It is in that context that these specific protections which the Government so naively believes that it has negotiated begin to take on the air of false shields and mere illusory protection because, if those same protections can be mentioned in a countervail action in the United States, they are going to end up, under American law, considered as countervailable programs. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) talked about the fishing industry and ignored the example of the Prince Edward Island fishery and the 58 separate Canadian government programs which were deemed by the U.S. Free Trade Commission to be countervailable.

So it is with trade laws too. Each country will be able to continue to pass its trade laws. The record indicates that trade laws in the United States are far more restrictive, far more Draconian, and give far more power to the American Government than do Canada's trade laws. We have only had one single countervail duty ever imposed on United States exports to this country in all the history of our trade law whereas applications go before the trade commission in the United States almost on a monthly basis.

Turning to the disputes mechanism, what a paper tiger, what a toothless mechanism it is to protect Canada. It will only be able to rule on whether or not the law of the United States has been fairly applied.

Mr. Reagan and Mr. Yeutter knew what they were talking about and they are honest. Mr. Reagan said that it is a new economic constitution for North America, and he is right. Mr. Yeutter said that the Canadians do not know what they signed, and he is right.

With regard to the negotiating process of this deal, our team was four times as large as the American team. Don't you think they knew who was hot to get this deal? Don't you think they saw us coming? Don't you think they sucked us in? Don't they have a tradition of being great Yankee traders, and didn't they see the rube coming down the sidewalk ready to deal generously with them?

That four-to-one disparity in the negotiating team size should have given this whole game away to the Government in the first place. That is one size disparity. Let us look at another, our capacity to monitor the underground network of protectionist activities that goes on in every economy, even between towns in Canada in selecting contractors for rewiring jobs on government-owned houses.

The American economy, 12 times the size of ours, is going to have 144 times the capacity to monitor economic events in Canada and look out for hidden protectionism for those non-tariff barriers which are, of course, so much more effective.

In this agreement we are not talking about free trade, and even less, is it fair trade. We are talking about the harmonization of Canada's social and economic systems to the American way and the American world view, in the same way as Hawaii was brought into the United States by means of a free trade agreement. Comparisons made by the British Prime Minister with the European Economic Community are false and meaningless because, of the four partners in the original agreement, counting Benelux as one have less than 15 per cent of total production and none more than 35 per cent. In the Canada-U.S. context the figures are 92 per cent and 8 per cent respectively.

The Government has said that this is a "historic agreement, but it is not prepared to let it become a "historic debate in this House of Commons. It is prepared, instead, to apply time limitations and closure. It is prepared to link up Canada's economy as in the famous metaphor, of the mouse that lies down with the elephant.

There will be modest gains but there will not be gains in the hinterlands. If there are job gains, they will be in the major centres which will get larger to the eventual detriment of their own citizenry. Aboriginal people know where they are going under this agreement, and it is nowhere. The people in the resource communities, the small, remote, far-flung villages and towns which have helped to build this economy are not going to see any gains.

If the Government were truly interested in promoting economic development in Canada it would be going for a lower interest rate policy which would democratize and spread that economic development across the country rather than concentrating it in the few major centres as this trade agreement will do if indeed it produces any gains in employment for Canada at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Debate. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise. in the approximately 10 minutes accorded to me before we end another parliamentary day in this Chamber, to speak on the so-called trade agreement with President Reagan and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Not only is the substance and content of this trade package offensive, but I think Canadians have an inkling that even if they, unlike our Minister who has not read the complete version of the trade agreement, did not have that booklet, they would have an inkling of what is in it by the very road that has been charted by this Government with respect to getting Canada into a trade agreement. It has been a process that is completely offensive to the integrity and sovereignty of this country. It is offensive to the citizenry of this country who have not been able to participate. They have not given the Government a mandate to change the course of our future in terms of trading alliances in the international community.

I think I can spend time on the substance, as have some of my colleagues so very ably, but I would also like to call attention to the so-called democratic institution and way of life that we as parliamentarians in this Chamber advocate one day after the next, and what we advocate when we go back to our constituencies. Where is the mandate of this Government to tie us into this free trade arrangement with the United States? In the last general election neither political Party really debated or campaigned on the question of a free trade alliance with the United States. The Prime Minister's own position when he was running for the Conservative Leadership of his Party was very much against entering into a free trade alliance with the United States.

There has been no national debate which has allowed the issues, concerns, visions and dreams of individual Canadians to percolate and somehow in partnership, in concert between the Government and the population, try to forge together on a very important course.

We are not talking about a trivial issue. We are not talking about a piece of legislation that can be changed overnight or a piece of legislation that does not affect the fabric of our country. We are not talking about a piece of legislation that does not alter our way of life, the definition of our country. That is why the absence of any genuine process is all the more offensive. It is all the more offensive to the substance and individual lots of Canadians from one coast to the next. This is their country as well. It is not a carte blanche that the Government can simply wield around, negotiating very important sectors of our country with the United States. The U.S. has been after our financial institutions, and it has them. It has been after our energy and natural resources, and it got them. It wanted to make branch plant mentality the way of life in this country, and now it is that much closer.

Canadians are at the very least concerned that if this is the Government's philosophy, if it is the Government's direction and vision of the country, that is fine, but at least it should have the political courage and integrity to place that vision before the nation, before the people, and allow them, in partnership with candidates from one coast to the other, in a 60 day campaign, to decide the fate of our country. They should decide together the type of trading alliances we will enter into.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member's speech, but it appears to me there is no quorum in the House at the moment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do see a quorum. The Hon. Member for York West.

Mr. Marchi: I thank the Member for drawing more Members in to listen to my words of wisdom. I was speaking of the ignorance and perhaps political politeness in the sense of a democratic country in consulting one's people about the future of their country.

The Tories in the last four years, based on their statements, on their policies and their record, have tried to rewrite history. That is wrong, but that is not as dangerous as trying to alter drastically in a very negative way the future course of our country. The Conservative Member from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso ended his speech by saying: "What do average Canadians think?" He talked about average Canadians on the streets, in the supermarkets and in the factories. One very interesting study was done back in February of this year. Average Canadians were asked a wide array of interesting questions. Not only were the questions interesting but the answers provided an insight into what average Canadians are thinking.

To a question that asked: "Which country will benefit the most from this agreement", only 10 per cent said, Canada. Sixty one per cent said, the United States of America. To the question: "Was the Canadian Government tough enough in the negotiations or did it give away too much?", only 23 per cent said it was firm enough, 57 per cent said it gave too much away. To the question: "What effects do you think this free trade agreement will have on jobs in your province?", 40 per cent said more jobs lost, only 25 per cent said more jobs created. To the question: "Do you think free trade will reduce Canada's cultural sovereignty?", 46 per cent said it will reduce it, 9 per cent said it will increase it. To the question: "Do you think free trade will reduce Canada's political sovereignty?", 46 per cent said it will reduce it, and 8 per cent said it will increase it. To the question: "Will Canada lose any of its sovereignty or independence as a nation under the deal?", 56 per cent said yes, 42 per cent said no. To the question: "Do you think U.S. corporate ownership and control in Canada will increase?", 64 per cent said increase, and only 6 per cent said decrease. To the question: "Is this free trade package a good thing or bad?", 41 per cent said good, and 12 per cent said bad.

Perhaps the most interesting question was: "Should an election be called over the free trade issue?", 62 per cent said yes, and 33 per cent said it is not necessary. To the question: "Who do you have the least trust in of any of the three Leaders?", at the top of the poll was your Right Hon. Prime Minister from Baie Comeau. That is very interesting.

The Member of Parliament from Nova Scotia wanted to know what average Canadians think. Those are some of the insights. One can read what Canadians think by looking into the eyes of the individual factory worker, by looking into the heart of some of those individuals out there in the resource sector. One can ask the female garment worker what she thinks. One can ask the people who are going to be displaced. They will give honest answers. That would be the insights. That is what Canadians are thinking about, and those Members opposite will find that out in the fall election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being ten o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made Monday, June 20, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

ELECTIONS

GOVERNMENT'S LARGESS

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the residents in my riding watched the election campaign of the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) with a great deal of interest, and now they can't wait for a general election, and it is easy to see why. They figure that the Government will do what it did in Lac-Saint-Jean and make their riding a present of $164 million, a riding that for the past four years or so has seen its Government grants cut, time after time.

What kind of manna will rain from the Tory sky, all in the spirit of justice and equity, on Mount Royal and on this country's 281 other ridings? One wonders, especially now that the Minister of Finance is doing everything he can to reduce the deficit. When you think about it, my constituents may be disappointed, because the Government seems to restrict its largesse to friends and school chums who want a seat in the House to defend strictly provincial interests.

Unfortunately, the new Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is part of that group, and I wonder, as I welcome him to the House if he would appreciate being wished a Happy Canada Day as well!

SCHEDULED HOCKEY GAMES BETWEEN SOVIET AND NHL TEAMS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the midst of the spy embrouillage comes some good news in Canadian-Soviet relations. It is announced that two top Soviet hockey teams, Central Red Army and Dynamo Riga, will play 14 team games against NHL teams during the next season. Games are scheduled with Vancouver, Edmonton, Calgary, and Quebec.

Perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) can assure us that the NHL is free from Soviet infiltration and no spooks loiter in our dressing-rooms spying out top secret Canadian hockey strategy.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSED SASKATCHEWAN DAM—EFFECT ON MANITOBA WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, considerable concern has been expressed about the proposed Rafferty-Alameda dam project in Saskatchewan and the negative impact it will have on the environment of Saskatchewan and North Dakota. Virtually ignored in this debate is the impact this project will have on Manitoba.

The Souris River, which the Government of Saskatchewan proposes to dam, flows southward into North Dakota and then northward again into Manitoba. Damming the Souris River will have a negative impact on any jurisdiction downstream, including Manitoba. The quantity and quality of water flowing into Manitoba will be reduced and the leaching of heavy metals and mercury contamination could become a serious problem in that part of the Souris flowing into Manitoba.

The Rafferty-Alameda project is not a simple arrangement between Saskatchewan and North Dakota. The Souris River crosses the international boundary not once but twice, and the Rafferty-Alameda project will affect not one but two provincial jurisdictions. Despite this fact, no international treaty exists between all the parties affected, especially Manitoba. I call upon the Government to exercise its international responsibility on behalf of the people of Manitoba and refer this complex issue to the International Joint Commission for detailed consideration and negotiation.

SUPREME COURT CASE—GOVERNMENT FUNDING SOUGHT BY WOMEN'S ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, as most Canadians know, Parliament is faced with the difficult challenge of rewriting Canada's abortion laws in light of the Supreme Court overturning Section 251 of the Criminal Code. There is also an important trial in the Supreme Court this fall, namely, the Joesph Borowski case, which would, in essence, give legal status and protection under the Charter to the unborn child.

The LEAF organization, which is the legal arm of the Advisory Council on the Status of Women, has applied for government funds to pay their legal fees because LEAF has interventionist status at the Borowski trial. This funding is in addition to what LEAF already gets from the Government currently. REAL women also have interventionist status, and are applying for government assistance as well.

• (1410)

I urge the Minister responsible for the status of women and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to give funding to REAL women in fairness as the Government does not provide any funding to REAL women presently.

Under the Department's own guidelines, funding is not to go to any group involved with either side of the abortion issue. But in lieu of LEAF's previous funding this stipulation obviously has been disregarded.

NATIVE PEOPLES

EMPLOYMENT—REQUEST THAT JUSTICE BE PROVIDED FOR WOMEN OF KAHNAWAKE

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, almost two weeks ago, attempts by Dolores Montour to create jobs for Mohawk women at Kahnawake were thwarted. It seems there is no room for Native women in the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

The Mulroney Government has neglected to address the specific needs of the women of Kahnawake, a group that is particularly affected by unemployment, and the way certain Tory Members act towards Native people cannot be called nothing less than degrading and racist.

The problem was not with the project itself but with the Natives themselves, Lopez said.

"All they do is take money from the programs, it's always the same, they take money and it's never enough."

He recently suggested all Natives should be sent to Labrador.

Mr. Speaker, Chief Joe Norton of Kahnawake sent a letter to the Prime Minister, asking for an apology so did Keith Penner. Canadians support Mr. Norton. They want social justice for the women of Kahnawake, looking for work. We also demand that Native people be treated with fairness and dignity.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, history repeats itself. In the early forties, after trying in vain to interest central Canada and Europe, the Alberta Government accepted entrepreneurs from the United States who spent millions of dollars drilling dry holes before Leduc came in. That was the beginning of the oil industry in Alberta.

But you should have heard the Liberals and the CCF, now the NDP, rail about the Americans. "They will take over the country". "They will throw out our social programs", et cetera.

Today we are hearing the same predictions from the Liberals and the NDP about free trade. But none of the dire things happened. The Americans worked under Canadian rules, and we lost nothing. We gained an industry and millions of dollars worth of work and employment for hundreds of our people. The same good results can be secured from free trade. So free trade for a greater Canada!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

TREATMENT OF DEMONSTRATORS AT TORONTO ECONOMIC SUMMIT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 19, over 140 demonstrators against the Summit Conference as a symbol of international greed and oppression committed civil disobedience. In a disciplined action they crossed over police barriers set up to block thousands of orderly protest marchers on University Avenue.

The police, after behaving very well in public, retaliated against those arrested afterwards by denying them their rights under Section 10(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which states that everyone detained has a right to retain and instruct counsel without delay and to be informed of that right.

After several hours in jail the police refused to allow prisoners to phone lawyers, refused to allow lawyers to contact or interview prisoners, and used systematic tricks and lies to deprive 140 people of their Charter right.

This deliberate and systematic violation of the Charter was planned in consultation with the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher), as he told us, who therefore shares responsibility for deliberate violation of the Charter.

I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to apologize to Canadians for his Government's part in this violation of the Charter, and to order a public inquiry to determine who was responsible and what disciplinary action is needed to prevent a repetition of this grave government offence.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has admitted that he has not read the free trade agreement. What utter shame and incompetence! What utter contempt!

The Prime Minister's chief Minister responsible for the Mulroney-Reagan free trade deal has admitted that he is winging it. He is winging it with the future of our country. In other words, he does not know what he is talking about when he defends the Mulroney-Reagan free trade agreement.

He is faking it, pretending to know that he understands the agreement when in fact he does not. If the Minister responsible for the free trade agreement has not read it, who on the government side has?

Mr. McDermid: I have, twice.

Mr. Nunziata: I suspect that they are all winging it, from the Prime Minister to the Parliamentary Secretary.

How can the Minister promote the deal without having read it? How can Canadians have confidence in their future when the Government is winging it?

The Minister should be renamed the wing-it Minister or, better yet, the wing-nut Minister.

HERITAGE

UTILIZATION OF GREEN SPACES OF DOMAINE MAIZERETS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today, and it is with great satisfaction that I rise in the House to emphasize the Government's commitment to environmental issues and heritage sites.

Mr. Speaker, on June 16 this year, I announced on behalf of my Government that $328,370 would be made available for the development and appropriate use of the greenspace of the Domaine Maizerets.

This historic heritage site is very valuable parkland and is of specific interest to the people of the Quebec City area. Developing this park, in addition to providing much needed greenspace, will give users an opportunity to enjoy a natural environment with great potential for education, interpretation, recreation and cultural activities.

We must all work together, Mr. Speaker, to make every part of this country a good place to live.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS' POSITION ON SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, about three weeks ago the Finance Committee of this House brought down its report on bank service charges. We all remember the hysterical reaction of the Bankers Association to that report. In fact, the president of the Bankers Association, Mr. Robert MacIntosh, accused the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), of being a socialist. I could forgive him everything, but that I cannot forgive the Bankers Association.

The President of the Bankers Association said that he had to shout at the press conference condemning the report of the committee, because he said the chairman had a tin ear. Furthermore, he said that members of the committee were only looking out for their own seats, and that is why they brought down this tough report about services that should be free, about a basic banking account with no frills, about an ombudsman, and about adequate notification.

That was the reaction of the banks. All the banks were absolutely opposed to the report.

Now what has happened? What we find now is that the banks have done a complete turnabout and would have us and the Canadian people believe that they suddenly accept the report. The Member for Mississauga South, and the Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), are willing to withdraw their Bill. We are not, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES CONFERENCE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in my riding almost 400 people from small and medium-sized businesses attended one of those free trade business opportunities conferences much maligned by the Liberal and NDP Opposition.

They came to learn how to benefit from the free trade agreement, and they represent the reality of Canada in 1988, a Canada in which two-thirds of our exports are manufactured goods, a Canada that earns more export dollars from selling life insurance premiums abroad than from softwood lumber or crude oil, a Canada that earns more selling office equipment than from selling meat, a Canada in which sales of telecommunications equipment are four times the value of our nickel exports, a Canada where wheat exports are worth only half as much as our truck exports.

Despite what the Liberal and NDP Opposition would have us believe, Canadians are no longer hewers of wood and drawers of water. Rather, they are eager to take advantage of the free trade agreement and they are confident of Canada's future.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I was looking for the Prime Minister, Deputy Prime Minister, or Minister for International Trade, to ask a question, but I presume they are at a remedial training course over the noon hour to catch up on their programs. I will pose my question to the temporary Acting Deputy Prime Minister, to whomever that may be. I guess it is a random selection or choice.

Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister attempted to defend the Minister for International Trade by saying that, of course, he had read every single part of the agreement. Outside the House the Minister for International Trade said no, of course, he had not.

We are faced with a circumstance where we have a contradiction. Considering how important this agreement is, and considering how Canadians want an informed debate, I want to raise a question with whichever senior member of the Ministry is here.

• (1420)

How can the Government continue to have as a Minister of Trade someone who trivializes the issue to the point where he compares it to selling vacuum cleaners? Is the Government prepared to replace the Minister of Trade with someone who will treat the issue seriously and someone who will come to grips with an issue about which Canadians want informed answers instead of the buffoonery of the Minister for International Trade?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Hon. Member that I have been closer to the seat of Prime Minister than he will ever be.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: I also want to say that my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, has, in his own inimitable words, read every jot and tittle, every last word of every schedule, every part of the free trade agreement, and I want the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry to know that.

I also want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister for International Trade has been doing a tremendous job selling the free trade agreement without having read every last schedule. Now that he has, he will do an even better job, and those folkes opposite just better watch out.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, considering the comment of the Minister about her familiarity with the seat of power, now I understand how she got her broadcasting Bill through.

An Hon. Member: By the seat of her pants.

Miss MacDonald: What does that mean?

Mr. Axworthy: I think it explains a lot of things, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member would want to put his question.

ENERGY EXPORTS—PROPOSED ONTARIO LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will pose this question perhaps to the Minister of Energy who may provide us with a half-way informed answer. Yesterday the Minister for International Trade said that the legislation introduced by the Province of Ontario in no way was contradictory or in any way has an impact upon the trade agreement.

Yet if the Minister for International Trade had read Article 904(b), of the agreement, he would recognize that it clearly says that any party to the agreement cannot impose a higher price for exports than it does for domestic consumption by any means such as licences, fees, taxation and minimum price requirements, yet the legislation tabled in the Ontario Legislature clearly intends to use those means to set a differential price between domestic and export prices.

If that is the case, can the Minister of Energy tell us whether the Government of Canada has now changed its position? Is it now saying that the provinces of Canada will have the right to set a differential price between energy exports and what Canadian consumers pay? If so, have they informed their American partners to the agreement because the American partners in their statements say that no such differential is allowed? Can we get a clearer description of that policy change which obviously the Minister of Trade announced yesterday?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious the Government of Ontario is trying to play cat-and-mouse and that the Liberal Opposition is its mouthpiece.

To us, the question is a purely hypothetical one. The Minister for International Trade answered the question yesterday, and I think his answer was satisfactory to the Minister of Energy.

REQUEST THAT AGREEMENT BE RENEGOTIATED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing theoretical about the Bill that has been tabled in a provincial Legislature which clearly gives to that province the power to set a different price for exports than it sets for domestic consumption when the trade agreement, Article 904(b)—if the Minister of Energy has bothered to read it—clearly states that that is not allowed.

Is the Government of Canada prepared to condone and accept the position of the Province of Ontario which will now apply to all provinces and allow them to set a differential price? Will the Government of Canada therefore be prepared to renegotiate with the Americans Article 904(b) and take it out of the agreement so it will correspond to what the Minister for International Trade says is the new policy of the Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada has tabled a Bill, and that Bill reflects its position.

PUBLIC WORKS

LEASING CONTRACTS—ALLEGED RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister and concerns the administration of the Department of Public Works. Shortly after 12.30 noon today, CJOH Television in Ottawa reported that the RCMP has completed an investigation involving "officials in the Prime Minister's Office" and their alleged involvement in redirecting government leasing contracts in Quebec and in Ottawa to Conservative supporters.

Given the seriousness of these allegations as reported on television today, is the Prime Minister or the Acting Prime Minister in a position to confirm or deny that such an investigation has taken place or is in the process of taking place at the present time?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, this allegation is being brought to my attention for the first time. I would say to the Hon. Member that if he or anyone else has any proof of wrongdoing which they are trying to allege, then they should be prepared to produce it.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE STATEMENT IN HOUSE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Considering that some very serious allegations about the Prime Minister's Office were aired today on television here in Ottawa, is the Minister of Justice prepared to make a statement here in the House of Commons on this question, either immediately or later today?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CONFIRM INQUIRY UNDERTAKEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Solicitor General, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question about these very serious allegations that were indeed made at noon. Could the Minister of Justice confirm that an inquiry has not only been inaugurated but has been completed by the RCMP involving personnel in the Prime Minister's Office and related to another serious allegation of influence peddling involving Public Works and the leasing of contracts?

Could the Minister of Justice at least assure the House that there has been no such inquiry or investigation by the RCMP into the staff of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have to tell the Hon. Member in all candour that I am not aware of any such investigation. As the Acting Prime Minister has indicated, this is the first time this matter has come to the attention of the Government. I can only assume that, if there is an allegation to be made, it will be handled as we have handled any such allegations, whether founded or not. It will be handled with the fullest examination of all elements of any allegation that has been made.

I would simply ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party to remember that, if he brings these matters forward on the floor of the House of Commons, he should be satisfied that there is some basis upon which they should be given the credibility of his office. He is an officer of the House and should not be bringing these matters forward unless he is prepared to stand behind the allegations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CHECK ON ALLEGATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, to understate it, I would have expected more from the Minister of Justice. We are not making allegations. This is in the news now. It is two hours old. I would have thought that the Prime Minister's Office would be monitoring the news broadcasts as have opposition Parties, and it would have been able to clear this up after two hours and make a statement in the House. That is the point.

Considering that the most serious allegations have been made involving the Prime Minister's staff and the Government of the Province of Quebec, I would ask the Minister of Justice if this will be checked out immediately, and will someone responsible to the House, a Minister of the Crown, agree to return to the House this afternoon to make a statement on this important matter?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there are good reasons why we do not make statements with respect to investigations. I can assure the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that, naturally, any allegation of this sort will receive the fullest examination. I said that in response to his first question.

I want to reassure the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that, if there are allegations made, naturally all these matters are looked into thoroughly. The fact is that in terms of the administration of justice one would want to make sure that there is an unfettered examination of all the elements of the allegation and that we do nothing on the floor of the House of Commons that would prejudice or jeopardize an investigation. I think the Hon. Leader of the NDP would agree with that proposition and not want to do something that would have the effect of prejudicing the investigation.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REPORT TO HOUSE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I agree completely with the Minister of Justice and I hope he could come back to the House within an hour or two and report that there was not an RCMP investigation inaugurated and completed involving staff of the Prime Minister. That is the allegation which has been made publicly.

Will he check that out and report to the House, yes or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, allegations are made and investigations carried out. There have been a number of allegations made by the Opposition with respect to so-called investigations which have had absolutely no foundation whatsoever. Everyone is entitled to receive the protection of the law, to be presumed innocent until proven guilty.

Investigations by the RCMP go forward quite independently of the Government. We do not control the police force in this country. They are an independent entity and carry on their responsibilities with vigour and effectiveness. I am sure the Leader of the NDP would not want to suggest that we should interfere with the RCMP in the conduct of their duties.

ALLEGATION RCMP CONDUCTED INVESTIGATION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for the RCMP, the Solicitor General, or the Acting Solicitor General, and deals with the same subject. Surely the Government should be in a position here and now either to confirm or deny that the RCMP have conducted a criminal investigation into the affairs of certain people employed in the Prime Minister's Office.

Can the Minister indicate whether or not the RCMP have been investigating the affairs of members of the Prime Minister's staff, yes or no?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have been responding to the questions in my capacity as Acting Solicitor General. I indicated that I am not aware and have not been informed of any investigation which has taken place. I am naturally going to make inquiries with respect to this matter, but at the present time I cannot confirm there have been any investigations. The matter will receive my close attention and if the Hon. Member has any specific allegation to make or any information, I hope he will turn it over to the police authorities.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, this is what you call classic stonewalling.

Mr. Beatty: This is what you call classic grandstanding.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, we understand that the Minister of Justice is not aware of any possible investigation. I direct my question to anyone on the government side. Have the RCMP conducted an investigation regarding people employed in the Prime Minister's Office, yes or no? Surely someone across the way should have an answer to that question right now.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question. If the Hon. Member cannot understand plain English, I will try it in French, but I think he understands.

CHARTERED BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES—PROTECTION OF CUSTOMERS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In light of the Angus Reid poll published today which shows that 75 per cent of Canadians believe that legislation governing bank service charges will be more effective than voluntary compliance, does the Minister not agree that the most effective way to protect the interests of Canadians is through legislation along the lines of the recommendations of the finance committee of this House? Or, does he believe that the road to Damascus goes through Bay Street?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I could produce a poll for the Hon. Member indicating that 100 per cent of Canadians want results on this issue and that is what we are going to produce tomorrow.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is a true believer.

The Consumers' Association of Canada has also said that voluntary compliance does not ensure that, once things got better, service charges will not rise again, as we noticed for example with the recent rise in bank credit card interest rates. Therefore, will the Minister assure this House that he will not lie down for the banks on this issue, as did his two colleagues from York-Scarborough and Mississauga South?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that it was over two years ago the Hon. Member for Mackenzie raised this issue. It was over a year ago that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East, all on this side of the House, raised concerns about this issue. As a result, and using the very fine work of the committee, we are going to produce a package tomorrow with which even that Hon. Member will be happy.

AEROSPACE

SITE OF SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology. For more than two years, everyone in the Quebec Government, municipal authorities, Quebec businessmen, unions and the Liberal Party of Canada, through its leader, have been pressuring the Tory Government to locate the space agency in Montreal, a real space agency, not an empty shell. Even the new Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, and I don't know whether he is also the new Minister responsible for Montreal, said during his campaign that he would put his full weight behind this question. I hope he weighs as much as I do so Montreal will win!

So my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology. If they don't intend to do what they did in Lac-Saint-Jean and buy votes in Montreal, and if for once his Government could be honest and avoid political scandal, could the Minister announce here and now where the space agency will be located and what contracts it will be given?

An Hon. Member: He's saving that for the election!

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it will be a pleasure to answer the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. During the past year, a great deal has been done for Montreal and for the province of Quebec. An agreement was signed that, according to Premier Bourassa, was a milestone in regional economic development for Quebec. The agreement will provide funding of over $970 million, with another $40 million for private forests in Eastern Quebec. Montreal will get funding for the Vieux-Port development and there will be a special development fund for Montreal's east end. More money has been made available under the subsidiary agreements for Quebec. A new program has been added for science and technology development in Montreal. And as far as the space agency is concerned, an announcement will be made at the appropriate time, as soon as the Cabinet has made its decision.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this Minister is just like the other guy. He doesn't read his documents and worse, he is deaf, because at a press conference the Premier of Quebec said the Government was not giving enough. It isn't one billion, it's only half a million the federal Government—the Premier blamed you for interest rates, and he blamed you for the shipyards. He blamed you for the space agency. So stop telling stories. The election campaign in Lac-Saint-Jean is over. The lying is over for the time being!

NATURE OF AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): What I want to know from the Minister, when he announces the space agency, is: Will the space agency be located in Montreal to administer contracts or will it just be people working in Montreal to administer contracts that will be performed in Toronto? Is it a space agency with powers, contracts, economic benefits, not the crumbs that you Conservatives have been giving us for four years?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it does not happen often, but I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie when he says . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate him when he rises in the House to say that the lying is over. This may be his last question in the House, then.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—ENGINE TESTING NOISE

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. The Minister is aware that the residents surrounding Pearson Airport have recently been awakened by run-up noises during the restricted hours of midnight to 6 a.m. For your benefit, Mr. Speaker, run-up noise is engine testing, not the run-up noise we hear on a daily basis from the opposition benches.

The Minister is aware that this run-up creates the same noise level as an engine in take-off or landing. However, unlike take-off and landing, it is not subject to any restrictions.

Could the Minister ensure that action will be taken so that residents around the airport will not be disturbed at these ungodly hours and that this colleague of his, who is also a resident, can get his much needed beauty rest?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, my officials have requested that the aircraft maintenance run-up organizations adhere to the following three stipulations: Inform power ground control of run-up activity; conduct run-ups in an area so as to direct noise to the infield of the airport; and avoid run-ups at night.

This is an important subject for the residents around Pearson International Airport. We are also going to ensure that run-ups are done late in the morning outside the restricted hours. I believe that should provide some comfort for that area.

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

INFORMATION COMMISSIONER'S ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday the annual report of the Information Commissioner, Inger Hansen, was made public. That report was a damning indictment of the Conservative Government's attempts to stonewall and deny access to information, to, in her words, block the road to openness. She said, "The Act isn't working and I felt I had to speak out".

In view of this harsh and unprecedented criticism of the Government, will the Minister of Justice now admit that his response to the unanimous report of the Justice Committee was a betrayal of the Prime Minister's 1984 promise to strengthen freedom of information, not to gut it? What action will the Minister of Justice take to respond to this devastating attack on his Government by the Information Commissioner?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the premise of the Hon. Member's question. It is not against the Constitution of Canada or the Charter of Rights and Freedoms for the Hon. Member, or indeed the press, to report on statements made by the Information Commissioner which are complimentary of the Government with respect to the initiatives we have taken.

We responded on a very positive note to the committee report. We have opened up the process. We are the first Government which has had access to information in place while in office. We have been responding in a very positive way to support this initiative and we will continue to do so, even if we do not have the co-operation of the Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF PCO LETTER TO DEPARTMENTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Information Commissioner went on to say, "The Prime Minister did at one time speak out in favour of freedom of information. Maybe he doesn't know what's happening today".

Is the Minister of Justice prepared to withdraw the letter which was sent out by the Clerk of the Privy Council in September of 1986 which basically told Departments that they had to vet through the Prime Minister's office all requests for information which might in any way embarrass the Prime Minister?

Will the Minister of Justice assure the House that this offensive letter, this attempt to gag any information which might embarrass the Prime Minister, will be immediately withdrawn? Will he at least take that step?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I noticed in press reports with respect to statements made by Miss Hansen that she has indicated that she has no hard evidence to back up her statement that there is any prohibition across the board with respect to the federal Government or any attempt to slow down the process.

I think the Hon. Member would accept the fact that we have introduced a regime whereby the Government is committed to public education and an increase in access to government information. We have had some very positive proposals which we plan to bring forward in legislation.

If the Hon. Member will co-operate with us he will find out that we in this Government will have the most effective access to information regime of any Government in Canada. When there was a socialist Government in this country it was not very high up on access to information. That is probably one reason it lost the next election.

AGRICULTURE

QUÉBEC FARMERS—GOVERNMENT POLICIES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. A few days ago, representatives of the Union des producteurs agricoles and the Coopérative fédérée du Québec and the Quebec Minister of Agriculture came to Ottawa to meet with members of our caucus, and perhaps with other Members from Quebec who sit in this House, to complain about the injustice and unfairness of the Conservative Government's policies towards Quebec farmers and their Government. For grain alone, they told us, the lost income for Quebec farmers and their Government amounts to $200 million.

I would like to ask the Government what it is waiting for to correct this unfairness to Quebec farmers, their representatives and the Government of Quebec, to correct this revenue shortfall of over $200 million.

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question on this specific subject. I am quite aware of the position taken by certain farm leaders in the Province of Quebec which is, to a certain extent I suppose, shared by my provincial counterpart from that province.

I have seen the document that they have prepared. I have had senior people within my Department analyse it. It contains many inaccuracies and many flaws.

I want the Hon. Member to know that since we assumed office we have ensured that all the programs we have delivered are fair and equitable to all farmers in all regions.

HARMONIZATION OF PROGRAMS—GUARANTIES—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, in this case, it is not an individual but a whole group of farmers' representatives, including the provincial Minister of Agriculture.

At the same meeting, these representatives also told us of the difficulties they face with the eventual harmonization of programs as a result of the trade agreement with the United States. On their behalf, I would like to ask the Minister to make a formal commitment that marketing programs, supply management and price stabilization that protect farm income and the family farm will be protected. Can these programs be guaranteed and does the Minister give us his word and his Government's commitment that these programs will not be affected by the harmonization process following the implementation of the Canada-U.S. trade agreement?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the Hon. Member asks that question, particularly at this stage. He might recall that when we began the process of negotiating the bilateral trade arrangement between the United States and ourselves we made it very clear—it was publicly stated in this very Chamber, I believe on March 16, 1986—that Canada's supply managed systems, Canada's agri-food marketing systems, would remain intact. At the completion of the negotiations we delivered exactly what we stated on March 16, 1986.

In addition to that, there is a provision in the bilateral trade arrangement, Section 710 which clearly sets out that particular issue as part of the trade agreement. Canada's supply managed systems are quite consistent with the bilateral trade arrangement and are quite consistent with Article XI in the GATT.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Last night on the U.S. based Cable News Network, Fred Grandy, a Republican Congressman from Iowa, indicated that the trade deal between Canada and the United States would allow the capital rich U.S.A. to have full access to the water and resource rich Canada. That differs greatly from what the Government has been telling the House and the Canadian people.

Will the Minister explain why, after his comments, all the words of the Minister for International Trade, and all the taxpayers' money that has been spent, the Americans still believe they have open access to our water?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, did you ever notice the schizophrenia of the NDP? On the one hand they elevate anti-Americanism to the level of Party policy—

Mr. Broadbent: Answer the question.

Mr. McMillan: On the other hand, they quote any American they can find, twist his remarks to buttress every manner of contortion of policy of the federal Government. The fact is that the Government of Canada has made very clear through its federal water policy that we are against large-scale exports of water.

Mr. Rodriguez: Why did you not exclude it?

Mr. McMillan: We are against inter-basin diversions for such a purpose. That is the policy of the Government of Canada and it stands, no matter what the NDP says on the subject.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that there is no piece of legislation that would prevent that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Angus: Let me point out to the Minister that the Congressman involved, Congressman Grandy, is another American actor, who played "Gopher" on The Love Boat. Is the reason the Government is unwilling to bring in legislation to prevent large-scale trans-boundary water diversions because the Prime Minister thinks he is on the Love Boat, having a love-in with President Reagan, and wants us to be nothing more than "go-fors" for the United States?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely ridiculous. The federal Government does not need law or regulation in this case. It has stated its policy, which could not be more clear even to the obtuse NDP.

An Hon. Member: Policy changes.

Mr. McMillan: The water of Canada is not for sale. We are against large-scale export of water. The free trade agreement does not force either Canada or the United States to sell water to the other. The water policy excludes inter-basin diversions for large-scale water export purposes. Nothing could be clearer. If we wrote it in a million laws, the policy would not be clearer than that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY DISBANDMENT—TERMS OF UNION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. He will know that as part of the Canada-Newfoundland agreement to close down the Newfoundland railway, the Government of Canada sought and received from the Government of Newfoundland an agreement for Newfoundland to give up the 1949 constitutional guarantee that the Government of Canada provide for Newfoundland's portion of the coast-to-coast national transportation system.

Yesterday in Newfoundland, Liberal leader Clyde Wells tabled a resolution calling on the Government of Canada to amend the 1949 Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland so that Ottawa continue to pay the additional costs for that portion of the highway system that results from the closure of the railway.

Given that the agreement signed a few weeks in St. John's destroys that constitutional guarantee, is the Government prepared to reconsider its position and restore constitutional guarantees that were part and parcel of Newfoundland entering union with Canada in 1949?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member well knows, there was the commitment in the negotiations that took place between the province, CN, and the federal Government to meet the constitutional obligations.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, we know from a declaration made yesterday in the House that the Minister for International Trade did not bother to read the trade deal. We know that the junior Minister of State for Transport has not read the Canada-Newfoundland Railway phase-out agreement because there is clearly a clause in which the Province of Newfoundland gave up its right to constitutional obligation on the part of Canada to maintain a transportation system in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. The Minister should be ashamed that he does not know it.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF TERMS OF UNION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, given that this agreement, negotiated in haste by Tory Parties in Ottawa and Newfoundland that are in desperate political trouble, changes the Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland, will the Government accept the advice of the resolution in the House of Assembly in Newfoundland and Labrador to effect an amendment to the Terms of Union so that that constitutional guarantee is retained into the future? We cannot accept a deal that was made for short-term political expediency and sells out the future of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as I clearly pointed out, I do not believe the Liberal Party in Newfoundland is negotiating on behalf of Newfoundlanders. It does not represent Newfoundlanders at this time. Negotiations that have taken place deal with the requirements of Newfoundlanders.

PUBLIC WORKS

ALLEGATION OF RCMP INVESTIGATION REFUTED

Hon. Allan Lawrence (Durham—Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In the three-quarters of an hour since the question of the alleged raid on the Prime Minister's Office by the RCMP has been raised in the House, has the Minister of Justice been able to check with officials about the veracity or lack thereof of that charge?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that question. I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that there is no investigation of any alleged wrong-doing on the part of anyone or person on the staff of the Prime Minister's Office or within the Prime Minister's Office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Get up and apologize.

Mr. Broadbent: For what?

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Andre: Throw some more mud, Ed!

Mr. Nystrom: What is the matter with you?

Mr. Siddon: Get up and apologize.

Miss MacDonald: Tell us about morality.

EMPLOYMENT

WAGE EQUITY—HUMAN RIGHTS COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since 1977, only 1.6 per cent of women working in the Public Service have benefited from the federal pay equity law. A year ago this week, the Human Rights Commission recommended a major overhaul of the legislative provisions on pay equity.

I would like to ask the Minister when his Government will implement the Commission's recommendations and give Canadian women real pay equity.

[English]

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it was this Government that introduced the Employment Equity Act. This Government introduced employment equity and broader affirmative action throughout the whole of the Public Service, and we will continue to bring equality into the Public Service in a way that had not been done in the past. We will do the same thing with Governor in Council appointments. We have done more in this field than any other Government.

Let me add that we have applied employment equity legislation to all businesses that are regulated under federal Government jurisdiction.

PAY EQUITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, we know the legislation is not working. Hamilton Mountain Census Data released this month, and I have here the Statistics Canada report, show that in my community women are earning 60 cents for every dollar a man earns. Why is the Government ignoring the proposals put forward by the Human Rights Commission? Why is it ignoring its commitment to pay equity for the women of Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Employment Equity Act is working. The New Democrats did not want it to work in the first place, they argued against it. They voted against it. They did not want equality for women or for minority groups. The reports are coming in this month for the first time on the Employment Equity Act. We see in hundreds of reports now being submitted to the Department of Employment and Immigration the advances that are being made.

For the first time, over one thousand companies and contractors which are doing business with the federal Government, have integrated the Employment Equity Act in their planning. They have never done that before. What we are seeing is contract compliance for the first time. Over one thousand contractors now have that compliance in place, as do businesses that are federally regulated.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEWCASTLE, N.B.—EFFECT OF POLYAROMATIC HYDROCARBONS ON WATER SUPPLY

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Recent testing for polyaromatic hydrocarbons in the Town of Newcastle, New Brunswick, has discovered samples which exceed the World Health Organization guidelines by at least tenfold. These hydrocarbons have been recognized as a potential cancer causing agent. As a result of this pollution, the town has had to shut down 40 per cent of its potable water.

Can the Minister advise us what federal assistance is being provided to the community and province to assist in discovering the source and correcting the problem?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, I have taken a very keen personal interest in this matter. The situation at Newcastle is serious. Polyaromatic hydrocarbons are an environmental bad actor. The Member will also know that the principal responsibility for this problem rests with the province and the municipality. However, for our part the federal Government is exercising its own jurisdiction to the hilt and backing the province and the community with all relevant and needed technical resources.

If the province or municipality need further assistance at any point in their own work, the Hon. Member can be assured I will instruct my officials to provide that assistance. In the meantime we are paying particular attention, because it is within federal jurisdiction, to water quality in the Miramachi River and to the marine life therein.

TAX REFORM

EFFECTS OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Although some Canadians will see a minor increase in their take-home pay this month, the Institute for Research and Public Policy confirms what we on this side of the House have being saying, that in fact middle-income Canadian families are worse off with so-called tax reform than they were in 1984. The biggest winners are the 1 per cent of Canadians earning the highest incomes.

Will the Minister agree with the witness before the committee who said that this tax reform should properly be called "tax deform"?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, many Members who have appeared before the committee have spoken to me not just about tax reform but about the tremendous growth we have had in this country and the fact we are leading the G-7 countries in job creation and economic growth, the fact that we have seen 1.3 million jobs created during this period of time, and the fact that we are taking the courageous move to reform the tax system. As the Hon. Member has pointed out, that will become evident to Canadians in their first pay cheque after July 1. I believe 85 per cent of Canadians will see their taxes go down.

These are the things Canadians are interested in. These are the things I am hearing from people when they come and congratulate me on the performance we have seen by this Government and by this economy over the last three and one-half years.

EFFECTIVE DATE OF TAX DECREASES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): The Minister takes $22 billion out of the pockets of Canadians, returns $2 billion and thinks they should be grateful.

Will the Minister confirm that although some of these tax decreases are effective since January, the payroll deductions only become effective in July and, therefore, the Government has been enjoying an interest-free loan of $1 billion from taxpayers?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised the Hon. Member would use that $22 billion figure. She is known for the straightforward, honest type of questions that some of her colleagues are not known for and that some of the people next door to her are not known for. She is, but she knows perfectly well that that $22 billion figure is 80 per cent because of the growth of the economy and only 20 per cent because of tax increases. I can understand why she is blushing now, having asked that question.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I wish to advise the House of the results of those discussions. Today, Routine Proceedings will proceed in a normal manner and under Orders of the Day the Government will call Bill C-130, that is, the free trade Bill. It is our understanding that the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition will seek the floor to address the Bill at that time.

Immediately after his remarks, the debate will be adjourned on consent and the Government will call for concurrence in the Ways and Means motion on tax reform. We expect a request for a recorded division on that particular item and, immediately after the recorded division, the House will return to debate on Bill C-130.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Government House Leader has accurately conveyed to the House the results of discussions on the matters he has mentioned, and we give our consent to the proposal he has made.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House in agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

REPORT STAGE MOTIONS TO AMEND BILL C-72

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-72 was reported to the House on Monday at three o'clock. I presented a motion to amend the Bill under Standing Order 114(5) yesterday at eleven o'clock. The Standing Order is quite specific. It reads:

> If, not later than twenty-four hours prior to the consideration of a report stage, written notice is given of any motion to amend, delete, insert or restore any clause in a Bill, it shall be printed on a Notice Paper.

Those amendments are not printed. I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, why it was not printed?

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Calgary East for raising this matter, which was in fact anticipated. I am sure Hon. Members will not be surprised to find that the Chair envisaged this point of order being raised in the House today.

I wish to advise Hon. Members that through the House administration it was brought to my attention that a revised report from the legislative committee which dealt with Bill C-72 would be presented to the House today. Since report stage notices should not be placed on the Notice Paper until the Bill is reported back to the House in its corrected form, I felt, after consultation with the Clerk of the House, that all notices received in amendment to the Bill at that stage would be held off the Notice Paper pending the revised report being presented.

I can assure the Hon. Member for Calgary East and all Hon. Members that their notices will be printed as soon as the report is presented to the House. I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS— THIRTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the thirteenth report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

This report deals with financial management in government. Hon. Members will know that the Auditor General has commented that although there is considerable improvement in financial control, policy decisions are being taken without good information on costs, and without full knowledge of the implications of these decisions.

In this report we concentrate on efforts to improve financial management in government. The report identifies potential savings of many millions of dollars, for example, $40 million in the Department of Health and Welfare by improving the system of income security payments by moving to a more modern system. There are other possible savings of $200 million per year.

We have asked the Government for a comprehensive response to this report.

SCRUTINY OF REGULATIONS—TENTH REPORT OF STANDING JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to present the tenth report of the Standing Joint Committee on Scrutiny of Regulations, which I have the honour to present in both official languages.

BILL C-72—REVISED REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mrs. Jennifer Cossitt (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, I have the honour to present the revised report on Bill C-72, as amended, to the House.

An important amendment to Clause 37 had inadvertently been left out at report stage of Bill C-72. This amendment had been adopted by members of the committee and is therefore necessary to be presented at the revised stage of this Bill.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the first report of the Standing Committee on National Defence.

My committee has conducted a review of those portions of the defence White Paper pertaining to our reserve forces, made visits, and held public hearings. The recommendations contained in this report are the result of our deliberations.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and indeed my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a number of my constituents who are concerned that the fabric of Canadian sovereignty is being threatened by the proposed trade deal, and that the federal Government lacks a mandate to negotiate a trade deal with the United States.

They also believe that the trade deal would reduce our country's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need. Since the trade Bill would integrate Canada's economy into that of the United States of America, they are asking that the House wrap up its affairs so that a general election can take place on the trade deal.

IMMIGRATION—REQUEST FOR CLOSER CO-OPERATION WITH VIETNAM

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto. They are concerned about our immigration policy. Inasmuch as family reunion is a major part of our policy, and whereas many Canadians from Vietnam find that it takes many months or years to bring relatives from Vietnam to Canada as immigrants, and the Vietnamese Government has delayed or stopped immigration for many relatives of Canadians, the undersigned call on the House of Commons to ensure that the Canadian Government will negotiate actively with Vietnam to secure an agreement providing for closer co-operation on immigration, including quicker action on Canadian sponsorships.

IMMIGRATION—INCLUSION IN FAMILY CLASS—SPONSORING OF PARENTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I have a further petition from a number of residents of Toronto who are concerned that the promise of the Government to allow sons and daughters unmarried of any age to enter as members of the family class should be carried through as promised by the Government to take place next month.

Also a two-year old promise of the then Minister of Justice, they wish to be carried out as well. He promised to remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more so that both groups would have equal right to sponsor parents of any age.

They request Parliament to call on the Government to fulfil its promises now.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Benno Friesen Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I have eight petitions with hundreds of names from communities from Delta to Abbotsford in the Fraser Valley. All of them ask Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

In duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have two duly certified petition to present. The first deals with the trade deal between Canada and the United States. It points out that the Government had no mandate to negotiate such a trade deal, that it would reduce Canada's ability to plan, and that it would further integrate Canada into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore the petitioners ask the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the trade deal and that it results in a national general election before any agreement is signed.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the other petition I wish to present deals with the subject of abortion.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have three petitions to present. The first indicates that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, that the Mulroney Government had no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need, and that the Mulroney trade deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. I fully understand the use, at times, of names to associate with something within the political sphere. However, I would ask Hon. Members not to overdo it.

I think that the continued repetition is perhaps getting to the point at which we might have some objections. I would ask the Hon. Member to keep that in mind.

Mr. Keeper: I am not quite clear what the Speaker meant.

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry if I did not make myself clear. We have had a custom and a tradition in this place for many years that we refer to Hon. Members as a Minister, a Prime Minister, or the Hon. Member for whatever riding. I recognize that in common parlance there are times when surnames are used and associated with some aspect of political life or government. I would just ask that Hon. Members not overdo it.

• (1520)

Mr. Keeper: I was reading the petition. Are you indicating, Mr. Speaker, that since it is the content of the petition I should not be reading it?

Mr. Speaker: I am not attempting to make a severe ruling. I am only asking for some co-operation with respect to the customs of the place.

Mr. Keeper: I will respect the Chair, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Good.

Mr. Keeper: I don't need you barking from the sidelines. I am attempting to present a petition signed by Canadians who want the Government to shove the trade deal, whether it is called the Mulroney trade deal or the prime ministerial trade deal.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre is trying to co-operate with the Chair, and I would ask other Hon. Members to remain silent while he finishes his statement.

Mr. Keeper: I have a petition from a number of Canadians across the country who would like the Government to abandon its trade deal, by whatever name it is called.

CANADA POST—POSTAL SERVICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my second petition deals with the Post Office. It indicates quite clearly that the Government ought to abandon its policy with regard to the Post Office, because it is destroying post office services in both rural and urban Canada.

The third petition is also with regard to the Post Office. It contains different provisions, but it states that the Government ought to develop a good postal policy rather than continuing to destroy postal services.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two petitions to the House. The first petition deals with a national general election on the trade deal. It puts forward several reasons why the petitioners do not think that the Government has the right to proceed with the trade deal. They request that the Government ensure a national debate takes place and that that debate result in a national general election before the agreement is put into place.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a duly certified petition on behalf of constituents of Victoria—Haliburton. The petition is signed by 163 residents of Beaverton, Kinmount, Cameron, Coboconk, Dunsford, Fenelon Falls, Cannington, Kirkfield, Lindsay, Little Britain, Minden, Norland, Oakwood, Omemee, Woodville, and surrounding areas.

In light of the fact that the Supreme Court of Canada is striking down Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada, and has left Canadians without any law restricting abortion, the petitioners call upon Parliament to pass legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception, with the exception of situations in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition given to me by the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada and signed by 56 people, some from the national capital region and some from Kaladar, and North Brook, Ontario.

They ever pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

As in duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

CUTS IN FUNDS FOR CHALLENGE '88 PROGRAM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I bring to your attention a grievance from Montrealers living in the Verdun, Pierrefonds, Bois de Bologne, St. Laurent, St. Leonard, Dollard- des-Ormeaux, Town of Mount Royal, Snowdon, Côte-des-Neiges, Côte-St-Luc, and a variety of other areas in and around Montreal.

The petition is bilingual and states that a 40 per cent cut in the budget of the Challenge '88 program in the Montreal region has a negative impact which goes beyond mere numbers of unemployed students and disappointed community organizations.

It is a well-known fact that almost the totality of cultural communities, visible or otherwise, live in those areas. The increase in available grants to other Québec regions can therefore bring cultural communities little comfort. They are thus being discriminated against in a way that is unacceptable from a Government wishing to appear committed to a multicultural policy.

Wherefore the undersigned petitioners humbly submit the petition which contains hundreds of names.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my duty and privilege to present four petitions containing a total of more than 400 names signed by residents of Edmonton, the majority of whom reside in my constituency.

The petitioners believe that human life begins at the moment of conception, and they call upon the Government to enact immediately legislation to protect the life of the unborn child.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 343 and 351.

[Text]

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

Question No. 343—Mr. Gauthier:

1. Will the Economic Council of Canada move outside the city of Vanier, Ontario and, if so, what will be the costs involved in the move and relocation of the Council?

2. What sums of money (a) does it cost to lodge the Council in its present quarters (b) will it cost to lodge the Council in its new quarters?

3. To the knowledge of the Government, what will be the costs involved for the workers as a result of the move for (a) parking (b) additional transportation (c) other expenses?

Mr. Len Gustafson (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I am informed by the Economic Council of Canada that:

1. Public Works Canada is currently seeking Treasury Board approval to enter into a lease for accommodation in downtown Ottawa for the Economic Council of Canada. The moving costs are estimated at $760,000 and are expected to be offset by the inducements offered by the landlord.

2. (a) The annual rent of the present quarters is $581,000.

(b) The annual rent of the new quarters is estimated at $775,000.

3. (a) The cost of parking for staff will increase from $36 to approximately $100 to $125 per month.

(b) The costs involved are very much dependent on the mode of transportation (single car, car pool, buses). The distance travelled by 60 per cent of the staff will be much the same or less while the rest of the staff, those who live in the east end, will have to travel an additional three kilometres (approximately) to get to downtown Ottawa.

(c) The Economic Council of Canada is not aware of any other expenses.

PERMITS AUTHORIZED UNDER EXPORT CONTROL LIST

Question No. 351—Mr. Riis:

During (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988 up to May 1, did the Government authorize permits for the export of any goods falling under Section 7 of the Export Control List where the destination of the said goods was (i) Bangladesh (ii) Chad (ii) Chile (iv) Colombia (v) El Salvador (vi) Ethiopia (vii) Guatemala (viii) Haiti (ix) Honduras (x) India (xi) Indonesia (xii) Iran (xiii) Iraq (xiv) South Korea (xv) Lebanon (xvi) Libya (xvii) Mali (xviii) Mauritania (xix) Morocco (xx) Namibia (xxi) Pakistan (xxii) Paraguay (xxiii) Peru (xxiv) The Philippines (xxv) Somalia (xxvi) Syria (xxvii) Taiwan (xxviii) Togo (xxix) Turkey (xxx) Uganda (xxxi) Uruguay (xxxii) Zaire and, if so, in each case, to what value?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Total values of Export Permits issued for Export Control List, Group 7 goods to the following countries, for the calendar years indicated. When no value is provided, no permits were issued.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner in the absence of a mandate from the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada."

And the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "political institutions of Canada," the words "including our valued system of social and regional development programs,".

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we are here today to discuss one of the most devastating pieces of legislation ever brought before the House of Commons. We are here to debate a Bill which will finish Canada as we know it and replace it with a Canada that will become nothing more than a colony of the United States.

So urgent and compelling is the impatience of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to pack up this country and ship it south that we are going to debate this Bill for only a few hours. It took 121 years for Canadians to build this Confederation. The Government is proposing to undo that in less than half that number of hours. This Bill represents over 1,000 days of intricate negotiations between the two countries. We will debate the result of those 1,000 days in five days before the House of Commons.

This Bill is a disaster like the trade agreement it will give force of law.

With this measure, the Government is telling Canadians they have no choice but to accept or reject this agreement. It is telling this House that the elected representatives of the Canadian people have no say in the drafting of this Bill and can do nothing to diminish its impact on our country.

We are being forced to pass this legislation in a matter of days without even having seen the corresponding U.S. bill.

At every stage of the talks, there were major differences of opinion between both governments about the wording and the content of the agreement. Nevertheless, this Government is now obliging us to adopt its version of the Bill without giving us a chance to examine the legislation proposed in the U.S. Congress.

Only two and a half weeks ago, the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff was still in Washington to negotiate differences between the United States and Canada, not just on minor points but on fundamental issues like the definition of subsidies.

[English]

This Bill greatly offends Canadian tradition in three ways: it is anti-parliamentary, it is anti-democratic, it is anti-Constitution. We are being presented with an omnibus Bill which changes 27 existing Acts of Parliament. Clause 8 commits us never again to pass a statute inconsistent with this Bill, never again to enact legislation inconsistent with this trade deal. The Bill is to supersede any other Act of Parliament, past or future. It has almost the authority of a constitutional provision. Yet the discussion draft that the U.S. Congress negotiated between the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives indicates that that version of the trade Bill, the American version of the trade Bill, can be amended by any subsequent Act of Congress. Not only that, we find that Canadians can be fined, even imprisoned, for contravening American law, present and future, laws we haven't even seen yet.

I raised this in the House of Commons. The Minister was surprised. Now we know why. He has not read the whole deal. He has not studied the document. I am going to take him and the House through several of the provisions that relate right to the fundamental nature of our country. I doubt that the government Members read any of the Bill at all. Here is what it says about people who do not uphold the trade agreement as incorporated into the Bill.

Section 77.26 (1)—Every person who contravenes or fails to comply with . . . (C) a protective order covering business proprietary and other privileged information made under American law . . . is guilty of offence and is liable . . . (E) on conviction and indictment, to a fine not exceeding one million dollars.

The Bill before this House involves Canadians in potential liability, potential imprisonment, and fines up to $1 million, not for offending Canadian law, not for contravening Canadian regulation, but for offending American law, present or future, laws that have not yet been enacted by the U.S. Congress. The Bill is anti-parliamentary for those reasons, and it is also anti-democratic.

Turning to public hearings, we do not know whether the committee will allow public hearings. There have been no public hearings on this Bill to date. There were no public hearings allowed on the text of the agreement. The only hearings across the country were on the general principles of that agreement. There has been no opportunity for Canadians publicly, before their elected representatives or Members of Parliament, to analyse the deal, to make their points, their submissions, to present their briefs on the deal, to analyse the real impact of the deal on their lives, their unions, their jobs, their professions, their businesses.

The whole procedure has been anti-democratic. The Prime Minister has no mandate for this legislation. It alters the fundamental direction of Canada. There was no mention of it in the last general election. It was not a theme put before the people of Canada in the last election. The only time Canadians were ever given an inkling, given an understanding of the Prime Minister's view on this very fundamental issue was when he sought the leadership of the Conservative Party at its national convention in 1983, and when, in response to a debate with the current Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the current Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the current Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), he was asked what he thought about free trade and his words were quite clear. "Free trade," he said, "it affects our sovereignty, and we will have none of it."

Those were the words of the Prime Minister when it suited him to be against free trade. Our Prime Minister's aversion to sticking to his word has become famous. Some would say even legendary.

Canadians were not consulted nor did they authorize a deal which changes the whole direction of Canadian history, and we need an election so that Canadians can decide.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is not only anti-parliamentary and anti-democratic, it is anti-Constitution.

Clause 6—the Minister hasn't read it, he doesn't know, people ask him questions and he's taken by surprise—Clause 6 contains a provision that allows the federal Government to ignore the jurisdiction of the provinces in order to implement the agreement. This would involve not just wine and grapes, as was claimed by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) but also energy, agriculture, our financial institutions, social policies, services, culture, and so forth. In other words, the present Government has allowed the Americans to rewrite our Constitution and to determine our future legislative agenda.

[English]

You must be asking yourself the question, Mr. Speaker: How did it come to this? Why? Why are we being forced to rush this Bill through at the last minute, against all our traditions, parliamentary, democratic, constitutional, against the wishes of a vast majority of the Canadian people who want an election before this deal is implemented?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why? Why are we now being forced to give hasty approval to legislation which represents the largest sell-out of our sovereignty since we became a nation in 1867? Why? Dishonesty, Mr. Speaker, dishonesty on the part of this Government.

The whole point of getting into bilateral negotiations with the United States rather than negotiating with that country internationally as we have done since the War quite successfully, the sole point of getting into bilateral negotiations was to obtain secure access to the American market. Secure access to the American market meant a specific exemption from U.S. protectionist trade remedy law. It also meant an impartial binding dispute settlement mechanism to enforce that exemption.

We in this Party have been saying that ever since these negotiations first started. I put it in questions to the Prime Minister; my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry put it in questions to the Minister for International Trade. I told the Ottawa Board of Trade in a major speech two years ago this month that any agreement with the United States that did not have a specific exemption from American trade law, that did not exempt us from protectionist legislation—the 1930 Trade Act of the United States, the 1974 trade law of the United States, the current omnibus Bill still being discussed in the Congress—that any agreement with the United States that did not give us that exemption, that did not give us a binding dispute settlement mechanism, was not worth the paper it was written on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Government, the Prime Minister, his Ministers, used to agree with me on that point.

A year ago the Prime Minister said in New York, quoted by the Wall Street Journal in response to some American reporters: "The U.S. trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada period". That was when he understood the deal. The former Minister for International Trade, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), said that the objective of any trade agreement—and she said this in the House of Commons—would be the elimination of countervail by both countries. The current Minister for International Trade agreed with his predecessor and with the Prime Minister. Here is what he said in St. John's, on July 2, 1987, a year ago, before the St. John's Board of Trade, and I use the Minister's words:

> Unless we get out from under the threat of countervail and other U.S. trade remedy law and unless there is an effective dispute settlement resolution to bind the Americans to their commitments, a free trade agreement with the United States would not be a good deal for Canada.

Those were the Minister's words. We have been saying that ever since these negotiations started. We have been attempting to hold the Government to that sole purpose of any bilateral negotiation with the United States. Well, we all know that the Minister for International Trade is trying to bluff his way through, trying to sell this arrangement to Canadians with jokes and anecdotes. Perhaps that speech in St. John's was one of them, but then again the Minister has not read the deal. He is the man who compares selling this trade agreement to the United States with selling vacuum cleaners. For his information—and I feel I owe him now the responsibility of taking him through the deal that he has not read—this is what the deal says in the actual text. The Minister will have great difficulty comparing that with his last July statement to the St. John's Board of Trade. Article 1902:1 of this trade deal says that the United States:

> —reserves the right to apply its anti-dumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party.

The other party is Canada. In other words, there is no exemption from U.S. protectionist trade law. It is the same law that crippled us on exports of softwood lumber, fish, potash, and put on quotas against steel. Those laws still apply.

Yes, it is true, we will have a new trade tribunal, but how will this trade tribunal ensure our exports guaranteed access to the American market? How will it protect our exporters from that protectionist American legislation? Well, the Prime Minister cannot tell us. We put the question to him. The Minister cannot tell us because he has not read it. The reason the Government cannot tell us is that the trade tribunal will not protect us or give us an exemption from American trade law. Not only will the procedure be longer and costlier for our exporters, the tribunal still will not be able to challenge U.S. law.

Here again I turn to the agreement. How can the Minister know? He has not read the whole deal. But Article 1904:2 states that the tribunal can review a trade decision of the United States Government only:

> —to determine whether such determination was in accordance with the anti-dumping or countervailing duty law of the importing Party.

That is American law. It goes on to say that:

> —the anti-dumping and countervailing duty statutes of the Parties, as those statutes may be amended from time to time, are incorporated into this Agreement.

In other words, the tribunal cannot challenge the law. Canadian exporters will not be able to challenge American law. The tribunal has the jurisdiction only to interpret that law using American precedent and American judicial practice. Nothing has changed for Canadian exporters. If an American industry feels that a Canadian industry by way of export into the American market is obtaining a share of that market which the Americans cannot tolerate, they have the same remedies in countervail, in quotas, in anti-dumping, and in surtax as they had before this agreement was ever signed.

Canadian exporters are being invited into the Prime Minister's brave new world of trade, with the United States, under the same rules. Not only existing American rules, but as the article I have just recited says, under any American statute present or future as they may be amended from time to time—present American law, future American law, and no restriction on the sovereign authority of the United States.

Also, even at this late date we do not know whether the tribunal's decisions will be considered constitutional by the American courts. Our Ambassador to the United States was properly concerned. He is quoted as saying the following in what seems to me to be the understatement of the year. These were his words:

> We would be profoundly concerned if the net result of the U.S. legal constraints is that panel decisions—

That is to say, decisions of the tribunal:

> —cannot be implemented under U.S. law.

This House is being forced to pass this proposed legislation at top speed, when we don't even know if the U.S. Government will have to abide by the tribunal's decisions or whether it will be able to act on those decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I always thought that in business, when one party enters into an agreement with another party and the latter cannot meet his commitments, the agreement is automatically cancelled. Apparently that is not how this Government sees it. Otherwise, we would not be here to rush through approval of our part of an agreement while the other party is not even sure it will be able to abide by its provisions.

[English]

What is completely incomprehensible, Mr. Speaker, and totally unacceptable is that despite the fact the Government opposite by its own admission did not get what it wanted in this deal from the Americans, namely, secure access to the U.S. market, an exemption from American protectionist trade law, it went ahead, continued the negotiations, and concluded the negotiations despite its failure to meet that objective.

The principal condition for a deal with the United States was not met by the Americans. Their markets will remain as protectionist and as protected as ever. Their lumber industry will continue to use protectionist trade remedy laws whenever it feels threatened, as will their steel industry, as will their potash industry, as will their fishing industry, as will their textile industry, as will their agricultural industry, because the Government opposite, led by the Prime Minister, did not have the guts to stand up and say to the Americans: "Give us the purpose for which we entered these negotiations. Give us secure access to your market. Give us a guarantee against harassment, a guarantee against unilateral trade law or else there is no deal".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why? Because this Government did not have the courage or the honesty to return to the people of Canada with a failed initiative. This Prime Minister did not have the courage or the honesty to say to the people of our country, "Well, we tried, but we failed". The Prime Minister had too much political capital invested in getting a deal, any deal, on any terms.

There are those who tell us that Canada need not worry about losing its national personality. Some of us sat in this House listening to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom assure us that there was nothing to worry about in this trade deal. She pointed to the experience of the European Economic Community. She told us that Britain, France, Germany, and the other nations have kept their distinctive nationalities although they are part of the European Community.

That completely ignores a simple reality. This is not Europe. This is not a case of several countries with a distinctive history of 1,000 years, with distinctive languages, of relatively equal size, trading together for a common purpose. On this continent, Canada is roughly one-tenth the power, the size, and the population of the United States. On this continent, we have only half of Europe's history. On this continent, the sole reason for most of us living here is that we wanted a distinct personality, we wanted a nation north of the 49th parallel. We wanted to be Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are concerned, Mr. Speaker, about maintaining our national personality. We are concerned with maintaining our national integrity, our cultural identity, control over our resources, our economy, our social programs, and our regional development programs—no north and south division as in the United Kingdom. Ours is a country where there is equality of opportunity from the Atlantic to the Pacific to the northern Arctic. We are concerned over our ability to set an independent foreign policy. These are the issues at stake.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, from the very beginning of these talks, the Government tried to convince us that we were examining a free trade agreement. That is a myth that should be laid to rest once and for all. In spite of its title and the Government's definitions, this agreement is not free trade.

I also think we should avoid getting into the debate about whether we are for or against the philosophy of free trade, we in the Liberal Party have always been in favour of freer trade, of liberalizing trade and reducing tariff barriers. What we are discussing today is not free trade. It is a selective trade agreement. A number of industries are included and a number are excluded. We must analyse the FTA like any other contract. What did we gain and what did we lose? What did we get and what did we give away?

But read it! Whatever I go in Canada, I tell Canadians: Read the text. And now I have to say the same thing to the Minister: Read the document, sir.

This is not free trade. And it is an agreement that is costing us a pretty penny. We are paying the price every day . . .

[English]

If it were just a matter of lowering trade barriers, lowering tariffs, we as a Party have always been in favour of that, always in favour of broadening our commerce. We have to remind the House and the country that 80 per cent of all the transactions that now move across the Canadian-American border either way go forward free of tariff. We succeeded under successive Liberal administrations since the War in achieving that. All we are talking about is the remaining 20 per cent, and for that remaining 20 per cent, this Prime Minister gave away the store.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have yielded control over investment. The limit for review of direct takeovers has been raised to $150 million. Any company worth less than that can be bought up by the Americans and no one in Canada will have anything to say about it. In the case of indirect takeovers, there will be no limit at all. It will be takeovers unlimited.

Just in case there was any doubt that the Americans are being invited to buy up our own country, this legislation turns 242 million Americans into Canadians for the purposes of the Investment Canada Act. How could the Minister know that? He has not read the deal.

Clause 14.1(10)(a) says:

> Every reference in those provisions to "Canadian" shall be read and construed as a reference to "American" and every reference in those provisions to "non-Canadian" shall be read and construed as a reference to "non-Canadian other than American".

The Government says that this new investment will bring jobs and prosperity. We have not seen any valid projections that demonstrate that. Ninety-four per cent of all foreign investment in this country since this Government took power in 1984 has been takeovers of existing companies, not new investment, not new jobs. Where are the new jobs that have flowed from these takeovers in the last four years?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have given up control over our capital markets. What does this Bill say about our banking system? The Bank Act is amended. From now on, Americans will no longer be non-residents of Canada under Section 109.1. Five Americans or five unrelated U.S. corporations will be able to own and operate an American bank in Canada and even buy a Canadian chartered bank. Can Canadians do the same thing in the United States? No, Mr. Speaker, because banking activities are regulated by the Government of each state. And 43 U.S. states, including California, New York and Illinois, have regulations limiting foreign ownership of banks.

So, Mr. Speaker, Americans are no longer considered non-residents of Canada for the purposes of the Bank Act, but they still consider Canadians as foreigners.

[English]

This deal sells out our energy, the life-blood of this country. How could the Minister know that? He has not read the deal. I say to him that he should read Article 904 of the agreement which states that Canada must ensure that any other tax or measure we take with respect to our energy, to use the words of the agreement, "does not impose a higher price for exports of an energy good to the other party than the price charged for such energy good when consumed domestically".

That means that we as Canadians, Quebec Hydro, B.C. Hydro, Manitoba Hydro, Ontario Hydro, nuclear exports from New Brunswick, cannot charge a higher price to Americans than we charge for domestic consumers, nor can we give a specific preferential rate to our own consumers, nor can we set our own surpluses, nor can we set our reserves, nor can we protect our self-sufficiency in the future.

The Minister for International Trade was asked by journalists yesterday whether the Ontario legislation affecting exports of electricity from the Province of Ontario and allowing Ontario Hydro to set a preferential price for Ontario consumers was against the deal. He said that that is romanticism. Now we know why. He has not read the deal. Now we know why we have never been able to get a specific answer from this Minister ever since he took on the portfolio.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The National Energy Board becomes nothing more than a monitoring agency. That is what the legislation says. I hope the Minister has the time to read it. Clause 84.5(1) says:

> The Board may neither refuse to issue a licence or make an order nor revoke, suspend, charge, alter or vary a licence or make an order for the exportation to the United States of energy goods or of any quality, kind or class thereof where that refusal, revocation, suspension, change, alteration, or variation would constitute the maintenance or introduction of a restriction on that exportation.

The National Energy Board is reduced to a monitoring agency. I can recall the Provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, and Saskatchewan particularly objecting to the National Energy Program. They felt that Ottawa was overriding provincial jurisdiction over resources. I have said in Calgary, in Saskatoon, in Winnipeg, in Victoria, and in Vancouver that what this deal has done is substitute the word "Washington" for the word "Ottawa". Now the western provinces are going to be under the domain of the federal Capital of the United States.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that our provinces have lost control of their energy resources. They fought the national energy program with the Constitution because, as they saw it, Ottawa had taken control of their resources from them.

With this agreement, it is Washington that is taking control of our country's energy resources. We will no longer be able to use our resources as a trump card. But above all, in case of shortage, we also guarantee that energy shipments to the United States will only be reduced in proportion to the total supply. This calculation will be based on figures for the most recent three-year period. Now total supply includes energy we import as well.

[English]

Articles 408 and 409 make it clear that the same proportional access regime will apply not only to energy, not only to hydrocarbons, but to all renewable and non-renewable resources including water. How could the Minister really know? He has not read the deal.

• (1600)

The Government and the Minister have denied that water is included in the deal. The Minister makes grand and sweeping statements to that effect but what is the truth? Read the agreement. The truth is that water is included in this deal just as surely as I have this glass of water in my hand. It is here in black and white. Articles 408 and 409 of this agreement apply to the export of any "good". Article 201 defines a "good" as follows:

> goods of a Party means domestic products as these are understood in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade;

That agreement has considered water a "good" for many years, as the Minister should know. Water is also listed in the tariff schedules attached to the trade agreement.

That is too complicated, too heavy, too burdensome for the Minister because he has no time. He sold the Encyclopaedia Britannica and did not read it, but he is selling something here which involves the livelihood of every Canadian in future generations.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Tariff Item 22.01 on page S144 in Volume III of this agreement includes:

> Waters, including natural or artificial mineral waters and aerated waters, not containing added sugar or other sweetening matter nor flavoured; ice and snow.

How could the Minister know? He has not read the deal.

There is another listing, and I know you have the patience to read this deal, Mr. Speaker, because as a Canadian you know what it means to your future. That listing is 2201.90.00 and it refers to all other water. Take the pains to read the agreement. Take yourself through the agreement. Take yourself through the Bill. Read the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. You will come to the inevitable conclusion that water is part of this agreement and we have committed that to the United States.

In response to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and myself, the Minister said there was nothing in the deal to force us to sell water to the U.S. He is not the only Member in this House to come from a fishing province. He is not the only Member to use a red herring now and then. That was one of the largest red herrings we have ever seen in this House. I would like to call it the catch of the day, but it is the catch of the century and Canadians are on the hook.

The Minister ignores the fact that the proportional access regime applies to existing shipments of water. He ignores the Grand Canal scheme estimated to cost between $80 billion and $130 billion to divert fresh water, destined for James Bay, to the United States.

When Mr. Pearson formed the Government, one of my first assignments was as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for natural resources, the late Arthur Laing. I had to examine the potential diversion from the Harricanaw River in the Hudson's Bay and James Bay Basins to the Great Lakes system. Then we studied in this House at one time the Rocky Mountain trench diversion potential. Always we took the position that there was no such thing as a continental water policy. There was an American water policy, a Canadian water policy, and this resource was precious to the environmental and economic future of this country.

What have we become? When you read this agreement we have become a storehouse, a reservoir for the U.S., by virtue of Articles 408 and 409. I say to Canadians across this country not to take just my word for it but to read the agreement. Unfortunately I have to say to the Minister: Read the agreement. The U.S. gets a guaranteed proportion of our country. What is theirs remains theirs, what is ours becomes theirs.

Is it any wonder that the President of the United States is happy with this deal? Is it any wonder that he comes to this House as a guest of Parliament to say, and this was a treasure for the grape growers of the Okanagan Valley and the Niagara Peninsula and the wine industry in Ontario and British Columbia, "Wouldn't it be wonderful to have California wine?" He said that standing right in front of you, Mr. Speaker. Then, at the Empire and Canadian Clubs in Toronto just the evening before Mrs. Thatcher was here in this House he was praising the deal again. Of course, he has a vested interest and he got what he wanted. He got access to all our resources and did not have to yield anything in return. No wonder he called this the fulfilment of the American dream.

Ever since the American Revolution and the Declaration of Independence the Americans have looked to Canada as part of their manifest destiny. I congratulate Pierre Berton for writing The Invasion of Canada and Flames Across the Border so we understand what we did to defend our country against the Americans. I was down in the Niagara Peninsula and the people there say that what the Americans were not able to take by force of arms in 1812-14, they have taken by virtue of this agreement while not firing a shot.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The fulfilment of the American Dream! Fifty-four Forty, or Fight! Manifest Destiny! A United States of America that will go down past the Rio Grande and right up to Alaska and the Arctic frontier. It is a dream come true for Americans. At long last they found a Government in Ottawa dumb enough, stupid enough, patsies so craven in the face of American demands that they just caved in to every request made of them.

I say to the people of Canada that this is not a trade deal. This is "the Sale of Canada Act".

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let's take for example the Auto Pact. On several occasions, we asked if the Auto Pact was included in the Agreement. One minister after another told us in this House that it was not. In fact, the Prime Minister even said the Pact was a free trade prototype that he wanted to apply in each and every sector of our economy. But the Auto Pact is not a free trade deal. It is a sectorial agreement which is managed and accompanied with guarantees in order to protect the Canadian content. Well, the trade deal has destroyed it. The guaranty system put in place to protect Canada's share in terms of production, employment, investment, and content will disappear while the tariffs decrease. But the Minister continues to deny that. Every time we ask that question, the governement retorts with a multitude of caustic and tasteless answers.

As far as our farmers are concerned, they are in very bad shape. The seasonal tariffs protecting their industry will progressively be eliminated. Since our climate is harsh, our growing season lasts no longer than four to five months. Our farmers will not be able to compete with their American counterparts from California, Florida, Georgia and other southern states where the growing period extends all year round. Canadian farmers are terribly clever, they are better informed than the business people and the professionals, because they have studied the matter, certainly a lot more than the Minister. They well know that a free trade agreement, even if it is really about free trade, is not possible in the agricultural industry.

We can't expect our farmers, whose growing season lasts only four, five or six months, to compete with their American counterparts whose growing season lasts 12 months. It's impossible.

Mr. Speaker, we have seen some Members in this House overlook certain basic facts. But only a Conservative government would have signed a deal which totally overlooks this country's climate.

• (1610)

The farm family is in great difficulty. Our whole way of life on the farm is under siege and this agreement goes a long way to destroying the family farm in Canada. Our whole supply management system is being negotiated away. Every Canadian support system is going to be brought into line by way of harmonization under the definition of subsidy with U.S. standards.

The Minister of Finance asked me whether I have read the agreement. I want to refer him to an annex in this agreement. His colleague, the Minister for International Trade, on his own admission, has not read this whole deal. He says that it is too cumbersome and too bulky. I shared the honour and responsibility of the portfolio of the Minister of Finance. He knows that any Minister of Finance who had not read his Budget before coming into this Chamber, or had not studied every subsidiary document, would not be worth his salt and should not hold the portfolio.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Although my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), and I have some quarrels with the Minister on policy, we know that he does his homework.

I have read this agreement, as he knows, and in one of the annexes is a list of every major agricultural program supporting the farm economy in Canada which is subject to the negotiation of the definition of subsidy with the United States. It includes the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, the Economic and Rural Development Agreements, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, the Special Canadian Grains Program, the Prairie Grains Advance Payments Act, and the Crop Insurance Act. I am not taking that from my imagination. Every one of those agreements upon which the western grain economy has been built is now open for negotiation with the United States.

Since the United States overwhelmingly dominates in agriculture by virtue of its size and market, the level of government support for Canadian farmers will not be determined by Ottawa or provincial capitals; it will be determined in Washington.

The agri-food industry will move to the United States where products are obviously cheaper. In Québec, ask any food processsing industry what they plan to do. They'll answer: "Good bye! So long! We're moving to the United States." Ask Harrison-McCain, in New Brunswick, the Canadian potato king. He's against the deal because he knows full well there's no future for food processing in Canada because all our economic sectors will feel the negative impact of this deal.

The same goes for our fishermen, on the Atlantic as well as the Pacific coast. We questioned the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), we questioned the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon), we questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). But our fishermen and those who work in the fish processing industry have been sold out. The government has in effect given up its right under the GATT to protect our fish processing industry.

[English]

With regard to our lumber industry, I have spoken before the Victoria Chamber of Commerce and Vancouver forums. I have told the people of British Columbia that the jobs of 7,500 workers on the West Coast from Alaska down to the American border are in jeopardy in the processing industry.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Have you talked to Mr. Bentley?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have talked to Mr. Bentley and others in the forest industry. I will stake my next election in Vancouver on the fact that before the Prime Minister started to sing for his supper at the Summit at Québec City with the President of the United States, we had free trade in lumber into the United States. We had free access for our softwood lumber into the American market.

When the Government was challenged by an attack from American legislation and administrative tribunals it yielded. A Liberal Government in 1982-83 had resisted that attack. We had beaten back the challenge of the American lumber industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The facts had not changed; the law had not changed. All that had changed was the determination of a Canadian Government to stand up for Canadian exports to the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We self imposed a 15 per cent export tax on our lumber into the United States. As evidenced by the President's letter to Senator Packwood and the other Senators from Montana, Idaho, Washington, and Oregon, part of the price of this deal between Canada and the United States was to render permanent the 15 per cent export tax imposed against Canadian lumber into the American market.

Don't just take my word for it, read the deal. I know it is hard work, I know it takes time, I know it is burdensome, and I know it slows down the rhetoric and restricts the vocabulary, but read the deal and you will find that our lumber industry is now permanently caught with a 15 per cent disadvantage in the American market. Why did this happen? It happened to save the Prime Minister's trade deal at any cost.

The trade deal goes well beyond trade. It goes to the control of our economy. It goes to the control of our culture. Yesterday the Minister had the gall to say to us again that it did not touch culture. Despite repeated promises that our cultural industries would be exempted, "print in Canada" requirements have been eliminated and a new regime has been imposed on the retransmission of cross-border broadcasting signals.

The notwithstanding clause, clear in the agreement, has been included and could freeze future cultural initiatives by Canada. If the Americans, under that clause, consider any new cultural initiatives of this country to be inconsistent with what they interpret to be the spirit of the agreement, the agreement gives the Americans the right to retaliate, not only against our cultural industries but against any other sector of our economy.

Read the agreement. Take the time. I know that the Minister will be surprised to hear that answer, but then again, he has not read the agreement.

It is scandalous that the Government opposite has agreed to act as agent for the United States entertainment industry in carrying out that threat.

The deal goes to the control of our regional development and social programs. There is a great word in the agreement, repeated again and again. It is called "harmonization". Our programs are to be harmonized with those of the United States. They include our social programs, our agricultural programs, our regional economic development programs. Under the agreement, that negotiation will take a period of five years to seven years in coming to a definition of what the subsidy means. What does "harmonize" mean? It is defined in the agreement. Harmonize means, according to the agreement, "render identical". Our programs and the American programs will be harmonized. They will be rendered identical.

You know who will do the harmonizing. We are dealing with an economy 10 times our size. We have already thrown away all our cards, because we have a Government with no commitment to regional development and no real commitment to our social programs. Those programs will be harmonized away.

After all, this is the Government of the famous sacred trust. The Prime Minister said that our social programs were a sacred trust, a trust that his Government violated in attempting to deindex old age pensions. The Government seriously contemplated in its discussion papers putting a tax on food, when food banks are springing up all across Canada.

The Government and the Minister of Finance who is in the House have raised taxes in the last four years, primarily on lower and middle income groups while giving special tax breaks to the wealthy. It is a Government that has systematically and dramatically cut regional development funding.

It is that Government and those Members who applauded enthusiastically when a Prime Minister from another country addressed us and said: "Subsidize the inefficient and soon that is all you will have". There you see the hidden agenda of the Tory Government. It wants to Thatcherize Canada and Reaganize us as well.

With the Prime Minister in charge, we are being harmonized, homogenized, and hosed.

In every clause and section, Mr. Speaker, this agreement refers to the harmonization and to the free market system. I too believe in the market system, in competition, in private enterprise, and in the need to reward success.

Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members Opposite should realize that Canada was not built as the result of the market system. We had to resist continental forces which were pulling us southward and we built our country in the East, West and North. We built an infrastructure to oppose continental pressures. We built a railway, a pipeline and a national highway. We set up a public airline and a national broadcasting system.

With the market system alone we would not have social housing, a public transportation network, or one of the best medical care system in the world. Personally, as a Canadian, I want to continue to live in a country where, if a person has to be hospitalized, they will not check his or her credit rating before his or her pulse!

[English]

I have said "harmonized, homogenized, and hosed". One would expect that the Minister for International Trade, with his vast experience as a former vacuum cleaner salesman, would know what it would be like to be hosed. But not that Minister. He specializes in providing Canadians with a fact-free analysis of the trade deal.

First he started promoting it. Then he said he had not read it. Then he said he did not have to read it. Then he said he had not read the whole deal. Then he said he read only the important parts. Then he said it was too complicated. Then he said he could not understand it because he only got 5 per cent in algebra. Then he said he was not fully qualified to give speeches selling the deal because he sold vacuum cleaners and did not know how to run one of those. Then he said he sold encyclopaedias that he never read. He asked: "Why should a trade deal be any different?"

That must give one a real feeling of confidence. I am sure Canadians will sleep better tonight knowing that the Minister has never read the trade deal.

Members opposite should look at the kinds of social programs delivered under pure market forces. Members opposite should ask themselves if that is the regime they want to impose on their own constituents. Do they want us to harmonize our minimum wage rates with Texas, where the rate is $1.40 an hour, or the nine other states in the American republic which have no minimum wage rate?

Do they want our unemployment insurance program, covering 85 per cent of the unemployed in Canada, to be harmonized with those in the United States? Under the combined federal and state schemes, only one-quarter of unemployed Americans are covered, and at a rate that is only a fraction of the Canadian rate.

Do they want to harmonize our rules on maternity benefits? There is no equivalent national program in the United States. Only about 40 per cent of American women have any maternity benefits at all, and most of those are for very short duration, less than six weeks, and are not provided by Governments, but negotiated with employers.

Do they want to harmonize our medicare program with those of a country where a quarter of the women of child bearing age have no medical insurance, where 37 million Americans have no medical insurance whatsoever, and where the federal Medicaid program is available to less than half the population living below the poverty line? Is that what Members opposite want? Is that what the Conservative Government wants? Is that what they want for our country?

That is the danger when one blindly accepts the idea of negotiating with the United States on its terms, and subjecting to negotiation with the United States every program that has built this country in terms of regional equality, every infrastructure and social program that has evened out opportunity and evened out the burden in Canada. Every one of those programs is subject to negotiations with the United States.

Let us be realistic. The Americans do not really believe in free trade. We have talked to congressmen in Washington. We have talked to leading senators on both sides of the aisle, both Republicans and Democrats. The Americans are not seeking free trade in their trading relationship with the world; they are seeking fair trade. Fair trade is what they define as the level playing field. We all know how that level playing field works. When you step on it, it is an American field, with American goal posts, an American ball, an American referee, and four downs. You know from past experience, Mr. Speaker, what that would mean as a Canadian.

You know me well, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is not anti-American. It is pro-Canadian. Americans have always been our closest friends, closest allies and our largest trading customer. None of that will change, whether or not this Parliament or this country approves the deal.

Most of us made a deliberate decision to live here. We like it here. We like our style of life, our sense of community, of tolerance. We like the responsiveness of our parliamentary system, our unique environment. Sure, from time to time it may cost more to live here, but the overwhelming majority of Canadians agree with me when I say that the price of being Canadian is a price worth paying.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am not going to allow this Government to rewrite history. It has been Liberal Governments, working through international negotiations, that brought tariffs down from an average of 40 per cent at the end of the last war to 4 per cent today. Liberal Governments brought our tariff structure to the United States to a point where, as I said earlier, 80 per cent of everything that moves across our mutual border, either way, is free of the impost of customs and tariff. We achieved that without giving away our sovereignty. All we are talking about in improving our trading relationship with the United States is the remaining 20 per cent. For that, the Prime Minister gave away the store.

The Liberal Party has always favoured, and still favours, more liberalized trade, not only with the United States but with all our trading partners. Under the Government opposite, our trade with the Pacific Rim and with Europe has deteriorated badly. As we outlined in our report entitled "Expanding Choices-The Liberal Alternative to the Mulroney Trade Deal", which I had the honour of presenting with my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, we believe that as essential, vital and crucial as the American market is to us, we have always done better in negotiating with the United States under the umbrella of international negotiations rather than taking on the strongest economic power in the world head-to-head bilaterally.

We have always done better internationally than by attempting to deal bilaterally and exclusively with the United States, particularly when a Government of Canada appears to want the deal so much more than the Americans.

We would continue to pursue sectoral opportunities like the Auto Pact. We would look for ways to eliminate those irritants to trade. Yes, we believe this country needs a more vigorous trading policy, but a Liberal trading policy would allow us to trade with the world, with special emphasis on the United States, not just an exclusive deal with the United States.

With a Liberal trade strategy the first step would be to eliminate interprovincial barriers. We should begin by experimenting with free trade in Canada. We would introduce a bill which would clearly spell out our trade objectives, financing methods and trade remedy mechanism. We would also regroup within a single administration the talents of our trade experts, in order to concentrate the federal Government's efforts on an essential objective, which is to develop our foreign markets to create permanent jobs for Canadians.

No trade policy can replace a national economic strategy. Rather, a trade policy ought to be part and parcel of such a strategy. No trade agreement, either with the United States, Europe or Japan could make us more skilled or competitive. We must do that ourselves. We must increase research and development investments. We are not going to ensure economic growth by applying technology developed by others.

[English]

We need to develop our education system and give our young people the skills they need for the jobs of tomorrow. We will commit ourselves to a full employment strategy, to supplementation for the working poor, to better training and retraining for our workforce, to a national literacy program and to a national apprenticeship program. When I have the responsibility to go to Washington to talk to the Americans, whether it be about trade, employment, acid rain, the fishery or about the Arctic, our Arctic, I will not start with the assumption that getting their co-operation means surrendering our political independence and surrendering our sovereignty. That surrender has been the result of this Government's strategy and we can see the results of that approach in this trade deal.

We who oppose this deal are painted by the Prime Minister as being afraid or timid, of having no confidence in our future and no confidence in Canada. That Prime Minister is dead wrong. We do have confidence in this country. We do have confidence in Canada. We do have confidence in our future. The difference is that for us our future is not a continental future. Our future is a Canadian future.

On the trade issue, I am not saying we can do it alone. What I am saying is that we can do it in our own way. We have proved for over 120 years that we can resist that north-south pull of continental forces. We have proved we can create and build a flourishing, proud and self-sufficient nation. I have full confidence in this country and full confidence in our fellow citizens. I believe we are now mature enough, talented enough, confident enough and tough enough to build our own future in our own way by making our own decisions.

In 1867, the Fathers of Confederation established this House of Commons and the other place. They gave this Chamber the responsibility to build a great sovereign independent nation. They gave our predecessors the responsibility of establishing a unique and distinct nation on the northern half of our continent. If this legislation is allowed to pass, it will be said that in 1988 this House abdicated that role set for us by the founders of our country, that we surrendered that responsibility and abandoned our sovereignty. As a nation, we cannot allow that to happen.

The Minister scoffs, the Prime Minister sloughs it off, but this debate is really about the future of Canada as an independent and sovereign nation. It is about our ability to maintain that sovereignty. It is about our ability to govern our own country, for our own people, in our own way. It is for us to make our own political decisions as to how we want to determine our own economy, our own social programs, our own culture and protect our regions. It is for us to define, establish, maintain and promote our own values and our own national purpose.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): A point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) on a point of order.

Mr. Ouellet: The House has just heard one of the most brilliant speeches of the decade. I sat on a House committee which studied parliamentary reform and recommended measures to make this chamber more relevant and the executive more directly answerable to the House. But we are still waiting for the Government response, and the fact that both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) are absent today is inexcusable. That is sheer laziness and I call this contempt for parliamentary procedure.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order.

Pursuant to agreement made earlier this day, the debate now stands adjourned. Orders of the Day.

WAYS AND MEANS

INCOME TAX ACT, CANADA PENSION PLAN, UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT, 1971, FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND FEDERAL POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION AND HEALTH CONTRIBUTIONS ACT, 1977

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved that a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977 and certain related Acts, laid upon the table on Monday, June 13, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Wilson, Etobicoke Centre), which was agreed to on the following division:

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661), and of Mr. Langdon (p. 16673).

• (1720)

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I look forward to making a few comments on this very important topic of free trade. I would like to begin by putting this debate and my comments in the context of some of the current trade statistics.

One-third of Canada's GNP comes from export. Compare that to Japan which is 20 per cent, or the United States which is 10 per cent. Close to three million Canadians jobs are directly related to export and 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States. Close to 2.25 million jobs are directly related to exports to the United States.

The Canada-United States trade is the largest in the world. The Ontario-United States trade is larger than that of the United States and of Japan. Ninety per cent of the exports from Ontario go to the United States. Just to put this in an historic context, in 1946, 40 per cent of our exports went to the United States. In 1988, 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States. In other words, our exports have doubled.

These statistics are very important for us to keep in mind when dealing with a free trade debate. We are not starting at zero, we are starting with a very high level of trade with the United States. We also have a high level of free trade with the United States as a result of the Tokyo Round from 1979 to 1987. As of January 1, 1988, 80 per cent of our exports to the United States went tariff-free and 65 per cent of their exports came into Canada tariff-free.

The Government's motivations in this free trade initiative are very important and can be summarized under three headings. First, it is our purpose to secure that high level of trade that we have with the United States now. We wish to secure that high level against the growing protectionism within the United States.

Our second objective is to bring a dispute resolution mechanism to solve trade disputes between our two nations. For example, in the last few years, there have been fishing disputes, disputes dealing with the shakes and shingles industry and disputes dealing with potash, just to name three.

Our third major objective is to enhance that trade. As I said, the motivations of the Government are first to secure the high level of trade we have with the United States, second to bring in a dispute resolution mechanism and third to enhance that trade and to create jobs.

This is trade with the richest market on earth, living right next door to us. Surely any other nation in the world would give its eye-teeth for the opportunity that we have at this time. That is what we have seized—

Ms. Copps: Why don't you take an arm and a leg while you're at it?

Mr. Reimer: I wonder if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) could simply do me the courtesy of allowing me to speak, and I will do her the courtesy of allowing her to speak when it is her turn.

Mr. Shields: Let's trade her mouth off.

Ms. Copps: I don't want to give my eyes or my teeth.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer) has the floor.

Mr. Reimer: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), earlier this afternoon, said that we had no mandate to conclude this free trade agreement. I would suggest that we have a very clear mandate to create jobs. I think everyone on all sides of the House would accept that. Surely then our record in job creation is second to none. Not only are we supposed to create jobs, but we should protect the jobs we already have. That is the one thing that this trade agreement seeks to do. First it seeks to protect and to secure what we have and then to enhance that.

I would suggest that we are seeking to secure the high level of trade and the relationship that we have now, second to none other in the world, and surely we have a mandate to do that against the growing protectionism in the United States. Therefore, I would submit to those in the Opposition who say that we have no mandate that they think again.

What does this free trade agreement do? It does three simple things. First, it eliminates all barriers to trade in goods and services between Canada and the United States. It does that in three ways. Some are eliminated immediately on January 1, 1989. Others are eliminated in five equal steps over the next five years. The remainder are to be eliminated in 10 equal steps over the next 10 years. Second, the free trade agreement significantly expands and frees the conditions of cross-border investment. Third, it establishes procedures for joint administration and for a dispute resolution mechanism.

It is also important to realize what the trade agreement does not do. It does not permit the free exchange of labour which is similar to what occurs in the Common Market. It merely provides for temporary passes for those who service equipment. Second, it does not affect Canada's regional development programs, pension programs, medicare programs, child care initiatives, welfare programs, unemployment insurance programs, education programs, pornography control, gun control or ownership and regulation of resources. Those all remain in our hands. Third, it does not create a customs union like the Common Market. Both Canada and the United States will still have their own external trade policies. Fourth, it is not an economic union with a common Parliament as is the case in Europe. It is really just a trade agreement.

As I listened to Liberal and NDP comments made in the House and to comments made by other Liberal leftist commentators, with all their whining, complaining and misleading statements about the free trade agreement, I found that their comments appeared to me to be similar to the techniques employed by Joseph Goebbels. The technique he used was that if you say something loud enough, if you say it long enough and if you repeat it over and over, then it becomes true. I think the tactics used by some of those in this debate are nothing short of shameful. I am struck by the fact that—

Ms. Copps: You should be struck.

Mr. Reimer: I am struck by the fact that the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Export Association and the Chamber of Commerce in my riding all—

Ms. Copps: So call an election.

Mr. Reimer: —unanimously support this free trade agreement.

Ms. Copps: You'll be blown out of the water.

Mr. Reimer: The Chamber of Commerce in my riding has gone on record as supporting this agreement. When I did a survey about the free trade agreement of 916 businesses in my riding—

Ms. Copps: That's not what John English told me.

Mr. Reimer: —82 per cent—I wonder if the Hon. Member for Hamilton East could do us the simple courtesy of keeping quiet when someone else is speaking. We will do the same when she speaks.

When I did a survey of 916 businesses in my riding, I found that 92 per cent of those who said that they would be affected by the free trade agreement said that they would be favourably affected by it. I was struck by the fact that at the Economic Summit, all of the leaders unanimously supported this trade agreement. Chancellor Kohl, when speaking here in the House, in an excellent speech congratulated Canada in concluding this free trade agreement with the United States, and he went on to say that this is a forward-looking sign and a wonderful development.

I would remind those in the Opposition of what Margaret Thatcher, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, said when she spoke in the House. She said: "Protectionism is not a lifebelt which keeps an economy afloat. It is a millstone that drags you down and penalizes consumers and the workforce alike. Subsidize the inefficient and soon that is all you have. You lose the competitive edge to export abroad and you keep prices down at home". I would say that Members of the Opposition should heed those words very carefully.

People have tried to say that we are forfeiting our culture and losing control over our own sovereignty in this agreement. There are many people in my riding who come from eastern Europe or the Soviet Union. Those people know that if we trade with a communist, we do not become communist. They know that if we trade with an American, we do not automatically become American. If that were true, then Ontario would be the most American of all provinces because 90 per cent of Ontario's exports go to the United States. We know that it is not true that Ontario is the most American of provinces. All this alarmist nonsense is simply that. Just because we trade with someone does not make us like that someone, but it might help to build bridges and understanding.

Surely we have to commend what Europe did after World War II in building bridges through trade and removing trade barriers. That is what we are doing now. I look forward to the day when we have this agreement operating, Europe has its agreement operating, and there is a North Atlantic agreement operating. I think that is the wave of the future. That is what this trade agreement is beginning to do.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said:

> Canadians rejected free trade in 1911. They would do so again—

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said:

> Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said:

> Free trade . . . raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost . . . Before we jump on the band-wagon of continentalism, we should strengthen our industrial structure so that we are more competitive.

They were right then, and they are wrong now to force this agreement on Canadians.

I have said in previous speeches that this trade deal entrenches U.S. protectionism, especially dealing with lumber and fish. It fails to give access to key U.S. markets. It gives unwarranted concessions to U.S. demands and subjects us to U.S. law. It gives the U.S. guaranteed access to Canadian resources, and many feel this includes water. It undermines Canadian energy prices, preventing economic diversification in the West. It opens the door for more U.S. takeovers of Canadian industries. It will destroy key agricultural sectors of our economy. There will be a loss of well-paid union jobs, and women in service industries will be victimized. Regional development programs may very well be at risk when they are considered unfair subsidies.

Today I want to concentrate on the impact of the deal on social programs and health policies. As we all know, Canadians are very proud of our social programs which far exceed those in the U.S. in providing for Old Age Security, protecting the unemployed, assisting families with young children, and providing free medicare for all our citizens. We believe these are inviolable social rights in Canada.

Despite government attempts to deny it, experts agree that this trade deal will have both direct and indirect effects on health and social programs. The Government maintains the public welfare is protected, yet ignores the fact that the U.S. explicitly targeted unemployment insurance as a "government-created trade distortion" in the Atlantic groundfish countervailing duty case. This undoubtedly was a precedent and should have been a warning to the Government. If, as the Government claims, social programs are exempted and not to be threatened by this deal, why did it not ensure this by including a specific clause to this effect?

Article 1907 leaves it wide open for subsidies to be defined over the next seven years through a process of negotiation. There is no guarantee that the Americans will not target any of our social programs as unfair subsidies under U.S. trade law. In fact, U.S. businesses have always considered that medicare, unemployment and regional development programs are unfair subsidies. Why did the Canadian Government not insist on a specific clause exempting social programs, similar to the cultural industries exemption in Article 2005? This could have been done.

Already the Government is adopting American-style practices in the field of social programs. There are many examples of Government encouraging increased privatization of services, by the Minister condoning provincial practices contrary to the Canada Health Act, and by encouraging commercialization of child care and services for the elderly.

Annex 1408 of the chapter on services in the agreement lists management services covered by this deal. It specifically lists management of general hospitals, psychiatric and children's hospitals, community health clinics, and others. This means that U.S. firms can take over management of such facilities in Canada and operate them for profit as is common practice in the U.S. We already see a trend in this direction in Ontario.

Studies show that standards suffer when services are privatized. Staff are cut and qualifications are not as high. Profits are the primary goal. Our system of medicare is much better and also much cheaper than the American system. Our system costs 30 per cent less than the American system and operates with 13 per cent less staff. U.S. privatized hospitals charge 22 per cent more on average for patient admission than we do in Canada. Do we want an Americanized system of medicare where 35 million people have no coverage at all and where the cost of an illness can bankrupt a family? Of course not.

It is bad enough that the Government is encouraging privatization with poor quality care in Canada, but it is extremely serious that this deal will allow U.S. companies to participate on an equal footing in Canada and enshrines these rights in an international trade deal.

Another very serious section affecting social programs is a giveaway section on monopolies buried in Chapter 20. This requires Canadians to consult with Americans before creating a monopoly, a term which could apply to all our universal social programs. Under this part Canada will lose the ability to create accessible, affordable programs for all Canadians. This could seriously affect future planning of social programs.

Under this agreement the Prime Minister can overrule provincial jurisdiction in health and welfare in the interests of establishing a level-playing field. U.S. child care chains, operating with minimum standards, will have open access to Canadian communities, with the right of public funding. American service firms are given the right to acquire businesses here and the right to national treatment. Disagreement on this matter will be settled through the dispute settlements mechanism. However, this process will undoubtedly influence Canadian policies in the future. It will require us to conform more with inferior U.S. practices.

Canadians do not want a Kentucky Fried Chicken type of child care. We want quality care for our kids, care that is affordable and not run just for profit. This agreement will have a very significant impact on the social contract that Canadians hold dear. The policy of harmonization, the level-playing field concept, will force Canadian firms to conform to the pressure of very powerful U.S. market forces. Workers will be affected, their wages and working conditions will be influenced by lower U.S. standards. Fewer workers will be unionized. Women will be forced into lower paid part-time jobs. Family benefits like the Family Allowance and child tax credit will be frowned upon and eroded as unfair subsidies.

Canadians have different expectations than Americans. We have fought hard, led by CCF pioneers, to establish comprehensive universal social programs like old age pensions, family allowances, unemployment insurance and medicare. We pay for these through our taxes. We try to redistribute incomes in a much fairer way to eliminate poverty. This is not the U.S. way. Canada is different than the U.S. We want to remain that way. We do not want to be sold off by a Tory Government through this agreement to become the fifty-first state.

The Prime Minister had no mandate to negotiate and impose this deal on Canadians. He had an obligation to call an election and go to the people with the real truth about the dangers of this deal for Canada and Canadians.

• (1740)

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, may I say that this is the most rewarding opportunity I have had since my election to the House of Commons, an opportunity to speak to the issue which I consider to be the most significant for Canadians and young people, in short for our whole economy: garanteed access to the United States market.

Before dealing specifically with the matter I should like to go over some of the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he delivered his speech on free trade earlier this afternoon. For instance he accused us and said that we would tear up or spend only five days debating the free trade issue while it took 120 years just to get prepared for that United States market. I might respond by saying that he wants to take half a second to tear up what Canadians took 120 years to achieve. While he is telling us that he did not have time and that we do not have enough time to study free trade, I would remind him that he should have read the report of and listened to the committee of the House of Commons which has heard many representations from Canadians here in Ottawa and in other major cities. Among others, he should also have listened to the Conseil du patronat, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Economic Council of Canada, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. He should read the reports of those organizations and listen to what they have to say.

He should also have heard and read the evidence before the Quebec National Assembly, before a parliamentary commission where Quebecers made representations on free trade, a parliamentary commission made up of MNAs from both sides, Liberals and Péquistes. He should also have read and listened to the remarks of Quebec Liberal Premier Bourassa. He should have listened to the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Parizeau, to former Parti Québécois Minister Landry and to Mr. MacDonald, the Liberal minister. Lastly, instead of saying that Canadians will not have time to study the free trade deal, he should have told the Canadian public that a committee made up of Members of this House will also hear representations from Canadians. We will probably be told before this committee that free trade means opportunities for Canadian products.

You will know that Canadians now produce some $500 billion worth of goods and services. A quarter of that or $125 billion is exported. And that quarter, Mr. Speaker, accounts for 3 million jobs for Canadians and of those $125 billion, 80 percent or $95 billion are exports to the United States. And that is what the Liberal Party and the socialists object to! I am both pleased and saddened to lump them together, but I can only say that they are the ones who lumped themselves together in a coalition. That is the $95 billion market that the Leader of the Liberal Party would have torn up. What does that $95 billion means for Quebec? It means in comparative terms that where Canadian production stands at $500 billion, Quebec production stands at $100 billion and that out of Canadian exports totalling $125 billion, Quebec exports $20 billion. That $20 billion accounts for 800 000 jobs for Quebec men and women and out of that $20 billion, 76 percent is exported to the United States, that is to say $16 billion worth of goods and services from Quebec. That means wood, electricity, manufactured goods, furniture, metal products, aircraft, aircraft engines, and so on and the 650 000 jobs that Quebeckers owe to the American market that they would take away from us.

And for those who do not know Quebec's history, Mr. Speaker, that market is very important because in Quebec, since 1960, there has been a lot of fast changes. In 1960, under a Liberal Government that had a different kind of policies than Liberals here, we went through the "Quiet Revolution". The Quiet Revolution meant that in our universities we got rid of the staple training of doctors, lawyers and priests. Instead, we trained business people, engineers, scientists, etc. We also had the "Masters in our own House" policy under which Quebecers increasingly assumed control of their own economy. We now need a market. And recently the Quebec Government, under both the Parti québécois and the Liberals, put in place systems to promote new financing structures for our business corporations. In other words, it favoured equity investments in our corporations. Those corporations are now ready to go, thanks to the Registered Share Purchasing Funds, thanks to the Caisse de dépôt.

Those corporations now have the capital needed. The Quiet Revolution also gave them the brainpower needed, the young educated professionals.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, 14 per cent of our business leaders and top executives in Quebec are under 30 years of age.

This is what we want for Quebecers, and this is why I support free trade. This is also why I blame the Liberals for not supporting free trade, because those young Quebecers have the education and the capital needed, they are all set and ready to go, and in Quebec we want to sell on the American market, and we have no wish of the Americans putting up tariff barriers again, as we saw in the case of softwood lumber, and as we are now seeing in the case of pork carcasses.

Mr. Speaker, why do Liberals want to scrap the deal? Why are they suggesting to Canadian business people: "You erred, you were wrong in selling to the United States, you should have sold elsewhere—in Europe, in Asia"?

Canadian business people get into the nearest market the same way someone who launches a business does in his village, in his town, in his region—at first he sells to the market next door.

And when I heard today the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) suggest: "We should overlook the American market, the market that has the money, the market that buys our products, the market that knows our products, the market that has a compatible economy with our own in terms of consumer habits and production" . . . If were to believe the Liberals, we should overlook that market, go to Europe, go around the world, go to Asia.

Have you ever seen business people forget about their regular customers and say: "We will go 3000 miles farther to sell our goods." That is nonsense, Mr. Speaker, and that is what the Liberals want us to do.

To me, that way of thinking seems to be obstructing Quebec's growth, and I find it very strange that the Liberal Premier of Ontario (Mr. Peterson) had allied himself with the Liberal caucus here, and has approved the statements made by the Liberal leader. The objective of that alliance is to harm Quebec. That alliance, and that is where the Liberals agree in fact with the Socialists, is to the advantage of southern Ontario.

Because, you see, the riding with 740 000 workers who have benefitted from a free trade deal since 1965 is in fact the one represented by the leader of the Socialist Party (M. Broadbent), the Oshawa riding. We all know about the free trade deal negotiated in 1965, which is working and which guarantees $30 billions in exports of Canadian made end products. Mr. Speaker, $30 billions are ensured by a free trade deal in southern Ontario, and the Liberals are joined in a coalition. They want all Canadians to be denied the benefits and the "profitability" of free trade in southern Ontario. And that is why the workers from southern Ontario are literally ripped off, because they pay union dues not to finance their collective bargaining sessions, but to finance the harsh campaign the Socialist party has now launched against free trade.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by saying that it is important for us to vote for free trade because it is important that between January 1, 1989 and the following 10 years tariff rates fall to zero. It is important that our possible disputes be settled in an orderly manner by a binational tribunal. And that is provided in the agreement, a dispute settlement mechanism, some court that will protect us from any negative action by American protectionism.

So Canadians will surely understand, something I doubt the coalition can do, but we will campaign on that issue, and the Canadian people will give us a mandate to sell it to the United States in order that our businesses keep on flourishing.

Ms Sheila Copps (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to hear the Hon. Member talk about mud-slinging. At least the Liberal Party did not have to secure a by-election with money as was done.

If you have the courage of your convictions, if you are convinced the free-trade agreement is such a good thing, why do you not call a general election today? Because we of the Liberal Party are ready to go to the people and ask them . . . Unlike you who are trying to hide the truth from everybody, to hide what the free trade agreement will lead to. That is because you are ashamed and afraid that if the Canadian people knew what is in that deal, they would never accept it.

I am not surprised, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has not read the documents.

Remember Mr. Speaker, the time I asked in the House, concerning the commercial blood bank . . .

• (1750)

Do you remember when I asked him in the House why the annex included commercial blood banks to be established under what is called strictly a trade deal? We are told it has nothing to do with social policy but it will allow commercial, for-profit blood banks to be opened in Canada. The Minister waved the paper and said that it is nowhere in here. He had not even read the deal.

Mr. Siddon: Read the section.

Ms. Copps: He did not even look at the annex. The annex states quite clearly that the free trade deal includes commercial blood banks.

Mr. Siddon: What clause?

Ms. Copps: The section and the clause are listed right in the Bill. Unfortunately, the Minister has not read it. Blood banks are included.

Mr. Siddon: Read it.

Ms. Copps: The Government says that social policy is not touched.

Mr. Siddon: Come on, Sheila, read it.

Ms. Copps: The Minister says to read the clause. I will read the clause.

Mr. Siddon: What is the number?

Ms. Copps: I have the number of the section. The article is there. The Minister does not want to admit it and the Government does not want to admit it because it realizes it has a secret and hidden agenda.

Mr. Siddon: You are taking it out of context.

Ms. Copps: I am taking it from the vagaries you claim represent the trade deal.

I could cite chapter and verse of the businesses that will be destroyed by this deal and of the people who will lose their jobs. When talking about the number of Canadians who are dependent on multinational corporations, just ask the workers at Firestone in Hamilton what free trade brought to them.

An Hon. Member: We do not even have it yet.

Ms. Copps: Ask the workers at Goodyear what benefits they are getting from free trade. Ask the workers at Massey Ferguson. When the going gets tough, the American multinationals pull up stakes quicker than one can blink.

The Government is opening the doors to even more foreign ownership than already exists in Canada. The tobacco industry is 98 per cent foreign owned. Transportation equipment is 88 per cent foreign owned; chemicals, 76 per cent foreign owned; electrical products, 68 per cent foreign owned. I could go on.

The Government is embarking on a plan to sell out Canada and it does not even want to give parliamentarians in this House the right to have a say. I was elected to represent thousands of people in my constituency. I cannot speak for longer than 10 minutes on a deal that will change the very shape and history of our country. The Government does not want the facts on the table. It does not want Canadians to know that our social programs are up for grabs.

Many women in this country hold dear the pregnancy benefits that will potentially be negotiated away if they are determined to be an unfair subsidy.

Mr. Siddon: You are way off base.

Ms. Copps: It was not a Liberal Member but the President of the British Columbia Business Council who said that this deal presents a threat to medicare as we know it. The Government is supporting this deal because it has a hidden agenda. We saw that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at the beginning of his mandate that senior citizens' pensions are a sacred trust and will never be touched. The first thing they did was to try to cut back senior citizens' pensions.

Mr. Siddon: No, he did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope Hon. Members would give the Hon. Member the same courtesy she has given you. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member says the Prime Minister did not try to cut back senior citizens' pensions. There are thousands of seniors in my riding who will attest to the fact that he tried to cut back pensions. Since it took office, the Government has had a hidden agenda to cut back universality, cut back on family allowances and cut back on senior citizens' pensions.

We watched Conservative back-benchers and the bookends clap and wave when Prime Minister Thatcher tried to tell us how to develop our social programs in this country. I do not want to have the rich and poor, the have and have-not Thatcherite philosophy as the philosophy for this country. We have been bamboozled and scamboozled by a Government that is not interested in the best interests of Canadians, but more interested in trying to save the Prime Minister's political hide.

The Prime Minister was acting from a position of desperation. On the Thursday night, Simon Reisman, the chief negotiator, said there was no deal. What happened between Thursday and Sunday? What miracle portended so that suddenly Canadians who had walked away from the table saying it was over now said it would go forward? It was the sale of Canada through our energy policies. It was the continental energy policy, the Achilles heel, for which the United States has waited for generations.

Between Thursday and Sunday Canadians said: "If you do not want to sign the deal, we will give you national treatment for energy". All renewable and non-renewable energy in Canada, including water, is included in the deal. In times of energy shortage every renewable and non-renewable resource, including natural gas, must be sold to the Americans in a proportion determined by this agreement, even when our own resources are running out.

The Government has stripped Parliament of any power by asking us to pass a Bill that says the free trade agreement takes precedence over any active Canadian Parliament in case of conflict. Yet the Americans are saying that in the case of any conflict an act of the U.S. Congress will take precedence over the free trade deal. Yet this weak-kneed lackey, boot-licking Government is actually signing an agreement which states that the free trade agreement will take precedence over any act of Canadian Parliament. It is asking Members of the House to approve a deal that will bind us to future American trade law. If we violate future American trade law, not yet passed by an act of Congress, we could face a million dollar fine or go to jail.

The Conservative Government intends to ram this document through Parliament. It is restricting the rights of Members of Parliament to free speech and is limiting our opportunity to put on the record not only the faults of the deal but the hidden agenda to destroy social benefits, unemployment insurance programs, and medicare.

By hook or by crook, the Conservatives on the back-bench are going to get the kind of level playing field we know is secretly coveted by them. They cannot come forward and do it publicly. They could not cut back on senior citizens pensions publicly because people revolted. They will do it through the back door and blame it on the Americans.

The Government does not want the people of Canada to know what is in the deal. That is why it is ramming this legislation through Parliament. That is why we are not being given an opportunity in committee to fully explore it through hearings across the country. The interpretation of this agreement has not yet been passed through the U.S. Congress.

The Government wants Canadians to consider instead the great principle of free trade and whether they are for or against it. Many Canadians will say that they want to free our trading policies and trade with the world. But they will also say that they do not want to sacrifice their Canadian way of life in the process. We do not want to give up our right to an independent foreign policy, an independent social policy. We do not want to give up the right for our children to pass laws in the Canadian Parliament that will shape the future of our generations. As a result of this document we are closing the options for future generations to develop a Canadian life style, a Canadian dream.

The Government is selling out to the Americans just so a desperate Prime Minister can have something with which to go to the polls. It will not work. He is not to be trusted. I urge the Government to call an election. They talk about Goebbels. The Government should call an election and let the people decide.

SERVICE CHARGES—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, for some months now, Canadians from all parts of the country have expressed their serious concern about the way in which financial institutions have been imposing charges for banking services. Today I am announcing a wide ranging package of measures which will respond to these concerns.

Four principles have guided me in developing this initiative. First, free market competition is the best way to obtain and maintain fair pricing practices. Fundamental to such competition is the informed consumer. The consumer must have the information if he or she is to act intelligently.

Third, certain basic banking services should be available at little or no cost. Fourth, customers should have a clear understanding of their recourse when they have complaints about services.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the government has decided to take strong and direct action to ensure that Canadian consumers are fairly treated when charges related to bank and trust company accounts are imposed. Canadians will now be properly informed, in advance, of charges relating to their personal accounts. We will amend the Bank Act and Canada's major banks and federally regulated trust companies will take voluntarily action with respect to basic banking services and certain objectionable charges.

[English]

In simple terms, we are achieving results which will benefit consumers. Where necessary, we are acting through statutory and regulatory improvement. Elsewhere, we are achieving these results by allowing the voluntary and market-driven business environment to operate. We have moved on all three fronts, regulatory, legislative and voluntary.

Some in this House, no doubt, would prefer that we avoid the use of legislation in answer to this problem of bank service charges. Others would prefer that we legislate all aspects of this initiative, leaving no room for voluntary action. In my view, our initiative today strikes the appropriate balance between legislated rights and obligations and voluntary action on the part of the financial institutions.

Providing Canadians with more information, while allowing financial institutions the freedom to maintain their competitive and pricing decisions, is an appropriate response to the problems identified by Canadians. In the process of identifying those problems, I want to pay tribute to the Members of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs who have worked to broaden public understanding of this problem. Their recommendations have provided the foundation for the measures being outlined here today.

I believe the way in which this issue has been examined and resolved is an excellent example of our parliamentary reform which was introduced by this Government. All Parties in this House, and as I look across the floor I say very clearly, all Parties in this House have worked constructively to achieve the progress which I am announcing today. I am hopeful I can count on that same constructive spirit to expedite the passage of the legislation.

Let me deal with the statutory changes to the Bank Act being brought forward today. New legislative requirements make full disclosure of commonly applied charges a fundamental part of this plan. The legislation will also ensure that customers are fully informed of service charges and the complaints procedure when opening a personal account.

[Translation]

Furthermore, our legislation will ensure that any increases in charges, or any new charges, cannot be imposed until there is proper notification. This will be achieved by distribution of a notice with statements, where applicable, and through prominent posting in all bank branches across Canada.

Moreover, posting will be required not only in branches, Mr. Speaker, but also at automated banking machines.

[English]

The statutory and regulatory changes are not only consistent with the recommendations of the Finance Committee but go somewhat further to ensure that customers are made fully aware of all account related service charges. I am today tabling the background material after this statement which provides a full description of the new disclosure requirements in the amended Bank Act and regulations. I believe that major federal trust companies will bring their disclosure practices in line with these provisions as well.

There is a fundamental principle which our initiative entrenches—no financial institution ought to alter its charges without its customers being fully informed in advance. This must be done. Consumers have the right to be able to make informed choices among available account options.

Following discussions between the Government and the financial institutions I am pleased to announce today that the major Canadian banks and the major Canadian trust companies will continue to provide, and in many cases enhance, their basic accounts. As a result of all this, most of the major federal deposit-taking institutions—the preponderance of them—will give their customers access to basic accounts, which will do what? They will allow unlimited deposits and unlimited cash withdrawals without charges, without maintenance fees and without minimum balance requirements. It can now be said as a result of this that all Canadians, economically disadvantaged Canadians especially, have or very soon will have access to basic banking services at little or no cost.

We shall be monitoring carefully compliance with these actions. We hope this voluntary action will be sufficient. But I emphasize that the Government will not hesitate to take legislative steps in the future should that prove necessary. We have it voluntarily now and we will act in the future if the voluntary system breaks down.

In order to assist consumers in making informed decisions about the cost and type of banking services to which they can have access, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), has agreed to publish a comparison table outlining available basic banking services, together with their costs. This will also help to ensure that the public can monitor financial institutions' compliance.

Let me move to certain reprehensible and objectionable charges referred to by the House committee. These charges have been or will be withdrawn. The results are as follows. I invite the House to listen carefully to these charges that will be withdrawn. First, recipients of NSF cheques will not be charged for depositing these cheques in their personal accounts. Second, there will be no charge for closing personal accounts which have been open for more than 90 days.

[Translation]

Third, there will not be charges for the maintenance of an institution basic account when the balance falls below a specified minimum level. Fourth, there will be no charge for any transactions resulting from an institution's error. Finally, administration and transfer fees on fixed-term deposits, notes and GICs will not be increased during the term of the instrument. Where necessary, this will be noted in the contract.

[English]

I am also pleased to announce that we will be taking specific measures to strengthen the process of handling consumer complaints concerning bank and trust company service charges. I discussed this problem with the major banks and with trust companies, that is, the need to enhance their complaint resolution procedures. This morning I went in to see my own branch manager in Ottawa. I asked him what his procedures were. He outlined that they varied from branch to branch and from bank to bank. He would welcome clarification and standardization.

It is desirable that as many complaints as possible be handled by the branch. At the same time customers must be able to go further within the institution if they are unhappy with what they hear from the branch to resolve their complaints.

[Translation]

The institutions have all assured me that they will take steps to improve their complaint resolution procedures. Moreover, the enhanced disclosure provisions in our legislation will ensure that customers are informed of these procedures.

[English]

Where a complaint has not been resolved by the institution, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions will mediate. Furthermore, he will prepare an annual report to the Minister of Finance to table in Parliament on the number of complaints and their disposition. I have asked that an interim report on this be made available in six months.

In order to ensure that the changes relating to the complaints resolution procedure meet the needs of customers, I have asked the Superintendent to do something further. I have asked him to assess the operation of the over-all system in the country within the banking realm for handling complaints and report to me on the results of this evaluation. The Superintendent is considering engaging the services of a specialist to assist in this evaluation. Not only are we putting a mechanism in place, we are going to monitor it and report back on the monitoring.

In summary, I am seeking a legislative mandate to require better disclosure on the opening of personal accounts and of service charges that may be related to those accounts. Furthermore, that mandate will provide for a clear notification period for increases in service charges.

[Translation]

At the same time, most major deposit-taking institutions will be providing basic banking services at little or no cost. In cases where these institutions have imposed service charges, identified by the committee as unfair, they will be withdrawing them. The complaints procedures within the institutions will be strengthened and I am formalizing the responsibility of the Superintendent for mediating complaints.

[English]

Today's measures serve to underline our Government's commitment to ensuring that the Canadian consumer, whose deposits form the foundation of our banking system, is treated fairly, frankly and with respect. These measures underline that.

The problem of bank service charges raised by the committee and by Canadians and acted upon today by the Government have, I believe, been addressed. We as a Government will be vigilant in monitoring compliance and in ensuring that the problems identified have been resolved, and resolved by effective action, not red tape.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that once again, the Government was weak-kneed. The Government caved in to the banks. It didn't even listen to its parliamentary committee. It didn't hear the message sent by members of its own Caucus. It did not even listen to Canadian consumers. It lacked the courage to do so, and that is typical of this Tory Government. It is a Government without a backbone.

Mr. Speaker, anticipating action by the Government, the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) considered withdrawing his Private Members' Bill on bank service charges, after introducing it with a lot of fanfare.

We were also surprised when the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the Chairman of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs voted against their own bill this week in the House.

I hope the Hon. Member will keep his bill in the running—he is here—after reading the totally inadequate measures announced this morning by the Minister of State (Finance) (Mr. Hockin).

Mr. Speaker, we saw before us a Minister who lacked courage. The report of the House of Commons Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs concerning bank service charges contained four types of recommendations. First, it recommended that financial institutions offer their customers a certain number of basic services free of charge. Second, it recommended that financial institutions keep their customers better informed of bank service charges. Third, it asked for the appointment of an ombudsman to defend the interests of customers and finally, it recommended a number of penalties in case of non-compliance with the legislation.

Obviously, we agreed with these recommendations and we strongly support such measures.

• (1120)

When the Finance Committee proposed free basic banking services the big banks were hopping mad. The President of the Royal Bank of Canada said that it would "impose unfair and unjustified costs" for all bank customers; that it would "distort pricing, tending to increase substantially other service charges". Those statements are taken from The Globe and Mail of June 9, 1988.

Yet, the banks themselves admit that occasionally they do provide free basic services to some four million senior citizens and young people. Now, apparently, most of them agree with "voluntary" measures to provide basic services free. In today's The Globe and Mail there is an article which states:

> But Toronto Dominion representative Sue de Stein vowed that the country's fifth-largest bank will not budge on what it regards as a question of principle.
> The bank intends to stay competitive in customer services but it doesn't want government dictating how banks run their business, she said.
> "We have no intention of giving in on this principle," she added.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering what all the fuss was about. On the one hand the banks oppose free banking services, and on the other hand they claim that they already do provide some such services, and they now agree—if we are to believe them—to provide more. I am not sure if all this outcry was really serious.

I wish to quote what the Finance Committee had to say about voluntary measures: "The committee welcomes any voluntary action on the part of financial institutions to provide basic services, but worries that voluntary provisions on an institution by institution basis will fall short of what is needed". That quotation is from the report.

The Liberal Party agrees with that statement and thinks that today's measures put forward by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) are totally inadequate.

In this morning's newspapers one reads that one of the largest banks, the Toronto-Dominion Bank, is still dickering over service charges. I wonder how the Government will oblige the Toronto-Dominion Bank, or any other bank for that matter, that in future will refuse to comply with voluntary measures. How will the Government oblige them to comply with the guidelines? There are no teeth in this morning's measure. There is nothing in there that gives the Government any stick to bring the banks into line with.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs recommended fines or penalties of up to $10,000 for a first offence and up to $100,000 for each subsequent offence committed within a period of three years. There was no mention in the Minister's statement this morning of any serious measures or penalties to force the banks to act.

As far as the ombudsman is concerned, he will be in a very difficult position because his role will not be to arbitrate but to act as a mediator in case of a dispute.

Admittedly, he will have to report to the Minister once a year, and the Minister will have to table a report in the House, but, Mr. Speaker, when a consumer's rights are violated, that person should be able to get some basic justice from the ombudsman; the Government did not accept this recommendation of the Committee.

What will happen, Mr. Speaker, if a conflict between a bank and a customer goes on and on? Who will settle it? We do not know.

Finally, the Minister's statement this morning is not specific on the measures to better inform customers about bank service charges. We do not know if there is a time limit. Will the customers have prior notice? Will there be time limits in the legislation to prevent abuse by the banks?

We in the Official Opposition would like the Government to include time limits in the legislation so that Canadian consumers really receive the services and are fairly treated.

[English]

Indeed, in my opinion, there is very little in this statement to satisfy Canadian consumers. It appears that the Minister went to his friends in the banking industry and said: "Hey, I need your support. I need your help. I need your co-operation. We have an election coming up and this could be a very sensitive issue. So, come on, friends, be nice to us, co-operate with us, do it voluntarily and we will be nice to you sometime. For God's sake, fall into line, don't do anything to hurt us now. We are politically involved in a very serious game called an election in Canada this year and we wouldn't want the banks to be embarrassing to the Government".

This is a spineless Minister. This is a Government that has no courage, and it did not do much this morning to improve the image that it has in the country.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the Minister today and read his statement, my conclusion is that this is the biggest bank hold up since the great train robbery. What the Minister has said today is a crock. It is an absolute cop-out.

Last fall Members in the House raised very serious questions not only about the proliferating bank service charges, but about the ever-increasing charges on services. There are approximately 180 different services in any given bank, and the charges have kept going onward and upward.

As a result, the Standing Committee on Finance investigated. Having heard the witnesses, the committee stated that the complaints of consumers are justified. It recommended several tough recommendations all the way from a no-frill basic bank account, to services for which there is no charge, to an ombudsman, to notification.

We in the New Democratic Party were not satisfied with those recommendations. As far as they went, we said that they were fine, but that they had to be tougher. We wanted an independent, autonomous ombudsman, and we put that recommendation into a minority report. We stated that there ought to be redress for the billions of dollars that the banks have heisted from the pockets of Canadian consumers. We said that there ought to be a freeze on bank service charges starting in the year in which the report was tabled in the House.

Following that report, the Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) entered a Private Member's Bill, which was patterned exactly after the report, complete with regulations. The Chairman of the Bankers Association, Robert MacIntosh, went wild. The banks went wild. They said that politicians had tin ears, that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) was a socialist, and that the only reason the members of the committee recommended those tough things to tell banks what to charge was that they were afraid of their seats. He also stated that there was no such thing as a free lunch, and that no one would ask the supermarkets to give free groceries to people, therefore, he asked, why are the banks asked to provide free services? That was the reaction of the banks.

Now, what has happened? What happened to the Hon. Member for York Scarborough and the Member for Mississauga South? The following is what the Hon. Member for Mississauga South said in debate on Thursday, June 23, as reported in Hansard:

> However, clearly, the kind of arrogance and lack of sensitivity expressed by the President of the Bank of Nova Scotia in his letter and other letters as a result of other actions, leave the Government with very little alternative except to proceed with the legislative hammer and regulatory control. It is important that that regulatory hammer and control be effected properly.

Then he went on to say, Mr. Speaker:

> I suspect that had the committee report been before the committee today, it would have been harsher than it is.

Now, what has happened to this roaring rabbit? There has been a conversion. He is nothing but a copy-cat today. Why? Because all the banks except one said, Oh well, we accept voluntary compliance. They said that, not because they honestly believe it. In fact, it is anathema to their very philosophy that the Government should tell them what services to charge for and how they should deliver the services. It is not part of their economic thinking. It is not part of their business philosophy.

So why did the Minister surrender? Why did he accept the fact? I mean, this Minister asking consumers to accept that the banks will voluntarily restrain themselves is like asking the Canadian public to believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he says that our social programs are a sacred trust. There is as much veracity to what the banks are saying as to the experience Canadians have had with the Prime Minister's promises.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Now, why did the Government do this turnabout? Because, in fact, they are not interested in protecting consumers. In a recent poll carried out by Angus Reid, it showed that 75 per cent—

An Hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Rodriguez: I know the Liberals do not like Angus Reid these days. I know he is persona non grata over there. The survey showed that 75 per cent of Canadians believe that the only way to deal with the banks in terms of bank service charges, was by government intervention, by regulation. The Consumers'—

Ms. Copps: Nationalization.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Consumers' Association of Canada said that while they will accept this sudden death-bed repentance by the banks, in fact the only effective way is through government legislation.

Ms. Copps: I thought you were going to nationalize—

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I heard the Liberal spokesman speak on this, condemning the Government, but last Thursday the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) got up and said that she prefers this voluntary compliance, that there was really no need for the Government to legislate.

An Hon. Member: Where do they get their money from?

Mr. Rodriguez: I understand that the Liberals have some difficulty with their banking services these days. It may be why the Royal Bank did not contribute anything to them in 1986.

The question has to arise—why? I think it is because this crock of voluntary compliance is in line with Tory philosophy. In fact, they are true to themselves.

Secondly, Canadians are well aware of the fact that the banks contribute considerably to the Conservative Party. As a matter of fact, in 1986, the five banks contributed $177,000 to the Conservative Party. In an election year, that doubles. For example, in the year 1984, they got $360,000 from the banks. This year, given the inflation factor, it will approach $400,000, no doubt about it.

So, do Canadians really expect them to bite the hand that feeds them? Not on your life. The banks have made the argument with the Government: Well, we will regulate ourselves. We will accept certain things. We went through this a little over a year ago. This House, the Finance Committee, did an investigation of bank credit cards because the credit card interest rates were skyrocketing. The Finance Committee did a study. The banks said, "We will voluntarily roll it back", and they voluntarily rolled it back.

I suggest to you, if you went now and looked at the interest rates on bank credit cards you would notice they are moving right back up again to their heights prior to the study.

Canadians do not trust the banks to comply voluntarily. In fact, the Toronto-Dominion Bank has said it will not comply. In an oligopoly, that is what you need, one leader. The Toronto-Dominion Bank will become the bench-mark against which all the other banks will determine their own service charges.

Ms. Copps: Nationalize them.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, the other argument that the banks use and which the Government has accepted is that there is no free lunch. The banks have asked, why should they give free services? Look at what the Canadian taxpayers have given to the banks. This Government, the taxpayers of Canada, allowed them to write off their Third World debt against their Canadian earnings. It is worth about $3 billion. Who picks up the tab when the banks do not pay their fair share of taxes? Ordinary Canadians. They pick it up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Furthermore, we have allowed the banks of this country collectively to defer taxes, which they will never pay. Who pays when they do not pay? The ordinary, average Canadians pay.

As Ernest Hemingway said in The Sun Also Rises: "They will pay and pay and pay". Canadians are sick and tired of paying and paying and paying to keep this Government in the position where it is today.

An Hon. Member: Watch your ticker!

Mr. Rodriguez: Now, who is getting the free lunch? The banks are getting the free lunch. The question has to be asked, after this statement by the Minister: Do things change for Mrs. de Gruchy? Does she have any more assurance, or does any other consumer have any more assurance that when they go to the bank to get quarters, they won't get dinged and donged? No, Mr. Speaker. No assurance.

Would any Canadian from a small business who goes in to get 50 cents in pennies not be charged 40 cents? No. There is no guarantee. There is no assurance that the banks won't ding and dong them again and again and again. Look at what they suggested, with respect to an ombudsman.

Now, there is one office in Ottawa, but surely it stretches the credulity of Canadians even to think that this office protects consumer interest. Do you know what office that is?

Ms. Copps: Harvey Andre.

Mr. Rodriguez: It is the office of the Superintendent of Financial Services. Now, if this Government or anybody believes that that Superintendent of Banks really has the interest of consumers at heart, have I got a bridge for them. Have I got a bridge!

Mr. Speaker, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions is only concerned about the solvency of banks. They are not interested in the problems of Mrs. de Gruchy or Go-Go Pizzas or any of the hundreds and hundreds of complaints we have had about bank service charges. Eighty-two per cent in the survey said that what we need is an independent economist ombudsman with the power to advocate and the power to referee. That is what we needed. We do not need to have the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, with all its little agents running around checking on solvency of banks, to deal with these very important and specific problems that consumers have with banks.

So the New Democratic Party said, that is what is needed. The Tories can laugh and they can make fun of it all they want. They are out of step with what Canadians want, and that is a little bit of justice when they are dealing with these bankers. The banks charge you when you put your money in the bank, they charge you now when you take the money out of the bank. They charge you to keep money in the bank. All of these things will continue. Nothing will change. It is now getting to the point where you walk in the bank and be charged.

One reporter was telling me yesterday that he went to get a print-out of his account, which cost him $3. He told me that about two weeks ago the print-out cost a buck. He was told that this was the new charge system, Mr. Speaker. And that is the Toronto-Dominion Bank. Does this change anything, Mr. Speaker? No. This Government has entered into collusion with the banks to hold up the Canadian public and pick their pockets. Last year the bank picked people's pockets to the tune of $750 million. The bonanza is coming because the Government has shown it is the banks' best friend.

Let me say to the Minister that Canadian consumers and we on this side of the House are deeply disappointed with the statement of the Minister. It is a complete surrender, totally unacceptable to the New Democratic Party and to thousands and millions of Canadians.

INCOME TAX ACT AND RELATED ACTS

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan Act, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, and Federal Post-Secondary Education and Health Contribution Act, 1977, and certain related Acts.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BANK ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Michael Wilson (for the Minister of State for Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-140, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Pierre Blais (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-141, an Act to regulate the marketing of agricultural products, import, export and interprovincial trade and to provide for national standards and grades of agricultural products for their inspection and grading for the registration of establishments and for standards governing establishments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think you will find consent to have this Bill read later this day after the House disposes of the business of Bill C-111.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the Bill to be read later this day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CANADIAN ARCTIC NUCLEAR WEAPONS FREE ZONE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-304, an Act to declare the Canadian Arctic a nuclear weapons free zone.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to establish in the north of Canada a nuclear weapons free zone hopefully together with other Nordic countries as an important step toward peace and disarmament and a nuclear weapons free world.

In the U.S.S.R., General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev has undertaken revolutionary changes with perestroika and glasnost during the historic Party conference this week. It is important that the West respond positively to these changes, not with the outdated cold war rhetoric set out in the Conservative Government's White Paper on defence.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Petitions

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition from the people of London and surrounding area calling upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts relating to schizophrenia will in future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-72—OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition containing many names of people from Barrie and area in which they humbly show that as concerned English-speaking citizens of Canada they wish to prevent any further steps toward official bilingualism.

They are aware of the subtle manipulation of a minority group in the current Government. They want their children to have the advantage of good English language education because it is the universal language. They want to prevent future confusion and violence as job opportunities and promotions disappear to a favoured few. They petition their elected representatives to stand up, speak out and save our country from a social disaster. Finally, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to prevent Bill C-72 from becoming law and call upon the Government of Canada to hold a referendum on official bilingualism.

CLOSURE OF POST OFFICE AT CULTUS LAKE, B.C.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a number of petitions today.

First, I have a petition signed by a large number of residents of the Cultus Lake area in British Columbia who are protesting the proposed closure of the post office in the Cultus Lake Mall.

Prior to the March 8 fire which destroyed the Cultus Lake Mall a post office was located there, and the people are very concerned that Canada Post may downgrade their services to franchise postal outlets, unattended letter box service and/or superboxes. They call upon the Conservative Government and their Member of Parliament to speak out against this erosion in the quality of postal service.

OPPOSITION TO STRATEGIC DEFENCE INITIATIVE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by hundreds of Canadians from all regions of Canada who note that the U.S. strategic defence initiative is a dangerous escalation of the nuclear arms race and that over 50 Nobel Prize winning scientists have condemned it as economically disastrous and strategically destabilizing. They call upon Parliament to guarantee firmly that there will be no testing, development, manufacture or deployment of SDI systems or components in Canada, to end all Canadian political support for SDI and to support actively positive alternatives to SDI, including the strengthening of the 1972 ADM Treaty, the establishment of international satellite monitoring agency and the abandonment of all nuclear weapons testing.

RIGHT TO LIFE OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents of my constituency of Burnaby who state that the right to life is a paramount and most fundamental right of a person.

They state that the paramount right to life is vested in each human being from the moment of fertilization without regard to age, health or dependency. They state further that the word "person" applies to all human beings irrespective of age, health, functional condition of dependency, including their unborn offspring at every state of their biological development, including fertilization. They call upon Parliament to prepare legislation immediately to the effect that no unborn person shall be deprived of the right to life except where medical procedures are required to prevent the death of the mother.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of residents in my constituency of Burnaby who note that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They note that this trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian, political and economic sovereignty. They note that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. Therefore, they call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada an opportunity to reject or accept the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

EQUALITY RIGHTS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): I have the honour to table a petition signed by hundreds of Canadian men and women who note that in February 1985, the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to report on the right to equality in Canada and that in March 1986, the Government said that it was happy with the recommendations of the subcommittee on equality. It added that it would do everything necessary to make discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation illegal in all fields under federal jurisdiction. They mention that so far, the Government has still not introduced in the House new legislation to act on the recommendations supported by the Government.

They ask Parliament to make sure that the Government and Parliament carry out the recommendations of the above-mentioned report as soon as possible.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified, signed by residents of the City of Toronto, who protest that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They say that the present Conservative Government had no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, that the trade deal that was negotiated will reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs we need and will integrate Canada more deeply into the North American defence industrial base. For these reasons, they call on the House of Commons to ensure that a national debate takes place on the deal and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is concluded.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions Nos. 219, 243, 309, 310 and 312 could be made orders for returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that questions Nos. 219, 243, 309, 310 and 312 be deemed to have been made orders for returns?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL HOUSING ACT AND CMHC ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of Public Works) moved that Bill C-111, an Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to repeal certain amendments in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe you will find that there is the consent of the House to move this to Committee of the Whole House rather than to a legislative committee in order that we may deal with all stages today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: By unanimous consent, the Bill will go to Committee of the Whole.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to outline briefly to the House the amendments proposed to the National Housing Act and to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act. The Bill contains provisions which support the Government's ongoing commitment to help house Canadians.

The amendments focus on mortgage loan insurance and mortgage-backed securities, two government programs designed to encourage a continuing flow of investment funds for housing. Other amendments in the Bill are designed to ensure that the mortgage insurance fund operates more effectively and, ultimately, becomes self-sustaining on an actuarial basis.

Incidental amendments are included to clarify wording and to repeal obsolete sections. These amendments comprise part of an ongoing review by this Government to ensure that under the federal housing policy, all Canadians have decent, adequate and affordable shelter.

With mortgage insurance for mobile homes which is also introduced in the Bill, young couples, families, singles and seniors will find financing this type of home far less costly than in the past. By providing mortgage insurance for these economical homes, we are significantly increasing the number of Canadians who can achieve home ownership and build family equity.

Equally important to home financing, whether private or government assisted, is the amendment designed to use existing mortgages for mortgage-backed securities. The extra millions of dollars of mortgage funds they encourage should continue to result in longer term mortgages at more stable interest rates.

The benefits in reduced monthly payments for fixed terms will truly aid more Canadians to fulfil their dream of home ownership. Furthermore, they will provide all of us, and particularly our growing senior population, with secure government-protected investments.

This Government has been vigorous in encouraging home ownership through sound economic management and government mortgage insurance initiatives. By working with the provinces and by directing all government funds to those most in need, more low-income Canadians, the disabled, women raising families on their own, widows, victims of family violence and young singles have secure, affordable housing. Only recently, co-operative housing groups have received additional support. This has been welcomed by those in the co-op housing movement.

The amendments with respect to social housing reaffirm the agreements for provincial contributions to housing for the needy and open the doors to home ownership to thousands more Canadians. I would like to take this opportunity to thank the Members of the House for their support in helping us achieve these goals and for agreeing to deal with this Bill so speedily today.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, first, I want to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) for allowing me to speak after the Parliamentary Secretary.

I have had an opportunity to discuss the measures proposed in this Bill with officials from CMHC and with officials from the Minister's office who have gone over the Bill fairly carefully. I want to say at the outset that we support the measures in the Bill and the process that we are about to engage in to have it adopted in all stages today. Having said that, I do not think the Parliamentary Secretary or anyone else would be surprised to hear me say that while we welcome the measures proposed in this Bill which will certainly be helpful to a certain segment of the population, I would have felt much more comfortable—and I expressed this sentiment to the Minister when I met with him and with officials in his Department—if the Government had also come forward with more concrete proposals to address the housing crisis that exists in Canada today and particularly the one that exists in Metropolitan Toronto in which my constituency is situated. I say this for a number of reasons.

There have been sentiments expressed in the House by Members on all sides who are seriously concerned about this crisis. I received a letter from a constituent of mine, which I think would be of interest to Hon. Members on all sides of the House because it expresses probably in a better way than I could the frustrations that are felt by many people in Toronto who can no longer afford to buy homes. My constituent wrote:

> My husband is a teacher and I'm an administrative assistant. Though we earn a decent income between us, the current situation makes it unlikely that we'll ever own a home or our own. Though I know it has never been possible for everyone to own their own home I think its very sad when even the smallest house is beyond the reach of the average person or family. So that a privileged few can make large amounts of fast money, a huge number of potential homebuyers are put out of the market permanently.
> Adding to the hopelessness of the situation is the fact that rents are so high in Toronto that even a small downpayment takes years to save. Generally, by the time one saves the downpayment on an average home, the price of the home (and the required downpayment) has doubled.
> I've lived in Toronto all my life and I love it here, but it now appears that if we want to start a family David and I will have to move to a smaller city nearby and hope to gain employment there (unless we want to raise a family in an apartment building).
> I know the real estate agents insist that the number of speculators within the homebuyer/seller market is as low as 1 per cent but I think this estimate is very low. I myself know several speculators (one is a real estate agent himself) and plenty of others who would gladly do the same if only they had the money to get their foot in the door.
> In the long run, Toronto will suffer as well as the people who will be forced out. The colourful community atmosphere that characterizes this city will be replaced by the childless, the very rich, and the extremely poor.
> The city will lose so much of its appeal as well as developing all of the problems associated with such huge gaps in the social strata.

That is a letter of concern, as I said, from one of my constituents and it is a feeling shared by many people in the City of Toronto today.

• (1200)

I seriously suggest to the Parliamentary Secretary that the Minister's Department respond to that crisis by implementing many of the measures suggested by myself and the Minister's own colleague from Scarborough West. In debate the other day that Hon. Member made 10 proposals, I believe, which are well worth consideration by this House.

Without taking up any more time, I felt I had to express at least those concerns of the people of the City of Toronto. I want to conclude by saying that we support this Bill and hope that the process as suggested by the Deputy House Leader will be followed by the House and the Bill will be passed in all stages today.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that I also welcome this opportunity to speak, on behalf of my Party, to Bill C-111, a Bill whose purpose has the approval of our Party, although we wonder whether there are sufficient guarantees to protect Canadians.

In a way, we are disappointed. And first of all, always in a spirit of collaboration, the Government should remember, when it introduces bills that are in the public interest, that the Opposition can work fast and pass this kind of legislation in one day. That is what we are going to do today. We will accelerate the process and thus help Canadian taxpayers who stand to benefit under this legislation.

Second, we are disappointed, as I said before, because this is not enough, although the amendments are valid ones and there is an improvement in the timeframe in which services are provided. I think making mobile homes and floating homes eligible is a step in the right direction. However, I would like to know whether these will be eligible for other CMHC services. I would have liked to see something for those thousands of Canadians who are waiting for social housing, which may be in the form of public housing provided through the provinces, referred to in Quebec as "HLM", and also for Canadians involved in housing co-operatives.

I think the Government could have made the necessary amendments requested by housing co-operatives, the groups involved in the construction of social housing. First of all, there is an appalling lack of housing units for the Montreal area, for Toronto, as was mentioned earlier, for Vancouver, Edmonton and in fact all large urban centres.

There is a shortage of cheap housing. There are a lot of condominiums going up, renting for $1,000 or $2,000 per month, but there is a lack of decent, affordable housing for people on middle and low incomes.

I think that here the Government missed a golden opportunity to show it has a social conscience. I agree the Tories certainly don't have a reputation . . . Remember what they did to the elderly, remember what they did with their tax on drugs, and as far as social housing is concerned, they have shown this is not really . . . Today for instance, they were a lot more flexible with the banks. This talk about controlling the banks is just that, but where the average citizen is concerned, they are not as generous.

However, Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of my colleague from Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) and on my own behalf, I would like to say that our Party agrees to have all stages of this Bill adopted today, so that Canadians can take advantage of its provisions as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-111, an Act to amend the National Housing Act and the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation Act and to repeal certain enactments in consequence thereof Mr. McInnes—Mr. Danis in the chair.

Is there unanimous consent to declare Clauses 1 to 37 carried?

Mr. Malépart: To save time, Mr. Speaker, I could start with two short questions and we could then proceed.

Concerning the matter of mobile homes or house boats being eligible for mortgage insurance, I would like to know whether that eligibility under the legislation will make mobile homes, house boats eligible for every other existing CHMC program, for home renovation or otherwise, or whether amendments will have to be brought in to other aspects of the National Housing Act to make them eligible, or whether this is strictly limited to mortgage loan insurance?

My second question deals with the delegation of authority to provinces. I think we agree on the matter of delegation, power sharing, cooperation with provincial governments, but where there is a breach, where, a province decides it no longer wishes to be the one to deliver housing in its jurisdiction and it wants to put an end to that operation, will the federal Government retain the same right as before to make direct delivery within a province? Or, in the case where there is a disagreement, can the federal Government reclaim its right to continue building housing, to deliver those programs in a relevant province, otherwise the legislation means that authority to deliver the CHMC programs is completely relinquished by the federal Government to the provinces?

[English]

Mrs. Martin: Mr. Chairman, to answer the second question first, no, it does not take any more power away from the federal Government whatsoever. If any province decided not to deliver, the federal Government could still deliver those programs.

On the mobile homes issue, this Bill provides for mortgage insurance only, not for other programs at this time.

Hon. Pierre Blais (for the Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-141, an Act to regulate the marketing of agricultural products in import, export and interprovincial trade and to provide for national standards and grades of agricultural products, for their inspection and grading, for the registration of establishments and for standards governing establishments, be read the second time and, by unanimous consent, referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today I would like to speak to the Bill we just tabled which concerns agricultural products in Canada. I may add that speedy passage of this Bill is urgently needed. Mr. Speaker, we need this Bill first of all to clarify and reinforce the role played by the federal Government in the agricultural sector. This legislation will give the federal Government more clear-cut statutory powers to regulate the marketing, inspection and grading of agricultural products and to provide for national standards and grades. It will help improve agricultural trade, both in Canada and on the international market.

Bill C-141 also provides better protection for the Canadian consumer. Speedy passage of this Bill is of the utmost importance to all Canadians, and especially to the agri-food industry. As you know, it is also of vital importance to the Canadian fruit and vegetables industry, whose 27,000 growers of fresh fruits and vegetables now have annual sales of over $1.7 billion. That is impressive, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Horticultural Council and the Canadian Fruit and Wholesalers Association agree that this legislation is essential to maintaining a well-organized market.

The two groups I just mentioned are among the twenty-seven national agri-food organizations supporting this Bill. At the present time, standards for these products are regulated under the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act. In fact, very few amendments have been made since the legislation was passed in 1955. As you know, the Act contains a number of shortcomings and ambiguities that were already pointed out some time ago. Some regulations have become practically unenforceable. That is why we must act now to provide the requisite authority to revise the regulations covering agricultural products. For instance, sub-paragraph 1(iii) of Clause 31 of the Bill will again give us the power to control consignment selling of fresh fruits and vegetables.

[English]

Until 1983, consignment selling was controlled under the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act of 1935. The Act was amended in 1942 to prohibit imports of produce which the importer purchased later than 24 hours after shipment and from the point of production. This effectively controlled consignment selling.

When the CAPS Act was introduced 33 years ago, it consolidated a number of existing Acts, including the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. However, the import provisions concerning consignment selling, Sections 56 and 57, were not consolidated but remained under the original Act.

For over 40 years these regulations controlled imports on a consignment basis. In other words, imports could only enter Canada under a prior purchase agreement. However, in January of 1983, the Standing Joint Committee on Regulatory Scrutiny examined the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act. It ruled that the Act did not have the enabling authority to regulate consignment selling.

In more than five years there has been no attempt to enforce such regulations. However, last summer notice was served that Canada's fresh fruit and vegetable markets are vulnerable to surplus products from abroad. These surplus products can be sold at depressed prices in direct competition with Canadian production and pre-purchased imports.

[Translation]

Without controls on consignment selling, Mr. Speaker, products can be imported without a prior purchase agreement. Blemished products can be offered for sale, causing prices to fluctuate in a market that is already unstable.

Controlling consignment selling does not in any way affect our free trade agreement with the United States.

During the talks, we clearly explained our position to the U.S. negotiators. They are well aware that Canada intends to take action in this respect.

In fact, these controls are entirely in line with the rights and obligations we have under GATT.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill also guarantees us some flexibility in cases where it would be undesirable or impractical to apply the present Act.

For example, test marketing of new products or new packaging would be impossible if it were not exempted from the requirements of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act. Furthermore, packers and processors of fresh fruits and vegetables must at times be temporarily exempted from the packaging and grading requirements when some Canadian products are in short supply.

Subparagraph 31(1)(iv) of this Bill authorizes the Minister or his delegate to allow the bulk transport of fruits and vegetables in containers that do not meet the regulatory standards. This makes possible the orderly, efficient interprovincial or international sale of fresh or processed fruits and vegetables when shortages occur on the domestic market.

Section 15 of the Bill authorizes us to make logos and quality names for agricultural products into national brands. Making trade marks of federal quality names will increase the effectiveness and credibility of our inspection system. The resulting constant quality will clearly benefit consumers, Mr. Speaker.

Improved controls on imported products or those sold interprovincially will protect consumers from products that do not meet our health standards.

[English]

Additional provisions will allow Agriculture Canada to respond to developments in the agriculture sector and provide authority for cost recovery and privatization. Proposed revisions will increase penalties established in 1955 and provide a general updating of the Act similar to revisions made to the Meat Inspection Act in May, 1985.

To ensure the use of fair and ethical trading practices and the orderly marketing of safe, wholesome agricultural products, it is necessary to improve the licensing of dealers of agricultural products. This is prescribed in Section 32(b). It clearly defines the terms and conditions under which dealers can operate.

This Bill will ensure that the new marketing procedures work fairly for dealers and buyers of fresh fruits and vegetables.

• (1220)

The Canadian Board of Arbitration and the Review Tribunal, which now operate under the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, would be maintained. I refer the House to Clause 4 of the Bill. The Board will consider complaints against dealers and provide rulings in accordance with the Act. The tribunal will hear any appeals against the Board's rulings.

The Canada Agricultural Products Act will update current provisions governing trade and product standards. Outdated and impotent legislation will be replaced with legislation that can help guide the agri-food industry into the 21st century.

[Translation]

Better regulations in the farm export industry would certainly enhance Canada's image as a supplier of healthy and high quality foodstuffs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the continuing support of our colleagues, especially in the Niagara Peninsula area.

[English]

I am thankful for the warm support of the Members for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson), St. Catherines (Mr. Reid) and Welland (Mr. Pietz) and the surrounding area. It was very important for the Government. Now we will have legislation that will be good for us and good for the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if this legislation is important for the Canadian farming industry generally, it is vital for horticulture. Therefore, I strongly urge the Members of the House who are here today to complete their deliberations promptly and give this Bill their full support.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Bill before us today is certainly much broader than we had called for under the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act. It goes far beyond the simple provisions relating to consignment selling and to bulk shipments.

This issue has been before the Government since at least 1984. It has not been able to enforce the old Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act regulations since 1984. The Canadian Horticultural Council has been calling for action since 1984. Last summer, the entire frozen sour cherry industry was destroyed because the Government refused to act even though it had promised for years to bring in amendments.

I cannot help but have the same feeling today, the last normal sitting day, that I had last year with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The Government brought in a Bill and allowed for a briefing of opposition Members in the lobby in the last hour before the House sat. We allowed the Bill to go through in one sitting. There were probably many flaws in the Bill because we did not have public hearings. The Government then took eight months to proclaim the Bill.

The Government will demand that this Bill be passed immediately, but will reluctantly proclaim the Bill next January or February, as they did with the Farm Improvement Loans Act. It is not only unreasonable, it is unfair to agriculture and certainly unfair to the House of Commons to bring in legislation in the dying hours of the session. It shows no respect for the House.

We know that the Canadian Horticultural Council needs this legislation and that the cherry producers need the legislation this year. We want to co-operate, but we are opposed to the Government treating the industry and the House of Commons with contempt, as it does year after year. We are faced with the ultimatum to either pass the legislation or let the industry be destroyed without it. The Government is showing utter contempt, as it did last year with the Farm Improvement Loans Act.

The Minister said that this legislation is leading the industry into the 21st century. The joke is that as a result of the free trade agreement that his Government is hammering through this House, the industry will not be around in the 21st century. Much of the industry will be destroyed with the loss of the seasonable tariff.

The grape industry will be destroyed. We learned yesterday that the Government will provide some $35 million in the Ontario region for the grape industry. Yet the grape industry requires at least $156 million just to cover its losses in the adjustment as as result of the trade deal. This industry was sacrificed because the President of the United States tipped his glass of wine with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr.

Mulroney) at Rideau Hall and said that he will not be happy until the entire Canadian grape industry and wine industry is destroyed and Canadians are drinking California wine. Clearly he is getting his wish. If the Government is going to sacrifice the grape and wine industry in Canada, the least it could do is pay some reasonable adjustment.

Furthermore, the Government is demanding that the Ontario Government pay a similar amount when it knows that Ontario has openly and consistently opposed the trade deal. The ones who will suffer are the people in the Niagara region, along with those in the Okanagan.

The Minister said that the Members from the Niagara region gave their warm support to this legislation. They will require more than warm support in order to get re-elected after the trade deal is passed. The trade deal will be absolutely destructive.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Mr. Foster: Every one of them knows it. The Canadian grape industry faces the loss of half their acreage. Some 11,000 acres will have to be removed but they will only get a quarter of the amount they need for compensation. While the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) states that he has warm support, I suspect it is very lukewarm. The meaning of "lukewarm" is "not too hot". The Members from the Niagara area are not too hot on this trade deal because they know they will be destroyed. They know the Government has abandoned them. The industry is demanding $156 million because half their grape-vines will have to be torn out. They are getting exactly $35 million. The Minister announces the best he can do with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is some $35 million when the adjustment required is $156 million. Everyone knows what will happen. There will be a tremendous demand for the small amount of dollars, one-quarter of what is needed.

This trade deal is absolutely devastating. I talked to a producer last weekend who has 800 acres of grape-vines in the Niagara area. He is facing their removal. I said to him that surely there will be some market, and he replied, yes, there will be some market, and do you know what the market will be, Mr. Speaker? The average white hybrid grape producer received something around $600 per tonne during the last three years. In 1989, he must compete with the grapes produced in California. The average price he will be competing with is $347, that is assuming the dollar does not appreciate some more, which is what it is doing practically every day. No wonder these producers are going to be put out of business. If they are selling white hybrid grapes for $600 a tonne on the market and suddenly they have to compete with the prices in southern California, delivered in Canada, with transportation and all the other charges, they are looking at $347. It is little wonder they are very concerned.

The Minister indicates he is going to provide about one quarter of the assistance required. This Government is not only sacrificing this industry but will not pay any compensation. The Prime Minister tips his glass to the President and says: "We are going to sacrifice the Canadian grape and wine industry". Surely he should pay the cost. But he is only putting up one quarter of the money.

We are not very happy with a Bill that does all kinds of things that are way beyond the scope of the original regulations which were ruled ultra vires last year. The old Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act was ruled ultra vires in 1984. The Government stopped enforcing it because of the decision of the Special Joint Committee on Regulations and Statutory Instruments. The industry has simply been in limbo with respect to this consignment selling ever since. So the pressure has been there.

The Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister have promised year after year at the Canadian Horticultural Council's annual meeting that they will bring in amendments. That is great, but why bring them in on the last sitting day of the session? This is an industry that could face horrendous problems. Literally millions of dollars were lost last year when the Government refused to bring in amendments relating to bulk shipments for the sour cherry industry.

This is the kind of Bill that should have proper hearings. It has all kinds of legal ramifications relating to search and seizure and relating to interprovincial trade. The Government talks about giving greater freedom for interprovincial trade. If we are going to have a free trade agreement with the United States, it might be good to have free trade between the provinces. Everyone seems to agree with that although Deputy Ministers of Agriculture have had not had much success so far. This Bill, if you can believe it, Mr. Speaker, actually further controls interprovincial trade.

The people in the Department say if we are going to control international trade, as this Bill proposes to do, we have to control interprovincial trade. That may be necessary under the GATT, but I would feel more comfortable if we had some public hearings and had the Deputy Minister for International Trade before the committee. Perhaps we could hear from some of the provinces. Perhaps Nova Scotia does not like this provision. Perhaps British Columbia does not like the provision with respect to interprovincial trade. But the Bill is brought in on the last afternoon of the regular parliamentary calendar to be swallowed whole. I suppose we could take the attitude that some like it. If the Government is going to screw up the country, let it go ahead and do it. But I do not really think it is discharging our responsibility either as members of the Opposition or as Government back-benchers to leave it to Government control.

This legislation will apparently upgrade many sections with respect to the horticultural industry, very much along the lines of the Meat Inspection Act a few years ago. That is desirable. We had public hearings. We brought in various people from the industry to see how it would work. I would think similar kinds of public hearings would be desirable for this Bill. This is a big country, with about five or six distinct agriculture producing areas, and the impacts are very wide. Clause 4 provides for an arbitration and review panel to handle disputes between shippers and receivers. This is very similar to the existing Act. There may be some minor adjustments there because this whole Bill has been brought in on an emergency basis in the way the Government does most things and the details are not provided for us.

The registration of establishments is provided for. This is similar to the existing Act, but there is a whole new section under Clause 14 which provides for contracting out. Apparently the Government has a policy now of contracting out for laboratory work. That may be desirable. I am not judging it one way or the other, but it seems to me it would have been good to hear from the private sector and from government officials as to what standards would be put in place to ensure that the laboratory standards are just as good in private sector laboratories as they are in government laboratories. We do not know that.

There is a new section, Clause 15, for national trademarks which provides for the products which use that national trademark standard and have not met those standards even though they have not crossed an international boundary. They would be subject to federal inspection. I think that is probably a very good provision. There are a number of arrangements with respect to Clause 19 as to how administrative officers are appointed. It is similar to the existing CAP Act. The inspection provisions are very similar to the existing CAP Act.

There is a new section with respect to search and seizure which is not in the existing Act. I have been told by officials that it is similar to the provisions which were put in the Meat Inspection Act, and it is probably useful, but I would have preferred to hear some testimony by officials with respect to the legal limits which are prescribed. There is also a provision for disposal of seized fruit and vegetables and other commodities. There are dramatic changes in the penalties. They have been raised from $500 to $10,000. That may be appropriate. We do not have testimony to prove that one way or the other.

I do want to deal with the question of consignment selling because that has been a problem with shippers in the United States who have surplus fruit and vegetables. Once they are loaded on the truck and moving, they can easily be rolled across the borders. It is a type of surplus disposal mechanism. For many years we were able to control that. Back in the forties it fell under the regulations of the fruit, honey and vegetable legislation. Those regulations were ruled ultra vires in 1984, and nothing has been done since.

We are glad that the Government is bringing in this amendment to change the CAPs Act. We hope that the Government will not wait for eight or nine months to proclaim the Act and to bring in the regulations. If it does the value of it for this year's fruit and vegetable producers will be lost.

We heard stories of shipments of boxes of plums coming into the country last year from California which were selling for $10 a box in California. By the time they reached Montreal in a deteriorated condition, they were down to $2 a box. That totally destroyed the Canadian market for those commodities. Similar things happen year after year with regard to peaches and other perishable commodities. They are simply rolled across the border and thus destroy our markets.

Apparently the same arrangement applies to interprovincial trade under this legislation. I am sure that some shippers and producers will be surprised that these regulations are being put in place. Likewise, I am sure that some provincial Governments will be surprised.

In Clause 32(l)(iv) there is a provision for the control of container shipments coming into the country. It states:

> (iv) permitting the Minister or a delegate of the Minister to exempt the marketing of any fresh or processed fruit or vegetable in import or interprovincial trade from any of the requirements of this Act or the regulations where the Minister or delegate considers that it is necessary to do so in order to alleviate a shortage in Canada of the fruit or vegetable or an equivalent fruit or vegetable,

Last year, because this legislation was not put in place a year ago last spring as had been promised, we saw the whole frozen sour cherry industry destroyed as a result of massive shipments coming in from Michigan and other points in the United States. This resulted in millions of dollars of lost production in the fruit and vegetable industry. We hope that the Government will not dally with this legislation this year because it will mean a similar loss.

Under its marketing orders to control price, quality and quantity of any fresh or frozen vegetable, the United States has all these powers. This measure will give our Department of Agriculture a similar type of control, belatedly, after a year or so. Law officers of the Crown advised the Government that the regulations which had been drawn for processed fruit and vegetables a year ago should be brought in to control those shipments. Of course, this legislation will firm up the regulations as they apply to fresh fruit and vegetables, as well as to processed fruit and vegetables.

Consideration of the impact that this measure will have on the trade deal is another aspect of the whole agreement which would have been useful if public hearings had been held. Clearly, in the drafting instructions provided to the United States administration there was a provision put in place by the two congressional committees to authorize the President to negotiate the control of vegetable imports into the United States. Our potato producers in the Maritimes may be looking forward to the American Government negotiating import controls. That sounds rather strange when we consider that the Government has agreed to a free trade agreement with the United States. Yet we see in the drafting instructions a measure for administrative action, not necessarily in the trade deal itself, but for administrative action to authorize the President to negotiate import controls and their levels. Under its marketing orders the American Government can do that at any stage with any fruit or vegetable.

As far as Canada is concerned, under the agreement as long as these requirements of size of container, quality standards and so on are met then the fruit and vegetables can flow into Canada. It is a very unequal arrangement that arises from the free trade deal. Clearly, assuming that these regulations are not protested at GATT when the Government actually has the courage to proclaim the legislation and to pass the regulations, we will be able to control consignment selling, and the rolling of van-loads of fresh fruits and vegetables often in a deteriorating condition into Canada. Likewise, processed fruits and vegetables in bulk containers can be controlled.

I have already outlined what the impact of the trade deal will be with regard to the fruit and vegetable industry with the removal of the tariff on processed food. The seasonal tariff is replaced by something called a snap-back provision which has absolutely no effect. It is only effective providing the farmer does not increase his acreage. In other words, the industry has to retrench if it is expanding and then that whole snap-back provision does not even operate.

The snap-back provision is a total joke. It provides that if the price drops below 90 per cent of the five-year average, removing the highest and lowest years from that five-year average, then the original most favoured nation tariff can be reinstated. Of course, those prices have to prevail for five days. There is also an administrative period of another two days to consider. I do not know of any fruit or vegetable producer or distributor who believes that once the price of a fresh fruit or vegetable breaks even for 48 hours it can ever be brought back in that season. It may make some people feel better to reinstate the tariff, but it has absolutely zero impact on holding up the price.

Of course, we have the disadvantage of being in a colder climate where many of our perishable fresh fruits and vegetables come on to the market three or four weeks later. Now we will always be taking the lower price at the end of the market.

We have been calling for this legislation to protect fruit and vegetable producers for at least one and a half years. We want to see it passed and have the protection. We are very concerned that the Government will not proclaim it for six or eight months, in the same manner as the Farm Equipment Loan Act. Although we have the worst financial crisis since the 1930s, the Government did not bother proclaiming that Act for six or eight months. We could face a devastating year for fruit and vegetable producers like the sour cherry processed producers faced last year, and the Government will fail either to proclaim the Bill or write the regulations and put them in place. We were assured by officials that those regulations can be put in place in a week or so. We on this side want to see the legislation passed. We think that the industry is facing a tremendously difficult time with the trade legislation.

In February I had the opportunity to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council. At that meeting there was a panel on the opportunities for free trade. I listened carefully to all the problems of the various sectors in the industry. I heard practically nothing in terms of opportunities from the trade deal for the fruit and vegetable industry. It is facing an incredibly difficult time.

I have already described what is happening to the grape and wine industry. It will be destroyed. Today I read a confidential document from the American Agriculture Producers Advisory Committee. It is the same as the Canadian SAGITS. They stated that they were quite pleased with the free trade deal, because they felt that right off the top in the grape and wine industry they were going to take at least $60 million of additional wine exports into the Canadian market. When one considers that our wine production is in the area of $210 million that is a pretty significant chunk of the industry.

We believe that if the Government is going to sacrifice the grape and wine industry, as the Prime Minister has decided to do, it should at least pay adequate compensation. We have been told that the compensation will only be $35 million over a six-year period, and the industry is asking for $153 million in the Ontario region alone. It seems like a total disregard for anything that is fair or just for that industry.

The Government has decided to sacrifice that industry and it is not willing to pay the money. The federal Government is saying that the provincial Government should pay the money. Surely the provincial Government through bringing in its legislation relating to the trade deal, whether it is for water, hydro, or medical services, has laid it on the line that it is not supporting the federal Government plan to sell out the industry. Why would the federal Government expect the provincial Government to provide the industrial adjustment for the industry?

Some 17 producers have already been put out of business in Ontario, and more and more are walking away. That is not surprising. If a producer is selling grapes this year at $600 a tonne and as a result of the trade deal that producer will be selling them for $347 a tonne next year, there is no question that the producer will go out of business.

The legislation before the House today will provide some assistance in controlling the imports, assuming that the Government passes it, and assuming that regulations are put in place. The industry is facing a very severe challenge in the future because it is being sacrificed in the free trade deal.

In committee we will look forward to receiving answers to some of the questions that I have raised. I hope the Minister of State for Agriculture will be able to provide those answers. This is a much larger Bill than we had anticipated. It goes far beyond the question of consignment selling and bulk shipments. It is brought forward in the last days of this session. It should have had a much more extensive committee study. We should have heard officials from the whole fruit and vegetable industry, from provincial governments, and from marketing boards in order that we would know what will be the impact of the interprovincial regulations, and the impact with regard to the whole industry from such an extensive Bill that was not envisaged and on which we heard nothing until one day ago.

In fact, we thought the Government had decided not to bring it in. I hope it will not simply be window dressing. If the Bill is not proclaimed and regulations are not drawn almost immediately, we will see many producers destroyed in this very crop year because of the Government's negligence to put in place the proper regulations to control imports from the United States. The Government has known about those problems for almost four years. In October and November, 1984, the Government was told that the regulations for consignment selling under the old Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act were ultra vires. One year ago the Statutory Instruments and Regulations Committee told the Government that the regulations with regard to bulk shipments were illegal, and that they could not be enforced for processed food. They were also told that they were probably ultra vires for fresh fruit as well.

Yet this legislation to give the proper legal framework for those regulations to control those two serious problems for the fruit and vegetable industry were not brought in until this morning. We hope that there will not be more mistakes and errors in it. We hope the Government will act, because it is destroying the industry through the free trade deal. We hope that the Government will at least try to take this one action which can be useful in controlling these abuses which have been going on for several years and have been extremely costly and harmful to agriculture producers in the fruit and vegetable industry.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-141, an Act to regulate the marketing of agricultural products in import, export and interprovincial trade and to provide for national standards and grades of agricultural products, for their inspection and grading, for the registration of establishments and for standards governing establishments.

This particular Bill came about as a result of a ruling or a decision by the committee on Statutory Instruments and Regulations. It ruled that the regulations Canada was using under the Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act and the Canadian Agricultural Products Standards Act were ultra vires because those two Acts failed to deal with the marketing of agricultural products. They were simply attempting to designate some of the other rules and regulations as having to do with standards, quality, and grades. The committee of the two Houses of Parliament, the Committee on Statutory Instruments and Regulations, found that the scope of powers that the Department of Agriculture was attempting to use lie outside of the scope of the legislation.

This legislation has been promised by the Minister for almost one year. It has been brought before us on the last day of June on a rush basis. The House has agreed to forgo the usual waiting period after introduction, therefore, we have had very little chance to become knowledgeable of the legislation. By agreement, the legislation will go through the House today. I have had a chance to go through it. I believe I now see why the Minister has delayed so long with the legislation. It approached us before the recess at Christmas, suggesting that perhaps we would have the legislation replacing the CAPs Act at the last day of the sitting at that time. Apparently it was not quite ready and he did not introduce it. We have it now. It is not just a question of chance, on the last day before the July 1 holiday. There are not too many Members in the House. Some of the Conservative Members who represent western ridings have chosen to go home so that they can attend their July 1 functions. As a result, the Minister does not have the problem that I think he would have had had he introduced this when there were more of his own back-benchers around. For the last two decades, at least, the Conservative caucus has refused to allow any agriculture legislation that permits control over the marketing of agricultural products to pass this House, particularly if that marketing involved livestock.

You will know, having been a long observer of this House, that when the legislation to permit the establishment of national marketing boards was established in the early seventies, that a rump of Conservative back-benchers stopped that legislation and in fact made it impossible for even a Liberal Government to bring it in, until they had put in an amendment making it impossible for producers of products to set up a national marketing board for those products, unless the product was named in the legislation.

They totally reversed the intent of the legislation, and it is now necessary to come before the House to have a product named in the legislation before you can begin the slow, tortuous process of setting up a national marketing agency. This House and this Parliament went through that in the case of tobacco. It was one of the first pieces of legislation before us.

Most Members in the House will remember that in spite of that having gone through the House relatively quickly, most of the impetus for the establishment of that national agency had passed by that time. It had taken three years of long, arduous work on the part of tobacco producers, who were going broke and were tired. They never did get their national marketing agency, even though the legislation finally was permitted, three years after it was needed.

What we have is an Act which, by force of the necessities and the exigencies of the way business is carried out, is permitting and requiring the Minister to have say, legislative and parliamentary say, over the marketing of agricultural products. Which agricultural products does he have the power to control? In marketing, and I quote from the legislation, it means the preparation and advertisement of agricultural products. It includes the conveyance, purchase and sale of agricultural products, and any other act necessary to make agricultural products available for consumption or use.

It is very broad and very necessary for the role that the Department of Agriculture has been carrying on in conjunction with the Horticulture Council of Canada. It goes beyond that because, under this Act, an agricultural product means, (a) an animal, a plant, or an animal or plant product. It is not just plant products, fruit and vegetables or honey that is affected this time. This Act does include animals and animal products. It goes on to say that the agricultural product also means, under (b), "a product including any food or drink, wholly or partly derived from any animal or plant". Or, (c), and this is new, "a product prescribed for the purposes of this Act".

The Minister will have the power under this Act to prescribe other products that do not easily fit within the category of being a plant or an animal product such as, I would presume, honey which comes from a bee and is only indirectly from the plant. What about mushrooms, which by definition are a fungus rather than a plant or an animal?

It gives, I think, the necessary latitude for a Minister of Agriculture to perform his functions and the functions of the Department on behalf of Canadian producers, and I am pleased that this legislation unshackles the Minister of Agriculture in a way that previous legislation did not permit. I am therefore supporting this particular action by the Minister of Agriculture on behalf of the Government.

The legislation also proposes to legalize the arbitration and review tribunal and to give it some enforcement powers, a problem that that particular tribunal ran into under the old Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act and the Canadian Egg Products Standards Act.

A change which I am ambivalent about is that it accredits certain laboratories in the private sector to perform necessary laboratory work. It maintains these laboratories under a system of accreditation, which will be maintained by federal inspectors doing spot checks, by sending some products for testing, to see whether the tests are similar to the ones that have been done by the Department of Agriculture itself. It will, to some extent, be privatizing some of these services that were largely carried out by the Department but can now be shared with the private sector. It establishes an agricultural product legend which has been in use, with the Maple Leaf and the Canada No. 1. It makes this a trademark so that this can be officially used only by the Government of Canada.

I am not sure whether we are going to have some of the spin-off problems with this particular trademark that the Olympic Committee had with the name "Olympic" and the circles and so on. I would hope not. Otherwise, we may find Air Canada and the Department of Agriculture in court some day, both using the maple leaf. Other corporations, Crown and otherwise, have used the Maple Leaf as well. I think that this makes good sense. The Maple Leaf and the No. 1 are readily identifiable symbols, and I believe that to register that symbol or that legend as a trademark is a necessary part of the marketing of our agricultural products from Canada and within Canada.

This legislation strengthens the rights of inspectors to open containers and it spells out the right of seizure of additional products when an inspection is made by a Department of Agriculture inspector.

Consistent with the new Constitution, the old legislation had to be changed. This legislation is modern in that it specifies there can be no entry to a dwelling or search of a person without a warrant, and the warrants in this case must be issued each day. It is my understanding of this Bill that during the course of such a search under warrant if other illegal products are found, charges can be laid concerning those illegal products even though they were not necessarily specified in the warrant.

Fines have been updated in this legislation because the old legislation had not dealt with the question of fines for 25 to 30 years. We now find that there are two ways of handling the question of fines. Under this Bill there is a procedure for minor offences where the arresting officer or the official of Agriculture Canada can simply issue a fine and ticket the offender for minor infractions and the fine would be paid immediately just as a parking ticket or something like that is paid. Fines for corporations and officers of corporations are now included in this new Bill and those fines will be to a maximum of $10,000 under summary conviction and/or six months imprisonment. Under an indictable offence fines rise to $100,000 and/or one year in prison. Fines have been tightened up considerably, the ability to enforce the legislation and penalties for avoiding the new law are much more onerous than they once were.

Terms and conditions for marketing, importing and exporting in and out of the country and in interprovincial trade will be spelled out under regulations. This is not anything new. Most of this kind of legislation makes the methodology which the Government proposes to follow clearer under regulation. We have had difficulty in previous legislation introduced in a rush by this Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), namely the Farm Improvement Loans Act. That Bill was introduced in a rush last June but was not put into effect until the following February 8 or 10. I have been assured by officials that this Bill comes into effect upon promulgation by the Governor General because there is no clause in it which says the Bill comes into effect upon the proclamation by the Cabinet.

We are allowing this Bill to go through the House quickly on the assumption that it will be in effect within a matter of days. We have been told that the regulations are prepared and that within 10 days or 2 weeks it is hoped to have them published. We are willing from my corner to permit the process to go through quickly. Therefore, I am now prepared for the legislation to move into Committee of the Whole so that the process can be finished in this Chamber.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to take a few minutes to speak on this Bill.

The Government suffers from an acute case of Roy McMurtry syndrome. When I was in the Ontario Legislature, the Attorney General of the province, Roy McMurtry, used to regularly introduce Bills on the last day of the session, expecting passage that very same day. This Government has adopted the same kind of philosophy when it pertains to agricultural legislation. Regularly on the last day of a session the Government brings forward a Bill that it has probably had ready or at least should have had ready for a long time. It wants first reading, second reading, committee stage and third reading on the same day and it expects co-operation from Members of Parliament. Of course, it expects that co-operation having approached Members discreetly beforehand saying that the Government merely wants to correct a portion of a Bill, in this case portions relating to consignment selling and bulk container shipping.

In other words, those two provisions have been turfed out of the old Bill because the regulations were done in a way which went beyond their scope and the Bill was necessary to make that correct. The Minister approached my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), and told him that. That is partially true, Mr. Speaker. The Bill, in part, addresses those issues, but it goes further. It addresses a number of other important issues.

However, the Bill is not 21st century legislation as the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) stated earlier today. He said, and I paraphrase his words, that this Bill will help to guide the fruit and vegetable industry into the 21st century. But with the free trade deal that his boss, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), has signed there will not be much of a fruit and vegetable industry left in this country at all. The only hope we have is that the Government will be turned out of office before the trade deal and the implementing legislation is over and done with.

Mrs. Martin: No chance.

Mr. Boudria: I hear the Member from the Niagara Peninsula across the way. I am sure the grape growers will want to know why the federal Government is offering a mere pittance to the grape growers of that region—

Mr. Della Noce: Not true.

Mr. Boudria: —when they will be suffering losses as a result. The Member from the grape growing region of Laval is telling us that that is not true. As an Ontario Member I have met the grape growers of our province. He can say that the grape growers do not tell the truth.

Mr. Della Noce: No.

Mr. Boudria: He has a right to say that and he can say it all he likes. All the grape growers who are listening will know that they have asked for at least $156 million in reparation for the damage inflicted upon them by the Government as a result of the trade deal. They will be offered somewhere in the order of $30 million or $35 million. Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government has the nerve to ask the Ontario Government to contribute half of the amount of repairing the damage the federal Government has caused to the Ontario grape growers. That takes nerve. It is the same as if I ran into your car with mine and I asked you for half of the money to fix my own car, Mr. Speaker. That is about the same kind of thinking and it is not surprising given that the thinking comes from the Tory Government.

This Bill goes well beyond the issue of consignment selling, bulk container sales and so on. I want to give an example of some of the things covered in this Bill. It is a very lengthy piece of legislation to be passed in a matter of minutes after a long-winded speech by the Minister of State for Agriculture. Let me read Clause 14 of the Bill:

> For the purpose of administering this Act and the regulations, the Minister may designate as an accredited laboratory all or part of any building or place set aside and used for conducting research or carrying out inspections, grading, testing, analyses or experiments in science or used for the manufacture of chemical or biological products.

That goes well beyond the issue of consignment selling and bulk container selling. Clause 13 is even more interesting. It reads:

> It shall be a condition of the registration and operation of an establishment as a registered establishment under this Act that this establishment and all agricultural products in it are subject to this Act and the regulations.

What we have here with those two clauses that I have just read is a system whereby the Government can contract or privatize certain services which are done right now by federal government employees.

• (1320)

I have not heard representations from the Public Service Alliance or from anyone else concerning the impact this clause could have on federal government employees. Does the Government intend to use this clause only in cases where there is an emergency and when the technology is already available in the private sector, something which could be deemed to be reasonable, or does it intend to privatize certain services being offered right now by federal government employees? I do not have the answer to that question. It will be very difficult to get the answer to such a question if we are forced to deal with this issue in a matter of minutes.

The Government wants this legislation passed with a few minutes' debate. It is interesting to recall that we dealt with another agricultural Bill earlier this year, the Pedigree Act, an important Bill. However, I would suggest that the Bill before us today is even more important. The Pedigree Act was discussed for one hour and 31 minutes in the House of Commons and it was debated for three hours and 39 minutes in five committee meetings.

The Bill before us today, which does a number of things which have been described by my colleague from Algoma, by me and by the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party, is supposed to be dealt with at all stages today without hearing from the provinces, from the industry or from anyone else. We will not even have the weekend to talk to our constituents in order to determine how they feel about this Bill that no one had seen until 11 o'clock this morning.

At 11 o'clock this morning, officials from the Department of Agriculture walked into the opposition lobby, Bill in hand, to brief us while another Bill was being discussed in the House of Commons. There we were sitting in the lobby listening to the debates of the House in one ear and being briefed in the other ear. That is the process the Government wants us to use in order to pass important legislation dealing with agriculture.

As has been said previously, this is the second time the Government has done this.

[Translation]

At about the same time last year, as the House was preparing to adjourn in late June for the summer recess,—in fact, on the very last day—the Government asked us to adopt another urgent farm bill. It needed it immediately. There were certainly flaws in this bill. We overlooked them. We were not even allowed to hear witnesses because of the so-called urgency. Do you know when the legislation took effect, Mr. Speaker? Eight months later. We had to wait eight months to see this bill implemented. How can we take this Government seriously, Mr. Speaker? I am not saying that we should not take this matter seriously, because it is serious indeed, but I am saying that if this Government was serious, it could have introduced this bill yesterday, the day before yesterday, or even before that to give Parliamentarians at least an opportunity to contact their provincial counterparts and the various farm organizations in this country to seek their support and advice.

[English]

The Minister of State for Agriculture talked about the fruit and vegetable industry being guided into the 21st century by this legislation. I do not intend to delay this any longer than I have to, but I must protest with the Minister the manner in which he and his Government have dealt with this issue today, a manner which is disrespectful of this parliamentary institution.

The Government talks about guiding this industry into the 21st century. Let me remind Hon. Members that McCain Foods, earlier this year, wrote to the then Minister for International Trade to tell her in no uncertain terms that the fruit and vegetable industry would be totally devastated by the actions of this Government. Mr. McLean of McCain Foods can hardly be considered to be someone who is a partisan of my political Party. As a matter of fact, he indicates in his own correspondence that he has been a supporter of the Conservative Party in the past.

Mr. McLean states that he cannot support this kind of legislation because it would totally destroy the Canadian agricultural industry. I have his letter here in front of me. In the interests of time, I will not read it into the record, but I do want to tell Hon. Members that Mr. McLean has indicated very clearly, as a supporter of the Conservative Party and as the representative of the largest food processing company in Canada, that this trade deal is not good for him.

We are talking about leading the fruit and vegetable industry into the 21st century, but we will certainly not be doing that with the Prime Minister's trade deal. That trade deal means total devastation for that industry. The Government knows it. It has chosen to sacrifice the fruit and vegetable industry, the grape growers of the Niagara Peninsula and the Okanagan Valley and several others in the agricultural sector deliberately in order to obtain that trade deal that the Prime Minister wants so badly.

That being said, I will end my remarks by again indicating to the Government that this Roy McMurtry syndrome from which it suffers has to be put out of its misery very soon, and an election should do it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, in view of the time and the fact that I believe the House would normally rise at 1.37, I think I can speak for Members on the government side when I say that we would be prepared to not see the clock to allow for my colleagues opposite to put as many questions as they like in Committee of the Whole House, with a view that perhaps, in accordance with discussions earlier, we could try to get through all stages of the Bill. The officials are here and we could go right through until two o'clock in an effort to allow for as much time as possible. If everyone would agree to that suggestion, we could move ahead.

The Chairman: Is there such unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Order. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-141, an Act to regulate the marketing of agricultural products in import, export and interprovincial trade and to provide for national standards and grades of agricultural products, for their inspection and grading, for the registration of establishments and for standards governing establishments.

I would suggest to the Hon. Member for Algoma that if the committee agrees, we could probably proceed with questions from Members and then we could carry all the clauses unanimously at the same time. Is that agreeable to everyone?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Chairman, the key question about this legislation concerns especially the consignment selling and the bulk shipments provisions of the Bill, and I wonder what commitment the Minister can make with regard to implementation of these provisions. Does the Government intend to proclaim the Bill or will it become law the moment it is passed? What commitment can the Minister give to putting the regulations in place, and how long will that take?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Concerning this matter which is certainly important, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague the Hon. Member for Algoma that this Bill will be promulgated as soon as it has been signed by the Governor General and there will be no problem.

• (1330)

[English]

Mr. Foster: Since the Minister has his officials with him, can he estimate when the regulations will be put in place and become effective? I am asking this because of what happened last year with the sour cherry crop.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, it will be within two weeks, no question about that. We will work very soon on that matter, within two weeks.

Mr. Foster: With regard to the consignment selling issue, can the Minister clarify whether the powers proposed in this legislation under Section 32(l)(3) are identical to the powers which previously existed under Fruit, Vegetables and Honey Act Regulations 56 and 57?

Can he also comment regarding container shipments under Section 32(l)(4) and whether the regulations drawn there to control bulk shipments are identical and that these powers will not be struck down by the trade agreement?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the Hon. Member that those regulations will be exactly the same as what we already have, in both areas, bulk and consignment.

Mr. Foster: With respect to the disputes handling mechanism, is the board of arbitration given the same powers it had under the existing legislation?

Mr. Blais: Yes, those powers are exactly the same as they were before.

Mr. Foster: Referring to Section 15 of the National Trade Mark and True Labelling Act, will a producer in, say, Prince Edward Island who is carrying a national trademark on his product be subject to federal Government inspection and investigation simply because the agricultural product carries a national trademark regardless of whether it has moved into interprovincial trade or not?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: This being a provincial matter coming under provincial jurisdiction, national trade marks will only be used when they come under national responsibility. On the private and provincial levels, federal jurisdiction will not apply.

[English]

Mr. Foster: My question was this. As long as the product is carrying a national trademark and is considered eligible for interprovincial or international trade, is it subject to all the inspection and investigative powers provided under this Act regardless of whether or not it has moved into interprovincial or international trade?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, if national grades are used, they must be in accordance with the grading standards even if it's at the provincial or international level.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Since this brings in a whole new barrier to interprovincial trade, I wonder if the Minister can identify which provincial Governments and which provincial marketing boards have been consulted and are aware of what is proposed in this legislation?

[Translation]

M. Blais: Mr. Speaker, because of the specific objectives of this legislation, all the provinces have been consulted and have agreed to it.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Can the Minister identify which marketing boards for fruits and vegetables have been consulted and those which object to the powers given under this legislation?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, in the case of marketing boards, growers' associations from all regions have been consulted concerning the commodities involved, but not the national marketing boards. I am speaking of the growers' associations in the sectors involved.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Are the powers given under this legislation approximately the same as those in the U.S. as far as limiting bulk shipments and consignment selling is concerned? I realize of course that more fruits and vegetables flow to Canada than flow the other way, but I would be interested in knowing whether these powers are similar.

[Translation]

M. Blais: Mr. Speaker, there are two distinct aspects here. In the United States, they control quality and price. In Canada, we only do quality control.

With regard to quality control standards, they are the same on both sides of the border, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Since we have not had the advantage of a committee hearing or investigation, can the Minister indicate if the powers of search and seizure and investigation are similar or equivalent to those powers granted under the Meat Inspection Act which did go through a proper parliamentary hearing process? Can he also tell us where they differ and which ones are greater?

[Translation]

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, yes they are similar in all respects and it is also worth mentioning that we have also checked to see whether they were in agreement with the Charter of Rights and Freedom.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES BILL—AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY CERTAIN CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have read with astonishment, not to say disgust, the 136 amendments tabled by the Conservative members who want to sabotage the Official Languages Bill. I think those amendments are bad, racist, and full of hatred.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party of Canada would never have let its members say such divisive remarks. I do not understand, Mr. Speaker, how the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who himself negotiated the Meech Lake Accord, can keep those members in his Party.

Is the Prime Minister ready to repudiate once and for all those members for their actions and to stop trying to convince Canadians that the Conservative Party is for official languages. When he talks to the French Community, he says he is for, when he talks to the English Community, he says he is against.

Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister please make up his mind, it is important for our country!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LIBERAL PARTY POLICY

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, exactly four years have passed since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) took over the reins of the Liberal Party, and still they have no defence policy. In fact, searching for the Liberal defence policy is like trying to catch fog in a butterfly net. Not a single original thought has clouded their minds on this vital public issue since 1971 when their last White Paper was tabled.

The NDP, to their credit, have put their few thoughts on paper in the form of a "red" paper on defence. Confused, self-defeating, and ever changing though it may be, the NDP has had the courage to put it forward and face public ridicule. Say what you will about the NDP, they have never been afraid of looking foolish in front of the ordinary people.

The Liberal defence policy, however, seems to be "What we don't know can't hurt us".

If ignorance is bliss, the Liberal caucus must be the happiest group of politicians in Canada. They dither, they ponder, they offer platitudes, but in the end they have no policy and no ideas. They remain as unconvinced and unconvincing as ever. The only defence policy the Liberals have is kept by their Leader to use against his caucus. That, Mr. Speaker, is not good enough for Canadians.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CALL FOR FEDERAL GRANTS TO MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the riding of St. John's East there is a crying need for assistance for municipal services. The City of St. John's desperately requires sewage treatment facilities to stop the flow of raw sewage into the St. John's Harbour. This will cost about $50 million.

In the Town of Paradise, believe it or not, open ditches are a health hazard because of sewage pollution. The Town of Conception Bay South, the fourth largest community in Newfoundland, needs $55 million now to answer the urgent needs for water and sewage facilities and another $60 million to complete its system.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities has been fighting for years to get the Conservative Government to contribute to an aid program for Canadian cities and towns. We in the New Democratic caucus support their proposal and believe the federal Government's one-third contribution ought to be in the form of grants to municipalities. The Federation of Municipalities has shown the economic viability of such a program and the returns to the economy.

Why is the Conservative Government turning its back on Canadian cities and towns? I call on it now to provide the communities of Canada with the help they so desperately need.

SENIORS

HOUSING OF YOUNG ONTARIO PSYCHIATRIC PATIENTS IN SENIORS' BUILDINGS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, many seniors in my riding of London East have expressed concern about the fact that the Ontario Government is now housing young psychiatric patients released from hospital, as well as disabled and handicapped young people, in apartment buildings which were originally designated for seniors only.

It is important that we meet the needs of these young people, but many of the seniors have expressed concern about excessive noise from rock music and late night parties, as well as theft and violence.

I ask the Minister of State for Seniors (Mr. Hees) to raise this matter with his provincial counterparts in the Peterson Government who are responsible for management of these buildings. I believe that this matter should be resolved as quickly as possible.

REQUEST THAT BILL C-72 BE PASSED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malepart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1988, the French-speaking people of Canada cannot but be disappointed, especially the ones from Quebec like me, who fought in the last referendum to stay in Canada.

When we see on the Order Paper of the Canadian Parliament, where we have fought for equality of both official languages, motions by 25 Conservative Members proposing that, in case of doubt, the English language shall have precedence over the French language . . .

They go so far as to ask that the language of work in the National Capital, where my collegues from Ottawa—Vanier and elsewhere have fought for years so that the French-speaking Québec side would get its fair share, should be English only . . . And these people have the nerve and the lack of courage . . . knowing the attachment the people of Quebec have for Bill 101, to ask that the federal Act take precedence over Bill 101, Mr. Speaker.

Let's hope that the new Mr. Clean from Lac-Saint-Jean will show his mettle and will bring these 25 Members in line. And let's hope that the Prime Minister will stop doing somersaults and invoke closure so that we can pass Bill C-72, the Official Languages Act, and get these stubborn Conservatives off our backs.

ARMS AND ARMAMENTS

ARMS SALES—RANKING OF COUNTRIES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in the international arms bazaar just who are the super salesmen?

Perestroika notwithstanding, the U.S.S.R. comes in first by a wide margin with annual arms exports of $120 billion. Yankee traders manage only a little less than half of this. France, with its Mirage jets and Exocet missiles, comes in third at $30 billion.

The prize for most improved performance goes to China, at $11 billion, which has now cornered some 80 per cent of the lucrative Iraq-Iran market.

These countries must certainly be very proud of their contribution to world peace.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—JOHNNY CANUCK CRUSADE

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in 1911 Oliver J. Wilcox, Member of Parliament for North Essex, was one of the Conservatives who defeated the Laurier Liberals on the issue of free trade. Today his great-grandson, John Wilcox of Salt Spring Island, fights to save Canada from the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

On April Fool's Day, a significant date, Mr. Wilcox assumed the identity of Johnny Canuck, the mythical Canadian hero who appears whenever Canada is threatened. Starting from Mile 0 of the Trans-Canada Highway at Victoria, Johnny Canuck drove his rebuilt 1941 Maple Leaf Chevy half-ton truck across Canada to warn Canadians about the loss of sovereignty if the trade deal goes through.

Johnny Canuck will be in Ottawa tomorrow to celebrate Canada Day. We welcome Johnny Canuck to our nation's capital and, with millions of Canadians from coast to coast, we join with him in the struggle to keep Canada "the true North, strong and free".

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

CANDIDATES' BACKGROUNDS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, does the leader of the socialist party read the background of his party's candidates in the upcoming elections? Does he condone their behaviour when they join his party's ranks? Has he read in the July 1977 issue of Chatelaine the article in which his candidate for Chambly, Mr. Phil Edmonston, gives advice on organizing demonstrations? Let me quote, for example, his advice no. 19:

> Destroy the company's property.

This is advice no 36:

> Organize civil disobedience through illegal ways.

Advice no 37 goes like this:

> Destroy property illegally.

This instructive article contains 50 such pieces of advice. It makes us understand better why the shadow and the blessing of the socialist leader lurk behind every illegal demonstration in this country.

To make a name for oneself, everything goes: illegal acts, destruction of property, and I include the recent incident in New-Brunswick. Such is, Mr. Speaker, the hidden side of the leader of the professional agitators, the Member from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

MEASURES URGED TO OVERCOME SHORTAGE IN TORONTO

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, following the International Year for the Homeless it is disturbing to learn from an Ontario government report that 200,000 families in the province lack appropriate housing. Unfortunately, this is not news to those living on the streets, in emergency shelters, and those in sub-standard accommodation.

The escalating problem of unattainable housing for the poor, coupled with unaffordable housing for the working middle-class families in Metro Toronto, cries out for immediate federal leadership and co-operation with the municipal and provincial levels of government.

The federal Downsview Airport base, vacant postal lands, and surplus federal properties should be made available for home construction at once. As well, a first homebuyers program, and action on speculative transactions which grossly inflate the prices of homes, should be initiated in order to encourage the availability of reasonable homes at reasonable prices.

The federal Government has ignored this dangerous housing crisis for far too long. It is now time that the Conservative administration exercise its responsibilities if we are to avoid turning the dream of owning a home in Metro Toronto into an ugly nightmare.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LIBERAL PARTY POLICY

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, today the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) will be celebrating the fourth anniversary of that fateful day when he became Prime Minister. We all know what the Canadian people thought of that idea.

One item not to celebrate today, however, is his defence policy because he has yet to offer one. We can only look to the sorry past of former Liberal Governments, and the Liberal defence record can be summarized in three words: shame, shame, and shame!

The right hon. gentleman's defence policy remains one of our nation's best kept secrets. He opposed Cruise missile testing because his own caucus was planning to use the Cruise on their Leader if he did not toe the line. He opposed nuclear powered submarines, presumably to uphold the Liberal tradition of rust-out of our navy. But what do the Liberals favour for our defence?

It is perhaps most telling to observe the actions of his loyal friend and defence spokesman, the Member for Sudbury (Mr. Frith). That Hon. Member, in the next election, has decided that the best defence is to be on the fence, choosing the life of paid lobbyist over explaining the unknown, his Leader's defence policy.

When voting Canadians concerned with our sovereignty ask what is the Liberal policy in the next election, the answer is clear: more of the same, more of nothing, more shame.

PLACE OF FRENCH IN CANADA

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, 136 amendments were introduced today which should put the Conservative Party to shame.

Those documents reveal the true nature of the beast and make us realize that the Conservative Party has remained anti-French. I hope that the Prime Minister will be as courageous as his predecessor, Mr. Stanfield, when he got rid of the Hon. Member for Moncton. I think that some of the amendments introduced go against the letter and the spirit of what the Prime Minister himself is spreading across the country. They go against the basic principles, if any, on which the Prime Minister got elected and against his perception of Canadian society and I consider them unacceptable.

Therefore, it remains to be seen if the Prime Minister will intervene to make his party recognize the Canadian duality over the precedence of the English language in Canada. Failing to do so would be unacceptable to all French Canadians. I hope that Conservative Members such as the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) will rise and ask those involved to withdraw from their caucus because their views are unacceptable in Canadian society.

TORONTO ECONOMIC SUMMIT

CANADIAN WINES SERVED AT FUNCTIONS

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Summit has come and gone, leaving behind a number of pluses and credits.

The first is to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his leadership and direction resulting in a successful summit conclusion.

The assembled G-7 leaders tackled many different social and economic problems. Realistic solutions were sought and practical plans were developed.

A big plus must also go to the summit food and drink organizers. Ten years ago, indeed five years ago, no thought would have been given to serving Canadian wines at such an international dinner. But this week was Toronto's week, Toronto's summit. Instead of the usual imports, Canadian wines complemented the summit menu, and were presented with pride and confidence.

Salute to the government advisers, the leaders and their spouses for their support of the Canadian wine industry.

Salute to the Canadian wine industry, the wines and wineries which have, at last, received the reputation that they so well deserve.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

WAGE GAP BETWEEN MALE AND FEMALE PUBLIC SERVANTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we heard the Government mislead the House by stating that the Employment Equity Act is working to bring equality to the Public Service and in companies under federal jurisdiction. Today we learn that the wage gap between men and women federal public servants actually is widening.

In 1987 the average male public servant made $9,300 more than his female counterpart, an increased wage gap of almost $3,000 since 1981. Why the persistence of this wage gap? Not only are the few women in high level administrative jobs paid less than their male colleagues, female public servants continue to be ghettoized in clerical support jobs, jobs which are low paying and offer few opportunities for advancement.

Canadian women deserve employment equity legislation that works, legislation that applies to all levels of the Public Service, and that includes mandatory pay equity.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

THINNING OF OZONE LAYER—CANADIAN RESEARCH

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the world community is concerned about a thinning of the ozone layer and its consequential effects on all forms of life. Environment Canada is monitoring its status and conducting research relating to the chemical processes in the stratosphere, with investigations to confirm the presence of an ozone hole in the Arctic region, in co-operation with other countries.

The Department has been operating ground based ozone observing stations since 1957. It has developed a modern ozone measuring instrument which has been exported to over 10 countries in recent years. Also, since the late 1950's, Environment Canada has operated the World Ozone Data Centre for the World Meteorological Organization which provides data for scientists on an international basis.

In September, 1987, Canada signed an international agreement, the Montreal Protocol, along with 24 other countries, to control substances that deplete the ozone layer.

Canada is working with its international partners to address this crucial issue, which has to be a fundamental priority for all of us in the global community.

NATIONAL PARKS

SOUTH MORESBY—NEED FOR AGREEMENT WITH HAIDA PEOPLE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the prospects of a successful agreement on South Moresby grow dimmer. Despite a unanimously recorded vote of this Parliament, the Prime Minister's Office has chosen deliberately to ignore that resolution of May 14, 1987.

A Memorandum of Understanding was reached between Canada and British Columbia last July at a cost of $106 million. Consultations have been pursued in good faith between the Council of the Haida Nation and Crown Canada as represented by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). Sadly, these have led nowhere and this is confirmed by the Prime Minister's Office this week insofar as those discussions were and are limited to the context of the National Parks Act only.

I believe that Section 35 of Canada's Constitution means what it says. The rights of the Haida in South Moresby are recognized and affirmed. I believe a unanimous vote of this Parliament means what it says, that the Haida be involved in matters affecting South Moresby. I believe that a consent agreement can and must be reached with the Haida Nation and be further negotiated through a framework agreement.

South Moresby will be preserved forever as a direct result of the will of the Haida people and their supporters across Canada. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should recognize and affirm reality through a Canada-Haida agreement. The Haida people, Canada, and South Moresby deserve respect.

ASSISTANCE FOR VICTIMS OF CRIMES

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State and Minister Responsible for Multiculturalism): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday June 9 last, an escape took place, shots were fired and hostages were taken in my riding as three dangerous convicts escaped from the Saint-Vincent de Paul maximum security detention center in Laval.

During this multiple escape, two hostages were taken, a corrections officer and a resident of my riding, Mrs Georgette Richard, who was fortunately released on the same day as a result of a well thought out operation by the Quebec Provincial Police. The three escapees were captured 90 hours later.

I am shocked and astounded to find out that victims such as Mrs. Richard, a law abiding citizen, received no form of help whatsoever. Indeed, prisoners are better treated than victims. The prisoner who was wounded during the incident was taken immediately to hospital and cared for without having to stand in line. When our victim, Mrs. Richard, whose car was used for the escape and later declared a total loss, asked for a means of transportation to IVAC, an aid agency for victims of criminal violence, some 46 kilometers from her home, the only answer she got was that she should take the bus to get there.

Mr. Speaker, it is crucial that we correct these and other criticized flaws in the administration of justice and that victims be afforded adequate humanitarian, medical and financial support.

DEMAND THAT AMENDMENT NO. 11 BE WITHDRAWN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

On today's Order Paper and Notices of the House, there are 136 proposed amendments to Bill C-72 respecting the Official Languages Act. Those amendements are moved by 15 Conservative Members.

Mr. Speaker, I must say to the Minister that those amendments are an insult to the dignity of all Canadians. We have here tangible and concrete evidence that an important number of Conservative Members are against the bilingualism policy we have here, in Canada, and do not believe in it.

Will the Minister of Justice require of his Conservative colleagues that they withdraw the shameful amendment, and I quote number 11, which says: "If the two versions of this Act differ . . . "

• (1420)

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Right. Hon. Member, but I think he should ask his question directly.

M. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister request that his Conservative colleagues withdraw the shameful amendment, namely Motion No. 11 which appears on this morning's Order Paper and which reads: "If the two versions of this Act differ, preference shall be given to the English version."?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think Bill C-72 represents a very substantial advance in recognition of the bilingual status of Canada. The Bill is one which has the full support of the Prime Minister, the Government, and the caucus of this Party, the government Party. It is a Bill which has received very careful attention on the floor of the House of Commons. Amendments have been put forward by members of the right hon. gentleman's own Party.

I do not think it is appropriate for me to make comment with respect to every amendment. I think it is the right of Members of Parliament to bring forward amendments as they see fit. I may disagree profoundly with the principle stated in that matter. I can tell the Right Hon. Member that we will have a chance to analyse the amendments that have been placed, on the question of dealing with the admissibility of some of these amendments, and whether they are appropriate.

Let me tell the right hon. gentleman that this Prime Minister and this Government have done more to enhance the understanding between the two founding groups in our country. It is a commitment we hold very dearly and one we are going to carry out.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in 1969 I had the honour to introduce Canada's Official Languages Act, and I find these amendments insulting.

ALLEGED ATTACK ON FRANCOPHONE RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Why did the Minister of Justice and his leader, the Prime Minister of Canada, as well as his colleague the Deputy Prime Minister, an Albertan, fail to have the Conservative caucus withdraw these amendments?

Mr. Speaker, the Conservatives who are against bilingualism have already managed to make 52 amendments to the Official Languages Act, and now they want to add 136 more, including a discriminatory provision, and I quote Motion No. 39 which appears on this morning's Order Paper:

> English shall be the language of work in federal institutions within the National Capital Region . . .

> English shall be the language of work for all members of the armed forces of Canada . . .

The last of these amendments, Motion No. 136, maintains that Canada's two official languages are a source of divisiveness.

How can the Minister of Justice allow Parliament to waste time debating such a flagrant attack by the Conservative Members against the rights of French-speaking Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the old hope would have it, I may disagree profoundly with the position the right hon. gentleman takes but I will defend with my life his right to express it. This is a democratic institution. I am opposed to those amendments. I make no secret of that. But what does the right hon. gentleman hope to accomplish by suggesting that we arbitrarily prevent people from moving amendments?

What did the right hon. gentleman do with respect to the dissidents in his own caucus on Meech Lake? Why does he not tell those people, who are against the inclusion of Quebec in the Canadian federation, to sit down or get out of the House? If he is so smart about his own Party, maybe he had better start getting his own act in shape.

POSITION OF MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, these antediluvian Conservatives opposite are so desperate to destroy the official languages policy in our country that they are even willing to sacrifice English-speaking Quebecers.

I want to refer to amendment No. 39: "French shall be the language of work in federal institutions in the Province of Quebec". It is right on the Order Paper this morning. How else can one explain that type of amendment?

I want to say to the Hon. Minister that if Parliament has to debate every one of these 136 amendments under the current rules of the House it would take a full year. Will the Minister explain how the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister and he himself could allow their colleagues to put forward such offensive and discriminatory amendments on the Order Paper of this House?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one thing very clear to the right hon. gentleman. This Party and this Government are going to move forward with this legislation. We are going to have it brought down and passed on third reading and send it to the Senate. I hope the right hon. gentleman has some influence in that place to make sure it gets through the other place.

Mr. Gauthier: He has spoken in the debate. You guys didn't.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I want the right hon. gentleman to know that all of us in this country understand the principles of democracy with respect to the ability of people to put forward their points of view. I may disagree, very profoundly disagree, with the position put forward by Members on this side occasionally and very often with Members on the other side of the House, but we are determined to get this Bill passed into law and we are going to want the assistance of the Opposition in that respect.

OPPOSITION OFFER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice just told us that the Government is determined to have the Official Languages Act, or Bill C-72, passed by this Parliament, by this House before the next election. If I understand him well, he asked for the help of the Opposition. Well, I want to offer him that help. On behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, I would like to give the consent of the Official Opposition to time restriction under Standing Order 115. I am sure the New Democratic Party would also consent to limit the debate on Bill C-72, because we know very well that a clause-by-clause debate of those 136 amendments would put that off indefinitly. Is the Government willing to accept that offer?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman was less interested in grandstanding than he was in making progress, he would have already discussed this matter with the House Leader. It is a little bit of show business for that Hon. Member to stand up and suggest he was prepared to do a certain thing in a procedural way. This is Question Period.

If the hon. gentleman wants to know where we stand on this Bill, we stand behind a Bill that has been described across the country by editorialists and thinking Canadians as being a fair and equitable piece of legislation, one that deserves the support of all Members of this House of Commons, and we intend to get on with the job.

OFFER TO APPLY TIME ALLOCATION TO DEBATE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I think everyone understands that these 136 amendments are just dropping out of nowhere. We did not know about them yesterday. We did not know about them two days ago. So I am making the offer in all honesty because the Government is telling us it wants to pass Bill C-72, the official languages amendment Bill, before the next election. I am saying right now that we will agree under Standing Order 115 to apply time allocation to this Bill to ensure that it passes before the next election. This is an offer which is made not behind the curtains, not under the table like the way in which the dinosaurs move their amendments—it is made in the open. Just say yes or no.

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I guess I have heard it all. Here is the Liberal Party in the Opposition who attempted to filibuster this Bill at second reading.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They did everything possible to stop the Bill from getting into committee.

Mr. Gauthier: It was for two days, for God's sake. What a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They forget now, Mr. Speaker.

If the hon. gentleman is really serious, then maybe he can talk to his House Leader to take this matter up with the Government House Leader. They can put forward the proposition. The House Leaders have meetings on an ongoing basis. If they want to co-operate with this Government on this progressive legislation, it is about time.

BILL C-72—QUERY WHETHER CONSERVATIVE CAUSUS DISCUSSED AMENDMENTS SERIOUSLY AND COMPLETELY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of Justice. A few weeks ago, we learned about the possibility of such amendments. When I asked the minister about it, he answered that these were only rumours. They are not rumours any more but the strict reality. My question is simply this: Can the minister tell the House of Commons whether the Conservative caucus has fully and seriously discussed these unacceptable amendments?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the role of Question Period is to question the Government with respect to government policy, not what goes on in caucus.

I ask the Leader of the New Democratic Party this. What is he suggesting to me? Is he suggesting that in his Party there is only one point of view and it is his point of view, and that whatever his Members do they have to get his permission before they even move an amendment? Is he saying that everything that is done by a member of the New Democratic Party on the floor of the House of Commons by way of amendment has to have his seal of approval, and that he has complete control over his caucus? I would be interested in hearing his answer.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON AMENDMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, not that it is relevant, but I would say to the Minister that one would expect a government caucus not to be presenting as amendments principles or ideas that are completely contradictory to the laws of Canada which the Government itself says it accepts. I want to say in that context that that is certainly the rule in our caucus. We do not propose amendments that are not consistent with the policy or program of our Party; nor should the government side be doing that.

Former leaders of Governments, and I think particularly of the Hon. Bob Stanfield, at one time in the history of the country all federal Leaders and all Parties—were solidly behind the Official Languages Act. Does the Minister think that it is compatible with government support for this law to be so acquiescent in accepting as proposals from government back-benchers amendments that would destroy the Official Languages Act?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is having some trouble with the line of questioning. First, I am not at all sure that it is completely appropriate to be putting questions to the Government in terms of what any Private Member may do with respect to an amendment to a Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Speaker: I am certainly not going to stop the Minister from answering. However, I want to indicate to the House that I think this line of questioning is getting us into some procedural difficulty.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Canadians know where this Government stands. We have brought forward the most progressive legislation that has ever been brought forward in this area by any federal Government. The Hon. Member has a very selective memory. I remember distinctly when the whole western caucus of his Party bolted and repudiated him with respect to his position on the Constitution.

Mr. Broadbent: That is absolutely false.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is absolutely right, Mr. Speaker. But I did not hear him beating his chest and saying: "You're either going to come with me or you are out of the Party". I do not recall that happening. I remember him acquiescing to his western Members.

In this particular case I have said that our Party policy is quite clear. We have a difference of opinion. I do not deny the position or the right of any Private Member to bring forward amendments. We are going to vote against them if they are inconsistent with the principles of the Bill. We have made a great many amendments to clarify and strengthen this Bill through the committee process. We think it is a balanced Bill, one which protects all Canadians. We want to see it through as the law of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE CLOSURE ON DEBATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Minister that there was a time when a former Leader of his Party publicly disavowed a potential candidate and said that that candidate would be unacceptable in the Conservative Party because of the position he took on this type of issue.

Since both opposition Parties are prepared to expedite a Bill that the Government says it stands by, will it for once use a closure motion in support of opposition Members—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —and in support of a principle to get something that is desirable adopted as a law of Canada, to get Bill C-72 passed as quickly as possible?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can only reiterate the answer that I gave to the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques. If the Leader of the New Democratic Party is really serious in wanting to help put through legislation in the House of Commons, from what I hear from the Government House Leader on the basis of what has happened with every other piece of legislation, this would be a complete 180-degree turn.

Mr. Broadbent: We are talking about what you support, you dolt!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Opposition has spent its whole time on pointless delays and debates so that we cannot get on with the legislation we want.

Mr. Broadbent: Two Bills were passed this morning.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why does the Leader of the New Democratic Party not clean up his own act, get a little co-operation going in this House to get some of these Bills through that are in the interest of Canadians, including this legislation?

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

WAGE GAP BETWEEN MALE AND FEMALE PUBLIC SERVANTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think what discourages Canadians in this case and in others is the web of contradictions that seems to emanate from the Government. We saw another contradiction this morning.

Many women remembered in the last federal election when the Prime Minister made a great many promises about how he was going to move quickly. One commitment was: "We are committed to making the federal Public Service a model to be followed with regard to the equality of women in the workplace".

Can he explain why almost four years into his mandate that model now means that the wage gap between men and women working for the federal Government is actually getting wider? Can he explain why, just because a person happens to be a woman, she can expect to be paid $9,300 a year less than a man working for the federal Government?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, one of the things that happened with the publication of this story today is that there was a mixing of apples and oranges in terms of average wages and pay equity.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: You're selling your soul, with your dishonest Leader.

Mrs. McDougall: Let me also point out that in the numbers that were published there was virtually no difference. In statistical terms there was none. That does not mean to say that we are not anxious to see this situation improved, because we are. That is why we have employment equity legislation.

In terms of the legislation and its impact, this study was done before the impact of the legislation was felt in the Public Service.

GOVERNMENT EXAMPLE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister suggesting that a woman is an apple and a man is an orange? What is the difference? Just because a person happens to be a woman there is no reason why this Government should countenance a wage gap which has actually increased by $3,000 in seven years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: I would like to ask the Government why yesterday—and perhaps the Minister who seems to be the expert on this can respond—we heard the Government beating its chest about the success of its private pay equity program, a 1,000 employers out of 30,000 had finally signed up. Can the Government explain to the private sector how we can go and ask the private sector to come forward with affirmative action and contract compliance when in our own backyard our own federal Government's salary and wage policies are discriminatory? What kind of an example is that for the private sector?

• (1440)

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, there is a member of a Party that did absolutely nothing about affirmative action or employment equity. That Party never once introduced it.

Mr. Axworthy: You are lying on the floor of the House.

Miss MacDonald: More important, in the area where they had control, where they could have made some difference with regard to women participating, what did they do with regard to Governor-in-Council appointments? Of the appointments that they themselves could have made as a Government, 15 per cent of the appointments were women. Over 30 per cent of the appointments that this Government has made, that this Prime Minister has made, have been women. That is double the record of that crew opposite.

Mr. Axworthy: Ever heard of the Abella Commission? Who set that up?

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, and it concerns the proposed amendments to the Official Languages Act.

Does the Government agree with the principle in Motion No. 39 which says, and I quote: "English shall be the language of work in federal institutions within the National Capital Region."? Does the Government agree with the principle in amendment 5 which says: "English shall be the language of work for all members of the armed forces of Canada who may directly or indirectly participate in combat."?

If not, is the Minister prepared, on behalf of the Government, to repudiate the dinosaurs who sit on the backbenches, the Conservative Members who have put forward that amendment and similar other amendments to Bill C-72?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government I will simply reiterate the point that we do not accept the amendment raised by the Hon. Member. I do not know what else the Hon. Member wants me to do about this. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that somehow the New Democratic Party's position would be that unless you vote with your Leader you are expelled from the Party? Is this roughly the position that he is taking?

In this particular case we in the Government have a position which is reflected in Bill C-72, the Official Languages Bill. It is a fair and equitable Bill. It commends itself to the support of all Members of Parliament, and I am going to urge everyone to support the principles there. That is the position of the Government. It is progressive legislation. That is something that the New Democratic Party has not been in a position to bring forward. I hope members of the New Democratic Party support us in trying to bring a better and more equitable law to Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, in my Party we vote for party policy and vote with our Leader in order to put into place party policy.

Mr. Broadbent: It's the policy that counts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: We as a Government would not tolerate a situation where a certain number of our deputies were allowed to send a hidden message to people who are language bigots across the country, such as saying that English only should be the language of the Armed Forces, or the language of the National Capital Commission, or saying that the Government will simply ensure that no anglophone has the right to services in English in the Province of Quebec. That is the position that the Minister should repudiate.

Mr. Speaker: I would like the Hon. Member to put his question and try to keep it within the bounds of government policy.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the danger that these amendments pose to the policy of bilingualism, which is a corner-stone of our national unity, and in view of the fact that a government Member is even proposing that English not be allowed as a language in which to serve the public in Quebec, is the Minister, on behalf of the Government, now prepared to repudiate the dinosaurs in his backbenches who have put forward this series of 136 objectionable and unacceptable amendments?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have already indicated the view of the Government with respect to that particular provision.

An Hon. Member: What is it?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We do not accept it, it is very simple.

I ask the Hon. Member is he going to stand up now and insist on the repudiation and rejection from his caucus, and to sit as independents, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, and the Hon. Member for Vancouver Kingsway, because they did not support their Leader with respect to bringing Quebec into the family of Confederation?

The same applies to the Liberal Party. Is it going to repudiate those people who took a negative and, I say, destructive and divisive position against the Meech Lake Accord which will at last bring unity to Canada by allowing us to have Québec within the family of Confederation?

I think the Hon. Member has a double standard. I will not call him a hypocrite, because it is not parliamentary.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

COMMISSIONER'S STATEMENT ON INQUIRIES CONCERNING PMO OFFICIAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Yesterday in the House of Commons in his capacity as Acting Solicitor General, the Minister of Justice said that there was no ongoing RCMP investigation involving officials in the Prime Minister's Office, as reported on television yesterday.

Late last night the RCMP Commissioner, in a news release, confirmed that an investigation had taken place involving officials in the Prime Minister's Office.

Could the Minister of Justice clarify his answer today, and confirm that, according to the RCMP, there have been inquiries concerning an official within the Prime Minister's Office? Can he confirm that? Yes or no?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is an example of what I would call selective reading by the Hon. Member of the Opposition. Why did the Hon. Member not read the following paragraph from the Commissioner's statement which reads as follows: "The Commissioner also confirmed that in the spring of 1986 the RCMP made inquiries concerning an official within the Prime Minister's Office based on information—"

Ms. Copps: That's not what the Minister said yesterday.

Mr. Kelleher: Before you crow, listen.

"—presented to the force alleging a possible breach of the law. The investigation was concluded in the fall of 1987 without any evidence of wrongdoing or impropriety being disclosed".

PLACE VINCENT MASSEY LEASE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Minister has clarified the modification here.

My supplementary question to the Minister is the following. Could the Solicitor General, or perhaps the Minister of Public Works, explain to the House why it is then, if there was such an investigation, as the Solicitor General described, from March, 1986, until the fall, 1987, that the lease which I have in hand here for the Place Vincent Massey Building in Hull was signed in the middle of that investigation? If the investigation was going on about this case, why was the lease signed in the middle of it giving a $30 million gift to a friend of the Conservative Party?

Mr. McDermid: Let's go outside the House and make that accusation, you scumbag, and you are not even an honourable scumbag.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may correct the Hon. Member, as is certainly necessary from time to time when he makes allegations—

Mr. McDermid: All the time.

Mr. Kelleher: —it was not an investigation. He made inquiries and it was concluded there was no evidence of any wrongdoing or impropriety disclosed.

Quite frankly, I am getting a little sick and tired of this Hon. Member standing up and making vague allegations, besmirching reputations, with no evidence whatsoever. If he has evidence, please bring it forward.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES—GOVERNMENT REGULATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It has to do with the statement that the Minister made today with respect to bank service charges, a statement that many Canadians hoped would give them justice when dealing with banks.

Two weeks ago today in the House in response to questions from members of the Opposition regarding the Go-Go Pizza that paid 40 cents to get a roll of 50 pennies, and Mrs. de Gruchy who paid $2 to get $10 in quarters, the Minister of State for Finance said the following. "I should also remind the Hon. Member who just asked the question that the Bank Act will be changed with regard to these matters. The regulations will be changed, and that will be coming very, very soon".

In light of the statement today about the coming legislation, what is it legally that banks cannot do tomorrow that they did two weeks ago?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, you might be interested to know that the announcement this morning has been very well received—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: —and the johnny-come-lately Member from Nickel Belt is trying to get into a popularity contest with regard to this issue. Let me tell you with regard to your question.

First, we have enhanced disclosure even beyond that which the committee recommended, a committee of which you were a part. That helps Mrs. de Gruchy and the Go-Go Pizza.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to address the Hon. Member through the Chair.

Mr. Hockin: The second part of the Bank Act changes that we are making is to require pre-notification, pre-notification of 30 days for regular accounts, 60 days for other accounts. That is very important and is part of the Bank Act.

Third, we have a complaints and procedure process that will be established as part of the Bank Act. That will help the Mrs. de Gruchys, the Go-Go Pizzas and every Canadian when they go to their branches. If they have a complaint, they will be able to get an answer. If they do not get an answer they can take their complaint to the boss of the banks, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. Plus, and more important, we have voluntary compliance from the banks and the trust companies, with one exception, to provide a basic account and to ban all of the charges which the committee wanted banned.

OMBUDSMAN PROPOSAL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. The Minister of State for Finance was absolutely correct. His statement today was well received. It was well received at the banks. They are breaking out the champagne. The Minister had a wonderful opportunity to choose between consumers and his banking friends. Whom did he choose?

Some Hon. Members: His friends.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course his friends.

One of the recommendations we looked forward to seeing the Government's response on was the whole question of an independent autonomous ombudsman as recommended by this Party. Even in Margaret Thatcher's Great Britain, even in Ronald Reagan's America, there are bank ombudspersons who have the responsibility and the power to mediate and referee.

Does the Minister not believe that, in fact, his statement today completely ignored the need to establish an independent, autonomous ombudsman, a position supported by 80 per cent of Canadians according to a recent poll, and that at least should have been the bottom line for this Government with respect to the interests of consumers?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): What has been provided, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, is a very, very powerful mediator on behalf of consumers.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: First, when a customer goes into the bank, there is someone designated in the branch—

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, yes?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member will listen to the answer, he will get an answer to his question. Each branch will have an officer to deal with the complaint. Then it will go to somebody further within the bank if that is needed.

Mr. Fulton: Marvellous.

Mr. Hockin: Then it goes to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions who will mediate on behalf of the customer.

Mr. Fulton: Does it take 60 years?

Mr. Hockin: As a result of this, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation whereby we will have immediate and powerful action now on behalf of the consumers—

Mr. Fulton: Send him a pension cheque.

Mr. Hockin: —rather than as the Hon. Member wants—

Mr. Rodriguez: What legal basis?

Mr. Hockin: —which is to create another bureaucracy, another huge department of government which will not necessarily promote the consumers' interests one bit, and slow down the whole process.

GOVERNMENT DIRECTIVES CONCERNING BANKS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of State (Finance), who seems to want to defend the banks, that considering the Government has decided to trust the banks and is using persuasion instead of legislation, asking financial institutions to adhere to a reasonable, charge-free basic services policy, and my question is this: When does the Minister intend to bring in a policy with teeth? Today we heard Toronto-Dominion thumbed its nose at the Minister and the Government and said it would not conform. What is the Minister going to do to make the banks fall in line with the Government's directives?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we had five problems. First, the lack of information about existing charges. In this respect, we went beyond what the Committee recommended.

Second, we had the lack of notice of charge increases. We took action in this respect.

Three more points: We have made arrangements to ensure the provision of basic banking services. That is something the Committee asked for. We did it. We also got rid of unacceptable charges. The committe asked for that as well. We also put in place a complaints procedure. That is in the Bank Act.

We acted on all the things the Committee asked for. We even went beyond that.

[English]

VOLUNTARY COMPLIANCE—PROTECTION OF CONSUMERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Government proposes voluntary compliance, that is, leaving it up to the banks. That is the position of the Government. On the other hand we have the New Democrats who said this morning the option was to nationalize the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a lie. That is a lie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: That is exactly what he said.

Mr. Rodriguez: I never said that. That is a lie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has the floor, but I would point out that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, is more than upset—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: —about the preamble it might be helpful if the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier thought through his preamble and put it in such a way that it would not cause as much a fuss.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: But he stated that this morning, Mr. Speaker. He is the one who said a few minutes ago that they always follow Party lines. That is in their handbook.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: Here we have the Government with voluntary compliance. Here we have the socialists and we will all get nationalized. Will the Minister take the middle of the road, reasonable Liberal position, and legislate consumer protection into the Bank Act so that Canadians are protected from now on?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry to hear this lovers' quarrel between the two colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity, was a part of the standing committee which recommended voluntary compliance, and only if voluntary compliance could not be arrived at should there be legislation. We arrived at voluntary compliance. We are in total consistency with the Hon. Member for Trinity. We believe that we have taken the middle course. We have taken the responsible course and we are going to monitor what we have done.

INDUSTRY

MASSEY COMBINES—REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF TECHNOLOGY IN CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Two and a half years ago Massey Ferguson, now the Varity Corporation, was bailed out by this Government through Massey Combines being spun off and a debt of $207 million being lost to Varity Corporation as a result. Now with Massey Combines bankrupt, Varity in the United States is buying back the conventional combine technology.

• (1500)

I want to ask the Minister if, to express concern about keeping this technology in Canada, his Government will act to see to it that this combines technology is kept in this country in production for Brantford workers so that there is a future for them and their company.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, yes, the Government is concerned not only about the technology that is involved in this unfortunate situation which was brought about for reasons with which most of us are very familiar, but we have three main concerns. The first of course is for the workers of the Brantford facility. The second is for the farmers who require parts and tooling for the existing equipment, and finally there is the concern about the technology.

In terms of the technology, there are two types of technologies. One is the conventional technology which is now transferred to the United States, as the Hon. Member rightly states, but in return we have a guarantee that Canadian farmers will have access to parts and replacement systems they need for their existing combines. The technology that was paid for and developed by Canadians with the assistance of the Canadian Government will stay in Canada and indeed has been transferred to Vicon Corporation in Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Hon. Member for a very short supplementary question and that will close off Question Period.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the City of Brantford has asked the federal Government at least to seek a delay in court approval of this corporate shell game. Will the Government request the three-month delay for which the City Council of Brantford has asked, for the sake of Massey Combines workers and pensioners?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I have told the Hon. Member that the dossier is at the very top of the desks of the Ministers who have jurisdiction in this area, in both the federal and provincial Governments. As the Hon. Members know, the workers are uppermost in our minds as we look at the pension rights that have been earned, and all of the facilities and the programs of the federal Government have been mobilized to ensure that the workers' rights and their particular interests are being protected in this case.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise the House that, as Hon. Members know, there is an order that the House will adjourn at three, and I want to make it clear that I have received several points of order and questions of privilege. With the co-operation of Hon. Members I will defer hearing those applications until Monday. However, there is one Hon. Member who cannot be here on Monday, and I have indicated to that Hon. Member that I will hear the application at another time. All of those matters will be taken into account.

Before we adjourn, I think it is appropriate to hear a point of order on some matters between the Parties.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Government House Leader to tell us what business he is planning to bring before the House of Commons early next week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise that on Monday and Tuesday of next week we will continue the debate on the free trade Bill.

I want to indicate to the House that there have been the usual consultations between the Parties, and because an agreement could not be reached under the provisions of Standing Orders 115 and 116 in respect to proceedings at the second reading stage of Bill C-130, the free trade Bill, I will be proposing a motion during Government Orders on Monday to allot one additional day for the consideration of and disposal of the proceedings at that stage.

I want to wish everyone a safe journey home and a happy Canada Day.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, to continue on the subject of the business of the House, I would like to ask the Minister, the Government Deputy House Leader, to tell us what his response is to our offer to co-operate on time allocation for Bill C-72, the Official Languages Bill. That offer is now supported by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), and since it was made over three-quarters of an hour ago, perhaps the Minister has had time to think about it. He has shown us he can move for time allocation. He just did so with the free trade agreement Bill. Would he be prepared to do so on Bill C-72? In that case, he would have the Opposition's consent to limit debate.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with the traditions of consultations between House Leaders, those are consultations which we will have at the appropriate time, and I will be glad to get back to my hon. friend.

Business of the House

Mr. Speaker: It being three o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 23, 1988, this House stands adjourned until Monday, July 4, 1988, at eleven o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR INDEX TO BILL C-139

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on June 30, 1988, the Government tabled Bill C-139, an Act to amend the Income Tax Act, the Canada Pension Plan, the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements and Federal-Post Secondary Education and Health Contributions Act, 1977, and certain related Acts, a brick of some 500 pages.

I find that not only is it complex and difficult but, to make matters worse, the Government did not append an index to this Bill. For those of us who are not specialists in this field, it is next to impossible to read the Bill. I know that members of the Government sometimes read Bills, and that sometimes Ministers use Bills to inform us as to what is in them. However, I wonder if you, Mr. Speaker, having read this Bill, found it easy to read such a Bill without an index.

In days gone by, members of the Conservative Party would have given hell to the Liberals if we so much as came in with a Bill that did not have an index in it, a Bill one third the size of this Bill. As a matter of fact, the Government has the habit of putting in an index. That is what it did with respect to Bill C-72, the official languages Bill. In this Bill of 500 pages, which is enough to raise oneself up by an inch and a half, at least, to give one some extra height, there is nothing in here that allows—

Mr. McDermid: Tear it up.

Mr. Gauthier: Try to tear it up. We cannot tear this up, Mr. Speaker. We cannot even read it because there is no index.

I ask the Government to ask its specialists in the next few days to give us an index to this Bill so that we can explain it, read it properly, assess it properly and possibly comment on it intelligently, which is more than the Government can do.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) indicated to me last week his unhappiness with this particular Bill, Bill C-139.

I want to advise Hon. Members that I have looked through it, but I have not read all of it. I will now hear the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) on the matter.

• (1110)

Mr. Lewis: I do not remember any income tax legislation as progressive from the previous Liberal administration. Second, I do not remember any indexes.

I will make inquiries to see if it is possible to prepare an index, if one is not already in existence, and report back to my hon. friend and the House.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps on that the matter could rest, at least for a while. The Government is probably procedurally sound in presenting the Bill. However, there is something to be said for the fact that when Bills are introduced, especially of such complexity, those of us who have had to practice in the field of income tax law know that even with indexes it is not easy to find one's way through those Bills. I am pleased that the Hon. Minister of State has indicated that perhaps he can find some way to accommodate the Hon. Member, although I believe the Government is probably within the rules procedurally.

Mr. Lewis: Since this matter has been raised, Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that there is a bit of a jam-up in printing, that there is an index being prepared and it should be available very soon.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for raising the matter, and I thank the Minister of State for responding so expeditiously to the wishes, I am sure, of all Members.

Motions

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

AGREEMENT TO ALLOT TIME ON BILL C-72

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that there have been discussions among the Parties. I thank my colleagues opposite for their assistance. Under the provisions of Standing Order 115, I wish to state that the representatives of all Parties have reached an agreement with regard to a proposed allotment of time for the disposition of report and third reading stages of Bill C-72, an Act respecting the Status and use of the Official Languages of Canada.

I therefore move:

That, in relation to Bill C-72, an Act respecting the Status and use of the Official Languages of Canada, one day shall be allotted to the consideration of the report stage and two hours to the consideration of the third reading stage of the Bill, and

That fifteen minutes before the end of the sitting day allotted to the report stage consideration, and the two hours allotted to the third reading consideration of the said Bill, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stages of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stewart: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Mr. Stewart: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Lewis: I wish to reiterate my appreciation for the expeditious manner in which this was handled by the opposition Parties. I want to advise the House that the report stage of Bill C-72 will be on Wednesday afternoon of this week, and that we will call third reading on Thursday morning of this week.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition which is signed by citizens of Saint John, New Brunswick, and a number of adjoining towns and townships. The petition has been certified correct as to form and content. It indicates that when the issue of such fundamental importance to the future of Canada as the proposed trade pact with the United States of America comes before Parliament, it is the opinion of the petitioners that the people of Canada should be permitted an opportunity to vote to accept or reject such a trade pact before it is put into force.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. The first petition deals with the trade deal between Canada and the United States. It points out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had no mandate to negotiate this deal, that it would reduce Canada's ability to plan economic, social, and cultural programs, and that it would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, the petitioners call for a national debate on the trade deal, and that this debate result in a national general election before the agreement comes into effect.

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS OVER GOOSE BAY, LABRADOR

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the second petition deals with low-level flight training of pilots of NATO at the Canadian Forces Base at Goose Bay, Labrador. The petition points out that it disrupts the way of life of the native people, that hunting, fishing, tourism, and mining can provide more stable, healthy, and peaceful employment than this type of training, and that this training is provocative in terms of flying under radar in eastern Europe, and therefore endangers world peace.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ends all low-level flight training at the Goose Bay Canadian Forces Base.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present four petitions signed by residents of the cities of Winnipeg and Brandon, and towns and villages including Dugald, Selkirk, and Seven Sisters.

The petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The petitioners state that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege and the responsibility to present a petition signed by residents of Toronto, Ontario. The petitioners point out that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs that we need. Furthermore, this deal would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

The petitioners call for an election in order that the people of Canada can decide once and for all whether or not they want to enter such a deal.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a number of Canadians from British Columbia to Halifax, and many other parts of the country in between, who are concerned that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States. The petitioners are concerned with the threat to Canadian sovereignty in the trade negotiations. They believe that the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the petitioners pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to submit a petition signed by a number of residents of Quebec and my Ottawa-Centre constituency who also believe the trade agreement between Canada and the United States creates a situation in which Canada would lack the policy freedom to determine its own economic future. They believe that hundreds of thousands of jobs are jeopardized by the trade agreement and they call upon Parliament to dissolve and give Canadians the opportunity to determine the country's economic future in a general election.

[English]

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have the responsibility to register with you a petition that comes from Toronto, Scarborough West and surrounding municipalities. According to Standing Order 106, the attached petition is certified correct. There is also a translation in this petition in Chinese, so the signatories certainly did understand everything that they were signing. They feel very strongly that this Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, and that the Reagan trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan an economic, social and cultural program.

It would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base, and for these reasons they would like Parliament to dissolve and have a general election.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is a holiday in the United States—Independence Day—and I am pleased to table petitions calling upon the Government to withdraw its Bill and cancel its agreement with Mr. Reagan.

The petitioners humbly declare that the Mulroney Government has sold Canada out without obtaining anything in return; Canadian industries are not always protected against American trade laws; the United States got everything it wanted in every important sector, including agriculture, energy, automobile trade, financial services and investment; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; and the Conservative Government has not made provision for any retraining assistance for Canadian workers.

The petitioners therefore humbly call upon Parliament to censure the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and the duty to table a petition signed by 228 residents of St. Hyacinthe, Sorel, Longueuil and Mont St. Hilaire. These 228 petitions are added to the previous ones tabled in the House, making a total of 33,168 petitions.

The highway safety campaign continues because the petitioners hope that car manufacturers will soon incorporate their request in the production of future cars. Since 1974, the highway safety regulations allowed the installation of air bags for drivers of passenger cars in the belief that this device would reduce the number of serious injuries on the road. For these reasons the petitioners humbly ask Parliament to order car manufacturers to install air bags in the front seats of cars and to install adjustable seat-belts with shoulder straps for rear-seat passengers.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition on behalf of a number of citizens of Alberta—Edmonton, Fort McMurray, Calgary, St. Albert, Leduc, Spruce Grove, Edson—who call upon Parliament to dissolve and to allow the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. They point out that the free trade agreement did not give Canadians what they were told they could get and that the Government did not have a mandate to proceed with this agreement.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of the Province of Saskatchewan who, in response to the proposed trade legislation, petition this House with regard to the sell-out of Canadian natural resources in the oil and gas area, agriculture, trade, financial services and investment.

They ask the House to denounce the Government for signing the Reagan trade agreement. This petition is presented on behalf of some 30 to 40 residents on behalf of the Province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions here from constituents of mine concerning the Government's proposed trade agreement with the United States. My constituents object to the devastation that is going to be caused to Canadian agriculture and the energy sector. They complain about the one-sided nature of this agreement whereby the United States will gain much and Canada stands to gain practically nothing and, in fact, lose a great deal. I would submit this to the House for its consideration.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions here, one from people of Ontario in the Brampton area, Mississauga and Bramalea, who petition Parliament against the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. They feel that Canada has certainly received the worst side of this deal, particularly in the areas of agriculture, in energy, in trade and financial services, in the areas of investment, and that this will hurt Canadian jobs, particularly in the area of energy where Canadians have spent a lot of money developing hydroelectric power in this country. Now Americans can buy energy from us at the same price Canadians will have to pay for it at a time when the Americans have no investment in the industry at all. This is totally unfair for Canadians.

These people from British Columbia and Ontario petition Parliament to reject the Conservative trade deal.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF TEN-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is also my duty to present petitions signed by residents of certain communities in New Brunswick including Saint-Antoine, Saint-Paul, Notre-Dame, Sainte-Marie, Saint-Louis, Saint-Edouard, Cocagne, Sainte-Anne and Côte Sainte-Anne.

The petitioners deplore the dicision of the federal Department of Employment and Immigration to increase the qualifying period for unemployment insurance from 10 weeks to 16 weeks and they deplore the fact that the Government has failed to consider the situation in rural New Brunswick.

The petitioners therefore humbly call upon Parliament to restore justice to the situation by maintaining the 10—week qualifying period for the rural areas of New Brunswick.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition concerning the Mulroney Government's agreement with the United States. Again, the petitioners are from New Brunswick, particularly Edmundston, Saint-François, Saint-Hilaire and Saint-Jacques.

The petitioners humbly declare that the Mulroney Government has sold Canada out without obtaining anything in return; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; and the Conservative Government has made no provision for retraining assistance for Canadian workers.

They therefore call upon Parliament to censure the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Questions Nos. 318 and 340 could be made Orders for Returns, the returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 318 and 340 be deemed to have been made Orders for Returns?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL OF UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege. First, I want to apprise the House of a word which was used by a Member of this House as recorded in Hansard at page 16989. In a response to a question put to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) made an intervention which I will quote:

> Let's go outside the House and make that accusation, you scumbag, and you are not even an honourable scumbag.

My friend from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell did not appreciate the accusation. I looked up the word in Beauchesne.

An Hon. Member: You had to look it up?

Mr. Gauthier: I had to look it up, yes, because that is not the kind of language I would use.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I looked it up in Webster's Dictionary. Webster says "Scum: impurities that rise to surface of liquid—worthless person—worst—"

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can help the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). It is the opinion of the Chair that that word, if used, is unparliamentary. I don't need any more authority.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want the Member to withdraw that word if it is unparliamentary. The Member knows, just as well as anyone in this House, that such allegations are uncalled for. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell usually backs up his statements in the House. I would like the Member for Brampton—Georgetown to withdraw that uncalled for comment.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I abide by the decision of the Chair and I withdraw the remark.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I have another question of privilege arising from Hansard for Thursday, June 30. On page 16991 in a question I put to the House regarding the—> Voluntary compliance. Consumer protection . . .

and what the Government intended to do about bank charges. I asked the Government and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, the Government proposes voluntary compliance, that is leaving it up to the banks. That is the position of the Government. On the other hand we have the New Democrats who said this morning the option was to nationalize the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

And then the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) said:

> That is a lie. That is a lie.

Mr. Speaker, I do not appreciate being called a liar. I was at the press conference that morning when the Member for Nickel Belt said publicly to the media that one of the options being considered by the NDP was in fact to nationalize the banks.

I also object to the use of such unparliamentary words as "lie" in reference to a Member in this House.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in light of the comments which the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) made when he put his question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), I was properly incensed because the nationalization of the Toronto-Dominion Bank was not an option that I had put forward at the press conference.

An Hon. Member: Which bank was it?

Mr. Rodriguez: I was asked by the chairman of the press conference whether I thought the Toronto-Dominion Bank should be nationalized because it stayed out of the agreement, not to go along with the Government's proposals. I said, "No, that was not an option at this time". If you look at the transcript of the press conference, that is exactly what you will see, Mr. Speaker. I was incensed by the preamble of the question put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier when he said, as recorded at page 16991 of Hansard for Thursday, June 30:

> On the other hand we have the New Democrats who said this morning the option was to nationalize the Toronto-Dominion Bank.

That is not true, Mr. Speaker. I know that it is not parliamentary to use the word "lie" in this House. Maybe it is too blunt a word to use to describe something that is not the truth. I will withdraw the word lie and say that the Member uttered a terminological inexactitude.

Mr. Speaker: Sir Winston Churchill managed to withdraw by using that exact term and I suppose that is a precedent. In the opinion of the Chair, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has withdrawn and has done so in a Churchillian manner.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Time Allocation

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-130

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill; and that, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on the above mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

He said: If you find the motion to be in order, I would like to make a few remarks.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to accept the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in case there had been some request for debate, I prepared a few remarks that I would like to put on the record now.

I think it is fair to say that the subject of free trade has been in the public domain for some time. The issue has been studied by two parliamentary committees which held extensive hearings and travelled across Canada. I do not think in my meagre experience in this House there has been any issue that has so consistently dominated the period for Standing Order 21, the Question Period, Opposition Days, and speeches on various Bills. The issue of free trade has very definitely been in the public and in the parliamentary forum. I would say that this time allocation debate and motion is not about five days debate on Bill C-130, it is about the conclusion of the debate on the issue of free trade.

We on the government side, Madam Speaker, feel it is time to decide. I would point out that the by the time we are finished debating this Bill we will have had four long days—excessively long days because we are in a period of extended hours—and one short day. When we originally discussed this matter with counterparts opposite, the Opposition House Leaders, we offered three long days and two short days under the usual formula of time. We did that with a view to receiving a counter-offer. At no time did we receive a counter-offer which we could then mull over and come back to the House Leaders, our caucus and Cabinet with. No counter offer was made.

Mr. Cassidy: We are prepared to debate it all summer.

Mr. Lewis: The early reply was procedural tactics which delayed proceedings on anything substantive.

The delays took place from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. every day and at three o'clock we were at Orders of the Day. Those delays in effect curtailed time on debate.

• (1140)

We have delivered on our promise. By the time we debate this today, and we intend to allocate tomorrow to this debate as well—

Mr. Cassidy: Your promise was not to bring in free trade. That was the Government's promise.

Mr. Lewis: We have delivered on our promise.

Mr. Cassidy: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was against it in 1983.

Mr. Lewis: I see the ex-Leader of the NDP in the provincial legislature here today. I would hope that he would see fit to enter into the debate today and to participate during the time allocated.

Because my time is limited to 10 minutes and I may not have an opportunity to participate in the debate, I want to say something about the issue of free trade, if I may. There are two points that I want to make, and they are connected to why we have to decide this now. Our opponents are wrapping themselves in the flag and declaring that we have sold out our sovereignty. That is nonsense. Years after the creation of the European Common Market, there is still a Spain, a United Kingdom, a Germany and an Italy.

Those opposite call themselves nationalists and say that they are the only true Canadians. The Canadians who are going to build a stronger Canada, the Canadians who have some faith in the future, are the Canadians who are in favour of this Bill. We do not have to take a back seat to anyone when it comes to sovereignty because our record is full of initiatives which establish our sovereignty as a country.

I am talking about the multiculturalism Bill which is at report stage, I am talking about the Official Languages Act, Bill C-72. We announced a water policy. We have an Environmental Protection Act which was passed and given Royal Assent. The Atlantic Opportunities Agency, the Western Diversification Fund, the National Defence White Paper and the construction of an Arctic-class ice-breaker are on the record.

This Government awarded for the first time the contract to monitor our North Warning System to a Canadian firm. We took it away from the Americans who had it for 30 years under previous Liberal administrations. That is sovereignty. Sovereignty means being able to look after yourself. It means believing it and demonstrating it. Strong countries execute international agreements with other countries. Weak countries are afraid.

That brings me to the comments of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said that this agreement is a declaration of confidence in ourselves, of confidence in our ability to compete with the best in the world, of confidence in our ability to adapt in a tough and demanding international environment.

I would ask my friends what is the concept of Canada that they have. Big Canada welcomes the challenges and the opportunities of the free trade agreement. Small Canada is afraid. There is small Canada right over there. Big Canada says we can compete with the Americans and small Canada has a massive inferiority complex. Big Canada says we can coexist with our neighbours and small Canada wraps itself in the flag and says it is afraid. Big Canada looks to the free trade agreement as a basis for prosperity and little Canada has no alternative.

This is an agreement for the 21st century. It is time our industries started to grow from a Canadian base, to encourage new investment and jobs, to create a more stable and certain framework between these two great countries. The opposition Parties have battled against the concept of free trade from day one. Nothing we can do in this debate will change their minds. They represent the status quo. There they are, the Parties of the status quo, afraid of the 21st century, afraid to compete, afraid.

I say in closing that we intend to look to the future with Bill C-130. We intend to execute an agreement with our biggest trading partner which will mean prosperity, opportunity and jobs for Canadians. I suggest that we get on with the debate, close it off and send the matter to committee so that we can pass this Bill which will mean increased prosperity and opportunity for all Canadians.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Madam Speaker, we have all just returned from celebrating July 1. I think it is important to note that this is an important day in the history of Canada. We all recognize the disappearance of one of the most useful and valuable institutions that has helped build Canada over the last 121 years, and that is the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada. It has disappeared. It has been replaced by the Republican Party of the North.

We now have in Canada a Government that is headed by someone who ran a branch plant. He now has a branch plant Party. He wants to turn Canada into a branch plant country. The Progressive Conservative Party, the Party of John A. Macdonald, the Party that used to stand for Canadians' opportunity to make choices of their own, that used to use the instruments of Government as an effective way to build a nation, has now disappeared into the branch plant Republican Party of North America.

The Progressive Conservative Party which used to stand for the rights of Parliament, for the concept of open debate, for the concept of free dialogue and for the opportunity for Canadians to be heard, has also disappeared and been replaced with a Party that simply uses its majority in a tyrannical fashion to suppress debate, to close off dialogue and to ensure that Canadians will not have an opportunity to be heard. I am here partly to lament the passing of that institution, because it did represent something that was important. I disagreed with its policies, but at least it had Canadians roots and Canadian outlooks and it respected Parliament.

Now that that institution has disappeared and we have this Republican Party of the North appearing in the House, we have to recognize that the only way to deal with it is simply to say that it is an alien force with a series of alien ideas and a very alien attitude. The real victim is the place in which we stand today, our own Parliament. The Republican Party of the North does not recognize the value of a parliamentary system. It does not recognize the opportunity that Canadians must have for a proper debate.

The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), the Government House Leader, has tried to perpetuate the myth that there have been all kinds of opportunity for debate. Let us look at the record. A committee in the summer of 1985 looked at two issues, the star wars issue and the concept of free trade. The recommendations it brought to the House were all rejected by the Government. Not one was adopted. The primary recommendation was that there should be a parliamentary debate in the House of Commons to establish a mandate for the Government to negotiate a trade deal in order to ensure that before the negotiations even began, there would be the opportunity for Canadians to know what they were getting into. That recommendation was rejected by the Government.

The first committee was thrown in the ashcan in typical fashion. The second committee to which the Government House Leader referred was established just before Christmas before it had the final agreement. It did not even have the details of the agreement. It did not know what kind of arrangements were going to be made.

We have to recognize that there is a major difference between the concept and the application. A real estate agent might say to me: "I would like to sell you a house," and I would say "I would like to buy a house". However, before I buy it, I look at the contract. I see what interest rates I am paying. I see what the terms of payment will be. I see what the obligations of the buyer and the seller will be. However, this Government does not want us to look at the contract. It does not want us to see what the specific obligations, rights and duties will be.

The Government is saying that this is just a debate about the concept of free trade, a debate about the concept of motherhood, fatherhood or sisterhood. The fact is that we have to see what the deal is. No Parliament has yet had the opportunity to look specifically at the deal that is now on the table.

The Government is giving us a couple of days to have a few rounds at it. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), Canada's answer to illiteracy, is now saying that he will not even allow the committee itself to cross the country to ensure that Canadians from New Brunswick to British Columbia, Canadians who will be directly affected, will have the opportunity to be heard.

When I say "the Republican Party of the North", there can be no clearer evidence of that than the total rejection of parliamentary procedure which we see in front of us today. No committee has had an opportunity to look at this agreement. Parliament is being short-changed in its attempts to debate this issue. Already we have the threat of the Government using its majority to simply ride roughshod over the right of Canadians to have their case heard and representations made on their behalf.

The Government is trying to defend the indefensible. It is trying to put forward a case that somehow or other a Bill that goes to the very heart of this country can be dismissed as a peripheral or marginal matter. We have spent more time in this House debating a sales tax on dog food than the Government will allow us to debate this country's future. That is the hard reality. We can cite Bill after Bill where this Parliament has had a fair opportunity to be heard. Members have had a fair opportunity to put forward the case for their constituents region by region, community by community. Yet an omnibus Bill which will affect 28 Acts of Parliament covering energy, investment, agriculture, natural resources, indeed every part of Canada, will not be debated because there is insufficient time for Members to make their case. That is an incredible example of the kind of arrogance and indifference the Government shows toward the parliamentary process.

There is no way it can be sugar coated. There is no way the Government can create the big lie that there has been a full opportunity to be heard. I defy any member of the Conservative Party to stand up and tell us how much time we have spent in debate on the hundreds of pages of the Bill now before this House. I will tell them. Less than two days. That is the sum total of time allocated for debate on a document affecting the future of this country.

I think members of the Conservative Party should be well aware of the latest poll published on Friday which shows that since they announced this initiative two and a half years ago, when they had 70 per cent in support, their support has dropped to a minority. With each week and month that goes by they lose support. This latest poll shows the opposition are now in the majority and that is why we have closure. They know the longer this Bill is debated, the more opportunity Canadians will have to see what is in it and the quicker the Conservative's case will be lost.

I remind the House that two and a half years ago, when the Government put forward its original proposal, we saw a cabinet document on the communications strategy. That document said the only way to still this deal is not to tell Canadians what is in it. The only way Conservatives could make sure of their case was to hide the real implications.

Mr. Kempling: Produce the document.

Mr. Axworthy: I have the document and I will table it. I will be glad to table it. I hope the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) will read it. The document said that the more Canadians know about the deal, the more opposition there will be. They were right.

The Government is using the traditions of this House in its attempt to sell a bad deal which it knows cannot stand up to the light of public exposure. We know once this Bill is in committee there will be a further effort to steamroll over the rights of Parliament and deny Canadians the right to be heard. We have seen it before in committee and we will see it again.

We say regardless of the merits of the issue, which must be debated, what must be respected are the rights of this institution. Yet the Conservative Party of Canada is trampling on those rights. That is why there is no longer a Progressive Conservative Party. They are acting as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has always acted, as a branch plant of the U.S. Republican Party.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, my grandfather, when he was 22, I think, joined the Conservative Party because he saw it then as a party of decency and honesty, a party that would stand up for the rights of this country. He saw it as a Party that believed in the independence of this country, one that could make its way in this world on its own, with pride, self respect and a sense of confidence. If he were alive today this would be a tragic day for him.

To try to convince me to become a Conservative, he looked at the pipeline debate in 1956 and the Liberal Party. He said that is the kind of Party that will do this sort of thing to this country. It will sell us out to the Americans; it will run roughshod over the rights of Parliament. The Conservative Party, he said to me, and I remember it very clearly, would never do that to the rights of Parliament and the rights of the people of Canada. Yet here today we have the final act in a shameful set of episodes which have marked this Bill's passage, this accord's development, this concept's progress throughout the last two and a half to three years. It is shameful.

The Government is making a complete U-turn with respect to the commitments it made before the election. It is shamefully ignoring the recommendations of committees that looked at this issue in detail. It is shamefully and desperately trying to keep every possible piece of information hidden from the public. It is shamefully running roughshod over the rules of Parliament to extend this sitting just so it can please its friends in Washington.

Mr. Rodriguez: Its bosses.

Mr. Langdon: Perhaps, but I think the Conservatives have taken the position they have not because they have been ordered to, but because they have lost their confidence in this country. Why? For reasons that, fortunately, the opposition Parties have not been able to follow along with.

We see a shameful, disgraceful performance which has wiped out, at each stage throughout this discussion, the democratic rights of the people of Canada. This is the most anti-democratic process which I, as an economic historian, have seen take place in this country since it was formed 121 years ago. This anti-democratic process now meets its culmination in the decision that, after two and one half days of debate on the 27 different Bills which are amended by this piece of legislation, the Government has decided it has had enough.

I can understand why the Government has had enough, because it is losing the debate and being hurt by it. The consequence, as seen in the polls, is that the overwhelming position of support with which the Government started out has shrunk to a minority of Canadians, which minority, I predict, will shrink further and further as people find out more and more about the ridiculous sell-out which the Government is now forced into by this motion. We cannot stop it. You cannot stop a raging mad elephant when it is charging.

We must recognize, however, that this is what is behind the laugh. The Government decided it would try the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), that he would get the country laughing so much that it would forget what was happening to it, that the country would laugh itself into dependence, laugh itself into becoming a colony. It did not work. Instead, I predict that the Minister will laugh himself into political oblivion with statements such as that he had not even read what he was responsible for trying to tell the nation as being for its very best, for its very future.

It is a sad sell-out, a sell-out which cannot be defended by the weak and ridiculous arguments of the Deputy House Leader who has tried to tell us a set of things, only one of which is true. He said that big Canada is in favour of this Bill and small Canada is against it. Well, I am pleased and proud to be able to speak for the small people of this country, for the small towns, and for the small cities. These are the people who stand for the true values of this country and have stood for them since Borden had to fight Laurier. They have stood for them throughout the course of our history and will stand for them in the future. This fight is not finished. This fight is just moving into its next phase and it will ultimately demolish the Government rather than demolishing this country.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Madam Speaker, unfortunately, in opening this debate or sharing my comments with you, I must, like you and, I assume, all the other persons present here today, conclude that the reaction of our opponents, the opponents of the Free Trade Agreement and of prosperity for Canada, has not been very original and has provided few surprises today. I cannot say we are really surprised by what we have just heard from the representative of the Liberal Party of Canada, and even less by what the New Democratic Party's representative has said. There was very little originality in their statements.

[English]

I was a bit amused by the comments of my two colleagues who preceded me. The Member from the Liberal Party was full of secret documents. For a while I thought he would get out his secret decoder ring and give us an idea of what is really in those documents. As for the NDP, I guess the attitude has not changed. The Member only repeated today what they said from the very beginning, that they would fight this concept in any way imaginable and would use every tactic in the book to do so. That is what the NDP is on the record as saying, so this was really no surprise today.

When my hon. colleague, the Deputy House Leader, said that those who think we should have a small Canada are opposed to the trade agreement, he was referring to people like those within the Liberal and New Democratic Parties who would rather have a small Canada, a Canada which has no ambition and which does not want to prosper. That, and nothing else, is what he was referring to. We very proudly represent in this House all Canadians from all parts of Canada.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, to understand fully the meaning of our debate, I think it would be worth taking at least a few minutes to see exactly what is involved, and it cannot be pointed out too often that Canada is an exporting country. In referring to this debate and the Free Trade Agreement, this basic fact must be borne in mind. Canada is probably the country whose gross domestic product depends most on its exports. That means Canada is probably the country that depends most on its exports to put bread and butter on the table. That, in essence, is Canada. And everyone agrees that this is so; even my colleagues in the federal Liberal Party and my colleague in the New Democratic Party agree. The fact is that more than one of every three jobs in Canada depends on exports.

Plainly the issue we are debating today is by no means an insignificant one for us, for our country. That is clear. If more than one Canadian in three depends on exports for their jobs, then this question is of the utmost importance. It is a question of the utmost importance when you look at our relations with the United States, because 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States. Around 23 per cent of our gross domestic product here in Canada depends on our trade with the United States. That is what we are talking about today. So it is a question of the utmost importance.

Madam Speaker, the three federal political Parties agree on the fact that Canada is an exporting country, and that it must remain an exporting country. The divergence of opinion comes when we discuss the means that must be employed to try to maintain our existing export capacity.

In recent years there has been an important change of perspective, I think, a change that must be taken into account and that must be explained more clearly, so that the people of Canada can understand their government's motivation. I am referring here to our attitude, if you like, our political will, our approach to trade, from the Second World War to roughly the 1980s. During that period, that is to say since World War II, there has been an intensification of the economies of Canada and the United States, which was accelerated by the war effort.

From that time to the 1980s, Canada's perspective on its trade relations was always more or less the same. Our intention, our will, were always directed toward being able to diversify our trade relations, because we realized that we were very dependent on a single market, that of the United States. To give you an idea of the form this took, in 1960 Prime Minister Diefenbaker wanted to diversify our trade relations toward Great Britain, arguing that we should not put all our eggs in one basket. That was the political thinking of the day. In 1976, the Trudeau government signed a general agreement with the European Economic Community, with about the same aim in view as Mr. Diefenbaker had had: to diversify our trade relations toward partners other than the United States, because we were largely dependent, and at the time thought to be too dependent, on that one market.

In 1980 the so-called third option was formulated, that is to say, an attempt to step up trade relations, this time with the developing countries, with, as always, the additional objective of making ourselves less dependent on the American market.

Madam Speaker, the great change occurred in the early years of this decade, particularly after the recession. The approach changed, and instead of having a continental vision of its trade, Canada has slowly but surely developed a more global vision of its policy and international trade.

The first sign of change occurred in 1982, when a Senate Committee, mandated in 1974 to study our relations with the United States, published a report which I can only assume my Liberal colleagues know well, since it was they who published it in 1982. This report recommended that the government of the day sign a free trade agreement with the United States.

So this is not a new proposal. And when my colleague from Winnipeg tells us that he has not studied the report, and that this is a question that has simply appeared from nowhere, and that we are going into it with our eyes closed—well, then I think there is quite a gap between that and the facts, Madam Speaker. Already in 1982 there was a Senate Committee, chaired by a Liberal Senator, recommending unanimously that we sign a free trade agreement with the United States.

And what did the Liberal government of the day do? In 1983 it issued a discussion paper on that very topic, Canada's trade relations. Again in 1983, in one of its Speeches from the Throne, the Liberal government of the day announced its intention of undertaking sectoral negatiations, Madam Speaker. What a surprise! Already, in 1983—wait for it, I'm getting there—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Charest: —I'm getting there. Already, in 1983, Madam Speaker, let's see what came of those sectoral negotiations, since my Liberal friends are wondering.

In a speech made in Washington on October 11, 1985, a speech given by none other than the Honourable Marc Lalonde, a Cabinet Minister in the same Liberal government I referred to a minute ago, Mr. Lalonde explained why the sectoral negotiations had not been successful: First of all he explained in his speech, which I have here, Madam Speaker, that because of the very nature of the negotiations, it was very difficult to reach an agreement, because one sector was connected to the next. The second reason, he said, was that basically the negotiations had never really got off the ground. This second reason reflects the fact that there was little political will on either side of the border in favour of a deal of this kind. So those were the reasons given by Marc Lalonde, Minister of Finance at the time, to explain why the federal Liberals' initiative had failed.

Next stage: in 1985, the Prime Minister and the President of the United States met at the Irish Summit and mandated their respective Trade Ministers to undertake consultations on the possibility of reaching an agreement.

At that point, Canada's Minister of International Trade did an extensive tour throughout the country to find out from business people and all the other interested groups what they thought about free trade and any other proposals they wanted to discuss. In 1985, Madam Speaker! In the summer of 1985, an initial Parliamentary Committee was set up to study the question. In the fall of 1985, more presicely in the month of September, that Parliamentary Committee submitted its report, recommending the signing of the free trade agreement. The two Ministers, American and Canadian, submitted their reports to their respective Heads of Government, the Prime Minister and the President, recommending that they undertake negotiations with a view to signing a free trade agreement. But the final touch was undoubtedly the publication of the Macdonald Commission report, on September 5, 1985. This Commission was chaired by a former Liberal Finance Minister, Donald Macdonald, who recommended unequivocally that the Canadian government undertake negotiations to reach an agreement on free trade with the United States.

I will point out in passing that Mr. Macdonald, your former Liberal Minister of Finance, today supports the free trade agreement that we are recommending to the country.

So no one can say now that this came out of nowhere. That's crazy! It's poking fun at the people of Canada. Basically that's what you're doing today. You're making fun of the people of Canada and denying they have any brains, when you try to make out that they haven't been consulted about this. But this isn't the first time, either.

Madam Speaker, our colleagues tell us today that they haven't been consulted and so on. Fine. Then can the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada (Mr. Turner) tell us to what extent he had consulted the people of Canada when he got up in this House the day the Agreement was signed to say he would tear it up? An Agreement supported by Mr. Bourassa, Premier of Quebec, Mr. McKenna, Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. Parizeau of Quebec, the Consumers' Association of Canada?

Madam Speaker, ordinary common sense means that the people of Canada will accept and welcome this Agreement, because Canada's economic future depends on it.

Madam Speaker, I see my time is already up. May I request the unanimous consent of the House so that I may complete my comments?

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member has spoken over his time.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs Champagne): On a point of order, the Honourable Minister of State for Youth and Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport.

Mr. Charest: At the moment my colleague from Prince Albert rose to point out that my time was up, I had already asked the House for unanimous consent to my completing my remarks.

As you see, the Opposition refuses to hear me. They don't want to hear what I have to say. I regret that very much. You are afraid to hear what we have to say.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Madam Speaker, I oppose this motion and I must begin by saying that it is shocking to see a Minister of the Crown treating a question of such great importance to our country with such lightness and frivolity.

We have in front of us the most important issue on which any Parliament in our entire history has had to make a decision. And all we get from these Ministers are weak jokes, instead of a debate on the substance of the question before us. And that question is: should we limit to only one more day debate on second reading of Bill C-130?

Madam Speaker, the Minister who just spoke, and the Acting Parliamentary House Leader, spoke of question periods, they spoke of committee studies, they spoke of discussions with the public, but there is a large hole in their argument because none of this public consultation, none of these Royal Commissions, none of these Senate Committees, none of these Committees, none of these discussions, dealt with bill C-130 or, more importantly still, with the Mulroney-Reagan Free Trade Agreement which the Bill attempts to bring into effect.

[English]

The Deputy Government House Leader and the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) have given us a long catalogue of events at which time they allege there was discussion of the free trade deal with the United States, entered into by the Conservative Government.

I suggest that there is a fundamental flaw in that argument. None of those committee hearings, none of those royal commissions, none of those exchanges in Question Period dealt in any way, shape or form, in a parliamentary sense, with the deal signed by the Conservative Government and the Government of Ronald Reagan. Specifically, they did not deal in any formal, parliamentary way with Bill C-130. It is a Bill designed to change 28 Acts of Parliament in order to make that trade deal with the United States come into effect.

What the Government is saying is that not only does it have no respect for the sovereignty and independence of the country, but at the same time it shows this by saying that it has no respect for the fundamental means of operation of our parliamentary institutions. If it had respect for the parliamentary institutions of the country, and therefore for the sovereignty and independence of the country, it would not try to choke off debate on the most important question to come before this House since Confederation after only four or five days of debate.

What does the Government have to fear by allowing the same type of discussion to carry on that the Conservative Party, when it was in opposition, insisted on and received from other Governments on measures far less important, far less serious than the trade deal with the United States? I remember the months and months and months that the Conservative Party took on measures such as the National Transportation Act and the Crow rate, both very important measures, but certainly not as fundamental as this trade deal with the United States. It would not accept this type of limitation. Yet measures of the type I have mentioned, as important as they are and as important as they were, were not as broad-ranging and as fundamental as the Government's trade deal with the United States.

I give you, Madam Speaker, one example of the absolute folly, the foolishness of the Government in trying to choke off debate on second reading of its trade deal with the United States. As yet there has not been presented to the Congress of the United States the American legislation to implement its side of the trade deal. We do not know yet exactly what it will be. We have seen the drafting instructions. But these drafting instructions are subject to negotiation between the Congress and the President. This legislation was promised to the Congress weeks ago but we have not seen it yet. We do not know exactly when it will come forward. We do not know to what extent it will tilt the Government's trade deal with the United States even further in the direction of the United States than the deal does already.

Surely it is the height of folly, a lack of real concern for the well-being of this country to try to proceed with the Bill to implement the trade deal with the United States before we know what this American legislation will state, and before we know how the Congress will react to it. This is exactly the same type of irresponsibility we have seen connected with the Government's approach to its trading relations with the United States from the very moment it came into office.

What we now have from the other side is nothing but a pile of stale jokes. First, just in the last few days we had the Minister who is in charge of this measure saying that he had not even bothered to read the deal all the way through and yet he expected Canadians to accept his salesmanship of this deal. He said that he used to sell vacuum cleaners but he never vacuumed a house. How shameful it is for the Minister for International Trade to deal with the future of the country in the same way he used to deal with vacuum cleaners. This country is more important, no matter what the Conservatives think, than a vacuum cleaner. However, when the next election comes the Conservative Party will be vacuumed up and right out of office.

If the Government really did not fear the reaction of the Canadian public to its legislation, if it really had a vision of a big Canada as distinct from a vision of a small Canada, it would say: "We don't mind that this debate goes on for several more weeks. We will also say that when this debate comes to a natural end we will allow full committee hearings across the country". In so saying this Government would say that it has confidence in itself, in its ideas, including this trade deal that it negotiated with the United States.

By trying to choke off debate at this point the Government is saying to the Canadian people that it lacks confidence in itself and in its ideas. It is saying that it knows the more the idea of the trade deal is studied and discussed and then understood by the Canadian people, the less the Canadian people will like it. This Government is showing its lack of confidence in itself. It is showing its lack of confidence in Canada. When it says, as the Minister says, that it stands for a big Canada, the vision of the Government of a big Canada is one absorbed into the United States so that there will be one big North American country dominated by Washington.

What happened to the vision of Sir John A. Macdonald which was brought forward so gloriously on July 1, 1867? What happened to the vision of successive Conservative Prime Ministers? Mr. Diefenbaker would not have gone for this deal. He would have stood up and said exactly what he thought of the cowardly and fearful Government that has replaced his vision. The current Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) did not do this. He would not have done this.

If we want to look at a non-parliamentary expression of this deal, if that counts as much as discussion and formal decision in Parliament does, then why does the Conservative Party not look at the words of its Leader when he was seeking to head the Party? He said that when it comes to free trade with the United States, it would undermine our sovereignty and he would have none of it now or at any other time. If non-parliamentary discussion counts for the Conservative Party, then let it give full weight to the words of its current Leader when he sought the leadership of his Party and when he seemed to be speaking for all time. We now see how empty those words were, just like everything else he has been saying ever since, just like everything the Conservative Party has been saying.

The Conservative Party does not care about Parliament. In presenting this motion it showed that it does not care about Canada. That is why we should vote against this motion and press the Government to call an election as soon as possible so that it can be shown that while the Conservative Party does not care about Canada, Canadians care about their country. They will get rid of the Government. They will be the ones who will save Canada.

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak on free trade and its significance in Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington. I certainly support the Government's initiative in time allocation.

It is important that people understand the benefits of free trade, the potential it offers for growth, for investment and for jobs. The federal Government sought an agreement that would limit trade harassment. We wanted to end tariffs between our two countries. We wanted an agreement that would govern the important areas of trade and services and government procurement.

From the beginning it was made clear what would not be at issue in the negotiations—our political sovereignty, our unique cultural identity, our social programs, or our commitment to fight regional disparities.

When the federal Government embarked on negotiating freer trade with the U.S. we understood that Canada, and all its regions, depend on trade for our prosperity. We set out to achieve a bilateral agreement with the United States, our largest trading partner, while at the same time pursuing global negotiations and initiatives.

In my view the freer trade agreement negotiated with the United States presents eastern Ontario with its greatest opportunity ever to catch up with other parts of this, our great Province of Ontario, and other manufacturing sectors. Furthermore, it allows us to maintain a share in high quality, high-skilled jobs which young people seek as their future career choices, their future career options.

That is the message I am hearing from business, from professionals and from academics in eastern Ontario. The people who understand what the vocal opponents of free trade do not is that in this modern world there are linkages between trade, technology and investment which hold the key to prosperity—

Mr. Langdon: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. This is a very important debate. Since there is such limited time, it seems to me that it is crucial that the people who take part in this debate actually deal with the subject matter of the motion in front of us, which is not what the Hon. Member is doing. The Hon. Member is not explaining why the Conservatives are cutting off debate.

Mr. McDermid: I rise on the same point of order, Madam Speaker. We have heard speeches from the Opposition today on their opposition to the free trade agreement. That is all we have heard from over there. The odd person has mentioned the debate. We have listened to the Opposition flail away at free trade. The Hon. Member has full rights to speak for free trade which is beneficial to this country.

Mr. Manly: I would like to point out, Madam Speaker, if we did not have this motion before us and allowed a full debate the Hon. Member would be able to speak on Bill C-130. At the present time we are debating a motion to bring in time allocation, and the Hon. Member should be speaking to that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington.

Mr. Vankoughnet: I mentioned earlier that I favoured time allocation because we must move with this important trade legislation to get on with the governing of the country, not the frivolousness the NDP and its social policies. To date, opponents of free trade have fought this initiative not through engaging the federal Government in debate on the merits of what the agreement contains, but by raising the spectre of dangers that do not exist, a process designed to confuse the public.

Thomas d'Aquino, President of the Business Council on National Issues, has characterized those tactics as "intellectual terrorism". The opposition Parties would have the public believe that free trade is a threat to our culture, our social programs, our identity as a distinct people, and will inevitably lead to the loss of thousands of jobs.

This is not the first time that the federal Government has heard such criticism from the opposition Parties. One point that should be stressed is the opponents of free trade are largely those who said that our other policies would doom the nation; that the pursuit of deficit reduction was single-minded cruelty which would cost the country thousands of jobs. We endured that criticism then, and we persevered in our policies because we knew we were right. They said our policies would cost tens of thousands of jobs. We said our policies would create an environment in which tens of thousands of jobs would be created.

Over 1,228,000 jobs have been created since 1984. In my riding of Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington, unemployment is now at its lowest point in over a decade. With such new industries as Goodyear and D. & E. Wood and the multiplier effect that this will have, unemployment will be reduced and new economic activities will be created.

These are the national results of national policies. These are the job creating industries and are not only producing for Canadian markets, but for North American and world markets. The results will be a boon to eastern Ontario, and an opportunity for youth and for jobs in this country.

When people attempt to hold up government legislation as important as Bill C-130, I have no alternative but to support a Government that wants to get on with governing and doing what is right for the people of Canada who want to work.

Under the free trade agreement, for the first time, world-class Ontario businessmen and services will be able to expand and grow as they seize the new opportunities available through this agreement. The new rules governing services and regarding temporary work in the United States will put our service industries and professionals on a level playing field. There is no part of Canada better positioned to seize these opportunities than the border regions of eastern Ontario.

A second sector for opportunity in this area is our manufacturing sector. This agreement will enable the manufacturing sector to grow from its Canadian base, encouraging new investment in world-scale Canadian enterprises. No province has more to gain under free trade than Ontario. Its economy was built on trade with the United States. Today, 90 per cent of Ontario's exports go to the United States. In turn, the United States provides 83 per cent of Ontario's imports.

In addition to the benefits offered by free trade's phase-out of tariffs over 10 years, we stand to gain from the $4 billion U.S. government purchasing market which will now be opened to Ontario firms. This is of particular importance to eastern Ontario. We have sought this opportunity for more than 20 years, and firms, particularly in my riding, are ready and able to take advantage of it.

It should be no surprise then that spokesmen for our manufacturing sector have called this agreement a great agreement for Canada and welcome it with open arms. When I hear the enthusiasm of existing industries and their plans for expansion through a freer trade agreement, I am convinced that the days of eastern Ontario being short-changed in manufacturing and employment opportunities are numbered.

Another opportunity lies in resource industries, both agriculture and forestry. I recognize that some people were worried about free trade posing a threat to the dairy industry. It is not surprising that they were frightened. The critics of free trade were consciously raising that fear. Of course, they were the same people who said our economic program would cause a loss of thousands of jobs. They were wrong about the jobs, and they were wrong about marketing boards. As promised at the outset of the negotiations, the marketing board systems with regulated returns and quota allocation are preserved under the free trade agreement. They were never at risk, except in the minds of people who wanted to scare the farm community. Dairy farmers will continue to enjoy the income stability of long term federal dairy policy which the Government has implemented.

In the forestry sector, industry should benefit from the gradual reduction of tariffs, barriers which have prevented us from processing wood even further prior to export—exporting jobs. That is extremely important for the region, because value added processing creates the potential for more jobs to be created here in Ontario.

Finally, a very important factor in the future development of eastern Ontario is small business development. The federal Government has introduced a variety of policies since 1984 to encourage small business development in Canada. We believe that the free trade agreement will further stimulate this growth. That is not only our opinion. It is the opinion of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. Federation President John Bullock has stated that small business in this country should be excited about the opportunities for greater investment in Canada, terming the agreement a "once in a lifetime opportunity for Canada" which will also help us with greater European and Asian investment.

More important, secure access to the United States market means that future Canadian business growth can take place here in Canada. It means we should at least see an end to the exodus of eastern Ontario firms when wanting to expand, set up shop across the border as a means of getting around U.S. trade barriers. The free trade agreement secures the gains already made, and opens new windows of opportunity for greater growth.

I have outlined why I believe free trade is eastern Ontario's best bet for greater diversification and more growth, and why I support time allocation. I do so because I believe the greatest danger to our Canadian way of life lies not in the prosperity of freer trade, but lies in the property of protectionism, and our inability to afford regional development and social and cultural programs which reflect Canadian values.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I was pleased to hear the Hon. Member who just spoke debate the merits of Bill C-130. I wish that this motion had not been brought in that will limit this debate; that the Hon. Member would have been able to make his case when we are debating Bill C-130, instead of when we are debating this motion which will choke off that debate.

Parliament is a place for speaking, and parliamentary democracy is based upon the right of members of this House to be able to speak out on issues. There is no issue that has been before the Canadian people since Confederation, 121 years ago, that is more fundamental to our future as a nation than this, and yet this Government is choking off debate on this issue after we have had two and a half days of debate on it. It is the most fundamental question facing Canada today, facing us as to the future of our country, the future of our children, our grandchildren and our great grandchildren.

Speaking of great grandchildren, it is a pleasure to have in the gallery today the great grandchild of Oliver J. Wilcox, a member of the Conservative Government of Robert Borden, elected in Essex in 1911, that helped to defeat the Laurier Government on the issue of a trade deal with the United States. Because of his strong feelings, John Wilcox has made a pilgrimage across Canada with specialty licence plates from British Columbia saying "no deal", trying to alert Canadians to the danger of the trade agreement.

This Government wants to choke off that kind of process. It does not want people in Parliament to be speaking about this issue. It does not want the people of Canada to be talking about it. Instead, a strategy paper from the Government said:

> The strategy should rely less on educating the general public than on getting across the message that the trade initiative is a good idea. In other words, a selling job . . . Benign neglect from a majority of Canadians may be the realistic outcome of a well-executed communications plan.

In other words, this Government wants to sell Canadians on the idea of free trade in the same way that the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), who has not read the agreement, said the other day that he used to sell vacuum cleaners and encyclopaedias. They see selling Canada on the issue of free trade as basically on that level. We reject that. We see the whole way in which the Government has dealt with this process as being fundamentally dishonest. The dishonesty began back in 1983 when the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was campaigning to be the Leader of the Conservative Party. He, along with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), were asked what they thought about the idea of a trade agreement with the United States, about free trade. They rejected it. They gave good reasons why it should be rejected.

An Hon. Member: What did the Prime Minister say?

Mr. Manly: The Prime Minister pointed out that Canadians rejected free trade back in 1911 and they would reject it again in 1983. Of course, they will reject it in 1988, when they finally get an opportunity.

The first people that were betrayed by this Government were the members of the Conservative Party because the Prime Minister campaigned for leadership of the Conservative Party on a platform where he said that it would be foolish for Canada to enter into free trade. He was seconded on that by other Ministers in his Cabinet.

Then in 1984 we had an election. Did we hear anything from the Prime Minister about a free trade agreement with the United States? No. He promised that he was going to end patronage. He promised that he would clean up corruption. He did not say we would be entering into this kind of trade agreement with the United States. He did not exactly keep the other promises either about the ending of patronage and the end of corruption.

In September, 1985, suddenly we were told that Canada had entered into negotiations with the United States on this agreement. For the next two years Canadians were basically kept in the dark about what was happening. It was the mushroom society that this communications strategy talked about.

An Hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Manly: Do not educate the people about what is actually happening, just get across the idea that free trade is a good idea, then maybe the people will go to sleep.

An Hon. Member: Leave them in the dark.

Mr. Manly: It is the mushroom society. Keep people in the dark, feed them lots of manure and let the idea grow. The mushroom society is not good enough for Canada in 1988. The House was kept in the dark when we asked questions. Provinces were kept in the dark and, of course, the Canadian people were kept in the dark.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member says it is not true. When were we told that energy was part of this agreement? I remember a debate in which the former Minister for International Trade said: "I will tell you what is in the agreement". She did not mention energy. We were assured time after time after time that culture was not on the table and yet when we look at this agreement we see that it is very much on the table.

Last fall there was a last minute agreement. This Government was so anxious to get that agreement that it caved in on its fundamental concerns. It caved in on the energy issue caved in on culture. We did not get any guaranteed access to U.S. markets. We did not get any binding dispute settlement mechanism, which is what the Government was really seeking.

What we have is a document that gives Americans access to our country and gives us very little in return. It gives big business in Canada some access to markets in the United States, but what is that going to do for the average Canadian? Following that we had a charade of committee hearings; one day in British Columbia to hear all the concerns of British Columbians, pro and con, on this agreement. These committee meetings had to take place before the committee even had the final text of the agreement.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Manly: That was only provided in the last two or three days of those committee hearings. They had this charade, this whistle-stopping across the country, setting up a dog and pony show in each of the provinces to hear for a few hours the concerns of the provinces about this trade deal. Then the Prime Minister signed it. He went through the committee meetings so that he could sign it on January 2. We were promised the legislation for February. The legislation was not tabled until May 24. Now the Government wants to rush it through. After only two and a half to three days of debate, it is introducing time allocation. They want to get this through as quickly as possible because they know that the more Canadians know and understand about this agreement, the more they will oppose it.

This travesty of a second reading debate raises some very serious questions about the way in which the legislative committee is going to deal with this debate after second reading. How is the committee going to handle it? Is it going to have the time to study adequately this Bill and its ramifications for the Canadian people? The Parliamentary Secretary nods his head. Well, we will be interested in the answers that the Government gives to this. Will we be able to look at all of the issues and not just, as the Minister for International Trade says, "kind of skim over it quickly"? Are we going to be able to travel coast to coast and to hear people—

An Hon. Member: He says no.

Mr. Manly: The Parliamentary Secretary says no. We will not be able to travel, according to the Parliamentary Secretary.

An Hon. Member: They are not interested in what the people think.

Mr. Manly: They are not interested in what the people of British Columbia say. They are not interested in what the people of Newfoundland say about this.

An Hon. Member: At least we listened to Canadians.

Mr. Manly: It goes back to what the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) said, that this Government has listened to big Canada. They are not prepared to listen to small Canada, to the people in Kelowna and Penticton who are concerned about the wine industry. They are not concerned about listening to those people.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Manly: They are not concerned about listening to the fisher people on the Pacific coast or on the Atlantic coast.

An Hon. Member: They are arrogant. They are as arrogant as Trudeau was.

Mr. Manly: They say big Canada favours this. Their notion of big Canada is big business. We are opposed to this time allocation because we believe this issue is so fundamentally important that all Members of this House should have the right to speak. The Canadian people should have the right to know what is in this deal and what is involved in this sell-out agreement.

An Hon. Member: And how it affects them. Right on.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, Madam Speaker. Before you recognize the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's speech—

An Hon. Member: What is your point of order?

Mr. McDermid: I will come to my point of order in just a moment, and his point about allowing time to debate.

I am making an offer now that at one o'clock we do not see the clock and we carry on with this debate until the two hours are up. That will give the Opposition more time to debate Bill C-130 this afternoon, starting at three o'clock. If the Opposition disagrees with this offer it is, of course, cutting into its own debating time on the Bill.

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Speaker, there is only one group in this House who are cutting off debate and it is the Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues. We will not agree and be complicit in their further frustration and dereliction of responsibility in this House.

Mr. Rodriguez: Madam Speaker, I think the House should be reminded that it was this Government that brought in the closure motion here today. If the Government were really interested in Members of Parliament expressing their views on Bill C-130, the Government should not have brought in the closure motion, and should allow Members of Parliament to debate fully the whole free trade deal. That is what the Government should have done. It should not be putting this phoney suggestion forward—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: A point of order, Madam Speaker. This kind of grandstanding ploy—

Mr. McDermid: There is no point of order. It was turned down.

Mr. Langdon: —on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary may look to people who are watching or reporting as if somehow he has made some—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair fails to see the point of order in the Hon. Member's intervention at this time. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, what I want to contribute to this debate today is an Ontario perspective. As the Member of Parliament for Timiskaming, I have focused a great deal of my attention on the merits of free trade in northern Ontario.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: If I recall, Madam Speaker, you recognized the Parliamentary Secretary without him saying anything about a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: I was on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: The Member did not say that at the start of his intervention. You simply recognized him, Madam Speaker. I think that, in fact, is the Conservatives' chance to make a contribution to the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The "blues" will show that the Hon. Member had risen on a point of order. I certainly recognized him on a point of order. I would suggest to the Hon. Member that we both wait until the "blues" are ready. If necessary, we can discuss the matter again. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, if you are reserving judgment in this case, as it appears to me you are until we see the "blues", it would seem that one would then have to go to the next representative of a political Party who has the right to speak other than someone from the Conservative Party. If the "blues" show that, in fact, the Parliamentary Secretary did rise saying "a point of order", then that can be made up for later. I think if you are reserving judgment one would have to follow that course of action.

Mr. McDermid: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On the same point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, my hon. friend is an Hon. Member. I think he will accept my word. I rose and said "on a point of order" and "Before you recognize the Hon. Member for Timiskaming". That is what I said. If he does not want to take my word, that is fine. The light may not have been on when I did it, but I did say it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, I have no problem with the Parliamentary Secretary thinking that that is what he sought to say.

An Hon. Member: You are eating up your own time.

Mr. Langdon: But he did not, in fact, say so, at least as far as I heard it, and I have heard a great deal from him this morning from across the floor. He is not one of the least quiet of the Members in this Chamber.

I would respectfully suggest that if you are, as you suggested, reserving your decision that it should now be a member of the Liberal Party who gets the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I can assure the Hon. Member that I recognized the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary on a point of order. I heard him say so. What I merely suggested to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor was that he may want to wait until he sees the "blues" and he would say that it was on a point of order that the Hon. Member was recognized. After recognizing many Hon. Members I gave the floor to the Hon. Member for Timiskaming who I think would like to continue with his intervention after being interrupted on quite a few occasions. The Hon. Member.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I did not realize this was going to be such an important speech with all of the points of order that we have heard.

Today I would like to take more of a province-wide perspective. Trade is an issue of considerable importance to Ontario, particularly the trade deal with the United States. Fully 90 per cent of all Ontario's exports go to the United States while 83 per cent of this province's imports come from south of the border. That is why the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is so important for Ontario.

We sought an agreement that would secure and enhance our access to the vital U.S. market. We fought hard for Ontario's interest and we have a great deal to show for our efforts. Unfortunately, there is some misunderstanding about the agreement in Ontario, especially with Queen's Park—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, it is absolutely scandalous in my view that the Conservatives should use up this short period of time which is given over to discussing their anti-dictatorial behaviour by putting speeches on the record with respect to the trade deal itself. There should be lots of time to make that sort of speech in the future. The Member is not addressing what this Government is doing to Parliament and the rights of Canada. It is crucial for you to instruct the Member to make his speech with reference to the motion on the floor.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Timiskaming.

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I have always thought that we had the freedom of choice to speak in a debate. I can see here again where the elements of the socialist Party are different from the elements of ours. What I would like to say—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: First, Madam Speaker, the Member has attributed certain motives which is against the rules of order of this House. Second, the Member has still not recognized the fact that the motion we are debating is the motion to limit time to talk about the trade deal, it is not the motion to talk about the trade deal itself. I ask you to rule on that point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that if the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor and other Hon. Members had shown a little bit of patience, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming would have found a way to make a link with the motion in front of the House. I think that for the Chair to be that strict on the point of relevancy at this point would only scuttle the debate, which is not what any Hon. Members of this House want to do at this time.

As it is one o'clock, I will now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOWNING OF IRANIAN AIRLINER BY UNITED STATES NAVAL VESSEL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the destruction of 290 lives aboard an Iranian passenger plane as it crossed the Persian Gulf yesterday is an action that cries out to heaven. For its cruel and final nature, it ranks with the shooting down of the Korean airliner in 1983 when innocent lives were also taken for the same argument, namely, that the off-course airplane allegedly posed a threat.

There is a peculiar similarity between the two superpowers in reacting to the two tragic events. Both expressed regret about the shooting, but still defended the legitimacy of such an act. Where the similarity ends is with the unwarranted presence in the Persian Gulf of the U.S. fleet engaged in a role that endangers more the seeking of peace in that region than it prevents war.

As a parliamentarian, I wish to put on record my sense of grief and horror at this senseless act in the hope that you, Mr. Speaker, will transmit it to Iranian and American parliamentarians. Our sorrow is about the fact that such a tragedy can still happen, that innocent civilians die because of unjustifiable and condoned acts of war-mongering.

PERFORMING ARTS

MONTREAL INTERNATIONAL JAZZ FESTIVAL

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, more good news from Montreal, Canada's international city. Along with Expo 67, the Olympics in 1976, and its international image in so many fields, this week Montreal celebrates—

[Translation]

. . . the ninth Festival international de jazz de Montréal.

Mr. Speaker, what a show!

In fact, it's not one show but a whole series of shows in various theatres, at the Place des arts, in small nightclubs and even on the streets.

[English]

This year's festival will attract over half a million local and international visitors to Montreal's St. Denis district, and all Montrealers can be proud knowing that our city is recognized around the world as a vibrant and exciting host and cultural wonderland.

[Translation]

I would like to mention the tremendous work done by Alain Simard, founder and president of the Festival de jazz de Montréal, by André Ménard, Daniel Harvey and the 500 members on the team who help to make this event such a success.

[English]

It is a success, with the sounds of the world's best jazz performers, including some home-grown talent like Trevor Payne and the Jubilation Gospel Choir, Karen Young, with Michael Donato, and Oliver Jones, to name but a few. To all the organizers and participants—

IMMIGRATION

TREATMENT OF WEALTHY PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the thousands of Canadians, many of whom live in my city of Winnipeg, who are seeking to reunify their families through the legal procedures set down in our Immigration Act. They follow the law despite knowing that reunification will face long delays because Immigration Canada is woefully understaffed, particularly in Asiatic countries.

If a would-be immigrant is a wealthy business person, the story is quite different. There are immigration consultants and lawyers in Canada who are busily soliciting clients in places like Hong Kong, offering Canadian citizenship for those wealthy enough to qualify for the business classification. Yet these same business people are told by their advisers that Canadian law is so full of loopholes that it is not necessary to give up present citizenship, to set up legitimate investments in Canada, or even to live in Canada at all.

Is this the kind of law we want for persons entering Canada? Is this the kind of person we want entering Canada? Is this fair treatment for the thousands of Canadians who are following the law to get family members into Canada? The answer to these questions is an emphatic no, and the Government must implement a fairer system for all future Canadians.

WESTERN DROUGHT—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE FOR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pride, as a Conservative, that I rise today to bring to the attention of the House that the Government is to provide up to $76.5 million to help western livestock producers cope with the drought that is devastating the Prairies. Together with the provincial Governments, this initiative will assist producers with up to $153 million. This will include a payment for breeding livestock in severely hit areas of up to $60 per head.

The Saskatchewan producers will receive up to $39 million under this plan. For Alberta and Manitoba, the figures are $44 million and $17 million.

The drought relief package will also provide payment of $15 an acre for greenfeed assistance, up to a total of $53 million. This is a boost to the supply of feed and a help for soil conservation.

Together the programs address the drought situation in a comprehensive way and the per head payment allows producers themselves to act in a way that best suits their individual operations. The Government has once again illustrated its strong commitment to the needs of Canadian agriculture and will continue to do so in the future.

HEALTH

CALL FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BIRTH TECHNOLOGY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, for months now, researchers in the fields of medicine, ethics, and the law have been calling on the Government to set up a Royal Commission to explore the emerging field of birth technology.

I personally have called upon the Government to react to these calls in this very House.

I rise again today because, tragically, we have reached a point where our scientific knowledge exceeds our abilities to make decisions in this field, and some form of action must be taken. This is a moral, social and political issue that cannot be ignored. To do so would be to condemn our society to live with the consequences of the unregulated contracting out of wombs, the possibility of unregulated fetal experimentation, and the commercialization of our most basic relationships. Once again I call on the Government to set up a Royal Commission in the hope that it will address its responsibilities.

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE PACKAGE WELCOMED

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to commend the Government for proving again that it supports Canadian farmers. As is the habit of this Government, it has consulted broadly with provincial officials and the producers before announcing its part of the $153-million drought aid package. This package is designed to help all livestock producers and allows them to choose from an array of options.

Producers can decide if they wish to transport cattle to feed or feed to cattle. They can choose to sell their cattle and restock next year without a tax penalty. Late seeding to produce greenfeed is encouraged.

Grain farmers in western Canada and Ontario still face the damage brought on by this drought. Last week the drought damage in my riding was severely compounded by frost. I know that grain farmers can expect a reasoned response from the Government.

As a member of the Ontario caucus, I applaud the actions of the Government and its support of western farmers. This Government has shown farmers again that when it states its commitment to farmers it can be believed without question.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POLL FAVOURING IMPROVED SERVICE OVER PROFITS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Saturday's Montreal Gazette reported on a public opinion poll which indicated that 70 per cent of Canadians want Canada Post to put improved service before profits. It went on to indicate that the survey, conducted by Angus Reid Associates, found that the vast majority would prefer to receive the best possible postal service, even if it means a post office budget deficit that would have to be covered by tax dollars.

There has been a battle of the polls with the Government. This is a scientific poll done on a random sample basis. The kind of polls the Government has been quoting have been done in selected communities and are not random samples. As well, the questions have been biased. It is time for the Government to recognize that Canadians want good postal service. Canadians want the Government to watch the pennies, but they want it to provide service as the number one priority.

To be fair, the poll also indicated that 22 per cent said that the Crown corporation's top priority should be to avoid losing money. That is the portion of the population that the Government is playing to, the portion of the population that will support the cuts in rural services and discriminatory policies in suburban locations.

It is time for the Government to get its priorities straight, to hear what the Opposition is saying and to understand that the Opposition is reflecting public opinion. It is time the Government stopped accusing us of lying when we represent the majority in Canada and we ask for service to be the number one priority at the Post Office rather than the under-cutting of the service Canadians receive.

IMMIGRATION

SENATE'S DELAY IN PASSING AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, as each day passes, the backlog in Canada's refugee processing system grows larger. The backlog could reach 80,000 by the end of the year, and if an election were to be held now, government Bills C-55 and C-84 presently in the Senate would die. The backlog would double before new legislation could be drawn up and passed.

• (1410)

The Liberal controlled other place is responsible for making Canada a haven for bogus refugees, as well as harming our integrity and reputation in the world community. The Canadian taxpayer is footing the full bill for these individuals, of whom the overwhelming majority are liars and cheaters.

What a shame that the Liberal controlled other place, after a year of studying the two Bills, is placing cheap partisan politics above the interests of Canada and Canadians.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT 10-WEEK ELIGIBILITY PERIOD FOR BENEFITS BE RETAINED

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the people of South East New Brunswick still have no news about the eligible period for unemployment insurance. Since May 10, when the Department of Employment and Immigration extended the eligible period from ten to sixteen weeks, residents of South East New Brunswick have been signing endless petitions to object to this decision. Workers in South East New Brunswick want the Minister to know how hard it is to find employment for more than ten weeks. Those who work in fish processing plants cannot work for more than ten weeks because in some cases the fishing season only lasts that long.

The New Brunswick Minister of Labour, the Hon. Mike McKee, has met the Minister in order to discuss this problem and find a solution. The Minister of Employment and Immigration must realize that she will make things very difficult for workers in New Brunswick if she still decides to change the eligible period. I suggest the Minister should find a way to apply separate standards for urban and rural areas. The unemployment rate in rural areas is three times as high as in urban centres.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, June 30, a program relating to livestock producers affected by the drought was announced by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise). To help producers maintain breeding herds the program will provide $100 million in per head payments for breeding stock in designated drought areas, as well as $53 million in payments on a $15 per acre basis for greenfeed and late seeded crops.

While the funding will be helpful, a most important aspect of the program was the announcement of tax deferral for producers who have to deplete their breeding herds as a result of these drought conditions. For many years the Canadian Cattlemen's Association requested a program of tax deferral in circumstances such as we now face. When forced sales of breeding stock take place the tax triggered makes it difficult if not impossible to rebuild the herds when conditions improve.

This is a common sense, practical approach in the best long-term interests of the industry. It does not cost taxpayers money. It does not avoid taxes. Most important, it gives the individual livestock producer an opportunity to make the right management decision in his particular circumstances.

These changes are long overdue and I commend the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for responding to a legitimate concern of the industry with a simple, straightforward and practical solution.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOWNING OF IRANIAN AIRLINER BY UNITED STATES NAVAL VESSEL

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the NDP I wish to express shock and disapproval at the downing of an Iranian civilian airliner by an American warship in the Persian Gulf yesterday. I wish to express profound regret at the tragic loss of over 290 lives.

While the full facts behind this incident have yet to be revealed, we urge the Canadian Government to join in calling for an emergency meeting of the UN Security Council and for a full UN sponsored inquiry. Both sides must co-operate in the full disclosure of messages, perceptions, and decisions made in the crisis moments leading up to the shooting. Canada must clearly communicate its disapproval to the Iranians over any acts of retribution.

This indefensible incident raises the question of U.S. deployment of air and naval forces in the Persian Gulf. Rather than discouraging attacks on shipping, they have led to increased instability and greater mutual threat. With the destructive power deployed and the tensions rampant in this region, such incidents are likely to recur.

A common security framework for the Persian Gulf must be pursued, rather than mutually antagonistic military postures. UN Resolution 598 calling for a ceasefire in the Gulf war must be reinforced with strong and comprehensive sanctions, including an arms embargo.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL ASSISTANCE PROGRAM TO COMPENSATE FOR CATTLE LOSSES CAUSED BY DROUGHT

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity today to inform producers that towards the end of September they will get their first payment under the federal-provincial assistance program for loss of livestock due to drought. The second payment will depend on enrolment in the crop insurance program for 1989.

I would also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that payments will be deferred so that the authorities can inspect the fields in the fall and assess the damage caused by drought.

We also want to give producers in other areas the assurance that Agriculture Canada is keeping a close watch on the situation in Central Canada and the Atlantic Region and also in British Columbia.

The announcement about the assistance program demonstrates this Government's commitment to producers across Canada.

THE ECONOMY

CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, deregulation, privatization, and Americanization are the package which the Government has developed as a vehicle for putting Canada under the economic control of American multinationals. All three moves are based on an ideology which accepts the tenet that large corporations have the right to direct the economy of the country, indeed of the world.

Which of these policies is going to help the ordinary Canadian achieve a better life? Who do these policies benefit? Deregulation allows multinationals to operate with fewer controls. Privatization allows the Government to pass over to its multinational friends the fruits of the taxpayers' development of many years. Americanization is the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal which turns over Canadian resources to prop up the faltering economy of the U.S.

Deregulation, privatization, and Americanization, the three horsemen of the Conservative Party in power.

FRUIT INDUSTRY—AMENDMENTS TO LEGISLATION WELCOMED

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise in my place today to draw Canadian's attention to yet another accomplishment by this Government on behalf of Canadian agriculture. Last year the Government made a commitment to protect Canadian agricultural producers through amendments to the Act. On Thursday the Government met this commitment and delivered on that promise, one that is important to the tender fruit industry in Lincoln.

Through the consultative process the Government was able to develop a package of amendments in tune with the needs of the industry. In short, the amendments to the Act will provide the Government with the conditions it needs to ensure a safe wholesome supply of products for consumers while, at the same time, allowing the industry to market its products in an equitable and profitable manner.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOWNING OF IRANIAN AIRLINER BY UNITED STATES NAVAL VESSEL—REQUEST FOR UN EMERGENCY SESSION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. We learned yesterday of the tragic downing of an Iranian airliner in the Persian Gulf. I think I can speak for all Canadians in expressing deep sympathy and regret over this terrible incident. We also recognize that it raises serious questions about further escalation of the conflict in that area and the potential danger this represents to the security of the international aviation system.

In 1983, when we experienced the horrible tragedy of the downing of the Korean airliner, this House unanimously endorsed the actions of the Government, which were to call for an emergency session of the UN Security Council as well as special sessions of the International Civil Aviation organization to investigate the incident and deal with the problems it posed for international aviation. Does the Government intend to take similar measures in this case and ask for an emergency session of the UN Security Council and a special session of ICAO to investigate this terrible and tragic incident?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada issued a statement and I would like to repeat it.

We learned with shock and profound regret of yesterday's loss of life aboard the Iranian airliner and we extend to the bereaved our deepest sympathy. This tragic event is a grim reminder of the dangers of continued instability in that region. All concerned must recognize the need to pursue with a greater sense of urgency efforts to bring this conflict to an end.

With respect to the incident itself, we have made no decision to take either of the actions which the hon. gentleman mentioned. We will see what the countries immediately involved suggest should be pursued.

The U.S. claims that the aircraft was mistakenly identified as an Iranian F-14 on a direct course with U.S.A. warships which were at the time engaged with five Iranian gunboats which had attacked American forces in the region, and that the Airbus failed to respond to repeated warnings issued by the U.S. vessel on both military and civilian channels.

We were shocked by this but there is no reason at this time to doubt the description of the events as provided by the United States. We will continue to look into this with great interest. We will take a position when we have all the facts.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ACT TO ENSURE IMPARTIAL INVESTIGATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the question I asked was on exactly that point, that is, to get the facts, to have a proper inquiry and investigation into all the circumstances surrounding this, based upon the representations of the countries affected the United States, Iran, and other countries in the Persian Gulf.

I do not understand why the Government is not prepared to take action now when we were able to take in 1983. The United Nations was able to respond as was the International Civil Aviation Organization. Proposals were put forward.

Considering the precedent set and the unanimous support it received in this House, why will the Government not take measures to ensure proper, effective, impartial international investigation of this tragic circumstance?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we wish to be fair we will see that the circumstances surrounding the Korean incident and those surrounding this most unfortunate incident yesterday in the Gulf are hardly similar. It was difficult to tell, for a number of days, what had happened to the Korean aircraft. There are a large number of dissimilar circumstances.

We will take a position and exercise our responsibilities as members of ICAO or as members of the United Nations if and when the matter comes before either of those bodies. We will then support what seems to be the correct and best course of action to take in the interests of humanity and the interests of Canadians. That is our duty and that is what we will do.

We are not a party immediately involved in this incident. We will do what is best for the international community of nations when this matter comes forward and is brought to the attention of these bodies by the countries immediately involved.

REQUEST THAT CANADA UNDERTAKE INITIATIVE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister not believe that the best course of action would be to try to get a resolution of the circumstances and that, rather than being passive and taking no action at all, it would be far more appropriate for Canada, with the reputation which we have in ICAO and in the United Nations, to undertake an initiative before the problem escalates, before there is further retaliation, and before there are further threats and damage to the international civil aviation system?

For the life of me, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the position of the Government in totally refusing to take positive, constructive action to find out the causes and to put forward proposals and measures which might prevent these kinds of incidents from happening in the future.

Are we prepared to propose that there be special meetings to investigate? Are we prepared to ask the countries to ratify the amendments of the Chicago Convention which would provide better rules for the interception of civilian aircraft? Why will the Government not take the appropriate action to forestall future escalation of this conflict?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I have explained our position and it is a sensible, reasonable, and responsible one. We have no reason to doubt the U.S. version of what occurred yesterday in the Strait of Hormuz.

As members of ICAO and the United Nations we will support whatever responsible action either of those agencies feels it is necessary to take. I believe that Iran has brought this to the attention of ICAO and has asked for an extraordinary session.

We will play our role when the time comes to play that role. In the meantime, we have no reason to doubt that the United States has given a version of the events which is incorrect. There is no evidence that its version is incorrect. I see no similarity between this and the Korean air incident. At that time it was not even admitted by the U.S.S.R. for a number of days that a Korean airliner had disappeared.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILL C-72—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL DISAVOW CERTAIN CONSERVATIVE MEMBERS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government and I suppose that the Minister of Justice will attempt to reply to it.

The Prime Minister and the Government are tolerating a certain number of Conservative Members who are anti-francophone, anti-bilingualism and almost anti-Canadian, as they are advocating linguistic separatism. Those Conservative Members are always trying to start quarrels on bilingualism and they want to divide the country over language. The one-hundred and thirty-six amendments to the Official Languages Act that were tabled are the proof of this.

Officially, the Conservative Government supports the Official Languages Act, but on the other hand, it allows its Members to move one-hundred and thirty-six regressive amendments that are unacceptable because they derive from hatred. It is insulting and demoralizing, Mr. Speaker, to read all of the proposed amendments.

Can the Minister tell the House whether the Government or the Prime Minister will have the courage to take a stand, as did Robert Stanfield, a former Leader of the Conservative Party, and disallow those Conservative Members who are proposing anti-bilingual, anti-francophone and anti-Canadian measures?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, our Party is the Party of national unity and the Party of healing. Those who would try to use the issue of bilingualism for their own partisan purposes do so not only at their own peril but at the peril of all the people of this country. I would remind the hon. gentleman of that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The policy of our Party with respect to bilingualism is contained in Bill C-72 as amended by the committee which studied it for a number of weeks. Under the McGrath reform rules Members of this House now have the opportunity to put forward their own views and ideas. They are not circumscribed and entirely subservient to the leadership of the various Parties in this House, as we have all noticed in the last few months.

Not only is it our express policy to extend the principle of bilingualism in Canada, our Prime Minister gave a magnificent demonstration of his belief in those principles in Manitoba before we ever came to power. He is going to continue to give demonstration after demonstration of his belief in those principles, and we will be backing him all the way.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER THE GOVERNMENT WILL TAKE DISCIPLINARY MEASURES AGAINST CERTAIN PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question, and I will address it to the Minister who knows the issue, the Minister of Justice.

Some Conservatives speak out for bilingualism in certain regions of the country, but other Conservative Members are using the language issue to divide electors and to feather their electoral beds, in their areas, in their ridings, by making statements that are anti-Francophone, anti-bilingualism, and, I feel, anti-Canadian.

Take for example the case of the Parliamentary Secretary who has sworn an oath of loyalty to the Government and who says that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources should not hire Francophones, and that is just one instance. Other Members support him.

And so I ask the Minister: When will this Government put an end to this foolishness, this stupidity, and impose sanctions on its own Parliamentary Secretaries and bring them to their senses?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, how short the hon. gentleman's memory is. A number of members of his caucus voted against the amendments to the Constitution, known as the Meech Lake amendments, which were endorsed and supported by us for the very reason that we wanted to ensure that Quebec is satisfied and is welcomed into the full constitutional panoply of Canada.

A number of the members of the hon. gentleman's Party, 12 or 14 if I remember correctly, voted against it, as did several members of the New Democratic Party, one of whom was permitted to campaign against the very Meech Lake amendments which the Leader of her Party says he believes in.

The hon. gentleman now wants to raise the point that several Members of our Party have a different view on some issue of government policy and that this is somehow nefarious. That is the pot calling the kettle black.

[Translation]

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-72—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and does not concern the actions of the Conservative Party's or rather the Conservative Caucus' backbench dinosaurs. It concerns the silence of the Secretary of State who is responsible for bilingualism and that of the Prime Minister.

Could the Minister of Justice explain the silence that lasted for five days after amendments were moved by his colleagues in the Conservative Caucus, amendments that would make English the language of work in Canada's Armed Forces, in all federal offices in the National Capital region and even in the Outaouais, and that would only oblige the Government to provide services to the public in French in Quebec and in New Brunswick?

Why was there no reaction, no condemnation by the Secretary of State or by the Prime Minister? Are we to conclude that there is a substantial minority of Conservative Members who are opposed to bilingualism and that the Government prefers to tolerate their opposition instead of condemning it?

• (1430)

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-72 is in my name on behalf of the Government. When I condemn the amendments as being contrary to the principles of the Bill, I speak on behalf of the Government. I have the full support of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, who all feel at one with respect to the position that we will not support any amendments that are contrary to the principles of this Bill.

Nothing would be a greater condemnation of the position put forward than for us to stand up and defeat the proposals put forward. Indeed, my colleague, the Deputy House Leader, today moved time allocation so that we will have these matters dealt with expeditiously on Wednesday. I hope we can count on the Hon. Member's support.

ALLEGED SILENCE OF PRIME MINISTER—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians can depend on the New Democratic Party's support for Bill C-72, without amendment and as moved today in the House of Commons.

Could the Minister of Justice explain to the House why, for five days, we have been waiting to hear the Prime Minister condemn his backbench colleagues, the dinosaurs? He said nothing, and neither did the Secretary of State, the defender of Quebecers. We haven't heard a thing for five days. And with the passing of time, the damage being done to bilingualism increases.

Why has the Prime Minister remained silent on this matter?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear on Thursday last that we are not going to support any amendments. In fact, we will defeat these amendments that have been put forward that are inconsistent with the principles of the Bill. That was a clear and categorical statement.

I think it has been pointed out by the Acting Prime Minister that the Prime Minister has shown exemplary leadership in this country with respect to the official languages. When he was Leader of the Opposition, I think he dealt with the matter in the Province of Manitoba with courage. He has led this Party toward very equitable and fair legislation that was never brought forward by our predecessor government. In fact, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier called for such legislation from his own Government which never responded positively.

We brought this legislation forward. We will see it through. We will give the leadership on this issue. The Prime Minister has been at the forefront of this particular matter and we should be proud of the role which he plays.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, one expects that if a general or a prime minister is to lead, he will be heard on a particular subject. The Prime Minister was in Ottawa on Friday, and Canada Day was perhaps the day on which he could have spoken out or issued a press released indicating quite clearly his condemnation of the actions by the back-benchers who are trying to destroy bilingualism in this country.

Will the Minister of Justice clarify the situation? Is the Prime Minister leading on this particular subject, or is he hanging back because it is election time and he wants the Conservatives to take one message about bilingualism to Québec and another message about bilingualism to areas like Winnipeg— Assiniboine, Peterborough, and Calgary East, that it is okay to be opposed to bilingualism and vote Conservative?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very sad that Opposition Members are again playing politics with an issue as sensitive as this one, and I am referring to matters that concern our two official language communities. I think the Government has given a very clear message, and that message is Bill C-72. The Bill was given unanimous passage on second reading by all Members of the House. Today, amendments have been proposed. You are being asked to wait and see what the Government's exact position is, and that position will be in line with the positions that have been taken by this Party since 1984. There have been problems with official languages before 1984. The Liberal Party did nothing about it. In fact, it always tried to evade the issue. Now I want to ask you one thing. Mr. Speaker, my question as a Member of this House and as a Minister of this Government is: When will you stop your partisan posturing and stop using official languages to set communities up against each other in this country?

EMPLOYMENT

JOB DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—FUNDING OF LOW-LEVEL JOB OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This morning The Globe and Mail confirmed the unanimous findings of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration when it said that too many of the job development projects are not training Canadians for a modern economy but simply subsidizing the payroll costs of certain private employers.

The Government is funding through these projects the hiring of waiters, clerks, cleaners, janitors, service station attendants and so on. How can the Government justify the funding of these projects when it has cut back legitimate training of Canadians in community colleges and CEGEPS? How does she justify that?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, many people who come to the Job Development Program would not really qualify for a community college program. The Job Development Program is designed to help the chronically unemployed. These are people who have real problems in the workforce, the long term unemployed, handicapped persons, and women who have been out of the workforce for a long time. They face particular barriers. To have a full-time job in a restaurant, or as a waiter or waitress, is a real triumph. I think the Hon. Member should know that.

The important consideration is that we have got away from the short-term, make-work projects that existed before, in an effort to give people a real chance at employment they never had.

COMMITTEE REPORT RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to listen to the Minister today because she is changing the concept of the program that was introduced by the Member for Kingston and the Islands, the former Minister, who said that the program would have an element to give portable training skills to those who took training in these projects. Skill training was one of the objects of the program.

The unanimous committee report of April 13 said that: "Under no circumstances should subsidized training be used simply to lower the payroll costs of an employer". Will the Minister officially change the program to do what she says today, or will she change it to make sure that employers do not use these grants from the Government to subsidize their payrolls?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we said at the beginning that we wanted private sector involvement in developing jobs, particularly in developing jobs where they are needed.

Let me refer specifically to the Job Development Program and the long-term, hard core unemployed. Three months after their training, 61 per cent had a job. Twelve months after training, 67 per cent had a job; 79 per cent used the training in their jobs.

Anyone who turns the page to read the rest of the story will see that it states:

> This is what happened at Casey's Restaurant in Etobicoke, Metro Toronto, where a mentally handicapped woman was hired to wash dishes and has stayed on as a regular, permanent employee.
> "It's worked out 100 per cent here"—

—the General Manger said. Let me quote again:

> In the end, however, a person who would not otherwise have received a job goes on to put something worth while on resume, which in turn leads to more challenging jobs.

I would like to know what the Hon. Member has against these people who have had great difficulty and are now getting the help they need.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. We learned again today in the Globe and Mail that one out of six jobs created in the private sector through the Canadian Jobs Strategy program is poorly paid, unskilled and provides no opportunity for training. It is scandalous for the Government to spend $1.6 billion of taxpayers' money without being required to make public the results of this colossal expenditure. Is the Government trying to hide from Canadians that their money is being wasted on the Canadian Jobs Strategy program where the Government provides private sector employers with an almost unlimited pool of cheap labour?

• (1440)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question, but asked in French.

[English]

Let me repeat what I said the first time. First, it is a very small part of the Job Development Program, a very small part of the $1.6 billion, but an important part because it deals with a particularly difficult sector of the economy. We have made some changes to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. One of the reasons we came in with a flexible program that involves the private sector was to ensure that we can do some fine tuning because it is such a profound change from the kind of make-work projects that existed before.

The numbers used in the article are not totally accurate. It mentions 17,000 jobs. It is not that, it is 17,000 employers or projects. A very small portion is the individually sponsored ones which are the ones where this very hard core get one-on-one guidance in a job.

Some 84 per cent of the people who took this program have said that it helps them to find a job and keep a job. I think that is success for people who have been out of work for two and three years.

MONITORING OF PROGRAMS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister asked why is it that we have to depend on The Globe and Mail reporters to get this information through Access to Information. Why is it that the Canadian taxpayers cannot get this information through the statistics of our own Government?

Is the Minister willing to reinstate the cutbacks on the monitoring of these programs that she announced last week?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we do some considerable monitoring of these projects, which is why I know that 84 per cent of the people who participated are able to say that they have helped them with their job training and helped them to keep a job. That is monitoring, and that is success.

We do follow up with the people who participate in this. We know that they have jobs. In fact, some 61 per cent have jobs after three months and 67 per cent after 12 months. For people who have been unemployed for a long period of time that is a real success story. I am very proud of it.

ENERGY

RENEWABLE RESOURCES—RESEARCH PROGRAMS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of the Environment, my question is directed to the Deputy Deputy Prime Minister.

Given the importance of renewable resources of energy, and in light of the statement made by the Prime Minister in Toronto last week that his Government is committed to the protection of the environment, and given also the fact that since 1984 the Government has cancelled a $40 million renewable energy program of the National Research Council, as well as the Canertech Institution in Winnipeg, and it has reduced climate research programs in Environment Canada, and given the fact that the record of the Government is moving in a direction opposite to what it claims, will the responsible Deputy Prime Minister give an indication to the House with respect to whether the Government is willing to reverse this trend of cancellation in renewable resources research programs and launch a research program that is badly needed in light of the global atmospheric changes, the threat posed by the thinning of the ozone layer, and the environmental situation as it has emerged as a result of the conference?

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy watched the proceedings of that particular conference with a great deal of interest, as did most other Members of the House of Commons. I can tell the Hon. Member that in no way have we reduced the efforts of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and, indeed, of the Government, with regard to alternative energy sources. In fact, we are spending something in the order of $89 million on just the kind of items the Hon. Member mentions.

In addition, we can affirm to the House and to the public in general that a task force is undertaking a massive consultation program with the public. It is called "Energy Options". That report will be submitted to the Government some time later this summer.

If the Hon. Member has any excellent suggestions, we will be glad to hear them.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REVERSE DECISION PERTAINING TO RESEARCH

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister has not answered my question. My question is very specific.

Will the Government reverse the trend of cancelling research, particularly research that is badly needed in the field of renewable resources of energy? Will it reverse its decision to close the marine ecology lab in Bedford and cancel the research programs in the National Research Council on renewable resources of energy? That is my question.

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, once again, in case the Hon. Member missed it the first time, I can tell him that the Department is spending as much as it ever did on renewable energy and alternative energy sources. I can tell the Hon. Member that we want to ensure that the programs that we do have are cost effective, and that they are suitable. We have reviewed some of those programs.

I can tell the Hon. Member that in no way have we diminished the efforts of the Government in terms of alternative energy sources.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF IMMIGRANTS UNDER OTTAWA-QUÉBEC PROTOCOL

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I will not ask her any questions on employment since we have 1.3 million more Canadians working.

My question concerns immigration. Wealthy individuals who were initially denied immigration status by our immigration officials are using an agreement between Canada and the Province of Quebec to gain landed status in Canada. Once they are approved by Quebec these individuals can move and settle anywhere in Canada.

Will the Minister review the 1978 Protocol between Québec and Ottawa in order that one uniform policy can be applied to all of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the people who come to Canada, whether under this program or under other programs, have to meet Canadian standards. The Cullen-Couture agreement falls beneath that national standard for immigrants.

Clearly, when people come to Canada for the first time to live they have the freedom under our Constitution to move to other parts of Canada should they so wish. We work very closely with Quebec in terms of the Cullen-Couture agreement, the entrepreneurial program, and the investor program which is somewhat newer. We will continue to work with them. However, it is not my intention at this stage to alter the agreement with Quebec.

GRAIN CROP PROJECTIONS—INITIAL PRICES—TIMING OF ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. In the last couple of weeks projections of the yield of the grain crop on the western prairies have dropped to the point of suggesting that it will be only 50 per cent or less. Also, the asking price for wheat by the Canadian Wheat Board has increased by about 25 per cent. The price for barley has increased by about 50 per cent.

Given this information, does the Government intend to announce an increase in the initial prices as quickly as possible?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the crop conditions on the Prairies are very uncertain due to the very severe drought. As a result, the price of grain is very volatile. Certainly, we as a Government have been committed to continuing the policy of trying to ensure that as much of the farmer's money is made available to him up front when he needs it most. In other words, we tried to keep initial prices as high as possible.

If the crop conditions are such and the prices are such that it would seem as if an increase in the initial price would be warranted between now and the beginning of the new crop year, which is about four weeks away, then that announcement will be made as close as possible, I would assume, to the beginning of that new crop year to ensure that the price is accurate.

In the meantime I note, and I think most farmers are already doing this, that what little grain is left on the Prairies is very often being delivered. Storage tickets are being taken out to ensure that if there is to be a higher price in place at the beginning of the new crop year then the farmer would receive that.

I also note that some grain companies apparently are beginning to waive that storage fee as well to assist the farm community.

APPLICATION OF NEW PRICES

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, at present there is a considerable amount of grain still being delivered, approximately 700,000 tonnes per week. Is there any possibility of the Government increasing the initial prices for this period of time in order that producers who delivered grain during the last year will receive some benefit of the increased prices as quickly as possible?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, first, as I have already indicated, farmers delivering grain have the option of putting it in storage for the next four weeks and taking advantage of any higher grain prices that might be in place as of the beginning of the new crop year.

Second, prices are rising. Quite frankly, that is about the only good news in prairie agriculture these days. One would assume that those increased prices would certainly be reflected in a final payment. Therefore, farmers will benefit from that, on the assumption that prices are rising, as we anticipate that they are.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT

DANGEROUS GOODS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In 1987, more than 20,000 Canadian National railway cars carrying hazardous materials used the CN track at Saint-Lambert. In Canada, the number of accidents or incidents involving hazardous materials increased from 108 in 1985 to 239 in 1987. I would like the Minister to tell us what he intends to do to guarantee the safety of Quebec's urban residents, especially those living on the South Shore, considering the risk of a disaster that is becoming greater every year.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I agree that the transportation of hazardous materials, especially on Montreal's South Shore, considering the kind of factories and the nature of the economy in this part of Quebec ... I agree it has increased. However, the Hon. Member will recall that the Government introduced a series of measures when it tabled the new legislation on the transportation of hazardous materials, and these measures concern training the workers involved, taking preventive action and also measures that are necessary in case of a disaster. Fortunately, we have not had to face that kind of situation so far, but once again, I want to make it clear that with this Bill we have taken a hard look at the situation. We cannot eliminate the transportation of hazardous materials completely because it would involve the loss of thousands of jobs, and once again, the important thing is to regulate the transportation of hazardous materials so as to eliminate the problems to which the Hon. Member is referring.

SAFETY REGULATIONS—POSITION OF CN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, since the U.S. experience has shown that deregulation of railway transportation has brought about a decline in safety and maintenance standards, could the Minister give the House the assurance that CN is adhering strictly to the safety regulations for hazardous materials?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to deregulation. I am afraid I don't agree with her because improving safety conditions does not depend on whether we are regulated or not. Improving these conditions is necessary, and this applies to the agencies that must deal with the transportation of hazardous materials. The Government, especially considering its direct responsibility for Canadian National, is going to take care of this, and in fact we have already started. The new Railway Safety Act which, I believe, is now in the Senate, will make it possible for municipalities and other groups to apply for relocation of railway tracks to areas where they would represent less of a hazard for the community. Conditions have improved a great deal in the past four years, but it is a serious problem, and we are taking it very seriously.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my colleague, the fast reader, the Minister for International Trade.

The Government has released its paper the Free Trade Agreement and Industry. On page 39, as I am sure the Minister will have read, it admits that performance requirements, such as increased exports or domestic content levels, will not be permitted under the agreement.

In view of these types of concerns, will the Minister urge the legislative committee dealing with this legislation to hear witnesses as widely across the country as possible, to have expert staff attached to the committee, and to see to it that Canadians get a chance actually to speak out right across the country to this legislative committee on this trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Canadians have spoken out across this country in support of, for the most part, and some in opposition to, the free trade agreement. There was a day of protest several weeks ago in which a heavily advertised meeting of those who are against the free trade agreement in St. John's, Newfoundland, drew 25 persons to the meeting out of a total population of 200,000, and across the country the same pitiful numbers turned out for those protest meetings.

If the House endorses the principle of this free trade Bill tomorrow, as I hope it will, the Bill will be referred to a legislative committee. My recommendation to it will be that there has already been a parliamentary committee that travelled across the country on this. There have been Senate committees. The Senate endorsed the free trade arrangement in 1982, and the Senate endorsed it in 1978. There have been five or six opposition days in the House on this very matter, and the same in the Senate. This matter has now been debated and discussed for a year and a half. We have had the text of the agreement since last December. We are ready now for action, and the Canadian people are ready for action.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the latest poll shows that 38 per cent of the people of Canada support this agreement, and 40 per cent are against it.

In view of the fact that there has not been a single bit of evidence or a single bit of testimony with respect to this actual agreement, will the Minister not retract that ridiculous statement and recognize that the Canadian people have a right to be able to speak out on this issue right across the country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I recommend to the hon. gentleman that he read Mr. John Crispo's book: Free Trade: The Real Story, where he will find explained for him the free trade agreement in a way that he does not seem to be able to understand it as yet. These are independent authors who explain the document from cover to cover. If the Hon. Member reads it, he will find that he does not need to read every dot, jot, and tittle of the original agreement.

The position is that the House is now ready to deal with this matter. Hopefully a legislative committee will sit in Ottawa and will pursue any matters that people suggest should be pursued, or that the members want to suggest. We hope to have its report before too long, and send this matter on to the Senate. Canadians are waiting to get at the U.S. market with the new opportunities. Our 17 conferences across the country are proving to be very successful in that endeavour to help Canadians take advantage of these new opportunities in the U.S. market.

HEALTH

FOOD IRRADIATION—CLASSIFICATION AS PROCESS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health. The Government has now classified food irradiation as a process rather than an additive. This is directly contrary to an all-Party committee of the House of Commons that stated if food irradiation was classified as a process rather than an additive, it would subject it to inappropriate toxicological testing.

At a time when 75 per cent of Canadians are opposed to irradiated food, why is the Government subjecting irradiated food to inappropriate toxicological testing?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather odd that the Hon. Member would put it quite that way, because it was his Government that in fact approved irradiation of certain foods prior to the studies that have been committed.

I can say to the Hon. Member that under regular procedures the proposed regulations were gazetted on June 4 of this year. It was a 60-day period. Groups obviously have the right to put forward their comments during that period of time. But I say to him that, with not only the approval that his Government had given earlier and the changes that we made which he has put in his question, it would still have to be done on a case-by-case basis, and efficacy and health would have to be proven. So, even despite the points that he makes, those conditions are still in place.

PRIVATIZATION OF RADIOCHEMICAL COMPANY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the benefits of food irradiation are not going to be met if the Government is also not going to meet the concerns of the public. The public's concern is going to be heightened with respect to irradiated food. This is a very sensitive area. The Minister would admit that. Yet the Government is going to privatize the Radiochemical Company which deals with the irradiation of food.

Why is the Government, in light of the concerns of the public and the delicate nature of this whole question, going to privatize the Radiochemical Company by April 30th of next year, when, as he says, irradiated food is such a delicate subject and one that needs to be dealt with in such a careful manner?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member, on behalf of his Party I take it—because he is the spokesperson for energy, mines and resources for the Liberal Party—has confirmed in his preamble today the value of irradiated food and irradiation as a process. I am pleased that he has done that.

Secondly, in respect to the report that has been put forward, I have given the details on it. Thirdly, in respect to any safety, if in fact the privatization takes place, I think as well that that is well covered by the regulations.

The last point that I would make to him, quite apart from what we have done in Canada, which his Government approved in fact and which has been done to this date—in fact, this Government has yet not brought any new processes into place, over all the former Government had in place—is that over 30 years of research has taken place on irradiated foods, for example, not only through the Atomic Energy Control Commission headquartered in Vienna, but also at Seibelsdorf, as well as work being through Third World countries which are looking for storage possibilities for food.

I am pleased that the Hon. Member, though he might disagree on some of the margins, has again endorsed the position that his Party had taken, both before and today.

TAX REFORM

DISABILITY DEDUCTION—CONVERSION TO TAX CREDIT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): My question is for the Minister of Finance. It relates to tax reform and arises out of Mona Winberg's column, "Disabled Today", that appeared in yesterday's Toronto Sun.

It is a matter of record that at least in two of the Minister's Budgets he has made changes that have marked significant improvements for Canadians with disabilities, who are taxpayers. In yesterday's column that I referred to, however, there is discussion about the shift of the disability deduction to a credit under tax reform. I will not give the contents of the column, but I did satisfy myself that the Minister has seen it.

The conclusions that were reached there were that by changing to a tax credit the Government is not taking fully into account the special needs of taxpayers with disabilities. My question therefore is to the Minister, to ask whether he can assure the House that Canadian taxpayers with disabilities, or with dependants who are disabled, will not at the end of the day lose these recent advances that have been made as a result of tax reform.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do appreciate the question of the Hon. Member who, as the Chairman of the Standing Committee on the Status of Disabled Persons, has shown a continuing interest in this particular problem. I might point out to him that two-thirds of taxpayers are in the low-income bracket which was, in part, the focus of this particular column. But 80 per cent of the claimants of the disability exemption—now a credit—are in that same tax category.

We have, I think, demonstrated an ongoing concern for the position of the disabled in the tax system. We have broadened the definition of "disability", we have expanded the list of items that are eligible for the medical deduction now to become a credit. We have also increased the size of the exemption in the previous Budgets by $250.

The over-all impact, we believe, on disabled people will be positive in tax reform if you take into account all the elements of tax reform, but particularly the effect on those in the lower-income bracket representing 80 per cent of claimants is clearly higher.

HUMAN RIGHTS

WINNIPEG APARTMENT BLOCKS—REPORTED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST NATIVE PEOPLES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for housing, who has just evaporated. Perhaps I could go to the Minister of Justice then. In The Globe and Mail there are reports that human rights activists in Winnipeg indicate that apartment blocks have a no-native policy, that there is housing discrimination in Winnipeg against native people. When this was first documented in 1981 it was also shown that federal dollars were going into renovating these apartments, and after the renovations the no-native policy was established.

What I would like to ask of this Minister is whether, now that this has come to light again, he would be prepared to appoint an independent inquiry to get to the bottom of this no-native policy, rather than do what CMHC did in 1981, and that was simply to get a promise from landlords and from the people who got the money, that they would not discriminate, and these promises were not policed.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman has given a damning indictment of the Government which had responsibility for housing in Winnipeg and in Manitoba, namely, the New Democratic Government of the time, because the hon. gentleman will fully appreciate the fact that housing is essentially a provincial responsibility. We on the federal side, in particular my colleague, the Minister of Public Works responsible for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, have had a policy with respect to our participation of non-discrimination. Obviously, we have done more than that. We have been pro-active with respect to our policies for native housing.

If the hon. gentleman would get to his socialist colleagues and tell them to shape up, it would be about time.

An Hon. Member: It is a Conservative Government in Manitoba. Shape up, yourself.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PARLIAMENTARY STUDY AND CONSIDERATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. I want to ask the Minister why he considers a general discussion of the principle of free trade to be a substitute for a full parliamentary and, specifically, House of Commons debate, and House of Commons committee study, of the detailed wording of the actual deal that his Government signed with the United States. Why isn't he willing to have a full and complete study of the actual wording of the deal signed by his Government with the United States, by a parliamentary committee, instead of giving what is an improper direction on the floor of this House to the members of the committee not to have such a study, a direction to the Conservative majority?

In short, why is something like Dr. Crispo's book a fit substitute for a full House of Commons committee consideration of the Government's trade deal with the United States?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there we see the true labyrinthine mind of the Liberal at work. The hon. gentleman's Leader and his Party have said they are going to tear up the free trade agreement. If they are going to tear it up, why should they care what is in it any further? They have made their decision months ago. They have blindly said they are going to tear it up, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party says that they are going to tear it down. Then they ask for another year to study the Bill.

The Bill has been in the House now since May. The agreement has been before the Canadian public since December. The time has come for action, not a childish threat to tear something up. It is reprehensible. Never was there such an irresponsible statement made by the Leader of a Party. And then his House Leader asked for more time to study the document that they are going to tear up. Bosh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

CLARIFICATION OF COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I asked a question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) on a very sensitive matter. The Government has reduced the status of irradiated food from a process to an additive. In accordance with an all-Party committee, this is directly contrary to the recommendation. The committee said that to so reduce irradiated food from a process to an additive would subject it to insufficient toxicological test.

The Government is saying that there is a definite benefit for having irradiated food in Canada, particularly in the Third World. We really do not know what the benefits of irradiated food are as yet. I do not think this Party or anyone should be in a position to say that there are not benefits from irradiated food. They may not be in ways that the Government is using irradiated food at the present time. The benefits may lie in some other area. The changes which the Government has made may be injurious to the health of Canadians. I am not saying that to try to alarm Canadians, I am saying that to try to put the question in perspective because we do not have sufficient information. There are other very knowledgeable countries in the western world which have not as yet even contemplated changing irradiated food from a process to an additive, and with good reason, because they do not have the information. No country has the information as yet.

When I asked the Minister about this, he said that he was glad to hear that I was agreeing with the use and the benefits of irradiated food. But there was nothing similar or indicative in my question which would indicate that I was approving of irradiated food.

On behalf of the Liberal Party, I do not want to take the chance of losing something that could be beneficial. It is something that in other ways could be injurious to the health of Canadians. We should not be using it in a cavalier fashion. To dismiss testing would primarily perhaps injure the health of Canadians. Seventy-five per cent of Canadians object to irradiated food at the present time. The Government, if it wanted to use irradiated food in the most responsible manner possible, should be doing all the testing it possibly could until it had the information that met the criteria of Canadians and other countries throughout the world. The Minister should not say that we are approving, when we are not. He said that this is a sensitive issue. At the same time he said that he is representing a Government that is going to sell the Radiochemical Company, a division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, to the private sector which only feeds on the concerns of Canadians, and will jeopardize perhaps the health standards of this country.

Mr. Speaker: I have allowed the Hon. Member to go on. I know it is a matter which he, other Members and the Minister treat with importance. His point may be a point of order. It is not a point of privilege. I call upon the Minister who may want to comment.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is an honourable person in this House and I respect what he said. The issue is moving from an additive to a process. The comments he made, and I think he has now said it again—I do not want to misinterpret him in any way—indicated that the Liberal Party still had an open mind on the issue. In many of the areas—and I say this directly to the Hon. Member—people do not take that position and that is what I meant in terms of that interpretation.

The testing will continue. There is a further safeguard with respect to irradiated food being approved on a case-by-case basis. The Hon. Member says that other countries have not yet moved in that direction. There is no doubt that Canada has been a leader in irradiated food and atomic energy research, including the associated safety measures. Those of us who know that industry are all proud of it. Having said that, obviously the Government will not move forward unless on a case-by-case basis both the testing and efficacy are approved.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) has in a sense not risen on a question of privilege. His point more properly should have been a point of order or clarification. Normally I do not think the Chair would have allowed the point to go on, but it may well be that the exchange has helped to clarify the situation both for the Hon. Member and for the Hon. Minister. It is a matter of considerable concern across the country and in this Chamber.

I thank the Hon. Member, and I thank the Hon. Minister for his reply.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-130

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

> That, in relation to Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill: and
> That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on the above mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A point of order. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, just before we broke for lunch a point of order was raised as to whether or not when the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) had the floor he had risen on a point of order or had risen to speak. I believe that you were going to check the "blues". Could you indicate at this time what the results are?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have not had the opportunity of actually seeing the "blues" but I can assure the Hon. Member, as I did earlier, that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary was recognized on a point of order, and he did say so at the time. I will ask for the "blues" to be brought to me during the Hon. Member for Timiskaming's intervention. He has been interrupted on quite a few occasions by points of order and I think at this time we should allow him to give his message.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, I think mine will be one of the most protracted 10-minute speeches that will have been given in the House. I would now like to return to discussing Bill C-130. I think it has tremendous benefits for all Canadians and, in particular, for those living in Ontario.

Today I would like to take a province-wide perspective. Trade is an issue of considerable importance to Ontario, particularly trade with the United States. Fully 90 per cent of all Ontario's exports go to the U.S. while 83 per cent of this province's imports come from south of the border. That is why the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is so important for us here in Ontario. We sought an agreement that would secure and enhance our access to the vital U.S. market. We fought hard for Ontario's interests and we have a great deal to show for our efforts. Unfortunately, there is some misunderstanding about this agreement here in Ontario, especially at Queen's Park.

First, David Peterson said he would support free trade but only if certain conditions were met. Then, when those conditions were met, he still said, no, he could not support the agreement. Then he said he was going to do everything he could to fight the deal. Now, he says he will wait and see. As John Diefenbaker once said:

> The Liberals are the flying saucers of politics. No one can make head nor tail of them and they never are seen twice in the same place.

Today, Madam Speaker, I want to set the record straight for the people of Ontario about this agreement, beginning with the automotive provisions.

Naturally the automotive provisions are of keen interest to Ontario where the automotive industry is the largest employer in the province. The Premier has said he worries that the Auto Pact could be gutted. His worries have no basis in fact. From the outset of the negotiations we said that the Auto Pact was working well and that Canada would not raise it. We did not. The Government also said that if the Americans made proposals which offered the potential for more production and employment in Canada, we would listen to them. The Americans did have some ideas which we found to be a sound basis for discussion. The result is what has been described as Auto Pact Plus. We have kept the fundamental elements of the Auto Pact and added provisions in the agreement which will stimulate new opportunities for production and employment in Canada.

Let me be more specific. For Auto Pact producers, not much has changed. They can continue to operate as they have been and retain their third-country privileges which will now be denied to newcomers. For Canadian parts producers, this is a good package. For sales to the Auto Pact producers, the situation will be unchanged except that vehicles assembled in Canada will have to meet a higher standard of North American content to qualify for duty free entry to the U.S. This is a real incentive to procure high levels of domestic parts.

What about parts producers selling or hoping to sell to the transplants in North America? The rules of origin negotiated in the agreement and the end of the duty drawbacks will create a real incentive for assemblers to increase their sourcing of North American parts to qualify for the reduced tariffs. These are highly positive developments.

Just as positive are the provisions pertaining to agricultural trade. In essence, the agreement provides for agricultural trade a balanced deal which makes important gains for our primary exporters and at the same time safeguards our marketing board system for sensitive sectors such as dairy and eggs. Ontario's beef and meat processing industries will gain from the exemption from U.S. meat import laws. Fruit and vegetable producers will be protected for 20 years by special tariff measures which can be invoked when prices are abnormally low.

With respect to investment, David Peterson has expressed considerable concern about the levels of foreign investment, something which sounds a bit strange coming from the man who has thrown open the Ontario securities industry to foreign takeovers, as economist John Crispo has pointed out. The Premier's concerns are ill-founded. Canada keeps the right to restrict U.S. investment in key sectors such as energy, transportation and culture. we also retain our ability to review major direct acquisitions by non-Canadians.

Those who are defensive about foreign investment forget that Canada is now a major net exporter of capital and has been since 1975. As an importer and exporter of capital, Canada has much to gain from a secure and stable investment environment at home and abroad.

Increased investment is particularly important to northern Ontario's key industries such as mining. New investment means more jobs and more secure jobs, especially for northern Ontarians who make up 73 per cent of the province's mining workforce.

Let me move on to dispute settlement, an issue I hear a lot about in northern Ontario where there is concern about the impact of U.S. protectionism on our forestry and steel exports. As Ambassador Reisman has pointed out, our objective in the area of dispute settlement was to ensure greater certainty about the rules of the game. What we have achieved is binding objectivity in the application of anti-dump and countervail laws by both parties.

The dispute settlement provisions make Canada an equal partner in the resolution of disputes and provide for fair and effective solutions to difficult problems. Canadians will know what the rules are and can be confident that they will have a voice in how they will be applied. How can anyone claim that this is not an improvement over what we have now?

For Ontario's service industries, there is also good news. The agreement will ensure that Canadian service businesses can compete with U.S. companies on an equal footing. Our entrepreneurs and businesses will have easier access to the U.S. to sell their goods and services and to supply after-sales service to their customers. This alone is a very practical achievement for Ontario with its large service sector.

With respect to financial services, the agreement promotes the Government's policy objectives for this sector that were set out last December. Those objectives are to increase competition, innovation and efficiency, to broaden sources of credit and options for consumers and to promote international competitiveness and domestic growth.

The agreement will open up a major new area of the securities market for Canadian banks in the U.S. At the same time, we retain the right to control entry of foreign banks into our financial markets and we keep full power to regulate chartered financial institutions operating in Canada.

What about jobs and free trade? Free trade critics claim that there will be many job losses. This is not so according to the Economic Council and the Conference Board, both of which predict increased employment as a result of free trade.

With respect to jobs and women, the Economic Council forecasts that half the new jobs created by this agreement will be in the retail and wholesale trade and in the commercial, personal care and business services. This is very favourable for Canadian women because 84 per cent of Canadian women work in service industries. The C. D. Howe Institute also agrees. It says that since women hold more than half the jobs in the services sector, they are well positioned to benefit from this employment expansion.

What about labour adjustment, another issue which has been brought up on numerous occasions? Critics ignore the fact that adjustment due to free trade will be small compared to normal labour adjustment that occurs each year in our economy. They also ignore the fact that the Government already has in place a wide array of labour adjustment programs. In addition, we have established the Advisory Council on Adjustment which will make an interim report this summer on the adequacy of existing programs.

An example that will need assistance is Ontario's grape and wine sectors which will need to adjust not just to free trade but also to the recent GATT panel ruling. Since December, we have been consulting extensively with provincial officials and the industry on an assistance package for these sectors.

Today, I repeat this challenge. I ask all the enterprising people of Ontario to help us take Canada forward to greater economic growth and prosperity for our sons and daughters.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Madam Speaker, it is difficult for Canadians listening to the debates to know where the exaggerations are on both sides of the House. I myself have had great difficulty understanding the issues in this debate. Canadians are entitled to know why the Government has gagged the Opposition in the House of Commons during the free trade debate. This is the most important Bill before Parliament in the 121 years since Confederation.

Canada's independence and sovereignty are at stake in Bill C-130. We should start by solving our interprovincial problems before getting into free trade with the United States.

A construction worker from Ontario cannot work in the Province of Quebec. We do not even have free movement between the provinces of Canada. For example, professional associations and corporations are under provincial jurisdiction in Canada and state jurisdiction in the United States. We know that the professional corporations in Quebec have very strict prerequisites with which professionals from other provinces must comply if they come to Quebec. We also know that the Americans' prerequisites are less strict and exacting. So we wonder what kind of services we will have in Canada after free trade with the Americans. Are we ready to lower the quality of our services, are we prepared to decrease the health protection of Canadian patients? There are many other imponderables in this Accord. Many decisions will depend on the interpretation given to it. For example, in future, will we need American approval before deciding whether a Government can nationalize automobile insurance, as has been done in Quebec and Saskatchewan?

There are already several other irritants between Canada and the United States. For example, the Americans steadfastly refuse to admit they are partially responsible for acid rain, an environmental issue which could be the subject of long debates.

Hon. Members will recall as well that we lost the fight over Arctic waters sovereignty in 1985, particularly the stealthy saga of the American icebreaker Polar Sea. Mr. Reagan laughed in our Prime Minister's face (Mr. Mulroney) by having him sign the Arctic co-operation agreement. Just what is the meaning of a co-operation agreement? It means that the Americans are stubborn and that under no consideration whatsoever will they acknowledge our sovereignty in the Arctic waters and the Northwest Passage.

Signing the agreement was tantamount to the Conservative Government's admission of being powerless to control the ongoing activities of the American giant in the Far North.

Conservative publicity would have us believe that we are looking at the perfect recipe for happiness, a recipe which is being sold to the Canadian public just like a fairy tale we tell our children. Everything is beautiful, everything is fine, not to worry, everything eventually will turn out all right. No way!

Before going any further I want to make sure that Canadians who are listening realize that the Official Opposition is not against free trade, we are simply against this agreement bearing the signatures of Mulroney and Reagan.

Since the end of World War II the Liberal Party in office has always negotiated freer trade through GATT. It did so successfully and to the advantage of Canada. Nothing prevents Canada from continuing and even improving this kind of negotiations.

My leader, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), stated in his speech on free trade that this agreement represents the largest sell-out of our sovereignty since we became a nation. He went on to say that with this agreement we are losing the ability and power to govern our own country, to choose our policies and to fulfill our national destiny as Canadians.

The Conservatives want us to believe that a general agreement with the United States is more advantageous because it would guarantee access to the huge American market. But, Madam Speaker, we already have access to a major part of the American market.

Since its creation in 1947 GATT paved the way for tariff reductions—then 40 per cent on average—to an average rate of 5 per cent now. Roughly 80 per cent of those products are already being exported duty-free to the United States. To put it another way, the Mulroney-Reagan general trade agreement is aimed at guaranteeing access to the rest of the market, only 20 per cent. That is clear enough!

The question is this: Does the agreement we have on the table guarantee the access the Conservatives have been striving to achieve? The answer is no, and there are three reasons for that. Last month the American Congress passed its omnibus bill, and henceforth this legislation will impose additional tariffs on all countries exporting to the United States, including Canada. Yet President Reagan had promised to veto this omnibus bill personally to protect Canada. He has yet to deliver and chances are we will face new tariff barriers on January 1, 1989 when the free trade agreement comes into force.

Furthermore, elements of this omnibus bill will be part of the next GATT negotiations. We will therefore not have access to these markets and we will have to renegotiate these items at the next round of GATT when we will already be bound by the Free Trade Agreement.

Second, the dispute settlement mechanism is deficient because we will be subject to U.S. laws.

Gordon Ritchie, ambassador and deputy chief negotiator at the Canadian Trade Netgotiations Office, admitted to the House of Commons Committee that Canada had not obtained any guaranteed access. According to him, U.S. law will continue to apply in this area. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed out to us that Article 1902(1) of the Agreement specifies that the United States reserves the right to apply its own legislation, its laws on anti-dumping and countervailing duties, to all products imported from the territory of the other party, namely Canada.

In the case of potash, steel and lumber, we have already paid the price.

Third, the dispute settlement mechanism is wanting. The three panels have no authority to enforce this Agreement.

It is mainly for these three reasons that we do not agree with this Agreement.

First, President Reagan has not yet exempted us from the U.S. omnibus trade bill; second, we are subject to American laws and third, the dispute settlement mechanism is ineffective.

Also, in the field for which I am a critic, the dispute on Class "C" plywood, which is of superior quality in Canada, and Class "D", which is an inferior U.S. quality, is a problem for Canada even before the Agreement takes effect. Although Canada offered to develop a test for the strength of Canadian plywood, the Americans still refuse to submit to it.

This dispute will particularly affect construction of public housing. The Americans are making a big issue of it and want us Canadians to lower the quality of our plywood. There is no question of Americans improving the quality of theirs. It is not as unimportant as it may seem because it shows what will happen every time the Americans want to have access to our Canadian market.

This can have serious consequences for public housing. For example, we have often heard very heated debates in this House when Members exposed the deplorable conditions of housing for native people in Canada.

Houses on reservations last about 15 years. If we lower the quality of the plywood used in building them, we are likely to have to replace them much sooner.

Public housing, which as we know is partly subsidized by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, will also be greatly affected by this U.S. decision. The Conservatives well know that I am watching them on this issue. I have made statements in the House, I have questioned the Minister responsible for housing and I do think that the Americans and the Government will pay attention, but we will have to keep on the lookout during the vacation period. It is very easy to have the wool pulled over you, as happened to Quebec, during the vacation period.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but her time is up.

[English]

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, we now have before the House a motion that will allow us to vote on a matter of vital importance to western Canada. We have heard much in this debate about free trade and its short-term impact on Canadian consumers, businesses and workers. We have heard from those who want to promote Canada to the world and those who want to remove Canada from the world. I want to consider the free trade agreement in light of the long term opportunities it presents, especially for western Canada, and the step forward in global relations that it represents.

Free trade resolves at least one problem which has plagued western Canada for a century and responds to the future challenges the whole country will face. Ever since John A. Macdonald's national policy the tariff system in Canada has worked to the disadvantage of western Canada. We sold our products on the international market at low prices but had to buy goods on the highly protected domestic one. Free trade is about to change that imbalance.

With free trade, western businesses will continue to compete as they have all along and western consumers will have the advantage of access to tariff-free imports from the United States. We can look forward to a revitalized economy, modernization, and real income growth. No wonder Albertans are among the strongest supporters of free trade!

At the First Ministers' Conference on the economy in February, 1985, former Premier Peter Lougheed of Alberta presented his belief that free trade would create jobs and opportunities for Canadians. He had supported the idea at the 1977 Premiers of Canada Conferences and it was supported again in the provincial Government White Paper on Industrial and Science Strategy. This time, though, the federal Government gave some consideration to western ideas.

What was being suggested was a mutually beneficial package of reductions in tariff and non-tariff barriers and that is what has been negotiated. I cannot say that westerners are totally responsible for bringing about the free trade agreement, but former Premier Lougheed was certainly instrumental in getting it placed on the national agenda. I think it is a credit to the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that he has pursued the matter.

At the 1985 First Ministers' Conference it was stated that: "From Alberta's perspective, a free trade arrangement is a viable method of overcoming obstacles to the revitalization of our economy. The benefits from expanded trade, the effect on industrial restructuring, rationalization, modernization, technological enhancement, productivity improvement, and real income growth can be realized if a free trade agreement is put into place... Federal and provincial Governments must now demonstrate their leadership and show that Canada has the self-confidence and political maturity to pursue a free trade arrangement with the United States".

The Alberta Government was saying then, and I am repeating now, that free trade is crucial for the economic future of the West, and, for that matter, all of Canada. It is also an indicator of the future economic policies that Canada must pursue. Canada dare not complacently accept the status quo. We must consider our own style of perestroika, our own methods of securing economic well-being into the future.

U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz spoke before the World Affairs Council in late 1987. He briefly mentioned some of the changes that he saw under way in technology, artificial intelligence, genetic engineering, and language. He concluded his overview with the comment that "in this time of profound change one of the hardest adjustments to make is intellectual adjustment. We must discard outdated habits of thinking and make room for new possibilities..."

We must consider that we are working today in measures of speed and magnitude that were only dreamt about a few years ago. Money now moves in international markets as quickly as it can be electronically relayed. We are using substances that were invented yesterday, not only resources that have been with us since the Earth was formed. Information changes as quickly as we can read it. These changes have implications on how we conduct our lives and how we must manage our governments.

Secretary Shultz suggested that countries which cannot or will not compete in the global market-place and interact with ideas from other societies will find themselves falling behind the advanced innovators and producers. Some may absorb these changes and benefit in a small way, others will simply become marginal. Free trade is only the first of many steps that Canada must take to meet the challenges of sharing ideas, coping with change, and being competitive enough to maintain our standard of living.

All countries face challenges, not only Canada. All are looking for solutions. It only follows that other countries have displayed an interest in our free trade agreement and have considered it as a model.

Members will recall the media controversy about the comments of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher when she spoke in this Chamber. Putting that controversy aside, I believe it is important to consider what she said and what it implies. The United Kingdom is our third largest trading partner, so she knows that Canadians can compete in the European market. She referred to the fact that Canada, with less than 1 per cent of the world's population, accounts for 5 per cent of its trade. On the basis of her country's experience within the European Economic Community, Prime Minister Thatcher applauded the agreement and the example it sets for other trading nations.

The free trade agreement is part of the Government's strategy to ensure Canada's continued success into the 21st century. It will increase Canadian business opportunities, make it easier for professionals to work on both sides of the border, and lower consumer prices for everyone. The free trade agreement is a triumph for the open market in Canada.

The free market cannot operate with stifling regulation, interference, or political difficulties. That is why our Government's policies, like decentralization, privatization, and deregulation, have brought increased employment, investment, and record economic growth.

The socialists do not share the view that Canadian businesses can grow with increased market opportunities or that Canadian workers are skilled enough to compete. A few days ago we heard in this Chamber from Chancellor Kohl of West Germany who also spoke of the importance of trade and freer trade. He should know. West Germany is one of the most powerful economies in the world and has the highest percentage of Gross National Product dependent on external trade of all the industrialized countries. Canada is second. West Germany provides a valuable model with its expanding economy and stable position in the OECD.

The East German economy, on the other hand, is restricted by government control, enforced isolation, inefficiency, and a far lower standard of living. We, of course, are favouring the first; the socialists would have us adopt the second.

The socialists are wrong on two counts. First, they have assumed that independence is the ability to go it alone. This is a grave error. The independence of nations is not based on their protectionism or their retrenchment. It is based on their ability to assert themselves on the world stage, their ability to command international respect for their policies and actions. We are proud of leaders, not of hermits.

Second, the socialists have forgotten that education, transportation, communications, and technology are the determinants of the economy. Markets, not governments, determine economic results and there is no way to overrule the market more than momentarily in an age when goods, services, capital and technology flow across international boundaries.

The free trade agreement will provide the mechanism for open trade with the Americans. Beyond that is the fact that global economic power has been dispersing. Ours is no longer a bi-polar world with the United States and the U.S.S.R. determining military policy and economic conditions. Developing countries like Brazil, Korea, China, India and Israel have become important commercial powers. In this new environment it is important to remember that we are trading as parts of blocs, not as individual nations.

Europe is one market, so is the Pacific Rim. We must consider our place within our own corner of the globe then look outward for other opportunities.

We must also remember what Montesquieu said more than 200 years ago for I believe that it is still true.

[Translation]

"The natural effect of trade is to lead to peace. Two nations that negotiate together become mutually dependent: one wishes to buy, the other wishes to sell; thus, all unions are based on mutual need."

[English]

The natural effect of commerce is to lead to peace. In other words, our movement toward global trade can be an important step toward world peace. With a free trade agreement we have established our role within the North American economic unit. We have chosen to compete with the Americans on an equal basis. We are choosing to be active participants in this quickly changing world. This choice will make us better businesspeople, better workers, and better Canadians.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I know that I have only a short period of time and I want to make sure that I fill it with a lot of punch. I remind the House that we are debating a motion of the Conservative Government to stop dead in its tracks the debate in principle on Bill C-130 which Simon Reisman called the greatest deal of the century. Simon Reisman, the negotiator of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal, said it was the great deal of the century. After two and one half days of debate the Government has brought forward a motion to stop debate dead in its tracks, to guillotine the debate.

What are the Tories afraid of? Are they afraid of the Opposition? No, I do not think so, they are 200 strong. Are they afraid of the Speaker? No, they are not afraid of the Speaker.

I will tell you who they are afraid of. They are afraid of the Canadian people. They know that Canadians would find out more about this deal through debate that would be coming to them on prime time television with the extended hours of the House. The Tories cannot stand the scrutiny of this Bill. This paltry, porous proposal of the Tories will not stand up to the scrutiny of a vigilant opposition. That is why they have come to close the debate. What a shameful performance.

Let us look at the history of this infamous Bill. First we have the man who signed for Colonel McCormick for $5, singing When Irish Eyes are Smiling, in Québec City for his American boss. They cooked up this deal.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has exhibited himself to be nothing but a lackey for the American power in Washington. He has switched from Colonel McCormick to Colonel Reagan.

We had the inimitable Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), formerly Minister for International Trade. Of course, they did not want that Minister handling international trade so it was put into the hands of that character from Dick and Jane. When the appointment was made the Prime Minister said: "I have given the ball to Pat. Watch Pat go. See Pat go. Jump Pat, jump. Run Pat, run." The Americans simply held up the hoop and said how high.

We were given an incongruous image of midnight approaching as the deal must be signed. Thank God Simon was not working overtime at $1,000 a day. As midnight was approaching, where was the Minister? She was on the beaches of Waikiki, unable to be there. What a mess. The former Minister for International Trade was not there when she was needed the most. She was on the beach at Waikiki.

The Prime Minister took that portfolio from the Minister and gave it to the new Willy Loman of the Conservative Cabinet, the man who could not sell vacuum cleaners.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It being 3.54 p.m., the two hours provided for the consideration of the motion now before the House under the provisions of Standing Order 117 have expired.

Accordingly, under the terms of the Standing Order, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion. The question is as follows: Mr. Lewis moved:

That, in relation to Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That, at fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government business on the above mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order, and in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried. Orders of the day.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 29, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner in the absence of a mandate from the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada."

And the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "political institutions of Canada," the words "including our valued system of social and regional development programs,".

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Madam Speaker, when the Conservative Party was elected to office in 1984 our commitment as a new Government was to undo the damage of the past. We were left with a 20 year Liberal legacy of spiralling government spending, federal-provincial squabbles, squandered economic opportunities and a devalued economy.

During that election campaign we said that we would bring the country together so that we could meet the challenge of change. We said we would fight poverty and unemployment in the only way they can be effectively fought, by creating a stable economic environment, by creating growth and investment, and by creating jobs. We said that we would restore Canada's reputation to what it had been before as an active and reliable participant in global affairs, securely from the positions as a reliable member of the western alliance. All of this has been done, Madam Speaker.

Despite the most dire predictions of the Opposition, Canada is in better shape than it has been for decades. But that fact has not stopped the critics and the naysayers. These same people said that our economic policies introduced in 1984-85 would cost hundreds of thousands of Canadians their jobs. They were wrong. Instead, more than one million new jobs have been created since 1984. Those same people today in the Opposition say that free trade threatens our very existence as a people and a nation. They will be proved wrong once again.

The opponents of free trade have, to date, fought this initiative not through engaging the federal Government in debate on the merits of what the agreement contains, but by raising the spectre of dangers that do not exist, a process that is designed to confuse and to scare the public. Today I join this debate to outline the benefits of free trade to the region and to the people I know best, those of eastern Ontario.

Let me place this latest initiative in its true context. The last time Canada was faced with a free trade debate was in 1911. If we had got together then at some town hall meeting, we would have all arrived by horse and buggy and everyone would have learned of the meeting by newspaper or word of mouth since telephones at that time were not in wide use. In short, we lived in a different world. We now live in a world of satellites and instant communications where decisions taken across an ocean may affect our business dealings the same day.

Where does Canada fit into this modern world? We fit in as the odd man out. Canada is a trading nation but it is in a world of trading blocs. To the south lies the United States of America, 50 states in one economic union with a population of 260 million people. It is a trading bloc unto itself. Second, there is the European Economic Community, which is comprised of 16 nations with a total population of 320 million people. Third, there is Japan and the Pacific Rim nations with hundreds of millions of people. Fourth, the Soviet bloc countries have their own trading organization known as Comecon. Fifth, Brazil and Argentina signed a free trade agreement earlier this year. Sixth, Australia and New Zealand have recently gone into a free trade agreement. Then there is Canada with 25 million people dependent on trade for prosperity, but we are not a member of any trading bloc, thus we have no leverage, no protection and, yes, we are vulnerable.

We are vulnerable to the wars between the trading blocs. The United States has already demonstrated that with the grain price war. Also we are vulnerable to action taken against us by trading blocs. The United States Congress proved that when it turned protectionist. Industries like softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, hogs and steel suffered severe damage and heavy losses. Many companies went bankrupt. Worse still, workers lost their jobs.

The opponents of free trade say we should stick with the status quo. The examples of the last two years have shown that that is really not a true option. Opponents of the free trade agreement say we will lose our sovereignty. It was only a week ago that Prime Minister Thatcher addressed this House and observed that concerns about our cultural sovereignty were unfounded, just as those same concerns on the part of some of her countrymen about EEC membership were proven unfounded.

Our critics say that this comparison will not work, that we are too small, that the U.S. neighbour is too big. I say to them that the island of the United Kingdom had a free trade agreement before it joined the European Economic Community. Were the Irish ever less sovereign? Were they less Irish because of it? I think not, Madam Speaker. After England joined the European Economic Community, did it lose its sovereignty? Is Maggie Thatcher not the Prime Minister of an independent country? Isn't Queen Elizabeth the sovereign Queen of an independent state? For that matter, look at Australia and New Zealand. They signed a free trade agreement to be phased in over 10 years. It worked so well that the process was shortened to a six-year period. Are New Zealanders any less sovereign? Did the agreement keep New Zealand from taking a radically different international position from Australia on the issue of nuclear arms on visiting U.S. nuclear-powered warships?

We have been working toward freer trade for some 40 years. At the end of the Second World War, the average tariffs in this country were 35 per cent. Today, where tariffs apply at all, the average is 9 per cent or 10 per cent. Eighty per cent of our trade with the United States is already duty free. Trade barriers have been steadily lowered for decades. Is Canada less sovereign because of that? Have Canadians lost jobs because of that? Of course not. In fact, in that period of time we have become more prosperous. This free trade agreement really just completes the process. It phases our the remaining tariffs with the United States over the next 10 years.

When our Government embarked on negotiating freer trade with the United States it was understood that Canada, and all its regions, depends on trade for its prosperity. We set out to achieve a bilateral agreement with the United States, our largest trading partner, while at the same time pursuing global negotiations and initiatives. In fact, if we do not like the free trade deal with the United States after trying it, then the ultimate act of sovereignty is to cancel it, and we can do so with a mere six months' notice.

In my view the free trade agreement negotiated with the United States presents eastern Ontario with its greatest opportunity ever to catch up with other parts of the province in our manufacturing sector and in getting our share of the high quality, high skilled jobs which our children seek as their future career choices, their future career options. That is the message I am hearing from business, from professionals and from academics in my region, the people who understand what the vocal opponents of free trade do not, that in this modern world there are linkages between trade, technology and investment which are the keys to job creation.

In my own federal riding of Lanark—Renfrew—Carleton my office surveyed 155 manufacturers. Some 68 per cent of the respondents favoured an agreement with the United States which would eliminate tariffs and reduce other trade barriers to the flow of goods and services between both countries. I believe that free trade is Canada's best best bet for greater diversification and more growth. I ask the people to consider those remarks. I do so because I believe the greatest danger to our Canadian way of life lies not in the prosperity of free trade, but in the poverty of protectionism. If we fail to go forth to expand, to progress, then we will not be able to afford the regional development, the social and cultural programs which are a reality and reflect Canadian values.

I do not have to tell you, Madam Speaker, that the Great Depression of the 1930s started with a stock market crash, but far fewer people understand that the Depression lasted a decade because of short-sighted trade protectionism around the world. Should we turn and run from the opportunities of freer trade? If we choose to retreat behind protectionist walls, I fear we could repeat the mistakes of the past and suffer the consequences.

I am as dedicated a Canadian nationalist as anyone. I believe that the freer trade agreement is the only path to follow to ensure the economic future of my region, in this province and in this country. That is why in the end I am confident that after this debate it is not the shrill negative voices of our critics that will prevail but, rather, the common sense of Canadians who have decided on its merits that this important economic opportunity must be pursued.

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House to express my astonishment and indeed embarrassment at the Government's decision to end the debate on the Mulroney-Reagan agreement. I am, as they say in English, appalled at the way the Government has dealt with the impact on women, when we know that this particular group stands to lose the most. Since the Conservative Government came to power, its members have said constantly that giving women their rightful place was one of their priorities. But look at what this Government is doing, and look at this agreement: sadly, the Mulroney-Reagan agreement contains no protection for women and minorities.

For instance, we know that 63 per cent of workers in the service industries are women, and Canada not only has to compete with the U.S. but also with developing countries that will produce and are in fact producing and exporting goods at far lower cost. Many women who work in the services industry have little education. Many are immigrants who speak neither English nor French. If these women lose their jobs, they will have a hard time finding other jobs because it is very likely no retraining will be provided in the services sector. We have asked the Government many times to include this as one of the conditions for the service sector, so that women can retrain for other jobs, especially when we realize that over 65 per cent of single-parent families are headed by women, who in that case are the sole breadwinner. Of course this Government has always refused to commit itself. I would like to quote from a study prepared in Ontario.

[English]

In the Ontario study it indicated that 44 per cent of women's jobs in manufacturing will be vulnerable under free trade. That works out to 100,000 jobs being lost. A Quebec study estimated that at least 30,000 jobs in Quebec would be in jeopardy. The job loss could be due to several things. First, the manufacturing industry in Canada is dominated by American subsidiaries. Once the U.S. has access to our markets it will take companies out of Canada to areas where labour is cheaper and where there are fewer labour standards.

Second, as pressure is raised on businesses to cut costs and become competitive under free trade many companies will replace jobs with high technology. This rationalization of production will mean heavy job losses for women.

Within the service industry the impact of women's jobs will be even greater. For services that are international, that is, banking, telecommunications, education, health, accounting and others, women make up 82 per cent of the labour force. Canada's economy is a service economy. We rely on the service sector to generate jobs and to increase our GNP. Services account for two thirds of the national income and provide 70 per cent of jobs in Canada.

Moreover, historically free trade agreements, such as the GATT, have had as their focus the liberalization of trade in merchandise and have not dealt with liberalizing trade in the service industry. The important point here with respect to services is that we have not yet defined what services will be affected by the trade agreement. This service industry might include such things as medical care and child care and thus will affect women as consumers and as employees within those industries.

[Translation]

We know that today, daycare is one of our priorities in Canada and that the Conservative Government has said it is committed to tabling a child care program before the next election. This is probably one of the services that will be affected by the agreement. Today, American companies are sending us proposals for establishing daycare services in the provinces, especially in the West. I know what I am talking about because I have copies of letters, asking me what I thought and whether I would agree to approve their projects. So in some provinces we are going to see a series of daycare centres run by American companies, centres that will not be subject to Canadian regulations and that will be able to operate, whatever the Government of Canada may decide to do. Madam Speaker, I object to this approach because I don't think we can treat daycare centres like some kind of McDonald chain, because children are much too important for that. This is one of the services where standards will not be observed, and where the emphasis will be on operating daycare centres at a profit. I don't think children should be used to make money.

This is only the tip of the iceberg. The social services sector includes services that would take care of handicapped children and children who are mentally disturbed. There would also be homes for single mothers. There are not many of these today. And it also includes ambulance services and rehabilitation clinics. If private companies are asked to operate these services, well, private services are often less accessible and far more expensive. Fewer people would have access, and we would have two classes of Canadians, like the present situation in the United States.

I was invited by the U.S. Government on a three week tour in 1984, to take a look at the women's programs and other programs set up by the Reagan administration. I later wrote to the President to say that I appreciated the trip, but that since he was elected, there were far more elderly people, including women, sleeping on the sidewalks; that all job retraining programs for women had been cut and that his record in this respect was pretty poor.

So we really have to do something, and this is one of the reasons why I am totally against free trade, because I get the impression that Mr. Reagan is the one who will be calling the shots.

[English]

The United States has challenged many Canadian Government programs claiming that they are barriers to trade. These include unemployment insurance, subsidized business, regional development and tax incentives. The pressure will be on the Canadian Government to stop intervening and let market forces prevail. This could prevent any kind of affirmative action programs focused on encouraging equity in employment by means of tax relief. It could also, and will undoubtedly, preclude industrial training programs which now benefit women. It will challenge the extension of maternity benefits through unemployment insurance as an unfair subsidy to employers.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, we know that maternity leave is not granted automatically in the United States and that this is left up to each employer, whereas in Canada, mothers are granted a minimum number of weeks off, and we are attempting to obtain parental leave as well. And so this is totally unacceptable.

Madam Speaker, I protest, and I have this to say to the Government. If free trade is as important as the Government says it is, it absolutely cannot conclude such an agreement without having done something quite specific for women, who make up 52 per cent of the population. And, at this time, I find the Conservative Government's approach to women and employment in Canada totally unacceptable. Let me reiterate that is is totally unacceptable! Furthermore, I am asking Canadian women to remember this, since we are heading for an election, and to remember how the Conservative Government handled their priorities.

[English]

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. I am sorry that it has to follow on the heels of the vote to limit debate on the free trade agreement.

This free trade agreement is of such historic importance to Canada that, regardless of which side one is on in the debate, we should debate it thoroughly, comprehensively and for however long it takes to cover the document without rushing it through. The speed with which the Government is trying to get this free trade agreement through is illustrated by the fact that the Minister who is in charge of selling the deal has not even had the time to read it.

I would have thought that we should have continued the debate, even if for no reason other than to give the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister who is in charge of selling the sell-out of Canada, the opportunity to read the document. Perhaps, having read it, he might change his mind about the quality of the document.

The question I want to focus on is whether or not there is anything to fear with regard to the free trade agreement that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has made with the American President.

Mr. McDermid: Hysteria of the NDP.

Mr. Keeper: I want to raise that question because of what I have heard from my hon. friend across the way. We in the Opposition have been accused of raising fears unnecessarily, of playing to the fears of people without cause. The Government has been using that line to try to convince people to rest easy about the free trade agreement. Government Members have said that it is just the Opposition raising unfounded fears while in fact what we have is a deal that is great for Canada.

Not only have government Members been saying this but they have been putting these words in the mouths of other world leaders. They attempted to use the Economic Summit to sell their sell-out of Canada. Of course, they got the full co-operation of the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher.

Mrs. Thatcher came before this Chamber and said to Canadians: "You have nothing to fear from free trade, it will do you nothing but good, it will not harm your identity whatsoever". She said in Canada that there is nothing to fear from the harmonization of policies with the Americans, from having closer economic links with the Americans. She said that there will be nothing but prosperity ahead of us and that we have nothing to fear.

What happened once Mrs. Thatcher went home? What happened to the Iron Lady when she got back to Britain? She was under pressure from the European Economic Community to co-ordinate her policies more closely with those of the European Economic Community, to establish a central European bank and to turn over the British central bank to the European Economic Community. What did she say to that? Did she tell the people of Britain that they have nothing to fear, this will bring them greater prosperity, let us make this great leap of faith? That is what she told Canadians, but when she got home to Britain, she told her own people that she said no to having a European central bank.

As far as I know, Mrs. Thatcher did not explain in any great detail why she said no to that, but an official of her Government said quite clearly that if Britain were to agree to this greater harmonization of economic policies with Europe and to the creation of a central bank of Europe, they would first have to give up the British House of Commons because the British House of Commons would be stripped of its power to direct the British economy.

Mr. McDermid: There is nothing in the free trade agreement that calls for a central bank.

Mr. Keeper: I hear the Tory puppies whimpering over there, saying that that is not in the free trade agreement. Of course, there is no present policy in the free trade agreement providing for a central bank between Canada and the United States, but the policy direction is the same. The direction is toward the harmonization of economic policies. In fact, every Canadian knows that it is a very rare occasion on which our central bank follows a different interest rate policy than that of the United States Federal Reserve. We already have a de facto lock-step branch plant central bank. We are already marching in harmony with the Americans when it comes to monetary policy.

The point I am making is that Mrs. Thatcher sings two tunes. She sings a tune of praise for free trade when in Canada. She tells us that we do not have to worry about the sovereignty of our country or about the powers of Parliament, we will continue to have plenary powers and there is nothing to fear. However, when she turns her back on us and goes back to Britain and is faced with demands from the European Economic Community, she says no because she knows that to acquiesce to such demands means a weakening, an undercutting, a sabotaging of the powers of the British Parliament. She is asking Canadians to accept a weaker House of Commons, a diluted House of Commons, while she herself will not put up with that.

Mrs. Thatcher reassured us that, based on her experience with the European Economic Community, Canada has nothing to fear from entering into a deal with the United States. Yet even the Iron Lady is being forced to succumb. While she was saying no to a European central bank, to a weakening of the British House of Commons, she was forced to acquiesce to a request to become part of a committee studying how to co-ordinate the monetary policies of Europe and of Great Britain, a first step down the road to a European central bank. It is first step down the road to weakening the British House of Commons. Even the Iron Lady has been forced by the pressures of entering into this kind of deal to move in a direction that will eventually weaken and sabotage the British House of Commons.

We know that we in this country have no assurance of having a Prime Minister who has the courage to stand up for principle and to stand up to foreign adversaries. We have someone who offers a smile to every slap in the face.

The point I want to make is that Canadians have good reason to be concerned about the deal that our Prime Minister has made with the United States. The reassurances of Margaret Thatcher aside, these fears are based on a sound analysis of the free trade agreement. When it comes to investment, this House is giving up the power to set a policy for screening foreign investment, a screening which would see whether or not the foreign investment is to the benefit of Canada. We are being asked to give up the powers of this House to do that under the free trade agreement. At the same time, the Americans are suddenly becoming concerned about foreign investment and are considering policies for screening, controlling and evaluating the benefits of foreign investment in their economy. The Americans are going to be raising their heads when it comes to questioning foreign investment and our hands are going to be tied behind our backs because of this agreement. All of this without an opportunity for the Canadian people to say whether or not they agree with the Government that the agreement is good for Canada, or they agree with the Opposition that there are real grounds for concern and the agreement ought to be put aside and some other more effective way found to regulate our trading relationship with the Americans.

• (1650)

All this agreement has led to is what Mrs. Thatcher said it would not lead to, a weakening of this House of Commons. We on this side of the House stand for sovereignty for Canada, a stronger Canada, a stronger Canadian economy, and we ask those people across the way to read the agreement, wake up, and stand up for Canada.

Mr. Kenneth Albert James (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to enter this debate on the importance of the free trade initiative. First, I would like to comment on some of the things that have just been said, especially with respect to centralized banking. Nothing like that is even talked about in the agreement. The Hon. Member talked about not reading the agreement. I have a feeling that perhaps he did not have the opportunity to read the agreement. One of the reasons we wanted the agreement was so that we could secure our access to the American market for investment by Canadians as well as investment by Americans in our country.

I would like to speak today about Sarnia—Lambton as it is affected by the agreement. That is an area very important to me, of course, because that is where I come from. It is the petrochemical centre of the east, and so this agreement is very important to us. The petroleum refining and petrochemical industry accounts for over 50 per cent of all employment in that area. I would like to quote from a statement made by Bill McCagherty, a Vice-President of Dow Chemical of Canada, which has its headquarters in Sarnia—Lambton. He said:

> We would be hard to beat. Sarnia has an ample supply of feedstocks, a highly skilled labour force and a competitive energy position. Unobstructed access to the large, adjacent U.S. market will lead to expansion.

What could be more positive in our area than expansion? It will make available more jobs to our young people graduating from university.

Sarnia—Lambton chemical valley is efficient, world scale and competitive. The industry has supported broad tariff removal with the U.S. for many years. U.S. import tariffs on petrochemicals range as high as 18 per cent, and have been a major impediment to our industry's ability to expand. Under the FTA, both U.S. and Canadian petrochemical tariffs will be phased out over a five to ten-year period. That is important and everyone across the country knows it. The industry was ecstatic. They thought that if we got an agreement to get those tariffs down in ten years we would be doing a great job.

The proximity of the industry to its major customers in Canada and the United States, and the supplier-consumer relations established over many years, will reduce the potential impact of increased competition from the U.S. gulf coast producers.

Ontario is Canada's second largest producer of petrochemicals after Alberta, accounting for 35 per cent of Canadian productive capacity. Since oil and gas represent up to 70 per cent of the cost of petrochemical production, availability and pricing are of critical importance to the industry. Tariffs of 7.5 per cent to 18 per cent are a significant factor in the Canada-U.S. petrochemical trade. Traditionally, the more upgraded the product in Canada, the higher the U.S. tariff. Some Hon. Member opposite said that under GATT these tariffs would be removed in the year 2000 or so. I tell him that those tariffs in existence today are troublesome to us because they involve downstream type of work, and a real example of that is the petrochemical industry.

The Leaders of both Opposition Parties have talked about tearing up this agreement. Imagine the importance of this industry in both Sarnia—Lambton and in Alberta. Think of the jobs. The tariff on the industry's products is 17.5 per cent now. There is a five-year countdown for removal of that tariff, so 20 per cent of it will have been removed in the first year. The opposition Parties are going to tear up the agreement and tell the petrochemical industry in Canada, "we are going to raise your prices so that you are less competitive in the American market". Imagine what would happen. That illustrates the ridiculous aspect of this threat to tear up the agreement.

This agreement is so good for Sarnia—Lambton that I want to read another statement, and I think the entire House will be interested in this. It is this:

> I think that we feel there are some winners in the free trade agreement and I would think that the petrochemical industry is one.

Let me tell you who said that. It was Monte Kwinter, the provincial Industry Minister.

Mr. McDermid: A Liberal!

Mr. James: What do you think of that? Monte Kwinter, the Liberal Industry Minister in the Province of Ontario said that very emphatically not too many months ago in Sarnia.

Petrochemicals are heavily export-dependent. Exports account for 40 per cent of our $4 billion worth of production. The U.S. is by far Canada's most important petrochemical trading partner, taking about 60 per cent of Canadian exports. We see a tremendously wide open market with the removal of those tariffs. Within a 500-mile radius of Sarnia—Lambton you will find 54 per cent of the U.S. payroll, some 54 per cent of its manufacturing activity and, what is important to Ontario is that our per capita exports are $6,545 compared to $4,700 for all of Canada.

I talked to you about what Mr. Kwinter has said. I would like to tell you about some of the other statements made by people in our community. This is what the general manager of the Chamber of Commerce said:

> In Sarnia—Lambton the impact of the Free Trade Agreement would be enormous. Access to the larger U.S. market for petrochemicals in particular would stimulate our economy greatly, increasing profits and allowing for further growth and more jobs.
> If we are to survive the pressures of changing global conditions we must align ourselves with a significant trading partner to remain competitive with the well positioned European and Pacific Rim trading blocs. Without this alliance we will find ourselves quite alone against these stronger trading partnerships.
> Sarnia—Lambton can be big winners with a free trade deal, and like the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and this Canadian Chamber of Commerce we would strongly encourage the passing of the critical initiative.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I will have to interrupt the Hon. Member at this time but there will be two minutes left in his time after we complete Private Members' Business.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[Translation]

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

SUGGESTED REPEAL OF SECTION 17

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 26, 1988, consideration of the motion of Mr. Redway:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted, each year, to Parliament for approval.

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, as my colleague from Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) has indicated, there are essentially two kinds of remission orders.

First, there are a few tariff remission orders of substantial dollar value whose purpose is to promote specific industrial developments. Such duty remissions are given conditional on firms meeting performance requirements with respect to investment, production or employment in Canada.

Use of remission orders in this manner might be called the equivalent of a "program". The purposes of such programs will be examined subsequently by one of my colleagues. I might mention, however, that as a result of the free trade agreement, no new remission programs conditional on performance can be introduced after June 30 of this year or after the agreement is approved by the U.S. Congress, whichever comes later, and existing programs of this type must be terminated before 1988.

I propose to examine the other major use of remission orders— in their functions as a fair and timely remedy. I might call the attention of the House to the fact that this is the reason why most remission orders have been granted over the years.

My argument will be that remissions for timely and equitable relief fulfill a useful and necessary function in our tax and tariff systems. Any reasonable system needs a "remedy of last resort" of this kind. I would also submit that the motion of the Member for York East would defeat the purpose of this useful instrument.

Remission orders to deal with unfairness usually come from two sources, Madam Speaker, corresponding to ministerial responsibilities. The Minister of Finance has the responsibility for tax and tariff policy. In the last six months, he sponsored or co-sponsored a total of two tax remission orders—on the grounds that failing to remedy the problems in question would have offended against the principles of a good tax system. In one case, double taxation was involved. In the other case, retroactive taxation would have been involved as a result of a change in legislation.

The vast majority of remissions on grounds of fairness, however, arise in the administration of the tax and tariff system and are sponsored by the Minister of National Revenue. These orders deal with cases of hardship, administrative error, anomalies and unreasonable applications of tax laws or the Customs Tariff.

As Members will know, a taxpayer is barred by statute from claiming relief for an error in filing taxes if the period in which amended returns can be submitted has expired. Remission orders are occasionally given where extreme hardship results or the circumstances were beyond the control of the taxpayer.

A case from the 1986 Public Accounts illustrates the process, Madam Speaker. The recipient of PC 1985-2/3341 was an Iranian resident who was, at the relevant time, prohibited from leaving Iran and was unable to communicate with anyone in Canada since it was dangerous for Iranians to own property outside of Iran. One can easily sympathize, Madam Speaker, with the reasons why this remission order was given.

Looking at tariff remission orders published in the Gazette or Public Accounts, one can also find many examples where remissions are given because of anomalies in the Customs Tariff. For instance, a remission may be given of the duty on a piece of equipment not available in Canada, used to produce a product which can be imported duty free.

Finally, Madam Speaker, in any tax and tariff system, there are inevitably and regrettably administrative errors. Remission orders are also used to compensate the taxpayer or importer for such errors.

These procedures of remitting taxes and tariffs are an exceptional power, Madam Speaker, and the House might like to be assured that they are used only after careful consideration. I can supply that assurance.

In cases involving administration of the tax system, an internal Committee within Revenue Canada considers requests for remission. Further, tariff remissions are recommended only after detailed examination by an interdepartmental Committee and thorough consultations with parties who might be affected.

There are further steps in the approval process. The larger industrial tariff remission programs are always submitted to Cabinet. All tax remission orders now have to be approved by Treasury Board. Finally, all remission orders are examined by the Special Committee of the Council.

Many of the cases I have mentioned constitute the only available remedy to rectify unfairness after the fact. There is another important function of remission orders, however, and that is to provide timely relief where a problem is ongoing or continuous.

As Members will recognize, our legislative calendar is crowded and it is a time-consuming process to change legislation. In these circumstances, remission orders may be used until a problem can be corrected by legislation.

A case in point is the "beer cooler" order passed on March 30, 1988. This order originated because a brewer wanted to get into the "hot" cooler market with a product blending both wine and beer. The problem was that excise tax is paid on wine used to produce the blend and another excise tax would apply to the finished product. To avoid double taxation, a remission order was issued. Should there be a continuing demand for this product, no doubt there will be a change proposed in the relevant tax legislation. What the remission order demonstrates, Madam Speaker, is the willingness of the government to act fast to remove roadblocks that would otherwise get in the way of the private sector going about their business.

Of course, Madam Speaker, there is a possible conflict between the levels of approval required in careful use of this exceptional policy instrument and its function of providing timely relief. Indeed, the Auditor-General has complained about the time taken to pass some remission orders. This is one of the reasons why Treasury Board is being removed from the remission approval process. This has already occurred in the case of tariffs and is also being considered for tax remission orders.

Action is also being undertaken to replace other long-standing remission orders by statutory provision. A case in point is the duties that have to be paid on goods admitted for temporary use in Canada.

Present practice is to remit all but a specified fraction of the full duty on these products and to record this as a remission. When these temporary entries are covered by regulation in the near future, over $200 million will disappear from the value of remission orders recorded in the Public Accounts.

Madam Speaker, that is my position concerning the motion sponsored by my colleague, and I should think it faithfully reflects the Government position in this debate.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on this particular motion. This motion attempts to increase the accountability of the Government of Canada to the Parliament of Canada and, consequently, to the people of Canada.

The Member for York East (Mr. Redway), and in fact all of his colleagues on the Public Accounts Committee, believe very strongly that there is a real need to increase the accountability of the Government in ways which make it possible to zero in on expenditures which can be looked at. In doing so we found that there are a lot of tax expenditures made by the Government by very simple strokes of the pen which no one can really get their hands on. Not only are we concerned that this can be done easily, there is no mechanism to require Parliament to pass such expenditures.

Government Departments must include their expenditures within the Estimates that are passed by Parliament. However, Government expenditures in the form of tax remissions or credits do not have to pass through Parliament. Consequently, one could almost call these illegal expenditures because a fundamental principle is that such expenditures must be approved by the Parliament of Canada.

According to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act, the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it is in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty. In theory, this may be money being paid to the Government which it is turning back, perhaps for a good reason. However, parliamentary democracy requires that those types of expenditures, even indirect expenditures, should be made by the Parliament of Canada. That is not the case with remission orders, and that is why I support the motion of the Hon. Member for York East which suggests that Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act be repealed and that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted each year to Parliament for approval.

While this may sound like a long and involved process, it would not take long to pass it through the House and would require Members to consider what happens in the remission process. For example, the Public Accounts of Canada, Volume II, contains many pages of remission orders which have never been passed by Parliament. They have only been registered as expenditures that have taken place.

The repeal of Section 17 and the addition of a requirement for parliamentary approval would establish control over a considerable amount of money. The latest Public Accounts of Canada, fiscal year 1986-87, contains 36 pages of remission orders totalling over $1 billion. Certain remission orders amounted to over $1 million in themselves, so we are not only concerned with small amounts of money.

A principle of democracy is that everyone be treated the same. This section of the Financial Administration Act allows Cabinet to return tax to anyone at any time for any reason. This leaves room for inequality when Parliament can only consider the Public Accounts reports that are filed perhaps a year after the expenditures have been made or moneys theoretically returned.

There are many good reasons for these remission orders and in most cases Parliament would approve them without difficulty. The point is that they would be considered by Parliament.

The tax credit is not covered by this Act, but the principle is the same. The previous Liberal Government provided for a research tax credit which companies that applied could use for a reduction in taxes. The tax credit cost us some $3.4 billion. We might have saved a considerable amount of that if the research tax credit were open to parliamentary scrutiny so that the list of applicants and the credits would have to be approved before the reduction in taxes were allowed. That is the type of procedure that has been suggested in this motion.

We need to review the process of tax expenditure to make sure that all tax money that is spent or credits that are given are authorized by the Parliament of Canada. It has been suggested that 30 per cent more in funds would go to Government coffers with the elimination of all tax expenditures and remission orders. I know that will not happen, but the point is that the remission of tax orders and the tax credit structure accounts for a very substantial part of expenditure. We must examine how to improve the whole structure.

The Public Accounts Committee has dealt with a number of remission orders. One of them is the Hudson's Bay Oil and Gas Company Limited, which cost us $400 million. It is that kind of operation which Parliament should be able to scrutinize before it takes place.

• (1720)

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Madam Speaker, first, I want to express my congratulations to the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) for introducing this particular motion. It is very important that Canadians understand as much about this process as they possibly can since it is so important to us all.

I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on tariff remission under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and the new tariff remission authority, Section 101 of the Customs Tariff.

The last time this motion was debated, two of the speakers talked about the openness and accountability of the remission process. Earlier today, we heard about fairness and equity in the process. I would like at this time to speak in greater detail about the tariff remission process itself. I believe that this is important because, as noted during the last debate by my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent), there is in fact a rather low level of public understanding of the workings of the tax and tariff remission system.

Prior to January 1, 1988, tariff remissions were introduced pursuant to Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. However, with the introduction of the new Customs Tariff on that date, most tariff remissions are now made pursuant to Section 101 of the Customs Tariff. As such, most remissions of customs duties would be outside the scope of the motion currently before the House. However, there will no doubt be occasions where certain remissions may still be introduced under Section 17, notably those affecting imports made prior to January 1, 1988.

While the wording of the tariff remission authorities allows a very broad use without any real restriction, in fact, the vast majority of duty remissions are introduced primarily as remedies in specific cases where the application of the tariff laws and regulations would lead to anomalous, inequitable, or unreasonable results or hardship. The Order in Council remission authorities allow for a quick response by the Government in these very disturbing cases. On March 31, 1988, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) introduced the first report to Parliament on remission orders.

I would like to point out some cases that were sometimes anomalous, inequitable, unreasonable and caused hardship. In this respect I would like to list just a few of the remissions that have been granted, as well as the dollar amounts involved. In 1987, the remission of a customs duty and a portion of the sales tax paid or payable on stoves and ovens imported into Canada by Riverside Lions Non-Profit Housing of Winnipeg, which is in my riding, amounted to $9,940. This was done to assist this group in its efforts to furnish apartments for the disabled with stoves and ovens with special features designed to meet the needs of handicapped persons. That was a very important use of a remission order.

Again, in 1987, on the basis of extreme hardship, the amount remitted for a refund that would have been payable to the taxpayer had she filed on time was $654.

Further, in 1988, to prevent financial hardship to a gentleman, particularly in recognition of the fact that the repairs made to his vehicle were covered by warranty with a company in the United States, some $2,676 was remitted.

Again, in 1988, an order remitted on the grounds of administrative error concerning a 1982 tax and interest charge relating to a statute-barred claim for partial dependency of a physically infirm brother was $212.

Again, in 1988, a remission order conditionally remitted on the grounds of an administrative error statute-barred income tax for 1981 and 1982 on registered pension plan contributions which could not benefit from a tax free roll-over to an RRSP was $3,258. The condition was that the funds minus the pension deduction must be transferred to an RRSP before 1988.

We can see that these remission orders are very often granted to rectify cases of extreme hardship to individuals and to groups doing good things in our society.

The primary responsibility for these tariff remissions rests with the Department of Finance. Tariff remissions introduced for administrative reasons are sponsored by Revenue Canada.

The role of the Treasury Board with respect to the remission process under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act has been to provide a central ministerial forum in which to discuss and debate proposed remissions, in particular the most contentious ones. The board makes recommendations on remission proposals to a special committee of Council, which in turn makes the final recommendation to the Governor-General in Council. The remission process usually starts with a representation to the Government. Most of these are received from importers or Canadian manufacturers who believe that, for one reason or another, they should be granted tariff relief on particular products that they are importing. It is very important on an ongoing basis that there be extensive consultation carried out with all the parties who might be affected by this remission.

The Government of Canada has made several improvements to the duty remission process. First, there is a new regulatory process which requires that a regulatory impact analysis statement be prepared for all tariff remissions, and that the statement be published in the Canada Gazette along with remission orders. Once the remission order has been approved by the Governor in Council, it is published in the Canada Gazette. This is another recent improvement in the process since, in the past, not all orders were gazetted.

Furthermore, all orders remitting over $20 million in duties are tabled in the House shortly after being approved. It is very clear that a $20 million level is set at one place while my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East, would want it to be much lower than that. In another Private Bill to be discussed by the House, Bill C-287, a suggestion is being made that orders over $1 million be tabled in this House before being approved. I think all of us want to recognize that remission orders are very important to the people to whom they are granted. I would not quibble if the $20 million level were set down considerably lower than that.

If the foregoing were not enough to make the remission process open and accountable, the Minister of Finance has undertaken to table in the House, twice a year, a report on all new remissions giving information on their costs and the reasons why they were introduced.

It is rather obvious from this report to Parliament on remission orders that these are done by and large for needy and worth-while cases in small dollar amounts. None of us would want to discontinue the process of granting small dollar remissions for very important causes to individual Canadians. What is at stake here is the accountability of Parliament and the fairness of these decisions.

In closing, I will say that the Government of Canada and the Minister of Finance have introduced several changes which make the system more accountable and more fair. None of us would quibble with any suggestions that Hon. Members would make to make the system even fairer and more accountable. I offer the following comment. If we were to introduce every single remission order for adoption in Parliament, then very important cases, very needy cases, might be unnecessarily delayed in a bureaucratic fashion.

I wish to commend the Hon. Member for York East on his suggestion that remission orders be made more accountable to the House of Commons, but would suggest that having every single one of them heard here might in fact hurt those people who the Hon. Member is trying to support.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join in this debate and say a few things about the motion that is before us. It is a motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). The motion states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted, each year, to Parliament for approval.

Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act states that the Governor in Council, on the recommendation of the Treasury Board, whenever he considers it in the public interest, may remit any tax, fee or penalty. Remission orders are somewhat different from tax expenditures. Parliament has to vote on tax expenditures. In remission orders there is no scrutiny by Parliament, or accountability by the Cabinet to Parliament. It is totally a decision by Cabinet on recommendations from the Treasury Board. That is how remission orders work.

While we support the thrust of the motion of the Hon. Member for York East, it seems to me that there is something more to it than just giving the information to The Gazette, and it is more than having the information. That is only a small part of it. In this review process I do not think that all remission orders need to be looked at. One has to realize that some are for very small amounts and time should not be spent reviewing all of them. I agree with the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) that tax remissions of $1 million and up ought to be reviewed.

However, there is more to it than that. We need to know the rationale behind the tax remission. Why was it given? What was the reason for the tax remission? Why was this money turned back to the taxpayer corporation or individual? There must be a statement of explanation from the applicant for the tax remission.

I recognize that many are justifiable. For example, investors in the Principal Group were being taxed on interest that they had not received. It is only fair that a remission order should be put in abeyance to collect that tax, because the investors had not collected the interest from their investment in the Principal Group. That makes sense.

There is one example that I have had difficulty with, and my colleague, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore, has raised it in the House. I wish to give him credit for that. One has to keep in mind that it is a Conservative Government and these ideas are coming from Conservative back-benchers. It is important that we keep the focus. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore has raised the question about Goodyear Tire Inc. in his riding. That company has received $63 million in tax and duty remissions. It has a bit of a fight going on with the union in the shop. It wants to get rid of the union. There are provisions for that type of thing within the Labour Act. Lo and behold, Goodyear has decided to close down its operation in the riding of Etobicoke—Lakeshore and move down the road to Napanee. It has received $63 million in tax and duty remissions. Then the Peterson Liberal Government of Ontario runs in and says: "Here, you will need some money to start a plant in Napanee, so we'll give you $32 million". Out of the public largesse, the Ontario Government has given Goodyear $32 million to locate in Napanee.

As one studies this particular case one finds out that Goodyear's headquarters in Akron, Ohio, has readjusted its administrative charge structure to the branch plant at Etobicoke—Lakeshore and it will receive the bulk of that $63 million. The bulk of that $63 million will be siphoned off in a pipeline to Akron, Ohio, from the Treasury of Ottawa, and zipped off to the parent company in Akron, Ohio. Members of Parliament have not and will not have an opportunity to review that situation.

When Goodyear does not pay that $63 million, someone else has to pay it. When companies such as Goodyear do not pay their share of taxes, the ordinary Canadian out there has to pick up the shortfall. I do not believe that in a democracy where that type of remission is being given it ought to go unexamined by those who are elected to Parliament to do that job.

While we support the general thrust of the motion of the Hon. Member for York East, we do believe that not only should there be a review, but there should be a statement of explanation accompanying each of those remission orders. As I stated previously, we do not need to look at all remission orders, but a good starting point would be anything from a million dollars up.

If we can approve this particular motion, it does not necessarily mean that the system will be changed tomorrow. I hope that anyone who is watching or listening understands that. This is simply a motion that suggests to the Government that this is what ought to be done. It is a suggestion that is coming from a Conservative back-bencher, and it is supported by other Progressive Conservatives. I know it is a contradiction in terms to think that there is such a thing as a Progressive Conservative, but there is the odd one. I want to make the plea that there is an odd closet Progressive Conservative sitting on the back-benches, or on the front benches. The Government would do well to listen to those voices of reason. From time to time they do have the odd reasonable suggestion, and this is one for which the Government would find support from the NDP side of the House. I do not know where the Liberals stand on it, but the NDP would certainly support a move to give this type of accountability to the whole question of tax and duty remissions.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made a speech in February, 1984, to the Young Presidents' Organization, at which time he called for changes in the administration of the Government of Canada, opening up the process to greater public scrutiny, and particularly a more important role for elected representatives in the decision-making process. I believe that that was very firmly part of the mandate for change that came later in that year of 1984.

If that is the general proposition, it has to come to rest in particular terms. No better example could be found than in the practice of the Government in granting remission orders under Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act. This practice developed over some time. Previous Governments were counselled to use Section 17 in an ever-expanding interpretation. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) who spoke a few moments ago correctly stated that the purpose of Section 17 was to correct the anomalies, the patent injustices, and the unusual workings of the Income Tax Act.

What we have seen happen, in addition to that, has been the practice for Governments to use remission orders as a means for implementing industrial policy. No one would say that Governments should not have an industrial policy. But the point here is that an industrial policy should not be carried out in a hip-pocket or off-the-record fashion, which Orders in Council granting remission orders are, but rather here on the floor of the House of Commons where Members on all sides who are informed on these issues would have an opportunity to debate, approve, or oppose.

This is not something that has been a concern only for Members of Parliament. In the 1979 decision of Clarkson Co. Ltd. v. The Queen (1979) 94 D.L.R. (3d) 348, 365, the Chief Justice of the Federal Court of Appeal queried whether Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act was meant to authorize general remission orders which effectively amend the relevant taxing statute, as opposed to the remission of specific tax liability in individual cases.

To me, as a lawyer, that is an extraordinary development when you have a judge opining in the process of a decision that here is a section of the law being used not for its intended purpose but in fact to amend legislation and to do it outside of this Chamber, which is the place where law is passed.

Parliamentarians have focused on this in other forms as well, most certainly the Standing Committee on Public Accounts. The New Democrat Member from Saskatchewan earlier referred to such celebrated cases as the Hudson's Bay oil and gas remission order in 1986, as being worth some $4.5 million, but the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in its Issue No. 26 of its report to this House, estimated the value of that remission order being in fact in excess of $1 billion.

So we are not dealing here with the small amounts that are forgiven from time to time because of unjust workings of the Income Tax Act. We are dealing with the practice that has developed for Governments to use remission orders as a means of implementing industrial policy.

My view is that we have a trend under way now in the House to come to grips with this problem. Certainly, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on March 6 of 1987, when he responded to the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts by letter, saying that he would henceforth table in the House remission orders exceeding $20 million in value, along with an explanation of those remission orders twice yearly, made a step further than what he was strictly required to do. We have the resolution of the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) on the floor today, where he goes all the way, and I understand completely his motivation for this, because he shares the concern which I voiced in this Chamber many times that we have witnessed the use of remission orders but we have also, most assuredly, witnessed the abuse of remission orders. His motion before us is an effort to correct that.

Being a moderate, as I am, perhaps there is a compromise position between the stage to which the Finance Minister has moved to date, namely, $20 million and twice-annual summaries tabled in the House, and the position of the Hon. Member for York East, which is saying that every single remission order, even if it is for $11.14, should come before Parliament.

In the Bill which I have introduced on March 16th of this year, Bill C-287, I am proposing a $1 million threshold, and two further features. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has already referred to this Bill, but there are two further features in it. One is that the remission order be accompanied by a justification report. It would be in this way that the Minister of Finance would explain to Members of the House of Commons what justifies giving such an order, along the lines of what we used to see under the Foreign Investment Review Act when justification had to be given that there was net benefit to Canada for this investment to be made. What is the net benefit to Canada of $63 million being granted, for example, to Goodyear Canada Inc.? What benefits outweigh that cost? These should be specified in a justification report, as I am proposing in my Bill.

Second, I am saying that there should be a 60-day period for those remission orders in the House during which the House can approve them or reject them and, at the end of the 60-day period, because the Government must get on and function, if nothing has been done at the end of 60 days, then those remission orders would take effect, without Parliament having voiced an opinion, yea or nay, on the particular remission orders.

As it stands, we now have the Minister of Finance bringing in his report to Parliament on remission orders. This has already been alluded to by previous speakers. I would like to say why I think this is an inadequate step along the direction that we must be going, although it is a step in the right direction, most assuredly.

The reason I say that—and I am contrasting it to what would be included in the justification report—is that here, for example, if one picks one of the remission orders that I am quite familiar with, that given to Goodyear, one finds that the first column is a description of the order; the second column is a sponsoring department or agency; the third column cites the applicable legislation; the fourth column shows the total amount for the life of the order; and the final, fifth column, gives the reasons for the order. Here is where we begin to come face to face with reality. The reason for this one was, to Goodyear, to facilitate the modernization and rationalization of tire production facilities "in order to prevent further plant closures and thus maintain current production and employment levels".

I am not going to take the few moments available to me now to repeat what I said earlier on the floor of the House, but let me say it in brief compass as follows. Those familiar with the two tire manufacturing plants which Goodyear has in Canada in Valleyfield, Quebec, and Medicine Hat in Alberta, understand well that there is no amount of government assistance that will make any difference to the level of production or the number of jobs at either of those plants, for reasons of market forces and tied selling to the GM plant at Ste Thérèse, Quebec, which last year the Government supported with $210 billion of additional funding. So that production and those jobs are secure.

Then it goes on and says, "to maintain current employment levels". We know in fact that the closure of one plant and the loss of 1,574 jobs in Etobicoke—Lakeshore is matched by the new plant with its projected employment of 800 new jobs. So that in fact is a net loss. This statement in the Minister's report to the House about justifying this report on the basis of maintaining current employment levels does not accurately state what the reality is. It is for that reason that I believe, fundamentally, we should have the opportunity on the floor of the House to hear the contentions made in defence of remission orders, and the opportunity to bring other facts that contradict those on the floor for debate and discussion.

In fact, I would conclude with these two observations. I do not think that any of these efforts, to permit the use of Section 17 or other measures like this, for industrial policy, is the right way to go. Leave remission orders for what they were intended to be, to clear up the anomalous results that are occasionally found—the unfair consequences of the workings of the law. If the Government of the day, of any stripe, feels that it is important to support the Canadian tire industry, then let it bring, on the floor of the House of Commons, a statute called, shall we say, the Canadian Tire Manufacturers Assistance Act, 1988. There we can deal not only with Goodyear, but with Uniroyal and with Michelin, because they both received remission orders as well. We can debate as parliamentarians whether the $100 million or the $200 million that will be the benefit for those companies is worth it. If it is not possible to have that kind of legislation brought before Parliament under the framework of our new trade treaty with the United States then I think we ought to know that as well and we ought to know it now.

Finally, with respect to this continued operation of Section 17 for granting these large remission orders that, in effect, implement industrial policy through the back door, I think the Government could very well find itself open to a legal challenge on this practice. This issue has not for the first time come before the courts. I have already referred to a 1979 decision. It is certainly open to anyone withstanding to seek from the Federal Court a declaratory judgment that the wording of Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act on its face does not support these kinds of tax expenditures, and any authorization of amounts such as this one to Goodyear is outside the wording of Section 17. The authorization would not, therefore, be properly authorized by law and such remission orders would be null and void. I raise as a distinct possibility that that issue could yet be a further chapter in the unfolding battle we have waging before us, that we see the end of the abuse of remission orders and bring true public accountability to the expenditure of public funds.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, the motion before us has been put by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). I know him well and I know his continuing interest in matters, especially those arising out of the Public Accounts Committee on which he has served and for which he has become somewhat well known. The motion states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of repealing Section 17 of the Financial Administration Act and require that all remissions of taxes, fees or penalties be submitted, each year, to Parliament for approval.

I do not have any real difficulty with the general intent of the motion, which is to bring greater accountability to the issuance of remission orders. I question whether or not the motion is sufficiently clear in that it does not really indicate what kind of approval would be sought from Parliament, whether it would be sought for every single remission order or whether it would be sought for matter in advance so that an order could not be granted without parliamentary approval.

Remission orders are used, I believe, because of time constraints sometimes imposed by the House to deal with matters like this in another way. For example, we could pass a Bill if we so chose. But I do not think anyone would suggest that Parliament should pass a Bill to grant a remission order for $654 to remit, on the basis of extreme hardship, the amount of the refund that would have been repayable to the taxpayer had he or she filed on time. Obviously I do not think that this is the intent of the motion, but that has not been made clear.

I suggest that what perhaps we could adopt is a practice whereby enshrined in law could be the tabling of a document by the Minister either annually or semi-annually, which could then be automatically referred to one of the standing committees of Parliament.

We have seen through parliamentary reform that all Governor in Council appointments are now referred to an appropriate standing committee. Speaking from the point of view of the committee with which I am most familiar, namely, the Finance Committee, we resolved that all appointments would be circulated to every member of the committee, and should any member of the committee, Government, Opposition or independent Member wish to have a witness called before the committee, he or she could notify the clerk, and the witness would then be called at an appropriate time. There is, however, very little use of the practice. We called the new Governor of the Bank of Canada earlier this year, but beyond that the practice has not been widely used. The practice has not been followed by other committees either, but that is not to say the practice is not working. What it has done by allowing automatic review of government appointments by a standing committee is to put upon the Government a greater onus to act with a little extra care and to be more conscious of who is appointed to boards, agencies and committees of government because these appointments may be subject to parliamentary scrutiny.

I suggest the same principle could be applied here and that having now received this first report from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who has committed himself to table such a report annually in Parliament, we could enshrine that practice. The current Minister has said he will do that, and I have no doubt he will, but future Ministers may not necessarily continue the practice. If we were to enshrine the need to table such a report semi-annually or annually in Parliament allowing it then to be deemed referred to an appropriate standing committee, the committee would then have the authority to review any or all of the remissions that have been granted. Again, as has been the case with Governor in Council appointments, I suggest that that possibility of scrutiny alone would serve to cause the Government to act with a great deal of care in the granting of such remission orders.

I myself have sought to have a remission order granted for a constituent of mine, so I can understand why the practice needs to be in place. It would allow the Government to act in cases where inequities, anomalies or other things occur that were never contemplated when the Act was passed. As yet I have not been successful but I can describe the case briefly.

A constituent of mine inherited a piece of property from a relative who had passed away. At the time of the death, property values were very high. It was approximately a half section of land and it was fairly near the City of Edmonton. As you know, Madam Speaker, there is under the Income Tax Act a deemed disposition of assets on death giving rise possibly to capital gains taxes. In this particular case, by the time the person received the property the land values had fallen dramatically. Nonetheless, Revenue Canada pursued the matter based on the value at the time of the deemed disposition on death. That value was somewhere around $6 million. My constituent has been unable to sell the property for any value. There was one offer which eventually fell through for something less than $1 million. If that offer had been accepted and received, the amount that would have been received from the sale of land would have been insufficient to cover the tax. The only error my constituent made was to inherit a piece of property. The constituent is now being pursued by Revenue Canada for an amount of tax based on the value of the property at the time it was inherited for which only a fraction of the amount can now be realized.

Here we have a case of hardship, I believe an inequity in the law and an anomaly that was not foreseen. In that kind of case I think there should be an adjustment.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661), and of Mr. Langdon (p. 16673).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House began Private Members' Business, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton had the floor and had two minutes remaining in his time.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for the opportunity to speak again on this very important initiative. I was talking earlier about the importance of this initiative to the people of the Sarnia—Lambton area. Most especially, it is important to our concentration of petrochemical and refining industry businesses there.

I thought another example of what has happened in the past might be interesting to all Hon. Members. In Sarnia, this event provided a major discussion point, particularly when we were attempting to bring ourselves out of the chaos of the National Energy Program which made us purchase feedstocks which were more expensive than those purchased by our American competition.

A company called Detroit Plastics and Moulding was looking for a place to locate. It was considering a number of areas, and the Sarnia area looked especially good to the company because of our proximity to the petrochemical industry streams and the fact that power is less expensive. The dollar was in our favour and the company would have lower operating costs. However, Detroit Plastics built its plant with 100 permanent jobs in Marysville, Michigan, right across the border in the State of Michigan.

While the Sarnia area had many advantages, the one disadvantage we had at the time was the 10 per cent export tariff on the plastic resin. To build an efficient chemical plant to do the mouldings, the company would have to make extra which would have to be exported. It would not be competitive because of that 10 per cent export tariff which would cost over $5 million a year. Therefore we lost the plant.

The Vice-President of Detroit Plastics said that the tariff made the difference between making money and struggling. Had it not been for the tariff, there is no question that he would have had a plant operating in Sarnia.

The petrochemical industry in Canada cannot grow without expanding beyond our domestic supply. Today we have enough capacity to supply our domestic needs for basic chemicals until the year 2000, so that just tells us how important it is to have access to that American market which will be ever growing due to the free trade initiative.

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): I welcome this opportunity, Madam Speaker, to speak in this important debate on the proposed legislation implementing the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Madam Speaker, although we just voted on a motion for time allocation, I think we should ask ourselves why the Government decided to limit debate in this way. Today's discussion is one of the most important ones we have had in this House for some time, and we should ask ourselves what the Government has in mind. Why does it want to limit debate? One of the first answers that comes to mind is that perhaps the Government is afraid Canadians will find out too much about this free trade agreement.

Recent polls have shown that public opinion is starting to change. People are no longer convinced that this agreement is such a good thing for Canada. Maybe that is why the Governnmment wants to push this legislation through the House. We are told, Madam Speaker, that since the Second World War, customs duty dropped from an average of 20 per cent to an average of 9 per cent. We also know that 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is duty free, and that the average duty on the remaining 20 per cent is 9 per cent. So why is the Government rushing to sign an agreement for which it received no mandate? In fact, when he was Leader of the Opposition, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said it would be unwise for Canada to sign an agreement with the United States. He used the metaphor of the mouse that gets in bed with an elephant. It could be a crushing experience!

Today we heard we shouldn't be afraid of the Americans. We should get together and trade and do business with them. Of course we shouldn't be afraid of the Americans. I believe that we as Canadians have enough maturity to take care of ourselves, without clinging to the coattails of the Americans. We shouldn't be afraid of the Americans, but, Madam Speaker, we should not get so close that our identity might be threatened. And I am afraid that this agreement could be a definite threat to our Canadian identity. There lies the danger.

Today we heard Hon. Members comparing the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement to the European Common Market. I don't think we can draw a parallel between the two. It's like comparing apples and oranges. We have a population of 25 million in Canada, while the Americans have ten times that: 250 million. It is indeed an opportunity to be run over and swallowed up. That is where the parallel ends; there is no possible comparison with the European Common Market.

When this agreement was discussed, Canadians were assured that there was no question of signing it unless some concessions were obtained from the Americans. First was guaranteed access to the U.S. market of 250 million consumers. We were also promised, we were told that there would be a commission to settle trade disputes between the two countries. People are trying to have us believe that the agreement gives us guaranteed access to the American market. But I cannot find this guarantee anywhere in the agreement. Access to the U.S. market will only be guaranteed if Canadians produce high quality goods at competitive prices. That is what gives us guaranteed access; the agreement will not be able to do that.

We could talk for a long time about the binational commission. It exists, it is there in the agreement. But unfortunately, this commission has no power except to see whether the countervailing measures sought comply with the law of the country concerned. If so, the commission can do absolutely nothing about it! We are not exempt from duties imposed by American laws.

During the debate, we also said that the Province of New Brunswick supported this free trade agreement. I will point out to you, Madam Speaker, that the Premier of New Brunswick, Mr. McKenna, nevertheless set some conditions, which have not yet been met.

One condition set was to ensure that regional development programs are not subject to countervailing duties. This condition has not yet been met.

A second condition is that Canada no longer be subject to protectionist measures. The omnibus bill is still alive and has not been dealt with. So, Madam Speaker, this condition has not been met.

We had also asked for an adjustment program for our food processing sector. This condition has not yet been met. We in New Brunswick have reason to be concerned for this food processing industry.

• (1810)

[English]

To see just how this pact will affect the food processing industry in New Brunswick we have to listen to Mr. Archie MacLean of MacCain Foods. That company is one of the largest food processors in the world and it is located in New Brunswick.

The food processing industry in New Brunswick employs 11,000 people. Mr. MacLean explained how the industry is threatened because of the simple fact that it has to buy its primary products at prices directed by marketing boards.

Mr. McDermid: He wants to get rid of marketing boards.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. MacLean was saying that in New Brunswick either they or the producers will have to go.

Mr. McDermid: Not because of free trade, though.

Mr. Robichaud: If it were not for free trade the industry would pretty well operate the way it is now.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, absolutely.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, for many years now the McCain Company has been operating in New Brunswick. It has been working in the present context with the marketing boards, it has long been buying the products of the farmers and it has been supporting many farmers of the area, but with this free trade agreement, the farmers are in serious trouble and will not be able to hang on simply because the McCain Company will not be able to buy their products anymore. Because if we look at . . .

[English]

When we look at the concept of the level playing field, these processors in New Brunswick will want that level playing field. They will want to have the same advantages in Canada as their competitors in the U.S. have and to buy their primary products at the same prices that the Americans pay for them.

Mr. McDermid: Name the products.

Mr. Robichaud: This means that the marketing boards in New Brunswick will not be able to function any more. Therefore, the primary producers will be just washed down the drain.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I see that you are indicating to me that my time is over. I had many more issues to address. I would like to speak of fisheries and other Canadian industries, but I will come back to it later.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I would like to begin by emphasizing that in his book Where I stand, published in 1983, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was already Party Leader then, puts forward his position on all of the main questions, the major issues the country faced in 1983, five years ago, and there is no mention whatsoever of free trade as the key policy of a Government he would be heading.

I would like to make a few comments on free trade because I believe that Canadian men and women should remind the Conservative Government that it has no mandate to sign the free trade agreement that is now before the House of Commons. In fact, in 1983, the Prime Minister did not claim to be for, but rather against a free trade agreement with the United States, and he stated that the issue had been settled in 1911 under Prime Minister Wilfrid Laurier, and settled for good, as far as he was concerned. It was not an issue to be settled in the future. Indeed, it was not an issue at all. Until he became Prime Minister. Just one year after his election, in 1984, he suddenly presented Canadian men and women with a free trade policy, by beginning negotiations with the United States on a bilateral free trade agreement, with no mandate whatsoever from Canadians for the negotiation of such an accord.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, the Government has totally bypassed the process it should have followed, according to me, my Party, and the vast majority of Canadians, which is that before launching negotiations with the United States, it should have obtained a mandate for a decision that is so fundamental to the future of our country.

Madam Speaker, we have now five days of debate on second reading of Bill C-130. The Government has given us no assurance that the committee will have adequate time to consider these matters. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) gives us no such assurance and may in fact be considering the possibility that the Bill be sent back to the House within five or ten days.

It is all very well, Madam Speaker, that the committees subscribed fully to the principle of free trade, but they never had access to the agreement itself. Even the committee that sat in the fall, Madam Speaker, had no choice but to draft its final report without access to the agreement, since it was still being drafted in Washington by the Americans and the Canadians.

These past few months, whenever I met with my constituents as well as other Canadian men and women both in Quebec and elsewhere, I asked them: Do you want to have an election before Canada gets involved once and for all with the United States through this free trade agreement? Eighty per cent of them said yes. Madam Speaker, such is also the case of the most recent polls which indicate that the small majority who favoured the free trade agreement are now a minority. Now, most Canadian men and women who have an opinion on this issue are against it. It should also be emphasized that the feeling among those who are opposed to the free trade agreement is a lot stronger than among those who support it.

The men and women who support the Free Trade Agreement come mainly from the business world. It is the Business Council on National Issues, a club made up of the chairmen and chief executive officers of all the main Canadian and multinational corporations in Canada, which is behind the Government. When business people tell this Tory Government to do something, the Tories say: Yes sir, we will go ahead. And that is what they are doing, Madam Speaker. They went directly to the United States to fill the order of the business people for a free trade agreement. Did they do so because it would benefit the ordinary people of Chicoutimi, the Gaspe, British Columbia or even Lac-Saint-Jean? The answer is no.

For instance, Madam Speaker, I personally visited Lac-Saint-Jean during the by-election campaign. I realized that the economic situation in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area has not changed a bit over the past four years under a Tory government. No regional development program has been implemented. No effort has been made by the Government to remedy the unemployment situation which exceeded 13 per cent when I was there! Madam Speaker, the reduction was maybe 1 or 2 per cent. Since 1984, in that area, the unemployment rate has been higher since the Tory Party came to power than it had been during the recession, say, between 1980 and 1982 under the previous government.

Now, because of the by-election, the Government was compelled to set up a regional development program, but without this program, would the promises made by the present Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) have been formulated? The answer is clearly no.

Will the free trade agreement really benefit those people? I don't think so for the following reasons. First of all, since most of the industrial jobs which will be created, if such jobs are created, will be based along the Montreal-Windsor corridor, the rest of the regions, including Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean, will not be affected.

Secondly, we can see that the investments in this region are mostly basic investments, and resource investments, for which no tariff barriers exist between the U.S. and Canada. Thirdly, Madam Speaker, the same thing goes for the timber and lumber industry of that region. Has this industry ever been affected by pressures from the United States, by measures which will still be in effect five to seven years after the free trade deal, and which might never disappear?

The Americans still have the power to put pressure on us. In fact, they have forced Canada to levy a 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports, because they felt we were too competitive.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I have read in the newspapers that the governments of both Quebec and British Columbia recently felt they had to send delegates not to Ottawa, but to Washington, to make sure that the U.S. royalties program relating to investments would allow Canadians to cancel the tax on softwood lumber exports from the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia.

And that, Madam Speaker, is the way we will have to handle things if this agreement is passed by our Parliament, by the U.S. Congress, and finally ratified before January 1.

Madam Speaker, I note for example that Quebec, under Clause 6 of the Bill, will have to adjust its legislation to the deal, or else we can expect that the Quebec legislation will be invalidated by the Canadian legislation, and even by the Canadian regulations and the Agreement.

Prime Minister Bourassa says that Quebec will adjust its legislation to the free trade deal. But let us suppose that our Governement is in power, that it is an NDP provincial Government or possibly a PQ Government, and that it does not accept a certain initiative taken by the Federal Governement. Will that Governement have the power to resist?

The answer is no since Quebec has handed over a great part of its powers to the Federal Government. That is what has been done by a Quebec Government, by a Liberal Governement in Quebec, Madam Speaker. And I believe that they are wrong in accepting this.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, according to Clause 8 of this bill, all Canadian legislation will be subordinated to the agreement as well as to Bill C-130 and the regulations pertaining thereto. That also is unacceptable.

Madam Speaker, my time has run out. I would like to speak a bit longer, but I believe that those in Quebec who think that they have made a great step forward with the free trade deal are wrong and that they will find that, unless they are able to stop this bill, in the final analysis Quebec will suffer a loss of freedom in terms of policy making and implementation. Having said that, Madam Speaker, I shall say no more, time forbidding.

[English]

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Madam Speaker, the free trade agreement with the United States will do much to correct Canada's long existing regional economic disparities. It will do more than just give the entire country an economic boost; it will also help regions develop and gain strength, not only from their own regional markets but from the large and rich markets which stretch from coast to coast just south of our border.

Nowhere is the removal of impediments more important than in the international trading system. Everyone is hurt by protectionism. No one can doubt the gains conferred on all countries by the great era of trade liberalization under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

Canada is firmly committed to working for freer trading rules in the vital multilateral negotiations of the Uruguay Round. Our agreement with the United States should in no way be seen as an alternative to or inconsistent with our determination to seek further liberalization through the GATT. Canada's commitment to liberalizing the rules is demonstrated by our free trade agreement with the U.S. The agreement can and will serve as a useful model for the multilateral negotiations, notably including its ground breaking provisions covering the important area of trade in services.

It comes down to a decision on whether Canadians should seek the opportunity and the challenge now presented of securing and enhancing a combined market of 270 million or whether Canadians are prepared to face the real risk of restricted access to a market so vital to their prosperity.

Free trade will encourage job creating investment in energy projects across the country. As we well know, a greater supply means greater energy security for Canada in the future. In the northeast corner of Alberta we have the Athabasca oil sands. These oil sands have within them proven reserves greater than the reserves in Saudi Arabia, immense reserves available to Canada. We cannot bring those reserves on stream unless there is a certainty of demand.

One of the things that will flow from this agreement is that there will be certainty of demand which will guarantee Canada having "made-in-Canada, provided-in-Canada" energy from our own sources brought on-stream because of our arrangements. This is not a continental energy policy. Canada retains full control over all aspects of energy policy that relate to management of the resource base, transportation, or domestic use of energy resources.

What is true of petroleum and carbon resources in Alberta is also true of hydro resources in Ontario, Québec, and elsewhere in our country. All these benefits will flow to Canada without compromising our ability to maintain agricultural marketing boards, regional development programs, our assistance to the cultural industry, or our wide array of social programs.

It has been argued that a free trade agreement with the United States would derogate from provincial jurisdiction. The free trade agreement does not in any way represent constitutional change or result in a constitutional amendment. It is an agreement between two sovereign nations and is subject to the provisions of the Constitution of Canada. Provincial responsibilities for such important matters as natural resources will be as full and complete after the agreement as they were before.

The free trade agreement provides an environment for the Canadian energy industries to secure and to expand their access to the United States. Our constitutional responsibility over our natural resources is not being eroded. Alberta will continue to own, to control, and to manage its resources on behalf of all Albertans.

I want to address four myths or misconceptions that I have heard being expounded during the current debate. The first is that the Canadian Government has been stampeded into this agreement by paranoia about United States protectionism. In other words, it is alleged that the Government has miscalculated the seriousness of the protectionist threat in the United States and has placed unwarranted value on seeking secure access to the U.S. market. This analysis is false. The trend toward protectionism in the United States is long term and inexorable because it is driven by a fundamental change in the global balance of economic forces.

So long as the United States was the world's predominant economic power and enjoyed substantial technological advantage over its rivals, it was driven by self-interest and magnanimity alike to pursue a policy of liberal trade. The United States is still the world's largest, richest, and most dynamic market, and it is liable to remain so for the foreseeable future.

However, American economic and technological leadership has now been challenged on three successive fronts: First, by the resurgence of a revitalized Europe from the ashes of World World II; second, by the rise of an extraordinarily disciplined and dynamic Japan; and third, by the recent emergence of the newly industrialized countries, particularly on the Pacific Rim.

The second myth or misconception permeating the debate here is that the choice facing Canadians is between a familiar and relatively comfortable status quo and the unknown of free trade. There is no status quo. The world is always on the move. The only difference is that the world is moving far, far faster now than ever before. It is an illusion to talk about the status quo. It just does not exist.

Global technological and economic developments mean that Canada's resource base can no longer finance the maintenance of an inefficient manufacturing economy sheltering behind high tariff walls.

Even Canadian manufacturers have realized that they can no longer prosper from the domestic market alone. They need secure and free access to a larger market, especially the United States market, to invest and thus achieve economies of scale and specialization.

The third myth or misconception in Canada is that the multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT and bilateral trade deals with the United States possibly represent alternatives, indeed incompatible alternatives. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Regional free trade areas such as the European Community and the Canada-U.S. agreement are fully sanctioned under Article 24 of the GATT.

It would be foolhardy as Canadians to close our eyes to these developments and to rely exclusively on a multilateral trading system whose effectiveness is unfortunately eroding and whose undertakings and disciplines are too generalized, too vague, and too narrow in scope to provide an effective brake to U.S. protectionism.

The fourth myth about the agreement is that it will result in a loss of Canadian sovereignty or independence. If by independence we are talking about the right of Canadians to maintain the unique set of social support measures such as medicare, unemployment insurance, and the Canada Pension Plan, nothing in the agreement prevents Canadian Governments from maintaining these programs.

There is no way that the federal Government would trash medicare, old age pensions, unemployment insurance, or other important social programs. Any politician who tried that would not make history, but would be history.

If free trade results in a loss of sovereignty, let us ask our New Zealand friends how they are making out with the Australians, or the Austrians or the Swedes, whether they have been taken over by other members of the European trade agreement.

Even in the European Community where a measure of political integration has been consciously undertaken, no one ever hears the Danes or the Dutch complain that their culture is being Teutonized or Anglocized as a result of a common commercial market.

One third of Canada's Gross National Product comes from exports. Close to three million Canadian jobs are directly related to exports, and 78 per cent to 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States. Canada must secure the high level of trade we have with the United States. We must bring in a dispute resolution mechanism that is contained in the free trade agreement, and we must enhance U.S. trade to create jobs and maintain our standard of living.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, the House is discussing Bill C-130 and the amendment to the amendment of Mr. Langdon, seconded by Mr. Angus:

> That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "political institutions of Canada," the words "including our valued system of social and regional development programs,".

Madam Speaker, although there is a ten-minute maximum under the Standing Orders, I will be able to continue later on when I speak to the amendment of my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and subsequently to the main motion, at least when the debate continues.

Madam Speaker, as was said earlier today, the Conservative Party is dead. That's right. The Conservative Party will make way for the Republican Party of North America.

An Hon. Member: It already has.

Mr. Gauthier: That is a matter I think the Tories should be worried about. Not so. They don't care. The Conservative Party as we have known it, progressive or not . . . In fact, it is, in a way, a contradiction in terms to say the words progressive and conservative in one breath. However, the fact remains that the Conservative Party is out for the count and in its stead has come the branch-plant Republican Party of North America! The Conservative Party has caved in to pressure from the multinationals. It has tampered with the system, tampered with the Standing Orders and put in place its own system which, in my view, is anti-parliamentary and anti-democratic and a direct contradiction of its proposal to set up a supposedly free trade market with the Americans. In the first place, this is not free trade. Some areas have been excluded, and to call this a free trade agreement is to misrepresent the facts. This is a trade agreement signed by the Prime Minister of this country (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, Mr. Reagan, for the benefit of the agenda of both parties, and to give one of the parties access to the immense natural wealth of our country and the other a political excuse to seek a second mandate as the Prime Minister of the Government of Canada.

Madam Speaker, it is positively ridiculous to limit debate in the House to five days when it took 1,000 days of complex and serious debate to get us a so-called trade agreement, an agreement that the Tories would like us to adopt in five days, an agreement that would change for all time the way Canadians have lived for 121 years. My grandparents and yours, Madam Speaker, built this Canadian federation, and the Party in power, the Conservative Party, is prepared to sell all to the highest bidder, and to adopt or rather make the House adopt, in less than five days of debate, the principle of an agreement that is flawed and, as my Leader said last Wednesday, poses a serious threat to this country.

Madam Speaker, this political and economic agreement, and that is what it is, initialled on January 2 by the two heads of State, is an agreement that, if implemented, could forever threaten the existence of Canada as the distinct society I have known in North America, a society with powers that enable it to influence directly its economic, social and cultural development.

The Conservative Government continues to spend millions, as we know. It was almost a scandal. It is even outrageous to think that it is spending public money to try to sell this bill of goods to Canadians, who according to the most recent polls, as we know, do not like the idea of changing forever the order of things in North America and economically integrating Canada with the United States.

The reason for this partisan propaganda from the Government that is circulated at great expense, some $30 or $40 million, is to sell this Conservative mess of pottage to Canadians. The reason why they resort to such measures is that the agreement itself is not that strong, the contract is not that sound, and we must say that it is not very convincing for Canadians today either, knowing that more than 40 per cent of them are against the Mulroney-Reagan free trade agreement.

Neither government propaganda nor the insults regularly sent our way by the Minister responsible for the negotiations and the mockery and clowning he so often uses to avoid discussing the negative consequences we will suffer once the agreement is implemented.

We know that the Minister was not even able to read the whole document. He did not have the heart to go through the whole document, he only read part of it and God knows that if he has to sell this mishmash, he should at least know what is in it. He was rightly criticized for this last week and we will continue to remind him that when a serious minister wants to sell a serious Bill, he must show that he is serious enough himself to read the whole thing.

Madam Speaker, as the President of the United States said quite rightly, the agreement is:

> . . . an economic constitution for North America.

There we have it! It is an economic constitution! Those are not my words but President Reagan's: it is "an economic constitution for North America." That means a continental step to industrial and economic integration.

I can understand very well that President Reagan is delighted, that he applauds the possibility for Washington, the White House, the American Congress and the powerful lobbies for private interests, to become automatically, yes, automatically, the absolute masters of this social and economic development strategy, and on a continental scale, if you please! This means that we will simply be integrated into the American strategy of obtaining their energy from us, and they will continue, as has been their wont, to press their point of view on us and to make little of the Canadian perspective.

But what is incomprehensible on the part of our Government is the relentless determination with which the Prime Minister is seeking, by every available means, to lead Canada in this direction. To my mind, this is a tragic example of betrayal, Madam Speaker.

It goes without saying that we must further improve Canadian producers' access to the vast American market. I don't know a single Liberal who is against free trade as such. We are for free trade, but not for the Mulroney-Reagan free trade agreement that was signed last January 2. We are against that agreement.

In addition, as we know, we must further reduce the protective tariffs afforded certain Canadian industries. We are in agreement with a gradual reduction of certain tariff-based advantages. We, the Members of the Liberal Party, Madam Speaker, do not have to prove that we support the principle of free trade. We demonstrated our support through the trade arrangements that successive liberal governments have negotiated and implemented since the Second World War. And we shall continue to promote policies allowing Canada to increase its exchange of goods and services with the United States and with other countries, such as the countries of Asia, whose markets promise much for the future.

I agree of course with the notion of increased trading with the United States which are our best friend and neighbour. But I oppose the overwhelming continental approach of the January 2, 1988, agreement which was signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), an agreement which this Tory Government is desperately trying to implement before the Canadian people have had an opportunity to assess its full scope, which would deprive all the Governments in Canada, including those of the provinces, of a great many of the powers which they can now exercise to directly influence our social, economic and cultural development. As a matter of fact, if this agreement were implemented, the provincial and federal governments could no longer have access to the same range of measures to protect and promote national and provincial interests.

During the next few minutes, Madam Speaker—as I said earlier, I shall deal again with this issue later on because I have a great many remarks to make, having had an opportunity to reflect on this issue since it was proposed a few years ago—I should like to give support to the statement that we have lost or will eventually lose the power to protect and promote national and provincial interests.

For instance, as soon as this agreement takes effect, neither the federal nor the provincial Governments will be able to require from American consumers for Canadian energy a price which is higher than the price paid by Canadian consumers. It is possible now for the Federal Government to impose an export tax. For instance, a provincial government may, under certain circumstances, protect its own consumers or even Canadian consumers generally by imposing export costs for electricity or natural gas. Provincial governments have full control over their natural resources.

A while ago, I heard the Hon. Member for Calgary claim that we are not going to lose our control. Well, Madam Speaker, I can tell you that the Government will submit this control to enormous pressure by telling the Americans that, whatever the circumstances, they will have a right of access to these resources, which for the most part belong to us, at the same price as Canadians. I am referring to energy for instance. They say it is not true. Well, I challenge the Hon. Member to stand in his place and demonstrate to me that it is not true.

Madam Speaker, I see that you are about to rise. If I may, I will return to this later on when the debate resumes on this issue. I should like to further explain free trade which is at the very heart and fabric of the essence of my country, Canada.

[English]

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to enter into the debate on free trade. The most important thing that can be said about free trade has to be said from this perspective: From where will we obtain the best advantage? From what standpoint in terms of trading do we say that we can improve our position or remain status quo which is satisfactory?

I found out from talking to grade 12 and grade 13 high school students in my riding that when given a chance to vote on free trade their vote was overwhelmingly in support of a move toward free trade. The argument that was used by the students, and I know that it is hard for some people in the Opposition to understand it, was that if one makes a widget and wants to sell it but has to hire a salesman to handle 25 million people, would one sooner sell the same widget to 10 times that number of people at the same price or not? The overwhelming answer given by the young people is that they would like a larger market, not a smaller market, not a protected market, but they are willing on their part to accept the challenge and look to the opportunities of an increased market.

Let us look at the corporate sector. I thought the best way to do that would be to write a letter to every major corporation in the City of Peterborough and the County of Peterborough that employs all the people who want to work. I asked the corporations one at a time how they felt about free trade. The first corporation to reply, one of the largest employers in Peterborough, was General Motors of Canada. In the past I was an employee and sales manager for General Motors in Oshawa. I received a very nice letter from the public relations manager for General Motors. That corporation responded in an affirmative manner and stated that it felt that it would create more jobs and more employment.

Mr. G. A. Peapples, President and General Manager of General Motors in Oshawa, stated: "Thanks to the new free trade agreement, we can compete, secure in the knowledge that the trade policy environment will be stable and fair and will permit us to act decisively and responsibly in the interests of our customers, our employees and Canada".

The next largest industry in Peterborough is General Electric Canada. I wrote a letter to the Chief Executive Officer and to the General Manager and Vice-President of General Electric Canada in Peterborough. In part he stated: "General Electric Canada favours the free trade agreement and at this point would anticipate a net gain in terms of business levels and employment as a result of this agreement for our plant here in Peterborough".

I had heard the argument that Canadian companies would be at a disadvantage if we signed a free trade agreement with the United States, that they just could not compete. I wrote to Mr. Bill Fisher of Fisher Gauge, one of the largest high-tech industrial industries in the Peterborough region. It has three factories in Peterborough and two in the United States. He replied and stated: "Strongly endorse the free trade agreement. Recognize the importance of the agreement for enhanced job creation. Fisher Gauge employs 275 people in Peterborough; 250 of those jobs are accounted for by exports, and 180 of those 250 jobs are maintained by business with the United States. Key to more jobs: greater access to other markets, mainly the United States market".

I wish to quote the final paragraph of the chief officer's comments. He stated: "I have no doubt that the free trade agreement will enhance our business in the United States and increase our employment here, but failure to implement the agreement could have the opposite effect, considering the increasing protectionist sentiment in the United States and elsewhere. Without the U.S. market we could be finished as a viable operation".

I wrote to the President, General Manager and Chief Officer in Peterborough of Outboard Marine Corporation. He stated that free trade would make an efficient manufacturer like Outboard Marine a much more effective competitor. The elimination of duty on parts would allow it to reduce the price of its outboard motors and thus be able to compete against cheaper Japanese imports.

Mr. Cassidy: That company has shut down 1,500 jobs in the last 15 years.

Mr. Domm: Now it can invest in more up-to-date technology to meet the challenge of greater competition.

Mr. Cassidy: They have been steadily moving out of Canada.

Mr. Domm: It puts it on a par with world scale plants. Now the large United States market will be open to it. The President and General Manager of Outboard Marine further stated:

> While OMC Canada does support the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, we are not entirely happy with the agreement as we had hoped that the duty would have been either removed immediately or certainly phased out much more rapidly. However, we do believe it is a step in the right direction.
> For example, we just recently lost a quote to manufacture component parts to a U.S. vendor. We were competitive on labour and material but lost the business because of duty. Elimination of U.S. duties for Canadian exports would obviously open new opportunities for OMC Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: It can also manufacture everything in Wisconsin. That is exactly the problem with that company.

Mr. Domm: The NDP spokesman is not very familiar with what is going on at Outboard Marine. It has recently rationalized. It has a world mandate to supply all gas tanks, inboard and outboard, for its total industry around the world. The major source of sales is in the United States. It did that because of the free trade agreement.

Outboard Marine in Peterborough was phasing out much of its operation. It has revitalized, modernized, and made its plant more efficient. Now it is one of only two manufacturers of the OMC that manufactures Lawnboys on a world-wide delivery system.

Let us look at Dofasco and Stelco. They are pretty good union operations. They are a very active union in the United Steelworkers of America.

Mr. Cassidy: Not at Dofasco there is not. Get your facts straight.

Mr. Domm: One of the union people who sent out a press release, of which I received a copy, Dennis Abernot, President, Local 2251 of United Steelworkers of America, stated: "Local 2251 welcomed federal Government's initiative on free trade when it began two years ago because it was clear to us that growing protectionism in the United States posed a serious risk to Canadian steel production and steelworkers' jobs". The more steel they produce, the more they supply to Oshawa. I am somewhat surprised that the Leader of the NDP has taken such a negative view of free trade.

Mr. Cassidy: That was not Dofasco, and it was not Stelco. You should get your facts straight.

Mr. Domm: The Leader of the NDP and Member of Parliament representing the City of Oshawa is unable to realize or fails to acknowledge the fact that he has created jobs in Oshawa through the expansion of modern technology on a competitive basis to compete not only with the United States—and they produce better cars there than they do in the United States—but to compete on a world-wide basis.

Let us bring ourselves up to date on how other industries think about us around the world. In Peterborough we have recently received a new industry called Pebra Inc. which employed some 300 to 500 people over the period of its phase-in.

Mr. Cassidy: What about farmers in Peterborough County as well?

Mr. Domm: I know the Hon. Member does not want to hear this, because it hurts the NDP to see labour getting jobs and working because of free trade.

If the Hon. Member would care to listen for a minute, I will read from a letter that I received from Pebra. The whole letter is available to anyone who cares to read it. I will table the document, and the Hon. Member can read it if he wishes.

Pebra Inc. opened a factory plant in Peterborough in the Old Pioneer Chainsaw building which was dormant for a long period of time, because neither the previous Government nor the Party that is talking over there that proposes to be the next Government could come up with a solution.

Pebra supplies automotive fabricated induction moulding parts for automobiles. It is a German company that has invested large sums of money in Peterborough in order to manufacture parts to sell world-wide, particularly to the United States. The letter from Pebra Inc. stated, in part:

> . . . the automotive industry can, from a Canadian point of view, only grow and prosper by expanding our market. The United States, which represent about one-third of the world industrial market, is of course the most logical territory to aim for, apart from the fact that they are our neighbour.

The Executive Vice-President continued with the reasons why he supports free trade.

Last week a new industry, Kendall Canada, came to Peterborough. It is an American multinational corporation that arrived in Peterborough. It is spending $20 million to build a plant in Peterborough. It plans to employ 322 people. It manufactures and distributes medical and surgical supplies to Canada and the United States. Its main company is in the United States. Kendall has indicated to me that it also welcomes this free trade agreement. It sees it as a good deal which will benefit the company.

I would like to conclude with one sentence. Free trade is good for business, because free trade employs people. If we employ people and create economic growth we can afford social service programs. Without those dollars that are generated by increased industrial expansion, there will not be all the things that the NDP claims to be protecting without any answers on how to protect them.

• (1900)

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, it is interesting to follow the Hon. Member from Peterborough (Mr. Domm). One would not think that he represents an Ontario riding, where the people in his riding oppose this deal as a sell-out of Canada. One would not think that he has had his eyes opened in the last few weeks whatsoever.

What I want to suggest this evening is that the Government across the way should be going to the people, calling an election, and seeking a mandate on this particular trade deal.

I am confident that I speak tonight on behalf of the people of my province and of my constituency. I am proud to say that in a very recent poll in The Globe and Mail by the Environics Corporation, the overwhelming majority of people in Saskatchewan are opposed to this deal. It is a bad deal for Canada and a bad deal for Saskatchewan. There are more people opposing the deal in Saskatchewan than in any other province. In fact, if we look at the total number of people surveyed in the Province of Saskatchewan, 49 per cent are against the deal, 29 per cent are in favour of the deal, a gap of nearly two to one. I say that this is a bad deal for Canada.

For a western province where the concept of free trade historically has been a popular concept, it is quite a startling statistic to find out that the overwhelming majority of people that who a position say that this is a bad deal for Canada. For that reason I want an election on this issue. I want that election now. The Government across the way has no mandate whatsoever to ram something like this down the throats of people. I see it as fundamentally bad for our country and fundamentally bad for the Province of Saskatchewan.

That same survey showed that only 9 per cent of Saskatchewan people strongly support the deal. Imagine that, Madam Speaker, only 9 per cent strongly support this deal that the Government is now using closure on, to make it the law of the land for generations to come. Some 36 per cent strongly oppose the deal. It is four to one in opposition to this trade deal in the Province of Saskatchewan for people who have strong feelings on it. I feel very confident tonight in saying that I certainly reflect the point of view of people in Saskatchewan, not just people who vote for the Democratic Party but people who vote for all three political Parties in the Province of Saskatchewan.

I invite the Government across the way to consult the people of this country, to call an election on this issue. If it does that, it will be overwhelmingly defeated from one part of this country to the other.

An Hon. Member: They did, in Lac-Saint-Jean.

[Translation]

. . . I know the Lac-Saint-Jean region very well, Madam Speaker, and the Conservative Party bought a seat in that riding. They spent $162 million to buy a riding for the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Bouchard. His seat was bought by the Federal Government through the Canadian taxpayers. But, Madam Speaker, the Government doesn't have the money to buy 200 seats for the Conservatives in the next general election.

[English]

That is what happened in Lac-Saint-Jean. Now, I want to debate the issue that is before the House. We find that the overwhelming majority of people in Saskatchewan oppose the deal; in Manitoba, they oppose the deal; in the Province of Ontario, they oppose the deal; and in the Province of Alberta, it is two to one in favour of the deal. I suggest that the reason for it is that no one in Alberta is speaking out in opposition to it because all Members from that province are Conservative Members who support it.

In the Province of Quebec the results are very, very interesting. We find that only 40 per cent of the population is in support of this trade deal and 33 per cent is opposed to it, despite the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) comes from Quebec, despite the fact that Mr. Bourassa and his Government support the deal, and despite the fact that Jacques Parizeau and the Official Opposition in Québec support the deal. Despite all that the Province of Québec is almost divided fifty-fifty in terms of the deal before us. In a general election campaign I am confident that the majority of Canadians in that province will also oppose the deal before us.

If the Members across the way think back throughout history, it has been their Party, historically, that has been in opposition to a free trade deal with the United States that is all-encompassing. If we go back to the election of 1891, it was the grand old man of Canadian conservatism, Sir John A. Macdonald, who fought his last campaign in opposition to the Liberals, who tried to impose this kind of a deal upon Canada.

Twenty years later it was again the Conservative Party that fought against Laurier, and against the Liberals when they tried, once again to bring in a kind of deal to tie the United States to Canada in more than just the economic sense.

I say that this particular deal is against the tradition of Canada, against the heritage of Canada. It is against the history, the tradition, and the heritage of the Conservative Party of Canada and what it stood for, from Sir John A. Macdonald right through to 1984.

It was in 1985 that that Party across the way did a flip-flop and negotiated a deal that will give Canada nothing whatsoever in terms of new access to the American markets. Nothing whatsoever is guaranteed in terms of the deal before the House today. At the same time, we are going to lose considerable independence and considerable sovereignty as a Canadian nation to make decisions that affect our own lives in the years that lie ahead. I take exception to the fact that this is not a free trade deal. It goes way beyond customs and tariffs. It is a deal that is a step toward the economic union of Canada with the United States; the economic union of our two countries. In that case, Canada will be totally dominated by our big neighbour to the South. An example of what I mean is energy policy, where we can no longer have a two-price system in energy, where we must charge the same price to the American consumer that we are charging the Canadian consumer if we export to the United States. That is part of this deal. That is one reason why Peter Lougheed is in support of this particular deal.

Also, in terms of energy, we must guarantee under this deal to the Americans proportional access to our diminishing resource in the time of crisis. Once again, it gives up Canadian political sovereignty.

When it comes to investment, we must treat American investors in the same way that we treat Canadian investors. We can no longer have an agency like the Foreign Investment Review Agency to make sure that investment in this country from the United States—

Mr. McDermid: Not true, not true.

Mr. Nystrom: —will be treated in the same way. It is not right to treat American investors as Canadian nationals. That is part of the deal. That is one reason why this deal and this Government will be defeated when the next election comes. The noisy Parliamentary Secretary across the way is muttering about the truth. He would not know the truth if it hit him across the head. He has that kind of reputation in this House.

When it comes to agriculture, we find that the trade deal will weaken the authority of marketing boards in this country. We have no better authority than Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. trade representative, and his interpretation document in May that talks about the interpretation of the deal being a weakening of the Canadian marketing board system, a weakening of the Canadian Wheat Board and its pricing mechanism. That is why the majority of farmers in this country oppose the deal. That is why farmers are mobilizing from the Province of Québec, the Atlantic provinces, and across the West, to oppose the Conservative Party, once it gets the guts to call an election campaign in this country.

Mr. McDermid: That is useful thinking on your part.

Mr. Nystrom: Now, the Parliamentary Secretary across the way, who does not know anything about the truth in this House or what the Canadian people think, should just take a look at the Environics poll in The Globe and Mail last Friday, and he will see that the overwhelming majority of people in Saskatchewan oppose this deal, how Manitoba opposes the deal, how the Province of Ontario opposes this particular deal.

Mr. McDermid: Free fall. Do you believe that poll?

Mr. Nystrom: I love that kind of free fall. In the Province of Saskatchewan 49 per cent of the people oppose the deal and 29 per cent of the people support the deal. When one talks about those statistics garnered by the pollsters, the Hon. Member from Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) loses his tongue and sits silently in his seat across the way. He knows in his heart of hearts that the Canadian people will not support the kind of deal that has been negotiated by the Prime Minister.

• (1910)

As I said, it is a sell-out of Canada. It is the economic union of our country with the United States. I fear for the loss of our sovereignty. I fear for the loss of our independence if this deal goes through. I invite the Conservative Party across the way to put pressure on its Prime Minister to call an election on the issue. It is the most important issue we have faced in decades. The Prime Minister is afraid to face the people of Canada. He wants to ram this deal through the House of Commons by the use of closure. That is not democratic. He does not have a mandate. The only person across the way who spoke about this kind of deal in the last campaign—and you know it as well as I do, Mr. Speaker—was the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) himself. The Prime Minister and other Ministers in this House all took a very strong stand against this kind of a deal with the United States.

To ram this deal through the House is clearly misleading the people of Canada. The Government has no mandate for it. I invite you, Mr. Speaker, to join us in trying to force the Prime Minister to call an election so that the people can be consulted in a true, free and democratic manner.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, one of the useful products of a debate is that one finds out things. Hon. Members say things from time to time that they are probably not supposed to say. But this debate shows, demonstrates, and reveals the kind of real motivation, the real raison d'être for this legislation. Perhaps no truer, sounder statement was made in this House than that made by the Deputy House Leader today. He said, "We represent big Canada". That comes as no surprise to Canadians when we look at what happened in the sell-out of the pharmaceutical Bill represented by the big pharmaceutical companies. When it came to capital gains tax we know who benefited from that. It was the big, powerful, rich Canadian corporations and individuals. When it comes to the question of regulatory policy and privatization, we know who benefits from that—the big, the powerful, and the rich.

We finally discovered the reason that we have this legislation. The Government is now simply the hand-maiden for big interests because there is no other rationale for it. At the start one might have accepted the economic argument, until the Government produced its own reports, until the Economic Council and the Department of Finance reported that the promises of economic growth and of additional jobs were simply not there. When the Economic Council report said we may get one-quarter of one per cent economic growth a year, one can hardly say that would be justification for uprooting one's country. The Economic Council went on to say that there would be 180,000 job losses. Putting the rhetoric and mythology aside, the Government's own data, provided by its own research resources, indicated simply that there was no economic growth worth measuring. It is simply not there, and we knew that could not be the reason for the Bill. Surely no Government would be irresponsible enough to overturn the history of the country completely, for the sake of one-quarter of one per cent growth per year.

The other promise made was for consumers. We have Ministers of the Crown saying that consumers will be the big winners, but let us look at the Government's own reports. As we well know, consumers may get over the next five years, if the deal goes through, a saving of 1 per cent on an inflation rate of 20 per cent. Rather than having 20 per cent inflation we will have 19 per cent. That is not sufficient reason for justifying the complete overturn and uprooting of the fundamentals of the country for perhaps 1 per cent. I would say maybe, because the Government was not too sure. As one of the advocates from the Consumers' Association of the Province of Québec pointed out, the net saving to an average family over five years might be $32, maybe, if all things work as they are supposed to work. Surely no one can say that a saving of $32 over five years is sufficient reason for this kind of agreement.

Ms. Dewar: On a 72-cent dollar.

Mr. Axworthy: And that is on a highly inflated, reduced dollar.

We come to the third reason put forward, that we have guaranteed access to American markets, except the agreement does not give guaranteed access. There is no guarantee. It is not binding. The trade laws still apply. The trade actions still take place. The only thing the Government got was a review mechanism, otherwise known as the Mickey Mouse mechanism, which allows a review to take place even though we already have a review mechanism, one that will probably be more impartial because the compromise reached in the U.S. Congress will give U.S. politicians more input to that review than the one at present. All the grand promises that there would be some kind of guaranteed secure access again are simply ashes. There is no justification for it. One cannot say that again would be reason for the massive upheaval and change which this agreement will produce.

Why, Mr. Speaker? Finally we had a Minister of the Crown give us the real reason. We finally got to the truth this morning when the Deputy House Leader said that it was because "we represent big Canada". What the Government is saying is that the big corporations of Canada do not want Governments to bring in programs that will reallocate income. They do not want government making decisions in the public interest. They want it all by the rule of the jungle, the corporations' rules. If big corporations with no allegiance and no particular loyalty have capital crossing borders with instantaneous computer transactions, I suppose they feel they have outgrown Canada, that they do not have to recognize the validity of this particular nation state any more. Big corporations find a Government to represent their interests. They find a group of advocates who will come into the House of Commons to speak for them and to bring in legislation to represent the big interests of Canada. Therefore, we have the Bill before us.

The real meaning of Bill C-130 has very little to do with trade. The reduction in tariffs is marginal. It is far less than we have achieved under multinational negotiations. There is far less a reduction in tariffs than we have received over the last 20 or 30 years. The Bill has major restraints, major limitations on the role of federal and provincial Governments to take decisions for Canadians contrary to those that might be taken by the big interests, to quote again the Deputy House Leader, "that they would take". It may mean that we would want to take decisions on environmental rules, on equity rules for women or for those with handicaps, or that we would want to take further decisions on Canadian content rules. That does not serve the interests of those big players about which the Deputy House Leader spoke. If we go through the legislation passage by passage, whether we are dealing with investment, Crown corporations, or resources, the Bill is really one designed to put a strait-jacket around government. The corporations are not satisfied in just putting a strait-jacket around the federal Government; they want a strait-jacket around provincial and municipal Governments. They are basically eviscerating the public economy of Canada. That is the tragedy, because that is how the country was built.

It was not built by the market-place. There are lots of very effective and good private entrepreneurs. If we look at our history we see that Canada was built by public decisions, oftentimes in partnership with private companies. It was built by a mixture, a partnership, a mixed economy. Now, for the first time in our history, the big interests have a Government which represents them. Now they will change forever and entrench into an international agreement the inability of government to take those kinds of decisions in the future. That is the tragedy of this legislation. That is what this Government does not want Canadians to find out. That is why the Government is afraid to go across the country and hold public hearings.

That is why the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) blusters and buffoons himself through the House of Commons. He is afraid to put the legislation out for public examination from Newfoundland to Québec, to Manitoba, to British Columbia, and to let Canadians realize that this is a Government that is strangling, suffocating and, suppressing the ability of Canadians through their democratically elected institutions to make decisions for themselves. It is turning over these decisions to the big players in the continental chess game. That is one of the reasons why we need further debate.

Perhaps, if we had further debate, we would have further revelations, much as the one we had this morning from the Deputy House Leader, as to what the real motives, purpose, and rationale really are for this Bill. That is why we find it such an affront to the democratic process that not only is debate being cut off before it has a chance to get into full flower, but the Government is now threatening to deny the committee that right as well. The only way Canadians will find out is if we get the ultimate sanction in a democracy, an election. That will let Canadians have a real look at what this Bill is really all about.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, before I begin the remarks I have prepared, I want to say that I find it a bit strange that already the Liberal Party has to go to second speakers. Members of the Liberal Party were talking earlier about the travesty of justice being committed, but now an Hon. Member has spoken on the Bill for the second time today.

Today and tomorrow, many Members of Parliament of all three Parties—

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member would want to correct himself. This is the second time I have spoken, but I spoke on the closure motion which had nothing to do with this specific legislation. The Hon. Member might know the difference after he has been in Parliament for a while, and I would ask him to withdraw that comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member for Don Valley East has the floor.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I suppose I hit a bit of a sore spot there. It was the same speech on the same topic.

Today and tomorrow, many Members of Parliament of all three Parties will be sharing their views on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. My Government and my Party have proposed this historic agreement, and I want to say that I am strongly in favour of it.

It is interesting that on some issues it is difficult for the public to see how the three Parties may differ. In the case of the free trade agreement, however, the picture is very clear. The Progressive Conservative Government is whole-heartedly in favour of it and both opposition Parties are totally against it. The battle lines have been drawn. In the next election, Canadians from coast to coast will be able to tell us if they want a bigger, healthier Canada because of the free trade agreement.

The importance to Canada of the FTA cannot be exaggerated. Currently almost 80 per cent of our exports flow to the United States. These exports account for 25 per cent of everything we produce, and over two million jobs are dependent on trade. For over 100 years, most Canadian Governments have pursued improved trading relations with the United States. In the early 1850s, Canadian farmers and commercial interests wanted a trading agreement with the United States. Our economy had become vulnerable due to Britain's commitment toward free trade.

For over 80 years, Canada had imported more goods from the United States than it had from Great Britain. However, up until 1942, our exports to the U.S. were less than those to Great Britain. This changed in 1942. Since then, the United States has been our number one market for exports. As stated earlier, the Americans now buy almost 80 per cent of the goods and services we export.

There have been attempts in the past by Governments to diminish our dependency on the U.S. by trying to increase trade with Britain and other European countries and with Pacific Rim countries. Their attempts to implement this strategy were not successful. Indeed, our trade with the United States increased during this period.

Professor David J. Bercuson of the University of Calgary sums up the situation very well with these remarks:

> Much has changed in Canada since the reciprocity treaty of 1854, the 1911 General Election, or the uncertain days of the late 1940's.
> Now it is the manufacturers who most want free trade while the farmers are reticent.
> Now it is the Liberals who oppose free trade, even though the Liberal Party has traditionally been its major supporter.
> But one overall factor remains as it did in 1948, in 1911 and earlier: There are those Canadians confident of the future and of their identity as Canadians, who seek to expand trade across the globe but who also want to compete as equals in the U.S. market.
> And there are still those who, out of fear, wave the flag and shout jeremiads about the future of a Canada linked to free trade and the United States.
> They are certain as their forebears were, that Canada is a fragile country that will not be able to resist the siren call of total immersion with the great republic.
> Times and faces have changed, but the message remains the same.

I agree that times and faces have changed. I do not believe that Canadians will be swayed by emotional, flag waving scare tactics. Canadians know the world is changing. They realize that no country can be an economic island when an integrated global economy is emerging. The private sector in Canada had a brutal reminder of this during the recession of the early 1980s.

It is abundantly clear that our service, production, and distribution sectors are affected by competitive companies in other countries around the globe. Canadians do not seem to be aware of how strongly the business community in Canada supports the free trade agreement. For over 100 years, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association supported tariffs with the United States. In 1983, however, it made a dramatic reversal by appearing before the Macdonald Commission in support of a bilateral trade agreement with the United States.

Many other businesses also submitted briefs in support of the FTA. Surely if the small business community, which generates most of the jobs and wealth in Canada, believes the FTA will mean economic benefits to Canada, then Canadians should not be seduced by the emotional arguments of the doomsayers, the Liberals and the NDP. Liberal and NDP Members say that the Tories want to hand over our jobs and our future. This is nonsense.

The energy sector is another area where the Opposition has tried to mislead Canadians into believing we will surrender control over energy. This assertion is false and opposition Members know it. Canada will still be able to control the pace of development and production of its energy resources. Canada will still be able to prohibit foreign takeovers of financially healthy oil and gas companies. Canada will continue to be able to use fiscal incentives to encourage exploration and development. Canada will retain its right to cushion the impact of any future sharp energy price increases by regulating prices or using the national tax transfer systems. Obviously, we are not losing control of our energy resources.

Many myths about the loss of our sovereignty and our culture are being propagated by the Liberals and the NDP. Again, the facts refute these myths. During the last two years of negotiations, opposition Parties have gloomily predicted that the Canadian Government would be pressured to give up important and highly regarded social policies such as unemployment insurance and free medical care. However, none of our social policies have been bargained away, not one.

The FTA protects current policies in two ways. The grandfathering principle has been applied to almost all things other than trade in goods, even if they are inconsistent with the rule of national treatment. This is applicable to a wide range of policies such as those prohibiting the sale of viable Canadian oil firms to foreign interests, to those regulating the export of raw logs.

In addition, many sensitive industries are totally exempted from any national treatment obligation. These include all cultural industries, day care, health, education, and Crown corporations.

Another falsehood being touted by the Opposition is that somehow the free trade agreement will be detrimental to women. In fact, free trade will deliver enhanced benefits to Canadian women as workers and as consumers. Many of the new jobs to be created will be in the service industries where female employment is already dominant.

High tariff barriers are particularly harmful to women since a larger proportion of their pay goes toward the purchase of basic necessities such as food, clothing, and living accommodations which are more expensive because of tariffs. Women can be winners from the free trade agreement. They have the innate capacity to adjust to changes in the workplace and the market-place.

I have talked to many men, women, and young people from Markham and Whitchurch-Stouffville about the free trade agreement. Some have genuine concerns, some lack enough information, and many are being influenced by the fear tactics of the opposition Parties and the media. However, on balance, I believe most residents of the area of Markham are supportive and they know that today's youth will benefit in the future through job creation opportunities.

I would like to end with the words of Professor John Crispo who said:

> It will be a shame and tragedy if the proponents of the Free Trade Agreement allow its detractors to so dishonestly distort its significance for the country's long-run well-being that the F.T.A. somehow goes down to defeat.

Mr. Macdonald who headed the commission believes so strongly that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is wrong to denounce the free trade agreement that he will not campaign for the Liberals in the next federal election. It will be the first election in almost 35 years that he will miss. Another high profile, long time Liberal, Milton Harris of Harris Steel, has abandoned the Liberal Party for its irresponsible anti-free trade stance.

• (1930)

I believe that Canadians have all the necessary facts about the free trade agreement and, when all the emotional and fear mongering myths have been dispelled, they will embrace the initiative with enthusiasm. Canadians do not run from challenges. They certainly will not turn their backs on the greatest economic opportunity of the century. The free trade agreement is a nation building initiative if there ever was one. Let us get on with the job and get it passed by this House and the other place.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I think, if the Hon. Member had read the speech before he delivered it, he might have been concerned about the accuracy of some of the statements he made.

Mr. Attewell: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I go on record as saying I wrote the speech myself.

Mr. Langdon: Then it is even worse. We were giving you the benefit of the doubt.

Mr. Hovdebo: Back in 1956 we had a debate on a pipeline Bill proposed by the then Liberal Government and piloted through this House by Mr. C. D. Howe. Mr. Howe ran roughshod over Parliament and allowed very little democracy with respect to the issue of putting that pipeline in place across the country.

At that time the Conservative Party was piloted by the previous Member for Prince Albert, John G. Diefenbaker. I wonder what he would say about what is happening here today. I can hear his call now: "We will fight this in the country. We will fight this in the small towns all across Canada". How disappointed he would be today if he had been forced to face this closure motion.

The trampling of parliamentary democracy would not have been the only thing that would have disappointed the Chief. The very idea of a free trade deal would have been a much greater disappointment. For all his faults, he had a vision of Canada as strong and independent. He had faith in the ability of Canadians to stand on their own two feet and make their way in the world. We would be a friend of but not subservient to countries like Great Britain or the U.S., particularly the U.S. What would he think of this lilly-livered approach to what Canada can do for itself?

Mr. McDermid: You choked on that.

Mr. Hovdebo: Yes, almost. What would he think of a Conservative Government that even thought that Canada should be subservient to the U.S.? That would be a very bad situation for the Chief, but to muzzle Parliament in order to get something through which is of more benefit to the U.S. than it is to Canada would be the last straw. If we hear a rumble tomorrow when we vote on this, it will be the Chief letting us know what his position is.

Democracy is a fragile thing. Many of the communist countries call themselves democratic republics. They have made that term illegitimate by ignoring what it really means. They have extinguished democracy. Their Governments no longer support democratic procedure. Is that what our Government is working toward? Is it extinguishing democracy not to give Members of this House and the people of Canada an opportunity to speak out on and to know what is in the free trade deal?

There is only one real deadline in this debate and that is December 31. That is the only real deadline for this legislation. Yet here we are six months before that deadline and the Government is pretending there is some kind of emergency and it must muzzle Parliament by closure. It appears that the real reason is to make sure that Canadians do not hear too much about the deal. In this case, knowledge, in the minds of the Conservatives across the way, appears to be a dangerous thing. If people get to know too much and start recognizing the impact of this deal on their lives and the sovereignty of Canada, they will not accept it. They will reject it out of hand and reject the Conservative Government along with it.

Democracy requires the consent of the governed. We all accept that. Yet this deal does not have the consent of the governed. It did not have the consent of the governed when the Conservatives started it, and it does not have that consent now. In fact, if anything, the Government started off by telling the world that it would never bring in free trade. That was the basis under which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was elected. That was the position the Conservatives had when they went into the last election. That was the position under which they won the election. They did not have a mandate and they do not have the consent of the governed. That is why they went from a high of 60 per cent in the polls down to a low of 22 per cent. They did not do what they said they were going to do back in the election. We now have a very undemocratic approach to one of the most important pieces of legislation that we have had before this House.

I would like, and possibly I will get the opportunity, to have spent a considerable amount of time talking about agriculture, both about what this deal is going to do to agriculture in Canada and the advantages that the U.S. thinks it will get from this free trade deal in that respect. We in Canada have a difficult time competing with the United States in agriculture, not because we are not efficient and effective but because we live in a climate which is much different than that of the United States. They have the advantage of a longer growing season. We have the disadvantage of lower levels of population, therefore longer distances to transport our goods, and higher building and energy costs. We have overcome these disadvantages to a great extent by efficiency and our ability to produce at a level nearly equal to that of the United States.

As I am out of time, I will finish my remarks at another time.

[Translation]

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I did speak earlier today, but since the government is imposing closure, I will rise once more to debate the amendment proposed by my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort-Garry (Mr. Axworthy). In my remarks, I would like to stand up for Canadian consumers. I have obtained my information from one of the government's promotional publications paid for by Canadian taxpayers. The Conservative Government is trying to convince us that free trade is a positive thing for Canadian consumers. In this publication entitled The Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement and the Canadian Consumers, we learn that the average household will save between $5,068 and $7,857 on furnishing a new home. That is what a young couple, for example, would save when furnishing their first apartment. To inflate that figure, everything was included: towels, linen, sewing machine, iron, clothes, etc. In that assessment, I have found four weak spots.

First, study after study there is a constant decrease in the economic benefits flowing from the Agreement as assessed by the University of Maryland in the States and the Economic Council of Canada. That was confirmed by Mr. Kerton, an economist with the Consumers' Association of Canada, when he declared that the maximum savings which Canadian consumers can expect will be less than one fifth of one percent a year. It is so small as to be insignificant. Furthermore, Mr. Pierre Racicot of the Fédération nationale des associations des consommateurs du Québec stated before the Standing Committee of the House, and I quote: "We have calculated that a household earning $35,000 a year could save $38 a year over a 10-year period. A household earning $20,000 a year and therefore living under the poverty threshold would save $32 a year over ten years. These statistics represent an improvement of one tenth of one percent. Needless to say, Madam Speaker, that slim benefit will be eaten away by additional taxes from the Wilson budget.

Secondly, tax reform as a whole will cancel all the small benefits resulting from the Trade Agreement. The Canadian Real Estate Association views the tax reform as a major problem impossible to overcome because the business transfer tax and the profit tax, a new tax under tax reform, will increase the other costs involved in land development and home building.

[English]

The "Wilson" tax reform will amplify the problems of the Mulroney-Reagan accord for the Canadian construction industry. I am speaking about the new transaction tax and tax on profit. This new tax will be disastrous for the construction industry. The Canadian Homebuilders' Association estimates in an October, 1987 report that the proposed tax on the purchase price of new housing would immediately increase the average purchase price of a new home by approximately $10,000. It would reduce accessibility for firsttime home buyers.

This new tax would prohibit 60,000 renters from becoming homeowners. According to the Canadian Homebuilders' Association it would reduce the accessibility of new rental housing for about 200,000 renters. We will likely see a sharp decline in housing construction and the whole Canadian economy will suffer. These added costs alone will wipe away any advantage gained through free trade.

The third point I want to raise about the Government's document regarding consumers is the fact that a national survey relative to housing is practically impossible to carry out. In fact, economies attributed to free trade may be very different in housing markets depending upon where one lives, whether it be in Toronto, Calgary, or Trois-Rivières. The $5,000 or $7,000 savings through free trade may mean absolutely nothing in Toronto's overheated market. Why is the Government presenting Canadians, in this glossy document paid for by my tax dollar, with statistics which may or may not be possible?

Finally, this document does not take into account the rising prices of housing. On page 22, Table 5.5, the Canada-U.S. agreement does not take into consideration the increase in costs associated with housing. Costs such as lot levies slowly but surely eat away at average Canadians' disposal housing dollars. If the Government were really serious it would supplement its free trade efforts with a national housing policy designed to encourage home ownership. It would not impose new taxes on the construction industry, and it would cut the red tape associated with that Department.

I can only conclude that the statistics used by the Government to try to persuade us of the so-called advantages of the U.S.-Canada deal are not worth the paper the agreement is written on. That is why we are voting against this Bill. The independence and sovereignty of Canada is at stake. Never in 120 years has this House faced such a dilemma.

Mr. Pat Binns (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in the debate this evening. Not only am I pleased, in fact I feel it is a duty to participate in this debate on free trade because it is such an important debate.

This debate is about our roots. I say that because when most of us trace our roots back a couple of generations we realize that our grandparents settled this country to establish trade centres here. If our ancestors were French, they probably penetrated the St. Lawrence area in the 1620s to establish trade centres to trade with their mother country. If our ancestors were British, they came in through the Hudson Bay area in the 1670s and again established trade centres. Those settlements competed with one another for the trade available in this country. Our ancestors grew up around trade. They came here because they saw an opportunity on this continent to better themselves and to provide a way of life for their families.

Cycles come and go. Trade moved to the West as settlers moved into Canada, and during a period after 1850 the Atlantic area had to push its trade west for a number of reasons. First, there was a civil war in the United States and Atlantic Canadians sensed that the United States was becoming increasingly hostile to its neighbours to the North. Second, the British stopped giving Canada preferential treatment as a colony.

We were forced to consider how to expand trade among ourselves in this great domain. The need for East-West trade contributed to Confederation in 1867. Sir John A. Macdonald encouraged East-West trade when he built the railroad, and Prime Minister Laurier continued that trade policy.

That cycle has come to an end. We have filled the market for goods and services for 25 million Canadians. In 1988 we need a new trade arrangement and new opportunities. We have to look again to the South and create more North-South trade than we had before.

The Atlantic area always had much trade with the South, particularly the New England states. The most prosperous time in our history was when Atlantic Canada had free access to the New England area. Today, 75,000 Canadians in Atlantic Canada depend on trade for their jobs.

We need a trade agreement now because we have been facing rising protectionism in the United States. Trading blocs have been building up in the world. The European Economic Community is a major trading bloc, which gives preferential treatment to its partners. Australia and New Zealand represent another trading bloc in that area that looks after its own interests.

Who will look after our interests in this changing world where trade blocs are forming and partners are establishing preferential treatment for one another?

Prince Edward Island needs access to the United States market, where 20 per cent or more of our potatoes are sold each year. We must sell our lobsters, and 60 per cent to 70 per cent of them go to the U.S. market every year. We do not need more restrictions on those products.

One of the most successful companies in my riding is a firm called USENS Fisheries in Surrey, Prince Edward Island. That company is owned by Americans, but it provides jobs to Prince Edward Islanders for most of the year.

Its head office for the area is located in my riding. That company provides jobs and pays good money because it has access to 52 states and 250 million Americans for fish processed in Canada. That benefits workers in my riding. I am not afraid of that kind of relationship, if that is what free trade means. Free trade means a better opportunity for my children and their children.

Trading countries succeed in this world. One only need look at Japan, one of the strongest trading economies in the world. The Japanese have the lowest infant mortality rate and the longest life span. They have the lowest unemployment rates. There are many advantages to a strong economy.

Mr. Manly: Tell us about medicare.

Mr. Binns: We can look at other trading countries that have succeeded. Even without a large land mass, Hong Kong has succeeded because of its trade.

Hon. Members opposite ask about medicare. Social programs are not affected by this deal. In fact, they are assured as a result of this trade deal. The programs that are not affected include family allowance, maternity benefits, child care, pensions for the disabled, Canada pension, job training programs, pay equity.

We celebrated Canada Day on Friday. After 121 years of Confederation we are ready for a deal like this one. We have secured our sovereignty. Our country is made up of 10 provinces and 2 territories. We have major cities that have over a million people. We have a Constitution, we have the Meech Lake Accord, and we have a Charter of Rights. All that makes us strong. This Party has a vision for the country. We want to keep it strong and dynamic.

I have wondered what my grandparents would do if they were in my place today. They came here from England and Ireland seeking new opportunities in Canada. They wanted a place to grow, develop, and raise a family. They were prepared to take a risk. I do not think they would tell me to sit back and live on the comforts they have established for me. They did not rely on the past but used their initiative. They would tell us to find our own way in the world rather than depend on what is given to us. One must continue to move forward in this world.

Canada wants a free trade agreement. Three out of four provinces in Atlantic Canada want it. Québec wants it. Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia want it. Two Liberal provinces, Ontario and Prince Edward Island, are against free trade. However, the people of Ontario and the people of Edward Island want free trade. It is good for farmers, fishermen, and consumers. It is good for women. It is good for manufacturers.

The free trade deal will make us winners. I am proud to be Canadian and proud to try to help my country. My grandparents would not have any less for ourselves or our children. Let us make Canada a better place by supporting this agreement.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few remarks on Bill C-130. The Hon. Member who just spoke said that he was not sure what his grandparents would think about this deal. I am not sure what my grandparents would think about it.

However, what concerns me is what my grandchildren will think about it. What will our grandchildren and great-grandchildren think about this legislation when they look back at it some years from now and ask what happened to Canada and the possibility of creating an independent, sovereign nation that was in control of its own destiny? They will ask why they are a satrapy of the United States rather than an independent and proud country.

I welcome the opportunity to speak on this Bill, particularly since the Government has introduced time allocation. There are Members who will want to make important comments on this Bill but will be unable to do so because the Government has closed off debate.

• (2000)

The fundamental importance of this Bill has been stressed on all sides of the House. It has been stressed by President Reagan who calls it a new economic constitution. It has been stressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It has been stressed by Simon Reisman who talked about it as the greatest thing since sliced bread.

What we are dealing with here is an understanding of Canada, our vision of Canada. The vision of Canada that this Bill presents is basically that Canada is America's attic.

The United States often looks to Central America and the Caribbean as its backyard. Canada is the attic to which the Americans come to rummage around for resources, for our water and our energy. They can bring down into the United States whatever they want.

The vision we in our Party have of Canada is of a nation that has a unique social and cultural contribution to make to our world. The trade agreement that the Tories are so intent upon rushing through the House would surrender this. It would surrender the possibility of this for the future. The historian Arthur Lower has pointed out that "growth into nationhood in our sphere of culture" is more difficult than the achievement of political sovereignty. That is particularly true for Canada where we live right next door to the United States with its very powerful mass market for its culture.

We share a common language with the United States. We share many of the same values. Americans have a strong popular mass culture in the areas of news, television, movies and novels. All of us from whatever Party share in a great deal of that culture.

We recognize that if we are to have an independent culture, then we have to take special measures. It is for this reason that we have seen that there has always been a much greater role for the Canadian Government to play in helping to create our Canadian culture.

The agreement states that Canada is going to be able to take those measures that it has been able to take. It can take measures to assist culture, which is okay by the agreement. However, in the very next phrase in the agreement it is stated that the United States can retaliate against Canada for taking those measures.

A culture reflects a nation. The mass culture of the United States is driven by its bottom line, by the fact that there is cash involved. Thus the Americans want to have some kind of cash compensation if Canada takes measures to protect Canadian culture. They see this as being basically a commercial transaction, and that they should be entitled to take some kind of commercial action against Canada, some type of bottom line recompense.

One of the oldest works in Canadian literature published in 1836 is Thomas C. Haliburton's The Clockmaker. The main character in his book is a Yankee trader named Sam Slick. He used to come up into Nova Scotia to sell clocks to the people of Nova Scotia. Generally speaking, he had a very low opinion of Nova Scotians. He said: "We go ahead. The Nova Scotians go astarn". The reason that he felt that was that the Yankees knew how to cipher. In other words, they were able to calculate everything to the bottom line.

At one point he said: "I tell you, if we had this country, you couldn't see the harbours for the shipping." At another point he said:

> The remedy—is at hand; it is already workin' its own cure. They must recede before our free and enlightened citizens, like the Indians; our folks will buy them out, and they must give place to a more intelligent and ac-tive people. They must go to the lands of Labrador, or be located back of Canada; they can hold on there a few years, until the wave of civilization reaches them, and then they must move again as the savages do. It is decreed; I hear the bugle of destiny a-soundin' of their retreat, as plain as anything.

This is 1988 and we are talking about some of the same attitudes that the Yankees had in 1836 which they still have now in 1988.

Sam Slick was the spiritual ancestor of the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). He said that he could sell clocks to people who did not really need them on the basis of his knowledge of soft sawder and human nature. If he was living today he would be selling vacuum cleaners or encyclopaedias. He might even be trying to sell the free trade agreement. He might be trying to sell things to people who do not really want them.

But, like the Minister, Sam Slick sometimes told the truth. At one point, when he was asked about the attraction of the U.S., he said:

> It ain't its attraction—it's nothin' but its power of suction; it is a great whirlpool—a great vortex: it drags all the straw and chips, and floating sticks, drift-wood, and trash into it. The small crafts are sucked in, and whirl round and round like a squirrel in the cage—they'll never come out.

Not all Canadians are going to be sucked in by this trade agreement. Not all Canadians want to get caught up in the American whirlpool and get dragged in as the Tory Government seems to want to do.

Canadians do not want to be Americans. We are not anti-American—we are just different. That is important to recognize. That is something that the Conservative Party used to recognize up until the time of John Diefenbaker who recognized it. The Tories have forgotten it under the leadership of their right hon. gentleman who used to sing for Colonel McCormick.

We have a different role in history. We recognize that the Americans are a great power. They have the burden and the responsibility of a great power. We might not think that they always discharge that burden and responsibility in an intelligent way, but we recognize that they have it. It is a different burden and a different responsibility from what we as Canadians have.

Canada's role is different. We are a smaller power. We have a role as a mediator. We have a different type of culture, a culture different from the mass U.S. culture. Our culture depends more on the responsibility of Government, which is why the basic organizations of Canadian culture are sponsored by the Government. I refer to such organizations as the Canadian Film Board, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canada Council.

The trade deal threatens all this. The fact is that the longer this debate goes on, the more people understand what this trade deal is doing to Canada. The more they understand how it threatens their culture, the more they understand how in the long term it will threaten social programs. Make no mistake about it. Business people are going to want what they call a level playing field. On both sides of the parallel they will be talking about how our social programs are not fair. Social programs will be threatened. Our culture is threatened.

The people of Canada have good reason to reject this deal if for no other reason than that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself in 1983 pointed out that a trade deal with the United States was not in Canada's interests. What we need is an election so that the people of Canada can speak on this deal themselves. We indicate our opposition. Now let us give the people of Canada a chance to show their opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Madam Speaker, I too am very pleased to take part in this debate on an extremely important issue or subject that I would call a challenge to our resourcefulness as Canadian citizens. I will be brief, merely hoping that my remarks will shed more light on a situation which some people enjoy making more confusing than it really is.

Ever since Canada and the United Sates signed the trade agreement I noticed two major trends of thought among the public. First, a noisy minority made up of Liberal and NDP Members relentlessly calls for cancellation of the agreement and maintains that Canada has sold out to the United States, that we are handing our sovereignty over to them, or so they say, in short they openly claim that we are selling the country to the Americans.

Madam Speaker, their claims are only a small part of the political picture because we must not forget that the majority of Canadian provinces are already committed to endorsing the free trade agreement.

Madam Speaker, earlier today I listened to some Members of the Opposition who said that the agreement would impose strict limits not only on the country but even more so on the provinces.

Well, Madam Speaker, either I do not understand anything at all or the provincial premiers did not even realize the Canadian Government was challenging them. Indeed, at least eight of the ten provinces—and the federal Government, of course—unreservedly support the free trade deal.

So when I hear people suggesting that we need a new mandate to justify the delay in implementing the FTA, I wonder just what kind of mandate they have in mind, once again considering that not only most Canadians but practically all provincial premiers are in favour of the agreement, including and especially Quebec.

Quebec Premier Bourassa of course agrees with the Prime Minister of Canada, they want Quebecers to forge ahead, become prosperous and get their fair share of the market.

On the other hand, Madam Speaker, the fact is that from public forums we hear about the satisfaction of business quarters and their nearly unanimous endorsement of the Canada-U.S. trade deal. Those most concerned with free trade are precisely business men and women who are directly involved in commercial deals with the United States, and most of them are prepared to face up to the challenge the free-trade deal represents. They are the men and women who will make or break the agreement.

Earlier, Members of the Opposition referred to bad aspects of the agreement. Still, as Government Members we are not trying to sell something unsaleable. We are fully aware of the fact that the agreement is not without fault, that it could be improved. We are fully aware of that. But we have full confidence in mankind, in Canadian men and women, in their capacity to adapt well enough to face the free trade challenge. Big businesses, particularly those involved in resource development, have made their position known. They are united in their strong belief that they will gain from free trade.

Besides, large companies have always been a factor of prosperity for small and medium businesses, if at no other level than subcontracting. If the industrial giants gain from free trade, the same will be true for small and medium businesses, that is obvious. Not surprisingly, at this moment, about two thirds of associations representing small and medium businesses have made it known they also approved the principles of free trade.

You can see, Madam Speaker, that the so-called betrayal the Opposition is talking about does not scare business people at all. While a handful of politicians blinded by partisanship are forcing upon us the desperation of their uncertainties, the industry stopped listening to them and is intensely getting ready to forge ahead. For the last few months, we have been witnessing an important move in the business world in all industrial and commercial sectors of Canada, precisely to plan the way their relations with the United States will develop.

The message delivered by the Economic Council of Canada, the Conseil du patronat, the Chamber of Commerce, the Board of Trade, at conferences, seminars, etc... Madam Speaker, is quite clear: Given Canada's trade history, it is more than likely that free trade will bring about an important increase in productivity and general business activity in this country. Canada's manpower is flexible, our exchange rate is attractive and furthermore we are closer geographically to the main U. S. population centers than a number of American states such as California and Texas. Certain firms are already looking at new ways of doing business with foreign counterparts. That is what I call positive thinking. Even among American Senators and Congressmen who are avowed protectionists, the principles of free trade have recently gained support. For his part, the President of the United States is even considering some form of free trade with Mexico, thus laying the groundwork for a North American economic community.

I must admit, Madam Speaker, that no trade agreement can satisfy everyone. There will always be those who will refuse to accept the need for change and to adapt to new situations. Others still will not want to sacrifice anything temporarily, even if the development or the future of their business depends on it. I can only ask these people to keep a cool head, to put things in their proper perspective and most of all to avoid the pitfall of emotional argumentation, since that would mean closing the door to any honest and enlightened discussion. Madam Speaker, that would mean a step toward a new type of isolation, a kind of ideological separatism, possibly more dangerous for Canada than the commercial isolation from which we have been able to get away, thanks to the courage and the determination of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

We will face the challenge, since we have many of the tools required to strike new business deals in the United States. Also, with the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology, we will be better prepared and better equipped to benefit from the free trade deal.

Madam Speaker, I ask all Canadians first to review, in an unbiased way, the past behaviour and accomplishments of the Progressive Conservative Government. Then, they will see that we have really listened to each and every group of the population. We have chosen our priorities in order to create a new harmony as far as the Constitution is concerned and to give a remarkable, and above all constant, boost to our economy. That is what we have been doing for the last three years.

Madam Speaker, the Prime Minister has been successful in surrounding himself with a team knowledgeable in economic matters, and I am sincerely convinced that with the free trade agreement we will be able to further excell.

Our duty is to transcend the words and the ideologies, because we have to face the reality of the more challenging world that is awaiting us in the year 2000. So, together, with our heads held high, let us fight like we have done in the past, and the victory will be ours!

• (2010)

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity this evening to speak on the subamendment to Bill C-130. I wish to commence by reviewing where the so-called trade proposal came from, the Mulroney-Reagan deal, because it certainly did not come from any MPs in the House.

It originated with Ronald Reagan during his campaign to win the Republican presidential nomination in 1980. Reagan proposed a "North American accord: a new system of economic co-operation between the United States, Canada, and Mexico". Seven years later we found out what Ronald Reagan thought of it. In October, 1987, he said, "The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement is a new economic Constitution for North America. This is our new policy, not only to Canada but to the rest of the world." What did Prime Minister Mulroney have to say during the 1984 federal election? He said, "Don't talk to me about free trade. That issue was decided in 1911. Free trade is a danger to Canadian sovereignty. You will hear no more of it from me." Who is peddling this trade agreement now? Well, none other than John Crosbie, from the same Crosbie family, as I was reminded by the pro-Canada network when they were here in Ottawa. They reminded Members of this House that this is the same Crosbie family that, in 1949, wore the black arm band in Newfoundland, saying, "No, no, Newfoundland, don't join Canada. Join the United States". This is the same Crosbie family.

This is the same guy being held up by the Conservatives as the buffoon, the one who has never read the deal, who travels around and says, "Oh, well, I sold encyclopaedias and I never read all of them". What kind of preposterous hypocrisy! If hypocrisy was a parliamentary word I would use it to describe the present Minister of trade.

This is the Prime Minister, who, whenever any travelling American businessman came up from the United States, when he was a small boy, loved to sit on his knee and, for a buck, would sing them Oh Danny Boy.

There were an awful lot of Canadians who were not listening to the dulcet tones of the same man who, just four years ago—let us look at some of the other things that he had to say.

An Hon. Member: He sings better than you speak.

Mr. Fulton: He said, Canadians rejected free trade in 1911. They would do so again." There is the person who calls himself Prime Minister.

Let us look at some of the other Tories. Let us look again at the same quote of Brian Mulroney. "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it", he said, "during the 1983 Tory leadership race". Shortly after winning the 1984 election, the Mulroney Government started on it again. Or how about the Minister of Finance, Michael Wilson?

An Hon. Member: You said that. You are being redundant.

Mr. Fulton: "Bilateral free trade . . . "—they are getting sensitive now.

An Hon. Member: Every one of your speakers sings the same song. Don't you have anything new over there?

An Hon. Member: Get a new speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All Hon. Members know that it is the way of this House to refer to Hon. Members by either their title or the name of their riding. As your Acting Speaker, I have been quite lenient today, but I think the Hon. Member is taking advantage of that leniency and has been repeating names, family names, of Hon. Members. I am sure that from now on he will be very careful. The Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Mr. Fulton: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had this to say prior to being elected, of course, much like other people I will refer to in a moment:

"Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally", he said. How about David Crombie, the former Secretary of State for Canada, who said: "It is silly. Our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sister".

How about our friend, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees)? He has been around this House for some time. He said in this House: "An examination of the facts as they are today, gives a clear indication that a move toward free trade with the United States would not be a good thing for this country, from either the economic or the political point of view. I believe that from both points of view it would be a disaster". There we have the Minister of Veterans Affairs who has been around for some time.

An Hon. Member: What do you say?

Mr. Fulton: Let us consider the country with which we would be having these closer economic ties. Between 1978 and 1985, according to Statistics Canada, 92.3 per cent of the new jobs in the growing services sector were created by Canadian firms. In the same period, the goods-producing sector saw Canadian firms create 89,500 new jobs, while U.S. subsidiaries cut 61,400 jobs, and other foreign firms cut 26,500.

Where did the Tories get these scintillating ideas? They got their energy policy from Richard Nixon in 1970. He said: "Preclude Canada from using indigenous natural gas and oil as a means of industrial development and nullify the comparative advantage we could attain from these resources".

Let us not forget that this is the same Party that agreed to implement the largest self-imposed penalty in the history of the world; the 15 per cent softwood export charge. Talk about a gutless bunch of wimps! These guys are incredible.

It is costing $800 million a year now. This incredible sell-out, grandfathered into the deal, is costing $800 million a year. I cannot wait until these Tories hit the campaign trail, in B.C., I will be torching their tails.

Thomas Niles is watching across the street, under the stars and stripes. Members opposite say that the Liberals and New Democrats just don't like Americans. What a lot of piddle-paddle. People on this side of the House like Americans just as much as they do on that side, but we don't crawl on our bellies for the United States the way they guys do.

Let us take a look at what Tom Niles had to say in Senate confirmation hearings about the forest industry in British Columbia: "Canada should be willing to open up its timberlands on the West Coast to American loggers, who could cut down Canadian trees and haul them to U.S. sawmills, at the same price that Canadian companies pay for timber on Crown land". Here is what the Tories stand for. They want Americans from Washington, Oregon, Idaho, California and Alaska, coming in to B.C., cutting down our trees. I will tell you, I will have none of it. I will kick those guys back down to the U.S. even if the Tories do not have the guts to stand up for one thin minute.

Mr. Schellenberg: Rambo.

Mr. Fulton: When Thomas Niles was asked if he did not think Canadians might view the proposal as an easy way of exporting Canadian jobs as well as natural resources, he said: "These are the kinds of things that need to be discussed". What kind of wimps did we send to Washington? What does Simon Reisman say? The way to get a trade agreement with the U.S. is to give them all our water. A brilliant strategy! How many of these brilliant sell-out artists do we need? Give them our water. Give them our timber. Give them our uranium.

An Hon. Member: Give them our country.

Mr. Fulton: Give them the country. Those Members are tough.

An Hon. Member: Give them the Tories.

Mr. Fulton: They are tough.

Niles has the experience of discussing pressing issues with Canadians. From 1981 to 1983, he was the head of the U.S. inter-agency negotiating team that met with Canadian officials to solve the acid rain crisis.

After three years on the payroll of Reagan and Nixon, saying: "We will solve acid rain with Canada", what has happened? There is more acid rain falling from the U.S. today than when the Prime Minister took office. He is brilliant. Not only do we have the largest self-imposed penalty in the history of the world, this is the largest self-imposed political and economic act of colonialism in the history of the world. This supinely, acquiescent, cloaca-mouthed Government is incredible.

Let me give some more information. Let us compare health care.

We know that our health care system is better. The Americans would love to have it. We have universal hospital and medical coverage in which employer contributions are compulsory.

What about the U.S? Forty per cent of the population are eligible for publicly-funded hospital and medical services. Thirty-six million Americans and 12 million American children have no insurance of any kind. This is what the Tories want to bring to Canada.

An Hon. Member: Come on.

An Hon. Member: That is not true. You know it.

Mr. Fulton: Bring all those good things. That is right. Perhaps the Tories would like to tell us the clause that protects social programs. Perhaps they would like to tell us the precise number. They cannot, Madam Speaker, because that is not protected. What about minimum wages? All provinces and territories have minimum wage laws, but only in Alberta is it below $3.20 U.S. an hour. In nine U.S. states there is no minimum wage. In Texas it is $1.40 an hour. What about unemployment insurance? Eighty-three per cent of Canada's unemployed collected benefits in 1986. The average payment was 60 per cent of the average weekly wage. What about the United States? Only 25 per cent of the U.S. unemployed workers received UI last year. The payment was 35 per cent of the average weekly wage.

I know there is not a lot of time because the Government only wants five days of debate on the most major piece of legislation in this century. Every single major personality on the front bench opposed this kind of a deal with the U.S. when running for office. Then the Tories came in with their hidden agenda. If they had any guts, they would take the issue to the people. If treason were a parliamentary word, I would use it to describe those Members for trying this hidden agenda on Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, having heard the speech of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), a member of the New Democratic Party, I understand why they got only 9.5 per cent of the votes in Lac-Saint-Jean. The people of that region think it is Disneyland rather than the land of Broadbent because from what he says, Madam Speaker . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear.

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): . . . from what he says, we realize that the New Democrats haven't read the Free Trade Agreement, do not understand a single thing about it and that they are only trying to undermine the credibility that has taken Canadians so many years to build in order to develop a strong American-oriented external market.

That, Madam Speaker, shows the arrogance and the working philosophy of the New Democratic Party and I understand why they only got 9.5 per cent of the votes in Quebec and will be unable to do any better.

The Free Trade Agreement is first and foremost an economic agreement. I don't understand why the two opposition parties, the Liberals and the New Democrats, are talking about cultural sovereignty, linguistic identity, social and energy programs and concluding that we have sold out Canada to the American economy as a whole.

Madam Speaker, this purely economic agreement is based on existing trade; 80 per cent of Canadian exportations go to the United States. We did not invent it. That is what the Canadian Government wanted to do. As a responsible Government, it wanted to maintain those benefits and create an environment in which Canada, a country dependent on exports, can have secure access to the U.S. market, with the attendant opportunities for expansion and for developing programs in this country that are available to all Canadians, programs that will improve our quality of life and improve the productivity of all sectors of our economy, with the result, Madam Speaker, that Canadians will take greater pride and feel more independent and stronger in their Canadian identity within a market of 250 million. That is what our free trade agreement means.

Madam Speaker, when we consider that our trade with the United States provides one job out of three in this country, and when we consider that both Opposition parties would put these jobs at risk, one example being the Liberal Leader who said he would tear up the agreement . . . The next day he said that if they were elected, they would have to live with the agreement once it was signed. All of a sudden he was interested in international markets. He doesn't know where he is going, Madam Speaker, and he wants to become Prime Minister of this country. Frankly, that makes no sense at all.

Consider the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He was against the Auto Pact. He said it would destroy the Canadian automobile industry. He said he was against the Pact. And today, what do we see, Madam Speaker? Today we see a leader who defends the interests of Oshawa, a party leader who says free trade isn't good for the rest of Canada, but we in Oshawa want to keep the Auto Pact. We want to keep the industry and we want to keep our zero rate of unemployment. Let the rest of Canada suffer! Madam Speaker, we are not going to do what the New Democrats want us to do. We will proceed, and we will implement an economic policy that is fair and equitable for all Canadians. We want an economic policy that looks to the future, not a regressive policy of the kind favoured by the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, but an economic policy that reflects the will of Canadians to expand and to become independent traders in an international market.

Madam Speaker, when I hear the Opposition Members, when I hear the New Democratic Party Members tell us their stories claiming that most Canadians and Quebecers are against the agreement, they have not seen the latest polls: in Quebec, 40 per cent are in favour of free trade. Forty per cent, Madam Speaker, is a majority. And they are trying to tell us that we do not respect democracy. But what does that mean in the case of Quebec? Madam Speaker, the Government of Quebec and its Premier are in favour of the agreement; the Official Opposition is in favour of the agreement; the Conseil du patronat is in favour of the agreement; the Coopérative fédérée du Québec is in favour of the agreement; Agropur and Agrinove are in favour of the agreement. I will point out to the Liberal Members who do not know Quebec that the Coopérative fédérée represents all farmers in Quebec and Agrinove and Agropur represent all Quebec dairy farmers.

Madam Speaker, to put in their place the Liberal Members who have not read the agreement, I will mention that Article 710 of the free trade agreement says that we keep our rights and privileges under Section 11 of GATT. This means that we keep our marketing and management systems and that Canadian agriculture will be able to develop as it wishes. This is in the agreement. And you may notice that it is no longer Jacques Proulx, president of the UPA, who is talking about joint plans; he is talking about cultural sovereignty and GATT discussions. Madam Speaker, we have given to the farmers what they wanted, we have protected them, and that is why 66 per cent or a third of their products not subjected to a quota system, for example beef or pork products, are exported to the United States. We have opened up to our producers a flourishing market, where they are more and more successful, Madam Speaker, because they have access to that market. That is nothing new, Madam Speaker, but a fact both Opposition Parties have absolutely refused to understand!

Madam Speaker, unlike members of both Parties in front of me, I view life more positively. All they know is to be negative and reactionary. Because they think that we are not able to compete with the Americans, they call Canadians a bunch of nobodies, of small-timers, and incompetent business people. Well, Madam Speaker, I am proud when I see a firm in the Champlain riding which exports to the United States, because it means my constituents can have jobs, they can buy a house, have a family, and continue to develop. That is what the future will be like for Canada and for Quebec, an optimist future centered on foreign markets and prosperity. That is what we have been aiming for with the free trade agreement.

Madam Speaker, we hear the two Opposition parties saying that Canada is being sold out to the Americans because they are ten times bigger than we are. But let's look at what is happening in other countries. Let's take, for example, Australia and New Zealand. Australia, which is seven times bigger than New Zealand, much the same, relatively speaking, as the United States compared to Canada, and New Zealand, which has increased its exports, think that the Agreement they have reached is good for both countries as a whole. The same thing applies to Sweden, which has signed a free trade agreement with other Scandinavian countries, Sweden which the New Democrats like to quote as an example of a country which has developed its social programs. They were the first to sign and to understand that an assured access to foreign markets would allow them to establish adequate social programs for their citizens and to ensure their economic development in their own environment; the European Economic Community also came to the same conclusion, Madam Speaker, and their trade has increased by 340 percent while Canada has stagnated at some 150 percent.

Such is the avenue, Madam Speaker, this Government decided to follow when the Prime Minister agreed with President Reagan to create an economic unit that would be strong for all Canadians, strong for North America, and thriving as far as economic development is concerned in the area of research, productivity and efficiency. This is how we want to open the debate, not on a negative note by telling stories about the past because it would be shameful to tell stories about the Leader of the Opposition when he contradicted himself so often over his last 15 years of political life. On this side of the House we look to the future.

We look to the future because we trust our young people, we want to give them opportunities for growth—we want to give young Canadians, the men and women living in this country an opportunity to become entrepreneurs, to grow, to provide themselves with efficient social programs, programs that meet the needs of Canadians, and it is to that extent that I am proud as Member for Champlain to support the free trade agreement and to suggest to the people in my constituency and to all Canadians—this is the best of investments in the future, rather than the investment in the past the Liberals would like to leave us with, and which the New Democratic Party never understood.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Madam Speaker, I bring some advice to the Conservatives tonight. Is there anyone in this House who has the welfare of Conservatives more in his heart than I? No, absolutely not. I give them some advice tonight. They are perfectly welcome to ignore my advice, but it is free. I hope they will listen and will listen well.

One of the first things Conservatives should pay attention to is the last Angus Reid poll. I am not referring to the raw figures which show which Party is popular. I want to deal with that particular part of the poll that dealt with honesty and integrity. When the Canadian people were focused on the question of honesty and integrity, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) scored off the scale, way up there.

Mr. Fulton: Honest Ed.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) was second.

Mr. Nystrom: Honest John.

Mr. Rodriguez: And way down at the bottom, in the incredible depths of 10 per cent, was the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Fulton: Oh, what's his nickname?

Mr. Rodriguez: Jaws III. There it was. In terms of honesty and integrity, the Canadian people were saying that they do not believe the Leader of the Government.

Why do Canadians not believe him? Has he given them any basis for having confidence in what he says? Has he given them any basis for believing any of the things he has said in the past?

We all remember 1983 when he was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party.

Mr. Fulton: What did he say?

Mr. Rodriguez: He said—

An Hon. Member: You just happen to have it with you?

Mr. Rodriguez: I just happen to have it here handy. When he was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party, he said:

> Free trade affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns or at any other time.

He also said:

> Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983.

Mr. Fulton: When was it that he said that, in 1950?

Mr. Rodriguez: That was in June of 1983. He was running for the leadership of the Conservative Party. God only knows what kind of thinking goes on. The Prime Minister went on to say that free trade is like a man who gets into bed with an elephant. When the elephant twitches and rolls over, he is a dead man.

Mrs. Killens: Who said that?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Prime Minister.

Mrs. Killens: Never.

Mr. Rodriguez: The Prime Minister said that and he was right then. He told Canadians that there would be no free trade with the United States.

He went through an entire election campaign in 1984. Was free trade raised? No, not on your life. Suddenly the guy is in Quebec City singing for Mr. Reagan, just like he sang for Colonel McCormick for five bucks When Irish Eyes are Smiling. Now we have free trade and it is being rammed through the House with only two and a half days of debate. It is an agreement which Simon says is the greatest in the history of the world. That is what Simon Reisman said.

What else did we hear in the 1984 election campaign that Canadians took at face value? We heard that our social programs were a sacred trust. Lo and behold, bang, at the first opportunity for a financial statement in 1984, we had the attempt to deindex old age pensions.

Mr. Fulton: Who did that?

Mr. Rodriguez: The Prime Minister did it, and Canadians made a judgment: this man cannot be trusted.

The Leader of the Government in the 1984 election campaign embraced the cause of open Government. He said:

> The present (Liberal) government believes you have only limited rights to know. Conservatives believe you have every right to know . . . If the Canadian people see fit to give us their trust, we will always give them ours.

Inger Hansen, the federal Information Commissioner, in her annual report to Parliament which was brought down last week, said about the Government's performance on freedom of information the following:

> "The act isn't working, and I felt I had to speak out . . . I meant to tell the Canadian public, 'You can lose these things if you don't watch out.' " The government "has, by inadvertence or by design, undermined both the letter and spirit of the Access to Information Act."

Is there any doubt now why the Canadian people do not trust the Prime Minister? Is it any wonder that he is down in the polls in honesty and integrity? On July 17, 1984, the Prime Minister said:

> Let's face it, there's no whore like an old whore. If I'd been in Bryce's position, I'd have been right in there with my nose in the public trough like the rest of them.

Then he went on to say about patronage:

> I was mistaken to treat so important a matter in a way which might be misunderstood and very much regret having done so. As I have said since the outset of this campaign, I am committed to the attainment of new standards of quality in making public appointments and that remains my commitment to the people of Canada.

Here we have the failed vacuum cleaner salesman, the failed encyclopaedia salesman, giving his buddy John Laschinger thousands of dollars to sell the free trade deal. This Government has not learned anything from the bad habits of the previous Liberal Government. It continues in the same vein. The Government promised no more patronage, but by golly, we have patronage.

What were we promised in September of 1986? In September of 1986, just two years ago, the Prime Minister promised Canadians that they would have their say on the free trade deal in an election or by some other mechanism. Have we seen that mechanism? Is two and a half days of debate in the House of Commons at second reading that mechanism? Will the legislative committee be able to travel around the country to get the opinions of Canadians about free trade? Not on your bottom dollar.

My advice to this Government is that when Canadians go into the booth to vote, it will not be on the mechanics of the free trade deal. They do not understand much of what is in that deal anyway. They are going to be voting on whether that Prime Minister can be believed, and the verdict is already in. What is the verdict, yes or no? No, he cannot be believed.

The only other thing that I learned around here goes back to 1974, and I want to make this crystal clear. There is another Party in this House, and I recall when Robert Stanfield proposed that wage and price controls was the way to get inflation down.

Mr. Fulton: Stanfield did, a Tory?

Mr. Rodriguez: Bob Stanfield did, a Tory. He was the leader of the Tories. We went through the entire 1974 election campaign and the Liberals opposed wage and price controls. Pierre Trudeau made a speech in Timmins to crowds of people and he said: "The only thing that's going to be controlled are your wages". Everybody cheered. We New Democrats, to our everlasting credit, were honest. We opposed wage and price controls. We did a beautiful job for the Liberals. We destroyed Robert Stanfield. The Liberals got elected, when the dust settled, with a majority. What do you think was the first thing we got?

• (2050)

Mr. Nystrom: Zapped!

Mr. Rodriguez: You got it. Zapped!

Mr. Fulton: Only wages were controlled.

Mr. Rodriguez: You got it. They set up the Beryl Plumtre agency. She was supposed to be monitoring food prices. They did not get any monitoring at all.

I recall the 1980 campaign. I was around for that one. I remember the failed vacuum cleaner salesman, the failed Encyclopaedia Britannica salesman, brought in his Budget which incorporated an 18-cent a gallon excise tax. He is also a failed Minister of Finance. He cannot even read. He brought in that Budget, and what happened? We waged a campaign in 1980 against an 18-cent a gallon excise tax. The Liberals were against it. You should have heard their speeches! To our credit again we were sincere and we opposed it. What happened after the election when the dust settled? The Liberals got elected, and what do you think we got now? Not 18 cents a gallon. We have something like $1.50 a gallon. We got it in spades.

We have to be careful. There really is no difference between what we are hearing from our right and what we are hearing from across the way. Let's go to election, I say to the Tories, before you fall any lower. Let's go.

Mr. Fulton: Unanimous consent, we want more.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Having spent 30 years of my life in the beautiful world of show business I find it very difficult to interrupt the Hon. Member when his time is up.

Some Hon. Members: More.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. You were not in the House when we had evening sittings. I think the last two speeches we heard from the NDP tonight probably say much more eloquently than anyone could why we do not have evening sittings any more.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Hardey).

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Madam Speaker, before I begin—

Mr. Langdon: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I have to appeal to the Chair to inform the Parliamentary Secretary that, contrary to what he said, we heard two magnificent speeches from my colleagues which put the free trade deal precisely in its proper context.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Your Acting Speaker has made all the comments she has to make on that subject. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Kent.

Mr. Hardey: Madam Speaker, I cannot help but notice the lack of speakers from the Liberal side of the House. They have missed the last several rounds, and as I stop to reflect upon the howling we heard from them in this Chamber about time allocation I am just amazed that they cannot find speakers to put up in this important debate.

Mr. Gauthier: I have a point of order, Madam Speaker. I know it is not proper to interrupt someone making his maiden speech but I would like to point out to him, if he has been around here all day, that we have had more speakers on this side today.

Mr. McDermid: Be careful.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Hardey: Madam Speaker—

Mr. Axworthy: Nice to see you here. What is your name again?

Mr. Hardey: —anyone who has been around the House as long as the Hon. Member will realize that when they miss their round they are obviously running out of speakers. That is the only point I wanted to make.

In the time allotted to me for debate on this Bill I want to emphasize some of the facts surrounding the free trade initiative. A few weeks ago I put out a flyer in my riding reciting several facts about free trade as well as a list of non-political opinions about the deal. This information was well received in my riding. I find that people are searching for unbiased facts, and as they find them they start to realize that those who oppose free trade between Canada and the U.S. do so solely for political reasons. The reasons have nothing to do with trade or economics.

As I listened to the statements made on the other side of the House, and the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) is a good example, as is the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I heard ranting and raving about the agreement. They did not recite any facts whatsoever. They called the Government names. I guess they think it is humorous, but this is not productive. Yet it has been that way since October, 1987, when the initial agreement was signed. Even when the negotiations were going on, the Liberal and the NDP Parties attempted to mislead and confuse Canadians in the most cruel way imaginable. There seemed to be no limit to how low they would stoop to try to twist the facts to suit their tactics which are designed to win political points.

Canadians are beginning to see through those tactics. Eventually each one of the accusations made to upset and confuse the people was found to be unfounded and false.

Mr. Langdon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Hon. Member just suggested that the accusations we made have been misleading. I quote from the Government's text which indicates that the day it was issued, performance required, such as increased exports or domestic content levels—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It appears that this is not a point of order. The Hon. Member is indulging in debate.

Mr. Hardey: Mr. Speaker, eventually each one of the accusations put forth to upset and confuse people has been proven to be unfounded and false. Yet without apology they simply continue. Of course, some continue to shout silly phrases. Some continue to display dirty cartoons on T-shirts. However, that will not be effective. People see through it right away because there are no facts, just ignorance of the agreement and how it makes Canada a stronger and prouder nation, not only for today but for tomorrow.

Time and time again we have heard about the combined efforts of Bob White, Shirley Carr and David Peterson, Premier of Ontario, to invent new ideas to oppose the deal. No one pays any attention to the so-called Leader of the Official Opposition because he has never had an original idea on how to oppose the deal. He simply leaps on someone else's ideas. Bob White, Vice-President of the NDP, and David Peterson, who wants to be drafted for the leadership of the Liberal Party, are the ones who are conjuring up untruths about the free trade agreement.

In 1987 David Peterson set his six famous conditions for approving the free trade agreement. He beat his chest and said that Ontario would use any power it had to block the free trade agreement if the agreement allowed unfettered U.S. investment in Canada, if the free trade agreement gutted the Auto Pact, if it eliminated agricultural marketing boards, if it infringed on cultural sovereignty, if it dismantled regional development powers, or if it did not provide adequate dispute settling mechanisms.

Those were his six points. We all know very well, of course, that those concerns were unfounded because every last one of those concerns was met. Marketing boards were protected under the agreement. Cultural institutions were protected under the agreement. Regional development was not inhibited. A binding dispute settling mechanism has been agreed upon, and the Auto Pact is not only intact but was complemented with a new rule of origin creating 50 per cent North American content in non-Auto Pact manufactured automobiles. That is a 40 per cent increase over the present North American content rules.

Premier Peterson was not asked to apologize for misleading Canadians, nor was Bob White or the federal leaders of the opposition Parties. A simple acknowledgement that the concerns of Canadians were met with the agreement would have been sufficient, but they did not do that. Instead, they get their heads together and dream up new untruths to confuse and upset Canadians.

This past week they came up with a real whopper. As we are all aware, a drought has come about in a great portion of Canada and the midwestern United States. We are all worried as crops wither before our eyes. As a matter of fact, that is about all we talk about in southwestern Ontario in the County of Kent. We are very concerned. Suddenly we find the Opposition accusing the Government of giving away our water to the United States. That is no coincidence at all, Mr. Speaker. This is one of the cruelest attempts to misinform and confuse people that I have ever seen. If ever an apology was in order, it certainly is now.

Can you believe that the opponents to free trade, true to their reputation of no common sense at all, picked up on Article 2201 of the Harmonized Tariff Schedule which indicates that tariffs will be eliminated on bottled water which, of course, includes carbonated water or Perrier water? They twist it further by complaining that Article 409, which does not allow either party completely to turn off resources to be exported, did not exclude water in the free trade agreement. The fact is that it did not exclude water because we do not export water. Nothing in the agreement forces Canada to export a resource which it has good reason not to export. The federal water policy is very clear on this issue.

The Opposition even brings up the 29 year old proposed Grand Canal Project. I will not go into a great deal of detail, but this 29 year old project proposal envisions a diversion of James Bay water to the U.S. via the Great Lakes. This 29 year old proposal has been formally rejected, as well it should be, and the proposal will not be considered by the federal Government. In any event, what has that to do with the free trade agreement? It is simply brought forth to frighten people, and that is what I want to talk about. That is what is upsetting me. It is not as though the facts make any difference to the Opposition, but the Opposition has always been in possession of these facts. Yet it moves forward with the twisting of them.

That is not all. In spite of being in possession of the true facts about water and the free trade agreement, Premier Peterson of Ontario decided to prey upon the emotions of the people concerned about the drought in our country and introduced legislation to control water exports from Ontario. I suppose he wants to justify the mistakes he made previously about the free trade agreement. He should apologize for being mistaken when he accused the federal Government of making a bad deal. He should be waving the flag for the free trade agreement, for keeping 92 per cent of Ontario exports moving into the United States market. Instead, he introduced legislation last week to control water exports from the Province of Ontario, clearly another political move to upset the people of Ontario concerned about the drought, and he tried to tie it to the free trade agreement. That was just another cheap political move to rationalize and try to justify this useless legislation.

The Premier quoted a U.S. governor who asked for 9,000 cubic feet of water per second to be diverted to the Chicago sewer project from Lake Michigan. He knows full well that that request has been forthcoming during dry periods since the 1930s when the project was created.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I am sorry to have to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his time has elapsed.

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few remarks on the free trade issue as well this evening, but I want to approach it from a slightly different point of view than that to which I have been listening through most of the evening.

One may say that Tom Wolfe said it best when he said: "You can't go home again". That is exactly what opposition Members want to do; they want to go home again. They want things to stay the way they are. That is impossible. They do not seem to understand that there are over 200 different trade Bills in the United States Congress, any one of which or any number of which could seriously affect Canada's economy and its trade. They want stagnation, not growth, not forward progress. These Bills can sideswipe Canada in any number of ways. There will be no exemption for us unless this free trade agreement can be ratified with the United States.

In my opinion if one says "no" to free trade, one wants a narrow, a less prosperous, and a socialist society in Canada. We talk about how important our social programs are to us. Free trade does not threaten them. It ensures them. If this country becomes less prosperous, the cost of our social programs will be something which must be looked at by any Government. We will have to consider whether we can afford them. The way to afford the social programs we have and to enhance them with such things as a major child care initiative is for us to have a booming economy, greater trade, and a more prosperous country. That will not be the result of turning down the free trade agreement.

For those of us in the West in particular, free trade not only enables us to trade with the United States but enhances our opportunities to trade throughout the Pacific Rim. I will give an oversimplified example.

A widget manufacturer in Vancouver producing widgets for the Vancouver market is not operating on an economy of scale. This free trade agreement will mean that we can open up the entire market of the United States, the five million people in the Seattle area alone and the California market which has more people than all of Canada. If the manufacturer can finally compete in the United States with security for his product, he can plan an expansion of his plant on the basis of maximum economy of scale. That exists in western Canada now. The minute he does that, it means that he can compete throughout the Pacific Rim with the producers of any product because his plant can be as efficient in terms of scale as any in the world. Frankly, that is what we need in British Columbia, that is what we want for British Columbia.

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has commented that he would tear up the free trade deal. I do not know what wag said it, but it has been said that to tear up the agreement shows a great more strength of hand than of brain. I must agree with that.

If free trade is as bad as Members opposite suggest, the clause allowing the deal to be cancelled in six months would be invoked. They do not need to tear up the deal because it can be cancelled by either party. We are not bound to it forever in any respect. However, if the deal works and increases Canadian trade, obviously we will want to keep it.

The New Democratic Party has been the most honest about their view of this deal. They realize that this agreement means greater trade and less government for Canada. It means prosperity, with less possibility of socialism coming to the country. We know that the New Democratic Party wants socialism and that this agreement will not help them in their objective to bring socialism to Canada.

Let me explain what free trade means to my constituents in North Vancouver. It will mean expanded traffic, with less hassle for the literally hundreds of consultants who must travel back and forth across the border to conduct the business that will be open to them. It will mean cheaper consumer prices. It will mean for the typical family in North Vancouver on a trip to Bellingham less of a smuggling operation because that will not be necessary with free trade. I hope I have not offended anybody, but we certainly see thousands of Canadian cars in Bellingham.

Free trade also means security for the forest industry, which is important, because British Columbia has been clobbered by lobbyists from the United States. Our shakes and shingle industry was particularly affected with the loss of many jobs. The free trade deal is worth it for the protection of our forest industry in British Columbia alone.

The NDP should talk to Jack Munro and International Woodworkers. I have yet to hear them make any statements condemning this deal as bad for British Columbia. They will not do so because they know it is good for them, their jobs, and the expansion of the market.

Do Canadians want a country that is facing stagnation? It has been said that one cannot go home again. The U.S. Congress is considering very defensive and narrow Bills that will not exempt Canada unless we can achieve this major agreement. I ask Canadians: "Do you want socialism, or do you want growth in our society? Do you want the economy to grow? Do you want jobs for your children and expanded opportunities? If so, closely examine the free trade agreement".

Rather than listen to the rhetoric from all sides, consider the studies done by independent groups such as the Canada West Foundation, the report by Liberal Senator Van Roggen's report from the Senate a few years which came out strongly in support of free trade, and the report by the Economic Council of Canada. Those who are not involved in the politics are saying that this is a great deal for Canada.

Those who want a socialist state and a bleak future for Canada should not support the free trade initiative. However, those who want a future that means something will support the free trade deal.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak so soon. I sat through much of the debate in the House this afternoon when opposition Members were raising a proper furore about the fact that they were not getting enough time to debate. I believe three Conservative Members in a row have spoken, and I am now rising to speak because opposition Members are refusing to speak, which I suggest makes a mockery of all the argument we heard this afternoon. However, I did not get up to talk about the Opposition. I want to speak about the issue of free trade from the perspective of a western Canadian.

There are three categories into which I want to divide this subject. The first concerns the historical problems associated with free trade. The second deals with why the West supports free trade—

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I could not help but hear the comments of my dear friend, the Hon. Member for Peace River. I want to tell him that if he feels obliged to speak and defend the Government's position on free trade, it is not necessary. If he wants to sit down, we will proceed to the vote right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): That is hardly a point of order. The Hon. Member for Peace River.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am quite happy to have an opportunity not only to put the position of my Government on record but my own position as well. I am still shocked that no opposition Members have risen to speak. We are very much surprised that they are not continuing to speak in the debate this evening.

The third category I want to discuss is the politics of the deal.

Let us examine why tariffs were originally implemented. Their purpose was to protect certain Canadian industries, which were largely in the manufacturing sector. Management would be one of the main beneficiaries of a business that was protected by these tariffs. They had a margin of error built directly into their prices with that tariff protection. Another margin of error could be applied to technological advances because they were looking at reduced investments. Those businesses did not have to be on the leading edge of competition.

However, they were not the only beneficiaries. The unions also benefited from tariff protection. They experienced job security along with reduced pressure on their need to be productive.

Of course, there were those who had to pay the price for that tariff protection. Several groups fall into that category. The first group would be the consumers who had to pay higher prices for their goods. They ended up with a limited or more restricted supply. As a result, those consumers began to pay the price of any tariff protection that existed within our economy.

There is another group that I think suffered just as much. It is a group which I think specifically relates to western Canada, that group of people who are involved in the development of our resources in the West. The reason they suffered is that the costs of goods and materials which they needed to develop, export, and market their products were higher to them simply because of the tariff protections which existed.

If one is in the oil and gas business, that means that pipe costs more because of tariff protection. Work clothes cost more because of tariff protection. The same is true with respect to tools which cost more.

All of this came to a violent head when the previous Liberal administration brought forward the National Energy Program. When that was done it became apparent to western Canadians that we were not able to buy the goods that we needed at world price. We had to pay the world price plus a tariff. We may have paid anywhere from 115 per cent to 130 per cent more for particular goods or services that we bought which were protected by tariffs. Yet, when it came to our own commodities, the commodities that we wished to sell—and under the National Energy Program that particular commodity was our oil and gas—we were told that we could not sell them at the world price. We had to go below the world price, down to 85 per cent of world price. What we had then was an obvious imbalance. Those who were protected by tariffs were receiving a premium price for their commodities. Those of us who were not protected by tariffs actually paid a penalty. In the case of the National Energy Program that penalty was 15 per cent.

It was no wonder that western Canadians were so angry about the National Energy Program. It is no wonder that their attention was focused immediately on the whole business of tariff protection. It is no wonder that today western Canadians in such a large majority support the free trade agreement.

I wish to consider why westerners support this deal. The first reason is that consumers of manufactured goods for the most part live in the West. They see prices being reduced as a result of the free trade agreement. They see more variety of goods and services being made available to them. As consumers they are in favour of the agreement.

Second, as producers of resources, whether that be in the area of oil and gas, forestry, or agriculture, they see full access to the American market. They see an opportunity to sell their goods at world price.

Third, they see the costs of their materials being reduced as a result of the reduction in those tariffs and as a result of increased competition in particular areas of supply.

The fourth reason that western Canadians support the deal is that we in the West are putting a great deal of energy into diversifying our economy. That is why the Government put into place the Western Diversification Program and why it has established the Western Diversification Office. That was done because we want to build a manufacturing and processing industry in western Canada. In order to accomplish that we need materials at lower prices, those materials that we need in order to finish or process our products.

Something else which is important in terms of the diversification of our economy is that we need access to the California market. That market consists of 25 million people who live in the State of California. That figure is roughly equivalent to the whole population of the entire country of Canada. The reality is that the California market is closer to the City of Edmonton than is Toronto or Montreal. Thus we have a larger market available to us through the free trade agreement. It is much closer to us than is the existing market in Canada. That is why we see so much opportunity and potential for diversifying our economy.

I now wish to talk about the politics of the deal. What we are really being offered is two choices. The Government is offering a positive position on free trade, what I call a balanced deal. We have negotiated a fair deal, a deal which says to the West: "Here is your chance to develop, to diversify, and to revitalize your economy. Here is a chance for those who are in the tariff protected industries to experience a phase out of those tariffs". In other words they are not hit right now, today; there is a phase down time. They have a 10-year period in some cases to make the transition from a tariff protected environment to an environment that is not protected.

What have the Liberals said about free trade? They have said that they will tear up the deal. Why do they want to do that? For one thing they favour the status quo. They like the balance of the economy that exists within Canada at the moment. They favour government intervention. That was radically demonstrated by their previous policy, the national energy policy. It is no surprise that they will rip up the deal.

What about the NDP? Members of that Party have said that they, too, will cancel the deal. Why are they going to do that? As my colleague stated, the NDP want a controlled economy, a socialist economy. They do not see that as being possible under the free trade agreement.

Members of the New Democratic Party are also big supporters of the unions. The big unions are not supporting this agreement. It is obvious that when the NDP is given the choice of supporting the western Canadian farmers and small business people or the big unions, they are going to pick the big unions each and every time. That certainly has been our experience.

I think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government have demonstrated a vision for Canada. They have given us as western Canadians an opportunity. It is an opportunity that I am proud to support. It is an opportunity that I think is good for western Canada. The time is right for the deal right now.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I know that with your vast experience in this House you have seen hypocrisy before. However, as a new Member I have seen hypocrisy today like I have never seen it before. I sat here all morning and all afternoon and listened to the debate on time allocation. According to members of the Opposition, they did not have enough time to debate it. They did not have enough time to talk about free trade. A year and a half has not been enough for them. Yet everyone in Canada is talking about free trade.

Mr. Rodriguez: Keep talking, Bob.

Mr. Horner: I will keep talking.

I am the fourth government Member in a row to stand up to speak. I see Members sitting opposite but they are not standing up. They do not want to stand up to tell us that we are wrong. We are not wrong.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. To this point, excluding the Hon. Member for Mississauga North who has the floor now, there have been 15 New Democrats who have spoken on the Bill, 22 Conservatives,—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: —14 Liberals, members of the Opposition being in a far higher proportion than members of the Government in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Once again the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has entered into debate on a point of order.

• (2130)

Mr. Horner: That was a very interesting point of order, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that you got a lot out of it. We are debating a subamendment to an amendment to the main motion. I do not want to talk about subamendments and amendments. I want to talk about free trade, and what is happening in this country.

Mr. Gauthier: Sit down and wait until we get to that. You are out of order.

Mr. Fulton: Self-confessed out of order.

Mr. Horner: No, I am not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: From the horse's mouth himself we just heard that he does not want to speak about the subamendment. That is what is before the House. The Hon. Member has to speak to what is before the House, not what will come up tomorrow. I would invite the Hon. Member to pay attention and to be relevant to the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I understand that it is very difficult for the Hon. Member for Mississauga North, but I trust that we can give him an extra moment or so at the end to make up for this.

Mr. Horner: Since opposition Members wish me to debate the subamendment, I will tell them that I will never support the subamendment. If opposition Members wish me to debate the amendment, I will tell them that I will never support the amendment, but I will support free trade, Bill C-130, because it is the only saviour of Canada.

Let me tell all Hon. Members about the great riding of Mississauga North. This little booklet contains 7,000 businesses in Mississauga just waiting to ship their goods across into the United States. We cannot wait to increase the size of the terminal at Lester B. Pearson Airport because we want to get our goods across into the United States.

The Mississauga Board of Trade conducted a survey. It was a simple survey sent out to 2,700 corporate members. The Board of Trade asked: "Are you in favour of free trade? Will your company benefit?" Fifty-eight per cent said yes, 15 per cent said no, and the rest were not sure. Perhaps some of the workers have been brainwashed by the unions and may not be supporting free trade. The entrepreneurs and the businesses are because they want to sell their goods in another country. They will, and they will create jobs.

Since the war we have become more and more dependent on trade with the United States. In 1945, 30 per cent of our exports were shipped to the United States. Today it is almost 80 per cent.

In the United Kingdom our exports have fallen from 5 per cent to 2.4 per cent. Our exports to Japan have fallen from 6.1 per cent to 5.4 per cent.

Mr. Gauthier: Blame it on the Tories.

Mr. Horner: No, not under the Tories. This was from 1976. In the other EEC countries our exports have fallen from 6.7 per cent to 5.1 per cent, and in all others from 14.6 per cent to 10.8 per cent.

We need trade with the United States and we want to secure our markets with the United States. The only way to do so is a comprehensive free trade agreement with a good dispute settlement mechanism so that we can sell—

Mr. Gauthier: Which you did not get.

Mr. Fulton: Read it.

Mr. Horner: I have read the free trade agreement. I would recommend to Members opposite that they read pages 56 to 76. They make really interesting reading—A minus B over C equals D where A is the amount of grain sold. As the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has stated, we do not need to know every tittle that is in there. All we need to know is that businesses in Mississauga will benefit.

Members of the NDP sit over there and laugh. There is not one among them who has ever created a job. Are they going to stand up and speak? No, they are not, because they have not a word to say. The Liberals are also sitting there. They are great while they are sitting down.

Mr. Rodriguez: What do you need to know? Up is down.

Mr. Horner: I do not need to know one thing. This agreement recognizes not only the independence of Canada and the United States but also the differences. For the first time Canada's legitimate concerns over cultural policy, social programs, and regional development have been recognized, putting to rest the unfounded claims that freer trade leads inevitably to assimilation.

I have some other surveys here, Madam Speaker. In Alberta, 53 per cent are in favour of free trade and 32 against; 44 per cent in British Columbia are in favour of the free trade agreement.

If they want to call an election, I will fight it on free trade any time at all.

Mr. Rodriguez: You are the Government.

Mr. Horner: I would like to quote from a release put out by the Ontario Small Business Corporation. It states: "A new survey reveals the small business sector in Ontario and throughout Canada has become more positive about free trade with the United States since the signing of the agreement in January. Federation President, John Bulloch, said opposition to free trade within the small business sector of Ontario has dropped by half since CFIB conducted a similar survey among its membership in 1986". It has dropped from 15.9 per cent to 7.8 per cent.

We hear a lot from the Opposition about whether Canadians can compete. Does Canadian industry have the plants, equipment, skilled labour force, and managerial skills to take on American competition? I say that we have. Free trade to the world's largest and richest market will allow Canadian industry to specialize in producing those things we do best. The result will be more investment, more exports, and more jobs. In 1984 we promised jobs, jobs, jobs. We could have sat here and done nothing like the Liberals did from 1980 to 1984. We promised change, not only change for the sake of change but, change for the better. We are not afraid to go out and bring forward an agreement like this one.

Much has been said about the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) changing his mind. Any politician who has not changed his mind at some time does not have a mind to change. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) is the former Mayor of Ottawa. I am quite sure in her term as Mayor of Ottawa she changed her mind numerous times.

Mr. Rodriguez: Have you got one to change?

Mr. Horner: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Have you changed your mind on Bill C-72?

Mr. Horner: The Auto Pact has been a boon to Ontario. In 1965 the NDP laughed and said that the Auto Pact would not work. They opposed it. The Auto Pact is working very well. There are no problems with it that require attention in the negotiations. The Auto Pact could be stopped with one year's notice.

The Liberals talk about tearing up the agreement. If any of the Liberals had read the agreement they would know that it can be stopped in six months, six months' notice is all that it takes. What type of credibility would any Government have that would say that it would tear up the agreement before it even saw it? I really cannot believe it.

I challenge any members of the Opposition to rise and speak; otherwise be a little quiet.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, I am quite willing to speak. Considering the previous Member was making our case for us so well, we are willing to give him extended time, if he wishes.

Mr. Rodriguez: He has nothing more to say.

Mr. Murphy: Unfortunately he had nothing to say when he was speaking last time.

Mr. Nystrom: Tell us about Bill C-72.

Mr. Murphy: There have been four Conservatives in a row, however that still brings the percentage of Conservative Members who have spoken on the free trade issue to approximately 10 per cent. In our case, over 50 per cent of our caucus has spoken on this issue—

Mrs. Mailly: That is because there are so many of us and so few of you.

Mr. Murphy: —and the Liberals are approaching that percentage.

We recognize the importance of this debate, and we will be putting up speakers in the one day that we have left to debate. It is interesting that today, on July 4, the American holiday, the Government moved to restrict debate on this very important issue. The Government wanted to spend more time debating capital punishment. It wanted to spend more time debating abortion. It wants to debate a number of issues. However, when it comes to an issue which is very important to all Canadians, an issue which will affect Canadians for generations to come, it wants a very limited debate.

Mrs. Mailly: Balderdash.

Mr. Murphy: We hear from their seats one or two Tories who say: "You can tear up the agreement with six months' notice". That is the excuse to say that we are not affecting future generations, because some future Government can actually rip up the agreement. They say that and they mean it. It is true that with six months' notice any Party can give notice, but let us look at what will happen. The way the Government is selling us out, it would be very difficult to unscramble those eggs and it knows that.

I was very interested when the former Conservatives Whip, the Hon. Member for North Vancouver—Burnaby (Mr. Cook), one of the valued dinosaurs of the Conservative Party, rose and said that he was for this agreement, that the New Democratic Party was against the agreement because we wanted a socialist Canada, and that this agreement would prevent it. What that Member was in fact stating was that future Canadian Governments were obviously limited in making decisions for this country. It is not a matter of socialism; it is not a matter of what social programs we want and what other Parties may not want. That Member was speaking the truth in his own way. He was recognizing that the ability of future Canadian Governments to make decisions that are important to Canada will be restricted by this agreement.

One thing that is interesting in terms of the Government and its desire to restrict this debate is, as we see from the Environics poll, is that opposition to free trade is growing across the country. In Saskatchewan, Premier Grant Devine has been out there campaigning. Let us remember what he said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: They do not want to hear from the Conservatives. They get upset. They get upset when the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) quotes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). They get upset when one of our Members quotes the Conservative leadership. Now they are upset when I try to mention what a Conservative Premier says. The Conservative Premier from Saskatchewan went around the province, preaching the value of free trade, explaining how important it was to the West and actually picking on the people of Ontario. What happened? Let us take a look. Which province is most against the Mulroney trade deal? It is the Province of Saskatchewan. I recognize that I should not have said "the Mulroney trade deal". I should have said the Prime Minister's trade deal, and I apologize, Madam Speaker. The point is that, as the Premier went out and tried to sell the deal, the people of that province turned against the trade agreement.

Let us take a look at what is happening today in the Government's latest issue. Let us look at what the Government says, in its own glossy publication. With regard to investment it asks: "What happens with the deal? What happens to future foreign investment in this country?" The Government says, in its own publication that performance requirements such as increased exports, import substitution, sourcing requirements, and/or domestic content levels as a condition of investment will not be permitted under the agreement. This means that if some foreign-owned company comes and takes over a Canadian firm, we have absolutely no right to regulate what the firm will do. It is the right of any nation to determine what will happen with its own resources, its own companies, its own regional development. We have a right, as Canadians, to make those decisions and those requirements. The Conservatives want to sell out that right. This group of Conservatives says "That is what we want. We do not want to have any controls. We do not want the Canadian Government to be able to say that it thinks, if there is a foreign takeover, that perhaps that firm should be investing in Canada, perhaps that firm should be buying goods in Canada, perhaps that firm should be hiring and training Canadians".

The Government does not want that power, and it wants to ensure that future Governments do not have that power. What I find amazing is that these Conservatives are rejecting what every other Conservative Government in the country has ever stood for. One interesting thing is that they ask: "What about the automobile industry?" Do these Conservatives remember that when the President of Ford Canada made his speech to the annual meeting—the board of directors were all there; they spoke to all their shareholders, 94 per cent being Ford of the U.S—he said that he was all for this trade agreement, that he liked this trade agreement? He congratulated the Government on it, and then he said that he did not like provincial laws on occupational health and safety. Because there was provincial laws on occupational health and safety—

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Murphy: The President of Ford Canada said that he did not like these laws because they restricted the company's right. Because of that, he thought that it might be just as advantageous for the company not to build a new plant in Oakville but to do it in the States.

The situation is that they are saying: "Okay, with the new trade agreement which we love, we are in a situation where we can make a decision that if we do not like provincial laws on occupational health and safety we can actually relocate in the States." That is going to be allowed under this agreement. That is going to happen as a result of this agreement.

The Government says: "We are not affecting provincial programs. We are not affecting occupational health and safety. We are not affecting the various social programs that have been put in place in the various provinces." However it is allowing Ford, GM, Chrysler, General Electric, and all such other firms to say: "Well, we don't like the social programs you have in Canada. We don't want to pay for those social programs that you have in Canada, so we are going to take our corporations, we are going to take our plants, and we are going to develop them in the southern states".

We have some controls in this country, we have the right to make decisions in this country, and they are selling out that right and they know it.

July 4 will be a Conservative holiday, and I will tell you, Madam Speaker, that my sons, my grandsons, and my granddaughters will remember the Conservatives as the traitors that they are.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2150)

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and honoured to wrap up the debate on Bill C-130 this evening. Like many of my colleagues I have been sitting here throughout the day listening to the debate and watching it collapse for the Liberal Party, with the New Democratic Party not far behind. I have been asking myself what if this Parliament had a great debate and nobody came from the opposition Parties? That appears to be what has happened this evening. Indeed, we are left now with government speakers to support one of the best Bills our Government has brought forward in the past three or four years, and it is my privilege to speak on it this evening.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just for the record and so that the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni is aware, there are 190 Conservatives missing this evening.

Mr. McDermid: We are all debating though.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I know the Hon. Member did not mention anyone by name, but it is not the custom of this House to mention the absence of Members, especially at ten o'clock at night. The Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni.

Mr. Schellenberg: Madam Speaker, after the next election there will be a lot of NDP votes missing, especially in British Columbia where the free trade deal is supported so highly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schellenberg: I think it is quite appropriate that I speak on July 4, having just been in my riding for Canada Day and today is Independence Day in the United States. The two days in between, July 2 and July 3, have been declared Canada-U.S. Friendship Days, so it is quite appropriate that we speak this evening on this very important trade agreement between our two sovereign nations.

I feel a bit like Alice in Wonderland. Things are getting curiouser and curiouser as this debate goes on. Opposition Members demand time to debate. They say five days are not enough, but they are having trouble putting up speakers. We have just heard the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) talk about the horrible Americans, as the New Democrats tend to classify them. Let us remember that it was an NDP Government in Manitoba—and the NDP Member for Churchill will be well aware of this—that sold its hydro power to the Americans.

Some Hon. Members: What?

Mr. Schellenberg: Why did the NDP Government do that, Madam Speaker? It was to create jobs in Manitoba. That is what happens in western Canada in particular where we fund our lifestyle on the resources that we export to other nations. The NDP Government in Manitoba has done that and other Governments across this nation have done that in order to create employment. This agreement will secure that kind of an arrangement with the Americans who are one of our biggest trading partners.

Mr. Axworthy: We are selling now without free trade.

Mr. Schellenberg: Then we had the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) a little earlier this evening talking like Rambo Jim about American tanks at the border coming to take our water, our trees, and our fish. The Hon. Member knows full well that that is not accurate. I wonder how dumb he thinks the average Canadian voter is to accept that kind of drivel.

Our own Government in British Columbia has released a report on the free trade agreement. I know the Hon. Member from Skeena and other NDP Members are big fans of the B.C. Government. Let us listen to what is in this report. The B.C. Government predicts, through its own research, a 2.5 per cent increase in provincial Gross Domestic Product by 1999 in British Columbia and 27,600 net new jobs in B.C. through the free trade deal. The question was asked about where B.C.'s exports were destined for. Through this document it shows that 46 per cent of British Columbia's exports go to the United States, 26 per cent to Japan, and 28 per cent elsewhere. "What will free trade's impact be on B.C.'s employment? No effect: 83 per cent; positive effect: 15 per cent; negative effective"—about which our socialist friends and Liberal friends seem to be so wrapped up—"2 per cent; barely minimum".

Let us look at Vancouver Island, my particular part of the world. What will the free trade's impact be on B.C. regions, Victoria and Vancouver Island which have a labour force of 201,000 workers? There will positive effect of 14 per cent on that labour force. I wish I came from my hon. friend's riding of Skeena. Up in Prince Rupert and area—I have 14 per cent on Vancouver Island—according to this document the positive effect in Skeena will be 28 per cent through the free trade deal. The Hon. Member stands in this Chamber and debunks one of the greatest agreements between sovereign nations. He should listen to his fellow socialists in New Zealand and Australia who have their own free trade agreement. It is working so well that they are speeding things up. They want the mechanism brought forward earlier than the 1990s.

Let us look at what has happened between Ireland and the United Kingdom. In 1963 before they signed their free trade agreement, 70 per cent of Ireland's trade was with Great Britain and 30 per cent with the rest of the world. What has happened 25 years later? That is a good example, a small country and a big country. We are all afraid of the great Americans. Twenty-five years later the situation is the reverse. Seventy per cent of Ireland's exports are to the world, the rest to Great Britain. Ireland became better at what it did. It had a larger market-place in which to trade and could export products much better. That is what will happen to Canada with this deal. Then we have our friends in the Liberal Party.

Mrs. Mailly: Where are they?

Mr. Schellenberg: They do not have too many friends in British Columbia, but they do have some friends. The Liberals say that they want to tear up the agreement. The New Democrats say that they are going to tear it down. The Liberals want more debate and want the legislative committee on Bill C-130 to travel across the country. Of course they do not really want too much input because they will tear it up anyway. Canadians will never support a potential Government that would tear up any kind of sovereign agreement. The Liberals say that they do not want a bilateral agreement with the U.S. What they want is world trade. That has been their argument for the last little while—not the U.S. but the world.

What happened when we had a world leader in this Chamber? The Prime Minister of Great Britain, Margaret Thatcher, came here. What was the Liberal reaction? Did they want to discuss trade with Margaret Thatcher? Of course not. They wanted to shout her down. They did not want to hear what she had to say about the benefits of world trade.

We have heard many quotes in this Chamber over the last few days. What have people in the B.C. forest industry said? Peter Bentley, Chairman of the Canfor Corp., has refuted claims that Canada would be better off as things are than with free trade. He said:

> That assumption is a myth, and the forest industry is living proof that protectionism in the U.S. is alive and well.

He went on to say:

> Bear in mind that as Canadians tariffs have declined, our exports to the U.S. have increased. Opponents of the agreement argue that free trade will cause Canada to lose jobs and trade to the U.S., yet history proves just the opposite. When tariffs come down, trade will go up.

That is all around the world, including Canada. The fishermen in British Columbia whom I know are listening to me tonight if they are not out on their boats catching fish, it is the season. Let us see what the American fishermen are saying and here is a good indication of what free trade means. This is from an American magazine, the February issue of National Fisherman:

> American east and west coast fishermen, processors, and their representatives have voiced virtually unanimous opposition to the proposed free trade agreement.

These are the Americans. Here is another quote:

> —fishing industry leaders say the U.S. industry has more to lose than gain if the trade pact is ratified. They charge that the accord is unbalanced in favour of Canadian fishing interests.
> As U.S. seafood industry representatives view it, the elimination of tariffs would be of substantially greater benefit to their Canadian counterparts since they would gain tariff-free access to one of the world's major seafood markets.

There you have it, Madam Speaker, from the forest industry to the fishing industry, to almost every other industry in this nation, the benefits from free trade are quite obvious. I wish I had more time. I have much more evidence and more brilliant eloquence to go through about the free trade deal. Let me summarize my comments this way as we wrap up the evening.

Many western Canadians to whom I have spoken are excited about the possibility which the free trade agreement presents. We know that Canada-U.S. trade has increased by 40 per cent over the past eight years. We do not feel any less Canadian because of that. We know that 85 per cent of our cross-border trade with the U.S. is now tariff-free and that including the remaining 15 per cent is quite logical. We know what western Canadians can do given half a chance.

Our Government is prepared to provide that opportunity in this nation through the free trade agreement with the United States of America.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and privilege to present a petition signed by Canadians who reside in Hamilton, Burlington, Stoney Creek, and other locations in that general area. The undersigned residents petition that the Conservative Government has no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States; and whereas the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised in the course of bilateral trade negotiations that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised; and whereas the trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the U.S., the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to be dissolved and to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition, pursuant to Standing Order 106, on behalf of a number of constituents who are very concerned that the proposed trade deal with the United States threatens our sovereignty as a nation. They are reminding Parliament that the federal Government has no mandate from the people of Canada to negotiate this trade deal. They also point out that they feel very strongly that this trade deal would jeopardize Canada's economic, social and cultural programs that could be introduced in the future in the best interests of Canadians.

Therefore, they want to participate in this decision through a national general election, and call upon Parliament to ensure that this national debate takes place before the agreement is actually signed and that that debate occur during a national general election.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on the subject of the Government's trade deal with the United States. In their petition, the Canadians who have signed the petition indicate that they are very concerned that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) does not have a mandate on the trade deal, that indeed the Prime Minister campaigned against such a mandate. They call upon the Government to ensure that there is a national debate on this issue, and that this debate result in a national general election before any agreement is finalized.

Petitions

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to present a petition on behalf of a number of my constituents who are concerned about schizophrenia. As Hon. Members will note, schizophrenia affects about 1 per cent of our population, causes severe mental anguish and suffering to patients and relatives. It costs Canadian society more than $3 billion annually in direct health care and other support costs. These constituents humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition from a number of Canadians, pointing out that the Canadian-American trade deal would threaten the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty, and pointing out that the Government had no mandate to negotiate a trade deal with the United States, that this deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs that Canadians need and, indeed, would further integrate Canada into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore, they call for not only a national debate but a national general election before this agreement is finalized.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it is my responsibility under Standing Order 106, to file the attached petition, and it is correct. This petition is signed by many citizens from Edmonton, Alberta, a province in which we often hear that people are very supportive of a trade deal. This petition states that they feel the Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the U.S., and the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

The proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the American market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs. Therefore, they ask that Parliament be dissolved and the Canadian people have the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present four petitions humbly declaring that the Mulroney Government has sold Canada out without obtaining anything in return; Canadian industries are not always protected against American trade laws; the United States got everything it wanted in every important sector, including agriculture, energy, automobile trade, financial services and investment; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; and the Conservative Government has not made provision for any retraining assistance for Canadian workers.

The petitioners therefore humbly call upon Parliament to censure the Government for signing the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

CALL FOR RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Jim Caldwell (Essex—Kent): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by residents of my constituency, from Wheatley, Cottam, Kingsville, Leamington, Ruthven, Chatham, Chairing Cross and Thamesville, who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada. As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA—U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I have here petitions from various provinces—Quebec, Saskatchewan, Alberta and Ontario—circulated by people in different constituencies. They request that the Government be censured for having sold Canada out to the Americans in the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement.

These people are complaining, as the UPA's slogan says, that a horse was exchanged for a rabbit, and that Quebeckers and Canadians will be the losers.

Consequently, Madam Speaker, these people have asked me to table these petitions in order to make all Members of the House aware of the serious situation we are in at present.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I, too, have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by a number of residents from various centres in southern Ontario. The petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, and that the proposed trade agreement would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I too would like to table petitions concerning the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement.

I have here two petitions from Quebec, one containing the names of 30 people form Pointe-Claire, Ville Mont-Royal,

Saint-Laurent, Beaconsfield, Lachine and various municipalities on the West Island of Montreal.

These people are concerned that Canadian industries are not protected against American trade laws under the Canada-U.S. agreement; the jobs of thousands of Canadians are threatened; and the Conservative Government has not made provision for any retraining assistance for Canadian workers.

Thirty people signed this petition, and I have another on the same subject, signed by 31 residents of Quebec—people from the West Island and other municipalities such as Dollard des Ormeaux, Pierrefond and Pincourt. These people are also concerned and maintain that the Government sold Canada out without obtaining anything in return when it signed the trade agreement with the United States.

[English]

I also have a number of petitions from residents of the Province of Ontario. One petition contains 30 names of people in the Kanata area. Another petition contains 25 signatories from people in the Orleans, Ottawa and Vanier area. Also, I have a petition containing 30 names from people in Pembroke-Renfrew and other related areas of the Ottawa Valley. Another petition, containing 30 names is from people in the Hamilton area.

• (1120)

I have another petition containing 26 names from people in Embrun. All of these people claim that the Mulroney Government has sold out Canada and received nothing in return in signing the free trade deal. They claim that the United States has obtained everything it wanted in all key sectors, especially in agriculture, energy, auto trade, financial services and investment. They are worried that thousands of Canadian jobs are threatened and that the Conservative Government has not provided for any adjustment assistance for Canadian workers. All of the petitioners are worried about the Canada-U.S. trade deal and want it pulled out.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition from a number of people in Mississauga, the Niagara Peninsula and many other communities across southwestern Ontario, such as, Tillsonburg, Chatham and Delhi, all of whom oppose the free trade agreement and want their voices registered in the Parliament of Canada. They are very concerned about the energy side of the agreement. They are most concerned about agriculture, auto trade, financial services and the investment community. They want to express strong opposition to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

I have another petition here from Niagara Falls, St. Mary's, Toronto, Bramalea and many other areas across southern Ontario, Scarborough included. These people oppose the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal for the same reasons. They are concerned about Canada's energy, our financial institutions and certainly our agricultural community.

I have another petition sent in by the people of Stevensville, Port Colborne, Niagara Falls, Fort Erie, Welland, and many other areas across southwestern Ontario. They are opposed to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal and want their message registered strongly in the Parliament of Canada.

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF TEN-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Madam Speaker, it is my duty also to present to you a petition, from the residents of certain communities in my riding, namely Sainte-Anne, Bouctouche, Bedeque, Saint-Édouard and even Moncton. The signatories deplore the fact that the Department of Employment and Immigration has completely ignored the unemployment situation in south-eastern New Brunswick in changing the eligibility period from 10 weeks to 16 weeks.

The petitioners humbly pray that the Minister will take the necessary steps to preserve and maintain the eligibility period for unemployment-insurance benefits at 10 weeks, as the rate of unemployment in the rural regions of New Brunswick is three times higher than the rate in urban centres.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from the constituencies of Essex—Windsor, Windsor West, Windsor—Walkerville and Essex—Kent, including signatures from Windsor, St-Joachim, Harrow, Tecumseh, Essex and Cottam who indicate in the petition that they are deeply concerned about the lack of a mandate which the Conservative Government had to undertake a trade agreement with the United States.

They feel that this trade agreement will take from Canada the very fabric of political potential decision-making within our country. It will make it difficult for Canada to continue to build a society distinct from that of the United States. Therefore, they ask this Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a national general election.

I have a second and different petition, Madam Speaker. This one has been certified correct according to Standing Order 106. The petition comes from Toronto and the focus of its concern is that the trade deal would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social and cultural programs that Canada needs and would also integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base. They ask Parliament as well to see to it that an election is called on this deal before it is put into effect. The petitioners hope very much that the Government will listen.

The third petition I have is similar to the first one that I have tabled with the House. This petition comes from the Hamilton area and includes people from Hamilton, Caledonia and other towns and cities, one might say of small Canada, within that part of the Province of Ontario. The petition also includes some signatures from Amherstburg, Windsor and Brantford, Ontario. I hope very much that the Government will pay attention to these hundreds of signatures being tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I too have a petition to present, which has been signed by a large number of Canadian citizens in Alberta and also in the Toronto region, protesting that the Conservative government has no mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a free trade deal with the United States; recalling that the Prime Minister had promised that during the course of the negotiations Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised; and [expressing] their fear that this Trade Agreement will deprive Canada of its political freedom to determine its own economic future, which could undermine our ability to build and maintain a society distinct from that of the United States. They therefore pray that the Parliament of Canada will dissolve and thereby give the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the Free Trade Agreement during a national election campaign.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 337, 357 and 373.

[Text]

STUDIES OF FLOW-THROUGH SHARE TAX INCENTIVES

Question No. 337—Mr. Penner:

Since September, 1984, has the Department of Finance conducted studies on the effects of the flow-through share tax incentives and, if so, what were the development projects studied and, in each case, what were (a) the dates of (i) commencement (ii) completion (b) the findings of the study?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, the Department of Finance has not conducted any flow-through share studies of the nature implied in the question (i.e. studies related to specific development projects). The Department has, however, conducted other studies of flow-through shares.

In formulating advice on this issue, the Department completed a study into flow-through shares in the fall of 1984. This study examined the need for changes to the income tax legislation affecting flow-through shares.

The findings of this study provided background for the technical changes to the flow-through share legislation that were announced in the February 26, 1986 Budget. These changes eliminated the need for costly and complex private arrangements to protect the investor. The changes removed any potential liability from the investor in the event of accidents—such as a blowout or shaft collapse—during the exploration or development program.

The recent announcement made by the Department of Finance and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources regarding the extension of the mining exploration depletion allowance (MEDA) and the introduction of the new Canadian Exploration Incentive Program (CEIP) were also the result of internal studies. These studies evaluated the rate of return and share premiums available to issuers and investors.

Other studies that provided background for the recent improvements to the flow-through share regime were a collection of submissions (both written and oral), requested by the Department of Finance, from the resource sector and the financial community. These submissions examined the flow-through share regime after the October stock market crash. These submissions were analyzed intensively by departmental officials and provided useful information in helping to arrive at the recently announced changes to assist exploration activity.

FEASIBILITY OF TRANSPORTING PLUTONIUM BY AIR

Question No. 357—Ms. McLaughlin:

1. With regard to the U.S.-Japan Nuclear Co-operation Agreement to fly plutonium over a polar route, has the Government been consulted regarding emergency procedures if a landing is requested in Canadian territory and, if so (a) what is, or will be, the Government's response (b) is there a policy set out for this matter?

2. To the knowledge of the Government, has the United States decided that plutonium will not be flown over its territory and, if so, will the Government make the same assertion?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The U.S.A. and Japan are studying the feasibility of transporting plutonium by air on a polar route between Europe and Japan, completely outside Canadian airspace and jurisdiction. No final decisions have been taken on the route or other aspects of the flights which, in any event, are not expected to begin before the early 1990s.

During the ratification proceedings in Congress, the U.S. State Department indicated that the administration is prepared to rule out air shipments of plutonium under the Agreement from overflying or landing in the U.S.A., except in the case of an aircraft emergency. Neither the U.S.A. nor Japan has approached us regarding procedures if a landing were to be requested in Canada as a result of an aircraft emergency. However, the Government has in place procedures applicable in cases of aircraft entering Canadian airspace in an emergency. These procedures may be supplemented in any specific emergency by safety and security measures related to the nature of the cargo. While Canada has said it would not rule out flights of plutonium in advance of a specific proposal, it has also said it would most certainly prohibit such flights if not satisfied with every safety, health and security aspect thereof.

RESEARCH INTO EFFECTS OF BORDERING U.S. NUCLEAR REACTORS

Question No. 373—Mr. Langdon:

Has the Atomic Energy Control Board participated, or considered participating, in any research into the effects of bordering U.S. nuclear reactors and their waste products on arable Canadian soils and Canadian waters?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy Control Board reports as follows: No.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, July 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner in the absence of a mandate from the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada".

And the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "political institutions of Canada," the words "including our valued system of social and regional development programs,".

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Now that the debate has been called, this making it the last allotted day for this Bill, I have two points to make, if I may.

First, I understand that the Leader of the New Democratic Party wishes to speak after Question Period today, and I want to indicate that the government Members of Parliament will be prepared to waive the 10-minute time limit to allow the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) to complete his remarks.

• (1130)

Second, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the final recorded division on Bill C-130 which, under the rules, would take place at 9.45 tonight. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find unanimous consent to defer the last recorded division at second reading on Bill C-130 until 6 p.m. tomorrow evening.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I simply want to say to the Deputy House Leader how much we appreciate this offer to enable our Leader to speak at three today for a longer than usual time under the present Standing Orders, and also to have the vote deferred until six o'clock on Wednesday, allowing Members from the west coast to travel here during the day in order to be here for the vote. I appreciate the generosity.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, the Liberal caucus agrees with the general disposition. The New Democratic Party was courteous to us when our Leader spoke last week and allowed him to have unlimited time. We of course realize that this is the last day allotted by government edict for debate on the Bill. It is the Government's intention to cut off debate. We have no alternative but to follow this, and we also have to agree to defer the vote until tomorrow at six o'clock, out of simple fairness to all Hon. Members. I do not like it but I will accept it.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Madam Speaker, I am addressing this House today because I am firmly convinced that the Free Trade Agreement is good for Canadians in general, and for Canadian women in particular.

I find it unacceptable that certain people are assuming the right to tell Canadian women that the opening of our market on the United States is a threat to their job security and to the viability of our social programs. I find that the whole free-trade debate, in fact, rests all to often on errors in perspective and inaccurate data conveyed by the Opposition.

In fact, the threat to these jobs, especially in the textile industry, comes not from the United States but from Asian countries, and these are the sectors that in the United States are most protectively fenced in by tariffs. There are plenty of Canadians active in this sector who believe they can compete effectively as long as they are given a long enough transition period, and the Accord provides for a ten-year period over which the tariffs will be amended.

Nor will there be any changes in our social programs as a whole. I will add, Madam Speaker, that I think it is dishonest and almost indecent of the Opposition to let such fears persist. We retain our sovereign right to make decisions about our social programs and our social policies. Furthermore, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) asserted at the start of the negotiations with the United-States, and I quote:

Our political sovereignty, our system of social programs, our commitment to fight regional disparities, our unique cultural identity, our special linguistic character—these are the very essence of Canada. They are not at issue in these negotiations.

It is high time, Madam Speaker, that these so-called protectors of our national identity stopped taking women for simpletons. The Free Trade Agreement aims primarily at extending our economic, social and cultural development even further, and at building a Canada that will be even stronger and more competitive.

How can women help benefiting from the expansion of our country's economy? The Free Trade Agreement represents, for them as for all Canadians, an opportunity to improve their quality of life and increase their chances of success. Our government has already demonstrated and proven its desire to enhance the status of women in Canadian society, and it believes strongly that Canadian women must have an equal chance to contribute to our development as nation and thus to profit equally from our economic prosperity.

This desire is being translated into concrete actions. If I may, I would like to mention just a few:

—Since the Progressive Conservative Party came to power in 1984, the rate of unemployment among women has fallen by 3.6 per cent, while under the Liberals the rate climbed from 8.6 per cent to 12.0 per cent.

—Today there are 653,000 more women in the labour force than there were in 1984.

—And lastly, between 1984 and 1987, the number of women occupying professional or managerial positions increased by 36.0 per cent.

Madam Speaker, I wonder where those critics of free trade were before 1984, when the unemployment rate for women was going up by 3.4 per cent!

What our government wants is to present a blueprint for a new and progressive society, so that we can meet the challenges of the 21st century. This is why it is vitally important that we be able to progress in a stable economic climate if we want women to be represented fairly and equitably in the upper echelons of organizations, and have the same chances of succeeding professionally. And that is what the Free Trade Agreement will mean for Canada.

The Economic Council of Canada predicts that the Free Trade Agreement will result in the creation of 250,000 jobs over the next 10 years, and women, among other groups, will want access to those new jobs. An increase on this scale means that women will have greater opportunities of finding work in non-traditional sectors. In addition, 84 per cent of working women are employed in the service industries. This is the most rapidly-expanding sector of the Canadian economy. We know that free trade with the United States will mean an acceleration in our growth rate. It follows that the service sector will also experience sustained growth. This means better prospects and greater job diversity for women and for all Canadians.

Business women, who represent a significant proportion of the owners of small businesses, will also benefit from this Agreement with the United States. For all these women, the Free Trade Agreement will make possible access to a bigger market and will safeguard trade relations between our two countries.

Among other consequences, the elimination of tariff barriers will be a direct cause of lower prices to consumers and a greater range of products, which will benefit women as it will benefit all Canadians. It is women who devote a large part of the family income to meeting essential needs such as food, shelter and clothing. It is estimated that a low-income family will be able to save up to $325 a year and that this saving could go as high as $644 a year for single women.

Madam Speaker, it is possible to frighten people. It is possible to spread false rumours. But it is not possible to deny the facts on the grounds that they don't suit our fancy. And the facts, Madam Speaker, speak for themselves.

• (1140)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I am happy to be taking part in this very important debate, which is going to have such serious consequences for the people of Canada. The Minister who just spoke unfortunately has raised false hopes, without any figures or data to back her up. We have seen that kind of salesmanship before. Think back to the campaign, when the Minister and all her Conservative colleagues promised a happy future for the elderly, they were going to make all kinks of progress, and the opposite happened when old-age pensions were de-indexed.

Madam Speaker, today the government is forcing us to accept a Bill, an Agreement called the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement, without really knowing what it involves.

Madam Speaker, to start with, we must bear in mind that the Prime Minister of Canada, when he was running for the leadership of his Party, came out unequivocally against a free trade deal. This is not the first time he has fooled the people, it is the n-th time. In addition, the commitments, the negotiating of an agreement with the Americans, were meant to remove any possibility of the American government's taking reprisals against the Canadian government. Think back to the soft-wood lumber affair. Up to that point it was an excellent idea to make sure, to enable our Quebecois and Canadian enterprises to sell their products on the American market, but first of all there were conditions that the Liberal Party and our leader called for: Canadian sovereignty, the fact of being "maîtres chez nous" as we call it in Quebec, had to be protected; second, culture could not be negotiable; third, nothing about our social programs could be affected, they could not be negotiable, they must not be "put on the table"; and fourth, agriculture also had to be completely protected, it could not be negotiated.

Unfortunately, we all know what happened, and as the Coalition du Québec, which is made up of the Union des producteurs agricoles [Quebec farmers' federation] and the federated unions, has demonstrated, the result is that the Prime Minister of Canada gave the President of the United States a horse and got a rabbit in exchange. That is what the government wants us to approve today. And why do I have reservations about accepting such an agreement? Because the Minister of Transport himself (Mr. Bouchard), who was Minister of Employment and Immigration at the time, the MP for Roberval himself said that according to studies carried out by this Department, as many as 500,000 jobs could be lost. And I have here figures from a study by the Economic Council, which is an organization that approves of the idea of free trade, and these figures—contrary to what the Minister has just said—show clearly that there will be jobs lost in the textile industry, in the footwear industry, in the clothing industry, in the electricity, cables and wires industry, in a number of industries, and in agriculture.

Madam Speaker, we know there will be losers, we know there will be winners. I know in advance that Bernard Lamarre is going to be a millionaire four times over with Lavalin. I'm not worried about him and he has no need of the House of Commons. His shareholders are going to be better off too, that's certain. But one thing I don't know, and nobody can guarantee it, not even Bernard Lamarre of Lavalin: who can put down in black and white a guarantee that their employees are going to be better paid, and that there are going to be more men and women in Quebec, in all of Canada, with jobs? Mr. Lamarre can't guarantee that. My friend Lortie of Provigo, is also in favor of the deal. He's sure his shareholders are going to be better off. But there again he can't guarantee in black and white that there are going to be more jobs in Provigo and Provigain stores opened in Quebec. He won't sign a piece of paper saying that those new stores won't be opened in Plattsburgh—that a new Provigo will provide jobs for the people of Plattsburgh. My friend Lortie isn't even able to sign for me a piece of paper promising that the day after the Agreement comes into effect, a tin of beans will be cheaper. And he wants me to vote for this Agreement with my eyes closed.

Then there's my friend Beaudoin of Bombardier. He's all for the Agreement too, but he can't guarantee me that it will mean more jobs in his factory in Montreal East. He can't guarantee me that he won't open another factory in the United States to give Americans jobs at lower salaries than Quebeckers and Canadians get.

This is what the Conservative MPs want us to approve. And on top of that, everyone here in the House knows that there are going to be workers between 50 and 64 who are going to have difficulty. Recent figures show that despite the improvements in the health of the economy, the rate of unemployment among older workers has risen from 6.9 per cent to 7.7 per cent. There is no program at this time to help the losers. The Conservatives have only set up programs to help the winners.

If you want to get richer, if you are already a millionaire, if you went to school with the Prime Minister, you don't need to worry, your pockets will be lined and re-lined.

But if you are middle-class, if you didn't attend the same university as the Prime Minister, well nobody's going to give a dam.

We in the Liberal Party—and I think business people will understand this—never put all our eggs in one basket. We believe in not being tied to anyone. We believe in being independent. Our industries, our employers, our small and medium-sized businesses, our big businesses, must be open to the world.

It isn't that I don't have confidence in the people of Quebec and the people of Canada, that I dont't believe them capable of competing with the Americans. Far from it. Our workers in industry, in our factories, give them a chance and they will be able to compete not only with the Americans but with the Europeans and the Asians.

But not under an agreement like this one. This is the same agreement the Prime Minister signed when he agreed to become president of Iron Ore, only to shut it quietly down. It is not with an agreement like this one, to sell Canada and Quebec quietly to the Americans, that our competitiveness is going to be assured.

For us in the Liberal Party it has always been plain that markets have to be opened up. We would negotiate for markets and open them up not just with the Americans, not just with the Europeans, but with the countries of Asia and elsewhere. But one thing is certain, and that is that sovereignty, being "maîtres chez nous", which is what has made the Quebeckers of today able to stand tall, being what Jean Lesage called "maîtres chez nous", must not be lost. I realize that the Tories have their roots in the Great darkness of Duplessis, they grovel, they sell mines to the Americans. But the Liberals under Jean Lesage called for us to be masters in our own home, and we must never abandon that.

Secondly, our social programs were won with the sweat of our fathers and grandfathers, who over the years struggled with their governments to get health insurance, drug insurance, hospital insurance. It wasn't so long ago that a worker with several children when one of those children got seriously ill, that worker had to declare himself a bankrupt under the Lacombe Act because he had gone into such debt to pay the doctor. After many years of struggle, people sacrificed salary increases to pay for health insurance.

Unemployment insurance in remote regions like the Gaspé and the Atlantic provinces, for fishermen, was a way to survive with a little dignity, a way not to become a beggar, a pauper, a charity case. It was a dignity-insurance program. Since the rich are able to afford RRSP's, no one is insulted. If you think that we in the Liberal Party are going to let this protection for the dignity of all middle-income Canadians disappear, you are wrong! "No Sir!" I say that to the Prime Minister and his Tory Members.

You're in the process of pulling a good one on us with your anti-francophones. There aren't many of us, just 39. But the 39 of us managed to make you back off over old-age pensions; we made you back off over certain people on unemployment insurance, those older workers whom you had penalized; we made you back off over four issues, including the tax on drugs. You can be sure that the leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) and his 39 Liberals will make you back right off the electoral map in the next elections.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, a few days ago hundreds of thousands of Canadians celebrated Canada Day, Canada's birthday, with a feeling of pride in the accomplishments of our country over the past 121 years. There was a great deal of celebration and a great deal of jubilation. I suspect that the celebration on July 1, Canada's birthday, may be the last celebration of its kind that we will experience in Canada because the Bill we are debating today, C-130, should really be called "The Turning of Canada into the 51st American State".

We have spent 121 years building our country into one that is unique in the world, one that reflects ideals and values which are admired by people from all countries. We have built a society here distinct from that of the United States. After 121 years of building, the Conservative Government, in only three years, has sold it out to the highest bidder, in this case the United States of America.

What we have seen in this country over the last three years under the Conservative Government can only be described as anti-Canadian activity. There is no question that we have lost our sovereignty as a nation because of this trade deal. A lot of people have said that we have sold out the country. When you sell something it is assumed that you get something in return. This was a give-away of Canada for all intents and purposes to the United States.

Not only is this legislation anti-Canadian, it is also anti-democratic. You will recall yourself, Madam Speaker, as I am sure many Members will, that just prior to the last general election when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was asked whether he supported a free trade deal, he said that he was against a free trade deal with the United States. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was asked whether he supported a free trade deal with the United States and he said that he was against a free trade deal with the United States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was asked whether he supported a trade deal with the United States and he said that he was against a trade deal of this kind with the United States.

I could name a number of other senior cabinet Ministers who, when asked that question, said that they opposed a free trade deal with the United States. The people of Canada assumed that the Prime Minister and some of his most powerful cabinet Ministers, having said that they were against a free trade deal with the United States, were against a free trade deal with the United States. All that we as citizens can do is believe that what the Prime Minister says is the truth.

We then had a general election, and not one single time during the federal election campaign in 1984 was free trade even mentioned. Not once did free trade with the United States come up for discussion or debate by the Prime Minister or anyone else in the Conservative Party anywhere in Canada. Then, on January 2, 1988, the Prime Minister signed a deal with the United States called a free trade deal.

This, then, is undemocratic because the Government misled the people of Canada. I think it is fair to say that those people were dishonest when they said that they were against free trade. They did not even mention it in the campaign and then, after being elected, are going to lock Canada into this deal, sell out the country forever, and turn Canada into the fifty-first state of the United States. The Prime Minister can be the governor of the "Estate of Canada".

This is also unparliamentary. After months and months of intensive negotiations in secret by various negotiators, the Prime Minister, and some of his major advisers, the Parliament of Canada has been given five days to debate this issue. As you well know, Madam Speaker, we sometimes spend four or five days on a fairly simple tax Bill which will amend the Income Tax Act.

This, however, is not a typical piece of legislation. In the Prime Minister's words, this is the most important trade legislation in the world. The Prime Minister has said that it is the most important trade deal ever struck between two nations and he has allocated only five days for parliamentary debate. The Government is now going to use its huge majority to curtail debate, muzzle Parliament, and for all intents and purposes prevent it from working effectively on behalf of the people of Canada.

Not only is this legislation anti-Canadian and anti-democratic, it is also anti-parliamentary. I could add that it is also anti-constitutional. One of the key components of this trade deal is the paragraph which says that this deal overrides all provincial legislation. It does not matter whether this deal goes against the Constitution of Canada or the negotiations which the federal Government has had with provincial Governments over the last 121 years, this deal takes precedence. When push comes to shove we can forget all the arrangements that we have made constitutionally and through negotiations with the provinces. That is clearly unconstitutional.

It is preposterous when you think that this deal is about to be wrapped up through closure when you consider what the deal does for us. Canada set out to accomplish three basic things. One was open, guaranteed, and secure access to the American market. Time and again the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) indicated that if we did not get unrestricted access to the huge American market of 242 million, there would be no deal. We did not get unrestricted access to the American market. The United States administration retains the right to launch countervail and anti-dumping suits against Canada.

In other words, nothing has changed. The situation between Canada and the United States as a result of this deal will be the same next year as it was 10 years ago. The Americans retain the right to launch countervail against Canada as they did on softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, steel, and in other areas. Therefore we failed to achieve that ultimate goal we had set out.

Second, we wanted a binding dispute settlement mechanism so that if there was a dispute between Canada and the United States in terms of trade in a certain commodity, there would be a powerful decision-making body with teeth which could move in quickly and resolve the dispute. We failed to accomplish our second bottom line. All we got was a review panel to ensure that the Canadians and Americans are following the laws of their countries in a trade dispute. This panel has no teeth, it has no ability to move in and make a quick decision. Therefore, we failed to achieve our second bottom line as well.

Finally, we wanted an exemption against the United States protectionist trade laws. We did not get that either. The Americans retained the right to pass what they call trade remedy legislation against Canada and we accepted that. Therefore, we failed to achieve every single one of the three fundamentals which we set out to obtain.

The Americans also had three fundamentals which they hoped to achieve and they got all three of them. First, they wanted unlimited access to our markets. They wanted to be able to move in and buy immediately a company valued under $150 million. The Government gave them that right. The Government said that the Americans can have secure access to our energy resources and we cannot charge them more than we are charging our own customers. Third, they wanted to harmonize the wage laws, workplace laws, pension systems, and so on of the two countries. Canadians do not want the Americans to have any of those three objectives.

I am afraid my time is up, Madam Speaker. I hope I will have a chance to return to this another time.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement which is being discussed in the form of the Bill now before us, the Agreement reached with the United States, in my view offers innumerable advantages to both countries. It will enable our two economies, Canadian and American, to grow and prosper. It will help the private sector to create jobs. Despite what we have heard in the past few minutes, from alarmists trying to frighten children with bogeymen, I don't believe the people of Canada and of Quebec will let themselves be fooled. We have, I believe, the support of a large and growing majority of the people, and whatever the alarmists say, Madam Speaker, I think we can have confidence in the people of Canada. They will know how to met the challenge of excellence that we have raised over the past four years, and they know now that with a government with backbone, which can offer Canadians the challenge of excellence in the future, with a historic Agreement with our neighbour, they won't let this chance slip.

We have to bear in mind that we undertook these negotiations with our neighbour to the South because we were faced with an unprecedented wave of protectionist measures, and we had to do something. We could not sit by while the various sectors of our economy fell victim, one after another, to protectionist manoeuvres from the other side of the border. We not only had to reply to those attacks, we also had to offer, both to Americans and to Canadians, a new choice and a new challenge in the economic sector. That is what we have done.

We will also be in a position, in the months and years to come, to show the people of Canada and the world an example of what can be done by two trading partners.

Agriculture, whatever some people have claimed—and I was listening to the Member of Montreal—Sainte-Marie just now—Canada never said that agriculture was not a subject for negotiation. That's not true. It has never been true. What we said was that we would protect the various marketing boards, and that in the sectors where we could ensure and expand our markets, we would do so. That's what we have done. We have protected, unequivocally, our dairy, poultry and egg marketing boards. And we have also received the support of the people in the commercial sector. We have quite broad support in the agriculture sector, although I concede that there are still some concerns there.

Quebec co-operatives that market agricultural products have expressed approval of the Agreement. The Coopérative fédérée du Québec, which processes and sells agricultural products, Agropur, the largest co-operative, and Agrinove, another dairy co-operative, have expressed approval of the Free Trade Agreement.

And if there is some reticence on the part of agricultural producers, I can tell you, Madam Speaker, when one meets these people in person and can answer their questions, they are, in most cases, reassured.

I have met hundreds and even thousands of agricultural producers recently in the region of the Lac-Saint-Jean constituency, and I think they have given both the Member for Montreal-Sainte-Marie and the Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), who have been going around haranguing these producers for weeks—the producers have not been deceived. They realized where the truth lay.

We made sure with Article 11 of GATT, Madam Speaker—we incorporated that Article in the body of the Agreement. We also added agricultural products in the dairy sector to the list of controlled imports, which will ensure security in the dairy sector in the future. And the dairy sector is the backbone of farming in Quebec especially and in Ontario.

We have safeguarded that sector and the other sectors protected by marketing boards.

In the red meat—beef and pork—sector, the Canadian Cattle Breeders Association and the Canadian Pork Council have come out substantially in favour of the Free Trade Agreement. When one has over one billion dollars worth of trade with the United States, a flourishing trade—it has tripled in the pork industry in recent years—one cannot take the chance, Madam Speaker, of abandoning and jeopardizing that sector. We cannot do what our opponents would do and turn to markets . . . I even heard the member for Shefford say at one point: "Forget the Americans; we should trade with Japan." I heard him say that here in the House. It is an absolutely inconceivable misunderstanding of the facts by a Member of this House. We know what growth there has been in our trade with the Americans, in processing industry employment in both Ontario and Quebec, where the jobs are, the people who wear white smocks and process our agricultural products here in Canada so they can be sold in the United States. To say: "Let's ignore that; let's sell it in Japan!", when there has been a severe downturn in that area in recent years, is to put one's head in the sand, Madam Speaker. And that is not what we are here for; we are here to encourage our producers and our processors on this side of the border to meet this challenge.

On that note, Madam Speaker, I will conclude. I think we have a historic opportunity to sign this Agreement with the Americans and to assure the future of Canadian agriculture in the 21st century. I think we must not do as those people are doing, looking in the rear-view mirror; we must look ahead and assure the future of Canadian agriculture. This Agreement is historic, and I think we cannot take the risk of missing this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne) Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the amendment of Mr. Langdon. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Langdon), which was negatived on the following division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment to the amendment lost. Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Some Hon. Members: Debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins).

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Thank you very much, Madam Speaker. I rise today to participate in this last day of debate on this reading of the trade agreement, the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, which is going to change the course of Canadian history. Before any of this happened—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair will now hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Hopkins: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I said, before any of this happened, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) uttered some remarks that are going to be heard a lot as time goes on and, of course, as did some of his present colleagues. We know that in 1983 the Prime Minister said these famous words: "Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of total world trade, which has dropped in recent years." Now, that is from the Prime Minister of Canada. What has he done since? He has done precisely what the electorate of Canada would expect him to do; he has turned around and done the very opposite. His Government is becoming famous for that record.

Then we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who stands up in this House and answers questions so blandly. What did he say? At the same time, in 1983, the present Minister of Finance said: "Bilateral trade is simplistic and naive. It would only serve to further diminish our ability to compete internationally." Does that mean, today, that we are to accept the fact that the Minister of Finance is now naive because he has accepted free trade? He has accepted this trade deal.

Then we have the famous words from another front-bencher in this Government—who has far more respectability across this country than the Prime Minister—the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He is far more popular than the Prime Minister of Canada today. He said at that time: "Unrestrained trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear." But today, what is he doing? He is marching to the same tune as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, and they have the trained seals behind them all going along with them.

We hear from time to time in this debate that Prime Minister Laurier campaigned on free trade in 1911, but they are using it in the sense that he was defeated on that free trade. They are not bringing those points out. I just want to point out today that it is interesting to note that before Sir. Wilfrid Laurier got on the reciprocity bandwagon in 1911, he had 133 seats in this House of Commons. The Conservatives had 85 seats. There were three independents. There were 221 seats in the House as a whole. After the free trade election was over in 1911, the Conservatives under Sir Robert Borden, who opposed free trade, had 133 seats, exactly the same numbers as the previous Government. The Liberals under Sir Wilfrid Laurier had 86. There were two independents. You cannot help but note the complete and precise turnaround in Party standing. Both before and after the election, the Government Party had an over-all majority of 45 seats.

I just point this out because I think that the Government has to be prepared for what is going to happen after this election on the precise turnaround. Let us take a look at it today. There are other things that are the same. At that time the proponents of free trade were bragging about and really pushing it as the great answer to the Canadian economy. We are hearing the same thing today from the front benches of the present Government. We are hearing enthusiastic speeches from the Prime Minister. In 1911 we heard the same thing from the Government of the day.

Mr. Murphy: It was a Liberal Government.

Mr. Hopkins: It is not enough for the Government to have a massive majority in this House of Commons. The Tories have to call upon international people to support them in their free trade deal. When the Prime Minister of Great Britain was speaking in this House on June 22, she praised the Prime Minister of Canada. She spoke the following words:

> A Canadian Prime Minister at the turn of the century predicted that "the 20th century would be the century of Canada".

Note, Madam Speaker, she did not say that Sir Wilfrid Laurier stated those words. She said "a Canadian Prime Minister". Then she went on to make this ridiculous remark:

> The last 12 months have certainly shown his prophecy to be true.

No partisan comment could be more blatant than those particular words. Later on in her speech, she went on to say:

> On the basis of Britain's experience of joining the European Community, you need have no fear that Canada's national personality will be in any way diminished. Fifteen years of European Community membership have left our people no less British and no less proud of their history and independence.

For a Prime Minister of Great Britain to stand up in the Canadian House of Commons, make that statement and expect everybody to believe it is really expecting a lot.

Let us look at the facts. One, Britain has been an industrialized nation for centuries. It has a population of 55 million people. Mrs. Thatcher joined the European Common Market with whom? With Luxembourg which has a population of something less than 400,000, with Holland with approximately 10 million people; with Belgium having around 12 million people, with France with a population of about 40 million and West Germany with a population of about 80 million people. Let us look at this realistically. Here you have Great Britain with 55 million people, an industrialized nation for centuries, joining a group like that. How can any world leader stand up and compare that situation with the situation we have right here in Canada today as we are cut off in debate discussing one of the most important pieces of legislation that this House has ever seen, namely, a trade deal between the United States and Canada?

On the southern side of the Canada-U.S. border there is a nation of 250 million people. Here in Canada we have 25 million people. That would be similar to comparing Great Britain having a trade agreement with Holland. What Mrs. Thatcher did was nothing but plain interference in a major internal issue on trade between Canada and the United States, internal interference in Canadian politics by a British Prime Minister. Let us not be too foolhardy about accepting the ideas that came out of that particular part of the speech.

We cannot help but think that international terrorism has been around for a while and we have been trying to blot it out. Now that this has happened on the floor of the Canadian House of Commons we have a new phenomenon here today. We have international Toryism where one Tory leader comes to another country and supports its Tory leader in the internal affairs of political life and economic history.

If we look at the agricultural industry, we find there is a real danger for our agricultural community.

Mr. Caldwell: Where?

Mr. Hopkins: In the case of dairy products, a free flow of products from the United States would mean a loss of sales in Canada to U.S. products. The cost of raw milk for the Canadian dairy industry is more than 25 per cent more in Canada than in the United States. Canada cannot compete. Obviously I am getting the facts out very well because I can hear shouting from the sidelines. This trade agreement would be a substantial threat to the Canadian manufacturers of dairy products, probably the destruction of the dairy farming industry, a serious loss of employment and employment opportunities for Canadians and the loss of control of a stable Canadian food supply. Energy and food are extremely important to any nation and its future. We will be dependent upon the United States for both food supply in the long run and for prices asked for dairy products. In other words, we are losing control of our own price structure and becoming dependent upon another nation. That is not the story of Canada.

It is really a sad day for Canada when this Government brings in closure on a Bill, such as this, which will set the stage for the future of Canada in a very detrimental way and a new course, one that is diametrically opposite to that which the Prime Minister promised the Canadian people in 1983. He will be reminded of his change of heart every day this Parliament remains open until the next election. Then, we hope Canadians will have an opportunity to express themselves on this, the future of Canadian nationalism and our ability to run our own affairs in our own way.

We will go out in the world and get trade internationally. We have confidence that we can do that, and it will be done.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be given an opportunity today to say a few words about the legislation to implement the trade deal. Over the last several months I have been asked primarily by senior citizens across Canada what impact this free trade agreement will have on Canada's social programs, our pension system, medicare, unemployment insurance and other programs which many elderly Canadians have fought for over the years. We have established a social safety net that is probably the envy of most countries in the world, particularly the U.S.A.

I have responded to questions that no one can say for sure what impact free trade will have on social programs. Many of the initiatives, if you can call them that, taken under this agreement will take about another five to seven to ten years to negotiate. Most people are under the impression that the negotiations have been concluded when, in fact, they have not. The agreement has not been concluded. Negotiations will carry on for a long period of time. I can say this much, that if you take a look at the attitudes of the people who did negotiate this agreement at the bargaining table, there is absolutely no doubt in my mind that Canada's social programs were indeed a part of these negotiations.

Mr. Murphy, the American negotiator, made no bones about the fact that as far as the Americans were concerned Canada' social programs were up for grabs, which included old age pensions, medicare and unemployment insurance. The Americans consider Canada's social programs to be far superior to those that exist in the United States, and indeed, they look upon those social programs as being an unfair subsidy in Canada-U.S. trade relationships.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and other cabinet Ministers have denied all along that social programs were a part of these negotiations. Let us go back to the first so-called Shamrock Summit when the Prime Minister and President Reagan first sat down together. What came out of these discussions? Two or three things did. First, we know and the record shows that the possibility of a free trade agreement was first raised between these two gentlemen at that time.

We also know, and there is absolutely no doubt about it, that at that same meeting, President Reagan raised with the Canadian Prime Minister the injustice, as he saw it and as the multinational pharmaceutical industries certainly saw it, of the Canada Patent Act which dealt detrimentally with the pharmaceutical industry based in the United States. In fact, I am thoroughly convinced that as a precondition to any negotiations opening up on free trade, the United States President demanded that Canada amend its Patent Act. There is absolutely no question about that, and that is indeed what happened.

Canada did amend its Patent Act and that legislation went through the House last year. During the debate on amendments to the Patent Act, seniors across Canada predicted that if the amendments the Government was trying to ram through the House and indeed did ram through the House at that time became law, drug prices would return to what they were prior to 1969 when the drug companies enjoyed a monopoly on drug prices in Canada. The Government, and particularly the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), denied that that would happen and continues to deny that that has been happening. Yet we know that since that legislation went through the House, many drug prices have increased by some 50 per cent over what they were a year ago.

We also know that shortly after the Shamrock Summit at which social programs were probably discussed, the first Budget was presented by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), containing a proposal to deindex old age pensions. That may be a coincidence, but I doubt it very much. In line with the proposal to deindex pensions which senior citizens fought against and forced the Government to back off on, the Government also proposed and still proposes to deindex public service pensions. In my view, that is the opening round of the attack against the pension system.

On top of that, since this Government was elected, it has opened up the medicare system to private enterprise in the United States. Our hospitals are now open to the American style of administration which is medicare for profit, a thing that Canadians have fought against since Tommy Douglas introduced the first medicare program in Saskatchewan. Medicare is a valued program in Canada.

When Canadian seniors go to Florida and see what happens to our American neighbours when they run into medical difficulties and find out how much it costs them for medical services, and then look at what the Government has been doing in terms of opening up the medicare system to multinational organizations which operate it for profit, they become concerned. I do not blame them for becoming concerned, because I can very well visualize that some time within the next seven-year period, this Government, if it is still in power, will open up the whole area of social policy in the free trade negotiations. I hope this Government will not be around after the next election so that it cannot follow that kind of course, but there is absolutely no doubt in my mind whatsoever that the steps taken since 1984 until this time have been a direct attack on Canada's social programs. I think it will be made even worse after this trade agreement is signed on January 1 of next year.

I expected some Conservative Members to start taking umbrage to what I have been saying.

Mr. McDermid: I do.

Mr. Young: I know you do. Rather than having me continue that line of argument, let me tell Hon. Members what some people in industry have been saying about Canada's social programs and the trade agreement. For example, a champion of free trade, Colin Harper, President of Camco, a white goods manufacturer, had this to say:

> The impact of free trade on Canadian manufacturing is going to be like a wave breaking at the beach—several things would be needed to survive. First of all consistency from the Canadian government in terms of taxation, regulation and legislation which all affect the cost of doing business and hence, our competitiveness.

That gentleman seems to be advocating already, before we have even signed this agreement, that Canada's competitiveness with the United States after the agreement is signed on January 1 of next year will be such that Canadian employers will have to cut back on the benefits they pay to employees in order to be competitive with U.S. industry. If those employers start to attack benefit programs for the people who happen to be employed by them, I can well imagine what the Government will do to support them.

In light of that, I move an amendment to the amendment:

> That the amendment be further amended in line 5 after "Canadian people", by adding: "is against the immediate and long-term interest of average Canadian families, and"

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair would like to reserve on the amendment at this time and will give a ruling after Question Period.

With the consent of the House, I would like to call it one o'clock.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

The House took recess at 12.59 p.m.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, at the conference on the changing atmosphere held in Toronto last week, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) declared his Government has tackled the immense and urgent task of restoring the integrity of the environment on a priority basis. Yet the record of his Government reveals that renewable energy research at the National Research Council has been eliminated. The marine ecology laboratory in Nova Scotia has been closed. The proposed Guelph-Toronto toxicology laboratory and research centre has been cancelled. Climate research has been reduced. Environment Canada has lost $71 million to inflation, and 336 persons have been laid off since 1984.

The facts reveal prime ministerial doubletalk. Will the Prime Minister ever learn that preaching without practising severely damages his credibility?

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS

ELEVATION TO CARDINALATE OF MONSEIGNEUR PAUL GRÉGOIRE

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday, in Rome, a Canadian parliamentary delegation of which I was a member witnessed the elevation of Msgr. Paul Grégoire, Archbishop of Montreal, to the cardinalate.

This most impressive religious ceremony was graced by the presence and imposing personality of His Holyness John-Paul II, of course, but all of the delegates from some eighty nations also had the opportunity of noting at first hand the simplicity and moral stature that radiate from the personable Cardinal His Eminence Msgr. Grégoire of Montreal.

Please allow me, dear colleagues of this noble House, to offer our most cordial tribute to this exemplary Canadian who will now be called upon to play an important role internationally.

On behalf of all Canadians in general, Quebecers in particular and Montrealers of course, bravo and long live our Cardinal Paul Grégoire of Montreal!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPOSITION TO PROPOSED GOLF COURSE ON VANCOUVER ISLAND

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Government has before it a proposal to build a golf course at Royal Roads Military College at Colwood, Vancouver Island. Local people object to the proposal for a number of reasons. First, the golf course would eliminate an attractive area of bush with several large trees. This would aggravate an already serious problem with surface water at a nearby subdivision.

Most seriously, however the proposed golf course threatens the Esquimalt Lagoon. Golf courses use large quantities of chemical fertilizer to maintain the greens. At Royal Roads much of this would drain into Esquimalt Lagoon.

One biologist wrote me to say that the influx of nutrients would stimulate rapid growth of unicellular plants and a tremendous production of biomass. When that died and decomposed it would rob the water of oxygen. Fish and invertebrates would die from lack of oxygen and birds would no longer land. The lagoon would begin to stink. Instead of being a place of life and beauty, it would have been destroyed.

We are only beginning to recognize the importance of lagoons, salt marshes, and estuaries in the total ecology of our world. Since the proposed golf course poses a real threat to the Esquimalt Lagoon I urge the Government not to consent to its construction.

ABORTION

RIGHT TO LIFE UPHELD

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canadian society today does not, and I hope it never will, permit a doctor, or two doctors, or Parliament, or anyone else to choose whether a crippled senior riddled with disease should live or be murdered. He has a right to live. Why, then, should one or two doctors, or Parliament, or anyone else decide whether an unborn human baby should live or be murdered?

The motion and both amendments concerning this matter presently on the Order Paper permit a choice. Who gave us the right to choose? I cannot support the motion or the amendments. Human life is fundamental to our society. The right to live is not negotiable. That is why I support Bill S-16 which protects human life from the moment of conception. The choice is God's, not ours.

HARBOURS AND PORTS

CONDITION OF MEAFORD, ONT., HARBOUR

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the condition of two harbours in Meaford, Ontario, located on Georgian Bay, was recently brought to my attention.

Last August the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) announced a plan to build a new harbour. This project was to be fully completed within the next two years. This year a drastic drop in water levels rendered the existing harbour unusable. In fact, the Coast Guard had to relocate its vessel to Owen Sound.

Despite numerous requests the federal Government refused to dredge the harbour which was last dredged 26 years ago.

In a letter dated April 22, 1988, the Minister said: It is anticipated that the present water levels will increase by one foot by the beginning of May. This will help reduce the quantity of dredging required to have the harbour at least partially operational for the summer of 1988." The water level has not changed and finally, after a loud protest, the Minister came up with $50,000 for emergency dredging but local citizens would have to match it.

I believe that providing and maintaining safe harbours is a responsibility which deserves proper funding from the federal treasury. To make matters worse, departmental officials have advised local citizens that they will also be responsible for any dredging in the new harbour.

I call on the Government to allocate the necessary funds to ensure that Canadians in Meaford and across this country will have safe harbours.

THE CANADIAN REALITY

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in July 1969, the federal Government officially recognized that Canada was a bilingual country. From 1969 to 1984, a period of almost fifteen years but for a few months, the Liberal Government did not, during all those years it was in power, do a single thing to promote the French fact in Canada. And today, the federal Liberals have the gall to criticize us! Even if there were a few amendments, Mr. Speaker, we would still have more to be proud of than the idleness the Liberal Governmment indulged in during those fifteen years. Bilingualism is a Canadian reality, and we are going to do everything in our power to make Francophones and Anglophones feel at home everywhere in Canada, in a stronger and more united Canada.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

B.C. LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS WEEKLY REPORT—REQUEST FOR SECOND-CLASS MAILING STATUS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-Operative Association publishes a weekly market report for its 2,200 members. This publication is devoted exclusively to agriculture and provides practical and essential information for British Columbia cattlemen to enable them to make well informed decisions about livestock production.

The severe drought conditions, coupled with increasing insecurity due to international and domestic market fluctuations, increasing feed costs, unfair competitive practices, and many other challenges, make it mandatory for cattlemen to have all the pertinent information possible to deal effectively and efficiently in today's market-place.

The Association requested second-class mailing status for its informative publication but the request was rejected by Canada Post. Second-class mail status would save the co-operative thousands of dollars in mailing costs. As well, by granting this request Canada Post would add considerably to the viability and stability of the British Columbia livestock industry.

I appeal to the Minister responsible for Canada Post and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to do whatever is necessary to enable the British Columbia Livestock Producers Co-Operative Association to receive second-class mailing status for this market publication.

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT'S SEMINAR ON SOFTWARE EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, in an article which appeared recently in the Niagara Falls Review I read that the Ontario Government has spearheaded a two-day seminar under the new Exports to Border States Program for Ontario software companies. The seminar was developed to teach those companies how to export their products to the U.S. It was open to all first-time exporters.

I am pleased and relieved that finally the Liberal Government of Ontario led by David Peterson has seen the error of its ways and has reasoned that the large U.S. market and our access to it are vital to Canada's economic prosperity. It is reassuring to know that Canadian small businesses are not standing idly by but are preparing for that time when the free trade agreement comes into being so they will be in a position to take advantage of that which the agreement affords.

I encourage Mr. Monte Kwinter, Ontario's Minister of Industry, Trade and Technology, not to keep his program secret but to tell Mr. Peterson just how well it ties in with the free trade agreement.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

EMPLOYMENT IN NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on June 20 the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said that the closure of the railroad in Newfoundland would not mean any job losses in North Sydney. This was confirmed to him by both Canadian National and Marine Atlantic. Yet the very next day, June 21, CN sent a directive to all its offices in Atlantic Canada directing them to send all containers for eastern Newfoundland east of Gander, including St. John's and all of the Avalon Peninsula, to Halifax for shipment directly to St. John's.

• (1410)

The President of Atlantic Container Express has said that the closure of the Newfoundland railroad will mean an increase in cargo shipments from Montreal to Corner Brook and St. John's of 12 to 15 per cent in 1988.

While the people in Montreal are counting new jobs the Government refuses to acknowledge the loss of jobs in North Sydney. Why is this happening? Why is the Government refusing to give compensation to the town and the people of North Sydney? Why is the Government doing unofficially what it refused to do officially, that is, acknowledge the loss of traffic in North Sydney, which is perhaps a prelude to the closure of the railroad in Nova Scotia between Truro and North Sydney?

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POSITION OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) complained that the Government did not allow enough time to discuss free trade in this House. However, he forgot to say that for weeks on end, the Liberal-socialist coalition has not stopped wasting the time of this House, never on substantial issues, always on procedural questions.

Mr. Speaker, he complained during the day yesterday. Last night during the free trade debate that lasted until ten o'clock, there was not a Liberal in the House, including the Hon. Member for Windsor West who did not even dare to come! The Liberals don't even bother to debate when given the time for it, but they ask for time.

That means what they say and what they do are two different things. That is how Canadians will judge them, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX ACT

EFFECT OF PROPOSED AMENDMENTS ON MANITOBA TEACHERS' PENSIONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, recently I had occasion to meet with representatives of the Manitoba Teachers' Society to hear their concerns about draft amendments to the Income Tax Act and the effect that some of these will have on the early retirement provisions of their pension plan. It is a concern shared by other groups as well, such as the Manitoba Organization of Nurses Associations.

For example, the teachers' plan has, over the years, been bargained from a point of full actuarial reduction between age 55 and 60 to a point where this was eliminated entirely in 1985 with a service requirement of only 10 years.

The Government's proposals would set this progress back 20 years and unilaterally undo an important dimension of a benefits package that was arrived at through teachers giving up other things at the bargaining table because of their conviction about the importance of full early retirement benefits in a stress-filled profession which also has many younger teachers unable to find work. At a penalty of 3 per cent a year, which the Government proposes, a 15 per cent reduction for those retiring at age 55 is almost certain to prohibit such needed retirements and the consequent turnovers.

Furthermore, the proposal to lengthen service requirements discriminates against women, many of whom have had to interrupt their careers. Teachers and health care workers in particular are concerned about these proposals as both groups have a very high proportion of women. I call on the Government to rethink these ill thought out proposals.

DEBATE ON CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, what would happen if a great debate were held in this House and opposition Members of Parliament failed to take part?

That is what happened last night as government MPs filled the gap while Liberal and NDP Members failed to rise. Yet we have heard these same Liberals and NDPers crying the blues day after day about the limited time for debate on this issue.

So the great debate became the great collapse for the opposition Parties last night. You would have heard all about it in the media this morning, but the media didn't bother to show up last night either.

"Curiouser and curiouser" said Alice in Wonderland. The more we talk, the less they say. Clearly the Government of Canada is winning the debate on free trade in this nation.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

QUÉBEC'S SHARE—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has not respected its commitments on shipyards to Quebecers.

We remember, Mr. Speaker, that the Government promised benefits from the frigates. Quebec got nothing. This resulted in the closure of the Sorel shipyard and of Vickers in Montreal. The workers in Lauzon tell us that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) has not looked after them and their jobs and that he has let them down.

Moreover, yesterday I met workers from the riding of Laurier—Sainte-Marie who told me that the Government has not kept its commitments on rail transport. We know about the Angus shops and Bombardier. We know that the Government allowed 30 locomotives to be built in the United States.

Mr. Speaker, we learned from a study in Le Devoir that once again the Conservative Government is not keeping its commitments on space research. Le Devoir tells us that in the past three months, the Conservative Government has given nothing for research in Quebec. Zero! Nothing! No economic benefits from research for Quebec.

HOUSING

METRO TORONTO—FUTURE USE OF GOVERNMENT LAND

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian and Ontario Governments have a chance to make a large tract of land just north of Metro Toronto available for affordable housing. Over 100 acres in size, it is being sought from Works Canada by the Municipality of Vaughan for so-called institutional purposes.

It boggles the mind that a town of 57,000 people needs over 100 acres for institutional buildings. Not since the pyramids would there have been such an orgy of public construction.

The Canadian and Ontario Governments owe it to the people of the Metro region to ensure that a major part of this land is devoted to affordable housing.

Let the two Ministers involved—Canadian and Ontario—do what only they can do. Let this deal be stalled. Let the rezoning be halted until provision has been made for affordable housing as well as for institutional buildings. We need people as well as institutions.

IMPACT OF PROPOSED PAROLE CENTRE ON YORK-SOUTH WESTON

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that a parole and bail centre is proposed for 330 Keele Street in my riding in Toronto. The site being proposed is a building owned by Public Works Canada which also houses the Keele Centre, a federal community correctional centre, in other words, a halfway house.

According to the Metropolitan Toronto Police, this particular centre, which would be operated by the police, would encompass 3,000 to 4,000 visits per week. This would vastly increase the traffic of parolees and those out on bail in this area of Toronto, an area which already has more than its fair share of federal and provincial halfway houses.

Tomorrow night at Annette Street Public School the local ratepayers' association is holding a meeting to discuss this proposal. I would urge the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) or a representative from the Solicitor General's office to be present at the meeting to listen to the concerns of the public. There has been too little consultation in the past and the Government has shown a flagrant disregard for community concerns and views.

I call on the Solicitor General to hold off on this proposal until the public is completely informed of the implications and the impact of this particular proposal on the community.

STATEMENT BY MEMBER FOR ATHABASCA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government, to the Acting Prime Minister. Only the Prime Minister can and does appoint parliamentary secretaries, who are official spokespersons for the Government. The Hon. Member for Athabasca, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, should have been fired by the Prime Minister when he objected to the hiring of Francophones in his Department. He should also have been reprimanded for stating that only Anglophones should work for Petro-Canada. How can the Prime Minister let the Hon. Member for Athabasca continue in his post as parliamentary secretary after insulting Francophones across Canada?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, because of their duties, parliamentary secretaries must act within certain limitations. In other words, they have to abide by those limitations or take the options available to them. The question is about official languages. The Government's position was very clear yesterday on Bill C-72, and there will be a vote on Thursday. I think our position is quite similar and the Government is against all the amendments and action of any kind. I think the position of the Government and of the Prime Minister is quite clear in this respect.

QUERY WHY PRIME MINISTER HAS NOT DEMANDED RESIGNATION OF MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG—ASSINIBOINE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, parliamentary secretaries are official Government spokespersons appointed by the Prime Minister. Another parliamentary secretary, who works for the Minister of Veterans Affairs, and I am referring to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Assiniboine, holds the view that only English should be used as the language of work in the Canadian Armed Forces. That is an insult to Francophone troops like the Twenty-Second Regiment and many others who have defended the honour of this country on the battlefield. This parliamentary secretary should have been sacked immediately, not the next day or the day after, for approving of this kind of retrograde measure.

Considering the Prime Minister's failure to act on repeated attacks by his own parliamentary secretaries against the Government's language policy, why didn't the Prime Minister show this anti-francophone, anti-bilingualism and retrograde Member the door?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I explained earlier that parliamentary secretaries are subject to the limitations imposed by their duties. The House is well aware of the fact that bilingualism is a fundamental policy of this Government. The Prime Minister has shown very strong leadership in this respect, and he has provided leadership here in the House of Commons and across this country.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REPLACE PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, these are not ordinary backbenchers. These are official spokespeople for the Government.

Mr. Schellenberg: What is wrong with ordinary backbenchers?

Mr. Gauthier: The Prime Minister and only the Prime Minister is responsible for appointing Parliamentary Secretaries. I just mentioned the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who have insulted francophones and got away with their repeated attacks on the official language policy of the Government.

When will the Prime Minister muster his courage and do the honourable thing by removing and replacing these negative, subversive individuals who occupy important and official positions as parliamentary secretaries?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, no Member of this House, including the Hon. Member who just spoke, can accuse the Prime Minister of Canada of being negligent on the position of official languages in this country.

Mr. Grisé: You know that very well.

Mr. Axworthy: Get him to do something.

Miss MacDonald: The Prime Minister has provided leadership to all Members of the House. He has provided leadership to Members and to the people of this country on the question of official languages.

I hope the Hon. Member who asked the question will recognize that this is an issue with regard to the Official Languages Act. Certainly Parliamentary Secretaries are appointed with limitations on their actions and they know that they must abide by those limitations, operate within them, or take the options available to them. There will be a vote on this very important issue on Thursday. We will see what people do in that regard.

I want to assure the Member and all Members of the House that the Prime Minister has provided leadership on this issue that no one can question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT AMENDMENTS BE WITHDRAWN

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Over the past few days, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State have been behaving like scaredy cats in the eyes of Francophone Canadians. I have something to say to the lady acting Prime Minister concerning the slap in the face which was given to all French-speaking Canadians by the Tory Members who tabled 136 amendments to the Official Languages Bill, including one which would make English the language of work in Federal institutions and in the National capital. Moreover, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is blaming the department for hiring Francophones. The Hon. Member for Calgary North is also blaming the department of Energy, Mines and Resources for hiring Francophone employees.

My question is directed to the acting Prime Minister. In view of the insult offered by these people on behalf of the Tory Government to the French speaking people of Quebec and Canada, and since the caucus will meet tomorrow, could she ask these anti-francophone Members to withdraw these amendments which are an insult to all Canadian men and women?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we are going to turn down all the amendments which are contrary to the principle of the Official Languages Bill. Our policy is to apply the principle of bilinguism in Canada. Bilinguism is a fundamental tenet of the Prime Minister and all his Cabinet Members. No one can deny that. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the bill in its present form will be adopted on Thursday.

PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARIES—BILINGUALISM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is entirely out of touch with the feelings of Francophones. It is not a question of legislation, it is a question of pride. Are we in Canada, yes or no? If so you will have to ask the two Parliamentary Secretaries who support anti-francophone legislation to resign. How could a unilingual Francophone citizen or veteran of the Montréal—Sainte-Marie riding trust a Parliamentary Secretary who does not want any Francophones to work in his department? How can the people from the Gaspé accept a Parlementary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who does not want any Francophones to work in that department?

Are you going to ask these people to resign as Parliamentary Secretaries? Also, you should withdraw the amendments and finally on behalf of all Francophones in Canada and those in Quebec in particular, I ask that these people publically apologize to all Francophones.

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already stated that we were going to turn down all the amendments which are contrary to the principle of the Official Languages Bill. We have already done so. Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that we will adopt Bill C-72 in its present form this coming Thursday.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOWNING OF IRANIAN AIRLINER BY UNITED STATES NAVAL VESSEL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday Canadians were not only shocked by the reality of the downing of the Iranian jetliner, they were also shocked by the response of the Government to questions about the Canadian response to this event, and its apparent unwillingness to consider requesting an international inquiry into this incident. They were shocked by the apparent uncritical attitude of the Acting Prime Minister of the day toward the American version of events.

The Government has had a day to think about it. Does it have a different response today? Is the Government willing to join the call for an international inquiry into this tragic incident?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not going to react with knee-jerk anti-Americanism as the hon. gentleman opposite constantly reacts whenever any matter comes up in the national or international sphere. There is an automatic Pavlov's dog reaction against the United States by the hon. gentleman opposite.

Of course we attach great importance to the safety of international civil aviation. We regard ICAO as the principal organization for ensuring the goal of safe international civil aviation. We support the convening of an extraordinary session of the ICAO Council to consider the Iran Air 655 incident. We would also support an independent investigation by ICAO to determine the facts.

As I said yesterday, we have no reason to doubt the version of the facts that the United States has presented to the world. We are not going to assume automatically that the United States version is wrong, as the Official Opposition and the NDP seem to want Canadians to believe. We are not going to react with automatic anti-American tendencies as the Hon. Members of the Opposition do. We wait, investigate, and ascertain the facts first.

ICAO is the right agency to look into this.

Mr. Axworthy: You don't know what you're talking about. You are an embarrassing disgrace to this problem.

Mr. Crosbie: Pavlov's dogs. They slobber whenever they hear the words "U.S.".

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Shut up!

Mr. Axworthy: Aren't you a childish little jerk.

Mr. Crosbie: They are not even Labrador retrievers.

IRAN-IRAQ WAR—UNITED NATIONS RESOLUTION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day when the office of a Cabinet Minister has to be so downgraded as it is by the persistent responses of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: It is not a question of uncritical acceptance of the U.S. view, or an uncritical rejection of the U.S. view. It is a question of Canada playing its proper role on the international stage and asking for an inquiry to establish what actually happened. That is all the Minister was asked for yesterday. That is all that he is asked for today.

We see some progress in what the Minister has had to say despite the preamble. Therefore, I would like to ask the Minister this question.

What does the Government of Canada plan to do at the U.N., using its good offices there and the reputation that we still have despite the Minister, to bring international pressure to bear on Iran and Iraq for the implementation of Resolution 598, and measures such as the arms embargo, so that we can suffocate this conflict in that tragic area?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I must point out to the House the difference, of course, between the present situation and the situation in 1983 when we had the tragedy of the KAL 007 incident. There we had eight of our Canadian citizens who were actually on that flight and went to their deaths as a result. There is a claim that we have made on their behalf against the U.S.S.R. which has never been settled. At that time—

Mr. Axworthy: Iranian kids are different from Canadian kids, is that it?

Mr. Crosbie: If I might speak without interruption—at that time we were an aggrieved party. We do not have any of our citizens involved in this incident today.

Mr. Tobin: Does that make a difference?

Mr. Crosbie: As Iran has requested that there be a meeting of the ICAO Council, we, of course, support that request since that is the proper body to investigate.

With respect to the United Nations, we are not an aggrieved party. We are not going to initiate action there.

I trust that has answered the hon. gentleman. Our position is no different today than it was yesterday. However, we are not going to react automatically unless there are some facts that indicate to us that there should be a reaction immediately. The mere mention of the name "U.S." does not mean that we are going to react in an anti-U.S. fashion.

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH UNITED NATIONS PEACE-KEEPING FORCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that we are not an aggrieved party. I submit that we are all aggrieved whenever commercial jet traffic such as this is put in such a position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: We were not an aggrieved party in the Suez crisis in 1956 but that did not stop Canada from playing an important role. That is the type of leadership that we are looking for from the Government.

I ask the Government what is its response to the proposal made only recently by Norway, and in previous days by other countries, with respect to the idea of a U.N. naval peace-keeping force in the Gulf to replace the U.S. presence there which is becoming so destabilizing.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, our position is that we support fully the efforts of our allies, including the U.S.A., which are designed to protect international shipping and freedom of navigation in the Gulf.

Mr. Blaikie: Norway is our ally, too.

Mr. Crosbie: We continue to believe that the continued presence of U.S. naval forces contributes to the lessening of prospects for escalation of this conflict and limits the possibility of a spread to other areas.

We urge today, as we have in the past, and we will continue to urge the belligerents in this situation, that is, Iran and Iraq, to bring this eight-year old tragic conflict to an end. It should be brought to an end. We will lend our efforts to any reasonable position that might hasten the arrival of the end of those hostilities.

The suggestion the Hon. Member makes can be considered. But there has been no viable proposal for any U.N. naval force to be put in the area to keep the peace as he has suggested. We can see if any such development occurs. We can then make a decision as to whether that is a suggestion which is practical and supportable.

IATA REQUEST FOR U.S. AND IRAN DOCUMENTS AND RECORDS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question which I pose to the Acting Prime Minister, the Acting Secretary of State for External Affairs, is this.

In the answers he has just given he seemed to say that this issue is one of whether one is pro-American or anti-American, or whether we are an aggrieved party. I simply want to say to him that I do not think it is a question of being pro or anti-American. It is a question of whether innocent civilians flying on international flights will be safe and secure from military attack. It does not make a difference whether Iranians or Canadians are the victims of this kind of action. They are human beings and therefore we have a responsibility to take some kind of action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: When the Minister says that the Government has changed its position from yesterday, something we are pleased to hear, do the measures which the Government is now prepared to support include those that are proposed by IATA, the international airline association, which asks that both the major participants in this, the United States and Iran, be asked to provide all documents, all information, and all records to ICAO so that there can be a full and impartial investigation?

Will the Canadian Government send a note both to the Iranian Government and to the American Government asking them to comply with that request?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in policy between yesterday and today, or tomorrow. Our policy is exactly the same.

Since yesterday Iran has requested a meeting of the ICAO Council. We will support that request for a meeting of the ICAO Council. We will support an independent investigation by ICAO of this incident. What the resolution will be and what resolution we will support will depend on the resolution that goes before the ICAO Council.

If there is to be an independent inquiry, then naturally it must have access to all the records and all the information, or it can hardly be a valid or worth-while inquiry. We do not need the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that we support a resolution of one type or the other until we see what the resolution is going to be.

With respect to us as a party, there is a difference between having our own citizens on an aircraft and therefore having a direct interest on behalf of our nation to pursue their interests, and being a nation whose citizens are not involved directly. We are not a direct aggrieved party in this matter as we were in the Korean matter.

In addition, we should also remember this. This incident occurred in an area in which hostilities were occurring—

Mr. Cassidy: And that makes it all right.

Mr. Crosbie: —in a hostile zone, not as occurred in 1983. There are a number of differences.

I say again that we have no reason to doubt the U.S. version of events that the U.S. has put out. If there comes a time in the future when there is some reason to doubt that, we would be the first to say so. We are not going to assume that the United States is guilty of any particular set of facts until they are established.

CHICAGO CONVENTION—NON-RATIFICATION BY CERTAIN COUNTRIES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in my supplementary question I simply point out to the Minister that no one is assessing guilt or blame. What we are trying to find out are the facts of the case. We are asking the Government to support the request made by the airline association that those facts be properly provided to international agencies. The Minister refused to say whether in fact the Canadian Government would be supporting that position.

I would further ask him this specific question. In 1983 the Canadian Government put forward proposals to ICAO that were amendments to the Chicago Convention detailing new rules of procedure dealing with the military interception of civilian aircraft. I am pleased to say that the Canadian Government has ratified that Convention, but many other countries, including the United States and the Soviet Union, have yet to ratify those new amendments to the Convention that would provide and enhance protection for international air travel.

Does the Canadian Government intend to pursue those countries, particularly those which are our allies, to get them to ratify the new rules that would register, monitor, and regulate international skyways in order that we can have a more secure system and not end up with the type of tragedy that we had in the Gulf two days ago?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that there is already prohibition against the use of weapons against civil aircraft. There is Article 3 of the Chicago Convention on International Civil Aviation which has been put forward. We were actively involved in the adoption of that article. The present administration of the Government of Canada ratified that article on September 23, 1986.

We have regularly spoken out at the International Civil Aviation Organization in favour of its early ratification by all member states, not only those friendly to us. We have urged all states to ratify that amendment to the convention, and we will continue to do so.

We are glad to see that the Hon. Member opposite supports this being done.

Mr. Axworthy: I proposed it, John, never mind support.

BILL C-72—PROPOSED AMENDMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Quebec senior Minister and has to do with the Conservative caucus internal crisis over the Bill C-72 amendments. Mr. Speaker, the Quebec senior Minister responsible for bilingualism . . . I have no idea who he is because both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State are absent.

Does the Minister agree with the Hon. Member for Charlevoix who has stated that he feels betrayed by the amendments introduced by the dinosaurs?

Does the Minister agree with the Hon. Member for Richelieu who has been talking about a schism within the Conservative Party and who is asking that the amendments be withdrawn because they are an insult to all Canadians?

Does the Government intend to take action against the caucus dinosaurs who question the Conservative Party's commitment to bilingualism? Or will the Government remain paralysed, so much so that the Quebec Conservative Members will split from the caucus because of these amendments?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that the Government has rejected all the amendments which run counter to the principle of the Official Languages Act. The Government has turned them down.

[English]

POSITION OF MINISTERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. She seems to be saying that Conservative back-benchers can put up any amendments in contradiction to government policy, to Conservative Party policy, and to the position of the Government, and there is nothing wrong with that at all.

Can the Acting Prime Minister explain why there has been no disciplinary action? Why have the Parliamentary Secretaries who proposed those amendments not been suspended from their functions? Why there has been no disciplining of those particular back-benchers? Why has the Prime Minister been silent? Why has the Secretary of State been silent? Can she explain why the Government is stonewalling while this crisis is breaking out in the Conservative caucus, which could split the Conservative caucus asunder, and our country as well?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the Government and the Prime Minister have not stalled on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Cassidy: They have been silent.

Miss MacDonald: Not at all. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the actions we took yesterday to bring this Bill to a vote on Thursday speak very clearly of the intentions of the Government in this regard.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre would want to put a muzzle on the House of Commons and in many ways he has tried already to do that. We say that parliamentary action should take place. Parliament should be able to express itself.

On Thursday of this week Parliament will speak. The Official Languages Act will be passed and members of the Government in its Cabinet will be united in their opposition to amendments that have been put forward that are contrary to the fundamental spirit of official languages in this country.

CORRECTION SERVICE

INDIVIDUAL ON SPY CHARGES ASSAULTED WHILE IN CUSTODY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Government is aware that Stephen Ratkai, who is being held on charges of spying for the Soviet Union, was assaulted on Saturday while in custody in St. John's. He was assaulted badly enough to be taken to hospital.

Can the Government explain why someone charged with such a serious offence as spying would be so loosely guarded? If he were important enough to cause such an international incident between the Soviet Union and Canada, then why was he not kept in more restrictive custody?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that yes, indeed, initially Mr. Ratkai was confined in special custody. At the request of his lawyer he was released into the general population.

The assault took place several hours after that release. He was taken to hospital. It was determined that his injuries were not serious. He has now been returned to the institution and is being retained in special custody, as he originally was.

I would also point out that the institution in which he is confined is a provincial institution and not under the jurisdiction of the federal Government.

Mr. Baker: If the Government had lived up to its 1984 election promise and built a new federal penitentiary in Newfoundland perhaps this would not have taken place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT BUILD PENITENTIARY IN BUCHANS, NFLD.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, when is the Government of Canada going to fulfil its 1984 election promise and build that new penitentiary in Buchans, Newfoundland, where everybody in Newfoundland agrees that it should be built—in my future riding?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the question and allegations of the Hon. Member, although I suppose I should not be.

It was the Party of the Hon. Member that for years promised a federal jail in Newfoundland, and it never came good on its promise. But our term has not ended. I am engaged in very fruitful conversations with officials from Newfoundland, I may say at the constant urgings of the Hon. Member for St. John's West, and I am hopeful that in the very near future we will indeed be able to keep our promise as the former Liberal Government never did.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who, despite his efforts for Newfoundland, has not done very well for Canada.

Despite the Government's cross-country propaganda conferences, the research director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has now stated that Canadian small businesses are not likely to benefit from the extra U.S. procurement spending open under the trade deal.

How can the Minister justify a deal that leaves Canadian small businesses entirely locked out of U.S. purchases from small businesses when we have to give American firms equal treatment?

• (1450)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. gentleman has asked that question so we can try to straighten him out again.

The free trade agreement was negotiated. We know that there is a U.S. small business set-aside program. It was agreed to have a mutual opening of government procurement which extends the multilateral provisions already signed under the GATT, and estimating the size of the U.S. government procurement market which will be opened to competition from Canadian businesses, including small businesses, the portion excluded under the U.S. set-aside program has been netted out. The estimate is that Canadian businesses will be free under the agreement to compete for a portion of the U.S. government spending, estimated at $3 billion Canadian. That was not possible before, Mr. Speaker.

Why is it that the hon. gentleman always attempts to twist the agreement? Doesn't he realize, as Thomas Shelton once said: "The truth shall always prevail above lies as the oil above the water"?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is my faith.

Mr. Crosbie: Practise it.

TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Why is it that not just small business offsets have been left out of these agreements? According to the U.S. draft statements of administrative action the following categories have also been left out of possible purchase contracts from Canadians: small business and minority business programs; Department of Defence programs; the hand tools program, cargo transportation preferences; construction contracts; service contracts; purchases by the Department of Agriculture and purchases by state and local governments? How can there be so much left out for Canadian small business—

An Hon. Member: Because of your complaining.

Mr. Langdon: —when this Minister claims that he is trying to help small business with this deal?

An Hon. Member: What about the provinces, and the Crown corporations?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand how the Hon. Member can ask that supplementary question after the Minister for International Trade just explained very clearly to him that he was totally wrong in his initial question put to the Government.

The set-aside program for small business in the United States has been taken under consideration in drafting the free trade agreement. Canadian businesses will have access to $3 billion worth of new business in the United States.

Further to the announcements made by this Government yesterday, the small business community, which is the backbone of the economic might of this country, will get its fair share of all government contracts in low dollar value contracts as well as sub-contracts for major purchases, so the winners are Canadian small businesses now and in the future.

MULTICULTURALISM

GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR NEW PROGRAMS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Multiculturalism. The Minister of State for Multiculturalism and the Deputy Prime Minister announced some weeks ago a significant increase in the programs in the multicultural sector. He announced an increase of $60 million in new money for new programs to give effect to the commitments made in Bill C-93.

Will the Minister inform the House about his intentions for implementing these programs, and that includes those in Alberta and possibly Edmonton, as well as assure the House that he intends to act swiftly to bring forward the new measures he and the Deputy Prime Minister announced some weeks ago?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): Mr. Speaker, our intention is to proceed now. Program criteria are in preparation for the new directions that stem from the C-93 policy commitments. Announcements will be made very soon and I know the Hon. Member will be very pleased.

I hope all Members of Parliament will want to endorse the view of the CEC which has given strong support to the improved multiculturalism Bill in which the Government is bringing forward our continued commitment to the ethnocultural communities.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade.

The Financial Post, which is a newspaper in favour of free trade, and Catherine Swift, Research Director of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, who is also in favour of free trade, said that Canadian small businesses will lose $4 billion worth of U.S. procurement. Why are Canadian small businesses limited to American procurement while U.S. small businesses are open to Canadian procurement? Why this discrimination?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that once again the members of the Liberal Party are not listening to what is going on in this Parliament. Exactly the same question was posed two or three minutes ago and answered both by the Minister for International Trade and myself.

While I am on my feet, let me confirm again what I and my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses, announced yesterday. The initiatives which this Government has taken with respect to procurement on behalf of the Canadian small business community will increase opportunities for Canadian small businessmen in Canada with the free trade agreement, as well as with general procurement in Canada, by over 50 per cent.

This is a major step in the right direction and I can assure the Hon. Member that members of the International Federation of Independent Business who were at my press conference in Toronto yesterday were in total and full support of these initiatives taken by the Government.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister gave us smoke and mirrors. He gave us no regulations or detail on how he will accomplish this new policy.

Specifically, will the Minister amend the legislation in order to correct the discrimination between U.S. small business and Canadian small business? Why is Canadian small business not allowed to have total access to the American procurement?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the Hon. Member asking that question again. How much clearer can we put it in saying that the Canadian business community will have access to an estimated $3 billion worth of United States business while the Americans will have access only to $400 million worth of Canadian business?

Clearly the Canadian businessmen come up on top, nearly 10 to 1 on this initiative. That is just one reason that the free trade agreement is good for Canada, good for Canadian small businessmen, and good for all Canadians.

INDUSTRY

DISPOSAL OF MASSEY COMBINES ASSETS

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

By this time tomorrow the assets of Massey Combines Corporation will have been sold off unless the Government intervenes to delay that sale when it comes before the Supreme Court of Ontario. Will the Government let hundreds of Canadians jobs disappear forever, or will it screw up its courage at this last chance to buy some time so we can find a buyer who will keep those 2,000 jobs in Canada, in Brantford, Ontario?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague well knows we have been following this very carefully. A receiver has been appointed by the court. Some assets are being sold according to the dictates of the court. That process, as I say, is being monitored very closely.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows the bottom line is to keep the parts manufacturing as a nucleus here in Canada. That parts manufacturing for the conventional combine has already been transferred to none other than Victor Rice whose Varity Corporation wholly owns Massey Ferguson of the United States.

Here is the Canadian owner buying back his own technology at bargain basement prices and transferring jobs out of Canada, out of Brantford, to the United States. I am asking this Minister to intervene tomorrow at Osgoode Hall as a major shareholder of Varity Corporation to stop this scandal, because that is what it is. It is morally repugnant not only to the people of Brantford but to Canada itself.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I dispute many of the claims that my hon. colleague has just made.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They are facts.

Mr. de Cotret: The facts are as I mentioned before in this House, the two very major packages of MCC assets were sold to Canadians with the very specific intention of retaining the technology, particularly the axle technology, and the jobs associated with it in Canada and the supply of combines and parts to dealers in Canada.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What about conventional combines going to the United States?

WESTERN DROUGHT—PRICE OF BREAD

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds. Today's press carries reports indicating that the baking industry is planning to raise the price of bread by up to 10 cents a loaf as a result of the drought in western Canada. The price of a bushel of wheat to the industry will in fact fall at the end of this month due to the abandonment of the two-price wheat system.

Will the Government allow bakers to increase the price of bread charged to Canadians at a time when the price of wheat is actually falling?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members know, the drought in western Canada has in fact moved the price of grain up at the export level, but as most Hon. Members know, Canadian bakers have been buying their product under the two-price system for many years and will continue to do so until August 1 of this year. The truth is that even with the increase in grain prices which has occurred these last few weeks and perhaps months, there will be a decrease in the price of grain assuming no further increase as of August 1. Therefore, there should be a saving to the consumers of Canada rather than an increase as of August 1.

Any action by the bakers of Canada or any other food processors to take advantage of the drought by trying to pass unjustified price increases on to the consumers of Canada will in fact be unwarranted and unconscionable.

REQUEST THAT PRICES BE MONITORED

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now that the Parliamentary Secretary has confirmed that there is no justification for increasing the price of bread even though there is a drought in western Canada, will the Acting Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs put in place a tough monitoring system to ensure that consumers do not get ripped off and that prices are not unjustifiably increased?

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are obviously control mechanism in that regard at the level of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Canada, and I will make sure the Department gives that matter proper consideration.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

PARENTAL BENEFITS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last month, a landmark decision was made by Justice Barry Strayer of the Federal Court of Canada who ruled that the Unemployment Insurance Act discriminates against natural parents by denying them the child care benefits which are available to adoptive parents.

In his ruling, Justice Strayer makes a clear distinction between pregnancy benefits which are benefits extended to women for purposes of health, and parental benefits which are benefits available to adoptive parents for the purposes of child care and bonding.

When will the Government introduce legislation to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to remove discrimination against natural parents?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have received the reasons for the decision and naturally we are waiting for the final decision. When we get it, and we do not expect it before September, we as Government will take the necessary measures.

[English]

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, there is an urgent need for these amendments. We know that Canada is ranked behind other industrialized nations in the provision of child care benefits. This has been made very clear by the courts. When will the legislation be amended so that natural parents will not be discriminated against?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, there is no need to reiterate to this House the concerns that I also have as a woman and a mother.

We have, of course, studied the situation very closely and as I have just said, the Government is waiting for the final decision to be rendered before implementing the measures that will be needed to uphold the right of natural parents.

PEACE PROCESS IN CENTRAL AMERICA

PRESENTATION OF FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. John W. Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, further to this morning's decision, I have the honour of tabling, in both official languages, the first report of the Special Committee on the Central American Peace Process.

[English]

The report is entitled Supporting the Five, and out of respect for those most central to this report, a Spanish version is being produced for distribution in the region.

The committee has examined ways in which Canada could play a constructive and positive role. Clearly, the peace process itself must continue to be directed by Central Americans. Canada's role should be to assist and to encourage those in charge of that process.

Specifically, Canada can immediately help in designing and possibly participating in ceasefire verification systems. In fact, we are awaiting a formal invitation. Beyond that, Canada can strengthen the peace process through human rights and democratic development programs, economic assistance and by the consolidation of diplomatic representation in the region.

This report is unanimous. All our recommendations spring from the single conviction that has guided our work, namely that Canada should do everything in its power to support Central Americans in their own search for peace in ways they deem useful.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661), and of Mr. Young (p. 17089).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before the House rose at one o'clock p.m., a subamendment to the amendment on Bill C-130 was proposed by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). The Chair took the subamendment under advisement and I am now prepared to place it before the House.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Madam Speaker, this debate that we are currently involved in is about two possible futures for our country. The one possibility is based clearly and constructively on our own historical traditions and the other represents a clear departure from that tradition and a radical shift away from what has become the Canadian heritage.

Beyond the surface similarities, there are on this North American continent of ours two strongly competing images of the good life. If this deal is consummated, the odds are very great that it will be at once witness and participant to the triumph of one image over the other.

With unintended irony, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in his first speech in the House of Commons: "Give us 20 years and you will not recognize this country". Well, we do not intend to give the Prime Minister 20 years. We do not intend to give him even eight years because we love this country of ours, and it is neither desirable nor his right to change our country beyond recognition.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this agreement surrenders our inalienable right to make our own decisions. It takes away our right to control our ancestral heritage. It denies us control over our natural resources. It even makes our water available to the United States. It threatens many jobs in our factories, in the agricultural sector and in our resource industries. It is a threat to the Auto Pact. It is a threat to women, especially those working in the service industries. It weakens our control over the environment. It gives Washington powers that are the prerogative of our provincial capitals. Madam Speaker, it does not even guarantee us access to the U.S. market. This agreement is totally unacceptable.

• (1510)

[English]

Although it does all these things, and for those reasons alone, in the opinion of my colleagues and a majority of Canadians who have now become more and more familiar with what is involved, the deal should be rejected. Today I want to talk about the much broader context within which I believe this accord ought to be seen. I do this because I deeply believe that what is at risk is the very idea of Canada as it has come to be known, particularly during the last five decades.

[Translation]

I may point out, Madam Speaker, that I did not say Canada itself is at risk. What is at risk is our present values, those that are shared and respected by all Canadians, both Francophones and Anglophones. If we hold these values dearly, we cannot accept this agreement. I am not talking about economics but about values and principles.

[English]

This debate is not about whether one narrowly defined economic system or aspect of commercial activity or another should be accepted. That is a much too restrictive interpretation to put on what is clearly involved in this historic decision. This debate is really about whether what I would call the Canadian way or the American way will prevail in our country. Both images overlap, of course, but such commonality should not obscure some very important and quite profound differences.

If you will permit me, I would first like to explain what I mean when I say "The American way". I mean by that a kind of society in which not only market values have been embedded in the system directly, but one in which those values come to dominate virtually every aspect of life. I want to be specific. I refer not simply to the buying of goods and services according to market principles but to the virtual transformation of everything else in society within the framework of those market values. I refer to culture, I refer to religion, I refer to social policy—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Religion?

Mr. Broadbent: —all of which, I suggest to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), properly understood in American society, have come to be dominated by market values. The most significant growth in religion, I say to the Minister, is in the fundamentalist sects in the U.S. which have come to equate Christianity with the successful making of money. That is not my view, it is a view which has been expressed not only by some North American but the world's leading theologians.

Market values have come to be all pervasive in the United States. Of course, and I say it right away, there are exceptions, but this is unquestionably the pattern of U.S. development as every serious observer from Alexis de Tocqueville in the past to Michael Harrington in the present has had the intelligence and insight to understand. It has its pluses and it has its minuses, but Canada has marched to the tune of a different drummer.

Yes, we, too, have accepted the market principle in Canada but from the very outset of our country's history we understood the limitations that ought to be put on that system. We have not allowed market values to become all pervasive. We are committed to life and liberty but we are also committed to a sense of community. This has become in my view particularly marked during the historical developments of the last 50 years but also, as I said, right at the outset.

Our founding Prime Minister, Sir John A. Macdonald, well understood that if this country called Canada, with its two founding nations but soon to be rich and diverse in language and cultures, was to survive, then something other than market values would have to exist. That was particularly true at that time as illustrated by state involvement in the building of our transportation system, which would never have come into being if we had relied upon the market system of the United States.

However, as I say, the changes which have come to characterize and distinguish Canadian life from American life have become most marked since the 1930s and, I would argue, have now come to be so pervasive that it makes immense good sense to talk about a Canada distinctively different from the country immediately to the south. It is in this development we have taken on a character as a nation that makes us much more similar to countries in the northern part of Europe than to the United States of America.

Recently, to illustrate a small point, I was invited to speak in another country. I left my home, got in my car, bought gas in a PetroCan gas station, listened to the CBC, and got on an Air Canada plane. All of this was perfectly routine for me. All of those institutions, as Canadians will recognize, are Canadian institutions in the public sector, none of which exist in those forms in the U.S.

Let me be even more concrete in talking about how different values have worked themselves out in our two quite different nations. First, something which is on the surface mundane and practical, is our medicare system. In the U.S., because of a different value system, the medical care system is still regarded as a marketable item to be bought and sold in the market-place like any other good or service. Americans are encouraged to fend for themselves. The consequence, of course, has been that in the U.S. today there are 36 million Americans without any form of medical insurance whatsoever, twelve million of whom happen to be children. In Canada, where we made the decision that the market-place is not something to dictate all values, we took medical services out of the market-place and have long since regarded them as a right of citizenship, not simply a good to be purchased by whoever can afford it.

If we look again at something as practical in the lives of real human beings as unemployment insurance and minimum wages, we find once again the value systems of the two countries are quite different. In the U.S. there is a strong belief that if a man or woman becomes unemployed, it is predominantly to be understood to be his or her own fault. In Canada we recognize, particularly since the 1930s, in our institutions reflecting the change in values, that if a man or a woman becomes unemployed, overwhelmingly the fault is not within that man or woman but in the economic system. As a consequence of these two quite different value systems the two countries have assumed quite different practical institutions. In the U.S. today only 25 per cent of American workers are covered by unemployment insurance. In Canada, 85 per cent of workers are covered by unemployment insurance. In Canada, all provincial minimum wages are over $3.20 an hour. Eight states in the U.S. have absolutely no minimum wage whatsoever and three are set at less than $1.60 an hour.

Another practical aspect is the right of trade unions, to which people on the other side very frequently allude when talking about countries like Poland. They claim the importance of trade unions in that country and other unfree systems but are only very infrequently prepared to defend those institutions here in Canada. I, as a Canadian, believe that apart from the development of democracy itself in the last 100 years, the right of trade unions to exist in developed societies is probably the most important institution giving freedom to workers which has emerged in the last 100 years.

In Canada our rate is hardly yet comparable to western and northern Europe, but 37 per cent of our workforce is in unions. However, in the United States only 17 per cent of the workforce is unionized. While the situation continually gets better in our country, I regret to say that it continually gets worse in the United States.

With regard to agriculture, when subsidies have been brought to bear in the United States, they have been seen to be anomalous to the system and described as exceptions to the rule. They have been said to be temporary even if they have lasted, at times, a decade or so. In other words, they have gone against the prevailing system which is to leave each farmer on his own, not only in the market-place in the United States but in the global market-place.

In Canada our approach has been different once again. With regard to institutions as diverse as the Canadian Wheat Board and marketing boards for egg, poultry, and milk producers, we have not responded simply in an ad hoc fashion to bail farmers out in any given crisis. We have seen farmers and farming families as an integral part of the community with rights which should include certain organizational principles which will not leave them the uncared for victims of a market system which can simply throw them hither or yon. Once again, we have brought an organizational principle to the economy which differs radically from that which exists in the United States.

Another area is regional development. We in this country have developed, particularly since the Great Depression, a commitment to the view that regional development is fundamental to the notion of what Canada is all about. Some of us worked hard in the 1981-82 constitutional period to ensure that the notion of equality was written into our Constitution in terms of regional development opportunities. I can tell you that you will not find that in the United States Constitution where, once again, the concept of a market-place prevails.

I go beyond my Party on everything I have said in terms of value systems. Elements in all Parties and all regions believe that a young boy or girl growing up in this country in 1988 ought not to have to move to Toronto to get a job. Our diverse country has really four or five economies within the bosom of one nation. We believe that the federal Government has a fundamental obligation to deal with regional economic development. In our view the present Government has not adequately addressed that issue.

The principle I am talking about is crucial. We have become aware as a nation of the importance of that principle in our economic development whereas in the United States, apart from the crisis actions of Roosevelt in the 1930s with the Tennessee Valley Authority, the only major economic policy coming from the national government in terms of regional economic development has been to use the military as an instrument for building jobs in one part of the country or another. The notion that you ought to interfere within the so-called natural workings of the market-place to ensure genuine equality of opportunity and development is not embedded in the philosophical system of that country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Similarly, in cultural policy, our country, again in a tradition much closer to that of Europe, and many Asiatic countries as well, has almost from the start had the view that the Government as well as individual citizens outside the state mechanism have an important role to play in culture. Whether talking about the CBC, regulations in broadcasting policy to ensure Canadian content, provincial and federal Government grants for major art projects, or tax laws designed to encourage the development of Canadian magazines and the fostering of Canadian publishers, we have seen a role of the democratic state in the encouragement and fostering of Canadian individual talent. That tradition, shared elsewhere in the world, has been profoundly absent in the United States.

I want to make the point that important value differences exist which distinguish us from the United States. We have very different approaches to medicare, unemployment insurance, unions, farmers, regional development, wage policy, and culture. In short, Canadian life is remarkably different and, I believe, remarkably better in these crucial aspects of existence than in the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In this context, there are many Americans who share our view. They are not the mainstream Americans but there is the noble tradition of Eugene Debs and Thomas Payne and, in a different context earlier, Thomas Jefferson. There is the modern tradition of Michael Harrington.

Last Thursday night I was in New York at a remarkable gathering where I shared in the celebration of the contribution to American society of one Michael Harrington. I was pleased to be in that gathering with some very exceptional Americans who have gone against the tradition of their own country because they, too, one day would like to have established within their nation a different kind of tradition building on the foundation of their nation, of a minority tradition.

At this gathering was Ted Kennedy, Gloria Steinem, Barbara Ehrenreich, and Michael Harrington himself, all Americans. The very interesting thing was that those Americans said to me, on an individual basis, what they have said countless times in public. Whether talking about equality rights for women, state automotive insurance in our western provinces, or social programs as Michael Harrington mentioned, without exception these Americans are looking to Canada for leadership and they want us to retain our independence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Let me summarize in a graphic way the differences which exist in the 1980s through the following story. Not long ago I was discussing with another Canadian the respective elections which occurred in the United States and Canada in 1984. We were talking about how these elections illustrated, each in its own way, the very different countries which we have come to have at this point in history in North America.

I think this Canadian was dead on when he said to me that Canada is so far advanced over the United States in these respects that even a Conservative Party in 1984 would not have dared to openly attack medicare whereas the United States, in the same year, was so far behind that even a progressive American like Ted Kennedy could not openly advocate a state system of medicare and have it politically acceptable. That says a lot about the difference between our two countries. It is a very graphic and accurate illustration of the difference between our two nations, each very positive in its own way.

Speaking as a social democrat and a Canadian by birth, I certainly have no doubt about which land I would want my children and my grandchildren to grow up in. Therefore, I have no doubt at all about where I ought to be when it comes to voting on this particular measure.

• (1530)

[Translation]

We can either agree or disagree with this argument, but if we agree, there is of course the question: Is there a problem with these principles in the agreement? There certainly is a problem, Madam Speaker. The business world said so clearly enough, and I quote: "Life will become far more competitive for everyone. There can be no free trade, no liberalization even of trade between two countries if one has a host of social programs and the other has hardly any".

[English]

That was William Ritchie, President of the Scotia Bond Company. Another business person who spoke candidly about what was involved said:

[Translation]

"We in Canada will be forced to create the same kind of environment that exists in the United States, whether we are talking about unemployment insurance, compensation programs for employees, tax rates or just about anything".

This was said by Laurent Thibault, president of the Canadian Manufacturers Association.

[English]

I could cite many more, but perhaps one other will suffice. Recently I picked up a paper in the airport and read two observations made by the President of the Ford Motor Company in Canada. The first was that he favoured this deal. The second observation was directly related to that. He was speaking from an Ontario perspective and said that he objected to Ontario laws that have evolved over a period of years. He said the laws would have to change in order to compete with the United States. He said that we have labour laws that provide too many benefits—

Mr. McDermid: We compete with them now.

Mr. Broadbent: He said we will have to make changes in terms of safety considerations and pensions.

Mr. McDermid: I read what he said. He was wrong.

Mr. Broadbent: He was expressing very serious concern when he was asked where the Ford Motor Company might locate the next plant. He was quite specific in saying that the Ford Motor Company would have to consider all these important differences that exist in Canada compared to what exists in the United States—

Mr. McDermid: It is $1,200 cheaper in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: This means that as a businessman he well understood the unstated agenda of many people in this country, which is to reduce all our social benefit levels down to those in the United States.

Mr. McDermid: Absolutely wrong. It is cheaper to build a car in Canada than in the United States. Get with it.

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Madam Speaker, it is not just a question of businessmen's ideology. If one looks closely at the Agreement, one can read—and even the Minister could read, if he wanted to read the document —that over the next seven years, both Governments are to consider the concept of subsidies. The two Governments are to harmonize the concept, that is to say they must over the next seven years see to it that the notion of subsidy that exists in Canada is brought into line with the American notion.

[English]

That is to say, we will be drawing on our tradition and the United States will be drawing on its tradition to discuss and decide on a final common definition of what is to be a subsidy. That is not a small matter.

When we consider recent history in the United States, specifically in terms of the discussions that have taken place between the two countries to determine what they view is a subsidy, it should cause all Canadians who care about the future of this country a great deal of concern.

At a hearing in Atlantic Canada involving exports from there to the United States, no fewer than 50 of our programs were described as constituting subsidies. Of course, these included regional development programs, Canadian pension plans, our medicare system and our unemployment insurance system. All of those are consistent with what I have described as the prevailing American ideology and all of which have become engrained in the belief of our system as not constituting subsidies but constituting an inherent aspect of the Canadian way of life.

Mr. McDermid: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The Minister is saying that he agrees.

Mr. McDermid: Thanks for the promotion.

Mr. Broadbent: I do not want to insult the Member by suggesting he is a Member of Cabinet. I withdraw that.

When it is time to consider what will constitute a subsidy, is there any illusion about whose definition will be accepted?

Mr. McDermid: I give up. My hands are up.

Mr. Broadbent: I am saying that if any government in Canada sits down in the next seven years after this deal has been put in place to talk about what constitutes a subsidy, whose belief system will predominate? Is it that of Canada or that of the United States which is 10 times larger in terms of population and power? Anyone who says that the Canadian system will predominate is either misleading the people of Canada or dreaming in Technicolour.

Mr. McDermid: The biggest inferiority complex in Canada.

Mr. Broadbent: Leading a Party, fully aware that when these discussions started—

Mr. McDermid: "We can't compete". You will make a great leader of this country.

Mr. Broadbent: We will have that competition any time you want to call the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Ed Broadbent cannot compete. He is giving up on Canada already.

Mr. Broadbent: We hear the bogus argument about being unable to compete. I want to tell the Parliamentary Secretary that when the Government entered into this deal we were $19 billion ahead in competition. We knew who was ahead. We did not embark on this kind of idiocy.

Mr. McDermid: Because you are short-sighted.

Mr. Broadbent: Because we have confidence in the future of this country. We have decided that we do not have to become Americans to become successful. That is the difference.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: We can compete.

Mr. Broadbent: The Conservatives may want to put all of our value system into jeopardy—

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Broadbent: —but we in this Party are not prepared to put what is best for Canada at risk.

It may well be that the Tory vision is the one that Margaret Thatcher came here and preached. Margaret Thatcher is running a country that is more divided than at any period in its history. It has a south that becomes richer and a north that becomes poorer. She is destroying the medicare system and starving her universities. The Tories may want that vision for Canada but the New Democratic Party categorically rejects it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is the same people with that ideology who like Ronald Reagan's model in the United States. During my visit to New York I went to a play where I picked up a program that advertised a watch for sale at $7,000. When I walked out of the theatre, I saw a woman lying on the street covered with blankets. They may want that kind of America, with the rich getting richer and the poor getting poorer, but we reject that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Even you do not believe that, Broadbent.

• (1540)

Mr. Broadbent: We have no intention of turning this country into that kind of social and economic wasteland for the majority of people.

Mr. McDermid: You can't hang that on us. Come on, get serious!

Mr. Nystrom: McDermid, take a valium.

Mr. Broadbent: We are saying that regional development programs for Canadians must be made by Canadians, and the decisions for them in the future, as in the past, must be made in Ottawa, not Washington.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Right on!

Mr. Broadbent: We are saying that the way to assess a cultural accomplishment is to look at the work of a Glenn Gould or a Margaret Atwood and not measure it by the commercial success of their records or the number of books they might have sold.

We are also saying that medicare ought to be regarded as a human right and not as a marketable commodity so profoundly believed in by many Tories.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We are saying that Canada must remain committed to life, liberty, yes, but also to a sense of community. We are saying, in short, no to this deal and yes to Canada's children for the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall).

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Murphy: You're getting the same treatment because of his idiotic behaviour—goddam ape.

Mr. Horner: Watch your blood pressure, Murph.

Mr. McDermid: We heard you last night.

Mr. Rodriguez: Get back in your cage.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair was under the impression that Hon. Members wanted to debate the subject. The floor belongs to the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Rodriguez: No, we don't have to listen to her.

Mrs. McDougall: Thank you, Madam Speaker. As a patriot, I, too, rise, but I rise in support of the proposed Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

I wish to discuss three issues. First, the positive impact of free trade on Canadian women—

Mr. Nystrom: Sell out!

Mrs. McDougall: Does this count as part of my time, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Yeah! Did you not hear McDermid? You are going to get the same treatment right now.

Mr. Benjamin: McDermid is here, Barbara, so don't bother speaking.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Why not sit across from her, McDermid.

Mr. Nystrom: Yeah, make an ass of yourself twice today. If you can't take it, don't dish it out.

Mr. McDermid: That's right. You have never let me finish a speech yet.

Mr. Rodriguez: Back in your cage, McDermid.

Mr. Nystrom: Back in your cave.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mrs. McDougall: The message I have is an important one for Canadians.

Mr. Nystrom: I doubt it.

Mr. Riis: Get serious.

Mrs. McDougall: I want to talk about the impact of free trade on Canadian women, something Hon. Members opposite have no interest in. In fact, they have no interest in women's issues at all.

Mr. Rodriguez: Blame McDermid.

Mrs. McDougall: Second, I wish to deal with the impact on our social programs. Third, I wish to consider the impact free trade will have on employment.

Let me make it clear to start with that here is where we are different from the other Party.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Vive la difference!

Mr. Fulton: Nine Tories turn out for your speech, heavy batting.

Mrs. McDougall: We regard women as contributors to the Canadian economy, as workers, as entrepreneurs, and as consumers. Women have a right to a substantial share of opportunities and benefits that will be generated by free trade, and they shall have it.

Mr. Riis: Name one.

Mrs. McDougall: If you would listen, you might hear some.

Free trade will mean increased employment opportunities for women in the service sector—

Mr. Cassidy: A chance to work for McDonald's.

Mrs. McDougall: —where 84 per cent of employed women work.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You would be well advised not to read.

Mr. Fulton: You can't read speeches in the House. It is against the rules of the House to read speeches.

Mrs. McDougall: Women can anticipate new employment opportunities and new chances to advance further in their careers.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We sat and listened to the Leader of the New Democratic Party respond. I wonder whether or not Members of the New Democratic Party would do the courtesy of allowing the Minister of Employment and Immigration to speak. These people who purport to believe in democracy should allow a free speech on the floor of the House.

Mr. Cassidy: Where were you when the Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) was intervening?

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Don't complain, never explain.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I think you noticed that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown when our Leader was speaking made a real fool of himself and embarrassed the House of Commons. I think if there needs to be anybody reprimanded in the House it should be him.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is a courtesy that you guys have to learn, and you will learn it the hard way.

Mr. McDermid: There is no greater heckler than you around here.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They will never elect a bunch of fools to the House of Commons.

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, they will. There is one right there.

Mr. McDermid: Why don't you wait until I speak, and then go after me? Don't go after her, go after me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Chair has listened very carefully to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. I wonder if he has listened to himself.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Perhaps he would consider acting accordingly.

Mr. Murphy: You never stopped McDermid once.

Mr. Rodriguez: McDermid was out of his seat and right up front and you didn't stop him once.

Mr. Fulton: A little bias, I think. That is what I heard.

Mrs. McDougall: It is a great pleasure for me today to talk about increased employment opportunities for women. In the service sector, where 84 per cent of women work, women can anticipate new employment opportunities and new chances to advance further in their careers. That is a very exciting opportunity for Canadian women.

Mr. Rodriguez: You're very exciting!

Mrs. McDougall: More efficient and better competitive industries will mean more and better jobs for women in the manufacturing sector—

Mr. Cassidy: How many women's jobs will be lost? What about the textile industry?

Mrs. McDougall: Growth in the primary industries will expand opportunities for women in non-traditional areas. I may say as well that women are used to dealing with children, which is what I feel like I am doing now.

For Canadian farm women the free trade agreement will improve access to the U.S. market for agricultural products and make that access more secure. Women entrepreneurs, whose numbers and successes continue to grow, will benefit from new business opportunities created by free trade.

Canadian consumers will find that the agreement will result in more competitively priced goods and a wider selection of quality goods and services. That is important to Canadian women because they are the ones who spend a substantial part of their individual or family incomes on food, clothing and shelter.

Mr. Fulton: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think, as the Chair is well aware, there is an enforceable rule of this House that experienced Members cannot and may not read speeches into the record.

Mr. Holtmann: That's what your boss did.

Mr. Cassidy: Tear it up.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister.

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, the remarks I want to make today I can make with or without notes. I want to make sure that I cover it all. Hon. Members who are not listening may not be interested but the people of Canada are—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: —particularly since I was just approaching a point about elderly women, something which, clearly, Hon. Members opposite are not interested in at all. Elderly women, single women, and women who are heads of households are the ones who will benefit from more competitive prices for a wider variety of consumer goods.

[Translation]

As Canadians, we have good reason to be proud of our social programs and I am happy to say that a good number of these programs were implemented to satisfy needs first brought to light by women and women's groups.

The free trade agreement does not in anyway affect this vital network of social programs nor our ability to create new ones. This means that existing programs, such as the Health Insurance Program, pensions and survivor benefits, and the Unemployment Insurance Program will not be modified by free trade, nor will new programs such as our National Day Care Strategy.

In fact, the free trade agreement will cause economic growth that will allow us to put in place a solid financial base for social programs that might be needed in the future.

[English]

A major part of that growth has been newly created jobs, tangible indicators of the progress that this Government has made and which will continue under the free trade arrangement. Since September, 1984, 1.2 million new jobs have been created in Canada, and the national unemployment rate has dropped to 7.8 per cent. They are not make-work jobs invented by Government, but dynamic jobs created by the private sector. Another fundamental difference is that our job as a Government is to create the climate for a vital private sector. That is what we have done, and we are very proud of it. Our programs for economic renewal and revitalization are working, and so are Canadians.

As we have pointed out before, Canada's job creation performance has been the best of any OECD nation. Furthermore, our average rate of growth over the past four and a half years has been the fastest among the major OECD nations.

Mr. Cassidy: Without free trade, so why go into free trade?

Mrs. McDougall: But we will not maintain this growth momentum, as the Hon. Member knows, unless we secure our markets and expand our ability to trade—

Mr. Cassidy: You failed to secure the market.

Mrs. McDougall: —because that is where tomorrow's jobs will come from.

In today's environment to stand still is to lose ground. That is why the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is so important.

[Translation]

The analysis of the economic impact of free trade carried out by the Department of Finance shows that by 1993, the agreement will have brought about the creation of 120 000 additional jobs. In addition, the number of new jobs will continue to increase when the agreement is applied in its entirety.

There is no doubt that these new jobs will require more skilled workers, and that is consistent with the objectives of the labour market development programs of the Department I am responsible for.

As a Government, we have recognized that we must take conclusive and innovative measures to help Canada's labour force adjust to the rapid development of markets and technology.

[English]

Over the past three years, unlike previous administrations, our Government has worked closely with provincial governments and with the private sector to develop the skilled and flexible workforce that Canada must have. Adjustment will be necessary but that is true today; it is true today without free trade. Adjustment, and the ability to adjust, are signs of a healthy economy. Some industries will have to make changes, as they do today. Some workers will have to acquire new skills, as they do today.

Mr. Cassidy: Like cooking hamburgers at McDonald's.

Mrs. McDougall: But these adjustments will be small in comparison to the large numbers of jobs that free trade will create.

We already have proven programs in place that will help workers and help employers respond to the new opportunities. For examples, an old program, the Industrial Adjustment Service that brings together business and labour to address adjustment and find their own solutions, has been doing that and proven itself for more than 20 years. So, too, is a new concept, the Canadian Jobs Strategy that has developed a reputation for responsiveness to changing labour market needs at every level.

Mr. Cassidy: Time. Madam Speaker, 15 minutes.

Mrs. McDougall: The Canadian Jobs Strategy is unique. There is no question about that. It is new. It encourages communities and their industries to find their own solutions to labour market challenges. In a modern environment, this flexible response to new opportunities will be invaluable.

We are confident that our programs are sufficient to meet the adjustment needs caused by free trade.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: You assured me today, Madam Speaker, of your desire to maintain objectivity in the House of Commons. I would like to point out to you that it is now some 15 or 16 minutes since the Hon. Minister rose. Perhaps you allowed a minute or two because of interventions, but certainly the time now is excessive, unless you are taking the view that Ministers have the right to finish the text prepared and written for them, whereas ordinary Members have to be confined to 10 minutes. I would urge you to bring the Hon. Minister's speech to an end. She has far exceeded the time available.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There were quite a few points of order that were raised once the Minister tried to get the floor. Actually, the Hon. Minister commenced her intervention at 15:48, and now another minute has gone by. Therefore, the Hon. Minister will have the floor until 15:59.

Mr. Cassidy: I rise on a point of order. I have to abide by your judgment, Madam Speaker. Certainly the clock that the New Democrats can see from this side of the floor indicated that the Leader of my Party took his seat at 20 minutes to the hour, some 16 or 17 minutes ago. If that is not the Speaker's finding, then let her live with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When I first gave the floor to the Hon. Minister it was 15:43. We were interrupted until 15:45. Then the Hon. Minister was given the floor and actually started her intervention at 15:48. The last time I gave the time I said it would be 15:59, now it will be 16:00 hours.

Mr. Cassidy: But you wouldn't intervene for the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) when the Member for Brampton—

Mrs. McDougall: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member does not want to hear that our programs are sufficient to meet the adjustment needs that will be caused by free trade.

Mr. Cassidy: We want a Speaker who will be fair to both sides of the House.

An Hon. Member: Order.

Mr. Kempling: Are you challenging the Chair?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Withdraw.

An Hon. Member: Throw him out.

Mr. McKinnon: Most boorish Member in the House.

Mr. Prud'homme: Ask him to withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Different things have happened. First, I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's statement that I let other Members make comments from across the aisle while his Leader had the floor. At no time did his Leader, or any member of the Hon. Member's Party, let it be known that it was bothering the Hon. Member. In fact, at one point the Hon. Member engaged in what seemed to be a conversation with the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Keeper: Boy, you are biased!

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Keeper: Are you the Chair, or not?

Mr. Cassidy: This is serious, Madam Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I know that this is very serious. At that time no one asked for the Chair to call order. No one said anything.

Mr. Keeper: Has the Chair no ears itself?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will wait a minute.

Mr. Keeper: Has the Chair no ears itself?

Mr. Nunziata: Throw them out.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I interrupted the debate when the Hon. Minister asked for help. Two Hon. Members have made remarks which are totally unacceptable. I will give them time to think, while I listen to the Hon. Member for York South—Weston who has asked for the floor on a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: We in the Liberal Party have been sitting back patiently listening to the debate. We find it absolutely disgusting that members of the NDP should carry on in the fashion they have been. On a number of occasions several members of the New Democratic Party, and it appears that their behaviour is condoned by their Leader, have been challenging the impartiality of the Chair. There is a long-standing tradition in the House that the impartiality of the Chair not be challenged. The NDP Members are doing so openly.

I would submit, Madam Speaker, that you have no alternative but to name the Hon. Members who are challenging the impartiality of the Chair.

• (1600)

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Madam Speaker, I very distinctly heard the Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper)—as was also indicated by the Liberal Member who made an intervention just prior to mine—use the word "biased", that the Chair was biased. I believe you will find that that is unparliamentary, and I think that the House has no recourse but to ask the Hon. Member to withdraw those remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would not have risen, but the Member mentioned me specifically. I want to point out that, while my Leader was speaking on a question of historic importance to this country, he was constantly hassled by a member of the Conservative Party, and that the Chair at that point made no intervention. That is what I call biased. That word is unparliamentary and I withdraw it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: I stand by the fact that that Member was allowed to hassle my Leader without the Chair intervening, but when we heckled the government Member, the Chair intervened. I see a difference in those two behaviours. I do withdraw the word "bias".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) for withdrawing a remark which was totally unparliamentary. As to his further comment, he may want to recall the fact that one person may have interfered during his Leader's speech, whereas, when the Hon. Member rose, there were quite a few Members who, together, interfered.

Mr. Keeper: In response to that speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister asked the Chair to intervene, which the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) did not. Now there is another point in front of us. I would imagine that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) may want to rise on a point of order at this time.

Mr. Cassidy: My comments with respect to fairness may be unparliamentary. I do withdraw them. However, I do want to indicate in a serious way my concern, which I have reflected upon a minute ago in the House, about the behaviour of the Hon. Member from Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) when he was out of his seat, when he was deliberately sitting directly opposite my Leader, the leader of one of the three Parties. The failure of the Speaker to take any notice of that does lead to grave misapprehensions and inquietudes on the part of my Party.

An Hon. Member: Withdraw.

Mr. Cassidy: I did.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Can the Hon. Member assure the Chair and the House that he has totally withdrawn the implications—

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I preceded my remarks by withdrawing those comments and, I repeat, I withdraw.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are three minutes left in the Hon. Minister's speech.

Mrs. McDougall: I want to talk about our programs and how confident we are that they will be able to meet the adjustment needs caused by free trade. As I have outlined, adjustment is part of a healthy and growing economy. But to ensure the fastest and most relevant response to change and to opportunity, to ensure that Canadians can take advantage of opportunity, the Government has an established advisory council on adjustment. That council consists of representatives from business and labour and consumer groups and educational institutions, with ex officio representation from the Government. It will assess our programs to make sure that existing programs are being used effectively and, also, to ensure that we keep ahead of emerging opportunities in the labour market, because opportunities are such an important part of adjustment.

Let me end where I began. For Canadian women, free trade will mean new opportunities for employment and new opportunities for advancement in their service careers, in the manufacturing sector and in their farming and entrepreneurial lives.

Free trade—and this is where it catches the imagination—presents Canada and Canadians with both challenges and opportunities. It challenges the status quo, slow growth and limited opportunity and restricted expectations, all of which have hampered women's chances of fulfilling their potential in a country that is bursting with promise.

Free trade also offers Canada opportunities to broaden our economic and industrial capabilities as a nation and to expand the employment choices in the manoeuvrability of our workforce. This will surely benefit women, who represent a major source of our nation's potential for future jobs and, as I said in the beginning, who are full contributors as entrepreneurs, as consumers, and as workers.

New opportunity is what this agreement is about, for our regions, our industrial sectors, for individual Canadians, for men and for women and, most particularly, for our children and for our grandchildren who are going to look at the opportunities that we have left them, who are going to look at how they can afford the social programs that we have today, who are going to look at the history of our country, which began with traders and has continued with traders. Whenever we have expanded our trade potential, our opportunities have increased. We owe our children and our grandchildren no small legacy. What we owe them is the opportunities that we have had over the past 40 years and will continue to have through the expansion of our trade opportunities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Madam Speaker, it is probably fair to say that no one can predict with any accuracy or any great certainty either the economic effects or the impact of this Canada-U.S. trade deal. I think the Government's propaganda that this will open the door to unprecedented future prosperity, that it will be the panacea for all of our future economic woes, has to be overstating the case, must be challenged and can be challenged.

The Hon. Mitchell Sharp, himself a former Trade and Commerce Minister, as well as Minister of Finance and Minister of External Affairs, a gentleman who served with great distinction in this House and was respected by all, has written recently, and I believe written objectively, the following:

> It is difficult to contest the assertion, at least theoretically, that the removal of remaining trade barriers between Canada and the United States would, after time—perhaps a difficult time—result in a net economic benefit to both countries, and that Canada would share this benefit, which would however be relatively modest.

So I would like to refer to three aspects of the agreement that are involved in Bill C-130. First of all, those remaining trade barriers, second, the difficult times which this agreement will undoubtedly bring for some and perhaps for many; and finally, the benefits and the costs of this agreement to our Canadian nation.

First of all, let me say that the Canadian resource sector seems generally to favour the trade agreement. They do so mainly because they believe that this agreement will provide them with a secure access to an ever expanding U.S. market. I think the question for Hon. Members is: Will it? The forest products industry has already paid heavily for this agreement in the form of a 15 per cent export tax or, now translated in some parts of Canada into higher stumpage fees, additional government costs imposed upon the industry. The forest products industry paid dearly and paid heavily. They did so because Canadian lumber prior to the last countervail action was taking a larger share of the U.S. market. They were doing so as a result of our Canadian industry being more efficient and competitive, coupled with the advantage that we had from a favourable exchange rate.

• (1610)

Michael B. Percy and Christian Yoder, in an outstanding piece of work, a study of the softwood lumber dispute, concluded:

> It is clear that once a Canadian industry increases its market share in the United States, the formidable array of contingent-protection mechanisms will be brought to bear on it.

And he said:

> Canadian industries are thus very aware that continued access to the U.S. markets depends critically on not exceeding some implicit or explicit market share.

I contend and I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to all Hon. Members, that this principle was in effect before the trade agreement was negotiated and signed, before Bill C-130, and this principle will be in effect after Bill C-130 and the trade agreement go into effect. Surely, everyone of us in this House can understand that for any beleaguered U.S. industry all competition tends to be unfair and injurious, even if that competition stems from true market-based cost advantage. That is a thesis that has been tested in the past and will be tested in the future.

Market share, I predict, will continue to be a problem for Canadian industries selling into the United States of America. At the same time, the pricing of our resources will in many cases cease to be under our control. If a province, for example, were to restrict production of a particular resource in order to raise the export price of that resource, the province could very well be faced with a challenge under the agreement we are ratifying today. Thus, on the one hand, our access to U.S. markets will continue to be restricted and will continue to be a problem for many Canadian industries and on the other hand, U.S. access to our resources at the best possible price for them will be assured. That being the case, Madam Speaker, is it any wonder that the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) when he was Minister of Energy in 1979 told Jack McArthur of the Toronto Star:

> Free trade in energy with the Americans is like wife swapping with a bachelor.

Second, while I acknowledge that there may be a modest economic gain for Canada after a period of time, perhaps a time of some difficulty, what can be said of these difficulties which are almost certainly to be encountered by a large number of workers in this country? What can we say about these times of trouble? During the adjustment period I asked what help would be available for displaced workers. I tried to listen with great care to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). She tried to leave the impression in this House that the existing programs, labour adjustment and job strategy will be enough. I would like to challenge her and all members on the government side and say to them that I doubt that very much.

The Government of Canada has not tied this comprehensive trade agreement to a comprehensive adjustment program for industries that will be adversely affected, for employees that will be displaced or for the communities in which they live to be assisted.

I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, that I do not share the total faith of this Government or the faith of President Reagan or Mrs. Thatcher, a total faith in the intrinsic value of unrestricted, unfettered free market forces. Of course, it is true that they create enormous wealth for some. Undoubtedly that is the case, but at the same time it also imposes terrible poverty and tragic hardship on others, and we can expect to see more of that in Canada as a result of this Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Finally, what will it cost Canada to embrace this policy of continentalism, which is implicit in Bill C-130? Sir Robert Borden said in an election message to Canadians in 1911:

> We must decide whether the spirit of Canadianism or if continentalism shall prevail in the northern half of this continent.

That message won for Mr. Borden an election in that year. Again, I refer to the analysis offered by Mr. Mitchell Sharp. He told us it is difficult to determine with accuracy the economic benefits. He went on to say:

> It is equally difficult to contest the assertion that a comprehensive preferential trade agreement with the United States would to some extent at least erode Canadian independence and sense of identity.

W. L. Mackenzie King is quoted as having said in 1948:

> I felt sure that the long objective of the Americans was to control this continent. They would want to get Canada under their aegis.

In his diary in 1950 he wrote:

> The more I think over the whole situation, the more I believe . . . that the U.S. foreign policy at bottom is to bring Canada into as many situations affecting themselves as possible with a view to leading ultimately to the annexation of our two countries.

Despite Mrs. Thatcher's purring assurances in this House that national identity is not at stake in comprehensive trade agreements, I do fear that a large, powerful, rich and influential nation like the United States of America can easily overwhelm us if we let it happen. I believe that Bill C-130 and this trade deal will help make that possible.

There is an old Indian elder in my constituency who lives along the shores of James Bay. I consider him to be one of the wisest gentlemen with whom I have ever had the privilege of conversing. He said to me not long ago when we were speaking about this trade agreement with the United States, and I end on this:

> Beware, when a small nation makes a treaty with a large and powerful one—look what happened to us.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am interested in participating in the debate on Bill C-130. I would like to spend another moment or two tracking the history or, as I have said before, tracking the genetics of this deal.

It was not a proposal that swelled from northwestern British Columbia or from British Columbia or from any of the provinces or either of the territories or from any single identifiable group within Canada; it is a business deal that was hatched in the late 1970s in the United States and became part of the campaign platform of Ronald Reagan. It took a number of years for the Republicans to find someone who could carry it forward in Canada but they certainly found a willing person in the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney).

Prior to being elected in 1983-84 he went on the record time and again openly opposing the concept of a trade deal with the United States. I suppose if one looks back at the track record of the present Prime Minister of Canada, one can see perhaps, in his handling of Schefferville, how the Iron Ore Company used him as a proxy for the United States to close down that community and to close up Schefferville and turn it into a ghost town. Perhaps going back even earlier to his childhood, one finds that he used to sit on the knees of visiting American dignitaries and, for a couple of bucks, sing Danny Boy.

We should look too at the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). As I said yesterday evening, it was that same Crosbie family who wore black arm bands in 1949. They were so discouraged that Newfoundland would join Canada and Confederation rather than becoming part of the United States, that they thought it was something to mourn over.

There are a certain number of tests to which one must put any piece of legislation in order to determine whether or not it is worthy of a nation's approval. I suppose one would have to start by asking if the deal is reciprocal, does Canada get as good a deal based on a careful reading of the text as the United States does. The answer, of course, is clearly no.

The principle that was enunciated time and time again by government Members across the country as being the absolute bottom line was that unless there was a binding dispute settlement mechanism, the deal could not fly, the negotiations would have to be called off. Anyone would know after taking a look at the agreement that there is no binding dispute mechanism in it because U.S. law prevails under all circumstances.

Bill C-130 places all Acts of this legislature, all Acts of Parliament, beneath it. It places all Acts of the legislatures of the provinces and territories subsidiary to it, but it is not the same situation on the U.S. side. Bill C-130 places everything below it in Canada. It rises above all other Acts. However, in the United States, of course it is U.S. trade law that will prevail.

Let us take a moment to contrast our two nations, the two systems, and see where this deal is likely to go. Let us begin with a point of evaluation made by the present Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher). While he was holding another portfolio, he calculated that the dislocation in the labour market will affect about 800,000 workers in the short term. The present Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), while he was the Minister of Employment and Immigration, estimated that up to 500,000 Canadians could lose their jobs because of the trade deal. Those are not figures that came from the NDP research department or figures that I saw written on the back of the curtains somewhere. Those are figures developed by the Government of Canada for the Conservatives to be used publicly.

Let us look at the binding dispute settlement mechanism. Binational panels are bound only to U.S. laws and practices whenever U.S. firms want to challenge how we do things in Canada. They have no powers to investigate, gather facts or direct national agencies to make specific judgments. All they can do is to judge whether American trade legislation has been applied properly.

Governed by U.S. law and precedent, the U.S. can define subsidies almost any way it wants to. It can continue to harass Canadian exporters and block free access over such issues as research and development grants, seasonally-adjusted unemployment insurance and regional-provincial-local development schemes. That is something of which the people of my constituency are well aware as are most northern Canadians. The regional development programs that have been developed particularly since the end of the Second World War will no longer be possible in their present form.

Since all Canadian producers are to some extent subsidized by government-run hydro, telephones, postal services, health care systems and so on, failing U.S. firms will never run out of grounds for filing unfair trade practice suits. Following a suit brought by the New England fishing industry, for example, the U.S. International Trade Commission identified 58, not five, not eight, but 58 Canadian government programs it labelled as unfair subsidies for the Canadian fishing industry.

That will mean that in the future, under the so-called binding dispute settlement mechanism, those same kinds of trade harassments on softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, fish, potash, pork, you name it, will still be able to proceed, and because American law prevails, the Americans will still be able to sustain the kinds of incredible harassments they have been practising against us in recent years.

A couple of areas deserve particularly close scrutiny. What about the impact on the first citizens of Canada, the aboriginal people? The only major study I have seen so far on what the impact will be on the First Nations of this country—and I do not think the Department of Indian Affairs has even touched on it—has been done by the Native Council of Canada, and it shows that the implications are devastating. This is principally because of the kinds of occupations in which most of the First Nations are still involved, including tourism, trapping and other indigenous activities including those activities in British Columbia that are highly evolved in the forestry and fishing sectors. Both of those sectors, particularly in British Columbia, are under enormous threat.

What about the environment? There has been very little talk about the environment, particularly from the government side. Where is the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan)? Where has a position paper from Environment Canada been hiding, or has it been developed yet? Having studied with great care the impact of acid rain on our country, we now know that the losses in terms of tree growth is billions of dollars per year. We know that the sugar maple is dying. We know that 40,000 lakes are in the process of dying as a result of acid precipitation. Nothing is being done by the U.S. or by the present Government to deal with a very serious problem.

What is being done about the greenhouse effect? What is being done about the hole in the ionosphere caused by chlorofluorocarbons and other chemicals that have an industrial origin? These are major planetary and global matters that not only are not addressed by this deal but in fact will be made worse.

The underlying desire is to lower wage structures, to lower the availability and accessibility of social programs in order to make the systems more competitive. We must understand that in making things more profitable in the present market-driven systems we see particularly in the United States, most of the major costs are externalized. Acid rain is an externalized cost.

I was in the United States when the Hudson River caught fire. Canadians would scratch their heads and say, "Rivers catch fire in the United States?" That is how much pollution there has been on a number of occasions on the Hudson and on other rivers in the United States that they have actually caught fire from the crap floating on the surface.

What about the Niagara escarpment, the Love Canal and all of the various waste dumps there? If our industries are to be bilaterally competitive with those in the United States, will we have higher environmental standards? Do we hear the Minister of the Environment trying to sustain that argument? No, we do not, because our environmental laws will be degraded by the impact of this deal.

Let us take a contrasting look at some of the main components of Canada's economic and social system versus that of the U.S. We in Canada have universal hospital and medical coverage with compulsory employer contributions. In the U.S., 40 per cent of the population is eligible for publicly-funded hospital and medical services and 36 million Americans have no insurance. Employer contributions are voluntary. All provinces have minimum wage laws as do both territories. Nine U.S. states have no minimum wage laws, and in Texas the minimum wage is only $1.40 per hour.

In Canada we have unemployment insurance. The rate of unionization is double that in the United States. Five point 3 per cent of our national income or $3,420 U.S. per pupil is spent on education in Canada. In the U.S., it is only 3.7 per cent of the national income. We have a much fairer system of income distribution in Canada than they have in the U.S. We know that the Canadian hospital system is the area that will first come under attack from this deal.

What do U.S. health care corporations look for when minimizing costs? In the words of a U.S. corporate executive:

> You cut down on people, cut down on space, cut down wherever you can. If you still can't solve the problem you try to find out if there are abuses.
> You let some doctors go; if you feel you're doing too much indigent care you just put a cap on the level of indigent care you will accept.

If any thinking Canadian were to take a look at what the impact on energy, the environment and social programs will be and what benefits may possibly flow from the agreement and weigh the two against each other, he or she would come to the intelligent conclusion that this deal is bad for Canada and should be opposed by every single thinking Canadian.

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, after all that doom and gloom, I categorically, enthusiastically support the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement because it represents significant opportunities and benefits for Canada but specifically for Alberta from where I come.

Free trade is best understood as enhanced trade, as encouraging free enterprise, as encouraging our ability to work and progress, the basis of our capitalistic, democratic society. Canada is a trading nation. The Canadian economy and society have been built and structured on foreign trade. Our ability to trade creates prosperity for Canadian families. Canada must have enhanced trade to compete in an aggressive, international market-place. Free trade means more jobs, greater job security, and lower consumer prices.

A broad spectrum of respected economic agencies promote the benefit of a secure trading market with the world's largest free enterprise economy, the United States. The agreement respects Canada's political independence and cultural sovereignty, our unique social programs and regional development policies.

At present Canada is the only major free enterprise economy that does not have unrestricted access to a market of 100 million people or more. Thus, we are economically isolated unless we trade with the U.S. For example, Israel entered into a free trade relationship with the U.S. but not with the same benefits and not as all-sweeping as ours. Israel has not lost its unique cultural or linguistic identity because of its economic trade relationship with America. The European Economic Community also expanded its market potential for Britain, France, Germany, Italy and The Netherlands. These expanded trade markets are proof that the old systems of trade protectionism must be replaced with open markets.

The free trade system will of course create significant economic benefits for Alberta's economy. Alberta will no longer rely upon domestic markets only in buying and selling its resources. The Alberta Cattleman's Association and the Alberta Petroleum Association are avid supporters of free trade and the opportunities it will create for Albertans. An expanded and secure resource industry will create permanent service and support sector jobs.

The agreement will build a stronger future for Canada's youth. Long-term growth means existing plants must grow, and new and better facilities must open. The youth of Alberta must have the opportunity to be employed by new as well as traditional industries, or start businesses on their own. New industries will be established as a result of the agreement. Canadian industries will remain in Alberta, no longer having to relocate in the U.S. to avoid protectionist trade barriers.

Of great importance to Alberta youth are the agreement's precedent-setting arrangements regarding trade in the service sector. Alberta is world renowned for its tourist and travel opportunities as witnessed by the success of the Calgary Winter Olympics. With service sector jobs growing faster than any other sector, the agreement will ensure that opportunities abound in this area.

Most analysts agree that the free trade agreement will benefit western Canada, especially Alberta. The Canada West Foundation, a non-profit, western based research institute has done extensive research on the Alberta free trade issue. Their study confirms that free trade is beneficial for western Canada.

The agreement assures secure market access for Canadian energy exports to the U.S. Alberta oil, gas and electricity producers support the enhanced access and security to the American market and easing of National Energy Board export regulations as a positive development for the western Canadian economy.

In talking about energy we might think only of the big companies, but it involves much more than that. It affects the petrochemical industry, research, transportation by truck, rail and air, steel manufacturing, skilled trades, and construction. The service sector will expand. An increased population will result and that creates a demand for education, public services, hospital care, recreation services. All this from an expanding energy sector.

Meat packing, the largest food processing sector in western Canada, will benefit from free trade. Oilseed mills will also benefit from the removal of high U.S. tariffs on processed oilseeds. Projections indicate that the sectors directly benefiting from the agreement account for 33 per cent of Gross Provincial Product. Most important, 75 per cent of Alberta's exports depend upon a secure American market.

Again, the agreement does not and will not adversely affect existing social programs such as medicare, child care, maternity benefits, job training, pay equity, the Canada Pension Plan, pensions for the disabled, and unemployment insurance. Neither does it prevent the introduction of new programs. We must remember that all those programs must be paid for by the Canadian people. Under the protectionist system there will be mass unemployment. We must remember that two million Canadians are working because of our exports, most of which go to the U.S.

I heard the Leader of the NDP talk about how great Canada is, and we all agree with that. He talked about the shortcomings of the Americans. After all, not every country can be as good as ours. However, essentially what he was advocating was protectionism. That is the way of the fearful. It is for those who have no self-confidence. It is for those with an inferiority complex. History has clearly demonstrated over and over again that protectionism is the way of a weak and insecure country. The NDP preach protectionism and that will lead Canada, and Alberta in particular, to stagnation, economic rust and high unemployment.

Our parents and grandparents could have said they were not going to leave the comfort of their own countries. Yet they did. They took risks, asking only for an opportunity. If this protectionist sentiment existed among our grandparents I wonder if there would have been any NDP Members here today. What if their parents or grandparents had been afraid to come to a wild country such as Canada? Wild, yes, but with opportunity.

I am suggesting that it is very important that we have this opportunity for free trade with the Americans. Theirs is the richest country in the world and they are one of the only countries who have the money to purchase some of our products and natural resources.

Several years ago we had another Government and it was supported by the NDP. Our national debt rose from $18 billion to over $200 billion. Today we pay $29 billion in interest on that debt annually with no increase in productivity to show for it. We are now paying more in interest on that debt than we are for our social programs, and if in the last twenty years we had a Government such as this we would have been able to pay for all our social programs and we would have been eminently successful.

In conclusion, free trade offers Alberta many challenges and Canadians many opportunities. The lowering of tariff barriers and a more stable business and investment climate will stimulate economic growth and create new jobs. This will result in higher wages, an improved standard of living for Albertans, and that is why we need this agreement between the U.S. and Canada.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill S-17, an Act to authorize Montreal Trust Company of Canada to be continued as a corporation under the laws of the province of Québec, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661), and Mr. Young (p. 17089).

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have a few moments today, I guess 10 minutes is all I have, to speak on Bill C-130, an Act respecting free trade between Canada and the United States.

At the outset, I do not think there are too many people in the House who do not believe in improved trading relations, from wherever they may come. However, it is one thing to talk about improving our trade relations with any country and quite another to talk about jeopardizing the sovereignty of our country.

When he was campaigning for the leadership in 1983, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, "This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. I am all in favour of eliminating unfair protectionism where it exists. This is a separate country, we'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch plant economy, in many ways in certain important sectors. All that would happen with that kind of a concept would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It is bad enough as it is".

During that leadership campaign in June of 1983 he went on to say the following with regard to free trade, "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it, not during leadership campaigns or any other time".

I do not think anyone could have said it better. What the Prime Minister was saying at that time was absolutely correct. It was absolutely correct in June of 1983, and it is probably even more correct in July of 1988.

In the Province of Prince Edward Island, from which I come, our most important industry is, naturally, agriculture. Our second most important industry is fisheries, and our third most important industry is tourism.

With regard to fisheries, we were told that with this Mulroney-Reagan free trade agreement we would have guaranteed and unfettered access to American markets. Nowhere in this free trade agreement do I find that we have any protection whatsoever for our access to the United States markets as far as American remedy law is concerned, neither the laws which exist in the United States today nor the omnibus trade Bills which are before the United States Congress and the U.S. Senate at the present time.

Therefore, not only are we subjected to laws which are presently in effect in the United States, we will be further subjected to their laws in the future. There is nothing in that agreement which gives us protection from them. This agreement does not give us any more access than we have had in the past number of years. We will always be subject to American trade law.

The dispute settlement mechanism is, in my opinion, a farce. If an American manufacturer or supplier says that his product sales are being affected by subsidized goods coming in from Canada, the dispute settlement panel can only judge whether or not American trade laws have applied correctly. That is all we have, same as in the past. There is no provision whatsoever to lower the risks of such manoeuvring by American business.

On Prince Edward Island there are about 28,000 people employed, directly or indirectly, in agriculture and the fishery, that is, those involved in the processing of agricultural and fisheries products as well as the primary producers involved in the harvesting of these resources. That is about 50 per cent of our total employment force in the Province of P.E.I.

Harrison McCain is a very important business person in Atlantic Canada. Not only is McCain Foods established in Atlantic Canada but in almost every country in the world including Australia. An article in Business Watch, written by Peter Newman, quotes McCain as follows:

> "We're free traders by nature," he told me. "If the government were to just come out and say, 'Hey, McCain, do you favor lowering tariffs in every case that's practical' I'd of course say 'Yes.'"

The key here is "that's practical". The article continues:

> But, McCain continued, "in the case of this particular deal, I'd have to say, 'Don't dupe us in the food industry.' The problem is that we have to buy our mozzarella cheese for the pizzas we make in Canada through marketing boards. That means it costs 39 per cent more than it would in the United States. At the moment, the Americans are not allowed to ship their cheese into Canada, but with free trade, they'll be selling their pizzas here duty-free. How do we buy cheese in Canada at 39 per cent more and still be competitive? We can't be. And we have exactly the same problem with our frozen dinners because of chicken marketing boards, and so on."

That is what Harrison McCain is saying. The article continues:

> "What I'd really like to hear," came McCain's parting shot, "is somebody standing up in Vancouver, or Halifax, or Toronto right now and declaring: 'Free trade is such a great deal, I'm going to start building a factory tomorrow. I'll double my capacity! I'll build a whole new industry! My God, just let me at it!' Why aren't we hearing that? I wonder . . . "

A lot of Canadians are wondering that. We hear a lot from the business world in Toronto and Montreal saying what a great thing free trade is. However, I do not hear them saying that they are going to expand tomorrow. It is not going to happen.

Returning to the fishery, a GATT ruling was imposed on fish processed in British Columbia. A fisherman by the name of Bruce Burrows wrote me an interesting letter which I want to read into the record. He said:

> Before I leave to go fishing this summer I have to do a little spleen-venting about yet another example of our federal government's stupidity and spinelessness. I am referring to Brian Mulroney's decision not to contest the recent GATT ruling on exports of west coast fish.
> Just to refresh your memory, this was a ruling by an international trade board, resulting from American complaints, that Canadian regulations calling for some of our fish to be processed here prior to export are contrary to the GATT Treaty.
> I'll deal with the economic effects later, but the first thing that angers me about this ruling is that it's a clear violation of Canadian sovereignty. These are our fish, our natural resources. We should have the absolute and final say on how they are disposed of. If we want to rule that every salmon exported from British Columbia must have a cherry stuck in its mouth and be called a sea pig, that is our right. Our Conservative government, whose normal negotiating position in matters of American wants is either kneeling or supine with legs spread, evidently disagrees.

I think that is a good indication of the negotiations the Government has had in the past. This is not from a processor, but from a fisherman in the Province of British Columbia. He concluded:

> We have, I think, only three possible courses of action—order a spine transplant for Mulroney and his cohorts, buy them all knee-pads for their next round of negotiating, or vote the mendacious sychophants out of office at the earliest opportunity.

I certainly would agree with that. The free trade agreement with which we are faced right now is certainly the most important agreement into which this country has ever entered. I believe that the people of this country must have an opportunity to express their views on it before it is passed and signed. I challenge the Prime Minister and the Government to dissolve the House immediately, to go to the electorate, and to let the people decide whether free trade is good or bad for this country. I, for one, welcome that opportunity. I would not mind coming back and supporting free trade if the people supported it. However, I can say that people from a province like mine have nothing to gain and everything to lose with free trade.

• (1650)

If free trade and access to the American market is such a good thing, why are the farmers, the fishermen and the forest industry in the State of Maine not making a lot of money? We know that they are far worse off than we are. They are far worse off in the hills of Kentucky than we are in this country.

Mr. Sid Fraleigh (Lambton—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the leader of the socialist Party outline the many things that make us distinctly Canadian. I support most of what he said about what makes us different, because we are different. We are Canadians.

I differ with him in how we perceive the results for Canada if we sign a commercial trade pact with one of our trading partners. In the past 20 years, trade between Canada and the United States has increased dramatically. In that same period, many of the programs that were identified by the leader of the socialist Party were either started or improved dramatically.

We must ask, why should any further improvement or expansion of trade endanger any of those programs that we enjoy, support and that make us distinctly Canadian?

Many of the programs we enjoy require funding. The best way I know to preserve and fund those programs is to have a strong and vibrant economy.

Let me take a minute to respond to the Liberal Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson) who asked a question that I believe deserves an answer. He asked why people were not standing up and announcing their plans to build plants. One reason is that his leader is entirely negative and is threatening to tear up this agreement if he becomes the Prime Minister of Canada, heaven forbid. I am sure that upon final approval of this agreement Canada will embark upon a period of stability and economic growth. This stability, in great part, will be due to the removal of the uncertainties that face our industries and traders in dealing with our largest trading partner, the United States.

I believe this arrangement will not be a disaster for Canada, nor will it be a panacea. Other problems in trade will exist, as recent rulings by GATT have shown. However, anything we can do to level the playing field for Canada is a positive step forward.

It is my intention to limit my remarks to the impact the trade deal will have on my riding, which is predominantly agricultural with a number of small industrial plants concentrated in the urban centre, as well as a single large petrochemical plant. My riding is probably not much different from many other ridings in Canada and is a fair reflection of all of Canada.

When this Government initiated the negotiations on this pact, we made certain commitments to agriculture. We promised to consult, and we did, setting up sectoral advisory groups from the private sector to assist and advise our negotiators.

The group representing basic agriculture plus the food and processing industry was made up of individuals highly respected by their peers for their experience in various sectors. Having known some of these people personally, I can assure the House that they were of the highest calibre and brought much to the bargaining table. As Canadians, we owe these people thanks for a job well done.

We also made a commitment to the supply management sector that their marketing system and the underpinnings which are necessary for it to survive, namely import controls, would remain intact. Not only did we deliver, but in the dairy sector we have added to that list a number of processed products which the industry indicated were vulnerable. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) has stated many times that if a secondary processed product threatens any of the supply managed systems, it will be added to the list. As well, just last week this House, under the leadership of the Government, passed in all stages a new Canada Agricultural Products Act that will protect our horticulture industry from seasonal dumping by U.S. producers.

For those who have any doubts about this Government's commitment to this sector, the Government approved the establishment of a national boiler hatching egg agency at the very time the bilateral trade negotiations were in progress.

It was our Party that established the chicken marketing agency in 1979, which the chicken producers of this country now enjoy.

Let me turn to those sectors which stand to gain by this arrangement and are supportive of the initiative. These sectors include the grains and oilseeds and the red meat groups, as well as a large number of secondary processors in the food and beverage sector.

Red meat producers have had free movement across the border with very limited tariffs for some time. Under this agreement, that access will continue.

Pork is our second largest export commodity in agriculture. We operate in what is considered to be a North American market in red meats, both cattle and hogs, where meat and meat products move back and forth across our borders with limited or no tariffs. In all cases, those tariffs are reciprocal.

Some 20 years ago, when I first became involved with the pork industry, we had 9 per cent of that North American market. Today we have 16 per cent of that market because we outsmarted and produced a better product than the Americans.

The Canadian oilseeds sector has punitive tariffs against it, which effectively has shut it out of the U.S. market. According to this agreement, those tariffs will go. End user certificates in grains will maintain our quality control system. It is a system that has made us a world leader in supplying quality grain to the export market.

According to this arrangement, the U.S. will not be able to use export subsidies for products going into the Canadian market. Canada maintains the right to protect our horticultural sector from seasonal dumping by the United States. Canadian agriculture can and will prosper.

I want to outline the benefits the trade agreement will bring to other industries in my riding. Like all other petro-chemical plants in the neighbouring riding of Sarnia—Lambton, commonly known as chemical valley, the plant in my riding is fully supportive of the trade initiative. This plant is world scale and is looking forward to the day when the punitive tariffs against its industry will be removed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Unfortunately, I must interrupt the Hon. Member. Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member to conclude his remarks?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fraleigh: The other main component of my riding affected by this deal is the small industries located in the urban centres. While some have concerns, almost without exception they believe there are opportunities.

The best way I can illustrate this is to relate what one of those small industries has done. This company previously had no involvement with the export market. When the initial announcement was made that a tentative agreement had been reached, did they cry that they would not survive? No. Did they tell their employees that their jobs would be finished? No. Did they come asking for the Government to exempt them from the deal? No. Instead, they identified their concerns, immediately hired a U.S. sales manager and participated in a major trade show for their industry in the United States.

They are convinced that they can compete. That opinion is shared by most of the other small industries in my area. In fact, most are grateful for the opportunity provided through this agreement.

We as Canadians do some things very well. Quite often we do not give ourselves credit for those things that we do so well. What has become apparent from the outset of this debate is that those people who are presently traders are fully supportive and think that this is a good deal for Canada. Those people who have never traded outside Canada have the greatest concern. I suppose that is a natural reaction, as nothing promotes uncertainty more than fear of the unknown.

I believe as Canadians that we must reject this fear. We must reject those who have no confidence in our abilities. We must take this agreement for what it is—an opportunity for our country to grow and to prosper, not only in the North American economy but in the world economy.

We can no longer hide behind the protectionist barriers of the past. We have to reach out and take our place in the world. That process begins right here with this agreement.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

ADVISABILITY OF INFORMING DEPOSITORS WHEN DEPOSITS ARE UNINSURED

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. Riis:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to this motion since I think it is an important one. If we have watched the evolution of the financial institutions in our country over the last decade then we have seen some pretty disastrous situations happen. I know that we have recognized the fact that there are certain depositors who are not protected. What we have seen as a result of the inquiry that is taking place right now in Alberta is the fact that many of these people did not realize that their deposits were not protected by insurance. Therefore, they are the ones who became innocent victims.

In this resolution what we are looking for is the ability of the federal Government to co-operate with the provinces so that there will be a consistent policy in place across the country as well as protection for those people who very often think they are protected but are not. We have grown up in a country in which there has been a great deal of trust in our banking system. Certainly, our Bank Act protects us in ways that we do not see south of the border. We now recognize that with the amendment to our Bank Act. It has allowed banks to go into the selling of securities and that type of marketing. Under the free trade agreement we no longer have the freedom to establish banking institutions in the United States. Yet the Americans can come here to establish banks because that action is not consistent with their Bank Act, whereas their banking and our selling of securities in our banks is consistent. That shows a great lack in the free trade agreement.

What we are really talking about in terms of this resolution is the fact that people who often think they are protected are not protected. As a result of the change in the Bank Act there is not the same type of protection for small investors. We certainly know that the Canadian way very often is to put the very last bit of savings that these people have into banks thinking that no matter what happens they will be protected. It seems to me it is important that we provide such protection and that it be given in consultation and through working with the provinces.

As Hon. Members know, Canadians are becoming more and more mobile. People move from one province to another. It would be a real tragedy if there were new legislation in place which was not consistent in every province and territory. That is why the author of the resolution suggests that such a measure be undertaken with the type of co-operation that would be needed with all the provinces.

As parliamentarians we have a responsibility to look at what has been happening in our society over the last decade. We have seen some of the tragedies that have taken place. That evidence is coming out as a result of some very expensive public inquiries which have and are taking place.

My background is in prevention. When I look at public policy I like to think that we are stopping things from happening that could hurt people rather than waiting for them to happen and reacting afterwards. It is important that we look to changing the habits of investors and attempt to give them the protection that they do not now have.

As we look at this matter we see that we are not just protecting the individual as an investor but that we are protecting society collectively. Now when we get into situations where there is not this type of insurance, small business hurts. Small communities are often hurt very badly in such instances. All that is needed is the failure of one financial institution in a small community in which many small businesses have invested to see this happen.

This type of motion makes a great deal of sense to me. I hope that everyone in the House will support it. We have seen in some cases that accidents have happened, while in others we see that their cause was verging on fraudulent behaviour. This is what has been coming out of the inquiries. Unfortunately, it is always the small person who is the most vulnerable. If a person must sign a piece of paper that says that a certain amount of money is not insured and that the investment is at a greater risk, then that is very important. Very often we know that it is information that can save a great deal of heartbreak later on. That is exactly what the author of the resolution is getting at when he suggests that this become the norm for people who are participating in investment if insurance is not be in place.

We must continue to encourage people to insure the majority of their investments, particularly small investments. This would help the public, our consumers, to understand the level of risk that they are taking. It would ensure that there would be broader protection in a collective, community sense. In this way the whole financial environment could be stabilized. That is very important.

There are a great many Canadians who were shocked in the early eighties when they began to realize what could happen in the country. Up until that time we had been fairly free of that type of risk. But once the world got into financial risk situations we also became victims of it. I saw it happen in municipalities. I saw it happen with individuals. I know a great many people who thought their investments were secure and had no idea that they would suffer the losses that they did suffer.

Not only would such a measure protect the consumers, making them aware of the risks they are taking, but it would also help to give education to the consumer about the type of obligations that financial institutions are under. It would show consumers that they are not just faceless, souless types of institutions in which one puts one's money thinking it will be safe for ever and ever. It would show people that there are certain types of activities that take place that put some investments at risk. This is a good resolution.

I hope Members of the House will support the motion. I know members of my Party will support it. It is one way of helping ordinary Canadians become better informed about the type of society in which they are living, and what financial institutions can and cannot do for them. Therefore, they will be much more cautious in the investments that they make and feel much more secure about it.

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Madam Speaker, I have a strong interest in the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). As a member of the Finance Committee I participated in our investigation into the situation of the Canadian Commercial and Northland Banks. I also participated with that committee in our study of the regulation of financial institutions. Approximately two years ago we issued a report which included major recommendations in that area. Subsequently the Government has moved in a legislative sense on most of those recommendations, not always completely in agreement, but addressing all the areas of concern.

One of the problems is that the federal Government does not have complete jurisdiction in this area. Essentially, this motion is suggesting that the Government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces. There has never been any lack of intent to co-operate with the provinces in achieving the intent of this motion. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) has been attempting to do that. I suppose that is one of the difficulties of the federal system, but it is heightened in a system where people do not necessarily know under what rules the institution may be operating.

In large measure the motion has been triggered by the collapse of the Principal Group, with which I am familiar because it is resident in my own city. I might mention that none of the 127 companies associated with the Principal Group were federally registered. In fact, only one company, Principal Savings and Trust, was CDIC insured. I would suggest that if the Principal Group had been federally registered, none of those problems would have occurred, because in large measure those problems were the result of or compounded by what is referred to as "self-dealing" which are transactions between related companies. Many of those transactions would not have been allowed under the proposals put forward by the Finance Committee in the new legislation, or even under the existing legislation.

When the CCB and the Northland Bank collapsed, the federal Government paid insured depositors, as was required under the CDIC Act, and it also acted to reimburse insured depositors for two reasons. One, it felt there was an element of fairness required to reimburse those people. The Government had indicated that it wanted to see those banks continue, and that it wanted to play a part. Therefore, to some degree the Government was a partner in continuing those institutions prior to their collapse. Second, in paying out more than $1 billion to uninsured depositors, the federal Government recognized that at that time the economy of western Canada, particularly Alberta, could not stand the blow of losing $1 billion.

One of the dichotomies of this is that the Party, and the Member who proposed this motion, was one of the leading critics of the federal Government acting to reimburse a billion dollars or more of uninsured deposits. I read in an article in The Globe and Mail of March 1 that the Hon. Member is suggesting that this rule should be put in place to protect uninsured depositors, and that the CDIC Act should be amended to cover investments not backed by any form of government insurance. These include deposits of more than $60,000, foreign currency deposits, deposits with a term of maturity of more than five years, and about $3.5 billion in deposits placed with investment dealers. It behooves me to understand why day after day that Party, and the Member in particular, criticized the Government for reimbursing uninsured depositors, and now as part of this motion the Hon. Member is suggesting that it should be an every day practice.

Notwithstanding the desirability of that motion making the Government liable for every type of investment that people might make, which is obviously impractical, in a large measure we must consider that the Hon. Member is talking about areas that fall completely under provincial jurisdiction, for example, the $3.5 billion in deposits placed with investment dealers. As we know, those fall virtually under provincial jurisdiction. To suggest that the federal Government should take responsibility for insuring people who place their money with investment dealers or stockbrokers is a questionable strategy and one that I find a little strange coming from a member of the New Democratic Party.

All of us in the House believe in the concept of deposit insurance. I question that we want to insure everyone against all potential losses. The current existing deposit insurance of $60,000 protects very small investors. Those persons with greater than $60,000 in assets should have some responsibility for looking after their own affairs.

On the question of having people sign for an uninsured deposit, where the deposit is placed with what would normally be regarded as a deposit-taking institution such as a trust company, that is a reasonably and possibly effective method of consumer protection. Many of the problems that have arisen have arisen with quasi-financial institutions. The problem and the difficulty would be to define what is a legitimate deposit-taking institution. Is a lawyer who receives $50,000 from each investor and invests it a deposit-taking institution that would be drawn in under this law? Given that there is no definition or suggestion of how this might operate, we will find great difficulty in the House in accepting this motion.

In closing, the Government has been acting in the area of consumer protection. There are new measures being put forward. I agree with the Minister of State for Finance when he states that new and up-dated legislation must be brought forward. I will be supporting those Bills. I expect that the House will move on them quickly to allow the type of protection that we are all seeking. It will also prevent the type of abuses that we have seen in some of those situations.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make submissions with regard to this particular motion which states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

That particular resolution has been moved by a member of the New Democratic Party. I find it somewhat curious that the New Democratic Party should move such an amendment, because it often purports to represent the ordinary Canadian, the little guy.

Mr. Hovdebo: This protects ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Nunziata: Hear me out. The NDP has mastered the art of heckling, but I ask with respect, hear me out.

We are talking about people who deposit in excess of $60,000. I do not know about NDP Members who talk about protecting the little guy, or how much money they have stashed away, but there are not too many of my constituents in the federal riding of York South—Weston who can boast of having more than $60,000 in a bank or in a trust company, because anyone who does have under $60,000 is insured.

• (1720)

The NDP says that those who deposit or have on deposit more than $60,000 in a trust company or some other financial institution, a bank or whatever, should be required to sign a form that says that they are aware that their deposit is not fully insured, that the excess of over $60,000 is not insured, and in the event that the financial institution should go bankrupt, that they cannot look to the Government or to any one else for any type of compensation or recompense. It is a motherhood type of issue, but it is somewhat curious, and I found it amusing, that the New Democratic Party should be so preoccupied with protecting rich Canadians, Canadians that have more than $60,000 in the bank.

Be that as it may, I believe that no financial institution, whether it is a bank or a trust company, should ever go bankrupt if you have the proper system of regulations in place to ensure that they do not mishandle moneys that are on deposit.

We can look at examples of banks and financial institutions that have failed—the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. Those two institutions went under because you did not have the proper system, the proper laws, the proper regulations, the proper inspection in place, to ensure that they acted as trustees and that they acted in a reasonable, prudent fashion in the handling of the moneys that they were holding in trust for depositors.

I hope that a lesson was learned by the Government of Canada and, indeed, by all the provincial Governments, from one end of the country to the other, that they cannot just hope that the financial institutions will regulate themselves and will act prudently, that there is an absolute necessity that we have some very strict and stringent legislation, rules and regulations in place, with proper inspection procedures, to ensure that no bank and no trust company ever goes bankrupt. There is no reason for it. If you have the system in place, you will not have to worry about people signing waivers, people who have more than $60,000.

I know the Hon. Member from Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) is well-meaning and he is concerned about all the rich people in Kamloops—Shuswap, all those who have in excess of $60,000, but does he really believe that people going into banks really read forms? If I had the opportunity, I would put the question to him, and the Hon. Member is in the House now. Does he read every document, every form that a bank hands to him when he opens a bank account, or when he transacts business with the bank? I suspect not, because most Canadians do not. You have dozens and dozens of forms that have to be signed. Does he really believe that someone is going to be deterred—some of his rich friends on Bay Street and elsewhere—from depositing $100,000 or $150,000, or a quarter of a million dollars, because they have to sign a waiver of sorts?

I would submit that people who have that amount of money surely must be sophisticated to the point where they know that only a portion of it is insured. We are talking about people with big bucks. We are not talking about ordinary Canadians who do not have savings. They have debts.

In any event, I know that the Hon. Member is well-meaning, and he is concerned. I would submit to the Hon. Member that his efforts would be better spent, better utilized, if he were to participate with the Liberal Opposition—and hopefully members of the government side—to ensure that proper regulation and inspection, very stringent regulations, are in place to ensure that institutions do not go bankrupt.

We have a big problem, even with deposit insurance, and that is because of the terrible precedent that was set by the Conservative Government of Canada. A few years ago the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank went belly-up. They went bankrupt. All those who had $60,000 or less were reimbursed because they were insured up to that amount. There were a great number of uninsured depositors, people that had more than $60,000. They were not insured for the portion invested that was over $60,000. The Government, in its wisdom, decided to pay off those people, those unnamed people. To this day, I do not know who those people are. I believe at the time the Government refused to submit a list. I say that they were not ordinary, poor Canadians. They were people that had substantial assets and interest.

As a result of the Government's negotiating over a billion dollars, the integrity of the system has been affected. If another financial institution goes bankrupt in the future, those people that are uninsured are going to look to the Government of Canada and they are going to cite the precedent of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank that went under during the Conservative rule of Government, in that short-lived Government between 1984 and 1988.

Regardless of the short tenure of that particular Government, the precedent was set. It was a bad move. It was an imprudent move on behalf of the Government of Canada, because it was paying off or compensating people who took risks in two financial institutions that maybe gave out more interest than a chartered bank, for example, might give on a deposit. Those people who take those risks have to be prepared to pay the price, in the event that, statistically, they are caught in the remote situation where a financial institution goes bankrupt. Where the Government went wrong is that it compensated those people. In effect it set a precedent.

In closing let me say that the resolution does not do any harm. It is motherhood in nature but, as I indicated earlier, I am surprised at the concern of the Hon. Member from Kamloops—Shuswap about his rich friends on Bay Street, those who have more than $60,000. It does not do any harm to co-operate with the provinces and have the people sign one extra form to say that, in the event that the institution goes bankrupt, they cannot hold anyone responsible. I reiterate that a more comprehensive approach ought to be taken. Unfortunately, the NDP at times look at problems in a very narrow, simplistic fashion. If they do not like the banks, nationalize the banks, they say, in their policy platform. If they do not like cable companies, nationalize them. In terms of the problem before us, and that is the trust in banks and financial institutions, a comprehensive approach is necessary to ensure that laws are in place here in the Parliament of Canada, in each of the legislatures across the country, to make sure that these financial institutions are properly controlled, properly monitored, so you do not have a situation where these institutions go bankrupt. Thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me the chance to say a few words on this subject.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) which says, and I quote:

> . . . the government should consider the advisability of co-operating with the provinces in establishing a system whereby those individuals who deposit money in financial institutions not covered by deposit insurance be required to sign a waiver form indicating that they are fully aware that their deposits are not insured in the event that the institution goes bankrupt.

As many of my colleagues did earlier in this debate, I would like to start by thanking the House Leader of the New Democratic Party for giving us this opportunity in the House to address the matter of protecting consumers of financial services in Canada.

I am sure Hon. Members will agree that financial institutions should provide their customers with more information about the deposit insurance available to them.

As you know, a great deal has already been done in this respect, and I am thinking of the reform of our financial institutions, and the federal Government has initiated various attempts in this direction in connection with its responsibility for the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and I am referring more specifically to Bill C-42, legislation that reinforces federal supervision of financial institutions. Watchdog agencies will be regrouped in the new Office of the Superintendant of Financial Institutions. Thanks to the new powers conferred on it by this legislation, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation will be in a better position to protect the interests of depositors and other creditors. Federal regulators will also have more definite and more specific powers that allow them to take over financial institutions that are insolvent or have failed to meet their legal obligations.

At the present time, the Government is committed to reinforcing its ability to supervise financial institutions as part of a comprehensive reform of the financial sector. Formerly, four federal agencies were involved in a supervisory role. The Office of the Inspector General of Banks supervised chartered banks; the Department of Insurance supervised insurance companies and federally-chartered trust and loan companies; the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation insures deposits and the Bank of Canada plays the role of lender of last resort. The other important measures contained in the bill are the consolidation of the Office of the Inspector General of Banks and of the Department of Insurance into a new Office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and some provisions would amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act.

Thus, any unauthorized statement by agents of a member institution of the CDIC that their institution or its deposits are insured is prohibited. Secondly, any member institution that takes an uninsured deposit must provide written notice of that fact on the deposit receipt, and member institutions that solicit funds for investments for a person who is not a member of the CDIC have an obligation to advise their clients of the fact that such investments are not insured.

Furthermore, the Government is considering new measures to protect consumers in light of the growth of one-stop shopping for financial products. These measures will aim to ensure that consumers are informed, firstly, of the identity of the person they are really dealing with when they purchase financial products or services sold by a financial institution, and secondly, of whether their deposits or investments are insured or not.

All federally-regulated financial institutions, including banks and insurance conpanies, trust companies and lending institutions with federal charters, will be governed by these new measures.

The motion, seen in the context of Government policy, proposes the selection of a specific provision in the overall context of the implementation of Government strategy. Like most of the Members who took part in this debate, I feel that this or a similar measure certainly deserves to be examined by the officials of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation.

However, I must point out that the measure proposed in the motion raises a number of questions. It overlooks the fact that we do not really have a single deposit insurance system. In fact, our system here in Canada consists of a number of insurance plans covering deposits and similar investments held by financial institutions. These deposits may be insured under the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, but also the Régie de l'assurance-dépôt du Québec which, like the CDIC, insures deposits with loan and trust companies and credit unions chartered by the Province of Quebec; by the Corporation de fonds de sécurité of the Desjardins Group, which also covers credit unions in Quebec; by various stabilization funds and deposit insurance companies that provide a similar service for credit unions in the other provinces; and by compensation plans for holders of life insurance and general insurance annuities and policies. Deposit insurance plans vary, depending on the institutions—banks, credit unions, insurance companies, and so forth—and the federal or provincial authorities responsible for their charter.

When the motion refers to insured deposits, it is therefore not immediately clear what is meant. And it is not a foregone conclusion that the proposed measure is the best way to ensure that consumers receive all the information they need. The motion also suggests co-operating with the provinces. That is not a problem, because since 1984, this Government has promoted co-operation and reconciliation with the provinces, and we have proved that we can agree and enter into agreements with the provinces. Nevertheless, we must not forget that these institutions are federally chartered and are thus supervised by the federal Government.

For these reasons I cannot support the motion in its present form. With my other colleagues, however, I want to join the House Leader of the New Democratic Party in asking the authorities responsible for various deposit insurance plans at both levels of government to set a priority on implementing measures that will improve consumer access to information on deposit insurance.

[English]

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Madam Speaker, I am glad to speak on this important subject. We have now spent just half our allotted time on this motion and it is the fourth time the motion has been called for debate. I hope our time is being used well. Certainly Members on this side of the House have been making effective contributions to our understanding of the basic issues which underlie this motion.

Let me go over what we understand the key issue to be. We do not believe that the issue is the form of consumer protection, that is, the precise mechanics and wording of the regulations. We believe that the real issue is the fact of consumer protection; the concrete steps already taken by our Government to ensure that legitimate rights of depositors are effectively secured. Financial issues, with implications for consumer protection, have been raised in this House many times in the past. We are all well aware of the kinds of problems that have arisen and might conceivably arise again. I do not suppose any Member in this House is not aware of some of the dimensions of the problems.

But when I turn from the underlying situation and the very real issues which can be discussed to the particular motion we are debating this afternoon, I begin to have certain problems. Let me go over them. First, this motion raises the subject of consumer protection and, of course, that is well done. But it assumes that the Government has not already acted effectively through legislation and regulation. The motion ignores the further measures to protect consumer interests that will be an important part of further legislation to reform the financial sector.

Finally, the motion makes a single proposal as if that measure, and that measure alone, were a perfect and sufficient solution to the problems. I happen to believe that we can agree on a goal of consumer protection without accepting the rightness of this particular solution.

• (1740)

While I have no problem with the Hon. Member's choosing to raise the issue in this House, I do have difficulties with his tactics and with his motion. As I have said, it is important to be aware of the concrete steps taken by the Government to overcome problems in the system. While I am satisfied that a good system is in place already, I would certainly agree that if improvements can be made, they should be made. Let me go over the provisions of the present system so that all Hon. Members are clear on what is happening already.

Our financial sector reform to date has involved two Bills passed and proclaimed last summer. Even before the Government moved on these two Bills, however, non-members of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation were prohibited from representing themselves as being insured by the CDIC. For some time, there has been a requirement that uninsured instruments should be stamped as such.

As I understand it, some people have from time to time had problems with institutions falsely claiming coverage or falsely claiming that specific instruments were covered. That is a problem with all regulation. We cannot regulate against misrepresentation, whether it is intended or not. If the existing provisions of the law have been ignored, that is not in itself an argument for adding to the regulations, the tack being taken by those who support this motion. Rather, it is justification for more stringent administration of the regulations, such as that which has been encouraged in our reforms of the financial sector.

Bills C-42 and C-56 which implemented the first stages of that reform included both general and specific measures relating to consumer protection. Together they established a more effective supervisory authority. The Superintendent of Financial Institutions replaces the former Inspector General of Banks and the Superintendent of Insurance, and the new office has been given greater powers and resources to ensure that its duties are well carried out.

In addition, this stage of the reform strengthened the CDIC. As a result, that corporation is better able to carry out its own functions. Together, this means that the kinds of situations which have arisen in the past, in part perhaps as the result of overstretched supervisors without the resources or powers needed, will not happen again.

Bill C-42 also added three further important elements to the existing CDIC regime. First, it made clear that the existing ban on unauthorized representations of insured status of member institutions or deposits received by them applies both to the institution and to all persons acting as their agents.

Second, the Bill made it a statutory requirement that when an institution takes a deposit which is not insured, this must be indicated in writing on the deposit contract. This provision comes very close to the proposal made by the motion before us, and the change made in Bill C-42 moves it from the regulations to the law itself.

Third, Bill C-42 instituted a new requirement that institutions that solicit funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or other non-members of the CDIC must give notice to investors that these companies are non-members and that such funds are not insured by the CDIC.

I have already mentioned that the Government will be proceeding as quickly as possible with the remaining legislation to implement its reform of the financial sector. Among other things, those proposals will grant broader in-house powers to federal financial institutions to enable them to provide their clients with a wider range of financial services.

Specifically, financial institutions will be permitted to own or to enter into networking arrangements with other types of financial institutions. We expect that this will provide Canadians with more choice and more convenience in obtaining the financial services they want. As well, the diversification of institutions into new lines of business should enhance their ability to meet the challenge of increasing competitiveness, both domestic and international.

A number of consumer protection issues arise, of course, in this new situation. For example, insured deposit-taking services may be only one of the services offered by a group of related financial institutions, not all of which are members of the CDIC. The draft trust and loans legislation takes account of this by enabling the Governor in Council to make regulations imposing terms and conditions on the activities that companies undertake in the areas which will be open to them. Similar provisions will be incorporated in the legislation governing banks and insurance companies. Although there will be a more complex situation than at present, we have already taken steps to ensure that consumers are protected.

Bill C-56 also dealt with certain aspects of this general problem. Some of its provisions will facilitate the creation of annuity and policy-holder compensation plans. The final details are still being worked out, but these plans will fill a gap in the insurance of deposit-like instruments. They will extend a form of coverage for insurance company annuities similar to that which the CDIC provides for deposits.

Work is already taking place to implement the measures set out in Bill C-42. The CDIC is always vigilant to ensure that it takes account of concerns expressed by others, especially Members of this House, and that it considers changing circumstances as well.

I am satisfied that a good system is being put in place, and I believe this motion ought not to be accepted as it stands. It does not recognize the many measures now in place. Nonetheless, I hope we will see the degree of co-operation the Hon. Member wants and that this country will continue to enjoy a financial system that protects the interests of all involved.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Madam Speaker, today's debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) gives me a welcome opportunity to address a number of concerns about consumer protection in the financial system. I know these concerns are common to many Members on both sides of the House. I think it is particularly appropriate to be looking at the consumer protection issues raised in this motion at a time when other consumer protection issues in the sector are also in the news.

Hon. Members opposite, or alongside of me in the House, and I share concerns in this case, but I have to be frank and make it clear that our common goals do not mean that we agree on the motion. Indeed, we approach this motion in very different ways.

Earlier in the debate when the motion first came before the House, I heard it being used as a springboard from which to attack the Government for its position with respect to the Principal Group's activities rather than as a means of discussing the most effective way to secure protection for the interests of consumers. That was disappointing, both because it diffused attention that should be paid to the issue of consumer protection and because it showed that this motion's mover either did not know or did not care about the jurisdictional limits on the federal Government's role in the financial system.

Having said this, I want to return to the important issues raised by this motion. Events of past years have ensured that we are all very sensitive to situations in which it appears that additional measures or actions are needed to protect the interests of consumers, depositors and others. We must always be vigilant, we must always have concern for the legitimate interests of the people who use our financial system. As a Government, we have already moved to make significant changes in the former regime to do just that.

To set the scene, I want to remind Hon. Members that even under the former regime, the law prohibited any institution other than a member of the CDIC from representing itself as a member of the CDIC. Then in Bill C-42, proclaimed last July, the Government undertook a number of specific improvements to the CDIC regime. It made three specific improvements to the provisions about which the Hon. Member is concerned. We have now entrenched in legislation regulations which ensure that when institutions take deposits which are not insured, they must indicate that in writing on the contract.

Second, we have extended the ban on unauthorized representations of the insured status of institutions or deposits to persons acting as agents for institutions.

Third, we have also required that member institutions soliciting funds for investment on behalf of their investment company subsidiaries or other non-members of CDIC must give notice to potential investors that these funds are not insured by CDIC.

The CDIC covers all federally regulated deposit taking institutions and the major provincially regulated deposit taking institutions as well. It seems to me that for companies within federal jurisdiction our measures go almost as far as the Hon. Member's motion if we assume that people signing contracts read them. That is surely not an unreasonable assumption to make when we are drafting laws and regulations. As a result, I think the legislation and regulations which govern these institutions is already in an acceptable state.

The motion before us draws attention to institutions and other types of instruments other than classic deposits. Many of these other institutions and instruments are already being used. As the Government's reform of the financial sector continues to be implemented and as the sector grows accustomed to the new opportunities it has, we can expect even more options and new developments. That means that it will be increasingly important to pay attention to consumer protection. For example, the new networking proposals which will undoubtedly give new opportunities to institutions and new options to their customers will also mean that customers will need more knowledge of these institutions. We have already seen links growing between banks which are members of the CDIC and security dealers which are not. Our reforms will now permit even further linkages.

At the same time, in order to deal with legitimate concerns, our reforms lay out requirements for organization, for corporate and individual behaviour, and for disclosure which will provide a significant increase in consumer protection. I hope that the legislation on trust and loan companies will soon be before us. In the meantime, we have been assured that the remaining legislation to implement reform will follow the outlines of the draft released in December, 1987. On that basis the Government is clearly moving effectively to deal with potential problems.

However, the legislation, when considered and passed into law by Parliament, will give the Government the power to make regulations imposing terms and conditions with respect to the potentially confusing activities of member institutions which are linked to non-members and which offer a variety of services, some of which are insured deposits and some of which are investments.

I think it is appropriate that the Government is also working with the insurance industry to arrive at an acceptable way of dealing with some deposit-like instruments. In effect, we want to find a way of insuring CDIC-like coverage for policy holders in both sectors of the industry. I understand that the two plans, one for the life and health companies and one for the property and casualty companies, should be in operation by the end of 1988 or the beginning of 1989.

I want to congratulate the Government, and particularly the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), on their concern for consumer protection in the financial sector. Their actions and proposals enhance disclosure. They strengthen the regulatory and supervisory authorities. They have added significantly to the requirements of the CDIC. They ensure that those who take reasonable care and are not the objects of deliberately misleading activities will have the proper information and can make decisions without confusion.

No doubt there can be improvements. I do not know of a perfect system anyway. However, I do not think there is the kind of urgency for further change that lies behind Motion M-143. We are after all looking at an evolving system where many new provisions have to be allowed to settle down. It would in my opinion be premature to mandate further changes at this time, especially when, as I pointed out, the substance of the Hon. Member's proposal has already been effectively incorporated in changes made last year by this House.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Madam Speaker, I am sure that all of us have heard from constituents worried about the stability and safety of Canada's financial institutions, particularly given the high profile failures of certain institutions over the past decade.

These incidents have pointed to flaws in the existing system which must be addressed by both federal and provincial Governments. The federal Government has given top priority to protecting the consumer. In fact, it has been one of the most important principles guiding the Government's reform of the financial sector ever since it first came out with its Green Paper in the spring of 1985. Indeed, on the very first page of that discussion document the Government committed itself to 9 principles designed to better serve the public interest in the regulation of financial institutions in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member.

The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business is now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the Order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661) and of Mr. Young (p. 17089).

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak to this Bill before us. This is probably one of the most important debates which has taken place in this country in many a decade, as other speakers have said. There is great concern that we do not have an in depth understanding of what this Bill means. This Bill amends over 27 of our statutes. We seem to be just putting it through in five days and not worrying too much about it. I think it is incumbent upon the Government to ensure that the committee travels in order to hear witnesses across the country. It is very important that that happen.

We first became suspicious of what was happening when we learned that the trade agreement was going to go on the American fast track and had to be ready by October. It was then delayed until January. A committee of the House travelled across the country to hear witnesses without even having the text of the agreement. When such a thing is pushed at you, you immediately become suspicious and realize that it is time to take a good look at it.

Many Canadians organized themselves very quickly in an effort to have a look at it. Most of them came from national institutions including the Canadian Union of Public Employees, the Canadian Auto Workers' Union, the Confederation of Canadian Unions, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, many churches and social agencies, the native peoples' organization, and immigrant women's groups. These groups studied the agreement and have maintained their opposition to it.

It is important to look at the facts. I have heard people saying that it is going to create jobs, others saying that it is not going to create jobs, and some saying that we have an inferiority complex which makes us afraid to enter into the agreement. We must look at the reality.

The Finance Department released a study in January which indicated that rather than the 8 per cent to 10 per cent growth in the economy which it expected, there will probably be a 2.5 per cent growth, not annually, but for all time. The Economic Council promised us 350,000 jobs and that number was trumpeted across the country. We are now told by the Economic Council, after it looked at the service industries and so forth, that the jobs had dwindled to 120,000 over five years, or about 25,000 a year. The economy is now creating about 300,000 jobs a year and we are talking about 25,000 jobs. Are we willing to sell our heritage for that number of jobs, which is exactly what we are doing?

I heard the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) speak this afternoon about the fact that the Canadian Jobs Strategy had the ability to do the training so necessary in a restructured economy. I was on the employment committee when it studied the Canadian Jobs Strategy. We heard from people right across the country. Government Members recommended a massive input of money into the Canadian Jobs Strategy if it is to deal with the restructured economy with which we are faced.

It is all very well for people to say that women will do well by it, but the reality is that women in the textile and garment industries cannot get training now to give them portable skills or language skills to enter into other areas of the economy. We are actually dealing these people out of our society for the long term future. That is grossly unfair.

We must also recognize the fact that the service industry employs many women. We know that jobs will be lost in the service industry and in data processing. That has been well documented by the study done by the Canadian Computer Association. It recognizes that it will lose jobs to south of the border.

We also hear about the great possibilities for foreign investment, that American money will flow into Canada and will be a great stimulus. We must recognize that from 1978 to 1985 Canadian owned companies created 876,000 jobs. U.S. investment in this country created 1,400 jobs and other foreign investment created 12,000 jobs. That certainly proves without a doubt that Canadian investment in Canadian plants is certainly a much greater job creator.

Apart from all that, we must deal with the allegation that we have no confidence in ourselves. When we consider the way the economy has been growing, and the fact that we have been in a trade credit situation with the United States, we must recognize that we do not have to give away our sovereignty and access to our resources in order to continue in that way. The one thing that we do need more than ever is secondary manufacturing in order that we do not just sell our resources. This deal makes it even more difficult for us to have secondary manufacturing.

I have heard a lot of people ask what the alternatives are. The alternatives are to look at the skills which we have here. Anyone who understands economic development knows that you build on the strengths you have, you invest in your own country, and you start to get control over your own corporations. You do not have to give away your energy or treat every American company as a national interest.

We have enough confidence to know that by building Canadian companies and a Canadian economy we can compete anywhere in the world. That means that we must reduce the amount of foreign ownership. It means that we must do the economic planning that we have never done in this country. We must start to recognize that there are a whole lot of things that we can do very well. We do not have to be on our knees to anyone else.

The time has come for us to consider this. If the Government were sincere when it says that this is a good agreement, it would not be afraid to show it to the Canadian people and let them analyse it section by section. The Government refuses to go to the Canadian electorate with it. It should at least give the Canadian people the opportunity of having a close look at it, and it will recognize, as it is reading it with the Canadian people, that this is a very poor agreement.

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Madam Speaker, it is an honour to speak on the most significant legislation before this House. The Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act is the culmination of months of negotiation, consultation, and debate. That is as it should be, for the magnitude and scope of the free trade agreement is unprecedented. To most Canadians the free trade agreement is not about legislation; it is about economic growth, opportunity, and prosperity. It is also about the future of this country.

We all know that this agreement incorporates a gradual implementation process which will not be completed until 1999. The full benefits of the trade agreement will not be felt until the next century. This Government will leave a legacy of assured prosperity to Canadians for years to come.

Since the agreement was agreed to in principle in October, my colleagues and myself have been carrying the message of the agreement to our constituents. At town hall meetings, on the street, in homes, in high school gymnasiums, and in auditoriums across this country, we have explained to Canadians that our country is dependent on trade, that 25 per cent of our GNP is dependent on trade, that more than 3 million jobs are dependent on trade, and that 76 per cent of our trade is with the United States.

The Opposition has questioned whether or not this Government has a mandate to initiate the free trade agreement. I believe that it is the responsibility of the Government to examine and explore the possibilities of the best method of economic development for all regions of Canada. Yes, this Government has a mandate to create jobs, and the free trade agreement will do just that.

This Government has a mandate to maintain and improve the standard of living in this country. This Government has a mandate to expand and ensure trade markets. The trade agreement will increase jobs and lower consumer prices, which will translate into increased consumer spending further contributing to an expanding economy.

The reality is that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is absolutely necessary to our economic well-being. The trade agreement offers co-operation between the world's largest trading partners.

The trade agreement provides for the reduction and the removal of trade barriers and affords Canada the opportunity to export processed goods rather than raw materials. It will encourage investment which will in turn encourage development and create jobs.

The Economic Council of Canada estimates that nearly 350,000 jobs will be gained. In addition, Canadians will enjoy lower consumer prices on a wider range of goods, and real income will be higher for the average Canadian.

Citizens in my home Province of Alberta are well known for their common sense. Common sense tells them that a trade agreement that removes barriers, encourages investment, and creates jobs is a good deal. It is a good deal for Albertans and it is a good deal for Canadians.

Alberta wants the opportunity to do business with certainty and to trade within a secure market. Alberta has always recognized the benefits of trading. The United States is Alberta's largest export market, representing 75 per cent of total exports, amounting to $10 billion in 1986. Albertans are well aware of the difficulties of trading in a market fraught with increasing protectionism. Without a trade agreement, the United States will continue to build a wall of protectionism that excludes Canada from its best customer. The trade agreement serves to replace the wall with a bridge that provides for a secure market. Alberta needs the trade agreement to ensure long-term access to the U.S. markets. The trade agreement will give Alberta that assurance.

Secure access to the U.S. market will provide a framework for a tremendous surge in Alberta's economy and Canada's economy. With respect to energy, Albertans are very much aware of the tremendous benefits to the energy, agriculture, forestry, petro chemical, service, and investment sectors. These are areas in which we can compete with the best in the world.

Agriculture and energy are the mainstays of our economy. Alberta's oil and gas industry has been developed to serve a huge market which encompasses Canada and the United States. The United States needs our energy exports and Canada needs the cash to maintain a strong producing sector, as well as a stable and predictable market environment to attract the investment necessary to develop our reserves.

I strongly believe that our energy security lies in development and not in reserves locked in the ground. The trade agreement will create a very favourable climate in which to develop Alberta's rich reserves.

Two basic principles underlie the trade agreement with regard to energy. Canada will be a reliable supplier if the United States is a reliable customer. Both countries will share their energy supplies in the event of a shortage. These are sound principles for any trading relationship.

The trade agreement will give Alberta and the rest of the western provinces a measure of equality in national affairs. The days when a Government can put in place an energy policy that discriminates against the owners of the resource are over. Never again will there be a national energy policy that discriminates against the West. Alberta has the resources, the ability, and now we will have the means to develop our full potential.

Turning to agriculture, the United States is Alberta's No. 1 export market in agriculture, a primary key to the future growth of our agri-food industry. The agreement provides for increased access, duty-free, to our largest customer while maintaining our supply management systems.

In the grain and oil seed sectors, the trade agreement offers potential for expansion in the United States market for rapeseed oil, high quality oats, malting barley, and wheat. Certainly the removal of tariffs will hasten this expansion. For Alberta's beef and pork producers, secure access provided by the agreement is vital to the well-being of the industry.

The riding of Pembina, located in north-central Alberta, is closer to the California market with 25 million people than to the Montreal market with 10 million people. We wish to penetrate further this established U.S. market, free from tariffs and artificial barriers.

In Alberta, free enterprisers are developing new industries. We are diversifying our economy and we need additional secure markets. Our business people are confident of their products and of their ability to compete in an enhanced market. Albertans are ready and eager to get on with free trade.

Alberta has long recognized that free trade with the United States is key to the development and well-being of the West. Peter Lougheed carried the message of free trade from the early 1980s, and Premier Getty has worked tirelessly in support of the free trade initiative.

It comes as no surprise that this agreement, which is so beneficial and so necessary to the West, is opposed by the NDP and the Liberals. The whole debate surrounding free trade comes down to our vision of Canada. Are we an outward looking country confident of our ability to compete in the market-place, or are we to be strangled by an unreasonable hold on the status quo? Are we to be limited by protectionism or free in a competitive market?

• (1820)

We are Canadians. We have a bright future. We have faith in our ability and a determination to succeed. Our vision of Canada is forward looking and full of optimism. The trade agreement gives Canada the tools with which to build our future and our children's future.

In conclusion, I speak now not only as a proud Albertan but as a strong Canadian who is determined to see Canada rise to the challenge. Free trade will bring equality and prosperity to all regions of Canada.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I must say that I did not agree with very much of what the Hon. Member for Pembina (Mr. Van De Walle) had to say. However, I certainly agreed with his idea that the trade deal really boils down to what is each Canadian's view of Canada for the future.

Every day I believe that more and more Canadians are opting for the view put forward by the Official Opposition and by the NDP. We want to see Canada trading around the world and not locking itself into a continental policy, a fortress North America approach in which we are the hinterland providing resources to the United States and taking highly processed goods in return.

I say that because of the results published last week of a very important poll. The results appeared in The Globe and Mail and were with respect to a poll conducted by Environics a few weeks before. They clearly show that the country is very divided on this issue but that in most cases the majority of Canadians are opposed to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

For instance, in the Province of Ontario some 48 per cent are opposed to this deal while some 31 per cent are in favour of it. However, when we look to those who are strongly opposed and to those who are strongly in favour, we see that a disparity comes into view. Those who are against it, some 28 per cent of that 48 per cent, are strongly opposed. Only 9 per cent of the respondents in the Province of Ontario, which is a province of some 9 million people, are strongly in favour of this deal. Similarly, in Saskatchewan some 49 per cent are against the deal while some 29 per cent are in favour of it. However, if we look behind those figures we see that those who are strongly, vehemently, determinedly opposed to the deal account for 36 per cent while only 9 per cent are in favour.

The figures with respect to the Atlantic provinces show that those for and against are evenly split. However, in practically every case those who are opposed are strongly opposed. They will get out to fight the deal all the way. This is in spite of the fact that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is spending some $25 million to $35 million to try to sell the deal as if it were soap, a vacuum cleaner, or an encylopaedia. These millions of bucks are not working. When the Minister admitted that he had not read the deal, we see that that is understandable.

Canadians are not very impressed with the deal, or with the Minister's salesmanship of it. We can at least say that the Minister is consistent. He was opposed to Newfoundland joining Canada. He is in favour of this deal, the free trade deal. He said so in the 1983 Tory leadership convention. All the other candidates were opposed, as was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). At least the Minister for International Trade is consistent whereas the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the former Secretary of State, and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have done a complete flip-flop. But Canadians are gradually and determinedly coming down against the deal.

I do not believe that Canadians are opposed to the liberalization of trade. I do not believe that in most cases they are opposed to the removal of tariffs. In this deal our average tariff is something in the range of 5 per cent. The tariff coming back from the United States for goods coming into Canada is even less. I do not believe that most Canadians are opposed to the removal or the reduction of tariffs, which have been taking place in any event. As a result of the Uruguay Round of GATT, most of those tariffs will be removed. In fact, some will be removed faster.

I travelled with the committee across the country. There were various delegations that appeared before the committee. It seemed that when the Americans wanted a resource that was great. They were delighted to provide access, especially when talking about energy and resources. But wherever they were not competitive, such as in softwood lumber, an export tax was put in place. If they were not competitive, for instance, in coasting or shipping, then the Jones Act was put in place. But the Jones Act was not good enough. The Maritime Union got to check it out and said: "Oh, not only do we want the Jones Act in now but we want it into the future". Thus that whole section was pulled out of the deal. In pulling it out I think Simon Reisman's comments to the effect that "we really licked the pants off them in this deal" are particularly hilarious. Clearly, the Americans got the best of the deal in every round, whether it be in agriculture or whatever. That is why Canadians are opposing this deal more and more and those who are opposing it are doing so more strongly.

Clearly, when the Americans gave something up or pulled it out, as in the case of coasting and transportation, they received full access through foreign investment. In the case of coasting, for instance in the Great Lakes, Algoma Central Steamship Lines in Sault St. Marie do a great job. It can compete on the Great Lakes. However, that was pulled out of the deal. That company cannot now go in to set up a company in the United States, but an American can come in to set up a company in Canada and have 100 per cent ownership of it. Clearly, we saw that the Americans generally gave full access in most cases for commodities that were already being freely traded. Wherever there was something that was not competitive, then they had a law, a regulation, or they did not put it into the deal.

At the end of the day they kept countervail duties and dumping duties. These are items which are controlled by the Government of the United States. If potash producers in a non-productive potash mine in New Mexico are concerned, they simply slap on a dumping duty, as they did, and saw off a deal in which no potash can go into the United States unless it goes in at $92 a tonne. That is great. Inefficient potash producers can be maintained forever in that way.

In agriculture we gave up practically on every front. We gave up supply managed commodities, the Wheat Board, and transportation subsidies. On top of that we agreed to go to the GATT negotiations in Geneva to state that we support the Americans in the removal of tariffs and agricultural subsidies. That may be true. They are our best friends, our allies, and our biggest trading partner, but they are also involved in international trade. In farm commodities such as grain, wheat, barley, and oats they are our competition.

It is ridiculous to say: "We will support you regardless of your position." I am not sure about the Government and the Minister for International Trade, but generally Canadian farmers do not support the removal of Article 11 of the GATT which would destroy farm marketing boards. The farmers of Canada will not be pleased with the removal of the import control arrangements provided in the GATT.

We are looking at the vision of Canada. Is it a vision where we want to trade world-wide? Is trade with the U.S. important? Maintaining our independence to trade internationally, not throwing ourselves into a continental energy agreement but moving down the barriers to trade through the GATT, is our vision. This arrangement is designed to give less power to the House of Commons and the legislatures of the country, and to put more power into the hands of the multinational corporations and of the Senate and the Congress of the United States.

That is not what we want to do. We want to trade more broadly, but we want to maintain our independence as a sovereign country and maintain the economic regional development and social programs that are distinctive to our country and to our communities. That is why we do not support this deal and we do not think it is good for Canadians.

In the past week the polls indicate that the majority of Canadians no longer support the deal. They want liberalized trade, but they do not want the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to take part in the debate on a subject that holds so much promise for Canadians—the free trade agreement with the United States. It was interesting to hear the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), chastise the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) for being responsible for conducting seminars throughout the country that would enable business people to have the tools to invade the United States market and to assist them, when indeed the Minister responsible for Industry, Trade and Technology in the Liberal provincial Government, the Hon. Monte Kwinter, has been conducting seminars so that business people in the software industry in Ontario can invade that very rich and potential market in the United States. The Hon. Member is criticizing our Minister for doing the same thing.

It was a privilege to be one of the members of the committee whose mandate was to listen to and question witnesses on the free trade agreement. The committee heard more than 200 witnesses, so it was little wonder that I came away from those meetings with a greater understanding of what was at stake for Canada and its economic well-being in the face of the protectionist mood so much in vogue with numerous American industrial and interest groups.

It has been emphasized over and over how much Canada is a trading nation, how its economic development is dependent and geared toward its export markets, and that no market is more valuable to us than that of the United States. Nearly all of our trade is with the United States, but that market may have been severely jeopardized had not a reciprocal agreement been reached.

The Province of Ontario relies heavily on its export market. Specifically, in 1986, 92 per cent of Ontario's goods were exported to the United States, trade greater than that of Japan, trade greater than $170 billion annually.

As I said before, Canadians were in danger of losing a market 12 times greater than our own simply because there were 200 restrictive trade Bills, including the omnibus legislation in the United States, which threaten our industries' access to the United States market.

I also had an opportunity to question what prompted the Hon. Donald Macdonald, co-chairman of the Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities, to become a proponent of free trade. He replied: "If Canadians wanted to have an increase in their standard of living, they were going to have to remove themselves from a substantial dependence on resource exports and look to the manufacturing sector and the services to do that. In order to do that, they are going to have to get access to a very much larger market. We should therefore be prepared to give up the restrictions on ourselves involved in running a protective policy and seek to negotiate better access for Canadian manufacturing".

During our committee hearings I put the following question to Mr. John Bulloch, President of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, and it is one that is frequently asked of me in my riding of Erie: "If Ontario is currently experiencing an economic boom, why should we change the status quo? Why not just remain as we are and continue to build on our successes?" Mr. Bulloch replied that the "status quo is not something you can be too comfortable about—you cannot guarantee prosperity. The labour markets and the business community are dramatically changing every day". We must keep in mind that history shows that where trade barriers are down all involved prosper, and in all cases the small country prospers from access to the larger market.

We hear criticisms that the free trade agreement was hastily put together, that it was written without consultation with the people upon whom the agreement will have the greatest impact, the public. I would like to take a moment to explore this criticism, to present a chronology of the history of what led to the free trade text as we have it here in the House of Commons today, and to make clear just how much public input there was.

In March, 1982 a Senate committee which had examined the issues since 1980 recommended that Canada seek bilateral free trade with the United States in all sectors. The committee heard more than 100 witnesses.

In November, 1982 the Hon. Donald Macdonald was appointed by then Prime Minister Trudeau to head the Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada. There were 13 people named to work with him; 1,513 written submissions were received from individuals, the private sector, the voluntary sector, educational and research institutions, municipalities, labour, provincial and territorial Governments, the federal Government, women's groups, aboriginal organizations; and 72 volumes of research studies were commissioned. Public hearings were held in 32 cities in all provinces and both territories. Public debates were held in Montreal, Halifax, Vancouver, Calgary, and Toronto, each lasting three days. The work completed in 1985 contains three volumes and 1,911 pages. There are 71 pages of recommendations. The total budget for the Macdonald Commission's report was close to $25 million.

In August, 1983 the Hon. Gerald Regan, former Minister of International Trade with the Liberal Government, called for sectoral agreements. In August, 1985 the Special Joint Committee on International Trade released its interim report pertaining to bilateral trade and recommended immediate bilateral trade negotiations with the United States. In February, 1986 sectoral advisory groups on international trade, SAGITS, were set up across the country dealing with every major sector of the economy including agriculture. Those groups met on 145 occasions and reported regularly to the International Trade Advisory Committee.

SAGITS are now permanently in place and will continue their work on multilateral trade. Their work has been extremely vital, and Canadians will be grateful for the tremendous work that they have done, even if some Hon. Members in opposition do not concur. Finally, in the autumn of 1987 the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade held two weeks of hearings in Ottawa and two weeks of hearings across Canada.

By nature of our government infrastructure, we expect MPs in opposition to oppose, to proffer concrete and reasonable suggestions on how the free trade agreement may be improved upon, but opposition Members have chosen to grope, to nitpick, to distort fact, to fictionalize, to incite blatantly, and to foster anti-American sentiment in their efforts to draw attention away from what is a very substantial accomplishment of this Government.

The Opposition attempted to claim that the free trade agreement encroached or affected our culture, regional development, our marketing boards, the CBC, and our social services such as medicare, unemployment insurance, old age security, child care, education, welfare. The latest attacks are over water, of all things. What nonsense, what utter nonsense. Despite all the flighty rhetoric and verbal somersaults by some of the Members included in the House that are here today, all are 100 per cent Canadian and will remain so.

The Opposition is reduced to a condition that is aptly described by the following editorial The Globe and Mail: "The less there is to complain about, the wilder free trade's opponents become in their similes, in their metaphors, in their epigrams, their prophecies and their sermons".

It is at this point in the one minute I have left that I would like to comment on the strength and resourcefulness of the Canadian people and to assure them that our Canadian identity is not threatened under the terms of the free trade agreement. In the words of the Hon. Gerald Regan, former Minister for International Trade with the Liberal Government: "The greatest assurance of protection of our sovereignty and of our culture is the maintenance of a strong economy. Free trade, with the greatest market on earth". Or, in the words of Dr. Richard Lipsey, Senior Economic Adviser to the C. D. Howe Institute: "Do your country and your national identity the honour it deserves by understanding that it is more than skin deep; that it is not only admirable, it is also deeply rooted, and that whatever sensible, if misguided policies that we follow in the future, our identity as Canadians will be around for quite some time".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. I am sorry, however, that the Government has chosen to limit debate to only five days on an issue which I believe is the most important issue to affect this country in this entire century. In fact, it may bring our country to an end.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has been blustering about this issue ever since he became the Minister. The fact is that public support for the trade agreement has been consistently going down since he became the Minister—

Mr. Crosbie: Like hell it has.

Mr. Cassidy: —to the point where now a majority of Canadians are opposed to the trade agreement, where before there was a very small plurality who were in favour of it. I would like to read a letter from Mary Anne Burke, who is a constituent of mine. It states:

> After reading material published by the Federal Government to sell the idea of Free Trade to Canadians, (the recent insert in my family allowance cheque, and The Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement Synopsis published by External Affairs, brought home from school by my twelve year old daughter, being two examples), I can't help but wonder how we are different from centrally-controlled societies where citizens, including school children, are regularly fed propaganda on only the Government's view of reality.
> What I am asking you, as my elected representative, are: first, to provide me and my fellow taxpayers with an accounting of how much of our money has been spent on propaganda for Free Trade, and secondly, will an equal amount of money also be spent to inform me and my fellow Canadians of the other side of the issue so that we can carry out our responsibility, and right, to make an informed choice?

Mr. Crosbie: You should be ashamed.

Mr. Cassidy: I also have a letter from Howard Schwartz who is a resident in my constituency. These are what the people of Canada are saying. If the Minister for International Trade is not interested in the views of average Canadians, then he should not be in government. That is one reason why my Party wants an election now, so that people like Mrs. Burke and Mr. Schwartz can have their say.

Mr. Crosbie: Your Party would be desolated.

Mr. Cassidy: Eighty per cent of the people that I consulted in my constituency said: "We want an election before Canada is locked into a trade agreement with the United States".

Mr. Schwartz said, and I quote, "If Canada is to enter the year 2000 as a world-class industrial competitor, then the Canadian Government will have to actively support and protect promising Canadian industries. The Canadian Government should support the manufacturing and service industries that can compete against products made in Asia and in Europe". This is an argument for an industrial strategy for this country.

This morning I read an article by Jim Gillies, a former Minister, a former Member, a former adviser to the Conservative Government, who also argued that this country needs an industrial strategy. We will not have the capacity to implement an industrial strategy if this particular trade agreement goes forward as it is proposed right now.

Yesterday I heard the Government House Leader talk about big Canada and small Canada. Small Canada means all those average Canadians who do not support the Conservatives' view— working women, people living in small towns, trade unionists, members of the Pro-Canada network. There is a group in the Council of Canadians who have been holding a picket, a vigil, on Parliament Hill for the last seven weeks, since this trade agreement was submitted in legislation to the House of Commons. They intend to be there all through the summer. I pay tribute to them. They are small Canadians, too.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Cassidy: I do not believe that the Government should demean average Canadians, the majority of Canadians who say: "We have doubts". Some say: "I am not sure why I have doubts, but I think this is just too far too fast". Some say: "Good fences make good neighbours. To tear down all of the fences between this country and our good neighbours to the south, the United States, is just going too quickly".

I heard the Government suggest that this country lacks self-confidence if people like myself, as financial critic for our Party, suggest that the trade agreement is not an appropriate agreement and goes too far.

I look at a country which is full of self-confidence, and that includes my Party and the people, the 31 per cent or 32 per cent of Canadians who now are supporting the New Democratic Party. We have not lost confidence in this country. We are not trying to erect protectionist walls. We have been supporters of liberalized world trade over the course of the last 30 or 40 years, and we will continue to be so. In the course of saying that, should we as a country be on the forefront in an agreement which is the first international agreement in the world that entirely removes barriers to trade in the service sector, without looking at what the implications should be? Should we expect that Canada with a tenth of the population and the economy of the United States, would generally be working on a level playing field with our friends in the United States? Do we need to make this move all at once?

People say that there are huge protectionist barriers. What are they? The fact is that close to 90 per cent of our trade with the United States—and it is the largest two-way trade flow in the world—is tariff-free right now.

I saw some figures the other day on the trade between West Germany and the Soviet Union. The trade between those two countries is not even 10 per cent of the current flow of two-way trade between Canada and the United States. This country is one of the major trading nations. We have one of the highest percentages of exports in our Gross National Product of any country in the world. Who says Canadians are not confident? Who says Canadians are not effective world traders right now?

• (1850)

An Hon. Member: The Tories do.

Mr. Cassidy: Who says that the economy of this country is now on its knees in order to have the trade agreement today? In fact, it is the contrary. The Conservatives will go into the election talking about economic growth.

We have reached the point where the Bank of Canada in monetary policy, which is supported by the Government and by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has determined that any time there is any increase in jobs in central Canada and southern Ontario it will jack up interest rates and jack up the exchange rate in order to nullify that increase in jobs. If we had the trade agreement today, before the optimistic predictions of its proponents were to be fulfilled, if we were starting to see new jobs created in Canada through the trade agreement, every job created through the trade agreement would be nullified by the actions of the Bank of Canada. In other words, according to the Government's current monetary policy, we have reached the limit and, therefore, we are not even in a position where we could benefit, if benefit were to be achieved, from this particular trade agreement.

On top of that, Mr. Speaker, last fall the Canadian dollar was running at around 76 cents at a time when we had these desperate last minute dramatic negotiations in Washington over the trade agreement. In the interim the Canadian dollar has gone up in value by some 10 per cent to about 82 cents or 83 cents.

Mr. Crosbie: Because we have good government in Canada.

Mr. Cassidy: The increase in the value of the Canadian dollar, which has been a part of the Canadian Conservative Government's policy, has totally nullified any gains that will be made through tariff cuts in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement over the course of the next 10 years. We have done that in one year. If we wanted to continue to have secure access to the United States markets, one thing we could have done was to ensure that the Canadian dollar would not go through the roof, that the Canadian dollar would not go to such levels. The Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the forest industry, and the Canadian Exporters' Association all say "Enough is enough. You are hurting our ability to export into the United States". I do not know how high is up. I am not sure how much further the Government intends to take the dollar, but all of this means that any benefits from the trade agreement have in fact been removed because of what is taking place right now.

Mr. Oberle: Do you want currency controls?

Mr. Cassidy: We have been concerned because the Government went into this trade deal promising to get secure access to American markets, which it failed to do, and promising to get a binding dispute resolution mechanism, which it also failed to do. What we have seen is an agreement where in the United States the U.S. Congress passes a law or has a law proposed before it, that will ensure American law supersedes the trade agreement. In Canada, we are asked to pass a law which says that the trade agreement will supersede all other Canadian laws. That is a recipe for inequality as far as I am concerned. The U.S. Congress can pass a law which would effectively nullify portions of the trade agreement, but here in Canada, any law that is found to be contravening the trade agreement will be null and void. Not only that, we have seen again and again that the Progressive Conservative Government has said "thank you" for small concessions from the Americans when their bargaining objectives fail to be achieved.

I want to quote Clause 153(2) of the Bill. I read this to those Canadians who I know are watching this particular debate—

Mr. Crosbie: No one is watching by now. Everyone has gone for supper.

Mr. Cassidy: It reads:

No order shall be made under subsection (1)—

That is, this free trade Act will not be proclaimed unless:

—the Governor in Council is satisfied that the Government of the United States has taken satisfactory steps to implement the Agreement.

In other words, if this Bill is passed, we in Parliament will be allowing the Government, which has been supine in terms of its acceptance and its tolerance for the American definition, the Cabinet to decide whether or not the Americans have lived up to the agreement. I suggest that that is not good enough.

We have suggested again and again that it is time to have an election on this particular issue. We have suggested that the process being followed right now is inadequate. To have a few weeks of debate in committee over the summer is not adequate. It is not good enough to have a pro-American Cabinet, headed by a pro-American Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), headed by a Minister for International Trade who belongs in a Republican Cabinet in Washington, determining whether or not this agreement should be ratified. That should be up to the people of Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

• (1900)

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as you know, it takes a great deal of confidence, dynamism, and unrelenting effort for organizations and people in a country such as ours to adapt to changing economic and social conditions. This constant and permanent challenge is what allows us to remain prosperous and competitive.

Because of its diverse economic activity, Canada must remain extremely alert, on the cutting edge of technology, and must adapt to constantly changing foreign markets.

More then ever, we are called upon to outdo ourselves in this global village we all share. In the face of that reality, two reactions are possible: to grumble and cling to the status quo or to take a resolute stand and begin making changes to reflect daily reality.

Mr. Speaker, in the riding of Argenteuil—Papineau, in the beautiful riding I have the honour of representing here, in Ottawa, free trade is welcomed as a sign of leadership, as a sign of the confidence we have in the ability of our businesses, and the vast majority of my constituents support the free trade agreement.

Let me, by way of illustration, name some of the businesses in my riding that are in favour of free trade and that have explained why: The Thundercraft Company of Lachute, Mr. Speaker; here is an example of entrepreneurship, a dynamic company that provides work to 300 persons, 80 per cent of whom are employees of less than 30 years of age.

Mr. Speaker, I must tell you that at the outset, the Thundercraft Company was sceptical, but now, after studying the issue, after carefully examining the agreement we have before us in Parliament today, it wants to jump on the bandwagon of prosperity and it now admits that it is rethinking its marketing strategy and wants to penetrate the very lucrative American pleasure craft market. And, might I had, it says that this agreement has been a motivating factor in its undertaking.

The Lyosan Company, a company that freeze-dries food products, also in Lachute, is not worried at all by free trade. In fact, it already exports 18 per cent of what it produces to the United States. According to the President of Lyosan, the agreement will help him increase his exports. So, Mr. Speaker, this means growth for the company, growth that would not be possible without this agreement.

Les Bois Murray of Grenville makes finished wood products like magnificent wooden staircases. For them, the New England market is a wonderful opportunity and they even expect to triple their sales. They now have 40 employees and logically, tripling their sales should mean two new jobs will be created thanks to this agreement for every one that now exists.

Mobilier Forme-D of Lachute is another company of which we are all proud in our beautiful riding. This company designs top-of-the-line furniture. Last year, it won all the awards: Salon Via Design, Salon du meuble, Salon de l'habitation, Mercuriades, to name only those, and the Argyrose from the Conseil d'expansion économique d'Argenteuil at an annual gala for business people . . . So this company in the so-called soft sector is not at all worried about losing jobs, although the Opposition claims that the furniture industry will suffer. I am giving you an example of a dynamic company led by four young entrepreneurs who are convinced, Mr. Speaker, that they will win with this free trade agreement.

FRE Composite of Saint-André-Est, a high technology company, is completely in agreement with free trade, of course. They are much more concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the changing value of the Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar than about free trade.

Another company in Saint-André, H.B. Fullers-Sesame, now imports filaments from the United States and for it, free trade quite simply means survival. At present, their imports are subject to tariffs and we are now working to have this tariff eliminated because it is detrimental to this company's ability to compete in a highly specialized market. It is therefore very important to this company that the tariffs be eliminated.

Charlebois et Fils in Lachute, Madam Speaker, a company that manufactures doors and windows, does not feel threatened by free trade. In fact, they intend to take advantage of the specific opportunities offered as a result of this agreement.

In Argenteuil we have La Pépinière, a company that is involved in greenhouse production, also very dynamic. Madam Speaker, the Durochers invented and are applying new technology for greenhouse production. To them, tariff barriers don't make any sense at all. They stand to benefit from free trade, and I can tell you they are enthusiastic and ready and willing to take on the lucrative U.S. market.

In Mirabel, Madam Speaker, there are any number of companies that are in favour of free trade. There are companies that will not be affected one way or another, and I would like to name Nora, a company that bottles top notch spring water. In fact, the area around Mirabel is well known for the quality of its spring water. Nora, a company that started a business using the latest technology in this area, will simply go on exporting its bottled water to the U.S. market. The same applies to Bell Helicopter, and there are many more, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), on a point of order.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I don't think we have a quorum. There may be five or six Conservatives who are enthralled by the Hon. Member's speech, but if I am not mistaken, there should be more Members in the House. Would you agree?

[English]

Mr. Crosbie: Let the record show, Madam Speaker, that there is one Liberal and one NDP Member in this House—two Liberals, and they are claiming that there should be further debate. The only people on the other side of the House are three people, two Liberals and one NDP Member, a disgrace.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I think the record should show that the Minister has not read the Bill. At least the Members on this side of the House have read the Bill.

Mr. Crosbie: If you have, why are you deceiving the public about it?

Mr. Foster: You are the ones who are deceiving the public. Why are you spending $30 million?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. Order, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Whatever the Minister of International Trade chooses to call me, I believe it is not parliamentary for him to accuse another Member of deceiving the public, and I believe that that comment by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) should be withdrawn.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): We now have a quorum. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

Mrs. Bourgault: Madam Speaker, I am delighted to see that Hon. Members are interested in hearing the names of businesses in Argenteuil—Papineau that favour free trade. And I must say it was worth being interrupted for that reason alone.

Madam Speaker, as you well know, free trade simply means the economic survival of this beautiful country of ours. I would like to take advantage of this opportunity, since Argenteuil—Papineau is a heavily agricultural riding, to reassure my farmers, and I would like to do so by quoting what was said by Professor Guy Debailleul who is with the Department of Rural Economy at Laval University and who analyzed the agreement.

He states that the agreement in its present form appears to be relatively limited in scope as far as Quebec agriculture is concerned. We know, madam Speaker, that aside from the President of UPA, the big agricultural co-operatives—that are, by the way, also members of the UPA, because when one is a member of a federative association or of a co-op, one is also a member of the UPA—thus the two positions are extremely contradictory. In fact, they are conflicting positions, but for farmers what is important is the organization that buys their products, their co-operative. And the big agricultural co-operatives in Quebec have come out in favour of the agreement. In other words, their position is diametrically opposed to that of the President of the UPA, because we have kept our commitments and have complied with their request to include Article 11 of the GATT. That being done, the Minister of Food and Fisheries of the province of Quebec, Mr. Pagé, is also in favour of the agreement.

Madam Speaker, I could go on about this agreement for hours. You are indicating however that I have used almost all of the time allotted to me. I would, for instance, like to mention comparable arrangements elsewhere in the world. We all recall full well that there are examples such as the European economic community, and I have mentioned this each time I have spoken on the issue. It is to be expected, madam Speaker, that the groups that are opposed to free trade agreements are socialists, labour unionists, unfortunately, and all those who are resistant to change generally; if we want to measure up to those who are in the fore front of progress, we have to step boldly into the new era of free trade. I will conclude with a message to consumers, who will be the big winners under free trade. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did a study. We have documents to back up what we are saying, and, for instance, consumers will see an increase of at least 2 per cent in real income, which means approximately $450 per year per Canadian.

And so consumers stand to benefit a great deal from the agreement, and they are too easily forgotten on the other side of the House.

An Hon. Member: Good news, wonderful!

[English]

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Madam Speaker, this evening, I want to discuss a number of myths that have been put forward in this debate. As you know, Madam Speaker, a myth is a misleading statement or a distortion of the truth.

The first myth that has been put forward in this debate is that this is a debate about free trade. This is not a debate about free trade, despite how it might appear. I repeat, this is not a debate about free trade.

This is not a debate about whether or not we in Canada are for free trade or are against free trade. That suggestion is a myth. This is a debate about a particular trade agreement with the United States. We are debating whether or not that particular agreement concluded by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States is a good agreement for Canada.

We are not debating whether free trade is good or not good in theory. We are not debating multilateral free trade. We are debating a very particular trade agreement between Canada and the United States and we are asking Canadians to look at the provisions of that agreement and to make a judgment. That is what we ask Canadians to decide upon, not theoretical free trade.

• (1910)

We are opposed to this agreement because we say, and I think Canadians would say as well if they examined it, that we gave too much to the U.S. for what we got in return.

Mr. Crosbie: And they say the opposite.

Mr. Allmand: We gave such things as unrestricted access to our energy, which has no place at all in a free trade agreement. We gave up the right to screen foreign investment, which has no place at all in the free trade agreement. We gave national status to American companies in Canada and vice versa, which really has no place in a free trade agreement. We say that in this agreement we gave up our identity as a country and our sovereignty as a country, and we gave too much power to the U.S. to control our destiny in the future.

I want to make it clear that the Liberal Party is not and has never been opposed to freer trade. If one looks at the record since the end of World War II, one finds that trade barriers between Canada and the U.S. have declined considerably. Even the other side admits that. As a matter of fact, as we debate this agreement, 80 per cent of all trade between Canada and the U.S. is conducted without any tariffs whatsoever. We are talking about only 20 per cent of the trade between Canada and the U.S. That occurred under Liberal Governments.

In addition, that 20 per cent of trade has an average tariff of about 5 per cent. At the end of World War II it averaged about 30 per cent. Obviously Liberal Governments have pursued freer trade and have been very successful at it, both bilaterally and multilaterally.

The second myth is that this agreement is absolutely necessary for economic prosperity. When the Conservative Government went to the U.S. seeking this agreement, we had a balance of trade with the U.S. of over $200 billion in our favour. You have to ask, in whose interest would it be to conclude such an agreement? Of course, it was in the interests of the U.S. and not in Canada's interests.

In addition, to say that this agreement, which sells out our sovereignty and identity, is necessary for economic prosperity is to ignore the past. If one looks at the economic history of this country, both before and after World War II, one will conclude that we had economic prosperity and good economic relations with the U.S. without an agreement such as this. As a matter of fact, in the 15-year period between 1965 and 1980 we had an average rate of unemployment of 5.6 per cent. Times were good during that 15 years of Liberal Governments without this kind of trade agreement.

The third myth which has been propagated in this debate is that the agreement is like the Common Market in Europe. It is not at all like that agreement. The Government has argued that if the Common Market is a good thing, this agreement with the U.S. must be a good thing. The Prime Minister of Great Britain put that same proposition to us when she was here. That is a myth. The Common Market is a trade arrangement between the approximately twelve countries in which no one country dominates. In addition, there is not a common language between any two of those countries. You have the British who speak English, the French, the Germans, the Italians, the Spanish, the Portuguese, the Dutch, the Belgians and so on. There is a wide variety of countries with different languages and cultures and no one country dominates the other.

In our situation we have the U.S., a country of 250 million people, speaking English, concluding a trade agreement with a country of 25 million people with two-thirds of its population speaking English and in which there is already a dangerous cross-current running between the two countries in the media, cultural industries and so on. It is quite different from the Common Market.

Another myth is that this agreement is like the Auto Pact. Again, that is not true. That pact is a sectoral trade agreement in which the U.S. is obliged to invest in jobs and plant and equipment in Canada. They are forced to invest in Canada. It is a managed bilateral trade agreement. It does not leave the U.S. free to do what it wishes with respect to Canada. The Auto Pact is not like this proposed agreement.

The fifth myth is that we have had enough debate on this agreement and that we can close it down. As a matter of fact, the Government has passed a motion of closure and it is going to close down second reading debate on this Bill this very evening. The Minister responsible for the Bill says that closure is justified because the Conservative Party has made up its mind with respect to the Bill. That Party is unequivocally supporting the Bill and the opposition Parties are unequivocally opposing the Bill. Therefore, what need is there for more debate?

The Minister completely misunderstands the role of Parliament in the Canadian system. That role is not simply to inform Members of Parliament on either side. The purpose of continuing debate is to inform the Canadian public so that they will have a better understanding about the Bill, the issues, and make a decision for themselves. If we prolong the debate, as we should, then the Canadian public will be able to decide much better than now whether the Conservative Government is right or whether the opposition Parties are right. By closing down the debate so quickly we cut off that opportunity, and that is what is wrong with closure. It is a question of keeping the debate going so that what we say here gets out to the greater Canadian public and they can make a decision of their own so they will be stimulated to examine the Bill itself and the agreement.

In the few minutes remaining I want to talk about what I consider to be one of the most dangerous articles in this Bill, Article 8. That article says that all the provisions of the trade agreement with the U.S. and of this Bill prevail over every other piece of Canadian legislation wherever there is some inconsistency or conflict. In other words, the Government is saying that this agreement will have precedence and prevail over every other piece of legislation. It will prevail over our agricultural legislation, our regional development legislation, our employment equity legislation, our labour legislation, and our environmental legislation. As a result, this Bill becomes in a sense the most important piece of legislation next to our Constitution. By the way, it is not only so with regard to legislation passed up to this point but any legislation passed afterwards.

That is bad enough, but what is really shocking about this whole situation is that the draft American legislation does not contain that same provision. Their Bill is exactly the opposite. It can be amended by any other legislation, and that is not acceptable.

• (1920)

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to join in the debate on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The legislation, Bill C-130, is now being debated at second reading and those opposing it are making their best efforts to confuse and to undermine the confidence of Canadians for political purposes before it passes into law. And pass it will, Mr. Speaker, both here and in the U.S. Congress.

It will pass because it is good for Canada and its future. It is good for all Canadians; consumers, students, businessmen, workers and investors. As much as the Opposition would have us believe that the agreement was thrown together—in fact they have adopted a "tear it up" or "tear it down" policy depending upon which part of the Liberal-NDP coalition you talk to—many of their past leaders and supporters, like Donald Macdonald and the Member for St. Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), whom, I was sorry to learn, will not be standing for re-election, favour the trade agreement.

When you include the members of the negotiating team and all those who participated in the sectoral groups of the international trade advisory committee, more than 250 men and women from across Canada participated in these negotiations on Canada's behalf. The negotiations went on for over a year. What an effort, and what a success.

My background, prior to entering politics four very short years ago, was consulting engineering, a sector for which Montreal and Canada have become internationally renowned. My firm of engineers and architects, with which I worked for over 37 years, provided design and project management services to industrial, institutional, and commercial clients around Montreal, but also across Canada and sometimes in the United States, that is, when we could satisfy all the regulations and overcome the obstacles. However, the contracts we won in Vermont and New Jersey were won in competition, and memory assures me that they were very profitable.

Why then is there such mystery, such concern over increased trade in services with the United States? Murray G. Smith, Director of the International Economics Program at the Institute for Research on Public Policy in Ottawa, has made a special study of this part of the trade agreement and I believe that his observations and conclusions will be useful in this debate.

He says that trade in services perhaps can be best understood by contrasting it with trade in goods or tangible commodities. International trade in goods, whether it is in primary commodities such as wheat or lumber, or high technology products such as computer chips and compact discs, involves items that can be counted or measured by customs officials at the border. It may be hard to determine the value of a computer chip or a compact disc but, at least in principle, the existence of the product can be readily verified when it crosses international boundaries. In contrast, trade in services involves intangibles and it is often difficult to determine when or if an international transaction has occurred.

The FTA provisions apply only to specific services, industries. These include a broad range of businesses and consulting services to the resource and manufacturing industries, as well as insurance, real estate and wholesale distribution. In addition, there are specific sectoral agreements that apply to tourism, architects, and computer services and data transmission.

Major service sectors are explicitly excluded from the provisions of the FTA. The major excluded sectors are the cultural industries, about which we have heard so much, the transportation industries, and basic telecommunications services. Various other services, such as day care, health services, education, and other social services are also not covered under the service provisions. Thus, not only can existing discriminatory policies affecting all these service industries be retained and new non-discriminatory regulations be imposed, but also new discriminatory regulatory, tax, or subsidy measures can be imposed by either country. We each have our own rights under this agreement.

Finally, differential treatment can be justified for prudential, fiduciary, health and safety or consumer protection reasons.

The professor concludes his review by saying:

> Over the decade ahead, Canadian services industries will be challenged to find their vocation in the emerging global services economy. In turn more competitive Canadian services industries will enhance the competitiveness of Canada's resource and manufacturing industries.

To return to my first love, the Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada represents almost the totality of our skills in that field. As I said earlier, it is world-renowned. It has made a major study on behalf of our industry to see how this agreement will affect us. The ACEC raised, in its brief and its subsequent meetings with External Affairs, Canada's International Trade Office, the Trade Negotiations Office and the Sectoral Advisory Group on International Trade, the following major points of concern: professional qualifications, licensing and registration, which are always a problem when we go across the line; cross-border movement of consulting engineering firms' personnel; duties on plans, drawings, and specifications; industrial and regional development programs; local or regional preferences; selection of consulting engineers; foreign ownership of the manufacturing industry; and government procurement of services.

Totalling the reviews of all of those, the ACEC representing the consulting engineers of Canada endorses the final text of the FTA as a positive step toward liberalized trade between Canada and the United States. The agreement breaks new ground and establishes a precedent for the forthcoming multilateral GATT negotiations, particularly those addressing trade in services and government procurement which are of paramount importance to the industry represented by the association.

The association believes that the FTA will be beneficial to Canada and, in particular, to the consulting engineering industry to the extent that it will lead to increases in trade and investment in capital projects and freer movement of people. The association has gone further and has entered into negotiations with its counterpart in the United States as a result of the FTA.

Their president writes: "I wish to inform you that as stipulated in the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) signed between our Association and the American Consulting Engineers—a joint committee of both Associations has now been formed" to exploit the agreement. I have a copy of that very modern agreement in front of me.

If time permits, Mr. Speaker, I would like to enter into the record the opinion of the construction industry of Canada. It says:

> The Canadian Construction Association, whose members employ 600,000 workers in this country, has closely followed the Free Trade debate as it has evolved over the past 18 months.
> After careful examination of the elements of the proposed Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, CCA is convinced the Agreement will be good for Canada and good for the construction industry.
> The Free Trade Agreement—will significantly reduce other trade barriers which for years have hindered the free flow of goods and services between our countries.
> CCA is confident the Free Trade Agreement will have a positive impact on the construction industry in Canada. As a result, it estimates the volume of employment in our industry will increase.

The construction workers and their leaders and engineers in this country say:

> It's a deal which is good for Canada, good for the construction industry in general and one which warrants the support of us all.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say a few words in this debate as a Member of Parliament from Saskatchewan. You may have noticed the Environics poll in The Globe and Mail last Friday which showed that Canadians are pretty equally divided on this trade deal. In fact, I think about 2 per cent more oppose it than support it.

• (1930)

The Province of Saskatchewan is one of two provinces where the overwhelming majority of people strongly oppose this deal, as a bad deal for Canada and a bad deal for Saskatchewan. Forty-nine per cent of the decided people in Saskatchewan say that it is a bad deal for Canada, 29 per cent say that it is a good deal. That is almost two to one against the trade deal. Only 9 per cent are strongly in favour of the deal, while 36 per cent strongly oppose it.

The overwhelming majority of people in Saskatchewan, representing all political Parties, oppose this deal as destructive to the future of Canada. On behalf of the people of Saskatchewan, I call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to either withdraw this legislation or go to the people of Canada and seek a mandate to implement this deal. If we on this side of the House win the election, we will have a mandate to terminate this deal and save the traditions we have developed in this country in the last 100 years.

An Hon. Member: Why do you not want it to go ahead if you are going to win the election?

Mr. Nystrom: We need an election because if the Prime Minister passes this legislation through the use of closure and time allocation and stays on for the full five years, we will have to serve the six-month notice after we win the election in order to terminate this deal. Members opposite may think it is funny that people in Saskatchewan strongly oppose this deal, but there will be very few Conservative Members elected in Saskatchewan because of this kind of trade deal.

I say to Members opposite, particularly my friend, the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), that she is a very honest and trustworthy person. It must hurt very badly in her heart of hearts to see her Prime Minister do this when he said in the last election campaign that a free trade deal with the United States is like a mouse sleeping with an elephant. He said that in 1911 the Conservative Party campaigned against this kind of trade deal which the people rejected then and which they reject again in 1983. That is what the Prime Minister said.

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) agrees. He knows that every Conservative in the leadership campaign in 1983, except for the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), took a very strong stand against a comprehensive trade deal with the United States. The Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the former Secretary of State, and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) took that position. Now, like the Liberal Party with wage and price controls, they are doing a flip-flop and trying to introduce a deal that will transform this country beyond recognition in the next 20 years.

The Minister for International Trade is in the House. He has not even read the Bill that he is trying to sell to Canadians. At least he is being consistent because he has always supported this kind of deal. He wants to transform this great country into something which his Party strongly opposed for some 100 years. He is probably an old Liberal at heart. I believe he and his family campaigned to join the United States rather than Canada back in 1949. At least that Minister is consistent when he wants to tie our country even more closely to the United States.

Let me explain why the people of Saskatchewan, including Conservatives, New Democrats and Liberals, oppose this deal.

Mrs. Mailly: They do not.

Mr. Nystrom: They oppose this deal because they are afraid we will lose our sovereignty in this country.

Mr. Crosbie: Get your security blanket. Run home with your security blanket.

Mr. Nystrom: The Minister has not read the agreement, but I refer him to page 233, which deals with investment. According to this article, the Prime Minister and Mr. Reagan have agreed that each country will treat each other's investors exactly the same. We will provide national treatment for each other's investors. A wealthy American investor in this country will be treated the same as a wealthy Canadian investor, like the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle). I say as a Canadian that that is not right. Canadians should maintain the right to set our own rules, to be the master in our own house.

I am not saying anything radical. We should maintain the right to set our own rules for our people.

Article 1602.1 on national treatment states:

> 1. Except as otherwise provided in this Chapter, each Party shall accord to investors of the other Party treatment no less favourable than that accorded in like circumstances to its investors with respect to its measures affecting:
> a) the establishment of new business enterprises located in its territories;
> b) the acquisition of business enterprises located in its territories;
> c) the conduct and operation of business enterprises located in its territories; and > d) the sale of business enterprises located in its territory.

In other words, American investors will be treated the same as Canadian investors. We should not give up our sovereignty in establishing our own rules. That is the position the Conservative Party took for some 120 years.

I can hardly believe that Article 1602 would go on to state:

> 2. Neither Party shall impose on an investor of the other Party a requirement that a minimum level of equity (other than nominal qualifying shares for directors or incorporators of corporations) be held by its nationals in a business enterprise located in its territory controlled by such investor.

We Canadians cannot determine a minimum amount of equity for our own investors. That infringes on our sovereignty and independence and I, as a Canadian, want to ensure that at least a minimum number of shares and equity in many sectors of our economy is kept by Canadians.

Mr. Kempling: You never bought a share in your life.

Mr. Nystrom: The Member for Gatineau is looking through the agreement. It is on page 234 of the free trade agreement, Article 1602.2.

Article 1602 states:

> 3. Neither Party shall require an investor of the other Party by reason of its nationality to sell or otherwise dispose of an investment (or any part thereof) made in its territory.

Mrs. Mailly: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Nystrom: What is wrong with that? There are many cases in Canadian history when we have legislated Canadian ownership and Canadian investment. Foreign investors have been told in the past that such enterprises as broadcasting and banking should be Canadian.

In the 1970s, our Government in Saskatchewan decided to buy out American and other foreign owners of potash mines in order to Canadianize the potash industry in our province.

Mrs. Mailly: We are still doing that.

Mr. Nystrom: Just read the section. One cannot necessarily legislate to ensure that the industry is Canadian.

It also states in Article 1062:

> 4. The treatment accorded by a Party under paragraph 1 shall mean, with respect to a province or a state, treatment no less favourable that the most favourable treatment accorded by such province or state in like circumstances to investors of the Party of which it forms a part.

Had this been in force in the past, Saskatchewan may not have been able to take over the potash industry. This country might not be able to nationalize the oil industry in the future—

An Hon. Member: Or nationalize the banks.

Mr. Nystrom: Or take over public ownership of one of the banks. That is exactly the blueprint.

One of the greatest Parties of public ownership in this country has been the Conservative Party. It began the CBC, the Canadian Wheat Board and the Canadian National Railways. Premier Lougheed in Alberta implemented much public ownership. Bill Davis established Suncor in Ontario.

According to this trade agreement, Canadians will not be able to make those kinds of decisions in the future. I resent that and ask Canadians to rally against this Party that is trying to turn our country into a shadow of Reagan's America or Margaret Thatcher's Great Britain.

• (1940)

I also refer my friends to page 146 of the agreement which refers to energy. It states that we cannot charge a higher price to the Americans than we charge to Canadians. That too is wrong. We cannot impose—

Mrs. Mailly: Look at page 224 and you will see what it says.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret to inform the Hon. Member in full flight that his time is up. I recognize the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell) on debate.

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to enter into this debate on Bill C-130, a Bill enabling the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

In the fall of 1987 it was written that the major trade agreement with the U.S.A. is a giant step toward a bright future for Canada. It dismisses the theory that Canada should draw into itself and exposes the American market to the initiative and free activity of Canadian business. It is a plan for the future and offers the only window of opportunity for Canadian manufacturers to have easy access to a market of over 250 million people.

Canadian jobs have been protected. The number and quality of jobs will be improved and consumer prices will drop. We have done this while protecting supply managed agricultural products.

I particularly like that piece. I bring it to your attention, Mr. Speaker, although I must admit I wrote it myself.

I am pleased to enter into this debate today to try to bring some reason to it. Two years ago when we began talks about enhanced trade with the United States we ended up in a variety of cute little arguments about the fact that it was not enhanced trade, it was in fact free trade. I am sure the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) will remember that since I would not be surprised if he participated in that debate at that particular time. But tonight we find the same Member arguing the other way. And this is supposed to be an important debate on the free trade agreement.

Also, today, another Member stood up—and I will not name his riding because I think he would be embarrassed—and talked about the great threat of the free trade agreement to supply managed commodities. He referred to the fact that milk can be produced cheaper on the other side of the border and that with the free trade agreement it would flood into Canada putting the dairy people out of business. Frankly, that demonstrates a great lack of knowledge about this agreement. I believe it is time we talked about the facts of the deal.

Therefore, in the time I have available I want to talk about supply managed products and in particular about the poultry industry. You will know, Mr. Speaker, I am sure, that I am a supporter of supply managed products. I believe that the supply management process has provided adequate supply of product at a reasonable price with a reasonable return to farmers. In fact, that is how the plan was set up by the Conservative Government many years ago in order to provide some stability to the farming sector.

During the negotiations on the free trade agreement there was a great deal of concern expressed by those who produced supply managed commodities. They had reason to be concerned, because, surely, if anything is different from free trade it is that we close the borders and make sure the production that is utilized in Canada is produced in Canada. They had reason to worry that under a trade agreement that right of protecting their market may be destroyed.

As we promised early in the negotiations, we protected supply management. I must say that quite a few people in that sector still cannot get over that very extensive and energetic lobby that was generated so long ago. That same thought is generated still by speakers such as we heard today who do not understand what is in the free trade agreement.

The free trade agreement is no threat to supply management. Of course, there have been some small alterations. I will talk about them in a minute. But we have left everything else intact.

There are threats to supply management. The fact is it is difficult among the provinces of Canada to adjust the amount of quota that each would utilize. Some provinces consume much more than they produce, and the opposite is true in other provinces.

There are also problems with respect to quota values. I checked with the Farm Credit Corporation which does a study on this subject once in a while. Quota values in Canada in 1984 amounted to $5.1 billion. We are presently studying farm debt. We know that the total farm debt in Canada is $22 billion. I know that the amount of quotas has gone up since 1984. I am wondering whether the amount of the quotas is not a significant part of the excess farm debt in Canada.

Supply managed commodities have no way of responding to markets and pressures. In poultry, if a new plant opens up there is no way for producers to direct their production to that new plant. This resulted in the payment of bonuses over and above what was an adequate rate of return for that particular commodity. That method of bonuses has been stopped now. In fact, it was stopped a year and one month ago. However, for a year and a half in the poultry industry extensive bonuses were paid.

With respect to the GATT, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) brought up the fact that we in Canada agree with the United States that Article 11 should be taken out of the GATT. That is simply not a fact. However, if we are going to go to GATT, if we are going to talk trade as we did with respect to the free trade agreement, then we have to talk about everything. The Americans have said if everything can go right through they will take out their Article 20 which allows them to have supply management. We Canadians do not expect supply management to exist in the States.

In a very far off situation in which all other subsidies were gone, Articles 11 and 20 might in fact be negotiated. But it would be so far off that I believe I can almost guarantee that this is not part of what is going to happen in the future. What did happen under the trade agreement with respect to poultry?

It appears that the base quotas went up from 6.3 per cent to 7.5 per cent. I say that it appears that way because, frankly, that is exactly the average amount of poultry produced over the last five years. The fact that we had a 6.3 base quota before and another 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent in supplementary quotas means that there would be no change in the amount of poultry coming into Canada from the United States. Because of the great economic boom that has occurred in Canada and because of the change in eating habits of Canadians the poultry industry has unprecedented demand. This is in part due to Mcnugget attacks, I guess I would call them. The broiler industry has increased by some 8 per cent. In truth, the demand for Canadian poultry is increasing in the face of what is apparently an increase in quotas.

Tariff reduction will have an effect. The fact that 7.5 per cent of poultry consumed in Canada after 10 years will be reduced in price about 17 per cent may put pressure on the other 92.5 per cent of poultry produced in Canada. I say "may" because we are not at all sure whether all of that advantage will be passed on to the consumer, and we do not know the effect in that regard.

Another area of concern, in the poultry industry one which I can understand, is with respect to the 2 per cent of poultry products put into further processed products. I refer to products such as Cordon Bleu and chicken pot pies. This area of business is expected to go up to 4 per cent in the next 12 years, by the year 2000. The tariffs will come off in that particular area. At present there are no controls in place to stop the influx of the product from the United States.

To compete in that market, to compete in the world market, manufacturers will have to be able to buy poultry products at a world price. Is that possible? I think it is. People in good authority have told me that efficient producers in Ontario, given the right to produce in their barns full time can in fact produce poultry at the world price and make a profit. I have a feeling that that statement will generate derision among the poultry people, but I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, what I have in fact heard.

The effect on the poultry industry of the 17 per cent reduction in tariffs on 2 per cent to 4 per cent of its production will mean a net decrease in income of some .6 per cent after 10 full years of production, that is if nothing else is changed. We have to remember that the free trade agreement covers many areas, including lower consumer products. Every poultry producer is a consumer. It includes more economic development, more jobs and higher paid jobs. The fact that more people will be able to buy more products will stimulate this economy.

The total negative effect of the free trade agreement on the poultry industry is less than the variation that occurs year to year in the industry. When all is netted out, when everything is balanced out, the poultry industry, the dairy industry—in fact agriculture as a whole—will benefit from this great agreement between Canada and the United States.

• (1950)

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, this year approximately 40 per cent of farmers' incomes have come from various Governments. One out of every 10 farmers is on the verge of bankruptcy, quitting, or foreclosure. It is important to the farm industry to know exactly what good the free trade deal will do for the farming industry. Will it improve the life of farmers? Will it save the 10 per cent who are going broke?

We must recognize that the trade deal will not make any difference to farmers. In fact, in the short term it may exacerbate the situation. In the short term the real impact of the trade deal will be relatively small, but what will be threatened is the viability of federal and provincial farm support and supply management. The previous speaker suggested that supply management was protected. I suggest that it is far from protected. In fact, the deal undermines the basic structure of supply management. Those programs have been an integral part of the maintenance of the family farm and the social fabric of many of the rural and small town communities. This deal encourages the trend toward continental integration in agriculture and food processing through the large agricultural conglomerates.

The trade deal provides for the elimination of agricultural tariffs over 10 years. In their negotiations the Conservatives recognized that the trade deal will eliminate the fruit and vegetable industry in Canada. Consequently, 20 years have been given to adjust to the new competitive environment. That is the terminology that has been used in this agreement. That means 20 years to get out of the production of fruits and vegetables in Canada and into something else. In the deal there is also a snap-back provision which is supposed to protect the horticultural industry. However, people in the horticultural industry tell me that it will not protect them. By the time it can be put into effect, and it goes into effect if the prices drop below 90 per cent of the past average price, the Canadian market will be flooded. Most of our products are seasonal, and the U.S. season is two or three weeks earlier than ours. Consequently, people in the horticultural industry tell me that those products are on the market long before theirs and that they are unlikely to be able to stop that flood by any snap-back provision.

Growers must forgo the tariff protection if they increase production. That guarantees that Canadian producers can never increase their share of the domestic market. If they do then they will not have the snap-back protection that is supposedly available. This concession has grave implications for the 27,000 horticultural farmers and the 24,000 processors who are mostly located in Ontario, Québec, the Atlantic Provinces, and British Columbia.

Article 704 is supposedly the section where there is a guaranteed improvement as far as farmers are concerned. This is the article that applies to red meat. Article 704 is cited as the most substantial gain for Canadian farmers. The deal reflects the current practices and the situation as it presently exists between Canada and the United States. Secure access for red meats, which was what was supposed to be sought in this deal, was not achieved. The United States still has the power to put in place quantitative restrictions on Canadian exports, and the 1985 4.4 per cent per pound countervail on live hogs is grandfathered and remains in place. United States beef growers are looking for markets for their beef in Japan. They tell us that there is no room for expansion into their markets by our beef producers. In fact, they told me very specifically that, if California needed more beef, they would produce it in Montana.

The selling or importing of grain into Canada has been regulated in the past by the power of the Canadian Wheat Board to licence the import of wheat, barley, oats, and their products. Article 705 will eliminate this power of the board under certain conditions. Eventually, there will be no stopping grains. Cheaper and lower quality grains from the United States will have no problem replacing our production in certain areas, and at whose expense? Article 705 is a very significant curtailment of the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board. Now the two-price system is phased out. With increases in the price of grains it probably would have been phased out anyway, but the free trade deal will mean that it has to stay phased out permanently, because under the circumstances of the free trade structure it will be impossible for the two-price system to be put back in place if it were ever required. That is or was a very significant portion of the stabilization program for wheat.

Other stabilization programs such as the Western Grain Stabilization Program are coming up for scrutiny. During the next seven years the Western Grain Stabilization and other agricultural programs which are meant to secure the farmers' income will come up for review, renegotiation or negotiation of a definition of subsidies. The Americans already consider them subsidies. Therefore, it is quite likely that programs such as Western Grain Stabilization, the Special Grains Program, and drought relief may be designated as subsidies and will also have to be phased out.

My colleague who just spoke suggested that Article 706 allows increases in quotas for chickens, turkeys, and eggs. The increase in those quotas seems small on the surface, but it is part of what the producers may put into the market. Therefore, it will affect the amount of products that they can put on the market in the future, and consequently it undermines the supply management programs in the feather industry.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise and speak to Bill C-130. In doing so, I would be remiss if I did not express my regret that Members of Parliament, because of Draconian measures introduced by the Government, are reduced to discussing something as important for Canada's future as the trade Bill, or what I would call the economic union Act between Canada and the United States, in a period of only 10 minutes.

It is instructive to note that, because the Government has never wanted, from day one, to have a comprehensive debate about what this economic union proposal between Canada and the United States really means. It has always been this Government's contention that the less Canadians know about the details involved in this proposal, the less Canadians understand all of the intricacies involved in this package, the better the Government's opportunity to sell this deal.

That is why it is tragic that the debate on free trade has been reduced to a discussion or a polling exercise among Canadians, whether or not they believe in free trade. There is nothing in Bill C-130 that in any way, shape, or form reflects the concept of free trade. Canadians are not being asked to judge, in reality, whether they are for or against free trade. Because being for or against, conceptually, philosophically, religiously, the notion of free trade, in my judgment is not a good enough reason to be for or against this deal.

This deal is not free trade. This is a comprehensive trade agreement that results in the economic unification of Canada and the United States. That is not free trade. So being conceptually for free trade is not a reason to be for Bill C-130. Being against conceptually free trade—if one were to be perfectly honest—is not even a good reason to be against Bill C-130. This is not free trade arrangement.

To understand what it is that the Government has before us today by way of this legislation, it is important to cast our minds back, to remember how it is that we got into this free trade or economic union agreement with the United States in the first place.

Canadians should recall, a few years ago, when we had a Prime Minister who was making predictions like, "You can bet your bottom dollar that when the protectionist winds blow off the shores of the United States, those winds will not be directed at Canada because of our special relationship with the United States". Canadians remember those brave words, a Prime Minister who said, "the flames were being fanned in Congress, but the smoke was being directed at Japan, not Canada".

An Hon. Member: He did not say that.

Mr. Tobin: A good friend and neighbour. And then the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), much to his surprise—

An Hon. Member: Where did he say that?

Mr. Tobin: I suspect, much to his chagrin, he discovered when he woke up one morning that the smoke was so thick he could not see beyond the windows and grounds of 24 Sussex Drive. What happened? There was an action taken against British Columbia softwood lumber. Initially, there was an action taken against cedar shakes and shingles. There were a number of actions taken against Canadian fish. There was action taken against Canadian steel. Non-tariff barriers were erected against Canadian agricultural products, primarily pork.

What was the response in the country, a country that "you can bet your bottom dollar" would not be subjected to American protectionist action? There was dramatic response, anger, a nationalist fervor. There was a response from the Government.

The Prime Minister said not to worry, "we will go south of the border and if you still have a dollar left, you can bet that bottom dollar that we are going to get a trade arrangement in which Canada will be exempt from this kind of U.S. protectionist winds and all the smoke and fire associated with it and that we will have a guaranteed access to the American market".

He told the New York Times that U.S. trade law could not "apply to Canada period", when he finished his negotiation.

It is important that we reflect and remember how it is that we got into the trade deal. The Prime Minister's bottom line, that he established by suggesting that we bet our bottom dollar, was that Canada would have guaranteed access to the American market. So, let us ask ourselves the fair question. Did Canada, in the negotiations that we undertook, achieve Canada's—as established by the Prime Minister—bottom line? It is not the NDP bottom line, the Liberal bottom line, Madam Speaker's bottom line, Canadian's bottom line, but the Prime Minister's bottom line. Did we achieve it? No, we did not. There is nothing within this legislation, nor is there anything within the agreement out of which this legislation flows, that gives Canada guaranteed access to the American market. It did not happen. So we did not get our bottom line.

To be fair, if one is to weigh a deal one has to ask two questions: what did you get and what did you give in return? Any company, if we were to assume that Canada were a company—and the Government would like us to assume that—that considered a joint venture with a partner 10 times bigger and 10 times more powerful which of course looks attractive on the surface, would want to examine what it was that you as a smaller player doing a joint venture with a larger player would get in return for this economic union.

I know one thing any business man, no matter how much his eyes may light up at the prospect of doing a joint venture with a company 10 times larger and 10 times bigger, would be less excited if at the end of the negotiation he read the bottom line, the fine print, and found that he that his new partner had 52 per cent of the shares in his company, and he suddenly became not an owner but a tenant to a much larger partner.

What did we give in this deal? We gave on investment substantially. We gave the United States of America the right to come and buy, outright, the valuable resources of this nation, resources that the Americans cannot get access to in any other way. We gave on investment.

An Hon. Member: That is not true.

Mr. Tobin: We gave on energy. We put an end to the day when Canada could be considered to have a Canadian energy policy made in Canada, for Canadians, by Canadians, and we made ourselves part and parcel of the continental energy grid.

The day is gone when a Canadian can expect one scintilla more from a Canadian resource found within the boundaries of this country within our coastal waters than a resident of the City of Los Angeles. Canadians in this deal have exactly the same rights to Canadian energy as any citizen of the United States. Canada has become part of the continental energy grid.

What else did we give? There is a whole area called subsidies which we could not define in time for the agreement to be signed, so we put that concept of subsidies aside. We said that over seven years we would harmonize our relationship. I am five foot eight inches. I know that if I get into a harmonization exercise with somebody six foot eight inches, who gets harmonized—I do.

I conclude by saying to the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who began his career at his father's elbow in 1947-48 fighting the battle of our Confederation, yes, the battle of Confederation in which Newfoundlanders given a choice, one that Canadians have not been given in this deal, made a choice for Canada. I will tell you who led the charge on the other side. The Hon. Member for St. John's West, his father, and his family led the charge for economic union between Newfoundland and the United States. This Minister attempts, some 40 years later to achieve through the back door what he could not achieve through the front door 40 years ago. This time it is not economic union between Newfoundland and the United States. I tell him that Canadians are a quiet people. We are placid people. We do no wear our emotions on our sleeves nor do we practise our nationalism like they do in the United States. Scratch a Canadian, in particular a new Canadian from Newfoundland, Canada's newest province, only that deep and you will find a backbone of steel.

• (2010)

The people of Canada will not give away their country in the interest of a corporate climate put together by a Government that has no sense of nation, no sense of sovereignty, and no respect for the fundamental concept and value of a nation on the northern half of the North American continent called Canada. We will not lay down and die, Madam Speaker. This deal must be rejected.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, before speaking to this Bill, to explain why my riding massively supports the free trade agreement—not just the principle of free trade but this agreement in particular—I would like to inform the Hon. Member . . .

[English]

He is always good for about 10 minutes of entertainment. For instance, he has forgotten to mention—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Mailly: Shut up. He has forgotten to mention, when he was talking about selling out Canada, that on page 265—

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Sit down, Mailly! Sit down! You don't even know how to behave in the House of Commons. Go back to your riding, they don't want you here!

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) on a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member just speaking is a Parliamentary Secretary. Her answer to Canadians and those who oppose this particular agreement is to "shut up", to quote her words. The Hon. Member should know that those words are unparliamentary. But I would ask you, Madam Speaker, to direct the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member who has the floor, to withdraw those insulting remarks that she has made to opposition Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) will do the right thing.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I would refer, for instance, to page 265 of the free trade agreement to show that what the Hon. Member just said had no basis in fact, to put it politely, and we read the following:

> . . . Canada retains the right to review the acquisition of firms in Canada by U.S. investors but has agreed to phase in higher threshold levels for direct acquisitions . . . These changes to the Investment Canada Review Process will not apply to the oil and gas and uranium sectors.

So what is he talking about? He is leaving, Madam Speaker, because he knows perfectly well that what I am saying is the plain truth. It doesn't apply to the resource sector, and he knows that.

An Hon. Member: Disinformation!

[English]

Moreover, a previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), surprised me very much today when he started quoting from polls on the free trade agreement, suggesting that because the polls were divided evenly it made the free trade agreement a bad agreement.

I remember when we had the debate on capital punishment and he said that polls did not matter even though 82 per cent of the people were for capital punishment and that what we had to do was the right thing. He was against capital punishment. Now the Member is telling us that the polls are right and that we must not do the right thing, that we must just follow whatever the polls tell us.

He omitted to say when he was quoting particular sections on investment that he skipped a few lines. I will quote them in French because I have the French text here. It says:

[Translation]

> The obligation to grant national treatment does not mean that such treatment must be identical in every respect.

[English]

That means the same. It does not have to be the same. There is no customs union. There is no giving away our identity. It goes on to say:

[Translation]

> A party may grant different treatment for legitimate reasons such as consumer protection or security, to the extent that the treatment is otherwise equivalent. Furthermore, regulations may not be used as disguised barriers to trade.

It also says:

> The parties must ensure that licence criteria are not discriminatory.

The agreement also says:

> That these undertakings are prospective. In other words, they do not oblige either government to change its current legislation and practice.

Further on in the same article it says:

> That the agreement does not prohibit the negotiation of product mandate, research and development and technology transfer requirements with investors.

[English]

So much for a customs union.

[Translation]

Moreover, this article does not preclude the negotiation of performance requirements attached to subsidies or government procurement.

Madam Speaker, they tend to quote very selectively. And with all due respect for the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and in fact I do have a great deal of respect for the Hon. Member because of his many years of experience in the House and because he usually is very accurate when he is quoting . . . Unfortunately, when he quoted section 8, he omitted some vital words. It says, for instance:

That the agreement prevails in the case of inconsistancies in any other Act of Parliament or any regulation . . .

Always within the meaning of section 2 of the Interpretation Act.

This particular paragraph bears the heading: "Inconsistant federal laws". Inconsistencies is between federal laws, not . . .

[English]

Supremacy of this law over other laws.

[Translation]

And when he mentions the Charter of Rights, he knows perfectly well, Madam Speaker, that the Charter of Rights prevails over all other laws in Canada as far as rights are concerned. So it is ridiculous to confuse the issue and have us believe that just because there is a section that says there should be no inconsistencies, that this means supremacy. I wanted to say this before explaining why the people in my riding are massively in favour of the free trade agreement, not just the principle, as I said earlier, but the agreement itself.

Rodrigue Tremblay, an economist, expressed it very well in an article in Le Devoir on February 24, 1988, when he looked at the concessions made by Canadians and Americans in the free trade agreement. Because that is what an agreement is all about, Madam Speaker! To arrive at an agreement, the two parties involved sit down and decide to examine a problem and to say: We want to arrive at a solution which will be equitable for both of us, a solution that we can live with and that will improve both of our situations. An agreement always entails some measure of compromise. Opponents to free trade have stated repeatedly that the Canadian Government sold off the country to the Americans. Mr. Tremblay quotes those who are against free trade. Several have also said that Canada made too many compromises. But the fact is that Canada made four important concessions to the United States and the United States made four in return. Firstly, Canada will no longer be able to resort to tariffs and quotas to limit the quantity of a product coming into the country and to block American products in Canada. Canada will no longer be able to discriminate between a Canadian-owned company and an American-owned company. That is what the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) was referring to.

We are talking about discrimination, and not about preventing Canadians from running their own country and adopting the policies they see fit, policies that will further the progress and development of their country. This means that an American company will be subject to the same laws and regulations as Canadian companies, and as our legislation prohibits foreigners from acquiring our industries, this protection will continue to apply. And I have quoted the relevant article. Thus, it is untrue to say that we have a union. It is also false to say that we will no longer be able to protect our industries. Nor are we giving away our resources. That is not in the agreement. It is very clear.

What concessions did the Americans make? Like Canada, they have agreed to relinquish the use of tariffs and quotas. But we must remember one thing, Madam Speaker: There are 25 million of us, and 250 million of them. It follows that that concession was much more consequential for the United States than for Canada.

We will have access to a market that is ten times the size of ours. It is a concession, as Mr. Tremblay said, that is weighted in our favour.

The United States has accepted that complaints of dumping and unfair practices be settled by a group of experts.

That is the key concession. In fact, Madam Speaker, the whole agreement almost foundered on the issue, because the United States is a very powerful country and the Americans are used to having the upper hand, and they were not particularly taken with the idea of an objective tribunal to settle disputes. Several of these controversies were mentioned today, shakes and shingles, for example. Why did we have a problem? Because the United States use their own tribunal to settle these matters and we always lose. So it was absolutely essential for us to have a dispute settlement mechanism and that is what we have. That is another concession that was very important for the United States.

Canada will be excluded from trade disputes that the United States may have with other countries.

That is very clear! So why do people tell us the opposite?

Finally, the United States agreed that some sectors be exempted.

Madam Speaker, "exempted" means "outside of the accord".

a) Cultural industries.

We keep our culture and our sovereignty. For example, films, radio, television, books, the National Film Board, Telefilm, the CBC are all excluded from the agreement.

b) The brewing industry.

This must please many men.

c) Canadian magazines can continue to enjoy postal rates subsidized by the Canadian government.

d) Social programs are protected.

Madam Speaker, you know that social programs are protected.

> e) The provinces continue to require the processing of logs and fish before export.

That is wonderful!

> f) The exchange rate of the Canadian dollar (its value compared to the U.S. dollar).

That continues.

> g) Agricultural marketing programs and agricultural price supports are maintained as well as the right to establish new ones.

We have the right to do so.

> h) Canadian clothing manufacturers can use foreign fabrics and export their products duty-free to the United States.

That is maintained.

So, Madam Speaker, if they try to tell me that this is a customs union, a sell-out to the Americans, if they try to scare me, if they try to tell me to do what the NDP Members have suggested, . . .

• (2020)

[English]

Let us march from the cradle to the grave, except this time they want us to march with crutches. We are not going to do it. We are not going to do it in the Outaouais, we are not going to do it in Québec, and we are not going to do it in Canada.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Madam Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Conservative Government has chosen to limit debate on the trade agreement, Bill C-130, and that I am only permitted to speak for 10 minutes in this debate.

Mr. Crosbie: Why did you try to block it? Why did you have all these hours of wasted time in Private Members' Bills? Don't be such a hypocrite.

Mr. Harris: Therefore, I must limit myself to the most important issues in this debate by setting out on the record—

Mr. Crosbie: You were afraid to have the Bill debated. You tried to stop it for a month.

Mr. Harris: The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) does not want to hear the other point of view.

Mr. Crosbie: You don't have a point of view. You do what you're told over there.

Mr. McCurdy: You are unparliamentary, John, just like "hypocritical".

Mr. Harris: Madam Speaker, despite the objections of the Minister for International Trade, I must put on the record my belief and my concerns about what this Government is doing to Canada and to Newfoundland.

First, let me say that New Democrats do not oppose but do support a gradual elimination of tariff barriers that is done in a way that is fair to Canada and that allows time and provides for programs to help in any adjustments that must be made. What we have here is not that kind of program at all. This Government has acted in the interests of multinational corporations and their Canadian subsidiaries and partners to give them a free hand to act as they see fit. This Government wants to leave future Canadian Governments powerless to control the destiny of Canada in the interests of average Canadian men and women who do not own multinational corporations and whose livelihoods and well-being depend on having a Government they can trust to act for them.

We in Newfoundland were all shocked when we heard that the Minister for International Trade who represents the riding of St. John's West had not even read the agreement. We know that he tries to be a buffoon as part of his big act, but most of us in Newfoundland thought that at least he did his homework, that behind all the quick wit was some knowledge about what he was talking about and a belief, at least in his own mind, that he was right. We were all wrong, and I join with the Montreal Gazette of Wednesday, June 29, in which an article read:

> So that's it. The reason Trade Minister John Crosbie keeps making such preposterous statements about the Canada-U.S. free trade deal is that he has not read it.

The Minister for International Trade has called this trade agreement the Auto Pact for Atlantic Canada. He has obviously not read that agreement either. If he had, he would know that under the Auto Pact American companies had a choice. They had a choice either to pay the tariff or guarantee jobs and production in Canada in return for access to the Canadian market. If the Minister had read the trade agreement, he would not be calling it an Auto Pact.

Article 1603 of the agreement reads:

> Neither Party shall impose on an investor of the other Party, as a term or condition of permitting an investment in its territory, . . . a requirement to: . . .
> d) achieve a given level or percentage of domestic content.

Those are the kinds of requirements that are contained in this agreement. It is the removal of any obligation and of any possibility of requiring that a foreign investor from the United States has Canadian content, Canadian jobs, and Canadian production to have access to this market.

The maritime provinces, excluding Newfoundland, joined in Confederation, which was a sort of a free trade agreement, back in 1867. Ever since then, they have lost economic ground to the point where now, with the addition of Newfoundland, the four Atlantic provinces are the Cinderellas of Confederation. They have the lowest per capita earned incomes, the highest unemployment rates, and the greatest lack of opportunity in Canada to live, work, and raise a family in their own communities of all the Provinces and Territories of Canada.

A full 10 per cent of Canada's population suffers as the victim of market forces, government neglect, and a lack of government resolve, either Conservative or Liberal. That is the fate brought on by the free market forces that have existed in Canada untrammeled and unchained by government policies that would act in the interests of protecting all Canadians across the country.

We have heard the Government boast about ACOA, saying it is a regional development program which will do something about this. The Economic Council of Canada stated in its most recent annual review that the programs administered by ACOA were likely to be the targets of U.S. countervailing actions. That is despite and regardless of whatever is in the agreement negotiated by this Government.

This American trade agreement will put Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada up against even greater market forces, which will force us either up against the wall or to compete. Companies can compete, but they compete at the expense of individual workers and their families who will pay the price in lower wages, lower social benefits, lower government services, part-time employment and part-time futures, such as we are already experiencing quite severely in Newfoundland.

Competition results in a number of factors. The President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Laurent Thibeault, said:

> It's simply a fact that as we ask our industries to compete toe to toe with American industries—we in Canada are obviously forced to create the same conditions in Canada that exist in the U.S. whether it is the Unemployment Insurance scheme, workman's compensation, the cost of government, the level of taxation or whatever.

We in Canada are worried. The Canadian Teachers' Association says that it is concerned about the downward pressure that business will place on the cost of government and warns of a great long-term hazard to education of the free trade agreement. In Canada keeping the cost of government competitive in terms of education would mean cutting spending for education. Canada now spends about 5.3 per cent of total personal spending on primary and secondary education, whereas the U.S. spends 3.7 per cent. In American dollars we spend about $3,420 per child compared to $3,199 in the United States.

In the Atlantic Provinces Harrison McCain of McCain Industries, a very large international company, no small potatoes in New Brunswick, said that if economic factors were to make his plants' continued presence in the province untenable, "we're a multinational and have other options. Unfortunately, our employees and our growers don't". He is honest about the prospects for Atlantic Canada under this agreement.

Regional development programs are vital to the development of Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada. The Economic Council of Newfoundland warned that regional and industrial development policies, local preference and procurement policies, and agricultural subsidies have been identified by the U.S. in recent actions as being incompatible with the tenets of free trade, but these same policies are seen as important tools for economic development in that province and region.

Yet, we are told that the agreement does not interfere with regional development policies. Whom do we believe? Unfortunately, we must believe those who have read the agreement and studied it, not those who have not read it and are prepared to tout it anyway.

In the United States social benefits are quite clearly seen by business leaders to be a cost to business. When proposals were put in the United States for federal legislation for compulsory maternity benefits for women, the biggest opponent to such benefits was the business community. It said that that would bring about an economic catastrophe and make it uncompetitive. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce spoke out strongly against granting time off without pay and a guarantee of a return to a previous job for a women who was pregnant. These programs are seen by business leaders in the United States as a cost of doing business. In Canada business leaders will come to see it in the same way. In Newfoundland we have already heard the St. John's Board of Trade speaking out about high hospital costs and how we must lower them.

We are told by the Deputy House Leader that big Canada is in favour of this deal and small Canada is against it. Well, there are more of us than there are of them. As Tennyson said: "Some work of noble note may yet be done, Come my friends it's not to late to seek your newer world". We will help build that world. We will defeat the Government. We cannot defeat this Bill because we do not have the numbers, but we will defeat this policy and this Government.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to intervene in this debate because to us in Alberta, those of us who are able to think large and dream big dreams, this is an opportunity not to be missed.

The final comment in the peroration of the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) was unfortunate. He referred to a comment made by the Hon. Government House Leader. In that particular comment the Government House Leader was referring to small-minded Canada rather than small town or small Canada. We all have small town roots, and it is quite evident that small town Canada and rural Canada as well as urban Canada support this trade agreement.

We sounded some views in my own constituency of Edmonton South. One of the first questions in a recent scientific poll that was taken in the constituency asked what was the most important issue facing the country. Bear in mind, Madam Speaker, that this was an open-ended questionnaire in so far as that particular question was concerned. The question was simply: "What is the most important issue facing Canada today?" It was a write-in question.

It is interesting that the issue which led all the rest was the free trade agreement with the United States. Twenty-seven per cent of the respondents said that it was the most important issue facing the country. The next issue was far down the line. It was economic questions and questions of employment which were at 11 per cent. There were many others down the line.

Later on in the questionnaire we took the opportunity to ask the view of constituents on the trade agreement which had been negotiated with the United States. The combined figures of those who supported it and those who strongly supported it was 66 per cent. Fully two-thirds of those polled in this scientific survey supported the free trade agreement which has been entered into.

I have been listening with great interest to the progress of this debate. I took care this afternoon to pay attention to the comments offered by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the New Democratic Party. I listened with some fascination because he is an academic and has a good knowledge of Canadian history, although our analyses may differ. He traced the evolution of the American psyche and the evolution of the Canadian Zeitgeist. He came to the conclusion that we are different nations when we examine ourselves, when we consider our role in the world, and when we consider our priorities for our nations. I agree with that fully.

Later in his remarks, through omittendo and some innuendo, the Hon. Member for Oshawa strove to imply that because we are entering into a trade liberalization agreement with the United States we will become the United States or become like the United States. That is where logic fails the distinguished Leader of that Party.

He, in that respect, is not unlike a fellow Edmontonian, Mr. Mel Hurtig, who also uses the slippery slope argument. As I understand it, the argument goes something like this: Once you have entered into a trade liberalization agreement, the next slide takes you to a customs union. Further the skids are greased so that you descend into some kind of a political union. Ultimately you are politically absorbed.

Mr. Hurtig and others dine out on this argument quite well, but never have they traced the causal connection, either through logic or through historical example. I put it to the House that it is rather irresponsible, at this very important stage in Canadian history, to torment Canadians with fear, fantasy, and fabrication when facts are what they crave. Tonight, in the time available to me, I intend to present some of those facts.

Before I do so, Madam Speaker, I want to comment on some of the other speeches we have heard here tonight. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), for example, suggested—and again in the fashion of his Party he did not come out and say it—or implied that because of ownership facilitation that is contained in this agreement somehow our broadcasting and banking industries were to become prey to the American eagle. He knows well, because he is a well-informed Member, that that is truly not the case, that there are clear safeguards and protection under Canadian law to prevent that from happening, and that the free trade agreement takes those aspects of Canadian law well into account.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton-Melville lamented that this free trade agreement might prevent the nationalization of the Canadian oil industry. If there is one reason why we should embrace and adopt this agreement, that is the reason. The biggest plus of this agreement is that it would not only preclude the nationalization of the Canadian oil industry but would prevent a Government of Canada from ever again bringing in a national energy program. That means something to an Albertan who has seen $60 billion skimmed off the top of the market price and transferred to central Canada. Sixty billion dollars is what the National Energy Program rape and pillage amounted to.

The Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo), who is normally a very straightforward, honest, and forthright Member of Parliament, said that fruits and vegetables were specially recognized under the agreement in that they were given 20 years to disappear as a Canadian industry. That is not the case. They are given 20 years in which to flourish as a Canadian industry. There is special recognition given for the necessity of an extended period of time because of the seasonal disadvantage in growing certain fruits and vegetables.

The Hon. Member for Humber—Port-au-Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) said that we had no sense of nationhood. Where was he when the Meech Lake vote was taken? He says that we have no sense of sovereignty. He omitted to recognize that the very embodiment, the repository of our sovereignty, which is our cultural sense and our cultural pride in terms of how we regard ourselves as being Canadian, is totally excluded from this agreement. I say again that that distinguished Member is falling prey to the temptation of dealing in fear and fabrication.

Last week, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), in responding to a question I posed to him about certain discussions that had been entered into with the leaders of the Congressional Democratic Party in the United States and a group of Canadian parliamentarians, suggested that it was out of fear that Canadians had entered into this agreement. He suggested that we are driven to the agreement out of fear.

I believe that what attracted Canadians to this agreement and what will attract them in greater numbers as the days go by is the reality of the growth of the protectionist sentiment in the United States. That reality has resulted in 38 protectionist Bills targeted at Canada being put on the desk of the Chairman of the House Trade Committee, Congressman Sam Gibbons of Florida. To the credit of that hon. gentleman, he is delaying those Bills because he has believed in free trade all his life and would like to see the arrangement go forward.

In referring to the facts of this agreement, I am drawn to some comments that were offered by the former Premier of Alberta, the Honourable Peter Lougheed, when he testified before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade in November. Mr. Lougheed said that it became clear to him in the latter part of 1984 that Canada's future competitiveness, its future as a productive country, was dependent upon entering into broadened trade, first with the United States and later with the Pacific Rim.

In his view there were three options: The status quo, a sectoral agreement, and a comprehensive agreement. Perhaps all Members of the House would agree that the status quo is not the answer. What about the sectoral solution? Sectoral trade would not have been acceptable to the other party, and there are many problems with a sectoral agreement which did much for us in the remaining 20 per cent of our trade that is not now duty-free.

Mr. Lougheed came to the conclusion that a comprehensive agreement under Article 24 of the GATT was the correct way to proceed. No agreement is perfect. However, he said that he felt good about this agreement.

I wish to associate myself with the view of this distinguished Canadian and advocate to all Members of the House, particularly members of the Opposition, that they reconsider their position and embrace this, not as a panacea but as an opportunity for our country to grow and prosper.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, in exactly 59 minutes, second reading debate in the Canadian House of Commons will end because of the Government's decision to invoke closure on what is without question the most important debate in the history of our country. There are 59 minutes left at second reading stage to determine whether or not this particular piece of legislation affecting the very heart of our country should or should not be endorsed in principle.

Bill C-130 is 123 pages of legislation amending 27 different Acts of this Parliament. The Government has the audacity simply to dedicate five days of debate to this important piece of legislation.

It is no coincidence that second reading debate is ending today, on July 5, 1988, in less than an hour. It is a belated birthday gift to the United States of America.

The Minister responsible for this particular agreement made an astonishing admission last week. He said: "I did not read the agreement". He is the key Minister responsible for the free trade agreement, which we like to refer to as the Mulroney-Reagan agreement. He has admitted that he has not even read the agreement. What utter contempt for his portfolio. What utter contempt for this Parliament. What utter and absolute contempt for the people of Canada. How can Canadians have trust in the Minister and the Government? How can they trust that the Government knows what it is doing when the Minister admits he has not read the agreement?

What Canadian would have a lawyer go to court for him or her without the lawyer knowing the facts of the case or reading the law involved? What sane Canadian would go to a doctor who is intent on simply cutting the person open without knowing what organ to operate on?

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) says: "I once sold vacuum cleaners but I have never vacuumed a house. I once sold encyclopaedias but I never read the encyclopaedias". If given the opportunity, Canadians will say to the Minister responsible for this terrible agreement: "Go back to selling vacuum cleaners. Go back to selling encyclopaedias. You have no business affecting in such a negative and irresponsible fashion the future of our country".

Is it too much to ask the Minister to read 123 pages of legislation? All too often the Minister has trivialized the issue in the House. He has been seeking laughter and making humour. This is a serious matter that affects the sovereignty of our country. It affects the future of our country, and the only thing the Minister can do is make jokes. He is the clown of the House of Commons. The Minister admitted last week that he was winging it. He did not know what he was talking about. The people of Canada do not want a wing-nut Minister. They want a Minister who acts responsibly and who knows what he is doing.

• (2050)

The Minister has hightailed it out of the House of Commons because he cannot stand the truth. The Government has decided to invoke closure on this measure. As a Member of Parliament I am given but 10 minutes to express my point of view on this most important piece of legislation affecting my constituents in the riding of York South—Weston and affecting all Canadians from coast to coast.

Why is the Government limiting debate? Why is the Government rushing into this so-called free trade agreement? Because the United States, Ronald Reagan, and the White House have given our Prime Minister his marching orders. They have given the Minister for International Trade his marching orders. They have been told to get that free trade agreement through and to give them a birthday present. It is a day late, but they are still giving the United States a birthday present.

Is it too much to ask for this Government to go to the people of Canada? Members of the Government said during the last election campaign, during the long hot summer of 1984: "We will consult. We will keep Canadians informed. We will consult with people from coast to coast on any national issue of importance". What happened to that promise? It is but another broken promise.

If members of the Conservative Government were true to their word, they would be consulting with Canadians now. They would be giving Canadians an opportunity to review this agreement. While the Minister may not be interested in reading this agreement, other Members of Parliament and other Canadians are very interested in it. Why is he so afraid to read the agreement? Why is he so much of a coward as to allow Canadians the opportunity to enter into a meaningful and intelligent discussion about something that will affect Canadian sovereignty?

It took three years for the Government to negotiate this particular agreement. It is now ramming it through Parliament in a dictatorial, Draconian fashion. It has allowed but five days of debate on it. No doubt it will limit debate at committee as well.

We know that the Conservatives, led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), want to go into an election campaign to talk about what they have accomplished. They think that the people of Canada will give them lollies for having passed and endorsed the free trade agreement here in the House of Commons. We say to the Minister for International trade that if he is so confident the agreement is so positive, and if he is so confident it is in the best interests of Canada, then why rush it? Why not go to the people in a general election? We will debate the Minister in any riding in Canada on any political platform during an election campaign. Let us be given the opportunity to present our side of the story, and the Minister can present his limited side of the story.

The Government is afraid. If the Minister took the time to read this particular agreement he would notice a few interesting facts. In Clause 2 it is interesting to note that those who drafted this particular agreement defined "United States". What is the United States? We all know the United States to be a country, a large country to the south of us, but for some reason it was important to include a definition of it in the Bill. I do not know what motives the Minister had in instructing the drafters of this legislation to define the United States, but it is defined as follows:

> (a) the customs territory of the United States, including the fifty states of the United States, the District of Columbia and Puerto Rico,
> (b) the foreign trade zones located in the United States and Puerto Rico, and
> (c) any areas beyond the territorial sea of the United States—

I suppose the Minister wanted to make it absolutely clear that we were not talking about Canada when we are talking about the United States.

No where in this clause is Canada defined. There is no definition of Canada, yet there is a definition of the United States of America.

We see that in Clause 130(9) it was important to define what an American is. Why define what an American is? Why define what the United States is and not define what Canada is? "American" means an individual other than a Canadian who is a national of the United States or is lawfully admitted for permanent residence. I just do not know what the ulterior motives of the Minister were.

I know that the Minister for International Trade can read. I know for a fact that he passed high school. I would ask him simply to take the time to read the agreement. I know that it might be a little complicated for him. He might have had some difficulties when he went to law school, but any lay person could at least read through the agreement and try to understand it.

I want an opportunity to express my view. You might find it necessary, Madam Speaker, in a few moments to cut me off, but I am not going to sit down voluntarily. I want to make submissions. I have a right as a Member of Parliament to make submissions on the most important issues facing my constituents.

In the last election campaign free trade was not an issue. It was not an issue in the riding of York South—Weston. It was not an issue in Manicouagan. It was not an issue anywhere in the country. This Prime Minister lied to the people of Canada, Madam Speaker, during the last election campaign—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I must interrupt the Hon. Member. The time at his disposal has now expired.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, the people of Canada will be given the opportunity to reject that Prime Minister—

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for York South—Weston knows the rules. We know he is only seeking publicity. Nevertheless, he has said that another Member of this House lied. In fact, he referred to the Prime Minister. He should do the proper thing and withdraw that remark.

He should remember this as well. He should remember that truth does not lurk in rat holes.

Mr. Robichaud: You should know, John.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will do the honourable thing. The Chair heard him as well.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, there is another word that rhymes with rat hole, and that is what the Minister is.

The Prime Minister of Canada, the integrity, the honesty, and the credibility of that Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Mr. Andre: You are disgusting, Nunziata, do you know that?

Mr. Rossi: Superbox Harvie, keep quiet.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have not as yet heard the Hon. Member withdraw. I am sure he will do the honourable thing and withdraw the term that was unparliamentary which he used, I know, in the heat of debate at the end of this long day. I am sure the Hon. Member will withdraw.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, out of deference to the Chair, on occasion I do get carried away, but I did call the Prime Minister of Canada a liar. I know that to call the Prime Minister a liar, or any Member in this House, any Conservative Member, is unparliamentary. I withdraw the fact that I called the Prime Minister of Canada a liar.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure that the Hon. Member knows that this rule applies not only to a member of the Government but to any Member of the House.

The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for South West Nova on debate.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Madam Speaker—

Mr. Crosbie: Back to your rat hole now.

Mr. Rossi: Go back to your cheese.

Mr. Nunziata: Go back to law school, John, and try to pass this time.

Mr. Robichaud: Go read the agreement, John.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) has the floor.

Mr. Comeau: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the lateness of the hour and the emotion with which some Hon. Members approach this subject. I also appreciate the opportunity to add my few words to the debate. First, I would like to say that Atlantic Canadians have been waiting for more than 100 years for this very significant achievement. Free trade offers the hope that we can return to the once great prosperity that we had in Atlantic Canada.

• (2100)

In the 17th, 18th, and 19th centuries Atlantic Canada was a prosperous nation. There was a freer flow of goods based on natural north-south trading patterns. Our ancestors were building a nation and they had confidence in themselves, their ability to compete, and in their future. They were exporting lumber, fur, agricultural products, fish, and coal, among others.

In those days there were no socialist reactionaries to hold back the progress of our nation such as we have today with the NDP socialists and their socialized Liberal partners. Socialists believe that we can solve all the problems of the world by throwing taxpayers' dollars at the problems. Socialists believe that when one runs out of money one simply prints more. Socialists wanted to choke off investment from coming to Canada, and now want to shut off our market access to the United States. They give the weak excuse that one cannot have a mouse sleeping with an elephant. Well, they are the mice, and they are afraid of their own shadows. They are a bunch of wimps.

We have not heard business state that it is afraid of the free trade. On the contrary, those who shout the loudest against free trade are the big union leaders and the academics who do not make business and investment decisions. On this subject, who is the judge that you would like to listen to, Madam Speaker—NDP Shirley Carr or John Bulloch who represents 80,000 independent small businesses across Canada?

The other day a constituent of mine gave me a good reason for supporting the free trade agreement. She stated: "If the big union leadership is against it and small business is for it, then it must be good". I agree with her.

According to the socialists, free trade will cause pollution, it will affect the environment, and it will somehow divert our water. When the socialists are challenged they wrap the Canadian flag tightly around themselves and shout that we will lose our culture, our language, and many other nasty things will happen. For all we know, we may even go bald, or I may lose my accent.

The socialists are afraid that Atlantic Canadians may taste the good life, such as is evident in the riding of the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). They say to Atlantic Canadians: "If you have prosperity, you might somehow lose your culture, and we cannot have that". There is nothing cultural about not having a job. Quite the contrary. Free trade will provide jobs in Atlantic Canada. With the dignity of jobs we will be just as cultural as the Member for Oshawa who, incidentally, rarely complains of the billions of dollars which have been invested in his riding.

Can we trust the socialist anti-American rhetoric, treating the Americans as enemies rather than as our friends and closest neighbours and allies? They somehow forget that 2 million direct Canadian jobs are dependent upon continued access to U.S. markets.

To move a little closer to home and the benefits to Atlantic Canada—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. McCurdy: In listening to the reading by the Hon. Member, my attention was drawn to Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, Citation 309, which states:

> (1) It is a rule in both Houses of Parliament that a Member must address the House orally, and not read from a written, previously prepared speech. Bourinot, p. 335.
> (2) On April 19, 1886, a resolution was adopted by the House, which reads:
>
> "That the growing practice in the Canadian House of Commons of delivering speeches of great length, having the character of carefully and elaborately prepared written essays, and indulging in voluminous and often irrelevant extracts, is destructive of legitimate and pertinent debate upon public questions, is a waste of valuable time—

Mr. Lewis: Which is what you are doing right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has listened with a lot of attention to the Hon. Member reading a rule which, according to the year he was mentioning, seems slightly archaic to me. Many people have been using notes. I am sure that the Hon. Member is really for debate, as are all Hon. Members in this House. As we were reminded a few moments ago, there is very little time left for debating this Bill. I am sure that the Hon. Member will want everyone who can speak at this time to speak. Therefore, we will not waste any more time on archaic points of order.

The Hon. Member for South West Nova.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Comeau (South West Nova): Madam Speaker, I am just using copious notes anyway, and if the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) does not like comments about his great leader from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), what can we do about it? That's his problem!

[English]

Members of the NDP like to dish it out, but they cannot take it.

Returning to my precious notes, I wish to refer to the benefits that will accrue to Atlantic Canadians. First, it will give us more assured and improved access to American markets and an end to the continued trade harassment which has been affecting industries in Atlantic Canada for the past few years.

If the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville were to check with his Atlantic Canadian colleagues, he would know that every two or three years the American fishermen come after us and attempt to place countervail on our fish. Under the free trade agreement, it will be much more difficult for American fishermen to come after our fishermen and attempt to take away our markets.

By removing the tariffs on processed goods that we export, we can do more value-added processing, thereby creating jobs in fish plants, saw mills, farms, and manufacturing facilities. We have shipped our raw resources long enough. With the removal of tariffs on processed fish, we will be able to produce consumer ready products such as TV dinners, adding value in Canada and creating jobs in Atlantic Canada.

It does not stop with fish. We will be able to use our vegetables from our farms in TV dinners. The value adding plants will require construction workers, electricians, plumbers, and repair people. As far as the NDP is concerned, this will create jobs in Atlantic Canada and we cannot have Atlantic Canada enjoying some prosperity. The NDP is against Atlantic Canadians.

The energy provisions of the agreement will assist hydrocarbon and energy development in Atlantic Canada. Security of access and stronger foreign investment guarantees will spur exploration and development of Atlantic Canada's energy resource base.

The socialists have painted a picture of doom and gloom, a picture of what they say are the three evils of the Government. Those three evils are: privatization, deregulation, and free trade.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Comeau: They are saying "right on". They are against privatization, deregulation, and free trade. This means that they support the opposite. They are for nationalization or state control of business, regulation, and central planning by the NDP, and finally, if they are against free trade, they are against trade. Simply stated, they want increased state bureaucratic and political intervention in the market-place, more central planning from Ottawa, and the creation of more Crown corporations.

• (2110)

The opposite of a national free trade policy is isolation, protectionism, and no trade. It means building a fortress Canada, insular and paranoid. Even socialist Russia has realized that centralized bureaucratic planning and intervention in the market-place is inefficient. It leads to low wages, low standards of living, food shortages, and long line-ups. You would think that Canadian socialists would learn from the experience of their socialist counterparts in the U.S.S.R. Business and entrepreneurship are dirty words to the socialists and the big union leadership.

We have heard the anti-American rhetoric. We saw the sheer anger when Margaret Thatcher said it like it was, when she dared to say the truth in the House of Commons about free trade and NATO. We all know what will happen if the NDP and the Liberals form a coalition Government. They will be against trade, against NATO, and they will drive this country into the ground.

I appreciate the opportunity, Madam Speaker, to have said a few words.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister of Trade on a point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, the Hon. Minister of State.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, that is about the only thing I have not done in the last week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If I may, I want to apologize for the slip of the tongue at this late hour. I certainly did not intend to put a cabinet shuffle in motion at this point. The Hon. Minister of State for the Treasury Board.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, it has just been pointed out to me by the Whip of the Official Opposition that I made my first error as Deputy House Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: This morning when I suggested, because all Parties had discussed the matter, that we would defer all recorded divisions until tomorrow at 6 p.m., I unfortunately said "the final recorded division".

Mr. Prud'homme: Stick to it.

Mr. Lewis: It was the intention of the House that we would give as much time as possible for debate today and this evening. Therefore, I would like to correct the record and have it read that "there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to the final recorded divisions on Bill C-130", which would, under the rules, take place at 9.45 p.m. tonight. I think you will find unanimous consent to defer the recorded divisions on second reading of Bill C-130 until 6 p.m. tomorrow evening.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, since I was brought on to the scene, I did bring the matter to the attention of the Hon. Minister. He has my copy which I underlined for him. This morning the Minister made a Freudian slip. It was clear to me that he wanted the final recorded division, but later on he said "the last recorded division". There was no "s" to make the word plural. I took it that it was the main motion that would be put tomorrow night and that we would deal, as we did this morning, with any subamendments or amendments that were before the House prior adjourning tonight. I thought that was the disposition.

Tomorrow, we will be debating Bill C-72 if I understand correctly. Maybe the Minister could confirm that to me. If we are, there may be several votes if the amendments are still on the books. I think it could be a very long evening. He is just adding to tomorrow night's voting patterns.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I must tell you that I also read the Order Paper for the House this morning, and it is just like—because the Minister knows that it must be unanimous, anyway. That is what I understood this morning, that we would hold all the votes on amendments this evening, today, but that the final recorded division would be tomorrow night. So I do not see why we do not dispose of all the other minor votes, the subamendments, this evening, as we did today. I am just repeating what our whip said.

Now, if my whip, not the house leader, but my whip tells me that he agrees, I will give my support, but I still want to say very clearly that this is not what we agreed on today.

I am looking at my whip there and he is busy talking. If my whip tells me that he agrees, I will agree with my whip, but otherwise, I will not give my support. But if my whip tells me that he understood it could be done, I will gladly do so.

[English]

Make it the final recorded division.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: To respond to the invitation of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), I have only one request and a modest one at that. I would like to ask the Government and the New Democratic Party to give the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who is sitting here in the House, who is waiting very patiently and would like to take part in the debate, a chance to speak. If the House agrees to let the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides speak for the ten minutes he is allowed before we adjourn this evening, I will agree to the changes proposed by the Minister.

[English]

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I confirm what the Deputy House Leader has said, that we will be voting on the free trade legislation tomorrow before report stage on Bill C-72. That was the understanding and agreement at the House Leaders' meeting today, I am told by the House Leader of our Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Maybe it is the late hour, but things still seem a little confused. I suggest that we continue with debate and maybe the House Leaders can get together and come up with a final decision to help the Chair.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, didn't I make it very plain? Anything clearer than that would be Calabogie spring water.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: The Government proposes that all divisions be deferred until tomorrow night at 6 p.m. We accept that on one condition, namely, that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has a chance to make his 10-minute contribution to the debate today.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If points of order are put aside, we will have time to hear at least one Member from each of the Parties before adjournment. We would hear first the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville, followed by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier said that there was agreement, as long as the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides was heard tonight. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville has the floor now, and I will come to the other Hon. Member a little later.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661) and of Mr. Young (p. 17089).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, I should not have thought it possible that over a century of struggle of this nation to maintain its independence would end with the fulfilment of the American notion of a manifest destiny within the House of Commons of Canada.

I talk as one who loves his country and not as one who is anti-American. As a matter of fact, my colleague to my right and I participated over the last three weeks in a joint celebration between the Cities of Detroit and Windsor celebrating our friendship, celebrating our mutual independence, and honouring our differences. Those who would allege that those of us opposed to this particular deal are anti-American ought to recognize that from where I come we have cousins, uncles, sisters, and brothers on the other side of the river. We marry and have children that are often American, as my children are. My wife is American. Let us not engage in allegations that because we stand for the preservation of a Canada that we love that we are anti-American.

Canada is a rich and a wonderful country, richly endowed with many natural resources becoming increasingly a nation that reflects the many peoples of the world. It is a country that perhaps can be described as one of the most civilized, if not the most civilized of the world, because it pursues not just the prosperity and the enrichment of the few but has a total commitment to social justice that marks us as different from many other nations of the western world. But because we are civilized and richly endowed does not mean that we have done all that we could have done.

Historically the many natural resources that we have had have been traded off to Europe, to Great Britain, to our neighbour to the south, and to Japan. We have done so with fair rewards and a fair degree of comfort, but those resources were traded off at the cost of jobs that might have been created in Canada if we had appropriately exploited the comparative advantages of our rich endowment of natural resources, including energy. It is historically true that those who in the past were willing to enrich themselves grandly by sacrificing jobs that might have been created to enrich a small portion of the population of the past, constitute the same sector of our society that would now perpetuate Canada as a resource source for our neighbours to the south.

Canada must now face a world that has changed tremendously, a world in which we understand that Canada must be much more open than it has been in the past, in order to compete effectively in a free trade environment.

Let me dismiss another allegation that is addressed to us who are opposed to this deal, who are opposed to free trade, that we are afraid of competing. It has been said by those who advocate this deal that there are going to be certain losses, certain sacrifices, in order to achieve long-term gain.

I would say that if the Canadian people are to suffer losses in order to achieve long-term gain, then let it be at the price of the sacrifice that must be made to maintain our independence, and not to give away a country that is a rising star to a nation that is a falling star. There is no doubt that critical changes must take place. Surely those changes should not be constituted in giving away the comparative advantage which our resources present us. They should not be on the basis of conceding our energy resources that could give us the ability to compete in a variety of areas with the rest of the world. They should not be at the expense of giving away our industry to those in the south. They should not be at the cost of allowing the acquisition of our businesses and our industries without being able to impose even those minimal and nevertheless yet costly conditions that we were able to apply when we entered into the Auto Pact.

We have heard a lot of talk about the Auto Pact. I do not want to enter into a long discussion about the Auto Pact in particular, but there is one thing that characterizes this deal clearly, namely, benefits. I would say that the Auto Pact was flawed, but nevertheless the benefits which it provided in terms of an assured level of production in Canada and jobs therefor have been excluded by this deal.

What other nation would give away its comparative advantages? What other nation would give away over the long run control over its financial institutions? One would have to be a pretty crude idiot not to understand that those who ultimately control the financial institutions of the country determine where investment will take place.

What kind of a country would state what no other countries in the world have done, because they recognize the neocolonials aspect of it, that our service industries will be open to Americans on an equal basis with Canadians?

We understand that the elements of information and so on constitute the mode of control of nations. Even Third World countries understand that concessions with respect to the service industries are concessions with respect to ultimate sovereignty.

The future of this country does not reside in becoming part of the continental divine mission of the United States. Our future must reside in Canada driving a hole in its future, takings its competitive advantages, its cheap energy and its resources and building from them the industries that will create jobs, not just for the Canadians who are here but for the Canadians who should be encouraged to come here in the future. Canada should have as its century the 21st century because we present a different kind of model from that of our neighbour to the south.

There are those who argue that somehow Ontario is trying to resist the opportunities that would lie in the future for the West and the East in this free trade deal. In 10 minutes I will not be left with very much time to examine an issue of this sort in great detail. I would ask those in Alberta and Saskatchewan whether they have seen that North and South Dakota and Wyoming have become the industrial giants that the Conservative Government says that they will be. I ask those in the Maritimes whether they really think that becoming more like Maine will make them more prosperous. Will the fate of this country and the fate of those regions reside where so many Canadians have told us over and over again? They want control of their economic future in their hands. They do not want an ACOA that is controlled from Ottawa, nor do they want an economy that is controlled from New York or Washington. They want the opportunity to shape their own fate.

If there is an alternative to the free trade deal, certainly it must be admitted that that future will not be gained without struggle, without sacrifice. The struggle and the sacrifice is to ensure the future of a country that has so much to offer.

We have said repeatedly that we must allow those in the regions to control their own regional economical development by decision making at the local level. We must make it possible for every community to shape its future through the financial resources and the expertise necessary, but we must recognize that this country is going to be competing in a knowledge based world economy. The Government is selling this country down the river if it truly believes that it can achieve the kind of innovation and the production of new products that this country will need if it intends to compete in the future. We are robbing our children of their future.

There are who say there will be job losses in the textile industry and in the service industry over the short term, but the real sacrifice will be the loss to Canada of the opportunities that this land offers us and the opportunities to shape a new model for the world about what a country can do if it pursues not just prosperity but social justice.

I do not want the cities of Canada to look like Detroit, New York, or Chicago with a market oriented philosophy, allowing the kind of degradation that that kind of market-driven philosophy which the Reagans and the Thatchers have allowed. Let us retain our independence. I stand with the majority of Canadians who are firmly against this deal, and in the future will be a majority of Canadians as demonstrated in an election. I dare those people over there to do two things: Read the agreement and then go talk about it to the electorate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take a few minutes to speak to Bill C-130, which deals with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Ten minutes are of course hardly enough to address all the aspects of a Bill that contains so many pages and schedules and so forth. I will therefore concentrate on two issues that are of particular concern to me: agriculture and energy. Within these two sectors, I would like to deal with some very specific questions, namely marketing boards for agricultural products, including supply management, and our food processing industries which are located across Canada, including a number in the province I represent, the province of Quebec.

Madam Speaker, the Government has been saying that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement does not in any way affect Canada's supply management policy, what we call supply management marketing boards. Government Members maintain that article 710 of the agreement allows both governments to set up marketing boards and to maintain existing ones. They maintain that this is consistent with our obligations under GATT, where article XI allows the creation of such boards.

However, it is extremely difficult to reconcile article 710 of the agreement with other articles in the same agreement, for instance article 703, which invites the parties, Canada and the United States, to improve access to their respective markets by eliminating tariff barriers and other barriers to imports. Furthermore, section 3 of the Bill provides that the purpose of this legislation is "to eliminate barriers to trade in goods and services between Canada and the United States". And this is followed by a whole series of objectives.

So how do you reconcile Article 710, which seems to allow some marketing boards, with the restrictions of Article 703 and clause 3 of the Bill, which seek to eliminate these tariff and non-tariff barriers?

Since, as we saw in the debates in the U.S. House of Representatives and Senate, the United States considers marketing boards to be barriers limiting the imports of American products into Canada, we are entitled to wonder whether we can set up such boards or after the process of harmonization, whether existing marketing boards can resist the pressure from the Americans, who will certainly use Article 703 of the agreement and Section 3 of the Canadian legislation to try to eliminate these barriers that marketing boards and supply management are in their view. Personally, I believe that as it is written, the agreement that was signed, as well as Bill C-130 that is being considered, will limit Canada's ability to set up marketing boards and to control supply. And this seems to fit in—this concern is found in the articles I mentioned and it is consistent with the spirit in which the Bill and the agreement seem to have been written, in particular the interpretation given by American legislators to these articles I just mentioned.

Also, clause 8(2) of Bill C-130 stipulates that "no person shall—do any act, exercise any power or carry on any practice that is inconsistent with or contravenes this Act or any regulation made under this Act, or the Agreement." In other words, this clause stipulates that marketing boards may no longer exercise their present powers if they are contrary to this agreement, for example, by limiting imports. But that is not all! In practice, the policy of controlling agricultural production results in slightly higher prices, as we see for milk, eggs and poultry. So these marketing boards, especially with supply management and limits on imports, make prices a little higher in Canada. In a way, this is the price we pay for greater stability in agricultural production, which protects the family farm and the income of family farm operators.

The sector that will be hardest hit by the agreement is certainly the whole food processing industry.

To survive, that sector will bring pressure to bear on the Government to do away with marketing boards or prevent the creation of new boards, but it will press even harder on governments to prevent quota limits or again the imposition of new import quotas which would reduce imports from the United States. The Canadian processing industry has said on several occasions that if the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement comes into force and if marketing boards and supply management are maintained it will be forced to set up shop in the United States to take advantage of the lower cost of American basic products. Should the food processing industry choose to leave, the related agricultural industries will also disappear. In other words, the FTA will make it even harder to establish marketing boards.

Madam Speaker, the agricultural sector is bound to be hit the hardest, and if that is not in the short term it will be in the medium term because for the processing plants the result of the gradual quota increase will be that the entire organization of production which Canada took 18 years to set up under various governments might be eliminated in the time required to harmonize Canadian and American programs.

That is why I will vote against Bill C-130, Madam Speaker, and I urge all Members from rural ridings, not only in Quebec but throughout Canada, to insist and pressure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister responsible for this Bill so that they secure much tougher guarantees not only for the short term but for the medium term as well.

The other part of the agreement I want to talk about is Chapter 9 of Section 904 dealing with energy and stating that in times of short supply, Canada would be able to limit its exportation of energy products, providing that such export restrictions do not reduce the proportion exported to the United States prior to the imposition of the restriction.

In other words, the energy problem of Canada is subjected to a guarantee as far as exports are concerned, a proportional guarantee which would apply whenever Canada would be forced to reduce its domestic consumption as well as its exports because of short supply.

So, you see, Madam Speaker, we find ourselves in a situation somewhat similar to that of a farmer producing, let's say, 10 sacks of potatoes, and eating 5 sacks a year. Our farmer goes to his neighbour and says, "I have five sacks too many. If you want to buy them, I'll export them." Now, let's assume that the following year, for some reasons, there is a short supply or a drought, and our farmer produces only five sacks of potatoes. Since he himself needs five sacks a year, he would go to his neighbour and tell him, "Sorry, but this year I don't have anything to sell. Because of the short supply, I won't export." But under the agreement, Madam Speaker, in terms of energy products, if I go back to my example, Canada would not be able to reduce the proportion exported due to short supply unless we cut down our own consumption by 50 per cent, in order to sell the other 50% to the United States. For my potato producer, that would mean that although he has only produced five sacks instead of ten and needs five sacks for his family, he would still have to sell two and a half sacks to his neighbour.

That is the meaning of Article 904, Chapter 9, in the Trade Agreement concerning energy shortages. The government maintains that this article is in accordance with the Emergency Oil Sharing System which Canada adhered to in 1974 through the International Energy Agency.

However, a study of the matter reveals that obviously the trade agreement goes much farther than the Emergency Oil Sharing System and differs from it on several points. Firstly, the international agreement signed in 1974 only concerns oil while the Trade Agreement covers as well electricity, natural gas, etc.

Secondly, Madam Speaker, energy products are not the only products involved.

You are indicating to me that my time is up, Madam Speaker. What a pity that, on such an important agreement, we should be held to the 10-minute deadline.

Madam Speaker, I am sure that, if Canadians and, in particular, businessmen like me who agree with the principle of freer trade and farmers for that matter, took the time to read the bill, their perceptions would change radically. The more the people read it, the better they understand it, the more they're against it. That is why the governement has chosen to limit the debate because, as we go into details about the bill's provisions, Canadians will realize the seriousness of this agreement and will condemn it in much greater numbers than the polls presently show. I invite people to take a closer look at this agreement and the bill implementing it.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, there have been further discussions among the Parties, and I think you would find unanimous consent that all final recorded divisions on Bill C-130 which would normally take place under the rules at 9.45 p.m. tonight would be deferred until 6 p.m. tomorrow evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the remarks of the Hon. Minister of State. Is there unanimous consent for that?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, just to make sure that I understand, the Standing Order says that the Speaker must interrupt the proceedings at a quarter to ten. It is now forty-seven minutes before the hour of ten. I take it that that does not modify in any way Standing Order 117, and that the Minister is proposing that at 15 minutes to 10 p.m. the Speaker will interrupt proceedings, put the questions to the House, and whatever happens after that will be deferred to tomorrow at 6 p.m.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Madam Speaker, if in fact there is a recorded division requested, it will be deferred until 6 p.m. tomorrow.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, it seems to me unfortunate that if there is unanimous agreement that the vote will be tomorrow there cannot be an extension of the debate until 10 o'clock to permit the last few arguments to be put in this attempt by the Conservatives to cut debate to a minimum on this major issue facing the country.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) seek the floor?

Mr. Prud'homme: I am sorry, but there have been so many orders from the House . . . I am sorry, Madam Speaker, please be patient, it is almost over. But I cannot speak on my point of order if you are standing, since that is against the rules.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I first asked the question to the Hon. Member to find out if he wished to have the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: It was concerning a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: I think that it would help, Madam Speaker, if I said in answering my colleague from the NDP that section 117 of the Standing Orders is very clear on that point. There have been orders from the House. If we start changing everything in this House that the Honourable Minister has been helping us to understand, there will be no end in sight. There is a section of the Standing Orders which is called section 117. The Honourable Minister has made concessions. My colleague the whip has accepted. The new Democratic Party has accepted, but I realize that it is 9.45 p.m. So I would think that my point of order . . .

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 9.45 p.m., pursuant to Order made in accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 117 on Monday, July 4, 1988, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill.

The first question is on the amendment of Mr. Young. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to agreement reached earlier this day, the recorded division and the putting of the questions on the amendment and the main motion stand deferred until 6 p.m., Wednesday, July 6, 1988.

It being 9.48 p.m., pursuant to Order made June 23, 1988, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 9.48 p.m.
