Canada if at some point a decision is made to rationalize operations? Il would be entirely up to the administrators, and they would then have carte blanche to take any action they feel would be appropriate. I am afraid that as a result of this push for bigger profits and for rationalization, workers will be laid off and shops will be closed. It is inevitable.

If only this Bill had taken a leaf from the privatization of British Airways, which seems to be a model of its kind. In England, when the Government got into privatization, it was careful not to let everything go.

It kept a so-called golden share which gives the Government the right to intervene if it feels the public interest is at stake and the company is not acting in the national interest. Here, we are told it's not worth it, and the Government prefers to privatize Air Canada altogether.

What is going to happen to services in outlying areas? We have been given the assurance these services will be maintained. We have also been told that the regions are getting better service than before because there are more carriers. There are regional carriers, but I think Hon. Members should realize, Mr. Speaker, that in some cases, national carriers have pulled out and been replaced by regional services.

What will happen if this experiment is not successful, and I am referring to the policy of serving the regions with regional airlines? National carriers will pull out. In fact, they have already done so and have been replaced. If this approach doesn't work, we in the regions will lose everything and have to strart from scratch.

One must also wonder, Mr. Speaker, what will happen to service in both official languages in regions of Canada that lose the services of the national carrier. We well know that clause 10 of this Bill requires Air Canada to maintain services in both official languages. Clause 10 states, "The Official Languages Act applies to the Corporation." Once the Corporation has given up the regional service lines, what will happen to bilingual services? I asked the President of Air Canada this very question yesterday and he told us that there was little danger of that happening. But I must point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that no law requires these carriers to respect this obligation of Air Canada. Here too, the regions will be the losers. We will lose these services that are essential for us.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I believe that this privatization of Air Canada means a considerable loss for Canadians. It is the loss of an essential tool that has enabled us to serve all regions of Canada. So, Mr. Speaker, as you may have understood, I am opposed to the privatization and want Air Canada to continue to serve all Canadians as a Crown corporation.

CAMPAIGN ON SALE OF CANADIAN FURS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has granted leave to the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) to move for the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 29, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the action of anti-fur lobbyists in Europe and the intention of the British Government.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming) moved:

That this House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in starting this debate tonight, may I first say how much I appreciate the support of all Hon. Members in what I believe is one of the most important issues facing rural Canada.

We are here this evening because the Canadian fur industry is being seriously threatened by recent happenings in Britain and Europe. Anti-fur campaigns have mounted an aggressive assault on our fur industry. European boycotts, called for by animal rights groups, directly harm Canadian trappers across our land, particularly native people who harvest fur-bearing animals for their livelihoods. These lobbying groups have proven very successful at getting their message across to their elected representatives. As a result, the British Government is currently considering legislation which would require fur products to be labelled, clearly in an effort to restrain and check retailers from selling furs and the public from purchasing them.

This week, on the front page of the financial section of a major newspaper, Canadians read an article bearing the heading "Fur industry jeopardized by activists," which reads as follows:

> European fur buyers are becoming nervous and hesitant, contributing to a weaker market for Canada's fur products in recent months, industry spokesmen say.

The article goes on:

> Fur prices in Canada this year are down about one-third from last year, said Ken McKay, manager of the Manitoba Registered Trappers Association.
>
> "The European situation has affected the market," Mr. McKay said. "European buyers are hesitant."

It continues:

> Robert Carmichael, chief of commercial wildlife management in Manitoba Department of Natural Resources, said the anti-fur activists are aware the actions of the British Government will carry "a terrific amount of weight" when other European countries decide whether to restrict the sale of fur.
> "It's exactly the same route that the seal industry took. There is absolutely no doubt that this is not just a local trade measure. This is part of a carefully calculated plan. This is the big push."

Let me deal briefly with the economic aspects of the fur trade for Canadians. The fur industry is worth approximately $600 million annually. There is a spin-off of, roughly speaking, $200 million in allied industries like transportation. For the last two to three years, Canadian fur exports totalled approximately $350 million annually, much of that going to the European market.

To put those figures into perspective, are we talking about six companies earning $100 million per year? Are we talking about 12 companies earning $50 million per year? No, we are talking about 105,000 Canadians who earn all or part of their incomes from the fur industry. We are talking about individuals who may earn $1,000, $5,000 or $10,000 per year, people who may have the opportunity to purchase a skidoo or a canoe. More important, we are talking about individuals who may be able to afford to put bread on their tables.

We are talking about aboriginal people. Fifty thousand of the 105,000 Canadians involved in trapping are aboriginal people. More than that, 80 per cent of the retail fur sales in Canada are made through privately owned family run one store businesses. We are talking about 105,000 Canadians who collectively do not want to be part of the welfare system.

Above and beyond the economics of this issue, and much more important, are the social and cultural factors involved with native people and northern communities. As Hon. Members know, in December of 1986, the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development presented the House with a report entitled The Fur Issue. The committee heard from many Canadians who depend directly upon the fur trade. At the time that report was prepared we had received 43 written reports and heard 33 witnesses. Among those who appeared were representatives of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Department of External Affairs, the Assembly of First Nations, the Department of the Environment, the Hudson's Bay Company, the Aboriginal Trappers Federation of Canada, the Government of the Northwest Territories, the Council for Yukon Indians, the Government of the Yukon Territory, the Ross River Indian Band, the Inuit Tapirisat of Canada, and the Canadian Arctic Resources Committee.

• (2010)

To native people trapping involves more than simply trying to earn cash income. It implies a unique social, spiritual, and cultural relationship with the land and its resources. In northern communities trapping and trade are the encompassing activities which hold the people together, creating a bond of belonging and providing all of the inhabitants with a purpose. These comments were echoed time and again in our committee hearings.

Page 10 of our report, under Social and Cultural Importance of Trapping, reads:

> Hunting and trapping are not "jobs" for Inuit—
> We in the North live the life of subsistence hunters and trappers. Our families contribute to all phases of getting ready for hunting and preparing of skins. Our wives, our children, and our relatives share in the work and the rewards . . . . We as Inuit have always harvested animals as a way of life. In the North the animals, man and nature lived in a harmony that was both cruel and fair to all. At times men and animals starved, and at other times there was plenty. Nature ensured the balance; and the Inuit were an integral part of his life. We have survived for centuries in this area of the country.

We heard from the manager of the Old Crow Indian Band. He said:

> Oh, it would deprive us of our identity, for sure. We still have not had the chance to adapt to any other society or any other way of living. That is where we are now at. We are slowly adapting so that we can create our economy, or create a structure if we have a strong economy. Trapping is a way of life for a lot of people in our community—

May I remind my colleagues in the House that this is not the first time we have been charged with defending our fur industry. Both in 1979 and in 1982 we considered the serious threat and implications of the anti-fur campaign with respect to the seal hunt. At that time the European community banned imports of seal pup pelts as a reaction to a lobbying campaign that was based on an emotional appeal, one which was very shallow in facts. Through an effective use of the media and through sheer sensationalism the animal rights movement was successful. The devastation that was felt by the collapse of our industry, especially in the Maritimes, is well recorded.

Sealing added $19.4 million to the economy of the Northwest Territories in 1981 but this fell to $9.9 million in 1983-84. After the European Economic Community ban on "whitecoat" imports was instituted in February, 1983, the market for pelts of mature seals collapsed as well. In 18 of 20 Inuit communities in the Northwest Territories the annual revenue from the sale of sealskin pelts dropped by approximately 60 per cent. The community of Broughton Island saw its collective income fall from a total of $92,099 in 1981-82 to $13,504 in 1983-84.

Towns have been economically ruined, families have had to move or have been torn apart, and an entire way of life was altered because we were unable to put an effective case forward for our seal hunt. The loss of the seal hunt and what it meant for thousands of Canadians can still be seen today; family break-ups, bankruptcies, needless suicides, alcoholism, the loss of an individual's self-worth, dignity, and sense of belonging. These tragedies we cannot allow to recur.

The impact of the animal rights campaigns and the anti-fur campaigns, particularly those in Europe, have been felt by many Canadians. Our Government, in partnership with the Canadian Fur Institute and other representatives of the industry, has taken steps to address their concerns.

In the past decade we have become increasingly active in the conservation and management of our wildlife, the development of the humane trap testing and design, trapper education, and the education of the public on the trapping advancements which have been made in Canada.

However, it is evident from the ever-increasing and constant pressure being applied by the animal rights groups and anti-fur lobbyists in Europe on their elected Members that our efforts here are not being fully recognized or appreciated.

The grand chief of the First Nations, Mr. Erasmus, said:

> They are basically trying to change the fundamental relationship between animal life in general and human beings. They are basically challenging our use of fur . . . they are challenging the fundamental relationship between man and wildlife, and they are doing it gradually. They are doing it in a way in which they have learned they can win at this game, and they have sensationalized one aspect of the struggle at a time. They are doing it methodically. They have fanatics in the back of them, but in the front of them they have moderates.

The animal rights groups are unrealistic in their goals and the current movements in Europe. If their goals are met it will undoubtedly be extremely harmful to the many Canadians who depend on the fur industry for their livelihood. What the British and European parliamentarians and public must recognize about our fur industry is that it is the responsible harvesting of a renewable resource.

I raise this issue today because I feel it is extremely important at this time to send a strong message to the British and European Parliaments and public. What the elected representatives are being told through the animal rights lobbying groups are distortions and manipulations of fact. As these interest groups did with the seal pup issue, they have singled out Canada and our export industry as their initial target. The European public is being fed sensationalized videos, billboards, and posters. They are hearing documentaries with misinformation and half-truths.

In this time of need, as Canadian parliamentarians, we must act. I say to my colleagues that we must remain steadfast in our support for the fur industry, in our support for trappers across our country, and in our support for our native communities and people for whom the fur trade is an integral part of their lives.

We are tonight trying to ensure that thousands of Canadians will have the opportunity to continue a way of life which is vital to them and their communities. We must ensure that they have the opportunity to continue what they believe is correct.

• (2020)

In conclusion, I wish to draw into focus what this debate tonight is all about. It is not necessarily about an economic industry, an export commodity, but about individual Canadians, their own sense of being, and about a livelihood and way of life.

Let me leave with the House the thoughts of an elder:

> I have been a trapper all my life. I had a family, but I lost my wife. I am just by myself now. I am 69 years old. I draw the Old Age Pension and I am still trapping.
> I have never been to school. I just live in the bush. All I know is how to sign my name on a cheque. I cannot read one word, but I make a living anyway.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise tonight to speak on this very urgent and pressing matter of the proposed order by the British Government and Trade Minister Alan Clark. He is proposing to bring in an order stating that garments may contain a label saying that some furs in the garment may have been caught in a leghold trap.

It is important to put this debate into context. We are not debating an anti trapping issue, but what is the precursor of an anti fur issue.

When we consider what happened with the sealing industry, with a campaign that began largely on an emotional argument based on little environmental data, we can see what can happen to an industry and the lives of the people involved in it.

Today we are dealing with a $600 million a year industry in Canada that is primarily a family oriented industry. Most retail furriers are small business furriers. The people who make the garments are mostly involved in small family businesses. Then there are the trappers and fur ranchers themselves.

The British Trade Minister said that this proposed order to label furs is a minimal response to a strong so-called animal rights lobby. Let me make the distinction between animal rights and animal welfare. I am sure very few people would disagree that we all must be concerned about the welfare of animals and ensure that animals are treated humanely and not subjected to inhumane treatment as part of our ecology and environment.

There is a strong lobby in Britain against animals being killed for any purpose, including medical research. This can occasionally take comic proportions. For example, in Maclean's on March 21, 1988, in an article entitled "Stocking Canada's Wild Fur Industry", the British humour magazine Punch asks whether the next step in the battle over animal rights might come when sweaters suddenly appear on store shelves bearing labels that warn: "This sheep was damned cold without this wool".

It is true that this proposed legislation has a very incremental effect on many products. For example, a product may be labelled that it creates a deterioration of the ozone level because of the way it is manufactured. While this incremental effect may be ludicrous on the one hand, it is also very serious.

The legislation in Britain specifically addresses the leg-hold trap. That is a form of trap used for many animals, but primarily for submersible animals like beaver and muskrat, which are caught under the water by the trap. Therefore, many of the objections to this trap are simply not applicable.

However, it is important to consider this issue from the British perspective. When I visited England a couple of weeks ago, it was clear to me that many British legislators understandably considered this from their own historical and cultural perspective, which was the exploitation of furs.

The history of the fur trade in Canada is that people from abroad, primarily Britain, took as many furs as possible and depleted the stocks with no consideration for the future. I pointed out that we are not dealing with the trapping or use of endangered species, which is clearly not done in Canada, but about a renewable resource harvesting industry. That is a very different concept from that of the historical exploitation of the fur trade.

Renewable resource harvesting involves utilizing the land, much like a farmer. It is the interest of that person to ensure the resource is maintained. It is an economic endeavour whereby the trapper, in this instance, has a great incentive to ensure that he is running his business well. In some instances, the trapper may leave a trap line for a year, much as a farmer leaves a field fallow for a year. This is a managed industry which harvests a renewable resource.

Many people in Canada as well as abroad, particularly in Europe where there is virtually no wilderness left, romantically revere the wilderness of the northern parts of North America and come to visit as tourists. A viable industry of renewable resource harvesting, such as trapping, maintains the wilderness of which we are so fond and which forms such a part of our Canadian identity. When there is a viable industry on that land there is an incentive to preserve the environment for the development of the renewable resource.

Many trappers in this country are aboriginal people. When the Europeans first came here this industry was one in which aboriginal people could effectively participate. This industry became a way of life and part of their culture, as well as part of the economy.

What are the effects of this labelling on people in the industry? There are about a thousand trappers in the Yukon, over 70 per cent of whom are aboriginal people. I want to quote the President of the Tungavik of Nunavut who also addressed this issue. I think he quite graphically portrayed the interests of his people when he stated:

• (2030)

> Hunting, fishing and trapping remains vitally important to Inuit throughout Nunavut (eastern Arctic). The "land" is our cultural and social bedrock, and is the basis of our economic life for it provides us with food and clothing. Unfortunately there is very little wage employment in Nunavut apart from a few jobs with the Hudson Bay and Co-op stores, which are ubiquitous in our communities, and some jobs with government agencies.

When some people present the fact that these people can do other things and that there are other alternatives, it is important to remember that this issue is not confined to one region of Canada. This industry involves all the provinces of Canada and the two northern territories. It is particularly carried out in the more isolated and rural parts of these regions. It provides a form of regional economy of which there are many alternatives for people to participate in. It is extremely important to remember that that basis of a rural and regional economy has a spin-off effect not just for that particular region but for Canada as a whole in terms of taxes and other revenue and secondary businesses.

I have talked somewhat about some of the alternatives that have been proposed when people say: "Well, trappers can do something else", just as they said: "Well, sealers can do something else". Basically, one of the options that was presented to me when I spoke to some people in Britain was that if Britain is going to pass this kind of legislation then Britain should provide compensation. When we look at that a little more in depth we have to ask what kind of compensation are we talking about. Are we going to give handouts to people? Are we going to make people welfare recipients? What are we going to do? It is just not a logical response to this issue at all.

There is a great concern in the country, and many of us have spoken on it before, about the high degree of unemployment, both in rural areas and in aboriginal communities. By destroying this industry as a result of benign neglect we would simply increase welfare rolls and the dependency of people, thus contributing to the loss of pride that self-sufficiency creates. This would simply add to the social problems that already exist in many rural communities. That is obviously not an alternative.

Other types of development include non-renewable resource development. There is certainly a place for this kind of development in rural and wilderness areas. But we have to think very carefully about that and about the preservation of our wilderness areas as well. I would submit that trappers and that kind of viable economic industry help to preserve that wilderness and that environment, as I have said before.

There are three major groups that will be affected by this labelling order should it go forward. They are the United States, the U.S.S.R. and Canada. Canada will probably be affected the most of the three.

However, there are other groups, members of the European Economic Community, such as Denmark, which have expressed their opposition to this measure because they also see the ramifications of it beyond this immediate so-called minimal response. Denmark has raised this issue with the European Economic Community, and it is being discussed because of the implications for some of the European countries and countries such as Greenland. It is an issue that is not confined just to Canada, although it is true that Canada has been making some of the most vocal statements about it.

I would like to say that the United States could be more vocal. The State of Alaska, which is very much affected by this legislation, in May passed a resolution condemning the British Government for this proposed order, requesting that the proposal be rescinded by the British Minister of Trade and Industry. Its concern hinges on the fact that this is a centuries old harvesting of animals for subsistence and trade. It is a centuries old tradition. It cannot be replaced without severe economic hardships. The State of Alaska has registered its concerns, as has the country of Denmark.

There are options that could be taken by Britain, as well as actions that our own Government should look to. The discussion tonight and today, with all-Party approval, will send an extremely strong message to the British Parliament about the concern that all Canadian parliamentarians have with respect to this issue. It is my feeling that the Canadian Government should consider asking for, minimally, a postponement of this legislation so that there will be an opportunity for Canada and Britain to discuss it further, and to negotiate some alternatives. My understanding is that it is generally accepted that when countries are about to bring in legislation which may affect trading items with other countries that they consult those countries. My understanding is that Canada was not consulted in this case. I think that we have some ground to stand on to ask, at least minimally, for a postponement of the bringing in of this order.

There is an organization called the International Trapping Standards Organization to which Canada and 17 other countries belong. It seems to me that it is an appropriate forum for those who are concerned about trapping methods to participate and to get agreements among countries about the kind of trapping that would be acceptable. Britain is neither a member nor an observer of this organization. As I said to Trade Minister Alan Clark in Britain, this seems to me to be a responsible alternative.

There are other measures which I think the Canadian Government must consider. I suppose that we could label British products to the effect that their manufacture contributes to pollution. But it becomes a very spiralling effect. I am not sure how useful it is. I suppose that one could get into that type of quid pro quo.

There have been suggestions particularly by more private organizations and individuals in Canada with respect to boycotts of goods, trade retaliation and so on. It is clear that those measures would have to be undertaken extremely carefully and within the context of over-all trade relations. Obviously, the United Kingdom is one of our favoured trade partners. We would like to continue in that way. But some form of countervail would certainly have to be at least looked at, I would suggest.

One of the things that the Canadian Government could most usefully be doing is to speak to some of the very large British investors in Canada. I had the opportunity to speak to one of the managers of Canada British Petroleum which has very large holdings in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, as well as in other parts of Canada. I did so to inform him about this legislation and about some of the reaction that his company might get when it begins to deal with, perhaps, aboriginal groups with respect to leases and so on. This is a measure which I hope the Canadian Government would consider to use in order to inform some of our larger British investors.

While this is an extremely important opportunity this evening to discuss this issue and to bring up the points—and all Members have an opportunity to speak on it to express their concerns and to send this extremely strong message to the British Parliament—I hope that the Canadian Government will be able to present us with some concrete steps that it will be taking in this area.

In conclusion, I would say that we must do something as a Parliament. The matter is urgent. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) mentioned the effect on individuals. This is extremely important, whether it is the person who works with a furrier, or a furrier, a trapper or a farmer. If we are not able to do something about this, what will we tell people such as Alarja Harper who is in his seventies now, an Indian from the Yukon who gave up his Indian status to go to fight in World War II for the freedom of this country and for the freedom of Britain? When he came back, he did not have a vote. He did not receive land as a veteran. He returned to trapping, and he is still trapping. What do we tell Elijah Smith? What do we tell Charlie Peter Charlie, also in his seventies who is from Old Crow? He and his grandsons continue each year to participate in this. What do we tell them if we let it go by? We cannot let it go by.

What do we tell the many, many families? I spoke to a number of them this past weekend in my riding in the Yukon. Those families are reliant on this industry both for their economic welfare, their cultural and traditional heritage, and for their family. In several instances that I am aware of, it is interesting to note that the courts, in lieu of sending someone to prison, have looked at the particular case and decided that prison will not work for that particular person. What we will do is send this person out on a trap line with his uncle or his cousin. This will be a way to teach him a skill, to teach him how to work, and it will be culturally appropriate for that person, and it will contribute to society.

In conclusion, this is an extremely important discussion tonight. I hope that we can see some concrete action taken out of it, and that it will send the strong message that we wish to to British Parliamentarians.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, I am personally pleased that the two applications for this special debate were allowed this afternoon by His Honour. I wish to commend my two colleagues, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), and the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) who were responsible for initiating this debate. In participating in this evening's debate, there are three points that I wish to make, time allowing.

The first of these points is that the Canadian fur industry is a legitimate industry. It is unjust and it is wrong that it should be crucified by the misguided animal rights movement which is so active in the United Kingdom and other parts of Europe.

The second point is that the fur industry is of particular and special interest, concern, and importance to the aboriginal peoples of Canada, as well as aboriginal peoples elsewhere, such as Greenland and the State of Alaska.

My third point would be that threats to the fur industry from the animal rights movement and what it stands for, and now supported in part by the United Kingdom Parliament at Westminster in its labelling legislation, should be vigorously and effectively counteracted.

Let me begin then on the question of legitimacy. I believe, Sir, that trapping has always been and should remain an essential part of the cultural and economic life of Canada. The Canadian fur industry is worth a great deal to this country. It is probably worth approximately $600 million annually, and then one could add perhaps $200 million more to that figure if one takes into account the other industries it supports. This country earns $350 million from the export of fur products. Our main market for those exports is Europe.

In Europe there are problems which are looming and lurking. European buyers of fur products are becoming hesitant. Part of the reason for this hesitancy is the successful efforts of the animal rights movement in influencing consumers in the attitude that there is something wrong in purchasing, wearing, and using a fur product. We are beginning to feel the effects of this in Canada. For example, fur prices this year dropped by approximately one-third over last year. Some trappers are abandoning their activity, just simply giving it up. But I emphasize to you, Mr. Speaker, that the fur industry is a legitimate one.

Trapping is another name for wild life harvesting. Here we are harvesting a renewable resource. An essential aspect of this harvesting activity must be that of conservation. Countries such as Canada which harvest wild fur simply cannot afford to be derelict in the protection of those animals. Fur bearers are harvested under sustainable yields in order that wildlife populations are in fact growing steadily.

When the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs conducted its hearings which led to the issuance of the document known as The Fur Issue, we learned that fur bearing populations in Canada are at least as high, if not higher, than they were when Europeans first came to this continent. No Canadian fur bearers are now being trapped which belong to any catalogue of endangered species. The trapping of all other species not on the endangered list is carefully and closely monitored by provincial wildlife biologists.

It is not the wise harvesting of fur-bearing animals which is a threat to their existence, but rather it is the loss of their habitat which is the threat. The loss of habitat is as a result of many other of man's activities. For example, the development and expansion of cities, the building of super highways and airports. That is far more a threat to wildlife than is harvesting or trapping of animals.

It is tragically unfair to select trapping and the use of fur as being illegitimate when so many other of our activities are deemed to be acceptable. We use the earth and its resources in so many ways, all deemed to be acceptable ways. Sometimes in the process we pollute and we destroy. The trapper must live in harmony with nature. By definition he or she must be a strong environmentalist. They must be a conservationist. After all, if the environment in which they function and earn their living is destroyed, if all of the species that they trap were to be killed off, then it is the trapper who suffers the consequences and becomes poorer as a result. It is accepted in Canadian society that we use but do not abuse animals. We use animals in a great variety of ways for food, for clothing, for recreation, for medical research, for pampered pets, and sometimes, not as often now as in the past, for work.

Just listen, Mr. Speaker, to Chief Georges Erasmus, head of the Assembly of First Nations, testifying at the Committee on Aboriginal Affairs. He said: "I see everyone here is wearing shoes. We are all wearing leather. We may not be wearing fur as the Inuit wear it, or as the Dene and other fur-wearing original cultures use them, but we use them in a more sophisticated fashion. Most of us will eat steak sometime this week. It might be beef, it might be lamb. Most of us will eat fish sometime this week. We are not all living on vegetables and called vegetarians".

In our use of animals, it is always recognized, as the Hon. Member from the Yukon pointed out, that we are not allowed to be cruel to animals. In fact, the Canadian Criminal Code makes it an offence to wilfully cause unnecessary pain, suffering, or injury to an animal. Regarding the method by which animals are trapped, more and more in Canada, acceptable, humane, trapping methods are being developed and utilized.

Listen, for example, to Mr. Art Lalonde, Executive Manager of the Canadian Trappers Federation. He said before the committee:

> I believe Canadian trappers have developed the most efficient and humane trapping methods in the world today. We are genuinely concerned with wildlife conservation. We have a good record and should be proud of it. This does not prevent us from trying to improve and we are constantly working at it. We must remember that the sealers were not defeated because they lacked any of this. They were defeated by public opinion, manipulated by the same people who were out to get us.
> The key to our survival is making it known to the general public that we use humane methods and that we are concerned about the way trapping is done. The person buying a fur coat must be convinced of that. It can only be achieved by public information through communication.

The lurid scenes presented by animal rights activists are, as a rule, a long way from reality. Some of the advertising that can be seen on British television borders on the obscene and ridiculous, scenes such as those which depict blood oozing from a fur coat worn by an attractive model. I would like to share with you, Sir, the view of one trapper who saw one of these films depicting the cruelty of trapping. This is how he testified before the committee. He said:

> I watched that tape and I looked at it and the person on the tape set a trap. He had on brand new pants—still creases on them—brand new snowshoes, a brand new shirt; and he set the trap with his bare hands in the warm weather, sun shining, the tree with no frost on it.

He set it under the tree in order to catch the animal. The animal was still alive. If you do that up here, your hands are going to freeze to the trap. They just made that movie to create more illusions and more arguments on their side.

By "up here" he meant the North.

Fur has been targeted by the animal rights activists and I suppose one reason is that a fur coat is thought of as being a luxury item; here is a way to get at the affluent or the rich. In part it is a luxury item, that is true, but it is also in my view a very wise purchase. It is a long-lasting garment. It is warm, lightweight and easily altered, and in cold climes there can be no better investment in comfort and good appearance than to have a good fur coat. That is why so many Canadians make the effort to make the purchase and why the product has been so popular among European buyers.

I believe if furs were more widely used and everyone recognized their utility, then the animal rights activists would have to choose a different target altogether. They are unlikely to get much support for a chicken or fish boycott. There are few who are ready to give up eating beef or lamb or the wearing of leather shoes and jackets, so they pick on fur. I would like you to listen to the very frank testimony give before the committee by Stephen Best, Vice-Chairman of the International Wildlife Coalition. He was describing for the committee the tactics of the animal rights group of which he is a member. He said and I quote:

If the international public was in full support of the fur industry and we were no longer able to raise funds to deal with the fur industry, we would definitely then shift over to whatever animal area we could raise funds to address. There are many animal issues.

It is estimated that about 105,000 Canadians earn all or part of their income from the fur industry. Of those, approximately 100,000 are trappers. Of that number, 50,000 to 60,000 are aboriginal people. The majority of trappers in this country are aboriginal people and that brings me to my second point.

The fur industry is of particular and special importance and concern to the aboriginal peoples of Canada. Opponents of the fur industry have promoted the myth that what we are dealing with here is a large, monolithic industry. This is a holdover from the fur trade days when the Hudson's Bay Company and the Northwest Trading Company were virtual monopolies in Canada. Today the fur industry is made up of small, generally family-oriented businesses, composed of trappers, ranchers, marketers, processors, artisans and retailers.

Trapping is vital to the aboriginal subsistence economy. Not many Canadians are aware of exactly what the subsistence economy is. Subsistence means a great deal more to aboriginal people than simply getting by. It has a very definite cultural aspect to it. Here is a member of the Old Crow Band in Yukon talking about subsistence. He said:

Subsistence means we like to trap, we like to hunt and we like to fish and live with the land and in harmony with the land and off the land. As one person said, we do not live up here for nothing. So, with that, we also have a lot of hard work to maintain our way of life.

Indigenous Survival International is an organization set up to relay the indigenous trapping message overseas. It was established to protect and promote indigenous harvesting rights and to maintain and promote a market for aboriginal fur products. It represents about one and a half million aboriginal people living in Canada, Greenland and Alaska. Indigenous peoples themselves are rightfully taking the leadership in protecting their harvesting rights. I want to quote from an interesting document put out by that organization which talks about the land as their life:

In the arctic and subarctic we make our living off the land. The growing season is short and the soil poor in nutrients. We must hunt to survive.

We hunt, fish, and trap as a way of life that has allowed us to survive for thousands of years in this harsh and delicate environment.

For generations our people have lived in balance and harmony with nature. We respect the land and it has served us well. We are part of the land and we are a natural part of the ecosystem.

My final point is that threats to the fur industry from the animal rights movement, now supported in part by the Parliament of the United Kingdom at Westminster through its proposed labelling legislation, must be vigorously and effectively counteracted by every possible means. It must be done by encouraging and giving support to Indigenous Survival International. It must be done by raising this issue at the Economic Summit in Toronto. Today in the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs we voted unanimously that additional copies of the fur report that I mentioned earlier be printed and available for distribution in Toronto at the Economic Summit as requested by the Government.

The other way in which we can get the message to Great Britain and Europe is by means of the debate which is taking place in the House tonight. During the debate on the patriation of our Constitution the British Parliament made a great deal about its concern for aboriginal rights, but in my view this proposed labelling legislation flies in the face of that concern.

I have received many letters from my own constituency, the James Bay Trappers Council for example, written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urging him to lead the way in indicating to Great Britain that the action they are proposing is totally unacceptable. In Yellowknife in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon there are proposals that we start boycotting British goods if this action goes through. I agree with the Hon. Member for Yukon that this kind of spiralling approach is counter-productive and no one wins.

I conclude by repeating that the fur industry is a legitimate one. It is of vital importance to the subsistence economy and culture of aboriginal peoples. The British Government must reconsider its ill-advised action. Passing this Bill in the British Parliament will do nothing at all to enhance Canadian-Anglo relations which many of us continue to value highly, especially those among us who see the Commonwealth of Nations as being a force for understanding and good will in a world which is too frequently hostile and violent.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and other Members of this House for seeking this emergency debate and to express my appreciation and that of the Government of the Chair's decision to have a debate on the matter of the proposed British fur labelling regulation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and I have raised this matter directly with British authorities and it will be very helpful to us and to the country to have this debate on record in the House.

As I said here in Parliament on February 10, this Government reacted immediately to the British proposed regulation and very strongly declared our intention to fight it. I am, therefore, pleased to spell out the Government's position on the issue and at the same time help to send a clear signal of the unanimous concern of Members of this House to the British Government. This has been so far if I may say so, Sir, an excellent debate. I hope not only will it continue in that tone but that its contents will be read by parliamentarians in Britain, by Members of the British Government, because what we have here tonight are individual Canadian Members of Parliament, from all of the regions of this unique country expressing concern about an economy and very much about the Canadian tradition and our way of life.

I should stress from the outset that the preservation and enhancement of the environment is not at issue here. Canadians do not need to be read lessons on the care of our natural heritage, including our wildlife. Trapping, hunting and other harvesting are closely monitored and weighed against their environmental impact. The Canadian fur industry has co-operated fully with federal conservation authorities and with the provinces and territories in ensuring that the balance is maintained between different species of wildlife and their habitat.

The British Government, to the best of our knowledge, does not contest this fact. Yet, there is a groundswell of sensitivity in Europe for the animal welfare movement which tends to propagate willfully or unwillfully a false picture of Canadian wildlife management. The current crusade by organized animal groups in Europe, the United States and Canada aims at banning trapping and particularly the use of leg-hold traps.

What is really at issue here? The real issue here is whether an historic and legitimate trade on which important segments of our aboriginal population depend for their livelihood can arbitrarily be destroyed as a result of unsubstantiated accusations. Let me cite, Mr. Speaker, a few figures on what this means for the people of Canada, particularly in the North. Fur is, of course, a billion dollar industry in Canada. But for many people it is much more than an industry. It is the only way they can gain their livelihood. This question is not just about animals, this question is about people, how they respect their traditions, how they maintain their lives and how they build and sustain their communities.

Trapping accounts for approximately 50 per cent of our fur harvest. It employs over 100,000 people of whom at least 50,000 are from native communities. Therefore, the imposition of this regulation will seriously affect 50,000 native Canadians whose sole source of income in many cases is from the traditional occupations of hunting, trapping and fishing. Trapping provides or supplements income for thousands of Canadians in rural and remote regions where, very often, there is little alternative employment or only seasonal work. The fur industry is characterized primarily by small family run operations at all levels of the production chain.

Since 1980, the number of furs sold has declined, yet the yearly average value of furs exported from Canada is approximately $350 million. Europe currently constitutes the second largest market-place for Canadian fur products with total recorded sales of $150 million in 1987. The United Kingdom was second to West Germany among our European markets. It is clearly possible for an action of the British Government to disrupt the livelihood of hundreds of small Canadian communities. That is what we are here tonight seeking to avoid. That is why this Government has steadfastly rebutted the arguments of the British opponents of fur trapping while, at the same time, pursuing proposals for international standards of humane trapping which would meet any legitimate concern.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is not a marginal market. However, the paradox here is that most operators on this market belong to a minority whose economic activity is constantly subjected to unfair criticism.

Canadian representatives met their European counterparts in April to keep them informed of Canadian concerns. Ministers from the Northwest Territories visited Great Britain to explain the impact the measures proposed by the British might have on our northern communities. The Office of our High Commissioner in London has been in touch with all levels of the industry in Great Britain. Members of this House have spoken directly to and corresponded with British members.

At the Cabinet level, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), raised the matter at recent talks in London. Personally, I also raised the subject in the course of bilateral discussions with Sir Geoffrey Howe. After these meetings, it was clear to all concerned that unjustified action that could be seriously damaging to Canadian communities could not but have a disastrous impact on our relations. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) discussed the matter during his conversations with Mrs. Thatcher, who said she wanted to obtain more information on the subject.

[English]

I hope, Sir, reason will prevail and Mrs. Thatcher will see to it that the proposed regulation is not adopted by the British Cabinet. But we need to remind ourselves and our British friends of some basic facts regarding trapping in Canada.

Trappers, industry and Governments within Canada support the development and the use of humane trapping systems. Canada is a world leader in the research and development of humane trapping standards as well as in trapper training to ensure conservation of resources, the best use of fur and high quality fur products.

No endangered or threatened fur-bearing species are trapped in Canada. The fur trade today is solidly based on the responsible use of a renewable natural resource. This is true for both farmed and wild furs.

Both for Indians and northern communities generally, trapping represents an integral part of a special way of life. Trapping is a vital element in the tradition and culture of many of Canada's rural and indigenous people. Its roots go back to the days of the early fur traders of the Hudson's Bay Company and the continuity they represent with modern times.

Native groups, territorial and provincial Governments and members of the fur industry have all approached me to express their legitimate concerns. There is an indisputable unanimity here which cannot be ignored. On this basis, and in full appreciation of the strong expressed willingness by the fur industry to adopt even more humane trapping methods, I want to take the opportunity in this debate to emphasize again that there is a constructive and positive alternative to the labelling requirement. Canada has made a very serious proposal that nations work together to establish humane trapping standards.

Therefore tonight I want to reaffirm our early proposal for the creation of an international humane trapping standards committee in which the United Kingdom, as well as Canada, the United States and other countries with pertinent fur interests might participate together. This would allow our friends across the Atlantic to be part of the humane trap development and monitoring process on an international scale while assisting the Canadian fur industry in continuing to ensure the further growth of an industry that is ecologically sound. That is a constructive way to achieve the goal of some members of the British public without disrupting Canadian traditions, without destroying Canadian communities.

We have learned much about morality from Great Britain in the course of the history of this country. Our respect for the integrity and the fair-mindedness of British institutions and British Governments is too great to permit the thought that in the name of morality, they could seek to secure the immoral consequence of destroying an industry of hard working people, an industry conducted in harmony with nature. It is our hope, on the contrary, that British authorities and authorities in other countries will join with us in developing new standards of humanity for the industry which will gain acceptance in all countries that originate furs and that utilize furs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, on March 5, 1979, the former Hon. Member for St. John's East, who is now the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, moved a motion under Standing Order 43 that this House reaffirm the right of Canadian sealers to go about their legitimate pursuits under the strict supervision of the Government of Canada and the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies free from harassment and interference. All Members present in the House at that time agreed to that motion.

A similar motion was agreed to on February 9, 1982. There was all-Party agreement to the continuation of the seal industry in Canada in the face of protests and opposition from the same kind of people who are now pursuing the fur industry with the same vigour. My fear, and the fear of other Hon. Members, is that the same results might ensue.

Today, there is no real commercial seal industry in Canada, and this has been as a result of the actions taken against that industry and against Canada by the immoral vilification of Newfoundlanders and Canadians who go about the legitimate business of working with animals and harvesting animals as a part of the traditional way of life Canadians have had for centuries.

We need more than simply an all-Party agreement to a motion in the House. We need serious action on the part of the Government to do more than just make pious arguments to the British Government which, unfortunately, is about to take action against the Canadian fur industry.

This is not just a response to concerns about the leg-hold trap. It is not only the wild fur industry that will be affected, although that industry will be seriously affected. In Canada, there are large ranching operations. In Newfoundland alone, there are 120 silver fox farms and 15 mink operations. These operations bring in in excess of $1 million at the farm gate, not counting the spin-offs to feed and other related industries. That part of the industry depends as well on the international market. All fur will be affected by the insidious action being proposed in the United Kingdom.

It is proposed that labels be required to say: "This garment may contain furs caught in a leg-hold trap". That affects the entire fur industry, whether it be the wild fur industry or the ranched fur industry, a very important part of the lives of many communities, individuals and families in Canada.

Very similar to those involved with the seal hunt, these are individuals, families and aboriginal peoples who depend upon this industry for their livelihood and who have very few other alternatives. When the sealing industry was destroyed by international actions and by boycotts in the U.K. and the EEC, many Newfoundlanders suffered a loss of income and a loss of self-respect and pride from not being able to earn an income. In other parts of Canada, there were far more serious consequences.

For example, on Broughton Island, a community in which Inuit hunters harvested more seals per capita than any community in the world before the European ban was imposed, eight of the community's 60 teenagers have taken their own lives in the last two years and a dozen more have tried and failed. This is the effect of such action on communities that are devastated by economic losses suffered because of the destruction of a traditional way of life.

The truth is that Canada trying to take the high moral ground, suggesting that we are humane in our trapping methods, has promoted more than anything else the research and development into proper methods of animal harvesting, but these actions have not worked. We have to recognize that in a sense, it is the tip of the iceberg to suggest a minor labelling program, something the British Government calls a minimal response to the demands of its people. The actions being taken in the U.K. will affect proposed legislation throughout the European economic community.

The EEC's environmental and animal welfare committee will be meeting in the near future to discuss various proposals relating to the fur industry. These include proposals to tag furs from all EEC countries, to ban the use of the leg-hold trap in Europe and to extend the present ban on the import of white coat and blue-back seal products to cover all seals up to one year old.

We have moved from the very emotional issue which was predominant several years ago, the banning of the white coat seal harvested in Atlantic Canada, to another one. That issue dealt with cute, pretty seals who were cute and pretty for three weeks and were easy to use in fund raising efforts and to create emotional responses. The farther one got away from the realities of making a living in Atlantic Canada, in rural Newfoundland and in the far North, the more sympathy was generated for the kind of measures that were being taken.

We require a very serious action on the part of the Government, not merely action to let the international community know that we are good guys when it comes to humane treatment. Those sentiments fall on deaf ears. We have to spend money and resources to ensure that the people in the United Kingdom know that we take seriously their attack on the rural people of Canada, their attack on the relationship our communities have with the natural environment around them, their attack on the opportunities available for the people of rural Canada to make a living. They are showing incredible hypocrisy in their countries in relation to the use of animals. Every country in the world makes use of animals in the way in which they live and pursue their economic destiny, be it wool in clothing, silk scarves or neckties, or leather shoes or belts. All these items come from animals. One could label a steak as having come from a cow that was shot between the eyes, or a pork chop as having been produced by slitting the throat of a pig. People who live in the cities or far removed from the realities of life do not concern themselves with from where these products come.

The reality is that human beings live with the animal kingdom and make use of the resources of nature. We have to do that in order to maintain our existence on this planet.

We need more than all-Party agreement that this is a serious issue. We know that this is a most serious issue for the aboriginal people of Canada, rural Newfoundlanders, and all people trying to make a living harvesting animals. That message must be put across in a most forceful way, not only through diplomatic channels but through the efforts of the Government and all parliamentarians. We must ensure that the British Parliament is well aware of the serious consequences which their previous actions caused for the sealers of Newfoundland, the aboriginal people of Canada, and the communities of Canada.

I call upon the Government to renew its commitment and to start acting on its commitment to the sealers of Newfoundland to respond to the recommendations of the Malouf Commission, which have yet to be implemented, in terms of support for the rebuilding of the sealing industry in Canada. We need an active demonstration that the Government will fight for the preservation of the culture and way of life in communities which depend on fur farming, trapping, hunting, and on fishing as well.

If we allow these kinds of attacks on the way of life of Canadians to continue, we will see no end to the bans, impositions, and strictures on our way of life. We have to make it clear that there will be consequences for countries which take such actions against Canada. It will require such a tough response from the Government of Canada to hold back the actions being proposed in the United Kingdom, mainly supported by those who themselves make use of animal products at all stages of their daily lives.

They have as their goal not only the attack on a particular type of alleged cruel activity, but in fact wish to ban all use of animals by humans and will ultimately destroy many communities in Canada. The banning of the seal hunt destroyed not only the communities but the lives of those affected by a high suicide rate and increased inactivity, leading to alcoholism, desperation, and no possibility of carrying on in a dignified manner to pursue the way of life they had pursued for many generations.

I call upon the Government to be forceful, to act strongly, and to leave no doubt in the minds of all parliamentarians in the United Kingdom that Canada means business on this issue, that we will not allow this industry to be hurt the way the seal industry was hurt, and that we will take forceful and appropriate action against the U.K. if it goes ahead with this proposal.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say only a few words on the subject being debated in this emergency debate this evening. It was rather interesting to watch the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stand in the House a few moments ago and say that he discussed this question with Sir Geoffrey Howe, that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) discussed it with the British Prime Minister, and that the officials discussed with the officials.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs said absolutely nothing regarding retaliation by this Government if the Cabinet of Britain goes ahead with this resolution. He should have said that they would tell the British to forget their submarine contracts if they go ahead with this resolution before the British House.

However, he did not say that. The Government is going to lay back again and, this time, allow the British Parliament to run all over it like the Government of France has run all over it. I suppose one could say—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): This is a non-partisan issue.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member says that it is non-partisan. There is nothing non-partisan about this issue whatsoever. I am going to be extremely partisan. The NDP may not like what I am about to say, either.

At least the Government of Canada can announce, at this very moment, what it intends to do in retaliation if the British Cabinet goes ahead with the resolution it has under consideration. They did it to us with the seals and they are going to do it to us again with our trappers.

There are 105,000 people employed in this country, directly or indirectly, partially or full time, in the fur business. We had $600 million of trade with Great Britain in 1985, plus $200 million in transportation costs with Great Britain. The Government will do nothing. It will let things slide as it always has.

It was this Government which turned around only a few months ago and announced that it was official, that no more would white seals be killed in Canada, that it was illegal to kill the whitecoats. The Government announced that without saying why it had taken that move.

• (2130)

They should be ashamed of themselves, especially Members from Atlantic Canada—

Mr. Forrestall: Tell me about Roméo Leblanc? Where is he from? Where was he when all this started?

Mr. Baker: Let me get down to a few facts.

Mr. Forrestall: Tell us about Roméo.

Mr. Baker: The Hon. Member will have a chance to speak in a few moments. I hope he does so, but I am sure he will not. He does not want to stand in the House for 10 or 15 minutes and put his thoughts to paper because he does not have any.

Mr. Forrestall: Where was Rompkey when this problem started? Where was Leblanc?

Mr. Baker: Let us deal with the question before the House. The seal hunt in Newfoundland was—

Mr. Forrestall: Where was Don Jamieson when these problems started?

Mr. Baker: The seal hunt still continues in several areas of Newfoundland today.

Mr. Forrestall: Where was Rompkey?

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, there is a Member talking across the way. Could you bring him to order? He is getting on my nerves.

Mr. Forrestall: You do not like the truth, eh?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker) has the floor.

Mr. Baker: At the beginning of the seal hunt issue there were several groups that supported the organizations that were opposed to the seal hunt. There were several Members of Parliament who stood in their place in the House and demanded an end to the seal hunt back in the early 1970s.

A lot of money was collected in Canada itself for organizations like Greenpeace and the International Fund for Animal Welfare Incorporated which was situated in St. Laurent, Quebec, at 1505 Lapine Street, to be exact. It is a matter of public record that some Members in the House at that time supported what the opponents of the seal hunt were doing. It is a matter of public record that they included Conservatives and New Democrats.

However, I do not believe that any of the political Parties agree with banning the seal hunt today. Each Party has passed a resolution in support of the sealers of Newfoundland and Labrador.

There are approximately 3,000 sealers in my riding, which stretches along the northeast coast of Newfoundland. There is the outrageous situation today in which thousands of these men go out and still get their seals but can only sell the meat. There has always been a seal meat cannery in my riding that employed some 100 people during that time of the winter. Of course, some of the seals are still killed today but only for the meat because the pelt is no longer in demand.

The Government still has not answered as to why there was initiative to do exactly the same thing with the seal pelts when similar action was being taken as they were being shipped overseas? Perhaps that is the biggest fault of Governments that had to deal with the problem in those days.

Mr. Forrestall: Where was the Liberal Government in the 1970s? What were you doing? Tell us about that.

Mr. Baker: I hope the Hon. Member will tell us what is on his mind. He has not spoken in this House in about 10 years. Maybe he will give us a speech in 10 or 15 minutes.

Mr. Forrestall: Tell us about Rompkey.

Mr. Baker: The Government should address this issue before the House tonight by retaliating against the Government of Britain. If it were doing its job, it would tell Britain to forget about a nuclear submarine contract. It could spend the $8 billion on daycare or allocate it to a special program for students who are trying to work their way through university.

Why is the Government not prepared to take this action? Perhaps it is because the friends of the Government are with the PR firms and lobbying firms that have contracts with the British. For example, GCI was recently hired to represent the Government of Great Britain in lobbying to sell its submarines. Perhaps that is why the Government will not deny the British any opportunity for a submarine contract.

My colleague who began the debate for the Official Opposition stated that the bottom line of the debate was that there should be a solution to the long-term problem. Perhaps we should be trying to develop a market here in Canada and to do with the pelts and fur what is being done in other parts of the world.

Perhaps the most disgraceful aspect of this debate is that there is no such thing as a leg-hold trap in use in Canada today. It is illegal in Canada and has not been used here in 10 years. Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs stands in the House to say that he spoke to Sir Geoffrey Howe and that the Prime Minister spoke to Mrs. Thatcher about this problem. I hope he informs them that the leg-hold trap has been illegal in this country for the last 10 years.

I am sure that all trappers and all sensible people who know and are concerned about this issue are calling on the Government of Canada to say how it will retaliate if this resolution is passed by the British Cabinet.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to Hon. Members from all Parties. I just heard the unfortunate speech of the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate (Mr. Baker), who decided to interject with political rhetoric about a vital issue.

He brought the level of debate down to a new low with his typical "Twillingate-isms" from Newfoundland. It is unfortunate that he could not have used the same style and quality as the Member from the New Democratic Party.

My concern about this issue of humane traps relates to my lifetime of outdoor interests. It goes back to 1974-79, during the period that I served on the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At that time the Standing Committee had the opportunity, on an annual basis, to review the report of the Federal-Provincial Committee for the Development of Humane Trapping and the development of a humane trap. That committee was a creature of the Liberal Government. It laboured long and hard to invite the trappers of Canada to send in their inventions for a humane trap and have those inventions tested.

This is now operated by the Fur Institute of Canada. The traps are now tested in Vegreville, Alberta, at the Environmental Research Centre run by the Alberta Government. Therein lies one of the problems which we face. The annual budget for the research centre at Vegreville is around $600,000. I suggest that if this nation has the capacity to put into space on a U.S. space vehicle something that is so vastly advanced in technology as the Canadarm, surely we have the inventiveness and the funds to develop a very precise and effective 100 per cent, "no problem whatsoever", humane trap.

In the minds of trappers there are, of course, precise traps for precise purposes for precise animals. In the minds of average persons, for example someone living on Bay Street or Bloor Street in Toronto, or anywhere else in a big city in Canada, a trap is a trap and an animal is an animal. They really do not make any differentiation as to how an animal is caught and how it dies.

What is the purpose of testing the mechanisms in Vegreville? Is it to provide a trap that will provide an instant kill for, say, a marten, a fisher, or a mink? What is instant? One minute, two minutes, a maximum of three minutes? That is pretty fast.

There are other traps such as the leg-hold trap. We heard the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate on the wrong track on that issue. Recently there has been some extensive testing conducted at the University of Minnesota on behalf of the Canadian Government and the Fur Institute of Canada to develop and determine the kind of pressures that there are on foxes in terms of emotional stresses and strains with the new type of leg-hold trap. Those tests have been very positive. Indeed, the tests show that any fox in a wild state has more pressures, more stresses, and different kinds of environmental strains on it which occur after the first 20 minutes in this revised, modernized, and scientifically developed leg-hold trap.

It cannot stop there. What this debate is really about is not what has happened today in Britain or is happening today in Britain; it is what is going to continue to happen and what has already gone on before, going back to the 1970s, going back to the birth, the spawning of the Brian Davies of this world and all of that ilk.

I refer to the animal rights peoples and the animal rights funds that sought millions of dollars and received millions of dollars in support of their efforts to bring a stop to the legitimate seal hunt of Newfoundland. What did they gain? They gained all kinds of gold to line their own pockets. There was not one receipt, not one financial statement, not one membership card—nothing. Ask Brian Davies. He will tell Hon. Members that it was the best thing he ever did in order to earn money. That is where that group is coming from.

Where has it gone? Where has it gone from that point? What is happening here in Canada? The European Economic Community and the European Parliament were the ones who initially torpedoed the fur seal. They are the ones who made the political decision to ban the fur seal in Europe. It was a decision that was based purely on politics and not on facts. They had the facts. They knew the facts.

However, it has gone beyond that. We now see the European Parliament busying itself with precise measurements for chicken coops. We must have a precise space for a laying hen. We must have a precise space for a broiler chicken. We must have a precise space for a pigpen, and a precise space for a cattle pen. That is where it is going.

Where else is it going? I was given a document recently, printed by an animal rights activist group, an extremist group. What did the document contain? In chapter and verse it laid out the manner in which to burglarize, terrorize, destroy vehicles, or break and enter a lab or a university. It sets out how to break and enter a zoo, or any facility. It sets out how to destroy the vehicles that may be there and how to run a car off the road. It tells one how to stretch a heavy steel cable painted black from one side of the highway to the other. What happens then? A car coming down the road strikes the cable, slides along the cable and off the road, and it is out of one's hair. That is the nature and the extreme to which these animal rights movements are headed. They are not out simply to vandalize a Dixie Lee chicken or a burger joint because they have meat or because they have chicken. Mr. Speaker, you are going to say: "You are really getting into extremes here". The fact is that those extremes are there. They are with us. That is what concerns me.

When we come back to Canada and trapping today, we see that we are making improvements in the development of humane traps. Two of the traps that have been tested at Vegreville come from my riding. I refer to the spillet trap or ymir trap and the kanya trap from the Slocan Valley. A gentleman of 70 years of age tested and tested his traps for a very long time and then developed them to the point that they could be tested at Vegreville.

I go back to the point that we are only spending $600,000 per year on the trapping fraternity of Canada, on all those indigenous people and their way of life, and that is all we are prepared to lay out. It goes further than that. It is not just trapping. It is hunting. When the animal rightists have succeeded in altering that milieu, that type of environment, then they will move on to fishing. I ask Hon. Members: "Do not think that that is some kind of idle suggestion?" It has already been espoused by the guru himself, Brian Davies.

What is needed is a plan that has been well thought out, well worked out, a plan that pays attention to the balance of our ecology.

The people who are hurt the most in all of this are the people who can least afford it. What we have are the animal rights people attacking, for example, the indigenous people, but not necessarily. They also attack the trapper, the hunter, that element of society. Once successful they remove them. Successfully removing them for what—for industrial development, for that pipeline that might otherwise not have been approved, for that large industrial complex that might not otherwise been approved because there were several trappers there, tribes, or groups of indigenous people. We have got them out of the way because we have removed from them their lifestyle. That is what the animal right movement accomplishes or can accomplish. The philosophy of the animal rights movement can then unconsciously serve the interests of the developer rather than the indigenous peoples of this country.

It is the British who have the fox and the hounds. It is the hounds that tear apart the fox. They tear it to shreds after they have chased it to death. That society condones that. At the same time it seeks to impose its will upon us while it subscribes money to hedgehog hospitals. What a mockery.

It is the reality of today that we provide a system of understanding. We should be prepared to invest substantially in the education of Canadians and also of people of other nations about what Canada is all about—that huge land of mystery with only 26 million people who must live off the land and have lived off the land since the day that the indigenous peoples arrived along the Arctic shores.

Today, at the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and Northern Development, I had the privilege to move that 5,000 copies of that committee's excellent publication in 1984 be published. On reconsideration, that was increased to 10,000. The committee has approved that. Earlier today, in response to a question that I put, the Minister indicated his support of that publication, with the view in mind of the European press, the world press at the Economic Summit, having an opportunity to receive a copy of that excellent publication. It is the creature of a great deal of work by the Standing Committee on Aboriginal Affairs and all its members in 1984. I am proud to have played a small role in that regard. In March, I was also pleased to have the opportunity to discuss those concerns on animal rights and where the fur trade was heading with colleagues in the United States—a couple of Senators and a couple of Congressmen—with a view to developing an over-all plan required to offset the negative, damaging, and deceitful impact of the animal rights movement.

Therefore, I urge the House to consider the development of a long-range plan in terms of the explanation, the understanding, and the acceptance of trapping. In that context, we must start in the schools. In the same context, we must move to a better understanding of hunting, the balance of nature, and how that works.

It is interesting to note that the provincial Ministers have shown an interest and concern in coming together to determine what they as Ministers of the Environment or Ministers responsible for wildlife may do to assist Canada in the development of a master plan. It will take a great deal of work and money. There is nothing very sexy about someone in a white fur coat being shot on the street and thrown over a pack horse to demonstrate that this is what happens to the animal. It has a great deal of shock and audience appeal in the context of shock.

We must take a lesson from such people as Allan Herscovici and Second Nature, a very excellent text. The public would be well served to take the opportunity to read some of the statements that he has provided.

I would like to conclude with a brief remark made by Mr. Herscovici who said: "The root of our ecological crisis lies in technology, urbanism, and wealth. Animal rights groups, however, have to date attacked those who live closest to the land, who are poorest, and who have remained relatively aloof from mass technological society". Let us come up with a master plan.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope that we can have order in this debate. It is a very serious debate. We are not only attempting to address Canadians or our colleagues in the House, but we are seeking to get a message to Britain. We hope that Members of the British Parliament will have an opportunity to read these Debates, or we could send them a video tape in order that they could receive the message from all of Canada on our concerns in terms of the motion before their House.

I wish to begin by reading from a letter with the letterhead of "10 Downing Street". The person who signed the letter is the Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher. She indicates in the letter that this matter "is still the subject of consultation". While she understands that we have concerns in this country, she states that "we must also take account of the widespread public concern here in the U.K. about the use of leg-hold traps. There is strong pressure for a ban on the import of furs . . . ", and the letter continues.

The proposition that I wish to put before this House is that the action that Britain is considering is presently at the stage of study and consultation. Prime Minister Thatcher refers to that and refers to coming to a final decision. The counsel that I would like to give to the British Prime Minister is for more study and consultation. She ought to reflect upon this matter in full before coming to a decision. She ought not to make a decision on this matter on the basis of widespread public concern or strong pressure. She ought to be looking at the merits of the case. While she says in the letter "there is strong pressure for a ban on the import of furs", and that the United Kingdom is being pushed to have a ban, she later states that the U.K. is being nice because it will label the products instead, and that this is a minimal response.

We do not want to be fobbed off with a minimal response, which leaves us with a sense of guilt that we are doing something wrong and the British Parliament is being nice to us. We would like them to take the time to study this issue and come to a moral conclusion. In other words, if furs from trapping ought to be banned and a solid and sound argument can be made for that, that is the irrefutable conclusion, then ban them; however, consider the matter first and fully and make the decision on the basis of merit, not of public pressure.

Surely if there is one Leader on this globe who has demonstrated a capacity to make decisions on the basis of principle, it is the Prime Minister of Great Britain. I fundamentally disagree with many of her principles, but I call upon her to provide leadership and to make a decision in this regard on the basis of principle. She should continue with the study and consultation and reflect some more on the issue take the time to come to a full and reasoned conclusion, and not just respond to public pressure.

What we as parliamentarians are faced with is a battle for the public mind. That is evident from Margaret Thatcher's letter in which she says that they must take into account widespread public concern. We have to win over the public if we are to win over the British Government and preserve the trapping industry in this country.

I think the fundamental question here is one of balance. On one hand we have animals and on the other we have people. The animal rights movement has done a very effective job of putting forward the case for protecting animals. I have nothing against them for doing that. However, there is another story which has to influence the decision if it is to be just and moral. The other side of the balance is people and communities. What happens to them if the industry is destroyed? I believe their case could be imaginatively and graphically presented if we took it upon ourselves to do so.

A hundred years or so ago there lived a great British writer, Jonathan Swift. The children of Ireland were starving and he used his pen to get that point across. The way he did it was to say: "We have so many children here that we ought to market them. We ought to chop them up like beef and sell them". He drew such a horrid picture that people became fully aware of the suffering of those children. We need to do the same thing today with respect to trappers. We have to do it through television, of course, because that is the way we communicate. We use television images. We have to be able to tell the British people that if they destroy the trapping industry, if they destroy the livelihood of aboriginal communities in the North, they will have increased unemployment, increased alcoholism, and increased suicide. To achieve a real balance, for every bleeding animal they see on television they should also see the dead bodies of those who have committed suicide as a result of the destruction of this industry.

If the people of Britain want to make a moral decision they have to have a balance. They have to consider the people and their communities. Those communities include more than northern communities. In the City of Winnipeg where I come from and in which my riding is located we have many people involved in the fur industry. It is not just a northern question.

Another aspect of this question is this: Where is the good in the issue of trapping and harvesting? I suggest that when it comes to using natural resources, the difference between use and abuse of a resource is again a question of balance. You have to balance your use against your need. If you look at aboriginal practices, history, and culture, it is easy to learn. Aboriginal people have historically taken from the land what was needed for sustenance; they have not done what we do today, rape the land and destroy the environment. If you take what you need from this planet, I suggest that what you are doing is good. That is not only true with respect to historic and traditional native values. It is also true in the western Christian tradition. The Bible says that we should take dominion over all of this. You name the animal. That is the theological, moral and spiritual basis for describing the taking of something for your own use and sustenance as good rather than evil.

There is another sense in which the question we are faced with today is one of balance. I want to speak about this historically and then in modern terms. Historically there is a question of balance between peoples. I think the Europeans are on the verge of repeating an historical mistake and once again doing an injustice to aboriginal peoples. It was the European demand for furs that created the fur industry in the first place. It was the European markets that disrupted the subsistence economy of North America. It was that market that made aboriginal peoples dependent upon European peoples. That led to undercutting the culture and way of life and spiritual values, which led to the destruction of the aboriginal way of life. That was started by the interaction among European peoples, markets, and aboriginal communities.

It was the tastes of Europe that led to the destruction of the aboriginal way of life. I am sure Europeans would not want to repeat that process because their tastes have changed and because someone thought that television advertising, through the effective use of propaganda, could sell the notion that it is wrong to wear fur, to trap and harvest animals. I ask Europeans to consider carefully their own history and to ask themselves whether they want to repeat the errors of the past.

The question of balance occurs in another way. As the Europeans look at the aboriginal peoples there are a couple of pictures to see—the pictures of trapping and of the animal suffering. People could conclude that that activity must stop because it is wrong for animals to suffer. I have already dealt with that question. I have dealt with the need to look at the other side of the coin, that is, what happens to the people. However, Europeans should look at the over-all behaviour of aboriginal peoples as they affect the environment, which is important to learn and observe. The aboriginal peoples have lived on this continent for a millennium and have preserved the environment. They have lived on this planet in harmony with the environment. Europeans should learn the values that underlie the aboriginal way of life because we have need of those values today.

Let me turn to another point. What are we doing about preserving the Brazilian rain forests? How man McDonald's restaurants are there in Britain, and how many of those are labelled? We know that the Brazilian rain forests are destroyed to make way for massive ranches to raise cattle and have cheap beef that shows up in a fast food restaurants in the middle of London, England. That destruction alters our climate. The Europeans ought to focus on the relation between the aboriginal peoples and the environment. They should be asking questions. They should focus upon the important and big issues rather than look at things in a narrow context, forgetting that there are two sides to everything.

It is time to consider this issue and to study it in more depth. No one should rush into a decision responding to pressure campaigns that can be mounted by the electronic media.

Margaret Thatcher says that by labelling she is offering a kind of minimal response. But you can have labels and you can have labels, Mr. Speaker. The suggested label is to state that fur comes from animals that may have been caught by leg-hold traps, which is meant to project a negative image that what was done is bad. She says that the purpose is to provide information. Maybe the label ought to say that these animals have been harvested by trapping.

There are many kinds of labels and many ways to present information. Time should be taken to study the issue, to consult and reflect. Rather than responding to pressure, one should consider that by coming to a just decision one not only considers what happens to animals but what happens to people. One has to consider what happens in a remote northern community dependent upon fishing and trapping. What happens to that community if it no longer has the revenue from trapping? What happens to a community that already may have 60 per cent to 80 per cent unemployment and is deprived of its source of income? What happens to people who have no hope in their lives? One must consider not just animals but people as well, and take time to come to a reasoned conclusion as to what may or may not need to be done.

I hope Members of the British Parliament have an opportunity to see the record of this debate and that Great Britain's Prime Minister can take the time to consider her decision. If her objective is to provide people with information, she ought to consider what kind of labelling she is getting into. First, she needs to consider the over-all question of justice and morality and the whole question of trapping and making a living.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this important debate this evening. The Parliament of Great Britain is referred to as the mother of Parliament by Canadians. We hope it will recognize the importance that Members of this House, representing three political Parties, place on this issue. We asked our Speaker to recognize the urgency of this issue and to allow a special debate in our Chambers. I want to emphasize that the matter is considered a very important issue by all three political Parties here.

It is strange, as colleagues in the House and men and women have mentioned, that for centuries the aboriginal people in Canada have lived in harmony with the land, with the waters, and with the animal inhabitants. That is something everyone can recognize. People have developed a skill and an understanding that such harmony must be respected. It is a measure of success. In cultures it is a measure of obtaining adulthood. The respect for the elements are the elements of nature. Those elements are not strange. They are the fellow creatures, the sources of food, clothing and tools. It is fundamental and is a characteristic of culture and of lifestyle.

Those of us in Canada who come from the northern and western parts understand the harsh climate and the soil conditions of our land. Our land is not warm. It is not hospitable. There have to be options for survival, and the options have to be there for the scattered native people of Canada as well. For many isolated communities, as other Members have mentioned, particularly in northern Canada—and I do not refer only to north of 60°; farther south there are isolated communities—there are limited employment opportunities. This is a means of earning an income.

The Inuit in the eastern Arctic are particularly dependent upon wildlife for food and clothing because of costs, because of tradition, and because of the area in which they have lived for millennia, an area which they understand much better than I and much better than most Members of the Chamber.

This is not just a political issue. I would like to refer to the words of the Right Reverend John R. Sperry, Bishop of the Arctic, in a letter which he sent to the British House of Commons on March 9, 1988. Bishop Sperry says that in northern Canada, without agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, factories, and all the avenues of employment traditionally evident in Britain, our native people are themselves trapped, caught in an era of cultural erosion, beset by social upheavals of every description, and experience a perplexing unknown that they have not known in their entire history. To rob them of what little is left of their traditional way of life is an act of unwarranted cruelty. I hope that Members of the House of Commons and House of Lords in Great Britain had an opportunity to read that letter from the Right Reverend John R. Sperry.

There are some 50,000 aboriginal trappers in Canada. Fur harvesting through trapping enables them to carry on their traditional lifestyle, the lifestyle of living off the land. It is a necessary supplement to income, and it also provides food for their families.

Trapping offers the native people of Canada an opportunity to maintain their spiritual and cultural relationship, that relationship with the land and with the resources of the land. What we fear most is the removal of that relationship by action that we hope does not take place. It has certainly come very close to taking place. It was supposedly entered by mistake and withdrawn, but it could take place in the House of Commons in Great Britain.

Other Members have mentioned that we in Canada find it very strange that fortunes were made in Great Britain by the very industry that some politician is now seeking to destroy. This politician feels that this action is cost-free. It is a way of getting re-elected without cost, taking on an industry and a people in Canada in a way which he feels will not cause him any harm in his political career in Great Britain.

Those involved in the anti-fur campaign feel that they can destroy this largely traditional lifestyle, again without paying any cost. I find it to be a real irony that the animal rights advocates who are primarily urban dwellers would destroy an aboriginal way of life based on respect for wildlife and for a harmonious co-existence with the natural world, a way of life which has already been lost to city dwellers. They wish it to be lost to the people of Canada who rely on this industry.

It is not an even game. The cards are stacked against the Canadian fur trappers. The urban based anti-fur lobby, the anti-trapping lobby, and animal rights groups are highly organized, well financed, and extremely adept at emotionally loaded advertising techniques. In any other kind of public persuasion, the advertising that has been put forward by the anti-fur campaign in Great Britain would be classified as—I will not say immoral, but it certainly would be classified as—and I will not say immoral—being sensational to the extreme and not putting forward a balanced point of view. It preys upon emotions of people who have no way of recognizing the change that could take place or any alternative that could be put forward. Actually, it is a cheap shot at people who are not able to put forward their own arguments and information to the British public.

I think it must be recognized that the aboriginal people and those involved in the trapping industry in Canada are not lacking in sophistication. They know about Boot's Drug Stores, Cadbury chocolates, and Marks & Spencer. They are willing to identify those outlets of British goods in Canada, and they will ask other Canadians to join them in fighting back if necessary. They have also asked to have identified those industries that would be particularly apparent in Mr. Clark's riding. That, I think, shows that they are serious about their lifestyle. They are not lacking in sophistication. They are willing to take on a powerful politician who wishes to use the people in the trapping and fur industry of Canada to gain his re-election without any concern for the cost or consequence to the aboriginal people and trappers of Canada.

The circumstances in which the trappers of Canada now find themselves were paralleled by that in which the Canadian sealers found themselves. It is against our rules to hold up evidence, but I was proud when I was first made a Minister of the Crown to be presented with a sealskin briefcase by the people of the Northwest Territories. I am proud to carry it. It would be something that I would carry to Great Britain, and I would like to say that though that may be found objectionable, it would not be objectionable to me and it is not objectionable to other Canadians.

There are ways that southern-based animal activists could attempt to understand the harsh realities of life in the North, and they are unrealistic to believe that these people who rely on this industry could survive without the animals they use to trap for income.

The destruction of the Canadian fur industry would pose a much more lethal threat to healthy wildlife populations in Canada than would disease, mismanagement and starvation combined. Anyone who believes that this action will protect the wildlife of Canada does not understand what can happen through over-population.

In thousands of years the native people of Canada have trapped fur-bearing animals and they have never—and I repeat, never—endangered a single species. It is because the trappers, more than anyone else, realize that their responsibility rests with the greater good of the total environment, with the health and survival of the species, not of an individual animal. Conservation is truly a way of life for trappers. The existence of their trap lines ensures that the natural habitat will remain undisturbed and will continue to support the thousands of animals that depend upon that habitat for their survival.

It is not something that is done haphazardly. It is a controlled harvesting of a resource, just as I, as a farmer, control the harvesting of the resource on which I base my livelihood, that of the land and the soil. Trapping is regulated in Canada by provincial and territorial Governments through licences, quotas, seasons, and export permits. The Government of Canada holds that trapping is environmentally sound. It is in harmony with nature and is an important part of a cultural life in this country.

It is not only Members in this House of Commons representing three political Parties who recognize that. In World Conservation Strategy, the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources states:

> Conservation is . . . the management of human use of the biosphere so that it may yield the greatest sustainable benefit to present generations while maintaining its potential to meet the needs and aspirations of future generations. Thus conservation is positive, embracing preservation, maintenance, sustainable utilization, restoration and enhancement of the natural environment.

Canadians have much to be proud of in this context. There are 20 major fur-bearing species trapped in Canada. After several centuries of trapping, none of these species is endangered. Good trapping practices have resulted in good wildlife conservation.

In fact, the people of Great Britain should know, stemming from beaver hats, that the beaver has been a heavily trapped species in this country. It may now be more populous than it has ever been before. To maintain the validity of their licences, in some provinces, Ontario for example, trappers must trap a minimum percentage of beaver as part of their annual quota. That is required because if that resource were left unharvested it would destroy itself.

The Constitution of Canada recognizes and affirms the unique rights and special status of Indian, Inuit, and Métis people within the Canadian Confederation. These rights are being debated and have yet to be fully defined in law, but trapping is clearly regarded by the aboriginal peoples of Canada as a fundamental right. I do not find that strange. The Government of Canada has a responsibility to protect the right of aboriginal people to determine their way of life. Trapping is integral to their land claims and their spirituality and culture. Without trapping there would be a great loss of self-identity and self-worth.

Trapping and hunting have allowed aboriginal peoples to walk the fine line between their traditional lifestyle and assimilation into the industrial world. That has been their choice and that, of course, is a choice that they should be allowed to make.

In conclusion I would like to read into the record, not my words, not the words of someone from south of 60, not the words of someone unfamiliar with the needs of people in northern Canada, but the words of Stephen Kakfwi, the President of the Dene nation. He spoke to the Arctic Institute of North America in the winter of 1985. As we all know, Mr. Kakfwi is now a Minister of the Government of the Northwest Territories, duly elected by the people of his constituency. Mr. Kakfwi said:

> My people have cherished and protected our land for centuries and will continue to do so in the future.
> To a people who continue to live in close contact with the natural world, and who have always viewed ourselves as part of that world, the argument that trapping is cruel just doesn't ring true.
> We know that there is no humane death in nature. Animals that die of disease, or starvation, or fall prey to predators, suffer.
> On the other hand, we are appalled at many of the cruelties that industrial society imposes on animal populations. For us, the thought of an animal living its life pent up in a cage, with its only purpose being to await slaughter for someone's table—that is cruelty.
> We understand that many people are worried about the loss of wildlife species throughout the world. We share this concern.
> But we also know that the greatest threat to animals is not from hunting and trapping. It is from the destruction of their natural habitat by the industrial society—by pollution and encroachment on natural areas that provide shelter to animal populations.

He concluded:

> We believe we can offer our knowledge and experience as a people who live in close contact with nature to help change this dangerous trend.

I really hope that the Members of the House of Commons and the House of Lords in Great Britain, the people of Great Britain, and the people of Canada recognize the importance of this emergency debate on an issue supported by all three Parties in this Chamber; indeed, supported by thousands of Canadians who are represented in this Chamber. I would suggest that those Canadians would support the trappers and aboriginal people in Canada. If it comes to making decisions to retaliate against something that can be done without cost by another country imposing something on an industry and a people who are very important, it must receive the support of this Chamber and the people of Canada.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to join in the debate this evening resulting from the motion before us. The Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) and the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) called for an emergency debate with regard to considerations being made by the British Government to apply labelling to fur goods on sale in British shops which could lead to a large-scale boycott of the fur products.

I am pleased to join in the debate, not because it is a happy matter. Quite the contrary, it is a matter of enormous importance to many Canadians. It is a matter of enormous importance to people across the North and in that context it is very appropriate that my friend, the Hon. Member for Yukon, should have requested the debate. It is also a matter of enormous concern across northern Ontario, which makes it so very appropriate that the Hon. Member for Timiskaming should have put the motion forward.

In my area of northwestern Ontario, specifically in the constituency of Thunder Bay—Nipigon, a great deal of fur trapping is carried on as part of the livelihood of aboriginal people and residents of various communities including the City of Thunder Bay.

In these circumstances it is of enormous importance to consider what would be the impact of this British proposal. Not wanting in any way to get into a competition, because I recognize the involvement of a government private Member and my colleague in asking for this debate, I think it might be of interest to all of us in the House and to those listening across the country to be aware of how longstanding the concern about the threat to fur trapping in Canada has been.

As long ago as 1985 the federal council of the New Democratic Party dealt with the situation in a way which focused on the importance of fur trapping and the necessity for the real, strong action which we have been seeking evidence of from the government in Question Period today and at other earlier times. Our resolution declared:

• (2240)

Whereas the fur industry in Canada is worth $600 million to our economy; and employs 100,000 Canadians 60 per cent of whom are native; and

Whereas most native and many non-native trappers rely on trapping for a large part of their annual income; and

Whereas for native people, the harvesting of fur-bearing animals is a traditional occupation and an integral part of their way of life; and

S. O. 29

Whereas evidence on October 15, 1985 to the Parliamentary Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicated that an international campaign to destroy the livelihood of Canadian trappers is well underway; and

Whereas the success of such a campaign would result in catastrophic loss of income and social disruption such as that already caused by the European ban on seal pelts,

Therefore be it resolved that the New Democratic Party of Canada calls for:

(1) Support for trappers and recognition of the importance of trapping to the economy and society of northern, native and rural parts of the country;

(2) Immediate and substantial funding for the development and presentation of the Canadian trappers' side of the story to Canadians and to the public of those countries where inaccurate and unfair representations of the industry are being made;

(3) Scientific baseline studies on the populations of all fur-bearing animals in Canada;

(4) Evaluation of all available technologies on trapping methods.

Be it further resolved that the NDP calls on the Government of Canada and on our fellow parties in the Socialist International to protect and enhance the livelihood of trappers, particularly native Canadians.

In that resolution was a clear statement by the New Democratic Party of the importance of trapping as a basis for the livelihood of 100,000 Canadians, 60 per cent of whom are natives. Trapping was a vital source of income for these people and an essential part of their lifestyle.

The place of trapping in the life and livelihood of aboriginal people of Canada deserves particular recognition. There are some profound ironies in this regard, because across the vast reaches of this country where trapping is so important, who was it that made trapping a fundamental activity in the lives of these people? Surely it was the British subjects in early days, particularly those in the Hudson's Bay Company, who saw to it that this was how people would live.

Life before that was one of subsistence, in which hunting and fishing were important and furs would only be obtained for use as clothing and shelter, not for the purpose of sale. It was the fur trade from Europe, particularly Britain and the markets in London, that changed the lives of the aboriginal peoples in the North.

The extent of this transformation is well worth considering. Before the fur trade aboriginal peoples were more closely tied to the land, perhaps only moving from a summer fishing area to a winter hunting area. It was an almost symbiotic relationship with the land on which the aboriginal peoples lived. That close relationship still exists in their understanding of themselves and the recognition of the territories in which they live even though they have been pushed back into small reserves.

The arrival of the fur trade drew them from those hunting and fishing activities into trapping of furs for sale to the traders and the ultimate use of those furs far from where they lived. Of course, this had far-reaching consequences which have been documented by historians like Harold Innis, author of a great works in the 1930s dealing with the fur trade in Canada.

One can think of more recent historians and anthropologists who explored what the fur trade represented for native peoples of Canada. They became involved in transportation activities by relocating to live at James Bay or Hudson's Bay in order to trade with the agents and factors of the Hudson Bay Company. They may have become involved in hunting activities for these fur traders.

In all of these activities, the lives of the aboriginal peoples were transformed. They were forced into a new mould of life and were dependent on the products they obtained from trading the furs they hunted. They became dependent on the use of guns and the ammunition that had to be purchased, as well as other goods they required.

This was the impact of the British and European demand for furs. There was an incredible transformation of their lives, for good or ill, from the kind of subsistence in which they lived.

What will happen if the British proposal is adopted and the labelling goes into effect? The fur market could collapse under this impact. What will happen if the European Economic Community decides to take similar action?

After 300 years of encouragement to move into the cash market for furs, aboriginal people have become largely dependent on that livelihood. Suddenly, as a result of British government action, they are faced with the return to subsistence and worse, in which their ancestors lived centuries ago. It is not an easy transformation.

When the buffalo were virtually wiped out in the past century, the Plains native people went through a century of readjustment to a different livelihood. Such readjustment, if possible, is an enormously costly and drawn out process. There must be an alternative.

What is the alternative in this case if the British succeed in destroying the trade and remove from the hands of our aboriginal people the source of livelihood and self-respect that has come to form the basis on which they relate to the land and resources around them? What process of readjustment will result from that? Those who speak of this action as being an act of "cultural genocide" do not exaggerate. We can only expect the most catastrophic of consequences.

These steps are being taken in a country which columnist Jeffrey Simpson recognized in an article last February in The Globe and Mail was characterized by the most profound of contradictions. He said very nicely in his column on February 20:

> Six years ago, when the Irish Republican Army detonated a bomb that killed men and horses in London's Hyde Park, public sympathy for the horses rivaled that for the men.

• (2250)

He went on:

> The British, you see, have this thing about animals. They chase foxes across the countryside, blast away at pheasant and grouse and run horses ragged over steeplechase courses. They race pigeons, train frogs to jump and, like the rest of us, slaughter livestock.

He went on:

> The British chase, kill, maim and revere animals. They also like to set standards for how others should treat animals, which partly explains why the British Government will now require certain fur products to carry a label indicating that the fur came from animals caught in leg-hold traps.

That final observation of his is the one we want to stop.

Members of the House, representatives of all three Parties as the Minister of Northern Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) recognized a moment ago, stand united on this issue. Canadians have had to stare hard at this issue, this question of the extent to which we will be obsessed with the rights of animals. None of us wishes cruelty to animals. We have as much of the sense that is involved in the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals among us as I am sure there is among all the fine people in Great Britain who are pushing this. We want to see research done on more humane methods of trapping.

We urge the British Government to join in that effort to provide funding and to advance the cause. But we are not ready in any of our Parties in this Parliament to sacrifice people to the sentiment about animals. We are simply not prepared to see the lives of people changed, transformed, as I have already indicated, from fur trade for over 300 years of activity, by this sudden obsession, which people in Great Britain have in one particular area, to focus on these furs, ignoring completely all of those who are still enjoying meals of meat and in other ways benefiting from the uses we make of animals. We are simply not prepared to see a blow at people in our country. As somebody has said, that may be done at seemingly no cost to the British people.

I was interested to hear the Minister of Indian Affairs suggest ways in which British enterprise might experience a Canadian reaction. I was interested to hear him indicate some of the well-known British enterprises operating in Canada which might find themselves experiencing boycotts organized by those who support the aboriginal peoples in their desire to go on trapping, to go on maintaining their livelihood as they have for so long.

That is an important statement of determination. We see even more from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that we want to have real evidence that the Government is pressing the British Government and Parliament to give it up. We want to see real evidence that the British people are aware of the concern of Canadians.

Recognizing that the Press Gallery is not exactly proud of this evening, I ask myself whether the British people, through the BBC, might be made aware of what we are debating. It is of course night hours over there, but tomorrow's news should give at least a short focus on this debate in the Canadian Parliament which is expressing concern about what the mother of Parliaments intends to do to people whose lives it has affected so profoundly in centuries past and now should not be considering destroying.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I never thought I would see the day when I would stand in this Parliament and speak to the mother of Parliaments. However, I am very pleased and proud to have this opportunity to participate in this emergency debate.

I congratulate you, Sir, the Speaker, for allowing this debate to happen. I congratulate all Members from all three Parties of the House who have participated in this debate. We are seeing a totally non-partisan debate. This is Parliament at its best, when it speaks with one voice on behalf of all the people of our great country.

You, Sir, may wonder why I as an urban Member, a Member from the nation's capital, representing a constituency in Ottawa, speaking to a debate that relates to the importance of our fur industry. I want to speak because my background is as a wildlife biologist. I studied biology and majored in wildlife management at the University of Ottawa. I have worked in this profession in Africa, Central America, and with Parks Canada. I want to speak because I think it is important. We are talking about an essential way of life for tens of thousands of Canadians in all our 10 provinces and both our territories.

I am also speaking because I love our renewable wildlife resources, as do the people who hunt and trap them. This is their farm. This is their life. This is their livelihood. No one should take it away from them.

If you think, Mr. Speaker, that no one traps around the National Capital Region, around Metro-Ottawa, you are wrong. Just 28 miles west of this city there is the little town of Dunrobin. In that town there is a man named Harvey Boucher. He traps for beaver and muskrat in the spring and in the wintertime. There is a man who works for the Sunday Herald, one of our newspapers, whose name is Ken Lehman. He traps beavers on behalf of the National Capital Commission. He relocates them to areas where they will not be doing damage to vegetation or flooding of people's backyards—in this city, the capital of Canada. That is something I want to get across to Great Britain.

[Translation]

I have another friend who lives in the Ottawa area, north of our capital, and his name is Aurèle Knight. In winter, my friend Mr. Knight traps beaver. He also traps other animals. That is his life and he is very, very proud of it.

[English]

It is people like him who make this our way of life. This is Canada. This is, as some people call it, the great white North. Our country was explored, built and developed by people from the Hudson's Bay Company and other pioneering people who explored our northern regions.

Since I have been a Member of Parliament I have had an opportunity to visit other regions of our country. I want to review some of the great places I have seen in Canada. While I am doing this, I invite all British parliamentarians to take out an atlas of Canada and to review the size of this country. Let me speak to them and say that all of Great Britain, all of it, can be put—now get your atlas—inside Hudson Bay five times. That is the size of this country that we are speaking of. I want the House of Lords and the House of Commons to understand that. Lake Superior—stay near your atlases—is .6 times the size of all of Great Britain. That is what I want to talk about.

Keep your atlas because we are going to go to a place called Old Crow in the Yukon. Go to the Yukon. Find the Yukon. See how big it is. I visited Old Crow with the Hon. David Crombie, the former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and former Secretary of State. I was struck by one of the villagers I met there. There are only about 300 people living in Old Crow.

I had a discussion with Norma Cassie who is one of the leaders of the community. I said: "Norma, what do you do here in the spring and summer?" She said: "We go rattin' because you sure as hell can't grow tomatoes and lettuce in permafrost".

Stay in your atlas. We are going to go on to Eskimo Point which is on the west side of Hudson Bay. I had the pleasure of hunting with the Member of Parliament for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Suluk). His people hunt caribou and seal and they trap and hunt foxes. I thought that I was so smart and knew something about the outdoors. I will never forget that I had a pair of boots made in southern Canada which I thought were warm. We were going hunting on his skidoo and it was minus 30 degrees. He said: "You can't leave until you get better boots". I said: "These are good boots. Look at the felt lining". He said: "You won't last 20 minutes on the skidoo. The chill factor is minus 50". He went through his village, and what did he find for me? I am fairly tall and I needed big boots. The people in the North are not very tall. He found a pair of caribou skins that I wore. They kept my feet warm. The villagers said: "You can't wear felt boots with rubber outside because you will not survive in this part of the world. You need skins from caribou, and that is what I wore.

Stay in your atlas, House of Lords, we are going to Tuktoyaktuk near the Beaufort Sea. We have travelled 2,000 miles across the North. In Tuktoyaktuk I ate caribou. When I asked the people: "What do you do with the caribou?" They said: "We eat it, Sir. We use the skins for clothing and boots." I asked: "What do you do with the horns?" They said: "We carve them and sell them to the southerners, because that is our way of life in the North."

Let us go to Manitoba, a place called Reed Lake. I was there four days ago. It is in northwest central Manitoba. I spent some time with a trapper and a fisherman named Corky Peterson, and his son Hal. I was also in the presence of Bob Carmichael, who is the chief of commercial wildlife management for the Manitoba Wildlife Department. He is a real pro. He works in renewable resources. That area is not over-trapped. It is well managed and conserved. The trapping of beaver, marten, fox and muskrat by Corky and his son is a well-managed wild-life activity. They are not at all endangered. It is in his best interest to maintain the resource to the best of his ability.

In Reed Lake I also met a man named Paul Vincent. He has 850 acres outside of the City of Winnipeg, one of Canada's largest western cities. He has a muskrat farm where dozens of people work. His business and industry are being threatened by the possible introduction of this initiative by Great Britain.

The animal rights people, the "antis" as they are called, have it all wrong. On March 10 I moved a motion in the House that asked the Government to do everything it can to enhance our wildlife resources. I have spoken on this issue all over Canada in the last three years. As one might say, I have been busting my buttocks to see that the Government spends more to manage this resource more effectively. With the help of the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and his colleagues in Cabinet, some day we will have more moneys allocated to enhance our wildlife resources.

The animal rights people and the "antis" have it all wrong. Most of them live in a cloistered, urban, downtown environment. Let us return to the atlas and remember what we are talking about. Great Britain can fit five times inside Hudson Bay. That is the dimension that I wish to remind the British House of Lords and House of Commons that we are dealing with. I invite them all to get out into the real resource world and see what they have been missing. Come to Canada and visit this country. Experience its vastness, its diversity, and its dependence on the natural resources, particularly our people in the North.

It has been said that some of them care more about wildlife than they do about people. Our wildlife is directly related to our people. Our people are directly related to our wildlife. They depend on it. They protect it. They manage it. Yes, they harvest it, but this is their way of life in a great part of our country. Therefore, they should be allowed to trap, whether they are sealers or hunters. This is an important historical part of the building of our country.

It is in their personal and professional interest to do so and to perpetuate this resource through respecting quotas and good management practices set by the world's best wildlife biologists. Professional Canadian wildlife biologists are world famous. They work for the Canadian International Development Agency in countries all over the world. They work for the Canadian Universities Services Overseas all over the world. They work for non-governmental organizations all over the world because they are the best and are highly respected in professional fields. The Canadian non-governmental organization community, such as the Canadian Wildlife Federation, Wildlife Habitat Canada, Ducks Unlimited, the Ontario Federation of Anglers and Hunters, and hundreds of fish and game clubs are all involved in the process of protecting and enhancing the wildlife resources of this country.

How many people have ever visited an abattoir? How many people really know how domestic animals die, for example, chicken, pigs, cows, sheep? I dare say it is not too pleasant in some circumstances. How do fish die? Most of us eat fish. How do they die when they are caught in the nets at sea? They suffocate. I dare say Members of the House of Lords and the House of Commons in Great Britain eat fish. Nobody is up in arms saying: "Kill the fish humanely, or don't kill them at all". Let us remind ourselves of some of these facts. We all eat for our survival.

Our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) spoke tonight in the debate. He made reference to the international humane trapping standards committee. As an appropriate mechanism to address this problem, Canada has suggested that Great Britain become a member. I invite Great Britain to consider seriously this timely and appropriate proposal from our Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Let me send this message to the people and all elected MPs of Great Britain. We have a saying in this country: "You use it or you lose it". If we do not use our renewable wildlife resources to the best of our collective ability, we will all lose it.

The Queen's Footguards in London have that great tradition of red tunics and black hats. The black hats are made from what? Bear skin. Canadian bear skin. I ask the House of Lords if it wants to see the uniforms of decades of tradition replaced with some North Sea synthetic: "Do you want to see that happen?" I do not believe you do, because you are a people of true, long-lasting, and important traditions. Therefore, maintain the Queen's Footguards as they have been for decades, and maintain that important link with our country through the hats that they wear, that we also have here on Parliament Hill. We are proud of that. The people of the world come to this nation's capital to see the changing of the guard, which is a true, British tradition with Canadian black bear fur hats.

I say to the people in Great Britain and their parliamentarians, please reconsider your proposed actions regarding furs. Do not let your emotions overcome your reason. Our people depend on it.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner) used a phrase which I believe all the world should be aware of, that extremists may care more for animals than they care for people. I would like to carry that one step further. The extremists may have a detrimental effect on wildlife as well as on people. The absurdities of the ban on seal hunting, for example, may not be known for another generation. Yet when they are, we are going to find the seal population has more than doubled. That means that seals will be eating an additional one million tonnes of the cheapest and healthiest protein supply available to people around the world. In addition, nature's way of thinning a population, which is usually disease, will probably have a detrimental effect on a wider part of our wildlife than just the seal itself.

I think the record of this country and its environmental laws are probably the best of any in the world. We have denied ourselves great economic advantage from British Columbia to New Brunswick in order to preserve the ecological and animal life of our country. We have denied ourselves the opportunity to use a renewable resource, water, for the generation of energy, the cost of which has gone up four or fivefold in the last 15 years. It could have gone down if we used all of our water resources without considering the environment.

What then is expected of Canada? Should we not have developed James Bay? When it was developed, billions of dollars were given to the native people affected to sustain them and compensate them for the loss of their environment. What more can we be expected to do? We have banned the seal hunt, not only of grey seals but of all seals. As a result, we now have harbour seals all over the east coast of North America and the islands off that coast, and the result has been millions of dollars of damage to fishing gear and the loss of hundreds of thousands of tonnes of fish devoured by those seals.

We have possibly created a situation in the sea, in response to the extremists, comparable to that of the rabbits and the fox on land. When the fox population drops, the rabbit population multiplies. I predict that somewhere down the road we will see a similar situation with the seal because of the ban on hunting. The seals will either die of disease en masse or starve to death because they have depleted the fish stock. This is a self-defeating exercise by the European Economic Community. It wants greater opportunities to fish in the Canadian waters of the North Atlantic, yet it will have less and less opportunity as the seal population multiplies.

If we go to the Pacific coast we find that Senator Stevens of Alaska is now saying to the U.S. Government that it has to remove the ban on the seal hunt and the whale hunt. Whales have now reached a population level such that they are appearing in waters in which they had never appeared before. They are preying upon the salmon stock, among others, on the west coast of North America. Senator Stevens, who is nothing if not interested in the environment, fishing, the caribou and all those other things that sustain his native population, is complaining to his Government that it has to do something about the seals and the whales. They are destroying fishing gear and eating fish to a degree that is very detrimental to the fishing community.

How, then, can we respond to the extremist who does not recognize the negative effect on wildlife caused by overpopulation? I believe it is a kindness to control that population.

In New Brunswick the coyote was on the protected list. Do not hunt it, do not kill it, do not trap it because it has not existed in any numbers at all for generations. What is the situation now? The deer and moose populations are suffering depredation. Domesticated animals are being attacked in their pastures or barns because the coyote population is far in excess of the natural supply of food available to them. We have protected the coyote beyond a rational point and we may just have to put a bounty on it to protect both wildlife and domesticated animal life in the Province of New Brunswick.

I am of course concerned about the dollars that accrue to trappers, native or otherwise. However, I do not think the dollar is all that counts. It is also important to recognize that it is a kindness to wildlife to keep their numbers under control so that they are comfortable in their environment and healthy. I do not believe it is right to go the route proposed in the United Kingdom or the route followed in the European Economic Community with respect to the seals.

It seems rather strange that on the one hand the UN is happy to listen to the aboriginal people of the world, whether they be from Greenland, Canada or Australia, but on the other hand, because it is listening to the extremists in the wildlife groups, those people are being starved because they are not being allowed to hunt a resource in a way which would not threaten it but would control its numbers. It is ironic that the aboriginals of the world can get sympathy in the UN while at the same time being denied this economic opportunity.

It is not that members of the EEC do not know what has happened. This situation has been presented to them before. At a meeting of the Canadian Parliamentary Association with the European parliamentary group there was present a gentleman from Greenland. He was pleading with us to support him because the native people of his country had lost 75 per cent of their income as a result of the ban on seal hunting. That was a pretty harsh sentence to impose upon the native people of Greenland by extremists and those who care little really for mankind which depends upon the life of this world. Mankind always has and always will be dependent for food on the vegetable and animal life of this world, whether it be ocean or land oriented. We shall always be dependent upon the animal and vegetable life of the land and sea for our food.

Why then should we restrict a group of people in a harsh and cruel manner? Why not allow these forest-oriented individuals to make a living, whether native or otherwise? We should appeal to the communities of the world, including the United Nations, to let us take a look at what is fair and right, what is in accord with the needs of mankind. Sure the people in the extreme North need furs to keep them warm and the people in other sections of the world enjoy wearing the furs which keep them warm. Maybe in some instances furs are a status symbol. Nevertheless I believe that since we are all dependent upon this form of life and the food and clothing supplied by them, we should have a rational control of populations as we did have with the seals in Canada. They should not be allowed to get out of control to the detriment of all the seal species and in the long run to the detriment of the food supply of the world.

S. O. 29

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that the very nation which some centuries ago sent explorers to this continent and subsequently large fur companies to disturb the balance and the equilibrium that existed at that time between the aboriginal people in this land and the animals which they hunted for fur should now be attacking those people again. These are the people whose very balance with nature they destroyed in the past and now they seek to destroy again by this action proposed by the Government of Great Britain in the form of a ministerial order which would have all furs, irrespective of their source, labelled to the effect that they may have been obtained as a result of leg-hold traps.

I am a biologist, Mr. Speaker. As a biologist I respect life. But I understand the differences that exist in that vast array of entities in this world that we call life. One thing that I recognize is that animal liberation organizations apparently do not understand the difference between human life and human existence and the value of humanity as compared to animals.

It offends me greatly that there are those who would place a higher value on animals of any sort than they would upon human existence, even upon the existence of human beings that could teach those city dwellers in Great Britain what it is all about to live a life of respect for nature and in balance with nature. The aboriginal peoples of this country, whether pertaining to seals or to fox, respected those living entities. They understood that their survival depended upon their exploitation to a certain limit. They also understood that they are a part of an ecological chain in which the fox kills smaller animals in order to survive. The aboriginal peoples, up until this day in the North and at one time throughout this country, lived the same kind of existence in that ecological balance.

Today we are faced with a group who would draw equivalents between animals and human beings. They talk about animal rights rather than animal welfare. How distorted can your thinking be if you truly believe that there is a real comparison between the existence of animals and the existence of human beings. This is a sorry example of tremendous hypocrisy perhaps more hypocrisy even than an incapacity to understand the world in which these people live. The hypocrisy of the Government of Great Britain and those who would push it to take action against the aboriginal people can be dramatized by the fact that they make much more of the existence of a fox than they would of that of an aboriginal person. This is an inconsistency from a nation which is entirely incapable of reacting to the blood of children spilled in South Africa, a Government that has refused every request for action in response to South Africa and the injustices there. This is a nation that would take strong action in response first to baby seals and now to fur-bearing animals in northern Canada and elsewhere. What kind of a nation is it that would refuse to behave in a fashion that is humane to humans but is more humane to animals? What kind of Prime Minister is Mrs. Thatcher who will not react to the oppression and the death of children in South Africa or the children, the elderly and others in Mozambique who day by day lose their arms and legs not in leg-hold traps but by mines planted by a Government, indirectly by a Government that the Thatchers of this world refuse to condemn. This seems so inconsistent that I wonder whether there really is an inconsistency here. Isn't it rather that this is a nation led by a Government that has little humanity for aboriginal peoples anywhere? After all, in South Africa we are talking about aboriginal people. So we have a Government that places rather low value on the aboriginal people, the original people of southern Africa, and low value upon the aboriginal peoples of Canada. This kind of hypocrisy cannot be tolerated by Canadians. This is a brand of hypocrisy that would condemn our native people to penury, and this loss of way of life cannot be tolerated nor can it merely be responded to by rhetoric.

There are those who have said that there ought to be strong retaliatory action by Canada in response to this proposed action of Great Britain if it carried through with it. That we should do. We should not allow a repetition of the tragedy imposed upon those in Newfoundland who depended on, as I described, and who existed in an ecological balance with the seals, the fish and the other partners in the chain of ecology. We cannot allow it to be repeated for the northern natives, the aboriginals who depend upon fur-bearing animals.

Every Member of this House should commit himself or herself to write to Members of the British Parliament immediately to point out what a disgraceful, hypocritical action is proposed by that Government. If indeed the British proceed with that action then the Canadian people, with the leadership of this Parliament, should selectively boycott British products so that the Government of Great Britain will understand that we will not allow our people to suffer because of the hypocritical stupidity of those who would value the lives of animals above the lives of human beings.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are three or four Members rising to speak. We have until 12 o'clock so I would hope Hon. Members would govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak on the adjournment debate concerning the move by the British Government to impose a labelling device on furs from Canada, a device which would detract from their value and would discourage people in the United Kingdom from purchasing those furs which come from Canada.

It is important that this debate take place tonight. We must send a uniform message to the British Parliament indicating that we are very concerned about this move to put in place such a regulation. We know what impact it would have on the incomes of literally tens of thousands of Canadians, most of whom live in northern regions and most of whom are at the bottom of the economic scale. These people probably earn less than those living in large urban areas. I am told that there are at least 100,000 Canadians who still earn a living from trapping fur-bearing animals.

We normally think of this as being an activity which takes place in the Northwest Territories and in the Yukon, but clearly it goes far beyond that. It takes place in northern Ontario, northern Québec and throughout many of the northern regions of Canada. In my own constituency of Algoma, there are some 12 Indian bands, and I would say that in at least half of them some level of trapping takes place.

It is an activity carried on not only by native people. Many small farmers and land owners are also involved, and there are many people whose primary occupation is trapping. This move on the part of the Government of the United Kingdom could have an extremely adverse impact on all of these groups. These groups are composed of low-income people who live in northern areas. The only cash money they receive for income is from the sale of fur-bearing animals.

I think it is important that we send a uniform message to the British Government indicating that we are very concerned about these Canadians. Often, the only source of income they have for many months of the year is their trap lines.

It seems to me that here we have a clash of societies, a clash between the urban sophisticated society of the United Kingdom and the society of northern Canada in which native peoples and others live. Trapping is an accepted way of life in this society. In my own riding, they use those kinds of traps, kanya bear traps and others, which are not considered to be in any way cruel. From the experience I have had with trappers, I do not believe that they operate in a cruel and unjust way. They are concerned with the biological movement from generation to generation.

It is clear that the proposed action with regard to the fur trade in Canada taking place in the United Kingdom and in other European countries is the same kind of action we saw with regard to the seal hunt a few years ago, which action ultimately cancelled the whole seal hunt. It was important to those of Prince Edward Island, on the shores of Québec and in Newfoundland while the fur industry is important to those in most provinces. I am told that it generates some $600-million worth of income a year and some $350-million worth of income in exports alone.

I want to join with Hon. Members who have spoken tonight, and with Members like the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) who put questions to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) yesterday calling on the Government to take the strongest possible action with the United Kingdom Government in sending a very strong message. We hope that the fate that befell the seal hunt will not fall upon those who earn their living in the hard and difficult world of trapping in the northern regions. I have spoken to trappers from the federal riding of Algoma and they have told me how concerned they were about the move that took place with regard to the seal hunt. We see now in the United Kingdom a telegraphing of possible difficulties in the future.

I simply want to join with those who have spoken tonight to urge that the United Kingdom Government back down from this action, which could have a devastating impact on tens of thousands of northern citizens, many of whom have a very difficult and onerous life as trappers.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) as well as the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mrs. McLaughlin) for arranging this evening's adjournment debate on the proposed British fur-labelling issue.

This issue is not a partisan issue, as many which are debated in this House are. For one evening, we have managed to set aside our Party bickering because we have ascertained a common enemy. When Canadians are faced with such a common threat, they tend to set aside their differences and work together for the common cause, in this case the common cause of trappers and the fur industry.

The Government is appreciative of the support given by opposition Parties to date on this issue and the support that we expect will be forthcoming in the future, because this undoubtedly will not be the last time this matter is brought up in the House. I have spoken in the House on many occasions in the past on this particular subject, and many, perhaps more eloquently than I, have spoken on the issue tonight. What I am about to say will be somewhat repetitive, but I hope to keep it fairly short.

The seriousness of the threat is not to be underestimated. It is something of the thin edge of the wedge. What starts out as a labelling requirement in one European country could spread to other European countries which constitute a large market for furs, and the labelling could, over a period of time, escalate into a total ban. It could have, in the long run, a devastating effect on our fur industry. The seriousness is demonstrated by headlines that appeared in The Globe and Mail on May 30, just a couple of days ago. One such headline reads "Fur Industry Jeopardized by Activists". On another page of the same newspaper, as the article continued, the headline reads "Activists Threatening Canada's $350 million in Fur Exports".

Therefore, interest in this issue is not restricted geographically to Canada. It is one in which all Canadians from rural, far northern, and major metropolitan areas can join together. It affects all aspects of the fur industry from the trapper or rancher to the traders, to the auction houses, to the factories, to the garment manufacturers, and the people involved in sales. Earlier this evening the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) told us that it was a $1 billion industry in Canada with about $350 million worth of exports.

I intend to restrict my remarks mainly to the northern trapper because those are the people whom I have the honour of representing in the House. I will do so by quoting from three letters from people who are all more knowledgeable on this subject than I am myself. The first letter is from a gentleman who has already been quoted once this evening in the House of Commons. I am going to quote from a different letter from the Right Reverend John Sperry, Bishop of the Arctic. He wrote a letter to the Prime Minister of Great Britain in which he says:

> As the Bishop of the Arctic, with some nearly 40 years of residence in the Northwest Territories, I have lived with and served a people, both Indian and Eskimo (Inuit) who for centuries have survived only because of their relationship to and the harvesting of the animals that inhabited their land and waters.
> For these people throughout their history lifestyles have certainly undergone changes but, for centuries, always in the colonial relationship they experienced under the British Monarchy and its Governments no challenge was ever given to their deep cultural affiliation to the land. This affiliation has always and necessarily involved harvesting by both hunting and trapping, the whole industry being given dramatic input by a succession of Europeans who opened up the Canadian Northwest for both exploration and commerce.
> The alleged action proposed by your Government to label Canadian fur products in such terms as to stigmatize the labour of the native trapper is viewed by many of us as little short of an act of cultural genocide upon a small minority of people who for so long have held the British Monarchy and its Governments in deep respect for their understanding of what life and survival on the most northerly frontier of the Commonwealth really entails; this threatened stance of your Government could prove to be a shattering experience for our people.

The second letter, Mr. Speaker, is from the Hon. Titus Allooloo, Minister of Renewable Resources with the Government of the Northwest Territories. It is addressed to the Right Honourable Joe Clark, Secretary of State for External Affairs, and is with regard to the proposed fur labelling legislation by the British Government. It reads:

> The Government of the Northwest Territories wishes to express its strongest objections to proposed actions by the British Government to legislate a requirement of retailers to prominently display labels on products which contain the pelts of wild animals that may have been caught with a "steel-jaw leghold trap".
> Once again, we experience the highest levels of frustration, and indeed indignation, that foreign governments and/or agencies are taking actions without due regard to the detrimental consequences their actions have on the basic livelihood of groups of people around the world.
> I request your assistance on communicating to the British Government our total rejection of such a proposal. In addition, we would offer to, once again, present our positions to them in the most effective manner possible, including direct representation.
> We have appreciated your high level of support in the past to counter these measures. The funding support to lobby organizations, such as the Fur Institute of Canada and Indigenous Survival International, are good examples of your dedicated support.
> We thank you also for your prompt statements in the House of Commons and the media. Your proposed meeting with Sir Geoffrey Howe is of special interest to us as we feel it may prove to be a most effective action.
>
> Our government is presently examining a variety of strategic options open to us and we shall continue to keep you advised of our planned actions.
> Thank you for your support and you may be assured of our total co-operation in this matter.

The third letter with which I wish to illustrate my point, Mr. Speaker, is from Ms. Alice Hill, Executive Director of the Native Women's Association of the Northwest Territories. In a letter dated March 14 of this year she says:

> The Native Women's Association of the N.W.T. is fully supporting the Indigenous Survival International and the Fur Institute of Canada to ban England's Legislation to label fur garments regarding leg hold traps.
> Our livelihood depends on fur trapping for food to feed the children, family and relatives. The fur hide is used to make moccasins, parkas, mukluks and mitts. It is used by the Dene (Indian) people of the North today. Every part of the carcass remains are used up. Monies made from the furs go right back into the Economy to purchase supplies and equipment necessary for trapping. Native women today sew arts and crafts decorated by fur. Fur has warmth and insulation for Northern climates.
> The fur season is from December to February when the weather is extremely cold in the North . . . During peak periods, the fur on the animals is very dense, therefore trapping is only done for approximately three months of the year.
> To our understanding, work is under way to find a new type of trap for the future, rather than the leg hold trap adversely opposed by the anti-fur lobbyist group. Despite this, families living off the land, still have to eat, live, and survive the climates and conditions of the Northwest Territories on an everyday basis.
> Jobs are not so easily available to Northern Indian and Inuit people. Many (majority) of them do not have the education required to go into the labour market. Historically, Indian and Inuit people were sent off to convents and residential schools for a short period of their lives for schooling.
> It was acceptable to send their children home with a Grade five or six education level so they may go back to trapping with their families. This colonization by the Government was an accepted practice. Consequently in the long run, we have many trappers depending on trapping with minimal education but very proficient as a trapper and would like to remain a trapper.
> Should England legislate the label, it would have a pronounced effect on our culture and our way of life as it did with the Inuit and the Anti-Seal Campaign, which destroyed the livelihood of the Inuit people who now depend on Welfare and odd jobs.
> Historically, England's demands for fur was what started the Fur Trades, and the long accomplished orientation of the Dene and Inuit to meet those demands were met, consequently, the majority of Natives in the long run are now trappers, which has carried on for generations upon generations.
> Today, we ask the Prime Minister, Margaret Thatcher, NOT to legislate labelling fur garments which would jeopardize the lives of the Dene, Métis and Inuit people of the Northwest Territories.
> The Native Women's of the N.W.T. would like to remind the Government of England to think of the poor Indian families and their children in making this decision.

I would like to comment on some of the actions of Governments to date. Both provincial and territorial Governments have been most active. They have sent delegations to England to try to argue the point. In the Territories a spontaneous movement has grown up. School children have written letters to the British Prime Minister and parliamentarians. A wide variety of people from that area, not only those who are dependent upon trapping themselves but the rest of the people who live there as well, have been very active in pursuing this matter.

● (2350)

With regard to the federal Government, we have been much better prepared with this issue than we were with the seal issue. Foreign officers, high commissioners, ambassadors and their staff know the position of the Government, thanks to the early forceful statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. They have been in a good position to present the Canadian viewpoint. They have had the facts available to them.

There have been personal meetings between our Secretary of State for External Affairs and his counterpart with the Government of Great Britain, Sir Geoffrey Howe. We have been working in conjunction with the Canadian fur institute. We have been funding Indigenous Survival International, for example, for an exhibit they put in the Museum of Man in London not long ago. We have been doing everything possible to see that the British and Europeans are aware of the facts and of our Canadian concerns.

So far, what we have been able to accomplish in concrete terms is to delay the proceedings. It is interesting how we have been able to do this, at least in part, by bringing this matter to the attention of Denmark which has trapping interests in Greenland and also, I am told, fox farms in Jutland. Denmark is a member of the EEC and was able to lodge a formal protest by way of a note of notice. That has brought about a three-month stay of execution.

Now we must consider what courses of action might be available to us in the future if the British persist in this measure. Of course, we will carry on with the representations as to date and we will work with our allies, especially those in the EEC, like Denmark.

However, we must look at action that might be a little stronger. This matter is certainly what I would call a restraint of trade. We must look at the possibilities under the General Agreement on Tariff and Trade and perhaps take it to that body.

I well understand and compliment the Secretary of State for External Affairs on his reluctance to escalate this matter into something of a trade war. No one really wants to see that. He takes a much more constructive approach by suggesting such things as joint membership of Canada and Great Britain in the International Humane Trapping Standards Committee where we can work together to make sure that fur is produced as humanely as possible.

However, if we were to really look, I am sure we could find a variety of British goods that are produced in ways that might not bear too much scrutiny. I hope that this would not become necessary.

Of course, there is the question of nuclear submarines which they would like us to buy. If they want to sell them, they must keep on pretty good terms with potential customers.

If we chose, we could be just as bloody-minded as the British. Hopefully, however, they will be sensitive and sensible enough so that that does not need to happen.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to make a few comments and congratulate the Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) and the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) for introducing this important topic.

The all-Party agreement on this issue must indicate to the Parliament in Britain that all of us believe the British Government proposal is unwise and is perhaps made more out of ignorance than understanding. All Parties oppose the British Government's proposal to compel the labelling of furs made from animals caught by the leg-hold trap.

This issue was first brought to my attention by my colleague, the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). One of his constituents is involved with the Canadian Fur Traders Association, and I know the Member has been concerned about the proposal by the British Government.

There is a fear that if this is successful, the fur industry in Canada will be ruined. This is an important matter because over 100,000 jobs are involved.

Presently, Parliament is caught up in a debate about free trade between Canada and the United States. The best estimate shows that there could be a net increase of some 120,000 jobs. Yet this British proposal could affect some 100,000 jobs.

This industry primarily affects aboriginal people, who have had great difficulty in adjusting to the western industrialized society. It is an industry in which they can earn an income while retaining a sense of pride.

The British Government, through its ignorance, is threatening this livelihood and has the potential to produce social and personal tragedies as the native communities no longer can make a decent living through trapping.

One can get into a philosophic debate about the role of animals in sustaining human life. Others have attempted to compare the cruelty of the slaughterhouse with trapping and the use of the leg-hold trap. However, I think those are moot points.

It should be pointed out that Canada is concerned about the humane treatment of animals and ensuring that they suffer the least amount of pain.

It is also important to point out that the meat of many animals that are trapped is more valuable to native communities because it sustains their diet. Therefore, while the British Government's proposal threatens the viability of the fur trade, it could harm native communities. Trapping is an important part of the native culture and the native tradition. Again, this tradition and this culture is being threatened tonight by the proposed actions of the British Government.

• (2400)

In concluding, and I assured you, Mr. Speaker, I would be brief in my remarks, the one point that I want to emphasize again is the importance of the fur trade to the aboriginal people. In my City of Regina I know many native people who have come from the country and the reserves because there was nothing for them there. They end up in the city where, again, there is very little for them. There are poor-paying jobs, if they are available. Generally it is a life of hopelessness and despair. People have had great difficulty finding a meaningful role for themselves in modern industrialized society. There have not been many opportunities for them to participate as human beings in our social process.

One of the few areas that is open to them is in the fur trade. The action of the British Government threatens that. I think it is a dumb move on their part. I am certain they do not know and realize the consequences that this will have on human beings in Canada, people who have experienced the hardships of the western civilization, brought about in great deal by Great Britain and the fur traders sent out by Great Britain. They will now ironically inflict even more harm and suffering on the native people by the actions that they are proposing to take.

I take great pleasure in joining with my colleagues from all political Parties this evening in urging the Government of Great Britain to cease and desist.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to thank the Hon. Member for being cognizant of the clock. I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) and then the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) before we end the debate.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I too will try to be brief because of the hour. First, I would like to say that I appreciate this opportunity to have my few words in this debate.

I cannot really believe that we continually have to get up in the House of Commons to defend industries that we have had here for centuries in Canada, and our way of life, from animal rights activists. First it was the sealing trade. Now it is the native people of Canada, the fur trappers and so on. Next it will probably be the fur farming industry of Canada.

Where will it stop? Where will the animal rights activists want to stop? Will it be with chicken farmers, hog farmers, cattle ranchers, with turkey farmers, or fishermen? Finally, will they go after the vegetable farmers because vegetables are living beings? We must surely realize that what is happening is deliberate. It is causing deliberate damage and disruption. This should be apparent to all.

In case some people may sympathize with what is being proposed by the animal rights activists, I would like to remind them that this will affect all Canadians, not only the native peoples of Canada who richly deserve our support but all Canadians. All Canadians should be alarmed and angered by the attack on our people and our economy. Canadians must realize the damage and destruction which is being caused to our communities. Canadians must realize the chain reaction effect which will touch us all. In case they may not know that we are being affected, I will give an example.

Let us take a fox ranch or a mink ranch, something which I am more familiar with. Let us say that ranchers in one of the communities in my riding, such as Little Brook, Weymouth or Havelock, who raise fur animals use the waste from the fishing industry, from the fish plants, thus acting as a waste disposal unit. Fish offal is used as food for the animals. It is a high protein food. The ranchers also use offal from chicken farms, as well as the eggs that have gone bad. These various waste products do not go to clutter up the environment. They are being used by the fur ranchers. These waste products might become quite damaging environmental problems. The carcass from the mink and fox ranches are then put to quite good use by being put into a rendering process, and what remains is used in various areas.

The chain reaction does not end there. Not only is fur farming important for the fishing and livestock industries, it is also important to the grain farmers who produce the feed that makes the food for the animals. Nobody would deny the problems that our wheat farmers and grain farmers have been undergoing over the past number of years. Fur ranchers support the lumber industry in the building of pens and in the furring sheds. Fur ranchers purchase wire for cages. So it affects the steel industry. The transport industry is affected since it transports feed to the ranches and the pelts to market.

How many jobs will be affected in the manufacturing of clothes from furs? Thousands. I could go on and on. We could mention the models who model the clothes. We could talk about the manufacturers of cardboard boxes, veterinarians and drug manufacturers. The list could go on and on.

If we as Canadians think that this is only affecting the aboriginal people of Canada—and it is affecting them and the way of life that they have held for thousands of years—it is affecting us as well, non-native Canadians. We should be reminded of this.

Centuries ago our ancestors came to Canada. One of the cornerstones of our economy, along with fishing and lumber, was the fur trade. This, I might add, is the oldest land based industry in Canada. Fur trapping and fur ranching is as Canadian as the beaver and the maple leaf. We have had a fur industry for centuries. We wish to continue for centuries into the future for the sake of our children and our grandchildren. We do not want a bunch of animal rights activists playing on the sentiments of people in order to raise funds for God knows what purpose. This is something of which I want to remind Margaret Thatcher. The company she is keeping nowadays leaves a lot to be desired.

I want to remind the British who have a sport which I think they should be looking into. I refer to the famous sport of fox hunt—tallyho and all that. I do not think that that is the way to go either. Let them look in their own backyard before coming to Canada.

Both the fur ranching and fur trapping industries are important to us. We want them to continue to maintain jobs for our rural communities, for our native communities, and we want them here for a long period of time.

I would like to draw attention to how fast damage can be done to industries. In 1980 in our sealing industry we could not produce enough seal pelts. It was a completely open market at that time. We could sell as many as we wanted to sell. That was in 1980. In 1982, there was virtually no market at all. So I would like to pass that on as a closing comment.

I promised that I would be very brief. I am living up to my promise. I am leaving time to other speakers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I want to thank the Hon. Member. I know that the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River will do the same.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I must say, in rising to address this matter of the proposed fur labelling legislation in the United Kingdom, that I am very glad to have the opportunity to speak. I would like to start by thanking the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) and my colleague the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), for this opportunity. I would particularly like to compliment and express my gratitude, and that of my constituents, to the Hon. Member for Yukon who has been so involved in this issue, and who went to the United Kingdom at her own expense to pursue this matter and lobby Members of the British Parliament and of the House of Lords.

I would also like to pay tribute to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). The degree of concern that he has shown in this matter does him great credit. I believe that the support which he has given to the fur industry is much appreciated.

The range, not only geographically but in terms of ideology and demography, and the range of constituencies whose Members have spoken in this debate tonight should show, if anything can show, the degree to which this concern is felt within this country. I have heard Members from Prince Edward Island, our smallest province and cradle of Confederation, from the two Territories, from the other provinces of this country, from urban settings, rural settings, and vast remote settings like that of my own riding, or that of the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), who is not present but who would also have liked to have spoken, ridings that are larger in size than the entire country of the United Kingdom where these regulations are proposed.

The Hon. Member for Southwest Nova (Mr. Comeau) spoke of fur farming. Because of my experience in my own riding I will speak only of the wild fur industry. What concerns me is the danger that we may be engaged in a dialogue with the deaf. After all, the Members of the British Parliament are presumably abed and do not have the opportunity to see this debate live as it is happening. We can only hope that their media sources are alert to the concerns of Canada, although past experiences with visiting British journalists have largely been negative. We can only hope that the mother of Parliaments, whose members at the time gave this Parliament its very existence and endowed this Parliament with its very traditions right down to the minutia of the colours that we see before us, are indeed going to pay attention to what is said here and the depth of concern from which our statements spring.

The history of the fur trade in Canada is a history that is intimately linked from its very beginning to the history of the United Kingdom. Our oldest corporate identity is the Hudson's Bay Company founded by Royal Charter in England at the Palace of St. James on May 2, 1670. It was a company of gentlemen adventurers trading into Hudson's Bay, at the initiative of those great French explorers and entrepreneurs, Radisson and Des Groseilliers, but nevertheless it was a company formed in England which took as its motto Pro pelle cutem which has been roughly translated as "We will give our skin to get theirs", or "Seeking their hides at the possible cost of our own".

The under-appreciated or perhaps totally ignored reality is that the fur trade, while we now see it as being integral to the very traditions and culture of aboriginal people in this country, changed North America socially and economically at the time and in a very dramatic fashion so that tribes and entire nations relocated across hundreds, indeed, thousands of miles to pursue this trade, their first and most basic economic interaction with the European society that intruded into this continent.

I think that I can bring some very special perspectives to this debate. I can remember as a child of seven raising funds for the people's dispensary for sick animals, one of those organizations which was in the forefront of animal welfare in the United Kingdom, long before we heard of animal rights leagues. I can also remember, before I came to Canada, being represented by two Members of the British Parliament who, I believe, are still Members. Memory may serve me incorrectly, but since I studied at the University of Exeter where the Hon. Gwyneth Dunwoody, who has co-operated so well with my colleague and friend from the Yukon on this matter, was a Member of Parliament, it may be that she at one time represented me.

Having grown up in England, I think that I understand very well some of these springs and the psychology which leads to this type of regulation being proposed. As a columnist in The Globe and Mail so wittily pointed out: "Anthropomorphism is a very deep strain within the education and upbringing of the English". I am sure there are English children who believe, as I did, that rabbits run around in little blue vests, and hedgehogs might be dressed in the style and manner of Victorian grandmothers.

There is also the urban psychology. I will not go into too much detail of fox hunting in the United Kingdom, a barbarous relic described by the poet, Siegfried Sassoon, "as the unspeakable in pursuit of the uneatable". After all, we must be fair and acknowledge that many of those whose opinions and views are behind this labelling regulation that is proposed are also opposed to fox hunting.

I would take up the point as to what constitutes cruelty, and others have made it very well. We eat steaks and we wear leather shoes. I respect those who avoid those things. But so many of us, in so many ways, use animals, and I believe it is far-fetched for anyone to suggest that there is more cruelty in the harvest of wild fur than there is in the confinement, breeding, and slaughter of domestic animals, whether it be for food or leather.

Let us remember the point raised that trappers do not use only the fur. They use carcasses for their own food as well as for the food of their dogs. Let us remember that nowadays, with the transition of the centuries, the fur trade and the fur harvest is so deeply entrenched in the psychology of the aboriginal people of this country that many of them see it, and quite correctly, as being their major link to that land with which they identify, that land and natural environment of which they see themselves as part, as a seamless continuum without the discontinuities of man and nature, the juxtaposition that we in our western way of thinking impose upon that environment.

Let us remember that the trapper is truly the conservationist, that no species has ever been driven into extinction by trapping, and particularly not by trapping undertaken by aboriginal people who are 60 per cent of the trappers in Canada, and perhaps 85 per cent of the trappers in my riding.

Those hunters and trappers, users of animals as they are, like the vast majority of all us, whether we live within an urban, rural, or remote environment, are the true conservationists; these are the true environmentalists. They were not the ones who drove into extinction the dodo or the passenger pigeon. That must be laid at the doorstep of those who came later.

I am somewhat reminded, in viewing this proposed fur labelling legislation by the Government of the United Kingdom, of the words of Neville Chamberlain in justifying appeasement: "Czechoslovakia is a far-off country of which we know nothing". It appears that these regulations are being introduced in the spirit that Canada is a far-off country of which Britain knows nothing, or indeed very little.

I believe that the misinformation and the lack of information that has been present in the public treatment of this issue in the United Kingdom reflects no credit on the Government of that country, and indeed reflects little credit on the popular views of many people in that country. It cannot be said that the mode of death of an animal, even one that is trapped in a leg-hold trap is something that is wilfully or arbitrarily cruel. Death is never, of course, an attractive reality. However, to say this is more cruel, more arbitrary than the death of an animal kept for slaughter is making a judgment that reflects not values but simply cultural perceptions.

I recall the seal campaign and the way that that affected the livelihood of many of Canada's aboriginal peoples and the way it led to a verifiable increase in the social misery indicators in the aboriginal communities. They saw their livelihood disappear because of arbitrary decisions made in another country. Let us not be deceived. This labelling regulation is but part of a campaign aimed at the complete elimination of the fur industry. That will cause untold disruption to the economy of Canada, and particularly that of our poorest communities, the aboriginal communities. The final irony will be that these communities will be left in their final agony through the elimination of that trade which gave them their very existence.

I would of course like to continue on this subject for a very long time tonight but obviously will not do so out of respect, but only for yourself and those who serve us here, as well as for my colleagues who have limited their own remarks. However, let us not forget that the precedent being set will allow speculative, at best, and fundamentally dishonest at worst, propaganda labels to be attached to fur goods in the U.K. Let us ask the Government to pursue this further. Let us ask the Government to make a commitment to further increase research and development of humane trapping within Canada. Let us ask the Government to put this matter on the agenda with the United Kingdom at the Toronto summit. Let us urge Members of the British Parliament to consider and pass Early Day Motion 651 which speaks so eloquently of the disruption and deterioration of aboriginal societies in Canada should this labelling legislation go into law in the U.K.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) here to speak?

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Yes, I am.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There has been agreement to allow the last few Members to speak for about five to seven minutes. If the Hon. Member is able to participate in the debate in that short period of time, I will recognize him.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was not aware of that arrangement. I was 100 miles out of Ottawa at a meeting tonight and I just got in and I wanted to speak in this debate.

I simply wanted to say that this debate is indeed not a modern occurrence. It is an historic debate in Canada over the fact that Great Britain is discouraging the sale of Canadian fur in that country and that pressure groups from the animal lobby are going after British politicians, obviously with results. Our minds must wander back to the days when the fur traders travelled up and down the Ottawa River past my riding for 150 miles. The canoes were those of the Northwest Company and the Hudson's Bay Company, British money. They came to Canada in those early pioneer days when Canada's staple crops, if we want to call them crops, were fish, fur and timber.

Grain was added later. Yet today, without proper research, without proper consideration for the economy of this country, we see a large organized pressure group in Great Britain come forward actually to attack the fur trade as it now exists in Canada. I must say that I am of British ancestry and I am very disappointed in what is taking place in Great Britain, as I think most Canadians are.

In our dealings with Britain, indeed other European countries, we have always been looked upon as a sort of good neighbour and good friend. Now we are being tossed aside. However, it is not the first time that Canada has been tossed aside by Britain and our other friends. In 1903 Great Britain and the United States came together and made an agreement, and Canada lost in the establishment of the boundary between Alaska and British Columbia.

Today, with the trapping industry in Canada going through a very difficult time with prices down one-third from what they were last year and with 100,000 or more Canadians who depend, if not entirely at least in part, on this industry for a living, I think it is time for our British friends to remember that Canada has done a tremendous amount for them over the years, to say nothing of the support we gave them and Europe through two major world wars. We can see the evidence of that as we look at the tombstones of our soldiers across Europe.

I think it is sad that we have come to this stage where animal lobbyists in Great Britain, without any research into the commerce flowing back and forth across the Atlantic, without any respect for the history or traditions of our two countries, are attacking this industry.

I heard one Hon. Member speaking just a little while ago about the fur hats of the Grenadier Guards in Great Britain. They forget where those hats came from. These groups are throwing that tradition aside, and it is ironic because if any country in the world loves tradition, it is Great Britain.

I would simply appeal tonight to the British Parliament, to Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her cabinet colleagues, to listen to these comments from the Canadian Parliament. Let them give a second thought to the situation and remember some of the things Canada has done for Great Britain at great expense in lives and great cost in food during a time when that nation was in crisis. We came to their rescue. Now, during a time of peace, we should be cementing that relationship. We should be building bridges of trade rather than tearing them down.

If there is any issue which has ever been brought up in this Parliament or in the British Parliament that relates to the previous days of the British Empire and the Commonwealth up to the present day, it is that of the fur trade. Let us ask our British friends tonight to reconsider this move and let us ask the general public in Great Britain and the animal lobbyists how they would feel if, all of a sudden, their very livelihood was cut out from underneath them. No matter what industry they work in, if suddenly tomorrow morning their work was no more, how would they feel? That is precisely what they are doing to many Canadians in this country today.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for letting me say these few words. I hope this debate in this Parliament of Canada tonight drives the message home to British parliamentarians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to thank the Hon. Member and all other Hon. Members who participated in this debate, as well as our staff, the clerks, the Table Officers, the pages and the media.

Pursuant to Standing Order No. 29(12) I am satisfied that the debate has now been concluded, and therefore I declare the motion carried.

Motion (Mr. MacDougall) agreed to

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 12.30 a.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1987

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON TRANSPORT OF BILL C-131

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of routine motions that have been reviewed with the opposition Parties. I think Your Honour will find that the House will be content to hear them and pass them immediately.

The first motion concerns Bill C-131 which was introduced yesterday. I move:

> That the order for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987, standing on the Order Paper, be changed to reading second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Transport.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but that was the last motion I had in my group. I am still checking with our critic on whether he agrees with this motion. Perhaps the Government could hold it for a few minutes, until we have a chance to speak to our critic.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I did not hear the Hon. Member. Is he referring to the motion that has just been proposed by the Minister of State, or to one of the motions which the Minister indicated that he will be proposing?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the motion respecting the order for second reading of Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987, is the motion to which I am referring.

Mr. Speaker: I propose to stand this motion down. I would ask the Minister of State to address the House on the other motions to which he referred.

Mr. Lewis: That is fine, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps you could ask the page to return the original copy of the motion with my notation that it has the clearance of the other Parties so that I could have it for my files.

Actually, the note says: "Liberals tentative only, get back to us at 11 a.m.". It is stood properly.

[Later]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have now had time to consult with my critic and I would like the Government to know, through its Minister, that he can change the note on his sheet and read it properly. We will authorize and agree with the committee reference on Bill C-131.

Mr. Speaker: I think we can take it as proposed. Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Lewis: I can assure my hon. friend, Mr. Speaker, with respect to this last motion, that it will be the last time I get a copy that says "tentative". I am sure that has been recorded elsewhere, too.

PROPOSED ADDRESSES—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the next motion is with respect to visits to the House of Commons of two foreign dignitaries. I move:

That notwithstanding Standing Order 3(1), on Thursday, June 16, the House shall meet at two o'clock p.m.; and

That, for the operation of the Standing Orders, such sitting shall be deemed to be a Wednesday, except that Private Members' Business shall be taken up between five o'clock p.m. and six o'clock p.m.; and

That, the address of the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany to be delivered in the House Chamber on Thursday, June 16, 1988, at eleven o'clock a.m., before Members of the Senate and House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That, the Chancellor's address, together with all introductory and related remarks, be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcasting system; and

That, the address of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, to be delivered in the House Chamber on Wednesday, June 22, 1988, at twelve o'clock noon, before Members of the Senate and House of Commons, together with all introductory and related speeches, be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House; and

That, the Prime Minister's address, together with all introductory and related remarks, be made available to the media for transmission in the usual way by the House of Commons broadcasting system.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to today's business, and I think you will find consent for the following proposal that would see the House concur in the Senate amendment to Bill C-102, and for Bills C-73, C-115, C-122, and C-123 to all receive second reading and reference to committee before the conclusion of Government Orders at 5 p.m. this evening.

We have rearranged, after discussion with the critics, the order of business to read as follows: first, the concurrence in the Senate amendment to Bill C-102 and then, in the following order, Bills C-115, C-122, C-123, and C-73.

I also have a motion that would allow the Bills to be referred to the same legislative committee, which reads as follows:

That, when the motions for second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-73, an Act to provide for the implementation of an agreement respecting Indian lands in Ontario, Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act and another Act in consequence thereof, Bill C-122, an Act to amend the Indian Act (by-laws and membership rules) and Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), have been adopted, the said Bills shall stand referred to the same Legislative Committee; and

That, notwithstanding Standing Order 93(5)(a), the said Committee shall remain in existence until each Bill has been reported back to the House.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, generally, speaking for the Official Opposition, we agree with the arrangements indicated to the House by the Minister of State. Certainly we do with respect to the order, that is, that we begin with Bill C-102, then proceed to Bill C-115, Bill C-122, Bill C-123, and end with Bill C-73. We also agree that, if the way is clear and there are no procedural difficulties, all the matters go to the same legislative committee.

There is only one difference with what the Minister of State outlined, and that is with respect to Bill C-115. There have been discussions among the Parties that we would deal this morning with Bill C-115 and take it through second reading. There is also agreement that this afternoon, when the Minister returns to the House, we would ask that Bill C-115 go into Committee of the Whole so that we can deal with all stages of Bill C-115, through to the third reading stage, this afternoon. Therefore, that Bill would not be included among the Bills that go to the legislative committee. If that is acceptable to the Government, we can then proceed on that basis.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling on the Minister of State, perhaps I should hear from the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm what my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), has said. I am not sure why we need Bill C-102 to go to the legislative committee. I think it will simply go on out of this place. Just to make it clear, it is complete; We are only changing a very small technical part of it. It will not go to a legislative committee. It will go out of here so that the enrolment procedures for the Inuvialuit can take place.

With respect to Bill C-115, I just want to confirm that I have an agreement with the Minister, and I spoke to the Parliamentary Secretary this morning, that we will start with the motion on Bill C-102, deal with it, deal with second reading of Bill C-115, complete that, and, if we have time, go on to Bill C-122. When the Minister is available after three o'clock this afternoon, we will revert and do all stages of Bill C-115 with the Minister present, and then complete either Bill C-122, Bill C-123, or Bill C-73, what is left of those. Bills C-122, C-123, and C-73 are the three Bills which will go to the legislative committee. Bill C-102 goes out of here, and Bill C-115 will have been completed and will go to the other place.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for rising again, but I would like to seek some direction from the Government with respect to the point raised by my friend, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). Bill C-102 is such a simple matter, a technical matter. I would like some direction from the Government on how we can can deal expeditiously with it through all stages and on what the procedure will be, because obviously there is no need for such a Bill to go to the legislative committee.

Mr. Lewis: If I may, Mr. Speaker, I mentioned Bill C-102 in my opening remarks, but when I got to the draft motion there was no reference to Bill C-102 in it. It will be handled first in order of business and then we will concur in the amendment made by the Senate.

With respect to Bill C-115, naturally I am pleased to see the degree of co-operation we have received, and we will leave it on consent of the Parties to amend the House order as proceedings go on this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister of State have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have six petitions signed by Canadians from the City of Regina and the communities of Regina Beach, Quill Lake, and a few others in Saskatchewan.

The petitioners state that whereas schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada affecting about 1 per cent of the population and costing Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs, and whereas the research effort in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia is extremely limited and not commensurate with the burden the illness imposes on Canadians, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will, in future, be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions signed by residents of Winnipeg and of other towns and cities in Manitoba.

The petitioners state in part that whereas the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of the bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Dennis H. Cochrane (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition signed by a number of constituents, particularly from the Town of Riverview in my constituency.

They are concerned about the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass immediately legislation to protect innocent unborn children.

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by residents of my constituency in the towns of Wheatly, Cottam, Kingsville, Leamington, and Ruthven. They humbly pray and call upon the Government to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception, and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed to save the life of the mother.

Order Paper Questions

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the privilege to table a petition from a number of citizens of Windsor. It is a petition which has been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions in conformity with Standing Order 106.

The petitioners state that whereas the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States; whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised; and whereas the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from the United States, therefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

WESTERN ARCTIC (INUVIALUIT) CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. Monique Landry (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the accommodation of the other Parties regarding the Bills that are being put forward today, particularly Bill C-102. There was an error in printing by the Department and the Minister. It was not discovered as it went through the House the first time. The Senate dealt with this error.

The original documents tabled with the Inuvialuit were correct. It was simply the legislation on which the dates were not correct. We are hoping that because of this we can deal quickly with the Bill, concur in the amendment, and send it on for concurrence by the Governor General so that it can become law very quickly.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, of course if the Official Opposition concur in this motion. I just want to indicate to the House that the substance of this Bill has already been fully considered. We dealt with it in all stages at an earlier time.

The agreement between the Government of Canada and the Western Arctic Inuvialuit represents an important step forward in settling claims. The changes that we passed earlier were primarily of a technical nature. When we did so, no one picked up the fact that there was an error in the drafting of the legislation with respect to the date. That is what we are now correcting. It causes no problems at all.

However, I think we owe a debt of gratitude to the Senate for having detected this error. It is not a serious one, but there have been other occasions when bad drafting has led to some very serious repercussions.

I would simply draw to Your Honour's attention a piece of legislation called Bill C-31 wherein bad drafting resulted in a regulation now used by the Department of Indian Affairs to prohibit a significant number of people from applying for the reinstatement of their Indian status. This is what we now refer to as the infamous death rule. The Department of Justice looked at the statute and discovered that there was a difficulty with it. Because there was a difficulty, it is now being applied in practice and affecting people's lives.

I simply want to draw to the attention of the House and to the attention of the country that we around here can sometimes be a little too lax in legislative committees and, in certain cases, in standing committees, or if we are dealing with matters in Committee of the Whole. We need a kind of expertise so that these errors in drafting will not get away from us.

I just want to repeat that we cannot take it for granted that we can proceed on the basis of good faith that those who draft legislation for us always do it right. That is why we have to be continually vigilant.

I repeat that with this case it is not a serious error. It is just a small one. We can deal with it very easily. That, of course, is the intention of the Official Opposition.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to have an opportunity to speak for a moment to the amendment to Bill C-102. I spoke to senior people in the Department who are aware of how this came to be on page 2 in the first clause at line 13. The date, April 11, 1987, happened to be put in there. The actual document was typed with that date, as I understand it, at the top of the page, and the actual date of signature was put in, in ink, at the bottom of the page. When the draftspeople were putting in a date, they in fact used the most visible and obvious typed date rather than the appropriate one, which is May 11, 1987.

I am assured that this is simply a technical change that resulted from a small error. It is not some other agreement or whatever, although I know that many first citizens in the country are deeply suspicious of what the federal Government does most of the time, if not all the time. They have every right to be given the assurance that it is not a change in any other way than to put the proper date on the document.

I want to remind Hon. Members about how long it has taken for us actually to get this done. The Inuvialuit, or as their negotiating arm was known, COPE, entered into the agreement with Canada on June 5, 1984. It was tabled in the House on June 19, 1984. It was passed by the House on June 26. That is almost four years to the day that the agreement was put in place. It has taken us four years of procedure to get to where we are today. It can go very quickly to get Royal Assent in order that, perhaps, it could be fully implemented by next week.

• (1130)

The Inuvialuit final agreement contained 18 principal points: 35,000 square miles in title fee simple absolute, full subsurface rights to 5,000 square miles, to roughly a seventh of the land, and on the other 30,000 square miles the Crown holds the rights to certain minerals, natural gas, oil, and so on.

The compensation was arranged at $44 million in 1977 dollars. Approximately $12 million was borrowed by the Inuvialuit and their negotiators to complete the process of negotiations. At present, the full amount in inflation protected dollars is $152 million, of which $73 million has been put out and there is approximately $73 million permitted yet outstanding.

I am pleased it is passing through this place today because the enrolment procedures for the Inuvialuit are being held up. They had planned to complete that this month. If the Governor General moves quickly, hopefully they may be able to complete that this month, or certainly by next month. I am pleased that after only four years of delay both Chambers have managed to patch things up and get the deal concluded.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): If you will recall, Mr. Speaker, what Bill C-102 did was to correct no less than 14 pages of drafting errors in the original Bill or in the agreement that formed the schedule thereto. In my remarks today I wish to echo the comments made by the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) that we must do a better job of drafting. These things are going backwards and forwards like a yo-yo between this place and the Senate in order that these corrections can be made. Professionalism within the various government Departments, in this case the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and presumably also the Department of Justice, ought to exist in order that that does not happen in future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mrs. Landry, for Mr. McKnight, moves that the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act, be now read a second time and concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Schellenberger) on a point of order.

Mr. Schellenberger: For clarification, Mr. Speaker, as I understood it, you called for second reading. We would like this to pass directly through the House. If you could accommodate us, we would be very happy.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion has been adopted and it now goes back into the Senate, so there is really no problem with that. That is the usual procedure.

The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner).

Mr. Penner: We were seeking clarification from the Chair that, if we dispose of it at this stage, that will be the end of it and the Inuvialuit will know that there will be no further procedural matters related to the changes to their agreement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion has been adopted. It will go back to the Senate and then it will come back after Royal Assent.

INDIAN ACT

Hon. Monique Landry (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act and another Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this Bill, one which is being presented for second reading today. Hopefully, by agreement, it can move through the House today by way of Committee of the Whole and third reading. We wish to do this because of the significance of the Bill.

It has been brought forward by the Indian people. We are looking for an amendment at their request. This Bill was given extra direction at the conference held in the City of Edmonton where the Assembly of First Nations met and passed a resolution supporting this legislation. The band that initiated the Bill that we are discussing is the Kamloops Band of British Columbia. They began the process in January, 1985.

By the end of that year, well over 100 other bands from across the country had formally communicated their support of this legislation to the Government. In July, 1986, the General Assembly of First Nations endorsed the Kamloops proposal, as they did again in the last couple of days.

On March 16, 1988, the Confederacy of Nations of the Assembly of First Nations examined Bill C-115 itself and endorsed it in principle. The Assembly of First Nations requested only one small amendment to the text of the Bill, and this is included in the motions that have been prepared.

I also wish to speak to the opposition critics on four very minor amendments that must be proposed to this legislation, and we hope to do that in Committee of the Whole. Those amendments are prepared and hopefully will be endorsed by all of us.

Over the last several years Chief Clarence Jules of the Kamloops Band, when we should commend for his diligence and hard work in this area, has travelled extensively throughout the country explaining this proposal at countless meetings to any band or organization that wishes to listen. He has also been very diligent in his work on Parliament Hill with those of us who are interested in Indian matters. Indian people understood what he was proposing and they supported him. I hope we will also do so today.

Chief Jules' attitude is one I share: as long as the Indian Act is with us, until such time as it is superseded by a higher and better law, then we should make the Act work for Indian people and not against them. Whatever gains we make in this way can be retained for the future in other legal expressions yet to come.

There are two main purposes to this Bill: first, to clarify the legal status of Indian lands; second, to establish the legal foundation for property taxation by band councils. These two purposes are closely related. I do not need to remind the House that land is one of the most vital and sacred concerns of Indian people. The lands that are set aside for Indian people must be under Indian control, and they must be legally disposed of in such a way as to provide maximum control and economic benefit to Indian communities.

One of the principal means by which Indian bands can benefit economically from their land is through leasing, both to Indians and in many cases to non-Indians, until such time as they have sufficient control, whether it is in farming, timber, or mining, to take over those apparatus themselves. The lease makes possible modern financial and contractual arrangements. Some bands may not wish to use their land in these ways, and that is their choice, but many bands wish to use their land base as a source of wealth and employment for their community, as well as underpinning their economic development. They must have that opportunity.

The great advantage to leasing arrangements is that the ultimate Indian interest in the land can be retained and the land is not lost from the reserve. At the same time, the lease provides the legal basis for the economic use of the land.

In order for bands to lease their land, the Indian Act requires that the land must first be surrendered to the Crown, which is then authorized to enter into the lease on behalf of the band. This is obviously an indirect and very complicated process. However, it has historical roots which touch on the basic nature of the relationship among the Crown, Indian land, and Indian people.

In this proposal to amend the Indian Act, Indian people have not asked that the surrender process be changed or removed. Such a step may come in the future, but only after much consideration has been given to the consequences for the Indian-Crown relationship. However, within the present context of the surrender process, the fundamental difference needs to be clarified between an absolute surrender of land for sale and a surrender for lease. At present this difference is merely mentioned in one line of the Indian Act. It is not clearly set out nor worked through the relevant sections of the Act.

The Bill before us will establish that a surrender may take one of two forms—first, an absolute surrender for sale which would remove land completely of all Indian interests and take it out of reserve, which is extremely rare, and, second, a surrender for lease or some other restricted purpose, in which case the land remains part of the reserve. Setting aside part of a reserve for leasing is not a surrender, nor is it a release of the Indian interest in the land.

In order to facilitate and strengthen the distinction between these two types of surrender, land surrendered for lease would be termed "designated land" and the process of such non-absolute surrender would be termed "designation". This terminology is obviously far superior to the word "surrender", and the symbolic importance of this change is of great value.

As a result of these amendments Indian communities will be able to set land aside for development without fear of losing the Indian status of the land. The rights they obtain through the Indian Act will continue to apply, such as voting rights in band elections, protection of cultural property, and the power to govern the land through by-laws.

The last point is very important. At present it is not at all clear in the Indian Act whether the word "reserve" includes surrendered land of any type. There is, therefore, a risk that when land is surrendered for lease it might cease to be defined as part of the reserve and the by-law powers of the band council could not govern the land. This is a totally unacceptable loss of Indian jurisdiction and control of Indian land. It would also mean a very serious vacuum of local jurisdiction over leased Indian land. This has taken place in many instances across Canada and is why the band at Kamloops requested the change. This situation cannot be permitted to continue.

One of the most important by-law powers that bands need is their power to tax use of the land. That brings me to the second purpose of these amendments, which is to establish clearly that band councils have the power to tax any interest or use of reserve lands in order to defray their costs as the government of that land. Such taxation power is obviously indispensable to any form of modern government. Some bands may not wish to use this power, but it must be there for bands which wish to exercise it.

In fact, Section 83 of the Indian Act has provided a taxation power for band councils since 1951. It is possible, however, that the power might apply only to Indians. It may not, as presently worded, apply to non-Indian leaseholders. The amendments will make certain that non-Indians are covered.

Section 83 is being brought up to date in other ways as well. Bands will no longer need to be declared to have reached an advanced stage of development before they may pass money by-laws. This provision is offensive and pointless.

The enforcement powers of band councils needed for their tax systems will be strengthened. Band taxation by-laws will be required to include appeal procedures to ensure equity for taxpayers. A general federal regulatory power is provided. Although no regulations are proposed at this time, the purpose of any future regulations would be to minimize ministerial discretion in respect of the exercise of band powers. If rules are necessary, they should be explicit and objective.

There is one final aspect of the Bill which I want to touch on in these remarks. There are certain sections of the Indian Act which create exclusively Indian land holdings in a reserve in which non-Indians cannot participate. The word "reserve" cannot include "designated land" for the purposes of the sections, since designated land is designed to include non-Indian participation. These sections are enumerated in the new definition of reserve, but Section 89 of the Act creates a special consideration in this context.

Section 89 protects Indian real and personal property on a reserve from any form of seizure or mortgage. It is a mixed blessing for Indian people. On one hand it protects their property, but on the other hand it prevents them from offering security for loans.

The question arises on how the concept of designated land should apply to Section 89. After all, the purpose of designated land is to allow leasehold interests to enter the legal and economic mainstream while protecting the underlying Indian interest in the land.

With this in mind, Section 89 is proposed for amendments so that leasehold interests in designated land would be made mortgageable. This will mean that an Indian person holding a lease on designated land would be able, just as a non-Indian is, to use the lease as security for a loan. There would be no risk to the ultimate reserve status of the land nor any possible loss of the ultimate Indian interest. Only the lease would be at risk. Of course, such leasehold interests would also remain under band council jurisdiction. This change should be a major breakthrough for the Indian economic use and benefit of reserve land.

The tendency in arguing for amendments to the Indian Act is either to do away with it entirely or to amend every section. Neither option is proposed here. Indian people have suggested a limited change to the Act. I believe these amendments are necessary and extremely helpful to Indian aspirations at this time, and I am pleased to be able to bring them to this House.

I want to add in closing that in August of 1987 the Department released an information booklet explaining these proposed amendments in detail. Over 6,000 copies of that booklet were distributed, including two separate mailings to all chiefs. Members of the House and the Senate were also sent copies, as were all provincial Governments and major associations of municipalities. These amendments have been developed in a very open process. Indeed, the content of this legislation has been developed in close consultation with Chief Jules, its main proponent from the Indian community.

I think the way in which this process has been undertaken shows that government and Indian co-operation on legislative change is possible and can produce substantial and positive results. I hope we will see much more of that type of co-operation as we continue to make changes in the years ahead.

In conclusion, it is very important that we continue this kind of process to encourage the self-government movement toward which many of us in this House have worked so hard. This is one small change in that direction.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-115 which we are now debating represents the end of a rather long struggle for Chief Manny Jules of the Kamloops Band in British Columbia. Bill C-115 amends the Indian Act. This Bill has actually now become known as the Kamloops amendment Bill.

As the Parliamentary Secretary indicated to the House, Bill C-115 will enable First Nations to tax non-Indian interests on conditionally surrendered reserve lands. I do want to say to the Parliamentary Secretary that to alter the terminology from "conditionally surrendered" to "designated lands" represents a reality and a step forward. Of course, it is only wording, but words carry important impressions, and those words need altering and adjusting from time to time. I and the members of my Party support the principle and the thrust of Bill C-115, as well as the technical amendments which either the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister will introduce this afternoon when we go into Committee of the Whole.

In being so co-operative, I have to say to the House that all of us have to acknowledge a failure. It is not a failure on the part of this present Government per se but a failure of the entire system past and present, a failure to recognize the historical and legitimate right of Indian and other aboriginal people in this country to self-government or self-determination.

Members of Parliament really ought to ask themselves the very big question: How is it that so late on into the 20th century we continue to delay, to resist, and to go on frustrating the aboriginal people of Canada by failing to recognize that they do have an inherent right to self-government? That inherent right ought to be in the Constitution of Canada. Until that recognition is forthcoming—and I want to say to all Members that I believe that recognition will inevitably come; I just hope that it will happen in my lifetime—we are forced to go on modifying this piece of legislation called the Indian Act. This Indian Act is really by any objective standards totalitarian in nature and intent, and it really ought to be declared unconstitutional.

Land for Indian people represents a part of their spiritual relationship with the universe. Land to aboriginal people is a great deal more than it is to most other Canadians who see it as a place on which to erect a house and reside or a place from which you operate a business or some kind of investment. For the aboriginal people it represents so much more. It has very deeply engrained cultural aspects and religious underpinnings as well. Land and control over it and its resources are, of course, a prerequisite, a vital aspect of self-government.

I think probably that most Canadians have the idea that Indian reserves are gifts of land from the Government of Canada to Indian people, that somehow they represent an act of generosity by the Government that said "here, this is yours. You can have it and look after it". However, that is a complete misconception; it is not so and that misconception must be corrected.

Indian lands are those areas which Indian people reserve for themselves under treaties. In some parts of Canada there are no treaties at the present time. Most of British Columbia comes under that category as does northern Canada, that is, north of 60°. Where there are no treaties, aboriginal title may be asserted, although the full legal impact and implication of aboriginal title has not yet been realized in Canada. I am so tempted once again to launch into my thesis about aboriginal title. I have done it on other occasions in the House, but I will restrain myself because the matter of defining aboriginal title is now before an important court in the Province of British Columbia. Given a satisfactory definition of aboriginal title, I believe that many of the arguments I have made in the past with officials from the Department, with the Minister, and here in the House with my colleagues may, in fact, be sustained.

Bill C-115 takes a step toward increasing Indian control over Indian lands. It clarifies the powers that Indian bands have to develop and to tax non-Indian interests on those lands. It is a step in that direction, but I do not think we should be too self-congratulatory because it is a modest step. It is a mild movement forward. The Indian Act allows for reserve lands to be conditionally surrendered or better designated to permit leasing and development. At the present time the Indian Act does not make it clear what taxation powers these bands have over these designated or conditionally surrendered lands.

This morning, with Bill C-115, we are clarifying exactly what powers the bands have to tax non-Indian interests on Indian lands that have been designated for lease and development. At some future time, Sir, when Indian self-government becomes a reality in Canada, then First Nations will have the right to control their own lands in the manner in which they see fit. It will be unthinkable that we in this House of Commons and Parliament of Canada would be dealing with such matters. It will belong exactly where it ought to reside, with the legal powers of the First Nations themselves. When that happens each First Nation will have the power to decide the methods of land holding and the land management regimes which they want to have in effect.

I repeat that we desperately need leadership from the federal Government to promote actively the constitutional changes which are necessary to recognize in full law the First Nations' right to their lands and the waters and resources on those lands.

Bill C-115 has to be seen as part of the ancien régime, a part of the old order. You may remember from your history classes, Mr. Speaker, about the ancien régime in France prior to the French Revolution. At that time, it was necessary for a local congregation to come to the Estates General to get permission to repair the roof of the church. Bill C-115 is not very much different from that. We are participating in an action under the old order, an old order that simply must change in time.

It is regrettable and unfortunate that it is still necessary for Parliament to give First Nations the permission to tax non-Indian interests on their own lands, on lands they have designated for development or leasing. In the process of so doing we also have to make it clear, are the legislation does, that tax exemptions on purchases and incomes made on these lands are applicable as they are on so-called reserves.

It has become customary, when we amend the Indian Act, to go through some manner of consultation. The Parliamentary Secretary made it clear that there had been a consultation process, and in this case it has been a satisfactory one. The Assembly of First Nations, in 1986, adopted a resolution endorsing the position taken by Chief Manny Jules of the Kamloops Band. However, at the same time, I think this House ought to be aware that the Assembly of First Nations and other native organizations in Canada remain highly critical of this Government's reluctance to move forward with more vigour in the recognition of aboriginal self-governments.

I have to tell my colleagues in the House once again how distressed I am that the important work done a number of years ago by the Special Committee on Indian Self-Government in Canada has resulted in very little that is positive. I regret that the Department of Indian Affairs has chosen to use much of the vocabulary of this report but to go on denying the essence and the reality of what was recommended in that document.

In Indian-Government relations in Canada, there has been much betrayal by successive Governments, both federal and provincial. Since there is such a long record of broken promises, there remains a deep concern that revenue that will be raised on these conditionally surrendered lands, these designated lands, will in future offer the Government a reason for reducing the normal or regular financial support for band administration, for economic development, for housing, and for other ongoing programs which in reality constitute a part of the federal Government's obligations under treaty or other aboriginal rights.

I hope that will not happen. I hope that the Government will not tell a band that raises revenue in this manner that now that it has some money from its own lands it does not need the other programs and that it will give them to someone else.

That approach has been tried as a result of the settlement with the James Bay Cree. It was done with one particular band in the southern part of the Province of Alberta, a band which received compensation from the Government for a cattle claim. When those moneys were disbursed, immediately the Government sought to reduce social assistance to the members of that band. That is the kind of betrayal that Indian people are concerned about. I want to make it clear that we will be watching carefully to see that, as a result of Bill C-115, this does not occur again.

Meanwhile, Chief Jules has made it clear that nothing in Bill C-115 will cause Indian bands to lose any jurisdiction on leased reserve lands, on these designated lands.

I conclude simply by saying that because the days of this Parliament are obviously and rapidly drawing to a close, Chief Jules wants to see this Bill become law and not die on the Order Paper. As the spokesperson for Indian and aboriginal affairs for the Liberal Party of Canada, I want to assure the chief of our complete support for and co-operation in dealing with this Bill. That is why the Parliamentary Secretary, the Minister, my colleague from the New Democratic Party, and I have agreed that when the Minister returns this afternoon we will deal with all remaining stages of this Bill, so that before this Parliament comes to an end Chief Manny Jules will have the legislation he so desperately wants, the legislation he worked so hard to attain.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate today, and I guess we can call it this afternoon now. I know that so long as the cable system in Edmonton, your hometown, Mr. Speaker, is still working, Manny will be watching with great interest this afternoon.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the Hon. Member to know that they were watching at 12.30 this morning, and we are back again 12 hours later. I am sure they will be watching you also.

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I know that sometimes this is good watching, particularly right now, of course. A scintillating debate is about to take place.

I want to make clear for the record the agreement we have. It is an agreement that seems to have become somewhat clouded over the last few days. The Minister approached the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and I on Monday, in writing, regarding the Bills for today. We collectively struck an agreement some 48 hours ago that Bill C-115 would go through the House in all stages today so that it can get off to the Senate and get Royal Assent before the end of this Parliament. By getting our job done today, we are giving effect to the long and hard work that Chief Jules and many others have done, not only in British Columbia but right across Canada.

I know that Chief Jules, in Edmonton yesterday, was carrying on his discussions with George Erasmus, Joe Mathias, George Watts, Conrad Sioe, and many others in relation to this Bill because some concerns were expressed by some in relation to the nature of Bill C-115. I think that is quite natural in that it is viewed by some as being a bit of a municipal change to the Indian Act, something that many First Nations avoid. Such a change has an odour that many First Nations do not like to have persist in the atmosphere around them.

Quite frankly, Bill C-115 is not and should not be viewed as some major advance in self-government, nor should it be ruled out as simply some kind of added municipal order. The amendments proposed here have limited but valuable impacts for those bands that wish to use them. The amendments are not some kind of imposition by Parliament on the over 500 bands and the many reserves of Canada.

As my friends both from the government side and from the Official Opposition have said, this is about the right to tax non-Indian interests on conditionally surrendered, or as they will be known, designated lands. Perhaps there is the most urgency coming from British Columbia because of the present tax structures affecting places such as Chief Manny Jules' own home in Kamloops.

B.C. is a little different from most other areas of the country. Other than Governor Douglas' 14 very small treaties on Vancouver Island, and Treaty 8 in northeastern British Columbia and northwestern Alberta, there are no comprehensive settlements in British Columbia and the reserves are very small. We have to reflect on the fact that here we are in the middle of 1988 discussing providing the mechanisms which will allow those very small and impoverished communities to actually tax. This debate should have taken place a century ago. However, we have to compliment the very hard work done by Manny Jules in getting it this far, through second reading this morning and, when the Minister is available this afternoon, through third reading and on to the Senate.

I want to spend a moment on an analysis of Bill C-115 done by a Vancouver lawyer. The analysis was produced in March of this year and makes some interesting points. It says that one must recognize that the amendments do not address all significant areas of Indian concern or the antiquated system of the Indian Act. The amendments do not fundamentally change the land holding system under the Act, nor do they represent any major advance to self-government. The proposed amendments must be thus considered in their context as having the following limited purposes: (a) clarifying the legal characterization of lands which have been surrendered for lease so as to confirm that these lands remain part of the reserve; (b) expanding the powers of Indian Governments to raise revenue on their land from band members as now exists and to include non-Indian businesses on leased land; (c) modifying Section 89 of the Indian Act which protects the property of an Indian from seizure and has the inadvertent consequence of making financing of Indian businesses difficult— that is a point I can certainly confirm from my experience in northwestern British Columbia—and (d) repealing a provision of the Veterans Lands Act.

That is a matter which we are of course going to be dealing with by amendment this afternoon. As I understand it, the original drafters wanted to do it for consequential reasons in relation to other legislation, and in fact an amendment will be moved by the Parliamentary Secretary to delete, I believe, Clause 13 from the legislation.

It should also be noted that these amendments were developed by the Department of Indian Affairs in consultation with and on the initiative of the Kamloops Indian Band. The provincial Government of British Columbia assesses property tax on non-Indian leaseholders of conditionally surrendered lands. The Kamloops Indian Band had faced particular hardship under the existing legislation as it conditionally surrendered some of its lands to create an industrial park and had several non-Indian lessees.

While the province claimed substantial property, school, hospital, and other taxes from those leaseholders, over $7 million in B.C. two years ago, studies show that few services are provided to Indian lands in return. Indian communities such as Kamloops, seeking to develop their lands or lease a portion of these lands, were often required to pay for services to these lands, and the province is acute for all First Nations in B.C. as it is the only province assessing occupiers or lessees of Indian lands.

There is, of course, the Leonard case of 1985 which decided that the personal property tax exemption in Section 87 of the Indian Act applying to income tax, sales tax, tobacco and gasoline taxes, among others, did not apply to transactions occurring on conditionally surrendered lands. This of course created further economic disadvantage for Indian communities that developed lands involving surrenders for the purpose of leasing.

There are some other major applications, but one other which I think should be put on the record concerns Section 87(b) and income tax. An important issue here concerns Indians working for businesses on conditionally surrendered or leased lands. Interpretation Bulletin IT-62 from Revenue Canada considers conditionally surrendered lands to be part of the reserve for the income tax issue. Bulletin IT-62 looks to where the services were performed to determine whether the Indian's income or personal property was situated on a reserve as Section 87 requires. The Supreme Court of Canada case, Nowegijick v. The Queen, decided that an Indian's income or property is situated where the employer is located and where they are paid. This effectively overturned Bulletin IT-62 and it has now been withdrawn. While the Indian remission order continues to recognize the tax exemption for Indians working on reserves, its definition of reserves does not include conditionally surrendered or what is now known as designated lands.

It would therefore appear that an Indian employee, one, working for an employer based on conditionally surrendered lands and working there, or, two, working for an employer based on conditionally surrendered lands and working off reserves, or, three, working for an employer off reserve but doing work on conditionally surrendered lands, will under present law not be able to take advantage of the income tax exemption in Section 87. Under the Bill before us today, however, in all these situations the Indian employee will not be liable to pay income tax because conditionally surrendered lands to be known as designated lands will remain part of the reserve and Section 87 will apply. Those are interesting and important opinions.

The document that was alluded to by the Parliamentary Secretary dealing with proposed amendments to the Indian Act concerning conditionally surrendered land and band taxation powers has, I understand, been made widely available. I do not agree with all the language, but I think some parts of it are worth putting on the record because its implications, certainly for B.C. bands and others right across the country, are important. I think Hansard may be the best way for that kind of information to be transmitted because it is available in libraries and elsewhere.

The opening page points out that in 1985 the Kamloops Indian Band, led by Chief Manny Jules, made a proposal to amend the Indian Act and a year ago, when this was put out, over 115 band councils had passed resolutions in support of the initiative. The Kamloops Band first became concerned about the question of taxation and conditionally surrendered land in the early 1960s when it established an industrial park on a section of the reserve near the City of Kamloops. The costs of developing the land and providing such basic services as roads, water, and sewage were and continue to be paid by the band. Yet provincial property taxes have always been levied on the park residence. They were therefore put in the position of having to pay service charges for roads, water, sanitation, and the like to the band in addition to property taxes going to the province. This situation inhibited the band in setting lease rates, providing services, and generally in competing with other industrial parks. This is basically a situation which might be described as double taxation.

After many years the band concluded in the early 1980s that it should assert its own powers to levy taxes. In attempting to do so the band encountered basic deficiencies in the Indian Act respecting conditionally surrendered land. Taxation was not the only problem. The band was also concerned about its ability to zone and regulate the land it developed.

It is important to look at the Bill for a moment. While it appears to be quite lengthy, in fact it is not really a terribly complicated piece of legislation in its intent. It amends the definition of "reserve" by adding a definition for "designated lands". It says:

> "designated lands" means a tract of land or any interest therein the legal title to which remains vested in Her Majesty and in which the band for whose use and benefit it was set apart as a reserve has, otherwise than absolutely, released or surrendered its rights or interests, whether before or after the coming into force of this definition;

That is really the key part of the Bill. If one then looks at the following pages, one sees that the amendments are consequential for page after page, adding words like "absolute" or "designation". These kinds of consequential amendments are required in law to make sure that it is clear and consistent throughout. Right through to pages to 4, 4(a), 5, and so on, there are consequential amendments in relation to land and to the definitions of "taxation" and "process".

• (1220)

Those groups that have expressed concern need not worry that it is legislation which brings a massive, broad sweeping change to the Act. It is very limited in its scope and has specific beneficial consequences for groups like the Kamloops Band and many others.

Let me return to the publication which was made broadly available across the country, certainly to municipal and provincial authorities in British Columbia. It went on to state:

> In the February 1986 Budget Speech the announcement was made that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development would bring forward amendments to the Indian Act to enable bands to levy their own local taxes.
> Shortly thereafter, the Honourable David Crombie, together with Chief Clarence Jules of the Kamloops Indian Band, issued a press release and wrote to all chiefs and the provincial governments to explain the Budget announcement further, and to launch a process of consultation.

It should be clear for the record that Manny Jules and the Kamloops Band have certainly gone to great lengths in attending meetings of the Union of B.C. Municipalities and in getting information out to other bands. That is evident from the number of positive supporting resolutions. Certainly they have been keeping anyone who is interested, including myself, the Hon.Member for Cochrane—Superior and I am sure the Minister, informed of the importance of getting this through all stages today, perhaps on to the Senate tomorrow, with Royal Assent perhaps by next week.

The document went on to state:

> Consultation with Indian leaders was led by Chief Jules, while the Minister and the Department consulted primarily with provincial governments. A number of themes became clear.
>
> First, band taxing powers are an inevitable part of the growth of Indian government. This seemed to be an idea whose time had come.
> Second, the status of conditionally surrendered land should be fully clarified such that no other rights are affected or transferred except as necessary to give effect to the wishes of the band in the surrender process. There should be no accidental loss of band jurisdiction or legal rights under the Indian Act.
> Third, non Indians on Indian land would be subject to band taxation without having the ability to vote in band elections. Confidence that band taxation would involve appropriate procedures to ensure fairness would be very important.
> Fourth, developing good working arrangements with other governments would be important to bands' success in operating taxation and regulatory regimes.

Chief Jules has demonstrated that all those matters have been vigorously and vigilantly pursued.

The document then posed some questions that I believe some people in the House and others across the country might ask:

> What is surrendered land?
> Under the Indian Act, Indian reserves are held by the Crown for the 'use and benefit' of Indian bands. Bands must 'surrender' their rights in reserve land to the federal government before the government can give possession of it, by sale or lease, to non-Indians.

Again, certainly in British Columbia, it comes back to the real, legitimate, and constitutionally required and prescribed need to settle the comprehensive claims in British Columbia. Obviously this would be pursuant to the full box of Section 35 of the Constitution which recognizes and affirms aboriginal rights and treaty rights in Canada.

There is beginning to be some clarification in British Columbia, through the Gitksan Wet'suwet'en case before the Supreme Court, and, without question, from the famed Nisga-Calder case that went before the Supreme Court of Canada some 16 years ago. The Justices of the Supreme Court unanimously recognized the continuing existence of aboriginal title.

It is only a matter of getting some kind of positive maturity from the Government of British Columbia to move forward and seriously settle the outstanding comprehensive claims in British Columbia. As anyone can see, the land rights provided under the Indian Act, as reserves in British Columbia, provides few benefits indeed.

Let me return to the document. It continued:

From the first version of the Indian Act in 1868 to today, except under certain restricted circumstances, no part of an Indian reserve can be leased or sold on behalf of a band unless it has first been 'surrendered'.

The next question posed in the document was: What is "conditionally" surrendered land? It stated:

In apparent recognition of this fact, the 1951 version of the Indian Act included a new reference to the old concept of surrender. Section 38(2) says, 'A surrender may be absolute or qualified, conditional or unconditional'. Nothing more was said as to how a 'conditional' surrender should be applied throughout the rest of the Act. The vitally important difference between conditional and unconditional surrender was recognized but not defined.

Subsequently, the Courts decided that land conditionally surrendered for lease retains a fundamental Indian interest. It remains 'land reserved for the Indians' under Section 91(24) of the Constitution Act, 1867. This means that Parliament has the exclusive power to pass laws affecting such land. Provincial laws or by-laws of municipalities which are land-related cannot be enforced on conditionally surrendered land, even against non-Indian leaseholders. Property taxation is an exception to this general rule for certain reasons—

I will now touch on those reasons.

The next question asked in the document was: What is the problem with conditionally surrendered land? As we deal with this debate, we realize that the rights provided to aboriginal people all across the country, certainly in British Columbia, is extremely limited. That has been the historical problem in raising funds to develop a business on reserve, to get a mortgage to build a home, or to use any of the kind of acquired rights that almost any other Canadian would find when one has title fee simple, whether to a small lot in the city or to a piece of land anywhere else in the country.

Even a lease or almost any other kind of title will provide a much greater potential financial instrument than the reserve situation as it has been allowed to rest since 1867.

The primary benefit of conditional surrender is clear: It enables land to be leased without losing its status as Indian land. This should mean that Indian bands can develop their land through lease arrangements without having to give up their underlying 'ownership' of it, their local government powers over it, or their special rights on it; all of which are fundamental to reserve land status. The only rights that are affected should be those that are necessary to the purpose and conditions of the surrender and the terms of the lease.

I encourage those who are interested in looking at the sections dealing with tax and tax power to obtain this document. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary would be pleased to provide it to anyone who wants to write to him.

Section C asked why bands needed jurisdiction over their land and indicated:

A regulatory vacuum.

One of the most important court decisions concerning jurisdiction on Indian land was a 1970 decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal ('Surrey v. Peace Arch Enterprises Ltd.) The Court decided that reserve lands conditionally surrendered to the Crown and then leased to developers for an amusement park were not subject to municipal zoning and other by-laws and regulations specifying building, water service, sewage disposal and other requirements with respect to the land and the way it could and could not be used. The lands remained 'lands reserved for the Indians' under exclusive federal jurisdiction.

The Committee asked, 'who can control the planning and development of Indian lands in British Columbia?' Considering the Peace Arch case and the deficiencies of the Indian Act, the answer appears effectively to be—no one except Parliament itself.

We must ask ourselves how this is possible not only in terms of the Kamloops Band which has helped to bring this proposed amendment to the Indian Act forward. Again, this leads to the argument my friend from Cochrane—Superior did not want to enter today, that the real debate which should be taking place on the floor of the House is in terms of self-government and devolution.

• (1230)

It is frankly impossible, with over 590 bands in Canada and with the kinds of decisions that have been taken by the Supreme Court of Canada, the Superior Courts, the provinces, and the territories, right across this land, on issues such as the one before us today. We are tinkering today—and it is important tinkering in that it is going to provide some small tools—but there is a more fundamental and much more highly principled debate that will soon take place in providing all the broader government rights to aboriginal people. Therefore, I am pleased to have participated this morning and this afternoon in second reading. Shortly after lunch, I understand, I look forward to completing Committee of the Whole and third reading stages and sending the Bill on to the Senate so that Chief Jules knows when to turn that TV back on in Edmonton and see the success.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the motion standing in the name of the Hon. Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my understanding that consideration in Committee of the Whole take place later this day, by unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

INDIAN ACT

Hon. Monique Landry (for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-122, an Act to amend the Indian Act (by-laws and membership rules), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, you are moving us right along today in your usual good way. I am pleased to speak to Bill C-122, which amends the Indian Act in order to help address the issue of enforceability and validity of enacted band by-laws and membership rules. As Hon. Members know, this Government is firmly committed to the concept of Indian self-governmemt. We have taken several important steps in this respect since coming to office, including passing self-government enabling legislation for the Sechelt Band in British Columbia. The Cree and Naskapi Bands in Quebec are also operating under a system of self-government, and discussions are ongoing with other bands on the development of new and unique systems of self-government.

Canada's Indian people are also assuming more control over their day-to-day lives through the process called "devolution", which is the transfer to Indian communities of authority for local programs and services. In many cases, the bands are using this process as a stepping stone to broader self-government arrangements.

Despite our commitment to increased Indian autonomy and the clear self-government aspirations of native people, the fact remains that most bands will continue to be governed by provisions of the Indian Act into the foreseeable future. We must, therefore, ensure that the processes by which the bands develop and implement by-laws and membership rules will be sensitive to native concerns and at the same time will not be adversely affected by the enforceability of by-laws and membership rules. Bill C-122 achieves that by simplifying those processes which safeguard the right of band members to be informed of membership rules and local by-laws.

I would like to take a few moments to provide Members with some brief background of this legislation. Under the Statutory Instruments Act, by-laws and membership rules of Indian bands must be examined, registered, and published in the same manner as other federal regulations. This means that they must be published in The Canada Gazette. While the federal Government has an important role to play in ensuring that the band enactments meet the criteria set out in the Statutory Instruments Act, we do not wish to restrict unduly the ability of elected band councils to establish membership rules and pass by-laws necessary for the good government of their communities.

On March 20, 1987, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and other Statutory Instruments presented its fifth report to the House of Commons and Senate. In this report, the committee outlined the difficulties encountered in discharging its mandate in relationship to by-laws made by Indian band councils. The Standing Committee also detailed its concerns over how by-laws are dealt with by federal Government and Indian bands.

The Standing Joint Committee concerns are well founded. I would like to commend its members for bringing these problems to light. The committee's recommendations were given careful consideration in the development of the Bill before us today. I am confident that this Bill will satisfy the committee's concerns. Under the existing provisions of the Indian Act, there is a very real possibility that by-laws and membership rules, passed prior to June 28, 1987, did not conform to the applicable requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act and could be declared unenforceable. It is for this reason that we require quick passage of Bill C-122.

This legislation strikes a balance between two important considerations. First, it ensures that band councils will have the authority to develop and enforce fair and valid by-laws and membership rules, but, just as important, it ensures that these by-laws and membership rules will be widely available for scrutiny by band members who are affected by them.

Not every band member receives The Canada Gazette. I do not know how many of us actually read it every day, and I am sure many of them do not. That is why this is so important. Requiring bands to conform to the stringent provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act complicates the process of band decision making, and it is seen by many bands as a unwarranted interference in their affairs.

Bill C-122, therefore, amends the Indian Act to exempt band membership rules established under Section 10 and by-laws made under Sections 81, 83, and 85, subsection 1, from examination, registration, and publication in The Canada Gazette. This will not provide by-laws and membership rules from public scrutiny. As I stated earlier, Bill C-122 contains important provisions regarding notification to band members. Band councils will be required to publish a notice of the band's membership rules in a local newspaper or post the notice in a conspicuous place on the reserve. The notice must include a summary of rules and indicate a location on the reserve where the full context of the rules can be found for review or purchase by anyone interested.

The legislation also requires band councils to publish a notice of all by-laws in a local newspaper. Bill C-122 also repeals and replaces Section 86 of the Indian Act. This amendment will enable a superintendent or secretary of the band to issue true certified copies of by-laws and membership rules, will allow certified true copies to be received in evidence without proof of signature, and will ensure that by-laws and membership rules are not invalid by reason of any defect in form.

Finally, Bill C-122 amends the Indian Act to ensure that existing by-laws and membership rules are not declared invalid simply because they were not processed in accordance with provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act. These amendments will not be considered retroactive for cases now before the courts.

Bill C-122 calls for simple but important technical amendments to the Indian Act. The legislation reflects this Government's themes of progress, fairness, and keeping its commitments to native people.

This House has previously demonstrated its support for Indian concerns and aspirations. I am happy to see that we are moving this Bill into committee today so that we can have a further detailed study of it to ensure that it is acceptable and, hopefully, to put it in place for Indian people in the near future.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it will be my intention in participating in this debate to indicate to the House that this Bill, Bill C-122, is far more than merely some technical amendments to the Indian Act, and that there are some far-reaching and undesirable consequences of it which will make it unacceptable to myself and to this Party.

Let me begin with some background and lead up to my objections to Bill C-122. The raison d'être for this legislation, says the Government in its communiqué giving the background to this Bill, is to "advance and promote Indian self-government". The Government argues that it does not want to restrict unduly the freedom of democratically elected band councils to pass local by-laws that are necessary for the good government of their communities. So says the propaganda. The Government of Canada does not want to interfere unduly in how such by-laws are enacted or implemented. The objective of the legislation is to exempt the band councils, in the case, for example, of their membership rules and other by-laws, from the application of the Statutory Instruments Act.

On the surface that may appear to be technical. In due course I want to show that it is much more than technical. At the same time this Bill provides what are considered to be guarantees that proper notice will be given to all persons likely to be affected by such band council enactments.

A couple of points must be made in dealing with the principle of this Bill. The first point is that it is pretentious, pompous, even misleading of the Government to make the fatuous claim that Bill C-122 in some way advances or promotes Indian self-government. I reject that as a claim. I reject that as being in any way a principle of this Bill.

The Special Committee on Indian Self-Government made it very clear that amending the Indian Act can never be a route to self-government. I quote from that report which states: "The antiquated policy basis and structure of the Indian Act make it completely unacceptable as a blueprint for the future".

Piecemeal changes to the Indian Act can never achieve the self-determination which Indian people are seeking. So the question must be asked: Why, today, is the Government tinkering again with the Indian Act in terms of what is proposed in Bill C-122? The real reason is the Government's past failure to comply with the Statutory Instruments Act with regard to the registration and the publication of band membership codes brought into being by virtue of Section 10 of the Indian Act.

The Government sought to end run or get away from the obligation under the Statutory Instruments Act by issuing an Order in Council on June 25, 1987, purporting to exempt band membership codes from the provisions of the Statutory Instruments Act. When the Native Council of Canada discovered this, it regarded the action in this Order in Council to be potentially invalid and certainly undesirable.

The interesting thing is that on closer examination the Order in Council did much, much more than simply exempt the band membership codes from registration and publication under the Statutory Instruments Act. It in fact exempted all by-laws passed by band councils from the registration, the examination, and the publication requirements of the Statutory Instruments Act.

Thus at first the Government tried to get away with it. Then it tried to circumvent the law by Order in Council. In both cases it failed to live up to the legal requirements of good government. Now, to clean up this mess it has decided to legislate, and to do so in Bill C-122.

The Minister advised bands and the aboriginal people's organizations that this was going to be done. They were asked to respond by a certain date, that is, February 28 of this year. They were asked to respond on February 28 in a letter that was dated February 15. Those of us who are aware of the postal service in Canada will know that those letters did not reach a large number of bands until the end of February, or in some cases early in March.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that in Canada the word "consultation" when it comes to dealing with Indian people has become a dirty word? I am sure the Minister would argue that consultation had taken place. The Native Council of Canada, which has a very special interest in band membership by-laws, because so many of its members are pursuing reinstatement under Bill C-31, were not even notified at all of the Government's intentions.

I want the House to know that Bill C-122 has been mishandled. If that were all there was to it, we could be forgiving because Governments by definition mishandle almost everything they touch. It is not the mishandling that I am so distressed about, although it is bothersome, but that this legislation is wrong-headed. It cannot be supported.

Bill C-122 will place new responsibilities on bands to publicize new by-laws. This Bill will require bands to post notices about new by-laws in a conspicuous place, to have the by-laws available to the public for examination, and to place notices in local newspapers.

Some lawyers quite rightly argued and pointed out that if the band is not extremely careful and most scrupulous in this obligation their new by-laws may in fact be null and void. They may have great difficulty enforcing them.

There is a more serious matter than that. That more serious matter is the Bill's provision to exempt all band by-laws from registration as statutory instruments. Bands do not want the legal status of their by-laws to be diminished in that manner, and that is the key point I want to make in explaining why Bill C-122 is unacceptable to us. It is not as innocuous as it seems at first blush. It does something quite detrimental to the nature of all band by-laws. The chiefs at the Assembly of First Nations meeting in Edmonton yesterday passed a resolution totally rejecting the Bill. They did so because the Bill exempts all band by-laws from registration as statutory instruments, as well as exempting them from examination and publication under the Statutory Instruments Act.

The exemption from registration appears to imply that all band by-laws from now on will not be considered as statutory instruments. That is serious. Indian bands have won some very important fishing cases in courts in this country because the courts have said that their fishing by-laws are statutory instruments which therefore supersede provincial legislation and regulations. If their by-laws lose their status as statutory instruments, as Bill C-122 proposes, then the legal status of bands and the by-laws that they pass will be diminished.

In the past, by-laws have been exempted from examination and publication. This Bill goes further by exempting future by-laws from registration. The Native Council of Canada opposes the Bill for its exemption of membership by-laws from examination or publication. The Assembly of First Nations opposes the Bill for taking away the statutory instruments of their by-laws.

Finally, when this Bill goes to committee, as it certainly will because the Government dominates the House with its majority, it will be seen whether or not the First Nations object to the process of passing by-laws contained in this Bill. The process is very much on the municipal model. Most First Nations negatively view the concept that they are no more than federally recognized municipalities. The report of the special committee made it clear that Indian government, aboriginal government in this country, is a distinct order. It is not federal, it is not provincial, and it is not municipal. It is a distinct order of Government and must be so recognized.

The Assembly of First Nations in Edmonton have rejected Bill C-122. They are concerned that the Bill would mean that by-laws would no longer be considered as statutory instruments. I have explained to you, and to my colleagues in the House, the legal importance of that when there are court cases pending with respect to fishing rights and other aboriginal rights.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, when you put the question to the House, I will ask that Bill C-122 be carried on division. I want it to be clearly indicated that I and members of my Party, the Official Opposition, do not support Bill C-122.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member for Skeena wish to speak longer than five minutes?

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): I will attempt to keep my remarks to one o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Like the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), I have extremely serious concerns about Bill C-122. For those people who are watching or listening to this debate, it should be made clear that, in bringing five Bills before the House today, it is a bit of a grab-bag routine. One gets the good, the bad, and the ugly. Bill C-122 is what I would describe as ugly legislation.

Earlier this morning we dealt with Bill C-102 which clearly was required. It is supported by the Inuvialuit and I am sure by all First Nations. Bill C-115 is broadly supported by First Nations across the country. This afternoon we will be debating Indian lands in Ontario. There are two sides to the debate, but again it has broad support and enormous implications for more than 200,000 acres of land that have been in a grey area of title since 1867, and similarly since 1924.

Bill C-122 is ugly in that it is Trojan horse legislation. If one was solely to read the media pulp coming out of the Minister's office, one would think that what the Government is doing is saving the complicated procedure of having to mail in by-laws, published in The Canada Gazette, and scrutinized by the Joint Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments of the two Houses. By publishing them in local newspapers and posting them in an open and visible place in local communities, that is somehow cutting back on a bureaucratic problem.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) who just spoke, pointed out that there are extremely fundamental legal issues associated with this proposal. I am sure the witnesses we hear before the committee will make it clear that this Bill should be amended down to zero.

Although a few months ago the Standing Joint Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments filed a lengthy report that I would encourage Members to read, the facts of the matter are that the Opposition put forward a resolution by the Assembly of First Nations in Edmonton yesterday based on good foundation. My friend referred to by-laws. I know only too well of some of those by-laws that the former Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development passed that became tied up in the courts in relation to the Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en by-laws on the Skeena.

There are many fishing and other cases that have succeeded based on the existing structure, albeit rife with problems as identified by members of the standing joint committee, but not simply to tear up the existing section of the Indian Act and amend it in this manner. One need only look at the multitude of press releases that come from the Minister, and information circulars and so on which make it seem that this is a nice way of tidying things up. That could hardly be further from the case. Even some publications make it sound as though it is only getting rid of some red tape and some localized problems in relation to alcohol by-laws, and so on. Nothing could be further from the case, even as is admitted by the members of the standing joint committee.

I wish to read a couple of brief quotations from their fifth report:

> The Statutory Instruments Act subjects all by-laws made under the Indian Act to review and scrutiny by your Joint Committee in accordance with the statutory reference set out in section 126 of the Act. From 1982 to 1985, the Joint Committee examined by-laws made pursuant to sections 81 and 83 of the Indian Act on a regular basis. The Joint Committee's general findings as to the degree of conformity of many by-laws to its scrutiny criteria are recorded in the correspondence reproduced in Appendix 'B' to this report. Your Committee concluded that its scrutiny of by-laws made under the Indian Act serves a limited practical purpose at best, and that it would not henceforth review these on an individual basis.

Here we have a committee and statutory instruments based on law passed by this Parliament in 1972 that are not being scrutinized by the joint standing committee. They do not want to have to keep looking at it. They point out problems with by-laws made under Section 81 of the Act which can only come into force 40 days after a copy of the by-law is forwarded to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), unless the Minister declares it to be in force before the expiration of that period. They certainly outline problems found with the procedures.

I could not say it more strongly, Mr. Speaker, that all Members of the House should oppose Bill C-122. I certainly oppose it in principle, and in terms of how it is laid out, in terms of how it is portrayed to the nation and to the first nations. I oppose it, my Party opposes it, and I am sure that when we hear witnesses before the legislative committee we will find that it will necessarily be amended to zero and not see the light of day.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Mr. Penner: On division.

Mr. Fulton: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion is adopted on division.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FLOWER WEEK

SUPPORT URGED FOR RESEARCH INTO LOU GEHRIG'S DISEASE

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the week of June 1 to 7 has been declared Flower Week by the municipalities across the country. Flower Week is the one time each year we are asked to remember those of our fellow Canadians who have been diagnosed as having a progressive degenerative disease called ALS. Amyotrophic lateral sclerosis, often called Lou Gehrig's disease, causes paralysis, loss of speech, and difficulties with breathing and swallowing. Life expectancy is only three years after diagnosis. What a terrifying thought that is.

ALS strikes as many people as multiple sclerosis yet we hear so little about this debilitating disease. During this Flower Week volunteers will be fanning out across Canada asking for our support and offering the traditional corn flower which is the national symbol of the ALS Society. This money is truly needed by this worthy society as they are attempting to raise funds for research into the cause of this killer disease and possibly to find a cure.

I urge all Members and all Canadians to support this deserving cause. Wear a corn flower and, as Lou Gehrig would say, help strike out ALS.

TOXIC CHEMICALS IN NIAGARA RIVER

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, as you know, this is National Environment Week. It is appropriate and timely, therefore, to review the preliminary results of a study released by the Ontario Ministry of the Environment.

The backdrop to this study is the declaration of intent signed by Canada and the United States which commits both countries to cut in half by 1996 the levels of persistent toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. This is a positive step forward. However, a new study indicates that, despite clean-up efforts, highly toxic chemicals from the United States continue to seep into the Niagara River.

Environment Week reminds us that we must continue to be vigilant and remind our American friends that they have a responsibility for completely cleaning up the mess they have made.

"LET WATER BE SACRED"

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, two years ago I visited a small community on the outskirts of Lima, Peru. Fifteen years earlier families had moved onto the area as squatters and built shelters out of woven mats. Gradually they replaced the mats with brick, but they had no water and had to purchase it by the barrel, which was both expensive and unsanitary.

Later the community dug an 80 metre well and put in basic plumbing, and Canada provided a pump. When Ambassador Keith Bezanson pressed the button and a four-inch stream of water began to flow, rusty at first but later clearer, everyone cheered and danced. This wasn't just a pump, this was water.

One hundred years ago Ludwig Feuerbach talked about the material basis of life and said: "Therefore let bread be sacred for us, let wine be sacred and also let water be sacred".

During this Environment Week when Ottawa hosts the World Congress on Water Resources we need to remember the importance of water for our cities, our farms, our fisheries, and our forests, for all the peoples of the world. For us let water be sacred.

ITALY

CELEBRATION OF THE REPUBLIC

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, Buona Festa to all our Italian friends! Forty-two years ago, Italy became a republic, and will celebrate this anniversary next Sunday.

We have a commonality of ancestors and cultures that goes back to the conquest of Gaul by Julius Caesar, which is probably why we seem to have much in common with the millions of Canadians who are of Italian origin.

On behalf of my constituents in the riding of La Prairie who are of Italian origin and on behalf of all Canadians, we wish to offer the President of the Republic of Italy, Mr. Francesco Cossiga, and the Italian government and the people of that wonderful country, our best wishes on that important day.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

MONITORING OF GREAT LAKES BY GREENPEACE SHIP

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, Greenpeace is a great Canadian institution. It has served the environment well at home and abroad since its inception in Vancouver in 1971. Right now its ship, the Beluga, is touring the Great Lakes. Joyce McLean, the Greenpeace Great Lakes campaign co-ordinator, explains why. She says:

> Our purpose—is to support local anti-pollution efforts ... We believe the public is frustrated with the lack of restrictive legislation concerning ongoing industrial pollution.

Clearly there is a big gap between the declaration of intentions in the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement and the daily reality.

The Beluga has identified many instances where serious pollution is caused by industrial and domestic waste and by human activities. Greenpeace deserves the support of Canadians and the full co-operation of governments at all levels. In identifying the causes of pollution Greenpeace plays an invaluable role in the cleaning up of the Great Lakes.

MARINE TRANSPORT

WEST COAST CRUISE SHIP INDUSTRY

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, recently several articles have appeared in West Coast newspapers implying that Bill C-52 will severely damage the cruise ship industry on the West Coast.

Bill C-52, which has been passed by this House and is currently before the other place, reserves the carriage of goods and passengers from one port in Canada to another port or the same port in Canada to Canadian ships. When no suitable Canadian ships are available, a flag waiver will be given so foreign ships may offer the service.

In recognition of the economic benefit to Canada of the cruise ship industry, particularly on the West Coast, cruise ships having overnight passenger accommodation of 250 or more have been specifically exempted from the provisions of Bill C-52. This means that they do not have to apply for a flag waiver but may carry on their business freely.

Press reports state that Bill C-52 will impose new duties and taxes on these ships. This is not so. All duties and taxes are imposed by tax legislation, and all decisions about what moneys are to be collected on these ships are made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Bill C-52 does not amend tax legislation.

The B.C. Members of Parliament have not let down the people of British Columbia.

CONDEMNATION OF SUPERMAILBOXES

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the City of Hamilton recently endorsed a resolution condemning the Government of Canada for its supermailbox program. The resolution calls for an immediate halt to the installation of supermailboxes and for the restoration of home delivery to all affected residences.

I rise today in support of this resolution. Supermailboxes are often mud splattered, prone to vandalism, and frequently surrounded by discarded junk mail. They are inaccessible to the disabled and can be quite some distance from people's homes, making it difficult for seniors and others to collect their mail.

The supermailbox program is an affront to the citizens of Canada and a violation of Canada Post's mandate to "provide a standard of service that will meet the needs of the people of Canada". The program effectively makes second-class citizens of urban dwellers by forcing them to accept this type of inferior postal service.

I join with the citizens of Hamilton in condemning the Government for its supermailbox program. Hamiltonians call for the immediate abandonment of Canada Post's corporate plan and the reinstatement of home delivery to all urban residences.

IMMIGRATION

FAMILY REUNIFICATION—EXPANSION OF SPONSORSHIP ELIGIBILITY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the constituents of Kitchener I would like to congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) for her recent amendments to the immigration regulations.

Effective July 8, the current policy of permitting family-class sponsorship of only those unmarried children under 21 years of age will now be expanded to allow the sponsorship of never married children of any age. Also, never married children of any age will be able to accompany immigrants in any category as dependants. Other changes will further assist married sons and daughters and sisters and brothers applying under the assisted relative category.

This new policy is consistent with Canada's approach to family reunification and genuine refugees, and its effectiveness will be greatly enhanced with the passage of Bills C-55 and C-84. These two Bills are designed to prohibit the abuse of our immigration system by phoney refugees and queue jumpers. As a result, Canada's immigration policy will be both compassionate and fair to those who respect the process, and tough and decisive on those who do not.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PRINTING INDUSTRY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, every day we hear of more and more Canadians who will lose their jobs and be casualties of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) trade deal.

Yesterday I received a letter from the Canadian Printing Industries Association concerning the effects of this deal. The Canadian Printing Industries Association has recently commissioned and received a report prepared by the prestigious Montreal consulting firm of Samson, Belair which says:

> The industry will lose 3,000 jobs as a result of the free trade agreement unless the Government puts in place adjustment programs dealing with some of the structural weaknesses identified.

The sad reality is that under this lousy trade deal adjustment programs are not even provided for and may even be countervailable as an unfair subsidy.

More and more we find out that this deal is bad for Canada and for Canadian workers.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK

RECYCLING OF GARBAGE

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, the United Nations World Commission on Environment and Development has concluded that the world, in order to safeguard the environment which is the ultimate base of all economic activity, must work to attain sustainable development. All Canadians can work toward this goal during this week, National Environment Week, and throughout the year in a small but significant way by recycling and reusing as much as possible the 500 kilograms of garbage each of us disposes of each year at a total national cost of $1.5 billion.

• (1410)

The Brundtland Commission has warned that our environment cannot sustain single-use throw-away products. Hundreds of items in our everyday garbage are indeed recyclables, including paper, glass and other items. Environment Week is a time to bundle it up. It is up to all of us to keep Canada clean, to keep Canada prosperous.

TOXIC CHEMICALS IN NIAGARA RIVER

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, reading the daily newspapers can really put one off celebrating Environment Week. For example, there is one story today about the 27 nuclear facilities around the Great Lakes, the lakes from which roughly 40 million Canadians and Americans get their drinking water.

An accident at any one of these nuclear reactors could be disastrous for that number of people. However, what does the nuclear industry say? It says that the storage is safe and that a little bit of tritium will not do us any harm.

There is also a story today about the fact that more toxic chemicals are showing up in the Niagara River than previously, despite the existence of an agreement on clean-up and the beginning of clean-up in some areas. Clearly the clean-up programs in place are inadequate right now and far more of these sites need to be cleaned up. Canadians would prefer to celebrate Environment Week with real clean-up and action and not a public relations program.

I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), the Hon Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), the Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) because, together with other Hon. KAHNAWAKE

CRISIS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday there have been some dramatic incidents at Kahnawake, and I want to condemn the Government and the RCMP for having provoked the kind of situation we are now seeing in this area.

We know that the so-called emergency was a fabrication, because the Indian reserve had been selling cigarettes and advertising the fact on billboards for three years, and now 200 RCMP officers have been used to arrest seventeen convenient-store clerks!

Mr. Speaker, I think this matter should have been settled through negotiations instead of this show of force that provoked a reaction from members of the reserve, so that now the entire population on the South Shore is being inconvenienced.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Government should have acted immediately, and that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) should act responsibly and settle this matter before matters get even worse.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—TORONTO STAR REPORT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, The Toronto Star is not known as the Government's greatest supporter. However, when public support for the Government's free trade initiative is overwhelming, even The Star falls into line with praise.

In today's article on the front page of the business section, we read the following:

> —no significant expectation of plant closings, layoffs or divestitures . . .
> Business believes that scaling back tariffs on both sides of the border will lead to increased profitability and more jobs—the vast majority of businesses support the trade deal—

The only people remaining out of line and out of step with Canada are the federal Liberal and NDP Leaders, and they, Sir, will pay for their folly at the polls.

HEALTH

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—HEALTH SERVICES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Minister of Health in Ontario announced the introduction of the Independent Health Facilities Act. This Act will give the Ontario Government the right to discriminate in favour of not-for-profit and Canadian operators in the provision of health services in the Province of Ontario.

We have heard time and again from the federal Government that the free trade deal has absolutely nothing to do with health care services, but according to the federal Government's legislation we cannot discriminate in favour of non-profit and Canadian operators in the provision of health care services because the deal says we have to give national treatment to health care services. You must have non-discrimination. This potentially violates clauses on services and investment.

• (1415)

I challenge the federal Government to lay it on the line. It should drop this section of the free trade agreement dealing with the ability of Ontario to promote non-profit health services. We want non-profit health services in Ontario. We want to support the Ontario Government's Bill. Yet the trade deal may prevent that.

Wake up, Canadians, the health of your children is on the line in this deal. The federal Government should drop health care services from the free trade agreement.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN POVERTY STATISTICS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, for years Saskatchewan boasted of having the lowest or second lowest rate of unemployment in the country. Succeeding Governments have been proud of this record of achievement. My province has now added a second place rating in another level of economic statistics. However, this time we do not take any pride in it.

The facts are that one in five people in Saskatchewan now live in poverty. Newfoundland is the only other province with a worse record. There, 22.8 per cent of the population lives in poverty. In Saskatchewan, 16.4 per cent of all families live in poverty. What is more disturbing is the poverty level of children. In our province more than 25 per cent, or 64,600 children, live in poverty compared to 26 per cent in Newfoundland. The national average is 17.6 per cent.

What a terrible legacy considering that Conservative Governments at both federal and provincial levels have always said that the family is their number one priority. That is great rhetoric but it is no consolation to the families or children of Saskatchewan.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

CANADIAN PATROL FRIGATE PROGRAM—CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATIONS OF PARAMAX

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and concerns matters arising out of leaked Paramax internal documents, a complete copy of which I provided to the Minister just before Question Period, and to the RCMP today.

Mr. Arthur Nightingale, President of Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd., confirmed this morning in an interview in New Brunswick that Paramax was in default of its contractual timetable obligations. He also indicated that Saint John Shipbuilding, and subsequently government security personnel, were made aware some time ago of the information contained in the documents made public yesterday. He said in The Telegraph-Journal:

> The company was aware of a brown bag circulating and had advised Government security departments of same.

My question is straightforward. Exactly when did the Government first become aware of the material contained in these leaked Paramax documents, and what action did it take to ensure that contracts for the frigate program were being administered in a timely, efficient, and proper manner?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, because of the fact we have the most comprehensive audit and verification system anywhere in the world we are made aware of every issue—

Mr. Tobin: Today it went wrong.

Mr. Jelinek: Nothing went wrong at all. The only thing that went wrong is that the Hon. Member had some information yesterday he said he would give to the RCMP. He held it for 24 hours, so he could grandstand. That is what went wrong.

Because of the most comprehensive audit system that exists in the world, we are made aware on a regular basis of any difficulties when they arise. We knew of this package which the Hon. Member has been handing around for the last 24 hours some two months ago. As a result of that—

Ms. Copps: Shame!

Mr. Jelinek: The big mouth from Hamilton East should listen and she might learn something.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister can complete his answer.

Mr. Jelinek: Because we have that system steps were immediately taken to rectify the situation. I talked to Mr. Nightingale as recently as this morning and he assured me that any differences that existed between Saint John Shipbuilding and Paramax have been resolved in a business-like fashion at no cost to the taxpayer. I do not know where the Hon. Member is coming from, except to say that what he is coming up with is misleading, wrong, and untrue information.

PARAMAX—AWARD OF CONTRACTS TO U.S. AFFILIATES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this Hon. Member called the RCMP yesterday and the inspector in question was not available until this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: The documents now in the Minister's possession, of which he admits the Government had possession two months ago, make clear that Paramax awarded contracts worth in excess of $100 million, without tender or a competitive bidding process, to affiliates of its U.S. based parent company, Unisys. Why has the Government approved of such an uncompetitive process that would eliminate competition and therefore eliminate potential savings to the taxpayer?

Will the Minister tell us what his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, meant when he said yesterday that the single source system is now under review by the Government? Will he tell us what prompted that review?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to check Hansard he will see that the Minister of Public Works did not say anything of the kind yesterday.

Second, the parent company in the U.S. about which the Hon. Member talks was a company responsible in formulating Paramax Electronics in Canada, which became a great success story for Montreal East, Quebec, and all of Canada with the creation of some 700 jobs. As a matter of fact, because of the subcontract being a fixed contract, nothing went outside the rules and regulations of the contract with the primary contractor, Saint John Shipbuilding, in any way, shape or form.

We on this side of the House are proud of Saint. John's Shipbuilding and proud of Paramax. So is the Canadian public.

ADVANCE PAYMENTS TO SUBCONTRACTORS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the issue today is not the Canadian frigate, the quality of the frigate, or the pride Canadians feel in a job well done. The issue is how well the Government manages taxpayers' money in a multi billion dollar contract.

The Minister has the documents in question which outline a series of advance payments made by Paramax to subcontractors in advance of any work being done or any cost being incurred by those subcontractors. Government regulations, of which the Minister is aware as Minister of Supply and Services, stipulate that such advance payments can only be made if they were first approved by the Department of Supply and Services and if the Government of Canada is credited with the interest earned on the advance moneys being paid out.

Will the Minister assure the House today that all advance payments made by Paramax have been approved in advance by his Department of Supply and Services and that all interest earned on advance money paid out was subsequently returned to the Government of Canada?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I confirm today that all contracting has been done in accordance with the rules and regulations of Supply and Services and the Government of Canada for the benefit of the taxpayers of this country. Frankly, I am getting sick and tired of irresponsible questions which lead to irresponsible headlines like this one which states: "Questionable Frigate Dealings have Cost Canadians Millions of Dollars", which is not true because this biggest contract—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

LEASE OF CAR FOR U.S. COMPANY PRESIDENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services and also pertains to the frigate contract. Even if the Minister pretends to be angry, Canadians still want answers.

According to an inter office memo, the President of Paramax in the United States is not carried on either the Paramax or SOSC payroll, two of the companies involved in the construction of the frigates.

Will the Minister responsible for the approval of the expenditures surrounding this contract explain to the House why the Government authorized the lease of a car garaged in

New York City for the U.S. President of the firm, using Canadian taxpayers' money?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: In other words, will he explain what a limousine in Manhattan has to do with building ships in Canada?

• (1425)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I have no idea, nor do I care what mode of transportation the president of a company in New York, who set up Paramax for the benefit of Canadian job security and for Canadian productivity, uses.

What I do tell the Hon. Member is that every cent of this contract from the Government of Canada to the primary contractor Saint John Shipbuilding is being utilized to the best of its capabilities. Those capabilities are one of the best in the world. In fact, this major contract is the biggest and most complex contract in Canada's history and is going to win the world championship in being on time and on budget above any other military shipbuilding company in the world. We are proud of that success.

LOBBYING EXPENSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, everyone is in favour of having contracts completed on time and providing Canadian jobs. What we want to know is did this Government act properly.

[Translation]

I have the following question for the responsible Minister. Internal documents from Paramax indicate that the company's management was very concerned about the fact that lobbyists' fees had been added to the cost of the frigate contract, which, according to them, was against Treasury Board and departmental rules. Could the Minister give the House the assurance that no lobby fees were paid by the Government of Canada in connection with this contract?

[English]

Some Hon. Members: You go home!

Mr. Boudria: You can't prevent me from asking an intelligent question.

Mr. McDermid: You wouldn't know an intelligent question if it hit you in the face.

Mr. McKenzie: Now tell us about the Bonaventure and the hydrofoil, you great contractors.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member is not listening to the answers because I already said that the subcontract is a fixed contract. So any of those expenses would obviously come out of the profit of the company and not the utilization of additional tax dollars. If we are talking about spending, I should remind the Hon. Member that he leads all the Members of Parliament in spending expenses as a Member of Parliament. Why doesn't he learn how to run a tight ship? Why doesn't the Liberal Party learn to run a tight ship—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

THE ECONOMY

INCREASE IN BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance.

[Translation]

A few minutes ago, the Bank of Canada announced an increase in the bank rate of one-third of a point. This kind of decision will have a negative impact on our exports because of its effect on the Canadian dollar. In the past, the Governments of Quebec and Ontario have taken a stand against this policy, and recently, the same kind of stand was taken in Western Canada. My question is this: why does the Government of Canada support the Bank of Canada's policy, which has a negative impact on Canada's economy?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend remembers back to November, 1981, when this country had interest rates over 20 per cent. That is why we are supporting the Bank of Canada's policy. We do not want interest rates to get out of hand here in Canada.

Let me tell the Hon. Member what has happened. Business intentions for investment are at an all-time high. Demand is very, very strong. Profits are good. Housing starts are at near record levels. We have a very, very strong economy with strong demand. We do not want this to get out of hand. So what has happened is we have all this heat running through the pipe of the Canadian economy. We do not want an explosion of huge, huge inflation and interest rates at the other end. That is why we support the Governor of the Bank of Canada.

EFFECT OF INTEREST RATES ON TAXPAYERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, spoken just like the Chairman of the Royal Bank or any of the other chartered banks. I can tell the Minister that the Premiers of all the western provinces, the Premier of Ontario, the Premier of Quebec, as well as the Manufacturers' Association, and the Association of Agricultural Producers—almost every group in every section of the country—are against the Government of Canada's policy in support of the Bank of Canada.

Since the Minister of Finance at the time of his Budget announced—

Mr. Shields: What about free trade, Ed?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has been courteous, if not his colleagues, in answering the question. I would like him to deal with a second question.

The Minister of Finance in the budget documents stated that a 1 per cent drop in interest rates reduces the charges on the Canadian debt paid by the Canadian taxpayers by $1.4 billion annually. If these interest rates continue to go up and there is a 1 per cent increase will this amount to a roughly $1.4 billion increase to the Canadian taxpayers in terms of paying charges on the Canadian debt?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question fell into two parts. First, he asked me about the regional impact of interest rates. I do not know whether the Hon. Member is suggesting that we have a monetary policy for Quebec, and another monetary policy for a different region of Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: They're all in agreement.

Mr. Hockin: What is very interesting—and I hope that the Hon. Member will listen carefully to me since I listened to his question—is that if we had in this country a monetary policy based upon southern Ontario, Oshawa, London, Toronto, and places like that, interest rates would be much higher. Instead we base monetary policy in this country on national statistics, national demand, and national supply. The interest rate policy as a result of that is more moderate than it would be if it were based on southern Ontario alone.

The second point which is important to realize is that commodity prices in this country—pulp and paper, raw fish, zinc, copper, aluminum—all of which affect the regions of Canada outside southern Ontario, are also high. Thus the whole country wants us to have a moderate interest rate policy, and that is what we have.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just acknowledged that there is a significant difference, in his opinion, between the different regions in terms of the interest rate policy that would be appropriate.

Since I have a communique from the western Premiers who have joined Premier Bourassa of Quebec—

Mr. Shields: Who all supported free trade.

Mr. Broadbent: —and Premier Peterson of Ontario in unanimously calling for a lower interest rate policy, and considering that we in the Opposition have done the same, as have manufacturers and farmers, why does the Government not do what the people of Canada want instead of what the Bank of Canada wants?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is very careful when he quotes those Premiers. When they support free trade he is not in favour of what they say.

When these Premiers ask questions about interest rates, we listen. We make sure that we have a monetary policy based for all of Canada, not just Oshawa, Toronto, or London, Ontario.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

PROPOSED BRITISH LABELLING CAMPAIGN

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the proposed resolution before the British Cabinet on labelling of fur products from Canada. An all-Party House of Commons committee reported to the House in December of 1986 stating: "Steel-toothed leghold traps are no longer used by Canadian trappers and have not been manufactured in North America for well over a decade."

The Government is having no results whatsoever in dealing with the British Cabinet. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the House last night:

> —the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs . . . , raised the matter at recent talks in London . . . I also raised the subject in the course of bilateral discussions with Sir Geoffrey Howe . . . The Prime Minister—discussed the matter during his conversations with Mrs. Thatcher, who said she wanted to obtain more information on the subject.

What more information does Margaret Thatcher need? Or is this just another example of this Government's problem in communication?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House once again the participation in the debate last night of all three political Parties.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, the discussions between the Prime Minister of Canada and the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and between the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Sir Geoffrey Howe, and other officials, have had some effect.

I would like to inform the Hon. Member that since the notification that is necessary to move this legislation in the British Parliament has not taken place, there is now a delay, a delay that we feel is important to Canada so that we can make our case once more. I believe that everyone would recognize that, rather than proceed as it could have with this piece of legislation, a delay is a good sign for Canada.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Minister will agree that if the British Cabinet passes this resolution then the next logical step would be to outlaw leather shoes, leather briefcases, or leather clothing, and certainly the consumption of meat products. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the British doing without roast beef and Yorkshire pudding, or steak and kidney pie?

If the British Government is intent on destroying the Canadian fur industry with false labels and information, is the Government prepared to tell the British that we will cut back on our business with them, and that they can take their nuclear submarine and sink it?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is concerned about leather—that includes leather lungs.

What we have to understand is that it is not only the Canadian Government that recognizes that Great Britain does business with Canada. The trappers and aboriginal people in Canada recognize that certain companies such as Marks & Spencer, Boots Drugs, and Cadbury's, do business in Canada. They are prepared to take action and ask other Canadians to join them which I, as an individual am prepared to do, as I am sure is the Hon. Member.

What one has to understand is that we cannot settle this in Canada. It has to be settled in the Parliament of Great Britain. That is why the Prime Minister has taken an interest in it, as has the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and why all Parties in the House last evening took part in a very historic debate.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TRANSMIT CANADIAN PARLIAMENT'S MESSAGE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the same Minister. Can he indicate to the House after the 21 speeches last night if his Department is prepared to carry forward the message that was delivered here last night to the British Parliament to ensure that Canadians from coast to coast will be able to have the same economy and the same jobs in the industry for years to come?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I would like to take this opportunity to compliment the Hon. Member for Timiskaming for initiating the emergency debate last night, and for his contribution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be forwarding through the Commissioner, Mr. McMurtry, the videotapes and the complete text of the debate last evening to the British Parliament which will allow them to see the feelings of the people of Canada expressed through their elected Members. Those tapes and that Hansard are to be used in public relations addressing this problem in Great Britain.

It is a positive step. The Members who took part last night should be proud of their activities.

ELIMINATION OF TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM—EFFECT ON CONSUMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Over the past couple of years Canadian consumers have paid something near the cost of production for products which contain wheat, such as pasta, bread, and other products. With the Government's announcement yesterday of the elimination of the two-price wheat program beginning April 2, consumers should see a measurable drop in the price they pay for wheat based products such as bread. What measures will the Government take to ensure that these savings are in fact passed on to the consumer?

• (1440)

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the question of the Hon. Member and, indeed, the thrust and thinking behind it.

I think it was very obvious that my colleague, in making the announcement on the two-price wheat issue yesterday, signalled the high expectations that, when phasing out of the two-price wheat system comes into effect after the next crop year, one would fully expect that the savings would be passed on and definitely be reflected in consumer prices.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE CONSUMERS WILL RECEIVE FULL BENEFIT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister responsible for Consumer Affairs. Canadian consumers know that generally prices go up and hardly ever come down. With the drop in the domestic price of wheat, we can calculate almost exactly what should be the reduction passed on to the consumer.

Would the Minister assure consumers that they will definitely receive the full benefit of the elimination of the two-price wheat program?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I have the legal and constitutional authority to do that. I can assure the Hon. Member that my Department will be watching bread prices very closely, and using whatever authorities are available to ensure that the consumer receives the full benefit of any reduction in the cost of wheat that goes into making bread.

ELIMINATION OF TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM—ONE-YEAR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Canadian wheat growers have been receiving some $280 million per year benefit from the two-price wheat system. Now that this is being cut out due to the Prime Minister's trade agreement with the United States, why will the Government only provide an adjustment program for one year when the United States is increasing its support to its producers under the Export Enhancement Program and other programs, and we are cutting out this benefit subsidy announced yesterday by the Minister of State for Grains after only one year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is not in possession of the facts when he attempts to make a connection between the phase-out of two-price wheat and the FTA.

I must make it perfectly clear that there is absolutely no connection whatsoever between the Government's decision to phase out the two-price wheat system and the FTA.

The decision was under consideration long before the discussions or negotiations began between the two countries with respect to the FTA. The decision was taken to ensure the financial viability of the Canadian domestic industry.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, surely no one believes that the Government is cutting out the two-price wheat system for any other reason than because of the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States.

What we want to know is how many other agricultural industries, for example, poultry, dairy, or the fruit and vegetable industry will be similarly destroyed? Will they only receive adjustment assistance for one year? Surely the adjustment should be for many years, if the Government is determined to destroy an industry like this, rather than cut it out after only one year.

Is this grant that the Minister announced yesterday just a cynical gimmick because there is an election coming up?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will try once again and indicate to the House that there is absolutely no connection between the phase-out of the two-price wheat system and the FTA.

In respect of the Hon. Member's other reference to the impact of the FTA on Canadian agriculture, the Hon. Member should recognize that that will have very positive effects on Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Benjamin: One supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

PUBLIC WORKS

PLAN FOR OLD PORT OF QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns the Old Port in Quebec City. Is the Minister aware of the growing opposition of the people of Quebec City to the Conservative Government's plan for privatizing a substantial part of the Old Port, and more specifically, for the sale of Pointe-à-Carcy to a developer, Rocois Construction?

Since Quebec City has been registered by UNESCO on its world heritage list, why does the Government refuse to say how it will protect the heritage character of this part of the Old Port? Why did it decide to privatize this important location before setting up a plan for the preservation and development of the Old Port?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Old Port of Québec Crown corporation called for proposals for development of the lands in question referred to by the Hon. Member. There were public hearings held over a period of months to give organizations and residents of the area the opportunity to air their views on the pros and cons of the development. After those public hearings were concluded an award was made to one of the developers.

A poll of people in the area indicated that 93 per cent of Quebecers in that area approved of the plan and the development that was eventually chosen.

[Translation]

THE COALITION—REQUEST THAT PLANNING COMMISSION BE CREATED—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister aware of the fact that a coalition has been formed of thirty organizations representing about 40,000 Quebecers, including the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste, Laval University's school of planning, the University of Montreal's planning faculty, and so forth? Is the Minister prepared to accept their request for a meeting as soon as possible? And will the Government agree to let a planning committee prepare a development plan for federal property in the Old Port before any sales to the private sector take place?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, when 40 community groups indicate that they have some reservations about a plan, obviously we will review their position to see what alternatives are available and what we might do.

I have asked my Department to explore the reasons for the opposition, and whether an adequate opportunity was given to voice their opinions. We will take another look. The Hon. Member has to bear in mind that the developer who was given the contract also has rights.

BUREAU OF REAL PROPERTY MANAGEMENT

FEDERAL LAND HOLDINGS IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. The McLaughlin Report that was released one year ago indicated that the federal Government, through its various Departments and agencies, is one of the largest land holders in Metropolitan Toronto.

I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board if one of those mysterious arms of the Treasury Board, that is, the Bureau of Real Property Management, would be prepared to release and make available some of that land in Metropolitan Toronto for badly needed housing. If so, would the Bureau also be prepared to authorize the leasing rather than the sale of that land in order to try to ensure that any housing built on that land remains affordable?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member is aware that this issue is being given serious consideration by the Bureau. The Hon. Member is also aware that our policy does permit the sale of land surplus to government needs, and that this can be used for housing, if that is the appropriate use.

The Hon. Member may be advised that such land is usually offered to municipal authorities before it is offered to individual developers. The matter is being given consideration.

IMMIGRATION

THWARTED ATTEMPT TO SMUGGLE ILLEGAL MIGRANTS FROM WEST GERMANY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration and it concerns last week's attempt to smuggle a boatload of people into Canada who were intercepted by police in West Germany.

We now learn that through investigating this incident the West German police have uncovered an elaborate human smuggling ring that includes a Canadian connection and Canadian context.

Given that the Government has already failed to act on similar operations from Portugal, Turkey, Brazil, and Lebanon, can the Minister now outline what information the Government has in its possession about this latest West German affair? What action is the Minister taking to prevent and stop the illegal and criminal activities involved in the business of human smuggling?

• (1450)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member is aware that we will soon be introducing our response to the Senate on our immigration Bill which, he will recall, in its original form contained some considerable deterrence.

This is something I take very seriously and I think the Hon. Member knows that. We will be actively pursuing all means at our disposal, both nationally and internationally, to ensure that these people are brought to justice.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister ignores the fact that these activities are contravening existing laws and our existing Criminal Code. Her provision to turn back boats will not punish or penalize those smugglers, and the Minister knows that.

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY RCMP

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): In the absence of the Solicitor General I will direct my question to the Minister of Immigration again. The West German police found that many of the 269 would-be passengers were carrying documentation and correspondence from Canadian universities, Canadian language schools, and Canadian government agencies, and that passport alteration was possibly done in this country.

In view of that will the Minister be asking her colleague, the Solicitor General, to order an RCMP investigation immediately into the illegal immigration network which is obviously operating in this country which contravenes our existing law and our existing Criminal Code in order that these culprits can be found and prosecuted at once?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have already discussed with the officials in my Department the best approach we can take to this. Clearly, it will involve investigation by other Ministers. I think the Hon. Member knows that I take this seriously. I have said that before.

We do not know that there are violations here but we do know that allegations have been made which we should explore, and we intend to bring this to a halt.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

CLOSURE OF CERTAIN DISTRIBUTION CENTRES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The National Film Board's distribution network is gradually disintegrating. Distribution centres in Chicoutimi, Rouyn-Noranda, Sudbury, Calgary, Victoria and thirteen other cities will soon be closed. Could the Minister explain the whys and wherefores of this decision?

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to have a full explanation given to the Hon. Member by the National Film Board. I would like him to understand that what is being put into place is a new system of distribution which will be electronically run and will offer much wider distribution to centres all across Canada than we presently have.

That will mean that there will be some changes to the present system, but it will not mean that there will be any diminution of the services.

PROVISION OF SERVICES IN SMALLER CENTRES

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that the Government has cut the budget of the Film Board by 15 to 20 per cent in real terms and that in fact it is imposing user fees? In fact, the Minister is so scared that she will not even table her new film distribution legislation.

Is it fair that Canadians can only watch NFB films in the larger centres now and that the people in the smaller centres like Chicoutimi, Kingston, and Sudbury are in fact deprived of the services? Is that fair? Why is the Government doing that?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I must advise the Hon. Member that, as usual, he is way out of date with things. The system is being changed because there has not been adequate distribution or possibility of using National Film Board films in the smaller centres across the country. That is what is being addressed, that is what is being changed.

When the Member says that the budget of the National Film Board has been reduced, he might take a look at the additional moneys which were just put into film and video distribution. Some $200 million was announced last month and $25 million of that will be going to the National Film Board.

MARINE TRANSPORT

WEST COAST CRUISE SHIP INDUSTRY

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. British Columbia's Alaskan cruise ship industry alleges that it is in danger of being wiped out by the imposition of duties and taxes to which it was not previously subjected. This industry brings in $70 million a year for B.C.'s economy.

Does the Minister know about what is going on out there, and is he doing anything about it?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend for his very important question. He knows that in 1987 the cruise industry in British Columbia travelling to Alaska paid no duty or taxes. I am happy to confirm that it will be paying no duty or excise taxes this year. An interdepartmental committee is examining this whole matter and we hope to put a program in place for the future as well.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

NEW CORPORATE PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. In its new corporate plan, Canada Post continues to close rural post offices, it refuses to provide door-to-door mail delivery in new urban developments, but it will continue to increase postal rates by as much as 30 per cent.

Is it true that in March 1988, the Minister recommended that his Cabinet colleagues approve this plan? Was he aware of its contents? And if so, how could he force this kind of injustice on Canadians? Will he withdraw this disastrous plan?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that plan, which was released to the public at a press conference on May 12, contained all the information about rate changes for first class letters which is the most important rate for ordinary citizens. The price is proposed to go up 1 cent next January, which is less than the rate of inflation. Therefore, in terms of constant money the price is actually going down.

The Hon. Member continues to make the false accusation that post offices will be closed. If he reads the corporate plan he will see that in fact over the course of the next five years there will be 5,000 new postal outlets opened, 2,000 of which will be in rural Canada. Therefore, they are opening new offices, not closing offices as the Hon. Member says.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, maybe the Minister doesn't know that there is a caravan travelling across Canada right now collecting letters and petitions from rural Canadians against the Post Office closing rural offices. Maybe the Minister should get acquainted with what is going on around the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPROVAL OF CORPORATE PLAN—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, whatever the Minister says, he approved the plan which increases postal rates up to 30 per cent. Will he now admit that he made a mistake in approving this corporate plan, and order Canada Post to scrap it immediately?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member obviously has not read the plan or he would not be making such silly statements. He talks about the caravan complaining about privatization. It appeared in Alberta and in Saskatchewan. A reporter talked to the people in the town of Tantallon, Saskatchewan, where they transferred the post office to the local general store. One of the residents, Miss Val Hamilton, said: "A lot of people think it's the best thing that ever happened".

The fact is that the union does not like it. In Manitoba a poll was taken in three towns where the post office had been changed. Eighty-six per cent said the service is either the same or better than it was before.

The Hon. Member should stop listening to the union leadership which is giving him false information. Talk to the people who recognize that service is getting better.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ELKS FALLS PULP MILL SPILLS

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. The Elk Falls Pulp Mill in Campbell River has recently had four major spills of green liquor and sulphuric acid. Last week more than 80 tonnes of 100 per cent caustic were pumped into the Straits of Georgia.

Will the Minister ensure a solid investigation of these spills and ensure that that company puts settling ponds and treatment ponds in place so that this will never happen again?

• (1500)

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member that the problem is serious with the most recent spill falling on the heels of previous ones that were at least as environmentally dangerous and threatening. The idea of a settling pond, for example, to prevent future spills is a worthy one. I will explore it with my scientific and environmental advisers and some of the legal people to see whether, in fact, the Minister of the Environment for the federal Government has jurisdiction to make such a requirement.

I know the employees of the mill themselves have played an exemplary leadership role here in monitoring the situation and drawing it to the attention of the public, to the Member, and through him to me. I salute them for their leadership and I will explore ways in which their committee could be given more formal recognition.

EMPLOYEES' ENVIRONMENTAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, in almost all of the pulp mills on the coast of British Columbia there are contractual requirements for recognition of environmental committees.

Will the Minister attempt to set up some formal mechanism between his Department and those environmental committees of the employees who are loyal to both the company and concerned about it but are also serious about protection of the environment? Will he look into the possibility of setting up a formal working relationship with these groups?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I think the idea is a good one. During this Environment Week, I can think of no better time for the Minister of the Environment to commit himself and the Government of Canada to working with employee groups such as the one to which the Member has made reference in his question, and I give him that commitment now.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CRISIS IN KAHNAWAKE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He is aware of the situation that now exists in Kahnawake, a situation that, I believe, was provoked by the undue use of force by persons under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General. I would like to ask the Minister the following question: Now that they have made trouble on the reserve and the population of the South Shore is caught in the middle, does the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development intend to wash his hands of the situation or will he help his provincial colleague, Mr. Savoie, who is on the reserve again today to try and settle this question? Will the Minister act responsibly and co-operate with the provincial authorities in order to clean up the mess they made?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am standing in for the Minister of National Revenue and wish to respond to the Member's question.

The Hon. Member knows that warrants were issued yesterday under the Customs Act and the RCMP advised Customs and Excise that an enforcement operation was under way on the reserve.

I understand from officials that the barricades placed in the way of traffic are in the process of being removed and that removal is expected within an hour. As well, I wish to acknowledge the good work that has been done by provincial officials in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan, a single question.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

SHIPMENTS THROUGH THUNDER BAY

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the two Transport Ministers.

Earlier this year the Canadian Wheat Board promised the Port of Thunder Bay that 7,000 grain cars a week would be rolling into our city. As of next week we will have only 2,700, resulting in lay-offs of 600 to 700 grain handlers followed, I am sure, by seafarers and people in the ports downstream.

What action will the Government take to ensure that the promise is lived up to that Thunder Bay would not be a residual port? When will we get some action to protect these jobs?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's continuing interest in the Port of Thunder Bay. While I cannot give him a precise answer today, I will certainly try to get an answer for him. I am sure though that the actual statistics are quite a bit better than the Hon. Member has suggested.

We undertake to look into the matter and I will get back to the Member as soon as I possibly can.

PRIVILEGE

CORRECTION OF COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in answers earlier today, the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Jelinek) may have, I am sure inadvertently, led the House to believe that he had information relating to my expense account as a Member of Parliament. Although you, Sir, are in possession of such documents if they exist, you know that they are confidential only to you and not to other Members of this House, even cabinet Ministers.

Perhaps the Hon. Minister could correct the record and also table the document he has, which may have something to do with the fact that I was once a Member of the Legislature. In that legislature the Government refused to provide translation services to francophone Members.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I was about to rise to speak prior to the Hon. Member. I would like to correct what I said during the exchange earlier in Question Period. When I said "Member of Parliament", I should have said that it was the former Member of the provincial Legislature who led all Members' expenses at that time. I am quite certain, Mr. Speaker, that his spending habits have not changed since then!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: At the same time I would like to table the documents from which I was quoting. They call him "Don the big spender".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, some Members on the government side may find this very funny but I do not find it amusing at all. What the Minister just did—

Mr. McDermid: I understand it.

Mr. Gauthier: Just a minute. I know why you understand it, because knowing from where you come and knowing your background you would understand the Minister's bad habits.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), as it turns out, quite properly raised a matter in which an answer given by a Minister was incorrect. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell had every right to raise the point. The Minister in turn has given an explanation. I think the Hon. Member—

Mr. Nunziata: There should be an apology.

Mr. Speaker: —for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is rising to remark on whether or not that explanation was satisfactory. I think Hon. Members ought to give him the courtesy of listening to him.

Mr. Gauthier: I thank you for your understanding, Mr. Speaker.

In this House of Parliament translations are commonplace if you are dealing with a constituency where that requirement is essential. There are many colleagues in my caucus and I know many Members on the government side who constantly, normally, and very justly use translation services. It is a fait accompli in the Parliament of Canada and that I think is a good thing.

When the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) was a Member of the provincial Legislature, there were no translation services allowed to its members. I want members on the government side to understand that. There were no translation services allowed and, therefore, dealing with a constituency which is close to 90 per cent Francophone he had to use a great deal of translation. For that, Mr. Speaker, we thank him because he rendered a good service to the constituents of his riding.

Mr. Jelinek: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the Whip of the Liberal Party is dragging this matter down to a lower level than it should have been.

Ms. Copps: You are standing on your head.

Mr. Jelinek: There is the big mouth from Hamilton East.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: You are the king of sleaze yourself.

Mr. Mazankowski: It was $8,000 for translation.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps what we need is a little bit of calm. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell has raised a complaint; it may not be a question of privilege, but it is a complaint. The Hon. Minister has responded and, while there may be some complaint the Hon. Minister ought not to have said what he said, he has explained the context in which he said it.

• (1510)

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has risen, as he certainly is entitled to do and as I think Hon. Members would expect him to do, given the fact that he is the Whip for that caucus. He has come to the defence of the spending of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell in another place and on another occasion. I think the situation has been made clear. I do not think it is to the advantage of order in this place to carry on with the discussion, so I am closing off this particular matter of order unless there is some compelling reason to continue it.

I will hear from the Hon. Minister, and then I will hear from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, if I may have the attention of the House, very calmly, I believe there is a compelling reason for me to rise again because the Whip of the Liberal Party, inadvertently I am sure, misled the House when he said that the expenses were for translation. In fact, the document which I just tabled very categorically shows that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) in that year spent some $89,000, only $8,000 of which was for translation. The rest was—

Some Hon. Members: Table it!

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that this is now becoming a debate on a lot of facts that are completely extraneous to this place, and I do not think it is in order.

[Translation]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the reason I think it is up to the Chair to decide once and for all that the libelous statements that continue to be made about my hon. friend, the Member for Glengarrry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), should stop, statements made by the Deputy Prime Minister, is that we clearly saw in this House that the Deputy Prime Minister was circulating documents listing the expenses incurred by the Hon. Member when he was a Member of the provincial legislature. I myself am a former MPP and I know that at the time, the Conservative Government of the Province of Ontario did not provide translation services, which put an additional financial burden on Members who had to make use of such services. At the time, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott-Russell represented the riding with the largest number of Francophones outside Quebec. If the Deputy Prime Minister continues to suggest, as he has done several times before, that MPPs do not have the right to declare translation expenses in provinces where services are not provided in both official languages, unlike the situation here in the House, I am sorry, but this means the Conservatives are denigrating both the excellent translation services available in this province and the province's Francophone Members, and that I cannot accept. I therefore demand an apology, not only from the Minister but also from the Deputy Prime Minister who passed these documents around several times.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think that the debate is getting well beyond the original complaint. I will hear from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, very briefly.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I would like to be helpful and put a conclusion to this. As a former Member of the Legislature and as a Member of the House, I do not apologize to anyone for having served my constituents by phoning long distance, no more than federal Members from British Columbia, according to the Public Accounts of this year, would have to apologize for having the highest travel bills. It was a fact of serving my constituents, just as it is a fact as indicated on page 12-14 of Miscellaneous Information in the Public Accounts of Canada. I am proud of having served my constituents, as I am sure the Conservative Members who have the highest expense accounts in Ottawa would be as well for serving their constituents.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the co-operation of all Hon. Members in allowing this matter to close.

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I did not realize that we were here to dissect what has been public information for a long time. It seems to me that we are not serving our constituents well with this kind of thing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be appropriate if I were to ask the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) to give the usual statement of government business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will continue the second reading debate on Bill C-129, the Air Canada privatization Bill, followed by consideration of Senate amendments to Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. If we do not finish that consideration tomorrow, we will then deal with those matters also on Monday.

For Tuesday, we are trying to put a package together which would involved Bill C-111, the National Housing Act, and would hope to get second reading on that Bill and send it to committee, followed by report and third reading stages of Bill C-93, the multiculturalism Bill. This would be followed by Bill C-131, the amendments to the National Transportation Act, and we would send that off to committee as well.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the House business question to ask a question of the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis). Apparently, there were some discussions with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and representatives of handicapped groups this past Sunday or Monday with regard to components of the Election Expenses Act.

As we know, that particular piece of legislation is in limbo right now. Apparently the Deputy Prime Minister indicated that there might be a willingness to carve out from the Bill the access components of that legislation, as well as the components dealing with opening up the number of electors who will be allowed to vote in terms of the mentally handicapped. I appreciate that the Minister of State may not be in a position to respond immediately, but I wonder if he could take that under advisement and check with the Deputy Prime Minister. We on this side of the House would be pleased to give consideration to such a proposal. It is a national week respecting special needs, so if the Minister could check on that matter, we would appreciate it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a very helpful suggestion. I will take it up with the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and see what we can do in that respect.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act and another Act in consequence thereof—Mr. McKnight—Mr. Danis in the chair.

• (1520)

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act and another Act in consequence thereof.

Clauses 1 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 10—Advice based on personal information statements, etc.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, in amendment to Clause 10 I move:

That Clause 10 of Bill C-115 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 19 to 21 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"(2) An expenditure made out of money raised pursuant to Subsection (1) must be so made under the authority of a by-law."

(b) by striking out line 31 on page 6 and substituting the following:

"Regulations not consistent with this section respecting the exercise of the"

On the first amendment, subsection 83(2) is being reworded in a positive rather than negative way for greater certainty in providing band councils the authority to expend tax revenues under a by-law.

In explanation of the second amendment, the phrase "not consistent with this section" is being added to ensure that regulations are consistent with the purposes of Section 83, which is to enable bands to pass taxation by-laws.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, I just wonder if I can get some clarification from the Parliamentary Secretary or the Minister. I thought there were two earlier amendments that were going to be dealt with, one in Clause 10 at page 5 and one in relation to page 1, the title.

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, I also want to move an amendment to Clause 10 on page 5 which is:

Indian Act

That Clause 10 of Bill C-115 be amended by striking out lines 43 and 44 on page 5 and substituting the following:

"taxation for local purposes of"

That phrase is removed by this motion and refers to by-laws subject to regulations under Subsection 83(5). The phrase is redundant since Subsection 83(6) requires that by-laws be consistent with any regulations under Subsection 83(5).

Perhaps I might reverse the order in which I moved them so they are consistent with the way we deal with Clause 10.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I have a few questions for the Minister. In some cases they are of a fairly broad nature. I waited for the right moment in the Bill to raise these questions, but in order to facilitate the proceedings this afternoon this may be as good a place as any.

First, I wonder if the Minister could give the committee an idea of how much so-called surrendered, or now, more appropriately, designated, land is affected by C-115? I can understand if the Minister does not have it, but perhaps it could be sent along at a later time. I am also interested in what potential revenue this may mean for bands and that information may be in the same category. It may need to be communicated later.

I would also like to have some information from the Minister about the position of the Government of British Columbia regarding Bill C-115. There is a lot of concern about the role of that Government and its relations with Indian people. I am wondering whether, for example, the municipalities of British Columbia have in any way lobbied the Government with respect to this legislation and what has been the effect of that lobbying endeavour on the attitude of the Government of British Columbia.

While we are talking about the province, perhaps the Minister could clarify an issue raised with me over the role of the province in taxing additionally non-Indians on surrendered lands. Is there still a taxation power retained by the province in this regard? I am sorry to throw it all at the Minister at once. I could have done it in a series of questions, but I want to move along as quickly as I can so that we can deal with other Bills related to Indian affairs.

My final question has to do with a concern raised by the Assembly of First Nations. Other chiefs have brought this to my attention as well. Once bands begin to enjoy the revenues from this taxation power being extended to them, is it likely that the Government will use this as a reason for cutting back on what may be described as normal or regular programs? I know the Minister wrote to Chief Georges Erasmus on May 16 and said on the second page, second last paragraph: "Please be assured that it is not the Government's intention to reduce financial support available to non-Indians because of their own tax-raising activities."

I am sure the Minister means what he says and it is not the Government's intention. However, knowing the record of relations between not only his Government but many Governments over a long period of time with Indian people, sometimes intentions are just not enough. I wonder if there is some way the Minister can strengthen that. Is there some kind of guarantee that First Nations are not going to see cut-backs in normal and regular programs because they have acquired this taxation power?

• (1530)

Mr. McKnight: I do not believe it would benefit anyone to provide a guarantee. All Governments need to operate on revenues and grants. Municipal Governments operate on revenues and grants.

I cannot think of a way to guarantee what would be a policy decision. I cannot see the benefit that would arise from such an action by any Government. Indeed, it would discourage Indian Governments from taking the very action that the legislation is allowing them to take, which is long overdue. It allows them to tax their own assets. I cannot see why anyone would want to reduce those revenues.

As I say, all Governments operate on a form of grants and revenues. The revenues that are provided in this case would come from Indian assets. Grants would flow as they do to other forms of government. I do not know how to assure my hon. friend that that could not happen, except that I do not believe it would because it would be totally counter-productive.

He asked if there is the ability for taxation by the province on a non-Indian resident residing on designated land. I believe the answer is yes.

I cannot give him the exact acres with respect to his first question, but there are about 100 bands that have designated lands at this time. We are undertaking to find out how much and what the usage of that land is. I cannot inform the Hon. Member of the outcome of that endeavour at this time.

With respect to how much revenue, I can talk about British Columbia where I believe 60 per cent of the designated lands are located. The revenues on those designated lands are about $5.5 million annually. It is a very small percentage of the municipal revenues in the Province of British Columbia, bearing in mind that there are some municipalities where the proportion of revenue from these lands is much higher than the average in British Columbia.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, dealing with the Government's good will in the future regarding regular or normal programs, the Minister is attempting to assure the committee that the kind of thing we mentioned is unlikely to happen, that it is counter-productive. I want very much to believe that.

Of course, the James Bay Cree discovered to their dismay that when they made a settlement with Canada in exchange for vast tracts of land that could then be utilized by the Government of Quebec and Ontario Hydro, they in fact did suffer on certain regular programs. They had to use what were described as compensation funds for community infrastructure.

The Grand Council of the Cree often reported that Indian Affairs officials in the Quebec region told them that since they had done rather well, there is only so much money and the Department had better look after somebody else.

In fact, the Tait Inquiry drew attention to the fact that in many cases they were short-circuited on regular and normal programs because they had made a tripartite agreement with Canada, Quebec and themselves.

Then there is the case in southern Alberta, the Blackfoot cattle claim, where there was an outstanding settlement. When it was decided to negotiate that claim and accept compensation moneys in exchange for cattle, and when the band dispersed those moneys among its members, they found to their dismay that the social assistance was accordingly cut back.

The Minister justified this on the basis that this was the way it was done in the province and he had to follow provincial guidelines.

My point is simply that in the past these kinds of situations have happened. It is easy to understand why bands, in attempting to improve their position, are nervous that there may be some rearguard action that will give on the one hand and take on the other. Therefore, how does one make any progress or get out of the treadmill situation?

The Minister asks me the rhetorical question: What kind of guarantees can be offered? Let me suggest to the Minister that when agreements like this are reached, what is wrong with signing a memorandum of understanding between the Government and the bands that they will in no way be jeopardized in regular or normal programs because they have gained revenue on their own designated lands through taxation?

The Minister admitted that the province will continue to have taxation powers on these designated or formerly called surrendered lands. Will the Minister elaborate and explain to the committee what is the nature of this taxation? What kind of taxation powers are they? Is it a concern of any of the chiefs that these provincial taxation powers will continue?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the Member referred to the James Bay Agreement. I draw his attention to the active involvement in the catch-up phases of construction of schools over and above the way they were scheduled, and over and above the way they were scheduled in the region of Quebec.

With respect to the Blackfoot cattle settlement, the band was informed that rather than distributing cash, if it distributed benefit in kind to its membership it would not be doing anything that will cause the Government of Canada to use the provisions of social assistance that apply to other citizens of Alberta.

That being said, the taxation of non-Indians is a concern to some of the bands and chiefs. At this time, we have been unable to find a constitutional way of removing the Province of British Columbia from exercising that opportunity.

It is a concern, but it is my understanding from my discussions with Chief Jules and other chiefs who will be involved that although it may not be perfect, they are willing to see it proceed in this manner.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, it is always good to see my cousin in the Chair. I think the Minister is aware of the Supreme Court ruling on the Nowegijick v. the Queen. Once Bill C-115 becomes law which, hopefully, if not today will be no more than a couple of days, there are three situations under which Indian employees will not be liable to pay income tax, those working for an employer based on conditionally surrendered lands and working there, or working for an employer based on conditionally surrendered lands and working off reserve, or working for an employer off the reserve but doing work on conditionally surrendered lands. I wonder if the Minister would confirm that those three situations will in fact somewhat expand the horizon and definition of not having to pay income tax in relation to Bulletin IT 62.

• (1540)

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to inform my colleague that that is accurate. It adds, I believe, to economic opportunity and again it would certainly be inconsistent with the action being taken by the House at this time to add to economic opportunity.

I should draw to the attention of my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner), that the Province of Ontario, I believe, has moved away from taxation in the area we discussed, the ability to tax non-Indians on designated land. Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta do not exercise that opportunity. Hopefully, British Columbia would be consistent with the actions taken by other provinces where conditionally designated land is found.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I have just one other question. I think the Minister may have missed it in my list at the beginning of questions. It had to do with British Columbia municipalities, some of which are currently taxing on surrendered Indian lands. In preparation for dealing with this Bill, I was in communication with the Minister's office and was advised that municipalities did have some concerns. I think it might be of interest to the House if we knew what those concerns were.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the concerns expressed are that of how to share in the costs of servicing those designated lands, how they will be arrived at, the municipal infrastructure that is presently there, how that will be compensated for. I really believe that the move we are taking today will allow us, over a period of time, to find our way through that. The establishment of the Indian Taxation Advisory Board, I believe, will be very beneficial in allowing us to step slowly to a resolution.

I believe that when municipalities can benefit, respond and co-operate beside one another, there should be the same opportunities for municipalities and designated lands to be able to co-operate in infrastructure and the use of public buildings and gathering places, those utilities that are provided around designated land and on municipalities.

It is a concern. Chief Jules has discussed that concern with some individual urban mayors in British Columbia. We have discussed it extensively with the British Columbia Urban Municipalities Association. I believe there are actions we can take once this Bill is moved to establish a process where we will all be able to learn as we progress. Chief Jules and those other chiefs who have designated land are certainly not lacking in knowledge about the concern. They and I and, I am sure, other members of this House feel it can be addressed.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Moved by Mr. Schellenberger that Clause 10 of Bill C-115 be amended by striking out lines 43 and 44 on Page 5 and substituting the following: "Taxation for local purposes of".

Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall Clause 10, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 10, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall Clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 11 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall Clause 12 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 12 agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall Clause 13 carry?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, we would ask that Clause 13 be deleted. I move that Clause 13 be deleted.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Are there questions?

Mr. Penner: Just an explanation, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Schellenberger: I ask that Clause 13 be deleted and the title be changed. It has to do with the Veterans Lands Act, which we feel was legislative housekeeping, and removing a section that really expired in 1977. The amendment to the Veterans Lands Act is not necessitated in this Bill and it is not consequential as a result. Therefore, there is no need to have it in. We would like to remove that clause and also change the title in order that it not be a part of this legislation.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Chairman, I certainly accept the Parliamentary Secretary's explanation. I think members of the committee, however, would be interested in knowing why it was determined initially that this was a consequential amendment. Why was it there in the first place?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, it was proposed by the drafting committee of the Bill as a legislative housekeeping matter, but after looking at it, it was decided we should not move at this time with that amendment. As well, Chief Jules as well has asked that we not do so, and we agree. As a result, we would like to have it deleted from the Bill.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Chairman, can I just get it clear, then? Has Section 46 of the VLA already been repealed somewhere else in 1977?

Mr. Schellenberger: It expired.

Mr. Fulton: It expired in 1977. So I take it this was an attempt to use this Bill to shotgun it out of an existing statute.

Mr. Schellenberger: The Hon. Member has answered his own question.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): That is efficiency. I would indicate to Members that a negative vote on the carrying of Clause 13 will have the effect of deleting it from the Bill.

Shall Clause 13 carry?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Clause 13 negatived.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall the title carry?

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, we would also, as a consequence of the amendment we just moved, have the title as well amended. Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-115 be amended by striking out the long title on Page 1 and substituting the following:

"An Act to amend the Indian Act (Designated Lands)"

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Is there agreement to the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall the title carry as amended?

Mr. Penner: I am sure there is a simple answer to this question. I listened with interest when the Parliamentary Secretary introduced the Bill this morning. I had the impression from what he said—unless I misunderstood him—that we would henceforth be talking about designated Indian lands, that we were going to get rid of the unfortunate phrase "surrendered lands". "Surrendered lands" and "extinguishment" is very bad vocabulary. It has been around for a long time. We were going to clean up our act and start talking in a new way. But here it comes up in the title of the Bill. Why not call it "an Act regarding designated lands"? Why call it "surrendered lands"?

• (1550)

Mr. Schellenberger: Mr. Chairman, do not ever let it be said that we are not convinced by the arguments of the Hon. Member. I would be happy to withdraw the term "surrendered" and substitute the term "designated" therefor. That seems consistent. It is a good suggestion, one which we should adopt.

Therefore, I move:

That Bill C-115 be amended by striking out the long title on page 1 and substituting the following:

"An Act to amend the Indian Act (designated lands)"

Mr. Fulton: I have one quick question, Mr. Chairman. I know that we are just about to complete committee of the whole and move on with the Bill. I am wondering whether or not the Minister might give his assurance that he will do whatever he can to make sure that this gets quickly through the other place.

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Chairman, the Hon. Member realizes that I usually only make commitments that I can keep. I will talk to my colleagues, if he will talk to his, in the other place.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall the title as amended carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Title, as amended, agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Edwards): Shall the Bill carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill reported.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that the Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act, (designated lands), as reported (with amendment) from the Committee of the Whole, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. McKnight moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Stan Schellenberger (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure today to rise in debate on this Bill, one that my constituents in the constituency of Wetaskiwin have been asking for for some time.

The bands at Hobema use their trust accounts to assist the parents of children to raise minors. This has been the practice of those bands for some time. However, in the last number of years the Auditor General has raised some questions as to the manner in which Parliament is allowing this to take place. So it is indeed a pleasure to see this legislation before us today. Once and for all we will no longer have this practice being questioned by the Auditor General and Members of Parliament as to whether or not it is in fact in order.

One of the primary goals of the Government is to return to Indian people control over their lands, over their lives and over their funds, moneys that have been gathered either through resources, through the Bill which we just finished debating, or in other business activities on the reserve. The manner in which they use those funds should well be within their jurisdiction.

Since coming to office we have moved steadily forward in this regard. We are doing so again with this legislation today. We are giving new impetus to the whole area of devolution, encouraging local decision-making and Indian participation in the development and delivery of a wide range of programs.

The Bill before us today is an important step for all Indian people. The key element of Bill C-123 is that it will provide Indian bands with an opportunity to take an active role in the release of funds to Indian minors, to parents or guardians of such minors, which is presently the sole responsibility of the Minister.

Indian people have the ability to direct their affairs and those of their children. The legislation before us today is very progressive in that sense. In fact, it has been in practice for some time.

As I have said before, serious concerns have been raised by the Auditor General concerning the way that the Department discharges its trust responsibilities. Accordingly, many of those concerns are now being addressed through a major review of the Department's plans, revenues and trust functions. As a result, this Bill, Bill C-123, deals almost exclusively with minors' trust funds.

Presently under the Indian Act all moneys derived from the sale or lease of Indian lands and resources are held in trust by the Government of Canada for use by the bands. As well, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) is authorized to direct the expenditure of those funds for the benefit of the bands concerned.

The Indian Act also authorizes him, with the consent of a band, to arrange payments to individuals or individual band members. The total amount distributed in this way cannot exceed 50 per cent of the band's capital moneys derived from the sale of surrendered lands. These lands are generally surrendered for resource exploration purposes.

Distribution payments to minors are held by the Government of Canada in individual trust accounts and released to minors when they reach the age of majority. The Department now maintains about 19,000 of these accounts worth more than $145 million. The vast majority are held on behalf of resource-rich bands in Alberta, or other bands of a resource nature in British Columbia.

One of the difficulties that I have noted over the years with respect to holding trust accounts until the age of majority, particularly in the oil-producing bands of Alberta, is that when these funds are released to a person who reaches 18 years of age there is a great feeling that these young people are not yet capable of investing, in some cases many tens of thousands of dollars, at that age. They often use that money to their personal detriment. Perhaps they buy a new car, which we are all susceptible to doing when we receive some money, and then go out on a bit of a celebration because of the windfall that comes at 18 years of age. I have spoken to the chiefs about this issue, and together we should consider a way in which this money can be sent out to the person after the age of majority, not all at once but in payments over a period of a number of years. That is an aside, but is relevant to what is happening and to this Bill.

• (1600)

In 1981, Indian bands in Alberta asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to make payments from these trust funds to parents or guardians of Indian minors to help provide for minors. A departmental directive was subsequently developed, and has been used for the last five years. Upon receipt of a band council resolution, the Department will pay up to $3,000 annually from the distribution made on behalf of minor band members directly to the parents or guardians of all such minors, in the band.

However, there are no specific provisions in the Indian Act authorizing the Minister to make payments to parents or guardians of minors, on a minor's behalf without a specific request for that money, and also establishing the need for that money. The Auditor General has suggested that the Minister is bound by provincial trust laws, common law practices and principles of trust.

Bill C-123 is designed to incorporate the basic principles of the provincial regimes governing moneys held on behalf of all minors in Canada, while still accommodating the particular needs and circumstances of Indian minors. In this manner, it strikes an important balance between ensuring that Indian communities can protect the interests of their minors, and providing for the lawful release of moneys by the Government of Canada to those who are entitled to them.

Specifically, Bill C-123 amends the Indian Act to provide the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development with express discretionary authority to make payments from a minor's trust fund to a parent or guardian for the maintenance, advancement, or benefit of the minor.

The legislation further amends the Indian Act to provide band councils with the authority to direct the Minister to pay all or part of per capita distributions owed to an Indian minor to a parent, guardian, or the council for the minor's maintenance, advancement, or other benefit. Under this amendment, the council itself may assume responsibility for distribution to a parent or guardian. The amount payable will be the lesser of $3,000, or the amount of the annual per capita distribution paid to members of the band.

Bill C-123 also amends the Indian Act to enable the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to pay all moneys owing to the minor at age of majority in a series of payments over a period of not more than three years. This is what I mentioned before, Mr. Speaker. In some cases, perhaps three years is not long enough, but it certainly is an improvement over what was allowed in the past.

A request to make payments in this way must be made in writing to the Minister by a parent, guardian, or the council of the band to which the minor belongs. This provision was included at the request of concerned Indian parents who were becoming increasingly alarmed at the tragic loss of their children's heritage through their inability to manage large sums of money at the age of majority.

These amendments are important from both a legal and a practical point of view. From a legal standpoint, they ensure that the Minister has the authority to discharge his trust responsibilities. From a practical standpoint, they ensure that at least some of the minor's trust money is available for his or her maintenance, advancement, or benefit.

The Bill also provides for one other important amendment to the Indian Act. This one is unrelated to minors' trust funds. Subsections 48(1) and 48(2) of the Indian Act will be amended to increase a surviving spouse's preferential share in the estate of an intestate from $2,000 to $75,000. This brings the Indian Act in line with the most progressive provincial legislation in this area.

Progress, fairness, and keeping commitments are what this Bill is all about. I know that all Members from all Parties are concerned about this, and hopefully this Bill can be moved along relatively quickly.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McKnight that Bill C-123, an Act to amend the Indian Act (minors' funds and surviving spouse's preferential share), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this is not an extraordinarily complicated piece of legislation, by any means. It simply clarifies the Minister's trust responsibilities for moneys held by Canada on behalf of an Indian person who has not yet reached the age of majority.

The Bill amends the Indian Act to provide the Minister with express authority, as indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary, to make payments to those who have not reached the age of majority on the request of a parent, guardian, or the band council in order that a child's maintenance and advancement or other benefit may be looked after.

Anyone tuning into this debate may wonder why it is that we are amending the Indian Act, and why it is necessary for us to do so. The answer is that in 1986 the Auditor General raised concerns about the trust accounts for Indian children held by the Government of Canada. They are called the minors' trust accounts. As the law now reads, the Minister of Indian Affairs must maintain trust accounts for Indian children until they reach the age of majority.

This is all part of what I consider to be the outdated but still lingering paternalism in this country which still characterizes the relationship between the Government of Canada and Indian people generally. I cannot imagine any other Canadian allowing such interference by the state in his or her personal financial matters and concerns.

Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that, pursuant to the Indian Oil and Gas Act, all the royalties from oil and gas reserves held by Indians and that come from Indian lands are held in trust by the federal Government on behalf of the bands concerned. I do not know what message that communicates to you or to my colleagues in the House, but to me the underlying supposition is that somehow these bands cannot, by themselves, be trusted to handle and disburse their own revenues. That flies in the face of self-determination, to which I will return in a moment.

Trust accounts for minors must be held by the Government until they reach the age of majority. There are some 14,000 such trust accounts at present, with a value of approximately $100 million. Despite the obligation to hold these moneys until the child reaches the age of maturity, it has in the past been the Department's practice to release annually around $3,000 on request for a child's education, maintenance, or benefit. That is to say, this money could be released to the child's parent or guardian.

Here comes the rub. There is fear about the Minister's liability in doing this. That is to say, the Minister might at some time in the future be sued for breach of trust by an Indian person whose trust moneys were disbursed while he or she was still a minor.

We have to be very frank in this House of Commons that what we are doing this afternoon with Bill C-123 is not something for Indian people, despite what the Parliamentary Secretary would like us to believe. What we are doing this afternoon is something to protect the Minister. We are trying to keep the Minister from being sued for breach of trust.

The Auditor General noted that in order to make these payments from a minor's trust account there really ought to be, according to the various trust acts in the provinces, a court order. Obviously, every time $3,000 was granted to a parent or guardian the Department of Indian Affairs did not want to get a court order. That would be a bureaucratic nightmare. If we do not want to go the court route, Section 52 of the Indian Act must be amended to give express authority to the Minister to advance such trust funds for the maintenance and education of Indian minors. That is what we are doing with Bill C-123. Therefore, this is a simple Bill to help out the Minister and his successors.

However, this problem of liability does not just dissipate and go away. We have transferred liability from the Minister to the band council. Band councils which make a determination that money is needed and request the disbursement of funds for a particular child themselves become liable and may find themselves at some time in a breach of trust situation.

Neither I nor my Party want to stand in the way of this Bill in any way. We will not hold it up at all. We want the Minister to have the protection he is seeking. As long as the Government of Canada has the enormous power and control, which is almost totalitarian in scope, over Indian people, a Bill like C-123 will be necessary.

It ought to be demonstrated through this legislation to Members of the House and all Canadians just how far we in Canada still are from recognizing the right to self-determination of Indian people. The failure to recognize the inherent right of aboriginal people to self-government in our Constitution continues, day after day, year after year, to compound our problems.

The sad thing is that we came so close. We almost made a breakthrough. We stood at the very edge of a major decision to complete the Canadian federation by inviting aboriginal people to come in, not as wards of the state, but as partners of our Confederation. However, at the last minute at the last of those First Ministers' Conferences there was a hesitation. I do not at all place all the blame on the present administration. There was provincial hesitation as well—hesitation and withdrawal. The political will failed. The vision which was seen for a moment faded and courage folded.

We are now at the point where a new generation of Indian leaders is rapidly losing patience. I have marveled, in the many years in which I have been involved in the House of Commons with aboriginal affairs and Indian rights, at the degree of patience which has existed among the leadership of the aboriginal communities. However, Chief Erasmus in Edmonton this week alluded to the fact that that patience is beginning to dry up, it is beginning to run out.

I raise this in the House of Commons because I think Members of Parliament from every political Party ought to be concerned. I do not believe that Chief Erasmus was threatening anyone, I do not believe he was sabre rattling. I think he was simply reporting on a reality which is becoming more and more apparent to him. The situation in Canada is deteriorating and statesmen like Georges Erasmus may not be able to control the situation unless they get co-operation and understanding from members of the administration and all Members of Parliament.

In his book written in 1976, I believe, entitled Across the Medicine Line, C. Frank Turner quotes Sitting Bull, Chief of the Sioux, who at one time explained to Inspector Walsh of the Northwest Mounted Police why he had left the United States of America to enter Canada, which he did in the year 1876. Sitting Bull said: "The grass in Canada is not stained with blood".

Members of the House may know that the civil rights activist Rap Brown once said that violence in the United States is as American as cherry pie. Well, that is not the tradition in Canada and it must never become the route to problem solving. Violent action is always, inevitably, a no-win situation for everyone. If anyone doubts that, all they need do is to look at Beirut or Belfast.

There exists in Canada today the most vital need to establish a new working relationship between aboriginal peoples and the Government of Canada. This new relationship must be established on two pillars, the first being the full recognition of aboriginal rights, including that of self-determination. The second pillar is fair, honest, and open negotiating in order to settle and resolve differences, disputes, and problems.

Until this is done we are going to go on and on tinkering with the Indian Act. We will continue to see matters like the Lubicon claim in northern Alberta mushroom into an international issue. We are going to continue to see police raids such as the one on the Kahnawake Reserve on the Mohawk people where, I am told, some 200 RCMP officers in three buses descended with loaded automatic rifles. Why? Because there is a problem there, a dispute, a misunderstanding, about the importation of cigarettes and the taxation of those cigarettes as they are sold. It seems to me that a problem like that can be resolved if reasonable people sit down around the table to try to solve it. In fact, I am advised that negotiations were in progress at Kahnawake on this matter.

I ask the House and the Government, where are we going when we send in 200 police officers with loaded automatic rifles to solve a problem like that? This is not the Canada that I thought we lived in. It seems to me when we do things like that we are on the very verge of becoming some kind of police state. It is time to call off that kind of action and proceed in a totally different way. Until we do, Mr. Speaker, there will be more and more grievances. The list will get longer and longer and the situation will become increasingly more tragic. This does not have to happen. There is a reasonable, informed, talented and capable leadership with the aboriginal communities of this country, but it does not feel that it has access to problem solving. The leadership feels that it is being manipulated, pushed around and used.

I am asking Parliament and the Government of Canada, for God's sake come to your senses and stop. What we need here in Ottawa is the kind of political leadership which is strong enough to say that the kind of paternalism that has gone on in this country for so long has to come to an end. Confrontation has to stop whether it is between police officers and band members or whether that confrontation is in a court of law. Why can matters not be resolved by way of negotiation? No finer a Canadian than the Hon. E. Davie Fulton said that the problem at Lubicon could be resolved. He gave a recipe for the resolution and he agreed to become the mediator. His recipe, his plan and volunteering to be a mediator were all rejected. The Minister decided instead to throw the whole issue into a court of law based on well defined premises laid down ahead of time by the Government of Canada. It is not the way to proceed, Mr. Speaker. It will not work. It will simply compound our problem.

I thank you, Sir, for your patience, but I want to make a plea once again. We have to begin today to establish a new working relationship with the aboriginal people of this country, a relationship between the Government of Canada and the aboriginal people, a relationship that will work, will yield understanding and goodwill, rather than have the situation that we see at present.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, as my friend just said, Bill C-123 will do what it is designed for. It is a legal bandage for the Minister and for the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs.

I had an interesting conversation earlier this week with some senior people from the Department regarding the five Bills we are dealing with today. I was not shocked but I was not amused to hear from them. I am not sure what code names they use. People who are senior in the Department use code names now. The one I am speaking of is probably "S", although I am not sure. I know he is probably watching the debate. I was not amused to learn that there is extensive, widespread law-breaking taking place right now by the Department in relation to the very issue before us today. It has been going on for many years and at great length. It was a point finally driven home, I suppose, by the Auditor General.

As is often the case in aboriginal matters in this country in recent years, matters seem to be resolved, at least in part, in the interests of Canada's first citizens by rulings by the United Nations as we saw in the Lovelace case, and ultimately by Bill C-131, which I said yesterday is like a balloon that has been heavily perforated with all kinds of legal problems.

The five Bills we have before us today I described earlier as being the good, the bad and the ugly. The ugly Bill C-122 we dealt with just before lunch. It deals with changes proposed by the Government to by-laws and the procedures affecting by-laws. This one I describe as bad. My friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) touched on some of the reasons why many Canadians and Members of Parliament consider this kind of an approach to be bad. Where is the commitment to self-government when one looks at Bill C-123? Where is the consultation? Where is the imagination in dealing with what I was advised about yesterday in terms of the total? The minors' trust is about $100 million, but if you look at the total amount being held by the Government of Canada, it is around $900 million. Where is the imagination to deal with funds of this amount? They are sitting in the Consolidated Revenue Fund drawing interest the same as a Treasury bill. There are sufficient funds to do all kinds of things in terms of leverage, banking proposals, in setting up tourist industries et cetera. Where is the imagination? There is no imagination in this Bill. All it is is a big roll of Elastoplast bandage to protect the Minister from being sued, from being in court, from having his bureaucrats charged with all kinds of offences. The officials admitted to me the day before yesterday that there is rampant law-breaking going on, and I am talking about very senior officials in the Department.

My friend from Cochrane—Superior asked, how does the Government respond to a treaty issue under negotiations at Kahnawake with the federal Government? How has it responded there? A para-military troop of 200 police officers has gone in with machine guns. This is the importation of violence. Whoever in Canada made this decision must have been watching Rambo I, Rambo II and Rambo III back to back a little too much lately. That is violence, Mr. Speaker. That is violent activity by the state against a group of peaceful people who have been operating this kind of a commercial transaction for years in full view. It is not hidden. It is not some kind of underground operation. The federal Government should hang its head in shame for the way it has been responding to this issue here in the House and outside in the last 48 hours.

The Auditor General in 1986 asked certain questions about whether or not the Minister had the authority to make payments out of trust funds for minors. The second part of this Bill is the distribution of estates, a problem that has been chronic in some cases. I do not know any other identifiable group in Canadian society that has had to put up with such things. Some payments in relation to estates have been held up for 20 years under the existing bureaucratic regime set up by the Department.

I talked earlier today about the kind of political pulp that comes out of the Minister's office every once in a while on Bills like Bills C-122, C-123 and others. It is basically propaganda trying to paint a nice face on legislation that is coming forward. Here is how it was covered by the press:

> The federal government has set out rules to ensure Indian bands, parents or guardians don't raid trust accounts set up for young native people.

That is a nice way to put it. It continues:

> Under a bill tabled in the Commons this week, a band council would have to give 14 days notice that it intends to take money out of a minor's trust account, and would have to hear any objections from band members at a general meeting.
> Withdrawals would be limited to $3,000 a year and would have to be used only for the benefit of the child, such as paying education expenses.
> Guardians who want to get at the cash would have to apply directly to the Indian Affairs minister, stating in writing how the money will benefit the minor. There would be no cash limit on the amount the Minister can approve.

What is this Parliament up to? This kind of paternalistic attitude, I suppose, is best revealed. I do not think it is a political philosophy per se, I think it is an attitude, perhaps most rampantly and repugnantly revealed in the remarks of someone who is in Cabinet in British Columbia. Stephen Rogers, when he was commenting on South Moresby, said, "Wouldn't it be wonderful, the Haidas could act as so-called living exhibits in South Moresby". There is a revelation by someone in Cabinet thinking, "Aboriginal people. They will attract tourists. We will have them as living exhibits in South Moresby". This is a living exhibit of the same kind of mentality. It is not an attempt to deal realistically with extensive sums of money that should be flowing more appropriately to settle estates of someone whose spouse passes away. Right now one can get $2,000 automatically, and here in Ontario, there is a case of a family that has been waiting 20 years for the Department to settle the estate. That is preposterous. I am not sure that this Bill will speed things up.

Let me carry on with this story:

> The accounts, for which the minister is a trustee, are created when a share of royalties from oil and gas revenues on Indian lands must be distributed to band members younger than 18 years.
> The federal spending watchdog, Auditor General Ken Dye, criticized the department in his 1986 report for automatically releasing $3,000 a year from all minors' trust accounts without the written request of the parent or guardian and regardless of need.

The Minister has been automatically releasing funds without any justification as to whether the minor needs it or not or whether it is ever spent on a hockey glove, a bus pass to get to school or the fee to join an orchestra. What is proposed here is nothing better.

If we are to really move toward self-government, and I think the will to do so exists in Canada and, if properly mobilized, even exists here in this Chamber, we should close down the Department of Indian Affairs. This Bill sets up a whole new bureaucracy. As quick as we can rub one out, another one is built, another great dream castle to deal paternalistically with those people.

Of course, this violates laws. As I said, senior bureaucrats admit that there is widespread law-breaking going on, but I do not see any charges being laid by the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) or by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). Perhaps that is the way this should have been dealt with, rather than with this legal Elastoplast.

The publication continues:

> And an 11-page legal opinion for the department by University of Victoria law professor Donovan Waters warned that the current system violates provincial trust laws and should be changed.

We did not hear from the Parliamentary Secretary or from the Minister yet whether or not that will continue to be the case. Obviously, this is a good reason why this piece of legislation should go to a legislative committee for proper hearings. To continue:

> The opinion—argued that no money should be released without evidence of need.
> The bill, an amendment to the Indian Act, aims also to cut into the backlog of cases involving the distribution of the estates of deceased natives.
> Dye's 1986 report noted long delays in the department's handling of estates, partly because of poor staff training. In Ontario alone, there were about 600 such cases awaiting settlement, some of them more than 20 years old.
> Under the proposed legislation, up to $75,000 from an estate could be automatically given to the surviving spouse. The current limit for automatic payment is $2,000.
> Departmental officials and Dye agreed in 1986 that the higher limit would reduce the estate-settlement workload.
> A spokesman for the Assembly of First Nations said the bill was put together without consulting native groups and that it barely touches the huge financial mismanagement problem at the department.
> "They got stung so they're scratching in one spot, ignoring the rash on the other side of the body," Ted Montour said Thursday.

I will not spend any more time on this Bill. I am looking forward to getting it before the legislative committee. I do not know that we can amend it in the direction of the principle that should have driven it, the principle of self-government and providing control of trust funds with those they are for. Surely that should be an underlying principle that all parliamentarians could agree on. I do not think there is a Member of this House who would agree to this kind of a Bill which would affect his or her children, grandchildren, cousins, nephews, nieces, uncles, aunts, fathers or mothers.

As I said earlier, this Bill falls into today's category of bad legislation. It is not ugly like the one with which we dealt a little earlier nor is it good like two of the ones with which we have already dealt today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

INDIAN LANDS AGREEMENT (1986) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved that Bill C-73, an Act to provide for the implementation of an agreement respecting Indian lands in Ontario, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it may be convenient at this time to ask if the House could ignore the clock. I know that one of our colleagues is anxious to leave. I would like all of my colleagues to have an opportunity to participate, and if we should by some chance go past a certain hour, I wonder if the Chair could ask Members at this time to ignore the clock for a very short time so that we could conclude these remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): The Hon. Minister has proposed that the clock be ignored, with the proviso that Private Members' Business be given the full hour. Is there unanimous consent for that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKnight: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I hope it will not be necessary, but I very much appreciate it.

Bill C-73, the Indian Lands Agreement (1986) Act, basically brings into play discussions that have gone on for several years regarding Indian lands in Ontario. It will provide a mechanism to resolve the question of control over unsold surrendered Indian lands and the royalties derived from mineral rights that are now being held.

By providing for a means to negotiate these issues, the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement could lead to the return of unsold surrendered lands to Ontario Indians and to their full entitlement to the mineral royalties on reserve lands. This will in turn contribute to the economic development in some communities and to the establishment of infrastructure that is indeed needed to support Indian Government.

The Governments of Canada and Ontario attempted to resolve a series of post-Confederation court decisions which established that title to surrendered Indian lands and the mineral resources on them be passed to the provincial Government. Among other things, these decisions cast doubt on the legality of past federal sales of surrendered Indian lands. This situation occurred in 1984, and the agreements were designed to give the federal Government the right to sell surrendered lands and to transfer the proceeds to the appropriate bands.

Despite the good intentions, the agreement was ambiguous in wording and brought into question whether it applied to lands surrendered before the agreement was signed. Moreover, under the 1924 agreement, Ontario retains 50 per cent of all mineral royalties on the lands.

As a result of this ambiguity, several million dollars in royalties are now being held in suspense accounts. Efforts have been ongoing since the late 1950s to resolve the problems that were found in the 1924 agreement. It was not until March, 1986 when the Indian Lands Agreement was approved by the Ontario tripartite council of federal and provincial Ministers and Indian association leaders that the agreement we are talking about today was finally reached.

Naturally, there are two sides to this. The 1924 agreement was ratified by Parliament and by the provincial legislature, and further legislation is required to amend the terms and conditions. On the federal side, that legislation is Bill C-73. Similar enacting legislation will have to be introduced in the Ontario Legislature.

The Indian Lands Agreement (1986) will allow the federal and Ontario Governments and individual Indian bands to negotiate specific agreements regarding the future control of the lands and minerals in question. It confirmed the federal Government's right to retain and administer land sale revenues for Indian bands.

In Ontario there are some 2.5 million acres of reserve land which has been surrendered by Indian bands. Not all of it has been sold. With the passage of this important legislation, the reserve land base of Ontario will have a potential to increase by as much as 12 per cent or 200,000 acres. We also anticipate that as part of specific agreements Ontario will relinquish its interest in existing mineral royalties which are now being held in suspense. Those royalties are worth today some $4.3 million.

The future value of mineral rights is, I think, even more important. Over the next 15 years royalties which could be worth several millions of dollars will flow to the bands in question. There is also provision for a separate agreement to ratify federal letters patent, some 33,000 of which have been issued to non-Indians for title to Indian lands. As I say, the expanded land and resource base resulting from this Bill will contribute to economic development in Ontario.

The impact will be favourable on a number of Indian bands in Ontario. Some 30 bands will eventually be involved in negotiations arising out of Bill C-73. Sixteen bands have already started the process. An example is the Nipissing Band which is negotiating agreements involving some 34,000 acres and Sarnia, which is negotiating for royalties of some $4.3 million now being held in trust, and six bands are involved in negotiations for the land at Manitoulin Island.

As we go forward we are prepared to assist Indian bands as much as possible during this negotiating process. My Department will be offering financial assistance to bands who undertake these negotiations. I would like to assure Hon. Members that this Act will in no way prejudice Indian rights in Ontario. In fact, I believe it will advance those rights by providing Indian people with a greatly enhanced opportunity for economic development. Neither will this Act affect third parties. I believe that as we look to where occupied lands cannot be returned to reserve status, other methods of compensation must be explored.

In conclusion, there are two features which have to be stressed. It is important to note that the agreement is between the Governments of Canada and Ontario, but there is strong support from most Indian bands in Ontario. I think that reflects a commitment by all three parties to resolve a long-standing issue so that the development of Indian lands and resources can proceed.

The second point is that the lands agreement is an opting-in agreement. That means the bands who do not wish to enter into any specific agreement will continue to be governed by the 1924 agreement. This is in keeping with the policy of proceeding with changes according to the timetable of Indian bands.

I want to point out that there are many bands in Ontario who are eager to proceed quickly with Bill C-73 so that they can accelerate the vital task of economic development for bands in Ontario. As we proceed we will both be able to clarify an outstanding problem and again benefit all people in Ontario by causing economic development to take place.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I would be grateful if you would recognize my friend from Skeena to speak first from this side of the House because of a flight he has to catch very quickly.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend from Cochrane—Superior and also the Minister for keeping his remarks brief so that I can get into the air to British Columbia.

Bill C-73 is supported by most groups in Ontario, so I am advised. I also understand there are some who are opposed to it and I can understand why they might well be. However, I think by having this legislation go from here to a legislative committee an opportunity will be open for the chiefs of Ontario who have requested that the legislation be studied in committee to make their views known, as will groups such as the Association of Iroquois and Allied Indians who have expressed concerns about the legislation. They will be able to air their views once it is in committee.

The one point I do not think can be passed by today is that we have to send a signal to the Legislature at Queen's Park in Toronto that they must reintroduce the parallel legislation that was before their Chamber two years ago but lapsed after the Legislature was dissolved. It has not been reintroduced. The fact we are dealing with it today in an expeditious manner may well be a sufficient signal. However, it may well be that Members participating in this debate and who are concerned about this issue will have to take additional steps to get the Government of Ontario to move to bring in the parallel legislation necessary to implement the tripartite process we are moving on today.

The problem is an old one. It started in 1867 with respect to most of the land. In fact, just 100 years ago, in 1888, there was the famed St. Catharines Milling case, which of course is part and parcel of what we are dealing with here today. It involves about 30,000 properties, if one were to look at the individual titles in Ontario with letters patent from the federal Government, but letters patent that are not really what one could describe as full title or title in fee simple. There are technical legal problems with how the land was ceded, and that is in part what we will be dealing with in Bill C-73.

About 200,000 acres are affected. Sixteen bands have expressed direct interest in proceeding and, as the Minister said, and I am sure my friend from Cochrane—Superior will restate, it is certainly our view from reading this legislation that it is an opt-in situation. Those who wish to stay outside of this process can continue to operate under the 1924 lands agreement.

It is a situation somewhat different from that in my home Province of British Columbia. We have only 14 very small treaty areas on Vancouver Island that were dealt with wisely by Governor Douglas a long time ago, and Treaty 8 in the northwest part of the province. The matter of land and a land base in Ontario is somewhat more complicated, to say the least. There is not what one could describe as the comprehensive claims settlement process that will ultimately deal with the land question of British Columbia. It is more a situation of specific claims.

Sadly, there are now almost 500 specific claims backed up in Canada, many of them here in Ontario, and only a few of them can be dealt with by the passage of Bill C-73 as it stands or as it may well be amended in the legislative committee when it goes there after today's debate. Therefore, I look forward to having this go through second reading today.

I know there are some in the country, as I said earlier, and some in Ontario, some first citizens and First Nations, who oppose this kind of approach to dealing with individual parcels of land. Certain people have a very much different relationship to land per se than do many other cultures and civilizations. However, I think at least in a small way, perhaps somewhat like Bill C-115 which we dealt with earlier today, this is a tool that will be effective and valuable to some bands and some individuals who will be able to make use of it once it passes through here and in a parallel fashion through the provincial Legislature in Ontario so we can get on with the process of returning at least those 200,000 acres which have been tied up in this rather bizarre legal problem with respect to deeding and patenting of the land.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, it should be understood by anyone observing this debate on Bill C-73 that, strictly speaking, we are not legislating anything. Through Bill C-73 we are ratifying an agreement that has already been reached. This Bill implements an agreement respecting Indian lands in Ontario. The purpose of Bill C-73 is to confirm and ratify a bilateral agreement between Canada and Ontario.

That agreement is known as the 1986 Indian Lands Agreement. That agreement is appended to the Bill as a schedule.

While the 1986 agreement came close to being ratified by the Legislature of Ontario, an election interfered and we are still waiting for the Legislature to ratify the agreement. However, we are ratifying the agreement in the House of Commons this afternoon.

The agreement to which I am referring makes it possible for three parties—Canada, Ontario and any Indian band or group of bands—to negotiate regarding certain lands and resources in Ontario.

These lands became alienated from the Indian people at some point and passed over to the Province of Ontario as a result of an earlier agreement between Canada and Ontario that was signed in 1924. This agreement passed over to the Province of Ontario complete beneficial interest in any surrendered Indian land and any federal Government control or administration of those lands seized.

Furthermore, under that 1924 agreement, Ontario was able to retain 50 per cent of all mineral royalties arising from the sale of minerals underlying those Indian lands.

It must be clear for those who follow such matters that Bill C-73 is not altering the 1924 agreement at all. It is providing for three-party negotiations regarding land and natural resources that have become an issue through this process of alienation.

The Minister has already given us the figures. We are talking about some possible 200,000 acres which could be added to the reserve land base of Ontario Indians. It may never happen, but it is possible that that much land could be at stake. As well, through these negotiations, the province may in time relinquish its interests in Indian mineral royalties, and these royalties are potentially worth many millions of dollars.

It has to be understood by the House that there is no guarantee that this land and these royalties will in fact be returned. A procedure will be put in place whereby these lands and these resources may be obtained if the negotiations are successful and if there is a settlement. However, there can be no settlement until we ratify the agreement of 1986. That is what we are doing now.

The Minister mentioned that there has already been one settlement, the Nipissing Band. As soon as the agreement is ratified they are in a position to receive some 34,000 acres. The Sarnia Band could receive something close to $5 million, which is Ontario's share of revenues from the sale of minerals underlying the Sarnia reserve.

Again, my colleague, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), and the Minister both mentioned that there are another 16 bands in Ontario who are seeking to obtain specific agreements.

I repeat that no agreement can become effective until this Parliament and the provincial Legislature of Ontario complete the ratification process.

There is some opposition to the 1986 agreement between Canada and Ontario by some Indian leaders in Ontario. There are some who object to the idea that they have to negotiate with the provincial jurisdiction regarding Indian land and mineral rights.

I want people to try to grasp a principle that is strongly held by many Indian leaders. The principle to which they hold dearly is that when they relate to the Crown, that Crown is with the federal Government and not with the provincial authorities. Therefore, many Indian leaders insist that the relationship always remain bilateral in nature and that negotiations be bilateral negotiations.

It has also come to my attention that Ontario is insisting that any renegotiation of the 1924 agreement has to be done on a quid pro quo basis. I have not been able to get more information about that, but I have carefully examined the agreement which is part of the schedule and I do not see that there.

When the Bill goes to the legislative committee we will have to look very carefully at what Ontario means when it talks about renegotiating on a quid pro quo basis. There are certain chiefs in Ontario, with whom I agree, who find it unacceptable and highly objectionable to be called upon to give up something in return for the correction of a past injustice. That would make no sense at all.

If that does somehow reside in the agreement that we are now ratifying, we will have to be sure that we take it out and make the negotiations open and clean and that no such prerequisite is established.

Bill C-73 basically provides nothing more than a legal framework to allow negotiations with the province to get under way. No Indian band is obliged to negotiate. Where negotiations do occur, leading to agreement, there is another aspect of the Bill which will have to be studied at the clause by clause stage. There is a clause that carries with it the tones of the old extinguishment problem that we have in our land claims process at the present time.

Members will want to look carefully at Clause 6 which says that all existing and future members of any band, and the council of that band and all its successors, are bound for all time by any such agreement that is negotiated. It is a very binding agreement on the band members and the band council.

Is it not strange that there is no such binding obligation imposed upon the federal or provincial Governments which enter into this agreement? The Government is insisting that this clause be there to prevent any future legal obligations, but what is there in the agreement to prevent the Government of Canada or the Government of Ontario from reneging on its obligations? There is nothing there at all.

Of course, if one wanted to write the history of Canada from the perspective of Indian people, it would be a history of reneging on agreements, of breaking promises, ignoring treaties, of backing away from obligations and trampling on rights. That is a history that is not taught in the schools. It is a history that is known by some but not widely dispersed by way of textbooks.

There is some controversy about Bill C-73 among Indian leaders in Ontario. These differences of opinion must be aired when Bill C-73 goes before the legislative committee. Perhaps in some respects we may be able to satisfy all the parties if appropriate amendments are introduced to allay concerns about the Bill and its effect. If that is the case, I ask the Minister if he would be willing to co-operate with the legislative committee if we want to make necessary changes based on the testimony we will receive? I conclude on a note about parliamentary reform. The Hon. James McGrath served this Parliament so well by establishing through his report that legislative and standing committees ought to be a check, a balance, against the powers of the executive and the administration and they ought to be able to exercise their authority based on testimony, consensus and agreement. So far these reforms are in the letter but have yet to be realized in the Parliament of Canada fully in their spirit.

SUGGESTED DEVELOPMENT OF POLICIES ON PATIENTS' RIGHTS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of participating with the provinces in the consideration and development of policies in the field of patients' rights, including the right of patients to have access to their files and the obligation for doctors and hospitals to keep patients' records for at least fifty years, and to encourage the enactment of provincial legislation on such matters.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments in support of my Motion 114 relating to the question of patients' rights to access to their medical records and their rights to have those records retained by doctors and hospitals.

The issue of patients' rights was first brought to my attention by a constituent's letter a year ago. Since then I have written to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) a number of times, and I have raised it in statements in the House of Commons. What this motion does is to urge the federal Government to work with the provinces to try to implement a scheme by which patients' rights would be recognized, including the right to have access to their files, and to have their records retained for a period of up to 50 years be enshrined in legislation.

I am sure all Members, after they have had an opportunity to think about the issue and have had a chance to look at the facts, will want to agree with the principle. I hope we will have agreement on this motion so it can be referred to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare for study. The problem, of course, is not with the principle but rather with the implementation. I think an hour is plenty of time for this House to agree on the principle involved, but it will take officials from the federal, provincial and territorial Governments many hours, indeed, days, weeks and months, to agree on some process for implementation. It is something like the federal Government trying to get 13 clocks of different brands all ticking at the same rate.

I want to say a word of appreciation to Ruth McVeigh, my research assistant, for initiative and hard work in developing this issue, for contacting the provinces and getting information from them. The need for patients to have access to their own files was shown by a letter sent by a constituent—who first raised this matter with me—to the Minister of Health in British Columbia, the Hon. Peter Dueck. I would like to read extensively from that letter. It says:

Dear Mr. Dueck:

As you may be aware there are currently actions being taken against the A.H. Robins Company due to damages caused by their I.U.D. Dalkon Shield, which was fitted in many women in Canada in the early 1970s. These damages include infections, infertility, septic abortions and deaths.

My wife was fitted with a Dalkon Shield in 1974 in Montreal, Quebec. Many of the records concerning the fitting, and subsequent hospitalization due to complications were lost or destroyed between then and 1985 when we first tried to get these records. Acquiring the hospital records that were left took several letters, phone calls, and ultimately a trip to Montreal. This proved frustrating and time consuming, but we were finally able to acquire some records while keeping costs below $100.

Recently my wife's law firm requested proof of the surgery and other treatment she had recently with her current OB/GYN here in Victoria. These treatments relate to the damages the I.U.D. caused. When she went to see her OB/GYN about getting copies of her medical records, she was informed by her OB/GYN that he would not release the records to her, and in fact would not release the records to her lawyers either without a payment of $222 plus photocopying and postal costs. Although the law firm representing her offered to pay for medical record fees from her award settlement, her OB/GYN refused to provide a copy of her records unless he was prepaid.

This has created quite a snag in our case. Neither my wife nor I can afford the kind of fees for medical records being requested. We are working with the lawyers on contingency because we cannot afford to hire a lawyer at salary. Also, there is the possibility the courts may request another copy of her medical records directly from her OB/GYN, new records may be needed to update the file at a later date if the case continues to be delayed (it has already taken 2 years), and my case is separate from my wife's, which may mean I need separate copies of the records. This could end up costing over a thousand dollars just for the file from one of her doctors. Also, after all these costs my wife still would not have a copy of the records to review for accuracy. There is a possibility that errors exist in her file, since she speaks with a strong accent . . .

There is even a greater issue at stake in this matter. As I understand it, the B.C. Medical Plan pays doctors for the time it takes them to write up the original medical record (as part of the office visit fee), the plan pays for the diagnostic lab reports and tests, the plan pays for hospital and surgical reports, and so forth. The discretionary $222 fee (plus photocopying fees) the B.C. Medical Association suggests be charged to patients for the service of sending a copy of medical records to lawyers, insurance companies or others is actually a type of double billing since most of the time involved in creating the original medical record has already been paid for by the B.C. Medical Plan. Doctors regularly provide this copying of medical records and summary sheet to other doctors as a professional courtesy, free of charge. Obviously, the time involved is not that great. My G.P., who believes patients have the right to retain copies of their medical records, often provides me with copies of my records for the cost of photocopying. This $222 charge suggested by the B.C. Medical Association to its members is a bit like going to a car mechanic to have one's car checked, paying the mechanic for the tests, and then having the mechanic tell you that if you want copies of the test results, or his opinion of what is wrong with your car you'll have to pay an extra $222.

I can understand a doctor charging a nominal fee for the time it might take to have the records photocopied or for the cover letter (hospitals typically charge between $15 and $35 for this service, and it takes much more time for the hospital to locate all the records of one patient, than it would for a private physician, since hospital records are often in several locations throughout the hospital), but the $222 fee is certainly well out of line. Also, I would think it fair that any record that would be sent to third party sources, such as courts, lawyers, insurance companies, etc. should also be provided to the patient to review for accuracy. Anyone can see and correct their confidential financial credit rating, so why not their medical record?

Lastly, I seriously question the policy of not allowing a patient a copy of their medical record, including lab test results, diagnosis and prognosis. In this mobile society, people often change doctors and locations, and medical records are often not retained beyond a few years. With the emphasis on medical history as a diagnostic tool, with slow developing environmental and occupational illnesses, with viruses which do not manifest for up to ten years, retention and access to medical record is becoming more and more important to the health of the patient. I am sure many less misdiagnoses would occur if doctors had better access to longer term medical histories.

The importance of record retention is becoming increasingly apparent. This is important in a number of ways. It is important in tracing the pattern of a single individual's illness from the time when the first symptoms appear and to show how it develops. It is important for being able to trace genetic disease.

Last fall, we had the very interesting story of the Attorney General for Oregon, David Frohnmayer whose two daughters suffer from Franconi's anaemia. Mr. Frohnmayer brought them to a small town in Nova Scotia, Musquodoboit Valley, to try to contact relatives who would have the bone marrow that might be compatible for a bone marrow transplant. It is this type of genetic tracing that can become extremely important.

Again, it is important for us to know of what disease did my grandfather died, and what is the pattern of heart disease, cancer or diabetes in my family. Individuals could find information like that extremely helpful in dealing with their own health.

It is also important for the statistical studies of disease. For example, we have a great many industrial diseases. It might be helpful if we had access to the medical records of workers in bleach plants in the pulp mills across Canada to see how that impacts upon their health. Or we could look at the way in which anti-sapstain application in lumber mills has affected health.

Statistical studies of disease are becoming increasingly important. We just have to look at the effects on children who grow up in families where there is a great deal of heavy smoking; or we can look at the effects of children who live on streets where there are heavy traffic patterns and lead impacts on the environment. There are any number of issues in which environmental concerns that have important impacts upon an individual's health could be examined statistically if these records were available.

There are those who when they hear of this problem of retention of records talk about the cost. I think that we have to balance the cost of retaining these records against the cost of having to repeat tests. We have to balance the cost of retaining records against the value of having access to knowledge that can help to reduce costly disease.

The amazing thing about this situation is that records are not being kept now. We made inquiries of the different provinces in this regard. It is astounding that there is absolutely no pattern across the country as to how long the different provinces keep records.

Newfoundland agrees that retention is worth while, but has no regulations in that regard. Prince Edward Island keeps records for 50 years, if microfilmed, 20 years following discharge or five years following death. Nova Scotia keeps records for seven years, and New Brunswick for 21 years. Quebec keeps records for five years and Ontario for ten years, and this is under review. Manitoba keeps records for 30 years. Saskatchewan is aware of the growing concern and cited cost as a problem. Alberta keeps records for ten years, and British Columbia for six years. The Yukon keeps records for 25 years, while the Northwest Territories understands the benefits of record retention but has no regulations.

In other words, in the whole field of provincial regulations in what other area would we find such a complete hodge-podge where there is absolutely no pattern whatsoever, no rhyme or reason? There is an important role here for the Minister to play. Unfortunately, when I wrote to the Minister he replied that this is under the responsibility of the provinces and territories. We know that. He stated: "Thus, it is now up to my provincial/territorial counterparts to bring the matter up for discussion. As I have stated, I will be pleased to respond to any issues or any questions they may wish to raise in this regard." In other words, the federal Government has not indicated that it is willing to take any initiative, in bringing the different provinces together on this issue but that it would be happy to discuss it if one of the provinces chose to raise it.

That is not a good enough response to a serious problem. It is a national problem, not simply a provincial one although health falls under a provincial jurisdiction. People move from one province to another. They move from Prince Edward Island to British Columbia and from Saskatchewan to the Northwest Territories and back to Quebec and so on.

There is a need for a national initiative and a national co-ordination. In addition to co-ordination the federal Government probably has a role to play in providing financial help to make this possible. It also has a role in terms of providing storage and access facilities for records after a certain period of time when it would be difficult for hospitals or individual doctors to retain them.

The modern methods of storage, retrieval and transmittal of information encourage this kind of centralized facility. Whenever we talk about centralized storage of personal records and centralized retrieval we pose some problems with regard to civil liberties. Certainly, that is true with medical records.

This is a sensitive area. Perhaps it is one of the areas that the committee should be studying. However, I suggest that the centralization of medical records does not pose a more serious question for civil liberties than does the centralized storage of income tax records and other kinds of sensitive information.

The committee should look at the experiment of some United States insurance companies which give their clients a medical record card which is kept up to date by coded material of test results and doctors' records. This card remains with the patient so that if they change doctors of if they move from one location to another their medical records go with them.

There are possibilities here. In the 20th century and the 21st century, which will soon be upon us, we have to have access to medical records in a way that our present regulations give us absolutely no guarantee of happening. I urge all Members to think about this matter. I hope that they will agree that it is important. I hope that they will agree that it is desirable that there be some national system of retaining records, that there be a recognition of the rights of patients to have access to their own records, and that they will accept this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, recently, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to take steps to provide for a uniform policy across this country on the preservation of, and access to, medical files.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, under the Canada Health Act all matters connected with medical or hospital files necessarily come under provincial jurisdiction, as do municipal files, for instance. Consequently, until the provincial ministers express an interest in the matter, the Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada cannot take steps to introduce legislation to that effect. Although in most cases, access to such documents is provided without any problems, free of charge, the fact remains that this Government is sympathetic to the difficulties encountered by some Canadians when they try to obtain access to their medical files.

Mr. Speaker, that is why our colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, is seriously considering the possibility of initiating consultations and talks with the provinces and a number of national health organizations, in order to reach a consensus on legislation concerning medical files, whether the files are kept by health professionals or by a hospital.

For instance, the matter could be submitted to the Advisory Committee on Institutional and Medical Services, whose next meeting will be held in November 1988. Mr. Speaker, as you know, the terms of reference of this Committee are to consider and discuss, at the interprovincial and federal-provincial levels, matters of interest or mutual concern relating to health services or institutional medical services, and include preparing recommendations as appropriate. Matters of interest or mutual concern may be generally understood to include any matter relating to medical files Committee members may decide to discuss.

For your information, Mr. Speaker, the Committee's membership includes senior public servants representing each of the provincial and territorial Governments and the federal Government. If the Committee should express the need for such a policy, the Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada would be willing to act in such a way as to encourage the creation of uniform policies across this country for the preservation of and access to medical files.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this is a matter that falls under provincial jurisdiction. I also wish to mention what has been done by certain provinces to deal with this problem. For instance, in 1984, the Province of Quebec adopted Bill 65 and created the Information Access Commission. Under the legislation, everyone is guaranteed the basic right to access to his own medical files. In Ontario, however, attempts to introduce amendments with the same purpose in mind were unsuccessful. That was the case in 1980, when the Province made an indepth study of this question, as reported by the Krever Commission.

On October 15, 1987, the federal Government tabled a document entitled: Access and Privacy: The Steps Ahead, its response to the Standing Committee's report on access to information and privacy protection.

Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada recognizes the fact that Canadians must have access to a wide range of information, including personal information. However, it is also absolutely necessary to protect the vital interests of Canadian citizens, so that the right balance is struck between the two. The Access to Information Act guarantees the public's right to information. By definition, this includes all medical information.

Mr. Speaker, it also means that the medical files of over two million Canadians which are now the property of the Minister of National Health and Welfare of Canada, are available to them without charge, except for the cost of photocopying the files.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands for raising this very important issue.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by congratulating the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) on his decision to bring this motion to the attention of the House. This is a very important matter.

In his motion, the Hon. Member says:

> ... the government should consider the advisability of participating with the provinces in the consideration and development of policies in the field of patients' rights, including the right of patients to have access to their files ...

He goes on to recommend that doctors and hospitals have the obligation to keep patients' records for at least fifty years, and to encourage the enactment of provincial legislation on such matters.

Mr. Speaker, I agree that this is not a federal matter as such. However, I think this House has the right to express its common wish and desire to see the provinces establish a system, as they see fit, that would provide for a uniform policy across this country with respect to the disclosure and preservation of patients' records.

Mr. Speaker, the Privacy Commissioner's Annual Report for 1984 mentioned a complaint about a medical report. This is what it says:

> An Ontario man, refused a disability pension under the Canada Pension Plan, complained to the Privacy Commissioner that he was denied access to the report which generated the refusal. The complainant had authorized Health and Welfare Canada to obtain proof of his disability from the Workers' Compensation Board. The Commission provided the report but refused to give it to the applicant when he was refused a pension.

This is an example of a Canadian who was denied access to his own medical record.

Mr. Speaker, I already had the honour and privilege to sit in the Ontario Legislative Assembly, as the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Jelinek) pointed out earlier today in this House, and as an MPP, I often had to defend cases where work accidents were overlooked, where workers had been injured on the job or in the workplace. And many times I had to call doctors and hospitals to get medical reports for my constituents from them.

Interestingly enough, it was often the constituent who went to the hospital for his or her medical record and was refused. If the MPP called, he was given the file. One wonders why! In many cases, the constituent could have defended his own case for worker's compensation if he had had access to the document in question. And I find it quite wrong that the patient should be refused what the MPP could obtain. Of course, when I as MPP had the file, we both got together around a table, the constituent and I—and I am sure that most MPPs still do—to share the information in order to better defend the accident victim's claim.

[English]

It is sometimes hard to understand why there is that reluctance on the part of the medical profession to make available to patients their medical records.

I have a newspaper article written by Mr. Arthur Schafer, the Director of the Centre for Professional and Applied Ethics at the University of Manitoba. Mr. Schafer refers to an article from The New England Journal of Medicine in which an American doctor says that there is sometimes a reluctance on the part of the medical profession to make medical records available because patients could potentially find out about mistakes made by doctors. The article reads in part:

> Dr. Hilfiker recounts, for example, how he relied upon negative results produced by the standard pregnancy test when deciding to perform a dilation in curettage—on one of his patients. Had he ordered an ultrasound examination before he scraped out her uterus, he would have discovered that she had a viable pregnancy. He relied too heavily upon one kind of test, and was insufficiently skillful in determining the size of the uterus by pelvic examination. The result of this error: "Nothing can obscure the hard reality: I ... killed their baby."

That also gives the doctor's position on abortion, one with which I concur. However, the point I am making is that it is obvious that in a case like this the doctor would not have had much to gain by giving that information to the patient.

I do not want to accuse all doctors of making it difficult for medical information or medical reports to reach patients for similar reasons, but it is, nevertheless, the view of the author of this article that there are occasions on which the medical profession is hesitant to provide information because the information in question could be detrimental to the practitioner.

I suppose there are other reasons for this as well. Sometimes medical practitioners make notes in the file to which a patient reading the note would take offence. There are occasions, of course, on which a patient may have a disease, the news of which must be broken to the patient in a specific manner.

If a patient is terminally ill the doctor may have to inform the patient of this in such a manner as to ensure that the patient will not go into an immediate depression or some other medical condition. Physicians know how to break such news although I would not, obviously. If the patient requested his or her file that very day and it was provided, the patient could be negatively affected I suppose. Therefore, I recognize that there are occasions on which a physician would have to use proper judgment and not provide information immediately.

When defending a worker at the Workers' Compensation Board I ran across a case in which a medical practitioner had indicated in the file that the claimant's difficulty in readjusting to the workforce was due to the fact that he was, in the view of the practitioner, somewhat deficient in terms of his mental ability. I imagine that had the claimant seen that, he would not have been too happy with the physician who did not have specific training in that field. This was a general practitioner, not someone who had done a thorough mental examination of the patient. Obviously, had the patient seen that, he would have been offended by the doctor describing him as suffering from mental retardation, which I believe was the actual term used in the medical note in that file.

Therefore, I realize there are circumstances which could cause medical practitioners to be reticent to have patients view their files. However, in my opinion that is not generally an excuse for not providing that information to the patient. If it is the file of the patient, in my opinion it is the patient's file.

The medical profession, together with the provinces, could probably adopt an ethical way of releasing the document. If it is sensitive at a particular time a specific delay may be invoked in certain cases for certain medical reasons, but simply to refuse to give it out either to protect the physician or to cause less expense for the physician or hospital is not satisfactory.

Having defended workers at compensation hearings in the past I know it is difficult to get that information, or at least it was in the days when I was a member of the Ontario Legislature. It was not impossible, but it was difficult, and, in my opinion, unnecessarily so.

It is my opinion that if we had a uniform system across the country established by the provinces, of course, perhaps with input and assistance by the federal Government, such a system would be helpful to injured workers and other people needing access to their medical files for whatever reason.

I am pleased to support this initiative. I do not want it to be interpreted that we intend to impose this on the provinces. That is certainly not the way I read the motion. The motion does not propose to impose it on anyone. It proposes a process of consultation and assistance to the provinces in establishing this. That is the way I see it as well. Given that that is the tone of the motion as I read it, I am happy to support it.

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) for bringing this matter to the attention of the House this afternoon. It is a very interesting and important matter and although, as the Member correctly points out in the motion, most of that with which we are dealing lies within provincial or territorial jurisdiction, it is quite properly a matter for debate in this House.

I notice that the motion is really divided into two parts, the first deals with patients' rights in general, and the second deals with access to records and a proposed standardized period of retention of records of some 50 years.

I want to address most of my remarks to the first part of the motion, one that has not really been dealt with yet. When one enters a hospital, a person undergoes a radical change in status. When you are on the outside, you are very much in control of your own affairs. You do what you want to do and when you want to do it. Once a person passes through hospital doors and is admitted, life is much different. When you are on the inside you are told when to go to sleep, when to get up, what you have to eat, when you have to eat it, what drugs you have to take and what kind of needles have to be stuck into you. It is an entirely different social situation in which you find yourself.

It has never really happened to me, but I have studied other people who have had the experience. The situation must be pretty difficult to take. Most of us do and accept it because we know that it is in our own best interests. The tendency in a hospital is to be treated like a thing or a number. Perhaps it is more akin to being treated as a child rather than an adult. But the situation is almost unavoidable. Hospital personnel try very hard and most, I am sure, do the best they possibly can to be as humane as possible to patients, but there will always be certain exceptions.

I do not know whether we can legislate in this area. We can obviously legislate things such as criminal negligence and so on, but perhaps what each and every hospital should adopt is some form of a patients' bill of rights, something that can become part of a particular hospital's policy, something with which the administration of a hospital could make sure that its staff and physicians are familiar and something the staff can keep foremost in their minds when dealing with patients. Maybe this bill of rights could be posted in a conspicuous place in several locations around a hospital for the benefit of the staff and the patients. Maybe when an accreditation committee makes its rounds periodically the presence or absence of a patients' bill of rights should be something which it could take into account when making examinations. Included in a bill of rights could be a mechanism to deal with any complaints and any recommendations patients may have.

One of the problems that we have in medicine today—it is one of the prices we pay for what is generally a good system of socialized medicine in Canada—is that you lose that "client" relationship between a patient and a doctor or a patient and a hospital because someone else is paying the bill. Sometimes you get the impression that hospitals may not be quite as nice to a patient as they should be because they know it is not the patient who is paying the bill but a third party.

The second part of the motion deals with medical records. I agree wholeheartedly with the position taken by the proposer. I have never been able to understand the reluctance to allow people to see their own medical records. It seems to me that it is an elementary right that should be available to anyone. I do not agree with the argument sometimes used that medical records are couched in technical language and people are not able to understand them. You can get legal records about yourself, but most people have difficulty reading those.

I remember many years ago trying in a provincial House to amend the law to give people access to medical records made as a result of examinations by workers' compensation physicians. We were unable to do that. I could not then and cannot now think of any reason why somebody should be refused access to records made by workers' compensation physicians. It is interesting to note that those people who opposed my proposal at that time were people generally of a socialistic leaning. I am unable to understand that either. Surely when we have dealt with access to information in general terms and we have passed access to information legislation in this House, that access should be equally applicable to medical records. Of course, the other side of the coin is privacy.

Medical records should, of course, be private. You have something of a built-in conflict between the two as we have between the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act. One might want to make some kind of distinction between medical records on the one hand and what might be described as doctors' notes on the other. I know that doctors might be reluctant to have made available hand-scribbled notes which they have made on the spur of the moment. Similarly, a Member of Parliament would have no objection to giving anybody a copy of any letter that he or she has ever written, but I do not know that I would want to hand out transcripts of notes or doodles that I have made when answering the telephone. I can understand the reluctance of certain physicians to hand out information. It might very often be wanted in connection with a malpractice suit or something like that. It seems that very often medical records are easily interchangeable between physicians and government Departments and agencies thereof, such as workers' compensation boards, and this is done with considerable ease. The only people who are not able to get in on this and not able to get copies of records are those most intimately involved, namely the patient.

With respect to the proposed 50 years suggested time for retention of records, at first blush that seems a little bit long. Fifty years is certainly longer than the working career of most physicians. In the days before the computer, if we had insisted on the retention of records for 50 years, we would have used up all doctors' offices and surgeries for the storage of paper in no time flat. With the coming of the computer it might make longer term retention a lot simpler. Certainly, as the Hon. Member pointed out, it would be very useful for medical research to have statistical studies to look into hereditary type diseases.

There is a wide variety of practices from one jurisdiction to another. Surely we can work toward a more standardized system right across Canada. I am advised of the existence of a committee called the Federal-Provincial Advisory Committee on Institutional Medical Services, which is a creature of the Conference of Deputy Ministers of Health. It would seem to me to make a good deal of sense, and that committee may have done so in the past, for that committee to take this matter under study so that eventually we could come up with a systematic national system.

• (1750)

Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, for your kind attention, and once again I thank the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands for bringing to the attention of this Chamber such an interesting topic.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to rise today in strong support of the motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). It is an interesting and quite an important proposal. It is nice to know that Members on all sides of the House support it.

The motion reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of participating with the provinces in the consideration and development of policies in the field of patients' rights, including the right of patients to have access to their files and the obligation for doctors and hospitals to keep patients' records for at least fifty years, and to encourage the enactment of provincial legislation on such matters.

I know, after talking to the Hon. Member and looking at some of his background materials, that his preparation for this motion has been very interesting. He has contacted all the different provinces and has documented the kind of recording procedures that exist at this time. I know that the Hon. Member referred to this in his remarks.

At the present time, there is no federal legislation which regulates the length of time medical records must be retained, nor is there any legislation requiring doctors or hospitals to release medical records or test results to patients. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has indicated that such legislation and regulation is in the provincial jurisdiction and it is up to his provincial territorial counterparts to bring the matter up for discussion. I rather question this position, because under the principle of medicare, the federal Government is supposed to ensure a system that is universal, with universal access and portability among provinces.

We are told that if the provinces do bring this matter up for discussion, the Minister has said that he would be pleased to respond to any issues or questions they may wish to raise in this regard. I am pleased that my colleague has been in touch with the provinces, and I hope that this will stimulate some action on the part of provincial Ministers to put this on a common agenda with the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As is the case when matters lie within provincial jurisdiction, the provinces and territories tend to respond in different ways with different approaches. On the matter of the retention of medical records, responses have varied from that of Prince Edward Island, which keeps them for 50 years if microfilmed, for 20 years following discharge or for five years following death, to those of Saskatchewan and the Northwest Territories which have no regulation to keep them at all. That seems to be a very strange policy. Of course, other provinces have varying regulations.

The other part of the problem lies with the fact that patients have no rights of access to their own medical records. I agree with the previous speaker who said that we should have a statement of patients' rights to which the medical profession and hospitals should adhere. At this time, neither doctors nor hospitals are under any obligation to share medical files with patients, and whether or not they do so is entirely up to their own judgment.

Further to the difficulties of obtaining patients' files, the cost of obtaining copies of files is also discretionary to the doctor. The B.C. Medical Association, for instance, suggests that there should be a charge of $222 for this, plus photocopying fees. This seems to be ridiculous since we do have a medicare plan which surely should be able to cover such expenses.

Mr. Manly: Double billing.

Ms. Mitchell: Double billing, as my colleague has said, quite correctly.

The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands has written to all the provincial Ministers of Health urging them to initiate discussions with the federal Minister of Health so that patients' rights will be met in a consistent manner across Canada. This is a basic principle of medicare. The Hon. Member wrote them in October of last year, and unfortunately there has been no action other than the supplying of the information to which we both referred.

I strongly concur with my colleague that it has become incumbent upon the federal Minister of Health to take the initiative to put this matter before the provinces for discussion. This Minister, repeatedly, on many different issues, has preferred to take a laissez-faire approach, sometimes deliberate and perhaps sometimes through neglect, when he should have been taking a leadership role. He has the right and the obligation to assume a leadership role in ensuring that there is a good quality of medical records, and that relates to a good quality of medical procedures across Canada.

There are some very good reasons for keeping good medical records and for providing fair and equitable access to them for all Canadians in a standardized way. Obtaining accurate medical histories is essential to moving our health care system away from its focus on curative methods only toward a more preventive approach. The Minister of National Health and Welfare himself has endorsed this direction for Canada's health care system in his document Achieving Health for All: A Framework for Health Protection.

As we know, some conditions and diseases are hereditary or genetic. Access to medical records would allow the transfer of correct information to offspring and other relatives. It also provides data for research into genetic diseases.

I understand that Canada already has better access to records for research purposes in some instances than countries which do not have a public medicare system, and that is very good. Certainly, however, longer and more consistent case histories that cover a period of a family's history would be very valuable, not only to the patient involved but to medical researchers.

Canadians are very mobile. We move between provinces and territories all the time. This is another reason for such a system, and other colleagues have mentioned this as well.

In the case of liability suits and legal matters, access to medical records can be essential to victims. An example of this is the harm done to the victims by the Dalkon Shield or Thalidomide. As well, women whose mothers took the chemical DES may be subject to developing cancer.

There are many reasons for adopting this motion, and I have many more which I do not have time to present. In view of the time limits with which we are faced, I would like to move:

> That this motion be accepted by the House.

I would like as well to call for a vote on this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret that the Chair cannot accept the motion.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be able to speak on this motion. The reality is that our time is expiring, but I would still like to say a couple of words.

As the motion before the House suggests, one important aspect of the broader issue of patients' rights relates to the patients' access to medical records. The federal Government is currently involved with native and inmate health care. However, any consideration of access to medical records at the federal level would not be complete without reference to the Privacy Act. The Privacy Act was given Royal Assent on July 7, 1982, and was proclaimed into force on July 1, 1983. The purpose of the Privacy Act is set out in Section 2 as follows:

> The purpose of this Act is to extend the present laws of Canada that protect the privacy of individuals with respect to personal information about themselves held by a government institution and that provide individuals with a right of access to such information.

• (1800)

As this important provision suggests, the Act has two basic objectives. First, it is intended to protect an individual's privacy. Second, it is intended to provide individuals with a right of access to information about themselves which is under the control of government institutions. Both these objectives are relevant to any discussion of patients' rights.

The focus of the Privacy Act is personal information. This term is defined by the Act to mean information about an identifiable individual that is recorded in any form including information relating to the medical history of the individual. Thus, it seems clear that a patient's medical records would fall within this definition as long as the patient could be identified therefrom.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—PULP MILL OUTFALLS—DIOXIN LEVELS IN CRABS/EXAMPLE SET BY SWEDISH PULP MILLS.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on May 17 I raised with the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) the question of dioxin testing around pulp mills in Canada, particularly in British Columbia. As you know, dioxins are the most dangerous substances known to humanity. They do not break down when they are released into the environment. Rather, they accumulate. Therefore, this is an extremely important question concerning our health.

In the last number of years we have become aware of the fact that our pulp mills produce dioxins. Therefore, this testing process was very important. As a result, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), and the Minister of National Health and Welfare released a press statement saying that there is no problem, nothing to worry about. I quote from the statement:

> The results of analyses of fish samples in these surveys have been evaluated by Health and Welfare officials. They have indicated that the levels of dioxins and furans found in the edible portions of fish samples are not considered to pose a health hazard to consumers.
> Relatively higher levels of dioxins and furans have been identified in a few samples of prawns and crabs, particularly in the digestive gland (hepatopancreas) of dungeness crabs, taken near pulp mills in Port Mellon, Woodfibre and Prince Rupert, British Columbia.
> Health and Welfare has recommended that further samples from these three sites be analysed to assess whether these recent findings are representative.
> The elevated levels of dioxins and furans found in the digestive gland of crabs are not unexpected as this organ concentrates ingested materials including contaminants such as dioxins and furans. Since this portion of the crab is not normally eaten, the levels found do not pose a hazard with respect to consumption of the edible portion of crabs.

Following that statement we had headlines such as "Pulp Mills Said No Threat To Fish Eaters", and "Dioxin In Fish No Threat: Govt. Test" and "Level Of Dioxin In Fish No Threat, Siddon Says". I think those headlines and the press release are belied by the facts released along with the press statement.

• (1805)

Background information points out that of three samples of oysters taken near Crofton, there were findings of 31, 12, and 14 parts per trillion respectively of dioxin in those three samples. There is a tolerance threshold of 20 parts per trillion. Therefore, one out of those three was much above that 20 part per trillion threshold, with 31 parts per trillion. They point out that there is no problem there because the area is already closed because of other forms of pollution. However, the fact is that the oysters there are at risk and people who eat them as they are, are also at risk.

Then they talk about crab hepatopancreas. Residues of 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD, that is dioxin, in the crab hepatopancreas from several different areas ranged up to 100 parts per trillion. We must recall that 20 parts per trillion is the tolerance level. However, three samples, one each from Port Mellon, Woodfibre, and Prince Rupert contained 662, 356 and 487 parts per trillion 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDD respectively.

The other less toxic dioxic congeners ranged from non detectable to 1,514 parts per trillion in crab hepatopancreas with the exception of the three samples from the above noted sites where a maximum level of 4,682 parts per trillion was observed. Residues of 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDF ranged from non detectable to 2,605 parts per trillion, except in the case of the three samples for Port Mellon, Woodfibre and Prince Rupert where residues of 2, 3, 7, 8-TCDF ranged from 18,890 parts per trillion to 24,968 parts per trillion.

That is a frightening statistic. First, we do not know what we are talking about. The Government does not have any level of equivalency for these other toxins to equate it with dioxin. Yet there are some very high levels.

The Government does not explain what the equivalency levels are because it does not have equivalency levels established. It has said that the hepatopancreas is not normally eaten, but the fact is that it is considered a delicacy by some people.

The serious nature of this issue is shown by a study of the great blue heron colony near Crofton which forages on the flats near the pulp mill. Last year, of 57 nests, not a single egg hatched. When they studied the residue of the eggs, they found that there had been a threefold increase in the level of dioxins in 1987 from 1986. This is a serious problem, and the headlines that say there is nothing to worry about do a disservice to Canadians.

The Government should take action in four areas. It should forbid all fishing in the immediate area of pulp mill outflows. There should be more rigid monitoring and enforcement of pollution control. Twenty-one out of 22 pulp mills in British Columbia are in violation of federal pollution standards but nothing was done about it.

The Government should bring in tough new regulations that will force pulp mills to reduce dioxin levels as is done in Sweden and West Germany where those levels have been cut by 80 per cent. Finally, it should encourage the production and consumption of unbleached and semi-bleached pulp products, rather than continuing this fetish with totally bleached white products that are doing us and the environment great damage.

• (1810)

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) must be congratulated for continuing in his interest in this very important environmental area with respect to the fishing industry and shellfish in particular. The class of chemical substances known as dioxins has been described in the media and elsewhere as being the most toxic chemicals known to man. Certainly, this Government does not in any way take away from that recognition. Consequently, any reports of dioxins being present in the environment, and particularly in the food supply, understandably evoke a great deal of concern in all of us and in the Government in particular.

I want to assure the House that the Government is not only concerned about dioxins and toxic chemicals in mollusks and fish in general. I believe Canada has the safest fish products anywhere in the world reaching the market-place. For instance, in Atlantic Canada every body of water used for harvesting of mollusks and other shellfish is being tested on a regular basis to ensure that the products are safe for consumption. There is a very rigorous examination and standard to ensure that the fish consumers are eating are safe. As I indicated, it is the safest food we have available to us at the present time.

However, it is important to know some facts about these substances before arriving at any conclusions about the possible hazards associated with their presence in fish and shellfish. The term "dioxin", for example, does not refer to one compound but rather to a whole family of 75 related chemical compounds. These 75 compounds are also often associated with another family or organochlorine compounds known as furans. There are an additional 135 related, yet individual, compounds in the furan family.

One might question the significance of all of this to the assessment of dioxins and furans in fish and shellfish with respect to any potential hazard to the health of the consumer. Well, Mr. Speaker, the fact is that based on the available information relating to these compounds, it is known that the toxicity of the individual members of the dioxin and furan family varies significantly. The most toxic is 2,3,7. 8-TCDD, or 2,3,7, 8-Tetrachlorodibenzo-para-dioxin for which a limit has been established under the Canadian Food and Drug Regulations of 20 parts per trillion in fish. The other dioxin and furan isomers have not yet been studied as intensively as 2,3,7, 8-TDCC, but on the basis of the available data they are considered relatively less toxic.

The reported levels of up to 25 parts per billion of these substances in shellfish relate to levels of individual furans in the digestive glands of crabs from one specific location. Such levels in the digestive glands of scavengers like crabs, taken near a waste disposal effluent pipe, are not unexpected since this organ concentrates many types of ingested substances. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, while there have been anecdotal reports of consumption of the viscera of crab, consultations with officials in the British Columbia Ministry of Health have not confirmed these reports. Clearly, it is in everyone's best interest to minimize exposure to toxic chemicals such as dioxins and furans. But let us proceed in a rational and orderly fashion based on sound information so that we can ensure that consumer products are safe for the fishery.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—CANADA PACKERS—CLOSURE OF WINNIPEG PLANT—WORKERS' UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS/DIFFERENCE IN TREATMENT OF SALARIED EMPLOYEES AND WAGE EARNERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight on an issue of fairness. When I raised this issue in the House on March 30, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration agreed that the problem was serious enough to warrant a very thorough investigation. I am talking about the closure of the Canada Packers Plant in Winnipeg.

In December of 1986, Canada Packers announced that its plant would be closing and 660 workers in the Winnipeg plant would lose their jobs by early 1988. In April 1987, a collective agreement was amended to provide allocation of separation payments to a one week period following the closure.

• (1815)

Then, on April 5, 1987, the unemployment insurance regulations changed to require that separation payments be considered earnings as per the regular week's salary, regardless of collective agreements. This would delay unemployment insurance claims by the number of weeks represented by severance pay earnings.

The reality of the situation is one-half the workers who were laid off on April 10, 1987, received their severance pay which was seen to be one week's pay. They were allowed to collect their unemployment insurance.

This year what has happened is that the rest of the plant closed. Over 300 workers were laid off. They were told that because it was after the unemployment insurance amendments had taken effect that they would not receive their severance pay as representative of one week but that it would be taken as a week for each week of salary earned. Unfortunately, it was older workers who were laid off latterly. We know it takes older workers longer to get back into the workforce. We also know that there was a number of older workers who have not been able to get back into the workforce. They are now seen as people who are not participating.

We have to take into account as well that these older workers have depended on their Canada Pension and retirement plans for their existence. Certainly, in many cases it is not a very lucrative existence after the age of 65. All the years that they do not pay into these plans is depleting them of what they will receive at age 65. The fact is that they have had to spend their severance pay at a time which could have been included as part of a retirement plan. They are now excluded from doing that.

To make the matter even more unfair, what has happened is that when the doors of the plant were closed, the salaried workers were exempted. These are workers who very often receive a much more generous settlement for all sorts of reasons, such as their salary or their status in the company. They were allowed to look at their severance pay as one week of pay after which they could collect unemployment insurance.

This gross unfairness is something that even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) addressed in Winnipeg. He said he was very concerned about it and that he wanted to look into it. He did look into it. He reviewed the situation when he was in Manitoba.

Strange as it may seem, after the Manitoba election the Prime Minister said that there was no justification for them to have an exemption. Surely there is a justification. Both groups of workers were working in the same plant. They knew at the same time that the plant would close. To add insult to injury, one group of workers which left the plant on the very same day had an exemption made for them. We are not only talking about a very unjust kind of policy. We are talking about a Government which promised to do something for older workers.

The Government announced in 1986 that it would do something for older workers. It still has not done anything. It announced that $125 million would be made available. Yet it has not implemented anything.

In my riding of Hamilton Mountain there are many older workers who have not been able to get back into the workforce. Those between the ages of 50 and 65 are certainly looking at a much reduced income in terms of pension. Over and above that they are having a very difficult time trying to find employment.

It is very clear to me, and I do not know why it is complicated for the Government, that this is a very unfair situation. We are talking about people from the very same plant who work for the same number of years and in many cases who were friends. Very often the ones who are being deprived are ones who taught others their skills. It seems clear to me that the Government should make an exception in this case and rectify the injustice which has gone on. Not only would an injustice be rectified but a great deal of comfort would be given to families which are suffering very much at this time.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. McDougall) I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

First, I want to say that I was disappointed in the way she framed her question on March 30, a question which she ended by stating that this was a case of discrimination. That is probably the easiest accusation to throw around nowadays. It does not matter what level of Government or what agency wants to provide help, benefit, or a program for any group of citizens deemed to require help. The group that is just beyond the fringe of receiving that benefit cries discrimination. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member used that word. The Act and the manner in which the Act has been applied is not discriminatory.

• (1820)

The Hon. Member comes from a rich experience of city administration and now represents a riding which is very active in union work, and union and collective agreements. It is not correct for the Hon. Member to suggest that there is a difference between salaried employees and hourly paid employed employees. If she asked a second or third question about the problem about the question she would know that it has nothing to do with whether or not they are salaried or paid by the hour, but it has everything to do with when the collective agreement was arrived at.

Ms. Dewar: They are all the same.

Mr. Friesen: No, they are not. The collective agreement for the salaried people was pre-1985. The collective agreement for the hourly workers, at least one part of it, came into force in June, 1987. That triggers an entirely different response on the basis of the Act. If the Act is applied fairly and legally for both groups, one cannot say that it is discriminatory. At the time the collective agreement was arrived at, the Act was already in force, and the workers knew that.

I wish to say to the Hon. Member that I understand exactly what she means when she talks about the distress, particularly of older workers who have a difficult time finding employment again, especially if they have been in that one location for 30 years and have perhaps not done any other type of work since they were teenagers. It is not easy. It is very difficult.

The other factor not included by the Hon. Member is when one is dealing with a collective agreement, one of the most important ingredients is seniority. I know that the Hon. Member would not want anybody to infringe on the seniority rights of the employees. When the first group of employees became unemployed or were laid off, naturally it was those who had not worked so long at the plant. Those who stayed on for another few months were the senior members.

In this case, it worked to their disadvantage in terms of re-employment. It probably would not have made much difference in terms of the space between the two periods of lay-offs. But in this case, seniority worked against the senior workers. I think the Hon. Member understands that. She has pointed that out and elaborated correctly in her remarks.

The Hon. Member also pointed out that in the legislation which was adopted in 1985 there was a factor which was used by the labour management people to balloon all of the severance pay into one week, thereby making the unemployment insurance provisions trigger more quickly. This was deemed to be an avoidance or circumventing the effect of the UI regulations. The Government is bound by that. It was changed by an amendment passed on April 5, 1987, and that amendment was passed before the next collective agreement came into force.

I understand the Hon. Member's concern for the workers, and I have some of those workers in my constituency—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that the time has expired.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

She said: Mr. Speaker, in responding to the message of the Senate with respect to Bill C-55, I want to stress the degree of scrutiny to which this Bill and Bill C-84 have been subjected. These two vital Bills, which I consider a complementary package, have been considered from every possible angle by parliamentarians, non-governmental organizations, legal experts, the media and many others. As a Government, we have encouraged the scrutiny and appreciate the efforts and sincere concerns of those who have contributed to the examination of these Bills. The process has been an example of how representatives of all Parties can contribute to the shaping of constructive and urgently needed reform. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-55 is urgently needed.

I have been aware of those who have expressed concerns about certain aspects of Bill C-84, and I will address those concerns shortly in the Government's response to the Senate's message on that Bill. The time has now come for rapid passage of these measures. Can we continue to debate the same issues over and over again knowing that the situation will only get worse if no action is taken?

[Translation]

We believe the amendments I am tabling reflect Canada's concern for the protection of the genuine refugee, ensure more consultation with knowledgeable groups, and provide greater safeguards without in any way diluting the ability of this bill to help restore order and justice to our system.

A more efficient refugee determination system, with greater emphasis on fairness and due process, can only serve to help those in genuine need of our protection and those who play by the rules.

[English]

It follows that these are the people who will suffer if we further delay the passage of legislation to restore integrity to our system. We want to be able to deal with those who really need our protection as quickly and humanely as possible. The Government believes that Bill C-55, in concert with the control initiatives of Bill C-84, can achieve the stable, fair and efficient system refugees and Canadians clearly deserve. We meet all our international obligations. Our system is linked to the recognition in Canadian law of the Geneva Convention definition of a refugee. Further, in Canada we offer a solid, practical role to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in helping us resolve refugee issues.

I want to also say a word about the many thousands of Canadians who volunteer their efforts to help refugees and who are working for the highest ideals and in the best Canadian tradition.

[Translation]

It was with the complementary nature of these Bills in mind, that many amendments were considered and approved by the Government for Bill C-55. It is our intention to soon introduce amendments to C-84.

The twin objectives of ensuring fairness in the system and curbing abuse were the raison d'être of C-55 and 84 and they remain the bottom line of this important legislation.

I will be detailing the C-55 amendments in their entirety shortly, Mr. Speaker. But I would like to mention briefly some of the more crucial changes that are under consideration by the House.

[English]

To address concerns about the status of safe third countries we are recommending the establishment of a special consultative committee. This consultative body will include non-governmental representatives with experience in refugee matters. It will advise and update the Minister concerning the establishment of the safe third country lists, and, on a regular basis, about any changes internationally that could affect safe return to a third country. We believe this is an important safeguard against possible error.

However, we will review and take into account the human rights record of countries under consideration for inclusion on the safe third country list. In addition, this provision will not be used to put people in orbit between countries, as we want assurances that the people we send to third countries will be accepted there or will have access to that country's refugee determination system.

Another area of concern was the review process as it applied to the exclusion of individuals from the determination process for security or other reasons. The Minister must now personally make the final decision on this exclusion of possible security risks.

As well, execution of the removal order has been extended from 24 to 72 hours in order to permit those being removed to retain and instruct counsel who may file for a leave application to seek judicial review. But filing an application for leave will not further stay the removal order.

We want to do everything we can to ensure fairness and equity in the legislation. We are bending over backwards to ensure no one who makes a refugee claim in Canada is ever removed to face death or torture. Where the refugee division rejects a refugee claim, the authority of the Minister and her delegates to act on humanitarian or compassionate grounds continue during the time during which any applications for leave to appeal a decision is being made. This authority will be exercised in every case.

The Government believes that the deterrent measures in Bill C-84 provide ample power to discourage the increasing abuse of our refugee determination system. These are necessary measures that will maintain the integrity of our immigration program. They will also send a message to the Canadian public and, beyond that, the Government is committed to restoring order.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the net result of these measures will be a refugee determination system better able to help those truly in need and to handle the unprecedented global pressures we are facing.

Our commitment to real refugees is strengthened by removing the opportunities for abuse by those who would exploit our system.

[English]

Over the past two years the Government has tried every administrative means at its disposal to maintain order within the existing legislative context. In May, 1986, we set a base system to fast track claims. This was followed by the control measures of February, 1987, to reduce the growth and abuse of claims, and by the imposition of visas on 10 countries, those which were the source of the most blatant abuse.

In the absence of the long-term solutions we are considering today, these measures were necessary. But it is only through the implementation of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 that we will bring about meaningful change in our determination system such as we have seen in other areas of our immigration program. This Government's commitment to genuine refugees is matched by an equal concern for the immigration program as a whole. We will not trade off refugee protection for a sound immigration process. Through extensive consultation we have revitalized our immigration program and given new direction to the crucial question of immigration levels, including refugee levels.

In 1984 landings were at historic lows. We set about to restore the program and the results have been impressive—an increase from fewer than 85,000 landings in 1984 to 150,000 in 1987.

Growth has been evident in all immigration categories. This holds true for the humanitarian stream that includes refugees, the economic stream, and the family-class stream which forms the foundation of our immigration policy. Just last week I announced new regulations expanding immigration opportunities for members of the family and assisted relative classes.

To complement these measures we have also begun to streamline immigration procedures, something long overdue. The more efficient processing that will result from these measures means better service not only for potential immigrants but for Canadians who want to bring close family members to Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many people both here and abroad are recognizing and benefiting from this new sense of direction and purpose. And I believe that all of us in this House, after months of debate, consideration and compromise, now have a responsibility to give refugee determination a similar sense of direction.

It is time we sent a message to Canadians, to immigrants, to refugees—and to those who would abuse our system—that fairness and efficiency will now define our determination process, from this day forth. This is the way to preserve our humanitarian traditions of helping those in need.

[English]

Certainly, this Bill before Parliament represents one of the most enlightened attempts anywhere in the world to create a fair and efficient refugee process that will protect the genuine refugee. Many countries are simply washing their hands of the responsibility to distinguish between the economic migrant and the legitimate refugee. In fact, some nations have moved to exclude all potential refugee claimants, false and genuine alike, before they even arrive. Border police are making executive decisions to deny entry of transportation vehicles.

The processes in these countries now have no place for review panels and lawyers. There are no representations from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, and no safeguards to prevent genuine refugees from being shuttled from country to country. We will not have that in Canada. It is not and never should be the Canadian way, or this Government's way.

Bill C-55 can and will make the distinction between those in need and those abusing the system. Bill C-84 can back it up with deterrent measures that mean something and are fair. Can there be any doubt that our attempts to rebuild a credible refugee determination program rests with the passage of this Bill and Bill C-84, legislation that is founded in our Charter of Rights and which meets our Convention obligations? Until this legislation is in place very little can be done to reduce the vulnerability of the refugee claims process. By September there will be more than 60,000 claims in the backlog. As we have seen in the last week or so there is a very real possibility of ships arriving again this summer.

How long are we as representatives of the Canadian people going to live with such an outdated system? After much discussion we now have before us legislation that can restore confidence in our system at home and abroad. It is legislation that gives all of us the chance to set a new course for refugee determination in Canada. Clearly, the time to act is now, to act quickly and in a non-partisan way to pass these Bills into law. We owe it to Canadians and to refugees who need our protection.

We occupy a unique and privileged place in the world. Canadians have always been cognizant of the political stability and of the economic stability and development that we enjoy. We have met and will continue to meet our international obligations. We shall do our part in assisting the oppressed, the tortured, and the persecuted, of whom there are far too many on this planet. We shall not shirk from our responsibilities, and we shall offer protection to those who are the subject of inhumanity.

Therefore, I move:

That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House agrees with amendments 6(b) and 12(c) made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, but disagrees with amendments 1(a), 2, 5, 6(a), 7, 8, 9(a), (b), and (c), 10, and 12(a) and (b), because this House believes they contradict the principles of the Bill for the following reasons.

Amendment 1(a) would imply that the right to counsel of choice would no longer be subject to the requirement that the adjudicator assign counsel at the expense of the Minister where counsel of choice is not reasonably available; arguments over this erroneous implication could be used to delay the refugee determination process.

Amendment 2 would result in the recommencement of every hearing where the claimant indicates a fear of return only after substantive evidence has been heard, providing an opportunity for abuse by those who lack a credible basis for a claim or who would seek to delay or avoid removal by frustrating the "safe" third country mechanism.

Amendment 5 would introduce subjective elements which cannot be easily proven or rejected, thus opening a major loophole in the "safe" third country mechanism.

Amendment 6(a) arises out of Senate amendment 9(a), but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 9(a), as set out below.

Amendment 7 would impair the effective elaboration of the "safe" third country list without improving the quality of the protection available to the claimant.

Amendment 8 would extend the scope and nature of refugee division hearings, significantly increasing the workload of the division and thereby delaying decision-making for all claimants.

Amendments 9(b) and (c) arise out of Senate amendment 9(a), but are not consistent with House amendment to Senate amendment 9(a), as set out below.

Amendment 10 would change a fundamental principle that there be one high quality hearing on the merits of the claim by competent decision-makers, which hearing represents a proper balance between fairness and efficiency.

Amendment 12(a) would frustrate the selection of the best possible candidates, including present Members, for each division of the new Board.

Amendment 12(b) is consequential on amendment 12(a), which is not acceptable, and is therefore inappropriate.

And, that this House agrees with the principle set out in amendments 1(b), 3, 4, and 11, but would propose the following amendments:

Amendment 1(b) be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out line 25, on page 8, and substitute the following:

Ready and able to proceed within a reasonable period of time, unless the"

Amendment 3 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 26 to 31 on page 14, and substitute the following:

ant's habitual residence,

(I) that has been prescribed as a country that complies with Article 33 of the Convention either universally or with respect to persons of a specified class of persons of which the claimant is a member, and

(II) whose laws or practices provide that all claimants or claimants of a particular class of persons of which the claimant is a member would be allowed to return to that country, if removed from Canada, or would have the right to have the merits of their claims determined in that country;"

Amendment 4 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 3 to 15, and on page 15, and substitute the following:

19(1)(j),

(II) a person

(a) described in paragraph 19(1)(c), or

(b) who has been convicted in Canada of an offence under any Act of Parliament for which a term of imprisonment of ten years or more may be imposed who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada, or

(III) a person described in paragraph (1)(e), (f), or (g), or 27(1)(c) or (2)(c) and the Minister is of the opinion that it would be contrary to the public interest to have the claim determined under this Act; or"

Amendment 9(a) be amended to read as follows:

"Add, immediately after line 13, on page 43, the following:

(1.1) Subsection (1) does not apply with respect to a decision of a visa officer on an application under section 9, 10, 25 or 79 or to any other matter arising thereunder with respect to an application to a visa officer".

Amendment 11 be amended to read as follows:

"Strike out lines 25 to 27, on page 55, and substitute the following:

tion, the country's policies and practices with respect to Convention refugee claims and the country's record with respect to human rights;"

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise on behalf of the Liberal caucus to respond to the Minister's response to the recent Senate report on Bill C-55, a Bill that will reform and establish a new refugee determination system for our country.

If one was to quickly analyse the words spoken by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) and the documents accompanying her remarks that she will no doubt utilize at her press conference later, I think the Minister is involving herself in a bit of legislative magic. To a certain degree it is a game of smoke and mirrors, and an attempt to parade for the Canadian public, and obviously the media, a number of the more minor amendments that she had agreed with in the Senate in terms of tinkering with words here and there, clarifying a number of phrases, and attempting to pass these off as major amendments to the Bill. Through that, she is attempting to convince Canadians that, under her leadership, Bill C-55 is indeed a very different piece of legislation from that of her predecessors, and there were many.

I would submit, with all due respect for the Minister and the House, that essentially she is peddling the same old baggage that was brought and carried by her predecessors. Major principles in Bill C-55 were unanimously objected to by groups and witnesses across the country, by legal experts who told the Government time and again that these measures will encourage every lawyer worth his or her salt to challenge them in the courts under the provisions of the Charter as soon as they become law, and that this ran contrary to the report some years ago of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration that enjoyed support from all three political parties and the members thereof. Yet the Minister is attempting to say to those various parties and interest groups that we are looking at a different piece of legislation, a piece of legislation that has corrected its flaws, that has protected itself from possible charter challenges which, if they are successful, will paralyse this policy and this program, and then the haemorrhaging of public confidence will begin again. She is trying to pass this off as a very different Bill, but it is no different from what was introduced and debated at second reading, from what was debated in committee, from what was debated at third reading, and from what was studied by the committee in the other place.

There have been numerous objections to the way in which Bill C-55 establishes the refugee determination system in this country. The first problem dealt with the question of pre-screening. The Government was to establish a new refugee board that would offer claimants an opportunity to give their side of the story and provide proof and credible evidence that would substantiate their refugee claim. That exists, and the refugee board will be in place to offer a legitimate opportunity to those claimants to come forward.

However, the Government has built a very high wall around that refugee board and called it the pre-screening stage. This stage will involve a refugee board member and an immigration adjudicator who will essentially try to stop and return as many individuals from where they came, without allowing them to have access to the new refugee board, whose purpose was to listen and judge the cases it received.

The pre-screening stage is a significant barrier that will impede full accessibility to the new refugee board which the Government is promoting throughout the country. Those two officers will have no discretion to make decisions because that pre-screening stage will be rooted in the whole safe country concept.

Those two officers will essentially ask refugee claimants for only part of the story. They will only want to hear something of the refugee claim so that they can make a determination as to whether that claimant can legitimately proceed to the next step, the refugee board.

The Government has been complaining that it wants to minimize the bureaucracy, red tape and processing time in the system. However, it is actually adding to that bureaucracy when it has two pre-screening officers conduct a mini hearing of its own before a possible real hearing before the refugee board.

The more important dilemma for the refugee at that stage is that the claimant will be asked to only give part of the story. If you are a legitimate refugee who is escaping persecution, torture or some other form of intimidation, you will want to provide your whole story to the refugee board. Where do you stop when trying to convince the officers to allow you to go to the next stage and be accepted by the refugee board? The pre-screening stage is a clear attempt to minimize the number of people who would be eligible to come before the new refugee board.

It would be like a hospital trying to maximize its efficiency by minimizing the number of patients coming into the hospital. It does not matter whether the patients are ill or in need of emergency health care, the hospital is trying to minimize the number of patients to maximize efficiency. Obviously that would be insane because hospitals exist to care for those who need health care, regardless of the number or the services offered by the hospital.

Similarly, if the Government is to establish a refugee board, let the refugee board take those claimants, adjudicate those hearings and render a decision. The Government is taking one step forward and three steps back. It is looking for acclaim, applause and accolades for introducing a new refugee board while Canadians may not be aware of this pre-screening stage that forms a huge barrier to the refugee board.

The second principle still contained in the legislation is the safe third country concept. Again, the Government is trying to wash its hands of the claims of these refugees, and wash its hands of the responsibility that this country has upheld for many years and for which it has earned us a proud record and tradition throughout the world as a leader in trying to galvanize an international solution to an international problem.

Canada won the Nansen Medal for a good reason. It is because of our long years of work and toil. Those reforms and those achievements were not made easily. They were the result of commitment, integrity, of compassion and long struggles to try to mould a progressive stance on an emotional issue that is causing increasing human misery throughout the globe.

Just as with the pre-screening stage, the Government's principle of a safe third country is another attempt to minimize the number of people coming into the system. According to this principle, those coming from a country that the Government deems to be safe will be returned there. Yet the Government has made very little effort to define what is a safe third country.

It would also have Cabinet make that decision. The Cabinet must make major decisions daily dealing with domestic policies and challenges. Now it will have to try to determine a list of safe third countries. How will the Cabinet establish that list? What will be the issues to determine what country is on the list and what country is left off?

We had an exceptional example of the fallacy of the safe third country concept being in the hands of Cabinet. The three member panel of the refugee advisory committee unanimously endorsed the fact that a refugee claimant, Santokh Singh, was a refugee. He had security clearance from both the RCMP and CSIS. It was made public a few weeks ago that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), out of the blue, wrote two confidential letters to the previous Minister of Employment and Immigration suggesting that this individual should not receive a refugee claim as recommended unanimously by the refugee advisory committee. The former Minister suddenly established a new committee and reversed the decision.

As of today we are still trying to find out the legitimate causes that would substantiate the intervention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That is a classic example of what happens when a Minister who is critically interested in the case can interfere in the procedures of what we are told is an impartial institution.

One would think that part of the reasons for the actions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, as he said in the letters, was the fact that India was putting continued pressure on Canadian authorities to have this individual removed. Despite the fact the Indian Affairs Minister from India and the Indian High Commissioner for Canada then denied that they had put pressures or wanted this man returned or wanted him refused refugee status, there is obviously an appearance and a perception that political and diplomatic pressure was brought to bear on our External Affairs Minister to involve himself and intervene on the Government's behalf to the detriment of the individual claimant. That is a test case of how this Conservative Cabinet will probably react when devising the so-called safe country list.

What will be the Government's priority? Will it be the individual merits of those coming from so-called countries which the Government wants to describe as safe? Will the Cabinet be concerned more with the political pressures that are brought to bear in the equation, the diplomatic relationships and pressures that we have with other countries? What about our trade with various countries and the political ramifications of putting countries that, while friendly and are allies to Canada, may be erring seriously in the refugee program?

The previous Ministers of Immigration never really answered these questions. They never really answered the question, when posed to them by myself or other groups in the House or in committee, that if the United States of America because of its political policies and stance in Central America discriminates against Central American refugees and deports them, would that mean a Central American refugee coming to our system and being asked by our Government where he came from—the answer being the United States—that the Canadian Government would decide the United States is not a safe country?

What political pressures would be brought to bear on the Conservative administration that boasts about its special relationships with Uncle Ronnie in the United States? What would be the consequences of leaving the United States of America off a so-called safe country list? I do not believe that this administration would leave the United States off a safe country list. Yet the question must be asked: "Is the United States a safe country vis-à-vis refugees coming from Central America?" If one were to pursue a truthful answer with both Canadians and Americans, Americans who testified at our committee, the answer would be a resounding "no".

Would this Government leave Great Britain off the safe country list? Probably not. Britain is a strong ally and friend. There are bonds of mutual respect and admiration with which I concur, yet when we break that relationship and just look at the refugee policy, Great Britain is indiscriminately deporting Tamil refugees. What happens when a refugee claimant who is a Tamil applies to our refugee board and is asked from which country did he come to which he answers Great Britain? Will Great Britain be left off a safe country list? The answer would be "of course not". What will constitute a safe country, Mr. Speaker?

The suggestion was made to consider what happens if the Government really wants to persist and hold dear to its safe country concept. This concept I think is flawed because the new Minister of Employment and Immigration should contemplate what happens if every other country defines and establishes a safe country list equally as flawed as this one. Every country will have a safe country list and every country will be safe and then every country will be sending refugees back and forth like a ball in a pinball machine. That is the domino effect of the policy. It encourages other countries to do likewise. Other countries up until now have been saying that Canada has shown leadership in this area. I know, as a Member of Parliament and as a Canadian that Canada, cannot nor should it accept every refugee claim. That literally would be impossible.

I do not accept the premise that Canada should be playing the Pontius Pilate of the world in trying to cleanse its hands of its responsibilities, shoving the problem somewhere else, only to have other countries do the same thing. What happens then to refugees around the world? What happens to those individuals? What happens when those people become desperate? They do not try to get in through the front door, they try to break in through the back door, which is precisely an action we want to stop. In a very contradictory way, this type of legislation, because it is more restrictive and more inflexible, will push and motivate people to go through the back door. It will encourage profiteers of human misery to continue to market their business of illegal human smuggling from different parts of the globe.

An attempt was made in West Germany, with no response from this Government. The same situation occurred in Brazil, Lebanon and Portugal and again there was no response from the Government. Then we hear that the answer to the problem is a safe country concept. It is not because that argument is intellectually and factually dishonest. We in the Opposition said: "Look, the Government has an absolute majority. In the end if it really wants to push something against the better judgment of the House of Commons and Canadians, the Government will probably succeed". At least an attempt was made at the eleventh hour to ask why the Cabinet would not simply make an advisory list of safe countries it deems safe and allow the new refugee board and process to determine in the end which countries are safe for refugee claimants. That request was refused.

At the eleventh hour we also suggested passing the opportunity and authority to create a safe country list with the new refugee board. That request was refused. We also attempted to change wording and suggested that before allowing someone to go on a safe country concept list, to allow for an assurance and a guarantee that that person will be permitted not only to enter but to enter the process of refugee determination. You would not be sending a person into orbit. There would be a guarantee that that so-called safe country would accept an individual and allow him or her to have a refugee determination. But that request was refused.

That safe country provision is onerous for many individuals and groups. I believe it is onerous for those around the globe who have worked tirelessly for progressive refugee legislation. That principle is still in the Bill today despite the Minister trying to parade a Bill that is very different from the one crafted by her predecessors in Cabinet.

There is a third principle, and these are only principles that are basically the major areas of concern. There are other individual concerns, but I am trying to highlight in the time available I have before Question Period some of the more major ones. The third principle is the whole question of an appeal. There again the Government refused the amendments of the other place, the Senate, to try to make the appeal system stronger and more foolproof. Why did the Senate attempt that?

On the advice of legal experts and organizations across the country, the Senate tried to help the Government recognize that when an individual goes before a refugee board, if he or she is a legitimate refugee, then we have to face the fact that the decision can dictate life or death. If you were a true refugee, Mr. Speaker, and you were fleeing from potential death, murder, torture, imprisonment or intimidation, you would want a full opportunity to defend yourself. If an error is made for some reason at some stage within the process, we need an appeal system as a safety valve that can recognize an error and rectify it so we do not have to pay for that mistake with a human life, that of a legitimate refugee who is sent back to his homeland to face that horrible music.

The current legislation suggests that an appeal be made to the Federal Court of Canada on leave. This means that the appeal is not automatic, it can only be appealed if the Federal Court agrees. Up until now, only 2 per cent of all cases that have been appealed to the Federal Court have been successful. Ninety-eight per cent of the cases are simply refused.

Moreover, the Federal Court is the wrong body to deal with refugee matters. Legal experts have told us that that is not the proper, knowledgeable body to judge such an appeal. As well, the Federal Court will only deal with points of law. It will not deal with points of fact or with evidence of the refugee claim. The Federal Court will only ask if the process was correct, fair and followed the proper course.

The Federal Court will not entertain points of fact, points of evidence or new evidence that the refugee or his or her lawyer would want to introduce in order to demonstrate an error. In effect, we have a very weak appeal system that will attempt to correct possible errors. This would not matter so much if the decisions involved did not have life or death consequences, but these kinds of decisions do.

Therefore, an attempt was made to convince the Government that the whole system, because it is predicated on human error, is only as strong as the appeal system. If the appeal system is terribly weak, which it is, and does not provide an opportunity to hear points of fact and new evidence and can only be used on leave, then it really casts a shadow over the integrity of the entire process.

That argument was made to the Government. It was not made in an attempt to delay the process. Who wants to delay the process? This Party does not want to delay the process. I am sure Members of the New Democratic Party do not, and no government Member wants the process to be delayed. Members from all sides would agree, I think, on the principle that when dealing with life or death decisions, we should ensure that we err on the side of caution rather than later on having to be sorry, having to say that if we had a stronger appeal system, such a thing might not have happened to such a person. Those things have already happened, and this has been documented, because of the failure of the Federal Court procedure's attempts to deal honestly and fairly with refugee claims.

The pre-screening provisions in Bill C-55 started a debate in Canada, and those provisions are still there. The safe third country concept which triggered a national debate is still there. The problems involved in a weak appeal system, which again triggered a national debate, are still there. Therefore, I must ask myself what this Minister has done to prove that this piece of legislation is now a compromise between the Senate and the House of Commons and that refugee groups will now be pleased with it. That is not true.

There have been some changes, I am not denying that, but I challenge the Minister to show that she has changed the clauses that were the major points of dispute. I challenge the Minister to find out if these minor changes meet with the major objections voiced by refugee groups. I challenge the Minister to return to the legal experts who came before the committee and to determine from them if they still feel that this piece of legislation violates our Constitution and our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I challenge the Minister to produce the opinion of the Justice Department which shows that the Government believes it is on sure constitutional ground.

I do not believe that we will get any responses from those challenges. This piece of legislation does not live up to the press release that the Minister will no doubt release in about an hour's time. That is why I said at the very outset of my remarks today that the Minister is trying to encourage this Parliament to accept magic legislation, legislation that does not exist.

The major principles in this piece of legislation have been carried over from the legislation presented by the Minister's predecessor. That is sad, because I, along with other individuals and organizations, had greater expectations from this new Minister, a Minister who had shown in her previous portfolios that she was capable of handling the national interest in an adept way. This Minister comes from a riding in the City of Toronto which is very much concerned with matters of immigration and refugee policy. I had hoped that a new leaf would be turned by this new Minister.

This Minister has shied away from addressing the major objections of the refugee constituency and of the legal constituency. She has not asked herself how to overcome the inflexibility shown by her predecessors. She has not sought co-operation among all groups involved.

I see that you are telling me that my time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I look forward to continuing my remarks following Question Period.

S. O. 21

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a brief point of order. This morning, we have heard from the Minister and we have heard from the Liberal critic. I simply want to point out that the critic for the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), will be the speaker for our Party, but he is not here this morning because he is attending the annual consultation meeting of the Canadian Council of Refugees in Montreal and is attending a workshop on refugee determination this morning.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed to Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21.

THE ELDERLY

TRIBUTE TO BUILDERS OF CANADA

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, let me ask my colleagues in this House to join me in recognizing the outstanding contribution seniors have made to developing our country. Our parents and friends have built the Canada of today with the sweat of their brow, with their tears, their suffering and their hopes, despite hardship, discomfort and difficulties.

Let us pay them tribute and assure them of our unfailing support in their struggle for a decent, pleasant, rewarding retirement. Let us never give up fighting to preserve the dignity and respect due to older people.

Throughout the coming week, we are to highlight the contribution of senior citizens to Canada. So let us ask our fellow citizens to stop for a moment and reach out a hand to our elders. Thanks to all our senior citizens!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—TORONTO SUN REPORT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, more and more we find Canadians displeased with the Government's trade deal. There is a report in today's Toronto Sun about the unpopularity of the trade deal and the Minister trying to promote it. Here is what the article says:

> Federal Trade Minister John Crosbie was confronted by hostile students at Jarvis Collegiate yesterday as he tried to promote the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement.
> And later he told a businessmen's group the $10 million his Government is spending to promote free trade "is a mere nothing."

S. O. 21

The students openly challenged the deal and booed as Crosbie encouraged them to read a book promoting free trade.

When he asked for questions, two students stood and chanted "Free Canada, Trade Mulroney."

"Now, that's the kind of reasoned argument you're going to hear from the opponents of free trade," Crosbie shot back.

Students told Crosbie they don't believe statistics showing the deal will create jobs. They also called for an election on the pact.

Those are obviously very enlightened young people.

NATIONAL RESEARCH COUNCIL

AWARDS WON BY TWO SCIENTISTS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that two National Research Council scientists will be honoured for their achievements in chemistry research at the Third Chemical Congress of North America, the largest scientific meeting ever held in Canada, June 5 to June 10, 1988, in Toronto. Dr. Peter Hackett will receive the Noranda Award, in recognition of his achievements in laser applications in chemistry. Dr. Jim McLaren will receive the WAE McBryde medal in recognition of his contributions to analytical chemistry.

The NRC develops new knowledge through its own research programs and also provides a wide range of services, facilities and technology transfer programs and collaborative research opportunities. I would like to congratulate Dr. Hackett and Dr. McLaren on their achievements and contributions to research and development, and I would like to commend the NRC on its fine work.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, one month ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in answer to my question about the delay in AIDS funding, said "We view this as a most important societal problem and one deserving of urgent action and the urgent devotion of national resources." Empty words from an uncaring Prime Minister because four weeks later, despite a desperate appeal from AIDS victims, the Cabinet has still not approved the requested funding.

What kind of a Government is it that cannot make a decision on urgently needed funding for a major epidemic? Not only are there limited operating funds for the federal centre for AIDS, but a promised conference has been refused, projects delayed, public information is inadequate, and funding for community groups is curtailed.

Why does the Cabinet refuse to make a decision on this important matter? Why did the Prime Minister once again break his commitment to Canadians?

PUBLIC SERVICE

INTRODUCTION OF SELF-FUNDED LEAVE

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today marks an important day which I think many of Canada's public servants will welcome. The President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) announced the introduction of self-funded leave for employees of the Public Service. What that means is a new option for the hard-working government employees who serve us across the country. It introduces a new freedom and flexibility in the workplace.

Employees will be able to defer a portion of their regular salary to provide income during a period of what would ordinarily be leave of absence without pay. This initiative will assist the Government, as a responsible employer, in its efforts to encourage more productive, effective, and innovative management of the Public Service. Best of all, it will not cost the taxpayers one extra dime.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—SALE OF CBC TELEVISION PROGRAMS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express deep dissatisfaction at the Conservative Government's failure to fulfil its commitment to impose stiff economic sanctions against the Government of South Africa.

We recently learned that CBC Enterprises is selling television programs to the South African homeland of Bophuthatswana, this in spite of the CBC's 1986 ban on program sales to South Africa, and despite repeated so-called strong statements by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). This is a clear case of the right hand not knowing what the left hand is doing.

Ms. Joan Gordon, Director of the Parliamentary Service of the CBC, clearly stated the Government's confusion on the sanctions issue and I would like to quote her directly:

> We are, and in fact have sold nature programs to BOP-TV. We know that "homeland" is a synonym for government control by South Africa. What was said in the newspaper reports—that's true. We are not aware that we have been doing anything wrong."

Here we have a clear indication that an incompetent Government has no idea what its official agencies are doing. I call on the Government to clean up its act by ensuring that economic sanctions are applied throughout all areas of Government, and to stop exporting products of CBC Enterprises to South Africa.

IMMIGRATION

BOGUS REFUGEE CLAIMS—IMMEDIATE REJECTION ADVOCATED

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, any attempt to use an amnesty to clear the backlog of refugee claims must be completely rejected. The solution to the thousands of backlog claims is not a free ride but a better refugee system. We want a system where bogus claims are immediately rejected and where legitimate refugees are given the help they need.

Over 70 per cent of refugee claims made in Canada are groundless. Yet under our current refugee determination system each claim can take years to process. We cannot allow illegitimate refugee claimants to stay in Canada simply because our system is too inefficient to process their claims.

Each claim must be examined on a case-by-case basis. Those that are not genuine refugees must be deported, and those that are must be helped. Fairness to the thousands of people who apply to come to Canada legally every year and to the thousands of refugees who need our help demands nothing less.

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

PROVISION OF SERVICES FOR HANDICAPPED TRAVELLERS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, National Access Awareness Week for the Disabled, which is being celebrated in Canada, points out the need for many services for the disabled to ensure that they can participate in society at the same level as the rest of us. Recently federal and provincial Ministers of Tourism formally recognized the need to provide these special services for handicapped travellers. However, words are not enough.

There is one organization which has been trying to provide travel assistance to the handicapped for some time. Freedom In Travelling, a very small organization based in Toronto, has been trying to provide these services on a national basis. With no funding from federal Ministers responsible for tourism or transportation, FIT has provided consulting services, education, and assistance to handicapped travellers. I urge the Government to put its money where its mouth is. FIT and other organizations like it deserve support to get the job done for disabled travellers. We do not need just fine words; we need fine action by the Government.

BAN ON NON-ESSENTIAL USE OF CHLOROFLUOROCARBONS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, National Environment Week is now drawing to a close. Poll after poll has shown that Canadians are very aware of environmental degradation. During Environment Week they had a chance to do something about it. Tens of thousands of Canadians participated in thousands of activities from nature walks to clean car clinics, from bird counts to classroom discussions to streamside clean-ups. The focus has been on participation to ensure our common future.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is to be commended for his announcement yesterday to ban all non-essential uses of chlorofluorocarbons and halons that destroy the earth's ozone layer. This goes far beyond the 50 per cent ban negotiated by 43 countries at last year's Montreal Conference on the Ozone Layer.

As Chief Seattle of the Dwamish Nation warned, "Whatever befalls the earth befalls the sons of the earth." Every action to protect our environment better is a protection of our own lives.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

RECOGNITION OF RIGHTS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we recently saw the sad spectacle of 200 RCMP officers descending on a Mohawk community near Montreal and, in a rather ham-handed way, trying to handle the situation in that community. Just about the same time the Government turned down a chance to negotiate land claims with the Inuit of Labrador.

If the Government refuses to consider seriously the rights of native people in this country it cannot be surprised when other means are taken. We have been warned by George Erasmus. What George Erasmus is saying differs very little from what Bishop Tutu is saying in South Africa.

Native people have legitimate rights and legitimate concerns. They have a right to negotiate their demands with the Government of Canada. If the Government of Canada does not respond to the reasonable demands of groups like the Labrador Inuit, let it be warned of the dire consequences to come.

SOCIALISM

PROJECTED FUTURE FACTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, some good news as we approach the year 2000: John Nesbitt, author of the bestseller Megatrends and a credible, recognized futurologist, predicts that by the end of the year 2000, socialism will be dead, throughout the world. He says that this has already begun in Russia and also in China. We know, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservatives in England buried the socialists long ago. We know that Manitobans told the socialists what they thought of their policies that defy the laws of nature.

Socialism, Mr. Speaker, is passé in Europe and in America; it has failed in Russia and China. There is no question of Canadians voting for an obsolete, moribund system in the next election, Mr. Speaker!

MOSCOW SUMMIT

TRIBUTE TO PARTICIPANTS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians, men and women, will want to congratulate President Reagan and General Secretary Gorbachev for this week's Summit in Moscow, not so much for specific successes as for the feeling that the two countries are learning to live together and beginning to reduce the arms race that threatens the whole world with nuclear destruction.

[English]

The fact that the Soviets are beginning to withdraw their miserable intervention in Afghanistan, and that the U.S. Congress has stopped Mr. Reagan from equally unjustifiable intervention in Nicaragua, are also positive signs for world peace.

Last night I had the pleasure to welcome the joint Soviet-Canadian team which pioneered a polar bridge between our two countries by skiing from the U.S.S.R. to Canada via the North Pole. I congratulate these athletes on their success, and I hope that the countries of East and West can develop more and more normal relationships of this kind based on co-operation and mutual benefit as an alternative to the destructive and costly confrontation which has proved such a threat to world peace over the past 40 years.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—SUPREME COURT REJECTION OF TERRITORIES' APPEAL

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, it was with disappointment and dismay that the people of the Northwest and Yukon Territories learned yesterday that the Supreme Court had rejected their appeal against the infamous and discriminatory Meech Lake Constitutional Accord. Apparently the Supreme Court, in this instance, is not able to protect the minority against the tyranny of the majority.

This rejection, however, will not dissuade us from pursuing our objective of securing the same political rights as southern Canadians have. The fight will continue with renewed vigour. We refuse to be relegated to the status of second-class Canadians.

IMMIGRATION

PLIGHT OF PENNER FAMILY, RANDOLPH, MAN.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of the House the very tragic and serious plight of the Jake and Maria Penner family of Randolph, Manitoba. Mr. Penner is a Canadian citizen but his wife and child are recent immigrants from Mexico who came to Canada and then discovered, tragically, that their young daughter is suffering from a very unique form of leukemia.

This personal tragedy is now compounded by decisions being taken by the Department of Immigration that would deport this family back to Mexico unless they are able to come up with a $25,000 cash bond by July 11. I know from my own experience as a former Minister of Immigration that it is possible to work out dispensations to override the rules in this case and provide a humanitarian response in such specific cases.

It would seem to me that in this particular instance the House of Commons, and in particular the Minister of Employment and Immigration, should apply the best of the compassionate and humane judgment of this country to allow the Penner family to stay in Canada and their daughter to have the treatment she needs so that personal tragedy is not compounded by the bureaucratic tragedy of sending the family back to Mexico.

BANKS AND BANKING

TRANSFER OF CHEQUING ACCOUNT FUNDS WITHOUT NOTICE

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, constituent letters continue to arrive outlining incredibly insensitive actions by banks. In one case a bank savings account had only a few dollars in it. The bank commenced charging $1 a month because the balance was below $200. When the account ran out of money the bank unilaterally transferred $10 from the individual's chequing account to her savings account solely to pay the $1 monthly fee. Only after seven months did the customer find out about the $10 grab by the bank because the bank had not notified her of the fee or of the transfer. Abuses like this should be prohibited in the future.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ONTARIO HEALTH SERVICES LEGISLATION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I would like to direct my question to the Minister for International Trade.

Will he and his Government endorse the Ontario legislation tabled yesterday which gives preference to the licensing of private Canadian non-profit health clinics in opposition to Articles 1402 and 1403 of the trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is highly unusual for a federal Government to be asked either to give its blessing or not to give its blessing to any piece of provincial legislation. It is a most peculiar question.

In any event, as far as I can see the Bill in question, which deals with the licensing and funding of private health care facilities, is not affected by the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The services chapter of that agreement does not apply to health care facilities. In any event, it does not apply to government health care facilities. The only application that there is to the health care field at all would be in regulating management services for private health care facilities.

In addition to that, of course, the FTA is not yet in effect. The Bill in question does not appear to be inconsistent with the FTA. This legislation is geared toward non-profit organizations which are not covered by the agreement.

I believe that the opposition Parties in Ontario, which have pointed out that this is not in any way in conflict with the FTA or any threat to it, are quite correct in their approach. I am not going to be asked to give approval to a piece of provincial legislation. That is the responsibility of the province.

ABORTION CLINICS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should be aware that the Free Trade Agreement specifically includes a section on free trade and health management, to which he has referred this morning. Thus, the trade agreement is actually paving the way for the establishment in Canada of profit-making American clinics in everything from abortion to eye care.

Does the Minister really want the establishment of private profit-making abortion clinics to be allowed in this country under the trade agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this Hon. Member has a habit of standing up in the House and making the silliest and most outrageous statements about what the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement contains. The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement does not apply to the health services of this country and it certainly does not apply to non-profit health care services. It applies only to and deals only with commercial activities. That is all the agreement deals with.

With respect to this proposed provincial legislation, it is not a piece of legislation which is in any way alarming. The Government of Ontario has the right to deal with health care activities within the Province of Ontario.

There is no point in the Hon. Member beating this dead carcass. There is no crisis because of this Bill and there is not going to be any crisis because of this Bill. The Bill, as far as I can see, is not inconsistent with the FTA and the FTA does not apply to non-profit government health services and does not direct that there be any other services. It does not direct anything about how we operate our health care system in this country. The whole health care system will continue under this agreement just as it is today.

• (1120)

PRIVATE HEALTH CLINICS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we are not talking about government health services, we are talking about the establishment of private health clinics in this country which will no longer be able to be specifically run by Canadians. The free trade agreement opens the door to American commercial enterprise coming in in the area of health management, and it has been pointed out very clearly in this particular Act.

I ask the Minister again specifically whether he really thinks that free trade in areas like eye care clinics, abortion clinics and ophthalmology clinics, is really in the best interests of this country? Or does he not recognize that we have the potential in this deal to undo 30 years of work in making a universally accessible non-profit health care system in this country? That is what is at stake.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a veritable female Goebbels—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Mitchell: Sexist!

Ms. Dewar: Sexist!

Mr. Crosbie: —who is continually going around this country making false statements, misrepresentations about the free trade agreement and the health care system.

Mr. Broadbent: You just called her a Nazi, fellow!

Mr. Crosbie: The free trade agreement has nothing at all to do with the health care system or any change in the health care system.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER WITHDRAW STATEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I know there are times when the Minister for International Trade gets carried away with his own rhetoric, but before I put my substantive question I want to ask the Minister if he will withdraw that ugly and abusive statement he just made about the Member for Hamilton East.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I don't want to upset the Hon. Member. I will say that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is not a female Goebbels, she is an Hon. Member who continually makes false and misleading statements about the free trade agreement and the national health care system.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Minister does not mean that the Member for Hamilton East does that deliberately, otherwise the Minister knows full well he would have to withdraw. We would like to proceed with the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Ms. Copps: Apologize!

HEALTH CARE INSTITUTIONS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have at least seen the Minister recognize the error of his first statement. I think he should recognize the error of his second statement as well.

Mr. Crosbie: Have you got a question?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I do have a question. I want to ask the Minister a very specific question because it concerns a great number of Canadians. In the trade agreement, in Sections 1403 to 1408, it clearly outlines that the agreement covers the management of health services in such things as rehabilitation hospitals, homes for the physically handicapped, ambulance services, blood banks, laboratories and a whole series of others. There is a whole list of these under the Occupational Services Act. Yet the Minister keeps denying there is any involvement.

With respect to this part of the agreement that specifically mentions these various important institutions, which are private institutions and which are now covered by the agreement, is the Minister now forswearing or denying or retracting or retreating from the position of the Canadian Government when it signed this agreement? In other words, are we to understand that this part of the agreement no longer is valid? And does he intend to communicate that to the American Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me repeat the situation. The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement does not govern or relate to government health care services, nor does it relate to non-profit health care facilities. Its only connection to the health system at all would be in regulating management services for private health care service. If a Government or someone wants to offer the possibility of carrying on management services for private health care systems and they want to regulate that, then it should be done in a fair manner. But that is only with non-profit management of a private health care facility.

The particular piece of legislation introduced by the Province of Ontario yesterday, as far as I can see, is not objectionable in any way with respect to the free trade agreement. Any attempt to allege that it is, is only an attempt to pretend that some province is defying the free trade agreement. The free trade agreement is not in effect yet but this particular legislation does not appear to be inconsistent with it in the least.

THE ECONOMY

GOVERNMENT INTEREST RATE POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday the Minister described the Government's interest rate policy as being a policy of moderation. Following that statement the chartered banks of Canada made a full half percentage increase in their prime rates. Newspapers from all over Canada that have arrived in Ottawa this morning, whether from Montreal, Toronto or Ottawa, all have, as part of their headline stories, "Highest Interest Rates in Two Years".

Does the Minister stand by the statement he made yesterday that the Government of Canada has a moderate interest rate policy?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do stand by that statement. The Hon.

Member's suggestions yesterday and, by implication, this morning, are to ask this Government to have a very relaxed monetary policy at a time when our economy is growing faster than it has ever grown before in recent memory. We have business investment up and consumer demand up. We have a very strong demand pull inflation.

The Hon. Member wants us to relax our monetary policy. It is a little like being in the woods in a log cabin and you have enough wood to get you through the year. The Hon. Member would pile all the wood on the fire in the first week and burn the cabin down. What we want to do is have a moderate monetary policy that takes us through the whole year and into further economic growth in the years ahead.

EFFECT ON PRAIRIE AND ATLANTIC REGIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it just happens that every Premier in the country disagrees with the Minister. The Consumers Association disagrees. The Manufacturers Association disagrees. You name it, they are all on one side and the Minister is on the other.

Yesterday the Minister used another quaint metaphor of the pipe. He said, in justifying the high interest rate policy, that there is too much heat running through the pipe of the economy. I think Canadians in western Canada and in Atlantic Canada would like to be able to see where this pipe is in their part of the land. Could he tell the people on the Prairies, who have the worst drought in 40 years and who are going to have this policy inflicted on them, where they can find this overheated pipe on the Prairies, or in Atlantic Canada? Where is the economy overheating? And what is the Minister going to do for those regions that still have unacceptably high unemployment levels that he is whacking once again with his high interest rate policy?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I remind my hon. friend again that he quotes the provincial Premiers on this question but he does not quote them very often when it comes to Meech Lake and free trade.

Mr. Broadbent: What do you mean "Meech Lake"?

Mr. Hockin: Yes, but on free trade in particular you do not quote them. So your quotation of them is very selective.

The Hon. Member knows that we have all sorts of regional economic programs in place that are going to address specific regional needs. We have the Western Diversification Fund, the Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the Western Energy Accord, the Atlantic Energy Accord. We have one regional program after another, together with something further about which the Hon. Member needs to be reminded. We have very strong prices for commodities in the regions, be it raw fish, aluminum, copper, or pulp and paper. That, too, has to be moderated and that is in the interests of the regions about which the Hon. Member speaks.

[Translation]

POSITION OF MINISTER AND OTHERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows perfectly well the Government did not increase its budget for regional development. For instance, it has not earmarked enough funds for development in the West and the Atlantic provinces. My question is quite straightforward, and I agree with the points raised by the premiers about interest rates. That is why I am quoting the premiers. My question is, why are the premiers wrong, why are consumers wrong, why are agricultural producers wrong, and why would this Minister in this Tory Government be right, while the rest of the world, while the rest of Canada takes an entirely different view?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, why would we need the kind of monetary policy the Leader of the New Democratic Party proposes? This policy completely ignores the threat of inflation. It is a policy for the short term, it is a dangerous policy and it is a policy the Government cannot support.

ABORIGINAL PEOPLES

LAND CLAIMS OF LABRADOR INUIT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, or his Parliamentary Secretary. If they are not here to answer then perhaps the Minister for International Trade would like to answer.

My question concerns the fact that the Government of Canada has recently turned down a Memorandum of Understanding with the Government of Newfoundland that has been in place for a year that would see the start of land claims settlement for the Inuit of Labrador. This comes on the heels of an ugly incident we saw in Montreal in which 200 RCMP officers descended on a Mohawk reserve.

Is it the intention of the Government of Canada to allow the ticking time-bomb of native rights in Canada to deteriorate to ugly situations? Or is the Government prepared to sit down to negotiate with reasonable groups which have legitimate demands and legitimate rights? If that is the case, why will it not sit down to negotiate now the land claims with the Inuit of Labrador?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was a member of a Government that was in office for quite a long period of time while these same Labrador Inuit were there in Labrador formulating and putting forward their land claims. He might well like to explain to the House why there was no progress whatsoever while he was there.

The Department of Indian Affairs and the Government are prepared to deal with the claims in Labrador, and to sit down, of course, with the people involved whenever it is reasonable and there are good prospects that some progress can be made in settling these particular claims. However, it has to be co-ordinated with the Province, as the hon. gentleman knows.

In addition, the Government of Canada is spending very considerable sums of money under agreements in all the territory that is lived in by these particular natives of Labrador. We are going to continue that.

There is a program under way this year to improve and expand the airport facilities along the coast, including, I think it is, Williams Harbour. I am sure the Hon. Member is pleased by that.

Mr. Rompkey: Yes, except that there are no Inuit in Williams Harbour.

I want to say on behalf of my Party that we funded land claims research. There was a document entitled: "Our Footsteps are Everywhere" which was funded by the Government of Canada when this Party formed the Government. Our record on land claims is very clear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT NEGOTIATE SETTLEMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, what I want to ask is this. Is the Government prepared to go beyond rhetoric? Rhetoric for native people is not enough any more. They want action. They are not prepared to wait forever.

Will the Minister of Indian Affairs go to Labrador, sit down with the Labrador Inuit, listen to what I consider to be reasonable demands, and try to negotiate a land claims settlement now? We do not want airports. We want land claims settled.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is an interesting statement that the hon. gentleman does not want airports for his district—

Mr. Rompkey: We have the airports.

Mr. Crosbie: —or improvements to the airports in his district.

The hon. Gentleman says that rhetoric is of no use, of no concern, and of no value. If that is the case then why is the hon. gentleman getting up in the House with his kind of dramatic rhetoric?

Mr. Axworthy: It's called Question Period.

Mr. Crosbie: Does he think that this will achieve anything? I agree with him, specious rhetoric will get no one anywhere.

Mr. Broadbent: You are living proof.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATES—WESTERN DROUGHT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. I am sure the Minister is aware that in western Canada what we have now shaping up is the worst drought in 40 or 50 years, the worst natural disaster we have seen for a long, long time.

On one hand we have a drought which is an act of God. On the other hand we have increasing rates which are an act of Conservative callousness. I want to know how the Minister can justify higher interest rates for the farmers of western Canada when they are suffering from a drought like they are suffering from right now?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely sure that there is a question in the middle of all that.

Let me say to the Hon. Member that NDP policy toward monetary affairs and inflation would lead to such a burst of inflation in the short term that that would be a disaster far worse than the one of which the Hon. Member speaks. What we are trying to do is to control the process and to moderate inflation.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said earlier today that the economy is growing at a faster rate than ever before. Yesterday in the House of Commons he said that we are protected by very high commodity prices.

I want to know how he can justify that when western farmers are suffering from low international commodity prices, where the economy is not going very well, where provincial deficits are escalating, and when the inflation rate is actually very low. How can he justify that to western farmers? Are we to expect a continuing policy of callous Conservative high interest rates?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, week after week the Government is proposing programs to help the farmers of western Canada, such as programs with respect to stabilization, crop insurance, western grains, as well as the program announced last week. We are very proud of that.

TAX REFORM

REQUEST THAT DRAFT LEGISLATION BE WITHDRAWN

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Finance. Now that the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants have confirmed my criticism of April 20 that the draft legislation on tax reform—300 pages of arcane language, with new measures—is the most complex tax legislation ever devised, will the Minister withdraw it and produce a simplified version that Canadians, including tax professionals, can understand and comply with?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to respond to that particular point. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this House understands that the simplest tax system in the world is a flat tax system which is also the least fair system. In fact, fairness does not always mean total simplicity. Fairness means that distinctions have to be made.

Let me just relate something further to the Hon. Member with regard to this matter. For example, we have fewer rates now in the income tax system. As a result of that people will be able intuitively and in an understandable way when they earn their wages to know what their tax level is. If there are 17 different wage rates and tax rates and so on, one never quite knows where one stands. Fewer tax rates are one of the most important elements of simplicity in tax reform. It is there and it is not acknowledged properly, I believe, in the report of the CICA and the Bar Association.

Also, I have to make this point. We have a number of complicated rules, which is true, for pension adjustments. However, if we take a crude approach to retirement savings and a crude approach to savings for pensions and make it simpler, we become unfair in the process. What we have to do in order to be fair is to reflect the different conditions of different people. That is what we have done through tax reform.

PENALTY FOR LATE PAYMENT OF TAX INSTALMENTS

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about fairness as being somehow opposed to simplicity. I should have thought that it was possible to do both.

Among the new proposals which were not disclosed in earlier tax reform hearings is one to impose an extra 50 per cent penalty on late instalments. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the people who pay their tax by instalments are mostly retired people or people who are out of the labour force.

Can the Minister explain, in view of his concern about fairness, why his Government decided on such harsh treatment for retired taxpayers or unemployed taxpayers?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely sure I can let the Hon. Member's comment about fairness and simplicity being the same thing rest the way in which she put it. I ask her this. When savings are made for retirement, for example, and people are in different situations, would the Hon. Member give them all the same tax treatment, which would be simpler, but which would not be more fair?

The point I am trying to make to the Hon. Member is that if she wants to be fair we have to make some distinctions. That is what we have done through tax reform.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ONTARIO INDEPENDENT HEALTH FACILITIES BILL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the Minister for International Trade on Ontario's Independent Health Facilities Bill. This Bill states in Clause 6(3) that in spite of any international treaty, licensing which takes place under this Bill for these private—not government—health facilities will give preference to non-profit Canadian controlled facilities. It is a direct contradiction, not to the section of the accord that the Minister noted, but to chapter 16 on investment which clearly indicates that national treatment is to be applied to any new establishment of an enterprise in this country by Americans or Canadians.

• (1140)

In view of these facts, why does the Minister think that he is not on a direct collision course with the Province of Ontario over this Bill?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that we are not on a direct collision course with the Province of Ontario with respect to this Bill, for the exact same reasons that Mr. Robert Rae, Leader of the New Democratic Opposition Party in the Ontario Legislature, believes that we are not on any collision course. The Ontario legislation does not conflict with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement does not apply to the health services field. It does not apply to non-profit organizations. It applies only to profit-making or commercial operations between the two countries.

As far as I can see, as far as we can see, and from what we know about it, this legislation does not trouble us. It is not in conflict with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It deals with the licensing and funding of private health care facilities, and gives a preference to proposals from Canadian non-profit organizations. If they wish to do that, they can do it. That is the position.

I agree with Robert Rae that there is no conflict. There is not any great conflict between this piece of Ontario legislation that has been introduced and the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement which to date is not in effect, but we hope with the co-operation of Members opposite that it will be in effect by January 1, 1989.

NEW BUSINESS ENTERPRISES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this Bill makes quite clear that it applies specifically to those parts of the health care services which are provided outside the public system of health care provision in the Province of Ontario. Therefore, what is in the section on investment obviously has to apply to it.

I ask the Minister the following question. Is he therefore saying to his friends in the United States that the section on national treatment in chapter 16 on investment, which states that each party must provide the same treatment to the establishment of new business enterprises located in each other's territory, is false, and that that statement is no longer something that Canada will live with?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is the same question asked again. The hon. gentleman refers to my friends in the United States. I trust that the United States and Americans are friends of all Members of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know of any Member of this House who considers himself to be an enemy of the United States of America. We live with Americans in peace and harmony, and we depend upon them for 77 per cent of our exports. That is why they are very important to us in commercial senses as well.

When the hon. gentleman attempts to intimate that somehow there is something wrong with me and my friends in the United States, I trust he will confirm that he has friends in the United States who have invested $8 billion in the town of Oshawa and created tremendous prosperity for the people of Oshawa, represented by the Leader of his Party.

TRADE

OPPOSITION TO FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

On Wednesday, June 1, 1988, Thorne Ernst and Whinney Inc., a firm of chartered accountants, published a report that revealed that 41 per cent of Canada's big companies not only intend but have decided to hire additional workers because of free trade.

My question is this: What does the Minister for International Trade intend to do to stop the false ravings of the socialist leader who is opposed to free trade?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asks a question with reference to a study done by the firm of Ernst and Whinney, a survey that confirms that Canadian business strongly supports the free trade arrangement, and is confident that it will increase production and employment in Canada. That backs up studies done by the Conference Board, the C.D. Howe Institute, the Economic Council of Canada, and the Canada West Foundation.

The study did note that only 27 per cent of those surveyed had done studies of the impact of free trade on their firms. That is what makes it so important that we go forward with our campaign which includes the studies we are now doing on Canadian industries and the opportunities that await them in the United States, that we have the seminars and conferences across the country that we are planning, and that we have the advertising campaign that we are planning, in order that Canadian businessmen will know where the opportunities lie for them in this agreement.

I end, Mr. Speaker, by pointing out that the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada fully supports our enabling legislation and calls on the Members of the House to give it swift passage both in the House of Commons and in the Senate.

Let's get with it!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF COMMERCE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of Mr. C. William Verity, the United States Secretary of Commerce.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Let the record note that Mr. Broadbent clapped.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

AIR SAFETY

SECURITY CLEARANCES FOR AIRPORT EMPLOYEES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the security problems at our airports which continue to plague the Conservative administration.

Today The Globe and Mail revealed that more than 7,000 aircraft employees such as baggage handlers, those loading aircraft, checking attendants, and security guards, including 10 per cent of all employees at the Pearson International Airport in Toronto, are performing these very sensitive tasks without the mandatory security clearance from CSIS.

How can Transport Canada justify and permit such a significant portion of its airport personnel working in these sensitive areas without the necessary security clearance, which clearly jeopardizes the safety and confidence of the travelling public? Will the Government immediately move to rectify this very unacceptable and dangerous practice?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that there is a serious backlog in the security screening procedures. The Department of Transport and CSIS individuals are working very vigorously to overcome this problem.

I am advised that, while this backlog exists, there are no serious security problems as a result of it. I take the Hon. Member's representation, and I assure him that this matter is being addressed on a very urgent basis.

CSIS SECURITY POLICIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Deputy Prime Minister for the answer, but I beg to differ with the suggestion that there is no security threat to the travelling public. This latest compromise in security at airports is not an isolated incident. Temporary passes without the security clearances are as valuable as phoney dollars; there is no substitute for the real thing.

The Director-General of Security Screening at CSIS, Mr. Ian MacEwan, stated: "In the general security context if a person needs a security clearance for his job, he shouldn't be doing it without one".

In light of these serious comments by an official of CSIS, why is the Government permitting Transport Canada to violate the security policies established by CSIS and contravene its own transport policies by granting temporary passes to airport employees who have not been security cleared? In this review, will all resources be allocated to provide the required security at airports by its employees, and rid the backlog at CSIS by providing either the personnel or financial resources in order to be on the safe side rather than sorry?

• (1150)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is aware that this Government has provided a beefed up security system at all airports in Canada and has provided considerable new resources in terms of person-years and funding. It is something in the order of $63 million.

I believe the CSIS individual was referring to the long delays in the security clearance process. I do not think it was his intention to alarm people unduly and that point was clearly made.

There is a serious problem and I can assure the Hon. Member that CSIS officials and the Department of Transport are working vigorously to clear up that backlog. Let me assure him and all Hon. Members that security has been, is, and will be one of our top priorities in terms of travel for Canadians and others who visit this country. That is our clear objective.

HEALTH

FOOD IRRADIATION REGULATIONS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whomever in the Government is speaking about food irradiation today. The Director General of the Food Directorate of the Health Protection Branch has told the Canadian Institute of Food Sciences that regulations changing food irradiation from an additive under the Food and Drug Act to a process will be published soon.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare asked the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs to investigate that very question. Given that it unanimously agreed that the Minister should leave irradiation as an additive until further studies involving the public and the scientific community could be carried out, will the Government tell us why the Department is acting against the advice of that committee?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when that committee reported, it asked for a response from the Government. The Government made that response. It is in the record and the Hon. Member can look it up.

MONITORING SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the official also indicated that record keeping would be used as a method for preventing the re-irradiation of foods. Since no test exists to identify irradiation, how will the Minister prevent a repeat of the British experience earlier this year where the monitoring became so farcical that the United Kingdom finally banned the irradiation of food altogether?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot comment on what errors might have been made in other jurisdictions. Whatever lessons are available to Canadian officials will undoubtedly be taken into account.

DISARMAMENT

MOSCOW SUMMIT MEETING BETWEEN U.S. AND U.S.S.R. LEADERS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question addresses itself to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Although the Moscow Summit apparently failed to come up with a strategic arms reduction treaty, from the Canadian perspective was anything accomplished there that would contribute to achieving world peace?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a great deal was accomplished at the Summit between President Reagan and Mr. Gorbachev. There has not been the conclusion of a START treaty yet. As the Hon. Member knows, that is the number one priority in the view of the Government of Canada.

However, significant progress was made on that question and on the signing of verification protocols that will allow the ratification of other important arms control agreements. We are continuing to make steady progress toward effective regimes of arms control. That has been highlighted and given real impetus by the meeting in Moscow between the President and Mr. Gorbachev.

[Translation]

DISARMAMENT—CANADA'S ROLE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister is aware that the United Nations' third special session on disarmament has started in New York. Considering the progress, as the Minister just mentioned, that has been made in reducing intermediate range nuclear forces, could the Minister inform the House whether he expects any progress in other areas, in the short term, and could he also inform the House about the role Canada will play during this very important session?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think we have now started making some real headway on arms control and the establishing of effective systems. The UN meeting is an important stage in this process. Ten days from now, I will have the privilege of speaking for Canada in New York. Canadian experts are now involved in developing procedures to implement certain agreements which have now become possible as a result of the Summit in Moscow, and Canada wants to continue to play a role in areas where we can make a constructive contribution.

SMOTHERING OF ARMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): The Minister knows perfectly well that eliminating intermediate range nuclear forces will be absolutely useless if new techniques are developed as a substitute for the missiles that are about to be dismantled. When the Minister makes a speech on June 13, will he, speaking on behalf of Canada at the UN special session, propose an arms suffocation strategy like the one suggested ten years ago by former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what we would like to do, and considering the constructive differences in the present situation—there have been many changes in attitude among the superpowers and changes in the international situation with respect to arms control. That is something we must consider. We must maintain a constructive role in the present context. I am prepared to consider any suggestions the Hon. Member and any other Members of this House may wish to make, and I believe that our main concern is to continue to play a constructive role in the present situation.

CITIZENSHIP

DELAY IN APPROVING APPLICATIONS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to whomever in the Government is speaking on citizenship.

Given that the Government is surely aware of the delays, now running eight months and upwards, in getting citizenship approvals through the system, why is it allowing this situation to persist, whereby new Canadians are denied their voting rights and the emotional gratification of Canadian citizenship by virtue of the Government delays?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not delaying this. As the Hon. Member knows, we have extended the celebrations about citizenship since we have been in office. We are as concerned about the delays as the Hon. Member.

I know how important it is for the people who have come through our immigration process to become citizens. At this moment we are considering some changes in our regulations regarding citizenship, but in the meantime we will deal with the delays as best we can. It is certainly not willful.

REMEDIAL ACTION

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to whomever speaks for the Solicitor General. What action is being taken in that Department to remedy this unacceptable situation caused by the delays in security clearances?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have doubled the number of people responsible for clearing the backlog. Hopefully we will soon see an improvement in this area.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be two questions by the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and one question by the Member for St. John's East.

THE ECONOMY

INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the increase in interest rates yesterday.

How can the Minister justify the increase in interest rates from 9.17 per cent to 9.49 per cent, which resulted this morning in banks increasing their five-year mortgage rate to 11.75 per cent? That creates a real interest rate of some 8 per cent. How can the Minister justify having real interest rates that are, in fact, higher now than they were in the depth of the economic recession?

• (1200)

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished that the Hon. Member would take us back to that period. That was the period when interest rates were over 20 per cent. The Liberal Government had terrible problems conducting any monetary policy at all during that period.

This Government wants to control the very, very strong rate of growth in Canada so that it does not get out of hand in an inflationary sense, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the heat is running through the pipe of the Canadian economy, as the Minister said yesterday, in his part of the country. In the part of the country from where I come and from where many of my colleagues come, that is not the case yet.

[Translation]

DISADVANTAGED REGIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to put the following question to the Minister of State (Finance). Since the Conservative Government came to power, various regional development programs such as IRDP, the Industrial Regional Development Program, have been abolished, while today, real interest rates are extremely high. How will this country's disadvantaged regions be able to work their way out of the problems they are facing today with this kind of policy?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, let us think for a moment about Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and what kind of a monetary policy that region of Canada needs. It does not need a short-term, flash-in-the-pan monetary policy that keeps interest rates down and leads to an overheated economy which could lead to a situation of hyper inflation. That is not what that region needs.

Mr. Boudria: Twelve per cent unemployment is hardly overheated.

Mr. Hockin: What it needs with 12 per cent unemployment are good prospects for short-term, medium-term and long-term growth, and that is what this monetary policy is trying to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question is for the Hon. Member for St. John's East.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

CONNE RIVER MICMACS—ELECTION OF CHIEF

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs or whomever is speaking for him today in the House.

At a tribal meeting of the Conne River Micmacs held May 3 and 4 the then Chief accepted a motion of non-confidence and offered his support to a new Chief who was then elected. A week later the Department of Indian Affairs, contrary to notions of democracy and Indian self-government, reinstated the former Chief after he occupied the offices of the band. This interference has caused serious disruption of the democratic process which can only be resolved by the Department.

Can the Micmacs of Conne River be given a clear assurance from the Department of Indian Affairs that it will respect the decision of a tribal meeting to be held in Conne River tomorrow?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East for his valuable question on this difficult issue.

I have in hand a letter dated today to Chief Michael Joe stating that we understand a meeting is organized for tomorrow which is being held pursuant to the band's by-law 1-87. Proper notice has been given and a petition has been signed by at least 51 per cent of the electors. If that is correct, the Minister and the Department are prepared to accept the result of that meeting. It is requested that the letter be posted in public view for all interested parties at the meeting.

Point of Order—Mr. Crosbie

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, just so there will be no misunderstanding, I want to make it clear that I withdraw the expression that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is a female Goebbels. That might well be unparliamentary. In any event, I will withdraw the comment whether it is unparliamentary or not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Minister.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to 25 petitions, Nos. 332-4487 to 332-4509 inclusive, 332-4515 and 332-4520.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two sets of petitions, both of interest to a lot of Canadians.

The first is a petition signed by people concerned about schizophrenia, an illness which affects about 1 per cent of the population and costs Canadian society more than $3 billion annually. The petitioners desperately hope that a cure and method of prevention can be found as soon as possible through larger research efforts dedicated to schizophrenia.

They say that the research effort in Canada dedicated to schizophrenia is very small and not commensurate with the seriousness and cost of the illness in Canada and they petition Parliament to make sure that the research efforts on schizophrenia in the future will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

This petition has been developed and signed by several hundred people who are related to the group of friends of schizophrenia. They are very concerned about that issue and hope that the petition will be taken very seriously.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION WITH VIETNAM

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition which is acceptable to the House. This is a petition by residents of Canada of Vietnamese origin, including many leaders of the Vietnamese community in Canada.

They petition that whereas the Hanoi Government has continued to violate human rights in Vietnam by imprisoning religious leaders, artists, intellectuals, businessmen and former officials and members of the Armed Forces of the Republic of Vietnam without trials; and whereas the Hanoi Government in their words has brutally suppressed legitimate, political opposition in Vietnam by mercilessly executing those who fought for the return of fundamental freedoms in the country; whereas the Hanoi Government has blindly wasted Vietnam's resources in the military conquests of Laos and Kampuchea; and whereas these inhuman policies have continued to force thousands of people to flee Vietnam every year. They call on Parliament to use diplomatic means to demand that the Government in Hanoi abandon its inhuman policies and restore human rights in Vietnam. They call on Parliament to maintain Canada's generous policies on refugee resettlement and family reunification. They call on Parliament to intervene with the Government of Thailand to open its arms in welcoming unfortunate Vietnamese boat people on a humanitarian basis once they have landed on its shores.

This petition was given to me at a rally of several hundred representatives of the Vietnamese community from Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa on Parliament Hill a few days ago. It is humbly submitted on their behalf.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of tabling a petition which was organized by Local 85 of the National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories.

The petitioners point out that Bill C-23 was passed on December 19, 1986, substantially changing the rules related to tax treatment on housing and travel assistance benefits paid to employees in isolated posts, and whereas Yellowknife was designated as having a developed rental market and housing benefits to be valued at fair market value and that in order to establish a fair market value there must be a willing seller and a willing buyer operating in a position of equality, that apparently not being the case in Yellowknife where the vacancy rate for rental accommodation has been about zero for over a decade and that no viable developed rental market exists in Yellowknife and no fair market value can be achieved, the petitioners ask Parliament that Yellowknife be treated the same as the remainder of the Northwest Territories for the purposes of the tax treatment of housing benefits in prescribed areas.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of constituents in my riding. They state that nothing in the Supreme Court decision has established abortion as a right and whereas human life is a continuum from the moment of conception to the moment of death and there is no point in time between conception and the birth of the infant at which point we could say that this is not a human life. Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development. The exception would be the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother. I present this petition on behalf of my constituents with my support.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and responsibility to present a duly certified petition from a number of Canadian residents pointing out that the Conservative Government had no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States and that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, but that the trade agreement negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canada's political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians or to equalize opportunities between the regions.

The petition points out that the trade agreement denies Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and it undermines our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. It denies Canadians the secure access to the United States that was the key objective of the negotiations and threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

PROHIBITION WITH RESPECT TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of constituents living in Richmond, Burnaby, Port Moody and Vancouver, British Columbia. They are joining many others who have signed petitions asking that the Criminal Code be changed to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places because there has been a very high incidence of crimes including murder, robbery and sexual assault committed with knives, and this is on the increase in all major cities across Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that questions Nos. 278 and 324 be deemed to have been made Orders for Returns?

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 1, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. McDermid:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-129, the semi-privatization of Air Canada Bill.

The Bill provides that up to 45 per cent of Air Canada's shares are to be sold on the market with the Government retaining 55 per cent, with the understanding that the Government's 55 per cent will be voted in accordance with the decisions made by the 45 per cent that are held privately. There are supposed to be guarantees in the Bill that will protect jobs and pension benefits of employees. There are supposed to be guarantees that the major Air Canada centres of Montreal, Mississauga and Winnipeg will be maintained and that no individual can own more than 10 per cent of the shares and that no more than 5 per cent of the shares can be foreign owned.

Looking at this legislation, I find that there are three issues I want to discuss. The first is the question of the betrayal of trust. Second is the ideology of privatization that this sale represents. The third is the specifics of the Air Canada sell-off itself.

First, let me deal with the betrayal of trust. On January 15, 1985, The Globe and Mail reported that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that the CBC is not for sale and Air Canada is not for sale. The Prime Minister went on to say that there may be some persuasive arguments in the case of Air Canada, that he would take a look at it, but that Canada needs a national airline.

There was a very clear commitment made by the Prime Minister, followed by a minor qualification. Now we see that the qualification is taking precedence over the commitment. The people of Canada were led to believe one thing. They were led by the Prime Minister to believe that Air Canada is not for sale. Now Air Canada is being sold. This reinforces the perception the people of Canada have had for the last three years at least that the Prime Minister is a man who cannot be trusted and that he leads a Government that cannot be trusted. Why the back-benchers on the other side are content to put up with this betrayal of the Canadian trust is something that I cannot understand.

The betrayal of trust in the sell-off of Air Canada is not an isolated incident. If it were, perhaps the people of Canada could forgive it, but it is part of a pattern. The one consistent thing we have seen from the Prime Minister is this pattern of betrayal of trust.

During the election campaign of 1984, we heard about fairness in taxation. We have seen that fairness in taxation means that people who earn over $100,000 per year have some savings in taxes whereas ordinary Canadians are paying more taxes. During the 1984 election campaign and since, we heard promises about a child care package. We have yet to see the details of this package, but what we do know indicates that there will be no more spaces for child care in Canada than there would be through normal growth as indicated over the past 10 years. There is another betrayal of the promise to Canadian parents that there would be an adequate, comprehensive child care program.

There has been a betrayal of promises to the Indian people. I think specifically of the promises that were made by the former Minister of Indian Affairs, the former Hon. Member for Rosedale who has since resigned. I suppose he had a bellyful of this Government and its broken promises. He made a commitment, not only a personal commitment but as a Minister of the Government, that Indian bands would not suffer as a result of Bill C-31. He promised that there would be adequate housing and that there would be adequate financing.

The Indian Affairs Committee is holding hearings on Bill C-31 to see how the reintegration of people who lost their status through unfair legislation is proceeding. The committee has found that in fact, Indian bands are suffering and that individuals who are being reinstated are suffering. The Government has not lived up to that commitment that was made on its behalf by the former Minister of Indian Affairs.

The latest example is that the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) promised that there would be legislation dealing with film distribution in Canada. It was supposed to be released on June 1. However, the Prime Minister, probably with Jack Valenti breathing over his shoulder, interfered so that the press conference was cancelled. The Minister even thought of resigning on a question of principle. It would have really been something for this Government if a member of the Cabinet had actually resigned on a question of principle. However, the Minister thought better of it and she is now doing the Prime Minister's bidding. The changes the Prime Minister's Office wanted in that legislation are being implemented. I do not know what those changes were, but I am pretty sure that they will not result in better legislation that will provide a better deal for the Canadian film industry. That is one thing I am pretty confident of.

These failures of the Government to fulfil commitments are bad enough, but they pale in comparison to the direct breaches of promises made by the Government. For example, during the 1984 election campaign, the Prime Minister made a great event out of Liberal patronage. Certainly the people of Canada were sick and fed up to the teeth with the long record of Liberal patronage. The Prime Minister promised that there would be a different approach to Government. We have not seen a different approach. We have seen that instead of Liberal pork-barrel patronage, there is Conservative pork-barrel patronage. It is just as bad and it is very difficult to tell the difference.

We heard many times from the Prime Minister that our social security programs were a sacred trust. That phrase has almost become a euphemism for breach of trust. The people of Canada have become so used to hearing him talk about a sacred trust that they know it means just one more area where he is going to break his word. Even the Prime Minister has got the message and he is not using that phrase anymore. It is kind of like the way people used to talk about a financial crisis. Then they had such serious crises that they did not talk about crisis anymore, they began to talk about depression. The idea of a depression did not sound quite so bad as a crisis. Then we had the Great Depression of the 1930s and we tried not to talk about depressions anymore.

The Prime Minister talked about social security programs that were not going to be touched, then we saw him attempt to deindex Old Age Security. We had senior citizens at the front door of Parliament calling the Prime Minister to account and accusing him of things I would not dare accuse him of in this House because it would require unparliamentary language. We saw the Government force through deindexation of family allowances at a time when we have unprecedented poverty among our children.

Air Canada is just one more example of this breach of trust. In 1983, when the Prime Minister was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party, he very clearly indicated that Canadians rejected free trade in 1911 and they would reject it again in 1983. He said free trade was not what he wanted. He did not mention it in the 1984 election, so presumably he was opposed to free trade. Then, suddenly in 1985, he begins negotiations with the U.S. and we have a whole process—

Mrs. Mailly: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am just wondering what Bill the Hon. Member is debating. I thought it was Air Canada. He seems to be talking about everything but the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): We always look for relevance but in a case like this the Hon. Member has only about seven or eight minutes left and I think we can put up with whatever comes for that period of time.

Mr. Manly: This is directly relevant to the issue because we were talking about the record of breach of trust of the Government. Air Canada is only one more example, and the people of Canada do not see it as an isolated example. He broke his word on free trade. He broke his word on film distribution. He broke his word on fairness in taxes. He broke his word on child care. On one thing after another the Prime Minister and the Government have broken their word. This is a Prime Minister that cannot be trusted by the Canadian people. He leads a Government that cannot be trusted. That is the point I have been trying to make and I am glad the Hon. Member finally understands it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The Hon. Member could try the patience of the Speaker by continuing in that vein for the rest of his time.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to try your patience. I think I have made the point.

I want to go on and ask why the Government is pushing through this privatization program, not only of Air Canada but of other Crown corporations as well. The fact is we are not dealing here with any pragmatic approach. We are not dealing with the fact that some Crown corporations may have outlived their usefulness or perhaps the time has come for the federal Government to get rid of its responsibility. For example, the Northern Canada Power Commission was one Crown corporation where it made sense for the federal Government to divest itself of its responsibility. Yet here we are dealing not with any pragmatic decision but rather something based strictly on ideology, a wholesale selling off of resources built up by the Canadian people over a number of years. It is the mentality of the bargain basement and used car lot. Everything must go.

I come from British Columbia where we have a soul mate of the Prime Minister for a Premier, Bill Vander Zalm. He wants to privatize everything. He wants to privatize maintenance of highways. He wants to privatize our hospitals. Our Prime Minister is also the soul mate of Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain. This is the approach of even Augusto Pinochet of Chile. He wants to privatize and sell off the national airline of Chile. That is what we are doing here in Canada.

Last July the Fraser Institute, the right wing think tank from British Columbia, if you can use the word "think" for people who simply rearrange their right wing prejudices, held a conference on privatization and outlined a strategy for privatization. They said when selling Crown corporations, sell significant amounts of stock to non-traditional investors. Among other advantages, this makes privatization politically popular. It also makes renationalization by future Governments more difficult. Of course, that is what happened in British Columbia with the sale of BCRIC. Those resources are gone forever, as the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) knows. I do not know how many BCRIC shares he has—

Mr. Friesen: Five.

Mr. Manly: —but he knows how much they have sunk in value. He has five, I gave my five away.

Mr. Friesen: You gave away 75 cents.

Mr. Manly: That is right. The second strategy advocated by the Fraser Institute was to undervalue shares so that share prices immediately rise and investors make a quick profit. By allowing large numbers of people a small share in the profits they will overlook any negative social effects. Third, sell profitable enterprises first. This builds the image of success. Fourth, identify who is likely to be opposed to the privatization and buy them off. Bypass the union leadership by making an attractive share offering directly to the workers. That is very much what is happening here with Air Canada.

They also recommend identifying all possible political objections and disarming them. Build in a regulatory framework if necessary. Legislate restrictions. Allow for successor status to unions. Specify levels of service, and so on. Whether these will actually work or not is secondary to the political advantage their existence gives to the privatizing Government. Certainly we have that tactic being used in this sale.

They recommend using retail merchandising techniques to sell ideas and stocks. The Government is great at hiring people to go out and advertise whatever it is doing to make it palpable to the Canadian people. They say no lay-offs and do not talk about lay-offs. Privatize first, then after that the usual performance procedures may take place. Finally, orchestrate the media.

Those are some of the strategies that the Fraser Institute identified for Governments that want to be involved in privatizing. Certainly we have seen that with Air Canada. It was founded 51 years ago, in 1937. Over the last 10 years its pre-tax profits exceeded losses by $379.3 million. Air Canada has been a money maker, but of course if there is one thing that the Tory back-benchers and many of the Tory Cabinet hate worse than a Crown corporation that loses money, it is a Crown corporation that makes money. When Air Canada is making money they want to sell it, they want to put it into the private sector so that private individuals can make that money rather than having it coming into the public Treasury.

• (1230)

A recent poll indicated that 53 per cent of the Canadian people oppose the sale of Air Canada. It had a very good image. This poll done by Angus-Reid showed that federal Progressive Conservative supporters are almost evenly divided on the Air Canada issue. Forty-seven per cent oppose selling it and 44 per cent are in favour. Even those people who traditionally vote Conservative, but are not necessarily as hide-bound as are some of the Conservative Members, on balance recognize that selling Air Canada does not make a lot of sense.

This is only a partial sale. Forty-five per cent is being sold with 55 per cent being left with the Government. The Government's shares will vote with the majority. In other words, the 55 per cent share which the Government is retaining in our name will not be voted in accordance with our interests. What we have here is neither fish, fowl, nor good red herring. It is a lame duck corporation and will be flying with one wing. It will be 45 per cent private and 55 per cent public, but the 55 per cent public will be non-voting shares.

We have to ask how that can possibly serve the public interest. If the 45 per cent wish to shut down unprofitable routes, the 55 per cent of government shares will simply go along with it. The public is, in effect, left holding a 55 per cent bag and has no say in it.

A year ago the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), who is sometimes able to speak the truth when other members of the Government are not, said that it would be better to sell all of it or none of it. Of course, we are selling a little bit of it. We are selling 45 per cent of it.

The Government pretends to have it both ways. It says it wants to protect the public interest. It says that it is protecting the interests of places like Winnipeg, that servicing will continue to take place there. It says that it will protect employee benefits and pensions. On the other hand, it says that it is getting out of the business and the business will be open to private direction. This is privatization on a wing and a prayer.

What possible reasons are there for privatizing? One of them, of course, is the need for equity. Everyone recognizes that Air Canada needs new equipment and needs equity. Certainly privatizing is not the only way in which that could be done. Another possible reason is to reduce the deficit. This will not result in a significant reduction in the deficit. We are getting rid of a corporation which has in fact brought money into the Treasury.

In conclusion, it is important that all Members of this House recognize the importance of Air Canada as a Crown corporation over the last 50 years. It served the public purpose. It has been one of the building blocks of Canadian Confederation. Canada is a huge country, it stretches thousands of miles from the Atlantic to the Pacific and needs something like Air Canada to tie it together. It has served that purpose in the past and we need to have that purpose served in the future. This is not an easy country to hold together. We are talking about a new constitution for Canada. I submit that infrastructure such as Air Canada is as important in holding Canada together as is the Constitution. Yet the Government is getting rid of it.

Air Canada has set service, safety, and employment standards for the airline industry. It is responsible, not only for a financial bottom line but to serve social purpose. On that basis I do not think the Conservative arguments for selling Air Canada are reasonable, I do not think they are convincing. On the contrary, I think there are very convincing reasons for keeping Air Canada as a Crown corporation. We will continue to oppose this sell-off and sell-out.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I was not at all surprised at the remarks of the Member. We have heard these kinds of remarks before. They follow a general theme. They usually degenerate into attacking characters and personalities and impugning motives. That should not surprise us because, as I said, it has been a general theme. What does surprise me is that the Member is also the minister of a church. This calls to mind, in the same context, the words of John Milton who said: "The hungry sheep look up and are not fed". Mr. Speaker, pity the flock.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Hon. Member made his comment and then did not have the jam to stay and hear a reply. If he is going to make that kind of a slurring comment, I wish he would stay to hear the reply.

Why did he not refute some of the things I said? I pointed out that the Prime Minister and the Government have breached their trust with the Canadian people. I cited specific examples. If the Member believes that it is undignified for a clergyman to say that what the Government has done is a breach of trust, I wonder what kind of truth he speaks from his pulpit.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, that was a very interesting exchange. It provokes me to wonder what is going in the minds of the Conservative Party with regard to this Bill. As a senior Member, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you recall that the Conservative Party has had a history of, from time to time, being fairly interventionist in the economy. I remember Sir John A.

Macdonald's national plan, his national dream. The Conservative Party, of course, started the CNR, the CBC, and the Canadian Wheat Board. It was fairly interventionist.

As the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) pointed out, the most recent Angus-Reid poll indicated that even among Conservatives, 47 per cent oppose the privatization of Air Canada and 44 per cent are in favour of it. I really wonder why the Conservative Party had made this fundamental change in ideology with regard to public ownership. Why this move to embrace Thatcherism, this move to embrace Reaganism?

I see the Chairman of the Transport Committee sitting across the way. He is a great red Tory from Nova Scotia. I imagine that great red Tory from Nova Scotia must be seething with anger as he sits in his seat. He was sitting there with head bowed a few minutes ago. I thought he was sleeping, but he was upset. He must be extremely upset to see the direction which the boy from Baie Comeau is taking the Conservative Party in fundamentally changing this country and trying to make it reflect Thatcher's Britain or Reagan's United States. I am sure that such a dignified senior Tory such as the Chairman of the Transport Committee must be extremely angry to see what is happening to his country because of the "boy from Baie Comeau".

Could the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands comment upon why, in his opinion, the Conservative Party is straying from its roots and heritage in terms of free trade, privatization, and regulation? Why this breach from the leadership of that Party over the years from Sir John A. Macdonald, Stanfield, Diefenbaker, and Joe Clark who believed in a certain amount of public participation? Why are they changing this country in terms of privatization, with the prime example, of course, being this Air Canada Bill? It is a fundamental change. Why this Reaganism? Why this Thatcherism?

• (1240)

I wonder if the Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has been able to psychoanalyse the mind of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and can tell us what is happening. If that does not work, maybe the Chairman of the Transport Committee could. He has great experience. He is an old fashioned red Tory who was a great admirer of John Diefenbaker and all those other red Tories. Perhaps he could get up in the House and tell us how disgusted he is about this particular move. Or has the Member who now chairs the Transport Committee been muzzled by the Prime Minister's office? Is he one of those puppets that has been muzzled and is afraid to get up and speak his mind? I suspect that might be the case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): Unfortunately, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has no time left because the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) used it all up. Debate.

Air Canada

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a particular interest in this Bill, partly because of the importance of Air Canada to my community of Winnipeg, but also because my own experience when I was Minister of Transport brought me into a close examination of some of these issues and questions. In fact, there was a suggestion, when the announcement was first made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), that the Conservative Government was basing its policies on my initial objectives and goals. As I pointed out at the time, I only wish it had. I think we would have had a much better Bill and a much better presentation of the role of Air Canada if it had continued to follow the pattern and development of airline policy that we started back in 1983-84.

I would like to spend the time I have this afternoon by outlining the steps that were taken and why I think this is not the right Bill. It does not suit the purpose of proper airline development in Canada. In the summer of 1983 when I took over the Transport portfolio, virtually all major Canadian airlines were in deep financial trouble. Two of the private firms were close to bankruptcy. Air Canada had very large losses and was losing a substantial number of customers on its existing airlines. It required an immediate response.

We immediately established a series of working groups to examine what changes could be made in airline policy that would restore to the airline industry the predominant role it has always played. We kept in mind that the airline industry has a special role in Canada because of our geography, our climate and because of our dependence on trade and commerce. The exchange of people and goods by air has always been one of the important factors in allowing us to build and grow and developmemt.

That was recognized by previous Governments back in the 1930s and 1940s when they had to establish a public airline because private airlines were not prepared to undertake that task. By the time we reached the 1980s, conditions had changed radically and altered the role of the public airline. After a very exhaustive and internal examination by a number of Departments, and an examination of the American experience with deregulation, it was my judgment that one way we could stimulate further development in airline activity would be to loosen the rules. So we announced in the spring of 1984 a new airline policy that substantially changed the rules applied by the Canadian Transport Commission. We gave the airlines far greater freedom to set prices, to choose routes and to engage in a number of other initiatives that would allow them to attract customers. The frequent flyer program was a direct result of those changes in rules and regulations in the spring of 1984.

At the same time it was clear to me that if we were going to move to loosen or liberalize the airline regulatory system, we also had to look at the role of the public airline in that context. If we were to follow the American pattern of full and total deregulation, it would obviously put Air Canada into a very awkward position, together with the private airlines. It is very difficult in a totally deregulated environment to have a public airline and private airlines competing. However, it was not my feeling that we should necessarily move toward the full deregulation because in examining the American experience, it was clear there was a number of serious problems related to that American experience. One problem was the whole question of labour relations. One of the by-products of deregulation was a severe and abusive treatment of workers. People were laid off. They lost their jobs and their livelihood without any due compensation or retraining or any opportunity to ensure that their workers' rights would be honoured or protected.

Second, there were some real concerns about safety. There is no question that by having full and open entry we were going to give an invitation to a number of airlines to come into the business without due regard for the proper accountability or safety that was required. Third, and this is a little known fact, under deregulation, the Americans had a very expensive program by which they promoted the development of smaller airlines connecting regional points. They would be prepared to subsidize in a substantial manner airlines that would provide connections to smaller regional areas in Alaska or parts of their continental expanse. That was seen by the Americans as a corollary of any deregulation atmosphere. It was a pure deregulation, in other words. There were also, I think, very severe question marks about the concentration of the airline industry.

At the same time as announcing the airline policy in April of 1984, we put forward a clear term of reference to the Transport Committee of the House of Commons to examine those kinds of questions. First, should we proceed with further liberalizing of the airline regulations? And what should be the role of Air Canada in that particular environment? Specifically that term of reference included an examination of safety, labour relations, merger and anti-competition policy, supply of services to out of place regions. We said that before any further changes would be instituted, the House of Commons Transport Committee, in keeping with the spirit of having a Commons committee engaged in policy making, should undertake a series of extensive hearings across Canada and undertake the proper research and examination and come forward with its recommendations.

Unfortunately, the election in 1984 brought that term of reference to an end. The then Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister, cancelled that term of reference. Therefore, there has never been an opportunity in this country for Canadians to express themselves in an open and public way on these very large and serious questions related to airline deregulation and to the role of Air Canada. For the life of me, I do not understand why the new Government, when it came into power in 1984, refused to continue with what should have been an open and serious examination and inquiry into those very important questions. Instead, it retreated back into the bureaucracy, I suppose, and came up with plans for deregulation and the role of Air Canada without any form of public reference or public examination.

Therefore, those questions went unexamined and to this day are still unexamined. They have not been looked at, nor have Canadians had an opportunity to make themselves heard.

In addition, it was also my feeling that the Government of Canada, as the sole shareholder of Air Canada, had the responsibility to begin examining airline policy and Air Canada not simply in purely transportation terms, but also in large economic development terms. As a renewed and intense competition internationally, we were looking at the development of new technologies, particularly in the aerospace industry. We were certainly looking at increasing the concentration of technology in the central part of Canada, not broadly shared by other parts of Canada. One of the reference I began to examine as Minister of Transport was the question of whether the public role of Air Canada should also include its responsibility to carry with it economic development benefits. That substantially broadened the kind of framework of analysis and accounting that should be applied to that very important Crown agency.

I do not know what happened to that examination. The people of Canada spoke their wisdom in September of 1984 and I was no longer a Transport Minister, so I do not know what happened to that particular internal study we had begun to determine how Air Canada itself could become a major instrument of public policy in terms of economic development. I would suggest that the concerns we had in 1983-84 about that role were certainly exacerbated and enhanced as we saw what began to happen. The CF-18 decision was a clear example of how the aerospace industry, which could provide a major sharing of technological benefits across Canada, was in fact denied. Instead, the legitimate case for Winnipeg, proven beyond a doubt in terms of economic and financial criteria, was rejected. It was decided for political reasons to place it in the City of Montreal.

Similarly, the situation with Airbus is another question mark. As Air Canada now decides to replace its 727 fleet with a brand new generation of aircraft, the key questions are: "Where will the subcontracting for that Airbus be made and where will the maintenance be carried out?" Those public decisions have a great deal to do with regional development in Canada. If we simply allow the market forces to play, then what we will see happening, once more, is a concentration of that technology, of that new sort of advanced frontier level work concentrated in a very small region of Canada.

The history of Canada has been that we have not relied upon market forces to build it, but that our forefathers, and Sir John A. Macdonald at the time of Confederation, said that if it were simply up to the market, there would not be a Canada. He said that there would be a north-south economic integration with the United States. In order to have an east-west economic union there had to be a form of public intervention. In Sir John A's day it was the railroad that did it. In our generation it may be the computer, or information systems, or the aerospace industry that does it. Nevertheless there has to be a public decision to ensure that those economic benefits are broadly and widely shared so that all of Canada becomes part of that system of new economic activity.

We come to the point as to whether those kinds of considerations were in fact brought to bear in both the deregulation initiative and the Air Canada Bill. The answer is clearly no. Nowhere in any of the speeches by the Ministers introducing these measures was there any consideration of those factors or criteria—none whatsoever. It is simply an attempt, as they say, to find ways of refinancing Air Canada, and then letting the competitive market-place take its course.

The reason I oppose the Bill is for that reason primarily. I still believe that there is a public purpose for Air Canada. There is still a very important set of public policies that can be carried out by a national airline.

This legislation, as hybrid as it may be, and as much as it attempts to say that we are going to protect the maintenance base in Winnipeg, does not say that that maintenance base will continue to provide work on the frontier of the aerospace industry. It is just as easy for that maintenance base to do maintenance work on junk aircraft, DC-3s or older jet aircraft, which will put it in the back lot of technological development.

The only way that a fair share of technology can be assured is through public policy. But if the primary carrier in the airline industry of that public policy is being taken away, then no longer can any type of judgment or guidance as to how it should be carried out be given. Similarly, it is very clear from the way that this has been handled that the Government has given no account to those concerns that were raised and should have been examined by the Transport Committee in 1984. There are still very serious safety questions related to the deregulation of our airlines.

One of the important roles that Air Canada has always played has been in providing leadership in establishing proper safety standards, ensuring that it would give the standard by which others would follow. Similarly, with respect to the question of employee-labour relations, we have been able, through public policy, to establish guidelines and standards for labour relations in the federal sector, which I think have had an important influence on all other sectors. We will lose that capacity.

Even matters such as our language policy, for which we used Air Canada as a carrier of national identity and expression, will no longer have the same ability to influence those decisions. The moment that there is one private share sold under the laws of Canada, Air Canada can no longer be used as an instrument of public policy. It can no longer be our instrument. Rules can be set that Air Canada must abide, like all other private businesses in the federal jurisdiction, but it cannot be used to demonstrate, to show example, to give a standard. That capacity is lost.

Let me deal with a further question which I think is important. We debate day after day, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, the question of trade in this House. The position of my Party has been that we should be aiming to establish Canada as an international trader and not to confine ourselves to a continental market-place. One of the crucial elements in that strategy is our capacity to establish lines of commerce, exchange and communication with countries around the world.

If we look at the airline industry, we see that it is one of the most important avenues for establishing those commercial connections. One of the reasons why we have such faltering sales in Latin America, for example, is that we have two flights a week to Rio from Canada and that is it. If one wants to travel to the Argentine or to Central America, it is a 15 hour flight from Canada, as opposed to direct flights to those areas which would open up new sales opportunities, as well as new commercial and tourist opportunities. To make that happen, a flag carrier is needed. What is needed is a public airline to establish that type of initiative. That should be a judgment of public policy. We will be dealing with an airline totally dictated by its market-place criteria, its bottom line. It will say: "Look, we can make an awful lot more money by putting our 747s on the London-Toronto run. We do not have time to open up a new line into Rio or Buenos Aires or into Malaysia". Some lines are being opened into Malaysia through negotiation. I think that that could be dictated because it is a Crown corporation and therefore has certain leverage.

What I am saying is that these Bills have been introduced in a total vacuum, in the absence of an airline policy for Canada that would demonstrate what we see as the future role and opportunity for airline travel, both domestically and internationally. There is no sense of what kind of needs we will have, or what our priorities should be, or whether we need a public airline to service those.

If we had done that examination, if we had said that there is the future of our airline industry for Canada in the next 50 years, and then done a proper examination as to what would best service that, what mixture of public or private initiatives, then we could legitimately say whether this Bill serves the purpose or not. It was done without any of that kind of judgment or analysis. So literally, to use an airline analogy, we are flying blind.

We do not know whether we need a public airline or not at this stage because the Government has never bothered to find out from Canadians. It is asking Parliament to pass an important piece of legislation that will take Air Canada out of the public sphere and turn it to the private sphere without knowing whether that is the best judgment in terms of future development for Canada or, in terms of increasing its commitment in high technology, or of ensuring that there is a fair sharing in the regions of Canada, and that we have the ability to protect ourselves abroad.

It is legislation that has no roots. It has no context. It has no framework. It is born out of a very basic and very short-term judgment that we do not have $300 million to give Air Canada to buy new airplanes so we will sell it now and get the money so that we can balance our books for the next Budget. That is not the way decisions of this importance should be taken. That is the reason why my Party and I are opposing this particular Bill.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) a few questions. I have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member. He is a fellow westerner. He has a great deal of experience in politics. He was a former Minister. We have worked together on projects in the past. I want to ask him whether or not he has really changed his mind in terms of privatizing Air Canada.

I happened by fluke to come across a Canadian Press article from May 17, 1984. I am sure the Conservatives will be happy to know that the headline in the article stated: "Air Canada may be flying into the private sector". The article contained a lengthy interview with a number of people, including the Minister of Transport at the time who is now the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. The lead sentence was: "Has Lloyd Axworthy hung a 'for sale' sign on Air Canada?" The article goes on to state: "Mr. Axworthy's plan to relax regulation of the airline industry has rekindled enthusiasm for putting Air Canada into private hands. Mr. Axworthy will not say whether or not he favours changing ownership of the airline, which has assets of some $2.2 billion". In the article, Mr. Jeanniot, who at that time was the Executive Vice-President of Air Canada, stated: "Mr. Axworthy would not oppose the principle of privatization".

I do not wish to read the whole article since it is fairly lengthy, but certainly in May, 1984, the Canadian Press was convinced that the then Minister of Transport was in favour of the principle of the privatization of Air Canada. It states in the article somewhere that the Minister is willing to have a study done and keep an open mind and see whether or not Air Canada should be sold to the private sector.

I am very happy, of course, that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is not in favour of privatization of Air Canada. Can he elaborate to the House if indeed he has changed his mind, and why he has done so?

Mr. Axworthy: It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member did not listen to my speech. I went through step by step what we did. I pointed out to him that, when we relaxed the rules setting a new airline policy in 1984, it clearly put Air Canada into a new position. I put a reference to the Transport Committee of the House of Commons asking it to examine the role of Air Canada in light of those questions on safety, competition and concentration, labour relations, and regional development. As I pointed out at the time, unfortunately the new Government when it came in in 1984, cancelled that reference.

What I was saying, and I think that I was being open and honest, was that the previous system, which, through unnecessary rules had restricted and limited the routing and pricing for airline policy, had to be relaxed. In light of the U.S. experience with deregulation it was incumbent upon us to determine exactly how we should proceed in Canada. All I did was to make an honest effort to allow Canadians to be heard on a very crucial issue.

Furthermore, I established very clear criteria as to what should be the determination. I was not responding blindly, as some of his colleagues do, against it or for it; I was saying that there are new circumstances that should be examined, Canadians should be heard, we should conduct inquiries, and if it meets some type of criteria then we would act. As I pointed out in my speech, and it is unfortunate that the Member did not listen more carefully, the Government refused to do that. None of the criteria that I have established in terms of a sharing of technology, a sharing of benefits, and a consideration about safety, have been answered. The Government has made no attempt to deal with those issues. There is no airline policy for Canada. Therefore, to privatize Air Canada without having a proper airline policy is a fool's game.

Mrs. Finestone: As my hon. colleague travels back and forth to Winnipeg has he noticed any significant change in the service offered, the length of line-ups, the time it takes to check through the baggage, or the time it takes to check through and board the aircraft? Does the Hon. Member think that privatization will add the security that is needed? Is there a withdrawal of the number of staff and people available to service the clientele?

When one listens to some of the airline employees, and I wonder if the Hon. Member has had the same feedback, there have been unconscionable cuts and not necessarily lay-offs, but the gaps have not been filled. As the Hon. Member laid out the parameters of the criteria that should have been examined by a committee of the House, which included not only the regulations but the sharing of benefits, labour relations, competition, and safety, what has the Hon. Member noticed when he has been travelling?

Mr. Axworthy: I must confess that this morning I did a quick calculation and discovered that in the last two months I have travelled back and forth to Winnipeg 16 times. With that type of frequency, my only way of coping was to shift my mind into neutral and not even recognize what was going on. That was the only way to deal with that particular vagary. It allows me to lighten up totally and once again become the refreshing and provocative Member of Parliament when I hit the ground in Winnipeg running.

Those types of questions were exactly what I had hoped we would have had a chance to examine. I find it unsettling and disturbing that those are questions that we could have found answers to. We did have the experience of other forms of deregulation or privatizing in other parts of the world that we could have carefully examined. There was no attempt to do that.

This particular legislation is dictated far more by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and his imperatives than by the attempt of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to come up with the best mixture of airline policy and the best mixture of airline services for this country. We are doing it for the wrong reasons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Towers): Unless I see someone else, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) can have the floor for the second time.

Mr. Nystrom: When the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) rose, I stated that I thought the Conservative Party had made a very abrupt change from a historical position on public ownership in our country. It was the Party across the way that brought in things like the Wheat Board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the CNR, and other agencies of that type. Now it seems to be following the policy of Ronald Reagan and Margaret Thatcher when it comes to planning our economy and our society. I suggest that some long-time members of the Conservative Party, for example, the Chairman of the Transport Committee, are probably extremely upset with this abrupt change in direction in a vision for our country.

Can the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry shed some light on why the Conservative Party has made this very abrupt change? There must be some reason for it, other than blind devotion to the ideology of Margaret Thatcher and Ronald Reagan, which is importing an ideology from another country. Can the Hon. Member shed some light as to why the Conservative Party is doing this and changing the country that we have all fought so hard to build?

Mr. Axworthy: For the life of me, I have never been able to figure out why anyone is a Conservative anyway, so to try to figure out why someone thinks like one is certainly beyond my capacity. I think that would require a whole assembly of Freudian psychologists to work that particular problem out.

I should point out to the Hon. Member that it is important to remember that in the United States the deregulation policy was initiated by President Jimmy Carter. In fact, it was Senator Ted Kennedy, who was known as one of the strong left-wing Liberals in the United States' political spectrum, who initiated that through his studies in the United States Senate.

To return to my point, I do not think that we should be debating on ideological terms. The real success in Canada has been to determine how we use public Crown corporations in a pragmatic, utilitarian way. Our judgment has been: "If you need a Crown corporation, then do it." If there is a public role, a public service, and a public reason for doing it, then have a Crown corporation. If those reasons come to an end, then get rid of it. The problem is that this Bill is not using that judgment. There is no basis for making that judgment in anything the Minister of Transport or his colleagues have stated. I think it was dictated frankly and purely out of the fact that the Government does not want to spend $300 million to refinance an Air Canada fleet. That is the reason the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) changed his mind. I think that the Minister of Finance simply said: "We can't afford $300 million, so sell the airline". It is as simple as that.

That is not a reason to sell one of the most valuable and important public assets in this country. Perhaps in a few years we will need a public Air Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Towers): On debate, the Hon. Minister of State for Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis).

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to point out to my colleague, who just suggested that we do not have the $300 million to buy new airplanes, that the reason for that is that the Liberals left us with such a vast deficit to deal with. Had we had a better Treasury, and had we not had a $38 billion deficit, we certainly would not be in the position of needing the money.

• (1310)

Under those circumstances, I move:

That the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment—

Mr. Nystrom: Point of order—

Mr. Lewis:

—for the purpose of consideration of Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): Of course, the Minister had to complete the motion once he had started. I can now hear the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was going to rise on a point of order and call for a quorum because I do not think the Conservative Party is taking this debate seriously.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The House has heard the terms of the motion moved by the Deputy Government House Leader. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): According to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), if 15 Members rise in their places to object, the motion is defeated. Shall the motion carry?

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): There being more than 15 Members rising in objection to the motion, according to the provisions of Standing Order 9(4)(b), the motion is deemed to be withdrawn.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I just want to point out that government Members were prepared to stay a little later today to finish this important business, and to advise the House that the business on Monday will be Bill C-129.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): The Minister will know that that is hardly a point of order.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to point out that if the Minister and the Conservative Government would get their act together he would not have to make a point of order that is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): That is also not a point of order. Debate.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, before the Conservatives flee from the House, I want to remind them of the promise that was made by the Leader of the Conservative Party on January 15, 1985. He gave assurances that the federal Government had no plans to sell either the CBC or Air Canada.

Now that the Government has flip-flopped on this one, I presume the next thing we will see is its decision to put CBC on the block as well. It is shameful that a government that was elected on a platform that Canadians needed a government that people could trust and that it was a Party bent on kicking out the Liberal Government to bring in something more positive has turned around and given the country exactly the opposite.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says that something is a sacred trust, we know that means the opposite. When the Prime Minister says that Air Canada is not for sale, we know now that it is not true. Whatever he says today is liable to be turned around tomorrow.

One of the basic issues in the forthcoming election campaign will be exactly that question: Can you trust the man who has been Prime Minister for the last four years? Is he to be trusted if he says in the next election that he will do something for battered wives or child benefits? You cannot trust him on Air Canada.

One of the first things his Government did after it took power in 1984 was to deindex the income tax system. Then it tried to deindex the old age pensions after the Prime Minister said that pensions and help for pensioners was a sacred trust. This gang cannot shoot straight and this gang cannot be trusted.

I am raising this because I think the Government itself has to realize just how profound is the deception, disaffection and disillusionment among Canadians since the Conservatives came to power in 1984.

There has been some improvement in terms of economic performance of our country. That has happened because of international factors and because of a spillover of economic growth from the United States. That probably would have happened under any Party in power. However, it has not affected how people perceive the Conservatives. There is some justice to their perception because people understand that whether or not there are more jobs or some improvement in certain areas of the economy, a lot more than that is needed. We need integrity in this country, we need honesty, and we have not been getting that. Instead, there has been a succession of scandals, an unprecedented succession of Ministers having to leave office under a cloud or facing various charges in the court and so on.

The public has had to shell out for expensive inquiries around members of the Cabinet. It is no wonder this has come right back into the hands of the man who leads the country, the Prime Minister.

When the Government announced in April that it intended to privatize Air Canada, it is no wonder that people responded by saying it was a betrayal. That is exactly what it is.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, personally, I have considerable doubts about the integrity and honesty of this Government, and I remember a meeting the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had with Mr. Laberge of the QFL, the first in a series of consultations with leaders of the labour movement in Canada, on January 15, 1985. When the Prime Minister met reporters upon leaving the meeting, he said: "Some people want to buy the CBC. The CBC is not for sale! Air Canada is not for sale!" Mr. Speaker, how can we trust a Prime Minister who makes statements that are completely turned around in a matter of days or months?

[English]

Recently there was another example of that exact question about the credibility of the Government and the kind of tawdry, sleazy government it is intent on giving to Canada. That example was the announcement made a few days ago that the Government intends to spend some $30 million of taxpayer's money on an advertising PR campaign for the free trade agreement. Some of that money has already been spent.

The Minister responsible for the trade agreement has hired the campaign manager who ran his leadership campaign in 1984 to direct this particular effort. The Minister is now jetting across Canada, going to barbecues and attending meetings, to say that free trade is good.

Until now, the campaigns have not affected the public's perception much, and people continue to say that they have grave misgivings about the trade agreement. They have even greater misgivings about that kind of misuse of public funds. They ask how the Conservatives can cough up a billion dollars to bail out some western banks, including some $300 million to foreign banks who had short-term deposits in western banks. These are not ranchers or farmers, these are not senior citizens eking out their living in retirement on the basis of money they deposited with the Canadian Commercial Bank or Northland Bank. These are big money machines in the United States and abroad that happened to put money in short-term deposits in these two banks in Canada, knowing the risk. They were compensated.

If Air Canada needs $300 million for equipment, why could that money not have been put aside? Instead, the Government could have put $700 million into Northland and CCB and kept the remaining money to ensure that Air Canada would not be sold by a Government that claims it is starved for money.

The same Government that says it must sell Air Canada is capable of turning around and saying the defence of the Arctic in this country requires Canada to have a dozen nuclear-powered submarines at a cost it says is $8 billion but which every expert says will approach $16 billion.

• (1320)

I think you should ask the average Canadian, Mr. Speaker, whether on balance people would prefer that we have an extra submarine or that we put half or one-third of the money the sub would cost into keeping Air Canada as a national instrument and as a company that continues to be owned by all Canadians.

One thing that puzzles me about this—

Mr. Scowen: It doesn't take much to puzzle you.

Mr. Cassidy: —is how the devil can you sell to Canadians something that Canadians already own? I really wonder about that. We are not talking about broadening the ownership of Air Canada, we are talking about narrowing it.

After privatization takes place, if it does take place, then we will see a few thousand Canadians, some Americans or other foreigners who will control Air Canada whether or not their shareholding is 45 per cent or 100 per cent. There, too, we have an example of deception of the Government and dishonesty of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister responsible, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) and others for this particular move. That dishonesty lies in the fact that the Government is trying to maintain that the majority stake in Air Canada is kept in the hands of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard). But the Minister of Transport and the Minister responsible for this deal, the Deputy Prime Minister, have specifically announced that 55 per cent ownership will be a passive ownership and will not be voted. In other words, it will follow decisions made by the directors who were selected by the private sector shareholders. That it seems to me does not leave us in a very good position at all. It means that Air Canada's control will have effectively been sold, whether or not the majority of the shares remain in the hands of the Minister of Transport.

May I say, as the spokesperson for finance for my Party—and I want to be quite specific—that if we arrive in government in a few months' time, and there is very much a prospect of that happening, and we find that 55 per cent of the shares in Air Canada continue to be in the hands of the Minister of Transport, we will not feel bound by promises made by the Government now that that will be a passive holding which will go exactly the way the private shareholders want it to go. That is an unconscionable commitment, a commitment which no government should make. If the people of Canada own the majority of Air Canada, then they should have the right to direct Air Canada just as it is done in the private sector.

Suggestions from the private sector that because Air Canada is publicly owned it somehow acts unfairly are just plain bunkum. The Chairman of Air Canada, who favours privatization, regrettably, has strongly reacted to any suggestion that Air Canada is operating under unfair business practices. Mr. Taylor responded to a critique by CP Air saying, "It is not our size that bothers the President of CP Air, it is our skill". He added, "Our shareholding community is 25 million Canadian citizens, and a great many of them feel a direct interest in our company". I think that is important. I will come to this question in just a second about what I believe is genuinely public enterprise culture which has served this country extremely well. It would be tragic to back away from it in the case of Air Canada. When Canadians see the Maple Leaf in the circle which is the Air Canada logo, they know it is theirs.

I can remember the day 10 or 15 years ago when perhaps Air Canada had too great a market share, too much control over the markets and it was criticized. The service was not as good as it might have been. Let me point out how the service in Air Canada has improved. This airline has won efficiency, tourists, courtesy, service and safety awards consistently over the years. Its operating statistics have put it in the upper rank of airlines in North America. Air Canada is a good airline.

I want to say to Mr. Taylor and Mr. Jeanniot and all the men and women who are employees of Air Canada that as one Canadian I am proud of Air Canada. I do not think we should try to punish them by selling it off and saying we are ashamed of the contribution it has made to this country over the course of the last few years.

I would say as well that if the Government had evidence that Air Canada was overstaffed and had evidence that it was being run inefficiently, the Government has had three and a half years to use its control of Air Canada to change it. The Government could and have replaced the Chairman or President of Air Canada and brought in new management and told them to do a decent job.

At British Air about one-third of the workforce was cut before Margaret Thatcher sold the company into the private sector. There were some real staff problems, but those problems do not exist with Air Canada or, if they do, I certainly have not heard them discussed by the Government as part of its justification for the sale.

What does the Government try to maintain? It maintains that Air Canada will become an unprofitable airline unless it is privatized. Over the last 10 years Air Canada has made profits of over $300 million. It has had profits in 10 of the last 12 years. There is absolutely no evidence that that will change. In fact, last year Air Canada's profits would have been upwards of $100 million if it had not been for a labour dispute toward the end of the year.

The Government says that unless Air Canada is privatized it will not able to replace its fleet of aircraft over the next few years because it will not be able to raise the capital to finance the move. I am not exactly sure what analogy to give to this, but let us consider the example of parents providing room and board for their son or daughter so that he or she can go to university and then turning around and saying to that son or daughter, "You have to pay for the room and board", to which the son or daughter replies, "Then I can't go to university". Parents will then blame their child for dropping out of university because he or she refuses to pay the room and board because it was not being provided by the parent in a parental role.

If I can come back to the corporate matter we, the people of Canada, own Air Canada. We own the equity of Air Canada. Air Canada has not had any equity from its owners over the last 10 years despite enormous changes in aviation internationally and nationally over the course of that period of time. Air Canada has done an outstanding job of maintaining competitiveness, of changing the way it operates, of providing competitive fares so people can fly across this country from time to time and return for $300 or $400, bringing air travel within the reach of many people who could not afford fares the way they were eight or ten years ago.

The reason that Air Canada cannot reasonably get those new aircraft is the Government refuses. The Government says it will not give it any equity, but then says Air Canada cannot compete to get new aircraft because it has no equity. Of course it has no equity because the Government will not give Air Canada any equity.

We know there was a shoot-out on this issue between the then Minister of Transport, who is now the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Air Canada came along and said it needed $300 million in equity. The Government said no, and the Minister responsible, the Deputy Prime Minister, then went ahead with privatization. The Government created a crisis where no crisis needed to exist.

The Government, which cannot find $300 million equity, has not explored other means such as lease-backs, nor has there been any published statement about the kinds of concessional terms available from aircraft manufacturers to assist with the financing of the new fleet that Air Canada needs over the course of the next 15 years. The airline needs to spend a couple of billion dollars. It is a lot of money and some of the money has to be in the form of equity. As a New Democrat I understand and accept that. If my Party were in power, the Minister of Finance of my Party would ensure that the equity which Air Canada needs, if that is the solution, can and would be found within the budget of the people of Canada in order to allow Air Canada to remain as a national and publicly owned airline.

Let us come back to the question that if the Government can spend $16 billion or $18 billion on a number of submarines, what is wrong with keeping Air Canada in public hands? If the Government can spend close to $1 billion on a low-level air defence system which, believe it or not, will protect two military airports in West Germany as part of our NATO commitment, then why can it not come up with $300 million for Air Canada?

I do not believe that the entire $300 million is needed today. I have had a look at Air Canada's balance sheet. It needs some infusion of equity, but if it were assured that it could have $100 million as of July 1 and a further injection of capital in, let's say, April of next year, and the rest in March or April of 1990, that would do the job. That would ensure that Air Canada could go forward confidently and order the new aircraft it needs. That would avoid the loss of control of this airline as a consequence of the Government's short-sighted policies.

Then they say that the federal Government has overextended itself in support of Air Canada. I am not sure what they are talking about. There have not been public funds going into Air Canada. This has not been like de Havilland or Canadair. Then they say that Air Canada will become leaner, meaner and more efficient if it goes into private hands. That case has not been proved. The Chairman of Air Canada himself says that it is an efficient airline.

The Chairman and the President of Air Canada say that Canadian consumers would immediately see the benefits of a privatized Air Canada in lower fares and aggressive fights for passengers. If I were the Minister of Transport, I would call those folk in and say: "What the devil are you doing? You say you can cut fares if we follow your campaign to become privatized". That is blackmail on the part of Mr. Jeanniot and Mr. Taylor. It is nothing less.

As the Chairman and the President of Air Canada responsible for a Crown corporation, they have been acting quite improperly and inappropriately in the launching of the privatization campaign that they have launched consistently over the last several years. I believe that if the Government had any gumption at all, it would tell the Chairman and the President: "You are our airline right now. We speak for the people of Canada. You quit that campaign for privatization. That is a decision that we as a Government will take. Don't try to force our hands".

I would like to conclude with some notes that go back to that great Canadian, Sir John A. Macdonald. As my friend, Herschel Hardin, in his excellent book A Nation Unaware: The Canadian Economic Culture, pointed out several years ago, this country has had and has now a public enterprise culture. We have good and efficient railways because we have Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. Canadian National was the result of lousy investments in the private sector initially, but it has given Canada very efficient rail service. There is the CBC and private television broadcasting in healthy competition. The public sector helps to set the standards and to ensure service to all Canadians across this broad and diverse country. I know that in the event that the broadcasting sector really falls down on the job, the CBC will be there to do it.

We have Petro-Canada and private oil companies. We have private and public companies in other sectors as well. While it may seem that there is reasonable competition between Canadian Airlines International, Wardair and Air Canada right now, we do not have the assurance that that will continue. It could simply collapse the way the U.S. airline industry almost collapsed after deregulation under Reagan just a few years ago. We could have chaos and we would have no national instrument.

Just because the Government feels that the instrument of national policy in air transportation may not be needed today—and I do not agree with the Government—that is no reason to abandon it and do away with a national instrument for public policy in the passenger and freight aviation sectors should it be needed in the year 1995 or the year 2005. For all of those reasons, I believe that this country can afford to keep Air Canada in public hands. It should be able to afford to keep Air Canada as an instrument of public policy and it should be proud of the job Air Canada has done over the last half century.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, as the finance critic for the New Democratic Party, I am sure my hon. colleague is aware of the very heavy tax burdens that have been placed on the Canadian people over the last four years by the Conservative Government. There is a lot of concern on the part of the Government about the deficit.

Does my colleague see the sale of Air Canada as being one possible way of reducing the deficit? If so, how significant an impact would it have on reducing the deficit? Would that in any way result in lower taxes for the hard-pressed Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the effect on the deficit of this particular measure would be minuscule. It would be infinitesimal. It would be absolutely microscopic. It would be insignificant. It would be invisible. It could not be seen in any meaningful way. I do hope I make myself clear.

Let us look at the figures. The national debt of Canada currently runs somewhere over $250 billion, and that is uncomfortably high. Our annual deficit is running at something like $28 billion or $29 billion a year. I am not sure how the Government would deal with the money received from the sale of shares in Air Canada. Does it really want to sell the jewels and use that money to pay for the groceries? That is essentially what would happen if all of that $300 million were to be put against the deficit. If it were put against the deficit, it would represent 1 per cent of one year's deficit. That would be the total reduction.

If the Government really wants to reduce the deficit, let it cut back on spending programs for nuclear submarines. I think Canadians would be an awful lot happier about owning an airline which encourages international co-operation than they would about having a dozen nuclear subs which would be increasing confrontation between the western powers and the powers in the Soviet bloc.

If the Government were to invest that money, it would return about $30 million a year. That would be meaningful in the sense that it would reduce the annual deficit of Canada, at its current rate, by about one-tenth of 1 per cent on a continuing basis. That is a very small sum indeed.

Finally, I have been reading in some commentaries in the financial press the suggestion that the benefit of the sale of the shares will provide the $300 million in equity that Air Canada needs. If I understand that correctly, that means that the Treasury will not get a dime in order to reduce the deficit. Air Canada is not costing us any money right now. There is no annual pay-out to Air Canada the way there is to VIA Rail. This move would simply provide Air Canada with $300 million in equity, and there has been no rationale or serious attempt to look for various other ways to find that money. The only argument then is that if we were to proceed and to provide that equity, there would be some charge which would either have to be met by lower expenses elsewhere, such as on nuclear subs, or else by an increase in the deficit. However, it is not worth half a bag of chicken feed relative to the over-all size of the deficit of the Government of Canada.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, a question or comment. I wish to advise that since an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 115 and Standing Order 116 with respect to an allocation of time for the second reading of Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: —I therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 117—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, a point of order!

Mr. Lewis: —give notice of my intention to move a time allocation motion at the next sitting of the House for the purpose of allocating a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of the second reading stage of the said Bill.

Air Canada

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) was on her feet to ask a question. It is my distinct understanding that the Chair is certainly free to recognize a Member from any Party on a question or comment until the period for questions or comments has expired. At that time, the Chair is certainly free to recognize the government House Leader or any other Hon. Member to speak. I am not sure where we were in the normal rotation, but where we were not was in a situation in which, purporting to rise under questions and comments, the government House Leader could proceed to move a motion for time allocation.

• (1340)

My point is this. That motion would have been all right at the end of the time for questions and comments or when questions and comments had come to a close. I believe the procedure followed by the Minister just a few minutes ago, where he got up purporting to do one thing and then did another, is misleading, deceitful, wrong, and should not be permitted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need to hear the Minister. The correct procedure was followed.

Mr. Cassidy: On a further point of order, Mr. Speaker. My colleague from Yorkton—Melville was able to hear the Minister while I was trying to attract your attention on a point of order. As he pointed out to me, the Minister sought to introduce a motion for time allocation. He was not calling for a further extension of hours on this Bill. Since he had just gotten up and called for an extension of hours the last time he got on his feet, I had no choice but to try to attract your attention on the point of order. However, I believe the point of order is still valid, and that is, when we are on questions and comments it is surely inappropriate and out of order for a government spokesperson to rise in order to move a procedural motion.

Mr. Lewis: Lorne, take over, that guy is hopeless.

Mr. Cassidy: That should take place in the gap between one speaker and another.

Mr. Lewis: Save him, Lorne.

Mr. Cassidy: That would be at the end of the period for questions and comments. That is the point I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I realize full well what the Hon. Member is saying. On certain types of motions the Hon. Member would of course be correct. However, the notice that was given can be given at any time.

We are now back to questions and comments on the speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the extensive rationale that my colleague gave for opposing the sale of Air Canada. However, he did not address the kind of policy introduced by the previous Government concerning deregulation, and I think it is important that we look at that.

My question is whether the fact that we are getting deregulation is part and parcel of what the Government is concerned about when it talks about selling off Air Canada, the felling that maybe consumers will not benefit from lower air fares. Or has the experience in the U.S. been that consumers really have not benefited that much from deregulation? Is my colleague aware of the situation in the industry in the U.S. as far as consumers are concerned, and would this inhibit our ability to stabilize the industry here when we lose such an important tool as a national airline?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I think the best way to describe the situation in the U.S. is that it is a bit like the curate's egg, it is good in parts. However, it is certainly bad in parts as well. At times it is downright chaotic.

Every sector has cause to complain about air travel in the U.S. There are certain people and groups who benefit. For example, if you live in New York and have a girlfriend in Los Angeles, it is cheaper than ever before to go and visit her once a month or vice versa.

Ms. Jewett: What about a boyfriend?

Mr. Cassidy: Or a boyfriend. If you live close to a major airport and wish to go someplace else, then it has perhaps been a benefit. On the other hand, should you have family living in some smaller community, then just watch out.

I talked with someone in my constituency office about this the other day. She had a telephone call telling her about the death of her mother in California. In order to go there for her mother's funeral, which she was in the end unable to attend, she would have had to go through four changes of planes. Because the fares were not melded in many cases, they went up and up and up if you were trying to get to the smaller communities. The names of the airlines seem to change every six months. For example, I do not know who Piedmont is but it seems to be very big in the eastern United States right now. I wonder what happened to Eastern Airlines. They seem to have disappeared.

Mr. Friesen: They are still there.

Mr. Cassidy: Are they? Maybe.

My final point is that for people in business or politics, those who need a premium quality service to get to places quickly and are very busy on behalf of their corporation or the people they represent, the situation is one of chronic delays, sitting stacked up in the airways over O'Hare Airport, Kennedy Airport or La Guardia. It means constant and chronic delays, fatigue, frustration and that kind of thing.

The point I want to make about Canada is this. For people along the main trunk from Vancouver through possibly Halifax, there are some benefits in deregulation. It is possible to go to the U.K. for less than $500. It is possible to get the occasional fare from Ottawa to Vancouver for $300 return. However, this is not a country consisting of a 3,000 mile long line of people. We have people living in Yellowknife and Whitehorse who are still subject to monopoly conditions. Before they can benefit from the fares coming in under deregulation they have to pay $500 to get to southern Canada. As a result, they are severely inhibited. They cannot get joint fares any more because of the way the system works.

One of the benefits of having a national airline is that it is more appropriate and possible to have a national policy so that all Canadians, not just those living in our eight or 10 biggest cities, have the benefit of cheaper fares and greater availability of flights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, this Bill was introduced in haste and unexpectedly by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) after his predecessor Minister responsible for privatization took a long time to consider it without the Bill being presented to the House. Let us look at some statements by the Government. Some time ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said Air Canada is not for sale. He said Canada needs a national airline. He said there is a possibility that shares in Air Canada will be sold to the public but the Government would certainly retain a majority interest. So spoke the Prime Minister. However, the Deputy Prime Minister said that the legislation will permit the transfer of all Air Canada shares to the public. This is essentially the first phase. What are we to believe?

The industry is distinctly cool to the sale, presumably because they, like Members of this House, are not quite sure what to believe either. Critics think that because of its heavy demands for capital it is unlikely that Air Canada will pay shareholders any dividends for a long time. Critics are unclear and uneasy about the precise division of powers as between the Government and the private shareholders. Again, the legislation is unclear.

On April 12, 1988, the Deputy Prime Minister stated that after completion of the initial offering the Government would hold no less than 55 per cent of the shares but would vote in accordance with the majority of the 45 per cent of private shareholders. That means that in theory several shareholders holding a majority of the 45 per cent, acting in concert, could exert considerable control over the company, and if the Government stays with that position it would be powerless.

The record following deregulation of airlines in the United States and Britain has not been encouraging. We have heard of extraordinary inconvenience to travellers in the name of economy. Flights are cancelled, flights are late, flights are crowded, and the less profitable, more remote areas are getting very poor service.

The three unions concerned with Air Canada have opposed privatization largely on the grounds of their concerns with safety. In one of their briefs they stated:

> A publicly owned Air Canada provides accountability and a "policy window" to ensure safety and service in an increasingly concentrated, deregulated industry.

Canada is a very large nation. One of our important planks of nation-building has been communications and transportation. The railways opened up this country and established the east-west links in a way which had not been done before and set the development of the country. Air Canada has contributed to that in particular by providing some levels of service to the more outlying areas.

There is within Air Canada now a form of cross-subsidization under which the major routes help to subsidize the less travelled routes. Obviously when the airline is privatized that will not happen if it is run purely on a profit motive. In the smaller Canadian market where expenses as a result of weather conditions make competition with U.S. airlines more difficult I think we can expect that service to small, remote northern areas will disappear or be greatly reduced. Once Air Canada is privatized there is no guarantee at all that jobs and services will be maintained.

Air Canada is now involved in numerous feeder lines. It owns 100 per cent of Air B.C., 75 per cent of Air Ontario, 75 per cent of Austin Airways, and 49 per cent of Air Nova. If the experience with the privatization of Air Canada is the same as in the United States and Great Britain, if the profit motive takes precedence over public policy goals of providing service to all Canadians, we will see less and less service to the less populated areas while the airlines provide more service in the more profitable, densely populated areas.

Privatization also raises questions about what is going to happen to the estimated $200 million surplus in Air Canada's employee pension fund. I have not heard the Government address this question. Air Canada has proved to be profitable. One must also ask why the Government wants to sell a winner which the people of Canada own and have paid for.

The reason the airline itself is asking for privatization is essentially that it needs capitalization. Do we have to privatize in order to ensure that the airline has funds to replace its aging aircraft? The proposal put forward by my colleague, our critic for transport, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), was that Air Canada be assisted to secure loans at preferential rates to renew its fleet as was done in the past. In 1977, when Air Canada had need for recapitalization, the Liberal Government moved to assist in that way. Indeed, Air Canada has gone on to be a very profitable and very successful airline.

We must ask again whether the Government is moving to privatize because this will really enhance the efficiency of Air Canada and its ability to recapitalize, or is this yet again a matter of blind ideology to privatize for the sake of privatization without looking at the alternatives or at whether it is even feasible? As I said at the outset, the markets are being decidedly cool at the thought of this offering.

To return to the solutions of the previous Liberal Government, in 1977 this House passed the Air Canada Act under which the corporation now operates. That Act was in response to the Estey Commission of Inquiry which had made certain recommendations. That commission proposed that Air Canada be given the legal and corporate structure, the flexibility, and the financing to operate on a commercial basis on the same footing as its competitors in Canada and abroad. Air Canada was refinanced in 1977 with a debt equity ratio equivalent to that of other major North American airlines.

There is no question that Air Canada requires financing to modernize its fleet, but is privatization the best way to ensure that financing? From the cool reaction of the markets it does not appear likely. Neither is there any evidence that the Government has carefully studied the solutions of the past to see whether they might again be used.

Air Canada does need billions of dollars to finance new aircraft. In the short term it probably has a need for some $300 million to start purchasing. However, the situation is urgent now only because the Government, which has been in power for four years, has done nothing. It has considered, but has failed to act to assist Air Canada. This is yet another example of the Government ruminating for almost four years and then acting in haste to produce the ill-considered motion before us which will not assist Air Canada.

We have clearly seen that the response in the markets is that this Bill is the worst of both worlds. It is not an attractive investment opportunity. In any case, it is very difficult to get people to invest in airlines at the moment, largely because of the chaos in the United States as a result of deregulation there.

Therefore, this Bill is ill-considered and is not going to achieve the Government's goal of recapitalizing Air Canada. There are better ways of assisting Air Canada to buy the necessary new equipment and continue to be profitable as it has been in the past.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Danis): It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

ORGANIZED CRIME

ADVISABILITY OF ESTABLISHING PARLIAMENTARY TASK FORCE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity) moved:

That a Special joint Committee be appointed to act as a Parliamentary Task Force to investigate and report upon the extent to which organized crime is connected to the legislative, judicial and administrative institutions of Canadian society;

That the committee be composed of not more than 15 Members to be named at a later date;

That the committee shall have all of the powers given to Standing Committees by Standing Order 96(1);

That the committee have the power to retain the services of professional, technical and clerical staff as may be deemed necessary;

That the committee have the power to adjourn or travel from place to place inside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the committee; and

That a message be sent to the Senate praying their Honours to unite with this House for this purpose.

She said: Mr. Speaker, last year I proposed a motion which suggested that a royal commission be appointed to examine various aspects of organized crime. The motion was voted on but defeated. Some of those who spoke on the motion suggested that a royal commission would be too expensive. Some of the government Members had speeches that were extraordinarily similar. One might even suspect they had all been written by the same hand. The speeches indicated that the Department of Justice had absolutely everything in hand and there was essentially very little problem.

So I have come back today with a new motion to take care of the criticism of costs. I have scaled this down so that instead of a royal commission, I am proposing a joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons.

May I also point out that some of the Members who spoke on my previous motion estimated the cost of organized crime in our society in Canada as being up to $10 billion a year. One would think that to counter that, the costs of a commission might be a very good investment.

The second round of criticism was that the new legislation being brought in by the Government would deal much more effectively with organized crime. Not all the legislation talked about is here yet. Nevertheless, since I have faith, I am concentrating this motion on the extent to which organized crime is connected to the legislative, judicial and administrative institutions of Canadian society.

The definition in Canada of organized crime, I believe, is two or more persons consorting together on a continuing basis to participate in illegal activities either directly or indirectly for gain. Organized crime, as we know, has no ethnicity. Organized crime can involve people of many ethnic origins. What I want to talk about today is the invasion by organized crime of legitimate business, the attempts to infiltrate members of organized crime into situations where they can have control, be it unions, the judiciary, the police and, of course, political office.

I would suggest that an examination of these matters can only be helpful if properly done, with careful rules of evidence, of course. No one would want to see a McCarthy-type inquisition. What is necessary is to turn the bright light of publicity on those who would exploit our fellow Canadians.

Something about which we must all surely be aware is that many of the activities of organized crime in Canada hurt the poor and defenceless in particular. Organized crime is being addressed by a Bill still before the House, that is, Bill C-61, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act. This Bill, among other things, addresses the seizures of criminals' profits as well as money laundering. But we have yet to see this Bill available for third reading debate.

Canada still lags behind both the United States and Italy where organized crime has been examined and legislation enacted. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), when he was in opposition, called for a royal commission into organized crime. So did the late Right Hon. Diefenbaker when he was in opposition. But there has never been a national commission into organized crime in Canadian history. We have had two provincial inquiries, one in Montreal and one in Ontario, the Waisberg Commission, which reported, I believe, in 1973. Both of these commissions were very effective in bringing to public attention abuses in the construction trade and other legitimate trades and unions which had been infiltrated by members of organized crime. It is this white light of publicity that will be one of the greatest deterrents to organized crime. When citizens are informed, they can protect themselves and, indeed, more public support and public pressure is needed.

Criminals fear the exposure of their crimes and the resulting efforts by society to limit profitability. The history of what has happened when organized crime has gotten into legitimate business is full of dangerous and unpleasant situations. When organized crime is involved in contract bidding in the construction industry, inferior materials can be used and lives can be lost. The corruption of public officials is necessary for this to happen and the corruption of public officials and business is very difficult to uncover. Last October, in the course of debate, the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid), described how business people, well known in the community, may be drawn innocently into the circle of organized crime by the prospects of large profits, not always knowing that the links to criminal organizations exist. Poor people find themselves drawn into organized crime. They borrow, they gamble, they then find they are being pressured to do unacceptable things. In Canada and in other countries, organized criminals are protected by using legal businesses to mask their activities.

To look outside of Canada at things that have happened elsewhere in the world, I will point out that in the fall of 1986, most Members here, I think, were reading about the situation of the European Economic Community where millions of dollars a year were being drained from the Community by the very ingenious use by organized crime of the common agricultural policy in Europe. Criminals are ingenious, and if they have officials in place who can give them information about how certain systems work, they are able to exploit the system.

Something else was happening at the same time as the European Economic Community was able to pinpoint the involvement by organized crime in this exploitation and abuse of a particular compensation measure under the common agriculture policy. In Britain people were becoming concerned about the organized structure of the United States illicit drug industry moving into Britain.

To go back a little further, in 1982, an Italian banker was found hanging from a bridge in Blackfriars, London. It was never determined whether this was suicide or murder. But you will remember, Mr. Speaker, this banker was the head of the Vatican Bank. In fact, the Italian Justice Ministry later issued arrest warrants for senior personnel of that bank. This was again proven to be a situation in which the tentacles of organized crime had extended even into the Vatican's own bank.

Members of this House who have read the book Mob Rule by James Dubro will be aware of incidents that have happened in Canada in which criminals have talked about laundering their money through apparently legitimate businesses. They have also talked about their practices in corrupt registration of deeds. Much of this depends on having an official in place who is controlled by these individuals. Without someone in a key position some of these schemes would fail.

Members of this House have been lobbied on behalf of organized crime, but innocently. One particular Member of the House whose integrity is absolutely beyond question was asked by local business people who were well respected and by a priest to write to the Solicitor General asking for special treatment for a prisoner on the grounds of the prisoner's youth and inexperience. That prisoner was a key figure in organized crime who is well known now to have ordered murders from his cell and who was himself subsequently killed by a rival gang. One could go on.

We are all aware that from time to time criminals will allege that they had a judge or a policeman in their pocket. In many cases this allegation is totally without foundation. It is merely a matter of boasting and trying to appear more powerful to the people they are trying to impress. However, it may not always be boasting. While the question exists it should be examined.

I repeat what I said at the outset. I certainly would not want to see, and I know that no Member of the House would want to see, a special committee of the Senate and of the House of Commons used in any way as a fishing expedition or used in any way to endanger people's reputations without full proof. But the mere fact that such a committee was known to be sitting, was known to be willing to receive witnesses, would itself cast a very bright light of publicity on the activities of organized crime and would act as a deterrent.

We have certainly seen that whenever politicians have shown the courage to tackle organized crime they have been able to win. We need only look to that extraordinarily brave

Italian mayor in Palermo who in spite of threats to him and his family went ahead in standing up to organized crime. The implications have been tremendous, both in the United and in Italy.

We also have to remember, as my colleague from Winnipeg pointed out in a previous debate on this subject, now that it is less profitable and less safe for organized criminals to ply their trade in the United States and in Italy they will be looking for other places to move to and other sources of influence. Canada must be prepared for this. I suggest that the establishment of a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to examine this whole subject could only be a useful and constructive one.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to address the House on the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for a parliamentary inquiry into organized crime. Much of the organized criminal activity in Canada involves the supplying of illegal goods and services, gambling, loan sharking, drugs, prostitution, pornography, and other forms of vice are included. Press reports indicate that organized crime is also involved in legitimate business with the purpose to monopolize services and manipulate prices. Within these structures activity is not dependent upon any one individual, and the criminal activity will continue to flourish even if one or more of the principals is removed.

We also know that persons involved in organized crime represent a wide variety of backgrounds and origins. They are groups of criminals, some working within structures as complex as those of some large corporations and subject to internal laws which are rigidly enforced. Their actions are well thought out conspiracy aimed at gaining control over fields of activity in order to amass profits.

All Canadians are concerned that organized criminals be thwarted, exposed, punished, and incapacitated to show that their business will not be tolerated in Canada. But I ask, Mr. Speaker, is the way the Hon. Member for Trinity suggests the best way to deal with organized crime in Canada?

Some Canadians, perhaps influenced by media, may have vastly inflated views of the extent of organized crime in Canada. While I do not want to minimize the threat posed by organized crime in Canada, particularly with respect to drug trafficking, the combined law enforcement efforts of the various orders of government in Canada are increasingly effective in controlling organized crime.

A major problem with inquiries of the nature proposed here is that they attract a great deal of public attention. There are public hearings, daily reports in the media, and discussions of the latest revelations on national news and interview programs which could sensationalize the issue and undermine the work of law enforcement authorities.

A parliamentary committee collects information. It is not a court of law where the rules of evidence are strictly applied. When there is a breach of criminal conduct only a trial, where a defence can be made public, satisfies the Canadian sense of justice.

Therefore, because the rules of evidence are less rigorous in parliamentary inquiries than those applicable to Canadian courts, inquiries have to be handled very carefully. Moreover, evidence educed before such an inquiry could not be used in court proceedings and thus is of little value from a law enforcement perspective.

Moreover, it is likely that a parliamentary inquiry would unnecessarily alarm Canadians by creating the impression that organized crime has not been adequately addressed by Canadian police and the courts. In addition, I am concerned that an inquiry would tend to deflect both attention and resources away from ongoing intelligence and enforcement efforts, and possibly retard the investigation and prosecution of major cases.

I believe that the arrangements we already have in this country are our strength in combating organized crime. We have a federal police force, the RCMP, dealing with the problem. We have all levels of government and their enforcement agencies co-operating to provide an effective shield against organized crime. We have national intelligence systems, national police training programs, joint force operations, and a host of other mechanisms. Major institutions, such as the Canadian banking community, are examining ways and means of minimizing the extent to which they can be used to launder money.

Those efforts are not widely appreciated and reported on in the media. In Canada, we tend to proceed more quietly and with less fanfare than in the United States.

In my view the approach of Canadian law enforcement authorities to organized crime is effective. It focuses efforts and resources and reflects excellent co-operation between all jurisdictions in the prevention, detection, investigation, and prosecution of organized crime figures. Enforcement policy and activities operate to preserve the confidence of Canadians in the integrity of our social, political and economic institutions as the major influences constraining the corruption that organized crime attempts to promote.

Key to this is the integrity of Canada's police, courts, and other law enforcement institutions as our front line defence against organized crime. Fortunately, these institutions have been and remain free of corruption, and we must sustain policy and programs to ensure that it will never become a country in which the underworld can take root.

The Government recognizes the Hon. Member's legitimate concerns respecting organized crime. A parliamentary inquiry would add little to the mechanisms already in place to deal with organized crime. Rather, this House should support and encourage the federal and provincial Governments in their law enforcement activities, including the expeditious handling of the proceeds of crime and mutual legal assistance legislation which are designed to make the law more effective in dealing with organized crime.

While I am confident that the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity reflects serious concern over the extent of organized crime in Canadian society and in advancing measures to facilitate enforcement efforts, the Hon. Member can be assured that members of the Canadian police community and other dedicated criminal justice professionals are dealing competently in their response to the problem. They have the confidence of this Government and merit the support of all Members of the House, and Canadians generally.

I believe that it would not be in the best interest of Canadians and our efforts against organized crime to establish a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate before the House on the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). In looking carefully at the motion I see are not talking about an over-all investigation into organized crime in this country. Canada is a very different country from that south of the border in the United States of America. Many of our images of organized crime come from the United States and perhaps from things that we as children may have seen on television, for those of us who had television when we were children, or read about from south of the border.

Television programs, movies, and books all give us a picture of organized crime, violence and essentially corruption that may result, in addition to the terror, murder, and death that is caused by the activities of people engaged in organized crime. That is one image that we have of organized crime, as I say, mostly coming from south of the border, but more and more we also hear of the activities of organized crime in Canada.

When one looks closely at the motion proposed by the Hon. Member for Trinity, an over-all investigation into organized crime and the extent of organized crime is not what is being suggested, but rather an inquiry into the extent to which organized crime is connected to the legislative, judicial, and administrative institutions of Canadian society. That is a very directed question and I would submit a very timely one, given the nature of this Parliament and the type of changes that are taking place in the way legislative decisions are made in this country.

As a result of the recent reforms to the House of Commons, as a further result of the greater efforts at lobbying individual Members and Governments that have taken place only in the last several years, we are seeing effective means whereby individuals, corporations, or groups with large sums of money, however they may get it, can use that money to influence the decision-making of this Parliament, of the Cabinet, and of the Government.

If that can be done at this level of Canadian society, at what we regard as the highest level of democratic decision-making in the country, at the level of the federal Parliament, and if those lobbying efforts can be made which are financed by funds collected in various ways or coming from corporate coffers, then we must be careful to ensure that any activity of that nature, that any influencing attempted on the legislative, judicial, and administrative bodies, and on the institutions of Canadian society which guarantee us the democracy, is tightly controlled, regulated, and insulated from the activities of those who would seek to corrupt governmental, institutional, and administrative decision-making in this country.

As we know, so many of the decisions that are most important in this country are not made in this legislature or by the Cabinet, because it is impossible for these decisions to be made. There are numerous administrative tribunals and boards. The CRTC makes numerous decisions which affect the corporate viability and profitability of Canadian corporations whether they be privately or publicly owned, or owned by a consortium. The operation of those companies and institutions are affected by many administrative decisions made outside this House.

If we look only at the House of Commons, we increasingly see an incredible effort to influence the decisions of Members of the House. We saw it most recently with the tobacco Bills, C-51 and C-204. There was extensive lobbying of individual Members, and I believe that will increase, perhaps to the extent that it is carried on in the United States where thousands of lobbyists in Washington attempt to influence the decision-makers in the Senate and House of Representatives.

I believe a study of the effect of organized crime on institutions is not a narrow point but a focused point. This is a timely motion moved by the Hon. Member for Trinity. There will be an increased focus of attention on how Members of Parliament and members of the Cabinet are making decisions that affect what happens in Canada.

There has been a rise in the number of corporations that are involved in the decisions that are made behind closed doors on the Hill. Many of these corporations include many former powerful federal and provincial politicians.

We know that organized crime is active in this country but we cannot limit an inquiry of this nature into the kind of godfather, Mafia-type activity with which we associate organized crime.

The definition of organized crime urged upon us by the Member for Trinity involved two or more people working together to effect an illegal purpose. That is somewhat the definition of conspiracy. Any conspiracy where two or more people get together for an illegal purpose is an organized criminal activity.

We must also consider organized crime in relation to corporate activity, whether it is in the area of environmental pollution or the breaking of environmental laws in an organized way by corporate decision-making or by criminal neglect on the part of corporate boards or management. That too is an organized crime and we must be vigilant about that type of activity as well.

When organizations that violate environmental laws, health and safety laws, or laws protecting workers, band together to try to influence the Members of the House, committees of the House or influence the Government to relax enforcement procedures, that too is evidence of organized crime influencing the legislative and administrative institutions of Canadian society.

The Hon. Member who spoke before me was concerned about the danger that this motion may scare people. Other Members may debate organized crime in this country and the extent to which it should be addressed. I think we should focus on what the motion says, which is to consider to what extent organized criminal activity is connected to the legislative, judicial and administrative institutions of Canadian society.

This would be a timely inquiry and one that should consider the activities of lobbyists and lobbying groups. I think this question ought to be studied and a joint committee of this Parliament and the other place would be the appropriate body to study it. I support the motion.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, no one can dispute that there is organized crime in Canada. However, the motion before us today would seem to suggest that Canada does not have enough legal mechanisms to counter organized crime and those who live by it.

The mechanisms we have may not be perfect, but they are continually being improved to ensure that Canadians can live in a safe country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may describe, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Trinity, a few of the mechanisms that already exist for investigating and fighting organized crime. The police, Crown counsel and the regulatory authorities have used these mechanisms successfully to render harmless those criminals who would otherwise profit from society's illicit lusts and cravings.

[English]

First, let us take the Criminal Code. It contains, in section 31(2), a provision which enables the court to declare "forfeit" the possession of property obtained by crime. Similarly, the Narcotic Control Act allows for the seizure of anything relating to an offence under the Act. Clever use of the provisions of these two Acts has led to the ill-gotten gains of the organized criminal drug trafficker being seized by the courts.

The Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) spoke also of the ingenuity of the criminal. I dare say that we have a tremendous amount of ingenuity in our police forces and our research institutions. As they develop more effective techniques of criminal analysis, that ingenuity is on the leading edge of keeping up with and in fact ahead of the criminal element that exists in our country.

Another section of the Criminal Code allows for the same punishment to be given for a conspiracy to commit an offence as for the offence itself. This is a particularly valuable weapon against organized crime because it allows police to be proactive in their investigations. By the means of legal wiretaps, they can follow the planning of a crime and then step in and arrest the offenders before the crime itself has been actually committed. This can stop illicit drugs hitting the street, release the loan shark victim from the threat of violence, and prevent the bookie from laying off his bets with another organized criminal in the United States. In addition, the whole organized criminal gang can be prosecuted at the same time as co-conspirators.

[Translation]

In the past ten years, this tactic has been used successfully against organized criminals. Thanks to the help of judges who are more inclined to impose severe penalties on drug traffickers and want to acquire a better understanding of the mechanisms of organized crime, there have been some real mopping-up operations recently.

[English]

I used the words peines plus sévères. I call upon the Justices of our country to vigorously enforce severe penalties which I believe are the deterrent element.

In one Canadian jurisdiction, 400 organized criminals of one sort or another were put behind bars, rendered inactive, or induced to flee this country to escape prosecution. All this within five years of the decision being taken to declare legal war on organized crime.

The criminal courts are not the only battle front on which the war is being waged. Neither are all the soldiers, police and prosecutors. As vendors of illegal goods and services, organized criminals frequently cross swords with the regulatory agencies in our country, both federal and provincial. Customs and income tax officers, stock exchange and liquor licensing officials are just as involved in suppressing organized criminal activity as are police officers and Crown attorneys.

There is a program you may know of, Sir, called Crime Stoppers which evolved from the U.S. It is now very successfully established in the National Capital Region in co-operation with the public, police forces, the judiciary and the legal community. I want to mention Richard Raymond, from Raymond Steel, Bruce Hillary, Sketchley Cleaners; Sgt. Harrison of the Ottawa Police Force, Gary Grant from Sheffield Graphics and Doris Johnson from Crime Stoppers, all of whom have played a major, private role in making this program in Ottawa a most successful one in attacking the criminal element in the National Capital Region. In fact, it is the most successful one of its kind in North America. All of the individuals and officials I have mentioned are fundamental to the task of tracing the financial exploits, the business deals, the empire building, the cheating and the lying and the scams of the organized criminal. These almost invisible officials and individuals patiently weed out the liquor licence application of known criminals who are seeking it for a bar where the real business is to sell and push drugs. They develop evidence to collect the thousands of dollars of tax on undeclared illicit income. They bring about the dispension of trading in phoney stock and seize consignments of heroine or other contraband coming into the country's ports of entry.

All this activity incapacitates the organized criminal without fanfare, without drama and usually without the public ever knowing about it. These are the concerned officials and citizens of our country. Regulatory agencies and administrative tribunals do not always make front page news. You know as well as I, Mr. Speaker, that the RCMP always get their man or woman. What they need are more resources to allow them to do that. They do not want to see more public funds spent on expensive task forces to tell them what they should be doing. They know what they should be doing. They need more help and more money.

In the area of legislation, the Hon. Member for Trinity made reference to the fact that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) has introduced Bill C-61, which I understand is coming back to the House shortly from committee. It focuses on the proceeds of crime legislation. It will enable the courts in certain circumstances to strip criminals of assets obtained through criminal means. The proposed legislation will allow the courts to order that the proceeds of designated drug offences and 23 Criminal Code offences be forfeited to the federal or provincial Governments. I urge my colleagues on all sides of the House to make the public aware of these efforts and to pass this legislation before a recess for the summer.

It is essential and it is long overdue. It will give the courts an opportunity to enforce more vigorously what we have to do to seize those assets acquired through criminal activity.

The Minister of Justice has also introduced Bill C-58 which will enable the implementation of the mutual legal assistance treaties discussed previously. The battle is far from won. We all know that. A concerted and continuous effort has to be made, but we are on the right track and this Government is proud of what it has tried to accomplish in this area. I am a little apprehensive that the proposed parliamentary task force might retard ongoing federal, national and international initiatives aimed at organized crime control. The key to this is to get Bill C-61 passed to give the courts and the judges more power to seize assets acquired through criminal activities. Let us throw the book at them so that your children, Sir, my children and our children's children will not have their lives affected by disgusting criminal activity that infiltrates our schools, even the primary schools where kids acquire drug habits.

Let us not set up a task force. Let us give the authorities more power, money and resources to go after the criminal element in our country.

• (1450)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Chartrand (Verdun—Saint-Paul): Mr. Speaker, today I would like to give my assessment of the problem of organized crime. First of all, I would like to say that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is right to be concerned about organized crime in Canada. My only criticism is the solution she suggests. In fact, an inquiry of this type would be more appropriate in the United States, where fragmented attempts to enforce legislation, lack of co-ordination, states' rights and many other elements make it very difficult to discover the extent of the problem posed by organized crime.

In Canada, we are lucky to have a very co-operative system under which policing, prosecution and enforcement bodies exchange information and co-operate in their operations. Thanks to this network we have a very clear understanding of the problem we are dealing with.

The many information sources at our disposal include the annual report prepared by Criminal Intelligence Service Canada, published by the committee on organized crime of the Canadian Association of Chiefs of Police; the annual RCMP report on drugs, Customs Canada's drugs seizure report; and the excellent reports prepared by the various services in Quebec and British Columbia dealing with organized crime. According to these sources, organized crime is not beaten but at least there is little chance it will expand.

In recent years, motorcycle gangs have been a major problem. They have become involved in all forms of organized crime, including drug trafficking, prostitution and contract killings.

The major gangs are very business-like. They increase their numbers by taking over smaller ones. Many bikers have shed the image of the sloppily-dressed trouble-maker and become clever, extremely image-conscious businessmen. The big crime organizations are also present in Canada. The most important members work in central and western Canada, but they often have contacts in many other countries. These groups are involved in what are often referred to as consensual crimes, in other words, customers agree to purchase the illicit goods or services they are offered. These crimes include drug trafficking, prostitution, gambling and loan sharking.

Although the Atlantic provinces appear to be relatively untouched by the more insidious forms of organized crime, there is nevertheless a thriving business in cigarette and alcohol smuggling. The region is also used as a dropping-off point for large cargoes of soft drugs, most of which come from the Caribbean. Youth gangs are also involved in organized crime activities and concentrate on gambling, drug trafficking and extortion. Occasionally, intense rivalry among gangs lead to multiple killings.

In a way, these gangs are similar to the motorcycle gangs. Since 1920, sociologists have held the view that youth gangs are often the first step towards much greater involvement in organized crime.

It is essential that measures be taken to prevent new generations of criminals, but I don't think an inquiry on organized crime is the answer. The emphasis must be on education and jobs.

By reducing the unemployment rate and by stressing the needs of Canada's youth, this Government has done a great deal to create a socio-economic climate that is not favourable for the development of organized crime.

Organized crime is a problem in most countries throughout the world. Even East Block countries will admit it exists there as well. There is an international network that focusses on dealing with these problems on a worldwide basis.

Thanks to this mechanism we are familiar with the problems of other countries, and it is reassuring to find that, compared to most countries, Canada has not been overrun by organized crime. Our parliamentary system, and our custom of appointing judges, Crown counsels, police officers and administrators according to merit, have given us a tradition of loyal public servants. It is one of our best defences against organized crime. We have a judicial system that we can trust and of which we can be proud. However, we must be prepared to provide the material assistance that goes along with that trust and that pride. We cannot ask our police officers, our Crown counsels and our judges to keep fighting organized crime without giving them the necessary tools, and today, these include the authority to participate with other countries in a form of judicial co-operation, and also the authority to declare forfeit the financial proceeds of organized crime. The House can give them those tools by adopting Bills C-68 and C-61. We should focus our efforts on supporting our judicial system, instead of ignoring its needs and creating a parliamentary task force.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are indebted to the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for bringing forward a very interesting motion which has to do with the calling of a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to inquire into the nature and the extent of organized crime in Canada.

I recall the opening remarks of the Hon. Member for Trinity. She pointed out that when she put forward a similar motion last year, the speeches of government Members who responded had a certain ring of similarity. She responded with some measure of disdain for that, and I do not blame her. I feel the same way about that as she does. Nevertheless, if we wanted to go back into the annals of Hansard, I suspect that we would find that about five or six years ago, she may have been guilty of the same offence. However, we do not take offence for that. I might just say that that is one of the illnesses that exists in this Chamber that we wish we would be cured of.

While the motion is an interesting one, I doubt that it is a very workable one. I say that not because we do not share the same goals. What she is talking about has an awesome ring of urgency to it. We know that organized crime does infiltrate into many segments of our society, and it causes fear and dread in many households, and it feeds on fear and recrimination if the detailed terms of any contract are not fulfilled. We know that it is an awesome problem in Canada. However, it is the kind of problem that I do not know whether we can solve or even approach through a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate.

I might use as an analogy an experience I had when I was living in the United States. I attended a university in the mid-western United States and was graduated there. Upon graduation, I decided that because I could not afford to move home, I would take employment in the United States as a teacher. That was in the late 1950s when that country was still suffering from the backlash of McCarthyism.

Because of the McCarthyism earlier in the fifties, many of the states had enacted legislation which required that people who worked in any way within the public sector, people like teachers, would have to take an oath upholding the Constitution of the United States. That was an admirable goal and I do not blame those states for wanting to ensure that those who worked for the Government in any way and particularly those who were entrusted with the education of their children would also be those who respected democracy and would not endorse the violent overthrow of their Government.

The problem with the proposal, however, was that those people who respected democracy, wanted to enhance freedom, and respected the family and the rights of the children were shut out from the teaching profession, for example, if they were not American citizens. They could not help the United States by enhancing democracy and a sense of freedom within the country. However, native-born Americans, who were full citizens but may have been communists or communist sympathizers and who may have endorsed the violent overthrow of the Government, would have no compunction about taking an oath like that since their sense of morality has nothing to do with absolutes, absolute honesty or absolute truth. They would not mind taking an oath of fidelity to the Constitution of the United States and then doing everything in their power to overthrow the Government of the United States. That would not bother people like that a bit.

There we had the anomaly of people who wanted to preserve and enhance democracy in the United States being shut out if they were not citizens, and those who would have gladly created problems in the United States being willing to take an oath which they did not intend to uphold. The problem is that the proposal of the Hon. Member for Trinity, while it may not be exactly parallel to that, has a similar ring to it.

If we were to conduct public hearings across Canada of the nature the Hon. Member is proposing, those people who have been affected by organized crime would be the least likely to come forward to give testimony in a public hearing because of the nature of the problem. What person who has been caught in the grip of extortionate financiers, threatened for not keeping up extortionate payments, what person who has had his life or possessions threatened or has been told that his legs will be broken if he does not pay that 30 per cent on his loan, will come forward in a public hearing to give evidence of how organized crime is treating him in Canada? Will people like that come forward?

The nature of the problem militates against the success of the proposal. If we recall the Congressional hearings in the United States, the only people who came forward were those who were totally disguised and had been given immunity. They were people who had earlier been convicted of a crime or who were part of the family of crime in the United States and were given immunity from further prosecution or were promised protection. They were people who were plea-bargaining. They appeared because their sentences were minimized or done away with. Those Congressional hearings were at least moderately successful.

However, the proposal of the Hon. Member, while it is a goal that the Government shares and I certainly endorse, will probably not be workable. While I commend her for the goal and the ambition she is showing in trying to deal with organized crime, I think the proposal itself would not be a workable one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being three o'clock, this House stands adjourned until Monday next at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) rises on a point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on today's Order Paper there is a motion for allocation of time on second reading of Bill C-129 to be offered by the Minister of State for the Treasury Board and Deputy Government House Leader.

Subject to your guidance as to when this point should be argued, Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order that this motion is improperly before the house at this time, by reason of the fact that the consultation required by the relevant Standing Order, at least with the Official Opposition, did not take place.

I would be prepared to make further comment in that regard, but I would like your guidance as to whether you would like me to argue this point now, or whether I should argue the point when the motion is called, as I understand it will be at an appropriate point during Routine Proceedings.

If you say that I should argue this point when the motion is called, Mr. Speaker, then obviously I would say that it would be without prejudice to the point that I intend to make.

I also want to state that it is my intention to raise as a point of order and as a point of privilege the acceptability of the notice of motion the Government placed on the Order Paper to suspend our Standing Orders with respect to the days and hours of sitting in order to facilitate the Government's legislative program which, through its own mismanagement and incompetence, has so far proven unable to fit in within the rules of this House as adopted by this House pursuant to the parliamentary reform for which the Government takes such credit every time it can.

I raise this now, Mr. Speaker, because when I raised a point of order about the acceptability of another motion by the Government to suspend the rules of the House in order to facilitate its approach to bringing the abortion issue before the House, you allowed Members to make comments, but you stated that, as far as you were concerned, this matter had to be dealt with if and when the motion was called formally.

Therefore, I wish to say that I am certainly prepared to argue the acceptability of the Government's notice of motion on today's Order Paper to suspend the rules not only with respect to one matter, but to throw them out of the window entirely for a purpose which I think is unacceptable to the country. If it is your wish, Mr. Speaker, and I suspect that may be the case from what you said the last time the Government put down a motion of this sort with respect only to the question of abortion, I would not be surprised if you informed me and the other Members of the House that the point should be argued in detail if and when the motion was called. I wished to ensure that I was not in some way waiving my rights and those of other Members of the House to argue the acceptability of the motion, by not raising the matter at the first opportunity this morning.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West for his intervention. Dealing with the two points he has raised, first with respect to Bill C-129, I certainly understand his position. It would be better if that were left until after we have gone through Routine Proceedings, and I will hear the Hon. Member then, depending on what the Government does.

With respect to the point of privilege or the alleged point of privilege the Hon. Member has raised with respect to the notice regarding summer sittings, the Hon. Member has certainly read the Chair's mind correctly, and that should be postponed until we see whether or not that is going to be proceeded with.

With respect to the so-called abortion motion, it is true that I felt that, under the circumstances given the particular matter, it was probably in the interests of this place to allow some preliminary comment at that time, which I did. I would prefer, for the better order of things with respect to the second matter the Hon. Member for Windsor West has raised, to hold that off until such time as we see if, in fact, it is actually going to be brought forward. But I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have notice of his concerns and I will make sure he is not in any way prejudiced by not insisting on proceeding at this time.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS—NINETEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting the nineteenth report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, in both official languages. The report recommends substantial changes to the Bank Act and regulations. Later this morning, a Private Members' Bill will be introduced complying with the terms of the report, and introducing an appropriate Bill.

The Bill will deal with how bank charges are to be imposed. It will limit the ability to impose charges under certain circumstances and will provide stiff penalties for non-compliance with the Bank Act.

WESTERN GRAIN STABILIZATION ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-132, an Act to amend the Western Grain Stabilization Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

The Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-133, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Pari-mutuel betting).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-292, an Act to amend the Bank Act (fair banking practices).

Mr. Speaker: Mr. McCrossan, seconded by Mrs. Collins, moves for leave to introduce a Bill entitled, an act to amend the Bank Act (fair banking practices).

Mr. McCrossan: I would like to point out that we had arranged that the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) would second the Bill. I am sorry if that was not communicated to the Table.

Mr. Speaker: I am very pleased to ask the House to permit me to change that accordingly, and I thank the Hon. Member for Trinity. Mr. McCrossan, seconded by Miss Nicholson, moves for leave to introduce a Bill entitled, an act to amend the bank act (fair banking practices).

Is it the pleasure of the House that the Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, this Bill will provide a means of implementing the nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. It is the result of some months of hearings into bank service charge practices. I would like to indicate that the regulations in the Bill will allow the prohibition of the common practice of having consumers waive their consumer rights when they open bank accounts. It will also allow the Government to set disclosure standards for future banking practices as well as prohibit certain bank service charges which the committee unanimously feels are not in the public interest.

I would like to thank all the Members of the committee, both government Members and Opposition, for their support with respect to this Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition in accordance with Standing Order 106. The petition is signed by a number of residents in the constituency of Spadina and the City of Toronto who are concerned that the Conservative Government, having no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, has in fact undertaken to do so, largely only through negotiations between the heads of state.

Whereas this agreement will hinder Canada's ability to develop our regional, cultural and economic needs and not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market but threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition from residents of Spadina and the City of Toronto with respect to the immigration policy. On one point the petition has met a promise of the Minister to be granted next month concerning unmarried sons and daughters of all ages, but the second point of the petition is that it is now two years since the then Minister of Justice promised to delete or remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more when they are sponsoring their parents. Canadian citizens have a right to sponsor them at less than 60 years, which the residents do not. This promise has not yet been fulfilled, the distinction not removed. Therefore, the petitioners ask Parliament to ensure that the Government will now fulfill its promise.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a duly certified petition from a number of Canadian residents pointing out that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. While the Prime Minister promised that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised, the trade agreement negotiated does in fact threaten the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, and to equalize opportunities between the regions.

The petitioners point out that the agreement would deny Canada policy freedom and secure access and will result in a loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament—

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind Hon. Members that a short explanation of a petition is one thing but a long argument in favour of the petition is something else again. I know the Hon. Member will want to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition under the provision of Standing Order 106.

This petition is from residents of Winnipeg who say that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society different from that of the U.S. Therefore, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition complying with Standing Order 106 from residents of Canada from Glenbain, Saskatchewan and Neidpath, Saskatchewan who point out that the Government had no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, that the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) promise that sovereignty would not be affected has not been kept. The petition goes on to point out that the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty is being affected by this deal because future Governments will not be able—

Mr. Speaker: Again, I hesitate to interrupt but the rule is quite clear. The House wants to hear what the petition is asking for, not all of the arguments that might be mustered in favour of it. There is some complaint obviously in the House this morning with respect to the length of explanations and I think the Chair has to recognize that. The Hon. Member will conclude his remarks.

Mr. Althouse: The petitioners list eight or ten very cogent arguments as to why they are opposed to the free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, but the main thrust of their argument is that Parliament should be dissolved to call an election so that Canadians may make the decision since they have not yet been granted such an opportunity.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table petitions signed by residents of Trois-Pistoles, Saint-Fabien, Saint-Cyprien, Notre-Dame-du-Portage, Saint-Arsène, Biencourt, Lac-des-Aigles, Cabano, Rivière-Bleue, Dégelis, Saint-Éleuthère and Rivière-du-Loup.

The highway safety campaign continues in Quebec because the petitioners hope for changes and they are aware that since 1974, the highway safety regulations allow the installation of air bags for drivers of passenger cars and they believe that this device would reduce the number of serious injuries on the roads.

For these reasons, the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to require air bags in the front seat of cars and adjustable seat belts with shoulder straps for rear-seat passengers.

SUB-POST OFFICE AT LAKE BONAVISTA

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege today to present to this House a petition signed by more than 1,900 residents of Lake Bonavista who object to the closing of Sub-post Office No. 102 located in the Lake Bonavista Promenade Shopping Mall and whereas Shoppers Drug Mart, Lake Bonavista Promenade Shopping Mall, is willing to have the said post office relocated in that store, and whereas Canada Post has refused to transfer the said sub-post office, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to re-establish a sub-post office in the lake Bonavista shopping mall.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-55—REFUGEE DETERMINATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House of Commons and through it to the Government of Canada.

The first one comes from Canadian citizens and residents from the Cities of Mississauga and Brampton in the Metro Toronto area. They complain and petition the Government to change the fundamental aspects of Bill C-55, the refugee determination Bill which is currently before the House. They argue that the Bill is largely unchanged, that there is still a prescreening stage, that there is still a third safe country concept to be established by the Government and that the weak appeal system to the Federal Court is completely unacceptable. These petitioners are asking the Government to reconsider these three major objections that have been the source of much aggravation in our country.

CLOSING OF EMBASSY OF ECUADOR

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my second petition deals with the question of the embassy that was in Ecuador. It comes from petitioners in Oshawa, Toronto and the City of Etobicoke.

These petitioners in three different petitions ask the Government of Canada to reconsider the closing. This is causing extreme hardship with waiting periods of as long as six months, and people have to go to Bogota, Colombia which is the closest Canadian Embassy office. They ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to reconsider his decision to close the embassy.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

TIME ALLOCATION MOTION PURSUANT TO S.O. 117

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Friday, the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) got to his feet, and, as recorded at page 16127 of Hansard, purported to give the notice required for an order to be made under Standing Order 117 of the Standing Orders with respect to time allocation for the completion of the debate on second reading of Bill C-129, a Bill to enable the privatization of Air Canada. According to Hansard, the Minister of State and Deputy Government House Leader said:

> Mr. Speaker, a question or comment. I wish to advise that since an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 115 and Standing Order 116 with respect to an allocation of time for the second reading of Bill C-129—

He then went on to say:

> I therefore, under the provisions of Standing Order 117, give notice of my intention to move a time allocation motion at the next sitting of the House for the purpose of allocating a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of the second reading stage of the said Bill.

I want to draw your attention, Sir, to Standing Order 117. It provides the basis for the notice purported to be given by the Deputy Government House Leader on Friday. It says in part:

> A Minister of the Crown who from his or her place in the House, a previous sitting, has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Orders 115 or 116 in respect of proceedings at the stage at which a public Bill was then under consideration either in the House or in any committee, and has given notice of his or her intention to do so—

And so on. This means that in order to determine whether Standing Order 117 can be invoked in the way intended by the Government we have to look at Standing Orders 115 and 116. Standing Order 115 says, in part:

> When a Minister of the Crown, from his or her place in the House, states that there is agreement among the representatives of all Parties to allot a specified number of days or hours . . . the Minister may propose a motion, without notice . . . and every such motion shall be decided forthwith, without debate or amendment.

Standing Order 116 provides that when a Minister of the Crown, from his or her place in the House, states that a majority of the representatives of the several Parties have come to an agreement in respect of a proposed allotment of days, then there is a provision in the Standing Order for putting that agreement into effect.

It is clear, on reading these three Standing Orders together, that in order to found a motion for time allocation under Standing Order 117 properly, the representative of the Government must have specifically consulted with representatives of the other Parties as to, first, whether or not there could be unanimous agreement on a motion to allocate time to complete the stage of debate of a Bill then under consideration, and, second, whether it has been possible for an agreement to be reached among a majority of the Parties for a motion to allocate time for the same purpose, and that there has been an agreement for that purpose.

The rules in effect say that there has to be consultation between representatives of the Government and representatives of the other Parties, specifically for the purpose of seeing whether the kinds of agreements made possible by Standing Orders 115 and 116 could be reached before the representative of the Government can rise in the House to give notice of an intention to move a motion for time allocation under Standing Order 117.

The rules do not say that it is enough for the Government House Leader or his or her representative to go to members of the Official Opposition and members of any other Parties in the House and say: "How many more speakers do you have," or, "Is the debate going to go on for a while," or, "Do you think we can finish this today". That is not what the rules say. The rules are very clear.

The representative of the Government has to come to representatives of the other Parties and say specifically, "Can we reach unanimous agreement to allocate time," and if that is not possible, he then has to say, "Can a majority of the Parties reach agreement on the allocation of time". I submit that if that has not been done, any attempt to move a motion under Standing Order 117 is not based on the foundation required by Standing Order 117, and therefore, in this particular case, this notice of motion that was given on Friday and the motion itself on the Order Paper are both defective. Under the rules, you cannot, Mr. Speaker, I say with all due respect, allow the Government to present its motion.

I further point out that the Standing Order speaks of an effort to reach agreement, when it comes to Standing Order 115, involving representatives of all Parties, and when it comes to seeking agreement with respect to the provisions of Standing Order 116, there must be a consultation between and an agreement among a majority of the representatives of the several Parties. I submit that this must mean, in the case of the Official Opposition and any other Parties in the House, people who have been formally designated by the Leaders of their respective Parties to engage in consultations for such purposes, the purposes of these three Standing Orders, or at the very least, people designated by such representatives to act on their behalf.

It is not enough for the Government House Leader or the Government Whip to come back to the opposition lobby or to go out into the hall or into the restaurant and, coming upon a member of the Official Opposition or a member of any other Party, engage in some conversation, and then return to the House and purport—and I am not saying that it would not be done with complete good faith—to offer to the Chair the view or the belief that the consultations required by these three Standing Orders have been duly carried out with representatives of the other Parties.

There will be others speaking to this point of order on behalf of the Official Opposition, but I want to say that the facts of the matter do not support the requirements of Standing Order 115 and 116 that before there can be a motion properly offered to this House under Standing Order 117, there must be an effort by way of meaningful, open and obvious consultation to seek either an agreement among all Parties to allocate time to complete debate on the stage of a Bill then before the House or at least agreement between the majority of the Parties for that purpose.

If you look in any recognized dictionary, I think you will find, Mr. Speaker, that it is very clear, and I am sure the courts have ruled upon this on many occasions, that agreement must mean a clear and obvious meeting of the minds on the point at issue. The people on both sides of any such supposed agreement must realize and understand what they are entering into on the basis of what is being sought from them. This is what is a meeting of the minds or an understanding in a formal sense, as the term "agreement" has been defined not only in recognized dictionaries but, very often, in our courts of law.

If, as I think the facts will confirm, there may have been some conversation between the Government House Leader or the Government Whip and members of the Opposition, or the Official Opposition at least, with respect to the number of speakers yet to be heard on the Official Opposition's side on Bill C-129, this is not what is required by our Standing Orders. There must be a clear statement, first by the Government House Leader or the Government Whip, that he is approaching the recognized and accepted representatives of the other Parties for the purpose of seeking an agreement specifically on whether there can be a unanimous order to allocate time, and if that is not possible, to see if there can be an order supported by the majority of Parties in the House.

I submit that that has not taken place with the motion now before the House, so the motion is defective. It has not been founded on the basis required by the rules, and the House cannot proceed on it. Therefore, I respectfully submit that this motion is not in order and cannot be received by you and placed before this House at this time.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. On Friday last, the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) did consult me about speakers. He knows that we were standing right here at that particular time. If I recall correctly, he asked me how many more speakers I had on the Air Canada Bill, and I said several. He asked how many, and I said I was not quite sure, but that there would be several. He said: "Thank you, that's all I have to know".

The Minister did consult me about speakers, but my point is that you and the Table Officers should think about setting precedents. The Minister did not indicate that he was consulting me regarding the possibility of time allocation under Standing Orders 115 or 116. He consulted me about how many more speakers we had. I wonder if we want to set that kind of precedent.

My understanding is that when these rules were drafted, going back to the days of Stanley Knowles and Ged Baldwin, the practice at that time was that the House Leader from the government side would come across and say: "Look, we want to see if there is an agreement to allocate time, would you agree to some kind of an allocation of time for such and such a Bill, and if so, fine, we will do it together". That is under S. O. 115 where you require all Parties to agree. If one of the Parties did not agree, there is S. O. 116 where a majority of Parties can decide to allocate time.

That is the way it happened in the past. As far as I understand it, the House Leader would be up front about it and say he was consulting under S. O. 115 or S. O. 116. If we in the Opposition say no, then the Government House Leader has the right, under S. O. 117, to give notice of a motion, which he did on Friday afternoon.

I want to make the point that we were consulted about how many more participants there would be in the debate. In the absence of my House Leader I was in charge of communicating with the Government, so the proper procedure was followed. However, at that time I had no idea he was thinking of time allocation and using S. O. 115, S. O. 116 or S. O. 117. I make the point that we should be up front about those things. If you are thinking about time allocation, come across the way and ask if we would agree to one more speaker or two more speakers or two more hours or four more hours or one day or two days, and then the onus is upon us.

The last point I want to make is also very brief. At no time whatsoever would I agree on behalf of our Party to time allocation on the Air Canada Bill.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

Mr. Nystrom: We take that position because Air Canada is a Crown corporation which is a very important part of this country.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you.

Mr. Nystrom: We do not agree to time allocation on that Bill. That aside, we were not consulted specifically about time allocation.

Mr. Speaker: Out of an abundance of caution and patience I am going to hear further arguments, but as to whether or not there is any need for consultation, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) seems to have almost eliminated that from consideration. In any event, I shall hear other Members, but I will now hear the Hon. Minister for State (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my hon. friend from Yorkton—Melville for his considerable assistance to my argument without even having heard it.

I want to say first that if the Canadian people ever wanted evidence of the delays being perpetrated by the Opposition, the filibuster of my hon. friend, the House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray), is proof positive. I want to put this Bill in perspective and say why we did what we did on Friday afternoon.

This Bill was debated on May 24, May 25, May 27, June 1 and June 3, for a total of five days at second reading. Some 20 Members have spoken on the Bill. In an effort to freshen the list of speakers there have been two reasoned amendments put forward. The Opposition even forced a deferred division to a following day in order to stall for time. There were some eight point five hours, including the first one point five hours, spent in debate. I submit that that was the condition under which we were looking at the situation on Friday.

Having said that, I want to explain, within the bounds of what I am able to say about consultations, exactly what happened on Friday afternoon. My hon. friend from Windsor West made a very good point about meeting and discussing this with formally designated persons in the Opposition. That is very easy when the formally designated people are here. One cannot always find the formally designated people. Since it is inappropriate to point out that certain people are absent from the House, I will not point out that the formally designated people of the Official Opposition were not here. However, I will suggest that the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) was here. Knowing he has an interest in this Bill I went to him as one of the two members of the Official Opposition in the House, the only one around formally or informally designated, and consulted with him. That is all I can say because I think those consultations are private and I have no intention of laying them out on the floor of the House.

I then went to the NDP and my hon. friend from Yorkton—Melville, whom I took to be officially designated. He and I had discussions as laid out by him this morning and I confirmed by his empathic remarks that no agreement was possible. That is what happened.

I suggest that my hon. friend from Windsor West wishes to structure the words "I say, you say, she says, he says", as we go through this consultation. I have been on both sides of these consultations. My friend, Mr. Yvon Pinard, had them on several occasions when I was Deputy House Leader and House Leader of the Official Opposition. They were not structured discussions. He followed through with a motion under S. O. 117 or whatever number it was at that time and we never raised this specious argument that we had not worn a red tie and bowed or been officially designated. That is a specious argument.

We have had discussions with respect to the debate on this Bill. We have brought forward the motion. I submit that nowhere in the Standing Orders does it lay out exactly how these discussions are to take place, as my hon. friend from Windsor West suggests they should be put forward.

Lastly, I want to say this. There is a time to protest and make your point and that time was Friday afternoon. If you look at Hansard and the comments I made, they were not made after two o'clock or at two o'clock. There was plenty of time for the Official Opposition or their formally designated representative, whoever he or she might have been, to protest. They had time to say, "Wait a minute, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has given notice under the rules but he has not consulted". When would this protest take place? Surely it would have had to take place at the time I gave the notice.

I say with respect that the other arguments I make are valid, but I also say that my hon. friend is too late. If that protest had any validity at all, it should have been made on Friday afternoon by the House Leaders of the Opposition or the people they formally designate to represent them when they are not here, and I understand Members sometimes have to be elsewhere. If they did not make that protest on Friday, then they are too late.

To sum up, I submit that the consultations took place. They were not as fruitful as I would have liked them to be. However, my hon. friend from Yorkton—Melville was as forthright on Friday as he was this morning. There is obviously not going to be any consultation, and I understand that. That is why we are moving under S. O. 117. I submit that the Government is fully entitled to move that motion.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, we have dealt, at least in part, with the specific situation, but I think it is important to put on the record the Government's view about S. O. 115, S. O. 116 and S. O. 117. Those Standing Orders all deal with the issue of time allocation. The basic difference between S. O. 115 and S. O. 116 as a package and S. O. 117, and the most important difference for the House to be concerned about, is the giving of notice. S. O. 115 and S. O. 116 define the conditions under which notice can be waived, and you can proceed immediately in the case of S. O. 115 to the putting of the question. In the case of S. O. 116, you proceed immediately to the two-hour debate followed by the putting of the question.

S. O. 117, on the other hand, requires notice of the time allocation procedure. I suggest to the House that this is the essential difference between the three Standing Orders. Indeed, the Government gave notice on Friday.

The House Leader for the Official Opposition has taken the words "agreement could not be reached" and somehow attempted to turn them into "consultation is required". Our House Leader has indicated that it is a pattern of the Government, which I think operates frequently in the best interests of the House, to ensure that consultation takes place. However, consultation taking place and the requirement for consultation to take place, are phrases somewhat different and ideas somewhat different from the notion that agreement could not be reached.

• (1150)

Agreement cannot be reached for many and varied reasons. All you need do is to put your imagination to work. You cannot reach agreement because a particular Party in the House has not named an official representative at the moment in time when you would like to do something. You cannot reach agreement when, as I think the Member from Saskatchewan has made clear, from the beginning of dealings on this particular Bill it has been clear that the third Party in the House would not agree to any kind of time allocation.

You can reach the conclusion that agreement to waive notice on time allocation, with which Standing Orders 115 and 116 deal, would not have been forthcoming in this particular case and in many cases in the future.

You can have intransigence within the government Party on the issue of agreement to waiving notice. Surely it is a dominant principle in the Chamber that the business of the Chamber, for the most part, proceeds on the basis of advance notice. That is where our privileges are very much affected. If we have advance notice, we can be present for the debates and the votes. In the best interests of the smooth functioning of the House we have seen the wisdom, over time, of providing procedures for the waiving of the notice. Those procedures, in all instances, tend to have the characteristics of some degree of agreement.

Standing Order 115 suggests agreement of all Parties and it is silent on independence in the Chamber. Standing Order 116 deals with a relationship between the Government and the Official Opposition as a way of proceeding more quickly despite the objections of a third or fourth party.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of motion may come back on the table occasionally in the next few weeks or in the more distant future. I think it important, in whatever statement you make about it, that you pay attention to the basic difference between the three Standing Orders. The first two deal with the waiver of notice under specific conditions, the third one is the procedure to be followed when notice is given. It does not require consultation, it requires a conclusion of the Minister that agreement could not be reached on the allocation itself and, in particular, the waiver of notice.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Deputy House Leader said that these instances of delay are occurring far too often. The situation in which we presently find ourselves is certainly not one of delay but a bona fide disagreement on the procedure and the rules of this House. We on this side have a bona fide position which we want to state.

The Deputy House Leader has said that it is too late to make an intervention, and I will return to that later. First, he said that he held consultation with Members of the Official Opposition, that he consulted the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) and that the Member for Papineau said there were going to be other speakers.

The Member for Papineau is this Party's critic on External Affairs. I know what the Deputy House Leader asked the Member for Papineau because I was sitting right next to the Member for Papineau and I am this Party's designated representative on privatization, the heading under which this Bill is before the House of Commons. When this matter goes to committee I will also be this Party's representative on that particular committee. The Deputy House Leader obviously did not bother to check to see whether the proper representative of this Party was in the House at the particular time in question.

To go back to the suggestion that the objection had to be brought up at that particular time, the Deputy House Leader gave absolutely no indication that he was going to be moving time allocation. As far as I was concerned and, evidently, as far as the Member for Papineau was concerned, he wanted to know how many more speakers we were going to be presenting. There is no indication that there had been or had not been discussion among the House Leaders of the three Parties in the House of Commons. The House Leader spoke to the Member for Papineau quickly and then was gone. He asked one question and then was gone. That certainly was not a consultation, it certainly was not—

Mr. Lewis: Is that the only time I talked to him?

Mr. MacLellan: The only time that I know of. The Deputy House Leader certainly did not indicate more than one meeting with the Member for Papineau. I was here all Friday afternoon and he never asked me whether we could negotiate time allocation.

Standing Order 115 specifically says, "people who have been officially designated by the Party". There were not discussions among officially designated representatives of the three Parties in this particular case. As the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) has said, the Party designates its official representatives. The Government does not pick the official representatives in the opposition Parties and there were not official representatives designated by this Party. The Deputy House Leader asked that question, presumably moved on to the New Democratic Party, and then proceeded to move his motion.

He says that this is being dragged out, he says that there have been 20 speakers on this particular Bill. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not even 10 per cent of the Members of this House. We are dealing with a Bill which is very important to this country, the privatization of a Crown corporation which has existed in this country for 51 years. This is a very important Bill to which both opposition Parties have expressed their opposition and to which other Members wish to express their opposition. There has been no attempt, certainly by this Party, to try to delay debate on this Bill.

I submit that Your Honour has been fair to Parties in this House, but there comes a time when the rules have to be enforced. If the rules can be so liberally interpreted as is suggested by the Deputy House Leader, then the rules will become meaningless. There has to be a format upon which all Parties in this House can rely. If that format does not exist, the good will which we in this Party hope to engender among all Parties in this House will certainly break down. It cannot help but do so because we cannot find a reference point. We cannot go to the texts and get our interpretation and know what Your Honour will favour.

The motion put forward by the Deputy House Leader is completely out of order and should be so stated by Your Honour.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal very briefly with some points raised by the Deputy Government House Leader and his Parliamentary Secretary. First, the Deputy Government House Leader has argued that our point of order is not valid because it should have been raised at the time he gave notice on Friday. I am informed that Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled in 1971 that the time to raise the kind of point of order which we are currently arguing was not when the notice was given but when the motion was proposed. I am sure you have advice as to whether my recollection of Speaker Lamoureux's ruling is correct, and you will so inform us.

• (1200)

The rule in question refers to agreement, and the Oxford Illustrated Dictionary defines agreement as follows:

> mutual understanding; covenant, (law) contract legally binding on parties; accordance in opinion.

If one accepts this definition, it is impossible for there to have been any attempt to ascertain whether the agreement contemplated by the rules in question could have been reached, unless the Deputy Government House Leader went specifically to representatives of the Parties and said: "First, are you willing to agree unanimously on a motion to allocate time? If you are not willing to agree unanimously, can there be an arrangement among a majority?"

There is no way there can be such a thing as an agreement or an effort to determine whether there is agreement if what happens is entirely within the mind of one party, in this case the Deputy Government House Leader. There has to be some open verbal communication which the others involved can either hear or see.

It is not enough, as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Government House Leader says, for the Deputy Government House Leader to conclude personally that no agreement is possible. That is not what the rule says. Standing Order 117 does not say that when a Minister of the Crown informs the House that he or some other Minister is of the opinion or has reached a conclusion that the opportunity for agreement under Standing Order 115 or Standing Order 116 is not possible he can then move the motion contemplated by S. O. 117.

The Minister of the Crown has to tell the House that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Order 115 or Standing Order 116. A Minister cannot honestly do that unless there had previously taken place the steps which human beings recognize are necessary in order to reach or attempt to reach agreement. That means open communication, not within the mind of one of the parties, but among and between the minds of all the parties who are supposed to be taking part in the agreement which the rules in this case contemplate.

I respectfully submit that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Government House Leader is in error if he says that the only purpose of Standing Order 117 is to provide a way of getting time allocation without having to give notice. It goes much beyond that. It says that in order to get an order for time allocation under Standing Order 117, other steps have to be carried out. The rule states that the steps have to be carried out pursuant to Standing Orders 115 and 116. This did not happen.

I say that even if it could be argued that at least the Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) could be looked upon as a representative of the Liberal Party, as the privatization critic, he was not approached for the purpose of seeing whether there could be the agreement contemplated and required by Standing Order 117, based on Standing Orders 115 and 116, in order to invoke Standing Order 117.

Finally, there seems to be the view on the part of the Government that there is something specious, as suggested by the Deputy Government House Leader, about asking you, Sir, to determine whether the rules of the House are properly followed. I ask you to make clear to the Government that the rules are an important foundation for the operation of this place and for our parliamentary democracy. If Members of the House raise points of order for the purpose of asking that the rules be followed, they should not be attacked for doing something which is the very foundation of our parliamentary system.

As I pointed out in the House on another occasion, parliamentary authority cited an old parliamentary maxim which reads:

> That nothing tended more to throw power into the hands of Administration, and those who acted with the majority of the House of Commons, than a neglect of, or departure from, these rules—that the forms of proceedings, as instituted by our ancestors, operated as a check and control on the actions of Ministers; and that they were, in many instances, a shelter and protection to the minority, against the attempts of power.

I have no quarrel with the Deputy Government House Leader or his Parliamentary Secretary saying that the arguments I made in support of my points of order are not well founded, contrary to the words of the rules or precedents of Speakers who interpret these rules. That is fair game.

However, it is wrong to try to intimidate—we will not be intimidated—Members who try to raise points of order because they believe the rules should be invoked, on the basis that there is something wrong or specious about asking you to ensure that the rules are upheld.

We already have indications that the rules do not matter to the Government, and that what it wants to do is all that counts. However, Parliament must be more than that. If that is not the case, our democratic system is gone. I do not think that that is what you want. I do not think that, on reflection, even members of the Government want that. I know for certain that it is not what the people of this country want.

Mr. Speaker: Unless some Hon. Member is impelled to further the argument, I think the Chair has enough information to make a ruling. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is on her feet. I will hear her briefly.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, when I was listening to the Deputy Government House Leader set the framework for the necessity of bringing forward the motion he incorrectly introduced it under Standing Order 117. I understood him to say that the reason he was moving this motion was the extensive debate we have had. He cited the debate that occurred over five or six days, and the number of people on all sides who spoke.

I have consulted with the Table Officers to look at the number of people who have actually had an opportunity to speak on this very important matter of Air Canada privatization, which goes to the heart and soul of the direction we want this country to take. In fact, only six government Members have spoken, seven Members from the Liberal Party and six or seven Members from the New Democratic Party. They have used seven hours, less than a total working day.

When one considers the salaries and expenses of Members of Parliament, it costs at least $200,000 per Member to keep us in business around here. That includes salary and expenses totalling approximately $75,000, plus the amount of money involved to run our offices, which is approximately $130,000. Surely, if we are spending $200,000 per Member to keep this place operating, we should at least have an opportunity to rise and have a say on the most important issue of the day. For the Deputy House Leader to claim that because six Members out of 210 on the government side have spoken that is sufficient is absolute balderdash.

• (1210)

Mr. Speaker: It is not for the Chair to rule on whether it is or is not. The point that I have to determine is whether consultation is required under the rules. That is the exact point that I am faced with. I have heard both the Minister of State and Minister of State, Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on whether the argument is properly in front of me, on the point that is being raised. I want to indicate that I am certainly accepting it at this time whatever arguments might ensue at another occasion. That is the specific point that I have to determine.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) could conclude.

Mr. Nystrom: I have had the opportunity to look up one of your rulings, Mr. Speaker, on April 14, 1987, when you were talking about time allocation in relation to Bill C-22 and you stated, in part:

> There are circumstances in which obstructive tactics can be an abuse of the rules of the House. Equally, notice of time allocation motions after only a few hours of debate at any stage of a Bill can also be an abuse.

You further stated, Mr. Speaker:

> . . . I submit that this is a legitimate use of Standing Order 117. Both time allocation motions and dilatory motions are open to abuse. When such tactics are entered upon by either Government or Opposition the balance of democratic parliamentary government can be easily upset. The maintenance of that balance is a fundamental responsibility of the Speaker.

That ruling was made on April 14, 1987, and you were concerned then about the premature use of time allocation. Usually time allocation is not moved before the eight hours is up when the 20-minute speeches have been made. This Bill has been debated for some seven hours. Therefore, I refer you back to your very sensible judgment, Mr. Speaker, in April, 1987. Once again, the same situation prevails here.

Mr. Hawkes: I have a brief intervention, Mr. Speaker. On May 25, 1988, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) moved the motion normally referred to in this Chamber as a six-month hoist on this particular Bill.

If you do decide, Mr. Speaker, that consultation is an issue, I direct your attention to the operative phrase that "agreement could not be reached". The motion moved by the Official Opposition early on in the debate was a rather clear indication that it would not be prepared to waive the notice and allocate the time.

Mr. Speaker: I thank all Hon. Members who assisted the Chair. The point in front of me here is clear and it is specific. It is whether or not, under time allocation rules that were originally brought in to this House in 1968 and, as I understand it, are essentially unchanged, under what is now Standing Order 117 it is incumbent upon the Government, if it gives notice of time allocation, to indicate whether or not there was consultation between the Government and representatives of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, it being the other opposition Party.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West has argued with persuasive force that, if one looks at Standing Orders 115, 116, and 117 taken together, then the rule contemplates that there had to have been some type of consultation because in Standing Order 115 and 116 there could not have been agreement without some consultation.

It is an argument which is intriguing, and which I do not think is in any way specious or frivolous. Unfortunately, while it is an argument that might very well carry extensive weight if we were considering making some clarification or change in the rules, it does not help me very much at the moment. What the Chair has to consider is what Standing Order 117 does, in fact, state. The words are very clear and are as follows:

> A Minister of the Crown . . . has stated that an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Orders 115 or 116 . . . .

This, of course, is why the Hon. Member for Windsor West states that surely the rule must have contemplated some type of consultation. The difficulty is that the rule does not state that. As Hon. Members will have noticed, and I hope others watching and listening to this will have noticed, there was some dispute raised by Hon. Members speaking to the best of their recollection as to what conversations, if any, did take place. The difficulty that the Speaker is in is that the Speaker does not sit in judgment on that type of thing. Standing Order 117 seems to state, whatever wisdom or lack of it was there on those who drafted it, that it is for a Minister to come in front of the Chamber and say that there is no agreement.

I invite Hon. Members to consider whether or not some change in the rule might very well make it easier for a Speaker. It might also do much to facilitate things in this place. But I am afraid that I am bound by the rule as it is.

I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members some comments of Speaker Lamoureux on December 1, 1971, as recorded on page 948 of Votes and Proceedings. He stated the following:

> That is exactly the point which was made by the honourable Member for Winnipeg North Centre. He suggested that the Chair has to rule on the Standing Order as written, and as it is before me for interpretation. Standing Order 75(c)—

That is equivalent to Standing Order 117 in front of us:

> —says that if a Minister has given notice of his intention so to do, he could "propose a motion for the purpose of allotting a specified number of days or hours for the consideration and disposal of proceedings at that stage." This, I suggest, is what the Minister has done at this particular stage. I do not see how it is open to the Chair to go beyond this. Perhaps the Standing Order should be rephrased and presented in another way.

There again is the difficulty that is facing the Chair.

More recently, on September 9, 1987, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) raised a point of order, and this is what he said, as reported on page 8801 of Hansard:

Madam Speaker, this is a rather unfortunate turn of events at a crucial point in this very important debate. I think Your Honour will find that in fact the motion is defective in that in its introductory comment it states that agreement could not be reached. As previous speakers have already indicated, there was no attempt to reach an agreement.

To be fair to my colleague, the following questions were put to us: "Do you have speakers? Can we expect a vote on this Bill today?" My response was that as far as I knew we had enough speakers interested in participating in the debate that we would not likely be voting before six o'clock.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap further stated:

The motion before you, Madam Speaker, states that an agreement could not be reached. I know that my hon. friend knows that we had no discussions with respect to whether or not an agreement could be reached.

The Acting Speaker at that time stated:

The Standing Order does not state exactly what consultation or discussion it should imply.

The Acting Speaker adjourned the matter for some minutes and returned and ruled that the notice was in order.

Having stated that, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville made some comment about comments that I had made in the past with respect to precipitous closing off of debate, and nothing I say in this ruling should in any way be taken as any diminution of a caveat that I gave in that ruling. In view of the fact that we are going to have a busy time around here, I want to make it very clear that I am conscious of that ruling and will keep it very much in mind.

• (1220)

I want to thank Hon. Members for their intervention at this time. I have to say quite frankly to the Hon. Member for Windsor West that he may very well have a point that ought to be dealt with because it seems very hard, I think, for members and for the public to understand how it is that these Standing Orders left out some mention of whether or not any consultation had taken place. I must say, as Speaker, that I think the rule could be adjusted in such a way that it did not put the Speaker in a position of having to determine on the weight of a lot of evidence whether or not a satisfactory discussion had taken place.

I have taken the point of the Hon. Member for Windsor West very seriously. I think I am coming down with a ruling that is proper procedurally and that closes off the matter.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I would like some clarification from you, Mr. Speaker. I take it you are not saying that no contact by way of consultation whatsoever with opposition Parties is necessary in order to found a motion under Standing Orders 117. I take it you are not ruling that the form of contact the Deputy Government House Leader in fact carried out on Friday, or prior to the point of order which the Chair cited in its ruling, does not have to be carried out.

Mr. Speaker: I want to be very clear. What I am saying is that at least in my view at the moment on the present wording of Standing Order 117, and having taken into account Standing Orders 115 and 116, I do not think the Speaker has the authority, in view of the Speaker's responsibility to rule on procedural matters, to inquire as to what consultation did or did not take place.

There might be some occasion when the question of whether or not consultation had taken place on some matter comes before this Chamber. I am not in any way suggesting what I have heard today either amounts to sufficient consultation or no consultation or any kind of consultation at all. I am just pointing out that, as I read the rule, it is not for me to get into that. I would not want any comments I made today in any way to take away from the ability of the Hon. Member for Windsor West to argue whether a certain set of conversations did or did not amount to consultation at some future time if the Hon. Member wanted to raise the matter again under this Standing Order or any other.

I am saying that I think I am bound by the rule as it is and that I cannot investigate whether consultation took place because, frankly, the Standing Order is silent as to my authority to do that.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, just on a further point of clarification, you have discussed what may or may not be consultation and the Speaker's dilemma in that respect. I wonder if Your Honour could perhaps give a clarification as to what your position would be with respect to who that consultation should be with with respect to particular parties?

Mr. Speaker: I think I may have indicated that if I had my way, and all Members wanted me to do so, I might make some adjustments in the rules. The question is an interesting one. I invite the Hon. Member perhaps to come to my Chambers and discuss it further. However, I do not think, in the interests of procedural law here, that any more speculation on my part will be helpful.

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-129

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, one further sitting day be allotted to second reading stage of the Bill; and

That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

I appreciate the opportunity, Madam Speaker, to address this motion. I want to say that I think the debate which took place on the procedural aspect of this motion was helpful and instructive. I think we can all perhaps learn from the contributions made by all Members who spoke, as well as the ruling of the Chair, and can go forward from here.

With respect to this motion for time allocation, I regret very much that it has become necessary because of the delaying tactics of the Opposition to go this far. I have myself consistently argued that extension of the hours of the House was a better method of allowing for debate and getting through Bills, and we have done that. On Friday, Madam Speaker, we tried to extend hours, to work a little longer on a Friday afternoon. Certainly, government Members were predisposed to work here.

Mr. Tobin: Say that with a straight face, Doug.

Mr. Lewis: All government Members with straight faces enjoy working on Friday, and we were prepared to do the business of the nation.

Mr. Tobin: You did not want to go back to your constituency?

Mr. Lewis: When we called for extension of hours and suggested that we were prepared to work so that this Bill could go to committee, it was blocked by members of the Opposition Parties. It was blocked with some glee. So if the Canadian public wants to know where the minds of opposition Members are on a Friday afternoon, they are elsewhere than in the Chamber, because they were not prepared to work beyond two o'clock.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that several Canadians, hundreds of thousands of Canadians, were working beyond two o'clock on Friday afternoon. We were prepared to join them—

Mr. MacLellan: You were the only one, if you were.

Mr. Lewis: —but the opposition Members were not.

Mr. MacLellan: Your nose is growing.

Mr. Lewis: As I indicated earlier, Madam Speaker, the Bill was debated on May 24, May 25, May 27, June 1 and June 3, five days at second reading. Some 20 members have spoken on the Bill. I was corrected by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that it has been our tactic, when government Members have made the point of the Government on a Bill, to see no need to filibuster the Bill in the way the opposition Members do. For that reason, our interventions have been circumspect in nature.

We have had two reasoned amendments. The reason for the reasoned amendments is that there are simply not enough Members here in the Opposition parties interested in debating this Bill. In order to freshen the list, not to have reasoned debate but to freshen the list so that the same person can speak over and over again, we have accepted two reasoned amendments from the Opposition. We have had some 8.5 hours' debate on this Bill. We submit that that is ample time to make one's point.

We have tried on other occasions, and we were successful on one occasion, to have extension of hours. We tried again on Friday, as I indicated, to move this matter along, but we are continually being stalled by the Opposition in an effort to stall a very good Bill.

I want to spend the second part of my argument, if I may, just referring to this Bill and what it is about to do. We have embarked on a campaign to privatize Crown corporations for which there is no longer a public policy or for which we can operate the public policy in a different way at a saving to the taxpayer. We have done this with several companies so that the Canadian taxpayer is no longer in the gunpowder business, no longer in the communications business, and no longer builds planes. We are out of the hotel business. Guess what, Madam Speaker, the Canadian people are now, thanks to our moves, catching up with the rest of the world. Privatization is the way Governments around the world are moving.

Mr. Manly: Margaret Thatcher?

Mr. Lewis: No. France, for example, and Japan, not Margaret Thatcher. I knew my hon. friend would clutch that weapon of Margaret Thatcher to his breast. I knew that. But it is in France. Catch up with France. We have dinosaurs in the Opposition. We have the dinosaur Liberal Party and the status quo New Democratic Party whose members say, "No privatization. Privatization may be happening around the world, but we are not going to let it happen in Canada because we like being in the business of building airplanes and losing money. We like being in the business of running hotels and losing money. We like being in the business of gunpowder". All of these things they like. They like losing money. We have turned business over to the private sector, and guess what, Madam Speaker, in de Havilland alone there are an additional 1,000 Canadians working because it was privatized.

• (1230)

I know my friends in the New Democratic Party object to those 1,000 Canadians working. Many, I would point out, are paying union dues as well. When companies are privatized there is more employment, more growth and more vitality. And that is what this Bill is all about and what the Government is doing.

We intend to proceed to put this Bill through second reading and we intend to see our program of privatization proceed. Canada will then be catching up with the rest of the world. The dinosaurs may cling to the status quo of public ownership and an attitude of, "Don't worry about it". But they will find when they get into the election, which they want so badly, that they will be out of step, not only with Canadians but with the rest of the world. We have things to do, Madam Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I think it is deplorable on the part of the Government to want to use its overwhelming majority of 208 Members as well as the Standing Orders of the House which, as we know, are open to interpretation because they were drafted in good faith by Members of this House who, in their negotiations with the Government in power, acknowledged that a modicum of order was necessary and that we had to adopt procedures that would be fair and equitable to all . . .

Ms. Copps: . . . and reasonable.

Mr. Gauthier: . . . and reasonable, as the Hon. Member said, and that the House must be able to dispose of debate quickly. That, Madam Speaker, we can accept.

Today however, they would have us believe that after seven hours of debate . . . I am not making this up. If we look at the Order Paper, it indicates . . . I may remind Hon. Members that we normally have eight hours of debate on second reading, and after those eight hours of debate broken down into 20-minute speeches, we have 10-minute speeches.

Today, in the Projected Order of Business, we read: Bill C-129:

—20-minute maximum during the next hour of debate: speeches are subject to 10-minute question and comment period.

There was one hour of debate left before starting on the usual eight hours for considering this Bill.

The Government has used this procedure to cut off debate, which amounts to strong arm tactics, to prevent Members of this House from speaking to the important subject matter of Bill C-129, which is the privatization of Air Canada.

Madam Speaker, I have not had a chance to speak to the Bill yet, and only seven Liberal Members have spoken so far. I would, however, like to take part in the debate, and I would like to give the House the benefit of the views of my constituents, who feel that today's privatization of Air Canada is a bad thing, and I want to let the Government know that we are against privatization, but being against the Bill does not mean that I will consistently oppose and obstruct. Certainly not!

We have a Government that is making proposals with which we cannot agree. We have only sixteen days of debate left, and we are being asked to pass forty-one bills between now and the end of June!

Madam Speaker, let's stop playing games! The Government is playing games because it doesn't know how to manage its time. It never learned how in the three and half years it has been in power, and it never will. But asking Members, after seven hours of debate, to forget it, to say: "It's over, no more debate!" . . . and to vote on the Bill . . . They can say it, and they can do it, but I can't agree with this way of doing things, Madam Speaker. This is using the majority like a sledgehammer. This is a Government that doesn't know how to manage its affairs, that is incompetent in the way it administers the House, or should I say in the way that it administers the business of the House, because fortunately, running the House is not the Government's responsibility, but the Chair's. The Government, however, is responsible for the business of the House, and as the Government proposes, we, considering our small numbers, must try to dispose, through sensible debate.

Madam Speaker, I have an important speech to make about Air Canada. There are clauses in this Bill that upset me. There are a number of things that upset me a great deal. Like many Members, we are exposed to a certain amount of lobbying.

Air Canada is now lobbying me very seriously about clause 10 of the Bill. I wanted to mention this in the House because I think it is important for Members from Quebec and those who support the French fact to know that Air Canada does not agree with Bill C-129 and Clause 10. It wants to get rid of clause 10.

Never! I will never agree to any changes in Bill C-129 that would release Air Canada from its obligation to comply with the Official Languages Act.

I wanted to say this, and I will, if I have a chance, Madam Speaker. All Members of this House should realize there is a lot of scheming going on within the establishment of Air Canada. That doesn't sit well with the Government which may have bitten off more than it could chew, as it does, from time to time.

In any case, I don't agree with this business of being told after seven hours of debate that the debate is over with. There are many Members on this side of the House who don't agree either and who would like to speak and who will, Madam Speaker. If we have to, we will use the Standing Orders to show the Government we don't agree with its sledgehammer policy, with its constant pushing and shoving of Opposition Members, trying to get them to be . . .

Mr. Rossi: Accommodating.

Mr. Gauthier: . . . accommodating, as the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) just said. They are acting like dictators, Madam Speaker.

I repeat that last Friday, the Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) (Mr. Lewis) tried to use a motion to extend the hours of debate on Friday in order to finish second reading. He said earlier that if the proposal was not acceptable on Friday, objections should have been raised right away.

Madam Speaker, I watched when the Minister came back a little later in the debate to move that the House limit the debate on Bill C-129 to one additional day. He did so at 1.35 p.m., only twenty-five minutes before the House adjourned. And he expects us to accept his argument that if we didn't agree, we should have asked the Chair for a ruling at the time, to find out whether the motion was in order.

Madam Speaker, I submit that this argument is as specious as his argument that there has already been enough debate at this stage. I suppose the Parliamentary Secretary, who has just entered the House, will try and rise again in this debate and will move, at one o'clock or even before then, that the House continue sitting during lunch time and that the additional time be used to debate the motion pursuant to Standing Order 117.

Madam Speaker, this Government will stop at nothing to push the minority around in this House. However, I leave it to the Chair to decide.

The Parliamentary Secretary let us know earlier that we have not heard the last of this Government's attempts to push and shove and use Standing Order 117, because as far as they are concerned, that is their policy. Well, this is no way to create a climate that is conducive to obtaining the co-operation of the Official Opposition. It makes things extremely difficult for the Official Opposition, Madam Speaker, since there are so few of us. We can hardly be expected to be available at all times to do our work in committee, in the House and all the other business we have to accomplish in a day's work. After all, we want our contribution, both in committee and in this House, to be worthwhile.

Personally, I didn't have time to speak to the Air Canada Bill because the Committee on Official Languages is sitting three times a week: Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday. I would have liked to be in the House when the debate took place, but I could not, because I had business to attend to elsewhere. Many Members would like to speak to Bill C-129, and although they may not be here in the House right now, they certainly do want to take part in this important debate.

I suggest that the Government be careful if it is up to its old tricks, because the Opposition knows a trick or two as well. There are a few chapters missing in their book on dirty tricks, Madam Speaker, and if they want to start playing this kind of game, they better watch out.

An Hon. Member: The Nielsen bible.

• (1240)

[English]

Mr. Tobin: The Nielsen bible.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, the Nielsen bible, the book of dirty tricks written by the so-called specialist. He did not write all the dirty tricks. There are still some unwritten, and we may use some of them.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, the motion before us today is a motion under Standing Order 117 to allocate time on the Air Canada Bill. I want to oppose that motion very strenuously on behalf of our Party.

We have been dealing with the Air Canada Bill in the House for only some seven hours, and after some seven hours only, the Government has moved to allocate time, to bring down the guillotine. That is probably without precedent, or certainly it is very, very rare for a Government to use its majority this early in a debate on a very important, fundamental issue. Where is democracy? Where is freedom of speech when the Government moves that quickly and ruthlessly to allocate time?

The Deputy House Leader said that we are railing about an issue that is now popular around the world. He is talking about privatization. He is worshipping Margaret Thatcher, Ronald Reagan and Jacques Chirac. I would remind the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) that Jacques Chirac was clobbered in the presidential election campaign in France, and one reason for that was his policies.

[Translation]

He was rejected by the French people, Madam Speaker, and he was trounced by the President, François Mitterand, during the presidential elections in France six weeks ago. A week from now, at the second voting round, France will have a majority socialist government. And this is also thanks to Mr. Chirac's domestic policy, Madam Speaker. It's not just Mrs. Thatcher and Mr. Reagan. We also have Mr. Chirac, in France. Another Conservative. And we have exactly the same problem here in Canada, Madam Speaker with the guy from Baie-Comeau!

[English]

We will fight as hard as we can to make sure that we keep Air Canada Canadian, to make sure that we protect this great Canadian institution which is part of the heritage of Canada. It was fought for and defended by many Conservative leaders over the last 50 or 52 years. We will not have our freedom of speech thwarted by a Conservative majority that wants to implement in Canada the political agenda of Jacques Chirac, Margaret Thatcher or Ronald Reagan.

The Minister says that the Government is being very generous in terms of the debate it is allowing on the Air Canada privatization Bill. I wish he would think back to four or five years ago when he and his Party were in opposition and the Liberal Government brought in time allocation. What did the Party across the way say then? It said it was a denial of free speech, that it was the guillotine, that it was the Government of Mr. Trudeau using its majority. Does the Minister remember that? Of course, he was making speeches on this side of the House about the unfair use of time allocation.

Mr. Tobin: Just quote Stephen Lewis's speech.

Mr. Nystrom: I have been told to quote Stephen Lewis's speech. Instead, I will quote the speech of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie).

On June 9, 1981, he said the following:

> Mr. Speaker, this is a continuation of the philosophy of the government. For example, first, the English Parliament must adopt any dog's breakfast the government sends over to them as a Constitution, and must hold its nose and pass it.
> Another illustration of that attitude is that we have to hold our noses and pass whatever this government brings to the House, and pass it quickly. This comes from a closure-crazed government, a government which suffers from the crime of parliamentary bestiality.

Whatever that is, Madam Speaker. That was the Minister for International Trade talking about parliamentary bestiality when the Liberal Government brought in time allocation on one of his favourite Bills in 1981. He went on to say:

> It cannot wait to force these kinds of things through the House . . . The same little group comes in here on every closure motion. The same little group of parliamentary eunuchs, the same group of parliamentary assassins—the House leader, the assistant House leader, the hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussières)—are in here all the time, assassinating this House and removing the good from the House. That is why I call them the parliamentary eunuchs.

Those were the words of one of the leaders in the Conservative Party, the Minister for International Trade and the former Minister of Transport. When he was on this side of the House, he was complaining about time allocation and about closure when it was imposed by the Liberal Government of the day.

It is no wonder the Canadian people say that the Conservative Party's Government is the most unpopular Government in the history of Canada. It says one thing in opposition and another thing in government, and it says it time and time again.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Scowen) is shaking his head in disgust right now. As a new Member, he cannot understand why the great Minister for International Trade would say one thing in opposition and another thing in government. That is why the Canadian people do not trust that Government across the way. That is why the Government will lose the majority of its parliamentary seats when the election is called. It says one thing in opposition and another thing in government.

Once again, the Minister for International Trade said in 1981 the following:

> This is an illustration of what has happened to Canada. Today we have a parliamentary system of government without any checks and balances and without the separation of powers. The Prime Minister has a group of docile sheep in his caucus—

Mr. Tobin: Bleating.

Mr. Nystrom: If we call the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) and the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) docile sheep, what name do we have for the people sitting on the backbenches of the Conservative Party today? They are not even docile sheep. They cannot even bleat. They will not even stand up on their hind feet and speak their minds. They are willing to be puppets on the end of the string of the Prime Minister's Office, trying to impress him because they want to be Parliamentary Secretaries or chairmen of committees or perhaps even Ministers of the Crown. That will just not happen.

The great Minister for International Trade said in 1981:

> They just say, "Baaa, sir, baaa, sir, pass it through the House, sir". As long as they do that, he has absolute power. This Prime Minister has absolute power as long as the majority in his caucus give him that unlimited power. They are so busy with their noses in the patronage trough and the power trough that they neither know nor care what happens to this Parliament, and we can expect nothing from them.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West was talking about patronage, time allocation and docile sheep in the old Government. I can think of no better way to describe the present Conservative caucus, a caucus that would allow, after seven hours of debate on a very important Bill, the government House Leader to move time allocation.

I see sitting across the way the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). I looked up a quote in Hansard from February 12, 1981. That Hon. member is quoted objecting to time allocation and closure and using some pretty strong language about the former Government. I ask him now to rise and say the same thing about this Prime Minister who is abusing his majority. The Hon. Member for Simcoe South said the following:

> This chamber should be the embodiment of free speech. It should be the epitome of all those basic rights we have come to hold so sacred in this great country of ours. I personally will not stand idly by and be gagged by a Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has nothing but contempt for Parliament and who has said so.

I cannot believe those words. They are so beautiful. They sound like intelligent words coming from an intelligent Member. I ask that Member now, with seven more years of parliamentary experience, to rise and say the same thing about this Prime Minister that he said about that one, because this Prime Minister is doing exactly the same thing in gagging Parliament and free speech.

That Hon. Member went on to say:

> There are no marionettes on this side of the House. Where are the voices of protest in the government ranks? There has to be one person who will speak the truth. Have government backbenchers become the trained seals about which I spoke? Are they so browbeaten that they are afraid to speak out in defence of the freedom of this House?
> If we lose freedom of speech, as we have started to lose freedom in our economy—

And so on. If the Hon. Member for Simcoe South could say that in 1981, 1982 or 1983, why does he not have the courage of his convictions and the consistency in his state of mind to say the same thing now? I ask him to rise and explain that to the House. That is another reason why this Party across the way is losing power and popularity with the people of Canada.

The people of Canada want from their politicians honesty and consistency. I say: Where is the Minister for International Trade? Where is the Hon. Member for Simcoe South? He made these speeches in opposition that misled the Canadian people in September, 1984. The Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), sitting across the way in his sanctimonious, pious, parsimonious manner—

• (1250)

Mr. Hawkes: Parsimonious?

Mr. Nystrom: —gets up and talks about the Government being free, benevolent, and offering all kinds of time for debate. Where was he a few years ago in opposition when time allocation was brought in after 15 hours or 12 hours or 10 hours of debate? He called that a denial of freedom of speech. He called that an abuse of Parliament.

There are very few Bills as important as the Air Canada Bill before us today. It represents a fundamental change in the way we as a country want to go. Yet here is a Government allocating time for debate after only seven hours. I am sure that if you were on the floor of this House instead of in the chair you, too, would get up and protest this abuse of majority, this denial of freedom of speech. That is what the Conservatives did in opposition over much less important clauses at times. I am sure that if some of them had the intellectual honesty to get up and speak their minds they would say the same thing today that they said some seven or eight years ago.

Mr. Tobin: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, in view of the remarks made by the Hon. Member who just spoke, and given the presence in the House of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), I would like to move:

That the Hon. Member for Simcoe South be now heard.

Mr. Rodriguez: I second it.

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I think you may find unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) rising?

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Thank you, Madam Speaker. I think that what has been happening in this Chamber in the last few weeks and months is well known to all Canadians. We have seen stonewalling tactics. The fact is that the important Bills coming from this Party are not the type of Bills I was referring to at that time. Not in the least.

Mr. Tobin: You are turning red.

Mr. Stewart: Nothing like your tie. Are you a cousin of David Peterson?

This Government has provided more good legislation in three and a half years than was ever put before this House in its history. Right now there is a backlog of the most important legislation that Canadians will ever see. We believe in the free enterprise system. We believe that Air Canada can be run properly in the free enterprise system. It will be, too, whether the socialists like it or not.

There are certain times when time allocation is a necessity. Such was not the case when I made this statement. This Government is dedicated to bringing forward over the next few months the policies that the Canadian people were promised. We are going to fulfil that promise regardless of the stonewalling.

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, the Government would like to acknowledge the generosity of the Opposition in putting an extra government Member up, but I think I am the next to speak.

Mr. Nystrom: No, you alternate.

Mr. Gauthier: You had your turn. It is our turn.

Mr. Tobin: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, if you are going to recognize me for debate I will carry on with my speech. Otherwise, I raise the point of order that the Hon. Member has spoken and it is now our turn.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) is recognized on debate.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I found it fascinating that a Member who went on forever six or seven years ago on the principle of parliamentary democracy, who spoke with great vehemence, great passion, and right from the bowels of his being about this cruel, unparliamentary, undemocratic gesture, this kind of motion, could only speak a minute or two in defence of the present Government. A few years ago he had to be restrained. The Sergeant-at-Arms had to be brought in to sit him in his place because he said he was going to stand and fight the battle for democracy, to prevent this kind of scurrilous, terrible motion being presented to the House of Commons. I have never seen such a spectacle of a Member standing and swallowing himself whole—a tragedy, not only for democracy, but for the Hon. Member who finds himself sitting in this House seven years later almost to the day when the same kind of motion was moved. Now he, suffering the threat of the lash of the whip of government Members across his back, had to stand and swallow himself whole.

I offer my sympathy, having witnessed the spectacle of a man melt before us in this House, having to swallow his words, having to take back everything he stood for seven years ago. I apologize for even forcing him to his feet to speak today.

The sad reality is that the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), who managed to bleat out a few words to try to justify his position, is unfairly targeted in this House today. There he sits next to his colleague, beaming, the redness in his face but a glow, like a beacon of embarrassment. Rudolph the Red Nosed Reindeer, being seen from all parts of Canada. The tragedy is he is but one, because he is surrounded by his colleagues, many of whom have made the same kind of speech but who were not unfortunate enough today to be singled out.

What did the Hon. Member say? He said he stands behind this legislation. He stands behind the Government. He stands behind this measure to bring the guillotine down. You can hear the jack-boots beating in the background, echoing off the walls of this great democratic institution, coming to shut us up. What did he say? He said:

If we lose freedom of speech, as we have started to lose freedom in our economy and as did Petrofina, we will lose individual freedom, because that is what happens when economic freedom is lost. If we lose freedom of speech by closure, the right to oppose, the right to criticize, the right to scrutinize public business and public accounts, what reason is there to sit in this House of Commons?

We ask him that question again today. What reason is there to sit in the House of Commons when a government majority takes away from a minority, those who speak on behalf of the people of Canada, the right to bring accountability to the work of the Government? In a parliamentary system, whenever a Prime Minister has a majority, that Prime Minister, if he chooses, becomes an elected dictator. When a Government piles up, through mismanagement, the kind and number of Bills the Government has piled up on the legislative agenda because of mismanagement and incompetence, and chooses to cut off the right, indeed the responsibility and duty of the Opposition to bring accountability to the work of the Government, that Government becomes an elected dictatorship. That is what is happening.

That supposed kind of gesture seven years ago had the Hon. Member for Simcoe South in a proper snit, and today it turned him into—no, I cannot use the word. He has suffered enough so I will contain myself. At page 7193 of Hansard of February 12, 1981, he says:

> I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we cannot be stopped with closure . . . But today hon. members opposite are sitting with a comfortable majority. I for one refuse to stand silent and see the rights of Parliament abused, frustrated and strangled. I believe in open covenants, and I believe they should be arrived at openly. We, as elected Members of Parliament, hold a public trust. That trust is being abused when a parliamentary majority seeks to withhold the rights of the opposition minority.

Those were the words of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South. When confronted with similar circumstances, he stood as a Member of Parliament, beholden to no one but his conscience to defend the rights of Parliament, and today he sits as a defeated man, a man who no longer believes in democracy. Shame!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPOSITION TO ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as time goes by the issue of nuclear submarines is becoming more and more controversial amongst Canadians for several reasons.

By purchasing nuclear submarines we would be breaking the spirit, if not the letter, of the Nuclear Weapons Non-proliferation Treaty which Canada promoted so well in past decades.

Second, we can establish our presence and sovereignty with less expensive and more creative means than by introducing nuclear technology in our Armed Forces.

Third, there are other more urgent items which require federal dollars.

For instance, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities every year implores Ottawa for help in the construction of badly needed sewers for the protection of our water. Or take the need for a national high quality day care program, an urgent matter.

Surely the children of this nation, our future, should command the greatest attention in the spending priorities of any Government, even this hopeless Government. Sink the idea of nuclear submarines.

UNIONVILLE VILLAGE FESTIVAL

TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTARY ORGANIZERS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend my wife Sandy and I attended the nineteenth annual Unionville Village Festival along with 30,000 to 40,000 other people. It is a family oriented festival with events and fun for all.

Saturday's festival parade was a great success. On Sunday I entered the 5K run along with several hundred people of all ages and am pleased to say that I finished the run in a record time of 22 minutes and 19 seconds. Later in the morning we attended an inter-faith open air church service in Crosby Park which was sponsored by six local churches.

The festival not only increases the residents' pride in this century-old community, but increases everyone's commitment to work hard to preserve its uniqueness.

To organize such a successful event requires an army of enthusiastic volunteers. Cathy Escott, the chairperson, expressed her sincere thanks to all these volunteers, and special thanks to vice-chairman Rick Newell, and for the help of several past chairpersons such as Joan Homer, Bob McCullough, Fred Cox, Paul Heney, George Shepherd, and Glenn Crosby.

ADVERTISING

DIET 7-UP CAMPAIGN—SEXIST STEREOTYPING

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a television advertisement for Diet 7-Up is currently receiving air time in Canada. The ad depicts two police officers, one male and one female. Having stopped a car for speeding, the female officer begins flirting with the male driver, letting her hair cascade out of her hat; then she writes out her telephone number on the ticket rather than a fine.

This ad denigrates the professional role of women in the police force. It is a blatant example of the kind of sexist attitudes which continue to permeate our culture and to create barriers for women in all professions and all walks of life.

We must actively oppose advertisements like this, which treat women as sex objects, by writing and expressing our objections. By monitoring and complaining, and praising when appropriate, we can work constructively to change images of sexual stereotyping.

As women claim power in our society the whole human race is empowered and we move one step closer to eradicating the other symptoms of sexual inequality so prevalent in our culture, like inadequate child care, unbalanced political representation, and job ghettoization.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPENING OF RECRUITING OFFICE IN YELLOWKNIFE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence is to be congratulated on its initiative in planning to open a recruiting office in Yellowknife next fall. This will be the first recruiting office north of 60 and will service the Northwest Territories, Yukon, and Arctic Quebec, giving northerners the same opportunity to join the Armed Forces as presently enjoyed by southerners.

In addition, the Northern Native Entry Program, which gives a three-week military course to potential recruits before they are obliged to sign up formally, is most helpful.

We thank DND for acting on the advice of northerners with respect to recruiting in their region.

THE HANDICAPPED

IMPORTANCE OF QUALITY OF LIFE

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, National Awareness Week for the Disabled is now past. I rise today to call on all Canadians throughout the country who took part in this campaign for independence last week to continue their efforts to improve the quality of life of our handicapped citizens.

You will recall that the United Nations proclaimed 1980 the International Year of the Disabled. It can be said that some obstacles have been smoothed in some areas like human rights, employment, income, housing, access to transportation and public buildings. But we are still very far from the two main objectives of the International Year of the Disabled. As you will recall, they were (1) full integration and (2) complete independence.

Handicapped people are not asking for charity, Mr. Speaker; they want to be full-fledged citizens. I therefore call on associations of the disabled, businesses, self-help groups, labour unions, the federal and provincial Governments and all municipalities to join together, as Rick Hansen asked us, to meet the legitimate demands of the handicapped.

SEEPAGE OF CHEMICALS INTO NIAGARA RIVER FROM UNITED STATES DUMPS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, last week's announcement by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) that $110 million in federal funds will be spent to help clean up pollution in the St. Lawrence River is welcomed indeed. However, the waters of the St. Lawrence which come from the Great Lakes system will never really be safe until we stop the seepage of deadly chemicals from the Occidental Chemical Corporation dumps on the American side of the Niagara River.

In spite of the Canada-U.S. agreement to reduce the amount of toxic chemicals flowing from these dumps, the levels have been increasing rather than decreasing. When will the U.S. clean up its act? Have we no alternative but to pray for the election of someone with a good environmental record, like Mike Dukakis? See you in church, Mr. Speaker!

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED INFRASTRUCTURE REHABILITATION PROGRAM

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today the delegates to the Federation of Canadian Municipalities conference in Halifax will learn whether they have been jilted at the altar once again.

Already Canada's largest cities have been turned down once by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on their proposal to regenerate the streets, bridges, and water and sewer systems of our cities. However, their case remains persuasive.

The physical plant in our cities is running down and delayed repairs now will be ever more expensive the longer we delay. The Government also knows that the proposal will create 80,000 direct jobs, the work will be socially and economically useful, the federal government contribution will be cost effective, and the broad consensus among federal, provincial and municipal levels of government favours this proposal.

Indeed, it is hard to find any reason for opposing this proposal except the Government's fear of further budgetary deficits. We can only hope that the Government will finally see the merit in a proposal that the federal New Democratic Party has already endorsed, and will act to make our cities more modern, more safe, and better places for many Canadians to live.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CONGRATULATIONS FROM EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from the sixteenth annual meeting of the European Parliament. The European Economic Community is the world's largest market with over 320 million consumers, with a Gross Domestic Product larger than that in the United States.

The 12 member countries differ in language and culture yet their success story in rebuilding Europe, even to a grain surplus, through free trade is legend. They now contemplate removing all customs posts at their borders.

When I spoke about our free trade agreement with the United States, they who are our second largest trading partner acknowledged and lauded our success.

When I told them of the opposition to the free trade agreement from across the House, for reasons such as the loss of sovereignty, they scoffed and asked: "Have any of us sold out our nations? Have any of us lost sovereignty?"

The Germans, the Italians, the Irish, the Greeks? Of course not! They have created a booming market and better jobs through free trade, which is exactly what will happen here.

Hans-Jurgen Zahorka, one of the most respected Members of the European Parliament, congratulated us as a Government for what we accomplished in our free trade agreement with the United States. He told me that many doctoral papers have been written in Germany confirming our good fortune.

Free trade means continued good fortune, better jobs, and a great future for our children. Let's get on with it.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

DETERIORATION OF INFRASTRUCTURES—DEMAND FOR FEDERAL AID

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the mayors of Canada's major cities are now in Halifax for the annual meeting of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

They have launched a call for help to the federal Government, faced with disintegrating municipal infrastructures. It would take $15 billion immediately to upgrade these infrastructures. Faced with this colossal expenditure, the mayors are asking Ottawa to help them.

The Mulroney Government is turning a deaf ear, but this program would create 60,000 jobs. I repeat: 60,000 jobs. We in the Official Opposition will not let the municipalities down. Not long ago, I presented a motion in the House, supporting the municipalities and their call for renewal of their infrastructures, and I got the support of all the provinces. Now the mayors want our support, and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has already promised a three-way shared cost program to create these jobs in this country.

I say to the Conservative Government: Canada needs a municipal infrastructures program. We need it now! Submarines, nuclear or otherwise, are not a priority!

PROTECTION OF OZONE LAYER

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, the earth's ozone layer is under attack by man-made chemicals and by man physically destroying the environment. In the past weeks there has been some positive news. Brazilian researchers have found that the burning of an area of the Amazon Rain Forest as large as southern Ontario, each year, will have a disastrous effect on life by weakening the ozone layer. Brazil has recognized the importance of the Amazon to the world, and it is hoped that action will be taken.

Canada has decided to ban all non-essential uses of chemicals that destroy the ozone. The Minister is to be congratulated for his tough action, which goes beyond the 50 per cent agreed to by the countries which met in Montreal last September. As more nations become aware of the impending disaster, I am confident that they will follow Canada's lead in taking measures to halt the destruction of the ozone layer.

EDUCATION

FUNDING REQUIRED BY UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, to those who insist that Canada's educational system remains strong and internationally competitive, the Ontario Federation of Students Report called "Cut to the Bone" provides a graphic rebuttal with these examples of a crisis of neglect: a university where bake sales are needed to buy books and supplies; another where students wear coats and sweaters to class because there is no heat; a technical university where students have used for 16 years equipment that has a six-year life span; a psychology class so crowded that it mocks fire regulations; and buildings infested with rats and dead mice.

The message is clear. Our universities and colleges are being killed a slow death as some provinces cut funding and others even pilfer federal funds.
