The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the rescue with another promise—he will insist that the provinces use federal funds for education. In the meantime, what about the sins of his Government which is draining $1.5 billion from post-secondary funding?

When will the federal Government take the lead so both it and the provinces treat post-secondary education as an investment in Canada's future? When will the rhetoric stop and the broken promises end? When will the Government stop playing games with the future of our young people and act to ensure the only route to a competitive future is a well educated population?

PORTUGUESE NATIONAL HOLIDAY

TRIBUTE TO FELLOW CITIZENS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, this week, more specifically next Friday, everywhere in Canada and especially in the wonderful riding of LaSalle-Émard, people will be celebrating Portugal's national holiday. Our sizeable Portuguese-Canadian community has preserved and enhanced its rich, ancestral traditions, to the delight of those Canadians who appreciate the benefits of Canadian multiculturalism.

Mr. Speaker, I hope our Portuguese immigrants who have given us such marvellous families will have a wonderful day, which will be a time for joyful reminiscing.

Our fellow citizens from Portugal, from the Algarve coast, the beaches of Estoril, and the Douro valley, have found a new home along the banks of Lachine Rapids, and we hope they will accept our best wishes on their national holiday.

IMMIGRATION

SPONSORSHIP OF ADOPTED CHILDREN AND OF GRANDPARENTS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for some time now the Government has been making promises to the immigrant community to have a more generous policy of family reunification. Yet we find out from lawyers in Winnipeg that the Department of Immigration is presently making it much more difficult for families to sponsor adopted children, parents, and grandparents. The Department is putting roadblocks in the way when the Immigration Appeal Board has already said that these roadblocks must be removed.

It is time for the Government not only to make promises to immigrants, but to take some action and tell the Department that, when the Immigration Appeal Board says it is okay to sponsor a relative, the Department ought to allow it to happen.

HOUSING

THE ELDERLY

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian population is aging all the time and according to statistics, it is predicted that in 2030, one Canadian in four will be 65 or older.

This results in a growing problem of housing for the elderly. It is not realistic to uproot someone from his community when he reaches retirement age. It is unthinkable to break the family ties between young people and their grandparents on the pretext of giving them security.

Mr. Speaker, on the contrary, other solutions to this problem must be found. The nuclear family, this bond between young and old, must be preserved. This wisdom that comes with years must be put to use.

I ask the Minister responsible for housing to deal with this important issue and to discharge his responsibilities by issuing the appropriate orders to CMHC to develop programs and make them available to beneficiaries.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. This weekend the Government's own Ambassador to the United Nations, Mr. Stephen Lewis, joined the succession of other important voices such as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, the former Chief of Staff, Mr. Thériault, the Ambassador for Disarmament, Mr. Roche, and other leading defence specialists, in condemning the Government's decision to proceed with the purchase of a fleet of nuclear submarines, especially at a time when the superpowers themselves are engaging in important efforts to disarm their nuclear arsenals.

Will the Government finally admit that this costly and ill-considered nuclear sub program is the wrong initiative and there are far more constructive and productive ways for Canada to secure its security and provide for the defence of the sovereignty of our nation? Is it not time that the Government admitted, considering this overwhelming evidence and contradiction of its own officials, that it has embarked on the wrong course?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, with reference to that question, I believe Ambassador Lewis himself, during his speech on Saturday to the Congress of International Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War, noted he was "neutered" until August 1, but that he endorses everything Mr. Broadbent said about the plan to acquire nuclear submarines. Well, while he was neutered, he was endorsing a neutered policy. It is not our policy. This is a private opinion of the Ambassador to the United Nations who had noted that his term was drawing to a close—

Mr. Broadbent: Like yours.

Mr. Orlikow: You have a few more months than he does.

Mr. Crosbie: The term of the NDP has never come and never will, Mr. Speaker.

Ambassador Lewis' views and ours on this question do not coincide. We believe, and we advocate, that Canada should have the means to defend its territorial sovereignty. We should be in the position to exercise control over the Arctic. We can do this with the nuclear propelled submarine policy outlined in our defence White Paper. We are going to stick to it. We will put the question clearly before the Canadian people and see if they want the neutered policy of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Broadbent: Do that!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if it is the Minister's conclusion that the Ambassador of the UN is neutered because he is coming to the end of his term, I suggest that puts him in exactly the same position as the Minister himself.

COST OF SUBMARINE PROGRAM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question on the same topic to the Minister of Finance. Last Thursday in the House in response to a question put by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, the Minister of Finance said that the precise numbers on the cost of submarines would be compiled after the country of origin for the submarines is chosen. That was compounded by statements by members of the Department of Defence admitting the $6 billion of operating costs have not been included in their estimates, so that no one knows what the final exact cost will be.

Is this a new way for the Government to do business, to make a decision before it even knows what the costs will be? Is that not a foolhardy and unwise way to proceed with a major expenditure of taxpayers' dollars on an ill-founded policy when the Government does not even know what the cost will be? Is it not time the Minister of Finance stepped in and took some control of this matter and tried to save this country from a disastrous decision?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is drawing too precise conclusions to things that have been said. What we are facing right now is a decision on the country of origin for the submarine purchase. We have a fairly good idea of the cost of this program at this point. It is not until you can get into the detailed discussions, which come only after you make the decision on country of origin, that you are able to define the cost of the program with the degree of precision that would be necessary before a final decision is taken. That is the position we are in right now.

• (1420)

Mr. Axworthy: That reminds me of that saying, "What's a billion or two", Mr. Speaker. Is that the new position of the Finance Minister?

POSITION OF AMBASSADOR TO UNITED STATES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister speaking for the Prime Minister.

A speech this weekend by Ambassador Lewis to the United Nations, I think it would be fair to say, has left considerable confusion on the question of the Government's foreign policy. The Ambassador over the last four years has accepted and articulated government policy on a wide range of issues from nuclear arms to foreign aid. Either the Government has radically changed its position, or the Ambassador has decided that the policies no longer warrant his support.

If the Ambassador's statement of this weekend on such crucial matters as Cruise missile testing, foreign aid, and nuclear subs does not contradict the Government's position, and considering he is one of the chief spokespersons for government foreign policy, does this not call into question the entire premises of that foreign policy, causing major confusion and doubt on the part of other countries and our allies as to exactly what the foreign policy of this Government really is?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt whatever about what our foreign policy is, particularly in this area. I quote from the Canadian Press report of this story. It reads:

> Mr. Lewis stretched the bounds normally observed by Canadian diplomats, who are supposed to stay out of domestic politics.

Mr. Lewis is an Ambassador and his job is to carry out the policy of the Government. In these remarks he was neither articulating the policy of the Government nor carrying it out. As he said himself, he is > —entitled to a little bravery at the eleventh hour of his tenure.

I would have thought he might be entitled to a little bravery throughout his tenure, Mr. Speaker, and that he should keep the rules in mind for the remainder of his tenure as our representative at the United Nations, so this kind of advantage cannot be taken of him or of us by the Official Opposition.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

COMMITTEE REPORT ON SERVICE CHARGES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, My question is for the Minister of Finance. Now that the Minister has received the Standing Committee's report on financial service charges, is it his intention to facilitate passage of the Private Member's Bill introduced this morning, or to introduce government legislation?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that this report has just been tabled. It is a very good report. As she knows, we have waited for some while with some anticipation for the report.

What I would like to do with my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, is to review the propositions in the report. At that point we can make a decision as to how we might proceed from here.

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the publicity about the report has focused on charges by banks, but the report itself deals with all financial institutions regulated by the Government of Canada.

Is the Minister able to say that whatever measures he takes will be applied not only to banks but to other federally regulated institutions?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that that is a logical question that the Hon. Member might want to ask. Again I would say a response would be premature.

We want to look at the implications that that might have as far as provincially regulated institutions in the same field of business, such as trust companies, are concerned. As I indicated in my first response, we are quite interested in the conclusions that have been drawn here. I do not want to make any early statement for fear of prejudging what a more considered point of view might be. It is something we will be studying at some length, and we will be back to the House at an early date with some response.

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—ARCTIC SURVEILLANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance who, I understand, is playing a part in the review of the reckless and costly nuclear submarine decision.

The Minister knows that military experts in Europe, Canada and the United States have all said that when it comes to surveillance in the Arctic there is a much more effective, much less costly way, of going about it than embarking on, as I say, a reckless and much more costly decision of having nuclear submarines.

Since the Minister is involved in a reassessment of the policy over-all, will he confirm that for every $1 billion that would be saved on nuclear submarines, we would have enough money to support 250,000 child care spaces for one year, 10,000 hospital beds for one year, 40,000 transitional homes for one year, and we could feed one million of Canada's poor children one lunch a day for three years? There is an alternative use of $1 billion in each of those items. Would the Minister confirm that those estimates are accurate and, in so doing, would he add his voice to sanity and say that he will oppose this reckless and irresponsible submarine decision?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have learned from three and a half years of hard experience never to take the Hon. Member's figures at face value. They are normally twisted out of some measure of reality, going back to the very first time he opened his mouth in this Parliament and said that we would lose 200,000 jobs because of actions we were taking. Clearly we did not lose 200,000 jobs. We gained many, many hundred thousand more than that.

I think the proposals that have been set out in the defence White Paper stand for themselves. They are the result of a very extensive review by the Government, working with the Department of National Defence and the military advisers, on the approach that we should be taking as a Government. I think the Hon. Member will understand that those questions are more appropriately put to the Minister of National Defence who will be back in the House shortly.

INDIAN RESERVES—SOCIAL CONDITIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Minister of National Defence will have the information we want on alternative spending in the social field, for example. Again, the Minister has been cited as one of those who is trying to bring some common sense to cabinet decisions.

At a time when we have in virtually every Indian reserve in Canada what can only be described as disgusting and unacceptable poverty, at a time when there are one million Canadian children in poverty, at a time when we have a need for child care spaces, at a time when there are all kinds of real social needs that have to be met, why does the Government not embark on a sensible surveillance military policy and use the saved billions of dollars for needed social spending in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member understands the importance of balance in public policy. The Hon. Member has mentioned our spending on Indian affairs, and I should point out to him that that has increased by 42 per cent since we came into office.

What we have done, on a range of social policy initiatives that I have outlined many times in the House, speaks for itself. Just to remind the Hon. Member, I will tell him that we have increased the child tax credit, we have provided for the prepayment of the child tax credit, we have introduced a refundable sales tax credit, and we have introduced a number of changes that have improved the lives of veterans.

The changes we have made in a range of social policy areas have, I think, been a good balance between what is needed on the economic development side, on the regional development side, on the international affairs side, and on the side of defence policy, all of which combined represent what is needed in good government.

It is very easy for the Hon. Member to pull out of the air some ideas that he would like to put into operation, something which he probably will never get a chance to do, so I understand his frustration in that way. I think it is important to look at the balance and recognize that we are coming off a period when the defence affairs of this country were seriously neglected.

We are trying to generate a greater degree of balance so that the men and women who represent us in the Armed Forces know that they will be properly equipped and that there is a Government that stands behind them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that what is being objected to is wasteful spending. He knows that Canadian military experts as well as British, French, and American have said that this nuclear submarine policy is an absurd one, and Canadians understand that.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is simply this: Would the Minister confirm that the Government is now considering its options on this policy? Is it possible that the Canadian Government intends to reverse its policy and to adopt an approach that does not include purchasing nuclear submarines?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know who the Hon. Member is trying to fool. His colleague sitting right beside him said a matter of weeks ago that the NDP would not introduce nuclear submarines but would put that same amount of money into surface vessels.

Mr. Broadbent: Not the same amount.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The NDP Leader is saying they were not going to cut back on the defence budget.

Mr. Broadbent: He did not say that.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You cannot have it both ways. You say you don't want to have nuclear submarines but you want to keep defence spending at the same levels. You cannot fool the Canadian people, they are too smart for that.

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED GRANTING OF REFUGEE STATUS TO NICARAGUAN CONTRA REBELS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration. It concerns today's reports that Nicaraguan Contra rebels requested and received refugee status in Canada as early as last year.

Following statements made last November by the Secretary of State for External Affairs who said that Canada might have to admit Contra rebels as refugees, the Minister for External Relations assured this House on November 24, in response to questions from the Opposition, that:

> We have never admitted terrorists or persons guilty of war crimes, and that policy will not change.

Two days later in the House the then Minister of Immigration said:

> —all those accused of violence, whoever they are, will not be accepted.

I ask the Minister a very simple and straightforward question. Why did the Government break its commitment to the House and Canadians by allowing Contra rebels to enter this country when many of them have horrible records of human rights violation and, as such, violate Section 19 of the Minister's Immigration Act?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, I stand by those statements made by my colleague. As the Hon. Member knows, these cases are all considered case by case. People with war crimes records and terrorist records are not considered as refugees in Canada.

The best way to resolve this is through the proposals we have before the House in our two Bills. They will help keep out claimants who should not be here. In the meantime, we continue to look at each case on a case by case basis wherever they are from. As the Hon. Member knows, this is only one of the countries with which we have some difficulties.

Mr. Marchi: The statements of the Minister of State for External Affairs and the then Minister of Immigration fly in the face of government policy and the Immigration Act which makes these individuals inadmissible. That is not to suggest they should not be helping legitimate refugees. The Minister irresponsibly ignores that very important point.

PASSPORT FORGERIES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, regarding the network of passport forgeries which facilitates the entry of these Contra rebels, the Minister's senior immigration official, Jean Roberge, said:

> —we don't see that as a major federal offence as far as Canada is concerned.

How can the Government justify an official position which essentially condones this criminal activity? Since the Government knew of this plot since April, why has it not halted this operation, which is clearly illegal under existing legislation, and brought these culprits to justice?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it is I who speak for the Government and this Department and I do take this very seriously, and so does the Solicitor General. In fact, there have been international meetings as recently as last week in which the Solicitor General was involved, which included the very large international problem of false documentation. We do take this very seriously and it relates once again not just to Nicaragua but to people who are in the country. He can see by the police action on the weekend that we do take these things very seriously. I am getting a little tired of the Hon. Member suggesting that I do not take my job seriously.

FINANCE

CREATION OF FINANCIAL SERVICES OMBUDSMAN POSITION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has just tabled its report, which concludes that consumers' frustrations and anger with the banks are founded and justified. Will the Minister immediately follow up on the Committee's recommendations and more particularly on those contained in the NDP's report, which called for creating the position of financial services ombudsman, whose role would be to act as a referee?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have essentially responded to the Hon. Member's question. I indicated we will study the report of the committee in detail. I had a quick read through it already but I want to reflect further on it before I make any statements. That particular comment must apply to the question the Hon. Member just posed.

SUGGESTED FREEZE ON SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, in the report tabled today the committee clearly comes down on the side of consumers who complained vociferously to the committee and this House that they have been dinged and donged on bank service charges. The one thing missing in the report was any immediate redress for Canadian consumers.

Is the Minister prepared to consider in a positive way the recommendation of NDP members of the committee that there be a freeze on bank service charges for one year in light of the fact that the Royal Bank has already done that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the point of view expressed. I think we have all had such representations from our constituents. I have indicated a few times in response to questions that we were looking forward to the work that the committee was doing on the question of bank charges to give us some guidance on how we might proceed. However, I am sure the Hon. Member is not so impatient that he would expect I would have an immediate considered response in a matter of two or three hours after the report is tabled.

For that reason I think he will understand that we want to review this carefully. We do not want to delay long in coming up with conclusions, and I am sure, once that is done, the point of view expressed, the importance of the interests of the consumer, will be taken into account in arriving at our conclusions.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

CITIZENSHIP APPLICATIONS—DELAY IN PROCESSING SECURITY CLEARANCES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. Is it true that those applying for Canadian citizenship now have to wait up to a year to receive their security clearances before they can become Canadian citizens? Is it also true that there is such a backlog of people waiting for security clearances that applicants in the family immigrant class are no longer being added to the waiting list by CSIS?

If that is true, when in Heaven's name are we going to do something about it?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quite correct in that there certainly is a delay with the processing of security clearances. We are certainly well aware of the problem and we have taken a number of steps to try to alleviate the situation, such as doubling the number of CSIS officers assigned to the screening process. We are reviewing the requests for security processing.

I would point out that in the past year we have had an unprecedented number of requests with respect to Le sommet de la Francophonie, the Commonwealth Conference, the Calgary Olympics, and the Toronto Economic Summit. For example, for the Calgary Olympics alone we had to process an additional 50,000 clearances. Indeed, we are aware of the problem, we are working on it, and we hope to have it resolved within the next several months.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CHICKEN IMPORTS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Last week we heard that the United States health care companies will be able to come into Canada and take over health care clinics here.

There is a report today in the press that the Prime Minister's trade deal will allow an additional two million chickens to come into Canada, raised under unsanitary conditions compared to those in Canada, and carrying high levels of residues of antibiotics.

Why is the Government endangering the health of Canadians by massively increasing the imports of this poultry carrying high levels of residues of antibiotics?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman has been in a knowledgeable position for a long enough period to know that the free trade deal does nothing of the sort. The only thing done under the free trade deal was to increase the quota of U.S. chickens allowed into Canada from 6.3 per cent to 7.5 per cent of Canadian production because it turned out that that was the quota level of the average of the last five years. In other words, what is permitted is what has been the average permitted under our quota system of the last five years.

The supply management system in connection with chickens remains in effect. Our health standards remain in effect. The whole situation remains unchanged. The Hon. Member knows that full well and should not attempt to spread a canard about the chicken situation.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade knows that the drafting instructions by the two congressional committees call for the administration to remove all barriers to imports of Canadian food as soon as possible. He also knows that when that happens that will allow a flood of poultry meat to come into Canada.

This morning a press report quotes Dr. Tom Feltmate of Agriculture Canada as saying that virtually no testing of antibiotics in U.S. poultry coming into Canada is carried out.

Why is the Minister increasing these imports? He knows that the recommendation of the United States congressional committees on the free trade deal is to remove all those barriers. Why is he playing Russian roulette with Canadians' health?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is this kind of gross exaggeration, completely bizarre exaggeration, which so damages the opponents of the free trade agreement. The free trade agreement does not permit an increase in the number of chickens being imported into Canada. The quota system remains in full effect. Our supply management system and the quota system remain in full effect.

Some Hon. Members: Not true.

Some Hon. Members: Wrong.

Mr. Crosbie: The attempt to yell me down doesn't change the truth. The truth stands no matter how much hon. gentlemen opposite cackle about chicken or whatever they want to cackle about.

I repeat that the quota level set is the quota that has in actual fact been the average of the last five years. No amount of obfuscation or bizarre misrepresentation can change that.

Oral Questions

IMMIGRATION

SELECTION OF GUATEMALAN AND NICARAGUAN REFUGEES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows from her Department's figures, between January, '87, and March, '88, her Government sponsored only 568 Guatemalan refugees, that is from a country with civil war, guerrilla war, and death squads, but 1,177 from Nicaragua, a country with a declining war, a much better human rights record, and no death squads.

Will the Minister explain why, out of a limited allocation of refugees in total for Central America, her Government sponsors more than twice as many Nicaraguans as Guatemalans?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that Nicaragua is a country which does have refugees. There are refugee camps with Nicaraguans in them. It is not only our country which determines that there are people in Nicaragua in need of our help.

The Member also knows that we look at all of these things on a case by case basis. Each one is determined on its merits one at a time.

The Member also knows that people arriving at our borders and claiming refugee status themselves take far too long to get through our system. We need help with some of those things from the Hon. Member.

SELECTION CRITERIA

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my colleague on my far left has asked me to give the Minister some help. I will point out to her that I am not referring to people coming to our borders but people being selected by our embassy in San José and other such embassies.

The Minister also knows that Jean Roberge, the senior immigration officer at San José, has been quoted in the press as saying that refugee status does not depend on a person's being in danger. He said that we look at their settlement ability in Canada.

Will the Minister admit that these Nicaraguans are not being selected as refugees but are being selected as immigrants? Will she take them out of the allocation of 3,400 refugees for Central America and make room for genuine refugees from Guatemala and El Salvador?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did not find the Hon. Member's question singularly helpful, any more than I find his approach on our refugee Bills singularly helpful.

Our process of selection abroad includes some other things. In our selection abroad we are able actively to screen out terrorists and people who have been involved in war crimes and war situations in their countries. That is why we have the screening process abroad.

We do the same thing once people arrive on our shores. But I can assure you that before people come to this country as selected refugees the dangerous ones are excluded.

AEROSPACE

SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Conservative Government about the way it is treating Quebec. I often hear people complaining on behalf of Quebec. On the weekend, Premier Bourassa cried foul, accusing the federal Government of dragging its feet, and he was referring more specifically to the long-awaited decision on the space agency . . .

Just listen to those Conservative Members who never bother to complain interrupt anyone who spears up for Quebec!

Mr. Hudon: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry may eventually get up enough courage to demand Quebec's due.

Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he could explain to the House what the President of the Treasury Board meant when he said on March 24, after he had been asked at least fifty times about the decision on the space agency: "The space agency is coming and it's coming fast!". What was that supposed to mean, when two months later we still have no decision and no hope that the Government is going to take any action soon?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member did not say is that the President of the Treasury Board at the time also said that, as soon as a decision was made about the space agency's location, a number of things would happen. We know that decisions have been made by the Government in this respect. However, the Government is still considering the matter, and as we have said many times, I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration about not getting an answer as soon as possible, but as soon as the Government is in a position to make a decision and to announce it, it will do so.

PUBLICATION OF AEROSPACE RESEARCH REGIONAL CONTRACTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it's not just a matter of frustration. The fact is, while we are waiting for the decision, Quebec's share of space research contracts is steadily decreasing.

I asked the same question a month ago, quoting Le Devoir which said that Quebec did not receive a single contract in the month of March for space research. I was told: "You picked that month on purpose". Well, in April, Quebec got 1.4 per cent of all contracts awarded in Canada. That is what is happening. Why won't the Government put its cards on the table? A year ago, the Department of Supply and Services stopped publishing the regional monthly breakdown for space research contracts. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether once and for all, he will ask the Minister of Supply and Services to publish the breakdown so we know what is going on.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I have never heard a more childish approach to the issue of awarding contracts. First of all, if the Liberal Party would make its position clear on space research contracts . . . If we follow the logic of the Liberal Party, according to which we should get rid of the objectives that have been set, namely, 35 per cent for the entire space program, this would mean that at the communications level, such as MSAT, a program under which 77 per cent of the contracts were awarded to Quebec, if we follow the logic of the Liberal Party, we should limit communications companies in Quebec to only 35 per cent of those contracts. I don't think this position would make the Hon. Member very popular with the communications industry in Quebec. Well, that is what he is arguing. Overall, our objective is to award 35 per cent to Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, the other point I want to make is that companies that bid on contracts do so wherever they happen to be located. The Liberal Party is upset—because there aren't enough companies in Quebec! What did the Liberal Government do during the sixteen years it was in power to develop an industry in Quebec that would be able to take advantage of these contracts?

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—HEALTH CARE SERVICES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who today again warned us against exaggeration. On Friday the Minister said, as reported at page 16106 of Hansard:

> The free trade agreement has nothing at all to do with the health care system . . .

I have obtained from the free trade negotiator's office a list of activities covered by the trade deal. That list includes commercially provided medical and other health laboratories, including x-ray labs, public health labs, blood bank labs and so forth.

Is the Minister now prepared to withdraw his comments of Friday and make it clear that in fact health care services are a part of this trade deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I tried to outline the position last Friday. The free trade agreement does not affect the health care system or health care services. There is only one possible area where it has any effect at all, in any way related to the health care system. It is in the provision of management services in the health care area.

We happen to have in Canada some of the best firms in the world in the provision of management services in health care facilities. Extendicare is one example. They were interested in our getting the right for them to be able to operate in the United States and to be more competitive in the United States. We have nothing to fear from U.S. companies in the field of health care management services.

If a province does not wish to have private management in its health care facilities, it can simply pass the necessary legislation to prevent it. There is nothing whatsoever in the free trade agreement that forces any province to have a private health care facility in the province. Provinces can have all public facilities. They can have non-profit facilities. Nothing forces anyone to do anything in the Canadian health care system under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

LABORATORIES AND CLINICS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this document comes from the trade negotiator's office itself. The Minister is right that it makes quite clear that there are a great number of management services that are covered, but there are also commercial health services which include those labs that I noted. In view of that fact, is the Minister prepared to withdraw his statement and, second, admit that part of the consequence of this trade Bill will be to import much of the profit oriented health system from the United States in these laboratory and clinic areas, to change the Canadian health system in a serious and significant way?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me reassure the hon. gentleman. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will not assist in an invasion from the United States of care-for-profit hospital or health services or whatever. If Canadians do not want profit involved in their health care system, if they only want government owned and operated and non-profit institutions, every province can make laws to that effect.

With respect to the legislation introduced into the Ontario Legislature on Friday, the Premier of the province himself said: "I do not think we are flouting the deal". He is absolutely correct. He is not flouting it. He is not even tickling the deal. He is not harming the deal or aggravating the deal. Opposition Leader Bob Rae told reporters that the legislation is: "A complete cop-out as a free trade gambit". Your question is a complete cop-out as a free trade slander.

COMMERCIAL BLOOD BANKS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade who apparently accuses everyone who does not agree with him of slander and every other kind of name.

I am pleased that today he changed the story he gave to the House on Friday with respect to the application of the free trade deal as it affects private and non-profit health care in this country.

For the first time in Canadian history, his Government has approved the private establishment of a for-profit blood bank in Montreal. Will the Minister tell us why commercial blood banks were included as part of the deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, may I repeat for the edification of the Hon. Member, who quite obviously does not take in anything the first time one says it, that there is nothing at all in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement that forces or causes Canadians to have a commercial blood service.

The Canadian system can and will continue. The Canadian Red Cross free supply of blood for those who need it will continue.

However, provinces can allow commercial blood services if they wish to have it or permit it. It has nothing to do with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I believe one is operating in Montreal at the present time. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is not even yet in effect. How could this commercial blood clinic in Montreal have any connection with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement? Why does the Hon. Member persist in these bizarre and grotesque allegations?

MARKETING OF BLOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, on the subject of blood, we know very well that a private blood bank has already been established in Montreal; this ties in with the Government's policy of privatization.

I would like to know precisely from the Minister, without the rhetoric that usually characterizes his statements in the House, why commercial blood banks are included in the schedules to the Free Trade Agreement. Why?

An Hon. Member: That is a good question, an excellent question!

• (1500)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me look up my book here.

At page 502 of these briefing notes it states: "The free trade agreement creates no new rights for the establishment of commercial blood banks. In Canada this function is carried out mainly on a voluntary basis by the Red Cross, and blood is distributed freely to Canadians. The principle under which the Red Cross operates in Canada is that blood is a gift from one Canadian to another. There is nothing in the FTA which would undermine that principle. There is nothing in the FTA to prevent the Government from introducing regulations in the future to protect this principle". That is the blood situation, no matter whatever the lady wants to spread.

Ms. Copps: Why isn't it in the deal?

Mr. Crosbie: If you want to read it yourself, come over here and get it.

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON AIRPORT PARKING LOTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Transport. The Department of Transport decided to close down the economy parking lot at the Edmonton Airport currently held by Park 'n Ride which has successfully competed against the Department's parking lot at the airport. When the Minister took over the portfolio he announced that he would take another look at the situation.

Can the Hon. Minister tell the House today if he has yet made a final decision?

Ms. Copps: He won't give it to me. He is a big phoney.

Mr. Dick: Stupid witch.

Ms. Copps: Don't call me a stupid bitch.

Mr. Speaker: I know that Hon. Members would want to hear the answer the Hon. Minister would want to give. The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the officers of the Department of Transport were instructed to extend the lease for a few months until we could go to tender. We believe it is fair that the interested parties should be allowed to compete on those tenders as soon as it will be possible to do so.

PRIVILEGE

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF STATEMENT MADE DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier today in Question Period the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in referring directly to me, stated that I had somewhere said that the savings to be made from going to conventional powered submarines as opposed to the very expensive nuclear-powered submarines would be spent by an NDP government in other ways in the defence portfolio.

I have never made that statement anywhere. I ask that the Minister of Finance withdraw that remark that he made during Question Period.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Hon. Member has stated. My understanding is that the NDP defence policy is to spend new money on helicopters, patrol aircraft, frigates, minesweepers, and diesel submarines.

If all of these are put together, and the Hon. Member may wish to debate this with us at any time, the costs of this range of new capital expenditures under the NDP defence policy would be about the same as the cost of a nuclear submarine.

The only point that I was making was that the pious approach of the Leader of the New Democratic Party saying if we did not spend our money on nuclear submarines we could spend it on this was a red herring. The NDP defence policy is designed to spend just as much money, and therefore the comparisons that the Hon. Member is making are totally fallacious.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No way.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt both the Minister and the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn). What has happened here is that the Minister had said something in reply to a question during Question Period. The Hon. Member for Brant has risen on an alleged question of privilege saying that at no time did he ever say that.

We are getting into a matter which is not privilege but a matter of debate. I think it could be more properly sorted out between the Minister and the Hon. Member.

In any event, the Hon. Member for Brant has it clearly on the record, and it is now clearly on the record, that he disagrees with at least part of what the Hon. Minister said that he had said at another occasion, and I think that that ends the matter.

OBJECTION TO COMMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the course of an interchange the Associate Minister of Defence (Mr. Dick) called me a witch. Originally I thought he said something else. He actually called me a witch. Frankly, it is going to be a rather long summer around this place, if people are going to characterize others with those ugly and sexist comments. I would ask the Associate Minister of Defence to withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Minister said what is alleged, I know that he would withdraw.

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, in all candour, I must admit that I did not say what the Hon. Member first indicated I said. I said she was a stupid witch, and I do withdraw "witch".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Greater graciousness would make it easier for the Chair.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom)

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENT QUOTED BE TABLED

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, earlier during Question Period the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) was quoting from his briefing book. It is the practice when a Member quotes from a document in the House that that document tabled. I wonder if it is possible to have the Minister do that.

Mr. Speaker: I thought that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had retrieved at least a part of the book, but maybe I am mistaken.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, having made the point, could wait for an appropriate time for the Minister to respond. I have the Hon. Member's point.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

ALLOCATION OF TIME TO CONSIDER SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-129

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, in relation to Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill; and

Time Allocation

That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) had the floor.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to continue my remarks, which are an attempt to show that the Government has moved in a manner reminiscent of the echoes of jack-boots of days gone by to deny the fundamentals of democracy by putting a closure motion on the Air Canada privatization Bill. I suspect that it is setting the stage for many more such motions in the weeks ahead.

The people of Canada are asking themselves what a closure motion is. In a Parliament that has 211 Members on one side versus approximately 70 on the other side, in other words an overwhelming parliamentary majority, closure is a decision by the Government of Canada to limit the number of hours of a debate that can be given to any one piece of legislation.

After seven hours of debate, a mere pittance of debate, the Government has brought in closure to shut off debate on this Bill which will privatize a Canadian institution that is 50 years old. The Government will bring in that closure motion after only seven hours of debate when notice of this privatization was only brought to the people of Canada one month ago. There has been hardly any measure of public debate or discussion, let alone any thorough discussion in the Parliament of Canada, the people's House, about this Air Canada privatization measure.

When we examine the record of this move by the Government we find it is resplendent in, and surrounded by, hypocrisy on the part of the Conservative Party which, when similar measures on financial Bills years ago were brought in after much more debate, in fact five or six times more debate, stood up and said it was a travesty of justice, a denial of democracy to bring in closure to limit the amount of time that parliamentarians can spend in debating the people's business.

There was one Member, the Hon. Member for Simcoe South, (Mr. Stewart), who made quite a speech in the House back on February 12, 1981, about closure, about the evil designs of closure, who today demonstrated all the nerve of a toothache, all of the might and will of the face of a robber's horse. Of course, we all know what part of the robber's horse we see when it is running away. He stood up today in the House and said that closure was appropriate, that it was a responsible measure, that it was the majority doing the will of the people of Canada in a responsible fashion. But what did that same Member say about closure on February 12, 1981? He said that closure was a denial of democracy, a loss of freedom of speech. He said:

What could Caesar have us become, eunuchs in his court? What would the emperor have us be? Spear carriers I suppose, strewing olive branches at his feet as he enters this Chamber. Is the emperor afraid to be told he has no clothes? Is he afraid to meet Parliament face to face? Is he afraid to look us in the eyes? Is he afraid to involve us in the process of developing progressive legislation which will advance the ideals and goals of this nation?

Who is the emperor today? Is the emperor the man who sits at the head of the Party which has 30 seats in a Parliament of 282 seats? Is the emperor the man who sits at the head of a Party which has 40 seats in a Parliament of 282 seats? Or is the emperor in this Parliament the gentleman who has a commanding, decisive 211 seat majority in a Parliament of 282 seats?

Who is the leader who is giving the orders that Parliament shall not have the right to act in a democratic fashion? Who is the leader who, hearing the faint echoes of jack boots, knows how effective is the system of ramming legislation through? Who is the leader who is giving the orders today to shut down Parliament? Who is that leader? Is it the leader of the Liberal Party? Is it the leader of the New Democratic Party? No, it is the leader of the Conservative Party of Canada who is now unveiling the election scenario of this Government. It is a Party with 211 seats out of 282 seats, an overwhelming commanding majority, which is trying to convince the people of Canada that a mere 70 Members of Parliament are holding up the work of Parliament, that a mere 70 members of the Opposition are thwarting the will of the elected majority.

That is poppycock. That is an attempt to set the stage for a Government which cannot manage its own agenda. It has not properly managed the work of Parliament and it now wants Canadians to believe that a mere 70 Members out of 282 have made it impossible for the decisive majority to do its work.

Closure is a denial of democracy. This institution is the voice, the heart, the soul and the conscience of the people of Canada. That is why it is called the House of Commons. The people of this country want to be heard on the nation's business. We cannot accept, nor will we, this closure motion. We warn the Government that we will not accept the tyranny of the majority. We shall ensure that the will, the words and the vision of the people of Canada are felt on all important business before this Parliament and this country.

If the Government had any sense—more important, if it had any backbone and conscience to go with that common sense—it would withdraw this closure motion and allow democracy, as painful, uncomfortable and inconvenient as it sometimes might be, to function properly. Democracy is not perfect, but it is the best of all the imperfect systems this planet has offered so far. We would do well to emulate democratic principles by withdrawing this closure motion today.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, it is always a pleasure to follow the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin). He talks about backbone and conscience. It takes a little backbone to stand up in this House and deal with reality and the facts. It does not take nearly as much backbone to stand up and deal in rhetoric and inflammatory words that attempt to mislead the Canadian public.

Mr. Tobin: What do you mean mislead?

Mr. Hawkes: He asks me what I mean. We have had five minutes of flamboyant rhetoric about closure. We are debating the motion under Standing Order 117 which deals with time allocation. The Opposition calls it closure. That is dishonest. It is especially dishonest in terms of this particular motion. This Government consistently offers the opportunity to expand debate. The Government should be commended for not using Standing Order 117 for many, many months. On Friday last we offered members of the Opposition the opportunity to continue debate for hours, for the entire weekend, on this particular piece of legislation.

Mr. Tobin: With no notice.

Mr. Gauthier: With no notice. What a big heart. What a hypocrite.

Mr. Hawkes: We offered up front in this Chamber the opportunity to debate. Where does time allocation come from? We saw that Hon. Member at seven minutes to one o'clock today do a procedural manoeuvre to avoid what is called a 9(4)(a). What is that? It is an expansion of debate, an expansion of democracy, and those Members opposite used procedural tricks. They used secrecy, the antithesis of backbone. Backbone deals with honesty—

Mr. Tobin: Point of order.

Mr. Hawkes: Secrecy is the opposite, and it is not a quality I personally like very much. I want to retain my place.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker was in the Chair today before the lunch hour and will verify that this Member proposed that the Member for Simcoe South be allowed to speak. The Member who is now on his feet rose and seconded the motion and asked for unanimous consent. How he can now describe it as a procedural trick or dishonest tactic is beyond me. But, of course, nothing should surprise me about this Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. Hawkes: Thank you, Madam Speaker. You can see how the rhetoric arises and how fact gets overridden.

Mr. Tobin: Don't let facts stand in the way of your story. Carry on.

Mr. Hawkes: The Member attempted to move a motion which would not have been found in order and would have led to procedural debate, potentially to the ringing of the bells and the denial of debate.

Mr. Gauthier: Wrong!

Mr. Hawkes: On this side of the House I rose to say they would find unanimous consent on this side of the House for the Chair to recognize the Hon. Member for Simcoe South. I seconded no such motion.

Mr. Gauthier: You gave unanimous consent.

Mr. Rossi: You gave unanimous consent. Why don't you be honest and tell the truth?

Mr. Hawkes: I seconded no such motion because the motion itself would have been out of order. But it tells you a lot about the accuracy we receive from the other side of the House. If this time allocation debate, and the two hours spent on it, end in a vote today, I expect the vote to carry. There will be one more day of debate on this Bill at second reading. The closure on debate will have been caused by the Opposition, not by the Government.

The Government asks the Opposition right now, do we have unanimous consent to continue today beyond the normal hour of adjournment to debate this Bill for 10, 15 or 20 more hours starting at six o'clock this evening? Do we have unanimous consent?

Mr. Gauthier: No deal with you at any time!

Mr. Hawkes: If they tell me that we do not have unanimous consent, they are telling me right now that they prefer three hours of debate under time allocation. They want three hours instead of 10, 12 or 15 hours.

We should examine the behaviour of the Opposition on this Bill at second reading. It has already been debated for five days in the House. This debate will take up the sixth day. The time allocation will take up the seventh day. If we put that into context of the year's workload on Government Orders in this House, we are talking, on a single stage of a single Bill, the utilization of 2.5 per cent to 3 per cent of the normal time available in this Chamber for debate on all business such as pensions, proceeds of crime, environment and tax reform.

This is the thirteenth privatization in the life of this Government. Privatization of companies works. Companies produce better products, lower prices, better and more jobs. That is the record of our Government on privatization. Privatization does not serve the Opposition's purpose very well. Opposition Members want to go into an election with high unemployment rates and run-away inflation, all of the things from which they could get political advantage, so they do not like it when we manage the economy and the House well.

Mr. Rossi: Why don't you call an election?

Mr. Hawkes: Opposition Members accuse us of cutting off debate.

There is time allocation in this Chamber five days a week. Today is a Monday. At one o'clock the House shuts down.

When six o'clock comes, the House shuts down. Time is allocated.

Mr. Althouse: By unanimous agreement.

Mr. Hawkes: I took over the responsibility I have now in January, and day after day during Routine Proceedings we hear opposition Members making lengthy comments about their petitions. When the petitions are finally tabled we see that they have been certified six or eight months before, even one and a half years beforehand. What are Members doing with this extra 30, 60 and 90 seconds? They are eating into the time allowed for debates in this House. Canadians sent us here for reasoned debate on public issues and to bring them to a vote.

Let us look back at our recent history. In the mother of Parliaments in Britain it is unusual for one full day to be spent on a single subject. What has the Opposition done? On the environmental protection Bill, the most amended Bill in parliamentary history, the most carefully examined in committee, at third reading stage alone the Opposition used up several days of debate, the equivalent of three full days on something vital to the young people and to all of us in the nation.

On Bill C-121 the Opposition used 15 hours, the equivalent of five solid days of debate on second reading alone. Bill C-121 was privatization legislation. On the excise tax Bill on second reading alone there were nine hours of debate. When we started this morning we had almost nine hours—

An Hon. Member: Seven hours.

Mr. Hawkes: The Member says seven hours but he forgets about the first three speeches. We have had eight and a half hours of debate, the equivalent of three full days in this Chamber at second reading stage before the Bill goes to committee, before report stage and before third reading stage. What have the opposition Members done with the Atlantic Bill, the borrowing Bill and the western diversification Bill? They do not like free trade. Canadians do.

Mr. Rossi: Call an election then.

Mr. Hawkes: Opposition Members are using closure twice a day at lunch time and at the end of the evening. We have tried on 14 separate occasions to extend hours to complete debate to help democracy and to get things thoroughly aired. On a Friday afternoon, 27 of them slink out from behind the curtains to stop a motion that would serve democracy and allow debate to continue.

The Opposition will close off debate this evening at 6 p.m. We are here and could debate for six more hours tonight. We could debate until two or three o'clock in the morning. If opposition Members want debate, we make the offer. Do we have unanimous consent in this Chamber this evening to continue debate until we conclude an opportunity for everybody to speak on the Air Canada Bill? Or do the opposition Members want time allocation to take effect at 6 p.m. this evening? Which is it? Do we have unanimous consent or do we not?

I ask you, Madam Speaker, to put the question whether or not there is unanimous consent to continue debate this evening on the privatization of Air Canada. If that is the case, we can abandon this motion and move on to other Government Orders and have the debate this evening. If not, we will ensure that the voters of Canada get one more day of debate on Bill C-129 because that is the best we can achieve. With unanimous consent opposition Members can have more hours of debate, but if they will not consent to the additional hours, we will take what we can get, which is one more day's debate.

Mr. Rossi: Let Canadians speak up. You are the worst filibusterer in this House, Hawkes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. A question has been put to the House by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary which I must put to the House at this time.

Is there unanimous consent for debate on this Bill to start at six o'clock p.m.?

Mr. Tobin: The answer is no right now. Debate.

Mr. Althouse: I have a point of order, Madam Speaker. It seems quite an unusual procedure for a second motion to be put before the House when we currently have a motion that was moved, seconded and is being debated. The mover of the motion has not proposed taking away the motion that is currently being debated. If he has, I did not hear anyone second it. In short, I am not sure that the motion has been properly put, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think we may save the House time if I say that I felt it was my duty to ask the House if there was unanimous consent. I am a servant of the House. If the House had decided to go back to Government Orders at this time and resume debate on Bill C-129 at six o'clock, the House would have been right in doing so. It was my duty to ask whether there was unanimous consent for the proposal. Obviously there is not. We are resuming debate.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We on this side of the House appreciate your concern and understanding of the need for any good Speaker to be a servant of the House and put a question that you thought we might have missed.

The responsibility of the Speaker, as you have properly just pointed out, is first and foremost to enforce the rules of Parliament. Indeed, the rules of Parliament are such that a second motion cannot be put while one is being entertained. Furthermore, the Member did not formally put a motion. Now that we are all clear on the subject, we can continue with debate.

Mr. Rossi: You can't always have it your way, Hawkes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his remarks. Nevertheless, I would like to add that in the close to four years that I have been in the House now I have seen many times when, on consent, the House has decided to put aside some of its rules and move in a different way. I wanted to make sure, as I think it was my duty, that such was not the desire of the House at that point. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, my major concern this afternoon is what I would almost consider sleazy behaviour on the part of some of our colleagues. There has been all sorts of manipulation. I was in the House this morning. I did not hear any suggestion of extending debate over the lunch hour and I have heard accusations flying back and forth.

The basis of this whole debate is to limit debate on a very important issue, the taking away from the people of Canada of their own airline and putting it into some so-called private sector that very likely could be controlled with all the manipulation by a foreign power. Because of that we need to have an extensive debate.

I become very concerned when I hear people talk about how we are holding up the business of the House. Granted, I have not been here for very long, but I do recognize the fact that this House has been sitting for over three years now. Come fall, it will be four years. All these Bills have now been listed. Did it take the Government until this last year to put these Bills on the legislative agenda? If that is the case, I hardly think it is fair to be accusing the other side of the House of holding things up.

I am also very concerned about the fact that this heavy-handed approach is being taken. There should be a broad discussion not just about what is happening to a major asset of Canada but about how the people of Canada feel about the implications of what could happen. Some of the statements made have been authoritarian and non-democratic. Certainly, a Government that is holding about 206 seats should not be backward about allowing us to put on record the feedback we are getting from our ridings.

I hear all this grandiose talk about extending debates, about the ability to extend debate but that no one is doing it. When I was not a Member of Parliament but an ordinary citizen, my understanding was that parliamentary reform was brought in so that there could be thoughtful consideration and serious debate on issues, so that there would be no night hearings and so that the regular timetable for the legislature could be followed so people could be responsible about their duties as Members of Parliament. Since I have been here, every now and then I hear that we need to have 15 people in the House or else they will extend the debate and shut off another Bill or we will be sitting all summer because the Government has not been able to get its legislative agenda together. That is certainly not the kind of Government Canadians thought they were getting when they saw that parliamentary reform was coming in. It really does make a farce of this structure that was supposed to make us responsible, make us thoughtful and help us bring issues forward, issues that we feel are important to our constituents and indeed important to the whole of Canada.

Certainly some of the words of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart) which were quoted today were embarrassing. It certainly helped me to recognize what has been going on. Hon. Members are simply saying: "You did, you didn't, you did, you didn't," but are not really addressing the fact that we are supposed to be able to look at the whole issue of the privatization of Air Canada and its implications on isolated communities.

This country was brought together by transportation networks and systems. Yet this Government wants to use less than eight hours of debate and allow about 20 people to speak in the House and then say that is it, we know what is good for you and we will do it. Surely that is not the kind of democracy that we should have in the year 1988.

We do know that there has been more and more of a desire on the part of Canadians to know what is happening here. There have been many requests to ensure that we use technology so that people can know what is happening. Certainly, the televising of the House of Commons debates has given Canadians access to what is happening here, but on a day like today, I think what they are hearing and seeing is rather tragic.

This Government wants to railroad things through. There would be some excuse for it if it were a minority Government. As a minority Government, it would be a little more sensitive to procedure. If it were a minority Government, it would feel that it would have to do this and that in case the House falls. However, after having a great majority for three and a half years, the Government is now trying to rush everything through at the last minute and it is saying that it is the Opposition's fault because we will not allow debate. Where were the Bills? Just 10 days ago, we received a Bill that amends 27 statutes. It is absolutely ludicrous that the Government is doing that while saying that we are holding up debate. I think this is a real tragic day for democracy.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is very good at making a joke of everything. However, when he was in Opposition, he said some things with which we agree. He said, when he was on this side of the House, the following:

> Where are all the defenders of the people on the other side of the House? They are going to come out of their trough in a few minutes. They will hear the bell and will have to break away from whatever trough they have their noses in at the moment. They will have to come into this House and says "Oink, oink". They will have to say "Aye, aye". They will have to say "Yes" to the stampeding of Parliament, to rushing this bill through the House. They will have to say "Yes" to the gutting of Parliament. They have to do the dirty work that the parliamentary assistants, assassins and eunuchs have asked them to do.

The Hon. Member for St. John's West said that on June 9, 1981, when he was in opposition. In witnessing the kind of behaviour we have seen today, we have become witnesses to great hypocrisy. If there is cynicism on the part of the public, it is because members of the public know that politicians say one thing to them one day and do the opposite the next day.

Though I have not been a Member of the House for very long, I was certainly on the doorsteps of the people a year ago during the long by-election campaign. I had much opportunity to get a good sense of what the people of my constituency were saying and feeling. I got a feeling of a great sense of powerlessness from the people of my constituency. They felt that the Government would do whatever it liked, that it did not really care what was happening to any of us. We have witnessed that today.

We have heard the Government say that time allocation is not closure. For goodness sakes, who is it kidding, and what kind of procedures is it trying to play with? We know that the Government is limiting the time for debate on this particular Bill. I think that is unacceptable, particularly when it comes to such a serious Bill.

We know that the direction of air transportation policy will change, and it will be a major change. Some might think that that will be a benefit and others might think it will not be a benefit, but surely it is the role of the House of Commons to discuss that, have a full debate on it and have a vote on it.

The Government is terrified that there might be some actual facts that come out instead of a lot of gobbledegook. Government Members are terrified, so they want to stop the debate. They know that as soon as Canadians start to get a good sense of what is really happening in the country, they will not put their support behind the Government.

A few moments ago, government Members were saying that Canadians all supported free trade. They were talking to different Canadians than I have been talking to. Again, they do not want to talk about the substance of these Bills. As soon as we get into any substantive debate, we hear that we are trying to delay the business of the House of Commons.

I notice that my time is up. I think it really is a sad day for democracy when the Government is trying to push through a Bill like this and is terrified to let the facts come out.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, much has been said with respect to the activities of this Government in attempting to stifle debate on this very important Bill. It is just ludicrous that the Government is attempting to choke off debate on this vitally important matter. Air Canada has been a Crown corporation for 51 years, yet the Government is apoplectic because we have debated this Bill for seven hours on second reading. It does not want to give the people of Canada the opportunity for the facts to come out. That is disgraceful. It is reprehensible. That is the kind of Government we have been getting for almost four years.

The Deputy Government House Leader said he had to put a limit on the debate because we would not sit extended hours on Friday. We were not prepared to oblige the Government in sitting well into the evening on Friday. He acted as though this was some kind of chastisement of the Opposition. This House adjourns on Friday afternoon for a very good reason. It allows Members of Parliament to get back to their constituencies.

Mr. Hawkes: What about tonight?

Mr. MacLellan: Now we hear from the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) whose constituents do not want him back in his constituency.

What happened is not only an abuse of the rights of Members of Parliament, but it is completely cutting the support out from underneath the Government's own proposition. It was that Government that brought forward the rule to adjourn on Friday afternoon at three o'clock. It was part of the Government's change to the rules of the House of Commons.

We have heard, of course, with great interest and amusement the comments made by the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart). I was just reading the Hon. Member's comments who said on February 12, 1981:

> Is the reasoning behind closure that we have an 83-cent dollar—

As ludicrous as it was then, it is even more ludicrous today because the dollar is even lower than it was then.

This Bill is of vital importance to Canada. If it passes we will privatize one of the major Crown corporations, certainly one of the oldest. It has been in existence for 51 years. The Government, as we said, allowed Parliament to speak for only seven hours. Of course, the Conservatives are not willing to debate this. They just want to get it passed. They have presented only six speakers, less than either of the two opposition Parties, so they are not interested in presenting their side of the case because they really do not have much of a case to present. They want to make sure that the opposition Parties are unable to present their side of the House and we feel we do have a case.

Not only has the Government limited debate to approximately seven hours, this Bill was introduced for first reading on the Thursday before the long weekend in May. On Tuesday, when the House returned, the Government brought this Bill forward for second reading. It allowed one sitting day between first and second reading. The Government is adamant that the people of Canada not hear debate on this measure. It does not want the people to realize what this is going to do to transportation in Canada. It does not want the people to know what they are going to be losing through the giveaway of of this very valuable Crown corporation.

The Government does not want the people of this country to know that if it had done the same thing last summer when the market was higher, the country would have got millions of dollars more for it. The Government is not only literally giving away this company to the private sector, but doing it at a time when the market is low.

The Government says it is not going to sell all of the shares of Air Canada, but it is not saying when it is going to sell any of the shares. It is going to sell some of the shares as soon as it possibly can. If it sells even one share of Air Canada, that Crown corporation stops being an arm of public policy to be used by Government or Parliament to the betterment and advantage of the people of Canada.

This is just a ludicrous situation. The Government said it had to give notice and limit the debate because, first, we would not sit extended hours on Friday. I have already mentioned that. Then it came through with this notice of motion on Friday, 15 minutes before we moved to deal with Private Members' Business. What the Government called consultation was to ask the opposition Parties how many speakers they proposed to put up. That is supposed to be consultation. There was no indication at all that it was going to limit debate.

The Government did this at a time when most Members were in their ridings, and no notice was given to either Members in the House or the various House Leaders. It waited until the last possible minute, knowing that as many Members as possible would be out of Ottawa. It is just incredible. Then the Government comes forward with the most ridiculous, most inane reasons for circumventing the rights of Parliament and the people of Canada. The new House rules may be an advantage but there are certain large gaps, and Standing Order 117 is one of them. In any event, the Government will not respect the spirit of the rules. It will use every little deficiency it sees in the rules to circumvent the rights of Parliament. That is a travesty and the Government is doing it more and more every day.

The Government expects goodwill from members of the Opposition. Certainly this opposition Party is prepared to give it if the Government has any sense of decency and any sense of acting in the best interests of Parliament and the people of this country. However, it has shown clearly it has not. Yet it will cry. It is the whiniest Government you will ever see. Any time members opposite feel someone steps on their toes, any time their noses are twigged, there is a wailing and hollering and beating of breasts and pounding of heads, a scene like you have never seen before. Yet we in the Opposition are supposed to be able to take that. We are supposed not only to have our rights trampled upon by the Government but we are supposed to allow the rights of the people of Canada to go undefended.

We are not going to do it. If we have to sit here all summer, every day, we are not going to do it. We are not going to do it because to do it would be a breakdown of the democracy which has existed in this country since it was founded.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Madam Speaker, I will refrain from talking about parliamentary procedure because, like most Members here, I have not had the benefit of 15 or 20 years to learn all about it. To be quite honest with you, I do not believe that a lot of the people who have spoken today learned an awful lot in the time they have been here.

What I hear being debated now, does not make any sense. I thought everyone in the Opposition wanted to express their views about why Air Canada should not be privatized. Yet I have not heard anyone saying anything today about why Air Canada should not be privatized. They are talking about the rights of which they are being deprived by not being able to speak about it. Why do they not use the time they have today to talk about what a great disservice will be done to the people of Canada if we allow Air Canada to be privatized?

The reason I have not spoken on the Bill to date is because the people in my riding are saying that we should get it over with, that the mistake the Government is making is that it is not going all the way and allowing all the shares to be bought by the public.

I do not know what all the argument is about. I do know that if the motion before us is passed there will be another full day of debate. There have already been eight and a half hours of debate. Even then the debate will not be over.

I have heard Members talk about parliamentary reform. It certainly was not the Official Opposition that brought in parliamentary reform, it was the Progressive Conservative Government which brought in the parliamentary reform to which everyone is referring now. We saw the results of parliamentary reform last week when a private Member's Bill was passed in the House with Members on the government side voting in favour of Bill C-204. It does not seem that this Government wants to implement a dictatorship in the House of Commons. It is clear to me that the Government wants private Members to have a say in what is being passed in this House.

As I said, there would be another full day of debate and the Bill would then go to a legislative committee, which is another part of parliamentary reform brought in by the Government, where it would be debated by whichever Members are appointed to sit on the committee. The Bill would be debated in that committee for a number of days. I hear that some legislative committees have gone on for months, partly because the Opposition has used stalling tactics, similar to what they are doing today, so that the legislation would not come back to the House where it could be debated again at report stage.

After that, Madam Speaker, it will be debated again at third reading. When it leaves this Chamber and goes to the other Chamber, it will be debated once more.

Opposition Members obviously know that there are many Bills presently before the House and more Bills which will be brought in which contain good legislation for the country. They do not want them to come forward. They are hoping that after a while Members will get tired of the long hot summer and the legislation will be put on the back burner to be brought up later in the fall.

They talk about democracy. I was of the opinion that the people spoke in a democratic way when they elected the majority which the Government enjoys on this side of the Chamber. All the Members hear what their constituents tell them when they go home and they come here and act accordingly.

I think the Opposition is getting on with a lot of nonsense. What is the point of talking about what happened five years ago and ten years ago when Members who are no longer here argued back and forth about pieces of legislation? As far as I am concerned, we must now look to the present and the future, a future which is good for this country.

I believe that the privatization of Air Canada will be good for the country. That is what the people of Canada want. We should get the debate over with, get the legislation to committee, and let the people start buying shares in this government operated Crown corporation which they want to have privatized. I am sure that, the same as the other corporations which have been privatized, it will be good for the country.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I find it passing strange that there are not more Conservatives in the House for this important debate. We might as well call quorum until they get some more Members here.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

And the bells having rung:

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There is an unfortunate habit creeping into the Chamber of calling quorum as a way of wiping out a debate. In the context of the present discussion, where we have made an offer to continue debate on this Bill for many, many hours, this further attempt to cut off debate is not appreciated by the Government. I suggest that the Opposition has some responsibility, on opposition days, to provide this Chamber with a quorum. I would just like to say on the record that perhaps they should remember that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, we sometimes have trouble hearing your voice over the shouting in the House. I rise to speak on this motion under Standing Order 117 moved by the Government to restrict debate on the Bill to privatize Air Canada. This motion has forced the House to discuss whether or not debate should be stifled and has taken away entirely from the debate on the Bill to privatize Air Canada.

I raise that to remind my friend on the government side who has just spoken that that is the reason for this debate. It is not in order to be discussing Air Canada as such or to make representations for or against that government Bill because the motion before the House at this time is whether or not we should restrict debate according to the government order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I apologize to the Hon. Member for having to interrupt him. However, it is impossible to hear the Hon. Member when there is a conversation taking place at full voice across the House. I would appreciate if all Hon. Members would pay a little more attention to what is going on in the House. My apologies to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Althouse: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The guidelines of this new Government and this new Parliament were very simple and very straightforward and were very much appreciated by Canadians in general who gave the Government the majority it currently has as a result of a promise of national reconciliation through the introduction of consultation, co-operation, consensus and general civility. That has been disappearing very much over the last three and a half years. It has been disappearing, not only because of the actions of a few people in the opposition but because of the actions of the 206 Members who are now left on the government side.

We have seen a lack of consultation which has generated the particular brouhaha which we are into today. The Government House Leader and the House Leaders of the other two Parties failed to have meetings concerning the progress of the Air Canada Bill. Very few words even passed between them, let alone real consultation and valuable communication.

There has been a lack of co-operation because it is very difficult to co-operate if people do not communicate. Instead, we have degenerated to the point where the Government House Leader uses his substantial power in the House to move motions like those under Standing Order 117 to restrict debate on a particular piece of legislation. In this case, it is an Act to privatize Air Canada.

I suppose one can only expect that when there is a lack of consultation and co-operation, civility and consensus will soon disappear. We are now at the point where the House had almost fallen into total discord, as you pointed out and brought back to order again, Madam Speaker. The House came back to order partly because many Members abandoned the House.

The Government is having great difficulty organizing its own business. There are some 41 uncompleted Bills that are on the Government's priority list of Bills which it would like to have debated and passed before the end of June, some 16 debating days from now. I do not believe that this House has ever generated that kind of productivity in passing legislation.

There were some productive days last week when I believe some four or five Bills dealing with Indian rights passed through the House, some through all stages. That can happen when there is consensus and co-operation. However, that can only take place when it is accompanied by consultation.

Not only are there some 41 Bills on the priority list of the Government, there are another eight to ten Bills that it intends to introduce. Two Bills dealing with agriculture that were introduced today had been promised for some months. The legislation dealing with horse-racing had been discussed well before Christmas, and another Bill amending the Western Grain Stabilization Act was promised before Christmas. We are still waiting for amendments to the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act which the Minister has been talking about since last summer. We have yet to see that Bill.

It is difficult to generate the kind of production the Government would like when it has not even completed the first stage of introducing and printing the Bill. Once Bills are before us, it is the right and duty of parliamentarians in opposition to look at them in a critical manner and see whether the proposed legislation is in the best interests of Canadians. If we have doubts or questions, it is our duty to present those arguments and those questions. That is why we are called the Loyal Opposition.

We began that process in the case of the Air Canada privatization Bill. We have been trying to find out why the Government wishes to begin the privatization process of a Crown corporation that has functioned efficiently and has served the country well for more than 50 years. That corporation has had profits exceeding its losses in the last 10 years amounting to $279.3 million.

Air Canada is not involved in a declining industry. The service provided by Air Canada is among the top 10 in the world according to all international objective observers. They recognize it as an efficient, well-managed and modern airline. It is recognized as among the most favoured airlines worldwide.

However, we are being told that this is not good enough and we must find another means of financing this corporation. We understand that it needs more equity to buy more equipment. There are a number of ways that this can be done, including the public issue of shares as decided upon by the Government. It could also be done through a commitment from the federal Treasury of another $200 million or $300 million and by expanding the equity shareholdings so that the corporation could borrow money that way. It is my understanding that even with the public issue of shares, the corporation's intention and requirement will be to go to the market to borrow money to make the necessary equipment purchases.

There is also the option of leasing equipment. We are not sure at this stage whether the Government and management of Air Canada fully investigated this alternative.

Apart from our concern about whether the Government has made the right choice in privatizing Air Canada, there are some aspects of the legislation that do not seem to make sense in terms of ownership and control. The Government is proposing to give control of 45 per cent of the shares to outside investors. We are told by Ministers involved with this legislation that the people who control the 45 per cent of the shares will have control of the corporation. That makes no sense to us. We believe it is undemocratic and not the proper way to give control.

At the same time, I believe the use of Standing Order 117 in this particular case is not the proper way for the Government to use its power. We believe that seven hours of debate on this very important matter is not enough. I urge the House to reject this motion to close the debate and to permit true democracy to continue functioning in a co-operative way which will provide a much better solution for the operation of the House and the country in general.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE RAISED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria)—Trade—Promotion campaign—Contract with John Laschinger/Request that contract be tabled; The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor)—National Revenue—Evaluation of used agricultural machinery; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Disasters—Air-India crash—Request for public inquiry.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, in relation to Bill C-129, An Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, one further sitting day be allotted to the second reading stage of the Bill; and

That, fifteen minutes before the expiry of the time provided for Government Business on the above-mentioned sitting day, any proceedings before the House shall be interrupted, if required, for the purpose of this Order and, in turn, every question necessary in order to dispose of the said stage of the Bill shall be put forthwith and successively, without further debate or amendment.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, once again, we see the end of the session approaching and the Government, as it has the bad habit of doing, tries to railroad the greatest number of very important bills for Canadians and workers.

The Bill on privatizing Air Canada now before us is incredibly important. We all know how important Air Canada is for this country. We know what Air Canada means in the most remote regions of our country. We recognize Air Canada's importance in places that are almost inaccessible to private airlines, so that Canadians can travel better, leave their villages, towns and townships and travel in Canada. Chances are this Bill would make it a lot tougher for Canadians to travel throughout the country. Now the Government wants us to pass the Bill in a hurry, after only seven hours of debate, if I am not mistaken. Madam Speaker, a debate of seven hours is almost ridiculous. We spent days debating much less important issues, but on this major Bill the Government has had enough—right up to here, as the saying goes—and says: "We are losing patience, that will do!" All of a sudden the Government realizes it has 200 Members, so they will resort to any tactic to make Canadians and the House of Commons see it their way.

My colleagues who rose before me clearly summed up the whole issue. We are dealing with a major piece of legislation designed to privatize our national carrier, Air Canada.

For one reason or another the Government did not go for the option it favoured in the first place—outright privatization—because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) once promised that he would never privatize Air Canada. So they come up with this half-baked scheme, and that is one more reason to find out why the Government chose to privatize only 45 per cent of the company. We happen to know that a few Cabinet ministers would have supported full privatization. Either you privatize or you do not! However, they painted themselves right into a corner as a result of promises made in a moment of panic or when they had to come up with the right answers for Air Canada employees, so in some circles they had to say: "No, we will not privatize Air Canada, no way". Well, they are confronted with this dilemma and now they are asking Members of the House of Commons to solve the Government's problem.

Madam Speaker, my colleagues have clearly explained why we are objecting. We are objecting to the hasty adoption of this Bill because there are so many implications, so many implications for Air Canada employees, so many implications for the Canadian people, so many implications of different kinds that, no matter how many we are in the Opposition, as parliamentarians we are duty-bound to give thorough consideration to such an important Bill.

And as my Whip who is carefully listening to my argument pointed out to me, we simply cannot afford to give our consent and do as the Government wants us to do just like that. There is an expectation among the general public that the Opposition, which has a responsibility to get a good look at legislation, will have an opportunity to do so, to defend it, to listen to the representations made by Canadian men and women across the nation in order to better assess whether the legislation to be voted on is in the best interest of Canadians.

I see my colleague from New Brunswick. I am very well aware that a partial, ill-conceived privatization can lead to huge problems for the travelling public in New Brunswick—it can lead to huge problems for my colleague from Newfoundland, for my colleague from Cape Breton, for people from Northwestern Quebec, the Gaspé peninsula, the Quebec region. We are entitled to a much more serious composed look at the legislation. This Government is getting jittery, suddenly realizing it has almost gone through four years out of a five-year term. They had five years available. But realizing they probably would like to call an election in the fall, they suddenly decided they would wear hon. Members out.

We were called back here I think on August 4 or 5 1987 in order to discuss a legislation again in a panic situation, to scare Canadians and Quebecers with so-called illegal immigrants. They panicked and they recalled Parliament. But the legislation we were recalled for has yet to be enacted by this House and the Senate, and the Government is getting ready to backstep and accept amendments put forward by our colleagues in the other place. Although this is what we were recalled for on August 4 or 5, 1987—and I stand to be corrected either by madam Speaker or one of my colleagues or the House leader—I am not sure as to the date, but we were recalled in August and are still here. And all of a sudden the Government says: Gosh, Meech Lake should be enacted now! Granted a majority of us will support Meech Lake, but let them call that piece of legislation! And on the matter of abortion, we are no longer sure where we are going!

We are presented with a motion that does not make any sense if there is to be some leadership in Canada. That must go through! The day care centers program must be passed! Governments always have the bad habit to try at the last minute to scare off or to tire off the House and say: "Well, from now on to the end of June, we must go through all our legislative agenda".

Well, we say no to that! We will take all the time we need. As rightly indicated by my colleague for New-Brunswick, they will not succeed in tiring us. They will not have us by surprise. We will continue to sit. We will do our duty. And although they may be 208 or 210 or 206, I forgot how many are left now, we will not allow them to violate the rules. We have the right to discuss bills. It is our right to do so if we consider them to be important, and to my knowledge, Madam Speaker, they are. We are not abusing the time of the House.

We think it is highly reasonable that we should take a little more time to see if Bill C-129, which will privatize Air Canada, is in the best interests of Canada. It may be the wish of the Government, but perhaps some Members of the Government are not happy. Those who believe in privatization would have liked Air Canada to be completely privatized, therefore they are unhappy that the Government is only going to privatize 45 per cent. Those who are opposed to privatization still have to fight because 45 per cent will be privatized.

This is not the manner in which to conduct the affairs of an orderly House of Commons in the British tradition. The British parliamentary system proceeds in a more orderly fashion than this House of Commons. It is not because perhaps Members are tired because they were called back on August 11 last year. In case some Canadians are not aware, Members have been here for five days a week, and the House sits for five days a week. Most of the time I am here five days of the week. Some other Members may not be for other reasons, but that is their privilege.

We have been here since August 11, 1987, and the end of the term may come soon, depending on the Gallup poll next week, which I am ready to bet will be excellent. The chairman of the national Liberal caucus and I are good friends, and I am sure he knows from the news we get that the Gallup will be quite devastating again this week, so that means that the election may be postponed again. I am ready to bet that the Gallup will be extremely good.

Mr. Gauthier: For us.

Mr. Prud'homme: Very good for us, of course, but I do not brag about it. It is a fact of life.

One thing that is sure is that members of the Government, at the very end of a normal term of office, want to stampede the House by saying that they are tired, they are fed up, and they want to go and work on their re-election plan. After all, we are not all here with the wish to be defeated, so we have to return to our ridings. But we are kept here with all kinds of rules of the House that make no sense.

At the last instant in June, the Government comes in with a vast plan of action, as if it was at the beginning of its term. It is almost a Speech from the Throne the Government is proposing to us. We were told we must pass this before the end of June, otherwise we will sit all summer. Well, I do not want to sit all summer but if such is to be the case, we will sit this summer. I like the company of my colleagues. I see my friend, the Hon. Member for Victoria (Mr. McKinnon). I am sure he will be here and I will be here and we will have plenty of time to continue our good acquaintance if we have to sit here this summer, but it makes no sense.

You are indicating to me, Madam Speaker, that I should terminate my intervention. I am sure my other colleagues will speak until the very last minute we are allowed. We object to this motion. We will vote against this call of the Government to stampede the House of Commons on a very important piece of legislation. The sacred duty of the Opposition is to oppose strongly when we see fit to oppose and to let legislation go through when we believe it is not so important that we should fight forever. But the consequences are great with this particular piece of legislation for the various regions of this country.

People from Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver have it good, but let us consider the rest of Canada. Those people are saying that with this silly privatization they will have more difficulty travelling. What about the workers who are asking all kinds of questions? I put it to you, Madam Speaker, that seven hours of discussion is not that much of an abuse of the House of Commons. I hope my very esteemed colleague from Alberta, who is trying to tutor the House of Commons on how we should act, will revise his views and allow us to discuss this piece of legislation for a much longer time.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to make a few remarks on the Government's motion to restrict debate on Bill C-129. Like all the other Members of my Party, I am strongly opposed to this motion to limit debate on one of the most important pieces of legislation brought before the House this spring. Bill C-129 proposes to privatize, at least partially, Air Canada, which has been in existence since 1937. It has been one of the building blocks of Canadian Confederation. It has helped tie Canada together from sea to sea. It has served the national purpose in terms of setting labour standards and serving all parts of this country.

This Government wants to privatize Air Canada. We believe that a measure as important as this deserves full debate. What we have had is seven hours of debate in which we have tried to bring forward our concerns about this measure. We believe it is a wrong measure. We believe it will be harmful to the people of Canada. We believe it deserves a full debate in the House of Commons. We have a number of arguments to bring against this measure and we would like to hear what the Government has to say in favour of the Bill. Therefore, we are strongly opposed to any measure that would close off debate.

Air Canada is a company that is well managed. Even the Government will admit that. It is a company the people wish to see retained in public ownership. Even a majority of Conservatives are supportive of the idea of the Government maintaining ownership of Air Canada. A minority of Government Members want to see it privatized. Yet, for ideological reasons, this Government wants to privatize.

I was interested to read some of the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Simcoe South (Mr. Stewart), in 1981. We heard him this morning trying to backtrack on what he said then.

> I refuse to worship at the throne of the emperor from Mount Royal who, in turn, worships at the throne of Castro, Galbraith, Mao and Lasky.

Of course, when he is talking about the emperor from Mount Royal, he is talking about former Prime Minister Trudeau. We know what emperor he is worshipping, but at whose throne does the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) worship? He worships at the throne of Margaret Thatcher, Bill Vander Zalm and the Fraser Institute. He worships at the throne of privatization.

Rather than looking at Crown corporations on a case by case basis to see whether or not it makes sense for some to be privatized or for the Government to divest itself of some Crown corporations, the Government has an ideological outlook. It sees privatization as the answer. It is fine for the Government to jam this measure through the House of Commons without the adequate debate we, for our part, want to see.

When I spoke on this Bill on Friday, one point I tried to make was that we once more have a betrayal of trust by the Government. Government Members did not want to hear this. They did not want to hear the litany of the betrayals of trust by the Government and this Prime Minister, of which Air Canada is only one. They tried to shout me down. It is its refusal to hear what the Opposition has to say which characterizes the Government. The huge majority opposite are not willing to listen to reason on one of the most important issues facing Canada today, whether or not we will continue to have a strong, vibrant public sector in our economy which is symbolized by Air Canada. The Government is taking the approach that it does not want that debate. It simply wants to have legislation pushed through the House of Commons with about seven hours of debate so it can then bring in some kind of time allocation.

Admittedly, the Government gave us a choice. On Friday it tried to have extended hours which it called "opening up the system for democracy". What a sham. The Government should count its own back-benchers and Cabinet Members. We are heading into an election. It knows that on Friday the great majority of Members of this House have to get back to their constituencies. Members who live in the West have to travel up to eight or nine hours to get to their constituencies. It is not possible to make changes on a Friday afternoon, cancel their plans, and still get home for important constituency events on the weekend. Yet the Government has the hypocrisy to pretend that by offering the possibility of extended hours for debate on something as important as the privatization of Air Canada, it is opening up democracy. What a sham and hypocrisy that is. If the Government is serious about wanting to have debate, it should let the debate continue. It should let all Members of the House speak. I am not speaking for myself here because I had the opportunity to speak on Friday. It was not my weekend to go home. I will be going home this coming weekend. But all Members who want to speak should be given an opportunity to speak.

The Government should give some of its own Members who perhaps believe in this idiotic privatization the opportunity to speak. Let us have a debate. What we have seen is one or two Members of the Government speaking and the other Government Members sitting like sheep. They bleat occasionally but do not get up and speak intelligently on the merits or lack of them in the privatization approach. They try to shout down the Opposition and then try to push through a measure to limit the total amount of debate.

This is not good enough in a democracy. I would like to refer again to the words of the Hon. Member for Simcoe South in 1981. They made sense then and I think they makes sense now. He said:

> I tell you, Mr. Speaker, we cannot be stopped with closure. That statement was made when closure was invoked during the infamous pipeline debate. But today Hon. Members opposite are sitting with a comfortable majority. I for one refuse to stand silent and see the rights of Parliament abused, frustrated and strangled.

We heard him today. He was prepared to see the rights of Parliament abused, frustrated and strangled. He said:

> I believe in open covenants, and I believe they should be arrived at openly. We, as elected Members of Parliament, hold a public trust. That trust is being abused when a parliamentary majority seeks to withhold the rights of the opposition minority.

The Hon. Member is in his seat again. This morning he had the opportunity to stand up and defend the statements he made in 1981. Instead he gave a very weak defence of the Government. He said basically that was then, this is now, that then I was on the opposition side and now I am on the government side of the House.

Mr. Stewart: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. That is not what I said at the time. That procedure was on a money Bill. There had been five closure motions in five months. Time allocation has not been brought in by this Government since last October or November. What the Member said was false.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is a matter of debate. I can understand the Hon. Member wanting to make his point. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly) has the floor.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I was not purporting to quote the Hon. Member exactly. I was giving the gist of what he said. If people wish to check Hansard, they will see very well that what the Member was doing was back-tracking on the brave statements he had made when he was a member of the Opposition and standing up for the rights of Parliament against what he considered to be an arrogant majority on the government side. We are now seeing that same kind of arrogant majority each day. We see the Hon. Member defending the arrogance, saying that it is okay because what the Government is doing meets with his approbation. I do not agree with that.

Time allocation is a form of closure. What we have seen from the Government is a form of limiting debate. On our side we are concerned that this measure to sell off 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada is a matter of fundamental importance to the people of Canada, and a matter of fundamental importance to the economy. We believe it deserves a full debate, not one that is cut short by motions of time allocation by the Government, not one that will be cut short by phoney motions to extend the hours which is, in effect, legislation by exhaustion, but rather a full debate in which all Members on all sides of the House have a chance to speak their piece, bring forward facts, marshal their arguments and say on what side of the issue they are.

The Opposition does not want to see this Bill pushed through. The Government is not interested in debate. It is interested in jamming through a whole agenda without proper, adequate and informed debate.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 4.34 p.m., the two hours allotted for the study of the motion put to the House according to Standing Order 117 have expired. It is therefore my duty, according to that Standing Order, to interrupt the debate and to put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

[English]

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved: that Bill C-279, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (tabling of documents), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

—Madam Speaker, I am happy to say a few words in support of this bill requiring that any document tabled in the House by the Government be tabled simultaneously in both official languages. Bill C-279 states that any document tabled or distributed in the Senate or the House of Commons by the Government must be in both official languages.

Madam Speaker, bilingualism and language of work practices in the House of Commons depend on courtesy and good will rather than on the Act itself. In fact, nothing in this Act which dates back to 1969, requires the government to observe the custom whereby all members of the House would have access to Government documents in the language of their choice. On occasion, documents might be tabled only in English, which would place those Hon. Members who do not speak English at a disadvantage; on the other hand, some documents tabled only in French would do a serious disservice to those Hon. Members who understand only English.

Because as a rule the Government tables all documents in both official languages, I have always considered this as a good practice and went along with it until one day, while reading the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, I suddenly realized that there was no provision either in the Official Languages Act or the Senate and House of Commons Act making it compulsory for the Government to table simultaneously all documents in both official languages.

I remind the House of the recent experience of last November when the Government tabled in the House the Free Trade Agreement in English only. We did not make a big fuss over it. We did not show our disappointment at the time because I knew quite well that the Government was taking this measure very seriously and that within a reasonable time, we would get a French translation of this document. As a matter of fact, we got it the very next day.

As a result of events which somewhat surprised and shocked a number of Hon. Members, the House will remember the amendments which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs moved to Bill C-22.

At that time the Minister came to the House and placed us in a somewhat de facto situation, informing us that although he had no French translation of these amendments he would give us one off the cuff which he did by reading very quickly the highly technical amendments provided by translators and interpreters—but he just could not do justice to these amendments.

I was very disappointed and I felt this was a most disrespectful approach to the basic rights of all Hon. Members to have access to all documents in their own language.

As I said earlier, nothing obliged the Minister or the Government to proceed differently. That is why I decided to prepare a Bill to amend the Official Languages Act, so that events such as those I just described do not recur.

We all know that the 1969 Official Languages Act is in its last days. I hope that it will be replaced by a much more complete, much more modern piece of legislation and Bill C-72, now in clause-by-clause consideration in committee, should come back to us in a few days and, hopefully, be passed quickly and proclaimed by the Governor General.

This Bill C-72, tabled in the House on June 25, as you will recall, contained no provision to require the Government to table documents in both official languages simultaneously.

I therefore thought, further to last November's events, free trade, Bill C-22, that it might be good to amend the law and that is why I tabled Bill C-279 here in the House.

Madam Speaker, the wording of Bill C-279 is quite clear and precise. It is simple. It has only one clause. The Official Languages Act is amended as follows:

"Any document tabled or distributed in the Senate or the House of Commons by the Government of Canada shall be tabled or distributed simultaneously in both official languages and both language versions are equally authoritative."

It seemed to me at the time that this was a reasonable and proper proposal, to say the least, and that it only required the support and good will of my colleagues in the House to have this provision accepted. In any case, our national bilingual policy depended merely on generosity of spirit has bothered me for a long time and that is why I asked the Committee dealing with Bill C-72 to include an amendment I had already put forward, which would in fact implement Bill C-279.

The Minister of Justice ((Mr. Hnatyshyn), when he appeared before us to explain his position, surprised me somewhat when he said publicly: "We accept the idea of including in Bill C-72 provisions saying that any document tabled by the Government should be tabled simultanuously in both official languages". He added, of course, that he would like my amendment to be more precise with regard to Government documents, and he suggested that the amendment should rather deal with documents prepared by federal institutions as defined in the Bill, which means the Government and the corporations established to perform a Federal function.

In any case, the minister's amendment, which was brought forward last week before the Committee, seemed basically to meet my objective, and I noticed with pleasure along with my colleagues of the Committee that there was a certain will to act on the part of the Government; they even let me propose the amendment in question which I think will be eventually passed by the Committee but which was withheld for now and which was, as we know, passed more or less, even if the clause is maintained until the end of the Committee proceedings.

Thus, Madam Speaker, I cannot see why we continue to proceed with Bill C-279, but I know the Standing Order. I know that to withdraw it I have to ask for the unanimous consent of the House but we will clearly have an amendment to Bill C-72 which will do precisely what I wanted to do with Bill C-279. I am very pleased with that. On occasion, Members in this House are able to help improve legislation. I am even prouder that the Government recognized that occasionally an opposition Member could help them draft legislation. I do not wish to take any more time on this debate. I simply want to say to the Government: Thank you very much! I appreciate your action. It is my view that many Members in this House will recognize that in this case the Government certainly is right to include in the Bill a requirement that any document from any federal institution that is tabled in this House will be tabled in both official languages.

Madam Speaker, I would ask for unanimous consent for Bill C-279 to be withdrawn.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Madam Speaker, I do not think there will be any trouble on this side of the House with the Hon. Member's request for unanimous consent. In a few days it will be nine years since I arrived here as a Member of this Chamber. There has been some frustration in my life as a unilingual Canadian from western Canada at the occasional absence of documents in the precise English that I needed.

I think the will of the committee dealing with Bill C-72 comes out of our different experiences in this Chamber. It is a country with two official languages and we really need the documentation and amendments that come before us to be in two languages so that we can give them the care and attention they deserve in a nation like this.

I thank the Member for his kind comments. Members on the government side and, I suggest, from the NDP as well were unanimous in the committee in putting the clause in Bill C-72. We were pleased to be able to have the Member take the Government's amendment and actually move it for us so that it was truly an effort in national unity relating to two languages. I think it is wise to withdraw the Bill, and we give our consent.

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Madam Speaker, it is with pride that I can give the consent of our Party with regard to this Private Member's Bill. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hon. Member who presented the Bill to the House.

I was surprised that legislation such as suggested in this Bill was not already in place. As the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has said, there are many times with the absence of a law that for the sake of expedience we begin to slip and put in documents in one language. That is unacceptable in our bilingual nation.

The progress we have seen is the type of progress we want to happen. It is nice to speak to something on which all sides agree, knowing that in the end we will be a better country for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that there is unanimous consent. Therefore, the order is discharged.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The step taken by the Hon. Member has meant that Private Member's Hour has finished somewhat earlier than usual. There are Members who have questions listed on the Adjournment Debate. I do not know if Members are prepared to proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I see that two of the Hon. Members listed on today's Adjournment Debate are present. Is it the wish of the House to suspend to make sure that everyone on the other side is present as well?

I am quite prepared to recognize the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), but I do not see the Parliamentary Secretary in the House. That is why I am inclined to suspend the sitting.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I think that the Parliamentary Secretary has gone to get some papers. I can telephone those who are expected to be called at six o'clock and ask them to come earlier, if necessary.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, we are making those telephone calls. The Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has a seven minute question. Perhaps we can begin there and see if the appropriate Parliamentary Secretary is here for the response.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, may I suggest that the House suspend until 5.30 p.m. in order for us to arrange for colleagues to be here for an appropriate debate, and continue at that time?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am glad that the Hon. Member agrees with the original suggestion made by the Chair.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the House suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.17 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 5.24 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

TRADE—PROMOTION CAMPAIGN—CONTRACT WITH JOHN LASCHINGER/ REQUEST THAT CONTRACT BE TABLED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, on a number of occasions in the past I have questioned the Government on its awarding of contracts for publicity. I must say that the answers I have received have been most unsatisfactory. That is why I have expressed to the Chair, by way of notice, that I wished to raise this issue during the adjournment debate tonight.

I raised a question with the Government about the cost of the free trade program. First, as I alleged in the question that I asked, the cost of running the free trade office is in the area of $30 million. There was a previous campaign designed, of course, to promote the trade deal, albeit unsuccessfully, which cost Canadian taxpayers some $12.7 million. So unsuccessful was this first program that much of the free trade material, the brochures, and so on, were recycled. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that it was raised in the House in terms of what we do with recycled paper; generally, we convert it to toilet paper and other such uses.

Some of us were of the opinion at that time that this action wiped the slate clean, but it had not. We now know that the Government wants to spend another $10 million to promote the free trade deal. This contract was given, in part, to a company having, as one of its principals, a gentleman by the name of John Laschinger. Mr. Laschinger is a good friend of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. McDermid: Mine, too.

Mr. Boudria: That is even better, Madam Speaker.

Mr. McDermid: And most people here.

Mr. Boudria: He is a good friend of the Minister for International Trade. In the House that Minister stated that Mr. Laschinger was used to doing the impossible because he had run the unsuccessful campaign for the Tory leadership of the Hon. Minister for International Trade. I do not think that is a very good defence. Let us remember that the Minister for International Trade came something like third in the leadership race. We should not be spending $10 million for a third-rate type of affair.

Some days later, on June 3, the Minister for International Trade was speaking to a group of students at Jarvis Collegiate in Toronto. He was questioned on the $10 million promotion deal, and in defence of his promotional package he said that this was "a mere nothing". To waste $10 million of taxpayers' money can hardly be considered as "a mere nothing". I, for one, feel that that expenditure is totally unnecessary. That is why I submit to the House today that I am dissatisfied with the answer that I have received.

And it is my sincere hope the Parliamentary Secretary will stand up in his place today and announce publicly that this Government has dropped their proposal to spend $10 million selling the Prime Minister's Trade Agreement. As we know, the Trade Agreement itself is wrong, it is bad for this country, and the Agreement as a whole should be withdrawn. But even if the Government still proceed with that wrong Agreement, the least they could do is not impose upon Canadian taxpayers an extra $10 million expenditure to sell that hodgepodge that I must say that is not even edible.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, I urge the Parliamentary Secretary today to rise in his place, here in this House, and clearly state once and for all the Government will stop that promotion, that propaganda campaign now.

[English]

In closing, it is interesting to note that the same Conservative Government, when it was in opposition, said that under a Conservative Government "no geese would be flying in the sunset", when talking about the national unity campaign of the early 1980s. If geese flying into the sunset for national unity is so wrong, why is it that those turkeys walking across the border in the fog, in the name of free trade, is so right?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) would stand here and call our American neighbours turkeys—

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. McDermid: —or refer to Canadians crossing the border into the United States as turkeys. That is what he said. I cannot understand that at all.

Mr. Boudria: I was referring to the Minister.

Mr. McDermid: I sat quietly and listened to the Hon. Member. Perhaps he could listen to me and learn something.

First, the Hon. Member said that this deal was bad for Canada. The only ones who say that are the Liberals and the NDP in their promotion. Every independent study states that it will be good for Canada. Every major economic unity in this country, from the Canadian Manufacturers' Association to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, all say it is going to be good for Canada. These are the people who are going to make it work, not the New Democratic Party, nor the Liberals. The people who are out there putting their dollars on the line, taking the risk, making it happen, are the ones who say that it will work. For the Hon. Member to go around saying that it is bad for the country is fair ball, but it is not necessarily so, that is for sure.

The next thing I want to talk about briefly is Mr. Laschinger. I can understand why the Opposition is concerned about John Laschinger working for the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). He is one of the top communications consultants in the country. This man has his Masters in Business Administration. He was a senior official in the Ontario Government where he was director of small business development and international trade development. I can understand why the Opposition has the fear of Mr. Laschinger providing advice to the Canadian Government with respect to communications on free trade.

The next thing I want to talk about is the $10 million and how it is going to be spent. In the first phase of the free trade agreement, not one penny was spent on television advertising or on radio advertising. The only advertising that was done in newspapers was to publicize a toll free number for people to call to get information or material. That was the only advertising that was done. What we have are printed material, brochures explaining the various sectors of the agreement, the agreement itself, the tariff schedules, and an over-all explanation of the agreement.

The Hon. Member must understand that in Phase I there was no paid advertising such as the Liberals used to do with all those ads on radio and television. In this next period we are going into the area where we want to have symposiums taking place across the country in order to educate the business people, the entrepreneurs, on how to penetrate the American market, how to find their niche down there, and how to increase their sales. That is what this money will be used for. The Liberals like to quote the Gallup Poll. Late last year a Gallup poll made it very clear that Canadians wanted more information. That is what the Government is providing.

Now that the free trade agreement is in the House and we are working on legislation to implement it, it is very important that the Canadian business community receives the information it requires. Our trade groups from all our offices in the United States must be educated on where they can penetrate the market in the United States. That is what the money is being spent on. That is what they are asking for. The Canadian public wants that. It wants more information. Our business community wants more information, especially the small and medium sized businesses. The large businesses can take care of themselves. The small and medium sized businesses must have access to these symposiums, and that is what we are talking about.

In this particular area we are going to provide information on where the public can obtain the brochures and more information. As I go around speaking in many different areas, I am told by a number of people that they cannot get information from their Member of Parliament. It turns out their Member of Parliament is in the Opposition and will not provide them with any information. These people are not being provided with the information that is available, so they must come to members of the Government to get that information. Of course the Hon. Member, knows full well that, in order to discuss and educate the public on the free trade agreement, this information must be forthcoming.

NATIONAL REVENUE—EVALUATION OF USED AGRICULTURAL MACHINERY.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, on May 5, 1988, I asked the Hon. Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay if the Hon. Minister would give favourable consideration to amending or rescinding any and all interpretation bulletins or other documents issued or used by the Department of National Revenue which permit employees of that Department, in effect, to change or alter the list prices of manufacturers or the invoice prices of farmers when a used machine is traded in on a new machine. The Hon. Minister said:

> I welcome this question from the Hon. Member who has been particularly conscientious on focusing on this matter which is, of course, of great importance to western farmers, indeed all farmers. I want to assure him that my Department is always anxious to administer this program in an equitable manner.
> I will take his question as a representation and remind him that we cancelled this special audit over a year ago and are endeavouring to find ways to give special attention to farmers who feel that the question of over-evaluation or otherwise of used equipment has not been dealt with properly. We are sensitive to this and we will continue to monitor it.

Monitoring is not sufficient, Madam Speaker. I strongly recommend that the Department scrap this inequitable program for the following reasons. First, it is grave discrimination. When the Minister cancelled the special audit over a year ago we all thought that that was the end of the program. However, since then the tax officers are again pursuing the same matter with some farmers—not all of them, just some of them. This is very discriminatory.

For example, in one case a farmer is being taxed several thousand dollars in taxes, whereas his neighbour who got more for his used machine is not even being assessed. It is discriminatory in another sense, and perhaps even a worse one. The Deputy Minister advised that Revenue Canada was not pursuing this matter in Ontario and Québec. His excuse was that in Ontario and Québec farmers have much smaller acreages and also use smaller equipment. The difference in price between the old equipment and the new range between $10,000 and $20,000, whereas in the West, where equipment is used to farm several sections of land, large equipment is required and the difference in price could go as high $100,000. If it is right to apply this program in western Canada, surely it is right to do so in central Canada. It is my view that it should not be used in either place, but certainly some western farmers are now suffering discrimination.

Second, farmers have been for a number of years trading old equipment on new equipment, and this policy of giving the collectors authority effectively to change a dealer's list price and the farmer's invoice price was not used until two or three years ago. I question the right of any tax collector to change invoice prices or list prices. As a matter of fact, the farmers have been doing what practically all Canadians do, namely, when we trade in a used vehicle on a new one we get the most we can for the used vehicle. This is readily accepted by everyone except Revenue Canada, which is now saying that farmers are different and that they are not going to be permitted to get the most they can for their used machines when they are buying new ones.

Actually, Bulletin No. 87.5 came into being on December 11, 1987. This document is the one, I understand, that the tax collectors now use to change invoice prices and list prices. This would be utterly unfair even if it were applicable to everyone in Canada, but it is essentially unfair when it is used only against farmers in the West. This bulletin and others like it are the ones referred to in my question which I requested to have rescinded or withdrawn.

Third, this policy is wrong, wrong, wrong, (a) because the tax men are dealing with these matters two or four years after the fact; (b) because economic conditions at the time of the deal are almost impossible to duplicate or be fully known four years later; (c) because dealers offer greater discounts to those who buy for the first time and to those who buy by trading in an old machine in off seasons when they can offer greater reductions in list prices; (d) because many farmers traded their used machines as the practice was acceptable and many farmers felt it was helping the economy of the country; (e) because farmers had a right to believe that when the deal was made the list price and invoice price issued by the dealer would be accepted; and (f) because the theory that the practice was unfair to those who buy new machinery without a trade-in does not hold water, as such a person would be able to get a discount on a new machine applicable to the time the machine was purchased.

Fourth, that if the principle is sound then let us apply it to all Canadians including Members of Parliament and Senators and not just the western farmers, or not just a few of the western farmers. But in my view the practice is unfair, unsound, and should be scrapped entirely.

It is not the business of Revenue Canada to interfere in the market-place. Even if the dealer wants to give more dollars for the used machine than what it is worth, that is his business. If he goes broke, he is the one who suffers.

A farmer should have every right in the market-place that other Canadians have and particularly in the tough times now being experienced on the farms. Every proper item that will keep our farmers on the land should be welcomed. In conclusion, I again urge the Hon. Minister to scrap this program and to do it fast.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) has raised this subject before and has very rightfully represented his constituents, and not only his constituents but others in rural communities.

On March 5, 1987, over a year ago, the Minister advised the House that he had instructed his officials to pause in the audit of the tax returns of taxpayers who have claimed investment tax credits on purchases of heavy machinery and equipment. The Minister advised that during the pause the Department would review all files under audit to ensure that audit criteria identified for this program and communicated to taxpayers and their representatives and Members of this House, including the Hon. Member for Bow River, were in fact being adhered to and that none of these audits was unreasonable.

The Minister has pointed out on numerous occasions that the specific audit program was not restricted to farmers of western Canada but included those in other industrial sectors such as logging, transportation, and manufacturing, and encompassed those in all regions of the country. Any of us who have been audited knows what a pain that is.

Departmental officials have reported to the Minister that their review of audit findings indicates that the normal audit process can adequately address investment tax credit overallowance issues. Accordingly, this audit activity as a special project was cancelled, however cases in process where either departmental officials had advised taxpayers or the representatives of a proposed reassessment or information had been received and a proposal was to be made prior to the project pause will be completed. Any further cases where evidence of non-compliance is discovered will be handled through the Department's normal or routine audit program.

It has always been the position of the Department that the investment tax credit claimed must be based on the actual cost of the property acquired and computed in a manner consistent with the economic reality of the transaction. The cost of a property that is acquired for consideration which includes a trade-in must be determined based on the value of all consideration given in exchange. The position on the determination of capital cost is set out in an information circular which reiterates the long-standing position of the Department as set out in an interpretation bulletin dated March 12, 1973. The position is supported by case law and by accounting principles.

Because Revenue Canada recognizes that the determination of fair market value of used equipment involves consideration of many factors, the Department will only reassess those cases where full benefit of the doubt has been given to taxpayers and there is a clear and significant overallowance. Revenue Canada will ensure that every reasonable opportunity is provided to taxpayers to present fully their positions before any reassessments are made. Taxpayers are reminded that they have a right to appeal formally any reassessment the Department makes.

Revenue Canada seeks to reinforce voluntary compliance with Canada's laws. Where an audit adjustment creates a tax liability, Revenue Canada has always been, and will be more than willing in cases of real hardship, to discuss reasonable approaches to settlement of the tax liability. In other words, it will maintain fairness within Revenue Canada.

DISASTERS—AIR-INDIA CRASH—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, exactly one month ago today, on May 6, I was sitting in my constituency office on O'Connor Drive in Toronto across the desk from two gentlemen, members of the Air-India Survivors Association. One was Dr. Bal Gupta who had lost his wife in that terrible tragedy. The other gentleman had lost not only his wife but all his children as well.

Although we can sympathize with Dr. Gupta and all the Air-India crash survivors, we cannot really feel the depth of their tragedy personally. Hopefully we never will be placed in that position.

The facts of the Air-India disaster speak for themselves. It occurred, as you will recall, Madam Speaker, on June 23, 1985, when Air-India Flight 182 plunged into the sea off the coast of Ireland and 329 men, women, and children lost their lives in that disaster. The vast majority of those men, women, and children were Canadian citizens with origins in India.

Why did those two gentlemen come to my constituency office one month ago? In fact, why is there such a thing as the Air-India Survivors Association? Why do they hold memorial services each year here in Ottawa and Toronto? It is, of course, to remember and honour the loved ones they lost in that great tragedy. At the same time, and understandably so, they want to see the investigation come to an end. They want all the facts to be known. They want justice to be done.

Three years have passed since this happened and, as you know, Madam Speaker, no charges have been laid, no trials held, and no convictions registered. Ireland, where it actually occurred, has had its investigation. India, the proprietor of Air-India, has had its investigation. What about Canada, where the flight departed from? What about Canada, where the vast majority of the victims lived as Canadian citizens? The Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Kelleher) says that an investigation by the RCMP and CSIS is still active, still ongoing, and is making progress. In fact, some $60 million has been spent, which the Solicitor General says is more than has ever been spent on any criminal investigation in Canada.

He says that to hold a public judicial inquiry into this great tragedy at this time would hinder the investigation, would divert the investigators away from the investigation, and would cause them to spend time justifying their own actions rather than carrying on the investigation to a conclusion. That may make sense. At first blush it seems to make sense to me, yet I think of the fact that three years have gone by since this investigation got under way. At the same time it has been revealed that tapes of wire-tapped conversations relating to the investigation have been erased. There have been reports of bad blood between the RCMP and CSIS, bad communications between those two organizations. On top of that, we know that the former Director of CSIS, Mr. Finn, left his post and was replaced by Mr. Morden. We know as well that that was not because things were going right with CSIS. On top of all that, we had a recent report of a mix-up in CSIS and the RCMP in the case of Mr. Mohammad.

With all this going on it is no wonder that the survivors group is upset. It is no wonder that people like Dr. Gupta and others are coming to me and asking questions. It is, in my opinion, time for a public judicial inquiry into this Air-India disaster. It is time to find out once and for all just how active is this investigation that the Solicitor General refers to. How many people are actually involved? Is there anything going on other than routine work? Is there a real investigation going on? What sort of progress has really been made? What do we mean by progress?

At the end of May, the Solicitor General said that he was never going to close the books on this investigation. It is not a question of keeping the books open or closing them. It is a time to look at those books once and for all and to find out what in Heaven's name has been going on.

If he is smart, the Parliamentary Secretary is going to announce to this House and the Canadian public tonight that there will be a public judicial inquiry into the Air-India tragedy.

• (1750)

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), on February 5, 1988, asked the Government if it were not time for a public inquiry concerning the Air India crash.

The Government shares the concern of Canadians over the progress of the Air India investigation. However, in view of certain actions under way at the moment, a public inquiry would not be appropriate.

The RCMP investigation of the Air India crash, which is still in progress, has been so extensive that there has never been less than 50 RCMP members devoted full time to it since it started. If a public inquiry were to be held while this investigation is in progress, it could interfere with the criminal investigation and would be denied the information that might otherwise have been available from a completed, unimpeded criminal investigation.

In this regard I believe that it would be worth while to point out that this view is also shared by the Security Intelligence Review Committee. I am referring to the testimony given by the chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, the Hon. Ron Atkey, to the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General during his last appearance before the standing committee on December 17 of last year.

At that time he said:

> Our unanimous opinion on this committee, representative of the three Parties in the House of Commons, is that the country's top priority must be to bring the culprits to justice.

As you are aware, Madam Speaker, the Security Intelligence Review Committee is responsible for reviewing the performance of CSIS and Mr. Atkey, in the context of a possible Security Intelligence Review Committee inquiry into the Air-India affair, went on to say as follows:

> We believe that, if we launched an inquiry now, we would disrupt the investigation by forcing law enforcement agencies, the Security Service, and individuals engaged in those agencies to concentrate on defending themselves rather than finding sufficient evidence to convict those guilty of these terrible events.

Moreover, the Air-India crash is also the subject of extensive civil litigation. A public inquiry could also influence these actions. I believe that Hon. Members would not wish Parliament to interfere with our established legal processes.

BILL C-61—PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Chairman of the legislative committee for Bill C-61, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act, and the Narcotic Control Act, I have the honour to present Bill C-61 to this House with amendments.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to present a petition from Vancouver, British Columbia, with 10,000 signatures. The petitioners unanimously believe in the rights of all unborn children and vigorously oppose the killing of such innocent human life through abortion.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to pass immediately legislation that will protect the unborn child from the moment of conception. I agree wholeheartedly with this most humanitarian request.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, it is my bounden duty to table before this august Chamber a serious petition from some 2,000 citizens of LaSalle, Ville-Émard and Montreal who demand that our responsible government legislate as soon as possible to protect children's lives from the moment of conception.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 106. The petitions are signed by residents of Winnipeg. The petitioners state that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States; and whereas the proposed trade agreement not only denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market, which was the key objective in these negotiations, but it threatens the loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, through the courtesy of the Hon. Member for Grey—Simcoe (Mr. Mitges), it is my pleasure to present a petition on behalf of more than 2,100 people from the Province of British Columbia. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass immediately legislation that will protect the unborn child from the moment of conception, as in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and, indeed, a duty and a privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of quite a host of constituents. They believe that the Conservative Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that in the course of the negotiations Canadian sovereignty has been compromised. They also believe that, essentially, we have lost our control as a country to build a society distinct from that of the United States of America.

They believe it is only right and fair that the Government now dissolve Parliament and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election. My suspicion is that they would like it to occur sooner than later.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Roger Clinch (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions today on behalf of the constituents of Gloucester County.

Therefore, the petitioners ask us to act immediately to protect, defend and respect the rights of unborn children.

[English]

These petitioners ask us to consider the tragic effects of the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to Section 251 of the Criminal Code. They pray and beg that we will take immediate action to protect, defend and respect the right of unborn children.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege, duty and honour to present a petition on behalf of some 700 petitioners from Kingston, Glenburnie, Joyceville, Enterprise, Elginburg, Inverary, Orleans, Battersea, Smiths Falls, Cobourg, Pembroke and North Bay. They are disappointed that the Supreme Court of Canada struck down Canada's abortion law leaving unborn children without any protection of the basic right to life. Therefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass immediately legislation to protect the unborn child from the moment of conception.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Monday, June 7, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. McDermid:

That this question be now put.

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to rise in my place today to speak in support of Bill C-129, a Bill which will give Canadians an opportunity to share in the future of Air Canada.

This legislation has been welcomed by Canadians from across the country—by consumers, Air Canada employees, the airline industry, not to mention the Canadian public at large. The Canadian public has welcomed it because it means increased competition. Increased competition means better service for consumers. Air Canada employees have welcomed it because it means expanded opportunities for the company in the future, and an opportunity for them to share in the growth of their labours.

This legislation is fully consistent with the competitive environment created by the National Transportation Act, which Act was passed just last year. That Act replaced a 20-year old law and revamped the transportation sector. It permits greater reliance on market forces and less reliance on economic regulation. The results of this are beginning to be felt in more innovation and enterprise, as well as more competitive transportation services with reduced prices.

For the airlines this has meant that it will be much easier to adjust their services to meet the demands of the market-place and to tailor their fare structure to meet competitive conditions.

The short title of Bill C-129 is the Air Canada Public Participation Act. This is an apt description of what this legislation is all about.

The intent of the Bill is to provide all Canadians with the unique opportunity to become real and active partners in the ownership of one of the world's great airlines. Once the Bill is passed, Air Canada's 22,000 plus employees, all of whom have contributed to the airline's national and international success and achievements, will also be able to share directly in the company's ownership and success.

I would remind Hon. Members as well that the legislation before us limits the level of individual ownership and, in so doing, broadens the base of potential investors.

The Air Canada Public Participation Act will ensure that no more than 10 per cent of Air Canada can ever be owned or controlled by an individual or any associated interests. There need be no concern about Canadians ever losing control of Air Canada. The legislation parallels the National Transportation Act, 1987 in that regard by restricting non-resident ownership to no more than 25 per cent of publicly available voting shares.

Air Canada, I repeat, will remain Canadian-owned and controlled. The only difference will be that Canadians, including the airline's employees, will be able to share directly in a Canadian enterprise that has become a symbol of excellence world-wide.

Most things will not change. It will be business as usual. Air Canada will be continuing its current employment and safety practices and polices, after public participation. Legislation such as the Canada Labour Code, the National Transportation Act, the Pension Benefits Standards Act and the Aeronautics Act will still apply to Air Canada, regardless of its ownership status.

The Government's commitment to maintaining a high level of safety in the Canadian transportation system will not be jeopardized. Safety has not been deregulated, and will likewise not be affected by public participation. This Government believes in regulating "smarter", and in some cases that means less regulation, in other cases more, but in all cases it means better regulation.

The Air Canada Public Participation Act will guarantee the continuance of the airline's operational and overhaul centres in Winnipeg, Mississauga and Montreal. Its head office will remain in Montreal.

In addition, the Official Languages Act continues to apply to Air Canada, thus ensuring service in both official languages.

When the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke during this debate, he referred to the support this legislation has elicited from all across the country and from all sectors and interests. They welcome it because they want to see Air Canada maintain its position of respect among the world's airlines. They welcome public participation because they know that a flexible, unfettered Air Canada will continue to prosper in the new environment that has resulted from the economic regulatory reform of the Canadian airline industry.

The Government's program of economic regulatory reform has meant that more people have been able to fly to more places at better prices than ever before. It means that Canadians have benefited from increased innovation, initiative, entrepreneurial spirit and competition in the air industry. Canada's airline industry has one of the world's best airline safety records.

Transport Canada's essential role will continue to be the regulatory and enforcement body of airline safety in the testing and licencing of flight and maintenance personnel and the regulations regarding aircraft maintenance and operations including inspections. Air Canada and all other Canadian airlines must comply with these regulations irrespective of ownership, as is the case today. In the context of airline safety records, it seems very appropriate that it is the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) who has introduced this legislation. Members of this House will recall that in his former capacity as Transport Minister in 1979 he set in motion the reform of air safety standards in this country through the study undertaken by Mr. Justice Dubin. The Dubin report was the long overdue examination of air safety. Its recommendations were wide-ranging and comprehensive. They addressed air worthiness, accident and incident reporting, enforcement, navigational aids, uncontrolled airports and personnel.

For example, one of the key recommendations contained in the Dubin report called for the establishment of an independent Aviation Safety Board. This board became fully operational in October, 1984. Its objective is to advance aviation safety by conducting independent investigations into aviation occurrences, identifying safety deficiencies and making recommendations to eliminate or reduce those deficiencies.

The Canadian Aviation Safety Board accident investigation lab here in Ottawa is one of the most sophisticated facilities of its kind in the world. It is there that specialized laboratory testing and analysis of aircraft parts, structural components and wreckage from aviation occurrences is conducted. The engineering function also includes wreckage search and recovery, such as the recent recovery of literally thousands of pieces of aircraft wreckage from the bottom of Hamilton harbour. I think we can all agree, Mr. Speaker, that these are not pleasant tasks but they are essential to ensuring the continued provision of safe air transportation.

Another Dubin recommendation that has since been implemented is the creation of the Civil Aviation Tribunal to hear and determine appeals from administrative decisions quickly and fairly. This tribunal is unique in the world and permits carriers or individuals to seek an independent review if, for example, they object to the imposition of a fine.

Finally, a discussion of the Dubin recommendations is not complete until we also address the amendments to the Aeronautics Act as amended in 1985. These amendments reflected a number of the Dubin recommendations and gave this country one of the most progressive aviation safety laws in existence. The Aeronautics Act, 1985, modernized and replaced safety legislation that had not been amended in any significant way since World War II. The amended legislation has strengthened the areas of airport security, government access to pilots and engineers' records, owner and operator insurance requirements, standards for air worthiness, air traffic services and navigational aids and medical check-ups for those holding licences. Most important, Transport Canada's enforcement powers have been increased and penalties for infractions have been strengthened. This involved amending the Criminal Code as well so that some aviation safety infractions are now considered criminal rather than civil offences.

As a means of properly administering the new Aeronautics Act, Transport Canada has undertaken an assessment of how best to employ in its certification, surveillance, monitoring and enforcement resources. But these new safety measures do not stop with the Aeronautics Act, Mr. Speaker.

Since 1985, Transport Canada has directed an additional $70 million toward enhancements to security at Canada's airports. This includes better physical security, more security guards and a better security inspection program. Among the further measures aimed at making air travel safe for all Canadians is the Canadian air space systems plan. This program is part of the Government's continuing commitment to develop world class technology in this country. The air space systems plan helps Transport Canada to keep pace with the rapid technological improvements in aviation safety. One aspect of this plan that is well under way is the radar modernization project. At a total estimated cost of $810 million, approximately half of which has already been spent, this initiative will improve air traffic control across the country. The bottom line is increased safety for Canada's air travellers. This was all accomplished long before initiatives such as regulatory reform and now public participation of Air Canada. Canada is the only country in the world that undertook a comprehensive review of our air safety regulations before pursuing economic regulatory reform initiatives.

Indeed, these accomplishments in the area of transportation safety made regulatory reform possible. Today it is not necessary to regulate how much a carrier can charge for a fare. What really matters is whether that carrier can operate safely. Likewise, it is not necessary for the Government to own Air Canada to ensure that it will continue to operate safely. For two years now improved regulations have been in place to ensure the safe operation for every carrier in the airline industry, including Air Canada. The Government has no difficulty with the question of where to spend taxpayers' hard earned money. We believe in using tax dollars where they will best benefit the people of Canada as a whole.

An Air Canada with access to equity markets will be willing and able to purchase aircraft on its own. The people of Canada are eager to participate by investing their capital in the future of a well-run airline. We believe that government dollars are better spent regulating air safety. This is where tax money should be going rather than buying an aircraft for an airline that would prefer having the freedom to buy them on its own and without someone looking over its shoulder.

We have witnessed a rapid evolution in the air industry as both technology and service have kept pace with the travellers' demands. In the face of increased competition, it is absolutely essential that Air Canada have new capital to develop new routes and to provide new services. It needs to maintain a modern air fleet so that it can continue to serve Canadians proudly around the world. Public participation is essential for a competitive, financially independent Air Canada, and a strong Air Canada is essential to Canada's competitive airline industry.

For the better part of this century, Canadians have relied upon air travel to span our great distances, open our remote areas and draw us all together as a nation. From its modest beginnings in 1937 Air Canada has grown to play an integral role in our nation building of this great Canada. Air Canada represents a network that has brought us closer together. It represents a network that has linked us with the larger global world, and Canadians are now looking forward to the day when they can share in the direct ownership of this great national enterprise.

Air Canada is a great national institution. I am proud to support this legislation that will allow us to participate in it, just as I am proud of the achievements of a Government that has made air travel safer, more reliable and more accessible for all Canadians.

Mr. Duguay: Mr. Speaker, I want first to congratulate my colleague on his very fine speech on the need for this legislation.

George Orwell once defined "Doublespeak" as the ability to hold and express two conflicting points of view at the same time. I want to read for the benefit of my colleagues some comments made on Thursday, May 10, 1984, by the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). He said:

> —and I myself embarked on a series of personal discussions in Canada and the United States . . . There were times I had to take issue with those who predicted mass chaos in industry if we attempted reform.
> Airline crashes, labour disputes, airline bankruptcies, loss of small community services, all of these were blamed on change, which I would say were properly and effectively disputed and debunked during the course of the hearings.

He went on to explain his view of policy:

> The essence of this policy is less regulation and more competition. It is a significant departure from the status quo and reflects the first comprehensive reform of Canadian air policy. It demonstrates the government's confidence in the maturity of Canada's airline industry to respond to the challenges of increased competition.
> This policy discards the concept that the airline industry is a public utility. Instead, it introduces the idea that commercial competition is the basis of a healthy air transport system.

It seems to me that the then Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, was an eloquent speaker for the privatization of Air Canada. I wonder if my hon. colleague from St. Catharines might have a comment about how the Hon. Member has perfected "Doublespeak" so that he can now oppose what he so fervently supported only a brief time ago.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it has been said of Canadians that we are a pragmatic lot. There is a tremendous difference between 1937 and 1987. There has been a growth in the airlines and in the maturity of this nation. Air Canada has matured as an airline. My friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry noted that change, and was in a position to do something about it. That was what he was doing, but he did not go far enough.

It became the opportunity of this Government, particularly the Deputy Prime Minister, who in 1979 indicated that safety would always be a priority concern of any Government to which he belonged and that transportation should be governed by the economic sector with a great role being played by the private sector.

A member of the Opposition who once held an important role sees the issue differently today. However, in 1988, the role of Air Canada can only be one in which it is given an opportunity to compete with other airlines without the regulations that encumbered the Air Canada of yesterday. That is what we are doing with this Bill.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that my hon. friend from St. Catharines is a good free enterpriser who is in favour of competition and private investment, I would assume as well that he believes that the investors in any profitable corporation should have an opportunity to make a return on those investments in the form of dividends, interest or both.

Why should Canadians or employees of Air Canada who are also Canadians buy shares in a company that had a $45-million net profit last year after taxes but paid no dividends? In 1986, it had a $40-million profit but paid no dividends. Does the Hon. Member think that that is proper? Do the taxpayers of Canada not have just as much right for an opportunity for return on their investment as any single private investor?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I can only ask my hon. friend to wait until 1990 to see what kind of dividend Air Canada will then pay. I recall that that question was raised by the Hon. Member himself at the Standing Committee on Transport. It was pointed out then that the Government of Canada did receive some return for the great service of Air Canada, but the point to be made now is that, yes, as a free enterpriser I agree that the people of Canada should be able to share in the growth and the wealth of an industry whose role is expanding and enlarging. We asked the employees themselves if they wanted to share in this, and of course they do. They want to be part of this growth. They want to be able to share in the profit of their labours. This is the opportunity we are giving them and the people of Canada. We are giving them an opportunity to share in that growth that is bound to take place in the future, just as it has in the past.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we intend to oppose the privatization of Air Canada today as we have on earlier occasions and as we will at every stage at which this Bill is discussed. We do that because we see this proposal being made not because there is any real economic or financial justification for the idea but simply because it is part of the ideological baggage the Conservative Government carries with it. It is part of its belief that anything the private sector does is better and more efficient than what can be done by publicly-owned companies.

The facts and the record of Air Canada prove that to be completely false. After all, let us recall that Air Canada was established as a Crown corporation by a Liberal Government generations ago because the then Government and the people of Canada realized that an airline which flew regularly from the Atlantic to the Pacific was necessary for Canada and because the private investors were not interested in such an airline. They could not see that they would make a profit in the early years. Therefore, Air Canada was established.

Air Canada has been an efficient company. It has provided service and it is rated internationally as one of the best, most efficient airline companies in the world. It has been well managed and it has been efficient. It has provided service to most parts of Canada, not just to the major cities. To the best of its ability, it has met the needs of the Canadian people.

We are told that part of the reason for privatizing Air Canada is that Air Canada needs new aeroplanes, which it does, and that these new aeroplanes, needed to replace the aging aeroplanes it is now using, will cost billions of dollars. The sale of shares the Government is proposing will only bring in $300 million.

Analysts in the business of watching how money is raised have indicated that there are other ways to raise money. The Government could permit Air Canada to borrow the money. After all, that would not add to the real debt of Canada because Air Canada has been sufficiently profitable to pay the interest and eventually repay the loans.

The Canadian public supports the belief that Air Canada should remain public. Two polls done earlier this year, one by Gallup and one by Environics, show that by a two-to-one majority people believe that Air Canada should not be privatized. Economists in the business world, business analysts, and the head of British Air, all of whom believe in privatization, have said that partial privatization is a mistake, that partial privatization will not work.

Mr. McDermid: They want the whole thing. Do you agree with them?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I guess the polls showing how low the Conservative Party is in public opinion—

Mr. McDermid: Come on down and run against me.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am quite prepared to listen to the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) make his own speech, and I will not interrupt. However, if he is going to interrupt me I want to deal with his interruptions. The reason he is so nervous and so busy interrupting, interjecting, and shouting, is that he knows he is not going to be here after the next election.

He asks me whether I agree with the people who are saying that the company should be 100 per cent privatized. I do not agree with them but they are saying, and I wish he would listen, that either the company should remain as a Crown corporation or it should be 100 per cent privatized. The Government does not have the guts to propose 100 per cent privatization because it knows the public is opposed to that. The Government has opened the door to 100 per cent privatization by bringing forth this proposal for partial privatization.

Those who believe in 100 per cent privatization say that partial privatization is a mistake and will not work. It will not work because there is a requirement in this Bill that the company retain its bilingual status. That is going to cost the company money. It requires that the head office remain in Montreal. That may not be the best business decision. It requires that the maintenance bases in Winnipeg, Montreal, and Toronto be maintained. They say that that is not necessarily a good business decision. They say that we ought to go for 100 per cent privatization, which this Bill does not provide for.

I want to raise several other points which have not been dealt with. We are told that the Government wants to privatize because the private company will be able to operate much more efficiently because of deregulation. We copied our deregulation system from the United States. We now know that many of the people, groups, and organizations in the United States which believed that deregulation would bring benefits in the United States, having now had the experience of a number of years of deregulation, realize that deregulation in the United States was a mistake. We ought to learn from that.

For example, in a June 1988 issue of Consumer Reports magazine issued in the United States the serious problems facing the United States as a result of their 1978 deregulation policy are discussed. This is the same situation which a privatized Air Canada will face following deregulation in Canada which was begun by the then Minister of Transport in the Liberal Government, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and continued by the present Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) under the Conservative Government.

I want to put on the record the views of the American Consumers' Association because the Canadian Consumers' Association has been one of the biggest supporters of deregulation. The article reads in part as follows:

> We recently surveyed more than 400 Consumer Reports readers who are fliers. Nearly half said that air travel is generally worse today than it was 10 years ago, before deregulation. Less than 20 percent said it was generally better. When we asked recent fliers if they had any specific complaints about their latest flight, we got an outpouring of grievances. Almost half reported their flight departed more than 15 minutes late; nearly one in five said it was more than an hour late. Half the readers called the seating "very crowded,"—

—anyone who has travelled on our planes recently knows how crowded they can be—

> —and one-third said their food was "unappetizing."

That certainly sounds familiar.

> They reported long lines at check-in (28 percent), overbooked planes (14 percent), and an unacceptably long wait for baggage (19 percent).
> All this is a far cry from what was expected from deregulation. Deregulation held out to consumers the promise of low fares, better service, more competition, and a boom in travel.

That is just what we heard a few moment ago from the Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Reid). The article goes on:

> Last year, names like Air Atlanta, Air South, Chicago Air, Gulf Air, McClain, Royale Airlines, Royal West, and TranStar vanished from terminals in airports around the nation. They join a raft of other more familiar names like Republic, Western, USA . . . All of them have been merged, purged, or submerged, leaving behind an industry of eight major airlines, each enjoying local monopolies or shared monopolies, and each serviced by smaller commuter lines that have affiliations with one or more of the giants.

Well, Mr. Speaker, is that not precisely what has happened here? Have we not, despite deregulation, the situation of having two and a half giants; Air Canada and Canadian International, and, to a lesser extent but coming up quickly, Wardair? This is what has happened. The article continues:

> Airfares, which dropped sharply because of aggressive competition from upstart airlines, have already started to rise—

That is in the United States and we are going to see that happen in Canada as well. The article continues:

> "You ain't seen nothin' yet," says Julius Maldutis, vice president for aviation research at Salomon Brothers, Inc. He predicts that cheaper fares will be further encumbered by onerous restrictions. "You'll still have discount fares, but the availability will be restricted," he says.

I could continue to quote from that article but I think I have said enough to indicate what has happened in the United States and what is going to happen in Canada as deregulation continues to bite further and further.

There are other problems involved. We have heard strong rumours that Air Canada vice-presidents are already strongly lobbying the Government to remove the bilingualism guarantees in the legislation. Members from Quebec should be worried, particularly Members from Montreal, because we know that the main centre for travellers is not Montreal but Toronto. We had a bitter experience in Winnipeg. When Air Canada began, its head office was located in Winnipeg, along with the major maintenance base. When Air Canada officials decided that its operations should be in Montreal, they did not explain to the Government that they had legitimate reasons for moving its head office, maintenance base and other facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal. Instead, they moved in stages, first with the headquarters, then other facilities, and finally the maintenance base.

The Member for Selkirk—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) is not so old that he cannot remember the pain and unanimous hostility felt not only by the unions and workers involved but by the business community over this move and how Winnipeg was shafted.

I suggest to Members of Parliament from Montreal that they keep a very careful eye on Air Canada when it is privatized. I will not be surprised if Air Canada facilities, now mainly centered in Montreal, are eventually moved quietly and surreptitiously to Toronto. Members may suggest that the Bill does not permit this, but we know from experience how a company can get around promises and legislation when it is interested in making a profit.

There is no provision to ensure that when the privatized company purchases new aircraft part of the production of the new planes will be done in Canada. According to my information, until now the wings for McDonnell Douglas aircraft that have been purchased by Air Canada were produced in Toronto. I also believe that some of the work done on other planes was carried out by Canadair in Montreal.

We know that the Post Office, in its determination to make a profit, has taken the contract to move mail originating in Canada to destinations in Europe away from Canadian air carriers and given it to a United States firm. I am sure that this contract formed a substantial part of the business of Air Canada and Canadian International Airlines.

The Post Office was given a directive by the Government to be as financially efficient as possible. Naturally, if it can get a better deal from a European carrier it will do so, ignoring the fact that it may lead to job loss in Canada.

Air Canada is looking at the purchase of new airplanes from Airbus. One must question whether any part of the Airbus aircraft will be built in Canada since it has no facilities here. Furthermore, if the purpose of privatization is to make a company as financially efficient as possible, why would it not buy airplanes as cheaply as possible unless otherwise directed by the Government?

Some government Members will suggest that the privatization still leaves the Government of Canada with a majority share of the company. However, the Government has already said that its share will be operated in a passive way, meaning that the private owners will make the decisions, including the decision to buy as cheaply as possible.

I ask Members from Toronto, Montreal and Winnipeg, where there are sizeable aircraft industries employing thousands of people, what will be the effect on those cities, those workers and on the business community if Air Canada is permitted to buy aircraft from Airbus in Europe or anywhere else, simply because they are cheaper? We believe it is important to take into account the adverse effects of such a decision.

The privatization of Air Canada will mean that it will be primarily concerned with the major centres of Toronto, Vancouver and Montreal, where the most money will be made. We are opposed to that kind of division in Canada. It will result in three groups of Canadians, with Canadians living in the major cities getting first class service, those living in other centres like Calgary, Regina, Winnipeg and Halifax getting second class service, while those in rural communities and in the North will get the worst service. That will be the inevitable result of the privatization of Air Canada.

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on the ramblings on of the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who quite clearly substantially lacks knowledge of the airline industry, despite the fact that he has been around this place for quite some time.

He flies every week, like me, and we see each other from time to time. The NDP purport to be the only Party that represents union people. Has he asked whether they are really in favour of it?

I have discussed this with many stewardesses and pilots. The Hon. Member held up a piece of paper, citing it as a poll saying that up to a three-to-one majority of people in Canada oppose what the Government is doing. I defy the Hon. Member to pull out the exact poll and tell us when it was conducted. He should present more substantial statements. I also have a poll that I would like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). It was published in the Financial Times and it was conducted by Decima. I suppose it is just as valid a poll as the one presented by the Hon. Member. On June 6, 1988, not very long ago, Canadians were asked: The federal Government recently announced that it will reduce its ownership in Air Canada, shares will be sold to Air Canada employees and Canadian investors first, and there will be limits on how many shares any one investor can have and how many of these shares can be owned by foreign investors. What is your view?

I hope the Hon. Member listens to the response, which was that 11 per cent were strongly supportive of this plan, 58 per cent supported it, 21 per cent opposed it, 7 per cent strongly opposed it, and 3 per cent did not know. That is hardly a two to one opposition to what the Government has done.

The next question asked was: How do you think this plan will affect the airline's ability to compete and grow? That is a fair question and it was asked of Canadians who, the Hon. Member purports, do not support this. Eight per cent said it will have a very positive effect, 64 per cent said it would have a positive effect, 20 per cent said it would have a negative effect, and 4 per cent said it would have a very negative effect. Do those figures back up the Hon. Member's statement that all Canadians believe that this is going to be very harmful to the industry?

I will read another question: How do you think it will affect the quality of service the airline offers to Canadian travellers? Nine per cent said it would have a positive effect, 65 per cent said it would have a very positive effect, 19 per cent said it would have a negative effect, and 4 per cent said it would have a very negative effect.

The Hon. Member threw some figures out in this House which distort what really is the case. This particular Decima poll indicates that basically 65 per cent of Canadians support the sale of Air Canada to the private sector. So the Hon. Member's argument requires perhaps some explanation.

The Hon. Member talked about deregulation. This has nothing to do with deregulation, so why bring the subject up? Does he mean that airlines should not continue to be regulated? We have private airlines right now. Are they not under the regulations that exist? Of course, they are. That is a different issue.

The Hon. Member talks about merging with U.S. airlines. What does the New Democratic Party know about business, anyway? When did those Members become the experts on corporations, how they operate and how they merge to become more effective and efficient?

Where is the NDP support for unions? People who work at the airlines are mostly quite in favour of purchasing parts of Air Canada. The Hon. Member uses an airline every week, as I do, and he should ask its employees what they think about it. I have done that. I think the Hon. Member would be quite surprised by the answers.

His point of view on behalf of his Party is obviously not the same as the opinion of some of his other colleagues. When we were debating the privatization of Teleglobe Canada, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) said, and I quote from Hansard, February 13, 1987, at page 3426:

> The Minister quite rightly said that we in the NDP are not against privatization—

Mr. Orlikow: I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) has asked a number of questions. I hope he will leave me a few minutes to reply to most of his questions in which he has misrepresented many things.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has a good point. Could the Member conclude?

Mr. Holtmann: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I just wanted to point out that what the Member said this morning in the House is quite different from what his colleague said not too long ago. As I said, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway said:

> The Minister quite rightly said that we in the NDP are not against privatization per se,—

They are in fact saying that in some cases they would consider privatization. He went on:

> —but there must be a practical reason for selling a Crown corporation. For example, if there was bad management in the Crown corporation, it did not have sufficient money, or there was no public policy reason for keeping the corporation, then maybe it could be sold to the private sector.

One of the Member's colleagues is suggesting that some Crown corporations should be sold. That was stated right in this very House. So I ask the Member to respond to some of the points I have made.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I know I do not have much time, but let me just say that the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake began by saying that I have been here for a long time. Yes, I have been here for quite a long time. I was here before the Hon. Member for Selkirk-Interlake, and I will be here after the Member is gone, which will happen right after the next election.

There is no difference between my views and the views of the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Of course, if a Crown corporation has outlived its usefulness, if it is not efficient or if it is not well run, we are not opposed to its sale, but Air Canada is efficient. It is well run and it provides a necessary, essential and worth-while service. That is why we are opposed to the sale. The Member questioned my statement about the polls.

Mr. Girard: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentions Crown corporations could be sold. Could he tell us what Crown corporations he thinks should be sold?

Mr. Manly: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not exactly a point of order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) has the floor.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would do that but I have barely enough time to try to deal with the ridiculous questions asked by the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake. The Member challenged my statement that the public was opposed to the sale. Let me put on the record part of the speech I made on April 12 which gives the facts. I hope the Hon. Member for Selkirk—Interlake will listen. I said then:

> On March 5, 1988, The Globe and Mail published an Environics poll concerning the selling of Crown corporations. The question was asked: Do you think the Government should or should not sell Air Canada? The response was: should, 31 per cent; should not, 51 per cent. It was the same in almost every region.

A similar poll appeared in the Toronto Star on March 31, 1981, conducted by Angus Reid.

Mr. Holtmann: In 1981?

Mr. Orlikow: In 1988. If the Hon. Member questions it, I will supply him with the actual report tomorrow. The poll asked whether or not the following corporations were well run. With respect to Air Canada, 63 per cent said it was well run and 20 per cent said it was not well run, 53 per cent said the Government should not sell Air Canada to the private sector, and 35 per cent said it should sell.

There is the answer, Mr. Speaker. There is no question in my mind that the public is opposed to the sale. With respect to talking to employees of Air Canada, asking a few employees does not give one the answers. They all belong to the unions. If they disagree with what their union is saying, it is very easy for them to arrange to have a meeting and move a motion that the union change its policy. They have not done that because they essentially agree with the position as expressed by their unions.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have the opportunity today to speak on this very important Bill allowing for the participation of the Canadian public in the ownership of Air Canada. I would like to list some reasons why interest in participation and purchase has received such strong support from so many sources in Canada.

My colleagues, both on the government side and opposite, were talking about public reaction to the sale of Air Canada. The polling conducted by the Financial Times and Decima was mentioned. I would like to discuss the area of service and what is important in servicing Canadians. Air Canada has a long tradition of service and it is important that we mention that aspect. In a poll in relation to service the question was asked: "How do you think it will affect the quality of service that the airline offers to Canadian travellers?" It is noted that 74 per cent of those polled had a very positive reaction that it would maintain and enhance the type of service that Canadians are looking for from Air Canada. We should take heed of that.

It is also important that all Members have the opportunity of noting what was stated by Mr. Ed Godin, a spokesman for the pilots. As we all know, pilots have been very positive about the sale of Air Canada for a good number of years. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) noted earlier that he thought a number of employees were against the sale. Mr. Godin, when speaking about the other unions, stated: "We find their Members don't share the opinions of their union leaders", and that the union leaders are speaking out. That is quite common and it concerns me that the leadership do not take a plebiscite of their members or present to them the pluses and minuses of being able to purchase stock in Air Canada. They simply go out and make a statement. The same thing happens in my riding of Sarnia—Lambton in connection with free trade. There have been instances where leaders of unions have campaigned against the free trade initiative, whereas probably in the area of 80 per cent of the unionized members are very positive and understand the positive aspects that the free trade initiative will carry forth.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member could advise when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will take a poll of the Canadian people on trade issues?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary may resume on debate.

Mr. James: I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, what type of point of order that was, but it was an interjection from my colleague opposite.

In addressing that very point, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government were elected to lead and show leadership in this country and maintain good government. Certainly, within that mandate international trade conditions have to be assessed. We would be a sorry lot if we did not adjust to the changing times and take into consideration having a treaty with our most important customer.

When talking about the union leaders Mr. Godin stated: "We find their members don't share the opinions of the union leaders. There's an effort within the unions to counter some of the statements of the union leaders". Mr. Godin further stated: "One flight attendant in Toronto has complained that her union is wasting its money to fight the deal while the pilots are using their money to get a good deal". The pilots are putting it in the sock in order to save it and have a good deal! I thought that was a very interesting quote.

The legislation responds to the changing needs of Air Canada within an economically deregulated air transport industry. This Government has paved the way for that to be done, which is very good for the industry. It provides the freedom and flexibility that will enable Air Canada to meet the challenges of a competitive and global environment. The legislation provides for the orderly transition of Air Canada, as a mature and responsive Canadian company, from a Crown corporation to a publicly held Canadian corporation. It will enable Air Canada to build upon the high level of performance it has demonstrated over its 51 year history. It will support the high level of personal identification that Canadians have and feel for Air Canada as our national flag carrier. We all know there is a very strong feeling in Canada about Air Canada, and certainly among many people who never board an airplane.

They feel positive about the Air Canada name and the airline. It is important that that be maintained, and it certainly will be. It has had a long and illustrious experience in Canada of handling the travelling public. When looking at the polls, it is important to note that a number of people who do not travel, unlike most Members in the House, have perhaps an even more positive feeling about Air Canada.

A few years ago, Air Canada was our only national airline. Today, we have Canadian Airlines International and its partners challenging Air Canada and its partners in national and regional markets across the country. In my riding of Sarnia—Lambton we have Air Ontario, a partner of Air Canada. It is a regional airline. Five months ago Canadian partners started to fly out of Sarnia on a regular basis. Therefore, we have excellent service in a metro area of approximately 87,000 people, and a county city, urban area of approximately 120,000. Air Ontario provides an excellent and competitive service. If one flies out at 7 a.m. to Toronto and connects with Air Canada one can be in Ottawa by 9.15 a.m. The same applies to Canadian Airlines International. It flies out of Sarnia at 7.05 a.m. That example in my own area illustrates the type of service provided to the smaller urban areas in Canada.

Wardair is also competing with the two major domestic air carriers in the domestic areas as well as in the charter business. That adds another dimension to the domestic airline business and its competitiveness. The other day I had to have my flight changed and it was changed over to Wardair. That other dimension adds competition, which makes for good service.

One might mention Wardair and the type of private sector competitiveness that Air Canada was experiencing. I note here that in September, 1987, Wardair successfully raised $125 million in a public equity issue to buy more airplanes. That illustrates the competitiveness that Air Canada was experiencing from the private sector where companies could go out and raise moneys, whereas Air Canada was not in the position to do so.

The changes that have been brought about by increased competition in the airline industry have taken place as a result of economic regulatory reform that has been brought on by the Government. This has led to competition for consumer dollars which, in turn, has resulted in lower fares. It is important to the service of Canadians that we have competition and lower fares. Americans have expressed to me their amazement with respect to the fares that we pay to go from one part of Canada to another. We are also interested in increased service and the growth of many smaller airlines serving regional needs.

I found it interesting to read an article which appeared recently in the the Winnipeg Free Press written by Dian Cohen who stated:

> The fundamental facts are these. Air Canada, as a creature of the federal government, is dependent on the government for its capital requirements. Air Canada operates as best it can as a private sector participant, in that it must endeavour to balance the books and make a profit. But it does not have the ability, as other private sector companies have, of going into the market place to invite equity participation when it needs a cash infusion.

She went on to state:

> Air Canada desperately needs a cash infusion right now—it has made a few million dollars in profits in the past couple of years, but nowhere near the $350 million to $1 billion it needs to replace its aging fleet with newer, quieter and more comfortable airplanes.

It has to replace those planes. Who will do it? Will the federal Government come up with the money? It is for more than competitive reasons that the fleet has constantly been renewed. Planes have geriatric problems just as people do.

She goes on to deal with certain jets with which Air Canada has had problems. The author of this article is a reputable economist. She deals with the options that are available:

> Option number one—that the Government will simply give Air Canada the money—is possible. It will mean, since the government of Canada is still spending about $25 billion more each year than it takes in in revenue that either taxes will have to go up, or the government will have to put Air Canada's needs above the needs of farmers, the oil patch, the unemployed, day care—

In order to come up with this amount of money something has to be sacrificed. That is of great concern to me, as it should be to everyone in the House.

In a recent article in the Vancouver Province of May 24, 1988, it is stated that if the Liberals and the New Democrats intend to do all they can to stymie the sale of shares in Air Canada, they had better spell out loud and clear how they expect the airline to raise the money to replace its aging aircraft.

The article goes on to state that the Liberals and New Democrats have offered no cogent reasons why Air Canada should remain as a Crown corporation, or solutions to its financing problems. "They should either put up or shut up and let the sale of these shares go on".

There are features of Air Canada as a Crown corporation that Canadians have valued in the past. Public participation will ensure that Air Canada does not lose sight of the values, and nor will public participation in any way detract from the high level of service Canadians have come to expect from Air Canada. The airline will continue its alliances with regional air carriers, which will provide air service to passengers from smaller centres. In a competitive market it makes sound commercial sense for Air Canada to maintain and improve upon joint scheduling with its regional carriers.

The airlines will still be working together to improve the industry generally. We believe Air Canada will continue to pursue opportunities to develop alliances and partnerships and to meet consumer demand. That is what the free enterprise spirit is all about.

In fact, Air Canada's commercial strategy has always been built upon good service and good value to customers. The interests of Air Canada's new shareholders will go hand in hand with those of the consumers. If Air Canada continues to provide good service and good value, it will continue to attract customers and will provide returns for the shareholders. When employees work for a company and are anxious to buy shares in the company they know the real potential of the company and are anxious to participate.

In the past few weeks I have heard criticism of the proposal to open Air Canada to public participation. It has been argued that Air Canada must remain a Crown corporation in order to serve a public policy role. What is the public policy role that Air Canada serves?

All airlines serve an important public service, providing access to regional, national and international destinations in a safe way, conveniently. We want it to be economical. Are Air Canada's routes and passengers more valuable than those of, say, Canadian Airlines? I believe not. It is very important that we have a deregulated and competitive situation.

Crown ownership of Air Canada is not required to ensure this service. What is required is healthy and open competition, exactly what this legislation will provide.

One major area of concern that does fall within the realm of public policy is the safety of the travelling public. Our Government has paid a lot of attention to safety issues in the airline industry. The Aeronautics Act of 1985 laid the foundation for a good, solid, regulatory framework. We have excellent enforcement by Transport Canada.

It is important that Canadians understand that when the Government came into office and took over the management of the company and was looking at privatization we developed some very sound ground rules. I have stated them a number of times before when I was very involved with legislation concerning Canadair, Teleglobe and de Havilland. There was a very sound basis for us to evaluate whether privatization should take place. Certainly, changing economic environment must be considered. We must look at effectiveness. There is abundant evidence to suggest that many Crown corporations are not as effective in serving their clients as the private sector can be. We must take that into consideration as we evaluate. Public ownership of Crown corporations places enormous demands on the Government. We have spoken about this a great deal today. Public institutions use taxpayers' money to operate. At times having Government involved even though just at arm's length tends to inhibit good, sound operation of companies. These facts were all taken into consideration when the Government moved into privatizing 13 different concerns.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak to this important legislation to explain why the Government moved toward its important decision on Air Canada. We are proud of Air Canada's achievement. As a member of the Government I am proud of this legislation that will enable Air Canada to grow and enable individual Canadians to share in its prosperity, its service to the country and to all Canadians.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find that there is agreement to defer the vote on Bill C-129, which was to be called at 4.45 p.m. today, until 5.45 p.m.; to commence Private Members' Hour at 4.45 p.m. today and to suspend the adjournment proceedings.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions. In an effort to facilitate the work of the standing committees of the House of Commons, we certainly agree to putting off the vote until a little later in the day.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, just to make things very clear, we are talking about the final vote on second reading of Bill C-129. Presently the House is studying the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) that this question be now put. The amendment before the House can be dealt with at some time during the day but, the final vote on second reading will take place at 5.45 p.m. tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the proposal of the Deputy Government House Leader. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I listened to my friend's speech. He keeps perpetuating sheer mythology. He was reading from a document of some kind about how public ownership of Air Canada inhibits its efficiency and ability to operate, or he said words to that effect.

First, I want to tell my hon. friend that Air Canada has received international gold medals and efficiency awards at least three times in the last seven or eight years. It is recognized around the world as one of the most efficient well-run airlines in the world. Where is this inhibition?

When the Hon. Member talks about Air Canada needing $300 million to purchase new aircraft, I do not know if the Member has ever read Air Canada's corporate plan from 1987 to 1991 but it says the funds required for this multimillion dollar investment will come from internally generated funds and borrowing. That is on the assumption of no privatization. Air Canada itself says it does not need funds from the sale of shares to purchase new aircraft. I also want to point out to my hon. friend that if he takes the trouble to read Air Canada's annual reports each year he knows that Air Canada has received no subsidy payments for 26 years, nor has it received equity capital investment for at least 15 years.

Mr. Tobin: It has had profits in the last eight years.

Mr. Benjamin: Air Canada during that period of time bought its fleet of 727s, 757s, 767s and half of its DC-9s without being privatized. It generated the funds internally.

Finally, if my hon. friend wants to look at what the present situation is with Air Canada, the Government of Canada, the taxpayers, have an equity of $329 million in a $3 billion corporation. Air Canada owes the Government $153 million in loans that it is paying back. In fact, it paid back $22 million of the loan in 1987. Where does my hon. friend get the mythology that Air Canada needs this money from the sale of shares to purchase new aircraft when it did not have to do it before? All its present fleet was purchased by selling bonds, by loans and by profits. None of it required the sale of shares. I want to remind my hon. friend that the share authorization for Air Canada is $750 million, and only $329 million worth of shares are held by the people of Canada, so the Government could buy another $421 million worth of shares and Air Canada would have more than enough money to start its purchase of a new fleet of aircraft.

I wish my hon. friend and his colleagues would quit peddling this mythology that Air Canada needs to sell shares to get money for aircraft when previously it bought all of its aircraft without doing that. The Hon. Member said Air Canada made a few million dollars profit last year and the year before. The amount was $85 million in those two years, for which the shareholders received no dividends, not very good free enterprise under a Conservative Government. Why does my hon. friend continue to peddle this kind of mythology that Air Canada needs this money?

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague opposite for his question. I know he has a great long-standing interest and involvement in the transportation industry. I know he feels very strongly philosophically about maintaining state involvement in our country.

Mr. Benjamin: Sound business practice.

Mr. James: We better get the balance sheet out. The Hon. Member mentioned that I said Air Canada needs $350 million to $1 billion. I quoted Dian Cohen's article, which is where that information came from. He might have been behind the curtain when I mentioned that. It seems to me that I recall that not too many months ago Air Canada's officials presented themselves at the Transport Minister's door looking for funds and, in essence, pressuring the Government for money, indicating that Air Canada was looking for money for the purchase of aircraft. It certainly does not indicate the aging of the aircraft. I have not inspected them, but certainly there is a very strong indication to the Government that Air Canada will need substantial funds.

• (1240)

I know the Hon. Member is concerned about the public. We must talk about—

Mr. Tobin: Question!

Mr. James: I am not sure what you are asking me. Are you telling me to sit down? I do not think I will.

What are we supposed to do, keep a national airline that is in competition with the other airlines that are privately owned and have to go to the well by themselves? As Hon. Members know, Air Canada does get preferential treatment when it goes on the market.

Mr. Benjamin: No, it doesn't, it does not.

Mr. James: It gets preferred rates. There is indication that it does.

Mr. Benjamin: It has to operate exactly the same as the privates.

Mr. James: Are we going to give it money? What are we going to do with the private sector people who are in the business while there is a government-owned Crown corporation? That is not very fair.

Air Canada employs thousands of employees, and the Hon. Member I am sure is very sincere about his concern for their jobs. So what are we to do, have the public sector airline in competition with two private sector airlines that are doing very well?

I agree that Air Canada is doing very well and has been profitable. In only two years in the last number of years, I don't know how many, it has lost money. Certainly it is the kind of company that will give us money back. Sorry, I have talked too long.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious when a Member has a poor case to make that he uses as much time as possible to avoid questions. The Hon. Member has said that he supports Bill C-129 because he read someone's column, but he obviously has not read Air Canada's annual reports, nor has he studied the situation with Air Canada.

We in this Party are not opposed to privatization. We do not have a philosophical objection to privatization. We do not have a belief that the Government must run each and every institution in the country, but we only support privatization when it makes sense and when it is in the interests of the taxpayers of Canada.

The Hon. Member is supporting a move to privatize Air Canada in the middle of deregulation, something that changes the ball game completely. We are hearing all kinds of horror stories from south of the border about airline companies operating in unsafe fashions, with money being diverted from maintenance and safety into profits. Deregulation has just been introduced in Canada. The experience of deregulation south of the border has been a mixed bag at the very best. Now Air Canada will be privatized, our only window left on the Canadian airline industry.

The day he announced this privatization, the Minister said that the Government of Canada will retain a majority shareholder position, 55 per cent of the shares, after the first initial privatization, and the Government will instruct the chairman of the board to vote the Government's shares with the minority shareholders. In other words, the 23 per cent or 24 per cent of the shareholders of Air Canada, private sector shareholders, will determine the fate of Air Canada because the Government will tell the person who is holding the Government's majority shares to vote with the minority.

Given that Canada is a huge nation of 25 million people only, and given that a small minority share-hold position may decide to cut routes all over the country in order to maximize profits because its bottom line is different from the public's bottom line, what will happen to Canadians who live in my riding, in places like Stephenville and Gander, people who live in northern Ontario, northern Quebec and western Canada? The service to those areas will be determined by someone who is looking at his pocketbook and at the bottom line. How would the Hon. Member explain to these people why suddenly the level of service has reverted to that of 15, 20 or 30 years ago? How does that serve the best interests of Canadians who already own Air Canada?

Mr. Benjamin: Why buy shares in something you already own? That's kind of dumb.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I think we have noted in the past some scary people who have used that same argument, dictators and kings and the like, so the Hon. Member wants to be a little careful about asking why we want to fight for it, we already own it.

Mr. Tobin: Answer my question.

Mr. James: My dad always said that the best measure of what will happen in the future is what has happened in the past. Certainly Air Canada, like the private sector companies, is servicing smaller centres. It flies into Sarnia, using smaller aeroplanes—

Mr. Tobin: Sarnia is a major centre compared to Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, P.E.I., northern Quebec, western Canada. Sarnia? Wake up.

Mr. James: With these—we have to remember that the times have changed.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary cannot possibly be expected to answer the question of the Hon. Member if the Hon. Member is going to shout out and cause such a commotion in the House. I wonder if you would direct the Hon. Member to be quiet and allow the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to answer the question calmly and coolly.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, speaking to the same point of order, I think that is an excellent piece of advice and I am quite prepared to follow it with good grace, provided the Parliamentary Secretary addresses the question I asked and does not meander again, as he is wont to do, lost in the haze, as he tries to figure out why he is supporting this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, thank you for all the assistance. The Hon. Member opposite and I have always had a good relationship. I cannot imagine how he would react to someone on this side he does not like. I am simply giving the Hon. Member an example of how the airlines now seem to be going through a lot of adjustments. Flying big aircraft into small centres is not economical. The partnership system seems to be using aircraft that are efficient and can handle the loads required. Both Canadian Airlines International and—

Mr. Tobin: You're flying low.

Mr. James: I am not sure that the Hon. Member wants to listen to the answer. I listened very attentively all the while to his question. I think we have to keep in mind the changing times and the changing use of aircraft, the new aircraft that is provided, built and manufactured for regionalization into small centres.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to advise the House that as of now, speeches will be of of 10 minutes' duration with no questions or comments permitted afterwards.

The Hon. Member for Otttawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), for the first 10-minute speech.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I regret the fact that we are down to ten minutes, but I will do what I can to highlight my major concerns about the privatization of Air Canada, which is the purpose of Bill C-129.

Mr. Speaker, I will be perfectly frank: I am against the Government's Bill. I am against the Tories' proposal for privatization, and I think the mechanism to bring this about was designed in haste and that the Government has given no serious consideration to the impact of its decision on the industry and Air Canada itself.

In this case, Mr. Speaker, we have a proposal for privatization that was drafted, as I said earlier, in haste, and which I think is surprisingly ill-prepared. Of course, we are used to that in the House by now. The Government always seems to be rushing in its legislation, and it is unable to manage the time of the House effectively.

Mr. Speaker, the Government decided to privatize Air Canada because the Corporation has to buy new aircraft. It needs a capital injection of about $300 million to renew its fleet. As we said earlier, these requirements are not new. In years gone by, the Corporation has been able to buy the replacement aircraft it needs, and I think it will still be able to do so if it remains in the public sector.

The Government tells us it is going to give Air Canada back to Canadians by letting them purchase shares in the company. Mr. Speaker, Air Canada already belongs to Canadians. It is a public corporation, a Crown corporation, 100 per cent owned by Canadians. What this Government is about to do is sell us something we already own. This isn't very logical, but that's Tory logic for you. We will make more money by investing in a company that no longer belongs to us. The purpose of Bill C-129 is to take Air Canada away from us. It's like selling the furniture to buy the House. It's like giving the lease to strangers, whose interests may be very different from the needs and interests of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, privatizing Air Canada does not make sense. We don't have to sell the pride and joy of Canadians that happens to be making a profit. In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said during the last election campaign, and I repeat it here today: "Canada needs a national airline", said Mr. Mulroney, and "I agree that Canada must keep this national airline".

Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Prime Minister. With a lot of time and effort, energy and skill and capital investment, we here in Canada have made Air Canada a going concern with an international reputation. Now the Government is getting ready to dismantle all that because the company needs airplanes.

Mr. Speaker, because I am short of time, in the few minutes available to us, I would like to touch on a most important subject related to my work as official languages critic, namely, clause 10 of Bill C-129, which reads, "The Official Languages Act applies to the Corporation."

In the few moments at my disposal, I would share with the House my concerns on this obligation, this provision of the Bill.

Mr. Speaker, as a federal institution, Air Canada has always been subject to the Official Languages Act since 1969. In an appearance before the Official Languages Committee on April 15, 1987, Mr. Pierre Jeanniot, President and Chief Executive Officer of Air Canada, said:

> Air Canada, through its people, extends the reality of a bilingual Canada to every place we serve. I believe that these examples, only a few of many, also effectively demonstrate that bilingualism does work in a commercial environment. It takes a lot of effort and dedication and commitment, but it can and it is being accomplished.

Since the subject of privatization has been raised, increasing pressure has come from the company, which feels that clause 10 of Bill C-129 will put too heavy a burden on it compared to its competitors. I know that because I have met company representatives who told me of their fears. They raised a number of issues, including services provided by a third party; Bill C-72, the new Official Languages Act I hope will soon be passed by this House, and how it will apply; bilingual signage; supplementary audits by the Commissioner of Official Languages, Treasury Board and the Department of the Secretary of State; the possibility of court challenges; language of work, both with respect to documentation and computer systems; and the role of supervisors. The corporation is also concerned about the primacy of the Official Languages Act over the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act, problems with personnel logistics and the interpretation of "significant demand", and finally, potential conflicts with provincial legislation such as Bill 101 in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I have discussed all these concerns with corporation representatives for some time. To hear these people talk, you would think they were headed for certain financial disaster if they ever had to comply with the Official Languages Act!

I listened very carefully to these people and I understand their concerns. Although I could take their fears one by one and put them to rest, I don't think this is either the time or the place to do so. However, one argument I utterly refuse to accept. According some Air Canada representatives, there is no way they can live with Bill C-72 in a commercial, profit-oriented environment. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, I am supported and by the President of Air Canada himself, Mr. Pierre Jeanniot, who told the Committee about a year ago, and I quote:

> In pragmatic terms, while our commitment is derived from a strong social belief in the equality of both languages and equal opportunities for all Canadians, we have also determined that bilingualism makes good commercial sense.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that this statement makes eminent sense. In the case of Air Canada and Bill C-129, I think there is room for adjustments, for specific arrangements to accommodate the company which, I agree, operates in a very particular and very competitive environment. The Official Opposition intends to propose such arrangements when the Bill is considered in Committee.

However, although we are open to adjustments, these should not be allowed to alter the basic principle. Canadians need a national carrier, but they also need a carrier that, partly privatized or not, respects the basic characteristics of this country, and I am referring to the English-French linguistic duality, a carrier that is able to offer services at all times in either official language of this country, from Vancouver to Halifax, from Yellowknife to Chicoutimi. This is a sacred principle that must not be altered, with or without privatization.

Mr. Speaker, I raised this point because I think it is extremely important. I would like to see the Government maintain what Bill C-129 contains with respect to official languages. I don't want to see the Government's commitment watered down. However I would not want to see Air Canada obliged to work in a competitive climate where it is not playing on a level field. I think we can allay Air Canada's fears about the Official Languages Act and its application to Bill C-129, while maintaining a certain way of doing things here in Canada for corporations that are privatized. In other words, when we privatize a public service, especially in the transportation sector, the corporation that will be privatized—it will be, because the Government has an overwhelming majority and will probably win the vote—but in any case, if it is privatized Mr. Speaker, there must be a commitment that the future company will remain subject to the Official Languages Act and that ways will be found to deal with the problems of being competitive after privatization.

I do not want Air Canada to be forced to do things that might reduce its competitiveness and give it financial difficulties. But I think that if the Government requires a company to do more than another company in the market, this same Government must guarantee that the company will be compensated for the additional services that it must provide. I am thinking, for example, of the three main aspects: language of work, language of service and equitable representation. There is no doubt that if employees are to work in their own language, English or French, throughout the country, Air Canada will have problems, but there are solutions, in Quebec as in Winnipeg. I think that we can reasonably call upon the expertise of the House and Hon. Members to find a solution to this problem of language of work that might cause major problems for Air Canada.

As for language of service, Mr. Speaker, I maintain today that Air Canada has been required to use both for almost 20 years. It has gained some experience. The President and CEO of the company, Mr. Jeanniot, said so in committee. It can be done very easily and with good will if the company just understands that it must serve the Canadian public in both official languages throughout its operations. I think that we already have good experience and some background in this.

I see no problems with equitable representation. It costs the company no more to hire competent people who reflect the country's demographic makeup. As I already said, I think that Air Canada already has some experience with all these questions. It is possible to do so and we must continue, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order! It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 21

[English]

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

BILL C-72—POSITION OF QUÉBEC GOVERNMENT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-72 to amend the Official Languages Act says that the federal Government should support the language minorities in Canada including the anglophone minority in Quebec. The Meech Accord says that the English community in Quebec is part of the fundamental character of Canada and that the federal and provincial Governments must preserve this fundamental character.

Why then is the Quebec Government now questioning certain provisions of Bill C-72? Bill C-72 is totally consistent with the Meech Accord which Quebec initiated. The Meech Accord does not give priority to Quebec in language matters. Certain language rights were entrenched in the Constitution in 1867 and once again in 1982, and the federal Official Languages Act was enacted in 1970.

The Quebec Government should stop confusing the public on these issues. Language rights in Canada are fundamental and the promotion of one language should never be done at the expense of the other.

ITALIAN WEEK

TRIBUTE TO ITALIAN CANADIANS

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, on this occasion of Italy Week right here in Ottawa, it is a real pleasure and a great honour for me to respectfully salute all Italian Canadians, who have enriched our Canadian culture with their traditions that are so warm and colorful.

I wish to take this national opportunity to draw particular attention to the multicultural dimension of our wonderful constituency of LaSalle-Émard, which has two very active Italian parishes: Maria Madre Dei Christiani, ably led by Father Duchini, and San Giovanni Di Bosco, whose pastor is Father Piol.

Since we are not allowed to use the language of Dante, so rich as it is, in this House, I will simply use this expression known in all times and civilizations: "Bravo" to all Italian Canadians!

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

APPEAL WON BY ALBERTA SCHOOLTEACHER AGAINST CONVICTION FOR INCITING HATRED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is not easy, in a society committed to freedom of speech, to curb abuse of that freedom. A blow for truth was struck with the conviction, in 1985, of James Keegstra for teaching Alberta high school students about a Jewish conspiracy he thinks is at work in world affairs.

The decision of the Alberta Court of Appeal to quash Keegstra's conviction illustrates the difficulty Canadians face in curbing lies and deceit used for racist purposes. Mr. Justice R. P. Kerans and his two colleagues assert that the Charter of Rights and Freedoms protects such freedom of speech and that the charge of inciting hatred against an identifiable group must be corroborated by evidence of such hatred and those exposed to the incitement.

An appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada regarding this decision is urgently needed. I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) to support the Attorney General of Alberta in obtaining an early hearing by the Supreme Court of Canada.

Canadians want to know what the limits on freedom of speech are in our multicultural society. They need to be assured that incitement to hatred against identifiable groups will not flourish under Charter protection.

ABORTION

SUPPORT URGED FOR PRO-LIFE LEGISLATION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the womb is truly a dangerous place to live. Knowing the current madness prevalent in those who would do away with unborn children, none of us would ever choose to be there today.

The about-to-be-aborted unborn children would agree. Occasionally they do survive the abortion, but who is there to monitor what happens next? Absolutely no one except those who are intent on preventing and destroying life.

As Members of Parliament we must call for and support pro-life legislation. As Members of Parliament we must question whether a woman has a right to terminate her pregnancy by ensuring the death of her child.

As Members of Parliament we must not condone the future destruction of our unborn children by handing them over to the canonized law breaker Henry Morgantaler, who now views his mandate for nation-wide abortion clinics and schools, to teach other doctors his perfected death skills.

For us to accept wholesale abortion is to put future generations and ourselves in the hands of those who hold a philosophy of death. All arguments in favour of abortion, infanticide, and euthanasia, reveal that the humanitarian ethic wants to restrict the right to live and expand the right to die and to kill.

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN VOTERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, last week, I had the pleasure and the honour to go to the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean and I met working men and women who, it so happened, have the same opinion of the Conservative Government as those in my riding of Montreal—Sainte-Marie. I met old people. They too feel the same way as seniors in Montreal—Sainte-Marie. I met families in Lac-Saint-Jean. They too have the same opinion of the Conservative Government as families in Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Speaker, the difference, I learned, is that the people of Lac-Saint-Jean . . . no senior citizen there will vote for our national "Charlie Brown." And I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that at this moment . . . Mr. Bouchard was ahead in the race, but now, he is behind and the people of Lac-Saint-Jean will give a lesson to this Conservative Government, which has been incompetent for the past four years.

AEROSPACE

LOCATION OF PROPOSED SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the proposed headquarters for the federal space agency must be in Ottawa because it would simply be the right thing to do. The federal Departments and foreign embassies with which it will continually liase are here. Thousands of person years in research and development and related scientific activities are within the National Capital Region and should not be disrupted or relocated. National headquarters, as in most other industrialized nations, should be in the National Capital.

In 1985-86, 44.1 per cent of federal government grants for R and D to industry went to Quebec, with only 5.7 per cent to the National Capital Region. Space plan targets for regional spending show Quebec to get 35 per cent and Ontario 35 per cent.

The space industry wants the agency in Ottawa and so do I. It is the logical decision.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—OPPRESSION OF BLACKS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the BBC has illuminated the tragedy behind the veil of secrecy designed by the South African Government to hide its torture and abuse of children. In Canada a lost child is often a victim of the criminal or the insane. In South Africa one seeks a missing black child in a government prison where the acts of the criminal and the insane are sanctioned by racist law.

Today three million black people are risking all to protest their continuing oppression. Under the leadership of COSATU and the churches of South Africa, in the face of uncivilized rejection of non violence by their oppressors, they themselves are trying non violent means of expression one more time. But perhaps the question must be asked: can they, or we who claim to be their supporters, really continue to believe that the violent oppressor will ever concede to a non violent plea? Will we instead find Frederick Douglas to be proven right, that we cannot hope to have the rain of freedom without the thunder and lightning of a liberating storm?

AIDS DISEASE—ONTARIO PREMIER'S ADVICE

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, David Peterson, Ontario's Premier, has bewildering advice for children and high school students. According to a story in the May 21 Globe and Mail, he told 420 young people that Governments are spending millions of dollars on public awareness, advertising, and medical research on the disease AIDS. Mr. Peterson informed them that it is acceptable to have safe sex with the use of condoms.

Mr. Peterson admits that there is no cure for the dreaded AIDS disease that causes suffering, misery, and heartbreak.

In view of the fact that he was speaking to children and youths, it would seem to me that the subject of safe sex could have been mentioned in a husband-wife context. He could have warned that promiscuity and homosexuality are probably the two greatest causes of AIDS. He could have warned them that the best way to play it safe is to wait for marriage, but he didn't.

Young people need better role models. As the Premier of Ontario, he has an obligation and responsibility to give healthy and intelligent answers to important questions.

Is David Peterson's advice the kind we want to give our children? Surely our children, our students, who will become the men and women of tomorrow, deserve better. Bewildering advice indeed!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S. COAST GUARD'S SEIZURE OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL IN LAKE SUPERIOR

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, last December 6, the Michigan Department of Natural Resources and the U.S. Coast Guard seized the Canadian fishing boat Last Time in Canadian waters in Lake Superior.

The vessel, owned by Ferroclad Fisheries of Batchawana, was taken to Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, and had been in the possession of the Michigan Department of Natural Resources ever since. This has resulted in losses of hundreds of thousands of dollars of income to fishermen.

The captain and crew have been charged with a misdemeanour of fishing with an illegal device, a gillnet, which carries a maximum fine of $500. No conviction has been registered yet against the captain and crew. The fishing vessel which is worth some over $500,000 is still held by the State of Michigan.

The seizure of a Canadian fishing vessel in Canadian waters by the U.S. is illegal. I call on the Government of Canada to demand that this vessel be returned to the owners immediately because it was seized illegally, that the misdemeanour charges against the fishermen be dropped, and that full restitution for the losses to these fishermen be made by the United States Government.

MARINE TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA CRUISE SHIP INDUSTRY

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement by the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) that cruise ships of 250 or more berths would be allowed duty free entry into Canada on a long term basis was welcome news for the British Columbia cruise ship industry.

Certainly the concerns expressed about this issue over the past week from all quarters of the marine and tourism sectors have been listened to sympathetically by our colleagues in Cabinet. Now the work of the interdepartmental task force, which will look at all aspects of federal policy affecting the cruise industry, must be done thoroughly and urgently, particularly with respect to whether or not over the long term any taxes or tariffs should be charged on the goods consumed or sold aboard cruise ships after 1988, for which they have already been exempted.

Perhaps in all the flurry over this issue, someone missed the important announcement by the Minister of State for Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) on May 25 when he unveiled an $80,000 study to examine the potential for expanding the cruise ship industry on the British Columbia coast. This study will look at port requirements, attractions and services for cruise ship passengers, as well as marketing strategies to attract even more customers to the B.C. west coast.

TOXIC WASTES—DUMPING BY EUROPE IN AFRICAN COUNTRIES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, modern industrial society does not know what to do with its garbage. Cities like Vancouver look for a dump site upcoast or in the interior. Large American cities tow their garbage out to sea or try to palm it off on poorer countries. The situation, however, becomes truly alarming when we deal with toxic waste. The experiences of the Love Canal and other dump sites have shown us that burying it is no solution.

We now hear of European countries that want to export the problem of toxic waste to Africa. A number of them plan to develop a toxic waste site in Benin. We read that Italy has dumped 1,200 tonnes of toxic waste in Nigeria and the containers for this toxic waste were so hot they burned the hands of the workers who handled them despite the fact they were wearing rubber gloves.

We need to recognize that we live in one world, a shrinking world. We cannot store poison in one part of it without damaging all of it. We must learn to stop producing toxic waste rather than trying to bury it.

ECCLESIASTICAL AFFAIRS

CARDINAL VACHON—FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY IN RELIGIOUS LIFE

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of Beauce and Quebec, I wish to pay tribute to a native son who is celebrating his fiftieth anniversary as a priest. I am referring to the illustrious prelate, His Eminence Cardinal Louis-Albert Vachon, Archbishop of Quebec.

This man, devoid of any affectation, has made his mark in the Roman Catholic Church. We admire his tireless dedication to his brothers and sisters in Christ. Cardinal Vachon has always believed that the life and dignity of every human being was worthy of respect.

Mr. Speaker, what is truly remarkable about this man is his abiding sense of justice and equity. As the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said: "In our modern society, the role of the priest has become immeasurably more complex, reflecting the rapid changes in our society".

Wherever there is trouble and despair, a priest is there to bring words of consolation and hope. Your Eminence, I wish you a happy fiftieth anniversary, good health and a long life!

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, there are many important issues facing the people of Central Nova in the next federal election, but none are as fundamentally important as the issues of honesty and credibility. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ran in Central Nova five years ago, he promised jobs, jobs, jobs. He bragged that when it came to government largess in Central Nova, he was going to make Allan J. look like a schoolboy. Well, we all know who the real schoolboy is. It is the Prime Minister.

In August of 1983, when the Prime Minister ran in Central Nova, there were 4,200 people dependent upon unemployment insurance. Today, four years and ten months later, there are over 6,600 people dependent upon unemployment insurance benefits in this area. In April the unemployment insurance rate in Pictou County was 31 per cent. Where are the jobs?

The Prime Minister has proven to be a schoolboy who does not do his homework. He deserves a detention. Perhaps he should be made to stay after school and write "I will tell the truth" 6,000 times. Better still, since he is failing so badly, maybe he should just drop out altogether.

THE ECONOMY

WESTERN DROUGHT—INTEREST RATE INCREASE

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the western economy is currently facing the strain of a drought. The federal and provincial Governments are prepared to provide whatever assistance is needed to overcome this natural disaster, yet the man-made problem of high interest rates continues to hurt the prairie economy.

Interest rates are now the single highest expense of non-farm origin faced by farmers. The rise in interest rates has been a major factor contributing to the decline of farm asset values, and what hurts the farmers hurts the whole prairie population.

The Bank of Canada interest rate policy is having a negative impact on new home construction, retail sales, manufacturing, and dampening the spirit of small business. This is all occurring at a time when the western economy is already in a depressed state.

I realize it is important to control inflation, but a policy which concentrates solely on inflation ignores the negative impact that high interest rates can have on important sectors in other regions of the country.

I call on the Bank of Canada to reassess its position.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HARASSMENT OF VICTIM WITNESSES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, Canada's legal system has a long way to go before a court trial can be held in which the accused, and only the accused, is placed on trial. Recent trials have demonstrated, all too often, the licence given to unscrupulous defence counsel to place the victim or victims, almost always women and/or children, on trial, rather than the defendant.

The practice of harassment and intimidation of victim witnesses in Canadian court rooms is one that must be stopped. It degrades the quality of justice in Canada, demeans victims, derogates from their human rights, and disgraces the legal profession by turning the courts into a media backdrop and defence counsel into mercenary actors.

If the legal profession cannot rectify this situation by discipline, then we shall have to by legislation. In either case, Canada's justice system must protect victims and witnesses and not expose them to a form of trial in many ways harsher than that which the defendant undergoes.

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION SOUGHT FOR OYSTER AND QUAHOG HARVESTERS AND SHIPPERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will recall the extreme bungling that surrounded the federal Government's handling of the mussel toxin case. This mismanagement reached its peak on December 11, 1987, and I quote from a press release from that day: "Health and Welfare Minister Jake Epp and Fisheries Minister Thomas Siddon announced today that an alert is in force on all shellfish from Atlantic Canada". Imagine the chaos and confusion created by that statement.

Protecting the safety and health of Canadians must come first, but surely the federal Government has to recognize that its handling of this problem only served to make a bad situation even worse. For instance, the federal Government ordered that oysters and quahogs already harvested and on their way to markets be destroyed. These producers and shippers are still looking for compensation for their products, which were totally free of toxin; no trace whatsoever was found in them either before they were harvested or in shipment.

I now urge the Ministers concerned to approve these funds as soon as possible.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

CONSIDERATIONS CONCERNING A NEW DEMOCRAT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the socialist leader has spoken out against nuclear submarines, thus taking the same position as the Liberal Leader. That is their political choice.

But it's a different story when Canada's ambassador to the United Nations and ex-socialist leader of Ontario endorses his former and future boss wholeheartedly.

Whether he is elected or appointed, an NDP'er will always thumb his nose at integrity. He takes the honours and the money, the benefits and the floor, but his philosophy never changes.

When dealing with a Member of the NDP, never forget the old French saying: "Donne à manger à un cochon, il va faire sur ton perron".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my questions to the Prime Minister. In the last two or three days we have been greeted with the spectacle of our Ambassador to the United Nations totally contradicting government policy in the areas of nuclear disarmament, foreign aid, and defence. We have had the spectacle of the Minister of International Trade contradicting the Secretary of State for External Affairs about what to do about the Ambassador to the UN. We have had the Minister of Finance contradicting the Minister of Defence as to what the cost of this very expensive program will be. We have had nothing but a series of confusing and contradictory statements from Ministers of the Crown concerning the silly and ludicrous defence program put forward by the Government.

Under those circumstances, is it not time for the Prime Minister to exercise his responsibility and to ask for a basic review of a program which not only threatens to bankrupt the defence treasury, but also undermines Canada's commitment to the non-proliferation treaty and the commitment we have had to verification and nuclear disarmament?

Is it not time that the Prime Minister stepped into this mess and cleared it up?

• (1420)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as usual in his allegations the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is wrong on all counts.

In so far as a silly and ludicrous defence policy is concerned, no one could compete for that title with the practices of the former Liberal Government of Canada which, in effect, abandoned Canada's defence commitments not only to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization but to the principles of freedom which this country should be dedicated to maintaining.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, since the Secretary of State for External Affairs is now trying to recover lost ground because of the statements made by his own official, the Ambassador to the United Nations for whom he is responsible, and which have contradicted the statements and policies of the Minister himself, I would like to ask him this specific question.

It is very clear that the Government, by going ahead with its nuclear program, will be abandoning its commitments under the non-proliferation treaty, as well as its commitments to the International Atomic Energy Committee to offer full and open verification, and its commitments that it signed with the United States in 1980 which require that its own uranium be used for only peaceful purposes and not for military purposes. How in the face of all those major contradictions can the Secretary of State stand up with any kind of honour or dignity and say that he supports this policy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member, in the allegations that he puts before the House, is wrong on every count. I have to admire his consistency.

With regard to one of the allegations that he made, let me simply restate the facts, facts which I believe he knows, even though he will not present them this way in the House of Commons. Everything that has been proposed with regard to a nuclear propelled submarine would be entirely consistent with our obligations under the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister should know is that that treaty only covers the peaceful use of nuclear materials. Therefore the decision by his Government breaks the spirit of the agreement by not offering to verify its use for military purposes. That is the truth, and those are the facts that the Minister should recognize.

SPEECH MADE BY FORMER CHANCELLOR OF WEST GERMANY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. For the last two weeks he has spent a good deal of time preparing for the summit. Part of his message has been the need to deal with the serious problems of Third World poverty and Third World debt. I wish to read to him the statement made by Willy Brandt, the former Chancellor of West Germany, who said: "How can you morally justify a circumstance where the cost of one nuclear submarine would pay for the full educational cost of 130 developing countries, including 150 million children?"

In those circumstances, when he is dealing with the question of the summit and trying to come to grips with it, is it not hypocritical and charlatan of the Government to pretend it is interested in that problem when it is going ahead with an expenditure of extravagant amounts of money for a weapons system that will contradict our commitment to non-proliferation, and at the same time deny the opportunity to increase our foreign aid commitments to countries which desperately need them to pay for the education of their children?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not read Mr. Brandt's speech. But if the Hon. Member's record is anything to go by, the Hon. Member is undoubtedly misquoting Mr. Brandt. Nonetheless I will take a look at his speech.

With regard to the opportunities for Canada to exercise real leadership in dealing with Third World debt, the initiatives that the Government has taken, particularly at international economic summits, have paved the way for very substantial action in relief of debt. That was the case with regard to Francophone Africa. It was the case with regard to African countries in the Commonwealth. Most recently, it has been as a result of a Canadian initiative that there has been a formula found among members of the Paris Club that will allow us to make even more progress with regard to the relief of debt in sub-Saharan Africa.

The Hon. Member stands in his place and talks. This Government has been acting to relieve the debt situation of countries in the Third World.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

QUEBEC'S SHARE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, who knows perfectly well that the list of people who feel that Quebec is being unfairly treated by the Conservative Government as far as economic development is concerned is getting longer by the day.

On the weekend, the Premier of Quebec said that the Government was dragging its feet on the space agency and regional economic development. Yesterday, the Secretary of State, Mr. Lucien Bouchard, said that Quebec was not getting its fair share of federal research and development contracts. The Chamber of Commerce put in its two cents' worth when it said that the Government's high interest rate policy was harming economic development in Quebec. My question for the Prime Minister is this: Why is he letting this kind of situation continue, and when will he announce a firm decision with respect to the space agency, the Port of Quebec, the Port of Montreal, regional economic development and research and development contracts? When will the Government stop its unfair treatment of Quebec?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Chamber of Commerce may have put in its two cents' worth, but the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides just about filled the piggy bank! Without quoting any figures, I would say that as far as the Secretary of State is concerned, he is standing up for Quebec's interests, which may not be customary in the Liberal Party. And when the Hon. Member asks us when we are going to make announcements, I suggest that he read the papers. It's all quite clear. An important announcement will be made Thursday morning.

APPARENT CONTRADICTIONS BETWEEN TWO MINISTERS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, we have two Ministers of the Crown contradicting each other. The Secretary of State says that Quebec is not getting its share, and the Minister who just answered my question implied that Quebec was being treated generously. I want to ask the Prime Minister, who is telling the truth, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology or the Secretary of State?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, under the previous Government, outlying areas did not get their share, and that was what the Secretary of State was referring to. To correct this, we now have an economic development plan that will deal specifically with those areas.

If we look at Quebec as a whole and if we consider the allocation of DRIE funding, we see that during the past five years, 39.5 per cent of those funds were allocated to Quebec. When we look at how contracts are awarded, when we came to power 16.3 per cent of the contracts were given to Quebec. The next year, 22.5 per cent, the year after, 24.2 per cent and last year it was 32 per cent. If we consider science and technology, 40 per cent of the contracts awarded went to Quebec under the space program.

All you have to do is listen!

TOPLEY, B.C.—REPORTED REDUCTION IN SERVICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. At the very time that the Government is finding billions of dollars to spend recklessly on attack nuclear submarines, it is busy totally undermining postal service in both rural and urban Canada. The Minister has, of course, been busy denying this. Let me ask him about what has taken place in the last few weeks in Topley, British Columbia.

Is he aware that in Topley, British Columbia, in the last few weeks because Sandra Shelford refused to take a $1,100 cut per month in pay, postal service was reduced from a post office to green boxes placed in a motel parking lot? Will the Minister finally admit that this has been what he has denied has existed in rural Canada, a major reduction in service to this part of British Columbia?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, talking about accurate statements, I have here an article from the Tuesday, April 19, issue of the Financial Post. Its headline is "New NDP defence policy outlines costly increases". I wonder where an NDP Government would get the money from.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Andre: The reality is that under the corporate plan of Canada Post the number of rural postal outlets will increase by 2,000 over the next eight years and, in fact, service will be improved. For example, last year 119 rural post offices were converted to the private sector. The hours of operation went from an average of 24 hours a week when run by Canada Post to 62 hours a week when run by the private sector. The people served by those 119 post offices are getting better service today, and that situation will continue in the future.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada and especially rural Canada, and more particularly that part of British Columbia, will notice that the Minister did not answer the question because he did not have an answer to the question. That is what they will notice.

REQUEST THAT SUPERMAILBOXES BE ABOLISHED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Considering that supermailboxes have been put in the Minister's riding and that every Member of Parliament on the Conservative side of the House and on this side of the House has supermailboxes in his or her urban ridings, and considering that citizens pay the same taxes and the same amount for postage stamps and are entitled to fully equivalent service as citizens, will the Minister admit that he was wrong on supermailboxes, abolish them, and restore door-to-door delivery throughout urban Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first let me say that door-to-door delivery has never been the exclusive way of delivering the mail in Canada for 120 years.

Mr. Broadbent: I mean urban Canada—listen!

Mr. Andre: Not even in urban Canada. Second, when Canada Post Corporation was created by an Act of Parliament, unanimously endorsed, including by the Hon. Member himself, the object was to avoid interference in the day-to-day business of the Post Office by the Minister. Now the Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking me about a specific post office in a specific area without giving me a warning that he will ask the question, and then expresses indignation and outrage that I do not know the answer.

Third, the fact is that any level of service is possible if we are prepared to pay for it. To extend door-to-door delivery to every place that now does not receive it—and no one has had it taken away—in the way the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party has asked would require that we raise the price of a stamp to 60 cents. If that is the position of that Party, let it do it. The money has to come from somewhere, from some source. The Act of Parliament to which we all agreed requires that the Post Office run in the black and not in the red. That would require a raise in the price of stamps. How high is the Leader of the New Democratic Party prepared to see the price of a stamp increase?

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that other people with expertise in the field by no means agree with the 60-cent figure. Much less than that has been estimated.

Will the Minister have a chat with his colleague, the Minister of National Defence, and have him get rid of just one nuclear submarine? He would then have enough money to pay for that, and he knows that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): And I come to my last question. As Minister responsible for postal services, is he pleased that the Government has found enough money to buy nuclear submarines but no money at all, or not enough, for postal services? Is he pleased with that?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I wonder about the New Democratic Party's defence policy. We heard the Party's spokesman on defence saying that the New Democratic Party, while it will not go for submarines, will spend that much money and more on other defence—

Mr. Broadbent: He's denied it. He didn't say it.

Mr. Andre: That's what he said. If they are going to spend all this extra money on other means of defence than submarines, where will it come from to extend postal service?

Incidentally, to do what the Hon. Member is talking about in terms of delivery door-to-door, and forgetting about what he is talking in terms of rural Canada, would require an additional $500 million a year. Where do members of the New Democratic Party suggest we get that—from the day care program, perhaps?

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

QUEBEC'S SHARE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. For four years, we in the Official Opposition have been saying that Quebec is unfairly treated, and the list is getting longer today. You have Pierre MacDonald, Quebec's Minister for International Trade, Mr. Garcia, President of the Montreal Chamber of Commerce, Jean Doré, Mayor of Montreal, Jacques Parizeau, Leader of the Parti Québécois, Robert Bourassa, Premier of Quebec, and then you have the Minister who is going to be defeated in Lac-Saint-Jean, Lucien Bouchard, who say that Quebec is being unfairly treated, on Quebec issues, by the Conservative Government. Since the Minister of State for Science and Technology has just lied by saying that his colleague, the Secretary of State, did not tell the truth in the televised debate, I would like the Prime Minister to answer the question; either let him come to the rescue of the Secretary of State or let him come to the rescue of the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Given the list of Quebecers who say that Quebec has not received its fair share, can the Prime Minister tell us whether or not he shares these people's opinion?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, regarding science and technology, I think that the last time we heard a storm of protest from Quebec was when Quebecers realized the fierce opposition of the Liberal Party to Bill C-22, which would have created 1,300 new jobs in Quebec and brought in $800 million of investment. That was the last time we heard such an outcry because the betrayal of Quebec was so great.

Now my colleague from Montreal—Sainte-Marie raises the matter of a four-year mandate for economic development. In a period of 55 months, in their last term, the Liberals created 40,000 jobs in Quebec. In less than four years, the Conservative Government has created 272,000 new jobs in Quebec!

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER CORRECT ALLEGED INJUSTICES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): I understand that the Prime Minister does not want to answer the question. All those people, who are honourable individuals in Quebec, from the Premier and Leader of the Opposition on down, say that the Conservative Government is dragging its feet on the following issues: Shipyards, space agency, rail transport, Montreal East, redevelopment of the Old Port of Montreal and development of the Port of Montreal. What I want to know and what these Quebecers want to know, Mr. Prime Minister, is not statistics from Statistics Canada. They want to know the truth! Will you correct the injustices now as the elections approach or will you simply maintain the status quo that we now have?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is quite strange to hear the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie talk about his concern for the Premier of Quebec, considering he was in a party whose leader called Mr. Bourassa a "hot-dog eater" which is a most shameful, contemptible statement towards Quebec. That is the real attitude of the Liberal Party to the Premier of Quebec and Quebecers.

As regards the economic results, the facts, if my friend does not accept the statements of Statistics Canada, let him look again. When he was a Member of this House and was quiet as a mouse, interest rates were at 22 per cent, at 16 per cent, and Quebecers were going bankrupt. The Liberals created only 40,000 new jobs in 55 months, whereas almost 272,000 have been created by the Conservative Government. This is really a giant step for the Quebec economy, and the Hon. Member should point it out gladly instead of criticizing the Conservative Government.

RURAL DIGNITY—SURVEILLANCE BY CORPORATION OFFICIALS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post and concerns a rather bizarre incident which took place in my riding last Saturday.

Last Saturday afternoon, at my invitation, three members of Rural Dignity, two women and one man, came to my office to collect petitions which had been signed and deposited at my office. They came at my invitation. I welcomed them to my office. As we were entering the office, they told me that there was a car in which there were two Canada Post officials which had been following them all the way from Ironbridge, and which was parked in the parking lot watching them.

I went out and spoke to both occupants of the car. They told me that they were there by the orders of Don Lander, the President of Canada Post.

I wish to put my question to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Since this is not the Soviet Union, and since the Minister may have heard of glastnost, can the Minister responsible for Canada Post tell me and the Canadian people how he justifies this kind of watching, besetting, and harassing by the DonDon macoute of the Post Office?

• (1440)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me what has been happening over the last couple of weeks is the postal union, disguised as Rural Dignity, is going across the country harassing the Post Office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: It is interesting that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt petitioned the Post Office for a new postal outlet in one of his towns called Wanup, Ontario. The Post Office agreed and opened a new retail post office to serve the 450 people who did not have a post office there. The Hon. Member said he was delighted. This was done under the policy which the Hon. Member, along with his Leader, now stands up and condemns as shutting things down in rural Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Minister I am not going to be diverted from my course—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: —by those kinds of shots.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to go back to the question because the Minister has a hot potato on his plate and he does not want to answer the question.

How does he justify, in a democracy like ours, this following all the way from British Columbia, all the way from Newfoundland, of people who are not harassing the Post Office, who are not threatening the Post Office, on a Saturday when all the post offices are in fact closed? Can the Minister tell this House and Canadians how he justifies that kind of behaviour in a democracy such as ours?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): In his first question he suggested the Post Office employees had followed Rural Dignity from Ironbridge. Now he says they have done it from Vancouver or St. John's, Newfoundland. Perhaps the Hon. Member can tell this House where the dignity is in travelling the country, passing on a bunch of misinformation, making a lot of false statements about closings, scaring people unnecessarily and so on. Perhaps he could tell the House how it can be justified that a Member of Parliament, as I understand it, comes rushing across the street and berates a couple of employees of a Crown corporation, screams and yells at them, calls them names, abuses them viciously, and then stands up and say they were misbehaving?

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN DROUGHT—TAX DEFERRAL REQUESTED FOR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He will be aware of the very serious drought in western Canada. Temperatures reached 42 degrees this past weekend. It is a crisis situation for livestock producers. There is no grass. Water-holes are drying up. Feed will be in very short supply. That means producers will be forced to sell up to one-half of their breeding herds.

I attended the seventy-fifth anniversary convention of the Saskatchewan Stock Growers in Moose Jaw this past weekend and many producers asked whether or not the Government would consider a deferral of income tax because of forced sales. They suggested a deferral of up to three years in order that they would have the funds to replenish their herds once the weather straightens out.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is very well aware of the sensitivity the Government has shown to the current very serious drought problem. The Minister of Agriculture was in the west just last week announcing a direct payment. It is our view right now that direct payments are a better way of targeting the assistance more precisely.

The Hon. Member is quite correct that there are some situations that arise right now where it is quite clear there are forced sales. However, there are also situations that are much greyer in interpretation and for that reason it is more difficult to deal with these through the tax system than it would be if the assistance is directly provided through a grant program.

I understand the concern expressed and I appreciate the representation that the Hon. Member has made.

RURAL POST OFFICES—COST OF HOME MAIL DELIVERY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Over the past year and a half, Mr. Speaker, I never missed an opportunity to ask questions concerning Canada Post. It was not like today when the NDP Members are rising one after another! We know this file inside out and I should like to put a very specific question to the Minister.

He stated earlier that it takes money to keep rural post offices open and provide home delivery. Considering the cost of a nuclear submarine, I wish he would tell me how many rural post offices we would be able to keep open and just how much mail we would deliver to homeowners in new residential developments. Could he tell us, for the cost of a single nuclear submarine?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party, and the Progressive Conservative Party agreed unanimously, along with the unions, in 1981 when the Post Office Corporation Act was passed by this House. That Act states explicitly that the Post Office shall run on a break-even basis. It shall pay for its operations through the sale of stamps. The proper question is therefore how much should the price of stamps be raised to meet the election promises that the Liberals and NDP are making? That is the proper question. To do otherwise would require the Post Office to break the law which was unanimously passed by this Parliament.

Mr. Gagliano: Mr. Speaker, the Minister forgets that the other two objectives of the corporation set in 1981 were to improve service and have better management relations. If the Government achieved better management relations it would have achieved the break-even point without cutting service and increasing the price of stamps.

DELIVERY OF SUPPLIES TO MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in rural Canada medical doctors receive their supplies by Canada Post. Is the new government policy, since it is turning the Post Office into a grocery store, that medical doctors will not be receiving their supplies any more through Canada Post?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I understand the question. The corporate plan calls for 2,000 additional rural post offices over the next eight years. That means that if there is a doctor in each one of these locations they will be able to receive their information and equipment, and whatever else, a little more effectively than previously. Service to rural Canada will continue to be improved under the current corporate plan.

BY-ELECTIONS

CONSTITUENCY OF LAC-SAINT-JEAN—GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES—BILL C-79—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my friend the Deputy Prime Minister.

According to Lac-Saint-Jean Conservative candidate Lucien Bouchard, now Quebec's heavyweight Minister in this Government, reforming the election expenses of political parties is the number one priority, the most important priority.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, the May 30 letter I got from the Government Deputy House Leader does not even list Bill C-79 among the federal Government's 30 or 40 priorities. It has been withdrawn from the priority list, Mr. Speaker.

So my question is this: Why was this Bill withdrawn? Why does the federal Government do one thing here in the House of Commons and why does Progressive Conservative Party candidate Lucien Bouchard say something different in his Lac-Saint-Jean by-election campaign?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, whenever the opposition Parties are ready to sit down and work out an agreement in an intelligent and orderly fashion, we will be prepared to do so.

QUERY WHETHER ANOTHER BILL WILL BE INTRODUCED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister agree that the statement made by Mr. Bouchard, in Lac-Saint-Jean, for political reasons, is in conflict with the facts as stated here in the House by the Deputy House Leader, to whom we have made this proposal three times, but to no avail? Will another bill be submitted to the Opposition Parties by June 30?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Deputy Prime Minister has already given an answer to the question concerning the tabling of a bill. As for the situation in Lac-Saint-Jean, I think that my friend will be interested to know that the Hon. Lucien Bouchard, the Conservative candidate in the Lac-Saint-Jean riding, is financing his election campaign in accordance with the formula accepted by the people and the Government of Quebec many years now, that is public financing. He does not accept contributions from corporations or labour unions.

The New Democrats might want to take note of that.

HEALTH

FOOD IRRADIATION REGULATIONS—REVIEW PROCESS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the Minister knows, new regulations regarding food irradiation were gazetted this week which will provide for applications to irradiate food to be reviewed on a case by case basis.

While a few of the recommendations in the report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs were included in the regulations, many were not.

Given the real public concern and scepticism about the whole issue of food irradiation, would the Minister once again consider a major recommendation of that report that a consultative panel, including scientists and consumer representatives as well as government officials, be established to review and advise the Minister on any submissions to irradiate food, so that the public will be more confident and assured of the openness and independence of the review process?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised this issue in the report. We looked at it seriously when we responded to the report. The Department of National Health and Welfare, specifically the Health Protection Branch division, has within it professional chemists, nutritionists, microbiologists, toxicologists, and other professionals, including the radiation group, to deal with these issues.

We regularly get advice from outside groups. I think it is important that the regulatory process within the Department of National Health and Welfare remain intact for the Minister and for the scientific advice from the Department.

Although I know it is a repeat of the points which the Hon. Member and her committee made, at the moment I believe that we have in place a consultative process without formalizing it beyond what we now have.

PUBLIC WORKS

BRIBERY ALLEGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the administration of the Department of Public Works. Yesterday, on CJOH television here in Ottawa, a promoter of a $157 million Micott office building project in Hull, Mr. Glen Kealy, stated that "an important person in Public Works on the political side said that support for the project would only come once I give them a bribe or pay them some money."

Given the seriousness of these allegations made on television here in Ottawa yesterday, has the Prime Minister had the opportunity to familiarize himself with this case? Can he respond to the House on it?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the person who made the allegation indicated that he had been speaking with the RCMP. The matter is under investigation.

RCMP INVESTIGATION—REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the supplementary question I would like to ask the Government is this: Is the Government in a position to tell us what will be the mandate and the parameters of this RCMP inquiry?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to observe that the employment of the person who made the allegation was terminated by the developers who made that proposal. We have made some preliminary inquiries about any involvement of Public Works. No one has any knowledge of that to which the Hon. Member refers. Again, I think is better left to the RCMP.

REVENUE CANADA

REPORTED DISCLOSURE OF TAX INFORMATION CONCERNING MISSISSAUGA COMPANY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The Minister will know that Revenue Canada officials have violated a taxpayer's confidentiality by sending "requirement to pay" notices to the competitors and customers of Copy Choice Office Equipment of Mississauga.

One of these notices, dated June 2, 1988, was sent to a competitor, Doering & Brown of Scarborough, which is not even a creditor of the company.

Is it new government policy to send private tax information of businesses hither and yon? Does this situation not in fact jeopardize the future viability of Copy Choice and its 12 employees?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, we are very aware that the principle of confidentiality is absolutely fundamental to our Canadian tax system.

I thank my colleague for raising this question. I have had a preliminary look at it. I have instructed my officials to look into it very carefully, to have a meeting with the taxpayer involved to hear his concerns, and to send out a statement of facts to the taxpayer.

As my colleague across the House knows, quite properly according to law I am precluded from putting the Department's side of the issue. We are sending the Department's side of the issue, as it were, in a statement of facts to the taxpayer. If he wishes to make it public he may. In the meantime I can assure the Member that I am taking the matter very seriously.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer and the recognition that what Revenue Canada has done has certainly infringed upon the declaration of taxpayers' rights with which his Government was so concerned.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the other point I want to make in putting my question to the Minister is that this taxpayer tried to get the co-operation of his office, the Prime Minister's Office, and the office of his Member of Parliament, who happens to be the Minister of Finance, and was not successful, in dealing with his concerns.

I want to get the assurance of the Minister, which I think he has already given me in part, that he will co-operate, that he will apologize to the taxpayer, and that he will intervene personally to resolve this tax matter quickly and fairly, particularly given the precarious financial position in which Revenue Canada has put Copy Choice.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have assured my colleague that we are taking this matter seriously. However, it would be unfair to ascribe any motives to the Department until the matter is more closely checked. That is the reason I have asked my Department to send a statement of facts to the taxpayer which the taxpayer may wish to make public. In the meantime I will continue to look into it.

REASSESSMENTS OF VALUE OF FARM EQUIPMENT

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question directed to the Minister of National Revenue concerns the heavy equipment over-allowance special audit under which some 600 prairie farmers are in various stages of reassessment. The issue is whether Revenue Canada can substitute its opinion of fair market value of a piece of farm equipment traded in, for that freely arrived at in the market-place between the machine dealer and the farmer.

Is the Minister prepared to instruct his officials to abandon the arbitrary reassessment in these situations where the parties have acted in a bona fide, arm's length, reasonable, and equitable manner?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for raising this issue. It has been raised before in this House. He knows that this special audit was cancelled over a year ago but that the Department has an obligation, indeed a duty, to check into various cases where it appears there may have been some abuse of this program.

In order to facilitate matters, I am seeking ways to have a representative case quickly brought into court so that some of the issues which the Member raises as to the acceptability of audit principles and jurisprudence can be dealt with quickly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

U.S. COAST GUARD'S SEIZURE OF CANADIAN FISHING VESSEL IN LAKE SUPERIOR

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last December 6 the United States Coastguard and Michigan Department of Natural Resources vessels illegally seized the Canadian fishing vessel Last Time in Lake Superior waters. The fishermen were charged with minor misdemeanors but the vessel was seized and is still held in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan.

Last Friday a United States court determined that this vessel had been illegally seized in Canadian waters. What action is the Government of Canada prepared to take to make full restitution to these fishermen for the loss of their vessel and for this illegal action by United States officials?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member said, that court decision was rendered last Friday. It involved a finding that the vessel had in fact been in Canadian waters. This country does not accept that the United States can cross the international boundary in pursuit of alleged offenders. I have instructed my officials to protest this action—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): So that's what you need your submarines for.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I'm not sure if the Hon. Member from the NDP is interested in the answer. I have instructed my officials to protest this action by the United States.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER DEMAND RESTITUTION FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister, in his protest, demand that the United States Government return the vessel immediately? It has put over six fishermen out of work for six months. Will he also ask that the United States Government drop the misdemeanor charges that have been laid against four fishermen and the captain? Will he demand that the United States Government make full financial restitution for the losses suffered by the fishermen in the last six months because of the United States' illegal action in seizing the vessel in Canadian waters?

• (1500)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly look seriously at that. I am not sure whether the best means to communicate that wish by Canada would be by way of a diplomatic protest. However, we want this matter resolved as quickly as possible. I appreciate the interest that the Hon. Member has shown both in his question and in raising the matter with my office earlier today. I want to work with him to get it resolved quickly.

EDUCATION

UNIVERSITY FUNDING—USE OF FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Both the Ontario Federation of Students and the Council of Ontario Universities have documented a financial situation in the universities that is so bad that the universities are reduced to using tax scams in order to make ends meet.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister because part of the problem is the failure of the provinces to pay their fair share. When and how will the Prime Minister keep his recent promise to British Columbia high school students that he will ensure that federal transfer of payments for post-secondary education are in fact used for that purpose?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is expressing the concern that the Right Hon. Prime Minister expressed, which is to ensure that we have a healthy and productive education system in this country.

We make available to the provinces a substantial amount of money, which has been increasing at a rate of approximately 6 per cent per annum. We are confident that the provinces will use that money effectively. These are questions that are the subject of discussions at federal-provincial meetings between those Ministers who are directly responsible.

I should point out that, as a result of the announcement made by the Prime Minister in January, there will be a significant increase in scholarships provided to students in areas of research and high technology. I think it is in the order of $80 million.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last question.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance seems to be operating in an unreal world. We have been hearing these promises and statements of concern for three years now.

Will this be another of those promises the Prime Minister makes because he is full of himself, or will he do something because he is full of concern? The time for him to meet the promise he has made is long past due.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to promises. The Prime Minister has delivered on those promises as a result of the announcement he made back in January.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The increases in the granting councils' funding is another indication of where we have significantly increased the funds that are available to the granting councils to provide support to research.

The Hon. Member is referring to a concern here. If there is a concern, the Prime Minister indicated in British Columbia that that concern would be raised by the appropriate Minister with provincial counterparts.

PRIVILEGE

REQUEST THAT COMMENT BE RETRACTED

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, during Oral Question Period, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) made some comments which, in retrospect, I am sure, were very hasty. He referred to my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) as having lied when he made certain references.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Chair. I believe the Clerk heard what was said by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. Why didn't the Chair ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie to withdraw immediately, instead of giving him a supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member of Chambly (Mr. Grisé) have a complaint about what was said by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie or does he have a complaint about the Chair?

Mr. Grisé: No, certainly not, Mr. Speaker. I ask that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie withdraw what he said as soon as possible, and I am sorry he is not in the House at this time. I think he should immediately apologize to my colleague, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Mr. Speaker: We have a very comprehensive complaint about comments made by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. Perhaps the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) could respond.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I was in the House when the comments in question were made. I am not sure that the words spoken by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie were as harsh . . .

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He will be able to speak in his own defence. Here he is now!

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie said the Minister is a liar, that is of course a very serious mistake, but I would like to hear the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montréal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, that was not my intention. I certainly did not have the impression that I said the words "avoir menti". I said that the comments made by the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology contradicted what was said by the Secretary of State. Although I may have said the word "menti" in the heat of the debate, I know perfectly well we are not supposed to use such language in the House, and I therefore withdraw those words, Mr. Speaker, but I maintain that the Minister for Science and Technology contradicted the Secretary of State in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean.

ALLEGED SURVEILLANCE OF CONSTITUENCY OFFICE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which hinges on the matters that I raised this afternoon in a question to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the riding office of a Member of Parliament is a center where constituents come out of fear—not out of fear—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You can't blame them.

An Hon. Member: Speak for your own office.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) would want to correct any misunderstanding.

Mr. Rodriguez: —fear of the Government's policies, Mr. Speaker.

It is a place where constituents can come without fear of being watched, where they can come with anonymity in many instances. The information they relay to their Member of Parliament or his staff is in confidence.

As a matter of fact, Beauchesne's Citation 16 states that:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their function and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals.

Last Saturday there was an unmarked car with two individuals whom, by my going over and harassing them—

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: You were harassing them?

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, I did. I questioned them and discovered in fact that they were under orders from Canada Post. They were employees of Canada Post who had been instructed, they told me, to follow those who were my guests, those who had been invited into my office to collect petitions about rural post offices. These two gentlemen in this car were watching my office and, of course, they would be watching anyone who came into my office. In fact, one person who came to my office came in disguise.

Mr. Lewis: If I were going to your office, I would go in disguise too.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would suggest that this is a democratic society, an open society. It is one which clearly recognizes that its citizens protest through petitions in a peaceful fashion.

These visitors were not harassing the post office. They were visiting an MP's office. In fact they came at my invitation to collect petitions which I had personally collected and which were sitting in my office, 2,000 of them.

I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister, if he was really concerned, should look at Section 381.1 of the Criminal Code with respect to following people with intent to intimidate. When people come to an MP's office in disguise, fearful that the office is being watched, I would suggest that it is a breach of privilege of a Member of Parliament. By extension, it intimidates those whom the Member of Parliament serves in that community.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin) on the same point.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. There is no question that there is long standing precedent that nothing should be put between a Member of Parliament and his constituents, or no action should be taken that in anyway prohibits a Member of Parliament from carrying out his or her responsibilities, particularly any action which may be seen to originate directly or indirectly from a government decision.

While Members may choose today to find humour in the example brought to our attention by my colleague who has just spoken, the fact is that the kind of complaint the Member has brought to the attention of the House, affecting his privileges or the privileges of any Member, be it a Member on the government side or on the opposition side, is serious and ought to be treated seriously by all Members of the House of Commons. I know it will be treated seriously, as is always the case, by the Speaker.

I hope your decision today, Mr. Speaker, will be to investigate the facts to see if it can be established that there has been a systematic following of visitors or a systematic note-taking of visits or activities of any group of Canadians. Whether the Opposition agrees with that group or whether the Government agrees with that group, whether they espouse the views of some people in Parliament or the views of no one in Parliament, or if everyone in Parliament disagreed with the views of a particular group in this society who wanted to communicate with their Member of Parliament, we could still not condone anyone secretly watching this group, in effect providing an intimidation tactic which may dissuade that group from seeking to communicate with their Member of Parliament.

A serious question has been raised and I beseech the Speaker to investigate the facts. If there has been a systematic following or examination of any group in our Canadian society, if any group is interfering with the communication between any Member of Parliament on the side of Government or Opposition, and a constituent, I ask the Speaker to find that there has been a breach of privilege and take appropriate action.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in reply, I suggest it is quite obvious that there has been no interference with my hon. friend's privilege. There has been no interference with his ability to do his duties. If people were going to my hon. friend's office in disguise, we on this side can understand that. I think probably most people would prefer that. However, the real point of privilege here is a question that we on this side are asking ourselves, why has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) not been included in the argument on the question of privilege? He is the Canada Post critic for the New Democratic Party. We are all wondering whether he has been replaced.

Mr. Benjamin: It was not his office.

Mr. Rodriguez: Whose office was watched?

Mr. Lewis: Why has the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre not been included? Has he been thrown out of office by the New Democratic Party? Perhaps we can find out exactly who the postal critic is.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious point. What we have here is a question of privilege raised by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). He is a Member of Parliament whose office was under surveillance, and I stress "under surveillance" by employees of the federal Government whose salaries are paid and whose expenses, I assume, are paid by the taxpayers of Canada. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to take a very serious look at whether or not is an infringement of the privileges of a Member of Parliament if one's office is under surveillance, a fact which can intimidate people from going to that office in a free and open manner. I think that is the point.

Mr. Speaker: Before I hear from other Members, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) has made the suggestion that certain employees of the Post Office who wished to see him were at least followed, or under some kind of surveillance, by other employees of the Post Office. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt says this is an interference with his privileges because this makes it more difficult for him to do his duty as a Member of the House of Commons. That is the point at issue.

Obviously, the Speaker, at least at this moment, has no means whatsoever of determining what the facts are except to accept with obvious generosity, at least, the side of the story the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt brings to the Speaker. Unless other Hon. Members in this Chamber also happened to be clustered around the Hon. Member's riding office at that particular moment, I do not need any more suggestions as to what happened. I certainly am prepared to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for a few minutes on the issue of privilege.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to intervene on this point of order because the case of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who has been under Canada Post surveillance, is not an isolated occurrence. I should like to draw the attention of the Chair to the fact that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) held a pro-Rural Dignity meeting in his riding, and that the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) made a speech in Vancouver where, as it happened, Post Canada employees had been sent to take notes and thus have an opportunity to intimidate people. I do not think the case of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt is an isolated case, for the established policy—with the Minister's blessing, of course—is to create problems for people who are prepared to express their views at open meetings or in the offices of Hon. Members.

If Mr. Speaker would examine this case—and not only the case of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt but that of the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou and of other Members—I think he will see that the privileges of each Member of the House are affected because of the fact that people who have genuine grievances concerning superboxes, including Rural Dignity representatives, will be afraid to visit their own Members lest they be reported to Canada Post by employees or other people. This kind of policy must not be endorsed by the Minister nor by Canada Post.

I would not want the Speaker of the House to handle this as an isolated case, because this policy has been established by the Canada Post president and endorsed by the Minister, a policy of harassment against people who do not like superboxes any more than the closing of rural post offices.

• (1520)

Mr. Riis: The point raised by my hon. colleague for Nickel Belt has become a serious matter as of today when it became a public issue. People across Canada will now be aware of the fact that, on certain occasions, certain government employees, under the direction of their employer, are asked to spy or conduct surveillance tactics on various members of the public.

In this case it is an isolated situation that happened in the office of the Member of Parliament for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez). It means that people across Canada will wonder if, when they go to visit their Member of Parliament, and many do it with some concern, by visiting the Member of Parliament they may be penalized, as my hon. colleague indicates. We want to take every precaution to ensure that a Canadian, no matter where he or she may live, would always feel free to visit the office of his or her duly elected Member of Parliament. With the reality of the situation, at least in one Member's office, where members of a Crown corporation, in this case the postal corporation, were conducting surveillance on people entering the office of the Member of Parliament, this has become an extremely serious issue in a country that prides itself on being free and democratic.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I forgot to add the precedent, and I wish to do so now, when Warren Hart was hired by the RCMP to conduct surveillance on Mr. Rosie Douglas who was involved in the destruction of the centre at the University of Montreal. In Mr. Douglas' approach to the Solicitor General of the day, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand), and myself, Warren Hart ended up gathering information and watching that Hon. Member and me. At that time I raised the question of privilege. Speaker Jerome said there was prima facie evidence of privilege, that while I was not the subject of surveillance, and the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East) was not the subject of surveillance, the fact of the matter is that we were caught in that web. Therefore, in his view, that constituted prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege. The question was put to the House that day, but unfortunately the Government of the day voted against the matter going to the appropriate committee.

If Your Honour would look at that precedent and find that there is a prima facie evidence of a breach of privilege, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion, or Your Honour might direct it to the Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedures.

Mr. Speaker: I recognize that the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) may well have something to contribute, and I will give him an opportunity to do so on another occasion.

Under the circumstances, the Chair would be assisted if time were given as a consequence of what has been said here for a response from the Hon. Minister who is responsible for Canada Post, but who does not run it on a day-to-day basis. I think I understood clearly from the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt that he was not saying, even if all these allegations are substantially accurate, that the Minister ordered this surveillance. I want that clearly on the record. I did not take it that the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt had stated that.

In fairness, I am going to adjourn the discussion at this point. I am not going to hear anybody else at the moment.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is wise.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

Mr. Prud'homme: My proposal was to suggest to Your Honour to do exactly that, that is, to take it under advisement and take all the time necessary. I am highly interested in this question, and I am sure Your Honour would prefer to have some time to reflect, and in due time to return to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Algoma could collect whatever it is he wishes to let me know about and bring it back a little later when I bring this matter back to the House.

In the meantime, the Chair is concerned about perhaps hearing too much of one side of the story without the opportunity of the other side of the story being heard. I do not want to leave anyone with the impression that only one side is being heard in this matter.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Algoma has a comment.

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on this matter and support the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) and his representations concerning his point of privilege. On the same day that the Rural Dignity group called at his office, earlier that day I met with Rural Dignity people and a large number of my constituents, some 60 or 70. I had thought that this was just a general public meeting of people from up and down the north shore of Lake Huron and all those communities because they were concerned.

As we left the meeting, we were told that officials from Canada Post were sitting across the road in their vehicle conducting surveillance on the group and keeping track of who was there and, I believe, intimidating many people who were associated with Canada Post from even attending—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty the Chair is in is that it is one thing to say that they were intimidating. I do not know all the evidence. It seems to me that the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is putting forth a very sensible suggestion that this matter be adjourned, at least for now. I will bring it back to the Chamber. If there is hard evidence of the allegations that have been made, I want to know what that evidence is.

Hon. Members will know that there is a difference between attending a public meeting and some surreptitious exercise of surveillance, which may well go beyond just surveillance and become intimidation. Surveillance within itself could become intimidation.

The appropriate thing to do at the moment is to adjourn this matter. I have no doubt the Hon. Minister responsible for the Post Office (Mr. Andre) will hear about this discussion. I will bring it back to the Chamber in due course, and Hon. Members will have every chance to put to the Chair, as fully as they can, the story as they know it. That is the appropriate thing to do at the moment.

I see Hon. Members indicating some support for that. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

POINT OF ORDER

APPROPRIATE LISTING OF MOTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order unrelated to this matter to bring to your attention what I consider to be a serious breach of the rules, the customs and practices of this House.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that yesterday my colleague, the House Leader for the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray), rose on a point of order to challenge the procedural acceptability of the motion currently standing on the notice paper in the name of the Government Deputy House Leader. You indicated yesterday that you would hear this point of order if and when the motion was called for debate.

I wish to raise a somewhat different point relating to the same motion. In yesterday's notice paper the motion to which I have referred was listed under Government Notices of Motion. As it was submitted last Friday, it has since been transferred to Government Orders pursuant to Standing Order 24(1). It is my contention that this motion, which deals with extending the sittings of the House past the normal date for summer adjournment, should be listed under Motions, not Government Notices of Motion. Because my point deals with the proper notice procedure and not the substance of the motion itself, I believe, Mr. Speaker, that you should hear my point at this time rather than waiting until a later date when the motion is actually called.

It is my position that Government Notices of Motion are those that deal exclusively—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member may have a very serious and legitimate point, but again the Speaker is in the same situation that the Speaker was in earlier, and that is whether or not the point that the Hon. Member is making or wishes to make is premature. If it is, then it seems that it is not appropriate for the Chair to use up the time of the House in hearing this matter at this time. I certainly want to let the Hon. Member know that when it is appropriate to hear it the Hon. Member will have every chance to express his concerns, as will other Hon. Members. Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to respond to my concern.

• (1530)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I anticipated your intervention. I would simply like to make the case that if Your Honour permits me just a few moments to proceed into the case that I wish to make, you will see that to hear my point of order at the time when you call for the motion would be inappropriate. The argument I want to put forward now is simply to indicate that the listing of the particular motion put forward by the Deputy House Leader is inappropriate in its particular positioning. Therefore it would be critical now, if you would, Mr. Speaker, at least be prepared to hear a few points. I will assure you—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could hear a few points, as perhaps a caveat, on behalf of the Hon. Member so that I am somewhat prepared for what may or may not come. In any event, I will hear the Hon. Member briefly.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to repeat once again that my point that I wish to raise at this stage deals with the proper notice of procedure and not the substance of the motion itself. Therefore I believe that it is appropriate that I put my point at this stage.

It is my position that Government Notices of Motions are those that deal exclusively with government business or government orders. I would submit that the motion standing in the name of the Government Deputy House Leader falls beyond these limits.

I would like to begin by drawing to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Citation 270(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads as follows:

> Motions respecting changes in the time of meetings or adjournments deal with the business of the House rather than government affairs and are moved by the Government House Leader who is responsible for the arrangements of the business of the session and the order in which ministerial measures are introduced and debated.

This citation is listed in Beauchesne's under the rubric "Motions". Of course, there will be those who insist that Citation 268 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition clearly permits what the Government has done. It states:

> The Government may, from time to time, put on the Notice Paper notices of motions concerning the business of the House.

First, I would like to point out that Citation 270(1), which I have cited to support my case, is corroborated by a series of precedents whereas Citation 268 appears as a statement only. I want to emphasize that it appears as a statement only. The point that I wish to argue is not that Citation 268 and Citation 270(1) are in conflict but that the language of Citation 268 is insufficiently clear as to reveal its true meaning.

Both citations use the same phrase "the business of the House". Yet Citation 270(1) specifically states: "Motions respecting changes in the time of meetings or adjournments deal with the business of the House rather than government affairs . . . " Here we have an explicit recognition that the phrase "the business of the House" should be seen as comprising two elements. The first is those matters that affect the entire scope of the proceedings of the House, such as the time of meetings or adjournments. The second is those matters that deal exclusively with government affairs or government orders.

Citation 268 does not make this distinction but Citation 270(1) does. This is why I believe that the language of Citation 268 is imprecise. I am sure that Your Honour is aware that it has not always been the case that motions regulating the time of meetings or adjournments of the House have been moved under "Motions".

Prior to 1955 the Government regularly gave notice of such motions under Government Notices of Motions. However, in many rulings on the procedural acceptability of this type of notice the Speaker implicitly recognized that these motions were not government motions in the sense of dealing exclusively with what Citation 270(1) of Beauchesne's refers to as "government affairs".

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Journals for December 10, 1951. On that day the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent moved a motion to change the sitting hours of the House. At page 290 of Journals for that day the following entry is made:

> A point of order was raised by Mr. Drew as to whether the said proposed motion was in order under 'Routine Proceedings' as it appeared on the Order Paper under 'Government Notices of Motions'.

On the same page, Journals records the decision of the Speaker on this point of order. It states:

> The Speaker ruled that as the proposed Motion dealt with the Business of the House and was not a Government Notice of Motion in the usual sense, it was in order at this time . . .

Here we have a Speaker's ruling that implicitly recognizes the distinctions between regular Government Notices of Motions and those motions dealing with the business of the House. Again, to emphasize, the ruling states:

> —the proposed motion dealt with the Business of the House and was not a Government Notice of Motion in the usual sense . . .

Speaker Lamoureux in a ruling on June 18, 1970, provides further support for my argument that motions to regulate the time of meetings and adjournments of the House are not government business in the strict sense. On this day the Government House Leader at the time, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, moved a motion to change the hours of sitting and daily adjournment of the House. I might add parenthetically that this motion was moved during Routine Proceedings under Motions and not Government Notices of Motions.

June 18, 1970, also happened to be an Opposition Day. When the Government House Leader moved this motion, the then Leader of the Official Opposition, the Hon. Robert Stanfield, objected stating that such a motion could not be moved on an allotted day. In his ruling Speaker Lamoureux stated in part, and I quote from page 1030 of Journals for that day:

> It seems to me that the motion should be put and honourable Members have brought argument against it to the effect that in their view this motion should not be put and that they would like to vote against it.

Speaker Lamoureux then continued on to make a point that is relevant to my argument today. He said:

> Honourable Members suggest that this is Government Business. Obviously it is not government business.

That is my point. It is obviously not government business.

Here again we have a ruling suggesting that there is indeed a significant difference between a motion that deals with the business of the whole House, such as the times of its sittings, and a motion that deals simply with a government order.

Let me now come to a ruling that you will undoubtedly wish to consult before rendering your decision on my point of order. On May 15, 1985, my colleague, the House Leader for the Official Opposition, rose on a point of order to argue that a government notice of time allocation was not in order as it had been listed under Government Notices of Motions and not Motions, where it had been the usual practice to move this motion orally and without notice. In his ruling, contained on pages 4821 and 4822 of Hansard for that day, Speaker Bosley made several comments that may influence your decision on my point of order, Mr. Speaker.

However, at the outset I want to state categorically that it is my view that a time allocation motion can indeed be listed under Government Notices of Motions because in most instances it deals exclusively with a government order which is strictly the business or affair of the Government. This position is logically consistent with the argument that I have advanced today.

As reported at page 4822 of Hansard, Speaker Bosley makes several points that I would like to deal with in order. First, Speaker Bosley begins by referring to Citation 268 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which states, as I noted earlier, that the Government may put on the Notice Paper notices of motions dealing with the business of the House. I addressed that argument earlier when I indicated that if one considers Citation 270(1) of Beauchesne's, in addition to the precedents that I have cited, it becomes clear that Citation 268 is imprecise and that the phrase "business of the house" can be broken down into two quite different types of motions.

Speaker Bosley then quoted Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, at page 296 which attempts to define the types of motions that are considered to be government motions. It states:

> Also classified under this heading are the motions regularly brought forward by the government for regulating the length of the Christmas, Easter, spring and summer adjournments of the House—another important example is that of allocation of time or 'guillotine' orders, which the government moves in order to hasten progress on one or more of its Bills . . .

I would like to suggest that taken out of context this excerpt may be very misleading. If we refer back to Citation 270(1) of the Canadian authority, Beauchesne, a new or different interpretation can be attached to this excerpt from Erskine May. Again, Citation 270(1) reads in part:

> Motions respecting changes in the time of meeting or adjournments deal with the business of the House rather than government affairs—

• (1540)

The important part is this:

> —and are moved by the Government House Leader who is responsible for the arrangements of the business of the session—

The point I wish to stress here is that Beauchesne clearly indicates that even though a motion deals with the business of the House, as distinguished from government business, only the Government House Leader can move this motion because only he or she is responsible for the arrangements of the business for the session, not simply government business for the session, but all of the business. Thus, when Erskine May seems to suggest that a motion to change the ordinary days of adjournment is a government motion, it fails to recognize the distinction that our Canadian procedural authority, Beauchesne, makes clear. It is not, as the rulings that I have cited, a government notice of motion in the usual sense, but because only the Government House Leader can move it, it gets lumped in with everything else, like a motion for time allocation. A time allocation motion is almost invariably moved to limit debate on a government order. Surely we cannot lump such a motion together with a motion to change the date of adjournment. It is like comparing procedural apples with procedural oranges.

Speaker Bosley went on to state, as recorded on page 4822:

> Once again, review of our recent practice relating to motions dealing with the sittings of the House and its adjournments show that they have been appearing under Motions on the Order Paper, but a review of the order papers of the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s shows that such motions have most often appeared under Government Notices of Motions.

This is, indeed, correct but only in part. As I indicated earlier, prior to 1955 many such motions appeared on the Notice Paper under Government Notices of Motions. However, as you are aware, Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders underwent a revision in 1955. The Standing Committee on Procedure, in its second report to the House on June 14, 1955, which was subsequently adopted unanimously by all Parties, recommended a number of changes to the Standing Orders and practices of the House as they then existed. These proposals are contained in Journals for that day.

One of the changes that the committee recommended, which was adopted when the report was concurred in, dealt with motions for changing the days or times of the sittings of the House. On page 746 of Journals for June 14, 1955 it states under "Other Proposals Relating to Procedures" at Section 2:

> That motions for concurrence in reports of any standing or special committee, for the suspension of any Standing Order, or such other motions as may be required for the observances of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment shall be listed, where notice is required, called and disposed of under "Motions".

Therein lies the critical decision that what we have done ought to be called and disposed of under Motions. This was in 1955. Yet, if we return to Speaker Bosley's ruling on May 16, 1985, on the point of order of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), he states:

> —a review of the Order Paper for the 1940s, 1950s and 1960s shows that such motions have most often appeared under Government Notices of Motions.

As I indicated earlier, I will concede that prior to 1955 this was the practice. However, I have had a chance in the last number of days to review some of the Order Papers for the late 1950s and 1960s on those days when such adjournment motions were moved—and I have them right here—but I could not find a single example of when such a motion was not moved under Motions as opposed to Government Notices of Motions. Not a single example was uncovered.

On Thursday, October 17, 1973, the then Secretary of State moved, under Motions, a motion to extend the hours of sitting on a number of days. Similarly, the Order Paper for Monday, August 4, 1958, shows that the Prime Minister moved a motion to change the hours of sitting. Again this motion was moved during Routine Proceedings under Motions as had been ordered when the procedure committee's report on the Standing Orders was concurred in by the House in 1955. I have others, Mr. Speaker. I have the Order Paper for Monday, July 14, 1958; the Order Paper for Monday, February 20, 1956 and so on. At page 15723 of Hansard for May 24, 1988, you said:

> I am reminded of Dean Swift when he said that lawyers are a race of men among us who believe that anything that has been done before may legally be done again. I think that it is always important not to get caught up in that adage too closely . . . However, the difficulty of the Chair in a case such as this is that if a practice has so fallen into disuse that it is not in the minds and in the contemplation of Members on either side of the House when the particular form—and that is of course what Beauchesne says it is—is followed, then the question is whether it is a better course of wisdom for the Speaker to reach back too far to pick something out of the mists of time to say that suddenly without any particular expectation, it applies.
> I must say that this is practice that I would not want to take part in unless I had some very clear direction from all sides of the House that, indeed, some ancient practice ought to be reinstituted and ought to be part of the consideration of the House at all times.

I would suggest that the principle you applied in your ruling of several weeks ago be applied here today. What the Government has done has not been done since the early 1950s. In 1955 there was a committee report adopted unanimously by the House of Commons specifying that motions which regulate the times of sitting or the date of adjournment had to be moved during Routine Proceedings under Motions. As I have said, I can find no precedent since the adoption of that committee report that would show that this motion has to be moved at any time except under Motions.

I suspect that some may argue that in extending the House past the normal date of adjournment, the Government if allowing for extra days to debate Government Orders or government affairs, as it is referred to in Citation 270(1) of Beauchesne, would not eliminate Question Period or Private Members' Hour. Are these two items government business? Of course not. Private Members' Hour, as you are well aware has, since parliamentary reform of the last several years, come to belong more than ever to the private Members on all sides of the House. In other words, it is ideally free from interference in any way by the Cabinet or executive. In no way could this valuable time be construed as belonging to the Government or being in any way government business.

What of Routine Proceedings, Mr. Speaker? I can refer back to Speaker Lamoureux's decision in 1970 that I quoted earlier to indicate that he clearly stated that Routine Proceedings were not government business. Routine Proceedings are when, for example, Members can present petitions, and belong to the whole House. Therefore, it is my view that to argue that the Government can extend the sittings of the House for the purpose of dealing with Government Orders does not take into account that this House deals on a daily basis with items that are not government business. Any motion to extend the sittings of the House can, therefore, affect the initiatives of any Member of the House and must, therefore, be seen as affecting the whole House and not simply Government Orders.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I was disturbed, to say the least, when I saw the Government's motion on the Notice Paper yesterday. It is a testament to the legislative mismanagement of this Government that it has some 40 or so government initiatives that it wants passed before the summer adjournment. I hope you will consider the arguments that I have made here today to indicate the Government has shown a disturbing tendency in recent months to disregard the rules and practices of this place even when those rules are explicit and those practices longstanding. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will rule that even a Government with an overwhelming parliamentary majority must respect the customs, traditions and practices of this place.

I thank you for your patience, Sir.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) may want to make a few remarks.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when we saw the motion by the Government to suspend the rules and, as a result, to force the House to continue sitting through the summer with the additional requirement to sit without a break from two o'clock in the afternoon until ten o'clock at night, I raised the point of order that this was not a motion that could be made on a number of grounds, including the breach by this motion of the traditional practices of the House as well as various factors pertaining to the Standing Orders themselves. At that time, in view of what you said when I made a similar argument with respect to the motion by the Government to suspend the rules of the House when it attempted to table a motion contrary to our normal Standing Orders on abortion, I noted you said that such an argument should be made if and when the motion was called.

Yesterday I reserved my right to make an argument at some length about the impropriety of the action of the Government in attempting to suspend the rules, not just simply to help itself get out of a tight corner on one issue, namely, abortion, but to help itself get out of a tight corner with respect to the total mismanagement of its entire program.

I said yesterday and I repeat now that I have some arguments which I believe are well founded as to why the Government's motion to suspend the rules of the House should not be accepted by you, Mr. Speaker. However, I do not intend to offer these arguments at this time. I just want to make sure that the record shows that I have these points to make and that I also have points to make about whether the Government's motion to suspend the rules with respect to the adjournment of the House on June 30 should be listed under Motions or under Government Orders.

I intend to argue that the Government erred in listing the motion in question under Government Orders, but I would offer that argument only if you should rule that the motion is receivable in the first place. If I am saying at this time that the motion should be listed under Motions rather than Government Orders, I am not in any way thereby admitting or agreeing that it is proper for the Government to present a motion which would have the effect of throwing the rules of this House out the window just because the Government finds itself unwilling or unable to work within our current rules, even though the Government has taken great credit and continues to take great credit for these rules as being an important achievement in parliamentary reform.

I would hope it would be noted that I intend to argue both these points in some detail and to present arguments which I think are well founded. However, I want to stress that I think it is very wrong for the Government to say that it cannot live or work within the present rules, due in effect to the mismanagement of its program, and therefore it wants to use its majority to force the House to in effect ignore the rules completely.

Mr. Speaker: I have exercised considerable patience under the circumstances, but I think the comments of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) are helpful, as are those of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

I repeat again what I said to the Hon. Member for Windsor West, which is that he will not be stopped from giving further argument at a more appropriate time. The Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) may want to make a few short comments.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to seek direction from the Chair. I would suggest with all due respect that something cannot be half premature. If argument on a procedural basis is premature, it is premature. I do not mind for a minute taking time to argue procedure, not at all. It is healthy. However, surely the 25 minutes we have now taken from debate on Bill C-129 would have been better spent on debate on Bill C-129.

I suggest that there are other items on the Order Paper. For example, item No. 33 appears on the Order Paper. We could be proceeding now with a procedural debate on Bill C-33 which has not been proceeded with by the House.

Some two weeks ago, the abortion motion referred to by my hon. friends was put on the Order Paper by the Government and it was debated at length by opposition Members. We reserved our right to debate the procedural argument because we felt it was proper to debate the procedural argument when the Bill was called. We now have another motion placed on the Order Paper. I submit the appropriate time to argue the procedure on that, and we are fully prepared to do it, is surely on the day it is called, not now.

My hon. friend has read into the record a very learned argument which we will review and respond to, but surely the time to argue procedure on that particular motion is the day on which the Government calls it. If we find ourselves arguing procedure willy-nilly on various items on the Order Paper, as it suits the purposes of my hon. friends, we will have chaos on the Order Paper. I seek direction from the Chair. When is premature premature? When should procedural debate on a matter take place?

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) raises a point which I think has some merit. As I say, the Chair has been generous in hearing the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It may turn out that it in fact is helpful. I hope that it will be. I hope it will be helpful to the Hon. Minister of State as well and to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

As I indicated at the beginning of this, it is in my view probably premature. There may be some useful purpose served in having heard the very well prepared argument of the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, and I have to say that frankly, I think it has helped the Chair. However, I think the Minister of State has a point and I think that it is appropriate now to put this matter off until such time, if it does happen at all, that the matter is called. I would ask Hon. Members to cooperate.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to question the decision you have just made, but I want to say that the point I was attempting to make was that I do not think we should ever get to Orders of the Day when this question is being called. The point is that it is coming up in the wrong place in Routine Proceedings of the day. When we get to Government Orders one day and then you call for procedural decisions, having arrived at that point, I submit that it would be too late. That is why I am saying that it is presently in the inappropriate location as it stands in the order of business before us, and it is for that reason that I would submit that some consideration at least ought to be given to rule on this prior to the Government actually calling the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: I will consider the point the Hon. Member has made. In the meantime, I think it is appropriate to adjourn the matter. I will give that particular point careful consideration. If the procedure that has been followed by the Government is found to be incorrect, it would be difficult for me to understand how the fact that that decision was made just before Orders of the Day started or at any other time would make any difference. However, I have the Hon. Member's point and I will take it into account. I would ask Hon. Members to cooperate in this.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When the House adjourned Orders of the Day for Question Period earlier today, we were dealing with Bill C-129 which, as you well know, is now before the House under time allocation. Without commenting one way or the other on the value of the procedural matters that were just raised in the last half hour, would the Speaker advise the House, given that we are dealing with Bill C-129 under time allocation and that this time allocation was imposed on two of the three Parties in the House, the opposition Parties, whether or not the half hour just spent on procedural matters is lost under time allocation or whether it will be added on.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe (Mr. Tobin), but I can answer that question, and I am afraid it is lost. That, of course, is just a procedural fact of life and I know Hon. Members will understand that. I thank the Hon. Member.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the motion of Mr. McDermid (p. 15859).

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have been able to wait for half an hour of the valuable and short time left to be spent dealing with an important matter like Bill C-129. Time is limited and debate will end this afternoon. I am pleased to speak on the Bill.

In bringing in time allocation on Bill C-129, a Bill to authorize the privatization of Air Canada, the selling of a crown asset, a publicly owned asset, to the private sector, the Government has been attempting in the few remarks we have heard from Members on the government side to paint a rather over-simplified picture of the purpose of Bill C-129. We have heard government Members suggest that Air Canada should be privatized because there is no need to have the Government—that is, the taxpayers—engaged in activities that can be carried out by the private sector.

There is no question that most sensible-minded, reasonable Members of Parliament would agree that anything the private sector can do efficiently and properly ought to be done by the private sector. There is no compelling philosophical reason to have Government do something that the private sector can do. However, that is not the issue with Air Canada. The question is not: Are you for private sector activity versus public sector activity? The question is: Should Air Canada be privatized at this time and in the manner the Government proposes?

Canadians should know, first, that they have a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, after he was elected, when questioned about the privatization of Air Canada, said on January 15, 1985, in The Globe and Mail:

> Air Canada is not for sale.

He made a commitment that Air Canada would not be sold. Air Canada would remain public property to serve the public good. Yet in this Bill now being debated in Parliament before the nation we have another major contradiction by the Prime Minister.

What kind of privatization is it? We are in a deregulated transportation environment which only began a year ago in Canada. There are no more regulations governing operations of airlines. The Government's continued ownership of Air Canada in that new environment, emulating what is happening in the U.S., gives us a window on the industry. It gives us an opportunity, without using regulations, to exercise a measure of control by having at least one of the players in the industry owned and controlled by the Government. That is why I am opposed to privatization of Air Canada for now.

I am also opposed to it because I want to see at least one airline continue to provide in this vast country, with a mere 25 million people, a level of service to Canadians no matter where they live. In a purely private sector industry, no carrier will provide that kind of commitment to Canadians living in rural Canada. It will not be there for people who live in rural ridings such as your own, Mr. Speaker, rural but nevertheless an important and dynamic part of Canada. It is purely the bottom line which decides where service should be provided.

What is wrong with this privatization measure the Government has proposed? I say that if you are going to privatize something, be it Air Canada or something else, then do it properly. If you are going to sell Air Canada off, then sell it off, lock, stock and barrel. Sell 100 per cent of the shares and be done with it. As bad a decision as that would be, selling it totally is a better decision than selling it partially.

What is the Government doing? The public does not realize what is happening. When they hear "privatization" they assume Air Canada is going to be sold. Yet the Government is making only 45 per cent of the shares of Air Canada available to the private sector. It is going to retain 55 per cent of the shares on behalf of the Canadian people. The people of Canada will continue to be majority shareholders. Then the Government says it is going to tell the official, the bureaucrat, the government employee who holds that 55 per cent to vote those shares on any question before the board with the majority of private shareholders. Basic arithmetic. With 45 per cent in private hands, that means that if 23 per cent of the shares of Air Canada, which represents more than half of the 45 per cent, were to get together and make a decision, they will control Air Canada. The Government, which continues to hold 55 per cent of the shares, is going to vote with the majority of the minority shareholders.

What do you then have? You have the taxpayers paying the bill and maintaining an equity position in an airline that is going to be run by 23 per cent of the shareholders. That is the reality. It is like saying the House of Commons is going to be run by 23 per cent of the Members. Some 23 per cent of all the shares vested in one group that acts in concert will control Air Canada. They will take decisions contrary, if they want, to the public interest. They will be making decisions which reflect private interests, bigger dividends for shareholders, even though they are in a tiny minority position. The taxpayers, who retain 55 per cent of the shares, may be the recipients of decisions that are not in their best interests.

What kind of cooked-up scheme has the Government evolved? It is one thing to say you are going to offer 100 per cent of the shares, as bad a decision as that would be, to the private sector, and then tell the private sector that if they want to run Canada's biggest airline they are going to pay for it. Before you get to a position to make decisions to benefit your own pockets, you are going to pay for it. You are going to give the taxpayers of Canada their equity back before you sock them in the teeth. It is quite another to take this airline with 22,000 employees and 50 years of history as a nation builder and put it in the hands of a few private individuals. That is what is fundamentally wrong. The Government is preaching a private sector philosophy, that the private sector can do it best, expressing total confidence in the private sector to run a national airline, and giving it to the private sector for a minority position, yet having the taxpayers continue to hold 55 per cent of the shares. That is not privatization, that is a farce.

If you go to the market-place and ask someone if they would like to own Air Canada because we are privatizing it, but by the way we are going to retain 55 per cent in the hands of the Government, and everyone knows the Conservative Government is going to be defeated in the next election, which means a new Government is going to reverse this privatization trend, you have automatically driven down the value of the shares. Not only are you giving away the airline, you have depressed prices by making a minority share offering. We are getting zapped twice. We are not getting the value for our money and we are giving away the company to a minority. It is absolutely ridiculous.

We have heard Members opposite say this is necessary because the company has to renew its fleet. They do not know what they are talking about. They have no interest in Air Canada. They have no knowledge of Air Canada. They do not know its history or the kind of service it provides. They know nothing about its fleet structure. They are merely on their hands and knees before the altar of private enterprise at all costs, not before the altar of common sense and an intelligent mixed economy.

Air Canada is going to replace its fleet of Boeing 727s which is on average nine years old. They will probably be replaced by the Airbus and they are only halfway through their useful life. Air Canada is going to keep the DC-9 which is 19 years old on average. It is not replacing its oldest aircraft. The DC-9 was built to fly 40,000 cycles. The DC-9s in that fleet, nearly 30 of them, have already flown 60,000 cycles and over the next 10 years they will fly 85,000 to 90,000 cycles. The 727s, which are only halfway through their useful life, are being sold off. Why? Because Frank Moores wants to sell the Airbus to Air Canada and they have to have the cash to buy it. This is a cooked-up scheme to put money in the pockets of those with Tory connections representing the Airbus consortium, and not a sale that makes sense for the people of Canada. It ought to be stopped in the name of fundamental justice and common sense and decency.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I just heard what the Opposition had to say, and incidently, for the past four years we have been hearing the same old speeches, without rhyme or reason. The same speeches that don't mean a thing. All they do is attack this Government's policies.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member was right to leave after he said the Conservative Government would not be in power after the next election. I might as well tell him right away that the Conservative Government will win the next election and will continue what it was doing about interest rates, inflation, reducing unemployment, creating jobs and privatization.

If we consider Air Canada, privatization will give this Crown corporation easier access to new capital. It will enable Air Canada to go and get the funds it needs to be competitive within the provinces, at the national level and internationally. Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may quote what Canadians generally think about the privatization of Air Canada, not the clouded perspective of the Opposition Parties. Canadians are in favour of privatizing Air Canada.

Last night I was in Montreal, and I was talking to an Air Canada employee who said: " Yes, I can't wait. I want to buy shares in the company". His position was based on the fact that it was a profitable company that over the years had acquired a national and international reputation.

His opinion was also based on the fact that many national and international investment dealers were prepared to sell and organize the sale of 45 per cent of Air Canada shares to the private sector. The same employee told me: "That's a good thing—everybody wants to buy. That's good, and I'm glad the Tories took this position. I'm glad the Government is sticking to what it said in 1984". In 1984, the Government said: We intend to put this country on a sound management basis, and this is one example of sound management. We could have taken the Opposition's position and made promises, with at the end of the line, an enormous annual deficit and national debt. Mr. Speaker, since 1984 the annual deficit has gone down. Since 1984 this country has been managed as it ought to be, and Canadians know that.

The polls asked the question: Do you think the Government is right to sell part of Air Canada's shares? Eleven per cent of Canadians firmly support the idea and 58 per cent are in favour. This adds up to 69 per cent of respondents in favour of this approach, Mr. Speaker. Twenty-one per cent are opposed and 10 per cent don't know.

And I look . . . Do you think that this plan of the Conservative Government will hurt Air Canada's chances to grow and be more competitive? Eight per cent think it will have a very positive effect, 64 per cent think it will have a positive effect and 20 per cent, a negative effect. Mr. Speaker, look at the reaction of Canadians!

And on the subject of the quality of service provided by Air Canada as a result of the Government's decision to privatize it, 9 per cent think that service will improve, 65 per cent also think it will have a positive effect. And, Mr. Speaker, 19 per cent think that it will have a negative effect.

Canadians are favorable to this idea of owning Air Canada and being able as Canadians, as citizens, to buy shares in this company, to use this company . . . The majority of Canadians are in favour.

Most business people, companies, stockbrokers are interested and think that it is good for their customers and most employees of Air Canada are in favour.

As usual, we notice one thing: That the opposition Parties are again the only ones opposed; they are out of step. That reminds me, if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, of someone in my riding who watched an army march past. There were 1000 soldiers and he said to his neighbour, "It is too bad; there are 999 who are out of step and only my son is in step!"

So that is the way the opposition works now. Everyone is on one side and they, as usual, are on the other. In four years, not one policy of the Conservative Government was accepted by, or acceptable to, these two Opposition parties. After four years, let us look at the results from the other side. The economy has grown, unemployment has gone down, jobs have been created, inflation has stabilized, the deficit has been reduced four years in a row. In every way, the quality of life has improved for our fellow Canadians. Quality of life is important! We talk about it in terms of the environment; we also must talk about it in terms of the economy and social programs. In every way, the quality of life has improved since 1984 and every time, the Opposition was against it.

So, Mr. Speaker, my fondest wish, and I see that you are indicating to me that my time is up, is that the Opposition will continue to be against the Government; every time that it is, it is good for Canadians!

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I think it is essential to pass this Bill as quickly as possible so that Canadians can express themselves not only in polls but in reality by buying the shares of Air Canada that will be put on sale.

• (1610)

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a few minutes to make some comments on Bill C-129. We are not surprised, but very disappointed and angry, that the Government has seen fit to bring in closure on this Bill. This is the type of behaviour that I recall Members on the government side objecting to very strongly when they were in opposition. They seem to have forgotten that, and the rights of Members on this side to put forward our position on a Bill about which we feel very strongly and on the policy of privatization of the people's airline, as Stanley Knowles used to call it, with which we disagree profoundly.

It is not necessary to sell off Air Canada from a financial and economic point of view. There are other ways of financing the capital costs of this airline which has been making a profit and has been run efficiently. I will come back to that point later on. The privatization of Air Canada is symbolic of the Prime Minister's broken promises and a feeling that Canadians cannot trust his leadership.

In 1985 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Canada needs a national airline. He said that he would not privatize Air Canada or the CBC. Air Canada is being privatized and I am sure the CBC will be next. It is another example of what happens to the sacred trust philosophy of the Prime Minister. It is no wonder that that Party is going down in the polls. It is led by a Prime Minister who says one thing but does the opposite. Not only is it unethical, the Government completely loses credibility.

Let us review some of the broken promises. The House will recall that the Prime Minister said the universality of social programs was a sacred trust. The first thing he tried to do was deindex old age pensions. Fortunately, grey power organized and older people fought back and won. The Government realized that pensioners would not stand for having the old age pension deindexed.

Despite having said that universality was a sacred trust, the Prime Minister decided to chop the family allowance and child tax credit. They are the only programs that provide family benefits in recognition of the next generation of Canadians and the expense that parents have in raising children, as well as giving an extra tax credit to low income Canadians who could certainly use an increase in that child tax credit.

He has not treated children the same. Of course, children do not vote or have the same political clout as pensioners, therefore, the Prime Minister proceeded to deindex the family allowance and child tax credit. Every year the value of those combined family benefits are declining, which means, in the case of the child tax credit, fewer people on marginal incomes are eligible for it.

The Prime Minister promised that the basic social policy of the Government would be to help those in greatest need. He said that while the Government may have to trim costs in the interests of the deficit, it would protect those in the greatest needed. He then proceeded to slap a sales tax on the poor in successive Budgets. A great number of people in the lower income bracket are still paying income tax.

The combined impact of these policies on low income people certainly did not help those in greatest need, it penalized them. The increase in taxes for low income people and families with children far exceed the token child tax credit which the Government deigned to give in its second Budget. Poverty among young families has increased and single families, particularly mothers raising children, are in a very bad situation. One in six children across Canada is poor.

Recently, I raised the question of the AIDS epidemic and the importance of having more resources to help toward education and the treatment of this dread disease. The Prime Minister told me in the House about a month ago: "We view this as a most important societal problem and one deserving of urgent action and urgent devotion of national resources". That sounds like a promise to do something immediately and urgently, with considerable investment of money to help the victims of AIDS and to help prevent the epidemic from spreading. However, one month later the funding that already exists in the Budget, much less increased funding, has not been provided.

The Prime Minister promised to help the women of Canada, 60 per cent of whom are working and have children at home who need child care. Four years later, he has yet to introduce a child care program. Free trade is another example. In 1983 the Prime Minister said that he was against free trade.

The Government's proposal to privatize Air Canada is as much a question of ideology as anything. It is not sound planning, it is not economically feasible, and it is certainly against the Canadian tradition of owning our national airline and national railway. These national institutions are fundamental to our geography and dispersed population.

Of course, the Government believes in the ideological trilogy of private enterprise policies: Deregulation, privatization, and free trade. One leads to the other. I remind my friends in the Liberal Party that they initiated deregulation. Shame on them for allowing it to get to this stage. The Government's policy follows the ideologies of Thatcher, Reagan and Vander Zalm. I know that in British Columbia the Fraser Institute only has to lay down the policies and the Premier will sell everything he can, with no regard to the real functions of national services.

Air Canada has been a profitable and well run airline. Why should it be privatized when it is working very well as a national airline of which we are proud? This airline is needed to service all areas of Canada, particularly rural and remote northern regions. Private enterprise will not be as concerned with the needs of all of Canada. As my colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Centre (Mr. Cassidy), pointed out, it would have been quite simple to obtain the required equity Air Canada needs for its new fleet. The Government could have followed other options.

We are extremely disappointed with this Bill and disagree profoundly both philosophically and from the point of view of economic feasibility.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, you will allow me, as representative of downtown Montreal or of the riding of Saint-Jacques, to make my contribution to this debate on Bill C-129 which, as we all know very well, is aimed at partially privatizing Air Canada.

Mr. Speaker, as spokesman for a Montreal riding where the Air Canada head offices are located I am very concerned, as are a number of my fellow Canadians, because the Bill before us will in fact signal the end of a national symbol which is dear to all Canadians.

As Hon. Members would know, this country came into being from east to west as a result of the construction of a great railroad, Canadian National. Other communication networks were added later on. One of them, air transport which featured Air Canada, is indeed the mainstay of Canada's transport system, a source of unifying strenght to all Canadians. I think it is regrettable that the Governement has chosen to break one of the solemn promises made by the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) who once said: Air Canada is not for sale. We are beginning to get used to promises made by the Government on the other side, promises made one day and utterly violated or broken a few months later. We on this side of the House did expect the Government to live up to its commitment not to sell our national air carrier, in part or in whole.

Mr. Speaker, one of the dangers threatening us, and one of the reasons why my Party and I are opposed to the privatization of Air Canada is that we are going to lose a regional development mechanism. The Government before us is so fully intent on privatizing a number of Crown corporations that our national Government will eventually find itself unable to even attempt to boost regional development in certain regions of our country, remote regions that need assistance. That has to be one of the distinctive characteristics of the Conservative Government for whom the only and best way to intervene in the economy is not to intervene at all and, on the contrary, to withdraw from those fields where the Government has the tools to intervene.

With maintenance bases in cities like Montreal, Winnipeg or Toronto, Air Canada is in a good position to buy local goods and services. That is one way the Government can get involved in the economic development of various regions of the country. By selling or turning over the control to the private sector, the Government is withdrawing from this field of activity, which is also something to be concerned about. I would be quite worried if I lived in a remote or outlying region of this country which are often served by Air Canada. The House is aware that our Crown corporation is making money on the major East-West routes. Air Canada finds the flights between Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver most rewarding financially. If the Corporation is now to be managed in a business like fashion, meaning that management decisions from now on will be profit-oriented, it will not be long before the new management decide to abandon regional air transport routes which are losing propositions but nevertheless necessary for some communities wich are only served now by Air Canada.

Of course, a profit-oriented corporation will say: We are going to drop this route where we are losing money. We are going to keep only those where we are making money. The end result is clear. After a while, several remote and outlying communities of this country will be deprived of services. We cannot hope for other private corporations filling the gap and providing services to areas where customers are few and far between and on routes which are clearly not profitable. Those are services which the private sector cannot provide, which is one of the major arguments against the adoption by the House of Bill C-29. Yet, Mr. Speaker, there are also a great many other reasons.

What about Air Canada employees who are rightly concerned about their jobs?

The House will recall that shortly after British Airways was privatized by Margaret Thatcher's Tory Government, over 20,000 employees were laid off in Great Britain. So, whoever is now working for Air Canada, for our national airline, is concerned and worried about what will happen to his or her job, a concern I can understand. Being my party's labour critic, I took the time to meet with three of the major union leaders representing 12,000 of the 22,000 Air Canada employees, something I am not sure other Members of the House did, and I can speak for them about their concerns. Take for instance the case of Mr. Val Udvarhley. He stated the views of the flight attendants.

Mr. Udvarhley was giving me the point of view of flight attendants who are now working for Air Canada. They are afraid that the flying will be restructered down from the present six bases Air Canada operates from. They fear that Air Canada, in trying to operate by the bottom line only, will rationalize and downsize the number of people working there. They are afraid in the Montreal area that this area in particular is more likely to be scaled down. I have been told they would not be surprised if the present strength of 900 in the Montreal area would be scaled down to 500.

They have pointed out to me, and they are right, that although Clause 6 of the Bill guarantees that, first, there will be maintenance in the Montreal area, that it will stay there, and that the headquarters of Air Canada will stay there, there are no specifics guaranteeing a number of jobs and, to use his own words: "We may end up with a maintenance base staffed with three persons and a wrench". What good is the headquarters of a large national company if it is only an empty shell?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I understand very well these employees who are concerned about their jobs, afraid that small communities now served by Air Canada will be deprived of all air services, that flight attendants for instance will be without job security, and who fear that Air Canada, once privatized, will tend increasingly to sub-contract part of the work to outside corporations. These are some of the reasons why I will personally vote against Bill C-129 and I will do everything I can to make the Government change its mind and abandon its decision to privatize part of our national transportation airline.

[English]

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, just before beginning my remarks on Bill C-129, I would like to read some comments made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). On May 1, 1984, she said:

> I think there should be a way of making evaluations. Most institutions are self-perpetuating, that is the nature of large institutions, but there should be times when some Crown corporations are terminated. What we would be most concerned about is whether they are of a value to the people of Canada, whether tax dollars are justified from that point of view—

May I just add, Mr. Speaker, that it is interesting to hear members of the New Democratic Party talking about tax dollars. They usually ignore that particular fact.

> —and whether they are run efficiently. I think that would be the criteria at which we would look.

Therefore, the Member for Vancouver East has stated an approach or a concept with which we agree. The Hon. Member begins her remarks by breaking that promise of how she might look at things.

This Bill is a good one. Air Canada was a great idea. It was visionary when it was started some 50 years ago. Canada did indeed need the links to all the corners of this great country. But the world has changed. We should not accept the status quo as the other two opposition Parties would like to do, whether that concerns trade or any other issue. The world is changing and the Government and the Conservative Party recognize that.

The executive and the employees of Air Canada are 100 per cent behind this move. They realize what is out there in the market-place.

Ms. Dewar: One hundred per cent? That's not true.

Mr. Attewell: First, we think that Air Canada should be sold because it does not serve a public policy purpose. Second, we do care about the deficit in spending. This company should be on its own and free to go to the capital markets.

Ms. Mitchell: It makes a profit. What's the matter with you?

Mr. Attewell: The Hon. Member says Air Canada is making profits. That is good, it is. When does one sell a corporation? When it is on the ropes? No, when it is doing well and one receives a better price. In that manner, the taxpayers' money is not being given away.

Ms. Mitchell: When it is doing what it is supposed to be doing for the people of Canada, you sell it.

Mr. Attewell: The third reason we opt for this particular approach is our sense of the market-place.

An Hon. Member: That's the number one and only reason.

Mr. Attewell: Wardair is doing very well. Canadian Airlines International is doing very well. Air Canada is doing very well. We submit that they should all be on the same footing. Yes, we do differ with the other two Parties on our philosophy. I would remind them of the whining and wailing they did when we proposed to sell de Havilland. What a disaster that was supposed to be. There would be thousands of jobs lost. The Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The Hon. Member is doing his best to deliver a speech in the very few minutes that he has available, and I would very much appreciate it if I could hear him.

Mr. Attewell: This whining and wailing is at the heart of the issue. The facts prove that a situation like de Havilland was a stroke of genius. The jobs are secure. As a matter of fact, more than 1,000 new jobs have been added. The marketing fit with Boeing was absolutely perfect. That company is on the rise. Let the record show what the two opposition Parties said about that.

In conclusion, I wish to read some quotes from an independent source. In an article by Dian Cohen she states:

> It took Transport Minister Don Mazankowski 40 minutes to subdue a rowdy Opposition in order to put on the House of Commons table the Bill which will ultimately allow Air Canada to be sold to the private sector. Why the Opposition opposes the question I can't answer, and I suspect they can't answer either.

What a telling tale that is.

The world has changed. The Government has opted to let Air Canada become private and bid for money the same way Canadian and Wardair do. It has opted for this because it does not want to have to choose between farmers, day care, other issues, and Air Canada. It recognizes that the world has changed in the last 50 years, and that the need for a state run airline has diminished. All the airlines have shown their own understanding of the need to develop feeder lines running out from the hub airports. The Government can, and has, put restrictions in place regarding the maintenance of maintenance bases across the country.

I consider almost insulting the insinuation from the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Drummond (Mr. Guilbault), that the present executive and management of Air Canada would reduce their caution and care for safety. That is an insult to their professional competence.

In closing, this Party is for privatization when it does not serve a public policy purpose. We will continue to do that. Canadians want that. We said that during the election and we will stand by that. I am here in a very strong way to support this proposal. The airline will not be diminished in any way. As a matter of fact, I predict that it will be strengthened and jobs will grow. Air Canada is a class act, and it knows how it can get on in an even better way by increasing market share, and Canadians across the country, by and large, are for this. They will ignore the rhetoric, whining, complaining, and emotional pleas of both Parties to my right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It being four forty-five o'clock p.m., pursuant to order made earlier this day the putting of the question now before the House is deferred until 5.45 p.m. later this day.

It being 4.45 p.m., pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston) moved that Bill C-261, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to introduce this Bill at second reading stage. Bill C-261 was introduced and given first reading on June 22, 1987, almost one year ago. The purpose of the Bill would have been to close the loophole in the law that allows an abortion when the mother's life or health was, or was likely to be in danger.

On January 28, 1988, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the particular section in the Criminal Code of Canada was unconstitutional. In a five-two decision the court held that Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada was contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Here we are some four months later and we still have not dealt with the issue of abortion here in the House. To my understanding, this is the first time since the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in late January that the House of Commons is considering the merits with regard to abortion. There have been procedural concerns raised about the issue and the introduction of a motion in the House, but this is the first time the issue is being considered on its merits.

I would like to explain why over one year ago I introduced this particular piece of legislation. It may not technically be permitted to proceed in that it intends to amend a law that was declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court of Canada. Nonetheless, I wish to take this opportunity to express my point of view and explain the reasons why I introduced this legislation.

At the conclusion of this particular debate, I hope that the House will consider referring the subject matter, the issue of abortion, to a legislative committee in order that that committee can consider the issue. My good friend and colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) when given the opportunity to speak will move a motion accordingly.

I introduced this legislation because I believe very fundamentally that it is wrong to take human life. Abortion is the taking of human life. I oppose the taking of human life whether it is through capital punishment, through the authority of the state, of the Government of Canada, or through the taking of a life before birth.

On January 28, 1988, the Supreme Court of Canada decided that the abortion law in Canada was unconstitutional. I do not mean to be overly critical of the Supreme Court of Canada, but it seems to me that the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada was a cop-out. Based on certain legal principles the Supreme Court of Canada decided that Section 251 of the Criminal Code was in breach of Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It states: "Everyone has the right to life, liberty and the security of the person . . . " Based on its interpretation of "security of the person" it suggested that abortion was permissible in the early stages of pregnancy. The majority held that Section 251 was unconstitutional.

How can one decide on whether a law contravenes the Charter of Rights and Freedoms before deciding when life begins? It seems logical that the first step one must take in this particular debate is to decide when human life begins. Once that decision is made, then one can look at the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. One would be required to conclude, depending on what one decides when human life begins, that everyone has the right to life.

The right to life is the only absolute right we have as Canadians. It is indivisible. Every other right that exists in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms must be balanced, in my view, against other rights. For example, one's right to freedom of speech is limited by the laws on slander. One's freedom to assemble is limited by certain municipal by-laws. Every right that exists in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is limited. The only absolute right is the right to life.

When one considers this particular question one has to keep in mind that the right to life is paramount. Thus the Supreme Court of Canada decided it was not going to decide when it was deciding on the Morgentaler case. It was not going to rule upon the question of when life begins. That was an abdication of the court's responsibility in my view.

When does life begin? In my view, and I challenge others in the House, to prove otherwise, human life begins at conception. If one concludes that human life begins at conception then, of course, that right has to be protected from that moment onward. For anyone to suggest that human life begins at some other point, I do not believe that that is an intellectually honest position to take. It cannot be justified by logic, law or medical evidence that life begins at some other point in time. It may be convenient for some who believe in free-standing abortion clinics or abortion on demand that life begins at some other point in time, but that cannot be established by logic, reason, medical evidence, laws or whatever.

Those who believe in abortion on demand refuse to answer that question because they know that they cannot in a reasonable way conclude when life begins, and then also argue that there should be abortion on demand.

Human life is sacred from the moment of conception to natural death. No person, no one individual, no state, no legislature, no House of Commons, ought to have the right to diminish life, to determine when human life should be taken and when and if human life should be given the opportunity to continue to live until natural death.

In my respectful submission, the issue is one of human rights and the balancing of human rights. As I indicated, the paramount human right that we have is the right to life. Any other right, whether it is the right to liberty or the right to the security of a person as indicated in Section 7 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, has to be balanced against the right to life; and the right to life must always be paramount.

There are those who argue that there should be no abortion law, that there should be free-standing abortion clinics, wherever, that the decision to terminate life, to terminate a pregnancy should be a decision of the woman in consultation with her doctor.

For a country, for any society, not to have a law to regulate abortion would be a society that is totally and absolutely morally corrupt. To put that price on human life, and very few civilized western nations have, is to diminish our very existence, the very integrity of life. Today, in Canada, with every passing moment pregnancies are terminated. Human life is being terminated. Just to put the matter into perspective as you know, Mr. Speaker, today there are over 60,000 abortions per year—60,000 per year. Let us put that into perspective. Over the last 16 years, from 1970 until 1986, there were a total of 907,351 abortions in Canada. That amounts to approximately the size of the population of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Just as a matter of interest, in 80 years of warfare, in the Boer War, World War I, World War II and the Korean War, a total of 99,449 people died. In 36 years of automobile accidents in Canada, from 1950 to 1986, a total of 173,620

Canadians died. In 36 years of drownings, from 1958 to 1986, 47,892 Canadians died as a result of accidental drowning. Yet in 16 years of abortions close to one million people, individuals, lost their lives, as a result of a law which has now been declared unconstitutional.

If one examines the statistics one can see that in 1985 there were 60,956 abortions. Abortions are on the rise, if one examines the statistics for 1970 to 1985. What is most disturbing is the statistics showing repeat abortions from 1974 to 1982. In 1982 there were 400 women in Canada who had their fourth or more abortion. There were 1,600 women in Canada who had their third abortion in 1982. There were 9,544 women who had their second abortion in 1982. If one examines the statistics from 1974 to 1982, one will find that the situation has not changed dramatically.

We have a situation in Canada today in which over 60,000 human lives are taken on an annual basis. It is incumbent upon Parliament to deal with this issue in an expeditious way at the earliest opportunity. I regret very much that the Government has chosen the method by which it has decided to bring this Bill forward.

Canadians want this Parliament to deal with the issue of abortion on the merits at a very early stage. Each and every Canadian of voting age will be asking candidates regardless of their political affiliation what their views are on this particular matter.

No longer can individual Members of Parliament or candidates in the next federal election campaign hide behind existing legislation. They must say in an unequivocal fashion where they stand on this fundamental and crucial issue, the most important issue which this Parliament will decide. Set aside the issue of Meech Lake, free trade and pornography. This is the most important issue because it is an issue dealing with life itself. We hear Members talk about apartheid in South Africa or abuses of human rights in Israel, South America, Nicaragua. We hear about the starving in Ethiopia. But here we have a situation in Canada in which 60,000 lives are taken on an annual basis. Yet at times this Parliament shies away from dealing with it.

I note that I have but a few minutes to conclude my remarks on the legislation I am introducing. I urge Hon. Members to recognize that we are dealing with an issue affecting life itself and to agree to a motion to refer the subject matter to a legislative committee. I do not know the timetable of the Government concerning the abortion issue. We have been told on occasion that the Government would like to see the issue dealt with before the next general election. This House at this moment in time can decide through the Private Members' procedure to allow the subject matter of this Bill to be referred to a committee in order for the legislative committee to begin consideration and to hear arguments on its merits. I am prepared to discuss and debate this issue with anyone at any time at any place in Canada.

Abortion is wrong. It is fundamentally and basically wrong for this Parliament, for the Government of Canada to take away human life. What about life out of the womb? We do not say because you are white, black, European, South American, handicapped, blind, crippled or deaf that your rights as a human being are somewhat less. No one can tell you that your life is any less important. Who are we as parliamentarians to tell anybody that the unborn foetus has rights less than we as breathing, walking, living human beings?

I urge Members to support the motion that will be presented by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to refer the subject matter to committee at the earliest opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): We are now at the stage of having 10-minute speeches. The Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer).

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) for the opportunity to second this motion and debate the issue. I am pleased to second the motion in that I agree with the Hon. Member that we have to close the loopholes that were contained in Section 251 of the Criminal Code. The Member knows that the offending sections of Section 251 were struck down by the Supreme Court ruling in the Morgentaler case. We are debating a motion put to us to amend the Criminal Code before the Supreme Court acted on January 28 with regard to Section 251.

As private Members we bring forward Bills and motions and put them into a hat, so to speak. They are then drawn and put in order of debate. We are now debating the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

I said I am pleased to support the Hon. Member's motion to the degree that what it seeks to do is really face the question of abortion as I think it should be, namely, that it deals with the rights of at least two people. In fact, I believe there is a third and an obligation of a fourth group. There is the right of the woman to life and health. There is the right of the unborn child to life and health. There is also the right of the father. Then there is the fourth group, that of society to protect the life of both the mother and the child, in fact, to protect that child and to protect all life. To that degree, I think the intent of this Bill is a good one and I support it.

Because the Supreme Court decision has in a sense superseded what the Hon. Member wanted to do by striking down the offending parts of Section 251, Parliament now has to face this whole question of what to do with the issue of abortion. The Hon. Member said that this is the first time we have debated the topic of abortion since January 28. To the degree that we are committing one hour of House time to it is correct. By implication, the Hon. Member was expressing some frustration with the lack of action in coming to grips with what are we going to do with the question of abortion. We are now in Private Members' Hour and I know the Hon. Member does not want to be excessively partisan. There is time to look at the merits but we should not become excessively partisan on every issue.

The Government sought the co-operation of all Members of the House by going to each of the three Party Leaders to seek unanimous consent to bring forward four different options for debate. The House could grapple with the issue and give a sense of the direction of the House to the Government so it could bring in a Bill. The Government requested the setting aside of the rules which would not permit the bringing in of different substantive motions. Through unanimous consent it would seek the consent of the House to deal with the different positions which Members hold. To that degree I think the Government was doing exactly what it should be doing. Our Party has always said during elections that if we ever got into a debate on the abortion issue, it would be a free vote as far as we were concerned. What the other two Parties do is up to them.

On this side of the House both on capital punishment and on abortion we have always said—I have said it during the three elections in which I have run and I know the Party platform is the same—that there would be a free vote on issues of conscience. We had an excellent debate on capital punishment and had a truly free vote on it. The first time I am aware of in recent history of Canadian politics that a true free vote was held and the respect for the conscience of each individual Member was in that debate. Every Member had the freedom to speak his mind and stand in his place either for or against. Now we have the same situation on the abortion issue. This is the second issue which this side of the House calls an issue of conscience and, therefore, requires a free vote.

When we get into this debate on abortion, the Government has clearly spelled out the desire to allow Members to express their will in at least three different directions. One is a pro-life direction, though perhaps a moderate pro-life direction from my personal point of view, and I think the Hon. Member for York South—Weston would agree that it is not a pure pro-life option. Then there is a middle or gestational option and then there is a pro-choice option. As I indicated, I think there was a fourth option which was a pure pro-life option. The Government presented these options to the Opposition and asked for the unanimous consent that would allow us to set aside the rules to have these four options before us.

The Hon. Member for York South—Weston expresses some frustration with the delay. I wish he would have succeeded with his Party and within the NDP in convincing them to follow the Government's suggestion so that we could truly have had unanimous consent. We would not have to go through the two stages that are now before us, first bringing in a notice of motion to get to the stage of debating the different positions. That would have saved a lot of the time of the House and it would have permitted us to get at this issue sooner.

Although I agree with the thrust and intent of the Hon. Member's Bill, and to that degree I am pleased to second it, I do not agree that he should express so much frustration with the Government for not dealing with it. The Government gave that Hon. Member, his Party and the other Party a clear choice, through unanimous consent, to begin this debate on abortion. In fact, such a debate would have given us an excellent opportunity to deal with a pure pro-life option at one end to a pure pro-choice option at the other, with a moderate pro-life and a middle ground. I think the Hon. Member should calm down his partisanship and just deal with the issue at hand.

Further, the Hon. Member quoted some statistics. He is correct that the statistics he quoted are readily available to everyone. Statistics are very important in this debate so that we know exactly what we are talking about. One statistic shows that most abortions, 89 per cent of them, are carried out by the thirteenth week of pregnancy. We also find that in the last year for which complete statistics are available, 20.4 per cent of that 89 per cent were repeat abortions.

Some of my colleagues have said to me that as we get into this debate, they hope we can end up with a law that does at least two things: First, a law that is more restrictive than the old Section 251 was, and second, a law that does not allow abortion to be used for birth control purposes.

Let us look at those two points for a moment. If we want a law that is more restrictive than Section 251, then surely we have to start to have fewer than 89 per cent of abortions done by the thirteenth week. We have to move to abortions closer to conception. If my colleagues do not want the same rate of abortion, does that mean that they are willing to move abortion closer to conception?

They then ask how much closer it should be, and I tell them to look at the statistics. By what stage do we wish to cut it off, and what is our objective criteria for doing so? I notice that the objective criteria are lacking. Then I say that around the seventh week, one can at least measure brainwave activity. We use that as the sign of the cessation of life in the case of organ donors and the like. Why do we not use the beginning of brainwave activity as a sign of the beginning of life?

Some say then that seven weeks is far too early. I say that it is not too early. We should really be looking at all the facts involved in foetal development. We really should go right back to conception, because at conception, we are dealing with a human being that is unique and will never be like any other. Its physical capacities are all there, all that is required is growth and development. All of the DNA and characteristics of a person exist at conception. The genetic code has already been determined. To that degree, we need not go past that into other stages because we are dealing with a life right from the beginning.

The other point that is often made is that abortion should not be used as birth control. We know that 20.4 per cent of abortions were repeat abortions in 1985. That figure is far too high. Therefore, I think the thrust of what the Hon. Member is trying to do is a good one—

Ms. Mitchell: What is going to stop that? How do you stop it?

Mr. Reimer: When we get into the debate on the different options—the NDP Member is going on with the Party line and trying to interrupt. I wish Members of the NDP would simply let a person finish his comments. When they speak, I will be quiet.

In conclusion, let me simply say that the thrust of the Hon. Member's motion is a good one. The Government has provided a means of dealing with this issue, and I hope that the other Parties will give us the consent to move quickly so that we may have a real debate that looks at protecting the child, something which we have not been doing, and also looks at protecting the life of the mother if necessary. All these side issues that used to exist in Section 251 must be done away with, and I think that if the Hon. Member were to look at amendment (a), he would see that it comes very close to that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I intend to call on the speakers in the following order: the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) followed by the Hon. Member for Hochelaga—Maisonneuve (Mr. Desrosiers) followed by the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate today. I believe that I am the only Member who has changed his mind on this issue since the repeal of Section 251 of the Criminal Code earlier this year. At least I think I am the only one who has admitted to doing so.

In speaking in favour of this private Member's Bill this afternoon, I should explain to the House the reasons that provoked me to change my mind on such a fundamental and important issue. I suppose the first reason is the fact that the previous position I had taken was wrong and, naturally, having taken a position that was wrong, I needed to correct it. The reason I am of the opinion and sincere belief that the previous position I had taken was wrong is what I would like to express to the House now.

Since last January, a number of Members of Parliament have been lobbied, and so have I, by people in favour of more restrictive laws, by people in favour of no laws at all and by people in favour of a so-called middle-of-the-road approach. One of the useful things about this lobby is the fact that it has provoked or at least encouraged me to obtain more information. When I say more information, I do not necessarily mean information that was provided to me by the various people who were lobbying. Of course, they too provided useful and valuable information, but I took it upon myself to obtain more and more of what I felt could be useful information for me.

Sometimes I wondered why I was doing this, because I thought I had made up my mind on the issue already. Nevertheless, I continued to accumulate and read various documents. For me, one of the things that provoked me into changing my mind, above many others, was the fact that I reread my own speech on capital punishment. I was the first Liberal Member to speak on capital punishment, aside from my Leader (Mr. Turner). I had indicated that life, all life, was worth preserving and that no life should be destroyed for any reason.

I am not saying that everyone who is against abortion should be against capital punishment. I would hope that to be the case, but it is not necessarily so. They are two different issues. For me, however, there was a parallel which was important in my own mind and in my own conscience in assisting me to make up my mind.

It got to a point at which I had difficulty living with myself with the position I had taken. I do not think I changed my position because of intense pressure from my electorate, although of course they too had a lot to say. I think I changed my mind because of that crisis of conscience when I came to realize that I had taken a position which was so much at odds with what I actually believed.

Some of the information I obtained does not necessarily come from pro-life groups. I have here a copy of The New England Journal of Medicine, hardly a pro-life propaganda tool, dated November 19, 1987. It contains an article "Pain and Its Effects in the Human Neonate and Fetus". Written by two doctors, it says that the foetus can indeed feel pain as early as seven weeks in the pregnancy. It says:

> Cutaneous sensory receptors appear in the perioral area of the human fetus in the 7th week of gestation; they spread to the rest of the face, the palms of the hands, and the soles of the feet by the 11th week—

There is sensation in those parts of the body by the 11th week of the pregnancy. If there is such a thing as a feeling of pain at the 7th week on the part of the foetus, if there is a heartbeat as we know there is, if there is all the other development of that foetus which we know there is because of ultrasound and other electronic equipment which provides us with that information, then one has to conclude that there is life, at least at that point.

Does life begin at conception? Several theologians contemplated that issue many years ago. I do not know the answer anymore than anyone else. However, for the purposes of our discussion today, given what we know now medically and otherwise, I have to assume that life does begin at conception. If someone has a differing view, I am willing to listen to it and to the proof that it is otherwise. I do not think I should be proving that life begins at conception but I think the onus rests on those who believe otherwise to demonstrate to me that it does not, if that is their belief.

Philosophers and theologians have recognized for many years the sanctity of life. Hippocrates, a philosopher and physician who lived from 460 to 367 B.C. wrote what is now referred to as the Hippocratic Oath. It says:

> I will give no deadly medicine to anyone even upon request, nor suggest any such counsel, and in like manner I will not give to a woman a pessary to produce an abortion.

That was right 2,400 years ago, it is still right today.

Ms. Mitchell: In your view.

Mr. Boudria: I know some will disagree and that is their prerogative.

We as a nation have to face this issue and it is difficult. This Bill obviously will not be able to proceed because of the fact that the Criminal Code section it deals with has been overturned. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. Henderson):

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substitute the following therefor:
> That Bill C-261, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (abortion) be not now read a second time, but that the order be discharged, the Bill withdrawn and the subject matter be therefore referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General.

I move that motion with the full co-operation of the Hon. Member for York South—Weston who proposed this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The debate is now on the amendment.

[Translation]

Mrs. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal with Bill C-261. I think that in this House and throughout the world including Canada, many individuals do not understand the very difficult problem of abortion. The problem is very difficult from a moral point of view and to my knowledge, no woman wants to be aborted but the problem lies with our society and not with women and men.

Abortion has always existed and, before 1969 in Canada, abortions were performed in unhygenic premises resulting in the death of many women and children. Those are not very pleasant conditions.

However, Mr. Speaker, if we want to reduce the number of abortions, our society will have to be fairer and more honest than at present Our society must love children, provide daycare services and also services for women. Moreover it should uphold values which do not consider women as sexual objects. It strikes me as really ironic that I am the only woman speaking this evening on this issue and the only one, I think, which is against the bill under consideration.

[English]

It is not because I think that anyone at any time ever wants to have an abortion. I know people who have made that decision but they did not want to. I hear constantly in this Chamber that we have to protect the unborn. I agree, but I think we have to protect the born. The same people who talk about those conditions laugh about making women sexual objects. Yesterday I raised in this House the fact that advertising such as with Diet 7-Up makes a sexual object of women for the amusement of their male partners who impregnate them and then leave them in their anxiety and tension and frustration. To suggest that we are talking about using abortion as a form of birth control is a scandal. We must ask ourselves why this is happening. We must ask ourselves why the country of Brazil has millions of abortions. It has laws like this and is not reducing them.

The Province of Quebec, which has refused to implement the Criminal Code on this, is the only province in Canada which has been able to reduce the number of abortions. However, we have not been able to increase the birth rate in Québec. In Sweden, however, where services are given, they have reduced the number of abortions and increased the birth rate.

The real question is whether we are willing to build a society which loves children. Will we sacrifice ourselves to show that children are the ones we really love? Will we give services to those children? Will we ensure that there are not children getting their meals in soup kitchens before they go to school? Everyone who is talking about this should go down to the soup kitchens and guarantee that these children have a life of dignity.

I am not even asking them to look after the women who have been so badly treated over the years. I am asking them to look after the children who are sexually abused today in our society. They are not sexually abused by women. Women have not declared war. Women are not the ones who have killed other human beings throughout history. And women will not have abortions if they have true choices because they will be able to build a society that loves.

I suggest to everyone who says that our society has no law that that is not true. We have laws, we have medical practitioner laws and medical ethics. It is in that area that we must deliver the necessary services to women. We do not want to go back to the back streets.

I am a public health nurse. I trained in a Catholic hospital and worked in a Catholic hospital. In the emergency room we saw some of the carnage which the butchers perpetrated on these youngsters, and sometimes on older women. When you see what that does to your society and values you ask yourself whether you treasure life or not. I treasure life very deeply. I treasure life so deeply that I believe we must look at the continuum of what is happening.

We are not doing that by implementing this kind of legislation. By implementing such legislation we are making the black market rich again. We are not putting in place services to help people understand their own physiology, their own bodies, and what contraception is all about.

I can get into a heavy theological debate about when life begins. I think we all know that at the connection of two cells, whether vegetable, animal, or human, the potential for life is there. However, we also know that there is absolutely no dogma which sets out when human life begins.

One hundred years ago the Catholic church said that it was okay to abort a male baby after 40 days, but a female baby after 80 days. That shows how long we have been struggling with this. We have also struggled over the years with how many angels would fit on the head of a pin. However, the real issue is to reduce the number of abortions in our society. That is the one thread of consistency that I have heard in this House. We then ask how we are going to do that.

Please, Mr. Speaker, do not allow us to take the attitude and approach that we are going to do that by penalizing the victim as is so often done. That is being done within a patriarchal society. There was only one woman in this House in 1969 when that first law was passed. It was not a good law. I think everyone agrees with that. It was only the beginning of trying to ensure that there were good medical procedures in place. The Supreme Court has said that the committees did not make any sense. In practice they made no sense. I saw how they worked and they were totally nonsensical.

If Members of Parliament really want to build a compassionate, loving society, they have to start treating men and women with dignity, with a sense of a quality of life that is important. They must say that children in total are important and valuable to us and put services in place which count.

That is how we can reduce the number of abortions. That is how women can start to feel that they are not being looked down on by males as a result of some of the dreadful expressions which are being directed at them. I ask the people who are supporting this kind of law to consider what kind of value they are supporting.

Mr. Edouard Desrosiers (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-261, introduced by the Hon. Member, deals with a very important and delicate subject. I cannot say I have no views on abortion. In fact, like so many fellow citizens, I was led by recent events such as the Morgentaler trial to think about the abortion issue. All Canadians know what my feelings are and what my position is, Mr. Speaker. I am not against anything. I am not against abortion. I am for the right to life.

Not long ago, on the Plains of Abraham, where a number of Members were invited to attend a meeting but many were afraid to go and talk to the thousands of people who organized this assembly... Mr. Speaker, since I am not afraid to say what I think, I told them I was not a fence sitter like most Members who are reluctant to get involved. It's a difficult issue politically, and sometimes they would rather not hurt the feelings of some of their constituents.

Mr. Speaker, there is a morality to the way we live, I think we all should be concerned about that morality. I come from a family of fifteen children, and I have said this before, and I will say it again: There were fifteen children at home and I can assure you that if my mother had decided to have an abortion, you would not have the honour and the pleasure to see me in this Chamber today.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the House that Section 251 of the Criminal Code prohibits anyone from procuring a miscarriage. In fact, section 251 is very specific—listen to this "... to procure the miscarriage of a female person". As far as I know, I never heard of a male person having or getting an abortion. But it's all there in Section 251, Mr. Speaker. It does sound rather bizarre, but what can you do?

The section provided for one exception, when the abortion is carried out by a qualified medical practitioner, other than a member of a therapeutic abortion committee from any hospital, in a hospital accredited by the Canadian Council on Hospital Accreditation, or in a hospital approved for the purposes of Section 251 by the Minister of Health of that province.

The hospital's therapeutic abortion committee had to consist of at least three members, all of whom are qualified medical practitioners, appointed by the hospital to examine and decide on requests for termination of pregnancy.

The majority of the members of the therapeutic abortion committee, at a meeting of the committee at which the case was examined, was to state by certificate, in writing, that in its opinion the continuation of the pregnancy would or would be likely to endanger the life or health of the woman. We must remember that "health " meant both the physical and mental health of the woman. The therapeutic abortion committee had to submit a copy of the certificate to the qualified physician performing this abortion.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, in the Morgentaler case, the main question before the Supreme Court of Canada was whether the provisions of the Criminal Code relating to abortion, namely Section 251, infringed on the right to life and liberty and security of the person except in conformity with the principles of fundamental justice.

The three judges who rendered the majority decision agreed that Section 251 infringed on security of the person and violated the principles of fundamental justice under Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and could not be safeguarded within the reasonable limits specified in Section 1 of the Charter.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the judges in the majority agreed that the expression "security of the person" found in Section 7 of the Charter includes both security and physical and mental health.

So, Mr. Speaker, you will see that the Bill proposed by our distinguished colleague not only seeks to change a law that no longer exists, or that at least is inoperative, but would also make an unconstitutional amendment.

Since abortion can become an explosive problem, it seems to me that the public has chosen to ignore it. It has not sought effective, direct solutions for these deep divergences. One of the attitudes taken has been, "Ignore it—it will go away eventually." Other people, with different points of view, have replied, "This is what goes on. This is what must be done."

Between these two positions, there is a range of deeply held opinions, not always easily expressed, found among people of every region, religion, political persuasion, language or other social category. These opinions range from an insistence on the preservation of the life and physical health of the mother to a concern for the woman's whole social environment and her family situation.

Each of these two attitudes is shared by many Canadians and is based on a different concept of the family and the changing role of women in Canadian society.

The abortion issue is a major challenge to normal principles and professional ethics and is therefore emotionally charged. Things will go on like this because, as in other life and death matters, there is no easy solution. Abortion disturbs many people who would have preferred to avoid it. It is one of those delicate choices which all women capable of bearing children may have to face.

The many women who have resorted to abortion have been ostracized and the subject of pressures which have left them permanently scarred. They worry about the long term effects of the surgical procedure on their health and still fear that their anonymity will not be respected.

I recognize, Mr. Speaker, the merits of the bill moved by my hon. colleague, but I am convinced that the matter is too important to be settled in the course of this debate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I think that my time has expired, I see that you are sending me desperate signals . . . I only wanted to say that I am very proud to stand up for the pro-life option and I think that it is my moral duty to fight for this cause and our fellow Canadians, and I do it with fairness and equity.

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the Notice of Motion on the Order Paper and the Government's clear commitment to have a clear and thorough debate on this topic, I think this amendment is both mischievous and unnecessary—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Order. I do not consider that to be a point of order.

The time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

AIR CANADA PUBLIC PARTICIPATION ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the motion of Mr. McDermid (p. 15859).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It being 5.45 p.m., pursuant to order made earlier this day, it is my duty to put the question on the motion for the previous question to the motion for second reading of Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public.

Accordingly, the question is the following one: Mr. Mazankowski moved:

> That Bill C-129, an Act to provide for the Continuance of Air Canada under the Canada Business Corporations Act and for the issuance and sale of shares thereof to the public, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. McDermid moved:

> That this question be now put.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. McDermid), which was agreed to on the following division:

WOMEN

SEXUAL HARASSMENT

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, last May the results of a Rhode Island survey conducted among 1,700 teenagers shocked Canadians and Americans alike when nearly a quarter of the boys and a sixth of the girls said that it was all right for a man to force a woman to have sex if he has spent money on her. It was also revealed in the U.S. study that 50 per cent of those young people believe a woman who walks alone at night is asking to be raped.

• (1405)

These results did not surprise Joan Steer who was aware of another study done in Toronto, which suggests that many adults do not consider "date rape" or sexual harassment in the workplace as real crimes.

Despite all the recent efforts to change attitudes to sexual assault and harassment, lack of information and ignorance remain the most crucial problem among young people. Mr. Speaker, we absolutely must inform teen-age boys and girls in order to change their attitudes towards violence and end rampant sexism for generations to come.

[English]

Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) promised more studies on the causes of wife battering and family abuse. There are many studies available. Why not speak out now through the media to teach and to offer hope to women looking for help by giving them the numbers of people to contact? I call on the Government to honour the recommendation of many of the studies and to awaken public awareness to avoid the perpetuation of sexual assault and family violence.

ENTREPRENEURS

TRIBUTE TO JEAN-GUY COTNOIR AND ROB METKA

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 5, the Rouyn-Noranda Regional Chamber of Commerce held its first Prisma gala to highlight the strength of our enterprising spirit.

Jean-Guy Cotnoir, a well-known personality in the region, won the award in the "builder" category. His name is synonymous with success, determination and fighting spirit. The head of a large, flourishing transport company that he built himself over the last few decades, Jean-Guy Cotnoir has been deeply involved over the years in the social and economic development of our community and in many charitable works.

In the "prospective" category, Rob Metka of Noranda Minerals won the grand prize. Originally from Saskatchewan, this young engineer now heads the construction of one of the largest technological challenges in the world, a sulfuric acid plant to be built in Rouyn-Noranda at an estimated cost of $125 million.

Messrs. Cotnoir and Metka, thank you for your generous contribution to our community and congratulations to the Rouyn-Noranda Regional Chamber of Commerce for this good initiative!

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING PROJECTS INSPECTION POLICY

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government recently decided to take a more flexible approach to the monitoring of Canadian Jobs Strategy projects. This decision will undoubtedly add to the abuse that already exists under this system.

[English]

The focus of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the provision of training through private-sector training programs, creates an urgent need for a comprehensive monitoring policy. Private-sector training courses often provide job-specific, non-portable skills. Without effective and comprehensive monitoring, it is unrealistic to expect that employees will receive broad, basic skills training.

S. O. 21

In his 1987 audit the Auditor General found that 40 per cent of the job development training agreements were incomplete. Yet, despite the lack of documentation ensuring eligibility, and the lack of specific training plans, these projects were approved and funded. Regular on-site inspections are absolutely essential to ensure that the training taking place is the training that is approved when the projects are funded.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy is supposed to be a training strategy for Canadians. Without an effective and comprehensive monitoring policy, it is merely a wage subsidy program for the private sector.

IMMIGRATION

UNSCRUPULOUS CONSULTANTS

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, unscrupulous individuals using the misnomer of immigration consultants are tarring the immigrant communities of Canada. These traders of human flesh who prey on the unfortunate cause irreparable human sufferings to individuals and families who succumb to their promises.

One individual who brings this issue into sharp focus is Joe Rafael, who plies his trade on the Portuguese community. This individual had his name added to the security handbook by the Immigration Minister under the previous Government. Last year the RCMP laid charges and his case is still pending. However, he continues to ply his trade in human beings.

This individual continues to give others the perception that he is untouchable, and the Liberal controlled other place is encouraging the rest of them since it is refusing to pass Bills C-55 and C-84. Therefore, while the country waits for our laws, the Minister should use Section 95(M) of the Immigration Act to rid Canada of these vermin.

AEROSPACE

SPACE AGENCY—MONTREAL—SECRETARY OF STATE'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that Mr. Lucien Bouchard, who is running in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, has decided to look after the Montreal region instead. I was delighted to hear Mr. Bouchard say that he would use all his political clout to get the space agency and that we could count on his friend.

However, Mr. Speaker, as the saying goes, we are known by the company we keep. The fact that Mr. Bouchard is a friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) bothers me, because the Prime Minister has deceived senior citizens with false promises, has deceived our families, the sick and Canadians in general, and now Mr. Bouchard, who is running in Lac-Saint-Jean, thinks the people of Montreal are going to believe that!

Mr. Speaker, I think we should tell Mr. Bouchard to mind his own business and deal with the problems in Lac-Saint-Jean before making any promises he won't be able to keep.

KAHNAWAKE

ILLEGAL CIGARETTE TRADE—MOHAWKS' NEGOTIATIONS WITH GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the problem with cigarette sales in Kahnawake goes back a number of years. Negotiations started several months ago between the Government of Quebec and Mohawk representatives, but Quebec is still waiting for a proposal from the Mohawks.

The approach taken by the Quebec Minister, Mr. Savoie, when the road blocks were set up, and his role in subsequent negotiations was most welcome. Thanks to the Minister, there were no unfortunate incidents and there was no violence in Kahnawake.

However, the problem with the Mohawks has yet to be settled, and we cannot tolerate unlawful sales on their territory. Today, the governments of Canada and Quebec are to negotiate with them to reach an agreement.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that these negotiations are difficult and complex, but they are necessary.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR ORGANIZATION

FINDING ON BRITISH COLUMBIA BILL 19

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, now that the International Labour Organization has ruled that Bill 19, passed by the British Columbia Government, is overtly restrictive and unacceptable in a free and democratic society, it is incumbent upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to meet with Premier Vander Zalm to have the Bill withdrawn as soon as possible.

The Bill severely tips the balance in contract negotiations towards employers and robs trade unions of the right to collective bargaining without government interference. It virtually eliminates any opportunity of developing an atmosphere of positive and healthy relations between labour and management in the Province of British Columbia.

Since the federal Government interacts with the ILO on behalf of the provinces, it is now appropriate and necessary for it to intervene with the British Columbia Government to ensure that the spirit and substance of the ILO decision are implemented in full. The future of progressive labour-management relations in British Columbia now lies with our Prime Minister and I urge him to act expeditiously.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, national press comment of last week was to the effect that dioxin levels are 10 times worse at the Niagara site. This increase occurred over the past two years alone, according to the latest of many studies. Niagara residents and the millions who use the Niagara/Great Lakes for drinking water are concerned and upset. They are looking to the Government for action, solutions, and money.

Last week the Government announced a massive $100 million plus for the lower St. Lawrence River clean-up. It is well needed and well done. Great for that region. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) said in Montreal that the St. Lawrence River has been the subject of countless studies and it was time to act. I agree. It is exactly the same for the Niagara. There have been countless studies, and unacceptable pollution has been well identified. Action and federal money are needed now.

AIDS DISEASE—FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, it is a real shame that people have to burn a Minister in effigy before they get action on an issue as serious as AIDS. However, the pleas and entreaties of the Opposition and thousands of people across the country have finally borne fruit. We are expecting the Minister to announce today a $129 million grant over five years, including $48 million for public education, $35 million for research, $20 million for innovative community projects, $10 million for training in health, and $6 million for international activities.

However, I ask why the Minister is afraid to make this announcement in the House. Why is he, as we say in the jargon, low-balling it? Is it because he has no problem talking to Canadians about health concerns like smoking and family violence, but for some reason he cannot even deal with the word AIDS? He should follow the example of the Premier of Ontario who has shown some leadership in talking to our young people and our communities about this dreaded disease. He did not hide in a small group and make an announcement hoping that no one would hear about it.

Canadians should hear. We need public education if we are going to stop AIDS. I congratulate those groups who finally forced the Minister, hopefully, to wake up when he makes his announcement in about 45 minutes.

TRADE

AUTO PACT—POSSIBLE SCENARIO

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, here is an interesting scenario. Assume that the Liberals and the NDP secured a slight majority after the next election—heaven forbid—and Prime Minister Turner sent Trade Minister Broadbent to Washington to tear up the trade agreement . . .

"Mr. President . . . er . . . ah . . . ooh . . . er . . . my bosses, Prime Minister Turner and Shirley Carr, told me to tear up this trade agreement . . . " RIP, RIP, RIP "Good-day Mr. President".

"Wait, hold on" said the President. The President took a copy of the Auto Pact from his desk and tore it into shreds. "Goodbye Mr. Broadbent".

The next day the Liberal-Socialist coalition was thrown out of office.

BANK OF CANADA

INTEREST RATE POLICY

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government's support for Chairman John Crow and the Bank of Canada's high interest rate policy in the name of curbing inflation is strangely reminiscent of the Diefenbaker Government's support of Bank of Canada chairman James Coyne's actions in the early 1960s.

What will the future hold for this Government which is not listening to the many voices calling out for lower interest rates? Interest rates shot up twice in the last two weeks alone.

The Government's policy of pushing our interest rates up causing the value of our dollar to rise is jeopardizing the competitiveness of many of our exports, particularly paper and lumber. In terms of the forest industry alone, the 81-cent dollar will result in a 1988 sales revenue loss of around $900 million.

Given that a number of key leaders in forestry and mining, the Premiers of Alberta, Ontario, and Quebec, Canadians renewing mortgages, the New Democratic Party, and many others are calling for lower interest rates, the Government must change its present course of making the people pay, before the country is driven off the precipice into the next depression.

DUMPING OF ITALIAN TOXIC WASTE IN NIGERIA

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, recently more than 100,000 tonnes of hot, stinking toxic waste from Italy were dumped in Nigeria in containers which were so hot that workers wearing rubber gloves burnt their hands when trying to handle them.

Nigeria is the very country which sponsored a resolution against such action. That resolution was adopted by the Organization of African Unity. Nigeria is the present recipient of these pollutants from the United States and Europe.

Canada must lead the way in bringing a halt to this practice of the poorer countries of Africa being prepared to receive the pollutants of other nations on the basis of a cash return. The returns in terms of health are going to be horrendous.

DISASTERS

1985 GANDER AIR CRASH—FBI INVESTIGATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I have repeatedly, in this House, asked the Government for a new investigation into the Gander air disaster of December 12, 1985, that killed 256 people. The Government has repeatedly responded that we should wait for the final report of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has been deprived of crucial information on which to base a reliable report.

For instance, through Access to Information in the United States it has been determined that the FBI was sufficiently convinced of the possibility of an on-board explosion that it launched a world-wide investigation.

Is the Government aware that the FBI conducted this world-wide investigation and questioned pilots and ground crews everywhere this ill-fated aircraft landed? Is the Government further aware that 239 of the 289 pages of evidence ensuing from this investigation were withheld, considered too dangerous to the national security of the United States to be released?

How can the Government accept any report from the Canadian Aviation Safety Board that does not include an examination of this FBI report?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understand that my colleague opposite just returned from Washington with some information. We would be more than delighted to meet with him and take any information he has which will assist us in the CASB investigation.

• (1420)

REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION BE APPOINTED

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, it is outrageous that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board would be working on a final report when it lacks so much vital information.

The pilot activated an engine fire extinguisher before impact. That evidence is not in the report. The pilot activated the master fire warning light before impact. That evidence is not available to the Board.

The FBI, according to its own documentation, was denied access to the crash site. A Major General in the U.S. Army tried to order a bulldozing of the entire crash site the day following the crash, before any investigation could take place.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. How can the Government contemplate accepting a report that excludes the opinions of the four aviation experts on the Board, that excludes the autopsy reports, that excludes the eye witness accounts, and that excludes any explanation why a CID inspector was on that aircraft, armed, because "he was transporting evidence to be used in a criminal trial in the United States"?

Will the Government appoint a Royal Commission with special powers to examine all of the evidence that is available?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): With great respect to my colleague opposite, he knows that the final report has not been made. An interim report is out and all parties are making representations on that.

Mr. Boudria: Not all parties.

Mr. Thacker: A final report will then be presented and at that time the Government will make the appropriate choices.

It is also true that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has a process with an internal separate body to investigate these accidents. We surely want that process to be respected because, after all, it was set up by the previous administration.

STATEMENTS MADE BY CANADIAN AND UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, on December 12, the day of the crash, the Pentagon's chief spokesman, Robert Sims, said: "We have no indication of explosions prior to the crash or of hostile action".

On December 12, the day of the crash, White House spokesman, Larry Speakes, said: "No evidence of sabotage or an explosion in flight".

On December 12, the day of the crash, our Minister of Transport said that "we have no indication at all foul play took place".

On December 12, the day of the crash, the U.S. Defence Department said: "There was no evidence of sabotage".

The question that comes to mind in the wake of this instant wave of denials is obvious. How was it possible before there was any investigation at all for the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States to make such emphatic and identical declarations? Was it because the Government of Canada was acting in consort with the Pentagon?

Mr. Mazankowski: Nonsense.

Mr. Holtmann: Get serious.

Mr. Baker: Does the Minister not realize that unless he appoints a Royal Commission or judicial inquiry the Government will be seen to be part of a cover-up to the real cause of the crash in Gander?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the Opposition, as they often do, are trying to anticipate a result to get some political benefit themselves.

We have a lawful and legitimate process that takes it out of the political realm and puts it into the hands of professional investigators, supervised by a board. I think we should respect that process that Parliament has set up and which has served us very well.

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD—REPORT OF DISSENSION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary just told Parliament that we should respect a professional investigation conducted by an independent board. The former Minister of Transport, the Member for St. John's West, retained one John Sopinka, recently named to the Supreme Court of Canada, to investigate the operation of the independent professional board to which the Parliamentary Secretary just referred.

In a report given to the former Minister of Transport on February 3, 1988, Mr. Sopinka referred to division and conflict within the Board, between the Board Chairman and the Executive Director of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board. He said this:

> The result of this dissension is that many members of the Board feel powerless to carry out their mandate. On occasion some of the Board members have been unable to obtain investigation of facts which they consider essential in order to carry out their function.

Given the evidence brought forward to the House by the Member for Gander—Twillingate, and given this damning indictment of the operation of the Canadian Aviation Safety Board, will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us how he can refuse today to grant a full public commission of inquiry into the tragic event that led to the loss of so many lives in Gander, Newfoundland?

• (1425)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is true there has been a bit of dissension within the CASB, but it is also true, and my friend opposite knows, that the next major initiative of the Government is a Transportation Accident Investigation Board which will complete the whole reorganization of transportation. It will leave the NTA with economic regulatory reform. It will leave the Minister with the minimum safety requirements, and there will be a new Transportation Accident Investigation Board for air, rail, and marine, which will independently investigate any accidents.

It will have the appropriate powers and the appropriate division of responsibility between the board and the professional investigators.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, what we have just heard from the Parliamentary Secretary is an admission that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board was incompetent to carry out a proper investigation, an admission that conflict existed and that the work of the Board was not being done. That is the report of Mr. Sopinka, now named to the Supreme Court of Canada.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): In addition to the reference to the operation of the Board and the conflict within the Board, Mr. Sopinka went on to say in his report to the former Minister of Transport this year, just a few months ago:

> Finally the view in the industry is that the competence of the investigators and the quality of their investigations and reports has deteriorated in recent years. Some feel that there is insufficient investigation of human factors and that the board lacks technical expertise . . .

Given this report by John Sopinka to the former Minister of Transport in February, and given the information and evidence brought to the House today by the Hon. Member for Gander—Twillingate, I again ask the Deputy Prime Minister, a former Minister of Transport, given his own statements in 1979, that whenever there was a question, whenever there were mysterious circumstances, whenever there was a lack of public confidence, he called for a full public inquiry, will he call a full public inquiry into this whole sorry mess and tragic loss of life?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our colleague opposite has shown his usual great imagination in framing his question and preamble. The answer lies in the Transportation Accident Investigation Board.

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on, that's ridiculous.

Mr. Thacker: The interesting point is whether the Opposition will stall that new board and delay and filibuster—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: That's what they will do.

Mr. Thacker: —or will the Opposition give us that Bill in one day, because that will solve the problems.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WORDING OF PROPOSED U.S. LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It involves his Chief of Staff, Mr. Burney, and the free trade agreement. The proposed wording of the free trade legislation, as jointly drafted by the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives, includes a clause pertinent to the interim period during which time a working group of Canadians and Americans is to determine the issue of subsidization. The wording is:

> Any U.S. industry may petition USTR—
> That is the United States Trade Representative.
> —if it competes directly with imports subsidized by the Canadian Government and is likely to experience a deterioration of its competitive position before the working group develops more effective rules and disciplines concerning the use of Government subsidies.

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Broadbent: The Prime Minister is paying attention even if some of his back-benchers are not. The clause goes on to say that very specific action may be taken against Canadian exports in the interim.

Was Mr. Burney sent to Washington this morning to meet with representatives in the U.S. to discuss very specifically this proposed wording in the U.S. legislation, because it appears to single out Canada for special unfavourable action during the interim period, giving U.S. industry additional weapons to use against Canadian exports? Is that the reason Mr. Burney was dispatched?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that is not the reason. The reason is for an opportunity for Mr. Burney, as agreed, to compare notes with the American administration with respect to our obligations to bring forward legislation before our respective Legislatures, and an undertaking to consult to ensure that, to the extent humanly possible, we avoid inadvertent incompatibilities with respect to the drafting of that legislation.

With respect to any specific question my hon. friend has based on that document, I would be happy to examine it. But the free trade agreement did establish a working group to develop over the next five years some effective rules for dealing with trade distorting subsidies. In the meantime we have improved our security of access through a binding bi-national dispute settlement mechanism.

I am not sure if that deals directly with the question my hon. friend raised on substance or not, but I would be happy to examine the document and respond with greater precision.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly not expect that it would be unreasonable to expect the Prime Minister to have before him the particular clause that I am referring to, or even conceivably the detailed knowledge of that particular clause. Since Mr. Burney is involved and he is the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff, and there is a wire story that is just now out alluding to Mr. Burney's trip being related to the question that I just asked, I want to ask the Prime Minister if he will deal with this in general terms.

Has he discussed in his office with Mr. Burney, or with the Minister who is responsible for trade, a possible interpretation of this clause that would give the United States additional powers vis-à-vis Canadian industry that could be used in an unfavourable way against Canadian industry during the next five-year period until the issue of subsidies is settled? That is the story that is out. The wording which I have just quoted is potentially quite alarming. Is the Government concerned about that issue?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks whether we discussed this matter and whether Mr. Burney was dispatched in regard to the question raised. The answer is no.

We assume that the legislation that emanates on both sides will be consistent with the free trade agreement. It is further stated that any inconsistencies at variance with the free trade agreement would be unacceptable.

I can point out to my hon. friend that Mr. Burney is down there with a group of officials pursuant to an agreement—not an unusual one—reached at the Washington Summit a few months ago when I was there. It was agreed that at a mutually acceptable time prior to the Toronto Summit both sides would meet to try to compare notes in respect of ongoing trade matters and preparations for the Toronto Summit. That is what my Chief of Staff is doing there with a group of Canadian officials today.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON CANADIAN EXPORTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister for International Trade were here I would be asking him about this matter, since he is the Minister responsible for negotiations. It has already been conceded that there are some real concerns about what has emerged from Washington in recent weeks, but the Minister has decided to hold off complaining until after the deal is finished, and then take a countervailing action if necessary.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask the Minister of Finance—

Mr. McDermid: He didn't say that.

Mr. Broadbent: That is exactly what he said. So pay attention to what he said. Just try it.

Mr. Nystrom: McDermid, take a valium.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like to ask the Minister of Finance, since he is obviously interested in the trade deal, has his Department had a look at this proposed clause which has been agreed to, Article 1907, by both the U.S. Senate and the House? Is it the interpretation of the Finance Department that this gives additional weapons to U.S. industry that do not even exist now in terms of existing relations between Canada and the U.S., and if acted upon could single out Canadian exports for special targeting during the next five-year period? Has the Department of Finance expressed any concern about this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Broadbent: Thanks!

Mr. Mulroney: I understand the question is to the Minister of Finance, but it is exactly the same as the one that was addressed to me.

Mr. Broadbent: No. I asked him if his officials were looking into it.

Mr. Mulroney: The officials work for the Government of Canada. As the Leader of the Government of Canada, I have already informed the Leader of the NDP that that was not the reason why Mr. Burney was dispatched.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: The question was asked. I have provided the answer. I am happy to provide it again, and give my hon. friend those assurances.

CONTENT OF U.S. IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question on this matter.

Two weeks ago we asked the same question in the House of the Minister for International Trade, considering the fact that the United States legislation implementing the Canada-U.S. trade deal was introducing a brand new system of trade action that would be used to harass Canadian exporters by defining a subsidy, monitoring, and giving the President greater discretion and freedom of action. We thought we had some satisfaction that, finally, the Government was responding by sending Mr. Burney. I now hear the Prime Minister saying that that is not the reason why Mr. Burney is there.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this. Considering that the U.S. legislation that has been accepted by both the Congress and the Senate has stated clearly that there will be a brand new process for monitoring Canadian exports, determining subsidies and taking unilateral action, why does the Prime Minister not instruct Mr. Burney this afternoon while he is in Washington to tell the U.S. officials that that is totally unacceptable, and we will not accept that kind of legislation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, why would the Hon. Member say that I had indicated that that is not the reason why Mr. Burney is there?

Mr. Axworthy: Because you said so.

Mr. Mulroney: I said quite the contrary, that Mr. Burney was there both on trade related matters, as agreed, in answer to a question by the Leader for the NDP, and on matters relating to the Toronto Summit. Clearly, if there are matters that arise the Chief of Staff and trade officials will be dealing specifically and helpfully with them.

My hon. friend will not be surprised if, in terms of the congressional procedures, irritants and difficulties arise in such a complex undertaking. It is our responsibility to ensure that whatever they are they are consistent with the free trade agreement. Failing that, they would not be applicable.

Mr. Burney will of course be dealing with matters of that nature, and I so indicated.

CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY AND SECURITY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister.

We have the clear legislative language that will set up this new system for taking trade action against Canada. We have the U.S. administration saying that the dispute settlement mechanism is unconstitutional, unless the President has the opportunity to interfere in it, thereby politicizing that dispute settlement mechanism.

Concerning those two major points, I ask the Prime Minister this. Will he give a guarantee to the House today that he will not force through trade legislation on the floor of the House, as the Minister says, within five days, until we have had a clear and unmistakable assurance that there is nothing in the U.S. trade Bill that will contravene that agreement or that will ask the Canadian Parliament to put at risk the sovereignty and security of this country, because the U.S. is taking major advantage without providing any kind of reaction or change by the Government? Why are you asking this Parliament to pass a blank cheque?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: The Government is not doing anything of the sort. The Hon. Member in his preamble made three points. All of them were totally incorrect and misleading. He stands there and says that we are trying to ram through this legislation in five days.

Mr. Axworthy: Five days of debate, that is ramming through.

Mr. McDermid: In our system of Government, and the Hon. Member has been around here long enough to know, there are various steps that a Bill goes through. The first step is first reading, which we have had. The second step is second reading. Then it goes into committee, and then into report stage. That is not all taking five days.

The Hon. Member knows that and he should not be spreading that garbage around the country.

BLOOMFIELD STATION, N.B.—USE OF PROPANE TORCH TO OPEN SUPERMAILBOXES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Yesterday, when my Leader asked the Minister responsible for the Post Office about the closure of the post office in Topley, British Columbia, the Minister responded by saying that the people served by these post offices are getting better service today, and that situation will continue in the future.

I want to ask the Minister today about Bloomfield Station, New Brunswick, where the post office was closed on October 31, 1987. The people of that community now have to travel 12 kilometres to another community to receive postal service. The Atlantic division of Canada Post has supplied to the contractor who delivers the mail to the superboxes a propane torch to be able to open those mailboxes when there is a north-east wind blowing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: I would like to ask the Minister if that is his idea of better service for rural Canada.

• (1440)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, since I did not get any prewarning of that question of course I cannot answer it. But I can answer about Topley, British Columbia, which matter was raised by his Leader yesterday.

The Postmistress sold the store which contained the post office to her daughter. Canada Post tried to get the daughter to accept a retail post office—

Mr. Broadbent: For $1,200 a month less.

Mr. Andre: The daughter refused. On May 31, Canada Post signed to have a retail postal outlet with the Whispering Pines Motel. The service is to start July 1. In the interim the group mailbox service is being provided.

Previously in that post office it received revenues of $8,000 a year but it was costing $22,000 a year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: That kind of thing perhaps makes sense to the New Democrats, but it does not make sense to anybody with any common sense.

REQUEST THAT RURAL POSTAL SERVICE BE IMPROVED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg—North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister, and it isn't funny.

When the Government has reached the stage where it is paying for full-page adds in the media to defend a postal policy that is a disaster for rural Canada, isn't it time to take the "torch" away from Calgary East and Canada Post and give rural Canada a decent chance of having a good postal service?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I understand from press reports that the CLC has financial problems. It is having to lay off employees, something which Canada Post is not doing. In spite of that, the CLC is taking $2 million of its members' fees and using that money on a campaign opposing Canada Post.

If the Hon. Member is really concerned about equity and fairness, he ought to come to the defence of the employees, the union members of the Post Office, whose moneys are being taken and inappropriately and quite possibly illegally being spent to harass the Post Office with these protests.

I can understand the Hon. Member's frustration because there have been a couple of polls in Manitoba, one in terms of users of franchise operations which shows a 94 per cent approval rating, and another poll of rural outlets which were converted to retail postal outlets where the approval rating is 86 per cent. With that kind of an approval rating, I can understand why the Member is so frustrated at what is happening.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

OPERATING EXPENSES OF NEW SHELTERS FOR ABUSED WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare or his representative. We certainly welcome the Minister's $40 million initiative to fight family violence, including $22 million for new spaces for short-term emergency housing for abused women and children.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: There already are a number of agencies across the country providing crisis housing, many of which are having difficulty meeting their ongoing operating expenditures.

What provisions have been made under this new program to ensure adequate operating moneys for these new shelter spaces, and if these funds would be dependent upon provincial cost sharing, what assurances does the Minister have that the provinces will pay their fair share to ensure the success of the program?

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad the Hon. Member for Capilano mentioned the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister responsible for the Status of Women.

It's good news for all Canadians. The federal Government has decided to take the lead on this issue, and the Hon. Member's question was about how the costs will be shared. As far as construction of new shelter spaces is concerned, the federal Government, through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, will be able to pay the full cost.

Maintenance costs, however, come under the Canada Assistance Plan, and the federal Government will pay its share, which is 50 per cent of the cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF SOVIET AND CANADIAN MEMBERS OF THE POLAR BRIDGE EXPEDITION

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the Members' attention the presence in the gallery of the nine Soviet and four Canadian members of the Polar Bridge Expedition who completed their 90-day trek from the shores of the Soviet Arctic to Ellesmere Island National Park in Canada on June 1 via the North Pole.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SECOND-STAGE HOUSING FOR BATTERED WOMEN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday we heard that the Government will not provide the money for second-stage housing for battered women and their children.

The Minister responsible for the status of women admitted yesterday that some women must escape to short-term shelters again and again after being forced to return to an abusive home by the lack of any alternatives. How can the Prime Minister justify this lack of funding for a long-term alternative to a life of pain, humiliation and fear, especially when his Government has cut 25,000 social housing units this year?

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, today the Hon. Member opposite is criticizing the quite considerable efforts made by this Government. If the previous Government had done the same, Mr. Speaker, we would not have the situation we have now. At the present time, we have 1,100 units in Canada to alleviate this problem. Yesterday, the Government announced it was adding 500 new housing units to the existing "bank" and that the new units would be financed with funds currently available to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, so that construction can proceed as soon as possible.

Mrs. Pépin: Mr. Speaker, I merely wish to point out that although these new units are very welcome, this is short-term housing. The problem is with second stage housing, and there are only 12 units per province.

OPPORTUNITY FOR ABUSIVE LIVING PARTNER TO LEAVE CONJUGAL HOME

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): My supplementary is this: I wonder why the Government doesn't introduce a policy that would oblige husbands or spouses who abuse their wives to seek shelter outside the couple's home and undergo compulsory therapy. Why not oblige husbands to leave home instead of putting the onus on battered wives?

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in the budget announced yesterday, certain funds will be allocated to the Department of Justice, to the Solicitor General's Department, in an attempt to respond to certain other needs.

I would like to mention a few statistics, Mr. Speaker. The average number of days for shelter stays in this country is fourteen days. All things considered, we can say that with the number of housing units available at the present time, 57,000 individuals can be assisted annually. With the housing bank, we expect 25,000 additional spaces will be available and perhaps better services for all concerned.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF FINANCIAL SERVICES OMBUDSMAN POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the absence of the Minister of State for Finance since the Minister has a direct responsibility and a legislative one for the benefit and welfare of consumers.

It is reported that the Minister of State for Finance is ready to embrace the NDP proposal in the bank service charges report—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: —for a financial services ombudsman who will be accessible to all consumers through a toll free number from coast to coast.

The Minister for Consumer Affairs has responsibility for consumers and he talks to the Minister of State for Finance. Is the Minister also prepared to support, in his discussions with the Minister of State for Finance, the NDP's further proposal that a financial services ombudsman ought to be independent and autonomous, someone who would combine the functions of referee and advocate? Is he prepared to support that proposal?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall ever seeing this Government embracing the NDP. I don't know what the Member was thinking about, and I do not think my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, did. Let's keep our distance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, Oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think the Hon. Member is referring to the report in The Toronto Star today about an interdepartmental committee review. That interdepartmental committee review covered a number of things. It covered disclosure of fees in respect of opening accounts, the issue of pre-notification and a number of options like that, not what the Hon. Member has just referred to.

I commented on this in the House on Monday. We are in the course of looking at this committee report. We have indicated we welcome the report, but when we are ready to make announcements as to precisely what elements of the report we will be accepting, we will be advising the House.

FINANCE COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Minister of Finance does not want to claim paternity for this recommendation of the NDP. He has embraced our minimum tax recommendation, and he has been known to embrace certain NDPers personally.

Some Hon. Members: Explain!

Mr. Rodriguez: Politically speaking.

It is also recorded that bureaucrats in the Minister of Finance's office are objecting to many of the good ideas, proposals and recommendations of the Finance Committee. I might point out to the Minister of Finance that those are supported by Members from all sides of the House. Will the Minister support the concept of a free vote on the Private Member's Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough which incorporates the recommendations of the Finance Committee's report? I can assure him that we on this side of the House will support that kind of an initiative.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow night is my nomination meeting and I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would not talk about me personally embracing any New Democrats.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I think the important thing about this committee report is that the report has been done in a non-partisan way and there are some good elements in the report which we want to study carefully before we accept or reject them. I know the Hon. Member is anxious that we move on this, but it has been only two days since the report was tabled, and I think that if he exercises his normal patience and forbearance we will be able to have a response to this report and we will advise him through the House in the ordinary course when that happens.

PUBLIC WORKS

BRIBERY ALLEGATION—RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and concerns the allegations of Mr. Glen Kealey of the MICOT office tower project in Hull. Yesterday in the House the Minister said that Mr. Kealey had been speaking to the RCMP and that the matter was under investigation.

I spoke to both the RCMP and Mr. Kealey who will be giving a statement to the RCMP only next week which may then result in an investigation. Can the Minister explain the contradiction between his answer and the facts? Who is investigating? It is not the RCMP. Is it an internal investigation of Public Works, or is it simply the investigation by Mr. Jarvis of the Conservative Party referred to in today's newspapers?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member can see, the Minister of Public Works is not in the House. He is in Montreal on government business.

I would like to repeat what the Minister said yesterday and what is my understanding today which is that, whether Mr. Kealey has spoken to the RCMP or not, the RCMP in fact is investigating the situation, and as a result it would be inappropriate to make any further statements in this regard.

MICOT PROJECT—PROMOTER KEALEY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in his reply yesterday, the Minister also tried to discredit Mr. Kealey's testimony, saying he had been terminated as promoter of the MICOT project. Why did the Minister forget to tell the House yesterday that Mr. Kealey was a member in good standing of the Conservative Party, a member of the Conservative Party's executive in the riding of Hull-Aylmer, a member of the 500 Club, a party organizer and owner of one-third of the shares in the MICOT project . . .

Mr. Malépart: A friend of Brian!

Mr. Boudria: . . . a project worth $157 million. Was it just an oversight?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, neither the Minister of Public Works, myself, nor anyone on this side of the House is trying to cover up anything, as opposed to what the previous administration used to do in these instances. The main reason the Minister did not make any references in that regard yesterday is because he is respecting the review by the RCMP that is taking place at this time. I hope the Hon. Member would do likewise.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MAGAZINE'S TESTS OF SAMURAI JEEP-TYPE VEHICLE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Tests by the U.S. Consumer Reports magazine have determined that the Samurai, a four-wheel-drive jeep-type vehicle made by Suzuki, overturns on dry pavement at speeds of less than 40 miles per hour and it has asked the U.S. Government to order it to be taken off the market.

Since this vehicle is being marketed to young people and has already resulted in eight deaths in the United States because of rollover accidents, will the Minister take steps on behalf of Canadian consumers who are unaware of its defects to have the Suzuki taken off the road, and compensate those persons who have bought these clearly defective vehicles?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of that study by the American consumers' union, but I hear the representation of the Hon. Member and I will certainly have it investigated by my officials.

REQUEST THAT VEHICLE BE REMOVED FROM USE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we have spoken to the Canadian Automobile Association. It has informed us that it wants all drivers of this type of jeep utility vehicle to be warned that the vehicle is inherently unsafe. Despite this risk, consumers are unknowingly buying these Samurais and despite their being the only vehicles rejected by Consumer Reports ratings in the past 10 years.

Will the Minister intercede on behalf of these consumers and get the Samurai off the road, and at the same time ask why Transport Canada does not have a stability testing standard for these kinds of vehicles?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my first answer, I hear the representation of the Hon. Member. I could have had a more complete answer for him today if he had given me some notice that he intended to ask this kind of a detailed question. However, I hear his representation and I will refer it to officials for appropriate action.

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, in Quebec we are going back to the time of Duplessis. As you know, there will a by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean, and while the Tory candidate makes announcements in Montreal, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, according to the press release I've got here, is expecting to announce tomorrow that the federal Government will allocate $440 million to Quebec for the various regions over a five-year period. I wish the Minister would explain why the Western provinces, and I have nothing against them personally, received $1.2 billion from the federal Government and the Altantic provinces $1 billion, while Quebec is getting only $440 million?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean in connection with a by-election involving Lucien Bouchard. He forgot to mention that yesterday, Premier Bourassa of Quebec said that Mr. Bouchard would be an important Quebec presence in Ottawa and that obviously, he hoped he would be elected, and I hope so too.

I agree that we have made some very important decisions in favour of regional economic development in Western Canada and the Atlantic provinces, and we will certainly do the same tomorrow, to the great satisfaction of Mr. Bourassa and, who knows, of the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie.

An Hon. Member: Defeated candidates don't count!

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, my friend Robert Bourassa may be right when he says that Mr. Bouchard would be a good representative for Quebec in Ottawa, but he overlooked the fact that Mr. Bouchard is running in Lac-Saint-Jean and that he would not be a good representative for Lac-Saint-Jean in Ottawa. What they need is a guy from Lac-Saint-Jean, not a guy from Meech Lake!

• (1500)

CREDITS ALLOTTED TO QUÉBEC—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is as follows, and I hope the guy from Lac-Saint-Jean will take care of Lac-Saint-Jean . . . I would like to know, and the Prime Minister failed to answer my question, it is just that $440 million means less than $100 million annually, while under the old agreement, Quebec was to receive $300 million annually. Is that what you call a strong Minister from Lac-Saint-Jean, someone who is going to make Quebec lose $200 million annually? Those are the kind of zeros we don't need!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member, I feel I must point out that Lucien Bouchard, a great Canadian and a great Quebecer, was born in Saint-Coeur-de-Marie in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean. He is a valid representative of that riding here in the House, and very shortly he will be able to speak with great pride about his roots here in the House.

I think the document that will be tabled tomorrow, and the project to be announced by the Minister tomorrow in Quebec City, with the collaboration of the Government of Quebec, are important to Quebec's economic development, especially that of the outlying regions that were seriously neglected by the Liberal Government. Mr. Speaker, in concluding I would like to say . . .

[English]

I want to tell the Hon. Member, who showed up unannounced yesterday in my office with a sack of something, harassing my receptionist, Betty Green, this. She told the Hon. Member to stick it in his ear, which is the best advice he has received in a long time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

WESTERN PROCUREMENT EXPENDITURES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. As the Minister is well aware, his Department spends approximately $1 billion a year on procurement in the west. However, this is approximately one-third of what the west deserves on a proportionate basis.

The western directorate of the Department indicated in Calgary that the Department is eager to add to its procurement list of expenditures. Can the new Minister indicate what steps he is prepared to take to ensure that this imbalance is corrected?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, in fairness, the west was ignored by previous Governments for some 20 years and there is a lot of catching up to do.

The policy and goal backed by this Government are to bring fairness and equal opportunity to all regions of Canada. Some progress has been made. The west received a 20 per cent increase in procurement orders from last year to this year. My colleagues and I, particularly the Minister responsible for western diversification, are working on building on that success. We hope to be making some pretty good announcements in the very near future so that we can meet our goal of bringing fairness and equality to all regions of this country.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise that given the time we will have to close off Question Period.

I have had a request from the Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester to address the House very briefly on a personal point of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

SETTLEMENT OF LIBEL SUIT BETWEEN OTTAWA CITIZEN AND MEMBER FOR CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER

Hon. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, on Friday of this week I will celebrate my 31st anniversary as a Member of Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: It therefore pleases me that today that I have had the only blot on my reputation as a Member of Parliament removed by The Ottawa Citizen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Coates: This has never been a partisan political issue. It has been a personal battle between myself and The Ottawa Citizen over the offensive words contained in a February 12th, 1985, article in that paper which states that by visiting a bar in Lahr, West Germany, I had posed a risk to my security and thus the nation's security. Those statements and others relating to security caused me to resign my portfolio for, in my opinion, I could not perform my responsibilities as Minister of National Defence with that cloud, through those words, hanging over my head.

In my view, then and today, that story severely damaged my reputation and libelled me. The fact it has taken three years and four months and many thousands of dollars on my part, and over $1 million on the part of The Ottawa Citizen by its own admission, to remove those offensive words indicates the awesome power of the media when they determine they are not going to admit to an obvious libel. The fact they would spend over $1 million to stay out of court on the main issue of the libel makes it absolutely obvious that they knew that by going to court they would have been found guilty of that libel.

However, what it has told me, and tells all Members of this House, is that the media, playing fast and loose with the reputations of Members of Parliament, can with their great wealth and awesome power prevent justice from being done. It is often said that justice delayed is justice denied. In my case that is certainly the fact.

If it had not been for my friends I could not have seen this matter through to this satisfactory conclusion. Without friends I would not have cleared my name. The Ottawa Citizen was prepared to use legal tactics to prolong the case by a further two years. That is the reason for the settlement. However, with the removal of the security implications, there is and was no story to write. I must thank Gerald Doucet for his assistance in putting forward an arrangement that allowed individual Canadians to contribute to my defence fund. The Government of Canada made no contribution to that fund.

Point of Order—Mr. Wilson

The Ottawa Citizen makes a point of stating there was no payment made by them to me in the settlement. I never sought financial gain from this libel action. I sought only to have my name cleared, and this has finally happened.

I must thank the Members of all Parties in this House, for they have been both kind and supportive of my efforts to clear my name. I must thank my family for their commitment throughout this ordeal, and it was an ordeal. I also must thank the many lawyers who gave me assistance in this libel action.

What we as Members of Parliament must now face is a concern for the ordinary Canadian who is libelled by the media. If I, with my friends, could not secure my day in court, what chance is there for the ordinary Canadian, if libelled, to secure his or her day in court? There cannot be two levels of justice in this nation, one for the rich and one for the not so rich. However, that in my view is what this libel action has been all about. It is not libel chill but the chilling impact of the awesome power of the media to do what they wish and, because of their wealth, prevent justice from being done.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank Ronald Mitton, the lawyer who handled my case in Nova Scotia from the beginning to the end. I am very relieved and pleased today to be standing in this House and being able to say to you, Sir, that I have cleared my name.

Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to express to all Hon. Members my appreciation for their courtesy in hearing the statement. I am sure that all of us can understand that on occasions like this there is perhaps justification for some flexibility in the usual application of the rules.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO MEMBER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House the Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) indicated that a certain taxpayer who is having some difficulties also had some difficulties with my office as his Member of Parliament. I want to make it clear in the House today that I am not his Member of Parliament, and he neither lives nor works in my riding. This person did contact my office. I believe that last Friday was the first time we heard from him, but I am not his Member of Parliament nor does he work in my riding.

FILM PRODUCTS IMPORTATION ACT

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-134, an Act respecting the importation into Canada of film and related products.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Minister shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADA LABOUR CODE AND PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-293, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code and the Public Service Staff Relations Act (essential services).

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, in this day and age Canadian grain producers, indeed Canadians generally, have a right to expect that facilities within the control of the Government of Canada will operate smoothly, efficiently, and without interruption. Indeed, it is not only an expectation but a necessity.

This Bill would prohibit strikes and lock-outs in Crown corporations, transportation and communication undertakings within the legislative jurisdiction of Parliament, and by designated employees and essential services under the Public Services Staff Relations Act. Binding conciliation would be substituted as the remedy in the event of labour disputes.

I urge Hon. Members to support this initiative.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FILM PRODUCTS IMPORTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-294, an Act respecting the importation into Canada of film and related products.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, the Bill I am introducing today with respect to film products is in fact the draft Bill produced by the Department of Communications before the trade deal. My Bill would, as would have the Government's Bill, limit foreign companies to importing films which they had either financed or to which they held world rights. This would allow Canadian film distributors to add a modest 12 per cent to their small share of our own market.

The Minister promised this licensing arrangement in her original February, 1987 announcement. The Government abandoned this policy at the trade deal bargaining table due to pressure from the United States film lobby.

This action shows the kind of humiliation Canadians are being subjected to as a result of this trade deal. The Government should be embarrassed that it has humiliated Canadians in this way. I urge Members of the House to support this Bill, the Government's original Bill, which is now my Private Members' Bill.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 on behalf of a large number of constituents who are concerned that the present Government does not have a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade deal with the United States.

They believe that the trade deal negotiated by the Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty since it removes the power of the Canadian Government to control effectively foreign ownership of our economy, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, or to equalize the opportunities between the regions of Canada.

Therefore, they are calling upon Parliament to dissolve now to enable the people of Canada an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

HOUSING TAX ALLOWANCE IN YELLOWKNIFE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions signed by the residents of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, who are extremely concerned that pursuant to Bill C-23 with regard to the northern tax benefit, which was passed on December 19, 1986, the Town of Yellowknife and the residents of Yellowknife have been discriminated against because their housing benefit is to be valued at what is stated fair market value. However, since there is a vacancy rate of zero per cent, and has been for over a decade in Yellowknife, it is very difficult to establish a fair market value.

Therefore, whereas no viable developed rental market exists in Yellowknife and no fair market value can be calculated, these petitioners call upon Parliament to treat Yellowknife the same as the remainder of the Northwest Territories for purposes of the tax treatment of housing benefits in prescribed areas.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present, according to Standing Order 106, a petition from a number of residents of Spadina and nearby ridings. The petitioners make two requests, one of which the Minister has promised to act upon but has not yet set a date. There has been no action on the other request.

The first request is that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages will be considered as members of the family class of immigrants and that married children and brothers and sisters in the assisted relative class would get 15 points instead of 10 points when assessed for immigration. That is the request upon which the Minister has promised to act but has not yet set a date.

The other request is with regard to the promise of the Minister of Justice two years ago to remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more in order that both groups would have equal right to sponsor parents of every age.

Whereas these important promises have not yet been fulfilled, the undersigned citizens and residents of Canada call upon this House of Commons to ensure that the Government fulfills its promises now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is also from a number of residents of Spadina and other ridings nearby who point out that the Conservative Government, without a mandate from the Canadian people, is proposing a free trade agreement with the United States which would undermine our sovereignty, hinder the economic development of Canada, and hinder the freedom of Canadian Governments to take economic measures, and has failed to obtain secure access to the American market. Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

• (1520)

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have great pleasure in presenting a petition on behalf of some Pentecostal assemblies. This petition contains more than 50 signatures, mostly by Canadians from the Turner Valley area.

Your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation when an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

As in duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that question No. 331 will be answered today.

NUCLEAR WASTE DISPOSAL

Question No. 331—Ms. McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood):

Has the Government prepared or commissioned any studies related to the decommissioning of the proposed nuclear submarines and, if so, has the Government identified any nuclear-disposal sites or estimated the costs associated with this decommissioning?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Preliminary assessments of costs and risks associated with decommissioning and nuclear waste disposal have been initiated. Costs of decommissioning have been evolved to Class D standards (departmental planning approval stage) as required for this phase of the project by Treasury Board. Discussions have been initiated with Atomic Energy of Canada Limited on the subject which indicate that viable technical solutions are available. It is a well-known fact that Canada is in the forefront of waste disposal technology.

Differences in the French and British reactors and fuels make detailed studies of decommissionning counterproductive prior to selection of a country of origin. To put the subject into perspective, the first of the nuclear powered submarines for the Canadian Navy is scheduled for completion in 1986. Assuming a 25 year life expectancy, that first submarine would be decommissioned about 2021. The time frame is such that, once the country of origin has been selected there will be adequate time for the most detailed and complete studies to examine the various methods employed today and those in the development phase with a view to selecting the safest solution.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call Motions for the Production of Papers, Nos. P-9 and P-10 in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). He evidently received notice and we had indications that he would be here. If there is no agent willing to act for him, we will let the matter drop and ask that Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all other Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

RULING BY SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: I am now ready to rule on the arguments given some days ago with respect to Bill C-130. In my view, they were excellent arguments.

I wish to advise Hon. Members that the Chair has reviewed all of the points of order relating to Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America. These points of order were raised by several Hon. Members on May 18, May 19, May 30, and again on June 1.

There has been a total of five and one half hours of procedural discussion on the various points raised and I hope that the House will bear with me, as this ruling is somewhat lengthy.

The arguments relate to five general themes: first, the acceptability of the Ways and Means motion relating to the Bill; second, the requirement for asking the House for leave to introduce a Bill based on the Ways and Means motion already adopted when a Royal Recommendation is attached to the Bill; third, the omnibus nature of the Bill; fourth, the fact that the title of the Bill does not list all the statutes to be amended by the Bill; and fifth, the issue that Bill C-130, the free trade Bill, seeks to amend certain Bills which have yet to be passed by the House or receive Royal Assent.

The Chair has decided to deal with the points of order from a thematic point of view for the sake of clarity. First, I will deal with the acceptability of the Ways and Means motion preceding the enabling legislation for the free trade agreement. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) made their interventions regarding this interesting procedural point on May 18 and May 19, 1988.

I should remind all Hon. Members and the public that is watching that Ways and Means is the procedure by which the House of Commons uses its time-honoured constitutional role in providing the Government of the day with the authority to raise revenue to meet national expenditures and to allow it to influence the economy.

[English]

The definition of the term "Ways and Means" can be found on page 99 of the Second Edition of the Précis of Procedure. It reads:

> "Ways and Means" refers to the process by which the government obtains the resources necessary to meet its expenses, usually by changing the levels of taxation by imposing new taxes, continuing expiring taxes or extending the incidence of taxes.

Further, to quote Speaker Jerome on page 785 of the House of Commons Journals of May 19, 1978:

> . . . a Ways and Means motion as the basis of a tax bill is the procedural device used to protect the financial initiative of the Crown.

Beauchesne's 5th Edition, paragraph 1 of Citation 516 refers to a Ways and Means motion as:

> a necessary preliminary to the imposition of a new tax, the continuation of an expiring tax, an increase in the rate of an existing tax or an extension of the incidence of a tax so as to include persons not already payers.

[English]

In Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, at page 821 is found a summary of items that are covered by a charge upon the people as follows:

> . . . (1) the imposition of taxation, including the increase in rate, or extension in incidence, of existing taxation, (2) the repeal or reduction of existing alleviations of taxation such as exemptions or drawbacks, (3) the delegation of taxing power within the United Kingdom . . .

In addition, Standing Order 84(1), (2), (10) and (11) provides the House with some direction, in that a Minister may table a Ways and Means motion at any time when such a motion is adopted without debate or amendment. Then a Bill based upon the motion's provisions may be introduced.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap argued that the Ways and Means motion relating to Bill C-130 was unnecessary. Careful scrutiny of the Minister's tabled motion, which is appended to the Votes and Proceedings of Wednesday, May 18, 1988, reveals the use of such words as "impose", "authorize the imposition", and "revise the provision respecting the imposition".

In the Speaker's view, these words can only be construed as coming under the general definition of a Ways and Means motion that I enunciated earlier.

The Hon. Member also quoted from Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, page 825, saying that motions, including provisions for the alleviation of taxation, are not subject to the rules of financial procedure. This is an interesting point. However, the reference is qualified by a particular practice used in the British Parliament with respect to their financial procedures. A separate Ways and Means motion is often not necessary in the British House, as the general Ways and Means motion attached to their finance Bill is usually sufficient.

The British House has a procedure quite distinct from ours. Their Ways and Means motions are debatable and amendable, ours are not. It is difficult to compare the British practice to ours in terms of process.

Because our procedure does not provide for debate or amendment with respect to the substance of the Ways and Means motion, it is the Minister who decides whether it is sufficiently detailed and clear for Members to understand. But Members have the option of voting against it.

As the Hon. Member for Kamloops-Shuswap has correctly indicated, examples can be found of Ways and Means motions that were both very brief and very detailed. The Chair said earlier that a reading of this motion does reveal the intention of the Minister to introduce a measure to impose or revise the imposition of certain charges upon the people resulting from the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America. Consequently, upon reviewing the Standing Orders and the Canadian precedents and practice, I am still of the opinion I expressed last May 18 when I stated, in part, at page 15588 of Hansard: "the Ways and Means motion of course is not dependent on the Chair accepting it." Under the orders, clearly, the Minister has the right to act.

The minister, in the tabling of his motion and in moving it for adoption, has followed the required procedure and has respected our practice.

• (1530)

There was another point raised by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap concerning the limits a Ways and Means motion imposes upon the Members at the committee stage. Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, at page 771, with further comments on pages 838 and 839, gives the general rule concerning amendments to Bills which are based upon Ways and Means motions, and it states:

> . . . bills may, of course, be amended, either by a reduction of the amount of incidence of a charge or by an increase in the stringency of the conditions or qualifications to which it is subjected.

This guideline is expanded upon further in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citations 522 to 534 inclusive. Nevertheless, this rule would appear to be no more restrictive than that used for other types of Bills in that all amendments to any Bill must be relevant and within the scope of the said Bill.

Furthermore, whether a bill is based upon a Ways and Means motion or not, it would clearly be out of order to raise a charge beyond the ceiling authorized by the Crown as set out in the Bill. I refer Hon. Members to citation 523 of Beauchesne's 5th edition.

[English]

I must, therefore, declare that the Ways and Means motion relating to Bill C-130 was tabled at the appropriate time and its adoption stands as the necessary prerequisite to the introduction of the said Bill. I wish again to thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap for raising this particular matter and for providing the opportunity to clarify the Ways and Means process.

I will now deal with the second major issue, the necessity of asking the House for leave to introduce Bill C-130 before it was first read on May 24, 1988.

On that day, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised a point of order to question the procedural acceptability of proceeding to the first reading motion of Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, before first asking the House for leave to introduce the Bill.

The Hon. Member argued that, even though Bill C-130 was based on a Ways and Means motion adopted by the House on May 19, the Government needed to ask for leave to introduce the Bill because of the Royal Recommendation accompanying it. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap concurred with the arguments raised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and pointed out that the precedents indicate that the motion for leave to introduce should be put to the House before the motion for first reading.

[English]

At that time the Chair allowed the objections of both Hon. Members and, because of the doubt I had concerning the procedure to be followed, I allowed the motion for leave to introduce the Bill to be put prior to putting the motion for first reading. I also undertook to consider the matter at length and to come back to the House with a reasoned comment on it with the intention of clarifying the complex and little understood matter. I think it would be appropriate at this time to give a detailed explanation of the procedure for the introduction of government Bills.

Generally, a Bill is introduced after a minimum of 48 hours notice. The introduction stage consists of putting to the House the question: "Is it the pleasure of the House that the Minister shall have leave, or permission, to introduce the Bill?" No debate or amendment is permitted at this stage, but a recorded division on the motion may be demanded. Permission to introduce the Bill having been given, the question for first reading and printing is then proposed, again without debate or amendment, and a recorded division may also be demanded on this motion.

The same procedure for introduction and first reading applies to what is referred to as a money Bill. This is a Bill which involves a direct expenditure of a certain sum of public money. Such a measure may not be introduced unless and until it is accompanied by the recommendation of Her Excellency the Governor General as required by Standing Order 86(2), which reads as follows:

> The message and recommendation of the Governor General in relation to any Bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost shall be printed on the Notice Paper and in the Votes and Proceedings when any such measure is to be introduced and the text of such recommendation shall be printed with or annexed to every such Bill.

The Royal Recommendation has the authority of the Governor General given to her Government to spend money. As described earlier, the preliminary step in the introduction of Bills proposing an increased or extended charge upon the taxpayer, but not proposing to spend money, is the adoption of a Ways and Means motion which then becomes, as stated in Standing Order 84(11), an order to bring in a Bill or Bills based on the provisions of any such motion. No debate or amendment is permitted on the motion to concur in a Ways and Means motion, but a recorded division may be demanded. Upon concurrence with the motion, a second motion for the first reading of the related Bill may then be put to the House without leave to introduce being asked of the House.

Our practice is quite clear. There is no need to ask the permission of the House to introduce such a Bill once the Ways and Means motion has been adopted.

In summary, there is one set of rules relating to ordinary Bills, with or without Royal Recommendations, which require a motion for leave and a motion for first reading. There is a second set of rules relating to Ways and Means Bills which do not contain spending provisions. Such Bills require concurrence in the Ways and Means motion followed immediately by the motion for first reading of the Bill based thereon.

The matter becomes a little more complicated when a Bill, based on a Ways and Means motion, also contains provisions relating to certain expenditures requiring the Royal Recommendation, which is the case of Bill C-130. Such a Bill requires, on the one hand, the adoption of a Ways and Means motion in order for the House to proceed to the next step. On the other hand, because it is accompanied by a Royal Recommendation, the minimum 48 hours' notice must be given in the usual manner and leave must be granted by the House before proceeding to the first reading. Such a case triggers a double procedure, which was the source of my hesitation with respect to Bill C-130, when the House was in fact asked twice to proceed with the introduction of the Bill, once through the acceptance of a Ways and Means motion on May 19 and a second time on May 24 through the regular motion requesting leave to introduce the Bill.

[Translation]

The Chair has examined the precedents and the practice since the Standing Orders relating to Ways and Means were changed in 1968, and has determined that the procedure which was eventually followed on May 24, at the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, was indeed the correct one.

Faced with a similar difficulty on January 18, 1984, Speaker Francis had the following to say, which is found on page 526 of the Commons Debates:

> ..if a Bill based on a Ways and Means motion with spending clauses requires a recommendation by His Excellency, such Bills, as has been done in the past, should be placed on the Notice Paper with the Recommendation and later transferred to the Order Paper under Routine Proceedings when it can be introduced in the House and given first reading under our usual practice.

[Translation]

I must repeat that the procedure followed on May 19 and on May 24, that is the vote on the Ways and Means motion, followed by a separate second vote on the introduction of the Bill, followed by a third vote on first reading, was in accordance with Speaker Francis' ruling and the usual practice of the House.

• (1540)

The Chair would like to remind the House that the complexity and even the necessity of the procedure relating to Ways and Means has often been questioned in the past, for example, by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization in its first report presented to the House on December 19, 1985, respecting the Canadian budgetary process. Among other things the committee recommended that Ways and Means motions be abolished, and that tax changes announced at a time outside the budgetary process should be given first reading when they are announced. In its wisdom and in light of the committee's recommendations, the House may well wish to consider further the issues of Ways and Means, in particular in the case of a taxation Bill accompanied by a Royal Recommendation for certain expenditures, the necessity to go through two different procedures for introduction in the House.

These occurrences are infrequent but, unless and until the House decides to clarify this, the Chair will continue, out of an abundance of caution, to follow both procedures and seek twice the permission of the House before proceeding to the first reading stage on such Bills, as was done with Bill C-130 on May 24, even though logically leave to introduce such a Bill appears to be a redundant question.

[Translation]

Again, I must thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Suswap for allowing the Chair to give this explanation which, I sincerely hope, has been helpful in better understanding the procedure related to bills based upon Ways and Means motions.

[English]

Next, I should like to deal with the arguments that relate to the omnibus nature of Bill C-130.

The Hon. Members for Windsor West, Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and Kamloops—Shuswap argued on May 30 that Bill C-130, because it seeks to amend 27 statutes, has gone, in the words of Speaker Lamoureux, "beyond what is acceptable from a strictly parliamentary standpoint".

The Hon. Member for Windsor West suggested that the ruling of Speaker Sauvé in 1982 relating to the energy security Bill should not be used as guidance because it was "so brief as to be peremptory". He also referred to the outcome of the 1982 crisis over the energy security Bill whereby the Government proposed a motion dividing the Bill into several pieces of legislation and the House concurred with that proposal. He suggested that the Chair use that decision of the House to establish a precedent of splitting a Bill by a ruling of the Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap argued a parallel between the decision to split a resolution during the flag debate, made by then Speaker Macnaughton on June 15, 1964, and the splitting of this Bill. He referred to Citation 415(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which clearly empowers the Speaker to divide a motion which contains "two or more distinct propositions".

In attempting to resolve the issues relating to this Bill and omnibus Bills generally, I believe it might be useful to attempt first to define such a Bill. There appears to be no specific definition in the procedural authorities. The most exact definition the Chair could find and agree with is that given by the Hon. Member for Windsor West, which is found at page 15880 of Hansard for May 30, 1988, where he said the following:

> The essential defence of an omnibus procedure is that the Bill in question, although it may seek to create or to amend many disparate statutes, in effect has one basic principle or purpose which ties together all the proposed enactments and thereby renders the Bill intelligible for parliamentary purposes.

The Chair is grateful to the Hon. Member for Windsor West for those words. They have indeed assisted me greatly in arriving at a decision. I believe that his definition will stand the test of time and be useful to the House and future chair occupants for years to come.

It might also be useful for the House to address the differences between the Energy Security Bill of 1982 and Bill C-130, now before the House.

[English]

In 1982, Bill C-94, an Act to implement the National Energy Program, was a Bill to enact, through several statutes, the policy of the then administration respecting national energy. The scope of that policy was set according to criteria and the parameters as determined by the Cabinet of the day. It met with considerable opposition because parts of the Bill or the policy were objectionable to many Members. The result of the ensuing crisis was the eventual splitting of the Bill by agreement of the House. I wish to underline that it was not by order of the Speaker.

Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United Sates of America, as was pointed out by the Minister of State and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) is based on an international treaty between Canada and the United States already made public, and comprises enabling legislation required to make the agreement binding in law. The purpose of the Bill is to enact and implement the agreement. That is the single unifying thread that links all the apparent disparate provisions contained in the Bill and becomes its only object.

Interestingly, Bill C-130 creates no new statutes. The Canada-U.S. free trade agreement, however broad in scope it may be, clearly becomes the four corners of Bill C-130, and as such defines the content and scope of the Bill. There are no doubt many principles in the free trade agreement and some that Hon. Members may differ with, but in the opinion of the Chair the main principle of Bill C-130 is to give force of law to a treaty signed by two sovereign nations.

I believe the House would agree that it is not the role of the Speaker to play broker between two national governments and to decide how best such an agreement might be put to the House. Where would a Speaker begin to divide such a Bill? Which parts of the agreement are independent of the others? At which point does the agreement dissolve if split into too many pieces?

Your Speaker was not at the negotiation table. I would suggest to the House that the Government, which bears the responsibility for the outcome of these negotiations, must equally retain the full responsibility for the manner in which the agreement is presented to the House.

I have stressed these particular questions because I want Hon. Members to know that as your Speaker I spent many hours considering very carefully whether some of the arguments pressed upon me could practically be done.

Canada is unique in its use of omnibus Bills. Although the United Kingdom does adopt such Bills, its legislative practices are significantly different from ours, not least of all because of a much stricter control of time for debate on Bills. In Australia the practice appears to go the other way, that is, its procedures permit the grouping of related Bills for debating and voting purposes. For these reasons the Canadian House of Commons cannot readily rely on precedent elsewhere on these matters. I know that I was urged to look elsewhere. I again want to assure Hon. Members that that indeed was done.

The date when omnibus Bills were first introduced is not certain, but the practice seems to go back as far as 1888 when a private Bill was introduced to confirm two different railway agreements. The first time that a question was raised concerning the reasons why the Government chose to amend three Acts in one Bill was on April 2, 1953.

Omnibus bills are introduced by the Government for a variety of reasons. One of the most obvious is to expedite the passage of legislation. Another, is to group all the statutory amendments required for the implementation of a policy under the same bill as was the case in 1982 on Bill C-94, the Energy Security Bill.

[English]

In contrast to the reasons given by the Government for using omnibus legislation, the Opposition has argued against the acceptability of certain omnibus Bills. Among the objections cited were the lack of relevancy between the various parts of the Bill, the debate at second reading not addressing a single principle, and the lack of opportunity at second reading to vote in favour of some parts and against other parts of the Bill.

Canadian practice regarding omnibus bills has grown significantly over the last forty years. Rulings by Speakers on the admissibility of motions and on points of order have clarified some of the problems associated with omnibus bills.

• (1550)

Members have often referred, as did the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, to their ancient privilege to vote on each separate proposition contained in a complicated question. The following passage from page 389 of May's Twentieth Edition is used to support this argument:

> The ancient rule that when a complicated question is proposed to the House, the House may order such question to be divided, has been variously interpreted at different periods . . . In 1888, however, the Speaker ruled that two propositions which were then before the House in one motion could be taken separately if any Member objected to their being taken together.
> Although this ruling does not appear to have been based on any previous decision, it has since remained unchallenged. A complicated question, however, can only be divided if each part is capable of standing on its own.

In Canadian practice, this concept is supported by a cornerstone ruling of Speaker Macnaughton on June 15, 1964, in which he concluded that the Canadian Speaker also has the authority to divide complicated motions. After examining precedents in Britain and Canada, he stated on pages 430 and 431 of the Journals:

> To summarize our procedure, it can be said that no clear precedent concerning the dividing of a question can be found in our annals . . . In other words, this would appear to be an unprovided case and ordinarily, under such circumstances, reference is made to current procedure in the British House.
> . . . Accordingly, it is my view that procedure which applies in this case is the current procedure used in the British House, one which perhaps has not been used too frequently but which nevertheless must be recognized, and if it is to be observed on this occasion it would appear that the question of the dividing of a complicated motion rests with the Chair.
> . . . I must come to the conclusion that the motion before the House contains two propositions and since strong objections have been made to the effect that these two propositions should not be considered together, it is my duty to divide them.

Speakers following Allan Macnaughton have made it clear that the Chair's authority to divide complicated questions only applies to substantive motions and does not apply to motions which relate to the progress of Bills. As Speaker Jerome explained on May 11, 1977, on page 5522 of Hansard:

> —there can be no doubt that a motion containing two or more substantive provisions is quite distinct from a procedural motion or a motion which is generally described as having only the effect of dealing with the progress of a Bill. The practice in respect of substantive motions has never been extended to those motions which relate to the progress of a Bill. The use of the omnibus amending Bill is well enshrined in our practices, and I really can find no reason to set aside my predecessor's very clear and sound reasoning, or the practice. Nor can I find any authority which would support an order of the Chair at this second reading stage that the Bill be divided.
> I should emphasize as well that the remedy sought by the Hon. Member is not to divide the Bill according to the separate statutes to be amended but by subject matter. Were that to be attempted, it would place before the Chair, it seems to me, questions of interpretation and responsibility for the drafting of an extremely complex order, which in my opinion the Chair ought not to attempt.

This conclusion had already been stated by Speaker Lamoureux on January 23, 1969, on page 617 of the Journals and was also echoed by Speaker Sauvé on June 20, 1983, on pages 26537-8 of Hansard.

In conclusion, the Canadian practice regarding the authority of the Chair to divide questions has been reserved solely for substantive motions which contain more than one proposition, where Members object to their being taken together, and the Chair has determined it is possible to divide the motion into more than one distinct proposition.

While some Members may feel that Speaker Sauvé's ruling in 1982 was too brief, one quote from that ruling seems to summarize the Chair's traditional position:

> For my part, in the present circumstances, there seems little point in offering yet another opinion on a question so well addressed by my distinguished predecessors. The matter is there for all to see. It may be that the House should accept rules or guidelines as to the form and content of omnibus Bills but in that case the House, not the Speaker, must make those rules.

The Chair therefore must rule that while Bill C-130 is an omnibus Bill, it has the single purpose of enacting an international agreement amending several statutes. As such, it conforms to our practice and should be allowed to proceed. Until the House adopts specific rules relating to omnibus Bills, the Chair's role is very limited and the Speaker should remain on the sidelines as debate proceeds and the House resolves the issue.

A further point raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap was the insufficiency of detail in the long title of the Bill because it does not list all of the statutes being amended therein. Hon. Members might wish to consult Dreidger's The Composition of Legislation Legislative Forms and Precedents for information on this point. This work may not have the same weight as Beauchesne or Erskine May, but it is a respected authority in legislative drafting. On pages 153 and 154 there is an explanation of Canadian practice as it relates to long titles, which clearly demonstrates that every Act being amended need not be mentioned in the title and that the Canadian practice has evolved differently from British practice by the use of generic language. If Hon. Members feel, however, that such a course is necessary, I suggest that they should proceed by way of amendment and not by a decision of the Speaker to reject the Bill. The Chair wonders if including all of the statutes in the title of the Bill would thus make it any more acceptable to those who oppose it.

Finally, the Chair will address the last point which was raised on Wednesday, June 1, 1988, by the Hon. Member for Windsor West. The Hon. Member stated that Bill C-130 now before the House, in certain of its clauses, proposed changes to two other Bills, Bill C-60, the Copyright Act, and Bill C-110, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal Act, neither of which, to date, has received Royal Assent, one of which Bill C-110, is at report stage. In response, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), referring to two decisions by Speaker Lamoureux, indicated that Bill C-130 was properly before the House and that the second reading motion could be put.

To begin, I should report to the House upon the status of the two Bills mentioned earlier.

Bill C-60, the Copyright Act, has been adopted by both the Senate and the House and is awaiting Royal Assent.

Bill C-110, the Canadian International Trade Tribunal Act, is on the Order Paper at report stage.

[English]

On April 20, 1970, Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled on a situation somewhat related to the present one involving a Bill which appeared to be dependent upon two other Bills then before the House. Speaker Lamoureux expressed sympathy for the Members' views in part, but at page 6048 of Hansard his comment reads as follows:

> —the debate is an interesting one and the argument is not without merit. If it has fault, it is that it might be premature—

Speaker Lamoureux then suggested that the House proceed with consideration of the Bills in question until the third reading stage, at which time procedural arguments should be brought forward if the circumstances warranted further consideration.

Less than one year later, Speaker Lamoureux was again faced with an identical situation which he resolved by stating, in part, on February 24, 1971, at page 3712 of Hansard:

> There is . . . nothing procedurally wrong in having before the House, at the same time, concurrent or related Bills which might be in contradiction with one another either because of the terms of the proposed legislation itself or in relation to proposed amendments.

Mr. Speaker Lamoureux ruled that the second reading motion of the Bill could proceed as the House was not giving final approval to the Bill.

On February 5, 1973, Mr. Deputy Speaker McCleave, in deciding upon a similar conflict concerning the third reading of the unemployment insurance Bill and an appropriation Bill, reviewed the history of events with regard to Bills amending Bills in the same session. Mr. Deputy Speaker McCleave made an interesting observation which I believe is applicable to our situation when he said, in part, on page 974 of Hansard:

> —(In 1958) bills to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Customs Tariff were being considered, and, while no decision was made by the Chair, it would be fair to suggest . . . that it was felt at that time that it was not a question of order but rather a matter of how best to achieve logical progression of companion or interdependent bills through the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker McCleave ruled that the debate should proceed on the third reading motion on the unemployment insurance Bill.

• (1600)

Having now reviewed with Honourable Members the available precedents, I must declare that the practice of one bill amending another bill still before the House or not yet given Royal Assent is an acceptable one.

[English]

However, if at third reading, circumstances exist whereby the Bill is amending another Bill still before the House, then I would be disposed to abide by Speaker Lamoureux's decision and hear further argument at that time.

There were other issues raised during the procedural debate on Bill C-130 that I will define as side issues but worthy of comment. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) expressed concern about the administrative provisions in the Bill which are not covered in the Ways and Means motion.

Standing Order 84(11) states that "The adoption of any Ways and Means motion shall be an order to bring in a Bill or Bills based on the provisions of any such motion." Several Speakers have made it clear that the critical words are "based on" and that it does not mean "identical to". On those occasions, the Speakers have cautioned the House that "the terms of the Ways and Means motion are a carefully prepared expression of the financial initiative of the Crown and frequent departures from them can only invite deterioration of that most important power". See Journals of December 18, 1974, p. 224.

[Translation]

The Honourable Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) referred to the opportunity to vote on the separate provisions of the Bill. I must tell him that he is anticipating both the committee and the report stage of the Bill and I am grateful to him for reminding both the House and the Minister of the Speaker's role at the Report Stage. The Honourable Member also suggested that a larger Legislative Committee ought to be appointed in relation to this Bill. That may indeed be desirable, but this is a matter clearly within the scope of the powers of the Striking Committee on which the Honourable Member sits.

[English]

Finally, some Hon. Members raised the issue of the constitutionality of Bill C-130. On this point, I can only refer Hon. Members to Citation 240 of Beauchesne's Fifth edition, which reads:

> The Speaker will not give a decision upon a constitutional question nor decide a question of law though the same may be raised on a point of order.

In conclusion, I wish to summarize my decision on the five major themes of procedure raised over the past several days in relation to Bill C-130:

1) the Ways and Means motion attached to the Bill is acceptable and in conformity with Canadian practice;

2) the vote on introduction of the Bill was proper but the Elections, Privileges and Procedure Committee might wish to review the whole matter of Ways and Means;

3) Bill C-130 is indeed an omnibus Bill—it meets the definition as stated by the Hon. Member for Windsor West in that it has a single purpose, while amending various statutes but without further guidance of the House and based on the practice to this day, it should be allowed to proceed without interference from the Chair;

4) the title of the Bill can be amended to be explicit or to reflect the statutes contained therein at the committee stage;

5) the matter of Bill C-130 amending Bills now before the House should be raised at third reading if the same situation still exists.

I do wish to thank all Hon. Members who contributed to the procedural discussion. No doubt, the Chair will be taxed further as this Bill makes its way through the House, but I am deeply indebted to all Members for the manner and the tone of the procedural discussion thus far. I hope Hon. Members will accept that the Chair and others have striven mightily to ensure that all of the important points that were raised have been met and dealt with in this ruling. I regret that it has taken time, but the arguments presented were taken very seriously.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for all Hon. Members when I say thank you to the Chair. It is not something we normally say, it is normally implied, but in this case we must be explicit and say that we appreciate the reasoned and thoughtful judgment which you have just delivered.

I appreciate also, as do all of us, that you have been well served by our advisers at the Table, Mr. Speaker. I think it is fair to say that the entire legislative process in this House has been well served by the contributions of my colleagues opposite and those of my Party on this important matter. It is only as we examine issues such as this that we improve the process.

I would also like to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your comments with respect to the tone of the debate. I compliment my colleagues opposite. We all had a good run at the procedure, and I think we all found some precedents we did not know were there and learned things through the process. I think it has been very helpful and I do compliment you, Sir.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition wish to thank you for your most thoughtful and reasoned ruling which has shed light on many previously obscure corners of parliamentary law. However, having listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Deputy Government House Leader about his commitment to the parliamentary process, I would ask him if he would act on that commitment by withdrawing the motion he has on the Order Paper to suspend the rules and the parliamentary process based on them in order to facilitate the Government's program which he has not been able to manage properly so far.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I too want to rise with my colleagues to say how much we appreciate not only the thoughtful insights you have provided us today as a result of your comments but also your willingness to hear representations from all sides of the House to such a degree that we would all feel that this particular issue has been well aired at this point. While we certainly accept your judgment, I simply say to my colleague, the Deputy House Leader for the Government, that this is simply the first hitter for the first inning.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can respond very briefly and again reiterate how much I appreciate the tone and the manner in which argument was given, and I want to say to some especially in this Chamber that the Chair took away those arguments knowing full well the very great importance that was placed upon them. I appreciate the comments that have been made.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Order. I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Government House,
Ottawa

June 8, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Bertha Wilson, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in her capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 8th day of June, 1988, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
S. Orr
for Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Friday, June 3, consideration of second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, last Friday when I had the floor on Bill C-55, I had just completed addressing what our Party feels are very significant objections we still have to the legislation as tabled in the response of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) on Friday morning in the House. At the time, there was concern on this side of the House that the Minister was trying to translate what were very minor modifications and amendments with which the Government agreed in the Senate report into very major amendments. She was trying to suggest that the response to Bill C-55 would make Bill C-55 a very different and radical piece of legislation. We rejected that on Friday. We take the same position today.

In resuming debate on Bill C-55, I want to point out that because the Minister had recently assumed the portfolio, there was an expectation that she would address the major hurdles which had faced her predecessors. The expectations on the part of non-governmental organizations were dealt a very significant blow when they heard the Government's response.

Before dealing with the Bill clause by clause or amendment by amendment, I want to place on the record some of the feelings of those non-governmental organizations. I want to point out the degree of frustration they are suffering because of the response from a Government which is obviously still very much opposed to compromising on some very fundamental objections. These objections go beyond philosophy. In fact, according to the legal experts who appeared before the committee, those objections will lie at the centre of the court challenges which may paralyze the legislation. That would really be a problem for the Government because the country was told not to worry, the Government was going to put a new system in place, only to have it tied up in the courts with a possible decision that it is in violation of the Charter or the Constitution.

The Canadian Council for Refugees said the Bill would essentially jeopardize the lives of refugees. B'nai Brith said, "You could not have come up with a Bill more open to legal challenges than if you had tried. This thing is going to be ensnarled in legal challenges for years to come under everything from the Charter of Rights, the Bill of Rights, Canadian law and international." The Coalition for A Just Refugee and Immigration Policy condemned the five amendments as "politicization of the refugee process and basically meaningless".

Amnesty International announced that its Canadian refugee section will not sit on the proposed consultative committee on refugees which the Minister has in mind. They do not want to participate in a process that is largely window-dressing because the power will really rest with the Cabinet and Government. A Toronto immigration lawyer says, "The Minister has given us nothing at all. It is just another slick packing job by the Government to mislead us again and make it look like there were concessions. If this Bill ever passes, genuine refugees will definitely be put at risk." In a letter to the Chairman of the Senate committee, the Canadian Council on Refugees said, "The Government confirms our worst fears that they will deport refugees without concern for their fate in the country to which they are sent."

That is but a small sampling of commentary from refugee groups and organizations not months ago, when we were studying it in committee, but over the last several days after the Minister tabled her response on the floor of the House of Commons.

In the time I have I would like to deal with the three areas we objected to in my speech on Friday. The first is the prescreening stage. The second is the safe country concept and the fact that the Government and the Cabinet will decide what is safe and who is going to be safe. The third is that the appeal process is very weak at best. I want to formulate the primary objections which are at the heart of the national debate which has been waged over the last number of months. In addition, the Government turned down a number of Senate amendments and I would like to spend some time on those because, while less important than the three principal objections, they are still of deep concern.

Amendment No. 1 deals with duty counsel. The problem was that if counsel is imposed on the claimant too soon, it could mean people that will lose the right to choose their own counsel. Alternatively, counsel might not be given enough to prepare for the hearing. In effect, the Senate wanted to give the claimant some reasonable time in which to choose legal counsel.

I agree that if there are concerns that an individual would take an inappropriate amount of time to choose counsel, then obviously that would be offensive and abusive. When you consider the lengthy backlog, obviously the process cannot be abused in that way. However, neither should the Government rush to remove the ability of a claimant to select counsel. I think that is fundamental to our system of law and justice. People are presumed innocent rather than guilty and they have the right, not the privilege, to choose counsel in order to defend that right.

We also think it is all the more important to try to offer reasonable time to a claimant to obtain counsel because the trauma a legitimate refugee is facing would be very much enhanced otherwise. There might be language barriers or other problems. Therefore, we believe that the amendment to provide reasonable time to a claimant to select counsel is reasonable. We regret that the Government chose not to accept the amendment and we plead with it to see the light and accept the amendment.

Amendment No. 2 deals with the possibility that claimants who did not make their claim at the port of entry would not be allowed to make the claim later on in the process. That situation might disenfranchise them of the right to have their claim heard. The Senate amendment suggested that if there were good grounds for not making the refugee claim at the very outset, perhaps because of a language barrier or some kind of trauma, or because the person did not understand the process, the person concerned would be allowed to continue that claim in the process even though it was not made at the very outset.

The Senate's amendment suggests that if there was a legitimate understanding in the opinion of the adjudicator, the person would be allowed a second chance. It is very important to emphasize the words "in the opinion of the adjudicator" because there is still flexibility. Notwithstanding the approval of the Senate's amendment, the adjudicator would still be able to disallow the individual from pursuing his or her claim.

The Government, for whatever reasons, thought that the person should not be allowed to continue in the process if the individual had not, at the very outset, indicated that he or she had a refugee claim to make. I reiterate to the Government that there are instances of legitimate misunderstandings, fears, apprehensions, or language barriers occurring at a point of entry. That should not preclude a legitimate refugee claimant from making that claim very close to the beginning of the process if not at the very beginning.

The Senate amendment allows the adjudicator to refuse that person if, in his or her opinion, he or she is abusing the system. That discretion is still in the hands of the adjudicator.

We believe that the Senate amendment would have been a good compromise. It would allow the refugee claimant to continue in the process because of the legitimate misunderstanding at the beginning. If the person was in fact abusing the system, the adjudicator would have the discretion to disallow him or her from proceeding any further.

We on this side of the House thought that that particular Senate amendment was a very progressive yet very firm compromise which the Government should have agreed to. It has not. We once again urge the Parliamentary Secretary to take that back to the Minister during this debate to determine whether the Government would be in a position to live with what we think is a very safe compromising amendment for both sides of the equation.

Amendment No. 3 has to do with the safe country concept. As I mentioned on Friday and at the outset of my remarks today, the safe country concept is a very questionable principle and foundation upon which the Government is building its entire refugee determination system. The problem is that there was no protection in Bill C-55 to ensure that safe countries would accept the people rather than send them on to other countries. The Government has made a change in this clause and is suggesting that it is enough protection for people to be returned to a so-called safe country and enjoy protection or entry into the refugee determination system there.

However, the words that the Government proposes to use say that the claimant would be allowed to return to that country if removed from Canada or would have the right to have the merits of his or her claim determined in that country. There are two problems with that amendment. The first is that the word "return" is weak in terms of ensuring the person's safety. We urged at committee stage and urge again today that rather than "return", "enter or admission" would be much much better for the safety of the claimant.

The second problem is that, in the alternative, to return to that country they would have the right to have the merits of their claims determined in that country. We believe that instead of "or" the word should be "and". If the Government is going to persist with either one, it should include an "and" if it is at all concerned about the safety of individuals rather than sending them into orbit.

We on this side of the House do not like the word "return" because it does not really say very much. In fact, many Governments in Europe have forcibly removed refugee claimants to a safe third country on the basis of the word "return". That is to say, many countries allow a person to return, but that does not mean the country will allow the person to enter the country legally or will admit the person legally. In many cases individuals who are returned to a particular country can be kept in a transit lounge until being removed.

That is why we believe that our previous amendments were correct. The word "return" is simply not good enough. It will not protect the individual from being orbited from one country to the next. We implore the Government, and in particular the Minister, to insist that the word "return" be changed to either "enter" or "admit".

At the end of my remarks on this particular aspect I will be moving an amendment to the Government's proposal to try to modify very significantly the word "return" and to suggest that the clause should be a tandem one, that it should provide for admission and entry into the refugee system in order that we do not send a person back to a country, the refugee system of which he or she does not have access to.

We would have hoped that the Government would have moved much more strongly in this area in terms of ensuring the person's return to a safe country. We on this side do not agree with the concept or principle of safe countries. However, if the Government wishes to include the safe country concept, we ask the Government, at the very least, to have a foolproof method for using the concept. The word "return" is, in our opinion, simply not good enough. We are seeking an amendment to that clause in order to ensure that a person will not be sent back and forth between countries but will have a safe country to return in which he or she will be able to enter the refugee system and receive a fair hearing.

Amendment No. 5 also deals with the concept of the safe country. The problem with Amendment 5, as reported by the Senate, is that in Bill C-55 the suggestion is made that the transit provision of a claimant in another country is only in reference to a person catching a connecting flight. That is to say, the Government has built into its legislation that we cannot consider a country to be safe if a person is only in transit there, connecting with another flight and coming to Canada. If asked which country you last came from, the country in which you changed flights would not be considered a safe country because you were simply in transit there.

The Senate objected to the fact that it only made reference to transportation via an air flight. The Senate wanted to amend that clause to indicate that any country in which you changed vehicles would not be considered a safe country. Whether you were changing planes, boats, trains, or any other form of transportation in a country, it would not be considered a safe country to which that person could be returned.

The Senate wanted to expand that clause not only to include connecting flights, but connections with other modes of transportation. Otherwise, there would be discrimination based on how one got to Canada. A person catching a connecting flight in West Germany could not be considered for return to that country. It should be taken into consideration that the refugee may be in a certain country temporarily to connect to other forms of transportation from that point to Canada, directly or indirectly.

We suggest that this amendment was in keeping with the original intention of the Government. Let us be very clear that if a person is only in transit and simply changing transit in a particular country, that country should not be considered as a safe country for return because that person would have no status there.

That is why we believe amendment No. 5 from the Senate was worth while. We hope the Government will change its mind and make it very clear that the question of transit and connections for transportation are not restricted to airplanes but take into account other transportation modes.

Amendment No. 7 also concerns the safe country concept and who determines that safe country list. The Senate, like Members on this side of the House, are concerned that the Cabinet is responsible for devising the safe country list. That is a flawed decision because we believe when a Cabinet is involved in the day to day domestic affairs of the country, when it must deal with such issues as free trade, day care, abortion and a multitude of other questions, it is impractical that the Cabinet would be able to satisfactorily decide what is a safe country and what is not.

We do not believe that the Cabinet will be able to make spur of the moment decisions about safe countries when various parts of the world face destabilizing events which create new unsafe places almost weekly. A Cabinet would not be able to turn around quickly and make those decisions that would obviously account for the sensitivities that are drawn into the equation of an entire refugee process.

We believe that the individual merits of refugee claims would be very much secondary to the political and diplomatic pressures that would be brought to bear on a federal Cabinet in deciding what countries should be on that safe country list. Nothing illustrates that better than the case of Mr. Santokh Singh who received a clean bill of health from both CSIS and the RCMP, and whose refugee claim was unanimously accepted by a three member refugee advisory committee. Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was able to intervene and overturn that decision based upon representations he had from the Indian Government and whatever other factors he brought into the equation. This is a test case of how the Cabinet would react in creating a safe country list.

The federal Cabinet obviously must protect our relations with our friends and allies. It would be asked to compromise itself with those countries by leaving a friendly country off the safe country list. I believe there is virtually no chance of those countries being left off a safe country list, and amendment No. 7 suggests that the refugee experts on the refugee board be allowed to create that list in an independent an impartial way, without being a target of political and diplomatic pressure. While we object to a safe country concept, if the Government is intent on having such a list we believe that it would be better to allow the refugee determination body to make the decision about safe countries and who will be safe in those countries. We regret that the Government refused to accept that amendment.

While it refuses such a suggestion on the one hand, it claims in public that it has changed the Bill to make that safe country concept workable so that a refugee returning there will be safe and will have a fair hearing. We are disturbed that the Government never attempted to define what it would regard as safe. For example, the United States of America is a friend and ally of Canada. No one disputes that fact. However, while being our friend and ally, it has a Central American policy that is at odds with ours because they will exclude and deport Central American refugees indiscriminately. Therefore, would the United States be on or off the safe country list? Would a Central American refugee who is coming from the United States be returned there, yes or no? Regretfully, we are not getting answers to those precise questions.

Another example is Great Britain. It is also a very close and honourable ally, as it should be. However, it is the immigration and refugee policy of Great Britain to deport indiscriminately individuals who we would not deport. A Tamil would be deported from Great Britain instantly. If we were to receive a refugee claimant who came from Great Britain, would that person be deported back to Britain? Yes or no?

For instance, if we were to receive a claimant who came from Great Britain, would that person be deported to Great Britain, yes or no? If a Tamil was deported to Great Britain, and if a Central American refugee was deported to the United States, could we as a country be satisfied to say we deported or sent those people to a "safe" country? We have sent them to gray countries. We have sent them to friendly countries. We have sent them to countries which are our allies. But are they honestly safe countries for those particular classes of refugees? If they are not, which in these two cases they are not, are we not really washing our hands as a country and placing in jeopardy these individuals who will become the ball in the pinball machine and slotted between different countries? That is the type of argument we have tried to make to this Government and to its Ministers in order to try to decipher what exactly is meant by "safe" and "unsafe" counties.

That is why we are worried and why the Senate is worried, why government Members sitting in the Senate are worried about amendment No. 7. They feel it would be better if a refugee panel of impartial experts was able to draft such a list rather than a Cabinet that is obviously politically interested and motivated in many of the decisions it undertakes on behalf of this country.

I reiterate that we have a great deal of concern about the Cabinet discharging that responsibility. We ask once again that the Government and the Minister rethink and re-evaluate the practicality and politics of having the Cabinet define what is a safe country.

If the Government is legitimately concerned with the refugee process, and with the individual merits of a particular case, it too would agree that the federal Cabinet as a forum is the wrong body with which to try to uphold the individual merits of refugee claimants. We believe quite strongly that those interests as a priority would be last on a long list of other priorities of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sitting at the table with his closest Ministers and most important advisers. Therefore, we concur in the Senate amendment. We hope in the debate that will ensue within the next number of days that the Government will change its mind and allow amendment No. 7.

Amendment No. 10 deals with the issue of appeal. Essentially, the problem with the current appeal is that it will go to the Federal Court, which has been acknowledged to be the wrong body, a body which is not particularly knowledgeable about the intricacies of the refugee law and phenomenon, by many legal experts before our standing and legislative committees, and that the current appeal will simply be on points of law. In other words, the appeal would not be considered if it is on points of fact or on new evidence.

Essentially, the Federal Court will only be able to rule if the previous process, namely, the refugee board, was fair from a procedural viewpoint but not from a substantive one. We on this side of the House have grave concerns with that kind of philosophy because decisions emanating from a refugee board will really be decisions that can legitimately dictate between life and death, between torture and no torture, between harassment and no harassment, between persecution and no persecution. We are not talking simply about a very trivial decision. We are talking about a decision with respect to the question of the life or death of an individual.

We are suggesting that if that is in fact what will be flowing from this decision-making process, we need an appeal structure which will be able to correct any human problems or fallacies which occur during that human process. We should err on the side of safety and caution rather than being sorry when it is too late. The amendment proposed by the Senate would have the force and authority to change the appeal system from law to points of fact and to allow new evidence to be brought at the stage of appeal.

When this Bill was before the legislative committee and at second and third reading, we offered a number of different formats in terms of whether there should be a written decision, whether there should be a one-member panel from the refugee board, or whether a group of two or three panelists would hear these appeals. We were flexible with respect to the actual structure of the appeal mechanism, but we wanted to guarantee a safeguard that the appeal mechanism, whatever its structure, would be based on points of fact and would permit new evidence in order to be as sure as possible that the individual would not be endangered by a very weak appeal system. That is what the Senate amendment tries to do, and the Government has rejected it. We were disheartened by the refusal of the Government to try to put in place the safest appeal mechanism as is humanly possible.

It should also be pointed out that currently only 2 per cent of all the cases flowing from refugee decisions which go before the Federal Court are successful. We believe there is a lesson there. When we basically have an appeal mechanism which disregards 98 per cent of the cases based on points of law, there is something wrong. I think we are not too late to try to change that trend, that kind of thinking. Our refugee determination system will only be as good, as solid and as foolproof as its appeal mechanism. Right now, with the proposals contained in Bill C-55, that appeal mechanism is very weak and many people are suggesting that it is the intention that there be less claimants allowed to go through the system. I do not want to believe that that is the case, but that is the perception. We in this country need to deal with those very real perceptions in the next several days as Parliament debates this very sensitive issue.

We ask the Government to reconsider its thinking on the appeal mechanism. I am not proposing this type of appeal on behalf of my Party simply to lengthen the process. No one in this Chamber wants to needlessly prolong or delay the procedure of refugee determination. What we are suggesting is not to lengthen the procedure, but to suggest that human mistakes will be made along the way, that these mistakes can have very serious consequences, and that we need an appeal mechanism which will act as a safety net in order to catch perhaps a few of those mistakes. I think it is better to have that kind of appeal mechanism than trying to live with a troubled conscience because our appeal system was so weak, we sent X number of people back to their original homelands only to face a fate none of us would like to face in our lifetimes. That is the rationale of the Senate's amendment. It is the rationale of our support for it. We hope that it will become the rationale of the Government and of the Minister of Immigration as well.

The eleventh amendment concerns the safe country concept. Essentially, the problem is that the Government is making the federal Cabinet the architect and the arbitrator of what is safe. With respect to this amendment, once again, the Senate in a different part of the Bill tried to remove from the Governor in Council the power to prescribe the safe country list. The Government did not necessarily refuse this amendment. What it did is it amended the Senate amendment. It did not necessarily agree with the principle that the Senate was putting forward. The Government response merely added the clause and the words to suggest that we are going to keep this at the federal Cabinet level but that now a country's record with respect to human rights will be taken into account.

We believe that is a very meaningless amendment. It states that these various records will be looked at, but it really does not guarantee that the political and diplomatic pressures will be removed because in the end the decision will be the Cabinet's. After everything is considered those political and diplomatic pressures in our estimation will still be so great that they will become the foremost priority, and certainly individual merits will be secondary.

That is why we disagree with the response of the Minister and the Government to the eleventh amendment. However, we realize that in the response of the Government it wishes to add a particular proviso suggesting that it will account for the human rights record of any particular country. I will also be making a further amendment to the Government's proposal at the end of my remarks today to suggest that if the Government really wants to have the Cabinet make those decisions, and if it will write in the legislation that it will account for human rights records, then the Cabinet must also consider an advisory list of safe countries as defined by the refugee board.

If the Government and the Minister want to maintain the decision-making process with respect to a safe country in Cabinet, then this amendment would not only force the Government or the Cabinet to consider the human rights record of any particular country but they would also take into account a safe country list as prescribed by refugee experts who are impartial and independent of those political and diplomatic pressures that flow into the Government of the day. We believe that this type of amendment will improve what is a bad situation.

Given the opportunity, as I said earlier, we would not permit the safe country concept in the Bill. However, if a safe country concept was really wanted then we would allow refugee experts of the board to make a determination in that respect. If the Government continues to insist that the Cabinet must take these decisions, then what we are trying to do at the eleventh hour is to provide greater safeguards around such a decision to try to give the individual merits of the claim the best chance possible. I will be moving such an amendment even though we disagree very fundamentally and strongly with the whole question of the safe country concept.

The final amendment is with respect to the Immigration Appeal Board. There is a clause in the Bill which suggests that all the members of the present Immigration Appeal Board would essentially lose their employment and would not be able to serve on the new refugee board. That has caused a very serious problem, a problem that has been dealt with by our courts. Lawyers have brought the case to court, suggesting that that particular clause offers a bias in our current system because it is like a cloud over the head of Immigration Appeal Board members who by this clause would not be automatically appointed to the new board. Therefore, those lawyers arguing on behalf of their clients suggest that this offers an unfair bias, and that Immigration Appeal Board personnel may be encouraged to try to side or rule on the side of the Government because of the fact that their tenure is in question.

What we are suggesting is that the Government has the right to appoint individuals who have refugee related expertise on this new refugee board, but we do not want the Immigration Appeal Board to continue in the manner that it has been going because it has been paralyzed from ruling constructively on many cases because of that ruling by the courts recently. The Senate suggested that that particular clause be removed in order to avoid the paralysis of the current Immigration Appeal Board which still has to continue to work until the new system is brought into place. In light of the court ruling in terms of a particular bias, it is incumbent upon the Government to remove that particular clause or to change it. That will remove the cloud that exists over the heads of members of the Immigration Appeal Board.

That is the position of the Liberal Party of Canada. We believe that the Government ought to go further in trying to understand the problems that are at the heart of this debate. It should try to come to grips with the situation that the safe country concept, the prescreening stage, the appeal mechanism, the question concerning duty counsel, the question concerning the Immigration Appeal Board and the single chance to make a claim are very large issues that are still unresolved. We believe there is a possible compromise that can be attained by the Government.

We are asking at this stage, on those fronts, for the Government to re-evaluate those positions, not to have a Minister of Immigration parade minor changes as major changes, and to refrain from suggesting that this is a different bill of goods, a different piece of legislation from that of her predecessors. It is not.

The quotations I referred to earlier in the House are testimony to the fact that almost on a unanimous basis the constituency in our country is still at odds with these very fundamental and significant principles. The legal community is still at odds with these same principles. It will challenge these principles on these grounds in the courts.

I am not suggesting that these should be used as a threat or as blackmail. I suggest that the Government of Canada and this Parliament has as its foremost obligation the drafting of legislation that is in keeping with our Constitution and Charter. If we draft legislation that does not respect the Constitution, every legal expert says that we will have a legal minefield. I believe that the onus is on the Government and Parliament to produce legislation that does not give rise to such perceptions and statements before this law is proclaimed to be the law of the country.

Therefore, this piece of legislation ought to be reworded so as to remove the possibility of legal challenges. If we as a Parliament are to be challenged on this legislation and if the court agrees with the appellant, then it will essentially strike down the very system the Government is proposing as a remedy to the current law.

I hear someone wants to enter the Chamber, Mr. Speaker. I will certainly take my place and resume my final comments at a later time.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1710)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber, the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-60, an Act to amend the Copyright Act and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof—Chapter No. 15.

Bill C-102, an Act to amend the Western Arctic (Inuvialuit) Claims Settlement Act—Chapter No. 16.

Bill C-113, an Act to promote the development and diversification of the economy of Western Canada, to establish the Department of Western Economic Diversification and to make consequential amendments to other Acts—Chapter No. 17.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is nice to have you and my colleagues back in the House. As I was explaining previously, many emotions are brought into a debate that deals with individuals who are seeking refugee status, whether here or anywhere else. Of course, many emotional arguments are brought into the equation, and we as a Parliament must deal with them. However, there are also the legal implications on which I ended my previous remarks. Those implications are very important because they deal not only with the legalities of the legislation but with a potential haemorrhaging of the confidence of all Canadians if this refugee system is to be struck down and found wanting constitutionally by one of our courts. Let us try to fathom the repercussions of such an event.

The questions of general immigration policy and refugee policy have been very much on the public mind because of what I believe has been a great deal of ineptitude on the part of this administration in trying to come to grips with the situation of a changing phenomenon. We are not castigating the Government about this because it only found out about this situation last week, last month or last year and did not have time to prepare proper legislation. For almost four years, we in the Official Opposition, my friends and colleagues in the New Democratic Party and colleagues on the government side have been urging the Government to reform the system. A parliamentary committee made a unanimous recommendation to the Government several years ago. We have raised questions and made statements. Non-governmental organizations have submitted recommendations and reports to the Government by the dozen.

When this Government took office, it received the report of Rabbi Gunther Plaut who was commissioned by the previous administration to evaluate the refugee phenomenon so that Canada could come to grips with it in a logical, fair and effective way. This Government says that it was the previous Government's fault because it did not do anything about this phenomenon, but that is false. The Government would want us to believe that we are still living with the phenomenon of the 1960s and the 1970s, but we are not.

In the 1960s and the 1970s, we sent visa officers to refugee camps to select a quota of applicants to bring back to this country. It was a clean, orderly and effective system and there were not too many problems with it. The reality of the 80s has changed dramatically. Millions upon millions of legitimate refugees are trying to find human decency on this planet of ours and are on the move. Many of them are no longer waiting in refugee camps, and are approaching various countries. Our challenge is to change the system as we go through this very significant transition from selecting refugees to trying to process them as they appear on our shores.

It is very obvious that we need a new system that is capable of meeting the challenge of the new phenomenon, not the old one. That is why for close to four years, we have tried to press the Government into action. We tried to do this before the situation was aggravated. Now we know how many are in the backlog. The multiplier effect has ensued from a course of inaction. A course of preventive remedies would certainly have helped keep the numbers to a manageable level.

That is water under the bridge. The Government did not act when we hoped it would and we are now debating this Bill. That is why we put forward the amendments we moved at second and third reading and in committee. That is why the Senators have moved amendments as well. I compliment the Senate committee composed of both Liberal and Conservative Senators who are equally concerned about the refugee phenomenon.

We have emotional arguments, we have legal arguments and we have the technical arguments of prescreening, counsel and appeal. There is a fourth argument that deals with our international reputation, what this will mean not only domestically but throughout the world. What will other countries read into this legislation and what impact will our stance have on that of the other countries of the world? That argument should not be underestimated.

We have to recognize that Canada itself cannot solve the refugee problem. Yes, we can do our part and be as progressive as possible or strive to be, but Canada should not and cannot accept the 10 million to 15 million refugees who are trying to find peace of mind and safety of body somewhere on the globe. Therefore, I am pointing to the fact that the refugee problem is an international one. Therefore, the refugee solution must be an international solution.

What are we doing to achieve an international solution through this legislation? I believe we are doing nothing, because to date, we have enjoyed a tradition among our partners on the globe, our international friends, of being a leader, not a follower. We are a leader when it comes to trying to come to grips with the very traumatic human dilemma of persecution in whatever shape it comes.

The Government is saying is that the way to have an efficient system is by turning people away. Yet what will happen if the U.S., Sweden, Great Britain, France, Norway, Holland, or whatever country you choose, says Canada has been a leader in this area and if they can pass this kind of legislation, then why can't we? Or, why shouldn't we? I ask my colleagues in all honesty to ask themselves what would happen if those countries move to a safe country concept or prescreening? Every country will have a safe country list. Every one of those lists will be compromised by political and diplomatic pressure. What you will then have is every country washing its hands of the problem. One country will say go to Canada. Canada says go to Germany. Germany says go to France. France says go to Japan. The world will then be completely safe according to the safe country lists. I predict that will happen.

Canada is going to be progressive but we are saying they have to be progressive, too. Canada is going to do its share and they have to do their share as well. Canada will take a satisfactory number under a satisfactory system but others must have the same. That should be our attitude. It should not be that we are going to try and close it down and so should they. If we have an international corridor of locked doors, will that help the situation? Will that make a refugee's life less desperate or more desperate?

If you were a legitimate refugee facing persecution and one country said you cannot come in, and the next country said you cannot come in, and the third country says you cannot come in, that will give rise to the sleazy operators who profit from human misery while trying to get people in the back door rather than through the front door. That kind of restrictive, let us close the door and wash our hands of the situation mentality, will get us in greater trouble. Maybe not today. Maybe not tomorrow. However, some day we will be in trouble.

We should be saying to refugee claimants that we have a good system. We have the expertise to make sure they are legitimate. Use that opportunity well and do not try and get in our country through the back door. That is the positive, courageous message and it will encourage respect for the law.

It is with those thoughts in mind that we bring to this debate a sense of concern that hopefully will be translated into a compromise by a new Minister. We hope she will go beyond the inflexibility demonstrated by her predecessors and sit down and ask if there is a way that the Government can be assured of an orderly process and satisfy those who champion the cause of refugees that refugees will have a fair chance. Is there a way to bring these two so far irreconcilable groups together? We believe there is. We believe it is possible. We should believe it is probable. We have met much greater and more difficult challenges than that. We can overcome the gap that exists between the Government and public opinion. We need to do that because we are talking about human decency. We are talking about people who do not have a place to stand.

Do you think those people would want to be on the move if they had a choice? Do you think they would pack their bags and jump on a plane if they had a choice? Do you think they would try to abuse the compassion of a country because they want to? Of course not. If the world were perfect there would be no immigrants or refugees. However, this is the international reality and I am asking the Government to lead the march toward an international solution. I am asking it not to run from it and, more important, not to encourage a dismantling of the political will and courage to deal with it.

Therefore, in concluding my remarks because I want to hear the remarks of my friend, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), I will move two amendments. The first amendment, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) is:

> That the proposed motion to amend the Senate Amendment 3 to Clause 48.01(1)b of Bill C-55 be amended as follows:
> "strike out lines 26 to 31 on page 14, and substitute the following:
> ant's habitual residence,
> "(i) that has been prescribed as a country that complies with Article 33 of the Convention either universally or with respect to persons of a specified class of persons of which the claimant is a member, and
> (ii) those laws or practices provide that all claimants or claimants of a particular class of persons of which the claimant is a member would be admitted to that country, if removed from Canada, and would have the right to have the merits of their claims determined in that country.

The second, seconded by the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice is:

> That the proposed motion to amend the Senate Amendment 11 to Clause 98.01(1)b of Bill C-55 be amended as follows:
> "strike out lines 25 to 27, on page 55, and substitute the following:
> "tion, the country's policies and practices with respect to Convention refugee claims and the country's record with respect to human rights, and in regard to an advisory list of safe countries as drafted and defined by the Convention Refugee Determination Division;"

I submit these amendments in the hope that the Government will give them due consideration.

• (1730)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The Chair will reserve decision on the acceptability of these amendments. I might note that the Member is not allowed to move two amendments at the same time. We will get back to the Hon. Member at a later date.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been agreement to grant the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) an extra 10 minutes, therefore, a full 30 minutes. I ask you not to see the clock at the end of 20 minutes but rather to grant him a full 30 minutes for his remarks.

I would also like to serve notice that it is our intention to ask for unanimous consent regarding five amendments to the message. The critics have received notice of that and I think it is their intention to give unanimous consent. I simply want to serve notice to you, Sir.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we accept this as notice. We appreciate the generosity of the Parliamentary Secretary and that of the House. Just to make it clear, the request of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is to have a few minutes more than 20, up to 30 minutes, if necessary, to complete his remarks. That is the understanding.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank Hon. Members of the House for their courtesy in allowing me a little extra time to speak on this, a very large and difficult subject. I would also like to ask the indulgence of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to give me a copy of his amendment because I may wish to move a subamendment to it after I have seen the actual wording.

This Bill has now been before the House for 11 months. During that time there has been a surprising amount of opposition to it registered by Canadians from coast to coast. Church groups, union groups, refugee aid groups which have been working very closely with this Government and the preceding Government to help sponsor and settle refugees, and thousands of other people have registered their great dissatisfaction with Bill C-55.

Their main concern, albeit not their only concern, is that it denied the right of an oral hearing as required, not only by the sense of justice of many Canadians, but in law by the Supreme Court decision in the Singh case three years ago. It also gives almost no right of appeal. That again offends, not only the sense of justice of Canadians but the international sense of justice. It offends the convention on refugees which we signed two decades ago.

The Senate amendments made some small improvements in this matter but most of those were turned down by the Minister. I doubt that the Senate's amendments by themselves would have been enough. However, together with a little further amendment they may have made this Bill more tolerable. However, amendments on so-called safe countries, oral hearings, right to counsel, a fair chance for refugees to state their case or make their declarations at the beginning, have all been turned down by the Minister, which is very unfortunate.

I believe that Canadians, represented strongly and repeatedly by groups such as the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, and so on, will continue to fight against this unjust law on the ground that it greatly weakens our policy for aiding refugees. It is said to be intended to help refugees, but that is not the way it is seen by the great majority of people in this country who have been engaged in the practical day-to-day work of helping refugees.

Part of the purpose of our Immigration Act is to carry out our international obligations for humanitarian work, such as the helping of refugees. The United Nations handbook on refugees, pursuant to the convention relating to the status of refugees which we signed 20 years ago, says:

> No Contracting State shall expel or return—

And for certainty it uses the French word refouler—

> —a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion.

The Minister's response, following the action of her predecessors denies that principle which is the heart of the convention relating to the status of refugees.

I want to take a few minutes to indicate why, in my opinion, we are in such a bind over this. The great majority of people in this country, so far as they have concerned themselves with refugees at all, mainly by helping, are opposed to the Minister and the Government being adamant in their refusal to listen to the constitutional lawyers, the Canadian Bar Association made up of lawyers in private practice whom the Government professes to respect, and many other public groups.

It seems to me that this convention on refugees arose out of the experience in the years following World War II when there were many displaced persons, as we sometimes called them, mainly in Europe. Out of that we developed principles and practices for the protection of refugees. These were mostly refugees left over from the chaos of World War II, many from Eastern or Central Europe. Over a period of five or six years after the war, a principle emerged of defending the rights of the individual refugee against his own government and giving him the right to claim protection from another government. This was done by many thousands of people, especially those coming from Eastern Europe to Western Europe or North America.

The Governments which led in establishing this convention for refugees on the basis of the rights of the individual are now denying it, as the Minister is denying it by her response here. Between the late 1940s and early 1950s and the 1980s the world has changed very considerably with regard to refugees and that affects how people see this law.

We now have growing conflict between the countries which are members of NATO, and one or two others, and the countries which were formerly colonies of the members of NATO. These colonies were used for the vast enrichment of the peoples of the countries which now make up NATO. They were sources of cheap raw materials, cheap labour, and immense debt repayment. Somehow or other the action of Francis Drake and his followers and the Spaniards and others in going to those countries and stealing gold, silver, wood, and other kinds of wealth, is now interpreted that those countries owe us hundreds of billions of dollars.

The governments must squeeze their people in order to repay at least the interest payments. Therefore, there is conflict. Our countries take advantage of that by selling arms to them. We are not the only ones selling arms to them, but we sure make a big business of it. Therefore, the conflicts that have been generated in these former colonies of non white people formerly belonging to the countries who are members of NATO have generated refugees, of which there are several million.

Some of these so-called refugees are not refugees in the technical sense established in Europe, refugees from persecution, some of them are refugees from famine. The famine may have been caused by natural causes or by bad farming practices introduced by the NATO countries into places like Africa, destroying the land, but it is estimated that there are about 15 million refugees of both kinds, mainly in Africa.

It is estimated that about 5 per cent, approximately 750,000 of those refugees, are interested in getting into the developed countries, whether in Europe or North America. That is to say, it amounts to 2 per cent of the population of the NATO countries. These are the countries that have benefited from the practices that created the conditions that produced those refugees. Some of them apparently would like to come and enjoy the fruits of what we took from their forbears.

The problem is not insuperable. It could be addressed. Seven hundred and fifty thousand refugees shared among 15 or 20 countries according to population, size of the country and resources, would mean perhaps an average of 40,000 or 50,000 refugees per country. It is not an insuperable problem but so far our country and other countries have been reluctant to address it. Therefore, we have the problem of the present legislation before us.

We have the problems of the response of the Minister, which is mainly aimed at keeping refugee claimants out. In fact, as is well known, many of the refugee claimants who are kept out will be genuine refugees. They will be turned away and we do not know what will happen to them. We do not even know which are the genuine refugees because we will be violating our international commitment by refusing to even examine their claim.

This is what is shown in the Minister's response to the Senate amendments. The main fault of Bill C-55 is that it denies the right of oral hearings which was nailed down three years ago by the Supreme Court in the Singh decision. The chief denial of that is in the so-called safe country clause. Again, that principle is that the individual has a certain right that even encroaches in a small way on the sovereignty of the state. That is reflected in amendment No. 3 from the Senate.

The amendment states that the person can be sent back to this other country in which he spent some time if that country is willing to receive the claimant if removed from Canada, or in which the claimant has the right to have the merits of the claim determined. The fact is that it will not work.

Even under the Senate's amendment it is not clear what quality of refugee rights determination that country will give. Furthermore, by saying that a country is willing to receive a claimant or choose to give him the right of refugee determination, it is not clear which he will have, and it is very likely that if they interpret the word "receive" in a way that allows him simply to come into the airport and be bounced out on the next plane to some other country, he will not have the option of having his refugee rights determined.

Therefore, if we send him away on those terms to Germany, or if we send a Salvadoran to the United States on those terms, we are endangering his life and freedom to the extent that the United States, which recognizes 85 per cent of Nicaraguans as refugees, recognizes only 3 per cent of Salvadorans as refugees and there would be a very great danger that a Salvadoran from Canada to the United States would be deported by the U.S. to the country from which many of them have a legitimate reason to flee.

Unfortunately, the Minister has worsened the amendment by using the term "return". The Minister's preferred wording is: "... of which the claimant would be allowed to return to that country if removed from Canada or would have the right to have the merits of his claim determined in that country". The word return in practice in Europe means, more clearly than receive, even, that they are free to bounce him out again.

We need a clause that amends it by replacing the word "return" with the word "admit", which means with the right to stay in our practice in law. We would have to apply that as a standard to whatever country to which we would send him. Not only should we replace the word "or" with "and", but also add to the clause and to the words that were moved in the amendment by the Member for York West the words "according to principles of fundamental justice". In other words, they would have the right to have the merits of their claims determined in that country according to the principles of fundamental justice. I will be offering an amendment to that effect at the end of my remarks.

This was pointed out to us a year ago by the United Nations High Commission for Refugees in an aide memoire that was made available to us through unknown channels, but was acknowledged to be a bona fide aide memoire of the United Nations High Commission.

They say that Section 48.1(1)(b), as presently drafted, does not allow the individual asylum seeker, or refugee, to invoke personal circumstances militating against return to a "safe" country, nor does it predicate return on the assurance of readmission and determination of his or her claim to refugee status.

Neither the issue of a convention travel document nor the listing of a safe country should exclude the possibility that an individual, because of his or her particular circumstances, has good reason to fear return to another country.

The United Nations High Commission for Refugees believes that case by case determination of such issues is essential and recommends that these provisions be reconsidered in the light of the general principles stated above.

The reconsideration was unfortunately ineffectual and there is great danger that the sort of practice reflected by the Minister's decision and which is spreading among the European countries, as the Member for York West warned us, may create the situation which was pointed out by Philip Rudge last year, Secretary of the European Consultation on Refugees and Exiles, when he said: "Increasingly, refugees are presented not as people in need of help, but as people who constitute a threat to the order of things; they do not have problems, they are the problem". That is the attitude that Philip Rudge is worried is growing in his own country of Britain and in Europe. To confirm that these countries will not be willing to accept the refugees Canada rejects, without having examined their case, we have a statement from the United States Government. Its spokesman, Duke Austin, said:

> Once an illegal alien is admitted by Canada for an inquiry, he has no right to re-enter the United States. You can't return illegal aliens back to a country where they were previously illegal. You deport them to their homeland. We wouldn't take them back.

In other words, what we are finding is that the safe country system will just not work. In fact, according to a study undertaken by the Library of Parliament, authored by Margaret Young, the researcher for the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration there is no workable basis for sending a person to another country with protection of his potential refugee status unless there are signed agreements. We were assured a year ago that agreements would be signed. I understand there have been many attempts to have agreements signed with the United States and with countries of western Europe, but there are no agreements. Therefore, as was pointed out in the study of the Library of Parliament, the system of safe country, the system of removing the majority of refugee claimants from our door to and returning them to the country they were spending some time in before, not the country they fled, the country where they had a temporary stay—perhaps they asked for refugee status, perhaps they did not. They were given permanent stay as is the case with most—is simply not going to work.

That is the major fault in this Bill. There are others as well. For example, the second major fault is that the right of appeal is denied almost entirely. It is denied through the rules the Senate attempted to amend somewhat. But in fact the Minister has cut out practically all of the rules the Senate tried to change, that is, all the amendments the Senate tried to make.

The Hon. Member for York West having had unlimited time to handle this matter, has gone into detail and I will not repeat the points he made. I will simply summarize by saying that no reasonable time has been given to a claimant to find a counsel of his own choice. No reasonable time has been given to a claimant to make his declaration. He has to make it at the very beginning, the first question asked, or else forever hold his peace. The irony is that that rule will not hurt the phoneys. It will not hurt the fake refugee claimants because they would have been coached on what to say.

If a person has perhaps been tortured by uniformed officers in El Salvador, and escapes through El Salvador, through Mexico, through the United States, and eventually months and even years later winds up in Canada, and meets uniformed officers who ask him that question, because he is a genuine refugee with a genuine well-founded fear of persecution, he might be afraid or confused so that he would not give the right answer the first time. This rule will throw out the baby and keep the bath water. It will exclude more refugees and allow in more phoney refugees who have been coached in giving a false answer.

A letter has been sent to the Senate, with copies to interested parties, by people representing the refugee advocacy groups including the Canadian Council for Refugees, Carter Hoppe, the Ontario Chairman of the Canadian Bar Association in his personal capacity, Michael Schelew, spokesperson on refugee affairs for the Canadian section of Amnesty International, Lorne Waldman for the Coalition of a Just Refugee and Immigration policy. The letter points out that these rejections of the Senate amendments by the Minister are unacceptable. It urges the Senate to reject the Bills as long as the Minister is unwilling to have the Bills amended in accordance with Canadian and international principles of justice.

We also have a resolution from the Canadian Council for Refugees which wholeheartedly supports the court action that will be launched by the Canadian Council of Churches. The Canadian Council of Churches has undertaken to raise $300,000 to fight this Bill because it violates the Charter principle No. 7 of Security of Person. It will support that action by providing its fund-raising mailing list to the Canadian Council of Churches, by promoting the campaign among its members, and by forming its own committee to develop and implement action. The Canadian Council for Refugees is firmly convinced that these Bills will jeopardize the lives of refugees coming to Canada. The membership of the Canadian Council for Refugees is very worried that these Bills might jeopardize the lives of refugees in Canada currently in the claims process. The Minister has made a very unfortunate decision to simply reiterate the false policy that was carried on by her predecessor.

It is a policy that already clearly is biased politically because over the last several years, Canada has brought in far more refugees, including the designated classes, from communist dominated countries than it has allowed in from countries dominated by right wing or fascist governments.

Figures from the Government's own Department clearly show that bias. This law will increase that bias because all the restrictions the Minister is placing do not hinder the people of the designated classes from eastern Europe. They only hinder the people who come to our shores seeking refugee status. Therefore, in closing, I wish to say two things. It would be practical if this Government would withdraw this Bill, at least for the purpose of allowing further consultation for amendment, because I warn, not out of any decision of mine, but as a matter of public record, that there are Canadians who have organized to oppose this Bill which they regard as fundamentally unjust.

The Bill will be paralysed by court challenges if it is proclaimed into law and attempted to be put into practice. At the very least, I would ask that one amendment be accepted, and that is the amendment about which I spoke previously. It is a subamendment to the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West. I would add to the end of his amendment the words "according to the principles of fundamental justice". I do not have it typed out because I had to find out the wording of the amendment. I am prepared to write it out and give it to the Clerk immediately because it is a very simple matter.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), that the last clause would read that these people would have the right to have the merits of their claims determined in that country "according to the principles of fundamental justice."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): The Chair will reserve on the admissibility of the Hon. Member's subamendment.

When the House next engages itself on this debate, the Hon. Member will be entitled to 10 minutes of questions and comments.

It being after 6 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

PRESENTATION OF FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to its order of reference dated January 29, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has considered the report of the Task Force on Broadcasting Policy and has the honour of presenting its fifteenth report to the House in both official languages.

This unanimous report presents the committee's findings and recommendations on a comprehensive range of broadcasting policy issues, including public and private radio and television, the distribution of broadcasting signals and such matters as the ownership of broadcasting undertakings and copyright issues in broadcasting. The report emphasizes that the broadcasting system must address the needs and interests of all regions of Canada, of French and English speaking Canadians, and of native Canadians and other groups in society. Our report stresses the importance of Canadian programming and makes recommendations for measures that are designed to encourage more and better choices for Canadians. This report builds on the committee's earlier fifth and sixth reports which dealt primarily with the legislative provisions for a new Broadcasting Act.

On behalf of the members of our committee, I wish to thank all of our witnesses for their contributions. In preparing this report, the committee held hearings in 18 cities across Canada, received 234 oral presentations and 170 briefs.

I want to take this opportunity to thank Members of all three parties for the work that went into the drafting of this unanimous report, and all those who provided invaluable assistance. The Committee requests the Government table a comprehensive response to this report, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2).

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I did not vote.

An Hon. Member: We noticed!

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes, I know you noticed. My dear friend noticed, and others may have noticed, and the reason is very simple. We have already proclaimed Mr. Wallenberg an honorary Canadian citizen. I participated in the debate. It was a motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille), and of the the Hon. Member for Laval (Mr. Ricard), and it was voted by this House. It was sent to the Senate. Approval was not given the first time. The Senate was adjourned and it was called back urgently the same day to proclaim Mr. Raoul Wallenberg an honorary Canadian citizen.

This country has two honorary Canadian citizens. I say this for those who like history. I do not understand why I should vote a second time. I have already voted for it, and I do not understand why all of you voted.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I do not want to argue against my friend, who has been here a lot longer than I have, but I want to make two points. Any Hon. Member has the right to introduce a Private Member's Bill in this House. I want to remind the House that when this came before the House in the past there were two Private Member's Bills which were both withdrawn and replaced by a motion. The motion was passed in this House and it was also passed in the other place.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, a motion itself does not have any legal effect. This Bill would have legal effect if it were to pass both the House of Commons and the other place. For that reason, I think it is appropriate on this issue. We are dealing with Raoul Wallenberg, and in order to send a very clear signal to the Soviet Union, I think it is appropriate that a standing vote in this House of Commons be taken.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, they say that a great man, if he wants to be recognized as such, should not hesitate to correct himself. So I stand by what I said, subject to correcting myself tomorrow and apologizing to the House if I made an error.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme).

[English]

Mr. Prud'homme: You are very kind, Mr. Speaker, but I am chairing a legislative committee at the moment, and I owe that to Your Honour. I am returning there. I do not want a debate. I just said that if it were the first time, I would have voted for the Bill, but I have already voted for it. It was the subject of unbelievable debate in the Senate. So I stand to be corrected tomorrow, but I have already given my consent to making him an honorary Canadian citizen, because he was a great man. That was my speech. We tried to pass that so fast in the House that nobody knew who was Raoul Wallenberg. Would you like me to make an hour's speech on how great he was?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend has made the point. It is very dangerous to play politics with something as serious as the efforts of Raoul Wallenberg. The actions of the New Democratic Party are completely irresponsible. The NDP House Leader's own Members denied him the right to introduce this Bill and forced a vote.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that this was done only so as to delay procedural debate on a motion to extend the sittings. It is one thing to say to Canadians, "We do not want to sit in to the summer"; it is very much another thing to say, "we do not want to sit in June".

Mr. Rodriguez: Oh, sit down!

Mr. Lewis: This is completely irresponsible. My friend should talk to his own Members and explain to them that it is the right of every Member to introduce his or her own Bill.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: May I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Mr. Rodriguez: No.

Mr. Blaikie: No.

Mr. Speaker: I do not have consent to dispense with the bells and, as a consequence, I will have to make the usual statement and say, call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion adopted.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but perhaps not everyone was able to hear what was said by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). Perhaps he could now proceed.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I went all over the place, to the Senate, to my office and to the House of Commons, and the fact is that on December 9, 1985, there was a big debate in the House during Private Members' Business. There was a bill and a motion by two Members, Mr. Ricard and Mr. de Corneille.

The two were merged, there was a debate, and at about 5.40 p.m., before the 6.00 p.m. deadline, we decided we would ask to have Raoul Wallenberg made an honorary citizen. The next day, on December 10, the Senate was sitting, and it received a message from the House of Commons, asking that Raoul Wallenberg be made an honorary citizen of Canada.

It seems that at the time, on December 10, 1985, one senator refused his consent, so they decided to postpone the debate on Raoul Wallenberg, and the Senate adjourned.

[English]

The Senate adjourned on December 10, 1985, as shown in Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate No. 98. I do not know what happened that day, but later on that afternoon, the Speaker of the Senate was convinced that there was an urgent matter and he recalled the Senate, and that is shown in Minutes of the Proceedings of the Senate No. 99. It is known as the second distinct sitting. It is unique in the sitting of the Senate.

What did they discuss? A message from the House of Commons humbly requesting the Senate to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen, on a motion of the Hon. Senator Nurgitz, seconded by the Hon. Senator Marsden, that the Senate do agree with the House of Commons in the said resolution by filling in the blank space, et cetera, and that the message be sent to the House of Commons to acquaint that House accordingly. Ever since then, Raoul Wallenberg, a Swedish diplomat who helped to save so many thousands of Hungarian Jews, was proclaimed an honorary citizen of this country.

I spoke on that Bill while others were trying to rush it through the House because I thought Canadians should know who Raoul Wallenberg was. If I made a mistake, it was only one. I said there are two honorary Canadian citizens. That is not true. I made a mistake. In the U.S. there are two honorary citizens, Sir Winston Churchill and Raoul Wallenberg. Why was Raoul Wallenberg chosen in the U.S? Because a Hungarian person of Jewish faith was saved by Raoul Wallenberg. He later on became a Congressman and for years and years begged his colleagues to proclaim Raoul Wallenberg an honorary American citizen. He succeeded, and today in the U.S. you have two honorary citizens, Sir Winston Churchill and Raoul Wallenberg. This country is unique because there is only one.

I remember the debate because at that time I was asking everyone how one becomes an honorary Canadian citizen. I wanted to propose Mother Teresa, who would also qualify very well as an honorary Canadian citizen. I was not told how to do it and I am still working on it. Some day I will come to the House and ask for the indulgence of the House to accept her. I do not think technically I am wrong in saying that Raoul Wallenberg is already an honorary Canadian citizen. If this was the first time, I would vote the same way for the same reason I did on December 9, 1985.

If I may make a very personal comment, I did not very much appreciate the last comment of the Hon. NDP Member who profited from that occasion to make a little bit of what I call Soviet-bashing, and I do not like Soviet-bashing when you are talking about a very important issue like this one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, first I want to indicate to my hon. friend that he is correct. He described the process that the House of Commons and the Senate went through back in 1985 in a rather extraordinary session of the upper House. As he indicated, that motion on that day proclaimed Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada. What that means in essence is that from that point onward, if Raoul Wallenberg decided to become a Canadian citizen he would not have to go through the normal process. He would simply apply and become a citizen. The Bill that I introduced today takes that further. As a result of a new statute it makes Mr. Raoul Wallenberg a citizen of Canada. He does not have to apply. Upon passage of this Bill he becomes a citizen of Canada, an honorary citizen of Canada.

The comments made by my hon. friend were correct, but Raoul Wallenberg is not an honorary citizen of Canada today and I want to make that very clear. If he applies, he can forgo the usual process and become a citizen. This Bill is not what some Conservative Members would want us to believe. This Bill becomes a statute of Canada and makes Raoul Wallenberg a citizen of our country.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself and I think government Members with the remarks of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I do not think Canadians will be interested in all the technicalities but everyone realizes the great service that Raoul Wallenberg rendered for civil rights throughout the world. I would just suggest that it is a shame that the NDP has seen fit to denigrate his memory.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I take considerable offence at that suggestion questioning my motives. As you know, I filed this Bill on the Notice Paper some time ago. I gave ample notice to all Members of the House that at the appropriate time I would be rising to introduce the Bill for consideration. As an executive member on the Committee on Soviet Jewry I take considerable offence at the suggestion made by the Government Deputy House Leader.

Mr. Holtmann: Why did you force a vote?

Mr. Reimer: Mr. Speaker, I just want it noted that I was in the House and in my seat when the second vote was called. I did not get up to vote a second time.

I want to associate myself with the comments of the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). I think he has reminded us of something very important. I also want to say that if the intent is simply to get a Private Members' Bill forward, that is done every day and very simply. It does not call for these kinds of votes. I refused to vote, not because of the issue at hand. What we are doing now, which is why I refused to get up, is playing silly games in order to deny the Government an opportunity to get on with its business. That is why I refused to stand.

Mr. Speaker: This might go on for quite a long time and I think I might exercise some good sense here and move on to other matters.

All Hon. Members and the public ought to know that the Bill voted on this morning, dealing with a matter of importance, has been on the Order Paper for a long time. The votes which took place this morning are procedurally correct and I do not think it is for the Speaker to comment beyond that. However, I do not think it is in the interests of the House to proceed with any more points of order on this particular matter.

Mr. Riis: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I need some guidance. Is it at this point that I have an opportunity to explain briefly the content of this Bill?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: No, that should have been done earlier. It could only be done now on the basis of unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Official Opposition, I would be happy to give unanimous consent to allow the NDP House Leader to explain his Bill. It is clear from what has been said in the House that we consider this Bill to be very important, and I think we would be denying the importance of the matter if the House Leader for the NDP were not allowed to put on the record briefly the reason he introduced the measure.

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is not unanimous consent.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

CONCURRENCE IN FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wish to move concurrence in the Fourth Report of the Committee on Official Languages, which, if I am not mistaken, was tabled in the House on June 25, 1987.

• (1250)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Gauthier, seconded by Mr. Gray (Windsor West), moved that the Fourth Report of the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages, tabled in the House on Thursday, June 25, 1987, be concurred in.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the House is aware that the Liberal Party and Members of the Liberal Caucus have an abiding interest in official languages, and especially in the work of the Standing Joint Committee of the House and the Senate, whose Members see this as a very important issue.

The report tabled by the Committee on June 25 last year was, by a strange coincidence, tabled on the same day as Bill C-72. The Chairman of the Legislative Committee will admit this was a good omen, and I for one think the Committee is to be commended for its work on matters dealing with the application of the Official Languages Act, the old Act, as it were, the 1969 legislation, and I hope that Bill C-72, the new legislation, will soon be adopted, so that we can update and harmonize all the language policies of this Parliament and the Government, the purpose being to provide for equity, justice and fair representation of the linguistic interests of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, on October 24, 1985, the Government responded to the Committee's second report through the then Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Nielsen. The Government promised at the time to ensure that the equal status of both official languages would be respected, both in law and in fact. Those were the words of the former Deputy Prime Minister.

The Government also reiterated Treasury Board's responsibility for language programs. Furthermore, it promised that the President of the Treasury Board would ensure that language programs of departments and agencies were satisfactory and that existing mechanisms to monitor their implementation were effective.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments at this point. I referred to the Deputy Prime Minister and the President of the Treasury Board. We also have the Secretary of State who, as you know, plays a very important role in this area. I do not need to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we have had many statements lately from the Secretary of State who is running for election in Lac-Saint-Jean, and the Conservative candidate in that riding gets a kick out of making statements to the press that in our opinion are just electioneering and do not have much to do with the facts.

This morning, I was able to pick up a bunch of press clippings where we see the Secretary of State talking about official languages and Bill C-72 and saying—let me just read the headlines:

PQ accuses Rémillard of weakness on Bill C-72 English dealt another blow on language

... by William Johnson, regarding the same subject of languages.

"Official languages: Rémillard optimistic." And I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and read you an article on Lucien Bouchard "On a hard road home" by Daniel Drolet. And there is more. Regarding Bill C-72, a headline reads, "Ottawa's proposal satisfies Rémillard," Quebec's Intergovernmental Affairs Minister. In La Presse of June 9, 1988, "Liberals want Bouchard to explain himself." And on that point, Mr. Speaker, I am a Liberal and I want the Secretary of State to explain himself. I want him to explain himself to the Committee first and then perhaps to the House one day. Let him tell us what he wants, what he wanted to accomplish by saying that in applying Bill C-72, the provinces would first be consulted and that there would be a memorandum of agreement signed with the provinces for the implementation of Bill C-72.

You will recall that Section 42 of Bill C-72 causes some problems in Quebec. This section allows the Secretary of State to promote—that is the key!—linguistic minorities in the provinces and in particular to help them exercise their rights and survive. I consulted several organizations and I also received telephone calls this morning from representatives of minority associations because that statement bothered me a little and I wondered why the Secretary of State was using such an important issue for petty politicking in Lac-Saint-Jean. I wonder why Rémillard and Bouchard are quarreling, or if it is not a political bluff to attract the attention of journalists and get them to talk about the candidate in the riding. We know that Mr. Rémillard, like many Members of this House, knew that Section 42 was in Bill C-72. This Bill was published on June 25 1987.

At that time there was a good understanding at the provincial level, at least with respect to what was meant by clause 42, and I fail to understand why Mr. Rémillard and Mr. Bouchard all of a sudden decided to launch this kind of verbal warfare, publicly questioning guarantees and general agreements between Quebec and Ottawa, although they both know perfectly well that this type of agreement was acceptable. After all, the federal Government signed this type of agreement with New Brunswick and is in the process of doing so with Prince Edward Island. So why not have one with Quebec, if we can have them with the other provinces? I fail to see why they want to make such a big stink about the fact that Quebec demanded a firm commitment from the Secretary of State that he would sign a general agreement with Quebec on the application of Bill C-72. I called the Fédération des francophones hors Québec, and I asked them whether they were against a general agreement. They said of course not, as long as it wasn't compulsory.

Otherwise, the federal Government would be restricted in its ability to intervene in a province that refused to sign the agreement. It is not compulsory under the Bill. Nothing in Bill C-72 obliges the federal Government to sign agreements, but if it is possible to reach an understanding on the implementation of a policy or on a general agreement with the provinces, I don't see why this should not be done.

As I said before, there is no legal obligation to sign an agreement. However, the law must be respected, and if Bill C-72 is passed, any agreement will have to comply with the provisions of the Act. Our conclusion: There is no problem, and the Secretary of State is trying to get political mileage out of this very important issue. It is just a lot of rhetoric, and, Mr. Speaker, I don't think it is right to take advantage of this situation to try and score political points.

Mr. Speaker, if I may continue, and I see you are signalling that my time is running out, the Committee's Fourth Report asked the Government, pursuant to Standing Order 99, to table a response. I recommend that Hon. Members read this response, because in it the Government makes a commitment to support certain recommendations made by the Committee with respect to the administration of the official languages program: Language of service, language of work, equitable participation, all those important subjects we discussed in Committee and which Committee Members would be well advised to read.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Fourth Report ought to be recommended reading. Read the Government's response as well. It is very enlightening and may be a positive contribution to the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair till two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DEMOCRATIC FUTURE OF HAITI

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment to remind us that for too long, unfortunately, the people of Haiti have been going through hard times. But with the departure of Presidents François and Jean-Claude Duvalier, Haitians expected much more freedom in a more democratic state.

Unfortunately, elections were held recently despite the boycott by a very large part of the population. The people did not want to take part in this travesty of democracy and they clearly showed their deep desire for democracy in that country.

A group of parliamentarians recently visited that country, began a dialogue with the present leaders and made recommendations to the Government for assistance to the Haitian people who are suffering and need help, but also for something most basic and important—the respect of individual rights and freedoms.

Now, I must regretfully observe that the Government has not yet officially followed up these recommendations made by Members of Parliament. I trust that the visit here in Ottawa by a distinguished politician from Haiti, Gérard Gourgue, one of the leaders of the Front national de concertation that is trying to establish democracy in that country, will open the Government's eyes and lead it to take concrete action on behalf of the Haitian people and for the establishment of true democracy in that country.

HISTORIC EVENTS

THE PHILIPPINES—ANNIVERSARY OF DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on June 12 Canadians of Filipino origin will celebrate an important turning point in the history of their homeland. It was on June 12, 1898, that General Emilio Aguinaldo, leader of the revolutionary movement, declared the independence of this former Spanish colony. While the Treaty of Paris ceded the islands to the United States and the Philippines did not become an independent republic until 1946, Aguinaldo's declaration began a process that would lead to the independence that the Philippine nation had long sought.

In the years following World War II, many Filipinos chose to immigrate to Canada in search of a better life for themselves and their families, making a tremendous contribution to the growth and development of Canada in the process.

The history of the Philippine nation has been difficult and troubled, fraught with political conflict. Through it all, the Filipino people have survived and their dream of democracy remained intact.

I urge all Members of the House to join the Filipino community in Canada and around the world in celebrating this important anniversary and in sending a strong message of support and hope for the future of the Philippines.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

MICHIGAN—STEAM LEAK AT FERMI II REACTOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have told the House and the Government before about the problems of the Fermi II nuclear reactor in Michigan, close to my constituency.

Now I have to tell the Government of yet another accident at that reactor, a steam leak which affected five workers, all of whom had to be decontaminated.

This is yet another argument for the Government to act and request an independent joint review of this trouble prone reactor.

Next week I will join Greenpeace, along with other Members of Parliament, in a protest news conference on their vessel, Beluga, at Fermi II. I urge the Government to act, and act fast, to respond to the concerns of thousands of Canadians for their safety, and to ask the Government of the United States to permit this joint review to take place. It is time for the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to show that he really cares about the safety of Canadians.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF REFUGEES FROM NICARAGUA

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the political left was saying that right wing Nicaraguan Contras should not be allowed to come to Canada as refugees. Not long ago the political right was voicing the same concerns about left wing Nicaraguan Sandinistas.

The Geneva Convention on Refugees that Canada signed in 1951 does not talk about left wing or right wing refugees. It defines a refugee as a person with a well founded fear of persecution for reasons of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion.

Are we concerned about refugees, or is our real concern their political philosophy?

FISHERIES

CODFISH QUOTA FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND FISHERMEN

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, under the Atlantic Groundfish Management Plan for 1988, fishermen with vessels under 45 feet in Zone 4T received a separate quota. For instance, these fishermen were allowed to catch up to 3,450 metric tonnes of codfish between April 22 and July 31. This allocation has now been caught and today is only June 9. Fishermen now want an additional quota to hold them over for the next two months.

Prince Edward Island fishermen, especially those from western P.E.I., are very worried because they did not catch their fair share of the 3,450 metric tonnes quota due to poor weather conditions. These fishermen have made a sensible request for an extra cod quota and they are willing to accept daily trip limits and mandatory gutting at sea. I would urge the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and his officials to approve this request as soon as possible.

FEDERAL—PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CO-OPERATION WITH QUÉBEC

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the $1 billion agreement signed today by Prime Minister Mulroney and Premier Bourassa heralds a new era of co-operation between Canada and Quebec.

Firstly, we bring Quebec back into the Canadian fold.

Secondly, we carry out, with the dynamic Quebec team, the Free Trade Agreement.

Thirdly, we allow the various Quebec regions to reap the social and economic benefits from the Meech Lake Accord and the Free Trade Agreement.

Only the Conservative Party could have succeeded in those three endeavours.

Only the Conservative Party could do it.

GREENHOUSE EFFECT—PARLIAMENTARIANS' CONCERN ABOUT ISSUE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, last evening on the CBC Journal special attention was paid to the problem of the greenhouse effect and the effect this may have on Canada and, indeed, the entire globe if nothing is done. One thing that disturbed me greatly about that program was the comment that it was time the greenhouse effect became a political issue.

I went back through the records of Hansard and I find that colleagues of mine and myself have been raising the greenhouse issue in this House for at least five years, going back to 1983, at the very least.

I am sure I speak for all Members of Parliament when I say that an issue does not just become an issue when the media discover it is an issue. An issue should become an issue when the elected Members of Parliament bring things up in Parliament, trying to call the attention of Parliament and Canadians to issues. That was something that was been done with respect to the greenhouse effect but attention was never paid to it when it was raised.

We often hear complaints that Parliament is not relevant. Parliament has been relevant on this issue for some time now. It is others who have not been paying attention. It is about time everyone paid attention to the greenhouse effect.

LENGTH OF SENTENCES—RESEARCH FINDINGS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, now that the capital punishment debate is over, the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, of which I am a member, has crossed the country, from Vancouver to Halifax, hearing witnesses on the most important matter of parole and sentencing. Clearly, most Canadians have expressed concern that those who have committed violent and sexual crimes are not receiving sentences that are commensurate with the crime committed, and violent criminals are being released too early on parole.

I asked the very excellent research staff of our Justice Committee to research the length of sentences for attempted murder, manslaughter, and criminal negligence causing death. I would like to share a bit of this information now.

Offenders released each year for conviction of attempted murder and manslaughter have served an average of three to four years. Those convicted of criminal negligence causing death served an average of one year to 1.3 years in penitentiary. Those convicted of rape and aggravated sexual assault served an average of two years to 3.5 years. Although each sentence has its own mitigating circumstances, this over-all record speaks for itself and is totally unacceptable.

Although the information available on parole and sentencing was limited, I still believe it confirms what myself and most Canadians believe.

NARCOTICS

DRUG ABUSE—RCMP ASSISTANT COMMISSIONER'S TESTIMONY TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, Canada needs an effective law to prohibit the production and distribution of illicit drug paraphernalia. Drug abuse is a very serious and tragic problem in our society, especially with young people. Not long ago a very young person in Toronto, a teenager, died as a result of drug abuse.

• (1410)

As Assistant Commissioner Stamler of the RCMP pointed out to a Legislative Committee today, the excessive production of illicit heroin, cocaine, cannabis derivatives, and other dangerous drugs, coupled with the ever sophisticated and diverse trafficking channels to Canada, continue to rank drug abuse and drug trafficking among the most critical problems facing the nation.

Drug trafficking is the most prosperous and widespread organized criminal activity in Canada today. I call upon the Government of Canada to introduce immediately legislation into the House to prohibit the production and distribution of drug paraphernalia. In Canada today there are over 500 head shops from one end of the country to the other that are selling this drug paraphernalia. We need a law to close down these head shops.

THE ENVIRONMENT

REHABILITATION OF URBAN MILIEU—CONGRATULATIONS TO VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS IN QUÉBEC-EST

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw your attention to a project announced a few days ago during National Environment Week, the "For healthier cities" project.

Nearly 80 percent of Canadians are city-dwellers. It is therefore very important that municipalities rehabilitate their social and physical environment to prevent disease and to improve public's health.

I am proud to say that Quebec City is one of the 16 municipalities which have decided to do something to make their urban environment healthier.

I would also like to congratulate the various volunteer organizations in Quebec-East who are working to that end.

Mr. Speaker, I will do my utmost to make all relevant information on this project available to interested groups.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

FORTHCOMING TORONTO SUMMIT—TREATMENT OF HOMELESS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 Toronto Police arrested and jailed homeless men during the visit of the Pope, no doubt so that His Holiness would not ask whether Toronto has beggars. Now with the Economic Summit in view Toronto Police are apparently cleaning up again.

Recently, police officers approached street kids near the Eaton Centre and said: "Be off the street soon or we will crack your heads". Homeless men and prostitutes are already being harassed for the edification of Ronald Reagan, Margaret Thatcher, and the Prime Minister's other guests.

The Prime Minister's guests will not be planning for the 10,000 homeless in Toronto, nor for the millions of homeless in Latin America, Africa, and Asia. They will not be planning for the thousands who must use Toronto's food banks, nor for the hundreds of millions around the world who go to bed hungry. They will be planning to make the wealthy countries wealthier, to collect external debt from the poorest in the world, to protect the seven wealthy summit countries from the desperate peoples of Europe's former colonies, our present debt prisoners.

Shame on all who try to hide from the poor. Inasmuch as we turn away from these poor, we turn away from God.

CREATION OF JOBS

Mr. Allan Pietz (Welland): Mr. Speaker, the Government's free trade legislation is a milestone for Canada. It marks this country's coming of age. Some people of other political persuasions would have us believe that we are not ready for it—that is ridiculous.

Since the Foreign Investment Review Agency was disbanded and replaced by Investment Canada, the Canadian economy has outperformed all other western industrialized nations. Canadian independent businessmen have responded with enthusiasm to the Government's incentives. Canadians are investing more money in this country than anyone else. This type of enthusiasm means jobs for Canadians.

During the last federal election the promise of jobs was a cornerstone of the winning political campaign. By improving the business climate for both Canadian and foreign investors 1,223,000 jobs have been created in Canada over the last three years.

According to well respected, non-partisan sources, such as the Economic Council of Canada, 150,000 more jobs will be created once the free trade agreement comes into effect.

MINERS MEMORIAL DAY

REMEMBRANCE OF HARDSHIPS AND SACRIFICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the celebration of a very special day for the people of Cape Breton—Miners Memorial Day which will be celebrated on June 11.

Miners Memorial Day is an important day. It is a day of reflection, time to remember the hardships, sacrifice, and personal danger that are part of the lifestyle of a coal miner in Cape Breton. It is a day to pay tribute to those who lost their lives in our coal mines. In addition, it is a day to salute all miners and their families for their outstanding contribution to the coal industry and to our community.

The history of Cape Breton is a history of hard work and sacrifice deep under the ground in the coal mines. Although the industry has been on the decline for the last number of years, it still remains a vitally important part of our history, both past and present.

• (1415)

On behalf of all my constituents, may I warmly congratulate and salute the miners of Cape Breton on Miners Memorial Day.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, the NDP have long argued that they oppose the free trade agreement in principle. That I respect. However, in registering its opposition to the FTA this morning, the NDP resorted to unprincipled measures.

On recorded vote Members unanimously supported the NDP's House Leader's Private Member's Bill to designate Raoul Wallenberg an honorary citizen of Canada. However, when the question was put orally before the recorded vote I heard only NDP Members, led by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), shout "No". Furthermore, only NDP Members, led by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, stood up to demand a vote, even though they intended in the end to support the Bill.

The irony is tragic. Raoul Wallenberg was a man willing to sacrifice his freedom and even his life for principle. How would he react to this unprincipled use of his name to delay and to abuse the rights freely given by the House to private Members to introduce Bills?

Oral Questions

OTTAWA-CARLETON SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANT—UPGRADING NEEDED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is time for the Tory Government to put its money where its mouth is.

Over recent weeks the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) has been telling the few people who are still willing to listen to him that he wants to clean up the environment. Now we can put this empty rhetoric to the test.

The Green Creek sewage treatment plant here in Ottawa-Carleton needs major upgrading and expansion which will cost $399 million. This expenditure would result in a tax increase of 50 per cent for serviced households and businesses in the Ottawa-Carleton area.

Yesterday the Chairman of the RMOC met with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in order to obtain federal assistance in a similar manner to other projects some time ago. Unfortunately, all he got from the Minister was "sympathetic consideration".

Sympathy is not enough. I call upon the Tory MPs from Ottawa-Carleton, especially the Associate Minister of Defence (Mr. Dick), to put their feet down and to tell the Minister of Finance that we need this money for a major environmental project. Otherwise, we will be forced to continue to believe what we already know, and that is that the Tory MPs from the Ottawa-Carleton area are as impotent as they have been in the past.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—PENALTY PROVISIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Trade may I direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Government with its customary arrogance intends to close down debate on the Prime Minister's trade deal at the very time that it is still being negotiated with the Americans.

Mr. Lewis: Not true.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I assume, in putting this question to the Deputy Prime Minister, that he and his Ministers have finally read the trade deal and the piece of legislation that they have deposited in Parliament and are prepared to answer some specific questions about the deal and the legislation.

Mr. Lewis: That's true.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy House Leader nods and says "That's true", and we will see how we get along.

Article 1904.2 of the agreement states that any future anti-dumping law or countervail law of the United States becomes incorporated into the agreement between Canada and the United States. Clause 8(2) of the legislation tabled here in Parliament states that any Canadian who contravenes the legislation, or contravenes the accord, is guilty of an offence.

The Interpretation Act and the Criminal Code of Canada state when there is no other fine or no other imprisonment listed, the offence is a summary offence subject to a conviction of up to six months in jail.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister seriously expect Parliament to pass legislation which subjects Canadians to prison terms, not for violating Canadian law but for breaching American law, including future American law that we have not even seen yet?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the assertion by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is totally untrue. What we have put before opposition House Leaders is a proposal to deal with the trade Bill and other Bills in an orderly and co-operative fashion. The House Leaders of the other two Parties have seen fit not to accept our proposal, and our House Leader today has written another letter to the House Leader of the Liberal Party, copy to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, opening the door for further negotiations.

With respect to the specific points which the right hon. gentleman has raised, if he want to make a second reading speech on the free trade Bill, C-130, he will have an opportunity next week.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister can count on it, Mr. Speaker. I will be here for second reading and I will be making a speech.

PROVISION FOR IMPOSITION OF FINES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I am asking a specific question. Why is the Deputy Prime Minister ramming through this legislation, the five-day limit on debate, forcing summer sittings, when this Bill includes fines and imprisonment, not for breaching Canadian law but for breaching the accord and for breaching future American trade law which has not even been passed by the Congress?

That is an absolute invasion of Canadian sovereignty. The Member from Brampton can laugh. He ought to read the agreement. He ought to read the Criminal Code. He ought to read the Interpretation Act. What I am saying will be borne out by a reading of those documents.

I am asking the Deputy Prime Minister about prison terms and about potentially huge fines that can be imposed upon Canadians for violation of future American trade law which has not yet even been passed.

Clause 77.26 of the Canadian Government's legislation tabled in Parliament says that any person who fails to comply in Canada with a protective order made under American law is guilty of an offence and is subject to conviction on indictment of a fine up to $1 million.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain how he can justify ramming through Parliament legislation which subjects Canadians to fines of up to $1 million not for a violation of Canadian law but for a violation of protective order under American law? That is an outrage, and I want the Deputy Prime Minister to explain it to this House.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, I think he is getting bad legal advice. This is a Canadian law. This is a law which has been presented to Parliament. This is a law which has been subject to debate and discussion over the course of at least two years. This is a law which will now receive intensive examination.

Mr. Kaplan: He is making a speech.

Mr. Gauthier: He is not talking about that—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is a trade agreement that is before the Canadian public.

Mr. Gauthier: He is not talking about—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister is attempting to answer a question that has been asked. The Hon. Minister is being interrupted by other Members who do not have the floor. I would ask that the courtesy extended to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition be extended also to the Minister when he gives his answer.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Thank you for your intervention, Mr. Speaker. I was simply making the point—and I think Canadians who observe this debate will find the fairness of the proposition put forward—that what we want to do is have a full and adequate debate on this matter. There will be an opportunity to examine the legislation in detail before a committee of the House of Commons which will be allowed to examine it clause by clause.

If the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will look at the provisions of the Bill, these are consistent with respect to Canadian laws that have been passed by previous Liberal Governments. If the right hon. gentleman wants to look at some of the penalties that have been imposed with respect to important combines investigation legislation—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadian law.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is Canadian law, Mr. Speaker. We in this Government legislate on behalf of Canadians in the Parliament of Canada. We make the laws here and we want to get on with the job.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I find that a very curious position for the Minister of Justice to take. If he would read the documents that I have been reciting, the trade agreement and the Bill before the House, he will see that by the way they are framed and drafted future American trade law is incorporated in the agreement. It is an offence to breach either the agreement or the law in the legislation that his colleague has tabled before the House.

• (1425)

What he is asking this House to do, under lengthened time allocations and under closure rules, is to impose on Canadians a potential fine of up to $1 million for one particular article, and a prison term of up to four years for another article, not for a breach of Canadian law but for a breach of American law automatically incorporated into the agreement, whether present or future American law. That is a breach of Canadian sovereignty and the Minister of Justice really ought to be protecting sovereignty.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister how he can explain this Government's need to strengthen its Bill and the Agreement with the United States? Any clause... well, six months' imprisonment, another unlimited fine, a million dollars, another four-year prison term for a specific clause. How can he justify that in the tradition of Canadian law, imposing fines and prison sentences on Canadians for violating a future law that the U.S. Congress has not even passed yet?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it is because this is not American, but Canadian law.

[English]

The right hon. gentleman is indulging in sophistry. He is indulging in this kind of not half-truth but untruth. He is saying that this is not Canadian law. This is Canadian law. It is an agreement which was entered into by Canada and the United States. We have it before Parliament. It is available to the right hon. gentleman and to Members of Parliament. If they feel that the provision is not adequate and that the fine should be increased, they can move to increase the fine, or if they want to decrease it, they can do so. This is a Canadian law and the right hon. gentleman, as a former Minister of Justice, should understand these things.

CONDUCT OF LEGAL PROCEEDINGS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says it is Canadian law but it is written in the Congress of the United States and it can change it. What is happening is unprecedented.

In proposed Clause 77.26, this Bill creates, for the first time in Canadian history that I can find, a Canadian offence which can be committed entirely in Canada and tried in a Canadian court for breaking an American law, present or future.

I ask the Minister of Justice, if a Canadian is charged with such an offence and tried in front of a Canadian court of violating American law, will he here in Canada have American defences? Will he be able to plead the Fifth Amendment? Will he be able to plead the U.S. Bill of Rights? If an American is charged with violating that American law in his own country, he will have those defences.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, opposition Members, in their attempt to justify their opposition to this very worthwhile treaty which is in the interests of Canadians, are really stooping to some depths in order to make invalid points.

Mr. Kaplan: Answer the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The justice critic of the Liberal Party asks me to give an answer. The answer is the question is stupid, that's the answer. There is no basis in fact. This is Canadian law, and if the hon. gentleman feels that the Charter of Rights of Canada should not apply, maybe he would want to make that a point in debate, but he has absolutely no foundation to his question and he should go back to his researchers to get a good question.

REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE HELD ON ISSUE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think that was a question that needs an answer, and I certainly did not get it. I would like to turn again to the Deputy Prime Minister and ask him this. We know that in spite of what the Government is saying, the agreement is falling apart and portions of it are being renegotiated. In light of that, will he take the advice of the Canadian people as demonstrated in the polls and take this issue to the people before renegotiating this terrible trade agreement?

• (1430)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member's assertion is absolutely false. The latest poll I saw says most Canadians agreed with the trade initiative signed with the U.S. That is very simply because it is good for Canada, good for all Canadians, and good for the regions. It will provide progress and prosperity for the Canadian economy. The Hon. Member, rather than trying to find ways and means to kill the initiative, should be the first to support it to ensure that Canadians will have jobs and new opportunities. That is what the exercise is all about.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He and the Prime Minister have time after time defended the costly and foolish decision to spend billions of dollars on nuclear attack submarines in order to protect Canadian sovereignty in the Arctic. The Minister was on television again this morning offering this curious argument, to understate it.

Very serious alternative proposals have been made to deal with sovereignty in the Arctic. They involve updated sonar and other equipment, and could be undertaken without any threat of violating the spirit of the non-proliferation treaty and without extending our involvement in a potentially aggressive strategy. Given that, why has the Government come down on the side of nuclear attack submarines costing billions of dollars instead of a much less costly and saner alternative?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, there are so many false premises to the hon. gentleman's question it is hard to know where to begin.

Mr. Broadbent: Give it a whirl.

Mr. Beatty: All right, let us start first with the premise that the reason for the submarines is simply to protect our sovereignty in the Arctic. That is false. One of the questions I put to the Navy in the Common's defence committee was if the Government had decided not to allow the Navy to go into the Arctic, what would be its recommendation with regard to protecting our Atlantic and Pacific responsibilities? The answer was to purchase nuclear-propelled submarines, a second batch of frigates, and anti-submarine helicopters.

In addition to the sovereignty issue, they will give us for the first time the ability to go into our Arctic. The NDP proposed to shut Canada's Navy out of Canada's North and leave it open to others.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: That is exactly what it would do because no other vessel the Navy has can go there. Conventionally propelled submarines cannot do it. Frigates cannot do it.

The hon. gentleman suggests that instead of defending the North we should simply put in underwater surveillance systems. That would be similar to building the North Warning System to warn us of long-range bombers coming over the Pole, but getting rid of the CF-18 whose job it is to intercept them. It would be similar to saying we will put a burglar alarm in the bank but we will not bother with guards.

Some Hon. Members: Strike one, Ed.

MONITORING OF SOVEREIGNTY IN ARCTIC

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to deal with the question. The question is this. Will he agree that not only experts in his Department but those in other countries, including the U.S., agree that there is a technologically adequate alternative? If our task is to find out what is going on in the Arctic, under the ice, there are alternative means of doing so that would cost much less and would not involve us in a potentially aggressive strategy. At precisely the time the superpowers are coming to their senses, our Government is the only one that wants to go the other way.

Why does the Government not do the sensible thing and have a strategy that would monitor our sovereignty but not get us into a potentially aggressive posture in any way whatsoever?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Again, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is simply confused and confusing in what he suggests. I suppose if our only goal in our defence policy was to know if someone was trespassing, without having the ability to defend ourselves, we could also scrap our CF-18s. We could wind down the responsibilities of the Army as well.

The responsibility of the Canadian Armed Forces is to defend the territorial integrity of Canada; to be prepared to ensure that if there is a trespasser in our airspace or in the maritime approaches, we are capable of doing something about it. This is consistent with the NPT. It is consistent with Article 14 of the agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency, as the Hon. Member should know.

The time has now come for the NDP to begin to come clean with the Canadian people. This week the hon. gentleman suggested taking that money and spending it on a range of social programs and giving it to CUPW, among other things. What is his proposal for the defence of Canada? What is he proposing that we do with the Navy? Does he disavow what the Hon. Member for Brant said about buying conventional powered submarines and—

Some Hon. Members: Strike two, Ed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

ALTERNATIVE PROPOSAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to make sure I get very clearly what the Minister is suggesting to the people of Canada, indeed everyone around the world. On the one hand there is a system that could be used to find out if there have been incursions on our sovereignty and then report back so we can take diplomatic action to deal with it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: All right.

Mr. Lewis: That is great, Neville.

Mr. Andre: We will throw the book at them!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): What did you want to do about St. Pierre and Miquelon? Send in the gunboats!

Mr. Andre: Gunboat Broadbent.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, please.

Mr. Broadbent: Now that we have heard the intellectuals in the Tory caucus—

Mr. Nystrom: Which one?

Mr. Broadbent: —there is the other alternative, and this was the thrust of the Minister's argument, that if we should find any incursion on our sovereignty we are going to attack.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Is that what the Minister is saying? They are the only two options. We proposed an alternative which could monitor and report incursions and we would then follow it up diplomatically. The other alternative is to spend billions of dollars on attack submarines. Which option are you choosing, and explain why?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, when I listen to the hon. gentleman I do not know whether to laugh or cry because it is so sad. He says that if Canada is attacked all we should do is stand by and protest.

Mr. Broadbent: Listen to the argument.

Mr. Beatty: The hon. gentleman asks a question but does not allow an answer. I do not blame him because the question was so fatuous.

The role of the Canadian Armed Forces is to be prepared to defend Canada. We have never occupied or coveted a square centimetre of anyone else's territory. The sole time that we use military force is to defend ourselves and protect freedom. We threaten no one. We certainly threaten no one by saying we are prepared to defend Canada. The NDP says we should not be prepared to defend Canada and they are dead wrong.

Some Hon. Members: Strike three, Ed.

CORPORATE PLAN—RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. A confidential portion of Canada Post's corporate plan obtained by Canadian Press, a copy of which I have in my hand, states that the Government will be rationalizing—that means shut down—5,221 rural post offices by 1996. Given there are 10,000 employees in rural post offices, 83 per cent of whom are women, how does the Minister feel about firing 8,300 women, which is likely the largest firing of women in the history of Canada? What is he trying to do, outdo his boss when he shut down Schefferville?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that document or article about which the CP story was written said that in the last fiscal year 269 rural post offices were supposed to be rationalized. In fact, last fiscal year 119 rural post offices were privatized. They were put into local general stores.

Incidentally, during the last fiscal year 218 new rural postmasters were hired and I understand that 80 per cent of them were women. Therefore, new postmistresses are being hired, not fired. The Hon. Member should get his facts right and not make such stupid statements.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the Government will be rationalized out of a job after the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): My supplementary question deals with the shutdown of 5,221 rural post offices. The document suggests that the Government could close this year 387 post offices, an average of one a day, and if—Heaven forbids—it were returned to power, it could close next year 858 post offices, an average of two a day.

When are the Prime Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister going to assume their responsibilities and order the Minister to end this sad joke and stop once and for all this discriminatory practice? What has the Government got against Canadians living in rural areas?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on May 12 the corporate plan for Canada Post was issued by the president. The press was there and perhaps members of the Opposition were there. I can send them the kit.

Over the period of time about which the Hon. Member is talking there will be an increase from the current 5,200 rural post offices to 7,000. There will be an increase. That means up, that doesn't mean down. That means people added, not fired. That means the Hon. Member should try to stick to the truth.

The fact of the matter is that service is going to be increased in rural Canada. The Hon. Member, as usual, knows nothing of what he speaks.

PROJECTED NUMBER OF CONVERTED POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. The Minister has just said that although the newspapers are reporting today that the conversions of post offices for 1987-88 were to be 269, in fact there were 119 conversions.

Is the Minister telling this House that the Government has been slowed down in the implementation of its corporate plan for converting rural post offices because of the protests that are being held across the country, and that the way to reduce the number of conversions included in the corporate plan is for Canadians to make their voices heard and say no to this corporate plan?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no. However, I wonder whether the Hon. Member would really like us to do that. In his Province of Manitoba a survey of people who are now being served by these converted post offices indicates that 86 per cent think the service is the same or better. Is the Member saying that his constituents should not get that better service?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is simply going to continue to quote a survey which gave people the alternatives of "keep it here through a local retailer" or "move it to another town", I think he is simply trying to mislead people.

EXISTENCE OF CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister confirm to this House that this confidential document, this corporate plan, exists and outlines the number of conversions which are going to take place year by year? Will he confirm those numbers and will he tell us which will be the next 300 communities to be converted?

Will it be Boat Harbour in Newfoundland, will it be Weston Shore in Nova Scotia, or will it be St. Tite in Quebec? Just which communities are on the corporate plan for conversion?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is often difficult to know where the NDP is coming from. The other day the Leader of the New Democratic Party talked about scrapping nuclear subs so that we can put up post offices. Yet their resolutions book, in Resolution A.4.3 says:

> An NDP government would put full employment as its primary goal . . . (would)
> (3) accelerate other public works, but only after re-evaluating their social usefulness. New post offices may not be nearly as important as new convalescent or nursing home beds.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It says "new post offices".

Mr. Rodriguez: What's the matter with you?

Mr. Broadbent: Can you read?

Mr. de Jong: Is that all you can come up with, Harvie?

Mr. Broadbent: You're really sick.

Mr. Orlikow: You need a new researcher, Harvie.

QUEBEC'S SHARE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who is certainly aware that over the past five years, direct federal spending in the various Quebec regions amounted to nearly $1 billion. The Minister of Finance is aware that the federal Government invested $453 million under the Industrial and Regional Development Program, $264 million under the Eastern Quebec Plan, and over $200 million under the Canadian Industrial Renewal Board. Could the Minister of Finance explain why, for the next five years, federal spending in the various Quebec regions will be cut by nearly 50 per cent or over $500 million? Why this reduction from $1 billion to $500 million in these five Quebec regions?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not understand the figures to which the Hon. Member has just referred. There was an announcement today, I believe, which provides for a substantial increase in regional development spending.

If the Hon. Member looks at the record of the Government over the last little while he will see that there has been a significant increase in regional development spending, not only in the Province of Quebec but in other parts of the country which we want to ensure have access to funds for regional development.

That which the Hon. Member just said is quite contrary to my understanding of the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I certainly challenge the Minister of Finance to check the figures I have just quoted. He will have the clear demonstration that direct federal spending in Quebec will be cut by at least 50 per cent as a result of the grandstanding announcement which the Prime Minister is making today in Quebec.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATIONS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance how he can justify that 50 per cent reduction when we know that the Prime Minister is only bragging and that in fact, $1.2 billion were injected in Western Canada, that Atlantic Canada will get $1 billion while Quebec will only obtain half a billion of federal funds when it got $1 billion during the past five years? Why such a reduction and why resort to deceitful propaganda?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Business and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, some do bragg and others got an awful cropper. If the Hon. Member looked at the figures, and I have them in hand, Mr. Speaker, he would realize that the commitments made by the federal Government in Quebec under its regional development programs are comparable. I would be embarrassed if I were a Liberal to rise today in this House to say that this Government has done less in Quebec. With those commitments, Quebec will get under regional development and other departmental programs 28 per cent more than what was previously spent. Those are the facts.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

LANDS ADJOINING KAHNAWAKE INDIAN RESERVE—INDIAN CLAIMS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development).

Mr. Speaker, after the unfortunate events last week at the Kahnawake Indian Reserve, my constituents are now very concerned about further developments.

Mr. Speaker, the chief of the Kahnawake Indian Reserve sent a letter to eight municipalities in the riding of Châteauguay, in which he claimed that eight municipalities adjacent to the Kahnawake Indian Reserve belong to the Seigneurie de Sault Saint-Louis and that the Seigneurie is now being claimed as having legally belonged to the Indians.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians, and especially the residents of these eight municipalities in Châteauguay expect the Government of Canada to do something to allay their concerns.

My question today is a question all residents are now asking: What will happen to the territory of the municipalities around the Kahnawake Indian Reserve as a result of the Indians' land claim?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises an important question.

First of all, the claims made by the Mohawk Council of Kahnawake that they have legal title to the former Seigneurie de Sault Saint-Louis were considered by the federal Government in the seventies, when the claim was rejected.

We have been advised that the Mohawk Council is preparing a new claim, Mr. Speaker.

In fact, the policy with respect to specific land claims has never been to expropriate third parties to settle a claim. Normally, such claims are settled by compensation in specie or some other consideration. Our policy is not to settle land claims by expropriating people who own and occupy the land.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BANK'S REPORTED $2 CHARGE FOR CHANGING $20 BILL

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On Monday this week, Mrs. Clara De Gruchy of Ottawa walked into the Bank of Nova Scotia at Fourth Avenue and Bank Street with a $20 bill and asked for two $5 bills and $10 in quarters. The clerk gave her two $5 bills and $8 in quarters. When she asked for her other $2 she was told that was the service charge because "too many people were requesting quarters". This is simply an exchange of Canadian money for Canadian money. Does the Minister not agree that this kind of service charge ought not to be allowed?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the facts are accurate, and I do not mean to be disparaging or suggest they are not, I find that outrageous, particularly if there was not a big sign that said: "We charge for making change". If there was a sign and someone did it anyway, that would certainly be wrong. I find it objectionable. Certainly, if I were that customer, I would have no further dealings with that bank. I suggest other consumers take the same action.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that the Minister's responsibility is consumer affairs, I hope he will follow this up and report back to the House.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is ironic that this happened on Monday, the same day that the Finance Committee tabled its report on bank service charges. It is clear that the banks are doing to consumers what Bonnie and Clyde did to the banks.

Is the Minister prepared to do something to protect average Canadians like Mrs. De Gruchy, or is he simply prepared to be the Government's Charlie McCarthy to the bank's Edgar Bergen?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the committee of which the hon. gentleman was a member made its recommendations and its proposal to the House. The Government has that under consideration.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Finance, has indicated that—

Mr. Rodriguez: You fiddle while Rome burns.

Mr. Andre: I gather that the Hon. Member suggests we should have had the necessary legislation in here before the committee reported.

Mr. Rodriguez: You should have had a freeze.

Mr. Andre: Then he would stand up in outrage at showing contempt for Parliament by not waiting for the committee's report before acting. The Hon. Member knows that is a bit unreasonable.

Mr. Rodriguez: You should have had a freeze on the charges.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LEAVE FOR FATHERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton-East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Yesterday, when the Federal Court of Canada confirmed what the Liberal party has been saying for a long time, all of Canada realized that the Unemployment Insurance Act is unconstitutional since it does not recognize the parental rights of fathers.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he can ensure this House that he will not appeal the decision of the Federal Court and, also, that he will introduce as soon as possible amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act so that fathers benefit from parental leaves and that, at the same time, mothers keep the benefit of maternity leaves.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the judgment was made two days ago. I think the Member would agree that the Government ought to give a studied response rather than a spontaneous one. I hope she would agree with that.

REQUEST THAT COURT DECISION NOT BE APPEALED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing to study. The issue has been studied by several parliamentary committees, including an all-Party committee which recommended more than two years ago that parental leave be granted to the fathers. Frankly, when the Federal Court of Canada speaks, I think the Government should listen.

Will the Acting Minister assure the House today that he will not appeal this decision? If he does appeal this decision, he is flying in the face of the Constitution and the Charter of Rights. Will he not ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration to proceed immediately with a new law to recognize parental benefits for fathers as well as maternity benefits for mothers? It is as simple as that.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the committee may have studied the subject but it has not studied the judgment. I think the Member owes it to us to do that.

REQUEST THAT UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT BE AMENDED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It also concerns parental leave which we believe is a vital component of child care.

I think we all welcome the decision of the Federal Court that natural fathers should be eligible for parental benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, just as adoptive fathers are, but also the confirmation that maternity benefits have a different purpose and therefore the position of the father must not deprive the natural mother of maternity benefits.

In view of this important decision, when will the Government introduce amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to offer a separate period of parental leave benefits so that fathers may have the opportunity of caring for an infant following the maternity leave period?

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for once the Member for Hamilton East beat the Member to the question and did a little better.

PARENTAL LEAVE BENEFITS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I expect you agree that that was a completely insulting response.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question, please.

Ms. Mitchell: My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare who, I hope, has some concern about parental leave as part of a child care package. Does he agree with most of the women's groups across the country who feel that extending parental leave benefits to fathers is desirable, but are also quite firm that this should be supplementary to maternity benefits because mothers need a recuperative period after giving birth to a child? Will the Minister please respond?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, Members will recall that changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act were introduced by the former Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Government showed direct action in respect to adjusting the Act to modern realities.

Second, in respect to changing the Unemployment Insurance Act, I think the Hon. Member should recognize, as the Parliamentary Secretary has also indicated, that if any changes take place it would be appropriate for the Minister to make those changes and those announcements.

CHARLES NG—UNITED STATES' REQUEST FOR EXTRADITION

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Charles Ng is nearing the end of his four and a half year sentence in Canada for shoplifting and attempted murder. The Canada-U.S. extradition treaty permits, with the consent of the Attorney General, a prisoner to be extradited before the full sentence has been completed. Therefore, is the Hon. Minister taking steps now to send this criminal back to the United States where he is wanted for alleged serious crimes?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The fact is that the United States Government has requested the extradition of Mr. Ng, pursuant to the extradition treaty between our countries. He has been arrested pursuant to this request. The matter has come before the courts in Alberta for a hearing.

There is a process before the courts that must take place with respect to this matter before it reaches the Attorney General of Canada. Accordingly, I have no comment with respect to this matter except to assure the hon. gentleman that, when the matter is referred to me, I will give the matter the appropriate attention.

CHILD CARE

GOVERNMENT PLAN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The federal Government has told us time and time again that child care was to be a priority on its agenda. We are still waiting for the tabling of the legislation. The Government has explained its last delay by an admission that there is not enough money to meet provincial needs. The federal Government was made aware of the specifics of the Ontario plan last December, not March or May, December 1987.

If the Mulroney Government—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mrs. Pépin: —has made child care a priority, why is it delaying, postponing, and contemplating reworking the plan? Why is it failing to address this important issue?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not contemplating shelving the plan, in fact, quite the opposite. The Government is working very diligently on child care. I should say again to the Hon. Member, as I have repeated so often before, that the legislation will be tabled and I hope we will have Liberal approval, just for once—just for once—on legislation—

Ms. Copps: Poor Jake!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —that will be passed, and that is a social policy initiative—

Ms. Copps: Let's start crying, Jake.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): —rather than the kind of nattering I hear even now from those who supposedly think they know better.

Ms. Copps: Poor little Jake!

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REMOVE FREEZE ON EMERGENCY FUNDS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, given that the Canadian Government has not yet introduced its child care Bill which has been expected since last March, will it grant short term emergency funds so that existing child care programs may be maintained? Indeed, you have not given a single cent so far and this Bill does not appear on your priority list.

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat again today that it is a priority. Again, the Hon. Member is more fair, more intelligent, and more insightful than those who generally speak on that side on social policy, so I would just remind her that if she takes a look at the amount of money this Government is spending right now under CAP on child care, and the amount of money the Liberal Government spent when she was the women's spokesperson, she will see how little was spent, and I would think she might want to get up on a point of order after Question Period and change the erroneous part of her question.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us the usual statement of government business.

I realize that the Government likes to think, as it says, with respect to the debate on the trade deal, that discussion outside the House is a replacement for parliamentary discussion. That may be why the Deputy Government House Leader already telegraphed to the press much of his statement of government business earlier this week. However, I think I should still show sufficient respect for Parliament and our parliamentary procedures to ask the Deputy Government House leader to give the formal statement of government business at this time.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I did have some discussions with the media as to what might happen over the next couple of weeks. My hon. friend will know that I delivered by hand a letter to him suggesting what might be a reasonable arrangement of business, which I have not released to the media, although my friend released my letter to the media last week without permission.

I would say to the Member that today we will call the motion to extend the sitting into the summer. I appreciate that neither the New Democrats nor the Liberals wish to sit into the summer, but we intend to continue with the business of the Government and the House.

Tomorrow, in the event that the procedural argument on the motion to extend the sitting is not completed today, we will continue that argument. If in fact the argument is completed, we will designate tomorrow as an allotted day.

Monday, we will have to wait and see if we are able to complete that argument and proceed with the motion to extend the sitting into the summer somewhat.

Tuesday will be a day on which we continue the Meech Lake debate, with the Prime Minister and the Leaders of the two opposition Parties taking part in the debate on that day.

POINT OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) on a point of order.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, during Question Period, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Valcourt) quoted from a document containing the DRIE expenses figures for Quebec, and I wished he had the kindness and courtesy to table it in the House for the information of all Hon. Members.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, you may have noticed or Hansard will indicate, if you look at the record, that I have not once referred to that document. I did mention having in my possession a document containing such expenses without, however, referring to it, and I believe that Standing Orders require that a document be laid upon the Table when referred to or when a quotation is made from it, which was not the case.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of my party, I would like to reserve the right to look at the video tape, to confirm the Minister's reply. If he did exactly what he said he did, we agree . . .

An Hon. Member: Does he have anything to hide?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): . . . but it seemed to us he quoted from a document.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Minister has said that he was not quoting from a document, but if there is further difficulty with this, I will hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques at another point in time. The Hon. Member may well want to look at Hansard and also at the video tape. If there is any further difficulty, I, of course, will hear Hon. Members.

NOTICE OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express to you that I reserve the right to raise a question of privilege after I have examined the record which contains the statement of the Hon. Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). That statement was made this afternoon. I will examine the record and then decide whether in fact I would like to raise a question of privilege at a later date.

Mr. Speaker: I, of course, would ask the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), and I am sure he would be very pleased to oblige me in my request, that he give me notice in writing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, since Thursday is the day we ask the Deputy House Leader about government business, perhaps I will put a comment to the Parliamentary Secretary. Considering that we have not had the usual round of meetings for House Leaders this week because of the press conference called by the Deputy House Leader, we would like to indicate that, as far as the NDP is concerned, there are a number of Bills we would like to move on expeditiously. As he knows, on a number of occasions we have indicated precisely what those Bills are. If the Government were to bring them forward, we would move on them with haste and in the most expeditious fashion.

However, he will also be well aware that the trade deal the Government wants to debate into the summer, to legislate by exhaustion, is what we oppose. For that reason, we oppose the idea of trying to jam that legislation through the House. I want to make that point clear to my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Government is very pleased to hear the word "expeditious". The Government would like to move expeditiously on some legislation. If we could package it all up, including getting the trade Bill amply debated in the House, lots of hours on it, then move it forward to committee, there might indeed be a basis for a very productive meeting. But I do not think the majority of Members of the House can be held hostage to a smaller unit of the House who have their priority. I think it is reasonable to expect that perhaps all three Parties have priorities. If we could agree on those priorities, indeed the House would be well served, as would Members of the House.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Parliamentary Secretary that we are not in a one-Party state. He may wish we were, but we are not. The House belongs to all its Members, not only to those who may be supporting the Government until the next election. If the Government wants to proceed in a reasonable way with a program of legislation, then it should operate so that it can get the co-operation, in a constructive way, of all Members, including members of the opposition Parties. If it is showing a willingness to do that, then it may be possible to make some progress, especially if that progress is intended to be within the rules of the House, and if the Government is going to give up its idea of throwing the rules out of the window because it cannot live or operate within those rules.

Last Friday I sent the Government a letter, which I made public, in response to the Government House Leader's letter which was attached to it, setting out suggestions for accomplishing a reasonable amount of work within the time period stipulated by the rules, rules adopted by this House unanimously, rules which the Government takes credit for as representing the best in parliamentary reform. If the Government is serious, it will withdraw the motion to suspend the rules currently on the Order Paper and stick with its belief, if it ever had that belief, in parliamentary reform as exhibited by the current rules and show that it has the competence, ability and willingness to work within them.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a point of order in support of the position just taken by my hon. friend, the House Leader for the Official Opposition.

I want simply to say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Parliamentary Secretary that on many occasions now—I can recall them over at least seven weeks—the House Leader for the Official Opposition and I have offered to co-operate on a whole set of Bills. An example of that element of co-operation that we are able to accomplish in the House occurred last week when a number of Bills of interest concerning issues relating to native people were packaged for debate. Through the co-operation of all Members we were able to move, I would say, even more than expeditiously. Quite frankly, we were prepared to set aside, after unanimous consent, a number of rules to enable these Bills to move through quickly. We accomplished that. I think that day exemplified just how productive the House can be in terms of moving legislation forward.

However, as my hon. friend has indicated, it does require a recognition that there is a role for the opposition Parties in the parliamentary system. That requires not only leadership but the willingness to co-operate by the Government, not simply the attitude that, "We are the Government. We have a large majority. We can do anything we like, including setting aside the rules of the House of Commons". That is not the case.

I simply want to remind my friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, that we are here to co-operate on appropriate pieces of legislation whenever we can. We demonstrated that willingness last week. We are prepared again on a whole set of Bills to do the same thing. But we ask the Government to bring forward those packages, to negotiate those packages, so that we can make this place work in the best interests of the people of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I was glad to hear the last remarks of the NDP House Leader with respect to working in the interests of the Canadian public and not to get bogged down in a great many procedural problems which we know we have here no matter what the charade may be for the public.

There is a Bill called Bill C-131 which deals with amendments to the National Transportation Act and which involves the handicapped. I must say, just to test the sincerity of the Loyal Opposition and of the House Leader of the NDP, I for one, and the handicapped, are wondering why we have not been able to move that Bill out of the procedural problems of the House and into the standing committee to which it is now designated to go. I think that perhaps it could even be referred to that committee today to show some good faith to the handicapped who want to have their problems addressed by the committee. We could get that Bill out of the House, out of the procedural wrangles that will continue no matter what protestations there are. We can do something fundamental for the handicapped in order to help them.

Today, on Thursday, when we are supposed to do things for the nation and not just for each political Party, I would like the House Leaders to agree on the floor of the House to have Bill C-131 referred to the standing committee to find out if the amendments to the National Transportation Act address the problems of the handicapped. We were the ones who helped focus attention on it. That would reassure me that this place still has a purpose rather than just engaging in a political dogfight that we know we are going to have for the next several weeks.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my hon. friend for making a very important point. Just so everyone, including those outside this House, understand the point, it is that the business of this House, if it involves measures introduced by the Government, is within the control of the Government. The Government has the absolute right to call at any time any measure it wants to bring before the House for debate. If the Government really cares about the kind of measure or, specifically, the measure mentioned by my hon. friend, it will have our consent, although it does not need it, to call immediately Bill C-131 rather than the motion to suspend and to throw out of the window the rules of this House.

I put the Government to the test. Let us see if it is sincere about the measure proposed by the Hon. Member from Nova Scotia. It does not have to proceed with the motion to suspend the rules. Instead, it can immediately, without notice, without my consent and without the consent of the NDP House Leader, call the measure to amend the National Transportation Act to help the handicapped.

I challenge the Government to show it cares for the people of the country and to call that measure right away and forget about this unnecessary and anti-democratic measure, the motion to suspend the rules. I challenge you to show you care about the handicapped and about the people of this country generally.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on many occasions through various officers, representatives and organizations of this House we have taken steps regarding concerns of the handicapped. In light of the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) may I suggest that, as far as the New Democratic Party is concerned, we are prepared to debate Bill C-131 today, right now, in order to expedite the matter and to get it into committee. I am making that offer. We are prepared to debate it now, tomorrow, Monday, any day. I think it is an excellent suggestion.

It is that type of leadership that has just been shown by the Hon. Member which is needed when the Government says, "Listen, we are concerned about matters regarding transportation and the handicapped. We are prepared to introduce legislation". As my hon. friend, the House Leader for the Official Opposition, has indicated, he is interested in co-operating. We are prepared to co-operate. As a matter of fact, we will deal with it right today. Let us deal with it today. If we do not deal with it today, the sooner the better.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I was the one who raised this matter. I did not want to get into debate.

I have been around here for a few years, the same as some of the Hon. Members opposite and the House Leaders, too. My hon. friends and the handicapped well know the purpose of my intervention. With respect, the debate is not here on the floor of the House. The Government has shown leadership and taken the initiative. It has introduced a Bill after consultation with the handicapped. It is now up to a committee of the House to see if the consultation is reflected properly in the Bill.

Quite frankly, if my hon. friends who just spoke understand fully—and I am not saying that they do not, but want to make sure they do—the problems that the standing committee focused on concerning the handicapped, then there will not be a long debate. I am not trying to put the handicapped forward as hostage to the free trade motion, or any other motion before the House. The purpose of my intervention is to show good faith on all sides for a fundamental group that needs help, and needs help now. It is not for debate but, by all-Party agreement—and that is the way it will move whenever it moves—to move it into the committee so that it can decide if the consultations have produced effective results. Then we will report back and hold the debate whenever that fits into the government's timetable.

It was not my intention to play cat and mouse with the present procedures and motions before the House. My hon. friend from Windsor West and my hon. friend, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, know that full well, and so do the handicapped.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, sometimes, and I have seen it before—I recall the Constitution debate—on the floor of the House we really can negotiate. I thank the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) for bringing forward the proposition, which the Opposition does indeed find acceptable, that we move on to the Bill on the handicapped. They have mentioned priority legislation. The Government is seeking agreement from the House. If agreement is not forthcoming on the basis of a vote, we can determine the will of the House on extending our hours for debate to a few more hours, a few more days in order that we can handle the legislation for the handicapped, we can handle the legislation around immigration, and we can handle the priority lists which are in their hands.

One of the ways that we could move very quickly this afternoon is if perhaps a recorded vote is needed on the government motion, to move immediately, without further debate, to the government motion. If it is defeated, or if it passes, we could have unanimous agreement in the House, whichever way they would like it, on the basis of short speeches, or no speeches at all, to move the Bill for the handicapped through. If they have something else on the list that they would like to move through expeditiously this afternoon, the Government would be pleased to consider that. We could have a few consultations while the bells rang, if we move immediately to the vote on the motion simply to commit ourselves as a Chamber to more hours or days of debate into the month of July in order that we can do the many significant things that remain on the government agenda.

If that is the sense of the offer, we would gladly accept it, and I speak on behalf of all Members on this side. If unanimous consent were required, we would be glad to give it.

Mr. Speaker: Having listened carefully, it is not quite the sense that I perceived. I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Thank you for your consideration, and I will be very brief. My hon. friend knows full well that the Government's motion is not simply to ask for a few more hours. Additional hours of sitting are already provided for in the existing rules for the last two weeks of June. The rules provide a simple way for getting those hours. What the Government of the Hon. Member has put before the House is a motion to suspend the existing rules and do something uncalled for by the rules, and unnecessary.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why he is not willing to call Bill C-131 right now, instead of the motion to suspend the rules. It is very simple. He has the authority, on behalf of the Government to do that. He does not need my consent. He does not need the consent of the House Leader of the NDP. He does not need the consent of any Member. Under the Standing Orders he can rise right now and ask the Clerk to call Bill C-131 for second reading. I ask the Hon. Member bluntly, will he do that? Will he call Bill C-131 right now instead of the motion to suspend the rules? If not, why will he not do that? Can the Hon. Member answer that question?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: I rise, Mr. Speaker, to advance the opportunity to debate Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987, which was introduced and read for the first time on June 1, 1988. If the Government is interested in proceeding with this legislation today, then I will say on behalf of the New Democratic Party that we are prepared to expedite this matter and complete second reading by the end of the day. I am prepared to make that offer. This is important legislation. If the Government is interested in introducing it, we are prepared to co-operate to get it into committee for study and further examination.

Mr. Hawkes: As soon as we have disposed of the decision which we must make about the hours of sitting of the House—

Mr. Riis: Not interested in helping the disabled?

Mr. Hawkes: —about sitting into part of the summer. If that can be done expeditiously, perhaps on division, we could have a standing vote, if required. As soon as that is disposed of, we would be very happy to work with members of the Opposition to pass Bill C-131.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has been very patient, as I am sure everybody would want me to be. I think, for the moment, at least, this negotiation is at a standstill.

Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

On the order: Government Orders.

June 3—The Minister of State, Treasury Board, moved the following proposed motion: That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.00 o'clock p.m., and on Wednesdays at 6.00 o'clock p.m., and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended;

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 22;

That following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 10(1) shall be receivable; and

That this special order shall not apply on any allotted days designated in the supply period ending June 30, 1988.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a point of order about the acceptability for debate of the motion that the Government has on the Order Paper, a notice of motion dated June 3, 1988, in the name of the Minister of State, Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis).

This motion states: "That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1 . . . " I will not take the time to read the remaining words of the motion. I wish to remind the House that Standing Order 4 provides that the House rise on June 30 and return on the Monday after Labour Day in September.

This motion, Mr. Speaker, if it is accepted by you, and I submit it should not be, and if it is later adopted by the House, states that the rules of the House with respect to when the House adjourns at the end of June are suspended and put aside in order that the House sit without a break until the day it is supposed to resume, under the rules, in September.

The motion also provides, if it is first accepted by you, Mr. Speaker, and then passed, that the House will not only sit during the usual hours provided for by the rules, but in addition will sit continuously without a break until 10 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays.

The issue is not whether Members of Parliament are willing to work. Clearly they are. Instead, the issue is whether it is proper and acceptable for the Government to be able to say, since it cannot do its work within the rules, since it does not want to work and live within the rules, that it will use its majority and throw the rules out of the window.

This is no ordinary motion contemplated by the rules and used regularly to arrange House business. To all intents and purposes this motion is without precedent. I am told that there may have been one instance when a Conservative Government in 1888 put through a motion to suspend the rules in order that it could force a single Bill through the House. If I am correct, this instance 100 years ago is hardly relevant today.

There have been occasions when individual rules have been suspended to respond to particular circumstances, but this has always been done by unanimous consent. It has never been done by the Government invoking its majority against the will of other Members. Even permanent changes in the rules have generally been carried out by unanimous consent. There was an exception in 1969 when permanent rule changes, not changes to suspend the rules for a particular purpose or occasion, were adopted by majority vote following closure. I am told that this came after two lengthy studies and reports by two separate committees, and after a lengthy parliamentary debate. The motion for a permanent change in the rules reflected the report of one committee, and it was in an effort to create the parliamentary calendar, and not to do what the Conservatives are trying to do in this motion, to sweep away the parliamentary calendar.

There has been no instance for over 100 years, and no precedent of a Government attempting to suspend the rules and throw them out of the window just to help it get through a number of measures that it did not have the skill and competence to get through by operating within those rules. Our rules, the rules we have today, the rules adopted by unanimous consent with the encouragement and support of the Government, for which it takes credit as a vaunted achievement of parliamentary reform, say that this House is to meet within fixed dates. These rules, for which the Government has been taking credit, I repeat, as an achievement of parliamentary reform, say that the House will sit during the periods of adjournment in only one way, that is, if after the House is adjourned the Speaker deems it in the public interest to do so. If that is the case, he can recall the House. I repeat, he can do it only after the House adjourns and if he deems it in the public interest, and after consultations with the Government.

Our rules, reflecting our parliamentary practice and traditions and for which at least until today the Government was taking credit as an achievement on its part of parliamentary reform, do not say if at any time the Government is not satisfied with its progress on its program, the measures it wants to get through, it can use its majority to cast those rules aside. It is wrong when a Government, as this Government has done, cannot manage its program, is incompetent when it comes to handling and organizing parliamentary business and as a result gets itself into a corner, and to get out of it tries to use its majority to throw the rules out of the window. The Government with this motion today says it wants to cast aside, to discard, the rules of this House because it cannot work or live within them.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I will cite authorities to support my position, the Government cannot treat our rules just like they were another one of the Government's promises made to be broken and discarded, not to be kept and treated seriously.

The rules, which the Government says were adopted because of its own commitment to parliamentary reform, mean the Government must organize itself and fit its program within the framework of those rules. It is not supposed to crush them under foot to cover up its own mismanagement and incompetence.

Mr. Fennell: We have put through far more laws than you did.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): We are talking here about something fundamental to our system of parliamentary democracy. We are not talking about some trivial parliamentary manoeuvre by this Government that is of little significance and has some meaning if only just for today. I repeat, this motion has serious and fundamental implications for Parliament and for our entire system of parliamentary democracy.

I refer you, Mr. Speaker, to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 1, the very first citation in this handbook of parliamentary law. It is headed Principles of Parliamentary Law. It reads:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence of tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express his opinions within limits necessary to preserve decorum and to prevent an unnecessary waste of time; to give abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure, and to prevent any legislative action being taken upon sudden impulse.

This citation is from Sir John Bourinot, the learned, important, respected and very well regarded expert on Canadian parliamentary law, from his Parliamentary Procedure and Practice in the Dominion of Canada, Fourth Edition.

I want to refer you also to Standing Order 1 of the rules of this House, Mr. Speaker. These, I repeat, are the rules for which this Government takes credit as a fundamental achievement on its part of parliamentary reform. Standing Order 1 under its heading Public Business reads:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

The Government itself recognizes that the motion about which I am raising this point of order is not a simple or routine motion. It starts out by saying, and this is the proof I am offering for this point:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House—

By saying, "notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House", the Government itself recognizes that this motion is not some limited, ordinary or trivial procedural device. It recognizes that its motion relates to the general practices as well as the rules of the House. The motion relates to and calls into question the fundamental principles of our parliamentary law. This I submit the Government must be recognizing in the wording of the motion. I submit that you can and, in fact, must rely on and follow Bourinot's statement of principles and the authority given to you by Standing Order 1 to apply the principles of parliamentary law and other precedents of this House and declare the Government's motion to be out of order.

What are some of the principles as stated in Citation 1 of Beauchesne, the words of Sir John Bourinot? He says that the principles are:

> —to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority—

It is very clear that the Government's motion oppresses the minority of Members of this House. We have not offered our consent to this motion because we realize it is intended to take away the protection offered by the rules of this House for orderly and logical debate. Since we do not accept this motion, which is a motion to suspend the rules, which is a motion to take away the rights we have under the rules, I say to you, Sir, you must not accept this motion. You have a duty to protect the minority of Members of this House who do not accept this motion since it pertains to the fundamental structure of this House and our parliamentary democracy.

Second, this motion is, to use the words of Bourinot "an exercise of the improvidence and the tyranny of the majority". It is clear the Government wants to use the majority it has to force its will on the House, not simply to have passed a particular measure which the House does not agree with but to suspend, cancel and sweep aside the fundamental rules of this House. When it comes to improvidence, the Government's own improvidence has led it to this arrogant and high-handed course of action as reflected by this motion, its improvidence brought about by its own incompetence and bad management.

Let us look at some examples. The final text of the trade agreement with the United States was released I think last December and the deal was signed between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan at the beginning of January, more than six months ago, yet the Bill to implement the agreement was tabled in this House only some two weeks ago. That is not the fault of the Opposition. We are not involved in the drafting of the Bill, unlike the Members of the U.S. Congress. I wish we had that same opportunity, but we do not. The Government cannot hold us responsible for its own inability to draft and table a Bill in the House with over six months to do so.

The Supreme Court of Canada ruled in February on the issue of abortion. Only a few weeks ago, the Government indicated its intention to present in a resolution a course of action to deal with that situation. Nothing stopped it from dealing with the matter sooner. Certainly nothing stopped it in so far as the Opposition in the House is concerned.

The resolution to adopt the Meech Lake Accord was called for debate for only one day some three weeks ago. It is true that it was impossible to find a date on which the three Party leaders could speak on the same day, according to their schedules, until next week, but nothing stopped the Government from calling that motion earlier and inviting other Members who wanted to speak to do so. The Opposition has not been holding up this measure. This is something totally within the control of the Government, as is the case with any other measure on the Order Paper pertaining to government business.

I can make the same point about day care. When did the Government table its policy? Was it last year? Where is the legislation? We are not stopping the legislation from going through. It is not before the House. Table the legislation and call it if it is ready.

The Government issued its policy on tax reform a year ago. Where is the legislation? It is not the Opposition that is preventing this legislation from coming forward for debate.

Mr. Speaker: I am of course listening very carefully to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) because his arguments are cogent and very properly brought forward, but I would ask the Hon. Member, if he could, to come back to the central question and that is, does the Speaker have the authority to reject the motion which the Government has put forward and which the Hon. Member complains about.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am simply making the point that this is not a case of obstruction by the Opposition, but instead, a case of the incompetence, the improvidence through incompetence of the majority.

The Government's motion, to use the words of Bourinot, is not really "to permit abundant opportunity for the consideration of every measure to prevent any legislative action from being taken on such impulse". It is a matter of public record, and I ask you to take judicial notice, if I may use the phrase, that the Government has already signalled its intention to impose closure on second reading of the trade Bill and prevent that second reading, once the Bill is called, from going on for more than five days.

This is the most important measure to come before Parliament in over 60 years, perhaps the most important measure since confederation. The very sovereignty, the very existence of this country, is at stake. Instead, with its arrogant motion, the Government intends to try to legislate by exhaustion. This is certainly the wrong way to have proper debate and consideration in the House and the wrong way to have public input. I think the Government hopes its legislation, to use the words of Bourinot, will slip through "on sudden impulse", and surely that is wrong.

If the Government can abuse the use of its majority to set aside, through this motion, those parts of the rules that say when the House should sit, I submit the Government can do exactly the same thing with any other part of the rules. It can force through a motion of this kind to eliminate Question Period. I know the Prime Minister has already talked about how he would be very happy to do without it. The Government could force through a motion to eliminate committee hearings, the whole concept of study in a legislative or a Standing Committee of a measure before the House. It could wipe out debate on second reading or third reading or even the requirement for a formal vote on Bills. It could force through an order saying that all Bills are deemed adopted as soon as they are tabled.

Some may say that that would be impossible, our Constitution would not permit that. I submit that the only thing our Constitution says clearly and definitely about Parliament and parliamentary democracy, or at least parliamentary democracy as it pertains to the House of Commons, is that there has to be a session of Parliament at least once each year and that a Parliament cannot last more than five years. That is it. Everything Canadians consider to be fundamental parts of our parliamentary democracy is really established and confirmed only by these Standing Orders, our rules.

If this motion is accepted by you and then proceeded with and forced through by the Government, the Government would be saying that it does not give a damn for the rules and practices of Parliament which reflect and involve our traditions of parliamentary democracy and it will do anything to save its own skin. It will know it can suspend or throw out the rules any time it thinks doing so will help it achieve its aims and survive. The only protection against this attempted abusive and arrogant use of its majority by the Government to suspend the rules and thus undermine our parliamentary democracy is the use of the authority you have, Sir, to refuse to accept and to put this motion.

This authority comes from Standing Order 1 of the rules of this House. It comes from the statement of parliamentary law as expressed by Sir John Bourinot. I think it is expressed in citation 120 on page 39 of Beauchesne's which reads:

> Foremost among his many responsibilities, the Speaker has the duty to maintain an orderly conduct of debate by repressing disorder when it arises, by refusing to propose the question upon motions and amendments which are irregular, and by calling the attention of the House to bills which are out of order. He rules on points of order submitted to him by Members on questions as they arise. Many powers have been vested in the Speaker by virtue of the Standing Orders.

I also respectfully refer you to citation 424(3) at page 153 of Beauchesne's which reads:

> It is the Speaker's duty to call the attention of the mover and of the House to the irregularity of a motion; whereupon the motion is usually withdrawn or so modified as to be no longer objectionable. If the motion is of such a nature that objection cannot be removed, the Speaker may refuse to put the motion to the House. He treats it as a nullity.

I call upon you, Sir, to carry out your duty to protect the minority in this House. I call upon you, Sir, to use your authority to preserve the foundations of our parliamentary democracy as expressed in the Standing Orders of this House and to reject this motion.

I want to make sure that this House and the Canadian people recognize that this is not a normal procedural motion usually brought forward at this time. Instead, it is to do something which is not reflected in our rules and that is to suspend a part of the rules which are as important and as integral to those rules as any other part and that is about when this House sits.

If the Government can get away with this kind of motion, then nothing else in our parliamentary procedure which a Government does not like or which it may be worried about from day to day or from time to time will be safe, whether it is Question Period or debate on second or third reading or committee stage. I realize I am asking you to assume a heavy responsibility, but you have been selected by secret ballot of all Members of the House to act on behalf of all Members, to speak for this institution and to preserve what it means for this country and for future generations. You have the authority to reject this motion. I call upon you to do so in the interests of this House and all its Members and in the interests of our parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am not terribly pleased to be participating in the debate on this point of order, knowing what the Government is attempting to do.

To begin with, I want to remind everyone that you as Speaker are the defender of the rights of all Members. You are a servant of Members of the House of Commons, whether a Conservative Member, a Liberal Member, or a New Democrat Member, or an independent Member for that matter. You rule to ensure that the rights and privileges of all Members are respected. I submit that today the Government has indicated it wishes to abandon the rules of the House of Commons, to set aside our Standing Orders, and implement the will of its huge majority in the House to draft a new set of rules and have us do something we would not normally do. I want to make some specific procedural remarks in that respect and then come back to that point in a moment or two.

You will recall that last Tuesday I rose on a point of order to argue that the Government had breached the rules and customs of this place by giving notice of this motion that we are debating at the moment under Government Notices of Motions rather than under Motions, as had been the custom. I would like to briefly review that argument and add to it to reinforce my very firm belief that improper notice was given to deal with this motion.

As I am sure you will recall, my argument rested on three main points, and I would like to briefly summarize each of them. The first deals with Citation 270(1) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which makes a distinction between motions moved to deal with government affairs or Government Orders and those moved to regulate the business of the whole House, that is the fixing of sitting dates or the time of the meetings. As you know, motions that deal exclusively with Government Orders or government business such as a time allocation motion on a government Bill are properly given notice under Government Notices of Motions. Those other motions that deal with the business of the House as a whole must be moved under Motions.

My second point relates to the practices of the House as spelled out in the Report of the Procedure Committee to the House on June 14, 1955. As you will recall from your study of past Parliaments, this report, which was of course adopted unanimously, led to the very first comprehensive revision of the Standing Orders since Confederation. We just went through a similar process in the last few years. In that report, which was recorded in the Journals for that day, there are several additional comments relating to procedure. I think it would be useful to quote an excerpt from that part dealing with the question of notice. That is the critical point I wish to make right now and it concerns the appropriateness of giving notice and where it stands on the Order Paper. At page 746 of Journals for June 14, 1955, we find the following:

> That motions for the concurrence in reports of any standing or special committee, for the suspension of any Standing Order, or other such motions as may be required for the observances of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meetings or adjournment shall be listed, where notice is required, called and disposed of under "Motions".

Clearly this sets out the practice that is to be followed in the case of motions which seek to change our sitting days and the times of our meetings or adjournments. Such motions must be listed under Motions.

Third, I wish to bring to your attention the lack of precedents to support the Government's case on this issue. As I indicated last Tuesday, prior to the 1955 revision of the Standing Orders it was not unusual for motions regulating the days and times of sittings of the House to be given notice under Government Notices of Motions. Such motions were then transferred to Government Orders were they were moved and debated. However, after the Procedure Committee's report in June of 1955, I have been unable to find a single example of where such motions were not given notice and debated under Motions. Not a single precedent after 1955. This fact cannot be simply dismissed. It is significant and relevant to our debate today. Precedent is a critical component of how this House regulates its business and cannot be ignored.

When the Government chose to give notice of this motion under Government Notices of Motions, it violated the practices of this House since 1955, some 33 years ago. I know that, being a student of parliamentary procedure and traditions, you will appreciate the fact that a practice we have followed for 33 years has obviously proven its value and we ought to be following it in the years ahead unless a clear case can be made against it, or there is unanimous consent of the Members of the House to proceed in some other fashion. Barring that, and simply recognizing the will of the Government to act on this point, I think it is important for you to recognize that a precedent set 33 years ago and followed continuously since then, as far as I can determine, ought to be continued.

That was the basis of my argument on Tuesday and I certainly stand by it again today. I can find no reason why we should at this moment depart from that practice of the House.

Furthermore, you will know that in the last several years the Standing Orders and the practices of the House have undergone a further review just as they did in 1955, for the purpose of making Parliament a more effective and vital institution. We made many changes to the rules governing Private Members' Business which have enhanced the role of the Private Member. I suggest that the recent passage of Bill C-204 in the name of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) is a testament to the growing influence of Private Members, and all of us are appreciative of that change.

Another innovation was the establishment of a parliamentary calendar so that Members on all sides know when the House will be sitting and when it will be adjourned. This helps Members plan their agenda and maximize the time they can spend with their constituents. Implicit in the establishment of this calendar was the recognition that the Government would have to regulate its legislative agenda to conform with the days of sitting. Unfortunately, the Government has shown a particular inability to manage its parliamentary calendar to meet the Standing Orders and the fact that we have agreed unanimously to follow a calendar in order to carry out the business of the people of Canada.

I want to add to that by saying right from the beginning we have had no hesitation in working in the House or beyond. I do not think that is in question. The fact we have been in session for nearly 11 months straight speaks well of the intention and commitment of Members of Parliament to serve their constituents. I do not think you will find many Parliaments in this world that would have sat for 11 months straight and are quite prepared to continue on.

When the Standing Orders were changed unanimously by Members of the House to institute a calendar, that allowed Members on certain weeks of the year and for the months of July and August to be able to set up rounds of meetings with their constituents. For those of us who have to travel 4,000 or 5,000 kilometres to our constituents on a weekend, it is difficult to serve our constituents. For that reason we welcomed a parliamentary calendar.

I submit that having a parliamentary calendar does not prohibit us from sitting in the summer. That is not the point here. If the Government felt there was an emergency or crisis facing the country, it can ask you to recall Parliament to deal with that situation. Last summer the Government determined that we had an emergency with respect to immigration and refugees. The Government appealed to you and, given the information it provided you with, you in your wisdom decided to ask Members to come back from their summer break, where they were serving their constituents, to deal with the legislation. I did not think at that time it was an emergency situation, but the Government made its case and in your wisdom you decided that was the case.

That still exists. We are not suggesting that under no circumstances will we ever not sit during July and August. The point, as any good businessman or businesswoman would know, is that you have to be able to plan ahead, you have to be able to conduct your business in a businesslike way, and that requires notice and advance planning. Quite frankly, I cannot imagine planning within a major business never knowing whether or not the business would be operating at a certain time of the year.

We instituted a parliamentary calendar so that Members of Parliament could make necessary arrangements, so that they could tell their constituents with conviction that they would be in their community or neighbourhood on a specified date. We have all done that. I am sure all our calendars are filled for July and August. In spite of the Standing Orders and the understanding which we have all had for the last few years, those appointments and commitments will have to broken because we will be required to be here.

Why are we being asked to do this? We have sat for 11 months and the Government has had an opportunity to introduce its parliamentary agenda. The Government is today admitting that it is incompetent. It is admitting that it has not done its job.

The Government says it wants to debate child care. After the 1984 election there was a Throne Speech wherein the Government said that it planned to introduce a comprehensive child care program. That was in 1984. There was then a committee which made recommendations in 1986. Then it was 1987 and now it is 1988 and we still do not have any legislation before us. The Government says the Opposition is holding up its legislative agenda. Nothing could be further from the truth. We are anxious to debate child care. Where is the legislation? It is not yet introduced after four years of government.

We could say the same for other legislation. Where is the tax reform legislation? In 1984 we were promised tax reform. In 1985 we were promised tax reform, in 1986 we were promised tax reform, and in 1987 we were promised tax reform. It is now 1988 and we still do not have legislation before us to enable us to deal with tax reform.

Where is the legislation for the trade deal? The international trade treaty was signed on January 2, 1988. January went past, February, March, April and May, and here we are in June now being asked to debate the trade deal. I am not prepared to say that the opposition Parties are holding up important legislation. We must at least see the legislation before we can react to it.

I want to appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, as a servant of the House and an individual who is profoundly committed to the practices and traditions of this place. At this stage the Government is asking us to suspend the rules, to throw them out the window, to set aside that for which we worked for months and months to achieve with the unanimous consent of all Members of this House. The Government is now asking us to abandon that and saying that if we do not abandon that it will use the heavy hand of its majority to force it through, to force us to do this and force us to do that because the Government has a majority. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not how the Standing Orders are developed.

I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, as a representative of all sides of the House, to rule against this initiative to suspend the Standing Orders of the House of Commons of Canada, to rule against this initiative by the Government to abandon the practices which we unanimously adopted only a few months ago.

I want to argue on two points, Mr. Speaker. I not only believe that the notice procedure for this motion was incorrect, as I have indicated, but also believe that the motion itself is a testament to the Government's general incompetence in the management of its legislative agenda. The fact that it has been unable to manage its legislative agenda properly is no reason for the Government to use the heavy hand of its huge majority to abandon the rules, practices, and traditions of this House.

I appeal to you, in the best interests of productivity, in the best interests of co-operation, and in the best interests of making the Parliament of Canada work for all the people of Canada, to consider this motion unacceptable and to rule against it.

Mr. Speaker: I have been listening very carefully to these arguments. I may as well say that I am not going to rule immediately. I may need some assistance from Hon. Members. I want to refer to a section of what we used to refer to as the British North America Act and now refer to as the Constitution Act. I refer to Section 49, and I know that other Members want to rise, and perhaps the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), may want to make some comments on this. Section 49 reads:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a Majority of Voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the Voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a Vote.

I would be deeply indebted to Hon. Members or anyone else who could find for me any precedent which has dealt with what the meaning of that particular clause is and whether or not it might be of any assistance to me when I am trying to determine the issue which has been brought before me.

I do not put that out for immediate response. I put that out because I may very well want Hon. Members to see if they can give me some assistance on it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I or others of my Party will be happy to respond to your invitation. I also want to give notice that, as you are raising Section 49 of the BNA Act, it would be useful also to consider the preamble of the BNA Act which says, to paraphrase, that its purpose was to create a country operating with a system similar in principle to that of Great Britain, and that also has implications.

Mr. Speaker: Again, also to help other Hon. Members, I have no difficulty in accepting that there ought to be some reason why the rules which we set for ourselves in this place ought to be abridged, changed, or otherwise. I do not have any difficulty accepting that premise on which I think the arguments I have heard are based. I am not taking away from any of the other points, but that is a seriously advanced argument and I do understand that. I also understand the invitation to look elsewhere for some guidance.

However, I am concerned about that particular section of the Constitution Act. I know Hon. Members would want to consider it in the next little while. I am not going to make a ruling without reserving. I will reserve, but I would like some advice on that.

Although I know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) is seeking the floor, and I will come to him, I think I will now hear from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Excuse me, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want a clarification of your comment on the BNA Act because I think it is important that the House understand something very clearly here. We are talking about an issue where the Speaker has to deal with decisions dealing with procedures before the House, not substantive issues. I do not think that the BNA Act, in the section to which you have referred, Section 49, talks about procedural issues. I do not think that the BNA Act, in the section to which you have referred, Section 49, talks about procedural issues. It talks about substantive matters. At that been some changes. I would like to leave it in the context that, at this time, we are talking about procedural, not substantive, issues.

Mr. Speaker: I am very much indebted for the comment the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has just made. That is one of the reasons why I thought it was appropriate at this time to put this question to Hon. Members. I will hear the Hon. Member further if it is necessary.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we will think about what you have brought to our attention and deal with it perhaps a little later this day.

The issue before us is really quite simple. In the last 25 years this House has sat for 80 per cent of the summers. The rules were changed about five years ago and this House has sat in three of the five summers since that rule change.

When I was first elected nine years ago, the House sat regularly on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evening until 10.30 p.m. The Government would basically put a motion to the House about whether it would like to continue to sit for a few hours three days a week and to sit for whatever portion of the summer was required to do the business of the House.

We have a procedural argument arising from the request in the motion by the Government. The House Leader for the Official Opposition began his argument by quoting Beauchesne, dealing with the principles of parliamentary law. He brought to our attention the phrase "to protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority". Indeed, the overuse of closure would border on the improvidence or potential tyranny of a majority. Occasionally, however, some kind of time allocation or closure is probably necessary.

What this Government seeks to do consistently, and certainly does in this motion, is the exact opposite of tyranny. This Government seeks the will of the House on the issue of whether we should sit for a few more hours three days a week and for a few more days into the summer so that we can give more careful consideration to the items on our agenda and so that we can give the Members more opportunity to express their opinions in public.

It states in the same paragraph of Beauchesne which the Hon. Member opposite brought to our attention that "to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner; to enable every Member to express his opinions", both of which are certainly consistent with the thrust of this motion "within limits necessary to preserve decorum and prevent an unnecessary waste of time".

Past history of this Chamber is filled with increasing tension and a decline in decorum when time is wasted. We began this morning with wasted time on two occasions, with the introduction of a Private Members' Bill.

Without the kind of initiative which is contained in this motion, I suggest that decorum may indeed decline because time will be wasted. Many speeches have been made both inside and outside the House by Members of the Opposition about their intention to filibuster and use up the time of the House. The behaviour of the Opposition for several months now has been consistent with that goal to waste time and bring the Government agenda to a halt.

The Government has provided Canadians with ample proof over the last three and a half years that it manages the public agenda very well. While the publicity surrounding the public agenda may cause difficulty, I think any fair minded analysis would lead to an inevitable conclusion that never in the history of this country has a Parliament succeeded in passing so many major pieces of legislation. We have also been able to handle the increased workload as a consequence of parliamentary reform and the powers that have been given to committees. We have dealt with Private Members' Business and Bills in a different way.

The Government knows how to manage the business and seeks permission of the House to manage an expansion of time for the next month or two. Members opposite say that we are seeking to suspend the Orders of the House. They are attempting to create the impression that this Party is trying to do something that would constitute a denial of democracy. If the expansion of the opportunity to debate, with the provisions of freedom of speech, is a denial of democracy then I have failed to comprehend what democracy is all about during my entire lifetime.

I draw your attention to Citation 9 on page 5 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which states:

> All rules are passed by the House by a simple majority and are altered, added to or removed in the same way.

The motion only seeks a temporary alteration. The same Citation states clearly:

> There is no procedural reason why any private Member or Minister of the Crown could not introduce a motion to alter the rules . . .

Erskine May, Twentieth Edition, at page 212, states the following about Standing Orders:

> Although a standing order differs from every other order of the House in having an express duration beyond the end of the session in which it is passed, no special procedure is, as a rule, involved in its passage except that after it has been agreed to on motion a further order is made declaring it to be a standing order of the House. Standing orders are not safeguarded—

This is particularly critical:

> —by any special procedure against amendment, repeal or suspension, whether explicitly or by an order contrary to their purport. Ordinary notice only is requisite for the necessary motion; and some standing orders have included arrangements for the suspension of their own provisions by a bare vote, without amendment or debate.

Notice, motion and a procedure whereby we can divide is what is required in changing our Standing Orders. All that we seek is a change to the Standing Orders to allow us to sit a little later and return to a time some five years ago when we sat through to ten o'clock at night all the time, and to move into the summer in the manner we have done for 20 out of the last 25 years. There is nothing unique or different about this.

My friends opposite wondered if there were precedents. There are many, but I would draw to your attention Hansard of April 24, 1961. The Government at that time was Conservative. A motion to change the sitting hours was moved by Mr. Diefenbaker. There were Standing Orders suspended in relationship thereto. That appears at page 467 at Hansard of that era. I skip forward to June 18, 1970. The Liberal Government was in power and there was a motion moved by Mr. Macdonald of Rosedale, seconded by Mr. Jamieson so there are precedents for the action the Government is undertaking at this time.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) raises what I think is perhaps a side issue, should a motion be under Government Orders or should it just be on motions during Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Gauthier: On motions.

Mr. Hawkes: The essential element of that dilemma—and probably the truth of the matter is that it could be done either way—

Mr. Gauthier: No, no!

Mr. Hawkes: If we go back to Erskine May, and the quote I gave, we decided to put the motion on the Order Paper under Government Orders. Why did we do that? Is it better for Parliament to do it that way? That is really the issue the Chair has been asked to address. When we did that, we took a step that required 48 hours notice. That is a very important principle. Things go wrong from time to time because parliamentarians do not have adequate notice. If we treat it as part of Routine Proceedings, the notice requirements are not the same. Members do not have the same opportunity to return from the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, or from wherever they have their constituencies. There is a lot of flying time to Ottawa in order to get back to consider something if Members consider it important.

By putting the motion under Government Orders, the 48 hours notice requirement is the maximal kind of notice requirement consistent with our traditions, and the Government chose to do that so that Members could be prepared for the debatable motion which followed. They could be here to vote on it because they had adequate warning.

Failure to do that involves the Opposition in a kind of Russian roulette. Simply putting the motion under Routine Proceedings, we never know. However, if we give the 48 hours notice under Government Orders there is warning. Surely this place is better served when a motion which would alter the hours in which we meet together proceeds by way of motion. Surely, it should also be seen as a government initiative. Attempts were made to reach agreement and no agreement was forthcoming. The Government, given its responsibility to manage the country, has decided that those three evenings a week, sitting until ten o'clock instead of six, and some time into the summer, is a sacrifice that surely every Member of the House should be prepared to make in the best interests of the country.

Earlier this day, Bill C-131, Aid to the Handicapped, was mentioned. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, if we get an opportunity as quickly as possible to debate this motion, to divide on it, and if it carries, then we are in a position to hold consultations—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Why won't you do it today?

Mr. Hawkes: —to give careful consideration to the priority list of each of the opposition Parties and to the priority list of the Government. We have a few more hours and a few more days we can use to ensure legislation which is important to the people of this country. Surely that is what we are all about, taking action, taking steps, doing things to help Canadians. That is why things are on the Order Paper. With those few more hours or days, we can do a better job of what it is we were sent here to do.

I wish you well with your decision, Mr. Speaker. After we have had a chance to look at Section 49 of the BNA Act, we will get back to you on that. I would like in closing to draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 56(1)(o). It deals with debatable motions, and our Standing Orders themselves clearly say "for the suspension of any Standing Order, unless otherwise provided".

Our Standing Orders make provision deliberately and specifically, for the introduction of a motion of this kind into the House. That is the Standing Order under which the motion was filed. It would indeed be a travesty of the rules of the House if Members were denied the opportunity to consider a motion filed under that part of the rules. They were put in there for good reason. The Government is using the rule and I do not know how much longer a procedural debate of this kind should go on until we get ourselves into the area of wasting further time in the House, having less time to get to legislation to help the handicapped and others.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think the Parliamentary Secretary is reflecting improperly not only on this House but on yourself, Sir, in questioning whether this procedural debate should go on longer and, to use his exact words, characterizing it as a waste of time. I say that this is barely disguised contempt for this House, and for you, Sir, and I call upon the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to withdraw those words and accept that procedural debates are the foundation of what this House is all about.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, if I have offended the House or the Member opposite in any way, I would be very happy to withdraw. I think a precise reading of my words, and I did try to say it precisely, would be that I wonder how much longer we can go on on this particular procedural item, which may certainly have aspects of clarity to it that may not always be present, how much longer we can go on without bringing the House into some kind of negative position.

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has made it clear that he was not trying to abuse any Hon. Member or the Chair.

I have some announcements I have to give because they are important. Before I do that, I just want to say something arising out of the exchange we have just had. I think Hon. Members realize that when Members of all Parties came together and set a calendar, it was done as a consequence of discussions, extensive discussion, and it was done, of course, in the better interests of this place and in the duties and responsibilities that Hon. Members have to perform. It does not seem to me to that to take a little while to listen to these arguments is untoward or any kind of abuse of the ordinary function of this House. I just want to assure Hon. Members that I am listening carefully, and I think I indicated that in my intervention a few minutes ago.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed consideration of Order No. 26 for the motion of Mr. Lewis to extend the sittings of the House.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I might just offer a tentative—and I stress tentative—comment on your request for comment on Section 49 of the BNA Act with respect to questions and the role of the Speaker in relation thereto. Unless I completely misunderstand what Your Honour read to us from that, it would seem that the questions that are referred to in that Section are questions on motions which are before the House which are about to be put to a vote referring, I believe, to the situation in which there may be a tie vote.

What we are trying to determine here is whether or not the motion that the Government intends should ever reach that stage, that is to say whether it is in order in the first place. I think the questions that are referred to by the word "questions" in the Section that Your Honour read to us are the questions which arise out of motions which have been deemed to be in order. What we are debating here is whether or not in fact the Government ought to be allowed to proceed with the motion. However, like everyone else, I would want to reserve the right to study the question more.

With respect to what is being debated here this afternoon, the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member from Calgary, went on at great length—

Mr. Lewis: Eloquence!

Mr. Blaikie: —and with a great deal of—

Mr. Lewis: Eloquence!

Mr. Blaikie: —self-righteous eloquence.

Mr. Lewis: Delete "self-righteous".

Mr. Keeper: Substitute "tedium".

Mr. Speaker: We have already had one call to order. I think that perhaps we should stay on the intellectual level which was set by those who commenced this debate. I do not want any Member of this House imputing any kind of motive to any other Member. I am sure that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill would not have intended that at all.

Mr. Blaikie: I certainly did not intend anything unparliamentary, Mr. Speaker. I certainly did not intend to attribute eloquence to the Hon. Member.

The fact remains that we often fall into the habit of accusing each other of having less respect than our opponents for parliamentary tradition and for the House. The fact remains that when people feel strongly about issues, they are wont to do within the rules, and sometimes beyond the rules, everything that they feel driven to do at that point in order to live out the strength with which they feel their views on any particular subject. I recall Members opposite in this House ringing the bells for 16 days, charging the Chair, et cetera. I think that these are things that we should keep in mind when we hear those kinds of comments.

What is happening here I want to speak to from the perspective of one who has been involved since the last parliament in the whole question of parliamentary reform.

Mr. Lewis: Procedurally?

Mr. Blaikie: Procedurally.

I want to speak to the question of the parliamentary calendar which is all wrapped up in what the Government is trying to do here. The Government claims the right, under the Standing Order that the Parliamentary Secretary cited just before he sat down, to change the Standing Order. I want to suggest that the Government does not have the right to change the Standing Order with respect to the parliamentary calendar that it claimed. It has the right, in the Standing Orders, to move a motion for the extension of hours with respect to the last two weeks of June. That right it has. That is a right that was unanimously agreed to in this House with respect to the rules.

Certainly, if that is all that the Government was trying to do today, then no one would have been able to raise their voice at all. It would be able to say that this is a provision of the Standing Orders that was adopted by the House. The Government would be well within its rights to do so. In my judgment, the Government is not within its rights to do this, unless one wants to maintain that by virtue of the clause that the Parliamentary Secretary cited that the Government has it within its power to change all the Standing Orders whenever it wants and whenever in the Government's judgment it does not like the Standing Orders, and it can unilaterally change whatever it wants about the Standing Orders.

What is at stake in the judgment that you have to make, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not the Government can at any time it likes use the Standing Order which the Parliamentary Secretary cited to change any or all of the Standing Orders that it deems to stand in the way of what it regards as the appropriate legislative agenda.

With respect, therefore, to what the Government proposes to change concerning the parliamentary calendar, I say that the parliamentary calendar is something which the Standing Orders clearly provide can only be changed in a manner consistent with the way it is laid down. That is to say, if the Government wants the House to sit beyond the calendar, then it has to go to you, Mr. Speaker. That is a judgment that Your Honour has to make, not a judgment that the majority of the House can make.

I said this last summer, once maybe we can get away with it, but twice and it is gone. We went through a lot of work to get a parliamentary calendar. We went through a lot of work to humanize this place so that Members of Parliament and their families could have some notion of when it was that they would have time away from Ottawa.

I do not understand for the life of me why this Government is determined to destroy that particular notion. It is not as if it has not had the time to get through its legislative agenda. If it has not got it through, then it has no one to blame but itself. Only recently it rose and said that it got through more Bills than any other Parliament in history. If that is true, that is not only a testimony to it but to the co-operation which the Opposition is able to demonstrate when we feel that the Government is dealing with us in good faith and reasonably.

The fact of the matter is, particularly of late, one does not know from one day to the next what the Government is going to call.

Mr. Lewis: Not true.

Mr. Blaikie: The Parliamentary Secretary got up to talk about what a wonderful thing the Government was doing. It was introducing this motion under Government Orders so that there would be 48 hours notice. We are lucky around here if we get 48 minutes notice with respect to what Bill is going to be debated next.

Mr. Lewis: Not true.

Mr. Blaikie: I find it very, very irritating to hear that coming from the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Lewis: This is not procedure, it is debate.

Mr. Blaikie: A lot of what was intended by the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons has turned out very, very well. We know that just recently there was a Private Members' Bill that went through the whole system and was passed. We see the committees working in ways that they did not work before. But some of the things have not worked out—

Mr. Lewis: Like petitions.

Mr. Blaikie: —for instance, the whole question of evening sittings. The idea of the reform committee was not to telescope the parliamentary day from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. The idea was to free up the evenings for committee work. That has not happened.

There are other things that have not worked. One of the things that is now at risk as a result of the phoney emergency back in August of 1987, and now this, is the parliamentary calendar.

I feel obliged to get on my feet on behalf of the members of those two reform committees that I belonged to, on behalf of Members now, and on behalf of future Members of Parliament, to say that if we sacrifice this parliamentary calendar to the Government's political agenda—and that is all it is, it is not as if there is any great emergency; if there is an emergency then it should make that case to the Chair—to its political pre-election agenda, then we will be doing a disservice not only to ourselves, but I want to make the larger claim that what is at stake is the health of the parliamentary institution itself.

It is not our self-interest that we should be concerned about here. We cannot go back to the game of psychological chicken that we played every year in the summer-time with each other. One of the things that the reform committee was trying to escape for everybody's sake was that kind of political chicken that gets played. There is no need to revive it. That is what is so infuriating about this.

There is absolutely no need for this motion to be before us except as a tactic on the part of the Government. I do not mind the Government using every tactic it has available to it within the rules. But what I do not like, and I have seen it happen a couple of times recently, is when the Government makes a unilateral decision with respect to how we are going to deal with the abortion issue and then it changes the Standing Orders accordingly, or the Government makes a unilateral decision with respect to the parliamentary calendar. For one thing it shows a lack of resources. The Government is not smart enough to figure out something within the rules, so it breaks the rules in order to get its way.

I am appealing to you, Mr. Speaker, to stem this growing tide of unilateral action on the part of the Government. Parliament is a Parliament. It has rules. It is not to be a dictatorship by the majority. If these types of procedures are allowed to stand we will come to see dictatorship by the parliamentary majority, the very thing that the Conservatives said time and again that they were against when the Liberals attempted to do it and unilaterally changed the Standing Orders in 1969. That was a tradition that we overcame in the early 1980s with the consensus of everyone here.

I find it a great parliamentary irony, tragedy, call it what you will, that it is a Conservative Government that is breaking that consensus and acting to re-establish the notion of the dictatorship of the majority in this House and lack of respect for the rules. All of us here, and future Parliaments, will come to rue the day we throw out the parliamentary calendar. We had it there with a little window where we had some sanity in this place. Some Members are trying to chuck that out of the window and everyone will pay as long as Parliament continues to exist for the fact that the Government put its own political agenda before the health of this institution.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): I have a few brief comments, Mr. Speaker. I understand that you have heard quite a bit of argument and I, for one, do not wish to prolong or repeat anything that may have been stated by other parties.

I wish to suggest to my friend, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), that he is suggesting two things. First, I wish to deal with the procedural argument which seems to be that the Standing Orders cannot be changed without unanimous consent. I would refer my hon. friend to Standing Order 56(1)(o) which states:

> 56(1) The following motions are debatable:
> Every motion:
> (o) for the suspension of any Standing Order unless otherwise provided;

Mr. Blaikie: It is otherwise provided.

Mr. Lewis: I submit that one is able to suspend the Standing Orders. Second, prior to my re-entering the Chamber, I understand that Your Honour made reference to section 49 of the British North America Act which states:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a Majority of Voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the Voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a Vote.

In other words, it seems to me that a question raised in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of the Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Blaikie: When it is in order. When the motion is in order. What we are debating is whether or not it is in order.

Mr. Kempling: You are not the judge.

Mr. Blaikie: Neither are you.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to have to give this some very careful consideration, probably assisted by all Hon. Members allowing each other to put their argument. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: I will close with the following comments: I will go on to read to my friend Section 50 of the British North America Act which states:

> Every House of Commons shall continue for Five Years from the Day of the Return of the Writs for choosing the House . . . and no longer.

I submit that we are not attempting to extend the period beyond the five year term.

Mr. Blaikie: Whoever said you were?

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend makes great reference to the fact that the parliamentary calendar has been agreed upon. I do not disagree with him. But my hon. friend, to use legal terms, can't suck and blow at the same time. One can't delay and delay and be everywhere in Hansard and the media saying: "We are going to stop free trade", and then when the Government wants to extend the hours of sitting to take care of an initiative of the House, complain that we are extending the time. One cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Blaikie: Bring in closure.

Mr. Lewis: We do not intend to bring in closure just now.

Mr. Blaikie: Take responsibility.

Mr. Lewis: We want to debate this issue on the merits. I submit that we have made the case that this is procedurally correct. I appreciate that the Chair will want some time to consider the procedural arguments. I can assure the House that when the procedural arguments are finished, we will be fully prepared to move on to other business, which is on the Order Paper, by the way, and we will be prepared to await your decision.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): I wish to make a few points, and I would like to pick up from where the Minister left off on his reference to Standing Order 57(1)(o). Indeed, that Standing Order states: "for the suspension of any Standing Order unless otherwise provided". It says "unless otherwise provided". In the Standing Orders we have a calendar provided for by the House and agreed to, after reform, by Members of the House.

Standing Order 5 states:

> 5. Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business . . .

If the Speaker has that authority, in my view, that is the point. The motion before us at this time is not in order. It addresses a point that only you, Mr. Speaker, with the reform of the rules, with the Standing Orders, have the authority to recall the House and to transact the business of the House.

I know some of the issues that have been put to the House today and repeated by some Members, for example, in regard to whether it is appropriate to have the motion before us, is it in order, or was it presented to the House in the appropriate form. Well, it was indeed presented on June 3 as a notice of motion, and it was transferred to government business. I do not want to argue whether the motion here is in order. I believe it is not in order, because it is not in the spirit of the new rules as they stand today.

I wish to make the point to the Speaker that there could be a good argument made, if one goes back to 1950 or 1960 when motions were regularly put down by the Government to extend hours. They were done in a very normal and accepted manner basically because the House only sat a few months in the year and it suited the purpose of all Members that the Government did have that motion there. But then there developed a need to reform the rules of the House, essentially because the business of the House became full time and not part time and rules which were in force at that time had to be changed.

I refer you to the McGrath report, Mr. Speaker.

the report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons, the Committee that tabled the report that formed the basis for parliamentary reform. I would like to quote a very interesting paragraph, at page 11:

> For nearly a hundred years after Confederation, federal parliamentarians showed great reluctance to change the Standing Orders. A closure rule was introduced in 1913, but it was in answer to an immediate crisis and was seldom used in later years. Some reforms were effected in 1927, chiefly a forty-minute limit on most speeches, but this went no real distance towards improving the effectiveness of the House, regulating debates or apportioning time.

And the Committee goes on to relate various attempts at procedural reform from 1940 to 1950.

And I quote at page 12:

> In 1958 a government was elected with the largest majority in Canadian history. During this period greater use was made of standing committees. However, the procedures of the House remained, in most substantive respects, those of 1867.

The same Government that was elected in 1958 with a very hefty majority in the House did not survive more than one and a half or two Parliaments, when it was defeated. Today, the Government is using the same strong arm methods to deal with the minority, and it too will be defeated because it does not understand the meaning of our Standing Orders or democracy.

Mr. Speaker, I may recall that when you referred to Section 49 of the BNA Act, which provides, and I quote:

> Questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a Majority of Voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the Voices are equal, but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a Vote.

Questions rising in the House of Commons! Mr. Speaker, those questions refer to substantive issues before the House, not to procedural issues. Perhaps I may recall the experience of yours truly here in the House, when at six o'clock, the Chair interrupted a vote called by the House, a vote that was not held because the Chair interrupted the proceedings, claiming that at 6 p.m. the motion had lapsed.

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion that was an infringement, a contradiction and even a violation of section 49 of our Constitution. However, the Speaker said in the House: "No, you are mistaken, Mr. Gauthier". I said: "Well, all right". I accepted his decision. But I would like to point out that our present Speaker told me himself that on procedural issues, the decision was up to him. I can agree with that. But I maintain that section 49 refers only to substantive issues, and when such issues are put before the House, the House decides.

[English]

If it referred to procedural matters, Mr. Speaker, we would still be in the situation where in former Parliaments one could appeal decisions of the Chair. Do you remember? We do not do that any more. That has been changed. Nobody in this House would dare reinstate that procedure, but we used to be able to appeal decisions of the Chair.

I want to talk about the Hon. James McGrath, Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland. In the debate on the reform of the House of Commons and the Government's response to committee recommendations he said—I hear some Members of the government side do not want me to quote what Mr. McGrath had to say. I had a lot of time for Jim. I think he did a terrific job for this House in bringing forth the reform of the House and I appreciate the great contribution he made. At page 9150 of Hansard for December 4, 1985 he said:

> We hope that the Government will give us a chance to function as legislators.

Further on in the text at page 9151 he makes a very interesting statement:

> I hope in saying this that the Government will not lose the spirit which prompted it to start this reform process in the first place because if there is one thing this Government will be remembered for, among all others, it will be its determination to reform this place in order to make it more meaningful for the people of Canada.

That is what this place is all about, Mr. Speaker. It is supposed to allow for debate, but the Government does not believe that. It thinks it can suspend debates and have its way despite the fact that we have adopted a Standing Order which says that the Government cannot do that, unless the Speaker has been asked and there has been consultation. Standing Order 5 reads:

> Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government—

The Government will be consulted, so why it would want to go around the Speaker, beats me, unless there is such arrogance—

Some Hon. Members: Come on!

Mr. Gauthier: I cannot read anything else except arrogance on the part of the Government in trying to use its massive majority to demean the minority and to have its way. I will reread the first Standing Order for members of the Government who do not understand the meaning of it. Standing Order 1 states:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

There is, in my view, a strong case to be made for this motion to be ruled out of order by the Speaker because it breaches the Standing Orders of the House. It is not in the spirit of the Standing Orders as we have developed them over the years. It took dozens of years to come to a point where we can have a sensible, reasonable agenda. The Government is playing havoc with it.

We were called back here last August 11 and we have worked since then. We are not the only ones. I think of the 2,800 support personnel in this House who have given us their sweat and their competence since last August and who will not have any holidays if this lousy Government has its way. I say to them: "Don't blame me. Blame the government Members. They are the ones preventing you from having a decent break after 11 months of hard work". I do not think the government Members should laugh when I say that because it is difficult for people in this place. It is difficult to take that kind of arrogance from that Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a number of points. First, and I do not think this one has been made clearly yet, the Government may be abusing the Opposition in this House by the way it is treating the rules. The Government is also abusing the Chair.

Mr. Fennell: Where have you been for the last three weeks?

Mr. Keeper: Under the rules of this Chamber, the Standing Orders, the Speaker makes the decision about whether the sittings of the House will be extended into the summer. The Government by putting in this notwithstanding motion is taking away the power of the Chair to make that decision and vesting it in the majority in this House. It is seeking to take away the prerogatives that have been given to the Chair by the rules of this House.

I believe the motion is out of order for a basic reason. When considering the motion we have to go back to basics. I refer to Beauchesne. In Chapter 1 under the Content and Sources of Parliamentary Procedure, we find Principles of Parliamentary Law. Citation 1 reads:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law have always been steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect the minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority; to secure the transaction of public business in an orderly manner.

It mentions both requirements, to assure the orderly transaction of public business and to protect the minority from the tyranny of the majority. If there is one thing that this motion does, it is to fail to protect the minority.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Keeper) is unfortunately caught by the clock. It is five o'clock, and I know the Hon. Member will understand that I am obliged to interrupt him. It has nothing to do with the substance of his remarks.

It being five o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' Bills as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--BILLS

[English]

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East) moved that Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act (list of ingredients), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this morning I had the opportunity, as do most Members of Parliament, to meet with some young people from my riding. They were from Prince of Wales School, and they wanted to know what we did in Parliament. I tried to explain to them—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I hope that when she explained it, she had the support of all Hon. Members as to just exactly what we do do here.

Ms. Copps: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I tried to explain to the students that as well as the work we do in Question Period which is often the cut and thrust of debate, we do work in committee and we try to pass laws to help the people of Canada. I think this Bill that I am proposing today, Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act, is probably a very good example of how Parliament and in fact all Members of Parliament can work together to promote a law which will actually save lives.

I must say that I owe this initiative to a real tragedy which occurred in my area. If it is permissible, I would like to dedicate my efforts in this regard to the memory of a young man by the name of Christian Taylor. He was a 17-year-old young man, a student leader in his community and a volunteer worker. He was probably the kind of son that every parent would be very proud of. He had only one problem. Christian Taylor suffered severe food allergies, allergies so severe that every time he ate outside his home, he was engaging in Russian roulette.

Christian was very careful. He made sure that when he went to a fast food restaurant, he inquired if nuts, a product to which he was extremely allergic, were present in any of the foods he would eat. Unfortunately, like many 17-year-olds, he had been out playing a hockey game and he and his friends made their way to the local Arby's Restaurant. There was a big lineup at the restaurant and one of his friends picked up an apple turnover.

Christian had never eaten an apple turnover at Arby's before, but he had eaten an apple turnover with no side effects at McDonald's and he had also eaten an apple turnover at Harvey's. He assumed that an apple turnover was an apple turnover. He did not realize that in fact, the apple turnovers at Arby's actually include invisibly ground up hazelnuts.

Christian took a bite of the apple turnover, and as soon as he ate it, he started to have a reaction. He had been told by his physician that if he ever had an allergic reaction to food, he would always have time to be treated, so he immediately hopped on his bicycle and rode home. By the time he got home, he collapsed in his father's arms. His last words before he died were: "Daddy, help me," and he died in his father's arms.

His mother came to see me. She told me that she had been lying asleep on the couch after having watched a soap opera or a television show and she was so sad because she did not even wake up before her son died. She asked me why the Government does not pass legislation that will let people know what they eat when they go to fast food restaurants. It seemed rather simple to me. We get involved in many long and onerous debates relating to everything from free trade to the issue of abortion. Many questions are not so simple, but I thought that it would help if I spoke to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp).

When the regulations to the Food and Drugs Act that require the labelling of food sold in grocery stores were originally drafted, it was done because most people ate primarily home cooked meals. In 1988, with the way society has changed, almost half of all meals are eaten outside the home. I asked the Minister if he would consider moving an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act that would deal with fast food.

This food already comes in very expensive prepackaging. The major chains spend a lot of money on very elaborate packaging to try to draw the customers to their particular products. I asked the Minister if he could pass an amendment to the Food and Drugs Act, by regulation, not necessarily by law, to require the major chains to label the food that is prepackaged. This would provide that those who bought Big Macs, as well as seeing the fancy lettering on the package, would see stamped on the side in not very large letters a list of the ingredients. If I go to buy a pizza at the grocery store, by law that pizza has to have the ingredients listed. This seemed to make sense to me.

When I spoke to the Minister, I did not want to make a political issue out of this. The Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) has been working very hard on this issue because the young man who died was in fact from his riding. I thought, as did the Hon. Member for Burlington, that this was the kind of issue that need not be a partisan issue. We do a lot of partisan wrangling in this House, but this seemed to be an issue on which all Parties could agree.

The Minister said that he would look into it. Several weeks later, having heard no response, I asked the Minister to come to the committee. When the Minister came to the committee, he said basically that no labelling legislation could be brought forward because it would be too costly and too onerous. He said in fact that the onus of deciding to eat or not eat should lie with the consumer. I agree that the consumer has to accept some responsibility. However, in the 1980s, according to the most recent figures of the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association, $11 billion is being spend on food outside the home.

Even employees of fast food chains have told me: "I wish you could pass this law because I'm flipping hamburgers, but when someone asks me what is in the hamburgers, because they may have an allergy, I can't tell them." An employee of a local fast food restaurant actually said: "I hope this legislation goes through because there is not a day that goes by that somebody doesn't ask me what's in the hamburgers and I can't tell them".

I think one letter highlights the situation. It is written in very large printing and reads:

> Dear Mrs. Copps,
> I'm Bradley Adams. I'm seven years old. I'm very upset that we mostly don't go to restaurants because we don't know what is in the food. I'm allergic to nuts, peanuts and fish. When I eat those things my throat closes over and I could die. I'm really scared. Thank you for helping me. Love, Bradley.

That is from a letter from Toronto. His mother followed it up with a letter thanking me for introducing and supporting this cause. She also wrote:

> Even going to a birthday party can cause problems if it is at McDonald's or Chuck E. Cheese. These places will not or cannot tell you what is in the food. Often the staff in these places do not understand why you are asking what the ingredients are and they think you are just another crazy mother. I think that this is what bothers me the most. There has to be something available so that we can know what he is eating and in doing so make life a little easier for both the people with the allergies and those who love them.

If the House deems that the motion I am bringing forward today is worth examining in greater detail, it could be improved upon. It could be made better. I would hope that the latitude I have allowed the Minister in the way of regulations would not place an onerous burden on him. I have been very specific in the legislation, particularly with respect to individual restaurants.

I recognize that for an individual restaurateur, having to label all his or her goods might be onerous. I said in part we should focus our initial attention on the 24 major fast food chains which have what is called a limited menu. They are in a position right now to tell us for the most part what is in the food they are preparing. If the Government, through acceptance of this Bill, moves to require that restaurants with limited menus be required to publish the ingredients on the package or make available a specific listing, that would certainly be a step in the right direction.

I did not realize until I got involved in this dossier that on average one person a month in Canada dies from a reaction to food. There are literally hundreds who end up sick or in hospital for the same reason. I do not think it is too much to ask that our food and drug regulations require the same kind of information with respect to food in restaurants that they do in grocery stores.

The Hon. Member for Burlington may have been in the House when the original food and drug regulations were introduced. No one in the 1970s thought that the wave of the 1980s was going to be eating out. Most people wanted to know what was in the food bought in grocery stores because they would go home and cook it. However, eating out in this day and age in many cases is a downright necessity.

I have not done a scientific study but the people who die because of this tend to be teenagers. They are just becoming independent, they may be out with their friends and not under the eye of their parents. At the same time, they tend to know they have an allergy. It is not information that is just sprung on them. If they were able, through a listing of ingredients on fast food restaurant boxes, to read that peanuts or fish or some other allergen was in the product, they would be in a position to make an intelligent choice about whether or not they could eat it.

I was pleased to hear most recently when the Canadian Food Services and Restaurant Association came before the committee, that McDonald's, the largest company in this field and a trend-setter, is moving on its own to begin, hopefully within the next two to three months, to provide a listing of all ingredients in all its products. I applaud them for that. I hope that is a trend which the industry will want to follow through on. For the Minister to say, as he has, that it is too onerous a proposition is belied by the facts. McDonald's is already working on a listing and that shows it can be done, especially when you are dealing with pre-set, formula menus which is the case in most big chains.

Red Lobster is looking at preparing a specific menu which would be directed to people with allergies. For example, if you have an allergy to fish, you might not order fish but you might order something else which happens to have a trace of fish in the sauce and subsequently be subject to the same bad reaction. The corporate community is beginning to be sensitive, but I dare say one of the reasons they are acting is because organizations like the Canadian Allergy Information Association, the Consumers' Association of Canada, which has endorsed my Bill, and even the Ontario Medical Association is moving in that direction, along with literally dozens of municipalities and school boards have come together and said we need some kind of legislation. While I do not think my Bill is necessarily the perfect vehicle, it does permit the issue to be referred to committee for further study in order to make a better Bill.

I think we saw in the smoking legislation that was just passed an example of political Parties getting together to deal with an important problem. When Bill C-204 was first introduced there were flaws and changes had to be made. However, once it was referred to committee the three political Parties sat down and worked on it so that it came back to the House in a more acceptable form and it actually became law.

I hope we will have the same opportunity with this Bill. Because what we are talking about here is the right of consumers to know the basic facts about what they eat away from home. It is all very well to say that if you have allergies, you cannot eat away from home, but for all practical purposes, in the world of 1988, it is not always possible to eat at home.

First and foremost, my Bill applies to the 24 largest companies, i.e. the big chains, not the small restaurants, because it would have been too difficult for small businesses to comply. But if you start with the 24 major companies like McDonald's and Wendy's—we know all the big chains—they already have set menus and it is not too difficult. Even company representatives have admitted that several of them already have the ability to put on the package the specific ingredients in hamburgers or whatever.

Mr. Speaker, I do not say that my Bill is perfect, because obviously we can have changes. All that I would hope, on behalf of dozens of people who have died—about a dozen die every year from allergies, others are hospitalized—is that the House decides to refer the Bill to a committee for further study.

Because some faults can certainly be pointed out in my own Bill one might say, for example, that I have given the Minister the right to define a "chain", because I did not want all small businesses to be affected. So I said that if it is up to the Minister to decide what a "chain" is, he can decide that only the largest companies are included, or if there are other ways to inform the public about allergies, smaller companies could be involved. It depends on the Minister.

All I ask is that the House find this question sufficiently important. Mr. Speaker, I have received more than 10,000 petitions on this subject already. I have received about a hundred letters. The office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) tells us that he has received more than 4,000 letters of support for a bill concerning food and a list of ingredients in food.

Mr. Speaker, the Consumer's Association of Canada supports my Bill, and apparently, although I have yet to receive the letter, the day before yesterday articles in the newspapers said that the Ontario Medical Association was supporting my Bill as well. More than a dozen members of school boards in the Province of Ontario have also expressed their support. The Canadian Council on Children and Youth is very interested. The Association even called our office for more information, and the director said he would personally support the Bill.

I think that even if there are some specific problems regarding my approach in this Bill, if the House agrees with the principle—we would start with the big companies, asking them to list the ingredients on the container—the whole subject could be referred to committee for more detailed consideration.

This morning, some students came to see me and asked me what we do in Parliament. I think we can say that we work together. Parliament is not just Oral Question Period and confrontation. We can also do a good job together. With the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), and I know the Hon. Member for Chatham is interested and other Members who agree to proceed, I hope that we will be able to proceed as soon as possible, if the House decides to support my Bill.

[English]

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for yielding her place in the order of speakers so that I could speak next. I appreciate that very much.

I want to compliment the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the issue she has brought forward. It is a very critical issue in our lives today. It is a much more widespread problem than most of the public realizes. It so happens that a member of my staff suffers from the same kind of allergy as she described in the young man whose parents came to see her. In the case of my staff member, if a knife is used to cut a Christmas cake, for example, and then used to cut something else and he eats that other food, that is enough contamination to make him choke.

I know this is a very serious and very widespread problem. However, there is an additional problem. The Member talked about natural foods. There is a growing problem related to this, that is, the increasing use of chemical additives by commercial establishments to preserve food in order that it has a longer shelf life and, in some cases, supposedly to enhance the flavour. However, these chemicals are increasingly becoming a danger to many Canadians.

It so happens that my wife and I were attending a conference a few years ago outside of Canada. She went to a local restaurant and had just a portion of a shrimp omelette, a very innocent looking meal. Yet, within hours she was going into second degree shock because of an additive called metabisulphide. She had to receive extensive treatments of Prednisone to counteract that chemical.

An additional problem with this is the inertia which exists in the Department of Health where officials ought to be proactive on this issue. When we returned from that trip my wife took the time to do some research on it. She went to her doctor and it so happened that he had suffered from the same kind of allergic poisoning just prior to that. The same kind of preservative was being sprayed on the corks of wine bottles. There was just enough preservative on a cork to give him the same kind of allergic reaction.

My wife met with officials in the Health Department and described to them in clinical detail exactly what was happening. What bothers me most is that they gave her careful, precise, and polite attention while she was there but then it was, it seems to me, out of sight, out of mind. Nothing happened after that. It appears as though officials in the Health Department do not recognize a problem until they have determined that it is a problem, that no one else has the right to define a problem until they see it as one.

Therefore, I want to compliment the Member for Hamilton East for taking the initiative she has on this particular Bill. I think this is a very important issue. It so happens that I do not think that the provisions of the Bill, as it stands today, make it a manageable proposition. It asks every restaurant to label "all the ingredients in such food is available for consultation by any person, upon request, during business hours".

First, some of that would be superfluous. If you know you are allergic to sesame seeds and you see hamburgers served on sesame seed buns, they should not have to be labelled. I mean, you can see that. Yet, under the provisions of that Bill a restaurateur would be liable to violation of this act if the buns were not so labelled.

Therefore, I think some of the Bill is superfluous and it is certainly difficult to manage. However, as the Member has pointed out, it may be that while the Bill has flaws it could be improved upon. That could be done in committee.

I encourage the Member to keep pressing on this issue to ensure that the Department of Health becomes pro-active on it and starts giving Canadian citizens the protection they deserve at a reasonable level so that when they go into a restaurant or buy food in a grocery store they are not buying a hazard, unbeknownst to them. When citizens take reasonable precautions in buying their food, they should not be put at unreasonable risk. They should get the protection they need. I would encourage the Member to pursue the legislation as vigorously as she can.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, on October 8, 1987, nine year old Kelly Chinnick died of anaphylactic shock due to a taste of icing at a Thanksgiving celebration at school. Kelly was allergic to nuts and was unaware of peanut butter in the icing. I have a number of very sad letters in my file which tell of the tragedy the parents suffered because Kelly died as a result of this lack of knowledge.

As the Member of Parliament for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has described, a young man in Burlington died of an allergic reaction after eating an apple turnover which he purchased from a fast food restaurant. The young man was allergic to hazelnuts and was apparently well aware of this fact. However, naturally enough, he assumed that since he had been able to eat apple turnovers from other stores this apple turnover as well would be free of nuts.

Perhaps if there had been some way for this boy to make a quick check of ingredients through a listing of ingredients in the foods sold at that outlet, he would be alive today.

The Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare, in addition to considering the whole question of food labelling from the point of view of the Member who is presenting this Bill, also heard from the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association which proposed a food chart as an alternate way of informing customers of the food ingredients.

Whether the method of choice is a label, a chart, or a combination of both, I am sure all Members and the public would agree that it is vital that information on food ingredients be made available to the public, particularly to people who are subject to allergies. The consumer must have this vital information. It is a matter of life and death in some cases.

Persons who have food allergies must have information about food ingredients in order to protect themselves. It is certainly a responsibility of food services as well to provide information about what is in the foods they are serving.

It is difficult to determine how to do this in a practical way, but there is no question that the food industry has a responsibility. The consumer also has a responsibility, not only to use this information but to demand more information and to demand that the public as a whole is informed.

I myself had to learn by trial and error what foods trigger migraine headaches. Simple health information should provide that. The impact of MSG is something from which many of us suffer as well. Although that is certainly not a killer, it is symbolic of the allergies which many of us have in a slighter form. Therefore, it is not only vital that the information be provided, it is crucial that we alert the public and instruct it how to use information and where to get more.

Health and Welfare Canada and the Department of Consumer Affairs also have a very particular responsibility. I am concerned that the federal Department of Health has not taken more initiative on this matter. It should be assisting in facilitating practical measures, including an assessment of the proposals in this Bill.

While it is not a complete solution, this Bill would amend the Food and Drugs Act to compel restaurants, particularly the larger chain restaurants, to provide a list of all ingredients in any food it sells, as well as any packaged foods sold by the outlets. The Hon. Member who just spoke pointed out that it may be difficult to implement these requirements in some respects. The problem is with the smaller restaurants, independent cafes and so on.

I have referred to witnesses who appeared before the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. The Canadian Restaurants and Food Services Association which appeared on behalf of the food industry admitted that it has a major responsibility to protect customers who have a risk of allergies from food. They certainly are concerned about this issue and have a very vested interest on behalf of their restaurant customers. They have proposed the use of a food chart which is currently being tested by some of the larger food chains. It was developed in consultation with the Allergy Information Association, an organization to which we should pay tribute. It has done excellent work in this field. It was developed in consultation with the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It would list the major food allergies and would be distributed to a vast range of limited menu restaurants. Of course, that is one of the restrictions to this technique.

The two advantages of the chart are that it could be implemented quickly and could be utilized by a large number of restaurants, particularly the large chains. The use of such precautions by some of the restaurants we mentioned could possibly have protected young people from death. The disadvantage of the chart system is that it provides limited coverage.

While the Bill proposed by the Member for Hamilton East has some limitations, any positive steps in this area should be supported. The committee would have to consider the fact that often the consumer does not see the label after the product has been purchased. Second, only the very large food chains could probably comply with the legislation due to the considerable cost of this technique. Third, the limited menu restaurants use a container for many different purposes, unlike McDonald's, so that the list of ingredients would be rather extensive and maybe very impractical. Finally, it would take a long time to implement the labelling procedure. However, it is a positive step which should be investigated. It may be practical to provide for a combination of a chart and labelling method.

The restaurants may also change their approach and limit the use of such things as MSG which has a high allergy content. There is no question that we should pursue all positive suggestions for informing people who have allergies of the ingredients of food items on restaurant menus. Of course, people must take responsibility for their own health, but they must have adequate information in order to do so. We favour all methods, including this Bill, that will be a positive step toward preventing tragic deaths such as those of the children who died from apple turnovers and concealed nuts.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, I was Chairman of the Private Members' Business committee when this matter came before us. I am pleased that the committee acted in the usual fashion and immediately found consensus to approve this Bill as an item to be voted on in the House of Commons.

The young gentleman referred to by the Hon Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) lived in my riding. Christian Taylor's mother came to see me after her son's death. To say the least, I was shocked at what happened and wrote to the Minister, asking him to look into the matter, and I know that his officials have taken some action. The matter goes far beyond this tragic incident.

I am sure that many of us have been with people who have not ordered certain items because of allergies. Recently, a lady came to talk to me about MSG. She said she would not go to a certain type of restaurant because it used large quantities of MSG. I asked her if she knew that some restaurants advertise that they do not use MSG. She suggested that there be a list of those restaurants published so people would know about it. I understand now that there are many people who are allergic to MSG and perhaps some steps should be taken to provide for a listing of ingredients used in the preparation of products.

After I learned of the unfortunate incident concerning Christian Taylor, I happened to speak to an allergist during a meeting I attended in Toronto. I said that Christian Taylor's mother had told me of her son's death as a result of eating an apple turnover. The allergist offered what I thought to be a rather cool and callous attitude toward the matter. He said that anyone who has a serious allergy should not eat out. I suggested that this may be all right for adults who are more disciplined, but it would be difficult for young people. I finally told him that I had written to the Minister about this incident in the hope that some steps would be taken.

I am pleased to support the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I know that the officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare have had numerous meetings with the officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to determine how this legislation could be carried out. While there are many difficult problems to overcome, it should not detract us from moving on.

We know that the fast food industry subcontracts for all their ingredients, many of which are precooked. The suppliers will have to be consulted about the ingredients being used and perhaps asked to be more specific. I believe this will be a positive step and will regulate an industry more precisely than it is now. While none of us like more Government regulations, where the result of no regulations can cause someone to die or become seriously ill or impaired, then I believe this is a classical case where Government should move and regulate.

The issue for us is to get this Bill to a committee and get it there as soon as possible. Perhaps at the next sitting, the next time the matter comes up for debate in the House, we can move to have it passed on to committee. I think it is useful that we hear from as many Members as possible today in this debate so they can put on the record the various experiences they have had in their constituencies and, by doing that, highlight the importance and seriousness of this matter.

It is important that we get together with officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and the people in the industry, of course, to see how we can, in practical terms, work this matter through. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East in drafting the legislation, has left it open for amendment. I think that is good. It is a wise move on her part. In fact, she said in the House today that she looked forward to officials from the Department of National Health and Welfare and others contributing to this Bill and putting in place amendments and regulations that will make it work in a proper and effective way. We should move to expedite this Bill through the debate process and pass it along to committee so it can be put in place at the earliest possible date.

We should hear from officials of the Department of National Health and Welfare and officials from the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs as to the progress they have made. We should hear their recommendations and the results of their discussions with the food industry. We know that has been going on for sometime. It is useful to have this debate so that this subject that is so serious can be brought home to those who have concerns about food additives. Let us resolve to move this matter to committee when it next comes before this House for debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak in support of the Bill of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), Bill C-289. It is a Bill that has just recently been introduced into the House of Commons. Bill C-289, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act, is really more than a Bill which will amend the Food and Drugs Act. This Bill is a reflection of very serious concerns of parents and other members of our society who live in constant worry about the contents of the food they are about to eat when they are out in restaurants.

It is very interesting statistically to note that in 1968, as an example, the Canadian Restaurant and Food Services Association told us that 18 per cent of all people in Canada eat meals outside of their home. Here we are in 1988, just under 20 years later, and more than 36 per cent of the population eat one out of three meals outside of their homes. I think that is a reflection of the changing dynamics of the society in which we live. We have working families and more access to fast-food chains.

It is part and parcel of daily life to go to get a hamburger at Wendy's or whatever happens to be the fast food chain in the area. It is fun to go out on Sunday with one's children and have a bite to eat. But if you happen to be the parent of a child or a teenager who has a severe allergy, you are taking their lives in your hands, not because you are not a responsible human being, when you in all good faith sit down and partake of a meal and there are serious consequences. If the question is asked, for example, if there are any nuts in a particular food, or is there a particular kind of mayonnaise which contains eggs in this food, and there is not a clear and unequivocal answer, or a knowledgeable answer, you have taken your life in your hands if you eat it and are allergic to it.

Members in the House today have talked about the sad case of a young man whom I gather is from the riding of the Hon. Member who just spoke. This young man was allergic to nuts and died at the very early age of 17 years. What a tragedy that was. He had eaten packaged apple turnovers at other restaurants without harm, but this particular restaurant made their apple turnovers—and I am sure they would be quite delicious if you were not allergic to them—with hazelnuts. The unfortunate aspect is that here was another mother who was convinced these were fine, edible and safe for her youngster. Had he been alone or with a group of friends, he probably would have felt it was perfectly acceptable to eat the apple turnover because he had eaten them before and there was no problem.

My colleague has recommended a Private Member's Bill that would enable better information, increased food ingredient information, available to Canadians who eat in restaurants. I think it is absolutely key that where possible we, as parliamentarians, bring this problem to the considered attention of Ministers of this House so they can enact the kind of legislation which can prevent unnecessary deaths or sickness in our society. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) pointed out that one could suffer from severe migraine headaches from eating certain kinds of foods.

I think what is important is the provision for the kind of information which will enable people to help themselves, and we can go about listing that kind of information in a place that would be easily accessible and readily understood. I was quite pleased to hear that the Allergy Information Association has given some very concrete suggestions. It is one of the many health groups which have supported this action to amend the Food and Drugs Act, as well as others, including the St. John's Ambulance, Burlington Branch, the Washington Centre for Science in Public Institutions, and the Consumer Association of Canada, which has recently joined in support of this very important move to enable a change to the Food and Drugs Act.

Thirty-five municipalities, counties, towns and cities have passed resolutions in favour of the restaurant food labelling, and these are Government supported initiatives. After all, municipalities are part of the government structure of the country in which we live.

Eleven school boards of education have passed similar resolutions. We have received dozens and dozens of telegrams. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) received in excess of 4,800 letters from May 1, 1987 to May 1, 1988, from Canadians calling for food labelling. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, has received over 100 letters in response to her new Bill. We have had a total of 11,000 petitions, with signatures, collected. This indicates that the population is seriously concerned about what is going on. This is an expression of the will of the population to ask us to please move and to effect the kind of change which will protect our citizens.

I was interested in my colleague's approach when he talked about the fact that young teenagers who are just starting to be independent cannot be monitored. They are having fun, and although they are aware of the potential danger they might not ask the question. He said that if there is an uninformed person giving that information, then how can they protect themselves? It is important to provide accurate information so that allergies to mushrooms, seafood, peanuts, soy oil, and all these various things is prevented in the best way possible.

It is important to make the Department of Health proactive. It is important that Canada Health and Welfare hear the voices of the Members of the House of Commons and is sensitized to the reality of our seriousness in this particular action. It is not just a ploy. All Members of the House regardless of political affiliation or Party are bringing this concern to the population.

I strongly recommend that while we may have some problems around this particular Bill, Mr. Speaker, you and I know that where there is a will there is a way. We can look at this problem from the point of view of finding creative solutions which I am sure will be forthcoming both from the industry and from the population at large.

I strongly urge all Members of the House to pursue all positions and all possible suggestions in support of this legislation, and to take it seriously. I hope that this Bill will proceed to second reading and be referred to a legislative committee as soon as possible.

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, the issue of food adverse reactions and the labelling of restaurant foods is indeed a very complex matter. It cannot be resolved through a simple solution such as enacting regulations that would require ingredient labelling on all restaurant foods. That is not to say that this situation does not require action to provide some additional measure of protection to the sensitive consumer. However, before instituting a unilateral solution, we should consider fully all possible courses of action.

In this regard the Health Protection Branch of Health and Welfare Canada has dealt in the past with specific problems of adverse reactions to certain food additives and is presently investigating the entire area of concern on a much broader front. The following comments will outline briefly how the Health Protection Branch has addressed this issue in the past, and the various approaches that are presently being investigated.

Many years ago, monosodium glutamate, MSG, a common ingredient used as a flavour enhancer in many foods, was found to cause untoward reactions in a small portion of the population. MSG was already required, under the Canadian food and drug regulations, to be declared on the labels of prepackaged foods, so foods eaten in restaurants were the major focus in this situation.

The Health Protection Branch consulted with representatives of the food processing industry to determine the extent of the use of MSG. It also consulted medical and toxicological experts to determine the severity of these adverse reactions. Based on the information obtained from these consultations, it was concluded that MSG did not pose a life-threatening situation, and that a program of education for both consumer and food service personnel would offer the best means of reducing the potential for such reactions to occur. To this end the Health Protection Branch produced a fact sheet on MSG for distribution to the public. This program appears to have worked very well to make the public more aware of this particular problem.

In the early 1980s another issue in the food allergy and adverse reaction area presented itself. This time it was sulphites, a group of substances that had been widely used for years as preservatives. The adverse reactions suffered by some consumers to these substances were severe enough to require medical attention and even hospitalization.

The Health Protection Branch once again sought input from several expert sources on this issue. From the many meetings and consultations with groups such as the Allergy Information Association, the Canadian Society of Allergy and Clinical Immunology, the medical community, regulatory agencies from other countries, and the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association, there emerged a clearer picture of the problem.

It was learned that the use of sulphites on fresh fruits and vegetables, such as in salad bars, was the most common source of problems. In further meetings with the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association this organization voluntarily moved to discourage the use of sulphites among its members. In addition, the Health Protection Branch felt it prudent to enact appropriate regulations prohibiting this use of sulphites. As well, it continued its program of consumer education through the preparation and dissemination of a fact sheet on sulphites. Based on the available information it would appear that these actions have been effective.

Today, we are faced with a situation in which the labelling of food ingredients in all restaurant foods and food allergies have been brought to the attention of the entire nation by the deaths of young Canadians. There is certainly unanimous agreement among the Members of the House that the deaths of these young people are tragic and that something should be done to prevent, to the extent possible, any further incidents. However, this action should be based on a sound, rational approach to the problem. This is the type of action that is expected to be forthcoming from the Health Protection Branch.

Representatives of the Health Protection Branch have already entered into a round of consultations with the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association and the Allergy

Information Association to discuss the various available courses of action to address this serious situation. Among the available options are the use of signs in restaurants advising customers about the ingredients in the meals served in that establishment, or labelling the individual serving of food.

The first option was tried in the United States with the use of sulphites in foods in salad bars. However, as it turned out, this approach was difficult to enforce and hence was not very effective even in a limited application such as salad bars. Based on this experience, one can imagine the difficulties this approach would pose trying to cope with a much broader based situation. The logistics of instituting the latter choice, that is, the labelling of individual servings, renders it virtually impossible for a many-itemed menu and recipes which might frequently vary depending on the availability of ingredients.

Another option, of course, would be to put ingredient information on the menus. The economic considerations and labour requirements to keep the menus updated would be substantial with no guarantee that people would even read or understand the information. These comments would also apply to the preparation of a booklet containing such information for the consumer.

Another possibility is the appointment of one person in each establishment who is responsible for consulting with and advising patrons on the ingredients in the meals served in that establishment. While such a personal touch does have some appeal, it places a sizable burden on the designated person, and problems could arise if this person were not available or had to advise several consumers at different tables which would slow service and possibly irritate the customers.

Although there are many courses of action to address this situation, there is not a simple and convenient solution to this entire problem. However, I am advised that the Health Protection Branch, the Allergy Information Association and the Canadian Restaurant and Foodservices Association have recognized the immensity and the complexity of this problem. They are agreed that the first efforts at providing ingredient information to the consumer should be concentrated in the "quick service" food industry.

Furthermore, all parties have agreed that at the present time it is only feasible to provide this information for the allergens responsible for the most severe and/or most frequent adverse reactions. A list of these allergens is in preparation with the assistance and support of the Allergy Information Association, and with input to be solicited from the medical profession. The information on the presence of these selected allergens in the menu items of the food service establishment is intended to be presented to the consumer in an easy to understand chart format. The timetable and other details of the implementation of this chart into the "quick service" establishments are under consideration at this time.

If this Bill before us today is passed, we shall be forcing a bureaucratic posture on the public and the food industry without any consideration of the effectiveness of this measure or the difficulties involved in implementing this action. In fact, it may well jeopardize the progress being made by the health professionals in resolving this matter.

We should let these issues continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2), the Order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

• (1800)

I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields), informing the Chair that he is unable to present his motion during "Private Members' Hour" tomorrow, Friday, June 10, 1988. Since it was not possible to proceed, pursuant to Standing Order 39, with an exchange of positions in the order of precedence, I herewith order the Clerk's office to place this item at the bottom of the order of precedence. Since the notice will be deleted, "Private Member's Hour" will be cancelled, and pursuant to Standing Order 39, the House will continue with or revert to the business before it prior to "Private Members' Hour", until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TRANSCONA SHOPS—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE WORK WILL REMAIN IN WINNIPEG/REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pursue a question that I asked of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) some time ago. I rose at that time to ask whether the rumours were true that I had heard about the closing of the CN reclamation plant in my riding. The Minister answered that this indeed was under consideration. Only a few weeks later CN announced that it was closing down what is known as the reclaim in Transcona. I rise today to continue my objection to this decision by CN.

I raise this issue in Parliament because I see it as part of a continuing pattern of depriving Winnipeg, in this case Transcona, of what should naturally be there as a result of its relationship with CN and as a result of its geographical location.

We know that Winnipegers are very sensitive, and rightly so, about work leaving Winnipeg for other parts of Canada. This sensitivity was rubbed raw by the CF-18 decision, but it existed beforehand. It goes back to the decision of the Government, shortly after its election in 1984, to cancel the VIA Rail shop that was to be built in Winnipeg, the manufacturing technology centre, and various other things that were scheduled for Winnipeg but which the Tories put the kibosh on.

Winnipegers have watched the behaviour of the Conservatives with respect to these issues. They are now nervous about Air Canada, the implications of the privatization, and the decision that Air Canada has to make with regard to the purchase of new aircraft and the effect that might have on Winnipeg. In all these things the anxiety of Winnipegers is quite justified and is not to be dismissed as whining, in the manner the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay) referred to the attitude of Winnipegers a few weeks ago. The Hon. Member for St. Boniface would do well to have a great deal more respect for Winnipegers' view of how they have been treated by this Government than he obviously does, but that is another matter.

The closing of the reclaim in Transcona is another instance of what we are talking about. One of the reasons given by CN for this closing is that it does not have as much rolling stock as it used to, much of its rolling stock that it does have is leased, and the leased cars are scrapped elsewhere. This is certainly true. The fact remains that many of us have bitterly complained for years about this policy of leasing stock, both in the House and in the transport committee.

It is irritating enough to be stopped by a train, but, when you have to be stopped at a railway crossing and you count leased American cars going by, you know that with every car jobs in the car shop in Transcona have gone, jobs in the reclaim in Transcona have gone, and jobs in a number of other associated places have gone. Yet the Government has done nothing to make CN see that the long-range viability of the transportation industry in Canada, indeed of itself, is based not on becoming dependent on American rolling stock but on continuing to have the kind of infrastructure it has had over the years.

I have a backgrounder here prepared by CN with respect to the closure about which I am speaking. CN makes the argument that it closed down the reclaim in Moncton, because the Moncton shops closed down, and that its scrapping of cars is generally associated with its main repair shops. Those cars have been deemed not worth repairing. They go to the reclaim to be dismantled and are reclaimed for various purposes, particularly scrap metal. CN says: "Well, the Moncton shops have closed down. That is a good reason to close down the Moncton reclaim".

Following that logic if Transcona shops are to become, as it appears, the only major repair shop for CN, why not maintain the reclaim right there, right beside the main repair shop of Canadian National in Canada? Instead, CN says that it will be transferring all the work to the reclamation yard in London, Ontario, which was chosen "because of its proximity to Canada's scrap metal recycling market". Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, but I suppose Conservatives and the CN have never heard of the rolling mills and the foundry in Selkirk, Ipsco in Regina, and all the other industries in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or western Canada in general, which have looked to CN not as the only supplier but as the major supplier of scrap metal over the years. Because we are continuing to have the shops in Transcona, thank God, we should also continue to have the reclaim in Transcona so we can support those related elements of the western Canadian economy.

What has the Government allowed CN to do? Basically it has allowed CN to say: "To hell with the western Canadian economy. We will locate all this stuff in London, Ontario, where it can benefit an already booming economy". There are many people upset with this decision because there is all kinds of work. There is enough rolling stock, yet that the Transcona reclaim could have been kept busy for years and years to come.

I know guys who worked there and I know guys who work in the yard in Transcona. They have been shipping trains and trains of scrap cars and equipment from there. This could have been left in Transcona where it was, to continue to provide jobs and to have been the integral part of the CN operation in Winnipeg that it has been for so many years. Instead the Conservatives have allowed CN, as they have allowed so many other companies, to disregard the interests of Winnipeg and western Canada.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my colleague opposite always seems to frame issues by saying that because a Conservative Government is in power there are cut-backs, but if there were a socialist Government in power, there would be lots of jobs in CNR, and presumably in other Crown corporations.

Mr. Blaikie: We would not be closing the reclaim in Transcona, I can tell you that.

Mr. Thacker: If the Member looked at the experience in Australia and New Zealand and in a number of socialist countries, he would find that even their Crown corporations have to keep up. The issue is not whether CNR should continue to be the employer of thousands and thousands of employees just for the sake of employing employees—

Mr. Blaikie: That is not what I said.

• (1810)

Mr. Thacker: The issue is whether it is there to serve the shippers, and in order to compete in serving the shippers, of course it has to keep itself efficient and on the cutting edge.

Mr. Blaikie: Talking about scrap.

Mr. Thacker: That is where the whole question of scrap comes in, exactly. Why does the CNR have to lease its leasing cars from privately owned railways? That would be a separate issue. Perhaps, if CNR were privatized, it could operate in the real world rather than relying on the taxpayer, that poor union stiff who is being sucked dry by the three levels of government simply because of the ideology that CNR must be a Crown corporation.

CNR is continually reviewing all its railway operations to improve productivity, and it has to do that in the sense of long-term technological and industrial trends. A reclamation yard salvages parts of the retired equipment for repair and dismantles the rest for sale to scrap dealers.

As my friend opposite has said, the size of the fleet has declined substantially. Earlier this year, the entire Moncton yard was closed down. That left London, Ontario, and Winnipeg. The reason, I am told, that it is being concentrated in London is that the reclamation yard is next to the scrap recycling industry in Ontario. It gets back to that tradition of western complaints—

Mr. Blaikie: The one in Winnipeg is close to the recycling in Manitoba.

Mr. Thacker: Part of the reason it is in Ontario is that it is next to that huge recycling industry. This gets back to the typical complaint we have in the West which is that, because Ontario has a large population and is close to the Great Lakes and that huge population in the United States, industry wants to go there. The solution for us in the West, of course, is to have an increase in population. That is the real solution to our problems. All the other things, such as more representatives in Parliament and more Senate reform weighted to the regions, are side issues. We really need population. If there were 15 million people in the West, we would have power. I am sure the Hon. Member agrees with that.

There are 43 positions in Winnipeg affected by this initiative. Twelve are eligible for early retirement and twenty-two can qualify for CN's employment security program. which means they cannot be laid off if they are willing to accept work available at any location in their region by exercising seniority or filling vacant positions. The remaining workers have been in the employ of the railway for between one year and seven years. They are eligible for a combined CN and UIC job security payment. It provides up to 80 per cent of their job rate for a period determined by their length of service.

The closure of the dismantling yard does not however impact on the repair facility or the operation of the railway's Transcona main shops which employ some 2,200 workers, 100 more than last year. In the greater Winnipeg area CN's total employment is in excess of 6,000 people. I wish we had that in Lethbridge.

HEALTH—AIDS DISEASE—PUBLIC EDUCATION/FUNDING OF FEDERAL CENTRE FOR AIDS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to comment further on my questions to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) of May 18 regarding the need for government leadership and funding in the urgent fight against the AIDS epidemic. I want to begin by acknowledging the Minister's speech in Winnipeg yesterday, giving the broad outlines of the Government's plans to combat AIDS over the next five years.

At least the Government now seems to be taking AIDS seriously. We deeply regret, however, the lengthy delays in government action in the last two years while people died. Canada has fallen far behind international expectations.

Nearly 1,000 Canadians have died of AIDS. Nearly 800 others are diagnosed as having AIDS and an estimated further 50,000 people are carrying the HIV virus. Only now is the federal Government starting to fund a comprehensive attack on this dreadful epidemic.

For months, the Cabinet even held up operational funding that had been budgeted previously for the Canadian information centre for AIDS. While I am glad that a start is being made as a result of the Minister's announcement, I want to make several points and cautions tonight.

First, the new federal government funding, $129 million spread over the next five years, must be measured against the immense problem which is facing us. While it is a welcome beginning, the Government must realize that it is only a first step toward a full-scale fight against AIDS. By comparison, the 1989 U.S. Budget proposed by President Reagan sets aside $1.3 billion for AIDS research and treatment.

Second, we are worried that the funds may not be directed appropriately and efficiently in the all out campaign against AIDS that is required. All the money in the world will not turn the tide against AIDS if it is squandered, if government policies are misdirected, or if the Government lacks the political will to address sensitive issues such as contraception in very direct, explicit ways.

Third, I am convinced by my consultations with the medical health officer in Vancouver that the most appropriate and effective way of co-ordinating both public education and support programs for AIDS patients is through the metropolitan and regional health centres, which should co-ordinate their efforts nationally and share successful techniques. They are doing the job now, they have lots of ideas, but they have not had the funds to get going in a comprehensive way.

Therefore, I urge the Minister to decentralize funding through local health authorities in major centres where there is a concentration of AIDS. The federal role is to co-ordinate such efforts, share information, and help conduct research. However, we need to get the money out there to the front line as quickly as possible. People have been waiting a long time.

I have written to the Minister and spoken in this House about the policies of the Department of National Health and Welfare regarding the provision of treatment drugs for people with AIDS. I have complained about provinces which refuse to cover the cost of recommended drugs under medicare. I want to read an excerpt from a letter from Dr. Eric Jeffries of Vancouver about the Department's protocol requirements. He and others are concerned about the ethics and practicality of the so-called double-blind trials which the federal Department is suggesting. He says:

> I understand that an aerosolized form of Pentamidine as a prophylaxis against Pneumocystis pneumonia is to be introduced in a double-blind trial.
> —double-blind trials are largely used to compare a new drug with a similar drug which is in use. The new drug may be more effective or have fewer side-effects but the problem is to check if there is an improvement over the proven drug.
> With P.C.P. we know the median life expectancy. It seems to me ethically unacceptable to waste time by performing a double-blind trial at this stage of paucity of information on AIDS. Double-blind refinements should wait.

On March 24, in a letter to the Minister, I raised the issue of the ethics of clinical trials for AIDS treatment drugs in Canada. I quoted the stand formally adopted by the B.C. Civil Liberties Association:

> An adult person confronting the catastrophe of proximate certain death has a right to elect, for themself, any medical treatment whatsoever that does not cause direct harm to others.

The Civil Liberties Association also stated:

> We are aware of the view that the single and individual patient with a rare catastrophic illness represents an "emergency", while a large group of patients with the same catastrophic illness represents an opportunity for a clinical trial which could be compromised if they claimed and exercised catastrophic rights
> ... As things stand, however, we regard it as nonsensical for catastrophic patients to cede their rights to self-determination in their treatment because of what can be seen to be little more than an institutional affection for the ideology of research rather than its vigorous pursuit.

Surely the National Health and Welfare bureaucracy can credit clinical trial data collected in the U.S. and Europe without laboriously duplicating research work already adequately done while Canadians are dying. This is not a scientific or a medical problem; this is purely a bureaucratic problem.

In closing, my colleagues and I acknowledge the Government's recent announcement. However, we want more details on these proposals. We want assurances that the money and effort will be well spent.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I reject categorically the allegation that the Government is somehow deliberately delaying the application of money to the AIDS program. Those types of allegations are quite silly. No Government of whatever stripe is going to deliberately delay the application of funds for research on AIDS.

The Member pointed out that the United States is spending $1.3 billion and that on a proportionate basis Canada should be spending $103 million. The Minister has announced that we are spending $168 million at the federal level alone. If we add to that the provincial contributions, it is far more per capita than even in the United States where the problem is much worse than it is here in Canada. It is certainly a lot more than the per capita expenditure in the socialist countries of which the Member is aware. As usual, Canada is right at the front line in solving a very major problem. For the Member to make that allegation against the Government only points out that she is really quite silly.

The federal Government's AIDS program reflects a diversity and flexibility of response found in few other responses to the AIDS problem, whether among the provinces or by other nations. Those qualities remain an integral feature of the national AIDS program. Another key dimension to the program is the importance given to co-operation and partnership with other organizations, including the provincial Governments. All these activities under the national AIDS program contribute to the broad question of education, some in ways not readily apparent.

Research is vital to addressing not only the factual content of education programs, but also to determining the social and behavioural context in which the key questions of prevention and understanding must be resolved. For example, the national study of adolescents now being carried out by Queen's University with federal Government funding is expected to provide dramatic intelligence on adolescent knowledge, attitudes, and behaviour which will directly influence AIDS education for young people.

Formal professional training at the frontiers of virology and immunology is crucial if Canada is to keep pace with the pursuit of new treatments, a cure, or a vaccine for AIDS. The funding given to research activities contributes to meeting this need.

In the health, social, and allied services the quality of professional skills such as counselling and psycho-social support is a prime determinant in the ability of these service providers to impart preventive education in terms that individuals will understand and absorb, whatever their background and circumstances.

Community based AIDS organizations have been on the front line of the daily battle against AIDS since the beginning. Their efforts to deliver candid, relevant, life-saving education to a widening circle of Canadians deserve great credit and respect. In many cases, the financing so critical to the survival of these organizations has come from one source, the Government of Canada.

The same applies to the public education and awareness campaign of the Canadian Public Health Association. Here, federal funds are being used to bring the message of prevention to the broad spectrum of the Canadian public. This will be considerably expanded by increased direct federal efforts in this field.

We are active on the international scene. It is universally recognized that more needs to be done. We are facing an issue that challenges us on many fronts, and no nation on earth has found the magic formula to step ahead of AIDS and stop it in its tracks. The federal Government has no intention of abandoning or diminishing its efforts to provide Canadians with the best protection and care possible.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—SALE OF EXPLOSIVES TO FOREIGNERS BY EXPRO COMPANY—REQUEST FOR RESULTS OF MINISTER'S INQUIRY / EXPRO COMPANY—FEDERAL ADVANCE

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in the proceedings on the adjournment motion this evening. I would have liked to take this opportunity to pursue the matter in French, since I put the question originally in that language, but since the native language of the Parliamentary Secretary and my own happens to be English, and in the interests of better communication, I will continue in English.

[English]

The presence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) here this evening to answer a question which relates to the portfolio of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is somewhat surprising to me. While I do not for a moment doubt the versatility, flexibility, integrity, and sincerity of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport, I feel that his presence here casts into question the seriousness with which the Government takes the adjournment proceedings and, indeed, after the debate today on the Government's motion to extend, the seriousness with which the Government treats this Parliament.

• (1825)

I say that with a sense of anger because I know, as the Parliamentary Secretary knows, that no fewer than three Ministers have replied to questions I have posed on the scandal on the indirect export of explosive propellants for shells to Iran.

Indeed, on May 12, a fourth Minister, the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), attempted to respond but was sat down by his colleague from Supply and Services.

Returning to the specific reasons I am dissatisfied with the Government's reply to the question I asked on April 27, I would like to point out to the Parliamentary Secretary that I asked if the Government was prepared to tell the House "what the results of the investigations are" and, second, "why the previous permits were not withdrawn last November?" Neither of those questions was answered by the Minister replying that day, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Indeed, he stated:

> We are informed that no explosive material was sent to Portugal since last October. Three shipments of explosive material were sent to Holland last year—that the amounts involved were not sent by the Dutch authorities to another destination.

I believe that this shows that the Government is clearly not interested, in this matter, in determining whether or not Canadian explosive propellants were used in shells that were used by the army of the Islamic Republic of Iran.

It seems to me that the letter of the Government's policy and the spirit of the Government's policy are going in different directions because the answer that was later given indicated that the Government, through the RCMP investigation, had satisfied itself only that the paperwork was in order, only that the necessary permits had been obtained. That was only part of the paperwork that was in order.

What had not apparently been investigated or verified by the Government was the fact, as we now see it, that this powder did go into shells which were actually exported to Iran for use in the Iran-Iraq war. To emphasize further the way in which the Government has treated this issue so lightly, the Minister replied that the amounts involved were not sent by the Dutch authorities to another destination. Of course they were not. It was never suggested they could have been. They were never even in the hands of the Dutch authorities. They were in the hands of Muiden Chimie, which used them to make the shells that were then exported to Iran.

There was another clearly unsatisfactory reply from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in answer to the supplementary question. He said, as reported at page 14866 of Hansard:

> We have been looking into the possible abuse of export permits or other matters.

He has never reported on other matters because the whole heart of the question lies in those other matters, as to what happened after the export permits had been used.

I believe the Government has approached this very important issue with little better than a fog of dissemblance. The objective of replying in the House has not been to respond but to mislead. Frankly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), may complain, as he often does, about treatment from the media but the media has shown compassion and mercy to the Government in this particular matter, to an unbelievable degree. Outside the Province of Quebec, the question has hardly been covered.

Indeed, it does not reflect very well on the English-speaking media in this country that it did not cover a matter of an export which was not only illegal under Canadian law but also clearly in contravention of the Government stated policy of December, 1986, not to export armaments to countries that would either use them in active warfare or use them to suppress civilian populations.

We have further evidence now that it may even have been broken again this year. That is what is at the heart of this issue. Nothing would please me more than to have the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport say that the Government has determined that that powder never went into shells and never went to Iran. I wish I could hear that, but I very much doubt that I will.

• (1830)

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry) raised this subject in November of last year, we responded that the Canadian company, Expro Chemical Products Inc., had fulfilled all requirements expected of it in obtaining the required permission to export, and that although the matter was being looked into more closely, there was no evidence of any wrongdoing on the part of Expro. The results of that investigation confirmed that Expro in fact obtained all the necessary permits and sought the assurances of the importing Government.

The assertion the Hon. Member has again made in the House is unfortunately misleading. Expro has not shipped any of the explosives to Portugal since October of last year and has certainly not continued to export to the Portuguese client after the issues that came to light in November.

The House will recollect that the other European nation investigating the suspected diversion of explosives to Iran was the Netherlands, and we have been monitoring this investigation carefully. The company concerned, Muiden Chimie, had its export licence to Portugal suspended for a period of six months and had investigators from the Government in the plant for a prolonged period.

We do not deny that exports have continued to Muiden Chimie in the past months, but these were permitted to continue because there are clear assurances that the Canadian propellant will be subject to the controls of the Netherlands Government whose foreign policy views on the export of military goods to countries in conflict are the same as the views of this Government. In other words, exports to Muiden at this time are extremely secure, and we have absolutely no doubt that the propellant would be used for purposes consistent with our foreign policy concerns.

The Hon. Member also suggested that the major part of Expro's production was destined for Portugal and implied that an advance of $8 million to the company was inappropriate. I must correct the facts and point out that Expro is an important supplier to our own defence forces and does not rely on Portugal for anywhere near the major portion of its orders. It is because Expro is a preferred supplier under the Government munitions supply program that a loan was made to it under the Defence Production Act. It is important to our own defence needs that we have domestic suppliers of critical defence goods for use by Canadian forces.

In his most recent question on this matter the Hon. Member indicated that he had in his possession documentary evidence that exports are continuing to Portugal. Despite persistent efforts by my officials to get a copy of this document, a copy has not been forthcoming. If the Hon. Member is sincerely concerned about this issue, his co-operation would be appreciated. Upon receipt of the document in question, we shall be better poised to respond to the Hon. Member's question and investigate his allegations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at ten o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

On the Order: Resumption of debate on motion of Mr. Lewis

The House resumed from Thursday, June 9, consideration of Order No. 26 for the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.00 o'clock p.m., and on Wednesdays at 6.00 o'clock p.m., and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended;

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 22;

That, following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 10(1) shall be receivable; and

That, this special order shall not apply on any allotted days designated in the supply period ending June 30, 1988.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, with your permission, I would like to give you, with respect, my views on the procedural problem Your Honour will have to deal with in ruling whether the motion presented by the Government is in order.

First of all, I would like to answer the question put to Hon. Members yesterday when you asked us, Mr. Speaker, for our thoughts on section 49 of the British North American Act and how that section might affect the ruling the Chair will have to make very shortly on whether the Government's motion aimed at speeding up the passage of the free trade bill and dealing with the rest of the Government's agenda is in order.

Mr. Speaker, I will not repeat what was said by the Hon. Member for Otatwa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who submitted our view that section 49 of the British North America Act referred exclusively to substantive matters that must be decided on, and which only can be decided on, according to our Constitution, by the elected Members of this House. My hon. colleague submitted that, in procedural matters, only the Speaker of the House is competent to decide.

[English]

Section 49 of the BNA Act says that questions arising in the House of Commons shall be decided by a majority of voices other than that of the Speaker, and when the voices are equal but not otherwise, the Speaker shall have a vote. The interpretation of my Party on this is a twofold one. First, all questions are decided by a vote of whatever kind. Sometimes it is a voice vote, Sometimes it is a recorded vote, sometimes a few voices say d'accord or agreed. However, there is only one way to dispose of an item before the House, and that is by a vote. Second, we say that this means the Speaker is not involved in the voting process unless there is a tie. When there is a tie, the Speaker casts a vote.

That being said, let me place this in context. On the question before us, if one wants to look at the effect of Section 49 of the BNA on the Speaker when he has to make a decision, I would like to say we would have to wait until a later stage to see the effect of Section 49. That section is obviously applicable at a certain stage, the voting stage, when a subject has to be finally decided upon by the House. We are not yet there. I submit that before we come to a vote on the motion submitted by the Government, there has to be a debate. However, before there is a debate something else has to take place, that is, the Speaker and only the Speaker, has to determine whether or not the motion on the Order Paper is in order. I humbly submit to Your Honour that we can come back to Section 49 once we have gone through the stage of having the Chair determine whether this can be discussed.

Third, after a debate has taken place and we get to a vote, I think the question Your Honour has asked us to react to would be better entertained at that stage. In other words, I am saying that there is no way that the question as to whether or not the motion is allowable can be decided by anyone but the Speaker.

Standing Order 1 reads as follows:

In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions, so far as they may be applicable to the House.

I submit that if there is one question that can be thought of, to go back to the Standing Order I just read, as being a case not provided for by the rules, the one before us, or which may come before us if you so decide, is such a question. The motion introduced by the Government starts with the words "Notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House". That certainly falls outside our rules. I submit that in a case like this, because of Standing Order 1 and because of our past practices, only the Speaker can determine whether this motion is allowable.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me it is obvious that under Standing Order 1, only the Speaker can decide, in this case, whether the question before the House is in order.

However, to help Your Honour in reaching a decision, I would like to submit my position and that of my Party. I maintain that the beginning of the motion, which starts with the word:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House . . .

. . . renders the motion inadmissible for the purposes of debate. I say inadmissible, because the Chair cannot allow suspension of the Standing Orders. There is a basic principle in our parliamentary system which has come down to us from the Mother of Parliaments, the Parliament at Westminster, and it is that all democratic debate in these precincts is governed by certain rules.

The motion the Government is trying to present in the House starts with the premise that the Standing Orders must be suspended.

I submit that, because of that fact alone, the motion the Government wishes to present is inadmissible, not only because it requests suspension of the Standing Orders but because it also requests a suspension of the practices of the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker, I also maintain that besides being unacceptable, the motion is even out of order, because, in my opinion, it is undemocratic. The whole set of Standing Orders before us, which has been accepted over the years, usually by all Members and all political parties unanimously, is based on the following principle: that debates in the House take place in accordance with established rules known to every Member.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the first right of an elected Member is to be able to enter and sit in this House. But probably his most important privilege is to be assured at all times that the debates that take place here comply with known and established rules that cannot be changed unless the Standing Orders themselves are changed or unless unanimous consent to override them is given by those who sit in the House at a particular time.

I maintain that in the present case, even discussing a motion that begins with the words "That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House . . . " is in itself undemocratic because this way of proceeding holds independent Members and minorities in this House in contempt. For the first time, this would sanction the possibility for a Government to use its majority, an overwhelming majority in the House, to operate completely outside the established rules and to impose its will.

Mr. Speaker, within this motion—and I do not want to get into the specific contents, but only mention them in passing—there are already things that are hard for an Opposition party to accept. But the most important one is that the motion begins by suggesting that the Standing Orders will not apply.

And I would like to suggest, perhaps on a jocular note, Mr. Speaker, that were I to draw a parallel between the House of Commons and a court of justice, if this were a court, the Minister of State (Treasury Board) who put the motion would have to answer for his actions. He would have to sit in the box in the House of Commons to account for his illegal act, and illegal it is in the light of our Standing Orders because this is something that goes against the Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make another point, because the argument will be made that on occasions the House strayed procedurally from its Standing Orders. This indeed has happened, but I would remind Your Honour that usually, or rather at all times when some Members, for reasons of convenience, request to be exempted from the rules, this is granted admittedly, but with unanimous consent.

For instance, we have seen on many occasions, in order to accommodate one or all Members sitting here, that it is agreed not to see the clock, for instance in order for a colleague to complete his comments. Also, we have seen Hon. Members unanimously agree to revert for instance to Motions or to Tabling of Bills, where a Minister would have entered the House after the time provided for doing so had elapsed. On a number of occasions we have seen Hon. Members grant unanimous consent for the Chair to be exempted from reading a motion that is often very long. We even have seen Hon. Members give unanimous consent for the Chair to do away with the ringing of the bells for calling in the Members for a vote. Is there a more sacred right than that of a Member in this House to know when a vote will be held and to have his attention called by the bells? Points of order have been raised previously on that, in this House. However, it happens quite regularly that we give unanimous consent for the Chair to be exempted from ringing the bells, when everyone agrees that a vote was held earlier an Hon. Members who are supposed to be here already are in their places.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, you will note that whenever the Chair is authorized to set aside our Standing Orders, to use a procedure or a way of doing things which is contrary to that provided for in our Standing Orders, in each and every case which I submitted to you, all Hon. Members were in agreement and willing to give what is properly called the unanimous consent of the House, meaning that everybody agreed to set aside our Standing Orders.

Well, I submit that in this case, it is clear that the Chair could not obtain the unanimous consent of the House to set aside our Standing Orders and make it possible for the Government to have its motion debated in the House.

For that matter, I suggest that Your Honour in his wisdom would not even attempt to ask for the unanimous consent of the House.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I should like to call your attention on a basic element of our Standing Orders which is its permanent nature.

Whoever opens our Standing Orders and starts reading it—there might be some of our colleagues who have never done so—if a stranger were to come here to read our Standing Orders, what would he find first? Even before the Table of Contents, even before Standing Order 1, he will read the Foreword. Even before getting to our Standing Orders, he will read this:

> The Standing Orders were amended on Wednesday, June 3, 1987, and came into effect, permanently—

I call the attention of the Chair on the word "permanently".

> —on Monday, June 8, 1987. In addition, an amendment to Standing Order 89(2) adding a new paragraph (e), was adopted by the House on Tuesday, June 30, 1987.

Why do I call the attention of the Chair on the word "permanently"? Simply because I want everybody in the House to be aware of it, since I know that Your Honour understands the meaning of the word "permanent". It is to emphasize the real meaning of this word. The word "permanent" is used here as the opposite of "provisional".

Before we were provided with these permanent Standing Orders which we use everyday, our debates were governed by provisional Standing Orders which we used for a while on an experimental basis. However, since June 8, 1967 those Standing Orders have become permanent. As I said, they are not temporary nor transitional. It means that they are here to stay and I wonder if the Minister who tabled the motion which appears on the Order Paper has taken into account the fact that the Standing Orders are here to stay and to be implemented daily and not be set aside to allow the Government to come in this House and say:

> . . . notwithstanding any Standing Order.

The opening sentence I just mentioned is also quite interesting because it provides a specific example of how the Government or any other hon. Member whether on the Opposition side or on the Government side, should proceed to obtain the consent of the House to alter the Standing Orders.

Moreover, an amendment adding a new paragraph (e) to Standing Order 89(2) was passed in this House on Tuesday, June 30, 1987. All those who were sitting here remember that even when the Standing Orders had become permanent and the Government saw fit to amend them, it did not resort to an exceptional measure, it did not use the back-door approach or underhanded tricks, rather it presented an amendment in the House and such an amendment was in that case unanimously passed.

Therefore Mr. Speaker, the Standing Orders are permanent and are meant to stay. They are used to rule on all cases before the House of Commons. They are not provisional. The Standing Orders cannot be implemented at someone's pleasure, whether it is the Government, a backbencher on the government side or in the opposition.

That being said, Mr. Speaker, I remind you that in our opinion, in the opinion of the Liberal Party of Canada, it will be up to Your Honour to make a decision, to determine if the motion standing in the name of the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) in the Order Paper is acceptable and may be discussed here. As I said, we object to this motion because it is mainly proposing to override the rules. And I maintain that if Your Honour was to approve it, sooner or later the House could end up in a complete chaos. In fact, it would create a precedent to the effect that the rules are left to the good will of the Governement and that they can be overridden any time to make decisions.

Mr. Speaker, those are the remarks I wanted to convey to you to help you make an important decision which will have historical consequences.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to add a few short remarks to the procedural discussion that is before the House at the moment with regard to whether or not we should be setting aside the Standing Orders to facilitate the Government's ineptitude and incompetence and allow it to sit extra hours and into the summer in order to carry out the mandate it received from the people of Canada since, unfortunately, it has not been able to carry that out in the normal time allotted for government business.

Mr. Speaker: I am going to hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) as I have clearly indicated I would. I want to hear him. However, given the hour and given the fact that we had a great deal of discussion on this yesterday, I want to give a bit of a signal to all Hon. Members that I hope we can wrap up this discussion between now and eleven o'clock. I hope that that is possible. I have heard extensive discussion, all of which is helpful, and I am just giving a bit of a signal, not to the Member for Kamloops—Shuswap, but to other Hon. Members, that I am looking to eleven o'clock to close off this argument.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your interest in getting on with the business of the House, but I think we find ourselves at a crossroads today.

My thesis is that the Government is using its huge majority in the House of Commons to usurp the Chair. It is you who is also being challenged today.

As my friend, the Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has indicated, the Standing Orders point out two very relevant areas. The first relevant area is in the beginning of the Standing Orders that all of us memorize and learn to use to make this a productive and positive place. It indicates that these Standing Orders, which came into effect and which we use in the House at this moment, are permanent. I do not know what you or other Members think "permanent" means, but to me it means permanent. It means we do not deviate from them unless there is unanimous consent to do so.

When we adopted these Standing Orders, it was done unanimously. There were discussions and consultations day after day, week after week, until there was unanimous consent in the House that these are the rules and regulations we wish to follow as parliamentarians.

Standing Order 4 lays out the calendar year. We agreed for the first time, on what I thought was one of the more sensible decisions taken by the House, to establish a parliamentary calendar year so that we knew with some precision when the House would sit and when it would not, when we would conduct the business of the people of Canada and when we would not.

It allowed for parliamentarians from all across Canada to make arrangements in their own constituencies and to be there to serve their constituents at a time when the House would be recessed or adjourned, as the case may be. This was in the Standing Order and was something that we agreed to.

Standing Order 5 states:

> Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

We saw this last summer. We were adjourned for the summer recess and the Government approached you and made it clear that it felt it was necessary to recall Parliament. You did that, Mr. Speaker. That is your obligation, your responsibility, and your right.

The House of Commons has given you that right in Standing Order 5. We felt that it was appropriate that you recall parliamentarians, not the Government but you in your position of representing all Members of the House. You are in a very exalted position, Mr. Speaker, because you are the first elected Speaker of the House. Every Member elected you to represent their interests and, similarly, to protect their privileges.

Now, the Government has decided to go past you, to ignore the Speaker's Chair and say that it is not prepared to go to the Speaker to request his decision to recall Parliament to do the business of Canada. It is saying that it does not have to go to the Speaker because it knows best. It has decided that it will extend the hours and, if necessary, will sit into July, August and the early part of September without asking the Speaker to decide, in spite of the fact that the Speaker represents all Members and all Parties in the House. The Government has decided to set aside the rules of the House of Commons. It has thrown them out. It has indicated on a number of occasions that it is prepared to abandon the rules.

But something more sinister is happening. It wants to abandon you and your Chair and the responsibilities and traditions of that Chair as well. That is exactly what this motion does. It sets aside your right to recall Parliament. It is called the dictatorship of the majority. It has decided to ignore the rules of the House of Commons, ignore the Speaker's Chair and do whatever it wants because it has the muscle to do it. The parliamentary bully boys.

We put our faith in the Speaker. That is what we did unanimously when we adopted the rules of the House of Commons.

We are at a very critical crossroads. If you permit this motion to stand in its present form, we are saying that we are setting aside the rights of the Speaker to decide how this place is run and giving that right to whomever is in the majority on the government benches, to do whatever they decide is in the best interests of the House of Commons. That is not what we were elected to do.

I submit with all humility that that is not what we expect the Chair to do as well. In conclusion, I do not think there is any way to justify proceeding with this motion in its present form. We will be awaiting your decision with some trepidation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker. You pointed out a few moments ago that you intended—you gave us a hint. You didn't say it was your final decision but you hinted that you might end this procedural debate at around eleven this morning. Mr. Speaker, I hope that was only a hint. When we say "Standing Orders", why do we have Standing Orders? Their purpose is to allow us to conduct our business in a matter that is harmonious, intelligent and civilized. In a family there are rules for conducting the family's affairs in an intelligent way. Companies have rules. Wherever people get together, there are rules. And we in the House of Commons, that court of last resort as Mr. Diefenbaker liked to call us on many occasions, and it is, in fact, just that. Because this is so important, we decided to have rules that would help us conduct the affairs of this country, of this nation of ours, of Canada, in a more intelligent, harmonious and less acrimonious fashion.

We all remember that regrettable, unfortunate and in my view intolerable incident when the bells were allowed to ring, and it got to the point where the whole electrical system was overloaded and became a fire hazard. I sat several nights here in the House to relieve Madam Speaker or whoever was in the Chair at the time. I sat during the night while the bells were ringing. I was alone, and I thought about the situation in the Middle East. I was thinking about the world's problems. It was all very unusual because there was no Standing Order to deal with the situation, so a group of parliamentarians was given the task to improve our Standing Orders. But that takes a long time, Mr. Speaker!

[English]

It is a long process when you want to change the rules of the House of Commons.

I know that Your Honour wants to render a judgment sooner than later. Therefore, I will not read what I had prepared last night and this morning.

However, we had a report of the Special Committee on the Reform of the House of Commons. I wanted to quote from Chapter 3: "Évolution de la Chambre des communes". It was a slow process to get where we are today because when we deal with the House of Commons rules it must be a slow process. Some people want more and some want less. We came to a good agreement under which we would not have any more stupid incidents like the famous bell incident, and Your Honour was given a lot of responsibility. We have all had the honour of recognizing you, Mr. Speaker, as the ultimate referee of this House of Commons. You are the ultimate person to decide what is right and what is wrong, and because we do respect you, we abide by your rulings most of the time, if not always. Very clearly in the new rules of the House of Commons, which we wanted to be very orderly, it is written that the House will adjourn at a certain time and will sit at a certain time.

Canadians may like to see the calendar of the House of Commons for 1988, 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992 and 1993. We already know how to manage our affairs in an orderly fashion until December, 1993. It is in the rules. As they say in good English, it is in the book.

On top of that, Your Honour was given a greater responsibility. Your Honour exercised his judgment last summer. You first did not see fit to recall us during the recess. I may have disagreed with Your Honour when you recalled us last summer urgently to deal with an immigration and refugee problem. But we came back in August because Your Honour decided there should be an urgent debate, and now it is June 10. By the way, on June 10, 1957, Mr. Louis St. Laurent was re-elected Prime Minister of Canada. I have no notes, but I remember. You recalled us to discuss an urgent matter. It was unbelievably urgent. It was a scandalous situation because there were some people who were dumped by a ship on our coast. Even today, we are still under the special order because the urgent matter for which we were called back is not yet resolved. Whoever is at fault, we have not yet seen the end of that debate. But Your Honour decided to recall Parliament at the request of the Government because Your Honour saw fit to see there was an urgency. I want Canadians to understand that it is in the rules, it is in the book. Standing Order 5 states:

> Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

In the case of the Speaker being unable to act owing to illness or other cause, the Deputy Speaker, who is present here today, a remarkably fine gentleman from Quebec, has the opportunity to do so. It continues according to the good British parliamentary system. We have a good line of authority in our parliamentary system. At times I feel I defend the British parliamentary system with more passion than any Anglophone in this country. It is a good system. There is a line of authority. If Your Honour cannot act, the Deputy Speaker can. If the Deputy Speaker cannot act, the Acting Speakers under him can act accordingly. We did that in order to proceed and discuss our affairs in an orderly fashion. That is the reason we have rules. Otherwise, what is the use of having rules?

I see your signal, but that also could be debated because your decision is so important. Your Honour may be put on the spot by the Government and I do not want to see my Speaker put on the spot by the Government. Mr. Speaker is above Government. He is the servant of all the House, of all Members, the Opposition as well as the Government. He is the first servant. He is not the master. He is the servant and he has to use his intelligence and judgment to ensure that we conduct our affairs in an orderly fashion. That is why he was elected. That is why he became the Speaker. That is why, a year or two later he still has the full confidence of the House. He is above us all as our servant.

I do not understand why the Government decided on this course of action at this time. It could have waited. It could have terminated its sittings on June 30, as the rules say, and convinced Your Honour that it was in the best interests of Canada, not of the Government, that this House should be recalled to discuss a very important Bill, and there are important Bills to be discussed. The Government may have succeeded in convincing Your Honour to recall us next summer and, therefore, keep the peace of the House. Otherwise, what is the use of having worked out all these rules? What is the use of having this big book? Why should we have rules? Why should we have had a parliamentary committee which worked on these rules? There were people who year after year after year sat with each other and others to arrive at a gentleman's and ladies' agreement on the way in which we would conduct our affairs in a more orderly fashion without having to go back to the silliness being brought upon this House by those who are now the Government while they were in opposition when the bells rang for days and days. Canadians thought we were a bunch of nuts, and they were absolutely right. They said: "What the hell is going on in that House of Commons, letting the bells go on and on for 10 days?" So we made an end to it by agreement, and it serves the Government very well today that we cannot use that tactic, and I would not join in using that kind of tactic. If it were still in the rules, we could use it, so I am glad it is not in the rules any longer.

I do not understand the rationale of the Government. What does it really want? Does it want this kind debate, so therefore I am helping it in its electoral strategy? It knows this resolution is offensive. It knows we are bound to fight. Therefore, it will say: "Look at the Opposition. It is delaying the important affairs of the state. Therefore, there is nothing else we can do but to call an election". It seems to me that this is linked with the Government's electoral strategy. But you, Mr. Speaker, do not need to join in, not you, Your Honour, because you are above all of this. Your are above the Government.

I know that my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East wishes to participate in the debate. Faithful to what Your Honour has said, I will try not to be upset at 11 a.m. You have given us a signal that you want to render a decision, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that you should. I am not sure that you should not.

Remember, you are the servant of the House and you have your authority and our confidence.

Mr. Speaker: I want the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) to know that I may have given a signal. It might have been some indication that there is an appropriate time to conclude the argument. I want the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis to know this. As long as the Hon. Member has something to say to me I will continue to listen. I do not in any way wish to interrupt the Hon. Member.

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before my colleague takes the floor I want to say that that is the beauty of this Parliament. I respect Your Honour. I have a lot more to add. As I said, I would have liked to quote extensively from the report of Mr. McGrath, who is today the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, but I will not abuse your indulgence, Mr. Speaker. I will sit down.

I will try to put to the Chair that the Government has acted too urgently. The Government is embarrassing our Speaker. I would like to speak for hours because I feel I am a friend of the court, as is said. As a friend of the court—a friend of the institution—it is my duty to say, Mr. Speaker, you have a tough decision to render. I hope that if this debate terminates at eleven o'clock, between 11 a.m. and 12 p.m. the Government will come to its senses and not pursue this unfortunate debate any further with respect to what it wants by a zap to change the rules of the House. Thank you for your kind patience, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I want to make it absolutely clear that no one in the Opposition is opposed to sitting during the summer to pass important legislation which will benefit the Canadian people, and that legislation must be passed during the summer. No one in the Opposition is opposed to doing that. But the issue here is whether every time the Government cannot operate within the permanent rules it can then go and changes the rules.

The reason in this case that it cannot operate within the permanent rules is that it was negligent in putting before this House certain legislation that it should have put before the House a long time ago.

With respect to the free trade legislation, the free trade deal was signed on January 2, 1988, yet it took the Government four and a half months, almost five, to put the legislation to the House, despite the fact that the free trade deal was being negotiated for the two previous years. Here we have a situation in which the Government, because it could not live within the rules due to its own negligence, tries to change the rules. That is like the Toronto Maple Leafs, because they cannot win at hockey with the ordinary rules set down for the game, cannot beat Edmonton, Montreal or Calgary, they want to change the rules so that they can win the game.

We have a set of rules. This set of rules was agreed to unanimously by the House a few years ago after long study, two long studies, one in the last Parliament carried out by Tom Lefebvre, who was Chairman of a committee on parliamentary reform. It made a report recommending certain changes to the rules to improve them. Then there was the committee under the chairmanship of the present Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, James McGrath.

After these reports were put to the House we adopted a new set of rules. Here we have the Government, because it cannot operate under the rules decided upon by this House, wanting to suspend them. The worst part about this, as Hon. Members have said, is that the present rules provide that if it is necessary to sit during the summer, the Government can make an application to the Speaker and the Speaker will judge whether or not it is in the public interest that we sit.

Mr. Speaker, we in the Opposition accept that. We accepted those rules. We believe that the Speaker should have the right to accept a motion from the Government that we sit during the summer when it is in the public interest to do so. But we do not agree, and we think it is your responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to reject a motion such as this, simply to suspend the rules of the House because the Government cannot do what it wants to do under the present rules. I submit that is against all our democratic traditions.

I also want to read into the record again a statement by Sir John Bourinot, the great commentator on parliamentary practice, who said:

> The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence of tyranny of a majority;

In other words, the rules of the House are there to make sure that even a small minority in Parliament will have the right and the opportunity to raise questions with respect to legislation, with respect to the business of the country. If the Government can suspend those rules by using a large majority, and does that every time the rules do not suit it, then we are in for serious trouble. This could lead to a very dangerous precedent. The next thing we know the Government because it does not like three readings on a Bill, may decide that we will have only one reading on a Bill; or because the Government does not like an extended debate, we will have a short debate.

That is the implication of this precedent when there is a Government with 210 Members and the biggest majority in Canadian history and it cannot live within the rules of Parliament that were unanimously agreed to after two long reports of parliamentary committees.

What it is saying is that Jim McGrath and his committee were wrong. What it is saying is that Tom Lefebvre and his committee were wrong. It has had conflicts within its own caucus, it could not agree what to do with respect to abortion. The Supreme Court ruled on abortion in February, yet it took the Government until the middle of May to come forward with a motion—not a piece of legislation but a multiple choice motion, not a solution to the problem.

The reason we have delays is that the government Party cannot manage the business. It cannot decide within its own caucus what it should put before Parliament. We are now left to the last moment when it wants to rush all this legislation through against the interests of the country.

I submit that one of the reasons that we have debate in this Parliament is not simply to decide the vote in this Parliament. We know who will win the vote in this Parliament. The Government with its large majority will do that. One of the principles of the House is that by debating in this House we influence public opinion outside the House and the media outside the House. That can only be done sometimes by extended debate.

If we look at the Government's attempt to deindex old age pensions, we see that if that had come to a vote immediately after the Government proposed it, it would have gone ahead and done it. It would have deindexed old age pensions. But by extended debate in the House we were able to bring to the attention of the Canadian population what the Government was doing. That takes some time. The media picked it up and private interest groups picked it up. Finally, the Government backed down because the Canadian population was able to tell it that it was wrong.

Mr. Lewis: Warren wants 10 weeks' holiday.

Mr. Allmand: I am ready to sit here all summer if it is to get important things done for the Canadian people, but I am not willing to sit here to bail out a negligent and improvident Government.

I remind you once again, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude on this point, that Standing Order 1 states:

> In all cases not provided for hereinafter, or by other Order of the House, procedural questions shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, whose decisions shall be based on the usages, forms, customs and precedents of the House of Commons of Canada and on parliamentary tradition in Canada and other jurisdictions—

I submit the jurisdiction in the U.K. and other Commonwealth countries. It is your responsibility, Mr. Speaker, to reject this tyrannical motion to suppress the rights of Parliament.

• (1100)

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments and I will, of course, give them very careful consideration.

It being eleven o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 19(4), the House will now proceed to Statements by Members pursuant to Standing Order 21.

CRIMINAL CODE

HATE LITERATURE—ALBERTA COURT OF APPEAL DECISION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, James Keegstra's 1985 conviction under our hate literature law was overturned this week by the Alberta Court of Appeal. The court said that this law was inconsistent with the freedom of expression assured by our Charter of Rights.

Let us remember, therefore, that this decision was founded on the court's interpretation of this law as written, it was not a vindication of Mr. Keegstra's views.

Seventeen years after the hate literature section of the Criminal Code was passed we are revisiting a basic tenet of our democratic nationhood—standing steadfast in our support for freedom of speech, while preventing wrongful public attack of identifiable groups.

Where do we go from here?

The Justice Minister says the Government is now reviewing the hate literature law, but we also need a commitment from Government that it will ask the Supreme Court to examine this very important issue, should the Alberta Attorney General not do so. This is the kind of commitment we need today.

In moving forward, we must search for a solution that strikes a careful balance between protecting all members of our multicultural society from unjust attack, while remaining true to the freedom of expression guaranteed in our Charter of Rights.

SITUATION OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POTATO FARMERS

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of Members of the House, and particularly to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the urgent need of Prince Edward Island potato farmers for financial assistance.

Due to the drought last summer, most potatoes did not reach full size. These potatoes are in storage and there is no market for them. I wish to point out that my riding, the western part of Prince Edward Island, was especially hard hit, and potato producers in this area have suffered the greatest losses.

This is a crisis situation. How discouraging it is for these farmers to plant their 1988 crop when they still have not received one penny for their 1987 crop. These farmers are in dire financial straits.

The P.E.I. Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Tim Carroll, has written to the Minister on behalf of potato producers adversely affected, most of whom reside in the western part of Prince Edward Island. He wrote to request financial assistance under those federal programs designed to aid farmers who suffer losses specifically from drought. I urge the Minister to act on this request immediately and provide this much needed financial assistance to the P.E.I. potato industry.

GOVERNMENT PROGRAM WELCOMED

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, we have all seen the sad effects that family violence can have on the peace and stability of the family, and especially so when children are involved. The announcement by the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) of a four-year $40 million program to address this tragic and complex problem is welcomed by all Canadians and with much satisfaction by those professionals and volunteers who work with the victims and the individuals who inflict the damage.

Family violence is indeed a serious, although somewhat hidden problem in Canada. The challenge now facing the CMHC, the Departments of Health and Welfare, Justice, the Solicitor General, Indian and Northern Affairs, and the Secretary of State is a formidable one and will demand the very best effort and resources.

I know I speak for all Canadians in wishing them success, because family violence must stop.

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

DENIALS OF ACCESS REQUESTS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told Canadians that "secrecy and stonewalling have become a habit with the Government and we will never break the habit until we change the Government".

Well, it is clear that for this Prime Minister a vice in opposition becomes a virtue in government.

Stonewalling and secrecy are apt adjectives to describe the Tories' attitude toward sharing information with Canadians.

I say this because I have filed many access to information requests seeking information concerning the nature of Canada's involvement in chemical and biological warfare research as well as a former Conservative Defence Minister's effort to pull Canada out of NATO. I was denied access to either of these pieces of information.

In the case of the NATO request the current Defence Minister (Mr. Beatty) invoked a rarely used section of the Access to Information Act which permits him not even to acknowledge the existence of the material requested. He refused even to acknowledge the existence of the material.

That, Mr. Speaker, should give us all pause. The Tories' obsession with secrecy is a habit that, to quote the Prime Minister, "we will never break until we change the Government". This is firm proof of the need for a New Democratic Party Government.

FEDERAL INITIATIVE WELCOMED

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, we were certainly pleased earlier this week when the federal Government announced a $40 million initiative to address the problem of family violence. In addition to the $22 million allocated to acquisition or construction of additional emergency housing for abused women and their children, the remainder of the funds will be used for programs of prevention, education, and support for those who are victims of family violence. These may include spouses, children, youth or, sadly, the emergence of a new social problem, abuse of the elderly.

This problem cuts across social, economic, and cultural boundaries and touches on responsibilities of individuals, communities, government and non-government organizations.

Seven federal Departments will be involved in this welcome federal initiative, but there must be support from all of us if we as a society are to be effective in dealing with this shocking problem, to break the cycle of abuse in order that future generations will not either perpetrate or suffer from the deep physical and psychological harm of family violence.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SINGAPORE—ARRESTS OF FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have received word from Mrs. Clare Seow-Looi of Merritt, British Columbia, that her brother, Francis Seow of Singapore, was arrested by that Government on May 6, 1988, and since that time has been held incommunicado and without trial.

Francis Seow is the former Solicitor General of Singapore and maintains a well respected position in its legal community. Mr. Seow has also spoken out in opposition to the present regime. On the day of his arrest, he had sought a writ of habeas corpus for two political prisoners who alleged torture during previous interrogations.

The circumstances surrounding Mr. Seow's baseless arrest have been receiving world-wide attention. Amnesty International considers this case so serious that it has been classified as one requiring "urgent action".

On June 6, 1988, The Globe and Mail stated that Mr. Seow was held by police for attempting to "lead a group of lawyers and professors into opposition politics".

I am sure all Hon. Members of the House will join with me in expressing our grave concern over the reasons for Francis Seow's arrest, and that Mr. Seow, as is his right under the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, should receive due process under the law.

CANADIAN HYDROGEN AUTHORITY

NATIONAL MANDATE REQUIRED FOR PROPOSED ORGANIZATION

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada faces important decisions on the establishment, organization, and location of the Canadian Hydrogen Authority. At stake is the outcome of Canada's national mission to be first into the hydrogen age and a world leader in hydrogen technologies.

If the authority is to be successful in leading the national mission it must have a national mandate and not represent regional interests or the interests of specific industry groups.

In establishing the authority it must be recognized that there will be stages in the development, for example, for hydrogen technologies from the immediate and near term opportunities in fossil fuel upgrading and resource integration to the medium and longer-term opportunities in technologies for hydrogen fueled products and production of hydrogen from sustainable sources.

The authority should be organized and located to facilitate an initial focus on those technologies offering the greatest promise for an early return on investment.

The Canadian Hydrogen Authority should initially be located in Alberta close to major sources of funding for development of those hydrogen technologies offering the greatest promise for early return on investment.

ACID RAIN—UNITED STATES SENATOR'S PROPOSED BILL

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if there is positive movement to control acid rain pollution this year in Washington, it is because of the work of like-minded U.S. Senators and Congressmen, not because of President Reagan's agreement to consider an acid rain agreement with Canada. The tide, we are told, may be turning.

A Bill by Democratic Senator George Mitchell of Maine proposing to reduce sulphur dioxide pollution by 12 million tonnes by the year 2000 is gaining momentum. The question is whether such a Bill can become law with less than 40 business days left in the current session of Congress. Today, 48 of the 100 Senators are prepared to support Mitchell's Bill. Right now efforts are being intensified to produce the necessary majority in the Senate.

We in the Canadian Parliament should pass a resolution wishing success to like-minded American legislators and supporting their move to stop acid rain jointly with us once and for all.

CANADA-QUEBEC AGREEMENT

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to a historic agreement, in fact one of the most important Canada-Quebec agreements on regional economic development, signed yesterday by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Premier of Quebec.

S. O. 21

The purpose of this agreement will be to remedy inter-regional imbalances in Canada and it will provide many benefits for my riding.

After the dictatorial and arrogant regime of the previous Liberal Government, the Progressive Conservatives have embarked on an era of reconciliation and confidence in the future. By promoting regional development, the Government intends to stimulate the economy and provide a favourable climate for investment and industrial development.

This agreement marks an unprecedented step forward for regional development in Quebec and provides a framework for co-operation and for harmonizing federal and provincial development programs, while reflecting the spirit of reconciliation and national co-operation to which this Government subscribes.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ELECTION CALL

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): On June 12, this Sunday, thousands of Canadians right across the country will be out to force the Government to hold an election before the U.S. Trade Bill is implemented.

Across this nation, Canadians will be marching on Legislatures, protesting at six border crossings, and holding afternoon meetings to suggest that free trade is unfair. They will also be making the point which these 350,000 cards from concerned Canadians make to the Government of Canada, that they "want to keep Canada and our economic political and cultural sovereignty intact". All these will be jeopardized by a free trade agreement with the United States.

The Government must call an election. That is the message of Sunday's protest. I hope it is heard.

THE OPPOSITION

ATTITUDES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for several weeks we have been witnessing out and out guerilla warfare in this House against all the Government's bills. Neither the Liberals nor the socialists are contributing any substantial criticism of our proposed legislation.

The Opposition keeps repeating it wants more time, but their speeches are becoming increasingly meaningless. The Liberals are conspiring, as always, with the non-elected Senate to block our legislation.

The socialists have so little discipline and so few principles that yesterday they twice voted against one of their own motions.

The Opposition is irresponsible. We are giving them hours and days and even the whole summer to debate the legislation Canadians need, but they refuse.

In these days, Mr. Speaker, candidates running for the Liberal Party get up to any number of dirty tricks to be elected, but once they are elected, they don't have time to come and sit in the House of Commons. That is the Liberal way, Mr. Speaker!

CHILDREN

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILDREN IN CERTAIN COUNTRIES—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER REACT

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michell—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, according to a recent press release from the United Nations in Geneva, one than 100 million children on this planet start working at the age of eight, doing physically demanding work for a pittance. This information was taken from a study by the International Labour Organization.

These children, both boys and girls, work long hours for minimal wages, without any of the usual social benefits. This shameless exploitation takes place in brick factories in Colombia, tanneries in Egypt, mines in Peru and in the underwater fisheries in the Philippines.

Their tasks, which are very demanding, both physically and psychologically, are often highly mechanized and require the use of sharp and dangerous tools and toxic substances, in extreme heat, dust and noise.

Mr. Speaker, in the mines in Peru, the medication used by these children and any days of work lost are deducted from their wages, and it is not unusual for the children to owe money to the company that employs them.

This is an intolerable situation, Mr. Speaker, and I want to ask the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) to draw the attention of the heads of state who will be taking part in the economic summit in Toronto next week to this very serious international problem.

MEMBERS' DUTY

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenu): Mr. Speaker, we want to sit during the summer, and I shall be pleased to do so.

During the last election, I made a commitment, along with my party, to bring about a change in our public life. Three major principles have been developed to accomplish these necessary changes: national reconciliation; sounder public finances; and enhanced international relations.

The bills which have been held up by the Liberal Senate and still are by the Senate as well as this House, by this irresponsible Opposition, are essential to the advancement of Quebec and of my region, the Outaouais. I am speaking of the Meech Lake Accord, of Bill C-22 on pharmaceutical products which was held up so long in the Senate and which, today, is already creating jobs in Quebec. I am speaking of Free Trade and of Bill C-72. These measures ought to be adopted. The Opposition and the Liberal Senate who are blocking them should be ashamed!

We will sacrifice our summer, Mr. Speaker, in order to fulfill our duty towards our fellow citizens of Quebec and Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—LENGTH OF PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE—WASHINGTON MEETINGS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and of the Minister for Trade, I will put a question or two to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Today marks the nine hundred and eighty-eighth day of negotiation between Canada and the United States on the Prime Minister's trade deal. Yet next week the House of Commons is being asked to debate whether or not this deal should be approved in principle. We as Members of Parliament are being allowed the sum total of five days to pronounce upon this very important closed arrangement with the United States, five days proposed by an anti-democratic Government.

Since the Prime Minister is still negotiating, since nobody has yet seen the American legislation, since there are obvious disagreements between the United States and Canada still at this point, will the Deputy Prime Minister have the common decency to tell Canadians what is going on?

What happened at the meetings conducted by the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff in Washington or aren't Canadians allowed to know that? What are the difficulties between our two countries on the issue of subsidies and on the dispute settlement mechanism? Why is Parliament being asked to debate this legislation when the key items between the two countries have still obviously not been resolved?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should not try to mislead Canadians by suggesting that all we are going to have is a five-day debate on the trade legislation.

He knows very well that on second reading debate we have offered five days and asked for the Opposition to consider other alternatives. Discussions have been going on. There has been no other alternative proposal advanced of which I am aware. But the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that there will be extensive committee study and he knows, as a distinguished parliamentarian, that it is in the committee study where one gets into clause by clause analysis and examination. Surely he would be interested in facilitating that process. We also would be very interested in hearing what he has to say in his contribution to the debate at second reading.

In so far as the discussions taking place between Canadian officials and the American officials are concerned, as has been pointed out before, it is important to ensure that the spirit of the free trade agreement is upheld. There were some concerns expressed by our Government in some particular areas. Those concerns are being addressed. In so far as the difficulties in the United States are concerned, there are obviously some internal legislative problems that are occurring, but we are confident that that will be ironed out.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we have had 988 days of negotiation on a deal which we object to because it changes the fundamental political and economic direction of this country and impinges on our sovereignty. Yet, as my House Leader and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party confirm, we are being allowed five days to decide in principle whether the representatives of the people in the House of Commons approve the deal.

CONSTITUTIONAL VALIDITY OF DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Americans . . .

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order! The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Conservative Members are a bit excited, Mr. Speaker, and rightly so, because the Americans are again discussing the constitutional validity of the dispute settlement mechanism.

Did the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff confirm in Washington that this mechanism provided for in the Agreement is unconstitutional under American law? Did the Americans propose that this mechanism now come under the President? Is this situation not worse than not having the Trade Agreement would be? Why is the Government of Canada asking us to approve the Agreement immediately, within a five-day period, while negotiations are still going on in Washington?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the House knows and all Canadians know what the position of the Leader of the Opposition is. The Opposition is opposed to it and will be opposed to it whether we debate it for five days, six days, 10 days, or 20 days.

May I simply point out what the Deputy House Leader has offered opposition Parties. It is five long days, which will be the equivalent of 27 hours or nine normal days. If opposition Members want more than that, then they should tell us what they want and we will certainly take it under consideration. Do they want six, seven, or eight days? Let us sit down and negotiate that. We would be prepared to do that.

In so far as the other point the Hon. Member has made, he knows that the administration signed off on this deal. They support it, they believe it. It is subject to ratification by Congress. That is the process that we are going through right now, and we are confident that it will be approved in due course.

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has a firm position for the deal, we have a firm position against the deal.

Mr. Darling: Okay, then let's get going.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let's get going, says the Member from Parry Sound. I want to tell him, and through him, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, that the purpose of debate is to air the views of this House of Commons to allow the people of Canada to form a judgment, and we encourage that debate and we are anxious for that debate.

The Deputy Prime Minister says that the Americans have signed off on this deal. They haven't.

Mr. Mazankowski: The administration has.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They have not. They are still arguing and they still have an opportunity to negotiate for a five to seven-year period the definition of subsidy. That definition of subsidy is still being negotiated by the Congress and the President for the purpose of the American legislation.

I want to cite to the Deputy Prime Minister the words of one key American Senator, Max Baucus, who said, "We are going to hold Canada's feet to the fire". The agreement between the President and the Congress to implement the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States does not save Canada from hostile unilateral American action on subsidies; it singles out Canada for hostile action. The Prime Minister is now on the verge of delivering the exact opposite he promised Canadians, not secure access to the American market but more vulnerability to American unilateral action on subsidies.

Why, in these circumstances, when the deal is still being negotiated between the two countries, when the President and the Congress are still arguing about it, when we still have not seen the American legislation, this headlong rush by Parliament when the deal has not been closed?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition talked about the duration of the negotiations which have been taking place between our two countries and the debate that has been going on in this House and throughout the country with respect to the free trade agreement. If he is so interested in getting on with the debate, let's get on with it. Stop the filibustering, stop the cheap procedural tactics, stop tying Parliament up. We want to get on with the work.

I know the Right Hon. Member may not want to work this summer. We are prepared to work. We want to work because there is important legislation that has to be done.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It's because you can't handle the business of the House, that's why.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is at issue here is the assurance that the principles of the agreement will be upheld by both—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is this hard-working Government this morning?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, don't let the Leader of the Opposition start talking about attendance. Let's not start talking about attendance, because we can do the same thing.

What we are interested in is the assurance that the principles of the deal that have been negotiated will be upheld. The binational disputes panel is certainly a very important element to that. We have expressed some concerns about certain areas. Those concerns are being taken into consideration and we have every confidence that they will be rectified in a satisfactory manner for Canadians in the interest of all Canadians.

PUBLIC WORKS

BRIBERY ALLEGATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the administration of the Department of Public Works. Yesterday an article appeared in Le Devoir alleging that the former Minister of Public Works requested a $5,000 bribe from Mr. Glen Kealey, a PC organizer and riding association director in Hull and promoter of the $157-million MICOT project, in return for support for this project.

On May 2, 1988, Mr. Kealey wrote a letter to the Prime Minister, a copy of which I have in hand, in which he said:

> We also have had to deal with numerous conflicts of interest, involving the political interests of well known individuals.

Why was it that no RCMP investigation was commenced, and to this day there is still not an RCMP investigation concerning this very important set of allegations?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to tell the Hon. Member that the RCMP are looking into this matter and it would not be appropriate to make any further comments at this time.

QUERY WHETHER RCMP INQUIRY HAS BEEN OR WILL BE INSTITUTED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Government and the Deputy Prime Minister. Earlier this week, I asked the Prime Minister when he was informed of this matter and whether there had been an RCMP investigation into it. First, the Prime Minister did not answer and second, two Ministers and today a Parliamentary Secretary stated that there was an RCMP investigation. Since this is not the case, can the Deputy Prime Minister finally enlighten and inform this House and tell us the truth? Is there an investigation? Will there be one and when?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised in the House on previous occasions. The Parliamentary Secretary has responded. The answer is very clear. He indicated that the RCMP are indeed looking into this matter and it would be inappropriate to comment on the issue at this particular time in light of that inquiry.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ACCESS TO U.S. MARKET

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has suggested that it is crucial to maintain the spirit of the free trade agreement with the United States. Yet the United States itself, through its Congressional recommendations, has suggested attacks which will affect Canadian fish processors, potato producers, and the harmonization of plywood standards, attacks which will affect duty remissions, electricity, and cultural industries. One could list virtually every single sector of our economy and see attacks which are part of the recommendations of the United States Congress.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister persist, given these attacks, in telling the Canadian people that he and his Government have somehow achieved a significant improvement in access for Canadian business to the U.S. market when in fact this access has been made much worse and is likely to be made even worse by this set of recommendations from Congress?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member's question. First he suggested that the proposals put forth by Congress were suggestions. Then, in another part of his question, he said they were recommendations, and then he went on to say that they were attacks.

This is part and parcel of the congressional-administration dialogue that is going on. We have expressed certain concerns about the approaches that Congress might want to take, and what is important is the end result. We are satisfied that the end result will be satisfactory to Canadians, all Canadians in all regions of this country, and the Hon. Member should get on board and start supporting it.

• (1130)

PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION OF BILL C-130

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that the spirit of this agreement has to be maintained. Given that, and in light of these suggestions or recommendations which are also attacks on producers right across the country, how can he possibly justify this Parliament continuing to consider Bill C-130?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed incumbent upon both parties to maintain the spirit of the free trade agreement. Of course there have been suggestions from various sectors on both sides of the border regarding certain relevant parts of the agreement. Nonetheless, the spirit of the deal has to be maintained and we are monitoring the situation very closely and making representations to ensure that indeed is the case.

MONITORING OF CANADIAN EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I think there is appreciation for this last minute attempt to defend what Canadians want to see defended about this country. However, given that news reports this morning suggest that the extra monitoring of Canadian exports to the U.S. is not going to be dropped but instead extended to all countries, how can the Government go on claiming that it has improved access to the U.S. market for Canadian producers when the result has been an increase in monitoring which will hit Canadian companies coast to coast?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is not a last minute attempt. The negotiations have been going on for quite some time. There have been many bilaterals and there will be further bilaterals. I can assure the Hon. Member that the rights of Canada and Canadians have always been maintained and upheld during the course of these negotiations.

The telling point here is the fact that Americans and certain sectors of the American economy are taking issue with certain aspects of the very good bargain we achieved on behalf of Canadians. That should be a clear indication to the Hon. Member that we have made a good deal for Canada.

AIR CANADA

IMPACT OF PRIVATIZATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for privatization and has to do with the Bill to privatize Air Canada. As you know, the Official Opposition is against this privatization of Air Canada, for several reasons. For example, there is no guarantee of what will happen to employees and their pension fund. Indeed, there is no guarantee on the services provided by the privatized company, much less on those provided by its subsidiaries, the regional carriers.

Today, we see in the media that Air Canada executives are very concerned about the application of Bill C-72 on official languages that they say would impose an unfair burden on them compared to their competitors. My question for the Minister is this: Before going ahead with the privatization of Air Canada, did the Government have a study done on the impact of Bill C-129 on the company or did it do one itself? Or did it rather decide to fly by the seat of its pants, even if it means destroying one of the national symbols that Canadians are proud of, if we believe Air Canada?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. Indeed, Air Canada has expressed some concern about compliance with the Official Languages Act and how that might affect its competitive position. I think we all recognize that Air Canada completely agrees with and has practised fully the principles of bilingualism. We want to ensure that is maintained, and we felt incorporating it in the legislation, which I believe is supported by all Hon. Members, was the appropriate way to go.

I think I am right in saying as well that Air Canada officials have indeed talked to the Hon. Member about this particular issue. He made reference to it in his speech expressing some concern about certain elements. It would seem to me that, as the Bill proceeds to committee, that is the place where this issue might be discussed more fully. If there are appropriate amendments which would uphold the principle of bilingualism and clarify certain aspects, perhaps with the help of the Hon. Member we might be able to achieve that.

IMPACT STUDIES QUERY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to know if the Government had done or had someone do a feasibility study of the privatization and the impact of the Official Languages Act on the new privatized company. That was essentially the question I put to the Minister. If a study was done, then I take it that Air Canada was involved and now I am kind of concerned and worried, like many other Canadians, that all of a sudden the company is asking for amendments which it refused to give us when we were in committee looking at Bill C-72.

We invited them to come and they did not. I took it that they were satisfied. I now understand from what the company tell me that they are not able to compete on what they call a level playing field.

If there were studies can we have access to them? Will the Minister give them to us so we can tell who is telling us the truth here?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we firmly believe that privatization will indeed strengthen the airline, allow it to build for the future, expand, and at the same time provide opportunities for individual Canadians, particularly the employees, to participate in the ownership of a very well established national and international airline.

With regard to whether there are any studies, Air Canada has lived within the spirit of the Official Languages Act to date and has carried out the principles of bilingualism in a manner consistent with that spirit. All we are asking it is to do likewise in the future.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR—INTEREST RATE LEVELS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. He knows that his high interest rate policies, which have driven up the central bank rate to 9.49 per cent, a 3 per cent differential over the American central rate, and resulted in near record real interest rates, are primarily responsible for the Canadian dollar hitting 82 cents. Since there is almost unanimous opposition to the dollar being at that level on the part of manufacturers, the Exporters Association, and every province west of New Brunswick, will the Minister of Finance tell us why his Government does not take some measures to reduce the real interest rates that Canadians have to pay?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to a high interest rate policy. I want to remind him that interest rates are lower today than they were in October of last year. They are lower today than they were when we came into office three and a half years ago. We are following a balanced economic policy.

If I may, I refer him to the Ottawa Citizen headline, "Canada's Economy Second Best in the World". The OECD is projecting that our economy is going to be second only to and just slightly below Japan for 1988 and 1989. That is because we have followed a balanced economic policy designed to ensure that we have non-inflationary growth, and that creates the jobs that are so important to us right across the country.

I should also call his attention to the fact that this morning we had further indications of the health of our economy. Some 68,000 jobs were created last month, and that brings us to a total of a little over 1,300,000 jobs created since September of 1984.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

M. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this: In view of the fact that yesterday, while the Prime Minister was announcing his assistance package as a way to secure a by-election victory in Quebec, the Quebec Premier was again blaming the Bank of Canada for its policy, why does the Government not take the necessary steps to make sure that interest rates are decreasing and that the economic development is shared fairly throughout this country and not just in the Toronto area?

• (1140)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand the logic which the Hon. Member has just put before the House of Commons. First he complains about the interest rate policy which we have been following in order to achieve the non-inflationary growth to which I referred. He does not like that. He does not like the results because the results are very bad for his political Party.

The second thing he complains about is the fact that we are addressing the concerns of regional development in the Province of Quebec. That is precisely the balance which Governments are trying to achieve and must achieve. You can be very focused in the direction of fiscal policy to direct funds to address regional disparities, which is what the announcement yesterday in Quebec was designed to do, and at the same time address a broad economic policy to deal with the inflationary pressures we are seeing in the country today.

That is the balance we have achieved. That is the reason why we have been able to get the successful economic performance about which the OECD is talking and projecting into 1988 and 1989.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Canadians are alarmed to learn that the levels of dioxins along the Niagara River have gone up 10 times over the past two years. At the same time we learn, with dismay, that the Government has decided to cut by 42 people the number of scientists, technicians, and support people working in the conservation and protection service of Environment Canada.

How can the Government keep up its commitment to the Americans to clean the Canadian side of the Niagara of PCBs, dioxin, mercury, phenols, and other toxic substances, with a reduced staff?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to remind the Hon. Member once again, because he has been reminded by the Minister of the Environment, of the dismal record of the previous Government compared to what we have done as a Government. Particularly when it was under the Member's leadership there was very little done.

I could go on and talk about the list of achievements which have been instituted by the Minister of the Environment. They include the Niagara River Toxic Management, the '87 Protocol on Great Lakes Water Quality, the action with respect to the international protocol on the ozone layer, the clean-up of the St. Lawrence, the clean-up of the Windermere Basin, the establishment of a new Environmental Protection Act, a new National Parks Act, and establishment of four new national parks.

I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker. I find it rather picayune for him to suggest one minute detail to which he takes exception.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, at the next election the people of the Niagara Peninsula will not judge how the Liberal Government performed before 1984, they will judge how this Government is performing or not performing during this term. This is not a picayune matter to millions of Canadians in the Niagara Peninsula who are represented by at least six or seven MPs in this House.

STAFF REDUCTION—FULFILLMENT OF CANADIAN OBLIGATIONS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this matter is damned serious and the Deputy Prime Minister had better address it. How can Canada live up to its side of the agreement with the U.S. if it is reducing its staff in Environment Canada which is responsible for keeping up the Canadian side of the agreement?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is refreshing that the Hon. Member is not blaming the Americans for everything. He usually does when we deal with the acid rain abatement program. It is interesting to note the tremendous progress that has been made there in terms of a new awareness and the actions by the States of Ohio and New York. That is due to the persistent efforts of the Prime Minister and the Minister in charge of the environment.

Of course the undertakings and policies that we have provided will be fulfilled, along with many others. I could go on and mention the new federal water policy. I could talk about the Great Lakes Water Level Forecasting and Communications Program, the National Hydrology Research Centre, the $1 million three-year P.E.I. work sharing agreement. Every one of these things is a priority and will be carried out.

BANKS AND BANKING

CHARTERED BANKS—SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance who, I am sure, like the rest of us, was shocked and horrified when he learned that the Bank of Nova Scotia got caught in the ecstasy of imposing service charges on its customers. As the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt indicated, Mrs. de Gruchy was charged $2 to get change for a $20 bill.

I think he was probably further shocked when the Bank of Nova Scotia spokesmen, Clyde Nunn, said yesterday that such a charge does exist for people who are not customers of that particular branch. The branch manager, Mr. John Cusson, went on to say yesterday that a person coming into his bank to make change for a $20 bill would probably be charged a service fee.

Is it not time that the Minister of Finance and his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, start standing up for consumers, stop being spokespersons for Bob MacIntosh and the Canadian Bankers' Association, and do something about this?

I suggest that one of the first things he could do would be to meet with the presidents of at least the major banks in Canada and instruct them to back off from imposing these punitive service charges on their customers.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to tune in to Question Period on Sunday he will see that I comment on that very issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am trying to get my ratings up, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows how important ratings are.

I said on that program that I thought that that action on the part of the Bank of Nova Scotia was outrageous and that, if that happened to me, I would certainly have my money out of that bank the next day.

These are things that we are looking at. A report was tabled in the House of Commons some three or four days ago.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You had better be better than that on the program or we're not going to watch it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not want to pay attention to this important issue. I can assure you that Canadians do understand that this is an important issue and do not like the way the Leader of the Opposition gets frivolous about this type of issue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): We are reviewing this particular report. When we are ready to make a response to the House of Commons we will be doing so.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, this is very interesting. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs suggested yesterday that they should put up a sign in the banks indicating that these charges are being made, or that consumers should boycott the Bank of Nova Scotia. The Minister of Finance now says that he is outraged at this, that he commented on television about it, and that he is going to look into and review the situation.

What is there to review? When the banks are imposing services charges on children to maintain or close out their small accounts, when they are charging senior citizens $2 to obtain change for a $20 bill, what is there to review, what is there to study? Why does the Minister of Finance not take some action, call up his friends who are presidents of the major banks in Canada, and tell them to stop this nonsense immediately?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member enjoys grandstanding in the House of Commons the way he has just done.

Mr. Riis: It's called doing something about it rather than reviewing it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Government received a report from the parliamentary committee four days ago. We are going to act on that report. We have to review the recommendations of the committee. The committee took some time to put together the report that was tabled. Surely the Hon. Member would be upset if we had acted immediately following that without having given a report of that significance the consideration it deserves.

THE ECONOMY

CANADA'S ECONOMIC GROWTH—QUERY WHETHER DANGER OF INFLATION EXISTS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question to the fine Minister of Finance could have been raised by the Leader of the Liberal Opposition, because newspapers articles help him a lot in his research more so than his research services. This morning, The Globe and Mail, The Citizen, The Financial Post and the Toronto Star reported the fact that the OECD, namely the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development had indicated that among 24 countries, Canada was second only to Japan for its economic growth in 1987.

Mr. Speaker, my question is this: In view of our phenomenal rate of growth, is there any danger of inflation? I should like the Minister of Finance to tell Canadians whether he intends to prevent any repetition of the high inflation rates which existed at the time of the improvident Liberals.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the OECD presented a good report which demonstrates the success of the economic policy implemented these past few years by the Government of Canada, and I think the OECD feels that our future looks quite good. The organization foresees a growth of 4 per cent this year and 3 or 4 per cent next year.

I suggest there is a problem in the opinion of the OECD as far as inflation is concerned. As a Government, it is very important for us to understand the inflation problem and set up policies to fight inflation here in Canada, in order to avoid a repetition of the problems which existed in the 1970s, the 1981-82 recession and the major unemployment problem during those years.

It is the reason behind our policies.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DISCUSSIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, a former Minister of Transport who is familiar with the plans to close down the Newfoundland Railway.

The news reports in Newfoundland are saying that a deal is imminent and involves a compensation package for 500 workers, the twinning of the Trans-Canada Highway across the island, and $200 million to complete the Trans-Labrador Highway.

Is this deal imminent? Can he confirm that the elements include the twinning of the Trans-Canada Highway and the completion of the Trans-Labrador Highway? What is taking so long to decide the fate of 500 workers who work for that railway?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there have been discussions between the Government of Canada and the Government of Newfoundland, along with other interested parties, to see whether a satisfactory arrangement might be completed with respect to this very important issue. I can assure the Hon. Member that the interests of the workers will be paramount in any decision that might be taken. They have been very much involved in the discussions.

I cannot indicate to the Hon. Member at this time whether an announcement will be made or when, but the discussions are proceeding and progress is being made. I hope it will be a satisfactory one for the people of Newfoundland and Labrador, and will signify the federal Government's on-going commitments to the economic development and economic development infrastructure for Newfoundland and Labrador.

ROAD CONSTRUCTION—NATIONAL STANDARDS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, if the Trans-Canada is twinned and the road is completed across Labrador, will the Deputy Prime Minister confirm that the Government of Canada has a constitutional obligation under the terms of union with Newfoundland to maintain a national transportation system in the province up to national standards? Will he confirm that if those roads are built they will not only be built but maintained by the Government of Canada up to a national transportation standard?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of "ifs" in the preamble of the Hon. Member's question. I can assure him that obviously one of the major components of the discussion in this deal centres around the constitutional obligations of Canada toward the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Of course, as part of the Terms of Union that will be taken into consideration. That will obviously be upheld.

ACID RAIN—BILLS BEFORE AMERICAN CONGRESS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Special Committee on Acid Rain went to Washington this week to discuss the bills now before Congress with Senators and members of Congress. There are four bills to reduce the emissions that cause acid rain.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that the Government will continue to urge the U.S. Congress to pass a law this year, instead of waiting for a new Administration and a new Congress, so that some action is taken this year?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course the Prime Minister and many Members of Parliament, particularly the Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka who was Chairman of the committee, have provided distinguished leadership in that particular area. In spite of what the New Democratic Party and Liberal Members across the way suggest, progress is being made and awareness is at a much higher rate today than it was three or four years ago.

Our Government, with the support of Members of Parliament, can take a great deal of credit, particularly with recent pronouncements in the States of New York and Ohio.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT PRESSURE

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, indeed there has been progress. There is an opening now. That is precisely why I am putting my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Will there be pressure for legislative action in the Congress this year? It seems there are more Senators than Congressmen willing to push for a law this year and no hope that we will get a better deal if we wait another year. Yet our Government seems to be stalling. Our Ambassador was prepared to wait.

Why is our Government not doing as much as American Senators and Congressmen to get a law through this year?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that we will pursue this very important initiative with the very same vigour in the future as we have in the past.

PENITENTIARIES

LETTERS SENT BY CONVICTED MASS MURDERER TO PARENTS OF VICTIMS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed the the Parliamentary Secretary to the Solicitor General. It relates to the mailing privileges of inmates incarcerated in federal institutions.

I have received reports recently from parents of some of mass murderer Clifford Olsen's victims who have received from him obscene letters which visibly detail and describe the terrible and senseless brutality which he committed against their children. This is an outrage.

One letter I received described Clifford Olsen's letter as: "a sick perverted document directing hate toward myself and my family".

Will the Parliamentary Secretary inform the House if the Solicitor General is aware of this and what he will do to prevent its continued occurrence?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly unfortunate that these letters have gone out to families of victims. The situation is bad enough, and having to relive it makes it that much worse.

The Solicitor General is certainly aware of the situation, as are the wardens of our institutions. As a result of this, the warden has instructed that henceforth all of Olsen's correspondence, except with his lawyer and other privileged correspondence such as with Members of Parliament, will be scrutinized.

As a matter of routine, inmates' correspondence is not read unless directed by the warden. However, if persons receive a letter from an inmate and do not wish to receive further letters, they can correspond with the correctional offices and indicate that they wish no further correspondence from that particular inmate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be two questions by the Member for Notre Dame de Grâce—Lachine East and one by the Member for Vancouver East. That will end Question Period.

• (1200)

PENITENTIARIES

ESCAPE OF THREE CONVICTS FROM LAVAL INSTITUTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Solicitor General my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday three dangerous convicts escaped from the Laval maximum security penitentiary near Montreal, that is, the old St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. They escaped by using a forklift and garden hose which somehow were left unsecured, and by taking a female guard hostage and by using her machinegun and revolver.

I know the penitentiary service has announced an internal inquiry, but I ask the Acting Prime Minister if he would assure the House and the Canadian population that at this inquiry all parties will have an opportunity to be heard, particularly the union of guards at that penitentiary, and that the results of the inquiry will be made public? Would he also tell us what steps are being taken to audit and upgrade the security at this and all maximum security penitentiaries?

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada: Mr. Speaker, I think we should all be relieved that the correctional officer and the other woman hostage who were taken are both safe. We are very thankful for that. I think both of them should be commended for their bravery with respect to the actions that took place yesterday in the hostage taking incident.

As the Member has already indicated, a general investigation is being opened and convened to examine all the circumstances of the escape. I am sure all Members, and anyone who has input into that escape, will have the opportunity to make their views known to that investigation. There will also be an outside member appointed to that review committee.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL SECURITY RESOURCES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, according to certain guards and union officials, the catwalk at the penitentiary, and the control centre, were unsafe and understaffed. It was said it was impossible for the presently authorized staff to survey the situation properly from a security point of view. Therefore, I would ask the Acting Prime Minister, or some Minister who has the authority, if he will immediately take steps with the Treasury Board to get additional resources, not only for perimeter security at these institutions but also for programs which will reduce the tension within the penitentiaries and help prevent this sort of incident.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General of Canada: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that with the general investigation, recommendations will be made, and if recommendations of that nature are made I am sure they will be taken care of.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East on one question, please.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who is also a transportation expert. The Minister will be aware of the continuing concern of Vancouver City Council and the B.C. cruise ship industry that the application of Bill C-52, the Coastal Trade Act, seriously threatens the cruise ship industry which brings $70 million in annual revenues to British Columbia.

In view of the fact that this Bill is now in the other place, will the Deputy Prime Minister personally undertake to secure a government review of the Bill in light of west coast concerns? And will he specifically guarantee that any government regulations that are passed to implement this Bill will not adversely affect this vital west coast industry? Will he particularly ensure a revision of the waiver system from the annual application to a longer term system that will allow more adequate corporate planning?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad my friend opposite could not get on the Question Period earlier, like about last week, because all aspects of this problem have been resolved as of last week.

Ms. Mitchell: It is a different question. You didn't listen.

Mr. Thacker: The Minister of State for Transport handled all the customs part of it.

Ms. Mitchell: No, they have not. You haven't been listening.

Mr. Thacker: At absolutely no time has Bill C-52 impacted upon the cruise industry on the west coast.

Ms. Mitchell: You go to the committee hearing next week and you will find out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair has received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Privilege—Mr. Parry

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED INCORRECT ANSWER DURING ADJOURNMENT MOTION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of a statement made last night during the adjournment debate proceedings by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker). I feel that my privileges may in some way have been infringed upon by letting stand on the record of Hansard a statement which is in fact untrue. More to the point, I believe that when a statement that is false is allowed to remain on the parliamentary record, the privileges of all Members of this honourable House are in fact impaired.

Hansard is used as a journal of record, and while obviously it records the partisan interpretations, the invective, the differing analysis of the three Parties, nevertheless I believe that where a statement is presented as fact, it should really be fact. The specific statement made by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport is found on page 16317 of Hansard. In talking of documentary evidence he stated:

> Despite persistent efforts by my officials to get a copy of this document, a copy has not been forthcoming.

The Parliamentary Secretary was talking about an export permit related document, in fact, a packing slip, and this document, which had been requested from my office by Mr. David Ryan, the Director of Export Control, on May 12, after my question, was unfortunately not sent to Mr. Ryan until May 17 because of a problem in identifying which part of the documentation was required and because of the intervention of a long weekend.

Nevertheless, this document was indeed, contrary to what the Parliamentary Secretary said, sent to Mr. David Ryan, the director of Export Control, and, indeed, the Government already had possession of a copy of that document, or should have had, if the export control process was working because right on the packing slip it says that a copy is to go to the Department of National Defence as part of the export permit process.

Therefore, should you, Mr. Speaker, find there is a prima facie case of breach of privilege involved in that statement, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion. Should you not find such a prima facie breach of privilege, I would nevertheless request that you refer this question, not as a specific instance but as a matter of general practice, to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure in order to determine what measures could or should be taken to ensure the veracity of the parliamentary record.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sure this does not constitute a question of privilege. However, notwithstanding that, my colleague opposite has raised a problem and I am more than happy to refer it back to the officials and try to get the correct chronology. We will get to the bottom of it one way or the other.

Mr. Parry: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Parliamentary Secretary for that assurance and I should have pointed out in presenting the question of privilege that there was absolutely no reflection intended on his veracity or sincerity, since he was merely presenting the notes the departmental officials had given him.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair thanks both Members for their comments and their graciousness.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION MADE BY HON. MEMBER FOR SAINT-DENIS

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday in the House on the debate on a Member's motion and the two votes that if I was mistaken, I would not hesitate to apologize today. I just wanted to tell you that I do not have to apologize because I was not mistaken. It is true that Raoul Wallenberg is already an honorary Canadian citizen.

So, Mr. Speaker, you know that the Speaker did me the honour of appointing me chairman of the legislative committee on the Bill to amend the Bretton Woods and related agreements. I have the honour to report to the House, to show that cooperation still exists and that there is no boycott and everything proceeds normally when people want to cooperate. If only the spirit of the legislative committee that studied the Bretton Woods and related agreements prevailed in this House, we would not have had this morning's unnecessary debate.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions from constituents of mine living in Surrey—White Rock—North Delta, as well as people living in Vancouver, Langley, and points throughout the Fraser Valley.

They state that whereas the distinguished Justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, in striking down Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada, have left Canadians without any law restricting abortions; and whereas nothing in the Supreme Court decision has established abortion as a right; and whereas all human life is a continuum from the moment of conception to the moment of death, there is no point in time between conception and the birth of the infant at which point we can say that this is not a human life; wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, ever pray and call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception, and at all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

I have a second petition similar to the first. The wording is slightly different. It states that whereas on January 28, 1988, the Supreme Court of Canada struck down the abortion law and Parliament has now the duty to pass new legislation; and whereas the unborn citizens of Canada are now devoid of any legislation protecting their basic right to life; wherefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass immediately legislation that will protect the unborn child from the moment of conception.

[Translation]

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, today I wish to present a petition with about 900 signatures, most of which designate the names of people in my riding. There are some from Hull and some from Ottawa as well. This is a petition that was circulated by the movement Coalition pour la vie, and it states the following concerns: It says that the unborn child is a human being, that consequently it has a right to life and to the protection of that life, that the Supreme Court of Canada, in ruling that the federal legislation on abortion is unconstitutional, has left the unborn child without legal protection, and that the Supreme Court has nevertheless indicated that Parliament has the authority to pass legislation to protect the life of the unborn child.

I am therefore tabling these petitions on behalf of the undersigned to express their concerns regarding the vacuum left by the Supreme Court's decision.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present two petitions today. The first is similar to the petitions that I have been presenting every day since January 1. It is signed by a number of constituents who represent the communities of Salmon Arm, Pritchard, Vernon and Kamloops, British Columbia. They are concerned that the present federal Government has no mandate from the people of Canada by which to conclude a trade deal. They believe that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) compromised Canadian sovereignty when he negotiated this deal.

They believe that the negotiated deal threatens the very fabric of our political and economic sovereignty, since it removes the power of the federal Government to control effectively foreign ownership, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians, as well as to equalize opportunities between the regions of Canada.

I could go on and on. It is quite a lengthy petition. But I will not go on.

The basic thrust of the petition is that the petitioners think that Canada got a bad deal. They are asking Parliament to dissolve now to enable the people of Canada to have an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

HOUSING TAX ALLOWANCE IN YELLOWKNIFE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition from the residents of Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, which points out that when Bill C-23 was passed, back in December of 1986, it substantially changed the rules relating to tax treatment on housing. The petitioners state that Yellowknife was designated as having a developed rental market and housing benefits that were valued at the fair market value.

They point out that to establish a fair market value there must be a willing seller and a willing buyer operating in a position of equality. In Yellowknife there is virtually a zero vacancy rate. The majority of housing in the rental market is controlled by employers. There is really no viable, fair market existing in that community.

The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to treat Yellowknife the same as the remainder of the Northwest Territories for the purposes of the tax treatment of housing benefits, or in prescribed areas.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present two petitions containing 58 signatures, which call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, the exception being the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

CUT IN FUNDS FOR CHALLENGE '88 PROGRAM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present today. They bring to the attention of the House the serious concerns of people in greater Montreal.

The petition speaks for itself. It states that a 40 per cent cut in the budget of the Challenge '88 program in the Montreal region has a negative impact which goes beyond mere numbers of unemployed students and disappointed community organizers and organizations. It is a well known fact that almost the totality of cultural communities, visible or otherwise, live in this area. The increase in available grants to other Québec regions can therefore bring cultural communities very little comfort. They are thus being discriminated against in a way that is unacceptable from a Government wishing to appear committed to a multicultural policy.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament and the Government in particular to reconsider this ill-conceived cut in funds available to the aforementioned groups who are found in all parts of Montreal, and Ville St. Laurent, Dollard des Ormeaux, Laval, Côte St. Luc, Beaconsfield, Town of Mount Royal, Brossard and Saint-Léonard. I hope the Government will take their plea into consideration.

REQUEST FOR INSTALLATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY SAFETY DEVICES IN AUTOMOBILES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, today I again have the privilege of tabling two petitions signed by residents of Rouyn-Noranda, sent to me by the Regional Health and Social Services Council of Abitibi—Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, our highway safety campaign continues, because the undersigned are aware of the fact that since 1974, federal motor vehicle safety regulations allow the installation of airbags by drivers of private vehicles, and they believe that these devices would greatly reduce the number of fatal and serious injuries.

Wherefore the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to make the installation of airbags on the front seat and the installation of adjustable shoulder-seat belts for rear seat passengers compulsory.

This campaign is wearing me out, Mr. Speaker!

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege to present three petitions today. The first petition is signed by approximately 25 residents of Balmertown and Red Lake areas. The second petition is signed by approximately 50 residents of those same areas.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child, except in those cases where an abortion is necessary to protect the life of the mother.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the third petition is signed by approximately 75 residents of Kenora, Keewatin and surrounding areas. They call upon Parliament to designate all communities in tier three ridings as eligible for the northern residents tax allowance.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present two petitions from residents of Spadina and nearby constituencies.

The first petition concerns immigration. It points out that the Government has promised to admit as members of the family class for immigration purposes unmarried sons and daughters of all ages. Two years ago, through the then Minister of Justice, the Government also promised to remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and residents of three years' standing in regard to their rights to sponsor parents of any age.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government will fulfil its promises now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my second petition is from people who are concerned that the Conservative Government, without a mandate from the people, has undertaken to negotiate a trade deal with the United States which, in the opinion of these petitioners, threatens Canadian sovereignty. In particular, it would reduce the ability of the Government to develop the regions of Canada and to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interests of Canadians. Furthermore, it fails to secure access to the United States market, which was a key objective of the negotiations.

Therefore, the petitioners request Parliament dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present two petitions. One is from residents of Westlock, Vimy, Clyde, Jarvie, and Edmonton, Alberta. This duly certified petition calls upon Parliament to enact legislation to protect the life of the unborn from the moment of conception.

PARK 'N RIDE LEASE AT EDMONTON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from residents of the Cities of Edmonton, St. Albert, Fort Saskatchewan, the hamlet of Sherwood Park, and a number of surrounding communities. It contains some 1,800 signatures. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to stay its desire to allow the Park 'n Ride lease at the Edmonton International Airport to expire and instead negotiate a new lease with the present tenant.

ALTA NOVA ASSOCIATES INC.

Question No. 335—Mr. Boudria:

Since September 4, 1984, has Alta Nova Associates Inc. received any money from the Government and, if so, on what dates and, in each case (a) in what amount (b) were contracts involved and, if so, in each case (i) what was the nature of the services contracted for (ii) what was the amount involved (iii) were such contracts put to public tender and, if so, which ones?

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): No.

[Translation]

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Wednesday, June 8, consideration of second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Mr. Danis): On Wednesday, June 8, when Bill C-55 was under discussion, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) proposed two amendments to the House which the Chair took under advisement. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) proposed a subamendment to one of the amendments, and the Chair also took it under advisement.

I have now had an opportunity to look at the amendments and the subamendment and I find that they are procedurally acceptable. I will therefore propose them to the House.

However, before doing so I wish to inform Hon. Members that since the Minister's motion is an all-encompassing motion as one message to the Senate, after consultation with the Hon. Member for York West he has agreed to combine his two amendments into one, and that is the form in which I shall propose them to the House.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moves:

That the motion be amended:

(a) in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 3 by deleting all the words after the word "be" in subparagraph (II) and substituting the following therefor:

"admitted to that country, if removed from Canada, and would have the right to have the merits of their claim determined in that country;".

(b) in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 11 by adding the following words at the end thereof:

"and in regard to an advisory list of safe countries as drafted and defined by the convention refugee determination division;".

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moves:

That the amendment be amended in paragraph (a) by adding the following words at the end thereof:

"according to the principles of fundamental justice;".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. When we concluded the debate on Wednesday, at that time the Speaker indicated that there would be 10 minutes remaining for questions and comments following my remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Fine, we will do that. On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald).

Ms. McDonald: I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) to elaborate on the subamendment he has proposed. The wording is very clear: "according to the principles of fundamental justice". I wonder if he could explain to the House how this would improve the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Heap: I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I wish to make two brief background points and then address the particular words of the amendment.

Since 1951 when the UN Convention regarding the Status of Refugees was adopted, which was subsequently amended in a protocol in 1967 and signed by Canada and 100 other countries, the focus of refugee legislation has been on the individual. I could quote from the United Nations handbook on procedures and criteria for determining refugee status, but while there is much in there that is relevant, I will simply point out that the most familiar sentence: "No contracting state shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers or territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group, or political opinion." There is more that defines that, Mr. Speaker, but the practice has been to distinguish this from previous statutory definitions of refugee which would say that all people of a certain class, all people from a certain country, et cetera, are refugees.

In this case the emphasis is on the individual and the individual's story. Why does this individual claim a well-founded fear of persecution upon returning home for race, religion, political opinion, membership in a particular group or nationality? Second, the practice throughout the years since 1951 has consistently been that the United Nations High Commission for Refugees has urged that each case be examined individually. In fact, this was confirmed resoundingly by the Supreme Court of Canada for three years when it declared in the Singh case that because this is a matter where life and liberty are at risk, each person must have an oral hearing. That is to say, each person must have a chance to state his case and show his credibility, if he is credible, before the very people who will make the decision yes or no.

That is the background in this matter. What is at stake here in these amendments is that the amendment as proposed by the Government is faulty. The original amendment proposed by the Senate was that the claimant might be sent back to a country, not the country he was fleeing, but a so-called safe third country, if that country were willing to receive the claimant if removed from Canada or in which the claimant has the right to have the merits of his claim determined. The Government, unfortunately, has changed that back to say, "the country to which the claimant can be returned". To return the claimant does not mean the claimant would have any right to stay in that country. It might simply be to arrive at the airport and be bounced on the next plane out after his arrival to God knows where.

The word used in Canadian immigration law to reflect the entry of a person to a country with the right to remain there is that he shall be admitted, and not have the right to return. "Admitted" would be a stronger word, I believe, than "received". That is why I support the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Furthermore, in both the Senate amendment and the government amendment there is a weakness around the word "or" where it says "the claimant would be admitted or in which the claimant has a right to have the merits of the claim determined". That can break in half. I believe there are no countries willing to accept a claimant who has left that country and willing to give that claimant the right to have his claim determined there. Once he is out, the door is shut. The second half, the right to have the merits of the claim determined, looks good but it means nothing in present reality.

Therefore, the amendment by the Hon. Member for York West which would change "or" to "and" is vital. A claimant must be allowed to return to be admitted and to have his claim determined. What I wish to add are the principles of fundamental justice as indicated by the Canadian courts. This means not only whether he will have his claim examined on its merits, nor the circumstances of the country he passed through or the general laws of his country, but the actual merits and history of his claim. The Canadian courts have determined that that must be an oral hearing and there must also be the right of appeal. Therefore, the phrase "the principles of fundamental justice" sums up what went before in the motion of the Member for York West but also adds the oral hearing on the merits and the appeal. That is my reason for moving the motion.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I would have loved to have had a copy of the two amendments that have been fused by the Table, then I could better support the debate around the word "or" which my hon. colleague so movingly moved. While we are locating the "or", let's row this boat, which is a big problem anyway.

As the Minister said, this is a companion piece. In that companion piece of legislation is that infamous Bill C-84 in which we are planning to row the boat, and the "oars" would come in very handy along with Noah's Ark from where that Bill must have emanated. To continue the pun on words, Mr. Speaker, if I may, as the "or" hit the fan, what is sad is that this Bill does take us back in time. We really are back in Noah's Ark with people going two by two into unsafe boats. Lord knows what might happen to them in terms of their physical safety, never mind the mental anguish or the problem they had to get to the boats.

I think it is an archaic response. I am sad to note that the Minister, in her maiden entrance, I guess, into debate on Bills C-55 and C-84, put them together and linked them so closely. She makes it very clear that she finds these two Bills companion Bills. When she stood to move the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, she started her remarks in responding to the Message from the Senate with respect to Bill C-55 with, "I want to stress the degree of scrutiny to which this Bill and Bill C-84 have been subjected". These two vital Bills, which I consider a complementary package, have been considered from every possible angle. The only angle which the Minister missed was that the matter was being discussed and examined by her departmental staff who continue to mislead her with respect to what is in the best interests of Canada and Canadians.

Although I am pleased to stand to respond once again—it seems to me that this must be about the third time I have talked to this Bill—I stand to talk to it in the full knowledge that the Bill has been before this House for 11 months. During that time an incredible amount of discussion has taken place around the Bill and its clauses. We have had expressions of concern from all kinds of groups. We have heard from churches, non-governmental organizations, individual Canadians and Canadians who have relatives waiting. We heard from Canadians who have come from where human rights are not respected who told us that friends and families are subjected to serious harassment if not the potential for even more serious consequences.

There are three major problems facing Bill C-55. The first, to which a lot of these groups are referring, is the prescreening. The second is the safe third country concept, and the third is the whole principle of the appeal process.

Before I deal with that, I thought it might be interesting to think about how we arrived at a state in the world in which we are looking at supposed abuse—I should not say "supposed" because there is obviously abuse—of the refugee system in Canada. Such abuse was noted back in the early 1980s when the Liberal Government named Rabbi Gunther Plaut to take a good look at the changes in the world that were leading to this upheaval in the system and to the new masses of poor souls looking for safe harbour. Rabbi Plaut came up with some very solid, sound suggestions. The principles of those suggestions flowed from the fact that we already had an Immigration Act that had been updated to reflect what had happened after the Second World War.

The United Nations had put together a handbook on refugees and had a convention relating to the status of refugees which we all signed over 20 years ago. That refugee convention stated that no contracting state shall expel or return—and the French word, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, is refoulement, and that is a very key word, much more expressive in the fullness of its concept than the simplicity of the word in our own English language. No one knows how to use that language more effectively than you, Sir. I know how you love to play with the fullness of words. Refouler would be one you would appreciate for its fullness.

The convention goes on to say that no contracting state shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group or political opinion. That is why one would want to examine carefully each person, case by case, who came to these shores, whether by land, by sea or by air. That is why one would want to examine the justice of a refugee's cause and the reasonableness of his request.

There was one kind of refugee who sought harbour at our shores prior to enduring the Second World War, and a different kind is now coming to our shores. This started in the late 1960s and the mid-1970s with the boat people from Vietnam. We all recall the waves of people coming from other lands, people to whom we were not quite accustomed. Look how they have added to the beauty of this country.

The disaster of the St. Louis and the loss of life as a result of our insensitivity to the needs of over 900 young Jews on that boat which was returned without really giving much thought is a very black blemish on the history of Canada. We would certainly not want to repeat that. That is why I was saddened when the new Minister linked the two Bills, Bill C-55 and the other Bill.

I see another colleague at the back who asked me how I would put those two Bills together. I think it is an unfortunate reality that they were joined in matrimony, not, I hope, forever, but I hope at least they will be joined with some new amendments that will be forthcoming from the Minister.

The sadness is that this Minister gave us hope. She met with the Senate and seemingly indicated that she was prepared to bring about some reasonable amendments. What did the Minister do after she made those wonderful, glowing statements? She moved the adoption of amendments by saying that they represent the best possible changes to the Bill and include a number of government and Senate recommendations reflecting Canadians' concerns for the protection of genuine refugees without impairing our ability to control abuse.

Of course, that is the goal of all parliamentarians. That is the goal of the groups that have been speaking to the Government, the groups that came before the legislative committee. It has been the ongoing wish and hope that we would find the true, just, safe, secure and fair measures that are typical of Canadian approaches to refugees, to immigrants and to people in need in any sphere of concern, whether on the national or the international level.

It is sad that this Minister did not address in substance any parts of the Bill through her amendments. She closed her eyes and obviously blocked her ears. I might say that she is like those three monkeys, see not, hear not, speak not. She played with the legislation. She used the legislative magic wand. She tinkered about with this Bill but brought in no substantive amendments. She did not bring amendments that would have given heart to the people who have worked so very hard and who want to co-operate with this Minister, people who look to her for guidance and hope.

What did we get? The clauses that were of main concern remain as they were. There is a denial of the right of oral hearings as required. There is a denial of a clear definition of safe countries and of who would define a safe country. For Tamils, is Britain a safe country? Tamils who are living in my riding can tell us that it is not a safe country for many of them. My hon. colleague across the way, the Parliamentary Secretary, knows well of what I speak. We have heard from those groups internationally.

The so-called safe country concept remains, as does the problem with the oral hearings which do not touch on the issues in depth. There is the question of the right to counsel, and the question of a fair chance for refugees to state their cases or make their declarations at the beginning. All of these concerns, if met, would have humanized this piece of legislation. The Minister turned a deaf ear to these changes. Now we are supposed to stand up and applaud the new look of this lovely, young Minister who did not hear a thing or whose ears were blocked by the functionaries and bureaucrats in that Department who do not want to be dictated to.

I believe that Canadians, as people of goodwill, want these changes. The Canadian Council of Churches and the Canadian Council of Catholic Bishops have all made it very clear that the flaws and errors of the Bill have remained.

There was a case that occurred about three years ago which was so poorly handled and so unfair that the special committee set up by the House, the committee that wrote the Equality for All report, stated that dramatic changes were needed in our refugee procedure and in our immigration legislation. That is pretty sad. That report, consisting of more than 400 pages and over 85 recommendations, carefully considered, is just gathering dust instead of being examined and re-examined as an excellent guideline reflecting the true values and thinking of Canadians across Canada.

The first issue that is of great concern is the question of prescreening. How can we have a good determination system when we have barely had an opportunity to go deeply into the facts of a case? I do not think it is a fair process. Recommendations were made suggesting that there be a change in the prescreening which would involve a refugee board member and an immigration adjudicator. There is a sense that the immigration adjudicator should know his immigration law well and should be well informed as to the evolution of immigration.

The key is in allowing access to a refugee board with a very competent and clearly trained staff who can examine cases and relate them to the individual countries involved. This is a fundamental and important aspect of this Bill.

• (1250)

What does the Canadian Council for Refugees say? It is an organization made up of 96 different groups and at its annual convention over the weekend of June 8 it urged municipalities to aid refugees whose lives will otherwise be jeopardized by this legislation. That group is particularly concerned about a clause that would allow authorities to deport claimants to a safe third country picked by the Cabinet. I do not know why cabinet Ministers would want to put their necks on the line over this kind of definition. It is totally ridiculous as far as I can see. They are also getting pressure, as we know, from countries who want to do business with us. Then you get the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) sticking his nose into cases where he had no business in the first place. He would not have been caught and he certainly should not be caught if we made sure that members of the Cabinet did not get their fingers stuck in this kind of pot.

Mr. Friesen: I agree.

Mrs. Finestone: Good, so you support the amendment that it be tightened up? Thank you.

Mr. Friesen: Who said that?

Mrs. Finestone: Another group expressing grave concern was B'nai Brith. They denounced the legislation and appealed to the Minister to make further amendments. The lawyer with that group's Institute for International Affairs said the Government could not have come up with a Bill more open to legal challenges than if it had tried. What is wrong with the Government? It must have a lot of lawyer friends. It does not matter what Bill I stand up here to speak to, it is like someone saying, "Open Sesame" to the lawyers to go to court. They are all going to be so busy we are going to have to produce many more lawyers just to deal with the holes and gaps in the Government's legislation.

Mr. Dick: What happened to the ones your previous Government hired?

Mrs. Finestone: I suggest you look in your own backyard first.

This legislation will be ensnarled in legal challenges for years to come under everything from the Charter of Rights, the Bill of Rights, Canadian law and international agreements. The Minister got up and said very clearly that she made sure this legislation was in agreement with all our international accords. Obviously she made a few mistakes. I am sure she knows how to read. They just gave her the wrong books to read.

The Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy condemned the five amendments as politicization of the refugee problem. Amnesty International's Canadian refugee section said it will not sit on any consultative committee on refugees that the Minister may have in mind. The Canadian Bar Association, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women—

Mr. Friesen: Oh, now, there is a winner.

Mrs. Finestone: Don't sneer. You may not like some of the things they do but many of the things they do are in the interests of Canadian men and women.

Mr. Dantzer: So there, Benno!

Mrs. Finestone: You and I share this beautiful, privileged Canada, and we ought to listen to what all these groups have to say. Maybe we would learn. That is why we are here, to have our finger on the pulse of society. They do not like what the Government is saying. They do not like the way it is proceeding on the refugee Bill. They want changes to the prescreening. They want changes to the access to hearings. They certainly want a change in the way we define safe third countries. We should be doing our own work instead of allowing others to pick up the cudgel for us.

I would like to conclude by thanking my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), our immigration critic, my friend, the NDP critic, and all the groups out there who, as they plead a little bit louder, might get the Minister to look at the Senate amendments, take another look at her own amendment, and realize she has made a serious mistake.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I want to re-emphasize an observation I made several years ago about the previous Member for Mount Royal. I think the current Member is a lot easier to work with than her predecessor in our work here. However, I just wonder to what extent she enjoys being locked in a time warp. What she was talking about today is certainly not the message we received from the Senate. She is still debating the messages she got from special interest groups across Canada who appeared both before our committee and the Senate committee. Undoubtedly their views have not changed, but she certainly was not taking into account the views of her own colleagues in the other place.

On page 5, Part II, under the heading "Observations", in the third paragraph, the last sentence of the Senate report says:

> We have concluded that the over-all structure chosen by the Government should be left intact.

The Hon. Member says we have to change what has been called the prescreening process. That is part of the over-all structure, and yet the Senate concluded that the structure is okay. They may have some criticism on fine points, but they want to leave the structure as it is. There is no doubt that the special interest groups across Canada are going to criticize that because they want to string out the structure. They want to make it a system that will produce five or six years of appeals. We have designed a system that will reduce that process to a maximum of about 18 weeks. That system will work.

In addition, the prescreening process includes a quality oral hearing right at the outset. I hope the Hon. Member recognizes that. The claimant is allowed legal counsel at that hearing. If they cannot find legal counsel, the Government will provide it. Counsel can coach the claimant to say, "I want to be declared a refugee". Nothing could be fairer than that.

On page 7 of the Senate report it says:

> The committee has concluded that the safe country provisions as they appeared in the first reading version of the Bill contained the minimum protections essential for compliance with the Charter and our international obligations under the Convention.

I hope my friend from Mount Royal reads that and reads it again. That is what her colleagues in the Senate said. There is no doubt that they quarrel with some other aspects of the Bill, otherwise they would not have recommended amendments. While we cannot accept all of their suggestions, our quarrel is not with the suggestions so much as it is that it took them nine months to make them. In the meantime, we have another 20,000 or 30,000 claimants in Canada. We have to take care of that backlog. Yet the Senate sat on the legislation, heard the same witnesses, read the same briefs presented to us, and it took them about nine months to do it. In the meantime, the system became warped and we were forced to deal with the backlog.

I hope my friend from Mount Royal will accept the fact that while the Senate does want to see some changes, and we have considered a few of them, they agree with the broad structure of the Bill.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I know that my hon. friend is fulfilling a mandate he has received and a gag order that directs how he should speak. I think that in his heart he does not believe what he has just said.

• (1300)

Think back to the emergency which brought us back to this House. We were all in a state of collapse over the arrival of a few—

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Just to keep the debate historically accurate, the emergency which brought us back to the House was Bill C-84, not this Bill.

Mrs. Finestone: Thank you very much. We had a kangaroo court in this House which rushed that legislation through. It did not take heed of the amendments. It was sent to the other place and the Member said it took nine months for the Senate to sit on the legislation. No, it took nine months to hear what was being said. The Government held hearings but did not hear and did not take up any of the amendments. The Senate actually heard, and thank goodness it did. It sent the legislation back here. The Member spoke as though the Minister had taken into account all the things the Senate said which would have improved this Bill.

There is no question that this Party, and all Members of this House, want quicker solutions. They want a system which will eliminate the backlog and will be fair. They want to rid us of the unscrupulous behaviour which puts human lives in danger. However, we want to do it with fairness and justice from the Canadian point of view.

The government has not done that in this Bill. The Senate recommended 18 amendments and the Government accepted only two, and those were housekeeping matters. I suggest that the Member reread the real story rather than what was said by the Minister.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member. I realize that she has some knowledge of the background of this matter, probably from her own city where there are many refugees from different countries.

What does she think of our Government prescribing the United States of America as a safe country to which to return a Salvadoran who is claiming refugee status in Canada? We must bear in mind that the United States' record is to find 85 per cent of Nicaraguan refugees claimants to be refugees, about 50 or 60 per cent of Polish claimants to be refugees, and 3 per cent of Salvadorans to be refugees.

Would it be reasonably safe, as prescribed by the Government's unamended clause—not the clause amended by the Hon. Member's colleague from York West or as amended by my subamendment—to send a Salvadoran back to the United States? Or, in the alternative, does the Member think that the Government should declare the United States as a country unsafe for Salvadorans?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for that question. He is a very knowledgeable man. I am not an expert in this field. Needless to say, both he and my colleague in this political Party believe we need that amendment. I certainly agree that we need it. That is why I felt so strongly about removing the Cabinet's obligation, let alone responsibility, to name safe third countries.

The United States is in a political bind because it has determined a protection move. Whether we agree with it or do not agree with it is not the issue. It has determined that it wishes to do something with respect to people from Nicaragua and the Government of Nicaragua and has taken sides. Therefore, those are their friends and anyone from Nicaragua, depending upon which side of the aisle they sit, will receive safe harbour.

However, the United States is not so friendly with El Salvador. It does not have the same political, economic, or social interests in El Salvador. Therefore, El Salvadorans sent back to the United States are not safe. They are trans-shipped immediately into orbit. They are back in serious trouble.

I suggest very strongly that it is an error to put the Government in such a position. We do political and economic business and have strong social ties with many countries, the human rights records of which we do not like, and we have something to say.

I strongly support the amendments which have been put forward along with the subamendment. I hope that the Government will see fit to do the same thing.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope that my friend will withdraw the remark about a gag being placed on me because that is certainly not the case.

Mrs. Finestone: I certainly withdraw. I know that could not take place. The Hon. Member is a most outspoken gentleman.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a sense that this House has heard a great deal on this Bill and has debated it and its companion legislation, Bill C-84, in considerable detail and at considerable length. I also have a sense that we have, occasionally, within the House of Commons, questions of morality which face us and on which we have to reflect our country.

They are often very difficult cases which, I am certain, are not popular. They are cases which, in the pre-election period, people may not want to confront. Yet, I think that in this case there is such a contradiction of everything which we as a country have stood for in terms of the protection of the individual under the due process of law, that this Bill simply becomes an unacceptable and, frankly, immoral imposition on the people of Canada.

I do not say that kind of thing about the trade legislation which I debate. That is an issue of economic and political choice. I disagree with the economic and political choice which is made. I think that the consequences of that choice are massive. I am prepared to debate it and we certainly have debated it in terms of questions, opposition days, and so forth.

The same is true with various of the privatizations which have come before this House. There have often, I think, been grievous mistakes for which future governments and future Canadians will end up having to pay. I think that is true, for instance, of the Air Canada legislation which was given second reading in this Parliament this week.

However, with this Bill we are dealing with something far more fundamental, something which cuts at the heart of our concept of the country much more than many of the other Bills which we have debated. I myself thought, frankly, that the Government, at some strategic point, would recognize that you cannot turn your back on hundreds of years of the building of due process of law within this country and within the countries from which many of us have come, whether Britain, France, or the hundreds of other countries from which we have come.

This is the final chance for the House of Commons to again consider again this legislation and pass judgment on what the Senate has suggested to us. This Bill still has as its fundamental purpose the effect of eliminating the potential for an independent hearing on the merits of the case of refugees who reach this country. Regardless of what the Senate may say, not only is it a negation of our traditional principles of fundamental justice, it is so un-Canadian that I cannot believe how the Government can continue along this path in spite of the opposition from so many groups to which we have looked for moral leadership in the past.

It is partly a personal consideration that I bring to bear when I look at a Bill like this. My grandparent's grandparents came to Canada from Germany after the failed revolution of 1848. There was no question about admitting them to our country because they were not just refugees, they were refugees who had challenged an established regime. While they may not have been revolutionaries themselves, they certainly supported that democratic revolution and had to flee.

In 1988 or 1989, when the same kind of people come to this country, will they get the same kind of treatment that my grandparent's grandparents received? According to this Bill, there is absolutely no possibility that that will take place. I consider that a deeply unhappy blot on this Parliament, which was elected to try to bring change in our approach to the future.

Apart from my own family, I see this in my constituency where constituents have crossed from Eastern Europe, often at tremendous personal risk, and have been accepted here as refugees. I see others who have crossed from Central America, at great personal risk, and have had the right to a fair hearing in this country. That right is being eliminated by this Bill.

I say to the Minister who is shaking her head that the hearing which people will receive when they reach the border is not a hearing to consider the merits of their case. Because of that, it is not a full scale hearing before an independent body where they can put as much of a persuasive argument as possible that would allow some kind of assessment of their claim with justice and due process of justice being seen to have taken place.

I recognize the extreme pressures on the Government with respect to this issue. We are talking about a world in which there are millions of refugees whose dismal, difficult, dangerous position, whether it is in Thailand, Sudan or Latin America, is very much a blot on how the world community has operated.

I can see the pressures from the point of view of the Government to try to set up some kind of barriers that will somehow give us a handle on the great number of people in the world who want to be some place else because of the lack of democracy, lack of human rights, lack of equality within their own countries.

I understand as well the pressures brought to bear by the immigrant communities in my constituency who say that it is not right that someone claiming to be a refugee can stay here for five years before getting a hearing, go through various appeals and so on and ultimately be able stay in this country because of some sort of ministerial amnesty. They do not have as logical reason to be in this country as a relative of one of my constituents may have. There is a great sense of opposition and anger about that, which I must say that I share.

It is not right that governments in this country have so badly bungled the whole issue of refugees. The last two Governments in particular have simply been incapable of finding solutions that are both consistent with our traditions of natural law, of due process, of humanitarianism, and our tradition of fairness to existing immigrants in this country.

I think the particular amendments which have come before us are in fact amendments which improve the situation somewhat within a rather unfortunate Bill. The amendments from my colleague in the Liberal Party are amendments which make it much more of an independent process with respect to the determination of whether a refugee has a valid claim and makes absolutely certain that if a refugee is sent back to a third country, that third country admits the refugee and has a system in place which allows that refugee to have his or her claims determined fairly within that country.

The amendment which my Party colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), has added is, I think, crucial because it makes the point that our system has to include an assessment that recognizes the principles of fundamental justice. Chile may well have on its books, in print, a system in which the merits of refugee claims will be determined in Chile. We may well receive assurances that these people will be admitted to Chile, but all of us in this House, after some of our colleagues from all Parties have gone to Chile, surely know that we cannot trust that the principles of fundamental justice are in fact observed within that country. On that basis, it should not be possible, if the amendment from the Hon. Member for Spadina is accepted, to send a refugee back to Chile.

The same thing, I am certain, would be true in El Salvador, Guatemala or Honduras, countries about which I know something, and which do not reflect in their justice systems the principles of fundamental justice which are reflected by and large, with the exception of this Bill if it goes through, in our country.

For reasons which, frankly, are deeply personal, and for reasons which reflect the concerns of my constituents, we want to see a fair system to assess refugees, we want to get rid of this nonsense of massive amnesties periodically which simply indicates our system is not working properly. In the context of those kinds of concerns, I urge this House very strongly to adopt the amendment which has been brought forward as a subamendment by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina, and to subsequently adopt the amendments which have been moved by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). I think we will at least come closer, then, to seeing to it that there is not a completely black blot on the future of this country as it is looked at from around the world in terms of the due process of law which should be reflected in our refugee legislation.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I listened with some attention to my colleague. As a former university professor, I would hope he would still hold to the maxim that when one debates a subject like this, one ought to go as much as possible to the primary sources and not rely on secondary or tertiary sources for one's comments and evidence. I am confident the Member's remarks reflect very accurately the secondary and tertiary sources he has read, all the statements by the pressure groups, the lobbyists. He has faithfully recited their points of view. However, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that none of it, or very little of it, reflects anything in the primary source, which is the Bill itself.

The Member has hardly read the Bill. If he had read it analytically, carefully and critically, he would not have made the remarks he made today. He could not do it regardless of what would jade his outlook or from his ideological perspective.

The Member began, for example, by saying his forbear came here in 1848 as a result of the failed revolutions in Germany. I understand that since my grandparents and great grandparents came from much the same kind of background. However, he went on to say that the refugees today are the same as those in 1848, as if nothing has happened in the world since 1848 that would change the outlook or behavioural practices of people wanting to come to Canada.

Let me list just a few of the concepts which have now formed the behavioural patterns of people. For example, nihilism, which basically says it does not matter since nothing matters anyway. So you can do what you want. It is all a black future. There is no good consequence of anything, anyway, so go ahead and do what you want. There is existentialism, which makes everyone's individual outlook paramount. There is no uniform absolute. Nothing is clearly right or wrong. Therefore, the expression of your own particular authenticity is the most moral thing you can do. There is no absolute morality so it does not matter if you incite violence or peace in its own self. That is a very popular concept.

There is dialectical materialism. It began to be popular around 1848 but was not pervasive at that time. But for the last 150 years witness eastern Europe and the effect of dialectical materialism, where the state is supreme and individual rights are nothing. They have value only to the extent and to the degree they support the state. How about situational ethics, again where nothing is right or wrong except the situation in which you happen to be. It depends on the situation. Finally, the Marxist theology of Latin America which espouses violence for their cause. I want to remind the professor that when we have that cauldron of beliefs in the system, the thought forms of people coming to Canada have changed in the last 150 years, and Canada deserves some protection from people whose thoughts forms have changed, if they no longer hold to absolute rights and wrongs.

The Canadian people deserve the right to choose carefully on the basis of what is good for Canada as well as good for the refugee claimant in order that they can live in a sense of security and growing tolerance and understanding, but with the knowledge that the people who come here, come with some solid basis of understanding that there is a consensus in Canada of what is right or wrong. We want them to share in that consensus.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, this is fascinating. It actually brings out, perhaps for the first time, what really lies behind the Government's concern. We have here a suggestion that when it is all boiled down, thought police will sit at the borders and will look for traces of nihilism in refugees who come before us. They will look for traces of existentialism, particularly, for example, Christian existentialism because it is the most dangerous of all. They will look for dialectical materialism. If someone happens to have a belief in dialectical materialism, the thought police will get him at the border and save Canadians from those thoughts ever penetrating our country. They will be looking for traces of situational ethics. I can see that we will soon be getting to a position wherein the Parliamentary Secretary will have to resign from the House and take responsibility for running these thought police. He is the person who can clearly recognize these people.

The thought police will be looking out for those who believe in Marxist theology. This would include, of course, priests and bishops, to those Members who might not be aware, who believe that it is right to have a system of democracy and equality within the countries in which they live. If the Hon. Member, as I think he has, has visited a number of Latin American countries from Paraguay to Chile to El Salvador—

Mr. Friesen: Nicaragua.

Mr. Langdon: Perhaps the Hon. Member has been to Nicaragua and has noticed Marxist theologists there.

The point that I make is that in many countries of the world that push for change, which is coming from the church—and the Hon. Member is absolutely right—is a push for fairness. It is a push for democracy. It is a push which was led, supported and endorsed by the Pope as he travelled throughout Latin America on his recent trip.

I suggest as well that if the thought police are going to be active, perhaps there should be a few more topics which the Hon. Member has missed. Since 1848 there has been a minor phenomenon of Fascism. Surely the Hon. Member would add that to his list.

Mr. Friesen: Got to get rid of them.

Mr. Langdon: Then there are the Nazis, anyone who believes in Naziism. What about Islamic fundamentalism?

Mr. Friesen: Terrible.

Mr. Langdon: So the Hon. Member is against introducing people who could cut off hands, et cetera. What about Sikhs?

Mr. Friesen: Well, I don't know.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, frankly, the Hon. Member is showing just how ludicrous is the approach that he puts forward.

Refugees come to this country. They should have the right to be assessed on whether or not they face conditions in their country, as the Convention on Refugees states, a Convention which we signed, which would lead to their being seriously harmed or eliminated if they were returned to that country. That is the basis of refugee status. That is the basis on which we should be making our assessments. We should be doing it by our traditions which recognize due process of law and not this nonsense about thought police which was suggested by the Hon. Member.

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Friesen: You have until 1.55 p.m.

Mr. Berger: I was just making a note of the time because all I need is to listen to the Parliamentary Secretary for a few minutes to get me so fired up that I could go on for hours and hours. Thus I have to try carefully to take note of the time so that I can get in everything that I want to say in the course of the 20 minutes that are available to me.

We just had a demonstration from the Parliamentary Secretary of demagoguery at its best, as only he is capable of. It is the kind of demagoguery that has been practiced by the Government since it introduced its refugee legislation in May of 1987. It is the kind of demagoguery that we are accustomed to from the former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Roberval (Mr. Bouchard). It is the kind of demagoguery that we are accustomed to from the former Minister of State for Immigration, the Hon. Member for Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

It is the kind of demagoguery that we are accustomed to from this Parliamentary Secretary who in previous debates on Bill C-55, and perhaps on Bill C-84, referred to numbers in the order of 5 billion people in the world who might come to Canada if we do not put up these walls around our borders that are represented by Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. I have already taken him to task on bandying about figures of that nature. I invite Hon. Members of the House to take a look at Hansard to see what the Parliamentary Secretary said.

Again, we are talking here about the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen)—

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that my hon. friend would want to be accurate when he wants to poke me. If he will go back to Hansard of August or September last year, he will see that what I referred to was the open-endedness in Canada that the Singh decision brought to the system wherein everyone is entitled to an oral hearing. Anyone coming to Canada would be entitled to that oral hearing. Therefore, it does open it up to 5 billion people. That has nothing to do with Bill C-55 or Bill C-84.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member stands condemned by his own words. He has put his foot in it again. As I said, this is a Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He is a person who, presumably, holds a position of some responsibility, and should put the facts before Canadians in a truthful fashion, to put the facts before Canadians in a manner so that they will not be mislead and that does not play to the fears that some people may have.

For him even to suggest it, to use a figure of that nature, to talk about the whole population of the world and to suggest that somehow if we had a full hearing on the merits that there is the potential that all the people in the world would come to Canada indicates to me the kind of irresponsibility and demagogic fashion with which the Government has treated Canadians over the past year and a half since this Bill was introduced.

It reminds me of a definition or a quip that I read a week or two ago which said that a demagogue is someone who rocks the boat and then tries to convince everybody that there is a storm out there. This is exactly what the Government has been doing for the past 15 or 16 months. They have been trying to convince Canadians that there is a storm out there, that we Canadians have to protect ourselves or we will be flooded, deluged, with hundreds of thousands of people who will sweep over our borders.

I am reminded of a comment by Rabbi Gunther Plaut to the Canadian Council of Refugees at the meeting one year ago in which he noted how the Government uses language of this nature relating to climate, a wave, a deluge, the type of language which is designed to cull up some sense of a natural disaster or of something that is beyond the control of human beings in order to inspire or build up feelings of fear in people's minds.

I condemn in the strongest language this attitude. The Parliamentary Secretary continued that in comments he made just after the intervention of the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). He talked about Canadians deserving some protection from people who may incite violence. He talked about the changed circumstances since 1848. He talked about the kind of philosophies, dangerous philosophies presumably, that people hold these days. He said that Canadians deserve some protection and that we have the right to choose carefully, and the right to live with a sense of security. Again, Mr. Speaker, he was playing and pandering to the fears of Canadians in a fashion that can only be described as the height of irresponsibility.

Many things have changed since 1848. One of the things that has changed is the Geneva Convention of 1951, which is a significant deviation from the principle that existed before that convention, that a sovereign country had absolute control over who it permitted to enter its borders. The Geneva Convention was implemented after the last world war. As we know, during that war hundreds of thousands of people became victims because they had nowhere to go. No country would accept them. It was felt necessary to provide individuals with the capacity to effect some salvation on their own, not to have to wait for the permission of a country, not to have to wait to be chosen by a consular official or an officer in an embassy, and not to have to stand in line in order to be patted on the head and told: "Yes, you can come to our country".

The idea and the fundamental revolution that was represented by the Geneva Convention was that somehow we were going to take away a little from the sovereignty of nations, that absolute sovereignty which said that a nation, a state alone controls its borders. We were going to allow people who regard themselves as refugees to move to a safe haven, to pack up and leave overnight, if necessary.

I gave the example in a letter to the papers, which I was fortunate to have published several weeks ago, of Billy Wilder, the famous film maker who received the Irving Thalberg Award at the Academy Awards this spring. He told the story of a consular official in a small Mexican border town where he had to go to apply for immigrant status and permanent residence after having been in the United States for six months. He talked about the trepidation that he felt when he went before this consular official. He came with very few documents. He came with perhaps his application form and one or two letters of reference. He presented this to the consular official who did not respond. There was what Wilder felt was an interminable period of silence. He decided to take his courage into his own hands and he explained that when he was told the Nazis were coming, he only had 15 minutes to pack a few things and leave. He did not have enough time to find his birth certificate, school records, or other documentation. These are the types of circumstances under which refugees have to leave.

The Geneva Convention was a significant change in international law in the sense that it provided individuals with the capacity to pack up and leave and to move to a safe haven without having to ask permission beforehand. The only obligation that states undertook under the Geneva Convention was not to refoulé a refugee, not to turn back a person in need of protection, that is, states very jealously guard their sovereignty.

A state does not have to give a person permanent residence, citizenship, or a work permit. Under the Geneva Convention all the state obliges itself to do is not to send back a refugee. In order to implement that obligation, it is necessary for the state to have some procedure to determine whether the person is indeed a refugee, or is not a refugee, because refugees do not come with the word "refugee" stamped on their forehead. Yes, people make claims, some of which may be valid claims, and other claims may not be valid. A state has the obligation to examine the claim and have some procedure for determining whether indeed that person is or is not a refugee.

This whole debate is about refugee groups and people who work with refugees in this country and who have been arguing for a revision in our system for many years now. They have asked that there be a quick procedure, one that would deal with claims in the course of, say, five or six months.

In this Bill we are studying today, which has been before Parliament for the past year, the Government has not provided such a procedure. It has set up a screening procedure whereby only certain persons will be eligible for claims. Only persons who pass through what are known as safe third countries will not be eligible to have their claims determined in Canada. Therefore, we have had estimates over the course of the past few months which have been made public. We see that as many as 75 per cent, 80 per cent or even 90 per cent of claimants who come to Canada will not be eligible to have their claims determined under this legislation. The Government is really reneging on the only responsibility it has under the Geneva Convention of 1951, which is to determine on the merits the claims of people who claim to be refugees. Therefore, this Government risks and inevitably will send people who are refugees to persecution and even death because there is no procedure to permit the Government to determine who is or who is not a refugee.

I have another word or two about Canada's role, Mr. Speaker. I believe we have a special responsibility. We are a huge country with a small population. If not Canada, I put the question to the Parliamentary Secretary: "Which country will continue to provide a haven for refugees?" Which country will uphold the principles of the Geneva Convention?

If we in Canada cannot find it within ourselves to respect the rules of the Geneva Convention, will any other country in the world do so? Will other countries be justified in saying that if Canada will not respect the Geneva Convention, why should they? Costa Rica has a large number of refugees, as does West Germany and France, what will they say? I read about Italy the other day. There are perhaps one million refugee claimants who have flocked there from all parts of the world. What will the Italians say if Canada passes this legislation? Countries are going to refuse to let anybody enter because, if Canada cannot accept refugees with its wealth, its resources and small population, why should they?

I would like to remind the Parliamentary Secretary and Members of this House that our so-called refugee problem is very small in comparison to that which exists in many parts of the world. I come back to this because I believe the Member was engaging in a bit of fear-mongering when he referred to the billions of people. Over the past couple of years we have had perhaps 18,000, 19,000, or 20,000 claimants who have arrived on our shores. That might seem like a large number. But think about it, Mr. Speaker, you could fill one hockey arena with 19,000 or 20,000 claimants. It is not exactly an overwhelming number. Compare that to a tiny country like Costa Rica which has several hundred thousand claimants on its territory, refugees who are seeking protection and who have sought safe haven there. Costa Rica has not sought to turn those refugees back. It has not closed its border to refugee claimants. What about Pakistan? There are 2 million or 3 million Afghans on Pakistan territory. How can Canada compare itself to a country like that?

I can only conclude by saying that this Government has not in its amendments dealt with the principal objections to this legislation. It has not dealt with its major flaws. This legislation is not worthy of our country. It not worthy to become the law of the land. If it does, unfortunately, at some point become the law of this land, I hope Canadians will turf out the Government so that a more responsible Government can amend it before any great damage is done.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, there were so many inaccuracies with respect to the legislation which the Hon. Member enumerated that it was difficult to keep up to him and certainly there is not enough time to correct them all.

Let me point out two things. The Member spoke about playing to the fears that people may have. That is exactly what we have been experiencing from opposition Members for most of the past year. They have been recycling the fears expressed by pressure groups and lobbyists that are totally inaccurate. If the Member had attended the committee hearings, he would have heard the question put to the Canadian representative to the UN Commissioner of Human Rights about whether or not this conformed to the UNCHR. His answer was yes, that they have played to the fears of refugee claimants going into orbit, being bounced from country to country, all of which is untrue—to put a better complexion on it, it is inaccurate. That in the context of parliamentary language is probably a little more acceptable.

I want to re-emphasize that if anyone has been playing to the fears of people, Members like that are the ones who have repeated the inaccuracies time and time again because of the communities they are playing to.

The Hon. Member criticizes me for saying Canada has a right to choose. Let the Member look at the 1976 Bill. His colleague from Labrador sat on the committee with me when we toured Canada and drafted the legislation. One of the underpinnings of that entire Bill was that Canada has a right to choose. We do have a right to choose. The fact is it ought to be fair, equitable, and unprejudiced, not based upon bias of any kind but according to Canadian law. That is exactly what we are debating.

• (1400)

In closing, I would like to ask the Hon. Member to name me one country in the world that has a more generous refugee policy than Canada, just one.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, balderdash is the only word to use to describe the comments of the Hon. Member. He referred to inaccuracies in my statement, so many of them that he said he could not identify them. I would ask him to identify one inaccuracy in what I said.

I am not going on what I picked up from listening to pressure groups, as the Hon. Member disdainfully calls them. I am not simply going on what pressure groups or lobby groups or church groups that work with refugees say about this, although I do take advice from these people and I do listen to them because I respect them. These are people who are committed and devoted, many of whom have spent their whole lives working with refugees.

There was a show on The Journal at Christmas time about Nancy Pocock of Toronto. When people leave Central America, they are given her name and telephone number. When they come to Canada, that is all they have when they get here. They go to her house and spend the first few days or weeks in Canada getting their bearings there.

Yes, I listen to people like that because those people have been exemplary citizens of Canada, a credit to Canada. They are great assets to this country and they make me damn proud of the work they have been involved in.

I do listen to those people, but I read the Bill and I read the 1951 UN Convention. I have attended seminars and conferences and I have read the testimony of the witnesses who appeared before the committee. I am capable of coming to my own conclusions about this Bill. I know, on the basis of my own judgment, that it does not uphold Canada's obligations under the 1951 Geneva Convention.

I would like to answer the Hon. Member's question. He asked me to point to one country that has a more generous refugee policy. I referred in my remarks to Pakistan which has maybe three million or four million Afghan refugees on its soil today. Maybe that is one such country. However—

Mr. Friesen: Who's looking after them?

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member asks who is looking after them. That is an irrelevant question. In many cases, the world community looks after refugees. The United Nations High Commission on Refugees, which has a mandate from the UN and the world community, looks after refugees, perhaps paid for by contributions of some of the wealthier countries in the world, including Canada.

The Hon. Member's question reminds me of a comment I heard at a conference on human rights and the protection of refugees under international law which was organized by the Canadian Human Rights Foundation in Montreal last December. I attended that conference, but I am not sure if the Parliamentary Secretary was there. A comment was made by one of the speakers at the conference that the standards of the countries of Europe or of any other country for that matter are not necessarily the standards by which we should judge our own practices. I think that is a significant statement, and I would like the Parliamentary Secretary to listen to it. I repeat, the standards of other countries or those of the countries of Europe are not necessarily the standards by which we should judge our own practices. That is why I reject the Hon. Member's question.

As I said earlier, I challenge the Hon. Member to show me any other country which is in a better position to be generous to refugees. Show me any other country in the world with a smaller population relative to the space we occupy. We have plenty of space in which people may settle. Show me one other country that is in a better position. Show me one other country in this world that has a greater responsibility to uphold the principles of the Geneva Convention, to show leadership.

I would remind the Hon. Member that it was Canada which received the Nansen Medal several years ago, it was not Germany or the United States. In fact, it was not even Canada, it was the people of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question on the subamendment?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There has been agreement among the Parties to end with the speaker who just spoke, but I also serve notice, both to the Table and to the opposition Parties, of my intention to table amendments that I have given to the Table and to the opposition Parties. I would like to table them now.

I have just been informed by the critic for the New Democratic Party that he wants to add a subamendment to one of the amendments. I would ask for advice from the Chair on how to proceed with this. I should table the amendments today, because I think a vote will be taken on this on Monday evening. I would take instruction form the Chair on how to deal with this.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, the copy that was given to me was, of course, embargoed, and that has necessarily restricted my inquiry into the meaning or implication of the amendments proposed by the Government, and I wish to seek advice on at least one of them in connection with what I have in mind as a subamendment. It has not been possible for me to do that because they have not been tabled and it will not be possible for me to have that effectively until Tuesday.

My difficulty is that while I am prepared to see these amendments entered for debate, notwithstanding that they are an unusual procedure and therefore need unanimous consent. I am not prepared to see them entered if it means that they would be debated today or debated on Monday and voted on Monday night. If there is any way that we can arrive at an understanding that tables them today but defers debate on them until after Monday night, I would be prepared to proceed with that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the House let the Chair proceed with the vote on the subamendment? We appear to be taking for granted that we will be voting Monday night. If we do that first, then we will see.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I find this somewhat unusual because the Hon. Member, while he may have been at some disadvantage in that it has been embargoed and therefore not debated, was given notice by me the other day of my intention to do so. He has had a copy of these amendments for 10 days, I believe, certainly for a week, and could have studied them at length. He has just five minutes ago told me that he has a problem with one of them. Could we not come to an arrangement whereby we do a voice vote on all of them today and allow the Hon. Member, for example, to submit a subamendment to the one about which he has a question and then proceed with the vote on Monday night?

• (1410)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If the House does not mind, the Chair would like to settle the question on the subamendment. Once we have done that, maybe we can move along.

May I dispense with the reading of the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I dispense with the reading of the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on the subamendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The vote on the subamendment will be deferred until Monday night at six o'clock.

Now that that is settled, we will go back to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I would like to move the amendments we have given to the critics of the opposition Parties. I hope I do not have to read them all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Parliamentary Secretary would like to introduce a series of amendments. In order to do that, we need unanimous consent.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are two ways to do this. One way would be for the Parliamentary Secretary to introduce the amendments. Unanimous consent can be given for that. Then, if the Parliamentary Secretary wishes those amendments to be debated today, the Chair would require unanimous consent again. I think we have unanimous consent for the Parliamentary Secretary to introduce the amendments today.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I think there is some confusion. In earlier discussions with the Deputy House Leader, it was our understanding that the only business to be conducted today was debate on the subamendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). We would then force a vote on the subamendment, which we have just done. As a result, we would then be voting on that subamendment at six o'clock Monday as the rules require. Any deviation goes against the spirit of what we negotiated with the Deputy House Leader earlier in the day. Unfortunately, if we allow the Parliamentary Secretary to introduce these amendments today, then debate would be possible on Monday on those amendments. That was not our understanding when we made our arrangement with the Government earlier today. That was done on the basis of what was convenient for the critics, and for us to change that now would go against the spirit of the agreement.

We do not want to keep the amendments from the floor, but we do not want to allow the Government to start the debate on Monday when we have had no assurances from the Government that it would not do so.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the NDP House Leader was in the Chamber the other day, as was the Liberal Party critic, when I gave notice of our intention to move these amendments. The NDP House Leader nodded assent and the Liberal Party critic certainly did not object. I did not see any great visible reaction. He was certainly aware of them because he had received copies.

I understand the agreement today dealt with all aspects of C-55. The Parties were aware that this is part of that Bill and I see no breach of the agreement if we deal with these amendments today.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion about the agreement reached by the parties. We all seem to have our own version. I will give you mine, since I was involved in the discussions with the two other parties.

It is my understanding that today we would get as far as the vote on the subamendment, that a vote would be called and that we would then call it three o'clock. This was quite straightforward. If I understood correctly, according to the agreement, since we have finished debating the sub-amendment and a vote was called a few minutes ago, we can now call it three o'clock. If anyone has a different interpretation . . . It seems to me it is as simple as that. And it certainly has to be simple for me to understand it!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State will clear up the matter.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we want to avoid any understanding which was reached being misunderstood and disrupting things in that way. It was my understanding, and I may perhaps be in error here because I did not realize there was going to be debate on the amendments, that they were going to be accepted as read.

What we were trying to resolve was that there would be no more business other than C-55 before the House. Perhaps we can have the amendments introduced and then suspend the sitting today. If, upon reflection over the weekend, there is a necessity for more debate and discussion, we can discuss it. I think that might be in the best interests of this place. Simply have them introduced and call it three o'clock.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if the Deputy House Leader has resolved our problem. It was our understanding that these amendments now being introduced by the Government would not be debated on Monday. If the Government House Leader can assure us about the business of the House on Monday, then perhaps we can give unanimous consent.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the business of the House will be debate on item of business no. 26 on the Order Paper, the motion to extend the sitting, in the event there is a ruling from the Speaker and that ruling is that the motion is procedurally correct. Pending a favourable decision we would debate the Government's response to Senate amendments to Bill C-84.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, this information is quite useful. On the other hand, whatever the government menu is for Monday, my understanding is that we are not discussing C-55 because there is a deferred division at six o'clock. Until then the Bill cannot be debated.

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That is the way I understand the rules. I do not know if this is clear. If we all operate according to the same rules, there should be unanimous consent to see the clock as three o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair understands that there is now unanimous consent to give the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary consent to introduce further amendments to Bill C-55 on the condition these not be debated on Monday.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Cannot be debated.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know, but is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Then the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if we can dispense with the reading of these amendments?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary dispense with the reading of the amendments?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can the Chair dispense with the reading of the amendments?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration) moves:

That clause 14 of Bill C-55 be amended

(a) by striking out line 38 on page 18 and substituting the following:

"landing of that person and any member of that person's family who is in Canada at the time of the application, unless the Convention refugee is"

(b) by striking out lines 24 to 26 on page 19 and substituting the following:

"cant and any member of the applicant's family for whom landing is sought if the immigration officer is satisfied that neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant's family who is in Canada is a person"

(c) by adding, immediately after line 8 on page 20, the following:

Interpretation "(8) For the purposes of this section and section 48.05,

(a) a person is a member of another person's family if the person is

(ii) the child of that other person, or

(b) "child", with respect to a person, means

(i) a person of whom that person is the natural parent, whether the person was born within or outside marriage, and who has not been legally adopted by any other person, and

(ii) a person who was legally adopted by that person, but does not include any person who is or has been married;

(c) "spouse", with respect to a person, means a person of the opposite sex to that person who is married to that person by a marriage that is recognized by the law of the country in which it took place, other than a marriage occurring at a time when either person was already married."

(d) by striking out line 17 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"mining eligibility to be grant-"

(e) by striking out line 23 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"for a determination whether the person or any member of that person's family who is in Canada at the time of the application is,"

(f) by striking out line 28 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"shall determine that the applicant and any member of the applicant's family for whom landing is sought is, but"

(g) By striking out line 32 on page 20 and substituting the following:

"member of the applicant's family who is in Canada is a"

(h) by striking out lines 12 to 15 on page 21 and substituting the following:

"(d) the person or any member of the person's family for whom landing is sought was determined not to be eligible to be granted landing for a reason other than the removal order; or

(e) the person and each member of the person's family for whom landing is sought were determined to be,"

(i) by striking out lines 25 to 29 on page 21 and substituting the following:

"(a) grant landing to the person and each member of the person's family for whom landing is sought, where the person is a person described in paragraph (5)(d) or (e) and the adjudicator is satisfied that, but for the removal order, the person and each member are eligible to be grant-"

And

That clause 18 of Bill C-55 be amended by striking out line 37 on page 28 and substituting the following:

"hold office during good behaviour for a term not"

And

That clause 29 of Bill C-55 be amended by adding, immediately after line 46 on page 55, the following:

"(7) Section 115 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

Advisory committee "(5) The Minister may establish and appoint the members of a committee to advise the Minister with respect to the prescribing of countries under paragraph (1)(r).""

And

That Bill C-55 be amended by adding, immediately after line 31 on page 56, the following:

"32. Section 123 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Delegation of authority "123. The Minister or the Deputy Minister, as the case may be, may authorize such persons employed in the public service of Canada as the Minister or the Deputy Minister deems proper to exercise and perform any of the powers, duties and functions that may or are required to be exercised or performed by the Minister or the Deputy Minister, as the case may be, under this Act or the regulations, other than the powers, duties and functions referred to in paragraphs 19(1)(e) and (2)(a), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1) (e) (iii) and subsections 82.1(2) and

83(1), and any such power, duty or function performed or exercised by any person so authorized shall be deemed to have been performed or exercised by the Minister or Deputy Minister, as the case may be.""

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May the Chair call it three o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being three o'clock, the House stands adjourned until Monday at eleven o'clock.

The House adjourned at 2.20 p.m.

NUCLEAR POWER ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-296, an Act establishing a moratorium on the continued development of nuclear power in Canada with a purpose of establishing a public inquiry into nuclear power that is followed by a national referendum.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is a reaction to the Government backing down from its commitment to conduct a public inquiry into the nuclear fuel cycle which was made during the last general election. I thought it was appropriate, some four years later, that we have a debate on this point.

The Bill essentially calls for a moratorium on any new use of nuclear power in Canada. It calls for establishment of a public inquiry into the use of nuclear power in Canada in the future. This follows on the tradition of countries like Sweden which has gone as far as holding a national referendum on the issue. We want to allow the people of Canada to let their views be known. On such an important matter of literally life and death, at least a public inquiry ought to take place. If not, we should consider a general referendum on the issue.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Léo Duguay (St. Boniface) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-297, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (safety interlock device).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Duguay: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to introduce this Bill, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, installation of safety interlock devices.

Yesterday, in Canada, approximately 400 people were arrested for driving under the influence of alcohol. One of the things that concerns all of us is that many of those people will be on the road today.

The purpose of this Bill is to allow judges in Canada to cause the installation of the safety interlocking device on cars. This device, when installed, prevents the car from starting if the driver of the vehicle has a breath alcohol level concentration exceeding 40 milligrams of alcohol per 100 millilitres of blood.

This is one more step to help Canadians prevent the ravage of the innocent that drunk drivers cause us all. As the commercial goes, Madam Speaker, "If you drink, that is your business. If you drink and drive, that is our business".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ADDRESS OF U.K. PRIME MINISTER TO BOTH HOUSES

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I think Your Honour will find that there is unanimous consent for the following motion to be put to the House immediately. I move:

That, further to the Order of the House of June 2, 1988, the address of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, to be delivered in the House Chamber to Members of the House of Commons and the Senate, be at 11.00 o'clock a.m., on Wednesday, June 22, 1988.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, as has been the practice whenever the Government brings forward a thoughtful initiative, we indicate our willingness to co-operate. Once again, I want to say that there have been discussions. It seems to be a reasonable request on behalf of the Government. We will certainly co-operate 100 per cent.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Minister of State (Treasury Board) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway) moved:

That the second report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, presented to the House on Tuesday, December 16, 1986, be concurred in.

He said: Madam Speaker, I wish to speak on this motion today on behalf of the New Democratic Party because I think and believe that the Mulroney-Reagan free trade deal that has been negotiated with the United States makes this report irrelevant. Indeed, it indicates the weakness in the trade Bill with respect to energy. If we look at the report, a copy of which I have in front of me, we will see that it deals with various recommendations of the Commons committee, which is a standing committee chaired by the Hon. Member who I see across the House from me, the Hon. Member from Calgary. I acknowledge her presence and her chairmanship of the committee. She did a good job in chairing that committee.

• (1150)

In the report that is under debate the committee recommended that a Ministry of Mines be created as a separate portfolio with its own distinct Department. The committee recommended that the Government, in co-operation with the provinces, the Territories, and the private sector develop a federal mineral policy based upon a function contained within the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. My point is that, as a result of the free trade deal, we cannot ever have a federal energy policy in this country. The federal energy policy will simply be the American policy. It will simply be the market economy. That will be it.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Miss Carney), the former Minister of Energy, stated that the free trade deal enshrines the present Government's energy policy. The present Government's energy policy is in fact the market policy, that is, that the Government should not intervene in any way in the market and the market will look after itself. What is the point then of having a new initiative, as this report says, by a federal Department? In fact, there can never be another national energy policy—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Waddell: —no matter what kind of position it is.

I hear the Members opposite. I hear this myth, and let me take a minute to deal with the National Energy Program, which an Hon. Member from Saskatoon yells we supported. First, we did not support the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Why are you worried about implementing another one?

Mr. Waddell: I invite Members to take a look at the votes. There were eight votes on the National Energy Program. We never supported the program in terms of those votes. As a matter of fact, I think we voted against six of the items, and I think that the Conservative Opposition voted against six of the items. Members can yell all they want. I was there and, in fact, so was the NDP energy critic at the time of the votes.

Members will recall that the National Energy Program was a program that the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, and the then Premier of Alberta Mr. Lougheed clinked champagne glasses over and agreed to. When the Conservatives yell at me and have this myth about the hated National Energy Program, they should remember there was a deal between the federal Government and the provincial Tories in Alberta.

There was a great deal of pressure on the provincial Tories. There were energy wars, as there will be in the future of this country. The fact is that they made a deal, and the people who enacted the National Energy Program were the Liberal Government, which was a majority Government. The New Democratic Party was in opposition, with the federal Conservative Party opposing the National Energy Program.

I will tell Members opposite why we opposed it. We opposed it for two reasons. I see that the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling) is leaving. He will not listen. Why does he not listen? He might learn something about energy.

Mr. Kempling: Say something intelligent and I will stay.

Mr. Waddell: There were two problems with the program. One, it was based on prices going up, but oil prices stabilized and went down. No one thought about what would happen if prices went down. That was one of the great flaws in the program. They thought it would go up to about $73 a barrel and everyone was going to have much money from these oil prices going up, but they did not go up.

The second problem was that in the National Energy Program the Government enacted a program called the Petroleum Incentive Program grants, PIP grants. These grants amounted to $8 million—as expensive as the nuclear subs we are supposedly going to get. If that $8 billion is included with some previous grants, it amounts to approximately $13 billion to the oil industry. It was a program to get people to drill offshore and in the North. Our position was that this was a mistake and a waste of money. In fact, the drilling should have carried out in the western sedimentary basin in Alberta and Saskatchewan. That was the position of the NDP. We suggested that if the Government wished to spend $8 billion to Canadianize, Imperial Oil could have been bought for that amount of money.

Mr. McDermid: That's what you would have done.

Mr. Waddell: Instead, the Government wasted $8 to $13 billion to drill a lot of holes in the Arctic and offshore, most of which did not produce, and some of which did. That was the way the Government was going to encourage Canadianization of the industry. Of course, that did not happen. Those were our criticisms of the National Energy Program.

We were in favour of holding the gasoline prices down for Canadian consumers. What happened was that Canadian consumers saved billions of dollars. I hope the Canadian people are listening to this because here is what happened. The Canadian Government said, in the early 1980s when the oil price rose, that it was going to protect Canadians and Canadians were not going to have to pay world prices. It is our oil. It does not belong to the American multinationals or to the United States of America. It belongs to the Canadian people generally. "We are not going to let Canadians pay these high world prices, we are going to give them a break at the pumps". The National Energy Program was very popular from that aspect. At the time polls were conducted and 73 to 80 per cent of the Canadian people supported the program. The Tory Party, which speaks for a very small group of multinationals and large oil companies in Alberta has spread the myth around that the whole program had to be scuttled, changed, and we had to have a total free market economy.

Canadians should wake up to what is happening. Big oil has won. Big oil and the Conservative Party are like this. They neck with each other. As a matter of fact, the Canadian Petroleum Association, which represents big oil, when talking about the Conservative energy policies of the Mulroney Government, says that "they are our policies. They are exactly what we want". That is exactly what they got.

Mr. McDermid: Quote IPAC.

Mr. Waddell: IPAC is also dominated by foreign oil companies when you look at it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Come on. You don't know your elbow from your ear.

Mr. Waddell: If you look at it and figure out what is going on.

Mr. McDermid: Check with the 700 independent Canadian oil companies and see what they say about it.

Mr. Waddell: I wish to return to the free trade deal. Under the free trade deal we are going to let the Americans set our energy policy. In fact, we are going to share the ace card that we have on mineral resources, our oil resources, and even our water resources with the Americans.

Mrs. Sparrow: That's not true.

Mr. Waddell: On this ground alone the Canadian people should reject the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. Canada should wake up, because in the next energy crisis we will be paying the top world prices. Furthermore, perhaps we will have gas jams. One will have to line up at a gas station to get gasoline in Canada, just as one had to do in California in 1972.

When Premier Lougheed, the former Premier of Alberta, appeared before the committee examining the Mulroney trade deal, he made his position perfectly clear. He said: "The biggest plus of this agreement is that it would preclude a federal Government from ever bringing in a National Energy Program . . . Those who want to have another NEP, fine. But you cannot do it . . . This agreement forces the market-place to decide on pricing. I think this is a very big positive". That is very interesting.

A small oilman, a fellow named John Mercier, appeared before the committee. He said: "If our former Premier, Peter Lougheed, said that the reason the free trade agreement is good for Alberta is because we will never have another National Energy Program, it would really disturb me . . . If he means it, he has joined other people in saying that Confederation is not going to work. Instead of going into battle with Ontario for Alberta's rights—" that is the fight within Canada for energy policy and the control of energy pricing—"are we going to allocate the authority to some administrator in Washington?" In other words, Premier Lougheed was telling the committee: "I prefer to deal with Washington rather than deal with Ottawa".

Mr. McDermid: That's totally untrue, and you know it.

Mr. Waddell: Well, that is the import of his remarks. Ralph Loffmark, a distinguished British Columbian and former Minister in W.A.C. Bennett's Government, also appeared before the committee. He said: "I find it difficult to accept the argument of the Alberta people that a national energy policy that had one price across Canada was not fair to the Alberta people. Let us look at that not being fair". He asked how in the world we can object to our own national energy program of a few years ago which we are told has now been dismantled, and then turn around and implement exactly the same thing. Instead of the Ontario people getting cheap gas and oil now, though, it is the Americans.

• (1200)

Mr. McDermid: That is totally untrue.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member might think it is totally false, but that is what Ralph Loffmark, a former Energy and Economic Minister in the British Columbia Bennett Government, said.

Let us look in some detail at the free trade deal. Article 901 says that basically every kind of energy product is included in this agreement, oil, natural gas, coal, electricity and uranium. Articles 902 and 903 say that Canada basically gives up the right to use either minimum export or import prices as well as the right to employ export taxes or export quotas in developing its energy policy. This means that Canada is supplying the United States with a de facto subsidy. We sell the United States energy based on its market prices, this being the most accessible of the oil and gas resources. These resources will eventually have to be replaced by higher priced replacements which we will be forced to develop. We cannot, of course, put in place a made-in-Canada energy policy.

This is the problem. Conservatives do not like a made-in-Canada energy policy. The Opposition likes it in various forms. So instead of Conservatives campaigning against it, winning an election and not having it, or us campaigning for it, winning an election and keeping it, they fixed the election through the free trade deal. If the Opposition ever gets in to power, it can never enact a made-in-Canada energy policy because of the free trade deal with the United States. That is the problem with the free trade deal. That is why the Conservatives want the free trade deal. They want to make their policies permanent.

The Conservatives are fixing the rules of the games. They are playing a different game. In fact, they are joining the United States and giving up Canada's sovereignty.

Mr. McDermid: There's a six-month escape clause. Come on, be honest with the people for a change.

Mr. Waddell: A six-month escape clause? I will be honest with the people.

Mr. McDermid: Then tell them about it. If you ever came into power, heaven forbid, you could cancel it.

Mr. Waddell: You can make a speech next.

Mr. McDermid: Tell them the whole story.

Mr. Waddell: Do you want to hear the whole story or not? I am telling the whole story.

Mr. McCurdy: It's hot outside, it'll be hotter in here pretty soon.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have been listening to some thoughtful comments being made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, and the Parliamentary Secretary obviously has some important comments to make. If he is patient and waits for a few moments, he will have a chance to make his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member was fortunate if he could understand what the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway was saying. The conversation going on across the floor made it very difficult for the Chair to understand what was being said. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has the floor.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I was arguing that the free trade deal fundamentally changes the rules of the Canadian parliamentary system, and I used that as an illustration of the energy policy.

The Conservatives have one sort of energy policy and the New Democrats have another. If we get into power, we will no longer be able to change the energy policy, even if elected by the Canadian people. The Parliamentary Secretary has said that I should be honest, we could repeal the free trade deal. We could not change the policy though because energy is enshrined in the free trade deal. The Parliamentary Secretary says that there is a six-month clause allowing us to tear up the deal, but the problem is—

Mr. McDermid: Here we go, listen to this.

Mr. Waddell: No, I think it is fair enough to say this, and I think I am being honest enough to say it. It will be very hard to change that free trade deal. It is all very well for the Leader of the Opposition to say that he would tear it up, but personally, I am not so sure that a Canadian Government would be able to do that. There will be enormous pressure from the Americans. They will say: "You tear that up and we will cut off your trade entirely," and what will the Canadian Government be able to do? It will be very difficult to do anything, so that is the problem.

Let us return to this report which proposes a mineral policy and an energy policy, and let us look at what the free trade deal does clause by clause, because it makes it impossible.

Article 904, another key article in the agreement, will require Canada to continue shipping to United States customers in the same proportion as in the previous three years if production is restricted due to shortages or conservation purposes. If, as is the case now, the U.S. imported 30 per cent of our light crude oil over a three year period and a major crisis developed, say in the Persian Gulf, we would have to give the United States 30 per cent of our light crude in the fourth year. No Government, either national or Albertan, would be able in time of need to reserve its resources for its own exclusive use.

Mr. McDermid: That's been in effect since '74.

Mr. Waddell: If Members of the Government would just listen—they are really sensitive about this, and they should be sensitive.

No Government, either national or Albertan, would be able to reserve its resources in time of need for its own exclusive use. As can be seen, this article goes on to prohibit higher prices to U.S. customers due to government action. Officials, including Ambassador Ritchie who appeared before the Commons Special Trade Committee, confirmed that this means that any bonus pricing to attract new industry is strictly prohibited.

Let me translate that into plain English. A Canadian Government may want to give cheap energy to a Canadian company to encourage development in British Columbia, for example, because that is our birthright. We have those cheap resources that the Americans do not have, so we want to favour a Canadian company. We want to get some regional development in Canada, to spread everything out, because we in Canada believe in that. We believe in equality. What will happen is that we will not be able to do that because of this deal. These are the insidious things in the deal that the Canadian public should read closely, and that is why the New Democratic Party is taking the time of this House to try to explain this. I challenge the Government to call an election on this so that we can go to the hustings and fight for the future of Canada.

The western provinces are all in favour of the free trade deal, according to present Conservative Premiers, but they should read this very carefully. The Minister of State, in an effort to distract me, is suggesting that some of the students are leaving the gallery.

Mr. Lewis: They've had enough.

Mr. Waddell: No doubt they are going out to get a copy of this terrible free trade agreement so that they can read it in detail.

I believe that Article 903 will strongly impinge on the provinces' rights to control their own resources. It specifies, for example, that no tax, duty or charge can be imposed on the export of energy unless it is imposed also on domestic consumption. On the question of provincial compliance with the free trade deal, the position of the Government, as I understand it, is as follows:

> It is our expectation that the Provinces will not take actions incompatible with the spirit and intent of the free trade agreement.

I was proud to be with my Leader on the previous constitutional matters of 1981 when we presented an amendment, Section 92(a) of the Constitution, which gave powers over energy exports to the provinces. I believe that the free trade deal will in fact change that, and in that way it is unconstitutional.

I could go on to talk about Article 905, which cripples the power of the national energy program, Articles 906 and 907, which talk about security measures, but I will wind up by saying that this report is out of date because the free trade deal emasculates the power of the Canadian Government to legislate on energy for Canada. We have given it to the Americans and we are fools to do that. That is why this free trade deal has to be defeated and that is why we in the New Democratic Party will do everything in our power to do so.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, first I would like to congratulate my colleague for revealing to the Canadian people one of the elements of the free trade deal which I have not quite noticed being widely publicized in the literature being purchased by the Government to convince Canadians that they should buy this kettle of fish. If this deal is so great and if the provisions set out by my colleague are so much in the interests of Canada, why has the Government not simplified those sections and made sure they are explained across the country? Perhaps the most criminal portion—I do not see any other way of describing it—of the so-called free trade deal is the literal giving away of a competitive advantage in the form of energy to the United States.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. McCurdy: In my view Canada has the potential for a tremendous future based on its ability to develop an economic strategy that would allow economic development in the regions. This provision of the free trade agreement has to be considered contrary to that. I would like to say parenthetically that those in the West and the East who believe that this free trade deal will, through the sale of our energy whether oil or natural gas, lead to the industrialization of the West, had better take a look at American states to see how much they have been industrialized as a result of the American market economy.

I would like to refer to another aspect of energy. I think all Members of this House would have seen The Journal's report last week on the greenhouse effect. Over the next three decades Canada could be experiencing fantastic, dramatic, and in some instances tragic, changes in climate as a reflection of climatic changes that will occur around the world. It has been estimated that in southern Ontario we may have an 8° increase in temperature and in the North a 15° increase in temperature. This says to me that, however promising the sale of natural gas and energy is to the United States, the outcome could be fatal for us all either in terms of literally cooking ourselves to death or being engaged in tremendous conflicts internationally over what to do and how to control this eventuality.

Not too long ago, Madam Speaker, you will note that in this House we discussed a motion introduced by yours truly on the development of hydrogen technology. One of the outgrowths of the petroleum industry in Canada is that we have developed a huge lead over most countries in the world in the development of hydrogen technology. This is unquestionably the energy form of the future to replace petroleum and fossil-based fuels which can do nothing else but eventually cook us all.

We should be exploring the competitive advantages we do have in the petroleum industry and hydroelectric power so we can develop the hydrogen technology that will serve the western world. This will establish a basis not only for a national mission in science but a basis for an entire economic thrust into the future for Canada. One of the notable features of the free trade agreement is that it robs us of those kinds of mechanisms necessary to do what the report of the hydrogen committee demanded that we do, namely, not only develop this technology but ensure that the ownership of it resides in Canada. Of course, the free trade agreement means that any initiative we may take with respect to hydrogen technology will be immediately sold to the south. There are no limits either on acquisition or any basis on which we can give preference to procurement which, after all, is the basis on which any nation builds the kind of mission that we are talking about concerning hydrogen technology.

I point out to my colleague that the dimensions of the sell-out of this free trade agreement with respect to the future of Canada is almost definite in its dimensions, particularly with respect to energy. The hope of Canada some day leading the world, not only economically but in offering a new model of what a nation can be economically and socially, is being dashed by this agreement.

Mr. Waddell: I have a brief reply, Madam Speaker. As the Hon. Member said, indeed there is a new dimension of a sell-out. Companies will not develop technology because big American companies will be here controlling it all. Look at Amoco taking over Dome. The pattern will start again with American companies taking over our Canadian energy companies. The Government will eventually sell Petro-Canada. If it is re-elected, the Conservatives will probably sell Petro-Canada either to the Americans or to their friends. That is what we are faced with.

What did we get out of putting energy on the table in the free trade deal? We got secure access to the American market to sell our oil and gas. But let us think about that. The Americans need our oil and gas. They are short of energy. All kinds of statistics are there. We have a huge surplus of energy which we are selling to the United States. The United States will need it. What did we bargain for? The access is ridiculous. We do not need to bargain for access because the Americans will take the access. We have 18 years of proven oil reserves left, 35 years of natural gas reserves and a 105 years of coal. If you compare that to what is in the Middle East, the ratio of Canadian oil reserves to current annual production is about 12. OPEC had at the end of 1986 reserves-to-production ratio of 73. Saudi Arabia is at 97 and 217. We have oil and gas now and we will have to develop hydrogen. But they will be gone. What will we do? We will be selling out our energy to the Americans to beat hell. We have agreed that if there is another crisis we have to share energy with the Americans. We have to be crazy to enact this kind of deal. We got nothing for it. The Americans want our energy. They have always wanted a continental energy policy. What did they get with this Mulroney-Reagan trade deal? The Americans got a continental energy policy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sold out this country to the Americans.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Waddell: Is this debate?

Mr. McDermid: No, this is not debate. This is the period for comments and questions. I sat very patiently and listened to the diatribe that came from my friend, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy).

Mr. Langdon: You sat, but not patiently.

Mr. McDermid: That is right.

There are a number of things that should be understood by Canadians. The New Democrats do not tell the whole story.

First, the provinces own the resources and control them. The Hon. Member knows very well that the provinces tell people where and when they can drill. If they are lucky enough to find anything, the provinces tell them how much they can pump and ship and so forth. The management and the conservation of those resources is still entirely within the power of the provinces. There is no question about that.

An Hon. Member: Talk about prices.

Mr. McDermid: The New Democrats are yelling for me to talk about prices. If they want to set my agenda for me, then we will talk about prices. There is a world price set for oil. For a number of years because of the policies of the previous Government the West was getting a lot less than the world price for oil. What happened to the West? The West was almost brought to its knees. We sell the West cars at world prices made in the Hon. Member's riding. We do not give the West a special Canadian price for cars made in Ontario that are shipped out. But we want oil here at a cheaper price. That is the way the NDP operates. That is the New Democrats' policy. Nationalize everything and dictate everything to the provinces. That is what they want to do and that is what they are afraid they cannot do any more.

Mr. McCurdy: You want Washington to do it.

Mr. McDermid: And thank goodness, Madam Speaker, they cannot. Let us talk about prices. The New Democrats say we cannot sell our energy across the border for less than what is being charged here. That is totally wrong. The Americans are paying market price for hydro. It is a lot more than consumers are paying in the Province of Quebec, for example. That is allowed under this agreement. There is nothing in this agreement that prevents that, nothing at all.

An Hon. Member: Have you read it?

Mr. McDermid: I have read it. I am willing to wager that I have read it more times than the Hon. Member has. The NDP do not want us to ship energy to the U.S. It wants to keep it to themselves.

• (1220)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: I struck a nerve over there. They do not want to ship energy to the U.S. Listen to them holler. They want to keep it here.

Mr. Riis: That is untrue.

Mr. McDermid: They want to keep it to themselves. Cut off our best customer. There is absolutely no incentive whatsoever for anyone to do exploration and find more sources of energy if they cannot sell the product they have. Of course they want to sell it. Why shouldn't they? The NDP policy is absolute nonsense. They would arbitrarily cut off their best customer. That is it. We are going to keep it all to ourselves. That is the narrow thinking of the Shirley Carr-Ed Broadbent Party. That is the way they think in the Bob White-Ed Broadbent Party. We know that the policy is coming from the CLC. There are no thinkers over there so they have to get it from somewhere. That is the energy policy of the NDP.

Which oil company are they going to nationalize? Is it Imperial Oil? They will spend billions of taxpayers' dollars nationalizing another oil company. We need that like a hole in the head, too.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions or comments has expired, but I will allow a one-minute rebuttal to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: The NDP policy is to provide sufficient, reasonably priced energy to the people of Brampton and favour the Canadians living in Brampton over the people who live in California. That is our policy.

Mr. McDermid: Gas prices just dropped in Brampton.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I want to put a few things on the record so that in the future people will know exactly what has taken place here today. Someone in the NDP talked about dimensions. We are seeing a new dimension of irresponsibility here. I want to lay out exactly what has happened today so that when the time comes to wear it, my hon. friends opposite will know how to wear it.

Mr. Waddell: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I would like to know whether the Hon. Minister is debating my motion. If he is, I suggest he deal with the energy policy.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member might want to do what the Speaker was about to do, which is to listen to the Hon. Minister and then make a judgment as to relevancy.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I am not clear whether we are still debating my motion. I would like to know if we are still on my concurrence motion.

Mr. Blenkarn: You never were on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I said "Resuming debate". The Hon. Minister has been recognized for debate on the concurrence motion.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, we are presently debating my hon. friend's motion for concurrence in the report of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources. I want to point out exactly how we got to that motion in the order of proceedings. During the time for Introduction of Private Members' Bills the Hon. House Leader of the NDP rose to introduce a Bill on the subject of nuclear energy. That is a very important issue. No matter which side of the issue you are on, the question of nuclear energy and whether it should be investigated is very important.

The usual request for the right to print the Bill was made, but that was denied by members of the NDP. Not members of the Liberal Party, not members of the Conservative Party, but members of the NDP denied it in order to trigger a vote which would delay proceedings of the House. When people read today's record they will find the motion to introduce that Bill was agreed to unanimously by Members of the House who came to vote. We then moved on after that delay to the motion of concurrence which my hon. friend spoke to at length.

What we are really talking about, though, is whether or not the NDP wants a 10-week holiday this summer or whether it wants to do the business of this House and the business of the Government.

Mr. Riis: On a point of order, Madam Speaker, I submit that imputing motives is not something the Chair normally tolerates. For the Minister to be suggesting that the NDP is even interested in a summer vacation when we have a free trade deal before the country is absolutely fallacious. We are prepared to sit here all summer if that is what it takes to stop the Government's introduction and passage of the trade legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster).

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak on the concurrence motion.

Some Hon. Members: Wait a minute!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thought the Hon. Member was rising on the point of order.

Mr. Waddell: He is in the middle of his speech.

Mr. Nystrom: You would never know it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate your coming to my rescue like that.

Whether or not the NDP wants a 10-week holiday, I suggest that the purpose of this place is to debate issues and not delay them.

Mr. Riis: That is what we are doing.

Mr. Lewis: The Canadian taxpayers spend a great deal of money keeping this place open, and for the NDP to shut it down unnecessarily is absolutely irresponsible.

I want to lay a couple of quotes on my hon. friends with respect to the responsibilities of the minority and the rights of the majority. Too often my hon. friends are quick to refer to the tyranny of the majority, but there is also a certain tyranny in the minority not allowing duly-elected Members of the House to go about their business and do the business of the Government. I want to quote from Hansard as follows:

> Every democratic assembly recognizes that issues will arise from time to time which the minority in all conscience cannot accept, which the minority in order to be true to its values must oppose vigorously and never concede. This is right and proper. It is one of the bases on which rest our democratic institutions.

Mr. Langdon: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. You suggested, as this speech began, that you would follow it and test it for relevance. It seems to me that what is being said has absolutely no relevance to the concurrence motion. If the Minister wishes to make a statement at some stage, he is quite able to do so. However, this has absolutely nothing to do with the motion which is before the House at the moment.

It seems to me that the further this speech goes, the further it diverges from the rules of this House with respect to relevance and direct reference to the subject before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Minister will make an effort to tie together the concurrence motion and the message he is obviously trying to convey to this House.

• (1230)

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I will certainly make the same effort to be relevant as have my hon. colleagues opposite. I will also give the same courtesies to them as they expect from all Members of the House with respect to speeches, interruptions, and relevancy.

I think the biggest problem is that they do not like what they are hearing. They do not like these quotations. One might ask how often free trade is referred to in this particular report of the committee. No one would accept more quickly than I strict enforcement of the rule of relevancy. I am prepared at any time, in any debate, to have the rule of relevancy enforced strictly. I put that on the record because it never comes from the NDP.

We are really talking about whether the majority will proceed to do the business of government or whether we will have a tyranny of the minority. In order to spare my hon. colleagues from any future embarrassment, because they do not like what we are reading into the record, we intend to eliminate the delay in the proceedings.

Mr. Riis: Another closure.

Mr. Lewis: We'll get to closure later. I want to point out just once more that we were sent here to govern, to respect the rights of the minorities, to keep this place open and do the work of the people of Canada. The NDP does not want to do the work of Canada so, therefore—

Mr. Riis: Point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I move:

That this House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

CANADIAN ALLIANCE FOR PEACE

LIBERAL PARTY'S PROGRAM—SIMILARITIES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada met the Canadian Peace Alliance, a coalition of over 400 organizations dedicated to peace across this country, which held its annual meeting on the weekend in Ottawa, under the theme: Vote for peace!

Of course, the Leader of the Opposition had a very constructive conversation with representatives of these peace organizations, in the course of which he recalled certain aspects of the Party's policy program, including the Party's rejection of the Mulroney Government's project to provide Canada's Armed Forces with a fleet of nuclear-powered submarines.

Second, the rejection of cruise missile testing in Canada, in view of the agreement signed by the United States and the Soviet Union, which will prohibit intermediate nuclear forces in Europe.

Third, the creation of a new international status for the Arctic by means of a multilateral treaty designed to stop the militarization of the circumpolar region, a treaty that would include all Arctic powers.

And finally, a proposal that Canada again seek a seat on the UN Security Council, so that it will be able to make a durable contribution to resolving regional conflicts such as those in the Middle East, Central America and South East Asia.

ROYAL CANADIAN LEGION

TRIBUTE TO SERVICE FOR THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Royal Canadian Legion was built on service. Service for country was a qualification for membership.

Working closely with the Department of Veterans Affairs, the Royal Canadian Legion has given the veterans of Canada one of the best programs of support in the whole world.

Since World War II the emphasis has been on service, not for self, but service for the handicapped, the disabled, and dependants. Stories of the good works of branches across the country for their communities and the peoples who live within them are legion themselves.

I am sure all Members of the House will want to join in commending the Royal Canadian Legion for its continued commitment to our nation and to our country as it meets in national assembly here in Ottawa this week.

PEACE

CANADIAN PEACE ALLIANCE CONFERENCE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this morning many members of the New Democratic Party caucus, including the Leader (Mr. Broadbent), met with representatives of the Canadian Peace Alliance. Our meeting was, I can truly say, a gathering of friends.

The Peace Alliance has just completed a highly successful three-day conference in Ottawa. The conference was designed to make Members of this Chamber aware of the high priority which Canadians place upon the vital issues of peace and disarmament.

The Alliance, and Canadians generally, know that the New Democratic Party has always been and will continue to be committed to promoting international peace, security, and disarmament.

But it is obvious that the Conservative Government does not share that commitment. Its defence White Paper, laced in cold war rhetoric, betrays an allegiance to an outdated and confrontational outlook on the world. The Government's misguided and foolish decision to purchase a fleet of nuclear powered attack submarines serves only to affirm that belligerent philosophy.

Not surprisingly, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could not find the time to meet with the Peace Alliance today. The Tories are too busy spending billions on tools of war to make time to talk of peace.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PARTICIPATION BY MEMBERS IN QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, Your Honour is well aware of the recent article in The Globe and Mail in which Mr. Jeffrey Simpson stated that in Britain government backbenchers get about one-third of the questions during Question Period, while in Canada they get one or two questions each day, in a House where Progressive Conservatives outnumber Liberals and New Democrats by roughly three to one.

According to the article, some of the most difficult questions for British Cabinet Ministers come from their own Party, while the opposition questions are usually predictable. Does that sound familiar, Mr. Speaker?

My question to you, Mr. Speaker, is a very simple one. When will Your Honour allow government Members more questions during Question Period? Supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER POLLUTION—MUNICIPAL SEWERS AND TREATMENT PLANTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, belugas ahoy! Despite the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) announcement of federal money for research, the St. Lawrence River will hardly be cleaned up because to stop the pollution, municipal and industrial, taxpayers' dollars are needed to build and repair adequate sewers and treatment plants.

Instead, the federal Government has cancelled its sewage and water treatment program while the Prime Minister creates the impression of taking remedial action. The fact is that, if we want to save the St. Lawrence River, including the belugas and other wildlife, the Government must turn around its misplaced priorities. Instead of billions of dollars for nuclear submarines, that money should go to provincial Governments and municipalities to rehabilitate and protect our waters. The Liberal Party is already committed to pay the federal share of such costs.

Those who want action to protect the St. Lawrence and the belugas must attack the Government and its misplaced priorities.

THE ENVIRONMENT

REDUCTION OF SULPHUR DIOXIDE EMISSIONS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, on June 9, Noranda Minerals announced at a press conference that it was committed to reducing sulphur dioxide emissions from its Rouyn-Noranda Plant by 70 per cent, by 1995.

This is now feasible thanks to a new sulphuric acid plant that will use some of the most innovative and sophisticated technology known today. This is very good news, not only for the people of Rouyn—Noranda and Abitibi—Témiscamingue, who will be getting cleaner air, but for the entire country.

Noranda will thus be ahead of the deadline set by the federal Government, which provided for a reduction of 50 per cent by 1994. This commitment by industry reflects a new attitude and is entirely in line with the federal Government's decisions and policies on environmental concerns since 1984.

Mr. Speaker, when industry causes pollution, it must be condemned. When industry takes steps to fight pollution to improve our quality of life, it deserves to be commended.

THE LATE FRANCINE McKENZIE

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the country has just lost a great Quebecer and a great Canadian, Francine McKenzie, who died last Friday. Ms. McKenzie was president of the Quebec Council on the Status of Women since 1984. She was a deeply committed feminist and showed great leadership on several issues affecting women.

In recent years, she did important consciousness-raising work and research on new reproductive technologies, which made it possible to take these issues out of the laboratories and into a public forum where women could speak.

There is no doubt that the work begun by Ms. McKenzie will continue in the Status of Women Council and women's groups. But her absence will be felt; she will be missed. I join my colleagues in the House of Commons in expressing my most sincere condolences to Ms. McKenzie's family.

ABORTION

CALL FOR LAW TO PROTECT UNBORN CHILDREN

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the abortion section of the Criminal Code that was struck down by the Supreme Court dealt with medical, psychological and health aspects to make it look respectable. The law ignored the fact that when a woman exercised the right to have an abortion, the rights of the unborn child were devalued.

With every right, there must be a responsibility. By opening the gates for unwanted pregnancies, the Parliament of Canada promoted the devaluation of all human life, and so no wonder more than 50,000 abortions occurred every year since.

Water will not cleanse our hands, we parliamentarians, if we permit these abortions legally to take place. A new law must protect every fetal stage of unborn children. Let us make sure as we approach the critical hour that one of the last vestiges of human respect, responsibility and freedom, are not lost.

ACID RAIN—BRIEF PRESENTED BY RENFREW STUDENTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the students of Our Lady of Fatima School in Renfrew, Ontario, have been studying environmental issues and have presented a brief to me and to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). They have asked us to present their petition to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and this is being done.

In their brief, the students state:

> Through our studies we have become aware of the main causes of acid rain. Acid rain is promoted by an unnecessary use of electricity and fossil fuels. Both coal and oil are used in each of these cases. Coal and oil both contain sulfur and nitrogen which when released into the air, combine with oxygen. In the clouds these pollutants undergo further changes forming acid rain.

The students continue:

> People might say we are just kids but we are not JUST kids, we are the adults of the future, we have rights TOO! We have the right to crystal clear water to drink and to swim in. We have the right to pure rain, and an acid rain free future. We also have the right to catch fish that are not deformed. We have the right to have a clean world as God meant it to be.

The students of Our Lady of Fatima School in Renfrew, Ontario, have asked me to impress upon the Prime Minister that he take their message seriously. May I respectfully request that he do so.

DISARMAMENT

UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY SPECIAL SESSION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, today the General Assembly of the United Nations enters the third week of a special session on disarmament. It has received little attention but should have received much.

• (1410)

The need for arms control is one of the world's paramount needs when the world's annual budget for armaments is $1 trillion. The cost of human lives since the end of World War II has been 20 million killed in 81 localized wars. Some Governments in the Third World, like Ethiopia, prefer to use their slender resources to feed and arm their soldiers while people starve.

Escalation of arms acquisitions first by the Soviet Union, later by the United States, and then by the Third World, has destroyed many hopes that much could be done to turn this around. In recent times the Moscow Summit has given the world a new hope that the accelerating race to destruction can be halted.

We should not make the simple assumption that the surest way to peace is through disarmament alone. The history of past debates on disarmament shows the folly of thinking that there is any such magic wand.

We can believe that the time is coming when the increase of armed forces may be reduced and Governments can realize that being poised to destroy one another is not the only option open to them.

MARINE TRANSPORT

BRITISH COLUMBIA CRUISE SHIP INDUSTRY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, consider the sad plight of the junior Minister of Transport from British Columbia, left on the sidelines in the dispute which has erupted on the West Coast over the threat posed by Bill C-52 to the passenger cruise industry in British Columbia.

Last Friday the Parliamentary Secretary to the real Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) gave this House a completely unqualified assurance that all problems have been resolved. He ignored comments of the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) who admitted there is a problem but she would straighten it out with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The junior Minister of Transport merely told the industry "Trust us".

However, the B.C. Chamber of Shipping which came to Ottawa today to meet with B.C. Members has a different opinion. It continues to be very worried about Bill C-52 because the Bill may jeopardize the cruise ship industry which brings $70 million in direct income to British Columbia. It wants amendments to the Bill.

I call on the Government to listen carefully to west coast representatives and review Bill C-52, and bring in possible amendments to preserve this vital west coast industry.

PRIVACY

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION TO PHASE OUT USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) responding to the report of the parliamentary Justice Committee and the concern of parliamentarians announced last week the Government's intention to restrict the use of the social insurance number in federal institutions. Over the next five years, the use of the social insurance number will be phased out and its use restricted to the administration of tax, pension and social benefit programs.

Many Canadians felt and feel threatened by the use of the social insurance number as a universal identifier, beyond the purpose for which it was originally intended. I am pleased the Government is taking steps to reverse this trend. The Consumers Association of Canada has hailed this Treasury Board decision as good for Canadians.

This Government cares about individual privacy. I hope that other levels of government and the private sector will follow our example and restrict the use of the social insurance number. Let us "SIN" no more!

INDIAN AFFAIRS

MILITARY CATERING CONTRACT DENIED TO KETTLE POINT BAND

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the road to economic self-sufficiency is full of obstacles for Indian bands. An example is the experience of the Kettle Point Band in southwestern Ontario which has been trying for the past three years to win a food catering contract at the military base located near to it.

In 1985 the band established the Stoney Kettle Management Company and built up the necessary management and staff through government training programs and the local college. In 1985 and 1986 it lost the contracts because its bids were not the lowest. This year its bid was the lowest but it did not get the contract. Why, Sir? Because the criteria had suddenly and inexplicably changed. The band was told it did not meet the experience requirements.

Despite having successfully catered for numerous organizations over the past three years, and despite having bid $112,000 lower than the company which won the contract, the band was turned down. Is it any wonder that Indian people in Canada are cynical about the Government's commitment to Indian economic development?

ATTENDANCE OF LASALLE BRANCH AT ANNUAL CONVENTION

Mr. Claude Lanthier (LaSalle): Mr. Speaker, today here in Ottawa the Annual Convention of the Royal Canadian Legion begins. On this memorable occasion in the name of comrades of my legion Branch 212, I would like to pay highly deserved homage to our so competent Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lanthier: Needless to say, our glorious Branch 212 of LaSalle is pretty well represented at this convention by an important delegation, skilfully directed by its President, George Stundon, who is being helped by the experience of its past President, John Jamieson.

But in these days of happy memories, Mr. Speaker, let us not forget the supreme sacrifice of some and the high price paid by our veterans who were hospitalized as a result of the wars and international peace missions in which our peace-loving Canada was involved in this most troubled 20th century. Je me souviens! Lest we forget!

PORNOGRAPHY

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-54

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, pornography is a major cause of social, physical, and emotional problems in our society. It creates a totally distorted view of human sexuality and behaviour. In fact, it encourages deviation, abnormal behaviour in relationships, and promotes violence towards women and children. Women and children must be protected from individuals who promote this disgusting and warped view of human beings.

Bill C-54 provides the mechanism which will ensure that pornography, which is nothing but vicious anti-women propaganda, is eliminated. I urge the Government to bring Bill C-54 to second reading in order that this blight on our society may be dealt with.

FREE TRADE

DAIRY PRODUCTS—TRADE AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES—APPARENT CONTRADICTION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We all know that the Prime Minister is trying to buy the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean. Today, the Prime Minister is visiting the riding. Apparently, he went to a dairy farm and talked about the high cost of this kind of operation. I find that incredible, Mr. Speaker, because we know that dairy producers have asked the Government of Canada to intervene to restrict milk imports from the United States, and the Government refused so as not to upset the Americans.

Today, the Hon. Member for Algoma received a letter from the Minister for International Trade who refused to act on the concerns of dairy producers because of this, and I quote:

> . . . the delicate situation this would create in the context of the process of approving the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister told dairy producers that programs designed to help Canadian farmers would not be affected by the FTA, but this letter from the Minister for International Trade says the exact opposite.

How does the Deputy Prime Minister explain the contradiction between the Prime Minister's statements in Lac-Saint-Jean and the letter from his Minister for International Trade?

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I did not detect any contradiction in what was stated by either the Prime Minister or the Minister for International Trade. Certainly there would not be any confusion or any contradiction in the minds of the 45,000 dairy farmers in this country.

We told the dairy farmers, in fact we told supply managed producers on March 16, 1986, I believe it was, that we would negotiate a bilateral trade agreement with the U.S. and preserve supply management in Canada. This is exactly what we delivered. In fact, Section 7(10) of the FTA, consistent with Article 11, sets out that agreement and that protection for not only the dairy farmers of Canada, who are supply managed, but also the supply managed commodities in the feather industry.

MILK PRODUCERS-POSITION OF MINISTER FOR INTERNATIONAL TRADE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation of this article by the Minister of Agriculture is debatable. The Union des producteurs agricoles du Québec and other dairy producers have expressed their concerns about the volume of milk imports from the United States destined for Canadian consumption. The only reason the Minister for International Trade could give in this respect was that he was worried about the future of the trade agreement with the United States.

The Prime Minister and his colleagues have stated on many occasions that the trade agreement with the United States does not in any way affect Canadian farmers, but the Minister for International Trade is stating the exact opposite in his letter to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Algoma. Why the contradiction?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, milk is not imported from the United States into Canada and, indeed, milk is not exported from Canada into the United States.

Mr. Orlikow: How about milk products?

Mr. Wise: I'll come to that. On March 16 we gave an indication that we would preserve the underpinnings necessary for the day to day operation of supply management. The commitment was that we would move the items about which the Hon. Member might be concerned, which are now on the tariff list, to the import-export list.

We gave that commitment on March 16, 1986. I stand to be corrected, but I believe it was the first part of January or the middle of January when I spoke to the annual meeting of the Dairy Farmers of Canada. At that time we had already passed the Order in Council which transferred all of the items which had been on the tariff list to the import-export list.

In addition to that we added a number of products which were not on the tariff list but for which the Dairy Farmers of Canada had been asking for 10 years. The previous Government had refused to do that. We also moved those items from the tariff list to the import-export list.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know that we cannot do that unilaterally. GATT obligates us to notify all of our trading partners that we are in that process. We have done that.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should also realize that we have to negotiate import controls with our trading partners. Normally it is the average of the last five years minus the high or low year. That is exactly the process which we are in now.

FLUID MILK PRODUCERS' REQUEST

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture knows well that the fluid milk producers have been asking him and his Government for some relief and protection from the import of milk from the United States for Canadian consumption.

Now, in direct contradiction, in response to the Member for Algoma the Minister for International Trade said that he will not help Canadian dairy farmers because of—and I want to quote the words for the Minister in order that he will have them exactly from his colleague, the Minister for International Trade—"the sensitivity this issue would create in the context of the Canada-U.S.A. free trade agreement approval process".

The interests of Canadian dairy farmers are being held hostage to the approval process of the agreement. The Minister knows full well that a free trade arrangement between farmers in Canada, who have a four, five, or six-month growing season, is impossible with California, Georgia, Mississippi and Florida farmers who have a 12-month growing season. It is absolutely impossible.

Is that the same reason that the seasonal import protection was withdrawn from fruit producers in Canada and vegetable producers in Canada, and is that the reason we are going to have a five to seven-year negotiation period wherein every single agricultural program will be harmonized with those of the United States?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman should check his facts. It might be in his interest to change his researcher because there is no doubt in my mind, in the mind of the Government, or in the minds of the dairy farmers of Canada that we are going to fulfil completely the commitments which were made on March 16 in placing those items on the tariff list onto to the import-export list.

• (1425)

The hon. gentleman can just sit back and relax because we will deliver to the dairy farmers of Canada exactly what we told them we would deliver on March 16.

Mr. Foster: Sell-out.

Mr. Wise: He should also check his facts again because the fluid milk producers of this country are not under federal jurisdiction. They are controlled by provincial milk marketing boards and provincial regulations.

Mr. Foster: Check the section.

Mr. Wise: Not one provincial milk marketing board has raised its concerns about the importation of American milk to this country because it does not come here and never has.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Two weeks ago I directed a question to the Minister of Trade about the statement by the chief legal counsel to the United States Trade Office suggesting that the whole dispute settlement mechanism would be unconstitutional under U.S. law. At that time the Minister said he was unconcerned about the matter, that it was a matter for the U.S. Government to deal with.

This weekend the chief spokesperson for the Canadian Government in the United States, the Ambassador to Washington, said in an interview with The Wall Street Journal that: "We would be profoundly concerned if the net result of U.S. legal constraints is that panel decisions cannot be implemented under U.S. law". The Ambassador is admitting that the whole dispute settlement mechanism is under question in terms of the U.S. legislation.

In those circumstances, does the Deputy Prime Minister not consider it foolhardy to ask this Parliament to proceed with legislation to implement the free trade Bill when the keystone of that Bill, the dispute settlement mechanism, itself cannot be implemented by reason of the U.S. Constitution? Should not the Deputy Prime Minister, as Government House Leader, simply decide to withdraw the Bill until those profound concerns raised by the Ambassador to Washington are answered?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Member is making definitive statements about the free trade agreement, saying that the binational dispute settlement mechanism is unconstitutional. It is in his mind that it is unconstitutional. I know that he does not have a background in law so perhaps we can understand why he comes up with some of those statements.

An Hon. Member: Neither do you.

Mr. McDermid: Two countries are presently implementing legislation. We are implementing ours according to the free trade agreement that was signed with the United States. We expect the United States to implement the free trade agreement within their legislation as well. That is what we are watching very carefully.

The free trade agreement does not become a fait accompli until the exchange of letters between the President and the Prime Minister takes place. That will take place after the free trade agreement is in legislation in both countries and abides by the letter of that agreement.

Mr. Axworthy: I apologize to the Hon. Member. I did not know he had the same law degree from the same institution as the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT IMPLEMENTING LEGISLATION BE WITHDRAWN

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not understand that the Canadian Ambassador to Washington has said explicitly that the Government has profound concerns that the whole dispute settlement mechanism cannot be implemented.

The Government is running across the country saying that it is the key to solving the problem while the Americans are saying they are not even sure they can bring it forward and make it constitutional. Therefore, is it not proper and wise either to send Mr. Burney back to do more negotiation, withdraw the Bill in the meantime, and not ask Canadians and Canadian parliamentarians to sign a blank cheque or pass a law that cannot be implemented here because the Americans cannot fulfil their part of the bargain? It takes two to tango.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we know what the Hon. Member's son Stephen thinks of his speeches by the picture in the Ottawa Citizen today. He expresses it very clearly on behalf of the Canadian people.

• (1430)

In the Hon. Member's preamble to his question I think there are two things that should be pointed out. The Ambassador said Canada "would" have concerns "if". Those are very, very big "ifs" and "would have concerns". Certainly we would have concerns about it if we could not implement it, but there has been very little discussion of that in the United States. We fully expect the Americans to put into legislation the spirit and the agreement we reached on the free trade agreement.

PEACE

CANADIAN PEACE ALLIANCE CONFERENCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister will know that the Canadian Peace Alliance, a group that represents over 450 groups from Canada concerned with issues of peace and disarmament, is meeting in Ottawa this weekend. I understand the Minister agreed at the last minute this morning to meet with representatives of the group, but up until this morning the group was under the impression that no one they had requested to meet with them from the Government was going to meet with them.

Why this reluctance on the part of the Minister and on the part of the Government to consult with and meet with this very important Canadian organization?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, far from me being reluctant to meet with them, I came back to Ottawa, in part to be able to meet with them, and I was glad to be able to do that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member will know, for example, that the Canadian Peace Alliance put out a letter on Friday attacking the Secretary of State for External Affairs for not being here in Ottawa to meet with it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been addressing UNSSOD-III at the United Nations. I suppose he could have cancelled that if that is what the New Democratic Party would like, and stayed here, but we thought it was important that he should undertake Canada's obligations to promote peace internationally.

Mr. Blaikie: The Secretary of State for External Affairs, unlike the Prime Minister, does have a good reason for not being here.

PRIME MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the Prime Minister chose to put the sinking political fate of his friend, Mr. Bouchard, over his responsibilities as Prime Minister—

Mr. Andre: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Blaikie: —to be here in Ottawa and meet with the Canadian Peace Alliance?

Mr. Lewis: Where is Eddie?

An Hon. Member: Quit playing to the gallery.

Mr. Blaikie: I am asking a question, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

An Hon. Member: Where is Broadbent?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Blaikie: I obviously touched a nerve there, Mr. Speaker.

My Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa, was there this morning to meet with the Canadian Peace Alliance. Why did the Prime Minister choose not to be here when he very well could have been here to meet with this group that is concerned about peace and disarmament?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is again doing exactly what created the disorder and I would ask him to not do it because there is a rule here, it is an old one going back decades, that we do not make comment as to why another Hon. Member is not in the Chamber. It only leads to other Members calling out that other Members are not in the Chamber. I would ask the Hon. Member to rephrase his question.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, my question is not about the Prime Minister's presence or absence in the Chamber—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Fennell: Order!

Mr. Andre: Order!

Mr. Blaikie: It is about his responsibilities as Prime Minister to meet with groups outside the Chamber. That is what I am talking about, and that is in order, and that is what I want an answer to.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this really is an example of low comedy on the part of the New Democratic Party when it goes through those sorts of shenanigans. The Associate Minister and I were delighted to have a chance to meet with the Canadian Peace Alliance. We have consistently met with representatives of the peace movement in Canada and will continue to do so.

I am pleased as well to say that at the present time in Ottawa we have another important convention taking place at the Royal Canadian Legion with people who also have a vital interest in Canada's peace and security.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence wants to give us the impression the Government has gone out of its way to communicate with these groups. The fact remains that The Group of 78, VANA, the World Federalists of Canada and others have been writing to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for months trying to get an idea of what he might be saying on behalf of Canada at UNSSOD-III today. They have yet to hear back from the Governmemt. I want to ask the Minister of National Defence why it is that the Government in its actions today and in its actions leading up to today, with the Minister speaking at UNSSOD-III, refused even to answer the letters written to the Government to ask what the Canadian position is on a variety of these issues?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the position of the Government throughout with respect to arms control and with respect to defence has been made public. What the public is entitled to have now is a clear statement from the New Democratic Party about what its policies are.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They have it.

Mr. Beatty: Would they build a third batch of frigates and conventionally powered submarines—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): They have it.

Mr. Blaikie: Answer the question!

Mr. Beatty: —which would cost more than the Government's proposals? Or would they gut the defence program and give the money to social spending?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What are you so worried about?

Mr. Beatty: That is why the NDP is the no defence Party of Canada.

Mr. Riis: He may be a little paranoid.

PUBLIC WORKS

ALLEGATIONS OF CORRUPTION—QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER RECEIVED REPORT FROM ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week, the Official Opposition raised the matter of the allegations made by Mr. Kealey with respect to the Member for Joliette. In reply, the Minister of Supply and Services said that he could not comment because the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was investigating the matter. However, on the weekend, the Prime Minister qualified those allegations as being unfounded. My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Did the Prime Minister receive a report from the RCMP on the matter and if not, how could he claim the allegations were unfounded?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made repeatedly in this House that someone has some information about someone doing something wrong. No one has ventured that opinion outside this Chamber.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You have changed your tune.

Mr. McInnes: If indeed the Hon. Member has some information that might assist the Government and the RCMP, would he be good enough to let us have that information? It would be very helpful.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You have changed your tune.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have news for the Minister. We are beyond that. On June 8 the Minister of Supply and Services said the matter was under investigation and that he could not comment on it. If that was the case, why did the Prime Minister comment on it and say that as far as he was concerned the accusations were without foundation? If there is an inquiry under way, will the Prime Minister withdraw his characterization of these accusations as without foundation, at least until the RCMP finishes the investigation that the Government itself says is under way?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, one assumption the Prime Minister has made, and I think all Members of this House should do the same, is that everyone is presumed innocent until proven otherwise.

I wish to affirm the fact that the RCMP are seized of this matter. I wish also to let the Hon. Member know that the gentleman, Mr. Kealey, was in my office concerning MICOT a good number of months ago and at no time was there any suggestion of impropriety on behalf of anyone in this Government.

AIR CANADA

PRIVATIZATION—BILINGUALISM—POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns his statement last week that the Government was prepared to consider amendments to its bill that would water down Air Canada's obligation to remain bilingual. This answer reminds me of the "Gens de l'air" issue and the national crisis it touched off ten years ago. Will it be possible for French-speaking employees of Air Canada to continue working in French at Air Canada if the Corporation is privatized or will only Air Canada customers be entitled to bilingual service?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, last Friday I was responding to a question posed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who expressed some concerns with respect to this. I said in light of the circumstances, clearly the place for this to be raised would be during the committee's consideration of the Bill, and I think he was quite satisfied with that and I stand by it.

MAINTENANCE OF AIR CANADA'S BILINGUAL CHARACTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

Bill C-129 states very clearly in clause 10, and I quote: "That the Official Languages Act applies to Air Canada." That is clear and precise.

The Government should have a policy . . . Will the Government make a commitment to maintain this clause in its entirety and unchanged, without amendments that might undermine its commitment to Air Canada's bilingualism or reduce its scope? Is the Government prepared to maintain that principle? Yes or no?

• (1440)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right. The Bill is very clear. I do not know why that would prevent the committee from hearing representations by Air Canada or anyone else. Why is the Hon. Member so opposed to democracy in this country?

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

POSSIBLE RELOCATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier: (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the Deputy Prime Minister about moving the Economic Council of Canada.

In a letter that he wrote to me recently, the Prime Minister told me that the Economic Council of Canada, which has been in Vanier for 20 years, would soon move to downtown Ottawa. This move will cost $750,000 and according to the Prime Minister, it is essential.

The Prime Minister told me in his letter that the move was to enable the Council to work very close to other federal agencies located in the heart of Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, Vanier is a kilometre from here, six or seven minutes if you hurry a little . . . I would like to know from the Prime Minister how we can be closer to the action than we are in Vanier. And can he tell us the real reasons for the move, or is the Government ashamed to be in Vanier?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a question which would more appropriately be addressed to the President of the Treasury Board. I will look into it and get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

REASONS FOR PROPOSED RELOCATION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is the Prime Minister who is responsible for the Economic Council of Canada.

When I spoke about the cost of $750,000 to move the Economic Council of Canada from Vanier to downtown Ottawa which is the objective—and which is but one kilometre away, or six minutes—I was asking the Deputy Prime Minister what kind of reasoning can be invoked other than the false and untrue ones that have been stated in the letter with respect to it wanting to come closer to MPs, Senators, and House committees. Come on, can it tell us the real reason?

What will the Government do if this thing does not fly? Will it again change its mind? I hope it will. Will it save the money, take the $750,000 and spend it on other priorities such as housing for battered women or perhaps day care? What is wrong with Vanier? Leave it there, it is all right.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the vigour with which the Hon. Member makes the representation. I said that I will look into it and get back to him.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN TORONTO—DEDUCTIBLE MORTGAGE INTEREST TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister is well aware that in the present severe housing crisis in the Metro Toronto area less than 4 per cent of tenants can afford to buy a house. He is well aware as well that in the past our Party has advocated a system of mortgage interest tax deductibility in order to encourage home ownership.

Will the Minister consider instituting a similar type of program to allow residential housing tax deductibility for first-time home owners, and institute a system either on a national basis or targeted for areas such as Metropolitan Toronto, targeted in the same way that the Minister has targeted other programs such as the northern allowance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has expressed concerns before on what is a very difficult question, the question of the cost of housing in Metropolitan Toronto. We are aware of that particular problem.

Again, in this particular instance we appreciate the thought that he has given to proposals for us to consider. In this case as well the focus on the particular option that he has chosen makes it very difficult to implement into places like Metropolitan Toronto.

In response to his question on whether we should introduce something such as mortgage deductibility, we have taken steps in tax reform to lower the whole level of tax rates. The reduction in tax rates will provide a much broader incentive for people right across the country.

HEALTH

NATIONAL NATIVE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Will the Minister confirm that he has dissolved the National Native Advisory Committee on Alcohol and Drug Abuse? Will he explain why, in view of the seriousness of alcohol and other substance abuse among natives, and the need to have native input into bringing about solutions, he has taken this action?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe the premise on which the Hon. Member bases his question is correct.

ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER'S LETTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a letter in my hand addressed to Mr. Roger Augustine, signed by Mr. J. D. Nicholson who is Assistant Deputy Minister, which states that everything will be wound up by December 31, 1988. Perhaps the Minister is not in charge.

Therefore I would ask him to ask questions of his Deputy Minister to find out what is going on in Health and Welfare.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we know what is going on in Health and Welfare. We also know what is going on in terms of NNADAP, the drug and alcohol abuse program. What I tell the Hon. Member is that in terms of the amount of money that we are spending in NNADAP obviously that will continue. However, we also want to get from NNADAP some re-evaluation. In some cases we now have facilities where our costs per bed are running extremely high. I think we can get more cost efficiency and in fact more people supported in drug and alcohol abuse programs than some of the infrastructure costs that we are facing.

CANADIAN ALLIANCE FOR PEACE

REQUEST THAT CRUISE MISSILE TESTING ON CANADIAN SOIL BE ENDED

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to answer some questions that were put this morning to the Leader of the Opposition at a meeting he had with the Canadian Peace Alliance. People representing the Alliance, which brings together nearly 400 organizations, were here and they complained to the Leader of the Opposition that they did not get pertinent answers to the questions they raised with the Government.

I therefore take this opportunity to ask the Deputy Prime Minister . . .

[English]

In view of the U.S.A.-U.S.S.R. agreement banning intermediate-range nuclear forces in Europe, is the Deputy Prime Minister now in a position to declare that Cruise missile testing in Canada will no longer be accepted?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, the INF agreement between the Soviet Union and the United States, which was a result of the two-track decision taken by NATO, deals only with the issue of ground-launch Cruise missiles. Submarine-launch and air-launch Cruise missiles are not covered by the agreement. Our hope would be to have them covered under the START talks. Those talks are still going on.

At the present time we continue to find Soviet long-range bombers approaching the Canadian air defence identification zone. The purpose of those long-range bombers is to carry the air-launch Cruise missile. The air-launch Cruise missile continues to be a threat to Canada's security.

It is appropriate that Canada should continue to test an unarmed guidance system of an air-launch Cruise missile in Canada.

INTERNATIONAL VERIFICATION AGENCY—CANADIAN POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. The Hon. Minister should know that there is currently taking place at the United Nations discussions which are very important concerning disarmament. Why is Canada not ready to accept the proposal that has been put forward which is now under discussion to have an international verification agency come under the auspices of the United Nations? Why is Canada not ready to accept this? Certainly such an agency would be absolutely essential to monitor disarmament, and certainly to monitor a treaty such as the INF.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is currently at the United Nations at UNSSOD III. He will be coming back to the House, and he will be pleased to go into considerable detail on any of the proposals made by Canada.

Suffice it to say that across the board our position has been, first, to press for cuts in terms of nuclear and conventional weapons and, second, to press for regimes of verification and control which would ensure that those treaties are met.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MASSEY COMBINES—CLEVELAND COMPANY'S PURCHASE OFFER

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the receivership of Massey Combines. It came to my attention over the weekend that a bid by Park Corporation of Cleveland, Ohio, to buy out Massey Combines in Brantford and run it as a self-contained agricultural implement manufacturing company was turned down by the receiver, Peat Marwick, in favour of a developer who will sell it off piecemeal.

• (1450)

In view of the fact that the federal Government and the provincial Government of Ontario have already put $200 million of taxpayers' money into that bail-out, in view of the fact that there are 2,000 jobs at stake in Brantford, and in view of the fact that rotary combine technology was built by Canadian taxpayers here in Canada, is the Government going to sit back and allow Massey Combines to be taken over by a developer and sold off piecemeal when there is a corporation in Cleveland, Ohio, that will buy it and keep it operating in Brantford?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this offer was referred to over the weekend by the Canadian Auto Workers. At this moment we are not in possession of the specifics of the offer. We are looking into it and we are quite prepared to follow through. The Government is certainly interested in retaining not only the jobs, but also the technology here in Canada. I have instructed my officials to follow through on the matter. As soon as we have some additional details or additional news, I will be very happy to give my hon. colleague the benefit of that information.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE TO ENSURE ACCEPTANCE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister is the following. Will he give the House an undertaking that if that offer to purchase by the company in Cleveland, Ohio, guarantees that Massey Combines Corporation will continue in Brantford to manufacture farm implements, the federal Government will intervene to make certain that that bid is accepted in the interests not only of jobs, but of the company, and the $200 million that has gone into bailing out Massey Combines?

Will the Government intervene to make certain that that company buys it?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, if the receiver receives an offer that ensures that the technology and jobs are maintained in Canada, I believe that that will meet the test of net benefit to Canada under the Investment Canada Act.

I am happy to see the support that I am receiving from my hon. colleague for this piece of legislation that might, once again in this case, ensure future jobs and maintain technology in Canada, in Brantford.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN TORONTO—REAL ESTATE SPECULATION TAX PROPOSAL

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In the early 1970s the Davis Government ended a runaway inflation of real estate prices in Ontario by imposing a land speculation tax.

Since flipping residential property, often before a purchase has been closed, is a factor in the average house prices in Metro Toronto soaring from $200,000 in February to $233,000 now, will the Government consider incorporating a real estate speculation tax into the income tax system as a way of cooling this market off?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the suggestion of the Hon. Member, and certainly I will take that as a representation. The Hon. Member is clearly demonstrating concerns that others have had about the level of house prices in Metropolitan Toronto.

I might observe to him that, if there is any degree of excessive "flipping" of houses, to use his word, that type of activity could be treated as income rather than capital gain for tax purposes, and certainly the tax liability of the individual doing this type of thing might be quite a bit higher than is anticipated.

LEVEL OF GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR HOUSING

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister responsible for housing. We have watched the Government give away money in the past weeks in this time of by-election and pre-election campaigning. What about the groups the Government has forgotten? I speak of low-income households, the homeless, and the near homeless.

My question is the following. Why has the Government systematically failed to address the Canadian housing problem? Why did it cut back funding to the CMHC from 1984 to 1987? Is it because people too busy seeking housing for their children are not vocal enough?

When will the Government make it a priority to provide access to adequate housing for all Canadians?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I might note, as I have indicated several times in the past few weeks, that the total amount of the budget, $1.6 billion, is now directed toward those most in need.

In co-operation with the provinces, we have been able to help 40 per cent more of those who come within this particular core area, compared to the previous Government.

ESTABLISHMENT OF SECOND TIER HOUSING PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the same Minister. Last week, the Minister of national Health and Welfare and the Minister responsible for the status of women allocated funds to create short-term shelters for battered wives. Considering the serious housing problem, would the Conservative Government be prepared to set up a program for second-stage housing for battered wives who have left their husbands and are looking for a place to live with their children?

[English]

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, first, by way of general reply, I might indicate that last Friday I spoke to the Canadian Co-operative Housing Association and indicated that we were changing our policy to accommodate 50 per cent of people in co-ops who receive a rent supplement.

Second, with respect to battered women, as a result of the Government's initiative and the $40 million announced last week, $22 million going to CMHC, 25,000 people who fall into this particular category will receive help.

We will monitor the progress of this program over the next four years, and that will dictate what else might have to be done.

REVENUE CANADA

RELOCATION OF WORKERS—TAX TREATMENT OF COUNSELLING FEES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. A recent Revenue Canada interpretation bulletin states that fees paid by an employer to a consultant to provide counselling to employees who retire or who are discharged will be treated as a taxable benefit.

Given the promise that the Prime Minister has made that workers dislocated by the trade agreement will receive assistance in relocating, does this new Revenue Canada policy mean that this promised assistance will now be considered as a taxable benefit?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, traditionally funds paid to assist people in retraining have been taxable income. If there is some variation, I will be glad to report to my hon. friend.

It seems to me that counselling services per se, unless they can be linked to the pursuit of income, would not be taxable, but I will have to check and see exactly what are the implications.

MEANING OF INTERPRETATION BULLETIN

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. My understanding is that in the interpretation bulletin only if a company hires outside consultants will it be deemed a taxable benefit, and not if it is done in-house. That again is a difference in department policy.

Does this not discriminate against outside consultants whether they are financial consultants or career consultants? Does this mean that if the Government of Canada through Manpower provides consultation to those workers who will be dislocated that that service will be considered as a taxable expense?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what is considered a taxable expense, or what is considered as income can be, as my friend knows, a very subjective thing.

I will have to check. I undertake to him to check and give a more informed answer at the earliest opportunity.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Considering the importance of water as a natural resource, why is water not excluded from the trade deal with the United States as it is in relation to beer, unprocessed fish, and lumber?

Can we have an answer to that, Mr. Speaker?

Ways and Means

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, I have read David Crane's fifty-sixth article written on free trade against free trade. We know that David is attempting to become editor emeritus of The Toronto Star, and therefore he is following its philosophy.

• (1500)

There is nothing in the free trade agreement that obligates Canada to sell water to the United States. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that obligates Canada to approve projects for the diversion of Canadian water for export. As a matter of fact, I might point out that in the free trade agreement there is mention made, for tariff purposes, of mineral water. This, I might add by the way, is standard GATT practice. There are no greater obligations in the free trade agreement than those which have existed under GATT for the last 40 years.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, if the Parliamentary Secretary took the trouble to read articles in the Star, he might also take the trouble to read the content of his own trade deal. He would then realize that his Government took the trouble to exempt certain products and certain substances from this particular trade deal.

Is the Government unwilling to include water in the deal so that it is explicitly spelled out as a natural resource that is not included in the deal itself? Why is the Government not willing to spell it out?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I guess if it is not mentioned in the free trade agreement, then it is part of the free trade agreement, according to the philosophy of the Hon. Member. That just does not hold true.

My colleague, the Minister of the Environment, explained very clearly in November the water policy of this Government. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that changes that policy in any way, shape or form.

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(1), I have the honour to lay upon the Table copies of a Ways and Means motion to amend the Income Tax Act, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 84(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING—MR. SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On June 7, 1988, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) rose on a point of order relating to Government Business No. 26 on the Order Paper. The item of business deals with the Government's proposal to suspend certain Standing Orders and to provide for the sitting of the House until September 9, 1988, without the usual summer recess. He specifically complained that the Government should be required to give notice under Motions under Routine Proceedings rather than under Government Notices of Motions.

When Government Order No. 26 was called on June 9 and June 10 last, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) rose to object to the procedural acceptability of the motion. His argument was principally that the Government, in proceeding this way, was abusing the principle of majority rule and oppressing the minority Parties in the House. He asked the Speaker to intervene in his role as the protector of the minority and to use the powers vested in the Chair by virtue of Standing Order 1. He also argued that if this motion is allowed to be proposed, the Government could use the precedent in future and possibly do away with committee hearings, second reading debates on Bills and even votes on Bills.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West was supported in that argument by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. Several other Hon. Members, in particular the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), appealed to the Chair to save the parliamentary calendar which was the fruit of the labours of two important reform committees: the Lefebvre Committee and the McGrath Committee.

[Translation]

The Hon. Members for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) and for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) stated that the Government could in fact call back the House during the summer under Standing Order 5, but they said that it should not be empowered to do so by a simple motion. Several other Hon. Members took part in the discussions on the procedural acceptability of this motion and I am grateful to them for their valuable contribution to this debate.

[English]

The Chair will address the major points in the following order:

1) Was it proper for the Government to give notice under Government Notices of Motions?

2) Can the Government initiate a motion to suspend the provisions of the Standing Orders?

3) Does such a motion, if in order, require unanimous consent or simply a majority decision of the House?

4) If the motion is in order according to precedence, has the recent parliamentary reform changed our practice fundamentally and rendered prior precedents inapplicable?

Before attempting to answer those basic issues, I believe it would be useful to remind Hon. Members and the public of the specific effect of this government motion if it is adopted by the House. I should also reassure Hon. Members that its passage would not throw out the rule book, nor would it destroy the major recent reforms. It would, however, most definitely affect many Standing Orders from the period of its adoption to September 9, 1988. This motion would clearly suspend:

a) Standing Order 4 which provides for a parliamentary calendar;

b) Paragraph 1 of Standing Order 9 would be suspended and the adjournment of the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays would take place at 10 p.m.;

c) Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment debate or "Late Show" would also be suspended until September 9;

d) Standing Order 10 which provides for an extended sitting motion would also be ineffective.

[Translation]

Those are the only Standing Orders that this motion proposes to suspend. Nevertheless, the motion provides that only Government Orders will be debated in sittings after 6 p.m.

[English]

However, other provisions for the daily business such as Statements by Members, Question Period, Routine Proceedings and Private Members' Business remain unaffected. In the opinion of the Chair, none of the traditional debating procedures would be curtailed and indeed more debating time is provided for.

The Chair will now address the first issue, that is, was it proper for the Government to give notice under Government Notices of Motions.

On June 7, 1988, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap argued that the item filed on the Notice Paper under the heading Government Notices of Motions dealing with the extension of the sittings of the House of Commons was incorrectly placed and that it should have appeared under the heading Motions. He pointed out that since 1955, all motions dealing with an extension of the sittings of the House have been filed under the heading Motions and not Government Notices of Motions. This, he stated, was because the issue dealt with the business of the House and not the business of the Government.

This issue poses several problems for the Chair. I should first underline that the Standing Orders of the House are silent on interpreting which items should appear under Motions and which items should appear under Government Notices of Motions. The Chair must give some consideration to what types of motions can be filed under these headings.

Can a distinction be made between those types of motions placed under Motions and those under Government Notices of Motions based solely upon their content? I would suggest it cannot.

For example, in this current session, there are eight instances where the House made decisions regarding the Standing Orders under Motions by unanimous consent. However, on June 3, 1987, when the Provisional Standing Orders were further amended and made permanent, arguably the most significant decision on the Standing Orders made this session, this was accomplished after two days' debate on a motion which was called under Government Business. On June 2, the opposition Parties registered their dissatisfaction that the Government chose to proceed unilaterally with amending the rules, but no procedural objection was made to the fact that this was done under Government Orders and not Motions.

These instances reveal the fact that the Standing Orders have often been and perhaps usually are amended under Motions. However, the Government has also proceeded under Government Orders.

The question then becomes, what is the distinction between a Government Notice of Motion and a motion? I would suggest a Government Notice of Motion is any motion that the Government gives notice of. In other words, a Government Notice of Motion is not based on the content of the motion, but rather upon the mover. In many cases, therefore, a notice of motion could go under more than one heading and it is up to the Minister giving notice to decide which heading should be chosen. Clearly a Government Notice of Motion can only be moved by the Government, but the Government can choose to place it either under Motions or under Government Notices of Motion.

• (1510)

This concept is borne out in a ruling on May 16, 1985, by Speaker Bosley. He was called upon to rule on whether a time allocation motion had to be moved under Motions during Routine Proceedings or whether it could be placed under Government Notices of Motion and then transferred to Government Orders.

His decision was that it could be proceeded with in either way and that the choice was up to the Minister moving it.

[Translation]

The Standing Orders do not define what is to be in a motion or notice of motion from the Government. In view of Speaker Bosley's decision, which I have already quoted, I must therefore say that when there is no distinction, the Minister may choose under what heading he wishes to place his motion. I am, however, unable to support the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis), who says that this motion was entered in the wrong place in the Order Paper.

[English]

The second question to be addressed is: Can the Government initiate a motion to suspend the provisions of the Standing Orders?

In order to answer that question, we should initially look to the Canadian authorities.

First, the current Canadian House of Commons Standing Orders in Section 56, paragraph (1), subparagraph (o) have at least envisaged the concept of the suspension of the rules. That subparagraph declares that motions for the suspension of the Standing Orders are debatable motions. There is no specific direction as to how such motions are to be decided but such a motion is clearly subject to the provisions relating to notice, debate and amendment.

Second, Citation 21 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition refers to the rules of procedure generally:

> The most fundamental privilege of the House of the whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them. A few rules are laid down in the British North America Act, but the vast majority are resolutions of the House which may be added to, amended, or repealed at the discretion of the House. It follows, therefore, that the House may dispense with the application of any of these rules by unanimous consent on any occasion, or, by motion, may suspend their operation for a specified length of time.

Citation 9 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition gives further precision by stating:

> All rules are passed by the House by a simple majority and are altered, added to, or removed in the same way—

Beauchesne's Fourth Edition amplifies more specifically on the Standing Orders by stating in Citation 10:

> Standing Orders may be suspended for a particular case without prejudice to their continued validity, for the House possesses the inherent power to destroy the self-imposed barriers and fetters of its own regulations. It may even pass an order prescribing a course of procedure inconsistent with the Standing Orders. A motion for such temporary suspension requires notice—but in urgent cases the notice can be waived—Any alteration in the regular procedure may be made effective by force of a simple resolution. This is one of the characteristics of British procedure and it has contributed in no small degree to the elasticity of our parliamentary system.

Furthermore, there are several precedents of such occurrences in the Canadian House found in the Journals for March 16, 1883, June 1, 1898, April 8, 1948, April 24, 1961, and May 14, 1964. Clearly then both the authorities and our practices allow for our Standing Orders to be suspended or amended by motion on notice.

The Speaker was urged by many Members to rule on this matter by using Standing Order 1 and referring to traditional parliamentary practice in other jurisdictions, if applicable.

The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Hawkes) has already referred to the British practice, and the citation on page 212 of May's Twentieth Edition is worthy of repetition:

> Standing Orders are not safeguarded by any special procedure against amendment, repeal or suspension, whether explicitly or by an Order contrary to their purport. Ordinary notice only is requisite for the necessary motion; and some Standing Orders have included arrangements for the suspension of their own provisions by a bare vote, without amendment or debate.

The Chair has also looked to the Australian practice as commented on by J.A. Pettifer in House of Representatives Practice. It is clear the Australian House does deal with such motions on a regular basis. Its Standing Orders specifically provide for the suspension of a Standing Order on notice. Such motions are debatable, amendable and require only the majority of votes cast to be adopted. The Chair is reluctant to use this practice as a convincing authority because it is supported in Australia by a specific Standing Order. Reference to the Australian practice does, however, demonstrate that suspension of the Standing Orders is not foreign to other Houses in the Commonwealth.

Therefore, in answer to the second question, the Chair is bound by the Canadian practice on the precedents cited earlier, and I must rule that the Government is acting within the rules when it files notice of a motion to suspend certain Standing Orders, and such motions pursuant to Standing Order 56 (1) are debatable, amendable, and votable.

I should now like to address the next question: Does such a motion require the unanimous consent of the House or a simple majority decision?

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that the House can amend or suspend its rules by unanimous consent. That is a given.

A review of our present Standing Orders reveals that they are, unlike those in the Australian House, totally silent on the manner of suspension. The practice reported by the Journals of the House reveals at least one specific case which was challenged and was ruled on by the Speaker. On March 16, 1883 the Chair "decided that it was perfectly competent on notice having been duly given, as in the presence case, for the majority of the House to suspend the rule". I refer to Journals, page 128 for March 16, 1883.

I am conscious of the fact that some Members may feel that that particular ruling may be "dated", but I would argue it is a very important one. It is one thing to find a series of precedents where the House did something and to demonstrate thereby evidence of an established practice, but a proceeding supported by a Speaker's decision must stand as firm guidance to future chair occupants unless the rules specifically relating to that subject are altered or events subsequent to it change its nature. I have been unable to find any other guidance or event that would alter my view of that ruling by Speaker Kirkpatrick in 1883. I must, therefore, rule that a motion, duly before the House, to suspend a Standing Order requires a simple majority decision by the House.

I will now address the last question: Has the recent parliamentary reform changed our practice fundamentally and rendered prior precedents inapplicable?

The Hon. Members for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) have all eloquently argued that the Government motion would undo years of difficult negotiations by two special committees. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap has claimed that "we are at a crossroads". With respect to the calendar, the Lefebvre Committee in its third report, which was concurred in by the House, stated in part:

> Your committee is of the opinion that a parliamentary session should be planned on the basis of three annual sitting periods which should ensure a reasonable certainty as to the dates and duration of the periods during which the House would sit.

Consequently, the calendar was inserted into Standing Order 4. The Hon. Member for Calgary West has indicated that the House has sat during two of those summer adjournments. These sittings, however, were the result of an application to the Speaker under the terms of Standing Order 5 and not as a result of a motion similar to the one presently on the Order Paper.

As some Members have suggested, the Speaker must take into account not only the letter of the rules but also their spirit. In addition, as I have said before in previous rulings, the Chair should also rely on that most basic rule of all, that of common sense.

To those Hon. Members who have asked me to reject the Government's motion on the basis that it is the "tyranny of the majority", I should like to point to them the possible consequences of accepting their advice.

If a Speaker rules that the Standing Orders could only be suspended or changed by the unanimous consent of the House, the situation could arise where the House would be in jeopardy of becoming procedurally the hostage of a single Member. Indeed, one Member, and one Member alone, could prevent any future procedural reform by withholding his or her consent. For example, one Member could prevent the House from adjourning in the month of May even if all other 281 Members preferred to adjourn prior to June 30.

The unique flexibility of the British parliamentary system, a flexibility which has allowed for adaptations to an infinite variety of circumstances, would be jeopardized. Clearly that is undesirable.

The Chair, however, is very supportive of the parliamentary calendar as brought forward by the Lefebvre Committee. I believe it has been responsible for bringing order to our proceedings and has encouraged and fostered negotiation and compromise between the Parties in the days leading up to the automatic adjournments. Without that co-operation and constant negotiation and compromise, our system of government ceases to operate smoothly. If the Chair were to support the view that only consent can modify the calendar, I would be establishing a precedent that would not only refute our practice and precedents to date but would make further reform almost unachievable and it would certainly be far more difficult to achieve the kinds of hallmark amendments brought forward in 1982 and 1985. The motion of the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) was therefore properly before the House.

• (1520)

I want to add one thing. There is an old saying that I may have referred to before, that hard cases make bad law. There was in this case a very natural temptation for the Speaker to try to find some way to uphold the continuance of the calendar. I have to advise regretfully those who argued so strenuously for that course of action, that I think that would have been a case of hard cases making bad law and I had to come down on the side of where I think the procedural law stands. As a consequence, it is accordingly my duty to propose the question.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)) moves:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;
> That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.00 o'clock p.m., and on Wednesdays at 6.00 o'clock p.m., and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended;
> That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;
> That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 22;
> That, following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 10(1) shall be receivable; and
> That this special order shall not apply on any allotted days designated in the supply period ending June 30, 1988.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I want to start my remarks by saying that we appreciate the scope of your judgment and the comments therein. I think it fair to say that we especially appreciate that in following this course of action the Government must pay heed to the parliamentary calendar and not change same without having a very reasoned argument for doing so. I am pleased to put forward the Government's comments with respect to the extension of the hours and of the sitting to allow for greater participation by Members to complete the outstanding work before the House in as short a time as possible.

As you suggested, the House has a calendar which sets forth the days, the weeks, and the months when it will sit. The natural question is: Why the change? How does the Government support the change in the calendar and thus this motion? I want to give you briefly, if I may, some six reasons, and elaborate on them, as to why we want to change the calendar.

The first is that we have an agenda as a Government which has been well thought out and which we believe is in the interests of the country.

The second is the amount of time and effort that all Members of the House, both in government and in opposition, have invested in legislation presently on the Order Paper at either committee stage, second reading or report stage.

The third reason is the importance of certain issues before the House and country which could not be foreseen when we laid out our agenda.

The fourth is the importance of the free trade initiative.

The fifth is the tactics of the Senate.

The sixth is the inflammatory comments and the delaying tactics of the Opposition.

First is our agenda. When we took office as a Government we decided to make some changes in accordance with the mandate given to us as a majority Government by the Canadian people. We sought to do and we sought to undo. We instituted a simplified approach to employment so that we could raise employment. We slashed spending. We slashed the deficit. We reduced the Public Service by some 15,000 people, mainly by attrition. We privatized Crown corporations. We enacted tougher laws dealing with prostitution, impaired driving, and the environment. We undid the National Energy Program which so unfairly crippled western Canada.

The list goes on and on. We deliberately set difficult goals for ourselves as a Government and we make no apologies for being ambitious because we believe Canada needs legislatures with ambition for their country.

This Parliament, the 33rd Parliament, has been one of the most productive in history to date. By coincidence, the 1974-1979 Parliament, which sat for 54 months, and the 1980-1984 Parliament, which sat for 51 months, both passed 177 Bills. This Parliament has passed 204 Bills in 44 months. In other words, if you deal with just the raw numbers, this Parliament has been 15 per cent more productive to date than previous Parliaments although it sat for much less time.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Then why sit in the summer?

Mr. Lewis: I reiterate, we make no apologies for being ambitious as a Government.

Let us look at the amount of time and effort invested by Members of the House on all sides in the legislation currently before us. We wish to send the following legislation at the very least on to the Senate for consideration. We have Bills with respect to national parks, the proceeds of crime, the Official Languages Act, lobbyists' registration, the very important multiculturalism Bill, the privatization of Eldorado, or divestiture at any rate, amendments to the Canada Labour Code and the privatization of Air Canada. As well, we want to complete the reply to the Senate with respect to the amendments to the immigration Bill and the emergency refugee legislation.

The debate on those Bills has been spirited. We passed them at second reading. We have heard witnesses. There have been amendments in committee. There are amendments at report stage. I suggest we would all be remiss in our duty if we did not see that as much as possible of this legislation goes through to the conclusion of third reading and on to the Senate prior to the conclusion of this sitting. We suggest we owe that duty not only to Members of Parliament but to the witnesses and the people who sent us here.

The third item I referred to was those items which could not be foreseen when we laid out our agenda. I refer specifically to two things. First, the decision by the Supreme Court of Canada to declare the abortion law, which had been in existence since 1969, unconstitutional. The second matter was the Senate's decision to suggest amendments to the Meech Lake Accord, which requires the House to debate the matter for a second time and resolve once again the House's position. We feel it is our duty as elected representatives to debate those two items before we rise.

Fourth, we have the importance of the free trade initiative. The House knows, the country knows, that on January 2 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed an historic free trade agreement with the U.S. Legislation to implement that agreement had to be drafted and drafted properly. It had to be proceeded with at an appropriate time. We set about to draft that legislation, and whether or not Members opposite are in favour of the initiative, I think they would agree that, having taken that initiative, they would want that Bill to be drafted properly and as closely as possible to implement what was agreed between the parties. That is the issue before the House on Bill C-130. Does that Bill properly implement the agreement?

We believe the product is sound. My colleagues opposite disagree. That is fair. That is what democracy is all about, debating the issue, and we want to complete second reading of that legislation before we rise for the summer.

• (1530)

The fifth item to which I referred was the Senate. In completing our legislative agenda we have a further complication with which to deal, that is, the Senate. From 1980 to 1984 the Senate never had a sober second thought, at least not one that came back to the House of Commons. It was only in this Parliament that I and Members who were elected with me in 1979 found out how the reply from the Senate worked because it started to send legislation back to us for reconsideration. That never happened during the two previous long Parliaments when the sober second thoughts were presumably being delivered in another manner.

As well, the Senate discontinued what I respectfully suggest was a very useful procedure, that is, the prestudy of Bills. When the Conservatives came into government the Liberal dominated Senate suddenly decided not to prestudy Bills. Fortunately it has prestudied parts of the free trade issue and I commend it for that, but I seriously ask why, if it wants to be part of this legislative process at the start, it did not continue that practice.

This very day on the Order Paper is consideration again by vote, at six o'clock, on the amendments to the Immigration Act. Also on the Order Paper, to follow up this particular motion, which we hope will go quickly, is the House's reply to the Senate's amendments to Bill C-84. I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that our agenda has been disrupted by these very deliberate tactics of the Liberal dominated Senate.

Finally, we have to deal with the position of the Opposition with respect to the free trade legislation. I respect their position. I do not agree with it, but I respect their ability to take it and to put it forward. However, I question whether that opposition should be by way of delay rather than by debate.

I can recite a series of comments by the Opposition with respect to what it is going to do with the free trade legislation. To build the case I will quote the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) who said that his Party will try to stall passage of the Bill in the hope that public opinion or controversy within the Cabinet will force the Government to do the right thing.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg said "The real war is just beginning". The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) said:

> Inevitably the government will cut off debate by invoking closure. But the Bill won't get out of the House of Commons until October, at the earliest.
> The goal is not to stop the legislation cold, the goal is to force the government to pay such a high price that they eventually have got to see the logic of going for an election.

That is delay, that is not debate. Here is another quote from the same Member:

> Our strategy is to try to slow down as much as possible the process of consideration of the Bill.

The strategy is not to win it by debate but to slow down the process of consideration.

There was a request for five days debate and the responsible comment of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party was: "Obviously we said no to that". The House Leader for the Liberal Party said: "We will fight the Government every step of the way".

When those comments are made we have to respond. We are prepared to debate and decide and the Opposition is prepared to delay and delay. When Canadians ask what the difference is between the Progressive Conservatives and the Liberals and New Democrats, that is the answer. We are prepared to debate and decide and the Opposition's only comment is to delay and delay.

When the House changed the rules in 1969 the Standing Orders were substantially revised by a motion before the House. That complete revamping of the rules took place by closure, closure, closure. That is what the Party which is now arguing against closure did.

I want to read some quotes from some eminent personages—and I submit that these will bear scrutiny, that I am not taking them out of context—not with respect so much to closure but with respect to the rights of the minority. Here is a comment from Prime Minister Trudeau:

> Every democratic assembly recognizes that issues will arise from time to time which the minority in all conscience cannot accept, which the minority in order to be true to its values must oppose vigorously and never concede. That is right and proper. It's one of the basis on which rests our democratic institution. But in a democracy the ballot box, not the filibuster, is the ultimate and appropriate technique of assessment as to the actions of the Opposition.

Mr. MacEachen said:

> One cannot run a parliament without an ultimate sanction to prevent a minority preventing the majority from getting their way.

An excerpt from a book called Majority Rule by Elaine Spitz says:

> In all electoral systems, what counts is open competitiveness and the consequent equal opportunity to make each vote count equally. Any organization of voting procedures that provides all with an equal opportunity to be heard in some significant way at some point in the process satisfies democratic principles.

Those are quotes from learned authorities. I looked for editorial comment and found the following from the Victoria Times-Colonist in the issue of May 26, 1988. It refers to the stalling tactics of the Opposition and says:

> It's not good enough for the Opposition parties to justify such tactics on the grounds that the Mulroney government is selling off our sovereignty. No Canadian is naive enough to think that there won't be a downside to a free trade pact, but many believe the potential benefits far outweigh the disadvantages. The Grits and the NDP have yet to counter that argument convincingly, to say specifically what they would offer in place of free trade. Surely that is their opportunity and their constructive role in the weeks ahead.
> If they just continue to play games they can expect scant public sympathy when the government finally invokes closure—in order to meet the Jan. 1, 1989 deadline for passing enabling legislation.

I submit that the Opposition has, quite rightfully, brought to the attention of the public its opposition to the free trade legislation. However, we do not believe that by extending the sittings, thereby extending the opportunity to debate that, we are in any way infringing on the responsibilities of the Opposition. We are giving them that opportunity.

That is the situation in which we find ourselves. We are an ambitious Government with a plan which has been well organized and is well under way. We are coping with unscheduled events and a planned and deliberate obstruction by a bragging Opposition and an appointed and anointed Liberal Senate.

The solution was two-fold. Number one, we put the motion on the Order Paper which allows us to complete our agenda. Number two, we wrote to the opposition Parties to see what could reasonably be completed before the House rose. I make no apologies, Madam Speaker. We included a very long list in writing the Opposition. I call it a "kitchen sink letter" and it was a kitchen sink letter. Everything but the kitchen sink was in the letter.

The reply from the Liberal Party was very constructive. I have said that outside the House and say that on the record. My colleague, the Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), delivered a very detailed and responsible response on behalf of the Liberal Party well in advance of the requested deadline. There are some differences of opinion, but we have an excellent starting point for negotiations.

By comparison, the response from the New Democratic Party was not what I had expected from a responsible Opposition. There was little or no effort to address the items on the Order Paper and I do not think it was responsible in any way whatsoever.

I therefore wrote another letter to the House Leader for the Liberal Party and sent a copy to the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. I cut down our list of legislation considerably by taking into account the legislation the Liberal Party said could be passed. Naturally, I added some five items which were not on the list of the Liberal Party. However, we got closer.

I went on to say that there may be certain items tabled in the near future on which we could make progress but it depends on negotiations between the Ministers and their spokespersons. In other words, since it is in the letter that has been made public, I state quite bluntly that it is up to Ministers and the spokespersons to work on items which are not on the Order Paper if they want to make progress.

Let me return to the free trade debate. It has been incorrectly suggested that we were prepared to allow five days only. While I did say five days, they were extended hours on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday which would result in some 27 hours of debating time, or nine days. I did not make any restriction to only five days, because if we are going to invoke closure or time allocation as the debate progresses, we will have to ask whether one more day or two more days after four days of debate will be sufficient.

The problem with negotiation in this business is that there must be a counter offer. There has been no counter offer on the free trade debate. There has been no suggestion that five days is not enough and the Opposition needs six. There has been no suggestion that they do not like the late hours on Thursday night and would rather sit late on Wednesday night. There has been no counter offer.

I went so far as to say that we would waive the eight hours rule so that after eight hours of debate on the substance and principle at second reading all speeches could be 20 minutes with 10 minutes for questions and comments. I suggested that we would waive that for the five days. There was no response. By the way, we are back to the eight-hour rule and thereafter every speech is 10 minutes.

I suggest to you, Madam Speaker, that we are open for this debate. I also suggest that while this is not a threat, all Canadians will be looking to the free trade debate to see whether the Opposition wants to debate or delay during those days when it is called. In other words, Canadians will not call the exhibition of this morning, which was blown on procedural votes, a debate on free trade. They will call that delay. I suggest it will be difficult for the New Democratic Party, which pulled those stunts this morning, not the Liberal Party, to sustain that practice.

That is where we stand on this issue. I have laid out the reasons why the Government is taking this action. We are not trying to abuse the parliamentary calendar. It calls for a 10 week recess. We are prepared to work into that recess. While we are very close to coming together with the Liberal Party on this question, if the Opposition Parties speak against this motion as I expect they may, I want them to explain to Canadians exactly how they disagree with our proposition.

We are prepared and always have been prepared to discuss this matter. We do not expect the extension of this sitting to be protracted. I have suggested and I am still convinced that with the co-operation and the spirit of debate that our colleagues opposite want on the free trade agreement, we may well be able to finish what we are required to do by July 15 or even earlier.

In conclusion, I invite once again a serious review of our comments by the New Democratic Party in order that we may come together with the Liberal Party and settle this in the way that the people of Canada expect, that is as duly elected representatives with the interests of all their constituents at heart.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, first let me say that we respect the judgment and the ruling of the Chair. While we are not happy that this motion has been declared allowable, it is out of respect for the Chair and for the rules of this institution that we have no choice and will enter debate on this motion. I think the Chair already knows our position with regard to the acceptability of the motion.

I know that the Minister of State (Mr. Lewis), the Deputy Government House Leader, has done his best to establish that what the Government is doing by introducing this motion is not an abuse of the rules of the House and an abuse of the Government's strength. The House will understand that I will be arguing just the opposite.

During the last election the Government promised to reform this place in order to allow the ordinary Member of Parliament a better say in what is done and in the decisions that are made. It is passing strange that the Government would come in with a steamroller and force the Opposition into a corner by using the might of its big majority to get its will.

Early in this Parliament when the Government tried to make people believe that it was fulfilling its election promise to reform the House, it appointed a committee on House reform chaired by the then Hon. Member for St. John's East, Mr. McGrath.

[Translation]

Mr. McGrath, now Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland, was given the mandate to reform the rules of the House and especially to try to give backbenchers a more important role.

So today we find ourselves in the situation where the Government is moving a motion that begins with the infamous words:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House . . .

This is what Parliamentary reform means to the Conservative Party: to propose measures that begin by saying the Standing Orders do not apply.

If that is the reform the Government had in mind, it does not amount to much, really.

[English]

If the Minister of State wanted to make a good case, he should not have spoken. I will review what he has said just to prove my assertion.

At the conclusion of his speech he said that he does not believe the sitting this summer will be protracted and that in his opinion, everything might be finished by July 15. Why is there this blackmail to force the Opposition into thinking that we will have to sit until September 9 if it appears not to be true? Why state September 9 in the motion if the Minister sincerely believes everything will be finished by July 15? That is my first argument. If the Government wants to make a good case, it should ask the Minister to stay in his seat and not say anything.

The Minister began his speech by bragging that the Government has passed more legislation than previous Governments. Moments later, out of the other side of his mouth, he accused the Opposition of stalling tactics. That is a strange picture he is trying to paint for the Canadian public. We are supposedly stalling the business of the House, yet he likes to brag that the Government has passed more legislation than any previous government. I ask the House to try to reconcile that because I have had difficulty doing so myself.

The Minister told us about all the time invested by Members of Parliament into the various pieces of legislation. He has argued that some of these items must be completed. He fails to realize that the Government will have ample time to complete its program. If you believe that you will be canvassing in your riding during the summer, Madam Speaker, I suggest that will not happen because a government that is third in the polls will not call an election this summer. There will be ample time to sit in the fall and ample time to sit next spring before the Government can recuperate some of the support it needs to call an election. As as matter of fact, it would never call an election if it depended upon how Canadians feel about the Government. It will try to hang on forever. Fortunately, our Constitution puts an end to the term of any government after five years and the people of Canada will finish the job by putting an end to this Government.

The Government argues that it does not have enough time to complete the business in which it has so much time invested.

[Translation]

They will have time, Madam Speaker, they have at least another year until the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has the courage to call an election.

• (1550)

[English]

You will forgive me, Madam Speaker, if I spend too much time destroying the arguments of the Government House Leader. I have more things to say in reacting to what he said, but I am going to try to go quickly through his arguments and then give my own arguments. The Government House Leader talks about the importance of certain matters that could not be foreseen. All of a sudden, according to his argument, he wakes up one morning to a whole new set of circumstances he could not foresee and he has to react to it. For example, he talks about the Supreme Court decision to strike down the sections of the Criminal Code with respect to abortion. I know, of course, that the Government could not foresee that the Supreme Court would do that, but I will tell you, Madam Speaker, what I could not foresee and what no one in the country could foresee, and that is the reaction of the Government. It decided to shy away from the issue and present three options to the House of Commons. In that way, the ordinary back-bencher would not decide on legislation but would give the Government a sort of feeling of what the House thinks so that the Government can be taken off the hook and will not have to deal head on with that issue before the next election.

The Government on the hustings would also be able to say: "We had a debate on abortion in the House of Commons". That is what it is trying to do without making a decision and without bringing forward a Bill. The Government wants to negotiate. It is a very thorny issue if the Government wants to negotiate with the Opposition a Bill which is likely to receive support from all sides of the House. We are willing to talk, but we do not want the farce of bringing a three-headed monster into the House of Commons for the Government to hide behind so it can go on the hustings during the election campaign and say: "We dealt with that issue in the House of Commons", without making a decision. We were not able to foresee that the Government would do that.

The Government House Leader is now saying that the Government could not foresee having so little time for the free trade legislation. Well, the Government is late, and I will get into that. It will be part of my main speech. I want to show how late the Government is in bringing forward many of the items in the House of Commons and then trying to make everyone believe that it is because of the Opposition that it has to sit during the summer. I will demonstrate in a moment how the Government has dragged its feet on a number of items which it is now dropping on the Order Paper at the last minute. We would have to sit during the nights as well as the evenings during the summer to deal with all this legislation. It is hard enough for us to try to co-operate with such a Government but we cannot be in its offices doing its planning, God forbid.

I contend that the Minister of State had better not defend his case. He had better ask someone else to do it. The Government has had almost four years to pass its agenda through the House of Commons. There are several—and I will list them later—important pieces of legislation that the Government has delayed before bringing them to the House of Commons. Everyone in the country is now asking how come they are not yet passed. Everyone understands that between June 13 and the end of June, there is no possibility of passing all these items through the House of Commons, even if the Opposition was crazy enough to agree with all of the material, and we strongly disagree with some of these items.

A Government that cannot manage its business properly does not deserve to run the country. It deserves to be defeated in the next election, and this is exactly what will happen to this Government. The Government has a huge and distorted majority and it is trying to make the people of Canada believe that such a huge majority is powerless against what the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) would probably call us if he had the floor, a miniscule Opposition. We are a very small Opposition. Can the people of Canada believe that a handful of opposition Member can stop the Government, which has an unprecedented majority, to pass its legislation through the House of Commons? No one in the public would believe that. If it is true, the public must believe that we are facing a Government which is like the giant with clay feet.

[Translation]

A giant with feet of clay, a huge, apparently powerful giant that is unable to get its program passed because of a small handful of Opposition Members.

[English]

What can be more phoney than a Government telling us that it will sit all summer, and that is what the motion says, and then for the Minister to say he only needs until July 15? The Government proposes that we sit all summer and then denies the Opposition more than five days to discuss what is probably the most important piece of legislation ever introduced on the floor of the House of Commons since 1867, our first Parliament. I am talking, of course, of Bill C-130, the free trade legislation, which will affect the lives of us all. The Government tells us it needs the whole summer to discuss the business of the country, but it will only give us five days to discuss the most important piece of legislation that has ever been introduced in this House. It is ridiculous for the Government to try to have it both ways. I never thought government Members opposite would have the gall to try to get us to swallow that.

[Translation]

It will certainly take some swallowing, this story that we will be expected to sit all summer for two months, while we will only get five days of debate on the most important Bill this Government and many preceding governments ever tabled in the House of Commons.

Madam Speaker, what are the Government's motives for keeping the Opposition in the House all summer? I wondered about this last night at home, and I said to myself: They must have something in mind. I was watching tv and I saw the Prime Minister campaigning while he was in the riding of Joliette in fact today, he is in Alma, trying to salvage Mr. Bouchard's campaign, the Conservative candidate whose campaign is not doing well at all in Lac-Saint-Jean and then I thought I understood.

The Prime Minister may have this diabolical plan which is to spend the whole summer on a preliminary election campaign across the country, while his travelling expenses are still paid for by the taxpayers. He is acting in his capacity of Prime Minister, so the Conservative Party doesn't pay for the plane ticket which it would otherwise do in an election campaign. And in that case, travel expenses would be limited by the Canada Elections Act. For the time being, it doesn't cost the Conservative Party a cent for the Prime Minister to do some campaigning and distribute goodies across Canada. If we look at the Prime Minister's schedule, he is going from region to region, handing out big chunks of money, nearly $1 billion so far in terms of regional development for Quebec. And don't tell me that has no connection with the upcoming by-election!

So the concept is simple. It is to keep the Opposition in the House of Commons during the summer. The Government only needs one-third of the Conservative Caucus to maintain a majority in the House, and meanwhile, the election campaign can follow its course across the country, while the Opposition parties are stuck in the House of Commons. The taxpayers are paying for the Conservative election campaign, since they absorb the travelling expenses of the Prime Minister and his entourage, as well as the cost of the goodies the Prime Minister distributes at every stop and every airport. Maybe that is the idea!

[English]

The Government is doing it the wrong way this year. Last year, the Government played on the Canadian public its biggest hoax by saying there was an urgency in discussing Bills C-55 and C-84, the Immigration and Refugee Determination Bills. That was supposed to be a matter of great urgency. The Government wanted to sit in the summer, and it did. However, it did it the right way. It looked at the Standing Orders and it did not say, "notwithstanding any standing order". It did not say that. It used Standing Order 5, which I will not have to read to the Chair, which simply states that when the Government feels there is an emergency situation it can go to the Chair. The Government submits its reasons and the Chair makes a judgment.

• (1600)

That is exactly what Mr. Speaker did last summer. Mr. Speaker looked at the arguments presented by the Government. Mr. Speaker believed—I do not know if he would still believe it today—that there was a matter of sufficient urgency that he call the Members back. He interrupted the recess on August 10 and we started sitting again. We discussed these two Bills which, by the way, have not yet passed.

The Government did it the right way last summer. Why not do it the right way this summer? I will tell you why, Madam Speaker. It is because this summer, with the kind of phoney arguments that I have just demolished a few minutes ago, the arguments of the Minister, the Government dare not go to the Chair and ask the Speaker for permission to sit in the summer because it knows that it would be refused. If members of the Government were sure that their request would be accepted, it would be much easier than trying to circumvent the rules. That is the reason they are not doing it the right way this year.

If I were a Tory perhaps I would rather spend the summer in this place. First, some of the offices are air-conditioned. From what I hear in the ridings that I visit over the weekends, if I were a Tory I would not be too fond of going back to my riding. I know what the people are saying when they are talking about the Tory Party. They prefer to be sitting here in the safety of their seats in the House of Commons where no one can kick them in the shins. Pages and all the Officers of the House of Commons are very polite people, they do not kick them. But when they go back to their ridings I know the kind of hell they get from their electors. Maybe the reason they want to spend the summer here is that they dare not spend the summer in their ridings.

I would now like to review some of the items that we have before us in terms of legislation. Let us see if the Government is sincere when it says that it needs the summer to complete his agenda. For example, there is a very much needed amendment to the National Housing Act. We advised the Government that we were ready to co-operate with respect to this measure. On February 12 the Government introduced legislation with respect to this matter. It is one thing to introduce a piece of legislation and an entirely different thing to bring it up for debate and to pass it in the House. My question is what has the Government done since February 12 with respect to the National Housing Act? Will the Government blame the Opposition? No. It has not brought it forward for debate. It is on the Order Paper but it does not move it ahead.

Do you want something more interesting, Madam Speaker? On February 24 with great fanfare the Government tabled conflict of interest legislation. It was supposed to protect the Government and the people of Canada from dishonesty in government. The Government took a big PR move by introducing it. I know that you follow the business of the House very closely, Madam Speaker. Can you tell me one day after February 24 when Your Honour has seen this measure debated in the House? Of course you cannot because there has been no debate.

[Translation]

Was the conflict of interest legislation tabled by the Government on February 24 just a public relations stunt, to give Canadians the impression that stricter legislation would stop Conservative ministers from putting the Government in an awkward position? Was it supposed to make Canadians believe stricter legislation would mean fewer violations? All I can say is that since then, the Bill was not brought back to the House for debate, and it wasn't the Opposition that prevented them from doing so. And this is one of the Government's priorities before the next election. Too bad. Until they bring the Bill before the House for debate, I can't pass it. Tabling the Bill is not my prerogative nor is it my Party's prerogative.

Take Bill C-93, for instance. The multiculturalism Bill was reported back to the House from committee on May 19. That was almost a month ago. The Bill would pass the House of Commons easily, but here again, the Government has not brought the Bill back for debate.

Another Bill, Bill C-82, was reported back to the House by its Legislative Committee. It is another piece of legislation that deals with honesty and openness in government. This was the Bill on lobbying, a Bill that met with no opposition or filibustering—another cornerstone of the Government's "squeaky clean" campaign. I wonder what Mr. Clean is thinking up in Lac-Saint-Jean, the man who was appointed to be the watchdog of the Government's integrity and who has now finally realized .. he may not be required to listen to what we are saying here in the House, but I am sure someone is going to report that I said the lobby Bill does not seem to be a priority for the Government. Just as, since February 24, conflict of interest legislation does not seem to have been a priority.

Take tax reform. They will say it is important for the House to sit all summer because it has to pass the tax reform Bill which has a high priority. If it has such a high priority, Madam Speaker, it should be brought before the House. Today is June 13, and the Bill first appeared on the Order Paper—I checked this morning—on June 10. That was last Friday which is certainly not that long ago. That has not been brought up for debate yet. They simply gave notice because they realize that they look stupid; people say that they are not serious about tax reform. So they put a notice in the Order Paper, but we have not had five minutes of debate on it. They would have us believe that it is our fault for all the items I have listed for you. They cannot blame the Opposition—they are the ones who are not moving to start the debate on those items.

On abortion, on May 20, they tabled the ridiculous three-headed monster, with three options, in the Order Paper. But despite that, they did not begin the debate. That was almost a month ago.

As for Bill C-130 on free trade, it had been promised—those who follow the debates here, who follow question period, know that the Government had promised it for the first week in March. Look, it is now June 13 and we are not yet debating it. It was only tabled on May 24, two months late. I tell you that if they took two months more to draft the Bill, they cannot blame it all on the Opposition.

Mr. Gauthier: They have to get their act together on the other side.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): That's right, because it may take them time to reach an agreement. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) may be right. Sometimes they can't reach agreement in that party. Anyway, they took a lot of time to come up with Bill C-130. Today, they blame the Opposition for delaying its passage and furthermore, they tell us that we will have just five days to talk about it. We will have to sit two more months in the summer, but have only five days for that Bill. How come we will have only five days to discuss it, while the Government took months to write it?

Mr. Rossi: That's dictatorship.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It's dictatorship, as the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) says.

Listen, I'll give you more examples: Bill C-128 establishing the Department of Industry, Science and Technology was promised last June. Do you know how long ago that Bill was tabled, Madam Speaker? It was tabled yesterday. Look at the Order Paper and you will see that. And I suppose they will tell us that the Opposition is preventing the Government from working.

[English]

Let us look at the Government's long awaited film policy. It took it a long time to think this one out. It had to consult a great many people.

Mr. Garneau: They had to consult Reagan in the United States.

• (1610)

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): They had to get more than that. They had to get their instructions from Jack Valenti, the czar of the U.S. film industry. Once they got their marching orders from him, on June 8, 1988, they tabled a piece of legislation. Two years ago we were pressing the Government to bring in a film policy. Everyone in Canada knows that we need a film policy. Everyone knows we have to take care of who distributes the films shown in Canadian cinemas. It took the Government two years to deliver this one on June 8, five days ago, Madam Speaker. Therefore, do not expect this piece of legislation to be passed by tonight. The Government has not brought it forward for debate yet.

Where is Meech Lake? It came back from the Senate and the Government is supposed to discuss it in the House. It came back from the Senate and it has been sitting on the Order Paper since May 19. In six days it will be one month. Where is the Meech Lake Accord? On this side of the House we do not intend to procrastinate the debate on the Meech Lake Accord. That debate has already taken place in the House. All we want to do is deal with it in an expeditious fashion. What is the Government doing? Nothing. I presume the Government would prefer to call an election with this not passed and attempt to blame it on the Opposition.

Where is the child care policy? It is even worse in this area because I cannot point to the Order Paper, Madam Speaker, and show you a Bill. There is nothing on the Order Paper. For years the Government has been saying that it will have a child care policy.

[Translation]

. . . a child care policy. There is nothing on the Order Paper, they have not even tabled a Bill and they would have us believe that they want to pass it during the summer, I suppose! They have not even brought their Bills forward.

[English]

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, we want to co-operate with the Government in providing extra hours to attempt to deal with the unfinished business of the Government, even if we have to hold our nose when we vote against some of the pieces of legislation. We would be willing to extend the hours. Standing Order 10 allows for that. Once again I will bring it to the attention of the Government, because it will give them a recipe to do things in the proper manner. The heading is "Extension of Sitting Hours" and Standing Order 10(1) reads as follows:

> On the tenth sitting day preceding June 30 a motion to extend the hours of sitting to a specific hour during the last ten sitting days may be proposed, without notice, by any Member during Routine Proceedings.

In Standing Order 10(2) the question is put in the following manner:

> Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

If the Government wants more hours, it could use Standing Order 10. It does not have to go around the Standing Orders and write a motion which states:

> That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House . . .

All the Government has to do is use Standing Order 10. If that was done, we would be ready to co-operate.

In order to help the Government do it in the proper manner, I would like to propose an amendment which will have the effect of simply offering the opportunity to the Government to go the route of Standing Order 10 which I just quoted. In this manner we could co-operate with the Government, give it more hours, which is what the Government wants, and we would not have to violate the whole book by saying: "Notwithstanding any Standing Orders . . . ".

I move, seconded by my hon. colleague for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

That the motion be amended by deleting the following:

"Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That, during such period" and by substituting the following therefor:

"Thursday, June 30, 1988".

Therefore, the hours will be extended, but not until September 9. The hours will be extended until the end of the month, like the Standing Orders call for.

[Translation]

That would be the honest way for the Government to proceed, and that is why we are suggesting to go back to Standing Order 10, which allows not only the Party in power to extend the hours of sitting, but also Opposition Members of back-benchers. The Order states that the motion "may be proposed by any Member". It doesn't have to be a Minister. This means that any Member could rise and propose that we give the government more time to debate. A Minister can do it. I myself have just done it on the Opposition's behalf. I have just proposed to extend the hours of sitting, but in a reasonable way, without suspending our Standing Orders but by making use of a Standing Order established for that purpose, namely to allow for an extension of sitting hours so as to have more time to debate questions before the House.

That is the kind of co-operation we are ready to give the Government so that bills which it deems important can be passed. I am not saying that we will vote favourably on all these Bills, since there are some we don't like, but at least, the Government will have more time for the adoption of its legislative program. And we believe that is what must be done. We are ready to cooperate, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) has just introduced an amendment. With the House's permission, the Chair should deliberate for a while on this amendment and rule later on its relevancy.

Meanwhile, resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riss) has the floor.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, today there is a certain sense of deja vu in the House of Commons. Despite the sunny skies above there has been a dark cloud hanging over Parliament Hill for the last hour or so.

It reminds me of October 23, 1980, when the Progressive Conservatives in Opposition decided that they had had enough of democracy; they had had enough of the Parliament of Canada as had been practised for decades and decades. They disagreed with the Speaker's decision, and rather than accept the decision of the Speaker, some of the Members in the House rushed up to the Speaker's chair screaming and yelling at the tops of their voices: "Stop it!". They were screaming and yelling in front of the Speaker. There are some Ministers present today who actually did that on October 23, 1980. They stormed the Chair demanding their rights to be heard despite the fascist totalitarian motion to cut off debate.

In 1980 the Conservatives called the Liberals fascist and totalitarian because the Liberals had decided to limit debate. Had the Government of the day decided to limit debate after a handful of speakers? No. There were 98 Conservatives who spoke in that debate. They stood up and made comments on the constitutional amendment. Then the Government of the day said 98 interventions on behalf of the Opposition was sufficient and it was going to limit debate and bring in closure. The Conservatives of the day went absolutely mad. I was present. It was one of the saddest days that parliamentarians have ever had. The Conservatives screamed and demanded that they be heard.

Now the tables are turned. Now the Conservatives are sitting on the government side and they have decided, because they have this huge majority, that they are now going to take this rule book of Standing Orders and throw it out of the window. That is it, throw it out the window. They are saying: "We know best. Big Brother Government knows what is best for Parliament, the Speaker does not". The Government is saying that you, Madam Speaker, do not know what is best for this House, that the Speaker of the House of Commons is not in a position to recall Parliament if he or she considers it necessary.

No, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has decided on behalf of Parliament, forget the Liberals, the New Democrats and the Independents. The Conservatives have the majority and therefore can do anything they want. They do not have to play by these rules that have developed over decades. They do not have to accept these rules which were developed after months and months of study between all the Parties and were adopted by unanimous consent of the House. No, they are saying: "We are going to throw them out, we are going to rip out the pages of this rule book and we are going to impose our own rules". That is like the Edmonton Oilers saying: "We are going to change the rules of hockey. We are going to throw out all the rules and introduce our own." Do you know when the Government last suspended the rules to meet its own political agenda, Madam Speaker? It was in 1883. Not since 1883 has a Government suspended the rules to facilitate its own political agenda.

We are now seeing a whole new approach to democracy in Canada. We do not like the rules, so we make our own. We do not like the way the Speaker might rule, so we will ignore the Speaker. The Government will use its majority. The sounds of jackboots are banging around Parliament Hill these days as the Conservatives impose the will of their majority against parliamentary tradition.

Forget parliamentary tradition, forget parliamentary practices, forget parliamentary regulations, forget the Standing Orders. Big brother Mulroney knows best what is good for the House of Commons. We reject that.

We will as concerned parliamentarians accept the ruling of the Speaker. However, this country has now started on a new path thanks to the Conservative majority in the House. Whatever the Government decides it does not want, it will change. It will simply suspend the orders.

What will come next? I wonder if the Conservatives will not change Standing Order 2 which provides for the election of the Speaker and say: "Why don't we simply impose on the House of Commons the Speaker we want?". Why not do that next? If they can suspend the rules for their own purposes, why should we have Question Period? Question Period is messy. Opposition and New Democratic Party Members pose difficult questions every day, so let's do away with that. Let's suspend Question Period and Statements Pursuant to Standing Order 21. Let's do away with Private Members' Hour. If we let Government Members get away with the suspension of this Standing Order, why would they not introduce other suspensions of rules that are aggravating and disrupt their parliamentary agenda?

Today's motion tells me that I am incompetent and that the Deputy House Leader of the Government is incompetent. He says that although we have been here for 11 months, the Government is not able to manage its parliamentary agenda or its timetable, so it is incompetent. It cannot follow the parliamentary calendar. The Deputy Government House Leader is indicating that in spite of sitting here for 11 months, we cannot handle the work of the House of Commons. We need more time.

A person cannot walk down two sides of the road at the same time nor talk out of both sides of his or her mouth at the same time, with one exception and that is the Deputy House Leader of the Government. He is able to do that. On one hand, he is saying: "Look at our impressive record. We have passed more legislation in this Parliament than any Parliament in recent time". At the same time, he is saying: "Those tough Opposition and NDP people are holding us up. They are holding up our ability to do the business of the House". He cannot have it both ways. He cannot brag about the tremendous success he has had in moving business through the House of Commons at the same time that he is saying that the Opposition is not allowing the Government to get on with the business of Canada.

Mr. Crofton: Let's admit it, you want to go home.

Mr. Riis: A Tory yells out that we all want to go home. They can go to Victoria and sit around their pools. As long as we are fighting this trade deal, the New Democrats are prepared to fight it today, tonight, next week, in the month of July and in the month of August. We will fight it as long as it takes to force the Government into an election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Why are we doing this? Why are New Democrats frustrating the Government's efforts to introduce and pass the trade legislation? Do Hon. Members remember the view of the Prime Minister on free trade back in 1983? He was against free trade with the United States. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was against free trade with the United States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was against free trade with the United States. The only leadership candidate for the Conservative Party who was in favour of it was Peter Pocklington. He was the only one who was advocating free trade.

In 1984, there was a general election. How many times did the Prime Minister mention free trade during the general election campaign? Not one single time, not a single phrase was uttered during the entire election about free trade. Then what did he do? On January 2, the Prime Minister of Canada, with his good buddy Ronald Reagan, signed Canada in to this trade deal.

We believe in democracy. We New Democrats do not rush up and challenge the Speaker's ruling. We do not start screaming, yelling and stopping the Speaker from talking as the Conservatives did in October of 1980. We believe in democracy and that is why we are saying that the Government should call an election. Let's go to the people of Canada and let them decide.

We are prepared to work as long as it takes to force the Government to come to its democratic senses and call an election, but I do not think it will. It thinks it has the bit between its teeth now. It thinks it can do whatever it wants now.

Think of the abortion resolution, Madam Speaker. Rather than showing leadership and bringing in a Bill that would be debated in the House of Commons as usual, it brought in a three headed monster. If some Hon. Members want to support abortion on demand, there is a motion for them. If some want to support no abortion at all, there is a motion for them. If some want a compromise in the middle, there will be a motion for them. What kind of decision-making is that? What kind of leadership is that?

To move that kind of a motion, the Government has to suspend the rules of the House of Commons, but it will do it. It has no hesitation in doing that. It has no concern for something called the traditions of this House, something called the practices of Parliament, something called rules and regulations, something called Standing Orders. All those things are a nuisance to the Conservatives in the House. Set them aside, suspend the rules, suspend the traditions, let the Government do what it wants because it has the numbers. It has the majority and it can do anything it wants.

We have just begun. The New Democrats have just begun to remind the Conservatives that that kind of arrogance has no place in a parliamentary democracy. We have just begun to fight.

The Government says it has important legislation to introduce. Where is the child care legislation? The Government says it has child care legislation that the Opposition is holding up. Have you seen the child care legislation, Madam Speaker? No, you have not. It has not been introduced, so how can we be holding up legislation that has not even been introduced in the House of Commons? That is just one Bill. I could list a whole number of pieces of legislation that the Government wants passed expeditiously and quickly, preferably without debate. However, we have not even seen that legislation. It has not been introduced in the House of Commons.

I remember the Throne Speech of 1984. The Government said that one of its priorities was to introduce legislation regarding child care. We waited for the fall of 1984, we waited all of 1985, we waited all of 1986 and all of 1987. It is now well into 1988 and we still have not seen a single page of legislation.

Mr. Rossi: Slow workers.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend says that they are slow workers. This is government in reverse.

Since this Opposition does not want to co-operate on the trade deal, the solution now is to force the Opposition into it. The Government is going to exhaust the Opposition into it because it is a very small group. There are only 33 New Democrats and 40 Liberals—

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Thirty-three too many.

Mr. Riis: I know there are too many of us as far as the Conservatives are concerned. They do not want any opposition. Their ideal world is to have a dictatorship, just one party. That is their ideal.

There is a new wave occurring in Canada. This is not a one-Party system. There is an opposition and we do not plan to co-operate on the trade deal.

• (1630)

Mr. Andre: Or on anything else.

Mr. Riis: On anything else, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) says. He is wrong. Last Thursday we demonstrated that. Five Bills were introduced on Indian concerns. We said that we would pass them expeditiously because the legislation was good. We co-operated 100 per cent. For one of the very first times all five Bills moved through the House of Commons in a single day. If the Government brings forward good legislation, we will pass it expeditiously. If the Government brings in assistance to the farmers, that legislation will go through here like you have never seen it before, like greased lightning, Mr. Speaker. If the Government brings in legislation on flow-through shares, again it will go like greased lightning through this place, but not legislation to implement the trade deal that will redirect not only the economic policies of this country but the social, cultural and the political policies of this country. In other words, the Government wants to turn this country into a fifty-first state, and we say no.

Let me say why we felt it was appropriate that we follow the parliamentary calendar. After months and months of study, Members of the House of Commons unanimously agreed it would be useful and it would make a great deal of sense if we established a parliamentary calendar. We would sit as a Parliament for 10 months of the year and then for July and August we would break from the House of Commons so that we could go back to our constituencies and work. Most of us have made plans during July and August in our constituencies. Call them constituency tours, meetings, or special gatherings with groups. The parliamentary calendar said that was when we could do that, and we agreed. Even the Conservatives agreed to the parliamentary calendar. We made plans. We felt it was important that Members of Parliament have some time to spend with their families. This might not be a priority for the Conservatives but for some of us it is. Spending time with our families and our constituents is important. We all agreed unanimously that for the months of July and August we would do just that. All of a sudden, the Conservatives said: "We don't like this idea. We don't like the idea of Members going home to their constituents and conducting tours".

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not true.

Mr. Riis: "We are going to force you to sit during the summer months". Again, that goes against the unanimous decision made as a Parliament. The Minister in his comments indicated that the Government is very big hearted and has decided that for the trade legislation, which the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said is the most important legislation introduced since the Second World War, there will be five days of debate. Only five days debate on the trade legislation. We have three or four days debate on routine tax Bills but on the largest piece of legislation with its implications not only for this generation of Canadians but for generations afterwards the Government said it will allow five days debate, do we agree.

Mr. Crofton: Five days with some extension.

Mr. Riis: To be fair, five days with some extension and a few hours into the evening. Remember, Madam Speaker, this proposal comes from a Party which gave 98 speeches on the Constitution and then, if you like, threatened the Speaker in the chair because its Members felt that their speaking rights were being terminated. The Conservatives said they would be generous and allow five days of debate for all 282 Members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Crofton: It is nine days at second reading.

Mr. Riis: It is appalling, undemocratic and it is certainly unparliamentary. We rejected strongly such a ludicrous request.

I want to say that the Government has not seen what a filibuster is all about. The Government might want to change the standing rules to suit its purposes. If the Conservatives don't like Question Period, I guess they will say Question Period is too aggravating. We may hear such things as: "We do not like the Standing Orders so we will change that as well". Because private Members are allowed 15 minutes a day to make statements about constituencies' concerns, I guess that too will be done away with. I can see the next change to the Standing Orders will be the suspension of the 10 months' sitting. The Conservatives may want only one or two weeks to bring in one big omnibus Bill and that will take care of the business of Canada.

That is not the kind of country we want. That is not the kind of country for which the legionnaires, 4,000 of them who are meeting in Ottawa today, fought. That is not the kind of government which those 4,000 legionnaires went overseas to defend. For those legionnaires in the gallery at the moment, I suspect they are thinking right now that here is a government prepared to rip up those freedoms for which they fought and is prepared to set aside the rules, traditions and fundamental practices of democracy for which we were prepared to die. That is what we are seeing today.

We are seeing a very negative spectacle when it comes to a democratic free country. That is why we say this particular motion is wrong. We accept the Speaker's decision. We must accept it. We will not rush the Chair or cause havoc in the House of Commons because we do not like the ruling. We will accept that. We have now moved the course of this place in a totally different direction where with a majority you can do anything you want. If you have the majority you can change any Standing Order you want, permanently, or simply suspend it. You can break any rule. You can throw out any tradition.

As I say, this is a dark day for our Parliament. It reminds me of the day back in October, 1980. It is not the kind of Canada most of us want to see. It is not the kind of Canada our constituents want to see. Our constituents have made it clear in every possible way that they want to see an election on this trade deal. They want an opportunity to participate in whether or not we should sign away our future to the United States. Canadians want to make that decision. In a democratic society, Madam Speaker, in a Parliament that says it believes in the democratic traditions, we ought to give the people of Canada that right and that opportunity. To do that, if necessary, we in the New Democratic Party, will do everything we can in our power to use the legitimate rules of Parliament to encourage the Government to live up to the free democratic traditions and principles that Canadians love and enjoy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Before the Hon. Member finishes his intervention, I would like to give the ruling on the preceding amendment which was moved earlier.

The Chair has found the amendment (Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques)) in order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, it is appropriate that you ruled on the amendment proposed by the Official Opposition. I thought to make the point and to indicate our concern at the way Parliament seems to be moving, I want to add an amendment to the amendment. It will read as follows. I move:

> That the amendment be amended by deleting the period and adding the following therefor:
> "and on that day the House shall stand adjourned at 3.p.m."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

• (1640)

Mr. de Jong: Madam Speaker, first I wish to commend my colleague for an excellent address on the question of suspending the Standing Orders. It seems to me that in a parliamentary democracy it is the accepted practices, built up over the sittings and the years, that really constitute the essence of our democracy. It seems to me that when the Government suspends the rules of the House it sets a very dangerous precedent. As I think my House Leader pointed out, if you start suspending the rules today on these particular issues, what comes next? You begin to suspend them with respect to Question Period, with respect to how Bills are moved through the House, indeed how the House governs itself.

What the Government is doing today is setting a precedent. What will stop some future Government from using that precedent and doing exactly the same thing? Once the Government, any Government, starts down that road, future Governments will use it as a precedent to be employed in other situations. Once you start down that road, it continues and continues and our Standing Orders, the rules under which we govern ourselves, are no longer meaningful. It is the precedent that it sets that creates a new standard, a new way in which Governments can deal with the Opposition and subvert Parliament. My House Leader said that not since the 1800s has a Government used this ploy of suspending the Standing Orders. We were fortunate that it did not become a practice.

Surely what the Government is doing today is demonstrating that even with its massive majority it cannot set its agenda and pass its legislation within the established rules. It must therefore suspend those rules. Surely this is a very dangerous precedent. Surely Conservative Members who cherish the traditions of the British parliamentary procedure must feel extremely uncomfortable with what their own Government is doing.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to respond to my hon. colleague who of course raises the fundamental question before us today, where does this take us? What is the next step?

It was back in March of 1883 that the Standing Orders were last suspended and now they are being suspended again.

Mr. Benjamin: A Tory Government then, too.

Mr. Riis: It was a Conservative Government, was it not?

Mr. de Jong: I believe it was.

Mr. Riis: I guess we should not be puzzled by these antics, then. First we had the suspension of the rules in 1883. I referred earlier to the storming of the Chair by the Conservatives during the constitutional debate. I failed to mention that in 1982 it was again the Conservatives who shut down Parliament for more than two weeks.

Mrs. Sparrow: Because of the NEP.

Mr. Riis: It does not matter why. In other words, the ends justify the means? The Conservatives say they have a right to do that. I like that. They say they were angry at the NEP. The Liberals brought that in, they did not like it, so they can shut down Parliament. That is fine. Because they do not like legislation it is all right for them to shut down Parliament. Because the NDP and Liberals are concerned about the trade deal we cannot have more than a five day debate. What nonsense, absolute nonsense.

Mr. Gormley: Louder.

Mr. Riis: It is typical coming from a Conservative, though. They felt they could close down the Parliament of Canada for a couple of weeks. That was all right because they were angry at the Government.

They were angry at the Speaker so they could storm the Chair and make a mockery out of that position. Harvie Andre was there, leading the pack, screaming and yelling. Total abuse of the parliamentary system. So why are we puzzled today when the Conservatives once again act on their view of democracy which we call tyranny, a dictatorship.

Our Parliament is based on the Mother of Parliaments. I thought all of us had a deep respect for the parliamentary system where we recognized the role of the Opposition.

Mr. Andre: We are following tradition.

Mr. Riis: I know the Minister dislikes opposition Parties. Maybe he should go to the Soviet Union or Chile. He will feel more comfortable in one of those countries.

There are still Members in this House who cherish the idea of Parliament. There are still Members who cherish the ideal of a Government and opposition Party. The opposition Parties are here to keep the Government honest. To do that, you need to have a Parliament in session and working. The Conservatives who said in 1982 that they were going to shut down Parliament are the same Conservatives who are saying today that they are going to bring in closure and time allocation. They do not want debate on this. They do not like the Standing Orders and they are prepared to suspend them for now. The last time the Government did that was in March of 1883.

Mr. Lewis: I remember it well.

Mr. Benjamin: You look like you do.

Mr. Riis: Here we go again.

My colleague's second question was what is the alternative to the Government introducing this motion? The alternative is the Chair. You will know that Standing Order No. 5 gives the Speaker authority to recall Parliament whenever he or she decides it is in the best interests of the country to do that. If we were to recess as the calendar says we ought to, on June 30, and on July 5 or July 10 the Government was able to make a case that it was in the nation's interest that the Speaker recall Parliament, you have the right to do that. We have unanimously given you that right. We say we trust the Speaker because the Speaker represents all Members of the House. The Speaker is elected by all Members. You represent the Government, the Opposition and the independent Members. We put that faith in you and in your position. Yet the Government has ripped that out of your hands. It knows best. It is Big Brother. It does not have to listen to the Speaker or convince the Speaker to sit during the summer months.

Mr. Rossi: Very dangerous.

Mr. Riis: Yes, but that is the situation we are dealing with.

I simply want to say to the people listening to this debate that our Standing Orders give the Chair the right to sit all of July and August if you feel that is in the best interests of the country. We like rules and regulations and traditions and practices. We adopted them unanimously. That is why when the Government says it knows best we become very edgy. After all, that is the same Government that negotiated the trade deal. I tell you that we are far from convinced that is in the best interests of our country. We know it is in the best interests of the U.S. but we have yet to see any evidence it is in the best interests of Canada or Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate.

• (1650)

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, the Government has today suggested that its facility in dealing with the trade deal with the United States has perhaps been the crucial reason which has forced it to take the step which has so cut across parliamentary traditions which have been with us for over a century. As our House Leader said, we have not seen the rules of this House suspended in this way since 1883.

Yet it has happened. It has happened in order to sell us out to the United States in a trade deal which is so devastating to the future freedom of Canada that the Legion convention meeting here today should be marching on this Parliament and marching on the Government for destroying democracy within this country.

Mr. Lewis: They marched before and there were precious few NDP with them.

Mr. Langdon: There were a lot of New Democrats with them.

What must be recognized is that there is one clear issue before this House, one clear issue to which the Deputy House Leader referred, and that is the question of whether it is essential that this summer the people of Canada be forced into this trade deal. The answer to that question is that it is not necessary, it is not right, it is not acceptable, it is not democratic, and it does not follow any of our traditions. It is instead a complete denigration of everything this country has stood for previously.

We can quote Minister after Minister in the Government. We can quote the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Secretary of State and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Before the last election each of them said that they were against a trade deal with the United States which would give us free trade because they saw at that time, not the pressures from the large corporations, not the pressures which have pushed them in the direction they have now taken, but instead they saw clearly the very important need to stand up for this country. They saw the necessity to protect Canadian jobs, to protect Canadian social programs, and to protect the integrity and distinctiveness of this country.

Yet, as soon as they got into power, less than a year after, they were meeting in Quebec City to set in motion with the President of the United States a massive change, a change so comprehensive in this country that it will devastate the potential future of our people, the freedom of our country to be what it should be, the distinctiveness which we have had, and the social programs which have characterized it.

This must be fought by every single Member as hard as they possibly can. I, for one, am proud to say that I will fight it with the greatest possible mechanisms of rejection of the Government's aims that I can possibly muster. I consider that this Party does itself proud by standing up so strongly for that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is on the subamendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

[Translation]

And the division bells having rung:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne) Order, please! Pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)a), the Chief Opposition Whip has asked me that the division be deferred. Therefore, the recorded vote on the question now before the House is deferred until tomorrow at 6 p.m., when the bells calling the Members shall have sounded for no more than 15 minutes.

[English]

It being 5 o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I want to confirm with the Government the agenda for tomorrow. I take it that it will be the Meech Lake Accord debate. Can we confirm that so we may prepare accordingly?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I can confirm to the Chief Whip of the Official Opposition that tomorrow we will be debating the Government's response to the Senate's amendments to the Meech Lake Accord. We expect to continue that through the day. I do not know exactly how many Members my colleagues opposite have to speak, nor do I know how many more we intend to have, other than the Prime Minister will be leading off the debate for us tomorrow.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, in the spirit of co-operation that we have just seen this afternoon, would it be possible to seek some guidance for the Leader of the New Democratic Party. We are starting the debate on Meech Lake with a Leader's day. Presumably the Prime Minister will begin the debate for the Government, to be followed by the Leader of the Official Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Would it be appropriate to have an understanding that all three leaders have an opportunity to present their views prior to the luncheon recess so that all three leaders can make their presentations together?

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, we have discussed this possibility. On behalf of the Government, I am prepared to suggest that we would be amenable to extending the sitting and not seeing the clock at one o'clock in order to allow all three leaders to complete their remarks before two o'clock.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I think it is only fair to extend appreciation to the Government as well as the Official Opposition for their generosity. I realize this sets aside some of the normal practices to facilitate the three leaders. I simply want to say that I appreciate the generosity.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

LITERACY

JOINT CANADA-UNITED NATIONS ATTACK ON ILLITERACY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North) moved:

That a special committee of the House should be established to consider Canada's serious and growing illiteracy problem and recommend ways that the Government, in conjunction with the provinces and territories, can join the United Nations attack on illiteracy.

He said: Madam Speaker, I moved this motion because I, like many other Canadians, recognize that the world is experiencing a revolution in the way we live and work. New technology moves so quickly and changes so rapidly that the ability of people to live and work is almost completely dependent upon their ability to read, write and understand it.

Many newspaper and magazine articles, and radio and television stories have told us of Canadians who are functionally illiterate and face a tremendous loss because of their inability to read and write. We have defined functional illiteracy as those people with less than eight completed years of schooling. Experts in the field are now beginning to define functional literacy as the ability to use printed and written information to function in society. Therefore, they are saying that the definition of eight years which has been used in the past is really too restrictive.

We like to think that our country is a modern industrialized society, one of the developed countries, yet according to a number of studies conducted by governments and voluntary agencies, most recently a study done for Southam News, five million Canadians are functionally illiterate. That is 20 per cent of Canadians.

We know that illiteracy increases as one moves from west to East, rising from a low of 17 per cent among adults in British Columbia to an astonishing high of 44 per cent in Newfoundland. We know that illiteracy is higher among men than women and that 100,000 illiterates a year are added to the Canadian population. Tragically, only one in ten of all illiterates would ever consider taking remedial classes of the kind that are presently offered by various agencies. We know that drop-out rates of 50 per cent have been recorded in some of the current programs.

Before the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took office three and one-half years ago, he appointed a task force to look at the whole question of manpower retraining. That task force recommended a federal-provincial conference for the sole purpose of developing an action plan to combat illiteracy. It also recommended a public advocacy campaign about illiteracy and immediate work on developing teaching materials for volunteer teachers. No action along these lines has been taken.

A recent study by the Canadian Business Task Force on Literacy estimated that the cost of illiteracy due to lost income is estimated at $4 billion per year in 1987 dollars. The cost to society is estimated at $10 billion. This figure is based on the difference between the average income of all income recipients, employed and unemployed, whose level of education is Grade 8 or less and those whose average incomes include some high school. The study assumes that the economy is strong enough to absorb additional employment from those whose skill and educational levels have been upgraded.

The study highlighted a number of labour demand trends and skill implications, including the decline of unskilled and muscle work; the increasing demands of technology which require literacy and numeracy skills; the rise in basic skill levels required for entry level positions. As well, 85 per cent of occupations require Grade 9 or better reading levels, and most jobs require about two hours of reading per day.

That is the reality of what is happening in this country. When people hear that a fifth of the people of Canada have been classified as functionally illiterate, they automatically assume that these are people who live in rural areas, who did not have the educational facilities we have in the cities and towns, or live in remote areas in the North. The fact is that studies which have been done tell us that 8 per cent of university graduates are functionally illiterate; 11 per cent of community college or trade school graduates are functionally illiterate; 13 per cent of university drop-outs, 17 per cent of high school graduates and 24 per cent of high school drop-outs are functionally illiterate. This situation can only be described as a national disaster.

In the Speech from the Throne after the Government was first elected, Canadians were promised that a major aim of the Conservative Government would be to deal with the question of illiteracy. The former Secretary of State, Mr. Crombie, promised on several occasions a major program that would be encouraged and financed at least in part by the federal Government. We have seen very little in the way of real effort or real change.

There is a small task force attached to the Secretary of State office which is doing some interesting survey work. There is some small effort by the Solicitor General for people who are incarcerated in our prisons. However, the Department of Employment and Immigration, which spends hundreds of millions of dollars on employment training, is continuing the same policies as it followed under a Liberal Government. It has downgraded and cut back on the programs funded through the Department of Employment and Immigration. These are programs for basic skill development which really try to help people who are functionally illiterate. Why does the Department follow that policy under the Conservative Government as it did formerly under the Liberal Government?

• (1710)

The reasons are pretty obvious although the Department would not like to admit it. There is no quick result in taking people who are illiterate and helping them become literate. That is only the first step in getting that man or woman a job. After all, the Department wants to show results, show it is successful. What the Department does is concentrate on people who are literate and who, in a relatively short training period, can be directed to a job which is available somwhere out there in the real world.

We have failed. There are a host of programs, some I have mentioned, which are funded by the federal Government. There are some funded by the provincial Governments and operated by departments of education in community colleges or high schools. There are some operated by volunteer agencies, funded either by the federal or provincial Governments. Frontier College, for generations has helped people upgrade their educational skill so they can find work for the first time, or a better type of work. Some of these programs have been successful but there is little co-ordination between the federal and provincial Governments. There is little assessment as to the success of the programs, whether they are operated by a federal government Department or a provincial government Department, by community colleges or high schools, or whether some of them are operating right on the job site.

There are dozens, probably hundreds of programs, but they are not sufficient. They do not begin to deal with the reality of the problem. They do not even begin to whittle down the number of people who are functionally illiterate. We really do not know how successful the programs which are operating have been so that we can learn from those which are successful.

A number of proposals have been made which make a great deal of sense. One proposal was made right here in Ottawa last year by the Ottawa Roman Catholic Separate School Board. It developed a model and proposed that we identify the type of service we would provide to a single immigrant mother, for example. It points out that would be vastly different than what is required to effectively serve high school drop-outs or middle management illiterates. As I travel around my city, and I am sure it is true in virtually every city in Canada, I cannot help but notice the tremendous change which is taking place in the type of people who live in the cities.

There are a large number of people who are non-white. They are from the Caribbean, from Africa, from Asia, from South America and from South Central America. Many of them come from countries in which the educational standards are far lower than they are in Canada, with all our faults. Many more of them who are literate in the language spoken in the country from which they come are not knowledgeable or proficient either in the English or French language. We have to deal with that kind of problem.

Any policy on illiteracy should take into account the diversity of the people who are illiterate. Many studies have been done identifying the need for literacy programs in general which suggested that what we have to do is tailor the programs to meet the needs of specific target groups within a community. It is suggested that these literacy programs can be delivered from the existing base of social services. If the school boards, libraries, community centres, colleges and other organizations were to expand and adapt some of their existing programs, a comprehensive and community based approach could be developed.

What they are saying is that we cannot decide here in Ottawa what is needed. Members of Parliament cannot decide, nor can the Ministers. Senior public servants cannot know what is needed in Winnipeg, Manitoba, Grand Falls, Labrador, or in Vancouver, British Columbia. What is needed is to give the organizations and agencies in these communities the ability to develop the kind of programs which would meet the needs in the communities.

Canadians must be given the opportunity to participate in literacy programs according to their own needs. In other words, we need to have input and dialogue. We need to listen to the people in the local communities. They know what is needed. Services should be delivered in small groups, one on one special interest groups, third language and cultural groups and regular groups. In my own City of Winnipeg, at least one union that I know of, and there are probably more, has arranged with employers to organize and encourage their members, many of whom are recent immigrants, to participate in these programs either at the place of employment or in the union halls. These are the kinds of programs that should be made available. When I say they should be made available, I mean that the federal Government has to do more than just talk about it. It has to do more than just bemoan the sad state of affairs. The federal Government has to be ready to provide the funds which are needed to meet the problem.

While the existing institutions can provide a setting for literacy instruction, alternative locations should be provided. This can be achieved through the establishment of facilities at commercial sites, such as laundromats, soup kitchens, store fronts, nursing homes, churches, apartment buildings, recreation centres, mobile units, and adult learning centres. In other words, if we say to the people who are illiterate that they have to go to the university, which could be miles away from where they live, or to the community college or the high school, it could be a disincentive for people to participate.

The key to success is to be able to reach people where they live with a non-threatening service that fits with the schedules and way of living of these people. We have to be ready to provide allowances for those who are financially needy, for those who are handicapped and for those who are restricted by time or other commitments to participate. We have to get the message out of how important it is for them to participate. The message has to be clear and understandable. It has to be written and delivered in the kind of language which they can understand.

I note that my time is rapidly coming to an end. I want to say that in proposing this motion I face up to the fact that I, like anybody and everybody who is interested in this subject, do not have all the answers. No one has all the answers. But we have enough answers, enough information to realize the tremendous scope of the problem. We realize how important it is that we begin to deal with the problem. The best way that I can think of beginning to think about the problem and possibly beginning to develop plans so that we can deal with it and solve it is through establishment of a parliamentary committee which would travel across the country, hold hearings and, hopefully, hear from those who are functionally illiterate and from those who have worked in the field.

I am sure that if a committee of that type held hearings across the country and if it listened to the experts and to those who have to live with the deficiency and the problems that they face, it would make a report which would give the federal and provincial Governments, as well as the people of Canada, plans which, if implemented, would begin to help solve this very serious problem.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to support the intention of the Hon. Member. Whether in fact a parliamentary committee is the most useful vehicle is a question with respect to which the studies have been done. The research into the problem and its identification have been done. What we need now is some action.

I would like to say why we need action. The Hon. Member referred to the special task force that was struck to look into illiteracy after the very valuable series of articles that was done by Southam. Indeed, as he said, the cost to businesses in the country of illiteracy is $4 billion. The social cost is $10 billion. Those are staggering figures. If we want to see the problem of illiteracy in context, we have to see it as a symptom. It is symptomatic of something else. It is that we just are not performing very well.

If we look at OECD studies we will see that the level of skill development in Canada is something like fourteenth among OECD countries. Yet we are heading into a society wherein the trade will be on information. We have got by in Canada by trading on natural resources. We are a country that takes minerals out of the ground and cuts down trees. We export those products. No longer will we be able to do that. The information society will demand of Canada that it begin to trade in information. Trading information requires a skill level. The countries with which we will be competing are the OECD countries, countries such as Japan, West Germany, France and Great Britain. Each one of those countries has given a national priority to education.

One of the first things that President Mitterrand did after his re-election was to set education as a priority. I bet that when Margaret Thatcher speaks to us very soon she will refer to it. In Germany, which is a federal state like our own, there is a Bundlander commission. Every country with which we will be competing has set education as a priority. But we have not.

The Hon. Member was quite right when he asked in the face of the costs, the heavy toll on business and society, what did the federal Government do? It allocated something in the order of $1 million to the problem. If Hon. Members were to talk to representatives of Frontier College in Toronto, they would be told that between $17 million and $20 million is the minimum that is needed even to address the problem. One million dollars does not even pay lip service to the problem.

Again, we have to see that type of reaction in the context of the society that we are heading into. I could list other programs which have been cut back in the face of the challenge that confronts us. The Hon. Member has already referred to them. They are cutbacks in Established Programs Financing for universities across Canada. Some $1.6 billion was cut from the increase that was to be expected.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy has been privatized. Community colleges tell me that some of them have lost as much as 50 per cent of the funding that they had received previously in order to operate. These are our educational institutions. These are Canadian educational institutions that we are going to need to be strong as we head into the information society.

What else are we heading into? We are heading into a free trade agreement with the United States. We will need to be competitive there too. We do not know what the effect of free trade will be. We do know that there will be winners and losers. There will be Canadian businesses that will profit from free trade. There will be Canadian businesses, just as certainly, that will lose from free trade. That means that there will be a dislocation of Canadian workers. All across the country there will be some dislocation. Free trade simply exacerbates a need that already exists for training and retraining.

Every country worth its salt has given a high priority to continuous learning. Yet in this country, natives, women, the disabled, all have a terrible time gaining access to post-secondary education.

That is the context in which we have to see the Hon. Member's motion. Illiteracy is really a symptom. It is not a problem but a symptom of a problem. The problem is that we in this country are not giving education a priority because we do not have a national strategy. We have seen it as a provincial jurisdiction. Yes, it is a provincial jurisdiction, and no one wants to change that. But what has to happen is that in the face of a national challenge there has to be a national response. People have to know what it is they want to do.

There are areas in the country simply in terms of finance alone which will not be able to respond. The Hon. Member is quite right. This is a problem in which the federal Government has to provide the dollars. Only the federal coffers have the ability that is needed to respond to the financial needs of mounting an attack on illiteracy and the other problems that I have identified.

I believe that the issue of illiteracy is extremely important. But it is symptomatic of a deeper malaise. This matter has nothing to do with provincial jurisdiction. Provincial jurisdiction remains. I also have to make the distinction that this should not be a federal strategy. I am calling for a national strategy. I think that is exactly what the Hon. Member is doing, too. He has pointed to a number of institutions that have grown up to deal with the problem of illiteracy. He is quite right when he says that we must deal with them. We must deal with the people on the front line. In dealing with them, in providing them with the money, the money will not be enough. What there also has to be is a national strategy.

I commend the Hon. Member on the initiative that he has taken today. I know why he has suggested a parliamentary committee. It is because a private Member cannot call on the Government of Canada for an expenditure of funds. It seems to me if he were not in that position that he would agree with me. We have studied and looked at the problem. In 1988 as we head into a free trade association with the United States which will bring challenges to us, and as we head into competition in the information society among the OECD countries, what we badly need is a national plan for dealing with the real challenge to Canada of education, of which illiteracy is a symptom.

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Madam Speaker, it is certainly an honour for me to rise in the House and deal with Canada's growing illiteracy problem about which we are all quite concerned. Literacy education is necessary not only to improve people's quality of life, but also to enhance communication and understanding between all Canadians, I wish to commend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for moving his motion suggesting that a special Committee of the House be established to consider Canada's serious and growing illiteracy problem. Madam Speaker, any Member representing a rural riding such as yours truly understands that illiteracy is a growing problem in Canada. In such regions as Abitibi—Témiscamingue, our elders and pioneers were much too busy working the fields and cutting trees to be concerned about learning to read and write. It is a problem indeed, but over the past few months, this Government has taken concrete steps to remedy the situation. That is why I suggest my Hon. Friend failed to take into account the efforts made by this Government to raise the level of education in Canada.

The Secretary of State supports community initiatives in the area of literacy education. Moreover, if I may, I should like to emphasize the fact that the Sollicitor General has emphasized literacy education in Federal penitentiaries and obtained encouraging results, which for that matter confirms a recent article published on this issue.

Several months ago, the Government invited organizations from all over the country interested in this problem to express their views and make recommendations on the ways to correct the situation. Having thoroughly examined the many fine proposals the Government has received, it was decided for starters to spend $1 million in literacy education programs. The annoncement of this commitment, on September the 8th, coincided with the World Literacy Day. However, Madam Speaker, the Government has done more than commit funding. At the Department of the Secretary of State, we have established a National Literacy Secretariat, responsible for co-ordinating federal, provincial, territorial and community activities in this field.

The Secretariat is now examining all federal programs to determine how they could respond satisfactorily to the needs of those of our fellow citizens whose ability to read and write is not sufficient for them to take an active part in their daily occupational and social activities. The Government is seriously considering establishing a national literacy council that would advise the Government in this area, and the Department of the Secretary of State has promised to hold a seminar on literacy.

Madam Speaker, without wishing to contradict the Hon. Member, I think it is rather premature to appoint a special committee of the House. The National Literacy Secretariat is now doing extremely productive work in the area of co-operative research. I say co-operative, Madam Speaker, because the Secretariat co-operates very closely with other governments and the agencies concerned, to ensure that the solutions that are approved are practical and down to earth.

Co-operative research is essential, not only to harmonize community, provincial and federal initiatives but also to avoid duplication and the wasting of precious resources. Madam Speaker, my point is that at the present time, a special committee of the House would merely be going over ground that has already been covered. If such a proposal had been made by the provinces and the agencies concerned when the Government announced its intentions on World Literacy Day, I am sure it would have been given serious consideration at the time. However, that was not the case. People working at the community level on this problem estimate that the present approach will make a very effective contribution towards permanently raising the level of literacy in this country. The opinion of these men and women is what counts for us at this time.

Madam Speaker, we realize that illiteracy is not only a personal problem but also a community problem. That is why the Government has opted for a concerted approach. For solutions that are worthwhile, the public sector, business, labour and government agencies must work together on long-term activities. Hence the co-operative research I mentioned earlier.

I am very pleased to announce to the House that during the past two or three months, the Government has taken a number of steps to encourage partnership with the provinces and the territories. A few examples, Madam Speaker: in British Columbia, the federal Government has allocated $100,000 for advanced teaching and professional training activities, in particular the creation of a residence for adult students, the development of a special form of supervised teaching, consultation with native people on the subject and funding a conference for adult students.

In Newfoundland, the federal Government spent $80,000 to set up a literacy policy office, for volunteer seminars and to organize a provincial literacy conference.

In the Northwest Territories, the federal Government has granted $50,000 for a continuing education conference.

In Quebec, the federal Government has granted $111,000 to set up a literacy data base, to investigate research requirements and for a study of literacy teacher training needs.

In Saskatchewan, the federal Government has allocated $75,000 for the activities of the new provincial literacy council, including a public awareness campaign, production of teaching material and development of a training program.

In New Brunswick, the federal Government has earmarked $100,000 for the production of teaching material in French to take account of the cultural characteristics of the population and for other literacy-related activities.

In Alberta, the federal Government has awarded $101,987 for the production of informational and promotional material, for a program to train people who teach illiterate adults and for professional development seminars.

In Prince Edward Island, the federal Government spent $80,000 on various projects, including public awareness, a study of the programs that would best meet the needs of the province's francophones, the establishment of networks of volunteer tutors and a training program.

Finally, in Manitoba, the federal Government granted $100,000 for a series of initiatives to develop effective literacy approaches for native peoples.

Madam Speaker, those are but a few examples of the numerous activities the Government has undertaken jointly with the provinces and territories in order to fight this disaster. Other federal-provincial initiatives are currently under way or being completed.

Twenty one years ago, Madam Speaker, during Expo 67, Canada proclaimed the first World Literacy Day. In 1985, we sponsored the right to learn declaration during the World Conference on Continuing Education which took place in Paris under the auspices of UNESCO. Partly because of this initiative, the United Nations General Assembly decided to call 1990 the World Literacy Year.

The Canadian Government intends to mark this international year with special events at the national level and to pursue its leadership role on the international scene, while maintaining its efforts to upgrade education levels throughout the world.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I wish to underline that the national literacy secretariat, in conjunction with the provinces and community organizations, has taken the right direction. I believe that the best way to deal with literacy in Canada is by letting the secretariat continue its work, and by postponing the examination of the proposal concerning the creation of a special committee of the House.

[English]

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Madam Speaker, did you know that over 4 million Canadians are finding it difficult to read and write, so baffling indeed that they are unable to cope with the problem. I ask Members in the House to think of what it means to be unable to read, unable to circle the expiry date of a drivers licence, read the label of a medicine bottle, or even sign the bottom of a SIN certificate.

• (1740)

Those are not my examples. They come from Creative Research Group Limited which was commissioned by Southam News to find out just how many Canadians can read and write. That study found that 3 per cent of those surveyed could not circle the expiry date on a driver's license, 8 per cent could not read the instructions on a medicine bottle and 9 per cent could not sign their names to a Social Insurance card. Southam News reported extensively on the results of the survey last Fall, and many Canadians became conscious for the first time of the previously hidden problem of illiteracy.

I commend the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) for bringing this very serious problem before the House. I do not particularly agree with the Hon. Member's solution, however. He recommends that we form a special committee to join with the provinces and the territories in the United Nations attack on illiteracy. This Government has already mounted that attack. It is very much aware of the seriousness of the problem. The Hon. Member's motion may be well intentioned, but a special committee of this House could perhaps overlap and even delay the work that is now going on.

Support is being given now as it has in the past to community based literacy initiatives by the Department of the Secretary of State. While the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North calls this a small effort, the Solicitor General has been increasing steadily and progressively the emphasis on literacy for those in the federal prison system, and encouraging results are being obtained.

In the Speech from the Throne of October 1, 1986, this Government made a commitment to work with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop resources to ensure that Canadians have access to the literacy skills that are the prerequisite for participation in our advanced economy and society.

In the year after that commitment was made and literacy was placed on the national agenda, this Government consulted extensively with the provinces, the territories, the private sector and voluntary organizations to forge national partnerships to strengthen support for literacy initiatives in Canada. A plan of action was developed following those consultations, and that plan is being put in place.

A national literacy secretariat has been established in the Department of the Secretary of State. The secretariat is looking at all federal programs to see if and how they affect those who cannot read and write. Funds are being allocated, as the previous speaker noted, to major community groups. These groups, whose members are mostly volunteers, are the front line troops in the war against illiteracy, and providing them with financial support is an immediate and cost effective way of helping those who want to help the most.

Money has been provided and continues to be provided for research into illiteracy. We also have to research an important and often overlooked side of the illiteracy coin and find out why illiteracy exists. What are we doing as parents, as teachers, as a society, that perpetuates illiteracy? We do not know the answer, but we do have to find out. If we do not, illiteracy will continue to grow because we will be unable to design programs that will get to the very root of the problem and meet the real needs of people.

Education, as we all know, is a provincial responsibility and no federal Government can tackle illiteracy on its own. It takes the co-operation of the federal and provincial Governments. This Government is justifiably proud of its record of co-operation with the provincial and territorial governments, and that co-operation is as apparent in the fight against illiteracy as it has been elsewhere.

Partnerships have been established since last autumn with each province and territory following discussions with their responsible authorities and officials. One wonders just what more a special committee of this House could recommend in further collaboration at present.

I would like to spend a few moments on Canada's role in the international attack, the United Nations attack, on illiteracy. Hon. Members may not be aware that it was Canada that made the first declaration of world literacy and established a world literacy day as long ago as Expo '67. In 1985, at UNESCO's International Conference on Adult Education in Paris, this Government sponsored the declaration of the right to learn.

The year 1990 will be the United Nations Literacy Year which obviously the Government supports. It will not solve literacy problems. That is not the purpose of International Years. What it will do is bring to the attention of all nations including Canada this problem of illiteracy, and it will focus public awareness on it. It will give those of us who are concerned, as is the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North, an opportunity to bring this problem to the forefront of public awareness and to find solutions if any.

This Government is committed to facing the problem of illiteracy and to facing it head on. It is a problem that has been with us for a long time, but it is only recently that we have begun to realize just how serious a problem it is in this nation of ours and just how difficult it is for so many to cope with it.

Illiteracy is not an issue that will just go away. It will take a longer period of time and it will take the combined efforts of the federal Government, each of the provincial Governments and the territorial Governments. It will entail the efforts of the private sector, labour, volunteer groups and those who cannot read and write.

Illiteracy is a practical problem needing practical answers, answers that will work in the church basements and the community halls, answers that will work with the professional educators and with the hard-pressed volunteers, answers that will put the resources where they are needed most, and that is with those who cannot read and write.

We as a nation cannot afford to keep adding day after day to the ranks and numbers of those who cannot read and write. The attack has already been mounted. The attack has begun and we are making encouraging strides forward. Let us all keep our efforts focused on dealing with the problem in a practical way, not on studying the problem over and over again while it gets worse and worse, day after day, as it has been doing.

• (1750)

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House today to deal with motion No. 150 which reads:

> That a special committee of the House should be established to consider Canada's serious and growing illiteracy problem and recommend ways that the government, in conjunction with the provinces and territories, can join the United Nations attack on illiteracy.

Madam Speaker, when considering a project such as this, one must be prepared to look at the full dimension of the problem. A great many studies have already looked into this problem in the past and the Creative Research Group published data to the effect that 8 per cent of Canadian adults are illiterate, meaning that they do not know how to read or write. Sixteen per cent can hardly function in their daily lives because they cannot read or write well enough; another 9 per cent are functionally illiterate. The same report indicates that the less education a man has, the more likely he is to be illiterate. Fifty per cent of the people who never attended high school are illiterate. Twenty five per cent of all those who did not finish their high school are illiterate, and so are 17 per cent of those who did finish.

The same report indicates that women are slightly better educated than men and that illiteracy among the people speaking either of our two official languages is greater among new Canadians than among native Canadians.

We have to address the problem on the basis of those statistics. But we must ask ourselves why people who are less educated are more likely than others to be illiterate? When asked, 50 per cent of our drop-outs explained that they were bored with school, that they felt that going there was a waste of time, and that they did not care about reading or writing, Madam Speaker. We must ask ourselves about their lack of motivation. They are 14 or 15 years old when they leave school, thinking that they will be able to find a job quickly; they try very hard, but they fail. This of course translates into a lack of motivation. They will end up discouraged and disgusted and will stop looking. That is the whole problem.

When we realize that our young people are running away from school, refusing to get an education, Madam Speaker, we must conclude that our society is ill. We must find a remedy.

I suggest that in introducing his motion, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) had a point. There is a reason to that. He feels that it is an outright failure and that we should do something. Except that there are in my view a great number of studies on that matter, and establishing another committee to study those studies or to study the studies on those studies that have already been studied will not heal matters. What is needed is using the means that are now provided and putting them to work.

My colleague from Timiskaming earlier commended the Government when he described what it has done up till now to fight that plague, and if I may I would like to give a few more statistics. In Quebec, there are 1,300,000 individuals who can neither read nor write. In the Maritimes, including New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia, there are 320,000. In Newfoundland, the figure is 140,000. Well, those statistics are self-explanatory. They show a clear, and tangible problem.

The Canadian Government, when setting up joint programs with provinces to fund the fight against illiteracy, is doing its share in my view. Clearly we could throw billions of dollars at the problem. But priorities must be established, and to date, I think the Canadian Government has not been remiss. Funds were allocated where they were most needed.

My concern is that establishing another committee for the sake of establishing a committee does not serve any useful purpose. We might as well try and find out why young people drop out of school, why young people when coming to the labour market are ill-prepared, if at all prepared, and find themselves in a position where they cannot cope.

I heard earlier a Liberal Member striving to link free trade and illiterate people.

One thing struck me, when he suggested those people would be worse off than others if they could not find a job after free trade. I would simply like to tell him that free trade will not determine whether young people will stay in school or drop out, except that if you feel you are more affected than others, because your company will be undergoing changes, if you are not ready to retrain or to go back to school, clearly you will blame that on free trade. And this is the reason why indeed the Opposition takes up that line, but it is not true.

We are living in a high technology era. We are living in an era where specialists are king. We must at all cost do what is needed so that our young can specialize, can stay in school long enough to become high technology people.

I look among us here in the House of Commons, Madam Speaker and I see some engineers such as the Hon. Member for LaSalle (Mr. Lanthier), people, who are trained in high technology. With their training, they are ideally suited for upgrading, for further study towards greater specialization, and they must be given the opportunity to do so.

Personnaly I think that we should keep our efforts focused on dealing with the problem. We should establish priorities but recognize the Government of Canada's great efforts up to now to fight illiteracy, and I honestly think that we should give it our support and continue to set our priorities with a view of getting our young people to stay in school or to go back to school to further their education so they know how to read and write.

Do you know what it's like, Madam Speaker, not to know how to read or write? When you give the salesclerk a $5 bill to pay for a $2.95 total and you don't know that you should get $2.05 back? I suggest that we make every effort to address this very serious problem.

I think my time is almost over. Thank you very much, Madam Speaker, for letting me speak to this important legislation.

[English]

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to respond to my hon. colleague's recommendation on illiteracy in Canada. It gives me a chance to address an issue that has serious implications for Canadians. It is an issue to which this Government is firmly committed to confront.

In order to respond fully and adequately to the recommendation that a special committee of the House be established to study the problem of illiteracy, I must first put the Member's request in context by describing the initiatives already undertaken by the Government.

Many projects launched to date are proof of the depth of this Government's commitment made in the October, 1986 Speech from the Throne to work with the provinces, the private sector and voluntary organizations to develop measures to ensure that Canadians have access to the literacy skills which are the prerequisites for participation in an advanced economy. The Government is aware of the extent illiteracy in Canada and the serious consequences this problem can have throughout the country. It knows that co-operation between the provincial and federal Governments is absolutely crucial if there is to be progress in this area.

To support all the efforts made to fight illiteracy in Canada, a plan of action was developed for establishing and maintaining close and effective ties between the various Governments and between concerned groups and individuals.

The Government embarked on a process of consultation a little over a year ago and several meetings have already taken place at the national level. To ensure that illiteracy remains on the national agenda this Government has established a national Literacy Secretariat within the Department of the Secretary of State. Members of the secretariat are working closely with the provinces, the private sector and community groups, and the secretariat is directly involved in development work. It oversees and analyses provincial and national activities and promotes the development of the new initiatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but the time provided for consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed, from Friday, June 10, consideration of second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other acts in consequence thereof; of the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 16341); and of the sub-amendment of Mr. Heap (p. 16341).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6 o'clock, the House will now proceed, in accordance with Standing Order 13(5), with the deferred recorded division on Mr. Heap's sub-amendment, in relation to the Senate's message, to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other acts in consequence.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the sub-amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

STRIKING COMMITTEE—PRESENTATION OF SIXTY-FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the Sixty-fourth Report of the Striking Committee.

If the House gives its consent, I intend to move concurrence in this report later today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND INTERNATIONAL TRADE—PRESENTATION OF FIFTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the Fifth Report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade.

[English]

The committee recommends that we continue to use every available means to provide emergency humanitarian aid to Ethiopia but that, unless the International Red Cross is allowed back into the area along with other international organizations, Canada allow no new government-to-government bilateral aid to Ethiopia.

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-298, an Act to amend the Railway Act (delimiting telephone areas).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill I have the honour of tabling in the House today is to authorize the Governor in Council to instruct the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission, commonly referred to as the CRTC, to harmonize the costs of telephone services within a given socio-economic region.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, the entire matter of long-distance charges is governed by three criteria, namely, commonality of interest, contiguity and distance. These traditional criteria create regional disparity and inequity among citizens in the same region, and the purpose of this Bill is to ensure that within the same socio-economic region, Canadians will not have to pay long-distance charges when they have to make calls within these cities.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN SIXTY-FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): If the House agrees, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé):

That the sixty-fourth report of the Striking Committee, presented to the House earlier, be adopted.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to move this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 from a number of constituents who believe that the Government lacks a mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a trade deal with the United States. They believe that the proposed trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and undermine our ability as a country to build a society distinct from that of the United States.

There are a number of other points which I will simply bypass in order to get on with the Leaders' speeches. The basic line of the petitioners is that they are asking that Parliament now dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity either to accept or to reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

IMMIGRATION—SPONSORING OF RELATIVES

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce two petitions from the residents of Spadina and nearby.

The first petition concerns immigration and the promise made several times by the Minister that unmarried sons and daughters of all ages will be considered as members of the family class of immigrants. As well, it has been promised for two years that the Government would remove the unfair distinction between Canadian citizens and permanent residents of three years or more, the distinction between them in regard to sponsoring their parents of any age. These promises have not yet been fulfilled. Therefore, the undersigned citizens and residents of Canada call upon the House to ensure that the Government fulfil these promises now.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this petition from Spadina and nearby is from citizens who are concerned that the Government, without a mandate from the Canadian people, is negotiating and trying to conclude a trade deal with the United States which would compromise Canadian sovereignty and deny Canadians the opportunity to develop our economy on our natural resource base without gaining access to the American market.

Therefore, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement in a national general election.

PROHIBITION WITH RESPECT TO KNIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions on the same subject. I am pleased the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) is in the House today. These petitions are from people in Port Alberni, Delta, Mission and Vancouver, British Columbia. Again, it concerns the high incidents of crime, including murder, robbery and sexual assault, committed with knives. This is on the increase in all major cities across Canada.

Whereas the federal Criminal Code and court decisions allow citizens to carry knives for self-defence, and the carrying of knives is directly responsible for knives being used in a variety of crimes, the petitioners ask Parliament to amend the federal Criminal Code to prohibit the carrying of knives by citizens in public places. The only exceptions would be those whose use of a knife is integral to legitimate work or those carrying a knife for religious reasons, such as is in the case of Sikhs.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition from the Town of Stayner, Ontario, in the riding of Grey-Simcoe, signed by many citizens who call upon Parliament to pass into law legislation that will protect the life of the unborn child from conception and at all stages of development, with the exception of extremely rare situations in which abortion is performed in order to save the life of a mother.

I am pleased to be associated with and fully support this petition.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURN

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if questions 291, 292 and 293 could be passed as orders for returns, these documents could be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Does the House wish to consider questions 291, 292 and 293 as orders for returns?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"AGREEMENTS ON IMMIGRATION AND ALIENS

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)"

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"GENERAL"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"COURTS ESTABLISHED BY THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

GENERAL

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987;

And the amendments of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra, p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent, (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia, (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston, (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman, (15620).

Mr. Speaker: Continuing debate. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one year ago the First Ministers of Canada signed the Meech Lake Accord. It was a rare and memorable occasion in the history of our country. For the first time in living memory there was unanimous agreement on a major constitutional amendment. For the first time in a generation there was an answer to that troubling and difficult question: What does Québec want? For the first time in a decade, we were able to see the way ahead to the next stage of our constitutional evolution as a people.

No one who was there in the old railway station that day will ever forget that day, the great sense of joy, the great sense of pride in our country.

[Translation]

As it happened, Mr. Speaker, the sentiment of June 3, 1987 was summed up by the next day's banner headline in Le Devoir, and I quote:

Le Canada dit oui au Québec.

There was a sense of understandable achievement—First Ministers had come to grips with and successfully resolved issues that had bedevilled us as a people for over a quarter of a century. For we had settled outstanding constitutional issues on terms that were satisfactory to Quebec, acceptable to the rest of Canada, and honourable for all concerned.

Mr. Speaker, this is no small achievement. In signing the Accord, First Ministers committed to ratify Meech Lake «as soon as possible. I am pleased to note today that after a year, five provinces have done so.

As for us, this House adopted the Meech Lake Accord last October 26, by an overwhelming margin of 242-16, with the support of all leaders and all parties in this House. So why are we here again, Mr. Speaker? We are here, for the first time in our history—as far as I know—to override the Senate on a constitutional question. So be it. The will of the elected representatives of the people must and shall prevail.

• (1120)

[English]

I am happy to have this additional opportunity to address the issues which brought about the Meech Lake Accord and the questions it has subsequently raised. A Constitution is much more than words on paper. It is more than a theory of how our affairs ought to be organized as a nation. It is even more than a social contract. It should reflect the history of our nation. It should reflect the aspirations of our people. And it should reflect reality or it simply will not work. The Meech Lake Accord meets every single one of those tests and I know that every Member of the House of Commons will ratify this Accord again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Accord reflects our history in that it recognizes the linguistic duality of Canada, and Quebec's distinctiveness within Canada, within the federation—those are key words in the document—while affirming the equality of the provinces. It reflects the aspirations of our people in the recognition that indeed in our judgment there is room enough for all of our citizens to affirm their identity as Canadians. It reflects the reality of our country, this vast, magnificent land stretching thousands of miles from Newfoundland and Labrador to British Columbia, a federation in which the diversity of our regions very much contributes—not damages—very much contributes to our national interest. There are some of the realities about Meech Lake; a sense of history, a sense of country, and a sense of reality.

I am the first to acknowledge that the Meech Lake Accord is not perfect, but we will leave to others the theories of constitutional perfection. We had to deal with the Canada that was left to us with Canada as it is, and that is a Canada that, in 1982, achieved the patriation of its Constitution and the entrenchment of its Charter of Rights and Freedoms without the assent of Québec, principal home of one of our two official language communities which gave rise to Canada, the existence of our country at the very beginning. As a result, the 1982 Constitution Act, which I have no hesitation in acknowledging had been intended as an instrument of unity, had become the opposite even before the ink was dry. This was a deep and a lasting wound on the body politic of our country.

In fact, by deciding to proceed without Quebec, and this was a value judgment that was made, the federal Government of that day ensured, first of all, that any attempt to reintegrate Quebec would take place in isolation in the future, any Prime Minister or any Parliament called upon to deal with this festering problem would have to do so in isolation, thereby depriving the federal Government of the flexibility inherent in a comprehensive negotiation. Because of this isolation, any formula to bring Quebec into the Constitution could be portrayed as giving in to Quebec or giving up too much for Quebec.

Not only was Quebec isolated in 1982, but the prospects of future constitution reform were also effectively blocked. That was the situation we inherited at Meech Lake and that, Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to say was the situation that we remedied at Meech Lake on behalf of a united Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Now the hurt of 1981 will be healed at last and the country whole again will be able to move on to the constitutional, social, and economic challenges of a new decade and a new century.

Much has been said and written about the Meech Lake Accord in the year since the First Ministers signed the document. Hearings have been held, speeches have been made and reports have been published, but nothing that I have heard or read persuades me that the Accord should be reopened. We said, in fact, that we would reopen the Accord if an egregious error were found in it. None has been found.

[Translation]

I am more persuaded than ever that the Meech Lake Accord is a valuable instrument of healing for Canada. And I am quite persuaded of the urgency for all Hon. Members of moving ahead with the immediate ratification process.

I will not have it said of this House and this generation of Canadians that we allowed this opportunity for national reconciliation to pass. Quebec has said yes to Canada twice, in the referendum of 1980, and in adopting the Meech Lake Accord in the National Assembly in 1987. But once before, in 1981, Quebec was left isolated and alone; we must not allow that to happen again in 1988. It is time, once and for all, for the rest of Canada to say yes to Quebec. And the way to do so is to proceed with ratification of the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Speaker, I urge this House and remaining legislatures to do so. Then we can at last turn this page in our history, and get on to the next chapter in our constitutional development. Our constitution is indeed a document for the ages, but it is not cast in stone. Our nation's constitutional development did not end with the British North America Act of 1867. It did not end with the Statute of Westminster in 1931. It did not end with the Constitution Act of 1982. And it will not end with the Meech Lake Accord of 1987. At every stage of our constitutional history, as we have settled the agenda of one generation, we have gained the freedom to move onto the next.

[English]

And so it was, Mr. Speaker, after the BNA of 1867 which settled the powers of the federal Government and the provinces and established the goal of "peace, order and good government" in the management of our national affairs; and so it was after the statute of Westminster of 1931 which saw our nation achieve autonomy in the conduct of foreign affairs; and so it was after the Constitution Act of 1982 which saw patriation of our Constitution and the entrenchment of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; and in the next round which will take place, Mr. Speaker, just as surely as summer follows spring in Canada, we will deal with the outstanding issues of Senate reform, aboriginal rights, and enhancing the role of linguistic and cultural minorities in Canada.

Are we as a Parliament, as a people, to hold Quebec's constitutional reintegration hostage to the pursuit of perfection in these other areas? Let us not make the perfect the enemy of the good. Surely, we have a much better chance to improve our Constitution with Quebec as a full participant at the constitutional table. Surely, no Government in its right senses would try to proceed to these other issues without the participation of Quebec.

The Meech Lake Accord is entirely consistent with our constitutional character as a nation. It affirms the federal nature of Canada. Since Confederation there has been a constitutional division of powers and responsibilities and obligations in Canada. And the discussions that led to the Meech Lake Constitutional Accord culminate over 20 years of constitutional debate. The Accord builds on the constitutional discussions of 1968 to 1971. It builds on the constitutional exercise of 1975 and 1976, and on Bill C-60 in 1978. It builds on the negotiations that followed the referendum in 1980, as well as the patriation exercise in 1980 and 1981.

We have gained much in the Meech Lake Accord in the national interest and for the benefit of all Canadians. We have gained the signature of Quebec on our Constitution, ending its divisive and potentially dangerous estrangement from our constitutional family. In the process, we have strengthened the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms because, for the first time, Quebec has accepted its moral significance and political legitimacy. That means that all the laws of Quebec will be subjected to the Charter, and the Charter will be interpreted in light of Quebec's distinctiveness, as it is now interpreted in light of Canada's multicultural and aboriginal heritage. We have broken out of the constitutional straitjacket, the dead-end, and gained the ability to move on to the next stage of constitutional reform.

Since 1982, constitutional reform has been effectively blocked. By way of illustration four difficult and challenging and important conferences on aboriginal rights ended in failure in some considerable measure because Quebec declined to participate actively. With the return of Québec we have increased the chances of success very greatly at a future conference dealing with the outstanding issue of aboriginal self-rule. Surely, if there is one group of Canadians which needs and deserves that degree of justice and equality of opportunity it is our aboriginal peoples. The Meech Lake Accord makes justice much more possible for each and every member of our aboriginal communities across Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As for our official language minorities, English-speaking in Québec and French-speaking in the rest of Canada, we have affirmed not only their vital presence but the role of the provinces to preserve their rights. This is in addition to minority rights entrenched in the Charter. These are first-class Canadian citizens with full Canadian citizenship wherever they live. The role of the federal Parliament and the Government of Canada to protect minority rights at all times wherever those minorities live remains a moral and a legal obligation of the Government of Canada.

When we say that the provinces have a role in preserving minority language rights, we will work for that in the broad, generous sense of that word.

[Translation]

We in the Federal Government will continue to "promote" as well as preserve the rights of official languages minorities, through instuments such as Bill C-72, the amendments to update and strengthen the Official Languages Act.

Mr. Speaker, this morning we concluded an agreement with the Governmnet of Saskatchewan, providing assistance to improve the situation of the 25,000 Francophones who live in that province. That is a tangible sign of our duty and our obligation with respect to linguistic minorities throughout Canada.

In some circles, Mr. Speaker, Meech Lake has been extraneously and erroneously linked with recent events in Saskatchewan. Indeed, that has often been tried with the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake accord was not in effect in 1886. It was not in effect in 1905. It is not yet in effect in 1988. For our linguistic minorities, the Accord means that their rights have been afforded an added measure of constitutional recognition—a "major step in the right direction" in the words of Canada's Commissioner of Official Languages.

[English]

The Accord for the first time affirmed the authority of the Parliament of Canada to launch programs in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. We have affirmed the federal character of the Supreme Court of Canada which is, in my judgment, entirely consistent with its ultimate role as the final arbiter of Confederation. Even more so, with its expanded role in interpreting the Charter it is entirely appropriate that the provinces play a role in submitting nominations for Supreme Court justices. It is entirely in accordance with reality.

Mr. Speaker, if you were to compare short lists of the federal Government with the provinces and the bar for this position you would no doubt find in almost every circumstance almost entirely the same names. But the national Government decides in all circumstances and therefore has the absolute and final say.

With respect to the Senate, pending effective reform, we have struck an interim agreement that also reflects the federal character of the upper Chamber in this federation. Vacancies will be filled by Ottawa from lists of competent people submitted by the provinces.

With respect to immigration, which promises to be a central public policy issue for many years to come, both in terms of economic development and social justice, we have also reaffirmed the federal nature of this issue.

Finally, we have institutionalized and constitutionalized the annual First Ministers Conference on the economy which we began in Regina in 1985. This annual meeting on the economy has proven to be an invaluable instrument of policy planning and co-ordination between Ottawa and the provinces and has introduced new discipline into the budgetary planning process.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this is not a unitary state. Regardless of what some people claim, Ottawa is not the omniscient, omnipotent source of wisdom and power in this land. There are those who say that too much has been given to obtain Quebec's signature. And there are those in Quebec who say that we have not conceded enough. On the one hand, you have those who regard themselves as being in sole possession of the truth, who have always treated Quebec's legitimate aspirations with ill-concealed contempt. On the other hand, you have those who have always rebuffed sincere efforts at reconciling Quebec's legitimate needs with the national interest, whose only interest in constitutional discussions is to sever links with the rest of Canada. And somewhere in between, Mr. Speaker, you have the vast majority of people who regard Quebec as their home, but Canada as their country.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, you have the vast majority of English-speaking Canadians in other provinces who want Quebecers to feel at home in Canada.

[English]

The Meech Lake Accord reflects that idea and that reality of Canada. Opponents of the Meech Lake Accord would have Canadians believe that it somehow represents a decentralizing thrust when in fact it is a pragmatic representation of the reality of our country.

Compromises were made at Meech Lake, honourable compromises to improve as well as reflect the situation we inherited. But nowhere at Meech Lake have we made compromises as significant as those that were made in 1982.

In 1982, Canada achieved patriation and an entrenched Charter of Rights but only at the price, the tremendous price, of a notwithstanding clause. So while the most fundamental rights of Canadians were guaranteed in 1982, the federal Government agreed that Parliament or provincial legislatures could override these fundamental rights by invoking the notwithstanding clause.

Nowhere in the Meech Lake Accord is there a compromise or a concession of the magnitude agreed to by the federal Government in 1982.

Mr. Waddell: There is still a notwithstanding clause.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1140)

Mr. Mulroney: Rather than criticize and live in the past, we tried to build on the good, and there was much good about the process in 1982. We accepted the advances that came from 1982 and moved on as a nation to the challenge of some day together, all Parties and all Leaders, completing the work of Confederation, which brought us to Meech Lake.

[Translation]

We have affirmed the linguistic duality of our nation, and the distinctiveness Quebec brings to our country. This constitutional arrangement simply reflects reality. Not that Quebec is special, just that it is different and, distinct within Canada. Language and culture in particular give rise to this fact.

We do not close our eyes to Quebec's distinctiveness within Canada, rather we embrace it, for it enriches our national culture, and strengthens our national identity as Canadians on the northern half of this continent.

The Meech Lake Accord acknowledges the distinctive character of Quebec, while upholding the principle of equality of all the provinces. The other arrangements contemplated by Meech Lake are equally consistent with the constitutional evolution and the practical reality of Canada.

[English]

On spending power, for example, while affirming the federal prerogative, we provided for opting out with compensation for provinces which meet national objectives in programs of their own. However, opting out with compensation is not a new idea.

It was not dreamed up at Meech Lake. Prime Minister Pearson first introduced the possibility of opting out of shared cost programs through the Established Programs Act of 1965. This applied to matters such as hospital insurance, old age assistance, the welfare portion of unemployment insurance, and vocational training. This is nothing new. Under these conditions social programs have been established in the past, they are being established in the present, and they will continue to be developed for the national good in the future.

With regard to the role of provinces in the appointment of Senators, Members will recall the federal Government's Bill C-60 in 1978, 10 years ago, which envisaged that half of the Senate appointments would be made by the provinces acting alone. Under the Meech Lake Accord the provinces can appoint none. They simply have the right to submit lists of competent candidates with the decisions in all cases being made by the federal Government. That is a far cry from the concession made by a federal Government 10 years ago.

As for the Supreme Court, and this interests every Member of Parliament very much, Members will recall that at the Victoria Conference in 1971 the federal Government proposed a provincial role in nominations. The federal Government would not have retained the final say over who was appointed. This is part of what transpired. This is not something that we dreamed up at Meech Lake. This is calling back on parts of our history.

The immigration provisions of Meech Lake entrench the essential features of the Cullen-Couture agreement of 1977 entered into by the Government of Canada. Let me quote an analysis not of a Member of this House, not of a political supporter, but a very distinguished jurist who exercises his power in another jurisdiction, the Attorney General of Ontario, the Hon. Ian Scott. He analysed the last 10 or 15 years, and this was his assessment:

> Most of these proposals, including those advanced by the federal Government prior to 1981, would have established a far greater role for provincial Governments than is provided for in the Meech Lake Accord itself.

I think the analysis of Attorney General Scott is one that all Members of Parliament from all Parties in every jurisdiction should read very, very carefully.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Meech Lake Accord, like all previous constitutional amendments, is not without its imperfections. Our Constitution is being improved with Meech Lake, and it can be improved in the future. I believe we can all be assured of that. The Meech Lake Accord incorporates improvements to the Constitution Act of 1982, just as the 1982 law brought improvements to the BNA Act. At each stage of our constitutional development, we have improved our constitutional structure. All Members of all Parties in this House can properly feel proud of this achievement. With Meech Lake, we have achieved the best possible arrangement under the circumstances. We are correcting the grave historical error of Quebec's absent signature, and we have obtained it on terms that are consistent with our history and our constitutional evolution. As Prime Minister of Canada, as Leader of my political Party, I am proud of the Lake Meech Accord.

[English]

Canada is one of the world's youngest nations but one of the world's oldest democracies. It is a country with an Atlantic heritage and a Pacific perspective. It truly is a land for tomorrow, perhaps the most bountiful and blessed country on the face of the earth. In this beloved country, which has been enriched by wave after wave of immigrants coming from around the world to build a tolerant and splendid new society on the northern half of this continent, the Meech Lake Accord brings us together as a people. That is our point of departure with Meech Lake, building one Canada, united and strong.

What is it that we all have in common? The answer is simple. All Members of this House, of whatever Party, whatever region, whatever background or whatever religion, are all Canadians and we all very much love our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is always with a sense of pride and responsibility that I take part in a debate on the fundamental law of our country. Like the Fathers of Confederation and those Canadians who succeeded them in this chamber, we must meet the challenge of having our collective identity and values reflected in our Constitution. We are at an important stage in the constitutional evolution of our country. I am Canadian. I am proud to be Canadian. That is why I have dedicated a large part of my life to serve my country as an elected representative. I do so because I want to build a Canada that is stonger, a Canada that is more just, a Canada that is more equitable, a Canada that is more united. I do so because I want to continue the Liberal tradition, but more importantly, because we must shape the future of Canada. In this regard, I have always been concerned with Constitutional issues and the unity of our contry.

I admit that I am not the first or the only one to promote excellence, harmony and Canadian unity. The fondamental law of this country, the Constitution, flows from and reflects the perpetual evolution of our nation. Constitutional evolution proceeds as a result of initiatives that flow from the needs and aspirations of our society. Each time, we search for excellence. Each time, we make progress. But each time we undertake such an exercise we are bluntly reminded that perfection is out of our reach. But I believe firmly that we must always persist. We should never be discouraged. The constitutional initiative we are looking at today is unrelated to the ones that have come before, nor is it different.

The objective of this initiative, to return Quebec to the Great Canadian constitutional family, is not only noble, it is absolutely essential. That is why I support it energetically. That is also why I am working energetically to improve it.

• (1150)

[English]

The whole history of our country is one of meeting great challenge and reaching historic compromise. In founding a parliamentary democracy the Fathers of Confederation recognized that a federal state, with powers shared between the provinces and the central Government, would best respect regional distinctiveness and yet ensure a strong national identity. There has been a perpetual ebb and flow in the powers of the provinces and the federal Government. The British North America Act of 1867, which defined that relationship was amended and refined many times to reflect the evolving priorities of our country.

There are two views of Canada which compete for dominance whenever we discuss the constitutional reform. One is the sense of a very centralized country, one Canada. The other is a concept of a very loose Confederation, such as a community of communities or the idea of deux nations. I see the Constitution differently. These two polarized and conflicting views do not reflect the whole debate, nor do they represent the sum total of constitutional discussion in this country. I have always believed in a balanced federalism, a federalism which is in equilibrium, a Canadian federalism. That has always meant to me a strong federal Government and strong provincial Governments operating in their own jurisdictions. Canada has one flag, but it does not fly only over Ottawa. Neither is it a patchwork of provincial emblems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have always believed, Mr. Speaker, that the test which must be met by any proposal to alter our Constitution is not "does it serve this or that level of government?" There is a higher test. The questions that must be asked are: "Does it respect the principles upon which this nation was founded? Does it enhance national unity? Will it work?"

Canada is a great tapestry. Through its intricate weave there are many competing strands, but there are five strands that are essential to the whole. The first is our sense of Canadianism, our love of country, deeply rooted in our history, our geography and our unique environment. The second is our linguistic duality and Quebec's place as the primary, though not the exclusive, source of the French language in Canada. The third is our aboriginal heritage. The fourth is the multicultural nature of Canadian society. The fifth is the paramountcy of individual rights over the powers we have given to Governments. I believe we must constantly review and renew each of these strands; our sense of belonging to this vast land; the essential role of our two founding languages, the special place of our first peoples; the rich and diverse legacy of those who have freely chosen to become Canadian; and the primacy of the individual in Canadian society.

In amending our Constitution, we must always be aware that the Canadian identity can only be preserved by strengthening and not weakening these continuing strands.

The genius of Confederation in 1867 was that it gave us a living document which could evolve to respond to the changing expectations of our people. The British North America Act in 1867 was not a perfect document. It was a compromise. It had several flaws, most notably the flaw that it could not be amended by Canadians in Canada.

Our constitutional evolution began almost immediately. Our country grew and expanded. It moved west and north. We created new provinces out of existing territories. We built an infrastructure quite deliberately to hold this vast and extraordinary nation as one. We built a railway. We established a postal service. We built a national highway. We created a great national public broadcasting system. We created a national airline. We put in place a national unemployment insurance scheme, a national pension plan and a national medicare plan. We heightened the dream of a fair, independent and sovereign Canada.

For nearly 50 years following Confederation there was a strong pull to decentralize this country. Many of the constitutional decisions of the judicial committee of the Privy Council in Great Britain strengthened provincial rights, but when we were faced with national emergencies in the Depression and the two great wars, it became clear that only with a strong national Government could we respond to those challenges. Then, of course, the courts began to reflect that understanding.

• (1200)

[Translation]

Canada did not achieve full independent nationhood in 1867. It was only with the Statute of Westminster in 1931 that we achieved control over our own foreign policy. It was only in 1949, that our Supreme Court became the final court of appeal in all legal matters, replacing the judicial committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain.

But the goal of complete independence from Britain was still to be achieved. We were still obliged to seek the approval of the Parliament of Westminster for any amendment to our Constitution.

This question was resolved when our Constitution was patriated in 1982. However, this enormous step forward was made without the participation of Quebec. Quebec is a full-fledged partner in our Confederation and must be a full-fledged participant in our evolution as a country.

The question of Quebec's place in the Canadian federation lies at the very heart of our existence as a nation. All too often the aspirations of French-speaking Canadians were met by a wall of indifference. The Riel crisis, the Manitoba school question, Regulation 17 in Ontario and conscription were the source of many French-English tensions. The Commission on Bilingualism and Biculturalism set up by Prime Minister Pearson in the 1960's sounded the alarm: the country would face serious difficulties if there was no fundamental reform.

In Victoria in 1971, the Liberal government, of which I was Minister of Justice, tabled a proposal which I believe remains a model of political consensus. All ten provinces agreed to an arrangement which recognized the linguistic duality of this country and provided an amending formula which gave a veto right to Quebec and to each of this country's other regions. But the Victoria agreement collapsed almost immediately. Quebec withdrew its support in response to mounting pressure from within that province. It was already clear that the feelings provoked by the constitutional debate were running so high that they could no longer be ignored.

The election of a Parti Québécois government a few years later crystalized the debate on the future of Quebec in Confederation. A polarization of ideas rapidly developed. That division culminated in the Referendum Debates. The debate was difficult for Quebecers and for many Canadians as well. It pitted family against family, and friend against friend.

At an important point in the debate, Prime Minister Trudeau delivered an historic speech at the Paul Sauvé arena. He told thousands of Quebecers that if they rejected the seduction of independence and opted for Canada there would be a renewed federalism. His message was very clear. And it was clearly understood. On the day of the vote, a majority of Quebecers, and a majority of French Quebecers, said a resounding "Yes" to Canada.

Long after referendum day the wounds and the scars were still evident. Friendships had been broken. Dreams had been shattered. But the promise of a renewed federalism remained well alive in the hearts of Quebecers.

After a long and difficult round of negotiations the constitutional agreement of 1982 was proclaimed. It was both historic and essential. We, as Canadians, finally patriated our constitution with our own amending formula and our own Charter of Rights. Since then Canada can amend its own Constitution without reference to the British Parliament. But the Quebec government did not accept the terms of the agreement. They refused to sign it. A majority of the members of the National Assembly, representing all political parties confirmed the decision of the Quebec government.

[English]

Although Québec, constitutionally and legally, was bound by the Constitution, was bound by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, Québec was an unwilling partner. The elected representatives of Quebec rejected the constitutional arrangement in 1982 because, among other things, it failed to recognize the distinctive character of Quebec.

One only has to travel to Québec to realize that it is a province unlike any other. It is the only province where a majority of our citizens speak French. It has its own civil code, it has a special culture, a distinctive flavour. The distinct character of Québec is a reality which enriches our country.

Because Québec was not a full partner from 1982 onward, thousands of Quebécers felt a sense of betrayal and a sense of exclusion. That situation could not be allowed to continue. I am proud to lead a Party which took the initiative to end that impasse. In early 1986, on behalf of our Party, I presented new constitutional proposals to do just that. I acknowledged that Québec did have a distinctive character. I responded constructively to the five proposals presented by the newly elected federalist Government in Québec. Our response received widespread support in Québec.

Premier Bourassa characterized our proposals and those responses as constructive, precise and concise. Québecers generally considered them to be progressive. At St. Hyacinthe, Québec Liberals embraced my proposals. At our convention in November of 1986, 3,000 Liberal delegates from all across Canada resoundedly endorsed a confirming resolution.

This was a Liberal initiative, it is true, but partisan politics have no place in the process of making it possible for Québec to join our Constitution, and that is why we depoliticized this debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We have always considered it to be a matter transcending differences between political Parties and a subject that challenged each one of us to find a Canadian solution.

The history of recent years has clearly demonstrated that Québec's absence from the table, even temporarily, impedes any future constitutional development and weakens our country. Indeed, no future constitutional change or reform is possible without the participation of Québec. Those who oppose Meech Lake as an imperfect document fail to take that into account.

I do not believe that the Meech Lake Accord is the straitjacket that its detractors paint it to be. It does not extend the unanimity rule to the entire range of constitutional changes, including the division of powers. The distribution of powers can still be changed under the 50 per cent, seven-provinces rule. The unanimity rule in the Meech Lake Accord extends to federal institutions but will not extend much further than it did before. I say to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), however, that constitutional reform should not be a casual affair carried out in haste in the early hours of the morning. It should be a well conceived, well thought out, well executed, deliberate effort to reinforce Canadian unity. We deeply regret that the Prime Minister missed that opportunity to present Canadians with a more complete set of amendments to the Constitution.

• (1210)

Québec must be a full partner in the Canadian family, politically, emotionally, and psychologically. It is for this reason that I support the Meech Lake Accord despite its flaws. We do not look to this Accord to solve all the unfinished business of Confederation. That being said, we still believe that it could have been a better document.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, when the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on the 1987 Constitutional Accord presented its conclusions, our party submitted a minority report. In it we proposed changes which would considerably improve and enlarge the Meech Lake Accord. These changes reflect the goals and aspirations of all Canadians. We believe that the aboriginal peoples should not be excluded. Most important, they should not be made to feel less important than other Canadians, because this is not the case. We cannot always be proud of the way we have treated our aboriginal peoples. We have ignored and forgotten them too often. Aboriginal peoples should be recognized as constituting a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of the Canadian society. Aboriginal rights should be a priority in constitutional discussions. That is why our amendments propose that the issue of self-government for aboriginal peoples be put on the agenda of the next round of Constitutional discussions.

Mr. Speaker, since the earliest colonization of North America, our country has welcomed people from around the world. Millions of people from every part of the globe continue to join us. They bring with them a set of values and cultures that enrich Canada and make it a better nation. Our Constitution should therefore recognize the contribution of our multicultural communities. We are proud of the multicultural nature of Canada.

The Charter of Rights and Freedoms stands as one of the greatest achievements of our constitutional development, and it must be paramount. The basic rights and freedoms of Canadian men and women must never be diminished. In particular, we must safeguard the equality rights of women as they are enshrined in the Charter. While we believe that the possibility of discrimination is very remote, we want to ensure that our fundamental rights cannot be threatened by imprecise language.

[English]

You know, Mr. Speaker, that we believe in an elected Senate. We want to reach this goal in the foreseeable future. I advanced this course in a debate with the Minister of Justice three years ago in this House of Commons when we debated Senate reform. We propose to eliminate the rigid unanimity rule for Senate reform and return to the formula of seven provinces and 50 per cent of our population.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I believe that our current amendment reflects the demographic and territorial facts of our country. Our proposal would accelerate the move from an appointed to an elected upper House. We would have Senators elected now, when vacancies occur rather than appointing them from provincial lists. I believe that the democratic rights of all Canadians would be strengthened by giving them the power to elect all their national representatives.

Canadians living north of the 60th parallel have been deprived by this Accord of the chance of any future representation in or appointment to the Senate. We propose that the citizens of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories have the right, as do all other Canadians, to senatorial representation. We also suggest that the eventual provincehood of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories be resolved, as it has been in the past, solely by the federal Government and the potential province in question.

We believe that the clauses in the Accord dealing with the appointment of Supreme Court justices could lead to an impasse between the federal and provincial governments. Parenthetically, I believe that the Prime Minister was wrong in his analysis of the 1971 Victoria Charter as it related to Supreme Court appointments.

We have, therefore, suggested a solution which would ensure that the Supreme Court has a full complement of judges at all times in the event of an impasse. It would also protect the basic rights of northern Canadians by granting their governments the same rights as the provinces have under the Accord to nominate candidates to the court.

Another area of the Accord which I have studied very carefully is the provision on shared cost programs. It is my view, certainly shared by the Attorney General of Ontario, that the Accord does not basically change the division of powers as they reside in the federal and provincial governments. In so far as it relates to the federal spending power it probably strengthens its power because it explicitly recognizes for the first time that that power can operate within areas of provincial jurisdiction.

The Meech Lake Accord specifies that national shared cost programs are to be established by the Government of Canada and that if a province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives it is entitled to reasonable compensation.

We believe that this clause should be clarified to ensure that Parliament sets those national objectives and ensures that there are minimum national standards. We would ensure that the minimum standards are met by the provinces in order to qualify for compensation. I do not believe, however, that allowing provinces to opt out of some federal-provincial programs, as has occurred—and the Prime Minister recited this—in the past, will damage our unity.

We also believe that to put the issue of fisheries on the agenda every year would create unnecessary instability in the fishing industry. Three of the four provincial Governments in the Atlantic region have expressed their deep concern that any transfer of this jurisdiction to the provinces would result in anarchy in the fishing industry in the Atlantic. For that reason we propose that the issue be dealt with once and for all at the first constitutional conference called for within the terms of this Accord.

One of the major thrusts of the Meech Lake Accord was the obligation on the part of provincial governments to preserve minority language rights. This strengthening of bilingualism in itself is a step forward for official language groups and ought to be noted. We in this Party, however, want to offer even more protection to official language minorities by ensuring that Parliament is responsible, not only for preserving, but for promoting the status of official languages.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): For this purpose we have introduced an amendment which would allow any province to adhere to this requirement should it choose to do so. All political leaders in this country have an obligation to ensure that the spirit of the Accord is upheld.

The Prime Minister mentioned Saskatchewan. I am deeply disappointed that the Government of Saskatchewan introduced a language law which the Prime Minister admitted to me here in the House of Commons contravened in spirit and in letter the constitutional Accord. This legislative action was taken by a Premier who sat and negotiated at the table. It was introduced into a legislature which ratified the Accord. Yet our Prime Minister praises that Premier. On his visit to Saskatchewan he should have told that Premier to withdraw the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1220)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There are other changes to the Constitution which we have not proposed in our amendments. The reason we have not proposed them in the amendments before Your Honour is that the rules of the House do not permit amendments to parts of the Constitution that are not touched by the Meech Lake Accord. However, these further amendments are part of our constitutional agenda, as are the amendments introduced in the Senate and in the House of Commons in identical language. We would ensure that Section 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed. That is to say, the notwithstanding clause which allows both levels of Government to enact legislation exempt from some of the most important sections of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Prime Minister characterized this erroneously, I believe, as a compromise which made 1982 possible. But in any event, the fact that he failed to obtain provincial approval to omit this clause when he had an opportunity to do so underlines his lack of personal commitment to the Charter.

In future constitutional discussions we propose to eliminate the phrase "where numbers warrant" in the clause relating to the administration of minority rights in education. We would rely on the general interpretation clause in the Constitution, which would allow schools to be set up in a minority language where that was reasonable.

These are my Party's proposals for constitutional reform. They are the focus of our vision of Canada. They reflect the central realities of our history. They mirror the great tapestry which is our country.

I believe in a federalism in equilibrium. I believe in a balanced federalism. A balanced federalism is the Meech Lake Accord plus the amendments we have submitted to the House. That is the formula for our future. That is the prescription for national unity. That is the formula that responds to the difficulties that have been found in this Accord across the country.

I renew my undertaking to argue for this balanced view here in the House of Commons, across the country, as part of our platform during the next election, and as part of our program when we form a government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): I understand that there can be disagreement, but I am going to continue my efforts to persuade those who do not share the vision I have tried to describe of a balanced federalism.

I urge all Members of the House, indeed I urge all Canadians, to accept the fact that constitutional reform is an evolutionary process. The Meech Lake Accord is not ideal. That is true. But it does have the overwhelming advantage to national unity of bringing Québec to the table and bringing Québec back to the Canadian family. We have to build on that unity before we move on to any other constitutional reform.

Let us not lose sight of the goal or turn away from the challenge before the House. Let us move forward with purpose toward realizing our dream of building a stronger, more confident, more united Canada. The greatest enterprise we have ever undertaken is this country itself. It is an enterprise which every generation must enhance. It is an ideal for which every generation must strive. It is a dream which every generation must rekindle. I am proud to be a Canadian. I am proud to share that dream. I am proud to stand for a Canada that is sovereign and that is just and, above all, that is united.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, today's debate will have major historic consequences for this country. That is clear. In fact, in the twenty years I have been a Member of this House, few debates have been as important as this one.

In the sixties, Mr. Speaker, Canadians all over the country were asking: What does Quebec want? That was the question in Jonquière, in Vancouver, in Toronto and in the Prairies. All Canadians were asking the same question. Since then, our history has known some difficulty and I would even say tumultuous times: the October crisis and the federal Government's excessive reaction which lead to the totally unjustified imposition of the War Measures Act; the election in Quebec of a government dedicated to Quebec's independence from the rest of Canada; the referendum in which the majority of Quebecers said yes to Canada; the patriation of the Constitution which gave Canada its own Constitution and its Charter of Rights, but unfortunately isolated Quebec from the rest of Canada; the negotiations that started after the meeting of First Ministers in 1986 in Edmonton, where it was decided that the next constitutional priority would be to include Quebec in the constitutional process, which led to the Meech Lake and Langevin meetings in May and June 1987, which produced the Accord.

Mr. Speaker, what does this Accord give us? Quite simply, it gives us Quebec's answer to the question: What does Quebec want? And the answer is: Quebec wants to take its place proudly within Confederation as a member of the Canadian community, fully participating in our tradition of co-operative federalism. Quebec wants the rest of Canada to reaffirm our history and incorporate, in our Constitution, that which has been unique and distinct since the inception of this country.

That is the very essence of this debate. Mr. Speaker, Quebec has said a clear and decisive yes to Canada, while reminding us of what we really are as a country, and ten provincial Premiers and three federal Parties answered a decisive yes to the concept of a great country with a distinct society.

• (1230)

[English]

Like other federal leaders and Members of both sides of the House, I have travelled recently in the Province of Québec.

[Translation]

It is a fact that the vast majority of Quebecers are very positive about the Meech Lake Accord. It is not just the journalists and politicians in the Province of Quebec. We hear it in the streets of Quebec and in the hearts of the men and women of this province. They are positive about this Accord because they realize that Quebec is not a province like the others, and they like the idea that, at last, the rest of Canada has agreed to include this concept in the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

Today, however, I want primarily to direct my comments to Canadians outside the Province of Québec. I want to explain to them why I believe this Accord is not only good and desirable, but why it is so very important at this precise moment in the history of our country. We have heard a great deal about the terms of this constitutional Accord, and I speak frankly when I say we have heard a lot of nonsense from many parts of our land and from people who, in my judgment, ought to know better or ought to have made an effort to actually read the document before they spoke out. As a consequence, there are many legitimately perceived misconceptions about this deal, but they are, nonetheless, misconceptions.

There are issues, particularly outside of the Province of Quebec, which have to be addressed and addressed frankly so that the people of Canada will understand that this deal was negotiated in good faith by Premiers who put it on their agenda, and it is accepted in every corner of the Province of Quebec. The people of Canada have to understand that it is good not only for Quebec, but it is good for Newfoundland, Ontario, the Prairies, it is good for all of Canada. We have to understand that.

Many people have said that this Accord drastically changes Canada, that too much has been given away by the federal Government and that the Accord is badly flawed. I want to respond to these arguments because I believe they are fundamentally wrong, and this Accord is fundamentally good. There are those who say that the Accord with its distinct society provision supersedes the Charter. How often have we heard that? How often have otherwise reputable newspapers published, and I speak frankly again, such nonsense? The reality is that courts in Quebec, before this Accord was even written, have referred to the distinct nature of Quebec society in their interpretation of our Charter, and in these judgments, the Charter provisions prevail. They were not abandoned. They prevail in those decisions in Quebec courts, and I say they will prevail in the future. The Charter is not threatened by this Accord.

Professor Peter Hogg of the Osgoode Law School, one of Canada's truly distinguished constitutional scholars, stated quite categorically in his commentary on the Accord:

> The new Section 2 does not override the Charter . . . A law passed to preserve linguistic duality or to promote the distinct identity of Quebec would, like any other law, have to comply with the Charter. If the law was contrary to the Charter . . . then the law would be invalid.

My Party supported and fought for the Charter in 1980 and 1981. We would not have supported this Accord had we believed the Charter was endangered or diminished. I say that with great conviction. There are those who say that the federal spending power will be diminished or significantly altered as a result of this Accord. As a Leader of a Party which in the past has pioneered medicare in Canada, which led the fight for pensions, social housing and other programs, and which is now involved, along with others, in asserting the need for a national child care program, I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this argument, if it turned out to be true, would have been of great consequence for members of my Party. But again, what do we see? In the Accord, we see for the first time the federal Government's right to create shared cost programs in areas that have hitherto been exclusively reserved to the provinces in the written Constitution, which is now to be enshrined in the letter of the law in the Constitution of Canada. That, if anything, is an expansion of the federal authority, not its reduction.

No longer will it be necessary for the federal Government to obtain legitimacy for such action either from past precedent by courts or from the highly contentious use of its spending authority. It will now be written in the Constitution. The federal Government will still have the right to decide where and how and on what terms it spends. It will have the right to attach strings to such a program. It will be the Parliament of Canada that will decide here in this debating Chamber, with all Parties representing all regions of Canada, what the national objectives of such a spending program ought to be.

In so doing, in order to be effective in a federal state, we would have to obtain the co-operation of the Provinces. I repeat once again, we are spending within provincial jurisdictional authority in this kind of activity, and any Government which is sensitive to the legitimate role of the provinces, which does not see the provinces simply as some unfortunate encumbrance around the neck of the central Government, any central Government knows this. Indeed, that is the way we got national programs in the past. It was absolutely essential to obtain crucial provincial support, and that is the kind of approach the New Democratic Party believes ought to be taken. In other words, it will ultimately be a matter of public pressure and political will in deciding whether new social programs are created, just as it was political pressure and political will in the past that led one of my predecessors, Tommy Douglas, and his colleague, Woodrow Lloyd, into action that first brought hospitalization and medicare to the Province of Saskatchewan and, subsequently, because of political pressure, persuasion and argument, we had national programs established in this field.

My Party would not have supported the Accord had we believed that federal Governments would not be able to continue their right of showing this kind of imaginative leadership in the future, whether on child care or some other important aspect of social policy.

There are those who say we are going to create a chequer-board Canada with a variety of social programs. That is another argument that has been trotted out again and again. The Attorney General of Ontario addressed the Ontario Legislative Committee on this subject. I agree with the Prime Minister and would urge every Canadian who is sensitive to the importance of this debate to the future of our country to read the fascinating submission and argumentation on the subject by the Attorney General of Ontario. It is a first rate argument and a first rate scholarship on the history of our Constitution. He said in his address that those who argue against a chequer-board Canada in this sense are more interested in proposing a radical agenda for change in the future of Canada than they are in terms of accurately describing the past reality or the present circumstances.

The truth is that there are already variations in the design and delivery of programs for Canadians in various parts of the country. That is what a federal Constitution, in part, is all about. It is this very flexibility that allowed Quebec, for example, to create the Quebec Pension Plan, which has been regarded not only as a model in this country but as a model in many other countries. Such variations on a theme, if I can put it that way, are a reflection of the difference in public pressure and political will of Governments. Residents of Manitoba, under a succession of New Democratic Party Governments, pay no hospitalization premiums, while Canadians living under different political Parties in the Province of Ontario do.

• (1240)

The point I want to make is that it is not the Constitution that requires one thing to be done in one region and a different in another. What is crucial here is the political decision-making of the people in any given province. All they have to do, if they do not like the present circumstances in terms of this kind of program, is to vote for a different Party and make sure that their political will is expressed in the legislature of that province.

Meech Lake will not change this. However, neither will it reduce the ability of a federal Government with the will to act boldly and decisively on behalf of all Canadians.

There are those who say that the federal Government lost too much with this Accord. We have heard this argument very often from the same people who, in 1982, said that that Constitution Act was a veritable grab by the federal Government in the provincial domain.

Yet if we look at the situation with care and get beyond the rhetoric, the Accord does not change the division of powers one iota as they are outlined in Sections 91 and 92 of the Constitution Act. In fact, the distinct society and linguistic duality section of the Accord state quite clearly that it does not affect the division of powers between Ottawa and the provinces.

As John A. Macdonald noted in 1867, under our Constitution the federal Government retains, in his words, "all the great subjects of legislation". The federal Government retains the power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada, including the provinces. It retains the residual power which gives it the power to make laws in areas not clearly delegated to the provinces. It retains the extreme power to disallow provincial legislation which, fortunately, has not been used in decades.

It has jurisdiction over, just to name some areas, the military and defence, the money supply, the financial system, the public purse and borrowing, the criminal law and corrections system, trade, commerce and navigation. It retains by virtue of the 1947 Letters Patent the exclusive right to make international treaties. It retains by virtue of the constitutional doctrine of paramountcy the guarantee that in the event that a provincial law is inconsistent with federal law the federal law shall prevail. It retains concurrent powers with the provinces over immigration, agriculture, old age pensions and resource exports. In short, the federal authority to provide leadership in great national issues in the country remains as strong today and will remain as strong after Meech Lake as all Canadians desire it to be.

What then did the federal Government give up, if I can put it that way? None of these many powers, for sure, which I have just listed. However, provinces will now have the right to nominate appointees to the Supreme Court bench and to the Senate. With respect to the Senate, I dare say Canadians are no more enthusiastic about patronage appointees coming from the provinces than they have been about those coming exclusively from the federal Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: On a more important matter, what is wrong in the federal strategy with the provinces having a right to participate in the selection of Supreme Court judges? Surely that change as well as many others was long overdue in our federal Constitution. It is one that we strongly support.

The arrangement arrived at in the Accord is a completely reasonable one. It is an example of the kind of co-operative federalism that my Party has always supported. It is one that we think is desirable in the future.

While giving the provinces a say in a very limited range of federal institutions, it retains for the federal Government the great subjects of legislation that John A. Macdonald wanted and that subsequent federal Governments have used to build railroads, the Trans-Canada Highway, the St. Lawrence Seaway, and to create a vast public transportation system. It retains the power the federal Government used to help create a system of social services that is among the very best in the world.

[Translation]

Finally, Madam Speaker, there are those who say the Accord makes matters worse for minority language communities, this as a result of the unfortunate plan of action adopted by the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Devine, in response to the Supreme Court's decision on the rights of Francophone minorities.

In fact, Madam Speaker, he has opted for diminishing the rights of Francophone minorities in his province, rights which had been conferred on them by the former Northwest Territories Act. Madam Speaker, no one in Canada could in good faith support this kind of action. However, I wish to point out that the Act was adopted before the Meech Lake Accord became law. The Government of Saskatchewan can for the time being proceed, on the basis of this Act, because it contains no constitutional guarantees for language minorities. But there are such guarantees in the Meech Lake Accord.

Under the Meech Lake Accord, the Government of Saskatchewan and the other provincial governments will be required to preserve linguistic minorities. Given the pressures of the media, culture and assimilation that threaten them, preservation of these minorities requires more than the passive support of the provinces.

One might expect the Supreme Court to interpret this commitment to mean that action is required of all provinces, although the Constitution in its present form does not require them to take any action.

[English]

The Accord does not undermine the division of powers. It does not supersede the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It does not diminish federal spending power. It does not create a chequer-board Canada. It does not give control over the Supreme Court to the provinces. It does not diminish the rights of linguistic minorities.

What it does is complete the job with patriation that was started in 1982 by allowing Québec to come fully and proudly into the constitutional fold. It allows and, indeed, encourages Québec to become a full member of the Canadian family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It does that, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and I have all argued today, in a manner that is completely consistent with the best traditions of our country.

It allows us to recognize Quebec's contribution to Canada's history. It recognizes what is already implicit in our law, whether we consider the Royal Proclamation of 1763, the Québec Act of 1774, the 1867 Constitution Act, Quebec's unique civil traditions, or successive judgments by the Supreme Court of Canada, which all provide historical evidence that Québec is not a province like the others and is now, and has always been, a distinct society within the Canadian family.

[Translation]

The Accord recognizes a specific historical fact: That Quebec is a distinct society within Canada, with its own language, its own culture, its own history and its own customs, of which it is proud. The Accord recognizes that francophones are the majority in Quebec, but it must be remembered that they are a minority in the other regions of Canada and in North America.

The Accord also recognizes that, while they are proud of being Quebecers, they are also proud of belonging to Canada.

A growing majority of Quebecers believes that the best possible future for Quebec is within Canada. They see this Accord as an integral part of the history of change, social progress and impressive gains of Quebec society expressed in this tradition; Quebec society has developed rapidly since the cultural revolution of the 1960s.

• (1250)

[English]

Further, there are many Quebecers, and I wish to underline this today particularly for Canadians living outside the Province of Quebec, for instance, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), who feels so strongly that this Accord could represent a last chance of rapprochement between Canada and Quebec that he and others have indicated they would leave public life should it fail to be ratified. Should that happen, Madam Speaker, should we allow this opportunity to slip through our fingers, should we fail to grasp the historic significance of this moment, I believe that future generations of Canadians will live to regret it.

As I see Quebec in my travels, I see Canadians who are nationalists in the tradition of my Party as social democrats, like Robert Cliche; I see nationalists in the Province of Québec like Robert Bourassa in the tradition of his Party in the Province of Quebec; and I see nationalists in the Conservative nationalist tradition like the Minister of Transport himself. They are uniquely Quebec, yes, and they are strong nationalists—

[Translation]

. . . the pride of the Province of Quebec is its culture and language.

[English]

—but there are also links with the common philosophical ideology of the rest of Canada.

Therefore, we have an obligation in this country to be aware of the consequences of what we might lose if we do not act. We see in the Province of Quebec men and women of good faith, pride in their province deeply embedded, and particularly I speak today of francophone Quebecers, many of whom were on the "oui" side of the referendum, if we are frank as well, who have said, whether they are Conservatives, Social Democrats, or Liberals, that they want to give Canada a chance because in their hearts they are Canadians and good Quebecers. I say to the rest of Canada that we must listen with care. We must respond with a clear mind and an open heart. We must respond by saying "oui" to the Province of Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: In short, we must accept this challenge. We must accept this Accord.

Having said that, Madam Speaker, I wish to turn to the amendments my Party has supported and will continue to support. As we stated the last time that the Accord was before the House, and as I have made clear in a letter that I sent out in September, 1987, to the First Ministers and to the Prime Minister we believe that the amendments that we have proposed are fully within the spirit of the Accord, and that they could be adopted without unravelling or upsetting the Accord in any way.

We want fairness for native Canadians, the first peoples in this part of the planet. We want it in the form of guarantees of future conferences on aboriginal self-government. Surely, it ought to have been in the Accord.

We also want fairness for northern Canadians who have lost the right of appointment to federal institutions that Canadians in other parts of our country enjoy. We also want their right to possible provincial status not to be encumbered by the unanimity rule that we find in the Accord.

After having fought long and hard for constitutional recognition of sexual equality in Section 28 of the Charter a few years ago, a number of Canadian women are now concerned that this right might be undermined. By simply adding section 28 to section 16 of the Accord, out of an abundance of caution as we have said, we could provide a reassurance of fairness for Canadian women.

We have every intention of voting for these amendments, and we will continue to press for them after. But if they should fail, we will be strongly supporting the Meech Lake Accord.

[Translation]

With this Accord, Madam Speaker, the future of our country is at stake. On the one hand, we can take this accord and a united country and try to go forward together, to dialogue and discuss together in order to develop a common approach to our country's problems. We can take this Accord and work together to achieve self-determination for native people, a constitutional agreement on the fundamental role of ethnic and cultural minorities, an improved constitutional decision-making process to include guarantees of public participation. And we can talk about removing Section 33. On the other hand, Madam Speaker, we can continue to have the deadlock of years of bad will, a constitutional impasse that existed without the full willing participation of all Canadians, men and women. That is the choice facing us. For my part, I am proud to stand up and be counted among those who say yes to a united Canada. I am proud to say yes to Quebec. I am proud to say yes to a real future as a country.

Madam Speaker, the conquest is past. In our generation, it is time to finally walk together as equals.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

ISOLATED AREAS TAX DEDUCTION PROGRAM—APPLICATION IN NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, recently the Conservative Government introduced a northern and isolated areas tax deduction program for areas below the 55th Parallel. In doing so, many communities became eligible but still many others were not despite the fact they are quite isolated.

The criteria for an area to be designated isolated are out of touch with reality. For example, the Town of Canso is eligible for the deduction despite the fact that a hospital, museum, library, drugstore, school, et cetera, are to be found there. Meanwhile, areas of the province such as Loch Lomond, where a resident has to travel 30 to 50 kilometres even to find one of those services, are not designated as isolated.

The federal Conservative Government must review the manner in which it designates isolated areas so that equity and fairness are delivered to all rural Canadians.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

DOCTOR'S LETTER ON TELEVISING ABORTION PROCEDURE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote from a letter sent to Pierre Juneau, President of the CBC, by Dr. Dennis Culver of Elmwood, Ontario. I totally concur with the letter which says:

> Dear Mr. Juneau:
>
> On Saturday, May 28th, 1988, I watched The National news together with my children. I noted scenes from a commentary on an abortion symposium being held in Toronto this week. I am of the opinion that the scene of an abortion procedure being actually performed under local anaesthesia was carrying things just a bit too far.
> This sleazy kind of reporting has no place in the living rooms of our household. I and a number of other physicians feel that life at all its stages is to be protected, particularly the unborn child, who represents Canadians of today who are most vulnerable.
> This promotional film clip from Henry Morgentaler's clinic I find quite distasteful, and I would like some assurances that your reporters will show some responsibility in the future.
> It would be most appreciated if the CBC would show some sensitivity to the position that many Canadians are quite appalled by the deliberate destruction of 60,000 unborn Canadians within the presumed safety of their mothers' wombs each year. This is a disgrace.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—VANCOUVER CITY COUNCIL RESOLUTION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, one of the big issues before this Parliament is whether the Government should spend $8 billion on nuclear submarines. The Government and Parliament want to hear from Canadians on how they feel about this issue.

I have here a resolution passed by the Vancouver City Council on May 31, 1988:

> THAT the Vancouver Members of Parliament, as well as the Minister of National Defence, be advised that council is opposed to the Federal Government spending $8 billion on nuclear submarines when there are so many other pressing needs in our communities, and that there are much greater direct benefits to be realized, including employment creation, from a similar expenditure on a municipal infrastructure program;

The Clerk of the City wrote to me saying that the proposal was rejected because the federal Government had rejected a proposed $14 billion joint federal-provincial-municipal fund for improving municipal infrastructure. It was generally agreed there would be a far greater gains realized by this country from the expenditure of this money on municipal infrastructure rather than on the nuclear submarine program.

This is not a left-of-centre City Council. This is a right-of-centre City Council. They are against spending $8 billion on nuclear submarines, and I think the country is against it as well.

THE LATE FRANCINE MCKENZIE

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): On behalf of my colleagues from this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to the late Mrs. Francine McKenzie, the chair person of the Council on the Status of Women, who passed away last week-end.

A woman of superior intelligence, she had fought for women issues with insight and realism until the very last moments of a career cut much too short. She was said to be a pragmatist while remaining a great humanist. She had spent a lot of time on some of our most pressing issues, namely, women's economic equality, security of income and family policy.

Moreoever, under her leadership, feminisim has acquired a new connotation which makes it possible for women's message to be heard and understood by men, something I fully support.

I would not want to omit any reference to the noteworthy and remarkable intervention made by Mrs. McKenzie when she appeared before the Special Joint Committee on the Constitution of Canada and stated that Quebec women should not fear being deprived of their equality rights within the context of the "distinct society".

To her husband, Mr. Bob McKenzie, a Quebec City parliamentary reporter, to her children and relatives, we wish to offer our deepest sympathy.

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN BY-ELECTION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to read this morning that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as a result of the June 20 by-election, might build a $40 million road from Lac-Saint-Jean to James Bay. If the campaign gets any tighter perhaps the Prime Minister might consider sacrificing his pet prison at Port-Cartier by moving it from his riding to Alma in Lac-Saint-Jean, which prison he previously moved from Drummondville. Or, he might consider putting the Agence Spatiale in Chicoutimi North, or even testing the nuclear submarines in the deep waters of Lac-Saint-Jean.

• (1405)

Better still, Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if I should resign my seat in NDG would the Prime Minister call a by-election immediately and promise to build three new senior citizens residences and complete the work on the Lachine Canal and the Port of Montreal? Thank God for by-elections!

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF FIRST MASS DEPORTATIONS FROM ESTONIA, LATVIA, AND LITHUANIA

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, on June 14, 1941, the Soviet Union began its first mass deportation of the Baltic people from the Republics of Estonia, Latvia, and Lithuania.

In one night, 60,000 men, women and children were torn from their families and homes and deported to Siberia, loaded like cattle into boxcars. Many died during the long journey. Those who survived were sent to forced labour camps where conditions were primitive, harsh and inhumane. Larger deportations were to follow.

These deportations were but one step in the long process of "Russification" of Soviet occupied countries. Earlier, in 1932 and 1933, millions of Ukrainians were starved to death by a Soviet imposed famine in their own homeland.

On the anniversary of these deliberate acts of genocide the Latvian, Estonian, Lithuanian and Ukrainian communities in Canada and all over the world join together to commemorate the tragedies their people endured and as a reminder of the need for vigilance in the defence of freedom, democracy, and fundamental human rights.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CRITICISM OF PROPOSED PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, last night on The Journal, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) stated that the goal of the Conservative Government's defence policy was to ensure increased Canadian responsibility for the defence of Canada. In this respect, Conservatives and New Democrats would appear to be in agreement. Canada does need to assume greater control over its own defence. Unfortunately, the Government's proposal to buy nuclear powered submarines will have the opposite effect.

Nuclear technology or, for that matter, any technology, is not the way to responsible or independent action for global survival. Only policy can do that and, unfortunately, instead of adopting a non-provocative defence posture designed to ensure Canadian security without threatening the security of our superpower neighbours, the Government's proposal will tie Canada even closer to the war-fighting strategies of the United States and to the insecurity for the human race that such thinking involves.

The Minister has rejected policies designed to reduce superpower rivalry. Instead his proposal to purchase nuclear powered submarines will increase our ultimate military and policy reliance on the destabilizing and globally dangerous policies of the United States. That, Mr. Speaker, is not Canadianization as the Minister so fatuously called his policy. It is a Conservative high-tech version of the Liberals' deference to the United States' perception of the world that has strait-jacketed Canadian defence policy since the 1950s.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

LOCATION IN NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION ADVOCATED

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, recently the Ottawa-Carleton Board of Trade tabled its 1988 annual policy statement entitled "Clearing the Way for Progress". One of its principal recommendations is that the space agency be located in the National Capital Region.

I fully endorse this recommendation. I have spoken to this effect many times in this House, in Ottawa-Carleton, and across the nation. When you fully understand the role of the space agency, the importance of the space program in the national agenda, and the merits of where the agency can best fulfil its responsibilities, Mr. Speaker, you can only conclude that it has to be located in the National Capital area.

I have and will continue to direct my energies to persuade the front benches of the Government and, indeed, all Members of this House, that this important national agency be located where it can be most effective, in the National Capital area.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN ASSOCIATION OF RE-REFINERS—PLEA FOR ASSISTANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has a habit of preaching one way and acting in another. In adopting this practice the most recent Minister to join the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse).

In a letter, rich with environmental prose and addressed to Pollution Probe members, dated May 30, 1988, he writes:

> We want to work closely with industry and the provinces to enhance environmental quality.

Yet the same Minister is unwilling to support the Canadian Association of Re-refiners, the people who recycle oil thus practising energy efficiency and sustainable development. In actual fact, re-refiners in Canada are in trouble. Their urgent pleas for assistance from the Ministers of Environment and Energy have fallen on deaf ears.

• (1410)

If the Minister of Energy (Mr. Masse) believes the words he writes, he should act and act quickly in support of this industry before it is too late. Words and letters of self-praise are not enough.

ABORTION

CALL FOR PARLIAMENTARY DEBATE ON OPTIONS

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the January 28 Supreme Court of Canada decision in the Morgentaler case, we now have no abortion law. The consequences of this can be readily seen.

Abortions at Dr. Morgentaler's Toronto clinic are up 33 per cent. Abortions at Dr. Robert Scott's Toronto clinic are up 200 per cent. The Ontario Liberal Government is proposing to use public moneys to pay for abortions at women's health clinics. Therefore, we should anticipate that the number of abortions will increase dramatically.

Recognizing that abortion is a fundamental issue and that each Member of Parliament has both the privilege and the responsibility of taking a position on such issues, the Government sought the unanimous consent of the House to have a free vote on several different options to give the Government direction in preparing new legislation. Regrettably, the Opposition played petty politics with the lives of the unborn and said "no".

I would urge all my colleagues in the House to treat this issue with the urgency it demands and put the resolutions to debate and a vote as soon as possible.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—TREATMENT OF THE SHARPEVILLE SIX

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Government of South Africa has now been defined as terrorist. How else to describe a Government that would bring to trial and condemn to hang the six black citizens of Sharpeville who are thus held accountable for the actions of a mob?

In most countries people are not held accountable for actions they have not been proven to have caused, but not if you are a black in South Africa.

In most civilized countries the courts do not allow the testimony of confessed liars to bring the innocent to the death chamber, but it is possible if you are black and innocent in South Africa.

Most countries are concerned about being considered a part of the world of nations characterized by humanity, respect for human rights, equality and civilized behaviour. Most such countries would respond to the pleas for clemency of the Sharpeville Six from the leaders of civilized nations of the world, but not South Africa.

In most countries, and this is the greatest error of the six, it is not a capital offence to demand freedom and equality.

As South Africa sinks into the inevitable and violent consequences of the terrorist actions of the regime that rules it, many of the world leaders who plead for the lives of the Sharpeville Six will be burdened by the guilt that they themselves must bear for ignoring the pleas of the 23 million who have asked for action against this terrorist regime commensurate with their actions against other regimes they have defined as terrorist.

FREE TRADE

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Leader made public the so-called Liberal alternative to Mulroney's trade pact. There were four outstanding mistakes. Quebec was not mentioned. For that matter, have they not always forgotten Quebec? And yet, the Quebec Government and all the political parties in that province are saying yes to free trade.

Second, the West is not mentioned. But, have the Liberals not always forgotten the West? I refer to the national energy policy. And yet, the West is saying yes to free trade.

Third, business people are not mentioned. And yet, they are selling for $95 billion a year to the United States. Why shouldn't they have their say?

Fourth, our main customer the United States, is not mentioned. What good or service salesman would ignore his main customer while re-organizing his sales network by overlooking his regular clients and neighbours with whom he is making money?

Mr. Speaker, so much for the Liberal's expertise on free trade!

INDUSTRY

CLOSURE OF FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the previous speaker directed his ammunition toward the Liberal Party, because that means he has finally recognized who is on the verge of forming the next Government. I would like to challenge him on the issue of the trade deal. We got a taste of free trade in the riding of Hamilton East through Firestone.

Not only did Firestone pack up and leave Hamilton, leaving 1,400 workers without jobs, but to add insult to injury Firestone could not run the machines in Des Moines, Iowa.

Believe it or not, Firestone has actually come to Hamilton, set up a temporary hiring agency beside the union hall, and is asking our workers to go to the United States so they can teach the Americans how to run the machines that were paid for by Canadian taxpayers' dollars so that more jobs can be exported to the United States.

• (1415)

The Government should be demanding interest on the interest-free loan of $13.5 million that went to Firestone which funded machinery which is now being used in the United States, operated by Canadian workers. What an insult to Canada, what an insult to the Canadian workers.

That fund should be set up for the workers at Firestone to save jobs, not to export them to the United States which is what we have done with this trade deal and this gutless Government.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—INCIDENCE AMONG HOMOSEXUALS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, world attention is focused on the AIDS crisis as international medical leaders meet in Stockholm, Sweden. There is a new AIDS case diagnosed every 14 minutes in the United States, yet medical research is not even close to discovering a cure.

In Canada 82 to 90 per cent of all AIDS cases are found among homosexual men. We must show compassion, love, and understanding toward the homosexual community and do everything we can to find a cure for this dreadful disease; however, we cannot accept their lifestyle as an alternative to the norm.

I have in my hands a pamphlet put out by the Ontario Government on AIDS entitled "Let's Talk". Nowhere in this pamphlet does it tell our young people that AIDS is primarily found amongst male homosexuals as a result of their sexual practices and in particular the practice of anal intercourse. The power of the homosexual lobby at Queen's Park and in Ottawa is most evident.

I urge the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to give all the facts clearly to our young people when directing new dollars to educational material. We also call on the homosexual community to exhibit self control in their sexual lifestyle because it not only affects their own community but society in general, not to mention the unbelievable burden it will place on health costs in Canada in the years ahead.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—GOVERNMENT URGED TO TAKE STAND AT TORONTO SUMMIT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my dissatisfaction with the Government's half-hearted approach to the question of apartheid in South Africa.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in 1985 that "if there are no fundamental changes in South Africa we are prepared to invoke total sanctions against that country and its repressive regime".

We can see that the Government is reneging on that commitment. Last week the South African Government renewed the state of emergency. We know that it continues to occupy Namibia illegally. Now once again we see that the South African Government refuses to bend to public demands that the Sharpeville Six be given a retrial.

Mr. Joshua Nkomo, one of the founding fathers of the modern state of Zimbabwe, who is here in Ottawa, should serve as a reminder to the Government that Canada should be taking a leadership role in championing the movement against the racist policy of apartheid.

I call on the Government to take these concerns to the G-7 Economic Summit which will take place later this week in Toronto and once and for all act to on this stated commitment to get tough on apartheid.

PROPOSED ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—REQUEST FOR CANCELLATION OF DECISION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, more and more strategic military experts believe that the Prime Minister's plan to purchase nuclear powered submarines is absolutely wrong, and the Cabinet is obviously split on the issue. To spend billions and billions of dollars on nuclear powered submarines is a wasteful and dangerous extravagance for a Canadian Government.

Will the Prime Minister address the House in response to this question and advise us whether he is now willing, upon reflection, to cancel his Government's decision to purchase nuclear powered submarines?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, of course the answer is no. My right hon. friend will be aware of the White Paper brought in by the Government of Canada pursuant to, I think he will acknowledge, many years of neglect of the Armed Forces of Canada by predecessor governments.

Political decisions have been made or are in the process of being made with a number of important objectives in mind: the sovereignty of Canada, the defence of Canada, and the respect of our alliances.

It is a very important proposition that this be done while supplying the men and women who serve Canada in the military with first-class equipment at all times. We have a first-class military which was not always treated in the manner in which it should have been. The White Paper and our policy resolve to change that on behalf of Canada.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think the statistics in percentage of Gross National Product which the previous Trudeau administration dedicated to defence are at least as high as those dedicated by this Government. I think that should be pointed out.

The Prime Minister knows that our Party is committed to NATO and continental defence. Does he really feel that spending upwards of $16 billion of taxpayers' money is an intelligent use of our funds?

Perhaps I should put my question to the Minister of Finance. Is that an intelligent use of our funds in fulfilment of defence obligations when there are far more pressing needs for the use of those funds?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, indeed there are very important and pressing needs coming from all elements of society. We try to accommodate those needs and have been successful thus far within the fiscal framework set out year by year by the Minister of Finance, which is a rather unusual habit in recent years in Canada.

There are demands for child care, for example, which are very important and which shall be met.

The very distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs yesterday announced brand new programs on behalf of the veterans of Canada who need and deserve our help.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: There are programs for regional economic expansion. I agree with my right hon. friend that all of these matters are very important. However, the defence of Canada is vital. We are not going to contract out our responsibilities to defend the integrity and sovereignty of this nation. We are going to stop the erosion of the Canadian Armed Forces which went on for the previous 20 years. We are going to make sure Canada's men and women serving in the Armed Forces go first class and that this country is given first-class equipment at all times.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the Prime Minister and his other Ministers had the good sense and judgment of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, we would be far less concerned about the way his Government is being run.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PURCHASE OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs exhorted the United Nations to reduce world militarization, in particular by adhering to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. This Treaty calls on the countries of the world to use nuclear energy only for peaceful purposes.

How can the Prime Minister reconcile the speech his Minister gave to the United Nations yesterday with his Government's decision to buy nuclear-powered submarines?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend, the Leader of the Opposition, refers to the very good sense of the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Of course he is right. Just the other day the Minister of Veterans Affairs was saying how saddened he was that the Leader of the Opposition was leading the Liberal Party in such a leftist fashion away from our traditional alliances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): Did you say that, George?

Mr. Gauthier: He denies it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): You did not say that, George.

Mr. Mulroney: In fact, Mr. Speaker, he is going to take the Leader of the Opposition to the woodshed and straighten him out once and for all.

[Translation]

Regarding the Opposition Leader's question, obviously, as he knows very well, to ask the question is to answer it. There is no contradiction between the speech and the policy of the Canadian Government.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in continuing the testimony to the sagacity of the Minister of Veterans Affairs, I point out that in 1979 he spoke strongly against the concept of free trade with the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): A lot of good sense. So did the Prime Minister.

Mr. Axworthy: I said testimony to sagacity, not duplicity.

My question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: You can do better than that.

Mr. Axworthy: I will try, Mr. Prime Minister.

• (1425)

The point of the bizarre and unanswered questions with respect to the whole negotiation on trade, is why the Government has succeeded in getting an exemption for beer but did not make any similar attempt, or gain any similar exemption, for the crucial resource of water.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I think we now have an answer to the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Or for blood, for that matter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: I do not know what the Prime Minister washes his hair in.

A senior official of the Inland Waters and Lands Directorate of the Department of the Environment has now stated in an interview with the Associated Press that the Canadian Government during the negotiations put forward a specific request that water be exempted, but in the last hours of that negotiation the Canadian Government once again conceded and was prepared to withdraw its demand that water be exempted.

If that is the case, if water policy is left unaffected as the Prime Minister and his Ministers have been saying, why did the Government originally request an exemption? And, far more importantly, why in the eleventh hour of the negotiations did the Government once again concede on this very important issue which affects all Canadians?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the water in the hon. gentleman's knee has moved to his head. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that obliges Canada, or forces Canada, to sell water to the United States. The only mention of it, in fact, is bottled water, water in bottles, I suppose, Perrier water—that kind of water the hon. gentleman might be used to.

There is no danger to Canada's water resources. In addition, our Government, through our colleague, has announced a policy that we are not going to permit large scale sales of water as a natural resource to the United States. We must be believed, because the Newfoundland Coalition for Equality which had a big workshop on Sunday in St. John's had the awesome number of 25 people turn out to protest, and across the country there were perhaps 2,000 scattered here and there on this mighty day of protest. So they do not believe this kind of twisting of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Axworthy: After that convoluted answer, we know that water is certainly not the favourite drink of the Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Explain!

Mr. Axworthy: That is self-explanatory.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT WATER BE SPECIFICALLY EXCLUDED FROM AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): If I may be allowed to continue my question, Mr. Speaker, the Minister asserts that there is nothing obligatory, but the fact is the tariff schedule contains a reference to water, not mineral water, not aerated water, not whatever kind of water the Minister swallows or swishes, but any water is included in that agreement.

Therefore, considering that the United States is now taking liberties with the agreement and putting forward major proposals to change the rules dealing with subsidies, changing the rules dealing with the dispute settlement mechanism, I would ask the Hon. Minister if Mr. Burney, as he now continues the renegotiation of the agreement, is prepared to request specifically request that water be excluded under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and that that exclusion be written into the legislation the Minister is presenting to the House.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, like Winston Churchill, I have at times drunk water but only with a great deal of distaste, and when I had no other choice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That is why I sometimes sympathize with the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: With reference to the question of water, Canadians do not need a U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement to protect our sources of water. The Governments they elect, as long as they continue to elect us, will protect the water. Perhaps we would be in danger if the Liberal Party got in power because its Leader himself, in his famous book which I do not have here at the moment, suggested this might be an article for trade between the two countries. Why don't the two of them get together and discuss their preferences, with water or without water?

TAX REFORM

INSTITUTE FOR RESEARCH AND PUBLIC POLICY'S ANALYSIS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Four years ago this summer the Prime Minister, the Leader of the Opposition, and myself had an interesting debate in the course of a general election during which the Prime Minister said to the people of Canada that he believed in tax reform and, to use his immortal words, he believed that the rich should pay, and they should pay handsomely.

The Institute for Research and Public Policy yesterday published its analysis of the so-called tax reform of the Minister of Finance. It reached this conclusion, and I quote:

> —the majority of families were worse off in terms of disposable income in 1988 than they were in 1984.

It goes on to state that the only people who will be paying lower taxes after four years of Conservative government will be the richest 1 per cent of Canadians. Those earning $117,000 a year will get a $3,500 tax cut. All other Canadians will pay more.

Is this what the Prime Minister had in mind when he promised tax reform in 1984?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member would like to get another point of view on this, a very informed point of view. Let me provide it for him.

That particular study ignores the impact of the change in capital gains taxation—

Mr. Axworthy: That's a big help to families.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —the change in film taxation, the change in MURBs, and the change in earned depletion, all of which will reduce the impact of these tax shelters that have been brought in over the years. So there is a major negative impact on people in upper income brackets.

The other thing that this particular study does is it ignores the broad impact of economic policy by the Government, that is, the fact that 1,300,000 jobs have been created. It is very, very clear that we are number one in the industrialized world in terms of job creation.

Mr. Broadbent: We are talking about tax reform, come off it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the New Democratic Party wants to talk about tax reform.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what the question was about.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I am talking about tax reform, but I am also talking about tax reform in the context of total economic policy, that is, the effect that it has on people who are working today. There are 1,300,000 more people working today. That is one of the reasons why we have seen tax revenues go up for the Government of Canada.

This is a healthier economy. It is because of the tax reform changes and other changes that have been brought in by the Government to improve the operations of the economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EFFECT OF TAX REFORM

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. It was the Prime Minister who made the promise in 1984. It is the Prime Minister who is in the House. It is the Prime Minister who has the obligation to answer for his record, not the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that working men and women pay income tax on unemployment insurance benefits and that pensioners at the poverty level continue to pay income taxes, does the Prime Minister believe it is just that the only Canadians paying lower taxes in 1988, compared to when he was elected, are the richest 1 per cent, and they will have a $3,500 saving? Is that his concept of fairness?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will perhaps want to review some of the data on which he bases his question. With tax reform, 85 per cent of Canadian households will pay less income tax. Nine out of ten senior citizens will pay less income tax. Some 850,000 Canadians will no longer pay any income tax. They will have been removed from the rolls. That includes 250,000 seniors.

Among the many initiatives taken by the Minister of Finance—and I think indirectly my hon. friend in the past has made reference to some of the initiatives that he viewed as helpful in terms of establishing a greater degree of tax fairness—most objective people will recognize that there has been both the growth to which my hon. friend, the Minister, referred, plus a much greater degree of tax fairness across Canada since the Government was sworn in.

One of the consequences of that is a greater degree of fairness in regard to the number of people paying tax, and the number of people who have been removed from the tax rolls. I would think my hon. friend, the Leader of the NDP, would want to celebrate that kind of achievement on behalf of the ordinary taxpayer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would celebrate if the Prime Minister was dealing with the right year. The Prime Minister talks about reduced taxes this year compared to the big increases we saw in the previous two years of Tory Government. The study does not make a comparison with this year and last year. It makes a comparison with the period in which the Prime Minister made his promise in 1984.

[Translation]

That is the real context. Is the Prime Minister of Canada pleased that 99 per cent of Canadians have to pay more tax, while only the richest pay less? This is Conservative justice! Is the Prime Minister pleased with this program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance has already indicated, we do not necessarily accept all the data and conclusions drawn by the gentleman who prepared this source document. Many factors enter into an economic paper and I will give him another one that has an impact on government revenues and the fiscal situation. Last Friday, for example, Statistics Canada indicated that 41,000 new jobs were created in Quebec last month alone, whereas in the 55 months of the previous Liberal Government, 40,000 new jobs were created in Quebec. More jobs were created in Quebec in one month of Conservative Government than in 55 months under the Liberals, and that has an impact on the revenues of the Government of Canada.

THE ECONOMY

EFFECTS OF MONETARY POLICY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Yesterday, the Premiers of Quebec and Ontario met in Montreal to take stock of the situation, and, more specifically, to talk about economic and fiscal issues. Their conclusion as that the federal Government was on the wrong track, and that increases in interest rates, together with the increased value of the Canadian dollar compared to the American dollar, were having a disastrous effect on the Canadian economy and that high interest rates were causing inflation.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance when he will see the light and espouse the view of the chambers of commerce, economic research institutes and now the Premiers of Quebec and Ontario, that his monetary policy is having a disastrous impact on our country's economy and that our workers will have to bear the consequences of that policy a few months from now.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have to draw the Hon. Member's attention back to what happened in the 1970s and the early 1980s. He just referred to workers paying for the policies that we have introduced. I ask him to think back to the 1970s when the previous Government ignored the pressures of inflation. Over the last four or five months we have seen pressures building up in terms of 5.5 per cent and 6 per cent inflation in non-energy, non-food areas. That is the signal for inflation about which we are concerned. That is why we are following the policies that we have been following with respect to the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada.

I caution the Hon. Member that this is not to the extreme that he implies in his question. Interest rates, while they are higher than they were two or three months ago, are still lower than they were last October.

[Translation]

EQUITY IN TAXES

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance seems to think he is the only one who is in step, but isn't his monetary policy following the same line as his fiscal policy, which in fact is based on President Reagan's recommendations?

Mr. Speaker, yesterday Mr. Reagan, the President of the United States, made much of the fact that the Canadian Government was following the same policy as the U.S. administration, raising the taxes of people on low incomes and reducing taxes for people who earn more. The same issue was raised by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, and it was President Reagan who was proud of this fact. So . . .

Some Hon. Members: Question! Question!

Mr. Garneau: Don't get excited!

Why is the Minister of Finance, instead of taking the advice of Canadians, following the policy of the U.S. President who raises the taxes of the less fortunate and reduces the taxes of the rich?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we started our policy against inflation in this country in June last year. That was before there were any changes in the policy against inflation in the United States. We have a Canadian policy for Canadian inflation, to deal with our problems here in Canada. The Hon. Member asked whether the Government of Canada would be prepared to listen to the advice of other legitimate commentators. There are economists today who give legitimate advice on inflation. There are many views on the problem, but the Canadian Government's policy is definitely Canadian.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NERVE GAS TESTING AT SUFFIELD, ALTA.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister who, like the rest of us, I am sure, was shocked when he found out that the Department of National Defence had been testing highly toxic nerve gas at the Defence Research Establishment in Suffield, Alberta, and to learn that this nerve gas had been released into the atmosphere at least three times during the past year.

Does the Government of Canada manufacture this nerve gas at Suffield? Does it import the nerve gas? If so, from whom? Why did the Government allow this nerve gas to be released into the atmosphere without prior notification to the people living in the adjacent areas?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence has never made any bones about the fact that at Suffield, in an isolated area, we have tested nerve gas in small quantities, in laboratories and elsewhere, in order to protect our own troops in case they were ever faced with this situation.

I should point out in the case of the testing done outside, it was between 1.4 and 1.5 kilograms of nerve gas that was used in an area of 12 square miles from which everybody else was excluded at the time the tests were conducted.

At the present time we are negotiating in Geneva on the quantities countries can have for their own testing, and the suggested level is 1,000 kilograms. This was 1.4 to 1.5 kilograms.

QUERY ON ORIGIN OF GAS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Associate Minister of Defence. He did not answer the question whether or not Canada was manufacturing this nerve gas at Suffield. If not manufacturing it, was it importing it? If so, from whom?

The Government has allowed the testing of the Cruise missile in Canada. It has committed us as a country to purchasing a dozen nuclear powered hunter killer submarines. Now we find out that we are testing chemical weapons. These are the same weapons that we saw during recent events in the Iran-Iraq war. It is a very serious matter.

Are we manufacturing this nerve gas as a country, or are we importing it? If so, from whom? Will the Minister commit the Government that whenever this testing will occur in the future the residents of the area will receive prior notification?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it should be noted that testing is done on the Suffield range where there are no residents living. It is quite an isolated area.

I happen to believe that, because we deploy some of our Armed Forces in places such as the Golan Heights, Cyprus, and in some other areas where perhaps someone else might use nerve gas, we should test it in order that we are prepared to protect our own forces in case somebody uses it against us.

Mr. Riis: That's not the question.

Mr. Dick: I do not want to have them exposed to somebody else doing it and we know nothing about it.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

ASSOCIATION OF CANADIAN DISTILLERS' PUBLIC SERVICE ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Last fall the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare tabled a report in the House entitled "Booze, Pills & Dope: Reducing Substance Abuse in Canada".

One of the recommendations suggested the CRTC require beverage alcohol advertisers to provide public alcohol abuse educational messages.

The Association of Canadian Distillers produced a public service announcement for television that related equivalent amounts of beer, liquor, and wine as being equally dangerous to those who drink and drive, and the CRTC disallowed the announcement.

Will the Minister undertake with his cabinet colleagues the necessary review to allow this type of public service announcement to be aired on television?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the role of the CRTC the Hon. Member will know that it is a quasi-judicial body. In respect to the representations that were made on behalf of the Government respecting alcohol advertising, it is my understanding that the CRTC has ruled that the ads that were submitted for approval from the distillers' association, while equivalency was one of the arguments, there was no counterpoint to that relating to use or abuse, especially keeping in mind that the Government has come in with a drinking and driving program in co-operation with the provinces, and also the drug and alcohol strategy.

If the distillers' association wants to come in with a program such as I suggested, that is, 15 per cent of its advertising to be used for alternate advertising, that is fine, and I wish that it would do so. The question it would then have to answer to the CRTC is, how it is relating this to abuse rather than attempting in some way, as identified by the CRTC, to have its name in the public relating to advertisements, even though they were equivalency advertisements.

PUBLIC WORKS

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST MEMBER FOR JOLIETTE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister, and it is a question that no other Minister can answer.

When the Prime Minister said over the weekend that the allegations against the Member for Joliette were unfounded, what was that statement based on? Had the Prime Minister received a report from the ongoing inquiry by the RCMP? If not, why did he make that statement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know it will surprise the Hon. Member, but the statement was made on the presumption of innocence.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me then ask the Prime Minister the following question. With an investigation going on, would it not have been better, and would his office not have been stronger if he had refrained from making comments, or reserved comment until the result of the investigation was known? That is what the Minister of Supply and Services did.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is going to go down in the annals of hypocrisy, asking me to refrain from making comments about defending the integrity of someone after all the members of the Opposition in the Liberal Party have been doing is slander Mr. LaSalle and saying that he is guilty without any evidence being brought forward.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Mulroney: This has been said by Liberals in the House of Commons, and that is a disgraceful way to do it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Who said that?

Mr. Mulroney: Boudria.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—PROPOSED SEISMIC TESTING

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the plan of Energy, Mines and Resources to start seismic testing in the Queen Charlotte Islands, despite the fact that there are important commercial fisheries there, and despite the fact that scientists raise the issue of the effect on fish and whales.

Would the Minister not agree that, prior to any such seismic testing, there ought to be a full environmental assessment of the consequences, and that there ought to be a public inquiry, a public process as part of this environmental assessment?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the decision by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources was based on a study that had been done in concert with all interested parties, in connection with which there had been considerable public participation, on the basis of which it was decided that the testing in question would not compromise the heritage values surrounding the proposed park.

REQUEST FOR FULL ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, while there is scientific opinion on both sides of this issue, and certainly in the State of California, and also information from Norway suggests that the effects might be detrimental, the State of California is not going ahead on the basis of scientific assessment.

• (1450)

Will the Minister assure us that there will be a full environmental assessment before the area is opened up to exploration and drilling? Will he also assure us that this will include an opportunity for the public to take part, given the very great importance of this question for the environment and the supposed commitment of the Government and the Minister of Energy to include the environment in all economic decision making?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has implied that the public has not been consulted or involved in any process leading up to the decision. Nothing could be further from the truth. Indeed, in addition to public consultation, there has been very close co-operation among all the relevant Departments and Ministers, including myself and my Department and the Department of my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

The information I have, with which I am totally satisfied, is that every due care is being taken to protect both the natural environment and the parks and heritage values at stake surrounding the proposed national park reserve in the area.

CLIFFORD ROBERT OLSON—PAROLE ELIGIBILITY QUERIED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Solicitor General. Media stories have given rise to worry and concern among the loved ones of the victims of Clifford Robert Olson, as well as the parents of young and teen-aged boys and girls, who fear that if released this criminal will live in their town or city.

Is any consideration whatsoever being given to granting this criminal a parole on a daily, weekly, monthly or yearly basis in the immediate future, or at any time before he dies?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that I cannot speak for the National Parole Board which has complete jurisdiction in this matter. However, I can tell him and those families affected that Mr. Olson will not be eligible for parole until the year 2006. In addition, over the past several months we have changed the criteria for releasing people on parole so that now the only criterion is whether or not releasing a person would constitute an undue risk to society. I would think it would go without saying that Mr. Olson would.

AGRICULTURE

BROILER EGG HATCHING AGENCY—REQUEST FOR IMPORT CONTROLS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. He knows that the Canada-U.S. trade deal prevents the Government from taking proper action on unfair competition from U.S. farm products coming into Canada or putting in place proper import controls. For example, the Broiler Egg Hatching Agency has been asking the Minister for months to put in place import controls on their product. Three producers have already gone out of business because of unfair competition.

How many producers of this commodity is the Minister prepared to see put out of business before he will bring in proper import controls?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the content of the Hon. Member's question bears no greater degree of accuracy than that of his Leader's question yesterday with reference to the FTA and our dairy policy.

The Hon. Member knows there is a process which you are required to enter into and have concluded. As I indicated yesterday, we have already moved a long list of items from the tariff list to the import/export list. When that is done, notification of our trading partners is required under GATT. We have served notice to the Americans with reference to the dairy aspect and we are awaiting their response only with reference to a timetable for meetings to discuss the level of imports.

We are not quite to that stage with reference to this particular industry. However, we gave a firm commitment when we established the national agency that we would complete the process and we have every intention of following through on that commitment.

HORTICULTURE

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES—CONTROL OF BULK SHIPMENT AND CONSIGNMENT SELLING

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister tell us, with respect to the control of bulk shipment and consignment selling of fruits and vegetables, when he is going to bring in legislation and regulations to control the situation? He will recall last year that the cherry industry in southern Ontario was destroyed because of his lack of action. Is he prepared to bring in legislation and regulations this summer to control that, or is that industry going to be sacrificed on the altar of free trade as well?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member will recognize that legislation has been on the statute books of this country for about six or seven years.

Mr. Foster: It is the amendments we need, John.

Mr. Wise: It has been used only once or twice. Indeed, when we were in Government in 1979 we utilized it.

We have given a commitment that we will be bringing forward amendments to the CAPS Act. We have every intention of fulfilling that commitment. Again, it requires notification of trading partners, which notification has been completed.

This is an important piece of legislation and will give that industry some safeguards it has not had for the last seven or eight years. When the Bill is introduced in the House I hope we have unanimous consent from both opposition Parties to move it through the House in all stages, hopefully in one day.

PIPELINES

WATER SUPPLY FOR SASKATCHEWAN CITIES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the city of Regina is one of the few major cities in the country which does not have a safe and adequate long-term supply of water. In fact, in the last election the Prime Minister promised a water pipeline for the cities of Regina and Moose Jaw. In the first Question Period after the 1984 election I asked him to indicate when we could expect some action on his promise. He replied "Soon".

Four years have passed and southern Saskatchewan is experiencing a terrible drought. I ask again when does the Prime Minister intend to act on his promise to ensure that the people of Regina and Moose Jaw have an adequate long-term supply of water?

Some Hon. Members: Soon!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well the action taken by this Government and my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, in putting forward a water supply for the people of Regina that was not only adequate but also consumable. I think the people of Regina would recognize that as a fact.

The other thing I would like to draw to the attention of the Hon. Member is the action taken by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, and the Government of Saskatchewan, in developing the water supply in the South Saskatchewan River system.

PROJECTED PIPELINE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is again directed to the Prime Minister. The promise was a water pipeline so that Regina would have an adequate long-term supply of water. People are rationing water. We do not have a long-term supply. Meanwhile, the Prime Minister is trying to buy a seat for his friend, Lucien Bouchard, with taxpayers' money.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the question I would like to ask on behalf of the people of Regina and Moose Jaw is when will the Prime Minister fulfil his commitment to the people? Can we expect some action? Like I asked in 1984, when will it be done?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, constituents in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean will be very upset to hear an NDP Member criticizing the federal Government for trying to help a peripheral region. The New Democrats ought to be ashamed of objecting to measures aimed at helping a remote region.

• (1500)

[English]

With regard to the people of Saskatchewan, I think they will recognize very, very quickly that this is the Government that most quickly responded to their needs in a dozen different areas, including agriculture for openers.

With regard to the matter raised by my hon. friend, the Premier and I, at the ministerial level, have had important discussions which, no doubt, I believe will give the people of Saskatchewan a degree of satisfaction in that area, as we have done in so many principal areas of life on the Prairies.

HEALTH

AIDS DISEASE—INCIDENCE AMONG HOMOSEXUALS

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The Ontario Government has come out with an information packet on AIDS called "Let's Talk", but it does not address the fact that the greatest purveyors of this disease, 82 per cent to 90 per cent, are male homosexuals, obviously a result of a powerful lobby.

The Minister has indicated that new dollars will be allocated toward education on AIDS. Will he assure the House that young people will be made aware of the consequence of the sexual lifestyle of homosexuality? Will he call upon the homosexual community to exercise self-control in sexual practices in light of the consequences, not only within that community but, indeed, all society?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Government has announced, as Members of the House well know, an additional $129 million for the AIDS program over and above the $39 million which the Government announced previously. As part of the program, Mr. Speaker, education always has a twofold effect. We believe that with more education especially vulnerable young Canadians can be given correct information.

With respect to high risk groups identified in the war against AIDS, there is no question that as we can bring more information forward it is helpful. In terms of people taking responsibility for their actions in changing high risk sexual practices, obviously that would be helpful in reducing both the incidence and spread of AIDS.

ENERGY

NEWFOUNDLAND—HIBERNIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, for nearly four years the Government has been flogging Hibernia offshore oil and gas development as an electoral carrot holding it up before the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

Last Thursday in St. John's, the federal Minister of Energy said that the development is basically on hold because of the inability of the Government to reach any kind of deal with the consortium headed by Mobil Oil. Last night in Calgary—a few days later—the same Minister suggested that a deal was imminent.

My question was for the Prime Minister who has since disappeared, but I suppose it will now go to the Member for St. John's West—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Tobin: —and is straightforward. Can the Minister tell the House today exactly what is the status of the Hibernia oil and gas potential development? Can he tell the House what concessions have been made by both Governments, particularly by the lead Government, the national Government, to stimulate Mobil Oil and its partners to have a look at Hibernia development?

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Energy I do want to report that negotiations have been going on for some time now. Offers have been made to Mobil and its partners.

Hopefully, as the Minister of Energy has said publicly, we will be able to get on with this particular project, but the matter is clearly now in the hands of the companies to respond to the offer.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, a short supplementary.

SHARING OF ROYALTIES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundland traditionally has the highest level of unemployment in the country and we badly need high quality good paying jobs. I want to tell the Minister that we do not want a job today if we sell out our rights and the royalties forever to Hibernia.

Can the Minister assure the House today, and through the House the people of Newfoundland, that the Government will resist the temptation to boost its sagging political fortunes here in Ottawa, and the sagging political fortunes of the Peckford administration, by giving away the shop to get a quick announcement on Hibernia and, in the process, deny Newfoundlanders and Canadians their rightful share of the royalties to Hibernia development in the decades ahead?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to tell the House that there was a meeting in Calgary yesterday with representatives of Mobil and the other persons involved in the consortium. It was a very positive meeting. Intensive negotiations are now following as a result of that.

The Government, well aware of the needs of Newfoundland and, in fact, all of Canada because all of Canada will benefit, from Newfoundland right to Alberta, with the development of Hibernia, has made the company a most generous and comprehensive offer to assist in this period of low oil prices.

We don't know—this has nothing to do with elections—if the latter goes forward we will be delighted. If it doesn't go forward, we will be very sorry but the people of Newfoundland and the people of Canada will know we did one hell of a lot better than hon. gentlemen opposite who stopped progress on Hibernia for 10 years while in office.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member for York Centre on a question of privilege and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Regina East.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED ACCUSATION BY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege arising from the Question Period out of an accusation made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I attempted informally across the floor to give him and the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) notice of the fact that this question was being raised. Both have left the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is perfectly relevant.

Mr. Kaplan: I gave them notice. They have left the House. I, of course, have not seen the "blues", but the statement that I have coming from the Prime Minister was, "All of the members of the Opposition are accusing"—meaning the Member from Joliette (Mr. La Salle)—"of being guilty". I call on the Prime Minister to apologize and to withdraw that allegation.

During Question Period today and yesterday I asked questions about allegations against the Hon. Member for Joliette made not by members of the Official Opposition but made by a Tory organizer named Glen Kealey—

Mr. Speaker: As I understand the question of privilege, the Hon. Member for York Centre is advising the Chair that he has not yet seen the "blues" but that his memory is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, "All of the members of the Opposition are accusing" and then went on. I have not seen the "blues" either. I think the appropriate thing to do before we get into a lot of peripheral matters, which have nothing very much to do with the words complained of, is for me to examine the "blues" very carefully. I will report back to the House, and I may call on other Members to speak.

With that in mind, I might ask the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I will conclude, but at the same time while you are examining the "blues" you may find similar supportive unjustified allegations made by the members of the government Party, and I would appreciate your examination of those remarks as well.

Mr. Speaker: There was an exchange. I cannot, any more than other Hon. Members, remember every word. I think the best thing to do at the moment is for Hon. Members to look at the "blues". I know the Hon. Member for York Centre will do so, and so will others on the government side. I will examine them and come back to the Chamber, and if there is any need to raise the matter further I will ensure that that is done.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Ask for your own independent set of the "blues".

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) suggests that I get my own independent set of the "blues". I thank the hon. gentleman very much for that advice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

ALLEGED IMPUTATION OF MOTIVE

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I also invite you to check the "blues" in terms of the response which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave me.

I understand from his response to my question that the Prime Minister imputed a motive to me that I was not concerned about the interests of the constituents of Lac-Saint-Jean. By the Prime Minister's reply he seemed to indicate that the interests of the people of Regina were at odds with the interests of the people of Lac-Saint-Jean.

I would suggest, if I may, Mr. Speaker, that you check the "blues". I believe the Prime Minister was imputing a motive in terms of my question and I ask your ruling on that at some time.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Once again, I will of course consider what was actually said and I will return to the Chamber at an appropriate time. If necessary, I will hear the Hon. Member further.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn, and the amendments of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra, (p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent, (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman, (p. 15620).

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, this morning, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. Following him, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) rose to speak in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. Following him, the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) rose to speak in favour of the Meech Lake Accord.

I hear people in my constituency of Etobicoke—Lakeshore and elsewhere around the country criticizing the Meech Lake Accord as a document that somehow diminishes the role of the Government of Canada. It struck me, as I listened to the Leaders this morning, that the very best thing I could do would be to reproduce those three speeches by those three Party Leaders and send copies of them to those people.

When the national Leaders of our three main Parties are speaking in favour of the Meech Lake Accord, that most surely represents a deliberate and clear conclusion that this is not an instrument for weakening the Government of Canada or the central purposes of our country but rather for maintaining and strengthening them. Each of the three Party Leaders represents the collective wisdom, advice and counsel that each would have received from those experts in matters of constitutional law, Canadian history and indeed partisan considerations, and in all cases they came forward to speak in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. That is not the position that would be taken, I submit, by national Leaders of any Party if in fact the Meech Lake Accord were, as its critics allege, somehow weakening and undermining the Government of Canada and its positive role in Canadian federalism.

Let us not make perfection the enemy of the good. That statement was made by the Right Hon. Prime Minister this morning, and I was so happy to hear him succinctly express something that in other forums I too have been trying to express. For example, in connection with disabled Canadians, I have recently been saying that part of the difficulty in Canada is this image of perfection that is held out. As soon as we begin to recognize that the image of imperfection is more accurately reflective of human condition and human society, the closer we will be to realism and in turn to a more gentle and caring society. If it applies there, it is no less true in application to matters of constitutional law.

Perfection in a Constitution perhaps could be achieved by each of us individually, sitting in the splendid isolation of our libraries or some other quiet place, putting pen to paper and writing down what according to our own personal lights might be the perfect Constitution for Canada. The beauty of a democracy, however, is that there is never any one person who has all the answers, and that what we achieve is truly a blending through political debate and through political compromise of various points of view.

Certainly, I agree with all of those who spoke, the Prime Minister and the two opposition Leaders, who said that we do not have in the Meech Lake Accord perfection. There are points in the Accord with which I do not agree. My own view with respect to the Senate, for example, is that the only way to reform the Senate is to abolish it.

I am a native of the Province of Ontario where there was an elected Upper House under our Constitution from 1841 to 1867, as for instance so did the Province of Prince Edward Island at one stage in its history have an elected Upper House. We went through that experience and found it was unnecessary. We found that indeed, in a democratic country like ours, with all the different levels of Government, we have more than enough elected representatives to speak for and to represent the Canadian people.

I have deeply held views on the importance of ending the existence of the Canadian Senate as an institution that has long since outlived its historical role in this country. Yet, there is in the Meech Lake Accord provision for getting on in the next phase with discussions to see how the Senate can be reformed. Each of us, I submit, must look at the Meech Lake Accord, and although there are parts in it that may rankle and may not accord with our own views, we have to see that there is something greater here.

I have listened to a lot of debate and discussion. I see in the House the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). He and I were debating this issue recently, not in the Chamber but in fact in a television studio. There were many people who came forward from the audience and expressed their concerns and points of view. What struck me as I heard some of these criticisms was that there seems to be a propensity in Canada for loading on to whatever vehicle is passing all the freight that it can carry. I do not know if this comes from something in our pioneer background. People were scattered across a fairly empty land. Someone who was stranded in the North was happy to see the bush pilot arrive, and those on a homestead were happy to see the wagon finally come by. They wanted to get everyone on the aircraft or on the wagon at once. Our approach intrinsically seems to be that whatever is going by, we want to load all of the traffic onto it.

I see the same thing happening with the free trade debate. We are dealing with a treaty that governs the trading arrangement between two countries, and on the one hand some Canadians are saying that that document is the panacea that will solve all of our problems. At the other extreme, people are saying that with this approach, in 25 years the country will be gone. They are putting onto the free trade debate all kinds of issues relating to cultural sovereignty and the like. No matter how many times they read the document and see that those issues are not touched, no matter how many times Ministers of the Crown rise in the Chamber to give assurances of that, there are still people who want to load all of this extra traffic onto the vehicle of the free trade debate. The same is happening with Meech Lake.

I am hearing the argument, for example, that the position of native Canadians, the position of women, the position of disabled people and the position of so many other groups in society will be adversely affected by the Meech Lake Accord. I would like to speak to that for a moment or two. There is one historic moment here that we must recognize. This is not the one and only time, the now or never chance, that we will have to deal with all of these issues of aboriginal rights, the position of women and the position of Canadians with disabilities, but it is the one and only time, the now or never chance, to say yes to Québec.

In 1980, Quebec said yes to Canada and Quebec is still waiting. That was the verdict of Quebec in 1980 when the people of that province held a referendum to make a choice between thinly disguised separatism and a renewed federalism. As someone who believes profoundly in the importance of referenda and plebiscites in our system, I watched closely what happened in the Province of Quebec. I saw the people of that province at organizational levels, levels of families and parishes, and everywhere possible meeting and debating. It was a cathartic experience for Quebecers to be put to that choice. They made the choice and in the majority they said yes to Canada, yes to renewed federalism.

There was another chance after Quebec was sidelined in the 1982 approach to amending the Constitution and entrenching the Charter. The result of that in 1982 was Quebec's isolation which, as J. W. Pickersgill has said, was to leave a grievance and a wound open in Canadian political society.

The 1987 constitutional accord has again held out to Quebec the promise of a renewed federalism. This is the second chance and the second time that Quebec has said yes. This time it was not the people in a referendum, it was the men and women who are the democratically elected representatives of the people of Quebec voting in the Quebec Legislative Assembly who voted in favour of the Meech Lake Accord.

As in baseball, whether you are playing for the Toronto Blue Jays or the Montreal Expos, the rule is three strikes and you're out. So it is in constitutional law and what is happening in this country in terms of the position of Québec in relation to the rest of the country. Quebec has said yes twice and it must not have to say that again. Québec has now made its position clear.

All the years when I was growing up in Ontario, living in the West, and living in Quebec, I heard other Canadians ask, "What does Quebec want?". The answer came in five very specific questions, very specific answers and proposals by Premier Robert Bourassa. It was to those five specific proposals that a response has been made and embodied in the Meech Lake Accord.

We have voted in this House on this question before and we voted affirmatively. Now, months later, we are being asked to do it again because the other place has succumbed to the smaller view of Canada, the Lilliputians who tied down with a thousand small threads the great giant who otherwise could stand and walk proudly and freely.

Let us transcend the legitimate but smaller points of debate. In the symbolism of politics I believe that some statements and some acts can transcend and transform. There is now an opportunity to transcend, to go beyond the legal minimum of what national unity requires and into a patriotic sharing of the full promise of Canadianism.

I will vote again in favour of the Meech Lake Accord because I believe that we in the Parliament of Canada must say yes to Quebec and to renewed federalism which meets Quebec's needs to preserve and promote its distinct society within Canada yet safeguards the federal Government's role as the voice of all Canadians and respects the equality of all provinces. Not to do so would cast doubts about our commitment here in the 33rd Parliament to a renewed federalism which, I repeat, acknowledges the reality of Quebec as a distinct society within Canada.

I believe we are long past the point where the Accord can be reopened or renegotiated. I believe there has been no demonstrated need to reopen it or to renegotiate it. Take for example the submissions made by some of the women's groups in Canada which say that somehow the Meech Lake Accord is going to undermine the position of women in Canada.

I have here the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Section 15 says that every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination including discrimination on the basis of sex. Has Section 15 of the Charter been repealed? No, it is still a vigorous and entrenched part of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms which, by virtue of the Meech Lake Accord, is now going to apply to all Canadians including Canadian women who live in Quebec.

This not an undermining of the position of Canadian women but an enhancement of it by the very fact that years after the Charter was included in our Constitution the Government of the Province of Quebec has signed its agreement, indicating that in laws enacted in that province, it will be subject to Section 15 and all other provisions of the Charter.

There are other provisions in the Charter. There is Section 28. Again, I mention this in the context of some of the lamentations which are being made by women's groups. Section 28 says:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Charter, the rights and freedoms referred to in it are guaranteed equally to male and female persons.

Has Section 28 of the Charter been ripped up? No, it has not. It is still in our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It has not been repealed, it is there. It is guaranteeing the protection, the equal rights, and the equal freedoms of women with men in Canadian society.

Therefore, why in this debate in our country are groups trying to undermine the effort to, at long last, bring Quebec fully into a renewed federalism by trotting out arguments that the Meech Lake Accord is somehow detrimental to the position of Canadian women? It is a snare and a delusion to argue that way. I must say that those who so argue are doing a tremendous disservice to the great possibilities and prospects which are currently and have historically been before us for a renewed federalism along the lines set out in the Meech Lake Accord.

When the joint Senate and House committee heard testimony on this point there were many who spoke to this very issue. For example, on the issue of sexual equality—and I am not leaving this point because I believe it is fundamentally important and the one that raised perhaps the most concern before the committee—William Lederman, the dean of Canadian constitutional scholars, to name but one, told the legislators on that committee that the Charter "speaks loudly and clearly and it rides right through".

The Meech Lake Accord does not change the Charter. The Charter is there with Section 15 and Section 28. That is why even, for example, the Fédération des femmes du Quebec and Quebec's Conseil du statut de la femme told the committee that women's rights are not threatened by the distinct society clause.

The distinct society clause is an interpretive provision in the Constitution, as is the section that talks about our Charter being interpreted according to the multicultural traditions of Canada, and as are the other interpretive provisions to be found therein. There is clear need to think back to that referendum and to what the people of Québec said with eloquence which speaks so loudly when, in a deliberate act of casting a ballot, men and women indicated a conscious choice which they had made.

• (1530)

There was moving testimony given before the joint committee by Yolande Chaput-Rolland, an ardent partisan of federalism, a renewed federalism, in all she said and fought for during that referendum campaign in 1980. This is what she told the committee:

[Translation]

For me it is really the first time that I have felt I won that referendum.

[English]

"For me it was really the first time that I had felt, yes, I won that referendum". Let us answer Madam Chaput-Rolland and every other Canadian who is prepared to go beyond the points of difference, the legitimate but smaller issues, and see an historic opportunity to move Canada to a new plateau in its evolution.

This is the unfinished business that was begun by a former Prime Minister in his effort to entrench the Charter of Rights, to have an amending formula that would allow Canadians to see our own Constitution amended here in our own country. That process was begun but it has yet to be completed. We are now in the process of completing it.

I stand as the representative for the men and women of Etobicoke—Lakeshore, an Ontario constituency, and say with deepest conviction as a Canadian that I will stand in this House and vote in favour of the Meech Lake Accord.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments? Debate.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, one year after the Meech Lake Accord was born, a date historians will not remember as a great day for Canada, a strong case can be made for rejecting it. Canadians would be badly served by this Constitutional Accord. It was arrived at without public consultation, driven by the notion that a yes vote for Canada in the 1980 Quebec plebiscite requires reciprocation. It makes only one province responsible for the promotion of linguistic rights. It is based on an outdated vision of a Canada mortgaged by the distinct society concept which could lead to the two-nation idea, a view of Canada pursued by the Progressive Conservative Party in the 1960s. It would jeopardize the equal opportunities provided to all Canadians in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This is where I disagree fully with the Hon. Member who just spoke.

The process also must be severely criticized. The way the Accord was arrived at can only be described by one word: awful. The process pre-empted any reasonable thoughtful input by any interested citizens, who were left out in the cold by 11 omniscient politicians playing kings. Interested Canadians were politely listened to by the joint parliamentary committee but their concerns were ignored. Indeed, the process did not produce a single amendment. What a disgraceful performance, so much in contrast with our fine democratic traditions and practices.

As many have noted, the Accord reveals a severe imbalance. While each of the proposed changes transfers powers to the provinces, there is no transfer of power to the federal state. If the Accord is approved, the national Government will emerge weaker. At a time when social programs, education, environment, international issues require new and creative federal roles, Ottawa strips itself of powers needed to tackle the future. What a vision of Canada this Progressive Conservative Government reveals.

Fortunately, Canadians have realized the dangers of the Accord. Public support has rapidly been declining. Provincial premiers who signed the Accord are gradually being knocked off by their electors. Witness New Brunswick and Manitoba. Some of those in power have admitted there are flaws. Time will take care of these short-sighted self appointed constitutional wizards, unperturbed by the absence of public input, inebriated by power, blissfully applying the "trust me" school of decision-making. If you have ever searched for a classical example of pornography of power, there is one here.

The disturbing fact about this Accord is that while technically it has not yet and may never come into force, its spirit is already being applied in the shaping of laws presently going through Parliament. The Environmental Protection Bill presently in the Senate is a case in point. There is the pathetic scene of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) first trumpeting this Bill as the strongest ever federal legislation in Canada that will remove and prevent all polluting evils from the face of the nation. He emphasizes that the federal Government will proceed on its own in enforcing its legislation. However, one day he appears before the legislative committee sheepishly requesting amendments to his own Bill. Why? Because Ottawa must consult first with the provinces before making federal environmental regulations.

The federal Government yields again when it decides not to apply federal environmental protection standards if a province comes up with provisions considered to be equivalent, whatever that word means. What has happened? There is no political will. The Government has given up on its federal mandate. It will not establish national standards of environmental protection for all Canadians.

The Meech Lake virus has infected the thought process of the Government and weakened Canadian federalism. The Coalition on the Constitution, which is comprised of the Canadian Environmental Law Association, the Citizens Network on Waste Management, Energy Probe, Pollution Probe, in a letter to the joint committee dated December 10, 1987, made two significant points regarding the Accord and the environment. First, commenting on the environment Bill, they said that this is a step backward from existing federal law. Second, commenting on Section 9 of the Meech Lake Accord which allows provinces to opt out from national programs, they said that this provision could apply to national environmental programs, undermining the ability of the federal Government to provide national standards of environmental protection.

The same can be said, alas, for national social programs because they too will be affected.

Another upsetting aspect of the Accord is how Canada and Canadian society are described, something that you could call the heart and soul of the Accord. A constitution should make the citizen say with a certain degree of pride: "Yes, I recognize myself in that definition of Canada". That is what a good constitution is all about. Instead, we see a definition which excludes millions of Canadians. If you are an aboriginal, you have been left out. If you do not speak English or French, and many good solid decent citizens do not speak English or French, you have been left out.

In other words, the Accord fails to describe all the people of this country: the new Canada that has emerged in recent decades and first Canadians.

The description of the Canadian society in the Accord is not the Canada of today, it is the myopic view of tired politicians who failed to recognize the society they were supposed to understand and represent. What did the 11 wizards do in the middle of the night while the nation was sleeping? They provided, if indeed the courts will accept at all the distinct society notion, a springboard for special status to one province, thus laying the foundation of a duality which could lead to the creation of a two nation Canada. That is what they did. What a prospect. This is certainly not the Canada Canadians want for themselves, for their children or for their grandchildren. The evidence produced in the Senate, and the contributions made by Senators, is sufficient to convince any reasonable person that the Accord should not be supported. The evidence contained in Issue No. 6 of the proceedings of the Senate submissions group, most ably chaired by Senator Molgat, says it all. I would like to quote from the report which deals with the comments of 43 groups and individuals on the Accord.

> Many Canadians fear that the rights accorded to them by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms will be diminished by the linguistic duality and distinct identity clause. Women's groups, French speaking Canadians living outside Quebec, English speaking Canadians living in that province, to name but a few groups, want the Accord amended to ensure that their charter rights will not be diminished by the "linguistic duality-distinct society" clause.

And I quote again:

> Aboriginal organizations stated that they are left out of the description of Canada . . . Aboriginal people asked to be recognized as distinct societies.

Some witnesses say the Accord does very little to promote multiculturalism. They request that it also be recognized as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, and so on.

• (1540)

One has to conclude so far that the only parliamentary institution which has really defended the views of people, the rights of Canadians, and made a really powerful contribution to this debate, is the Senate. The Senate held hearings that were meaningful. It moved amendments and certainly did not vote for the Accord. The House of Commons hardly had a debate a year ago on this matter. One would think, then, in light of the evidence brought out in the Senate, in the wake of the language dispute in Saskatchewan, in light of the defeat of Premier Hatfield and Premier Pawley, in light of the tensions caused every day by Bill C-101 and the pending Supreme Court decision, in light of the substantial decline in public support for the Accord, that the present Government would stop and think instead of having the Prime Minister engage in threats against those who do not agree with the Accord.

Would it not, I ask, be in the public interest to find out what "distinct society" really means in constitutional terms, what the consequences would be to national unity if such a term were to have legal meaning? After all, a reference to the Supreme Court is not novel. In 1981, former Prime Minister Trudeau referred the constitution proposal of that time to the Supreme Court. "Oh, but listen", some say at this point, "you don't need to worry too much now. If amendments are needed, there will be a chance to make amendments on a second round. Approve the Accord now. We can improve it later". I submit, this is utter nonsense. These people who are not accepting changes now will not accept changes in a second round. If they are serious about changes, why not make the changes now? Why go ahead with constitutional changes when almost everyone agrees it is bad for Canada?

The amendment the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and I are proposing tries to define Canada and Canadians. It is a description of the Canadian people in contemporary terms, the very people for whom this Constitution is written. We wrote this motion with three thoughts in mind, first, to offer a mirror of contemporary Canadian society, second, to strengthen the notion of one Canada with two official languages and, third, to highlight an historical fact and evolution over time. In our amendment, aboriginal Canadians are included. Canadians who do not speak either English or French are included, and the distribution of English and French speaking Canadians across the nation is described. This amendment describes today's Canadian scene, the new Canada to which present and future generations belong. If, in reading this amendment, each Canadian recognizes himself or herself, then we will have succeeded in our effort. I invite the House to examine it and support it. Our amendment reads:

> That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule
> (a) by deleting Section 2(1) and substituting the following therefor:
> "2(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada consists of aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec",
> (b) by deleting Section 2(3).

In so doing, we bring together a concept, a mirror of Canada, which we think is contemporary, one that does not leave out one Canadian citizen, because one would be too many. We recognize in this motion the linguistic duality of this country and the spread of the population from coast to coast according to the language they speak. When we hear someone in this House say: "Let us not make perfection an enemy of the good", we believe that kind of approach is a signal for settling for less than mediocrity. We do not want to have a Constitution that is less than mediocrity. We have had the time and we have the skills and ability to produce a Constitution that corresponds with the composition of the society of today, not only that, but a Constitution that will not lay the foundation for division in future times. The Conservative Government vision of Canada is the wrong vision. It must be rejected.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). I am reminded that he was the former Minister of the Environment, a portfolio in which precious little was accomplished. Yet day after day we hear him comment and criticize the great work our Government has done on the environment. We hear again today some relatively hollow remarks from the Hon. Member with respect to the Meech Lake Accord.

I am not sure if the Member was in the House this morning when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke, but I disagree strongly with the Hon. Member for Davenport when he says the Accord should be a perfect document. We are not saying it is mediocre. We are saying it is a good document. One of the telling points the Prime Minister made, I thought, was that Quebec should participate in the final completion or other phases of the document to deal with the aboriginal people or if there are some issues surrounding women as well. Why would the Hon. Member deny the people of Quebec the right and obligation to participate in future improvements to that important document?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I am certain the majority of people in Quebec would want to have the best possible constitutional agreement that can be arrived at, and that the majority of Quebecers do not really wish to be singled out and given a special status. That is what the issue is all about. Quebec's vision of its own role in Canada is one that encompasses this nation from coast to coast. It wants to be in a Canadian federalist state in which no one is given special privileges. I am sure that Quebecers are the last ones who would want to be given special privileges.

What I am saying in my intervention is that we have here a document which was arrived at without public consultation. That in itself is a poor process. In a way it is a signal to members of the public that politicians know better than they, the people for whom the Constitution was written. I am saying that this proposal which we have before us today makes only one province responsible for the promotion of linguistic rights. That is not the approach that Quebecers or anyone who speaks French in Canada would want to have. We want to have this responsibility across the nation, as it should be because in law and linguistically we are a society which speaks two languages.

We are saying that the concept of a distinct society could lead one day to a two-nation Canada which is a concept that the Party of the Hon. Member fondly developed in the 1960s and one which it has flirted with on more than one occasion.

That in itself is reason enough for speaking against the Meech Lake Accord. Who wants to lay the foundation with this document for future generations of politicians to say: "Well, there is a distinct society clause in the Accord which allows, gives us the premise, the jumping board to claim one day that actually one province should become a separate nation"? That is not what the majority of Quebecers want. The Hon. Member has it all wrong.

If one looks at the totality of the document before us and the impact that it has and adds to that the description of Canadian society in Section 2(1), which is so outdated, one cannot help but say that this exercise, this drafting has to be sent back to the drawing-board to be started all over again. In the long term it is not a real definition of Canada. It is not a good document in the long term for Canadian unity.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is talking about the idea of perfection, and I gather he is, then I think he is being misleading. I do not know what he did before he was a politician, whether he was a teacher, a businessman or something else. In any endeavour I think one works toward the greatest degree of success along with a number of men and women attacking the problem. However, there comes a point in time when a decision has to be made and we must move on. One cannot keep striving for that perfection. Maybe that is what he was trying to do in the environment portfolio when he was Minister. Is that the reason he accomplished nothing?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would be the last one to boast about my record as Minister of the Environment. I would seriously question the Hon. Member's concept of a healthy democracy when constitutional amendments are made and the people who will be affected by them are not consulted and when no amendment will be accepted in the process. That is not a definition of perfection. That is simply a definition of healthy democracy which we apply in our country in every walk of life. We seem to have forgotten that in the evolution of this most important and central document, the Constitution of Canada. What is wrong with healthy consultation with the public?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Prud'homme: Time!

Mr. McDermid: —I want to question the statement that the Hon. Member made about public consultation on the Constitution and on the Meech Lake Accord. The Constitution has been the subject of consultation with the provinces and with people from all walks of life for many, many years.

Back in 1980 and 1981 when the former Prime Minister and most of the First Ministers reached an agreement on the Constitution, it was done with a great deal of negotiation and bargaining in the back rooms. We all remember the Hon. Roy McMurtry, the Hon. Jean Chrétien and the Hon. Roy Romanow and the deals they were cutting in the back kitchen to bring the Constitution together for the First Ministers of the land. We remember at the time the joy there was because a decision had been made, although it was not perfect. We also remember that at the time one province was left out. The Meech Lake Accord has a great deal to do with bringing that province in.

Since that time there has been public consultation among people in all walks of life. The Hon. Member knows that full well. If the Hon. Member had paid any attention to the election campaign of 1984 and the speech that the Prime Minister gave in the Province of Quebec on the constitutional Accord and bringing Quebec into our Confederation under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Constitution, he would know full well that there has been a great deal of public consultation going on since that period of time. For the Hon. Member to stand up and tell the Canadian people that there was no public consultation is completely erroneous. I do not believe there is a Canadian who would buy the nonsense that the Hon. Member is trying to spread.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I would always defend the right of the Parliamentary Secretary to disagree with me. Nevertheless, that does not take away from the fact that his knowledge of historical facts is totally incorrect.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I wish to elicit a comment from the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) by way of a question. The Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) referred to the Hon. Member's remarks as being somewhat hollow. I would ask the Members of the House not to impute motives or try to castigate Members who hold legitimate opinions. One can have one's opinion about this agreement. One can be for it or one can be against it.

I say to the Hon. Member for Davenport in support of his remarks that there are two competing visions of this country. One is a vision of Canada wherein Canadians owe their attachment to the country as a whole, a Canada greater than the sum of its parts. The other vision is that one owes one's loyalties to the particular province or region from which one comes.

The former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, in his remarks to the Senate on March 30 really made that point when he was referring to Henri Bourassa who said that many generations of Quebec politicians will have fought for the establishment of the French fact in Canada, not in Quebec. He saw this as a retreat from that way of viewing the country.

Does the Hon. Member care to make any additional comments about what I feel, and what I beg all Hon. Members to understand, is a very legitimate view of what Canada is all about?

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret to interrupt but it may well be possible as the debate goes on for the Hon. Member for Davenport to be able to respond. However, there is some indication from Hon. Members that there does not seem to be complete consensus within the Chamber to extend the time for questions and comments. That time has expired.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of State (Treasury Board).

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your recognizing me. I just wish to explain something to the House. On the day that the House order was made to frame this debate, that is, May 17, there were consultations among all Parties in an effort to put the House order to the House and to have it approved.

• (1600)

Unfortunately, my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), was not in the Chamber at the time that order was being negotiated, and he came in just immediately prior to it being called. At that time, I went over to the Hon. Member and we discussed the matter. His concern was the length of time for debate. I indicated to him at that time that I was sure that I had the authority on behalf of the government Members to suggest that the amount of time allowed to him to speak could be extended, as far as we were concerned. I wish to reiterate that comment to the House and put it on the record.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Hon. Donald J. Johnston (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of my hon. friend. I do seek the indulgence of Members if I run slightly over the time, but I do not expect to be much in excess.

The 1987 Constitutional Accord, which like others I refer to as Meech Lake, has been with us now for almost one year. Despite the conspiracy of silence, one might call it, established among our so-called political leaders and some of our aspiring political leaders, Canadians are slowly becoming aware of what is truly at stake in Meech Lake. The result of that awareness was predictable. The more Meech Lake is understood, the more it is being rejected by Canadians. Some Canadians see it only as a problem for themselves, and that is understandable. For example, the native peoples, women, representatives of the Yukon and the Territories, and so on, have pleaded their cases eloquently at every opportunity.

[Translation]

The proposed constitutional amendment is invasive in that it affects every aspect of our economic and social fabric, even our political geography. When we talk about Meech Lake, we are talking about the future of Canada, the Canada we have known for 121 years, the Canada we love and the Canada where we have prospered.

Mr. Speaker, my concerns about Meech Lake aren't restricted to a single issue: whether we are talking about the future of Anglophones in Quebec; whether we are discussing the sad plight of our Native people, the weakening of sexual equality, the restrictions that would apply to federal spending powers, the absurd suggestion regarding appointments to the Senate or the dangerous proposal for appointments to the Supreme Court, my concerns rise from the proposed amendment as a whole.

[English]

Thanks to Meech Lake Canada is to be partitioned into two distinct societies based on language and territory: Québec will be French, the rest of Canada English, albeit with each agreeing to preserve the existence of those whose tongue is alien to the particular society in which they find themselves.

Linguistic genocide, therefore, is not proposed, but neither is a bilingual nation where public services would be available in French or English from coast to coast.

Québec will have a special status, authority to promote its distinct identity at home and abroad, with additional powers not available to other provinces. What authority remains to the federal Government to deal with the social and economic challenges of Canadians is also being removed.

Canada is to become an association of provincial fiefdoms with semi-annual meetings between First Ministers to co-ordinate national objectives and policies, and strip Ottawa of whatever other authority the provinces might cherish. Meech Lake is very clearly the beginning of that process.

At Ottawa's expense, the provinces acquire powers in immigration, social and economic areas, appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court, and a veto for each over all major changes, including the creation of new provinces. To make those gains secure, there is an amending formula that puts Canada's evolution on a one-way street to more and more decentralization and the potential break up of the federation.

You might ask, Mr. Speaker: Why do so many accept Meech Lake? Well, most accept it looking through rose-coloured glasses, hoping that the various scenarios implicit in Meech Lake do not unfold. Having listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Leaders of both opposition Parties here today, I believe that they are wearing the rosiest glasses of all. They rationalize away what concerns they may have on the ground that Québec's moral adherence to the Constitution is worth the price. They hope the price is not too high, but they do not know. Some, even our Prime Minister as a matter of fact, admit that they do not know what the price is. What is the meaning of the distinct society clause? "Some day the Supreme Court of Canada will tell us", he says. Yes, indeed, the courts will one day tell us what we have done to Canada through Meech Lake, should it move forward. If we do not like it at that time, too bad. It will be too late to change directions.

Others, of course, embrace Meech Lake because they covet a further reduction of federal authority. If a form of sovereignty association with a unilingual French Québec is necessary to achieve that reduction, well so be it. Québec nationalists want it because they will finally have created the long dreamed of deux nations, and the extreme nationalists in Québec see Meech Lake as a solid stepping-stone to Québec's independence.

When the Prime Minister, and the Leader of the NDP Party (Mr. Broadbent), say: "We now know the answer to the question: 'What does Québec want?'" I would say we have a vague idea of what the current Quebec Government wants. The two are very different. We have heard all leaders, and we just heard the Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer) say that Quebec has said "Yes" to Canada and now Canada must say "Yes" to Quebec. In fact, the Prime Minister said very specifically Quebec—

[Translation]

"Quebec said yes twice". That is not true, Mr. Speaker. The people of Quebec said yes in 1980, but the Parti Québécois Government said no to Canada.

The two are not the same. What the population said and what the Government said are two entirely different things.

[English]

In 1980 the Quebec Government said "No" to Canada, and we are not hearing from the Quebec people except through the Quebec Government which replaced the Péquiste Government of Mr. Lévesque.

What does this adherence mean? We hear that it will allow Canada to move forward with constitutional evolution, that Quebec will now come to the negotiating table on a regular basis, that this is the Quebec round that has been finished. We have heard all of this, Mr. Speaker. Where do we see any of this in Meech Lake? As a matter of fact, when I look at Mr. Bourassa's comments in the National Assembly, I hear him say, or I read that he has said that Quebec has not lost anything through Meech Lake, that there has been no step backward.

[Translation]

In fact, the Liberal Party, and I quote: "recognizes Quebec's right to determine its internal constitution and to express freely its desire to either maintain or terminate its membership in the Canadian federation". That was a resolution passed by the Liberal Party in 1980, and it has in no way been changed or affected by Meech Lake.

[English]

I am not so sure that the attributes of this adherence that are being given to Quebec's signature by Members in the House, and by the Leaders of the Parties, are really those that Mr. Bourassa gives. I see no guarantee that the Quebec Government in future will come to the table, if it does not suit its purpose.

Where are the defenders of Canada in this debate?

[Translation]

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am here as one of Canada's elected representatives, and I am ashamed, because our elected politicians have done a disservice to the 25 million Canadians they are supposed to represent. Mr. Speaker, this is a sad moment in our history. It is a sad time for our political system, and I think it is even sadder for those in whom their constituents have placed their trust.

Mr. Speaker, this constitutional debate, the most important one of our time, and its effects that will determine the very nature of our federation, of our national, political and economic institutions, and even the future of our country, this debate will go down in history without any expression of dissent from the Opposition parties in this House.

• (1610)

[English]

What have some of our political Leaders said about the Meech Lake Accord? In recent weeks, and I will come to some of the comments made today, I heard Premier Bourassa ask: "Who has found a serious flaw in Meech Lake?" The answer to that is: "Who has not?" We can begin with 80 per cent of the lawyers polled by the Canadian Bar Association who responded with various degrees of concern about Meech Lake. The list of flaws and critics is virtually inexhaustible. Only our so-called political Leaders have chosen to duck the issue.

The Prime Minister stood in this House again this morning claiming that no one had found an egregious error. That is simply nonsense and the Canadian people know it. Mr. Lucien Bouchard, who supported the separatist aspirations of René Lévesque and the Parti Québecois, is now an unelected Minister of the Government. He is reported in the May 18 edition of Le Devoir as saying:

[Translation]

"What we must tell English Canada is that Quebec's aspirations can no longer be kept out. There is a very simple solution—the Meech Lake Accord."

What aspirations is he talking about? Something like the sovereignty-association that he fought for in 1980. It is quite obvious, as my colleague from Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has just said, that the Accord could provide a way to attain it. And like the Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bouchard divides the country into two language groups, French Canada in Quebec and English Canada elsewhere.

And my colleague, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), who is in the House this afternoon, talks in the same way. In an interview in La Presse on May 18, he accuses us, that is Jean Chrétien, Pierre Trudeau and myself, whom he considers the old guard, of completely misunderstanding the Meech Lake Accord:

"I said that I was going to Ottawa to defend Quebec's interests, not to defend Ottawa's interests in Quebec."

[English]

My friend from Laval-des-Rapides also seems to divide Canada into two territorial linguistic communities. Here we find a fundamentally different view of Canada and even of the role of Members of Parliament. Mr. Bouchard and my friend from Laval-des-Rapides are no doubt sincere in their belief that they are here to defend the interests of Quebec. However, by that they clearly mean the interests of the Quebec Government. Clearly they have no better mandate to speak on behalf of the people of Quebec than I do. Or, would they say an Anglophone MP cannot speak for people of Quebec? If so, would they say that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), a Francophone, cannot speak for people of Ontario? Or, the Hon. Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duguay), also a Francophone, cannot speak for Manitobans? I do not think they mean that. Therefore, when my friend from Laval-des-Rapides refers to Quebec, I believe he refers to the provincial Government of Quebec and sees this House as a kind of brokerage house for provincial interests which he believes he has a mandate to defend.

I say to you and to him that if we in this House adopt that attitude, who in this Chamber is going to speak for Canada? Who is going to defend the national vision? I would add that I have enormous respect for my friend from Laval-des-Rapides, whose sincerity, dedication and integrity are beyond reproach. That is a healthy and welcome contrast to what I sometimes see elsewhere in this Chamber.

I did not come to Ottawa to defend the interests of the Quebec Government. Premier Bourassa does a good job of that. We here are elected to a national Parliament and we must never forget it. Our duty is to defend the national interest. In doing so, we must be accountable to those who elected us but not to provincial Governments. While we defend and promote the interests of our communities and our regions, we must do so within a national context.

Meech Lake is very much in keeping with the other view, namely that the federal Government and this Parliament are simply delegates of the provinces, like the manager of a condominium project with the responsibility delegated by the owners to take care of the common property, cut the grass, remove the snow, and clean the lobby and hallways. That is not my vision of Canada. It was not the vision of the vieille garde and all those who preceded them, from Sir John A. Macdonald to Pierre Elliott Trudeau. I want to say, judging by the volume of mail I have received and the reception I have received across this country on many speaking engagements, that this vision of the old guard is strong, healthy and growing every day.

During the past year I have addressed the subject of Meech Lake on many occasions in all the provinces of Canada with the exception, regrettably, of Newfoundland. That experience tells me that Canadians believe in one nation, one society, and when informed they overwhelmingly reject Meech Lake.

I respect the fact that some sincerely believe that the federal Government should be, as it were, a condominium manager and Canada should be divided into two nations, one French speaking and one English speaking. I profoundly disagree and I will fight to defend my vision of the country. I do respect those views, but I do not respect those, and we heard from the three Leaders in this House today, who would have us believe that Meech Lake is not changing the nature of our federation. Some even pretended, for goodness' sake, that it promotes national bilingualism even in the Province of Québec. I refer to the earlier speeches of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), my friend from York Centre, and the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), and the speeches again given today by the Prime Minister and the Leaders of both opposition Parties. If I may say so, those speeches are replete with naivety, inaccuracies, and even legal stupidities.

Ms. Jewett: How conceited can you get?

Mr. Johnston: I am glad to see my friend from New Westminster—Coquitlam here today. She said:

> If Meech Lake were already in effect, it is our firm belief that that limiting action of the Saskatchewan Government would have been declared contrary to the Constitution as amended by Meech Lake.

Ms. Jewett: Right on.

Mr. Johnston: Really? That seems to be the view supported by the Leaders today.

Ms. Jewett: We think it is the right view.

Mr. Johnston: As far as Saskatchewan is concerned, Meech Lake was in effect morally, it being the second province following Québec to accept it. However, if one reads Meech Lake, which most people apparently have not, it clearly states that provincial legislatures have a role to "preserve the existence of French-speaking Canadians elsewhere in Canada". There is nothing in there referring to the preservation of rights, notwithstanding the fact that the Prime Minister said that today and the Leaders of both opposition Parties said the same thing. One final nail in the coffin of that argument is that Section 2(4) of Meech Lake is absolutely clear: No power with respect to language that belonged to a legislature prior to Meech Lake is affected by Meech Lake.

The Supreme Court of Canada told Saskatchewan it had the power to do what it did, but it would seem the Prime Minister and the spokespersons for the opposition Parties are offering us legal opinions that even a layman would reject reading the text of the Meech Lake Accord itself.

Finally, I ask them this question. If Meech Lake is intended to protect existing rights, then French-speaking Canadians elsewhere in Canada would have more rights in Saskatchewan or in Ontario than they would in British Columbia. Mr. Vander Zalm presumably feels that he would be discharging his role to "preserve the existence of French-speaking Canadians" without adding any rights to his statute books. Why should not Mr. Peterson and Mr. Devine be entitled to discharge their roles at the same level as Mr. Vander Zalm? Some day the courts will answer these questions, but please do not then turn and say that we were not warned about the disastrous consequences of Meech Lake on the linguistic rights of Canadians from coast to coast.

• (1620)

Finally I turn to some of the remarkable comments of the Minister of Justice speaking on behalf of the Government, Mr. Speaker. He assures us that the territorial division of Canada into a distinct society of Quebec on the one hand and the other distinct society in the rest of Canada is not to be feared by minorities in Quebec. He said:

> When we say that Quebec constitutes a distinct society within Canada, it is understood that all residents of Quebec are an integral part of that society . . . Those Quebecers from a multicultural community are part of it. Quebec's English-speaking community is an integral part of the Quebec's distinct society.

That is an interesting comment. Is that what Premier Bourassa meant when he said in the National Assembly:

[Translation]

For the first time in 120 years of history, the Constitution will recognize Quebec as a distinct society. The Constitution will provide Quebec with the means to preserve and promote its distinct identity and will give a constitutional basis for the French fact in Quebec.

[English]

Is the Minister of Justice really telling us that the Quebec Government sees itself as having a role to preserve and promote the English presence in Quebec? If so, how does he view the current policies which forbid the use of English on commercial signs, which limit access to English schooling, which insist on French dubbed films before general film distribution and so on? Does he see all this as changing after Meech Lake when Quebec will set about to promote all elements of its distinct society including the English component? If he does, then the Minister of Justice—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I would like you to remind us of the rule of the debate. I have no objection to listening further to the Hon. Member, but are Members allowed 30 minutes or 20 minutes for their speeches? I think the time of the Hon. Member expired some time ago. We have four Members who want to speak. If the Hon. Member has a few more minutes, then that is okay with me, but he needs permission.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member raised a legitimate point of order. As Hon. Members know the Party Leaders had unlimited time. All other Members are speaking for 20 minutes followed by a 10 minute question and comment period. The Hon. Member has spoken for about 21 or 22 minutes at the moment. I am in the hands of the House. I will let him continue for a few minutes if it is the wish of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Johnston: I thank you and my hon. colleagues for the courtesy, Mr. Speaker.

I was pointing out what had taken place in the Province of Quebec and that the Minister of Justice seems to believe that there is an obligation to promote the English component of Quebec society. In light of what we have seen, if he believes that, I would add that he must still believe in Santa Claus and the tooth fairy.

Professor Lederman in the Financial Post on August 31, 1987, an authority quoted with approval in this House by the Government, had it right when he wrote of "the distinct society of French-speaking Canadians in Quebec". That is what Meech Lake is all about. It is about a French Québec in an English Canada. There are 800,000 English-speaking people in Quebec who are not part of that distinct society. Make no mistake about it, Mr. Speaker. Meech Lake is opting for the Belgian solution, which our Commissioner of Official Languages in his recent report has described as a recipe for national suicide. Only days ago as we know Mr. Remillard made the Quebec Government's view absolutely clear. Meech Lake is to support a French Quebec not a bilingual Quebec. For once I found myself in entire agreement with Mr. Remillard because that is what Meech Lake is telling us.

The message is coming through to Canadians despite efforts to suppress debate even in this House. What is that message Canadians are receiving? If you believe in one Canada, you must reject Meech Lake. That is part of the message.

[Translation]

And if you believe that this country should keep a national vision that is greater than the sum of the provincial visions, that is, that Canada is greater than the sum of its provincial parts, you must reject the Meech Lake Accord.

[English]

If you believe that the individual minority rights of Canadians, be they linguistic rights or sexual equality rights, should be protected against the collective rights of a distinct society, then you must reject Meech Lake. If you believe that Canada requires national programs meeting national standards or criteria in research, education, training, income maintenance and health and that the federal spending power should be used for such purposes in the future, I should say as it has so successfully done in the past—

Mr. Prud'homme: You are totally off.

Mr. Nystrom: You are totally off.

Mr. Johnston: —then you must reject Meech Lake. If you believe the Constitution of this country should be a flexible instrument reflecting changing economic and social conditions as our country evolves with a constitutional amending formula to allow that to take place, then you must reject Meech Lake.

[Translation]

And if you believe, Mr. Speaker, that the 11 First Ministers should not have the power to change behind closed doors our fundamental law, namely the Constitution, you must reject the Meech Lake Accord. And if you believe that the judges of the Supreme Court should not be appointed from among candidates submitted by the provincial governments, you must reject the Meech Lake Accord.

[English]

If you believe that the Senate should be reformed to reflect the original intentions of the Fathers of Confederation, namely, to protect the regions against an overbearing central authority, you must reject Meech Lake.

If you believe in that, in a federation like ours the provinces should exercise the same powers and that no one province should have a special legal status which entitles it to exercise important powers not available to other provinces, you must reject Meech Lake.

[Translation]

So, Mr. Speaker, if you see our country as one with two official languages and bilingual institutions in every province, in every region, with sufficient protection for linguistic minorities, you must reject the Meech Lake Accord.

[English]

For those who look at this Accord and see where it can take the country, I say to those who voted no in the Quebec Referendum in 1980 that you must also reject Meech Lake.

So, Mr. Speaker, I have tabled amendments, which are found in the Order Paper, seconded by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), which are designed to satisfy the Quebec Government's five demands for moral adherence to the Canadian Constitution. They are virtually identical to those adopted by the Liberal Party at its 1986 November policy convention and were supported overwhelmingly by Liberals from all regions of this country. I say to my fellow Liberal Members in this House and the caucus, regrettably of which I am no longer a member, that if they do not support the amendments brought forward which reflect the mandate given to us by the Liberal Party of Canada, they are turning their backs on the Liberal Party and rejecting not only the Liberal vision of this country of Canada, which we have held through most of the century, but the specific mandate given by the Party at the November 1986 policy convention.

In order to save time, and I appreciate the generosity that Members have extended to me, I will not go through all of these amendments but I hope Members will look at them because they incorporate the Victoria formula, for example for the appointment of Supreme Court Justices. They invoke the Victoria formula suggested by the Liberal Party for constitutional amendments. They put in a preamble which recognizes the distinctive character of Quebec as the principal but not the exclusive source of French language and culture in Canada. They cover all of those points that were subject to the Liberal resolution of November, 1986.

In conclusion, let me say that these amendments are important because the Meech Lake Accord is not acceptable to Canadians in its present form. Those in this Chamber who think this will pass through all the provincial legislatures, I say that they are dreaming in colour. The answer is not simply to reject what we have, it is to come forward with something that will be acceptable to the Province of Québec and which will be acceptable to Liberals from coast to coast.

I say to those in this House who argue as they have time and time again that it is necessary to proceed with Meech Lake despite its obvious flaws and that it is necessary to adopt it without amendment, remember the wisdom of William Pitt who said in the British House of Commons nearly 200 years ago:

> Necessity is the plea for every infringement of human freedom; it is the argument of tyrants, it is the creed of slaves.

Canadians are not slaves, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) for his excellent speech. I think that he has shown the House that his vision of Canada is shared by many Quebecers and most Canadians.

[English]

I would like to ask the Hon. Member a somewhat precise question about the distinct society clause. How does he feel about the distinct society clause not being in the preamble but in an operational clause, therefore giving clear instructions to the courts that they should interpret every other part of the Constitution relative to that clause? It would be interesting to know if the distinct society clause overrides the Charter or overrides anything that is in the Constitution so that that may be interpreted in favour of a distinct society for Québec. I wonder if we should refer that clause to the Supreme Court of Canada for interpretation before we vote on this important issue.

Second, I wonder if the unanimity clause prevents amendments to the Constitution as far as the Senate is concerned. As the Hon. Member well knows, western Canadians believe that we should have an equal, effective and elected Senate. Will having the unanimity clause in the Accord prevent us from changing the second House in this Parliament?

We have seen what can happen. Last year we were called back to deal with emergency legislation on refugees. The Senate has been holding back that legislation for the last year. Those who are not elected, not responsible to constituents, are holding back our legislation. Will the Meech Lake unanimity clause prevent us from changing the Senate? These are some of the concerns I have, and I am also concerned as to whether or not the distinct society clause overrides the Charter of Rights.

Mr. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have been asked a legal question and I have my own legal opinions, but I do agree that it would be very useful to refer the distinct society clause and a number of other clauses to the Supreme Court of Canada for determination so that Members of the House would vote with the full knowledge of what may be involved. In June of 1987, I in fact wrote to the Prime Minister suggesting specifically that, and I wrote as well to all of the premiers because the provinces also have the right to refer matters to their respective courts of appeal for interpretation, as in fact the provinces did back in 1981 during the patriation exercise. I think there is a very serious question as to what the implication of the distinct society clause is, not only on the Charter but also on power transfers.

We have heard Members of the House say that there is a non-derogation clause, we cannot change Section 91 and Section 92. However, some of the most important powers in our Constitution, their distribution and application, including communications and much of trade and commerce and the application of the peace, order and good Government clause, have been brought about through the interpretation of the Constitution. As Professor Beaudouin, a proponent of this particular Accord, said—

[Translation]

"It is an interpretation rule that has changed the Canadian federation."

[English]

This interpretation clause then is very significant.

With respect to the Senate, that is not a legal question, that is a question of political dynamics. I ask Members of this House who are practising politicians if they know any politician who would voluntarily give up the right to appoint 24 Senators to the Senate of Canada in return for an equal, effective and elected Senate in order to satisfy the concerns of western Canadians. I might say that in the amendments I have put forward, that kind of Senate is put right on the agenda of the First Ministers. The Triple E Senate should be addressed by the First Ministers as soon as possible. In the meantime, no change should be made because if the change which is provided for in Meech Lake is made, then I do not think, and I think the Hon. Member from Calgary shares my view, that we will ever see Senate reform in our lifetimes.

Mr. O'Neil: Madam Speaker, I would like to make a short comment on the Hon. Member's speech and on some of the points of view he put forward. First, I would observe that we have had in Canada a long history of the implementation of the kind of philosophy he advocates, namely that of an extremely strong central Government, the heavy hand of Ottawa coming down on the provinces. We have to ask where that got us, and that is only in recent history.

If this philosophy is the one that keeps our country together, how is it that in 1980 at the time of the referendum, 40 per cent of the people of Quebec and almost 50 per cent of the French-speaking people of Quebec voted to leave confederation as we know it? If that is the philosophy of success as far as keeping our country together goes, how is it that in 1980, we faced a major constitutional crisis, perhaps the most significant crisis in this century?

The Hon. Member spoke of constitutional documents, their perfections and their imperfections. How can a Member speak with such criticism of Meech Lake when in 1982 there was a constitutional agreement reached which left out the Province of Quebec? The National Assembly of Quebec rejected the document. The Government of Quebec was not a signatory to the 1982 constitutional Accord, notwithstanding the fact that the change which was reflected in that document was the change which was promised to the people of Quebec in 1980, change which was an effort to respond to the legitimate aspirations of the people of Quebec.

In the 1987 Meech Lake Accord, there is a series of constitutional changes that date well back into the history of the Liberal Government which was ruling this country in 1968. Changes to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Senate, the shared-cost programs, references to distinct society, the duality provisions and the role of the provinces, all of these have a history that predates this Government. What was new in 1987 was that for the first time, these elements were brought together and an Accord was reached. That is what eluded Canada before this.

The question for us all to consider is not who will speak for Canada, because there is a far more basic question than that, and that is, will there be a Canada. In my view, there will be a stronger, more prosperous Canada because Meech Lake is the glue that will keep us together.

Mr. Johnston: Madam Speaker, I think it is quite appropriate to have a debate in this country on centralization or decentralization or whether we should have two nations in order to keep the country together. I have no problem with having that kind of debate, but let us have that debate, because that is what we are talking about. I do not happen to share that view, but let us not pretend that Meech Lake is anything other than a stepping stone to deux nations and to a highly decentralized federation with an amending formula which does not permit the flexibility that we have known historically.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) asks what has this done for us. It has brought us to being one of the seventh largest industrialized countries in the world with one of the highest standards of living known to man. I think Canada has been a great success, though certainly there could be improvements.

The Hon. Member referred to the 1982 patriation exercise. It was former Prime Minister Trudeau who pointed out in the Senate that in fact, of elected Members from Québec, whether in the National Assembly or in this House, comparing the two of them, 109 voted in favour and only 74 against it. The entire Parti Québécois and only four others in Quebec voted against it. We remember that in this House overwhelming support was given to the patriation exercise in the Charter by Members who represented every single region of Quebec, just as the Hon. Member represents Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

• (1640)

It is simply pure folklore to say that there were not elected Members from Québec speaking in favour of the patriation exercise. Did anyone really expect a péquiste Premier of Quebec, René Levesque, whose life was dedicated to taking Quebec out of Canada, to sign a constitutional document which would basically bind Quebec to Canada? I think that is somewhat unrealistic.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed, without amendment, Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, and Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall

June 14, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 14th day of June, 1988, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth,
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn, and the amendments of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra, (p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent, (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman, (p. 15620).

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, I really quite doubt that I am going to have an opportunity to finish what I would like to say with respect to this debate on Meech Lake. I understand that we have perhaps two or three more minutes before this portion of the debate ends.

I quite agree with those who say that Meech Lake has its imperfections. It may very well be, as one Member has indicated, that those who believe that it will ultimately be ratified by the provinces are dreaming in Technicolor. However, let me make myself clear. While it is possible to have alternative visions of Canada, it is not possible to have a vision of Canada which disregards the history of Canada. If Quebec is recognized as a distinct society, that is not established by Meech Lake but by the history of this country.

As one whose family has been in this country for 150 years, the debate, in my view, is not on the issue of whether or not Quebec should be a distinct society, but whether one-third of the population will be considered a part of this society.

I grew up in a nation which, according to all that I experienced, seemed to consist of only two peoples, those who were French and those who were English. For too long this country has failed to recognize that one-third of the population of the country, which proportion is increasing, has been disregarded all too completely. It is true that we have provision for multiculturalism. However, insofar as I am concerned as a representative of that one-third of the population which is not derived from either of the founding peoples, the Meech Lake Accord has one single most notable flaw, that is, its total irrelevancy to me.

If it was important, if it was critical to have Quebec a willing partner in Confederation; it if was important, if it was essential to have Quebec as a part of Canada, it is equally essential to have those who are of neither French nor English origin equally a part. That is just as essential, just as critical. Meech Lake failed one-third of the country. We were not included at the time of Meech Lake.

There has been some question raised about the significance of ascribing to Quebec the status of a distinct society. There is no question about the result which leaves unchanged the situation of the one-third when one looks at the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and reads Section 15 which is of fundamental importance to those of us who are neither French nor English. It reads:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

That sounds as though it were a ringing clarion call for equality and equal participation of all citizens in this nation. However, there was a bit of work undone and that was the fatal flaw for one-third of us in the 1982 Constitutional Act. That resides in Section 33 which reads:

> Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or of the legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

In other words, the rights of one-third of us can be overruled by a decision of any legislature and as long as that is so Meech Lake is irrelevant to one-third of the population of Canada. While Meech Lake may solve the problems which have been historically rooted in this country, a new problem is created when one-third of us consider Meech Lake inevitable. Until that is changed, until the override is eliminated with respect to equality, Meech Lake is an indication of the incompleteness of Canada rather than its completeness.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member with respect to the override provisions of the Charter of Rights in Section 33. The Hon. Member indicated that Section 33 was aimed only at one-third of Canadians, those Canadians who are not of French or British origin. He implied by his comments that Section 33, the notwithstanding provisions of the Charter, was aimed only at all other Canadians, those Canadians who are normally described as the multicultural community and come from various backgrounds other than French or British.

I am sure the Hon. Member does not want to leave the impression with this House and the public that Section 33 applies specifically only to all other Canadians, that third of Canadians who are not of French or British origin. In fact, as the Hon. Member knows, that provision, which I am sure offends everyone in this House, applies, unfortunately, to all Canadians, whether they be of British origin, French origin, or any of the other many origins which make up this country.

I am sure the Hon. Member would want to correct the record and ensure that he in no way, whether deliberately or non-deliberately, or just by confusing the issue, leaves the impression that that is the case and that Section 33 applies only to one-third of Canadians when, in fact, it unfortunately applies to all Canadians.

• (1650)

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether that question is based on an erudite understanding of those articles of the Charter to which the notwithstanding clause applies or whether it is based on gross insensitivity to the realities of this country. It is true that the override clause applies to Articles 2 and 7 to 15. It applies to a number of articles that have nothing to do with non discrimination or equality.

If the Hon. Member does not understand it, I know of no situation in this country where the English have been subjected to unequal treatment. I know of no situation in which the English were denied the ability to be pilots in the Royal Canadian Air Force. I know of no situation in which English were not employed or had no access to apartments. I know of no situation of that sort.

The situation of the French in this country was historically much more comparable to that one-third of the population who were denied so many rights. When we look at Section 15 as a guarantee that everyone in this country will be treated equally, we understand that it applies to everyone but that it applies with greater significance to those of us in this country who have been denied the very equality that it refers to, who have been objects of the discrimination to which it refers. That includes Ukrainians, Poles, aboriginal people and members of minority groups.

This is significant because it states that one does not have to be of either French or English derivation in this country to be treated on equal terms. Therefore, Article 33, the override with particular respect to Article 15, is fundamental to the nature of Canada as I understand it. Progress is made in developing a nation of many peoples, all of whom are equal citizens, with preferences to none.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I have enjoyed debating the Hon. Member and working with him in committees. I know that he is a distinguished Member, a passionate speaker, and a career scientist. I do not think he has a legal background.

I have the benefit of having had a bit of a legal background and I want to suggest to him that while I understand his concern about Section 33, and find it equally abhorrent, before we had a Charter of Rights we had ways of defending the rights of all Canadians under our Constitution. I will not get into the whole discussion of the implied Bill of Rights or a constitution similar in principle to that in the United Kingdom. The United Kingdom does not have a charter and rights are not violated with impunity there because of the fact that there is not a charter.

While I find Section 33 abhorrent and agree that it should be removed from the Charter, I cannot conceive of any Government invoking that clause with impunity in respect of the kind of concerns he has expressed here today. There was a government in Québec that did it as a political tool, but any government that would do this would suffer from the weight of public opinion.

Even with the notwithstanding clause, the Charter was a great step forward. It was a step forward in the progress that Canadians have sought for 120 years to make our rights more formal, more explicit and provided for in constitutional provisions or human rights legislation. Would he not agree that the Charter should be seen in that light, as a step forward? Even with the notwithstanding clause, the trend was upward and forward to greater protection for rights and more rights for Canadians.

With Meech Lake, however, for the first time we are stepping back from that trend. Now the trend is down. Therefore, I deplore the fact that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was negotiating this agreement he did not use the opportunity to get rid of that notwithstanding clause. That is where his ire should be directed.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I do not know whether my legal training is at all relevant since my hon. colleague, whom I respect equally as he respects me, ended up with the same conclusion as I, that Meech Lake is flawed from the point of view of one-third of Canadian citizens.

When we were dealing with the problem emanating from the failure to recognize Québec's distinctiveness, we failed to take that opportunity to correct that flaw in the Charter. More than anything else, it is the symbolic value of the Charter that is important, and the importance of recognizing our status within this country. I admit that the Charter was the most significant provision in the 1982 Constitution Act to me and many others.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Madam Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the Honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Madam Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1700)

[Translation]

And being returned.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate chamber, the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following bills:

Bill C-117, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act—Chapter No. 18, 1988.

Bill C-127, an Act to amend the Cape Breton Development Corporation Act—Chapter No. 19, 1988.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

HOUSING

METRO TORONTO HOUSING SHORTAGE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should make the solution of the developing housing shortage crisis in Metro Toronto a matter of top priority in forming housing and financial policies for 1988.

He said: Madam Speaker, I ask you why this House should recommend that the Government give priority to the housing crisis of Metro Toronto. The answer is very simple, for the same reason the Government gives priority to crises in other regions, be they drought on the Prairies or fishing rights in the Atlantic. This motion is not just about a city, it is about a region, what sociologists call "a conurbation," an urban region that is home to more than four million Canadians. They are people who are just as much a part of this country as if they lived in the East, the West or the North. As such, they make a claim on us in this House and in this debate because they are facing a crisis. It is a crisis in meeting a basic human need, a basic human right.

I do not exaggerate when I refer to the housing crisis of Metro Toronto in those terms. There has to be a crisis for most people when the price of an average house in this region has risen since last February from $200,000 to $233,000, and when the rent of an average apartment is over $800 a month, if one can find an apartment. That average is based on the rents for rent control departments as well as those in the so-called free markets.

The social implication of this crisis demands the recognition of this House of Commons. A basic cause of poverty in Metro Toronto is now housing. Where 30 per cent of a person's income was once enough for accommodation, it is now 40 per cent or much more. This vast conurbation stretching from Oshawa, or even Bowmanville, to the east, right around the "horseshoe" to Niagara Falls, a spur going up from Hamilton to Cambridge and Kitchener, is close to 100 miles long and embraces four million or more people.

We have in that area a tragic paradox of full employment and "food banks". That is why we have a new social category called "the working poor". But this crisis afflicts not only low-income people, not only those at the very bottom of the scale. It threatens others who are just above the level of low income. It threatens people who hitherto had enough to provide for themselves and perhaps had a little more to help provide for others. But the escalation of the housing crisis in this kind of conurbation threatens to erode the middle class. Part of its essence has been its ability to provide for itself. The soaring cost of housing now makes many ask if they can do for themselves what their parents did for them. For so long in Canada we have assumed, generation by generation, that each new generation would try to do better than the one before it. Each generation of parents hoped their children would go further than they were able to take them. We are now finding the possibility of a reversal of that. We find young people wondering if they can achieve what their parents achieved, when the sorry cost of housing makes them wonder if their dream of owning their own home is going to be nothing more than that, a dream.

I speak of this as a small cloud on our social horizon. But it is a warning cloud that should alert us to a sinister social change, that is, the erosion of the middle class. I call upon the House to give attention to all who are anxious about housing, the destitute homeless, the working poor, the threatened middle class, none of whom aspire to the so-called "executive homes" that are advertised in the Saturday editions of our newspapers or that some municipal councils favour. I am referring to people who seek what no Canadian should be denied, a place that he or she can call home.

Let us look at some questions that might be raised in this debate. For instance, why do these people not go where housing is cheaper? That is a good question, since housing is dramatically cheaper in some parts of the country. Last February a $200,000 house in Metro Toronto would have gone for $120,000 in Winnipeg, or $84,000 in Fredericton.

Moving is no solution. Metro is where the work is. That is why there may be pouring into this region 100,000 a year. One reason for increased housing prices in Metro is this ingress of people from all parts of Canada as well as from beyond. That is why it is not simply a municipal problem, not simply a regional problem. It is a problem that should concern us all in this House because it is generated by the needs of people from all parts of Canada who are concentrating in one region.

All the efforts of government to decentralize the industry of Canada, to spread jobs around, so that they are more plentiful in other areas has not had the effect to which these sincere desires have aspired. Metro remains the Mecca for job seekers. People will not leave in order to find the blessing of a cheap house and the curse of no job.

Let us look at another question. Why should Parliament care about a problem in Metro Toronto? Why not let the people fend for themselves? A former Mayor of Toronto once said Toronto provides the most unifying effort in the whole of Canada because it gives everybody else in Canada something to hate. So we might ask why Parliament should care about a problem in Metro. I hope that none of us here forget that when money was needed to assist grain farmers Metro Members stood with rural Members to provide what was needed, and stood rightly.

That is what I ask today. My motion focuses on Metro because I speak as a Metro area Member of Parliament. That is where the housing crisis is most acute. However, if any Member of the House wants to amend the wording of the motion to embrace a larger area, I would support any initiative that would bear on meeting human need anywhere in the country.

Let us look at another question. What can the Government do? The tone in which the question is normally raised assumes from the outset that there is no possibility. A partial answer would be that the Government should stop exacerbating the problem.

Here is an example of how three levels of government in the Metro area have been guilty. First, many municipalities impose approval processes that are so long and so expensive that they add immeasurably to the cost of every dwelling unit. The Province of Ontario has maintained a rental control system that has often helped the people who have needed it least and left unprotected those who have needed help the most. This is a system that has exacerbated the critical apartment shortage when the Government should have encouraged rental construction. This is a system that has led to property deterioration that has not been a blessing to people. That is not saying that the system should be abandoned. It is to say that the system could be examined, amended and improved.

Let us remember federally that we are not guiltless. Recently the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation unintentionally but no less effectively drove up the price of land in the north-east Metro region by using a sales method that at one time may have been plausible but in this time of crisis served to add fuel to the fire of speculation. It set a new level of price for the cost of land, a level of pricing that was inflationary in itself.

We might agree that if Governments just stopped making the crisis worse they would certainly help. I believe that Governments can do more. I put before the House a 10 point housing program which I believe should be considered by all three levels of government, points upon which all three can co-operate and which can certainly serve to meet the needs of our people in a way that are not being met now.

First, the Government of Canada should devote a major part of the Armed Forces base at Downsview to affordable housing. This act alone could provide 5,000 affordable homes, if CMHC can rid itself of its bottom-line mentality and made sure that the lots were made available to people within the price range of low and middle-income earners.

Second, let these lots be leased rather than sold, or at least be available for leasing. Let them be leased to people who can buy the house and rent the land until they are in a position to acquire the land as well. This method has already been tried and has been found to be effective. When the Malvern housing project was opened by Canada and Ontario in Scarborough less than 20 years ago that was precisely the method that was used. It worked then and it can work now. All we need is the will.

Third, in several elections the Progressive Conservative Party promised to remove the federal sales tax on building materials used for houses. That promise was not made in 1984, and this Government is not committed to it. Let us be clear on that. But it is a policy that once committed itself to my Party. If it did so again that move could reduce the price of a new house by several thousand dollars, especially for people who would meet income criteria.

Fourth, to put more money into mortgages let us examine the possibilities of a mortgage exchange which would create a secondary market for mortgages. This proposal has already been approved by the Parliament of Canada, a previous Parliament. It has never been implemented for reasons that have never been made clear to any Parliament. But now that we are freeing up the financial services industry, I say again that this idea, already proposed and approved in a Budget by the Parliament of Canada, should be looked at again with a view to opening up the market and making more money available at competitive rates.

Fifth, let us look at subsidizing the interest rates on mortgages for home buyers who meet income criteria. We do that for organizations. The idea that I am recommending is not radical at all. We are already doing it. This Government has already announced it in terms of serving organizations who sponsor co-ops in that way. What I am asking is for this Parliament, for this Government, to look at the practicality and the possibility of doing that for individuals, to believe in individuals, to believe in families as much as we believe in organizations. Will it work? It has already worked. Between the years 1968 and 1972 that method helped fund the purchase of 400,000 family homes in the United States. So it is certainly worth looking at.

Sixth, we need to examine flexible loan structures with a view to enabling people to buy homes with lower downpayments and longer term mortgages. Lower downpayments and longer term mortgages stretch the payment period out. It means that the person might never acquire the home free and clear. "But so what", many people would ask for their priority is not aspiring to own the house free and clear. Their priority is to get a roof over their heads. Therefore, if they have a monthly payment within their means, they want that home with the equity they would build up, however little, month by month. They want it with the assurance of having security of tenure as long as they can pay their monthly payment. What I am suggesting is being practised in other countries where they provide for lower downpayments and longer mortgage periods than we are accustomed to in Canada.

• (1720)

Seventh, the Government should consider imposing a speculation tax on people who buy housing not to use it but to flip it. This type of speculation only increases the problem. The best way to reduce it is to burn the speculator. The capability of a government doing that was already demonstrated by a Conservative Government in Ontario. In the early 1970s the Davis Government did precisely that and it cooled off the speculative market within days. I can remember the moaning and the groaning of developers whom I knew in the City of Scarborough, at the thought of what this was going to do to them. They are not the only speculators. There are many individuals who try to take advantage of the speculative market. The Government has within its possibility at either provincial or federal levels, or in concert one with the other, to cool that off and cool it off quickly. Even announcing such a tax could turn the spiral of speculation around.

Eighth, in co-operation with Ontario, let us re-examine the fees charged for insurance, legal services, real estate commissions, and other costs added to the price of a home to ensure that the consumer receives fairness.

Ninth, let us investigate the value of an accommodation or rental allowance as a way of helping low-income persons who are now lined up on waiting lists two years long for social housing in Metropolitan Toronto.

Tenth, I urge the Government to make a study of the economic, social, and psychological implications of social housing which is located in what are rightly called ghettos. Such a study should ask the questions: "Is this the only way people can be served? Is it the best way? Are there options open to us?"

I have put forward those 10 proposals to show that there are initiatives open to governments, including our own, to deal with what is a crisis in Metropolitan Toronto, and in the future could become a crisis in other communities. Each proposal is practical, each has been tried; none is radical, none is living in a dream world. All of them can succeed. I sum them up by saying that together they offer hope.

"Hope" was defined by one French philosopher by the word "possibilities". People have hope when they can see possibilities. Part of the burden of life in our huge conurbations is the hopelessness of seeing or at least feeling that we have no possibilities in front of us, no possibility of gaining a home of one's own, no possibility of owning a piece of Canada, no possibility of providing for ourselves and our families as our parents provided for us. No possibility, but instead frustration, insecurity, and anxiety.

I do not believe that Canada has to be like that. I believe that Parliament can change that and offer the people such as I have described new hope and new possibilities, that we can say to people the simple dream that they have is still possible.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond in the 10 minutes allocated to each subsequent speaker. First, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) who spoke very passionately on his Private Member's Motion. I would like to commend him for raising the subject and as a Parliament attempt to deal with a matter that is obviously of concern to Metropolitan Toronto, but also to the major centres across the country.

Perhaps the metropolitan area of Toronto defines crystal clear the problem the Member attempted to address. In reference to Toronto, there used to be a saying that everyone's home was their castle. That dream for Metropolitan Toronto is evaporating in the sense, as the Member pointed out in his motion, that there is indeed a housing shortage crisis, yet there is a crisis in affordable housing. Many homes are being built in Metropolitan Toronto and the various suburbs, but they are simply and clearly becoming unaffordable for the average Canadian citizen who resides or wishes to reside in Metropolitan Toronto, and in the major urban centres from one coast to the other.

In Toronto the average young couple is in a dilemma. The dream of owning a first home and then building that nest and moving to the second home is evaporating. For a young married couple in Metropolitan Toronto even the dream of renting is becoming next to impossible. The whole evolutionary process of moving from a starter home to perhaps a larger home to reflect the needs of a family, or perhaps to meet the upward mobility of both parents in terms of their economic livelihood is being stunted, and they are fortunate if they can buy an affordable starter home.

The whole picture of parents aiding their children in the purchase of that first home is also becoming stunted. How can parents who may have three or four children begin to assist one child in purchasing a house, which is now in the neighbourhood of $225,000 or $230,000? How can that parent or parents treat their children equally? It is obviously becoming impossible. In terms of affordable housing, Metropolitan Toronto has, unfortunately, become an exclusive backyard for the well-to-do. This has not happened by any master grand design, but that is clearly the direction in which Metropolitan Toronto is heading.

Without deference to the various municipalities and towns that have sprung up around Toronto, for example, Brantford, Ajax, Newmarket, or Bolton, which are beginning to flourish as they should, but flourishing from individuals who work, shop, and go to Toronto for their various social, cultural, and entertainment opportunities. That should not be the case. The individual ought to have the opportunity of residing and living in that same community without commuting great distances. Those distances are becoming farther. There are people who do the daily trek from Newmarket, Stouffville, Ajax for one hour or an hour and a half into Toronto, they work, and then return because they cannot afford to live in Metropolitan Toronto. Clearly that is wrong.

If we as a Government are to be interested in where and how people live, and why people can live here and not there, and if we have that social conscience as a Parliament and as a Government, and I believe that we can muster that, then we cannot run away from the problem in Metropolitan Toronto, and indeed in the major centres of the country.

In his 10-point agenda the Hon. Member for Scarborough West offered a number of stimulating concepts and ideas that we need to address. We need to address those not only as a Government, and as a federal Government, but in partnership with provincial and municipal elected leadership. We also have to bring into that partnership the builders in Metropolitan Toronto, as well as the real estate industry. It goes beyond simply trying to have a program of assistance for that first time home buyer, or perhaps to take the Downsview Airport base and give portions of that land to affordable housing. Those are legitimate programs and proposals that we need to look at.

We also need to look at the speculative real estate market in urban centres like Toronto. The Hon. Member touched on that briefly but we need to delve into it much more seriously. There needs to be some sort of apparatus which would not allow these artificially inflated prices to take root. How many times have we seen in Metropolitan Toronto a real estate market cutthroat competitive to the point where real estate agents, rather than losing a listing, will list a house at an inflated price.

I am not knocking the real estate industry because they have to put food on the table. However, it is clearly wrong to have an agent list a home for $240,000 or $250,000, when it would realistically sell for $175,000 or $180,000, just to satisfy the seller. It is not the individual transaction that is worrisome. It is the collective effect of many real estate agents and companies doing it. Prices will start upward in an artificial spiral and the transactions will legitimize the price of a home at $240,000 or $250,000 rather than a realistic figure of $170,000 or $175,000. Clearly there needs to be a code of ethics in the sense of looking at housing not only as an economic transaction but as the centre-piece of an individual's existence in any major urban centre.

We should also, particularly municipal leaders, look at the question of property taxes. How often do we hear, from our more senior citizen population in particular, that having suffered and sacrificed for 30 years to move from an apartment to a semi-detached to a bungalow or perhaps a split-level, the property tax becomes a problem. The income of a senior citizen in Metropolitan Toronto is so poor that they cannot keep up their homes much less afford the increasing property taxes imposed on them.

It is time to look at that situation because municipalities have to replace their infrastructure and to do so, perhaps they should have a piece of the income tax pie. When you really get down to it, it is unfair, given what we expect from the various city councils and their budgets, to ask them to deliver the necessary services without passing the cost on to individual home owners. It then becomes a vicious circle. The property tax base is becoming archaic and unrealistic. For example, it is time to reform the system so that when people improve their home through an addition, which will be immediately reflected in increased property taxes, we should have perhaps a freeze so that those taxes do not have to be paid except when the house is sold. Otherwise, not only are people not going to be able to afford improvements, we will be discouraging them from making those improvements which keep our city clean and proper.

I hope the House of Commons and the Government take this motion and others very seriously so that we can avoid our major municipalities going the way of New York where apartments rent for $10,000 a month. From that lesson let us learn to be different. Let us learn as an elected body to confront the challenges now for a better tomorrow.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, I am very glad to be able to speak on this subject of the housing shortage crisis in Metropolitan Toronto. I join with the Hon. Member who just spoke in commending the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) for having brought this before us today.

I will not take time to reiterate the evidence that there is a housing shortage crisis. It has been well publicized in many ways and the Hon. Member has stated it well. I wish to comment on some of the past and present ways of dealing with the problem, though.

For the past four decades or so, particularly up until the beginning of the 1980s, the Government undertook to solve the housing problem primarily by subsidizing the builders. That resulted not in lower prices to consumers but in much higher profits and the creation of huge companies such as Cadillac which then took their profits to the U.S. so that we do not have the benefit of that tax gift anymore. That gift ran into the billions.

I believe the Hon. Member for Scarborough West is on a much sounder track with his proposals and I will be referring to some of them in a few minutes. Before I do, I wish to comment on the remarks of the Minister responsible for housing at the Co-op Housing Foundation meeting in Vancouver on the weekend. In his address he made two promises which were mentioned in the newspapers.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Madam Speaker. I regret to interrupt my hon. friend but there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is unanimous consent to the following order being put:

That after the recorded division on the subamendment to Government Order No. 26 later this day, the House shall continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of adjournment for the further consideration of Government Order No. 23 (Meech Lake) and that when debate is completed on the said order the question shall be deemed to have been put and the recorded division deferred until three p.m. Wednesday, June 22, 1988.

I thank my colleague for his patience.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the terms of the motion. Shall the motion carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

HOUSING

METRO TORONTO HOUSING SHORTAGE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Stackhouse:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should make the solution of the developing housing shortage crisis in Metro Toronto a matter of top priority in forming housing and financial policies for 1988.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Madam Speaker, when the Minister spoke in Vancouver the major promise he made was to increase the project development allowance for each project to a maximum of $500,000, depending of course on the size and circumstances of the project. The other promise was that up to 50 per cent of the units might be subsidized in each of the new projects, although he indicated that that would be partly by increasing the charges on the non-subsidized units and, of course, it would be subject to provincial negotiation which, as we know, puts it in the possibly far Never, Never Land. However, I do welcome those initiatives of the Minister as far as they go. He did not answer some of the co-op movement's particular requests. The co-op movement, taking the same view, which in part is shared by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, of a public obligation to assist in providing affordable housing, has asked that the Government commit itself to enabling the co-op movement to produce 10,000 units of housing per year.

• (1740)

It points out that in Metro Toronto alone there are 20,000 requests on hand for housing accommodation. It also requested something similar to what was promised, namely, 40 per cent of the unit would be for low income people and 20 per cent for people of not quite such low income. There would be cut-off lines. People with modest income, as the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, said often have great difficulty in Metro Toronto. The Minister's promise as stated was not at all clear on how it would address that problem of those of modest income.

There is a request for a $20 million land trust to enable co-ops to acquire land for building, but this money would come from existing funds contributed by the co-operatives into the co-op housing stabilization funds. It would require the Government to assist in making those funds available for land acquisition. They also ask that administration of co-op housing units be transferred to the co-operative organizations, not each individual co-op, but the 60 service organizations for co-ops that have grown up in the country. They point to the general experience that co-operative housing after five years or so is so efficiently operated that housing charges are lower than comparable housing rents in the districts around them. In other words, co-ops manage their funds efficiently.

In addition to these, Madam Speaker, I would urge several other points. I agree strongly with the Hon. Member for Scarborough West in saying that we should reinstitute a tax on speculation. Perhaps in the direct sense that must be done by a provincial government—and I am not sure—but this Government could very well do it simply by rescinding its ill-advised capital gains exemption of, I believe, $100,000 at present since that is considered to have done a great deal to inflate land prices in places like Metro Toronto.

There is also the question of lands in Metro. There is more than just the Downsview lands. The federal Government owns a good deal of land in different parts of Metro, which it has been selling off to the highest bidder. Metro council is instituting a reform of its own practices with its own Metro lands, namely, to give non-profit housing first refusal on Metro lands to be sold. That would not produce such a high price in all cases, but it would very directly and quickly go to meet the need of which the Hon. Member for Scarborough West has reminded us. This federal Government would not only with the Downsview land but other lands in all parts of Metro follow the same principle of giving housing, that is non-profit and affordable housing, the first chance whether it is leased or lease-to-buy as the Hon. Member suggests to co-ops. There could be a variation or several plans tried.

I would also agree roundly with the Member's suggestion of removing the federal sales tax on building materials. That would cost some money in taxes lost but I will come back to that. There was a suggestion that a mortgage exchange ought to be assisted financially by the Government. Other suggestions the Hon. Member makes would cost the Government money, and I will come now to that point.

The money is available. It is a question of where the Government's priorities are. The $1 billion that might be squandered on nuclear powered submarines will, which not defend Canada and will perhaps increase the danger of war, would provide a great deal of this housing assistance which the Hon. Member has pointed out is urgently needed and much more clearly needed than nuclear powered submarines. Furthermore, dollar for dollar or billion dollars for billion dollars, building and servicing housing and providing the necessities within housing, furniture and the rest, will create far more jobs than the same $1 billion spent on nuclear submarines.

I hope this Parliament will treat the Hon. Member's motion very seriously and that perhaps we might even have some legislative initiatives in the same direction.

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to participate on Motion No. 156 put forward by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse). I commend him for his fine 10-point program. I want to say a few words on the economic situation generally and then speak on matters of housing, particularly for our growing elderly population, especially in Metro Toronto and in my riding of Willowdale which is part of Metro.

I believe all Members will agree that a strong and stable economy is a requisite for a vigorous housing industry capable of meeting the needs of Canadians. The actions of the federal Government in managing the national economy well with low interest rates, low inflation rates and the creation of 1.3 million jobs since 1984 had a profound influence on private business and industry. In the field of housing, entrepreneurs and the Government through Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation have worked together since the earliest days of the corporation in providing decent housing for Canadians, especially for low income Canadians.

This private public partnership arrangement has been of immense importance. In the early days of CMHC, the private sector developed the land and built the housing according to CMHC standards and designs that were fashioned to make homes available to the majority of Canadians. This partnership philosophy has continued through a variety of government programs, and Canada's housing industry has been a powerful ally in making these programs work effectively. The policies and programs of CMHC as an agency of the federal Government since the end of the war have been designed to encourage home ownership as well as to make housing available to those who cannot afford to buy a home, especially those in the low income groups.

The federal Government and other levels of government have undertaken the responsibility of providing affordable housing to low income Canadians. For Canadians who are able to buy homes, the private sector plays the lead role while the Government's supporting activities set the climate. An area of growing interest is the challenge we face in the coming years of housing our senior citizens, especially in Metro Toronto and in my riding of Willowdale. Before too long, one in four Canadians will be a senior. We must prepare now for that day together with private industry, the provinces and, of course, the municipalities.

It will be necessary for the private and public sectors to continue to work together to meet the challenge. We must determine how the housing for senior citizens will be financed, how regulations can be developed to assist rather than hinder innovation and how appropriate levels of support can be provided within communities. Canadians in general and seniors specifically are well housed. Many of them built their homes in days when NHA mortgages and mortgage insurance helped create 25 per cent of all the homes in Canada. They offered low downpayments on long mortgage terms.

There are about 2.7 million seniors in Canada now and they live in about 1.3 million households. Of that number, 1.1 million own their own homes. This is a group envied by those of us who have not yet graduated to the status of senior, though some of us are getting close. This group is fortunate in that 92 per cent of them own their own homes outright. They have no mortgage whatsoever, and on average, their homes are worth precisely the same as younger households, $57,000.

• (1750)

Looking at the net wealth of senior-led households versus those who are not there yet, the statistics are remarkable. The total assets minus the total debts of seniors versus non-seniors is again precisely the same, $133,000. The principal difference is that seniors have more liquid assets and little or no mortgage. I do not mean to suggest that turning 65 somehow creates riches. It does not, but planning, good fortune and a wide range of other factors have brought the majority of Canadians to this happy circumstance.

As you and I know, Madam Speaker, there is a group of Canadians who are seniors but do not fit the profile of the fortunate individuals I have just described. That is where Governments have historically played the most important role, in helping those who need it most.

In housing, there is a mix of programs available to ensure that senior citizens remain integrated in the mainstream of society. Through CMHC non-profit housing, co-operatives, rent-supplement assistance and residential rehabilitation, Government helps to provide decent, affordable housing.

In the last three years, more than 15,600 social housing units have been added for seniors, bringing the total number of senior units to more than 184,000. The residential rehabilitation program is a tremendous help for elderly home owners to keep their homes in good repair. In 1986, approximately 10,500 seniors' homes were repaired under this program, using a full 30 per cent of the total budget. A special residential rehabilitation program is now available throughout the country for Canadians who become disabled. All that is required is a call to the local CMHC office.

Seniors have built a country which has created much wealth and they have also encouraged the value of compassion. It is an important legacy which we must carry into the future. There is virtue in this and there is also an imperative. Governments, private industry and concerned groups must lift their eyes to this horizon.

Can we ensure that seniors continue to live independently and in dignity? I believe we can, and this Government is taking leadership in preparing an environment that will allow new financing mechanisms, new types of housing styles and a wide range of housing options for future seniors.

CMHC already has a number of important research programs under way in preparation for this changing population. It is already looking at a wide range of styles of housing and at some very interesting new ways of financing these households. A national demonstration project of garden suites or granny flats is already under way and has met with tremendous response. It may be one option for the future.

Many elderly home owners have equity in their homes but lack the income to pay the taxes and keep them maintained. The federal Government could assist by having property taxes and repairs deducted from income taxes for seniors, or could give a grant similar to that which the province gives on property taxes. Methods of converting this equity to cash are currently being developed by both the public and the private sectors. Reverse annuity mortgages, for example, could allow home owners to take out a significant portion of home equity and use all or part of it to buy an annuity that provides monthly payments for life.

Another option is a sale-lease-back arrangement in which an investor pays below market value for a house in return for a reduction in the rent paid by the seller. Alternatively, the seller could take back the mortgage, ensuring a steady stream of income from the payments. Arrangements such as these allow the elderly home owner to remain independent in his or her own home with security of tenure and an improved cash flow to meet taxes and maintenance needs.

Another area of investigation is the concept of made-to-convert housing which is designed to make it easy for a portion of a house to be made into an accessory apartment during different periods in the life cycle of a family. It could be an income-producing apartment or accommodation for elderly parents. We should also encourage the provinces to gradually reduce rent controls, of course.

An important step in meeting the challenge of housing for the elderly has already been taken. A major national conference will be held in Halifax this October to discuss the issue and to look for solutions.

An incentive for the housing industry to get involved in the problem is a new affordable housing achievement award. This award has been established by CMHC to give public recognition for excellence to those who bring adequate and affordable housing to Canadians.

The Government could lower the tax on building materials for affordable housing, as my friend from Scarborough West suggested. When industries move out, we could use that land for residential and commercial purposes rather than for the present commercial use only. The Government could make available leased federal surplus lands in Downsview and Vaughn, as the Hon. Member for Scarborough West has said, for various types of housing in one community, or could make mortgage deductability available for first time home owners and institute a land speculation tax to cool the market.

Housing the young and the elderly requires urgent and long term planning now. I am pleased to know that once again the private sector is working with the public sector to plan for the future.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Madam Speaker, unfortunately I see that I have only a couple of minutes before you call it six o'clock, but I would like to take this opportunity to outline some of the research activities in housing undertaken by the Government to improve the availability of affordable housing to all Canadians in Toronto and elsewhere.

As a result of the consultation process started a few years ago between the Government and Canadians with a stake in housing, the National Housing Research Committee was established. This very important initiative is already paying dividends. The committee includes the provinces, industry and other main players in the housing sector. Its general aims are to facilitate the co-ordination of research, to identify priorities and to determine the most effective ways to use research funds.

One of the main issues being looked at is that of regulatory reform which is critically important, particularly where the pressure for housing is intense, and the greater Toronto area is an excellent example. As we know, one of the major constraints on getting new housing on the market is the availability of land, and most specifically serviced land. In the greater Toronto area, and I am including Halton, Peel, Durham, York and Metro Toronto, official plan approval has been given for the development of 45,000 vacant acres, and they have been zoned for housing densities ranging from 4.5 homes per acre to 9.4. Even at these very low densities, 303,000 new residences could be built and 68,000 of these potential units are scheduled for development before the end of 1989.

At the current pace of development, there is a nine year supply of vacant land. With infill projects and redevelopment, an extra 6,000 units per year could be built. Through the streamlining of some approval and regulatory processes, could we not move to this goal far sooner than the end of 1989?

Furthermore, rather than putting four estate-sized homes on an acre, it would be appropriate for some municipalities to zone for somewhat higher housing densities such as apartments, townhouses or other forms of multiple family dwellings, or perhaps they could be zoned for smaller sized homes. Many of us in this House started off our early years in 800 or 1,000 square foot houses, and I do not believe that many of us really need 4,000 square feet and five bathrooms. Surely home buyers should have a choice between large and small homes.

We know that property taxes paid to municipal Governments are based on house sizes and amenities, and it is understandable that they would be encouraging this type of housing. However, zoning exclusively for huge single-family dwellings is not helping to provide affordable housing as we understand it.

One of the first priorities of this committee was to review the regulatory process with the municipalities which can add substantially to the cost of housing, and there is no question that a number of regulations on the books are outdated, even though they may have—

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed from Monday, June 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 16379), the amendment of Mr. Guilbault (p. 16387, and the subamendment of Mr. Riis (p. 16390).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(4)(a), the House will now proceed to the defferred recorded vote on the subamendment of Mr. Riis to the motion to extend the days and hours of sitting.

Call in the Members.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment to the amendment lost.

Pursuant to order made earlier this day, the House will now continue with Government Order No. 23.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn, and the amendments of Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra,(p. 15617), Mr. Broadbent, (p. 15618), Mr. Caccia (p. 15618), Mr. Johnston, (p. 15618) and Mr. Roman, (p. 15620).

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, since we decided to extend the hours to continue the debate on Meech Lake, and considering that on Thursday we will go into extended hours as a result of the Standing Orders and that the pages have their annual banquet or get together tonight, I wonder if the Chair would seek unanimous consent of the House to allow the pages to leave the Chamber. We will do the services for ourselves.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, we on this side of the House also much appreciate the services provided by our pages, both ladies and gentlemen, during the past session.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

We would certainly agree with the proposal made by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). We would agree to let the pages go to their party. Maybe, if we sit long enough, they can come back after their celebration and tell us how nice it was.

• (1830)

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, naturally government Members are in agreement with the proposition but not with the premise. If we are to be sitting Thursday night it will be as a result of Government Motion No. 26, and not a motion under the Standing Orders. We are in agreement with the suggestion.

Mr. Prud'homme: Now you're using the book.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair sees that there seems to be unanimous consent with respect to the suggestion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As Acting Speaker and in the name of each and every Member of the House, I say to our pages: "bon appétit".

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Thank you, Madam Speaker. It was a very satisfying and also very moving experience to listen to the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) this morning when he spoke to us about Meech Lake. I must say I also listened with great satisfaction to the Leaders of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) when they set forth their positions.

However, Madam Speaker, this afternoon I was exposed to the, I must say appalling, experience of listening to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) who gave us a picture of Canada that is completely outdated.

If we rise above the melee around Meech Lake and ignore the purely linguistic and legal considerations, we get a very clear impression of what this country is, what it should be, and what Canadians want it to be.

The Accord is the expression of a desire to reaffirm and reinforce the federal nature of our country. This is particularly necessary since for many years, the federal Government did so much to make Canadians forget the federal nature of their country. This attitude, unfortunately, led to divisions, the like of which Canada had never seen before. That is now over and done with, as Professor Kenneth McRoberts of York University said, and I quote:

> The Accord will at least have the effect of establishing once and for all that Canada is a federal State.

Professor Pierre Fortin of Laval University added:

Meech Lake is important because of its form and its substance. It fosters confidence in our efforts to build this country in the future, with eleven governments working together in the national interest, instead of just one.

Madam Speaker, I think that the vision of Canada that we see arising from Meech Lake was described far better than any one has done so far by the Hon. Lowell Murray, when he appeared before the Committee of the Whole in the other place on March 31. Senator Murray said on that occasion:

The Meech Lake Accord will help transform our Constitution [. . .] into a more authentically federalist document. In so doing, the accord will not revolutionize our constitutional arrangements. Rather, it reaffirms the view of the federation held by a broad spectrum of Canadians. This view is not based on mistrust, a pugilistic vision of competition between the partners of the federation. Rather, it assumes the interdependence of the federal and provincial governments and provides a better reflection of what Canadians want Canada to be—a generous, tolerant and united society which respects diversity and which believes that governments should work cooperatively within their respective spheres of juridiction. [End of citation]

Madam Speaker, I do not believe that it is necessary to add anything at all. That is what the Accord does and the vision of Canada that it defends.

Unfortunately, not everyone shares this vision of Canada. Many prefer the pugilistic vision that Senator Murray spoke of.

And the Liberal majority in the Senate is full of those people for whom federal-provincial relations must be a no-holds-barred combat. For them, the central power is an empire; they are its gladiators and they are sworn to fight for it in the federal-provincial arena.

For the Liberal Senators, Meech Lake is the end of the empire and its replacement by a true federation.

It is not surprising under these circumstances that they applauded when the emperor visited them to inquire about their loyalty. It is not surprising that these Liberal gladiators in the Senate saluted and answered Ave Caesar, morituri te salutant or rather, if I may be allowed a free translation, " Hail, Pierre, those who would like to kill the Meech Lake Accord salute you."

But although they did everything in their power to make their vision of Canada triumph, the Senate gladiators cannot prevent Canadians from hoping for a new era of greater cooperation and respect between the two levels of government and all Canadians.

Most Canadians wants us to pass the Accord, I think, because it will bring about this vision of a Canada of cooperation and respect, of a stronger, more united Canada.

How? That is just the question I intend to answer today.

The 1987 Constitutional Accord recognizes first of all, as Senator Murray said, the interdependence of the federal and provincial governments and is based on the principle of intergovernmental cooperation.

This principle was sorely tested during the events that led to the repatriation of the Constitution in 1982. Of course, repatriation, the formula to amend the Constitution in Canada, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are achievements worth mentioning.

Nevertheless, there is an extremely important shortcoming: every time, the decision was made without the consent of Quebecers in the National Assembly of Quebec. Quebecers did not take part in the constitutional banquet of 1982. They were kept out.

How can one help being struck by the irony of Quebec's situation in 1982, considering the history of constitutional reform in Canada over the last two decades?

As Gordon Robertson, chief constitutional advisor to the federal Government from 1975 to 1979, pointed out when he testified before the joint committee examining the Accord, it was Quebec that launched the idea of reform. After years of fruitless constitutional debate, Quebecers said no to sovereignty-association in 1980 and yes to the renewed federalism solemnly promised them by the rest of Canada.

And instead of renewal, an agreement devised behind its back was imposed on Quebec. The Constitutional Accord helps us turn the page on the worst aspects of the 1982 deal, without compromising the major gains. It helps us reunify Canada. But the Accord does much more than help Quebec return to the Canadian fold, Madam Speaker. It sets up a framework which encourages greater cooperation between the two levels of Government. The Accord reinforces the federal nature of major national institutions such as the Supreme Court and the Senate by offering the provinces an opportunity to suggest candidates. Moreoever, the Accord paves the way to a complete reform of the Senate, and the temporary procedure for the selection of candidates reflects the will of the Government to achieve this reform. It shows that for the Federal Government, the type of Senate as it exists now has become obsolete.

In the case of the Supreme Court, the provinces' participation in the selection of judges will also help reinforce the Federal fabric. After all, it is the Supreme Court which is called upon as a last resort to rule on the interpretation of all Constitutional issues, including conflicts between the Federal and Provincial Governments. It is also the Supreme Court which must rule on the constitutional nature of Federal and Provincial legislation.

As far as the First Minister's conferences are concerned, the Accord eliminates once and for all a traditional source of conflict in Federal-Provincial relations. All of you probably know that until 1985, it was the exclusive privilege of the Prime Minister of Canada to call a First Minister's conference. The Provincial Premiers who, by the way, had been meeting for over 30 years . . . even the 10 Premiers could not force the Federal Government to hold a Federal-Provincial conference. The situation was such that, before 1985, they spent more time trying to convince the Prime Minister of Canada of the necessity to call a conference on the economy than of the need to co-operate and co-ordinate the economic policy.

As you know, in 1985 in Regina, the Prime Minister and his Provincial counterparts signed a memorandum of understanding calling for five yearly economic conferences. By entrenching these economic conferences of the First Ministers, the Accord adds an element of stability in the relations between the two levels of Government. Likewise, the Accord makes it possible for the Constitutional reform to proceed in a more orderly fashion, free from the arguments which always surrounded the calling of a conference.

We find the same concern for stability in the provisions of the Accord dealing with immigration. Here, the Accord makes it possible for the various Governments to constitutionalize the Federal-Provincial Agreements to administer this shared responsibility. Free from political interference, the Constitutional Agreements will contribute to a long-term planning of Government action in this area. It is also the Accord which will ensure the stability without overlooking the need to protect national interests efficiently.

Under the Accord, it is the responsibility of the Parliament of Canada to set "national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada". The Federal supremacy in the area of immigration is therefore secured.

Madam Speaker, there is another factor which contributes to clearing up relations between governments and strengthening the Canadian federation, namely the provisions concerning the power to spend. This power of Parliament will be maintained and, for the first time, explicitly acknowledged in the Constitution. It seems to me that is one of the factors which has been ignored by the critics of the accord.

Sometimes these people would have us believe that the provinces are forced to join shared cost programs set up by the federal Government in fields under exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Of course this idea is akin to the vision some people have of Canada.

Whether you like it or not, the provinces never did have to accept such programs.

The integrity of provincial jurisdiction is acknowledged in the accord, guaranteeing as it does fair compensation for provinces whose programs are tailored to the specific needs of the people and compatible with the national objectives.

According to Queen's University Intergovernmental Relations Institute Director Peter Leslie, this arrangement might prove to be very good for Canadians, both as taxpayers and as people on the receiving end of various programs.

He also stressed that the provinces will be in a position to find new solutions to problems which are common to most Canadians, and they will be urged to set up the mechanisms required to reach the national objectives as effectively as possible.

For their part, the joint committee members came to the conclusion that, in fields under exclusive provincial authority, shared-cost national programs can still be negotiated to the benefit of both the federal Government and the provincial Governments, and that basically the proposed change will reaffirm the importance of negotiations. In other words, the accord guarantees that from the outset the federal Government will be inclined to proceed through co-operation and negotiation rather than make unilateral attempts to force the provinces to accept rigid programs. Again this goes to show that after the accord the Constitution will be more respectful of our federal character.

Madam Speaker, this brings me to the conclusion that the constitutional accord strengthens the Canadian federation in two ways.

First it enables Quebec unashamedly to get back to the job of building the Canadian nation.

Second, it ensures that the federal Government and the provinces will make a joint effort in a spirit of co-operation rather than confrontation.

Thanks to the accord we will be united rather than divided in our quest for better ways to respond to the challenges of tomorrow.

Certain critics seem to have quite simply chosen the old approach: seek confrontation and send the country down the warpath.

As I see it, Robert Stanfield aptly summed up the situation when he appeared before the Senate committee and said: "Some people do wonder what the Government and the Canadian Parliament are getting out of the accord. Well, among a few other things, the perspective of leading a united country where people fully respect one another rather than a country slowly moving towards self-destruction."

Madam Speaker, that is a challenging undertaking which all Members can proudly support. I hope they will vote in favour of the resolution.

Mr. Redway: I wish to congratulate my colleague, the Parliamentary Secretary, on her remarks this evening and to tell her that I whole-heartedly agree with them. As she is aware, I am a whole-hearted supporter of the Meech Lake Accord. Inclusive in that is the provisions of the Accord which incorporate the concept of a distinct society. My own personal belief is that the Accord merely puts on paper what has been and has always been a part of Canadian society ever since our country started and, for that matter, for hundreds of years before there was a formal country of Canada.

I know that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary is aware of concerns that have been voiced by approximately one-third of Canadians whose origin is neither French nor English but come from a variety of minority cultures and backgrounds that make up our great country. In my own constituency there are over 70 different cultures and ethnic groups. On many occasions they have voiced to me their concerns with respect to the fact that there is no mention in the Meech Lake Accord of these other ethnic and cultural communities and that they are concerned that this, in some way, may take away from their rights.

Earlier today we heard a comment from another Member of the House to the effect that they voiced that concern, in that they feel that perhaps the Meech Lake Accord overrides the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and takes away some of the rights enshrined in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That concern is also reflected in some of the amendments put forward in the House. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) deals with that concern in one of his amendments. It is also reflected in the amendment put forth by the Hon. Member for York North (Mr. Roman), that somehow or other the concept of a distinct society for French Canadians overrides the rights of the multicultural communities of Canada.

• (1850)

As you and the Parliamentary Secretary know, Madam Speaker, Section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides that the Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians. That provision relates to Section 1 which says that the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees the rights and freedoms set out in it.

In my view, in no way is there any amendment to that Charter of Rights and Freedoms and in no way is the concept of a multicultural Canada overridden by the Meech Lake Accord.

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary if she and the Government agree that the rights of various multicultural communities as set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are in no way overridden by the Meech Lake Accord and in fact remain as a solid basis of the rights and freedoms and privileges of all our minority groups as citizens of Canada?

[Translation]

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Charlesbourg): Madam Speaker, I would first like to say that the question asked by my colleague, and especially his preamble, do reveal how much he appreciates the Meech Lake Accord. Concerning minority rights, I think that somewhere in my speech mention was made of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That is a vested right for Canadian society and it's for keeps.

The reference in the Meech Lake Accord to a dictinct society means a situation peculiar to Quebec. The idea is not to curtail the rights and freedoms of others, but to recognize that Quebec lives in a situation all of its own. As far as the government and I are concerned, there was never any question of denying other groups any particular right or freedom. To my mind, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms will prevail for Canada's multicultural groups.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Madam Speaker, as a Quebecker, I have always considered it essential for the future of our country that Quebec be a major, full fledged partner in the Canadian federation and that it have at its disposal the essential tools for development.

In 1980, when the referendum on sovereignty-association took place, a majority of Quebecers said yes to Canada and to constitutional reform. That was the signal which set in motion the process of constitutional reform and renewal.

However, since patriation, we have all deeply felt Quebec's absence and it was imperative to find a respectable way to bring Quebec back into the constitutional fold.

Although I feel that Meech Lake is far from perfect, Madam Speaker, I find it an acceptable compromise to pull Quebec out of constitutional isolation.

It fits our venerable constitution to the realities of the times.

I contend that this debate can be rightfully termed fundamental to the future of Canada. Furthermore, it concerns the Constitution, the uppermost document in our legislative framework.

For some, of course, Quebec should be a province like the others. In their view, any concession to Quebec opens the door to separatism. Their vision of Canada is static and they are neither able to sense the ever evolving reality of our country nor to adapt to it.

Quebec wants certain guarantees with regard to its distinctiveness, to the growth of its population, to its participation in federal institutions, to its full freedom to use the legislative powers granted to Quebec under the Constitutional Act of 1867.

History has shown clearly that there can be no building of Canada without Quebec and that the men and women of Quebec must have their place in life and institutions of this country. In fact, the distinct character of Quebec is a fundamental aspect of Canadian federalism.

The role of the Canadian Government is not a passive one. It has the full right and responsibility to protect and promote the French fact not only here in Canada, but also abroad.

It must constantly define and attune that responsibility in light of changing situations and greater challenges as the country evolves.

Such is the vision that guides us today in this debate on the Meech Lake Agreement.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I was among those who supported the motion the first time and I now reiterate my support today.

As for the distinct society concept, Madam Speaker, Quebec's distinct identity is not new. Quebec is the main wellspring of the Francophone community's linguistic and cultural energy and inspiration and, as Senator Eugene Forsey pointed out, Quebec is the citadel of French in Canada.

It is a fact that Quebec is different from the other provinces. Its differences lie in its history, language and Civil Code, its origins, feelings and politics.

Madam Speaker, Meech Lake is not unique in recognizing Quebec as a distinct society. The Constitution Act, 1867, created a federal rather than a unitarian State, in order to respect and protect the distinct society established within the territory of the Province of Quebec.

Madam Speaker, that is a historic fact, even if the Constitution Act, 1867, does not say so specifically. However, many sections of our Constitution recognize the distinctiveness of Quebec. Section 133 of the Constitution Act, 1867, provides guarantees for the use of French and English before federal courts, the courts in Quebec and in the National Assembly. These guarantees are not found among the other founding provinces. Section 94 of the Constitution Act, 1867, provides that the Parliament of Canada may make provision for the uniformity of all and any of the laws relative to property and civil rights. This section applies to only three of the four founding provinces, namely Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

From the outset, the Fathers of Confederation decided that Quebec's Civil Code and Code of Civil Procedure would remain distinct from the Common Law practised in the other provinces. That is, in fact, what happened.

Madam Speaker, although the Constitution recognizes provincial equality, this equality is not a major consideration, because on the other hand, the Constitution provides that on historic and geographic grounds, treatment may differ from province to province. As the Joint Committee pointed out, the principle of provincial equality is an important one, but it should not be allowed to stand in the way of the development of a large part of our country and penalize its population. In 1979, the members of the Pépin-Robarts Commission, in referring to Quebec's distinctiveness, pointed out that in a society in transition, politics take on a new meaning. Because of these aspects, Quebec is a society, it is a province and it is the citadel of the French Canadian people. So there is nothing revolutionary, in this day and age, about the constitutional and exclusive recognition of Quebec as a distinct society.

I don't think Quebec will turn inwards or that the Accord will lead to the two-nation or two-Canadas concept. The existence of a political society does not necessarily lead to the creation of an independent State. Quebecers don't want to live in a ghetto. It is possible to have a pluralistic State. The distinct society concept will not affect bilingualism. On the contrary, the Official Languages Act remains in effect. The protection afforded by the Constitution to official language minorities across the country is in no way diminished, and every province still has the option of declaring itself officially bilingual. Finally, Meech Lake obliges governments to preserve Canada's linguistic duality.

As far as immigration is concerned, Madam Speaker, Section 95 of the Constitution Act, 1867, provides for concurrent powers, with federal paramountcy should provincial legislation not be compatible with federal statutes.

Sections 95 (a) to 95 (e) in the Meech Lake Accord which deal with immigration are, in fact, a constitutional rendering of the Cullen-Couture Agreement that will provide Quebec with a sound basis for claiming the right to select prospective immigrants. The Accord guarantees that within the annual immigration quota set by the federal Government for all of Canada, Quebec will have a number of immigrants, including refugees, proportional to its share of the population and, for demographic reasons, it can exceed its immigration quota by 5 per cent.

We cannot help but be pleased with this provision. All the provinces may avail themselves of it, but I believe that especially for Quebec, which faces a serious problem due to a low birth rate, this provision will have major beneficial effects because it will help Quebec protect its particular linguistic character.

As regards the Supreme Court, creation of the Supreme Court of Canada does not go back to Confederation. The Judiciary Committee of the Privy Council of Great Britain at that time took the place of a court of appeal for all British colonies and the obligation to apply to it was maintained even after Confederation. The 1867 Constitution Act provided for the creation of an appeal court for Canada.

Section 101 of this Act authorized the federal Parliament to adopt measures to create, maintain and organize a general appeal court for Canada. The court was created by an Act of Parliament in 1878 and therefore Parliament could amend it by a federal law.

In 1949, the federal Parliament abolished the right of appeal to the Privy Council and in 1975, it required appellants to obtain authorization to do so, thus giving the Supreme Court effective control over the cases it would hear.

I am glad that paragraphs 101(a) and 101(e) of the Meech Lake Accord enshrine the Supreme Court in the Constitution.

This is even more important because since the Charter in 1982, the Supreme Court influences the evolution of Canadian society as never before. We need only refer to the latest decision on abortion to see what an effect the Supreme Court can have on the Canadian people.

Such a unique court must be enshrined in the Constitution. Furthermore, reports on the Constitution presented over the years are unanimous on this point.

Quebec's civil law legal system is distinct from the other provinces.

It was necessary to guarantee the civil law component in the Constitution. Quebec judges are trained in civil law and practise in French. Their presence is therefore crucial in civil law cases and those pleaded in French.

As for constitutional conferences, Madam Speaker, the Accord also has a provision requiring that a conference of First Ministers on the Constitution be held at least every year, the first one to be held within 12 months of the proclamation of the present constitutional amendment, not later than the end of 1988. The following items on the agenda are expected to be written into the Constitution: Senate reform, roles and responsibilities in fisheries, as well as any other question on which agreement is reached.

But I am wondering: Why did the Canadian Government include none of the matters of concern to it in the agenda of the First Ministers' Annual Conferences on the Constitution. It should have included among other things a provision to abolish the nothwithstanding clause, i.e. Section 33 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, with the aim to provide all Canadians with the most complete protection of their rights and freedoms. Also, it could have proposed an amendment to Section 23 of the 1982 Constitutional Act to provide official language minorities with control and management of their publicly supported educational institutions and also to delete the words "where the number so warrants" in Section 23, while recognizing that Section 1 of the Constitutional Act, 1982 applies to Section 23.

Concerning the spending power, Madam Speaker, it has been there for a good number of years. Mr. Pierre E. Trudeau defined that power as the power of Parliament to pay monies to individuals, organizations or governments for purposes which do not necessarily fall within the legislative power of the Parliament of Canada. That power was not provided for in the 1867 Constitution. It is now entrenched in Clause 106A of the Meech Lake Agreement. But the wording is ambiguous. I am thinking for instance to the terms "shared-cost program" and "national objectives".

As pointed out by Mr. John Whyte, the Dean of Queen's University law school, during the Joint Committee's hearings, the uncertainty as to the eligibility to compensation and its related conditions apparently constitute a very strong disincentive for the Canadian Government to engage into certain expenditures related to social social programs. That uncertainty as to eligibility to compensation is a disincentive because it is impossible to know two things: first, the amount of compensation to be paid, that is compensation for which the Canadian Government will be given no credit and for which it cannot be held responsible either. And second, the attainability of the project objectives because no one can say how many provinces will decide, when a project is announced, to bring their own measures in line with the national objectives.

Will that prevent us from having national programs? Does that mean that from now on it will be impossible to establish a national childcare program? What about the guaranteed annual income and medicare? Would unemployment insurance have been impossible under the Accord agreed to by the First Ministers?

Will the possibility of opting out of programs with compensation undermine the quality and uniformity of services throughout Canada? Who will set national goals?

As for the Senate, the amending formula will require from now on the unanimous consent of the provinces. It is too strict even with regard to federal institutions. Isn't there a danger of eventually being trapped within the Constitution? Will Senate reform come to pass? Will we finally see a Senate elected according to the formula adopted by the Prime Minister and his provincial counterparts? A reform of the Upper House is highly desirable, but the proposed amending formula is a strait jacket. It will make it very difficult.

• (1910)

And now, Madam Speaker, I would like to go somewhat against what my colleague from Charlesbourg (Mrs. Tardif) said when she seemed to hold the Senate responsible for holding up the ratification of the Lake Meech Accord. As for me, I say that we must live with our institutions and that, as long as they are not changed, we will continue to respect them and each other. It is only by respecting each other that we will be able to make the changes required to get the political instruments we need to go forward and give Canadians the best Government and the best political system in the world.

Madam Speaker, we know from experience how hard it is to amend the Constitution. The Meech lake Accord is more than just an agreement. It is a unanimous agreement which cannot be dismissed out of hand. This unanimity weighs heavily on all Canadians. It means the pride of belonging to a nation which, despite its regional disparities, succeeds in creating harmony from coast to coast. As Mr. Whyte told the Joint Committee: Those who continue to oppose the 1987 Accord, after it has been accepted and approved by Quebec, must realize that they are not only working against conditions for reconciliation, but also attacking an historic document of reconciliation which will clearly have a long term negative impact on Canada. The deficiencies of the Accord would have to be very serious and have highly probable consequences and I don't think it is the case, Madam Speaker.

This time, Canada and Quebec must not miss the boat, although a few riders could be added on later. There will always be time to correct the flaws in the Accord, Madam Speaker. We are at a privileged juncture. Let us say yes to Quebec.

Mr. Grisé: Madam Speaker, first of all, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin) for his interesting speech and especially for his interest in Quebec. Madam Speaker, I was thrilled with the first part of his speech, but the conclusion of his statement leaves me somewhat confused, because there he begins to quote and list the weaknesses that might be found in the Meech Lake Agreement, which was unanimous, as he rightly mentioned, and because we have certain institutions, he must respect their decisions. I have great difficulty understanding the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice, Madam Speaker, because on the one hand, he says that we must absolutely respect the Agreement as it is, in the interests of Quebec, and he is prepared to defend Quebec's interests particularly. On the other hand, he says that we must respect the decision of the other place, a majority of whose members belong to his party, Madam Speaker.

We know very well that the Senate has a Liberal majority. So how come those Senators decided not to accept a decision of the House of Commons, accepted by all three parties and the Canadian people so that Quebec can return to the constitutional family and they decided for all sorts of reasons that it is not necessary, it is not important, because it is not a perfect agreement? We never claimed to have a perfect agreement. How can you amend a text that you don't even have, something that does not even exist? How can the Hon. Member for Saint-Maurice accept the decision of his colleagues, of his caucus, of the Liberal Senators, to say no to Quebec once again and at the same time say, "Yes, Madam Speaker, I voted for the Meech Lake Agreement and I intend to continue to do so"? How can they split their decision? How can they divide their interest for Quebec into sentimental and political categories?

Mr. Grondin: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) for giving me this opportunity to say that, in this case, respect is a matter of respecting our parliamentary institutions that make decisions on the basis of the texts they receive or the bills submitted to them by the House and which may require improvements or amendments or changes to make these bills acceptable.

If I may make a comparison between the texts we send to the other place and the Government's decision to ask us to sit this summer, we must abide by the decision even if we disagree with the Government's proposal, since we will have to bow to the will of the majority, and the same applies to the amendments proposed by the Senate which will probably be rejected by the Government's majority when the Senate has finished its review.

Madam Speaker, I may also inform the Hon. Member that I always agreed with Meech Lake as a way to bring Quebec back in the Canadian constitutional family, but I am also in favour of adopting certain amendments that were unfortunately rejected by the Government majority. Personally, I believe that the proposals made by the Opposition included amendments that would have been acceptable to Canadians as a whole, especially to Native people and other groups that may feel somewhat frustrated by the Accord as it stands today. I look favourably on Meech Lake because of the prospect of a second round of negotiations that will give us an opportunity to correct the weaknesses of the initial document. That is why I am in favour of Meech Lake and why I pointed out the weaknesses of the present version, and I hope that the second round will give us a chance to remedy those weaknesses and make the Accord responsive to the wishes of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to say a few words in this debate in support of the Meech Lake Accord. I am also very proud to say that all three political Parties are in support of the Meech Lake Accord.

[Translation]

I have been a Member of this House since 1968. In fact, it will be twenty years a little less than two weeks from now, and I remember very clearly when the referendum was held in Quebec eight years ago. At the time, Quebecers said yes to Canada and now it is time for Canada to say yes to Quebec.

[English]

In the last 25 or 30 years, this country has spent an awful lot of time and political energy on the constitutional issue. We have talked about this issue month after month, year after year, at various conferences around this country. Now, for the very first time in the last 30 years, we have unanimous agreement on a constitutional Accord for Canada that is signed by all 10 premiers, including the Premier of Quebec.

For me as a Canadian from western Canada, perhaps the most moving moment of the constitutional debate surrounding Meech Lake was when the Premier of the Province of Quebec, Robert Bourassa, sat at that table and put his signature on the Accord with the other Premiers of Canada and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, it was in my view an historic moment for all of Canada, for all Canadian men and women, since we have now spent the last 25 or 30 years in constitutional debate.

And I do remember the last 25 or 30 years. At first I was only a young lad in Saskatchewan but I have vivid memories of the quiet revolution in Quebec. I clearly recollect the great quiet revolution headed by Jean Lesage, the former liberal premier of Quebec, and his ministers, René Lévesque, Gérin-Lajoie and many others who were there at the time of the quiet revolution in Quebec.

Afterwards, there was an evolution with Daniel Johnson as leader of the Union Nationale and I recall very well his campaign slogan or "Égalité ou indépendance". He won his election campaign on that slogan, on that platform.

Madam Speaker, after that I was elected in 1968 and I was here facing Prime Minister Trudeau and others, before the Victoria Conference, held in 1971. And as I remember very well, an agreement was signed in Victoria, in June I believe, by the Prime Minister of Canada and ten provincial Premiers, including also Premier Bourassa of Quebec.

After a few days however, Mr. Bourassa changed his mind, he was won over by many Quebecers such as Claude Ryan and others and he came back on his position. That was the end of the Victoria Agreement of 1971.

Madam Speaker, after that, as you well know, there came November 15 1976, the election of the Parti Québécois, the election of René Lévesque and his crusade for independence and sovereignty-association and the May 1980 referendum.

After that, there was Meech Lake last year. And that is how the constitutional debate has evolved, not only for Quebecers but for all Canadians.

• (1920)

[English]

Quebec has been holding out its hand and saying: "Look, we have signed a document, we are ready to come into the Canadian constitutional family, here is a piece of paper, come and sign it with us and approve it with us". We must accept that gesture. We must not at this time fail to reach out to Quebec. We must seize the historic moment and sign the Meech Lake Accord.

I was one of the Members who sat last summer on the special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons during July and August hearing witness after witness. I want to refer to the words of Madam Chaput-Rolland which were some of the most moving words we heard about the necessity of seizing this historic opportunity and ensuring that we pass a resolution in this House and all across the country in favour of the Meech Lake Accord. The special joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was co-chaired by Senator Tremblay and the Member for Cambridge (Mr. Speyer). I quote from the report at page 139. Madam Chaput-Rolland said:

> I think none outside Quebec knew the reality of the referendum. I travelled throughout Canada, about a few months after. It was all over, eh? Good. It was not exactly all over. Families against families, towns against towns, fathers and mothers not speaking to their children.
> During the Referendum we spoke with thousands of Quebecers. Women wanted to leave to their children a country as big as the one they had received from their father. That was mainly the article that reached the heart, because you are right: in this country if we put a little more heart into what we are doing, maybe we would be aware of the hurt we inflict on others.
> And then we came home. We went back to the National Assembly, back to our villages, back to our houses, back to the friends that were no more friends; they were on the "yes", we were on the "no". It was not a picnic, it was not a social gathering, it was not a think-tank, it was a battle between brothers, a dangerous, divisive battle, and we still feel it. It was not 100 years ago, it was seven years ago that we lived that referendum.
> English Canada could not care less one month after, and it stung me and it stung all of us who fought so hard to remain in Canada and to find ourselves outside of Canada. You know, it was a very dramatic gesture when Mr. Levesque put the flag of Quebec at half mast on the day you were all celebrating here. But our hearts were at half mast too that day, because we were out of a country we had chosen to remain.
> So the Accord of Meech Lake brought us something "incroyable" as a gesture of friendship.

It is very important that we all listen to the words of the Madam Chaput-Rolland. She was on the Robarts-Pépin Commission on National Unity and is a very wise and intelligent Quebecer. She goes on to give English speaking Canada a warning. She says:

> But surely by now, surely, you all know that if Meech is to fail for whatever reason, there can be no more negotiations, no more justifications. If Quebec is once again to realize that it is more difficult to opt in Canada than to stay out of Canada, then surely, you know that the roads of tomorrow can only lead to another form of independence, but this time not chosen by any political party in Quebec, maybe chosen and imposed on Quebec outside Quebec.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, that is what Mrs. Chaput-Rolland said when she testified before our Special Committee on the Constitution last year.

[English]

I accept her warning that if we do not seize this opportunity and accept the Meech Lake Accord as it is we may have some extremely divisive and troubled times ahead in terms of keeping this great country of ours unified.

Therefore, my first point is that we must accept this historic opportunity. My second point is that I believe the Meech Lake Accord offers this country a new vision of co-operative federalism, a vision of national conciliation, of reconciliation that recognizes the great diversity of this country; on one hand a strong federal Government and on the other hand provinces that are treated as equals and respected in their own domains of jurisdiction.

That vision of co-operative federalism is not a new vision in this country. I remember very well the 1960s when Mr. Pearson talked a lot about co-operative federalism and negotiated the Canada Pension Plan and the Québec Pension Plan, recognizing that Quebec was different and unique and wanted to handle its own affairs in terms of a pension. Mr. Pearson was moving with the co-operation of both opposition Parties in those days.

Tommy Douglas talked an awful lot in those days of co-operative federalism. In Quebec he had with him Robert Cliche, a tremendous Quebecer who talked about the uniqueness of Quebec and the need for a vision of a co-operative federalist society in Canada. In the Conservative Party in those days there was Robert Stanfield, another great Canadian who recognized the importance and value of diversity in this country and the need for co-operative federalism.

In 1968 Pierre Trudeau was elected. Even though I have tremendous respect for Pierre Trudeau in many areas such as the Official Languages Act, the Charter of Rights, his intelligence, his frankness, and his honesty in terms of conducting public affairs, the one area in which I violently disagree with his philosophy, dream, and vision is in how he saw Canada in terms of federalism.

I think that in that particular area Trudeau set this country back by 20 years. We are now, with the Meech Lake Accord, where Pearson, Douglas, Stanfield, Robert Cliche, and all those other people were in the late 1960s. We had a national consensus then. Since then we have had 20 years of confrontation, 20 years of centralism which was too rigid, and 20 years of inflexibility in terms of federalism. Now we are back into an era where this country was 20 years ago. That is another reason why I support the Accord that is before us today.

This afternoon we heard from the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston). Although I respect the gentleman, as an Hon. Member opposite said, it was a voice from the past. He spoke of a Canada of yesterday. It is a Canada of yesterday that all three political Parties in this country reject.

I can say that I am proud to see a Leader of the Liberal Party get up and reject that voice of the past and the philosophy of yesterday when he, along with my Leader and the Prime Minister spoke about a co-operative federalism and a Canada that is flexible and built on diversity, with a strong federal Government and provinces that are created equally.

In addition to the historic opportunity and co-operative federalism that the Meech Lake Accord embraces, there are a number of other reasons why I believe this Accord is positive for all Canadians, regardless of where we live.

The third reason is the distinct society. The clause recognizes Quebec as a distinct society within Canada, and I stress that it is within Canada.

[Translation]

Saskatchewan, where I come from, is not a province with a large French-speaking community since only 5 or 6 per cent of the population speak that language. Nevertheless I think it is important to recognize that Quebec constitutes a society different from the rest of Canada. It is not a province like the others. It must have a different status and, as I said, that fact was recognized long ago by Mr. Pearson and his Liberal Government in the 1960s, by Mr. Stanfield when he was leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and leader of the Opposition here in the House, as well as by Messrs. Tommy Douglas and David Lewis as national NDP leaders and Mr. Robert Cliche as NDP leader in Quebec in the 1960s.

And I remember very well the national consensus among the three political parties on issues relating to Quebec and its reality. Quebec is different from the other provinces. I also support the Meech Lake Accord because it recognizes Quebec's distinct society and that reality is now acknowledged in the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

The fourth reason why I support the Accord is the amending formula itself. I come from a small province, with some one million people or about 4 per cent of the population of Canada. We maintain the same amending formula that there was before, in most cases. In order for constitutional amendment, the requirement is that the federal Parliament pass the resolution and seven provinces, representing 50 per cent of the population of Canada, also approve.

That recognizes the equality of the provinces in Canada and recognizes that in a federal state, Prince Edward Island is equal to Quebec, is equal to Ontario, that Saskatchewan is equal to Newfoundland. In a federal state, all provinces must be recognized as equal on the one hand, while on the other hand, there must be some recognition of the population difference. Our amending formula states that we need seven provinces, but those seven provinces must represent 50 per cent of the population of Canada.

Every federal state in the world of which I am aware has a similar amending formula and recognition of the equality of states. For example, in the United States there are two senators per state, whether it is Rhode Island, California, Maine or New York. That equality is recognized in this amending formula.

The fifth reason why I support the Accord is the spending power. My friend, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), already stated that for the first time in Canadian history the Constitution will refer to national objectives, where federal spending power can be used in terms of national objectives. As she pointed out, Mr. Pearson had attempted this many times in the 1960s without success. For the first time, this will be reflected in the Constitution of Canada as a result of Meech Lake.

The sixth reason why I support the Accord is that it recognizes that this country is a federal state through the way Supreme Court Justices will be appointed in this country. Until now, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice or both would unilaterally appoint a justice of the Supreme Court. While a practice had built up whereby provinces were consulted, bar associations were consulted and there was a mechanism for consultation to take place, the federal Government ultimately would unilaterally appoint a justice of the Supreme Court.

According to the Meech Lake agreement, the federal Government can choose from a list that is submitted by the provinces. In other words, there is a co-appointment of the justice of the Supreme Court. I believe that is only proper in a federal state. The Supreme Court is not solely the instrument of the federal court but is in Canada as the highest court of our land which often must mediate between a federal government and a provincial government in disputes. My Party and I wholeheartedly endorse the approach we see in the Meech Lake Accord.

I have stated the reasons why we support the many positive aspects of the Accord. Our Party has suggested for some time that there are some things missing from the Meech Lake Accord. My Leader mentioned today that there is a lack of fairness for northern Canadians, a lack of fairness for women in this country and a lack of fairness for the aboriginal people of Canada.

Last summer, when we were writing this report to present to the Parliament of Canada, our Party, including myself and the Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, included addendum B which is found at page 155 of the special joint report. At that time we suggested that the Prime Minister and the premiers go back to the table to try to reach a consensus and clear up at least three areas that are not fair for many Canadians.

The first area of unfairness is the way the Meech Lake Accord unjustly treats the people of northern Canada. The change in the amending formula requires unanimity for the creation of new provinces. That is not fair. My province came into Confederation in 1905 through negotiation between the province and Ottawa. Newfoundland came in in 1949 in a similar fashion, as did Manitoba, British Columbia and Alberta. Suddenly, unanimity is required for the creation of new provinces. That is unfair to the people of the Yukon and Northwest Territories and I urge First Ministers to go back and renegotiate an Accord to include an element of fairness for the creation of new provinces. I believe that would have the support of all Members of the House.

The same applies for the appointment of Supreme Court justices. The provinces will submit lists, but what about the Northwest Territories and the Yukon? They are not provinces and there is no mention in the Accord about the territories. Both territories are treated as second class citizens.

Section 28 of the Charter of Rights talks about equality rights for women in this country. That should be included in Clause 16 of the Meech Lake Accord so that it is very clear there is no discrimination whatsoever based on gender.

Third, there must be an element of fairness in the Accord for the aboriginal people of Canada. Why not do what Pierre Trudeau did in 1981, when he held a conference with all the premiers to discuss women's rights in this country? They eventually agreed, after much pressure, to insert rights for women of Canada in the constitutional agreement at that time. Why not try the same thing in these three areas? If it fails, so be it, but if not, it will improve the Accord and make it much better for all Canadians.

In conclusion, we also suggest that the Constitution should be expanded in the future to recognize not only the duality of this country as a fundamental characteristic of Canada, but recognize the multicultural and ethnocultural reality as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. There must be Charter review to do something about Section 33 in particular as it pertains to minorities and visible minorities.

Finally, I believe we should democratize the process in the future, as suggested by the committee, so that more Canadians are involved in the process of constitutional change.

• (1940)

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I would like to refer to a comment made by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom). During his remarks he referred to the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) as being a voice from the past. I would like to put to him, as I pointed out earlier in this House, that there are two competing visions of Canada at play here, both equally legitimate. One holds that Canada is greater than the sum of its parts, that there has to be some way for the national interest to find its expression through our federal and national institutions. The other vision is that we owe our allegiance, perhaps, to the provinces or regions from which we come. These are two visions and I think they are equally legitimate. I think it is wrong to refer to the vision I hold as being a vision from the past.

I would also put to the Hon. Member that perhaps there is a curious intergenerational issue at play. I feel many young Canadians and many young Quebecers do not have the same kind of preoccupations held by the Premier of Québec today. When the Hon. Member talks about voices from the past, I can only tell him that I am happy that the Liberal Party has been the only Party which has focused this debate. The focus on the Meech Lake Agreement has been in the Liberal Party. It had to take place somewhere, and I am glad it has been within our Party. Canadians clearly are concerned. A Gallup Poll in April indicated that support for the agreement had dropped by half in the last year. I am glad there are young Canadians and young Québecers out there. I could name someone like Timothy Danson, a lawyer in Toronto, the son of a former Cabinet Minister, and John Kaplan, the son of our former Solicitor General. I read in the paper a few weeks ago John Kaplan was travelling throughout the country this summer on a campaign against the Meech Lake Agreement. He says he has agreed to disagree with his father on this particular issue.

[Translation]

I could speak about Michel Simard, a young Quebecer who shares our vision of this country.

[English]

I could speak about a young Canadian of Greek origin. He was born in Canada but his parents came from Greece. His name is Bill Mavridis. He wrote a letter to the editor a couple of weeks ago expressing his concerns and opposition to this agreement. These are all young people probably under 30 years of age. I do not regard them as voices from the past.

All I can say is that the Hon. Member's Party is out of step with the times and his Party will pay for it eventually.

Mr. Nystrom: Madam Speaker, the question was one about two competing visions. I do not really think there are two competing visions. I think there is a great national consensus of three Parties. I ask my friend in the Liberal Party to look at his own Leader's speech today and understand and realize how most members of the Liberal Party are going to vote when it comes to the Meech Lake Accord.

He should also look at the history of his own political Party. If I remember its history correctly, there was former Prime Minister Laurier, one of the great leaders of the Liberal Party, who said: "You get unity through diversity". He did not mean great centralization and everything being controlled by Ottawa. Lester Pearson in the 1960s was one of the fathers of the whole philosophy of co-operative federalism. It was Mr. Pearson who brought in the Canada Pension Plan and the Quebec Pension Plan and who recognized the uniqueness of Quebec and the diversity of this country. It was the Liberal Cabinet of that day that moved in unison along with the country toward recognizing the vision of the country we now have with the Meech Lake Accord.

It was the Opposition of that day, led by people like Bob Stanfield, who also recognized that Quebec was unique and different and that the country was diverse. It recognized that our country was going to grow strong by realizing its diversity and building upon it. It was the New Democratic Party led by Tommy Douglas and great people like David Lewis who also supported that vision in the 1960s. We had a consensus in those days that Quebec was unique, different and distinct as a society. We realized we had to build this country on a foundation of co-operative federalism, that there was diversity and we needed flexibility and harmony, that we would achieve it through this kind of approach.

Then there was Pierre Trudeau, and I suggest rather than having a different vision, Trudeau was an aberration who set back national reconciliation and nation building in terms of the Constitution of this country by 20 years. In 1988, we are back in 1968 in terms of a national consensus. Today, to his credit, the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) is back where Pearson, Laurier and the Liberals were in the 1960s. Mr. Turner is there now with a majority of people in his Liberal Party. Sure, there are some voices from the past like the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount but Mr. Turner knows where Canada is in terms of nation building and how he wants to organize this great federal state of ours. He knows because that is where his Party was back in the 1950s and 1960s. That is where the CCF was, that is where the New Democratic Party was, and that is where we are today. I am proud because of those reasons that we once again have this national unity in terms of how we approach this country.

I am also proud to say that after Quebec ratified this Accord in a resolution of the Quebec National Assembly—

[Translation]

If I remember correctly, it was in July that the Quebec legislature ratified the Constitutional Accord.

[English]

After that, the first province that did so was the Province of Saskatchewan, with the support of all three Parties in that province, including the Leader of the Liberal Party. I am very pleased to see this kind of opening up toward Quebec and toward a vision of co-operative federalism in western Canada, and indeed, all across this great country of ours. Rather than two visions, I think we have some kind of a throw back to the past with Pierre Trudeau, Marc Lalonde, Jimmy Coutts and Keith Davey. Once we go beyond that circle, we are really scrambling to find a few more names.

[Translation]

Mr. Berger: As I was saying in my remarks to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), Madam Speaker, I repeat that the House was presented with two different visions of Canada, both legitimate. One vision . . .

[English]

And that is that Canada is greater than the sum of its parts.

[Translation]

You will admit that this is not easy to say in French. The other vision is that our loyalty is first and foremost to the provinces or regions we live in. Personally, I feel that there should be a way for national interests to be expressed in a federation. We must find a way for the national interests to be reflected in our institutions, failing that we might witness the break up of our country not because the men and women sitting here in the Canadian Parliament are wiser, but simply because we have been elected to promote the national interests.

The Provincial Governments and legislatures have a more restricted mandate, which is to promote the wellbeing of their province, something which, you will certainly admit, is sometimes quite different from the wellbeing of the country as a whole.

Over the past six months, we have seen just to what extent the Meech Lake Accord is detrimental to the national interest and to what extent the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has failed to understand where the national interest of Canada really lies.

Let us have a look at the debate on the linguistic rights of Francophones in Saskatchewan. Let us remember the remarks which the Prime Minister made—I do not have the exact quote—when he stated that if the linguistic rights of minorities were not well protected, it is because the minorities had been overlooked in 1981 by the previous Government. The Prime Minister has also stated in the House, and I quote: "The only way to protect the linguistic rights of minorities in Canada is to include guarantees to that effect in the Constitution".

With all due respect, Madam Speaker, I will say that the Prime Minister is trying to rewrite history. We are aware that the Prime Minister had held several positions and now he would like to play the part of an historian. I feel that Canadians will seek elsewhere an assessment of history.

I feel that the history of our country can be defined as a constant effort to ensure equality among all Canadians. The Prime Minister and the Meech Lake Accord have broken with this tradition. Those who want to have a fair assessment of history should refer to the statement made by former Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau when he appeared before the Senate on March 30th at which time he reminded us of the efforts of such persons as Henri Bourassa to protect the rights of Francophones in Western Canada: "The purpose was to make sure that Francophone and Anglophone Canadians felt at home everywhere in Canada". To achieve this, the Constitution of 1867 included such provisions are Section 133 and Section 93.

In the 1960's, the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission described the linguistic guarantees which I have just mentioned and which dated back to 1867 as pre-concepts of equality. The commission was seeking equality and increased rights and mention was made in its recommendations about what had to be done for the Federal Government and even the provinces to consider Francophones and Anglophones as equals. With respect to employment opportunities, the courts and services offered by federal Government agencies like the CBC or Air Canada, there is no need to go over all the details of major advances made as a result of work done by the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and of the Official Languages Act of 1969.

The 1982 Charter of Rights enshrined a number of these gains in our Constitution, and we went one step further by including minority language educational rights in Section 23 of the Charter of Rights.

As you can see, Madam Speaker, for 120 years or since 1867 we have been trying to widen, more clearly define and guarantee the rights of all Canadians. That was the work of the Fathers of Confederation. That was the goal of Henri Bourassa, that was the objective of Commissioners Laurendeau and Dunton, and that is what we did in 1982.

Today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) may very well blame us for not doing more and endorsing the notwithstanding clause. There is always room for improvement, Madam Speaker, but at least we were headed in the right direction.

Such was the history of our country until the day this Prime Minister appeared on the national scene. Before he was elected, the curve of rights was pointing upwards, but now it has shifted and the pattern is just the opposite. So far it has been a trend towards more equality and more rights, the ultimate goal—I mentioned this a moment ago—being to have all Canadians, both anglophone and francophone, feel right at home anywhere in Canada.

The Meech Lake Accord is the first historic constitutional document which takes us one step backwards. With the Meech Lake Accord we are not seeking more rights but a political agreement which ignores rights, which creates an ambiguity that ought to be dispelled by the Supreme Court, of course, but still which leaves a cloud of uncertainty over the maintenance of historic rights.

When the Prime Minister never misses an opportunity to blame somebody and say that the rights of minorities are badly protected, when he claims that the only way to protect rights is to include them in the Constitution, he is guilty of shameful hypocrisy, Madam Speaker. If minority rights ought to have been better protected under the Constitution, why did he fail to do just that at Meech Lake? That is the question I would like to ask him today.

Perhaps the Prime Minister does not understand the logic of his approach. It has always been in the national interest to recognize the French fact and the English fact everywhere in Canada. It is in the national interest that Canada as a whole feels obliged to promote the two languages. With the Meech Lake Accord, we revert to a less generous vision, where provincial interests are paramount. We said the same thing a year ago, six months ago, during the debate which occurred here in September, in October, but now, recent events have confirmed our position.

With the Meech Lake Accord, we are heading towards a French Quebec and an English Canada. Instead of recognizing that linguistic minorities are an integral part of this nation's fabric, we barely accommodate them. We acknowledge their existence, but without conviction.

• (1950)

[English]

One would have to be deaf not to have heard the concerns about the Meech Lake agreement expressed by linguistic minorities during the course of the past year. I invite any Member of the House to read the papers or to obtain a tape of the Peter Gzowski show from two months ago on which he talked about the state of bilingualism in Canada today. He interviewed Anglophones in Quebec and Francophones outside Quebec. Hon. Members will see what they had to say about this agreement and how they expressed their concerns.

Yesterday I had an 11-year old boy who is in grade five, an English-speaking Quebecer, come to interview me. He asked me a number of questions about my political career and about the upcoming election. One question which he asked me toward the end of his interview was as follows. He said: "What is the future of the English in Quebec?" I had hoped that that question had been laid to rest over the course of the past 15 or 20 years. I thought it would be unnecessary for an 11-year old English-speaking Quebecer to ask such a question.

• (2000)

The same thing applies to Francophones outside Quebec. I would have hoped that they would not have to ask questions about their future, that their future would be guaranteed. They would be getting a pat on the back, an extra dose of generosity, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has referred to in his speeches, but which we find absent in the Meech Lake agreement. Why? Because, as I have tried to explain, that is the essence of what this country is all about. Obviously there has been concern with Meech Lake. One does not hear that very often in the House today. Obviously there has been concern because of the actions of certain provincial Governments.

[Translation]

Indeed, Madam Speaker, at the first opportunity following the signing of the Meech Lake Accord when a government had the choice of maintaining or abolishing the rights of its linguistic minority, it chose to abolish them. I am referring, of course, to Saskatchewan, the first province to ratify the Meech Lake Agreement and one of its staunchest supporters. Premier Devine of Saskatchewan, said that from now it would be up to his government to decide when and if provincial acts will be translated in French.

Therefore, the rights of the Francophone minority of that province are at the mercy of the majority. Mr. Bourassa did not want to intervene when he went to Saskatchewan because he did not want other provinces to meddle in the affairs of Quebec later on. And here is what Mr. Bourassa said before going to Saskatchewan, in Victoria, on April 12 last, and I quote:

[English]

"Mr. Getty . . . ", and he is referring here to the Premier of Alberta, " . . . was expressing an obvious fact with which I am in agreement. I take care of language questions in Quebec, and he takes care of language questions in Alberta. That is a self-evident fact". He goes on to say: "I don't think I would be justified in interfering in the powers of other provincial jurisdictions, just as I hope that in Quebec we can take care of our own problems on our own".

Again, I think that most Canadians can see that that is a satisfactory statement coming from the mouth of a provincial premier, but it is not the type of vision of this country that we want to entrench in our Constitution.

[Translation]

So, the Saskatchewan matter is a good lesson. It shows the consequence of forgetting the national interest and giving precedence to provincial interests.

I am not blaming provinces, Madam Speaker. They are not required to act in the national interest. Such is not their mandate—it is the national Government's mandate, the mandate of Members here in this Canadian Parliament.

Six months ago, we were told the Prime Minister was relinquishing another aspect of national interest in the area of federal spending power. As we know, under the Meech Lake Accord, provinces can opt out of shared cost programs, with compensation, provided their provincial program is compatible with national objectives.

My concern and that of many others was that it would be impossible to set up new social programs with such a provision. Six months ago our points were rather academic, but today we have an example of new funding programs for childcare services that are satisfactory to no one, including the Quebec womens' groups that oppose the programs. Indeed this is a childcare program in name only, because there is nothing to deal with workers' health, safety, security and qualifications, training requirements, the number of children under the care of each worker, and so on.

This Conservative Government is proposing a program devoid of basic criteria because it fears such criteria would cause provinces to opt out, thus vindicating the Meech Lake's opponents.

I am not asking for uniformity, Madam Speaker, nor that the Canadian Government should dictate how provinces should manage their programs. What I am looking for is a compromise that would come out of negotiations between both levels of government. That is what federalism is all about. Each level puts forward its own vision.

This leads to healthy competition that benefits all Canadians. Indeed, it is the only way to consider new social programs or an overall reform of our existing social programs, because with the huge cost of that reform and that of new programs, neither provincial nor federal Governments can proceed alone. But under the Meech Lake Accord the dice are loaded. The federal Government, as we have seen with childcare, cannot afford to put forward its own concept because it fears provinces would opt out. So what we are left with is a hollow program where the Canadian Government is limited to keeping the books, supplying money to provinces and saying nothing as to program contents. Under those terms, Madam Speaker, there will be no future social program. The federal level will refuse to take up the odium of taxing in order to transfer moneys to provinces without saying anything about program contents.

Many other examples of how the Prime Minister sacrificed the national interest come to mind, but I cannot mention them in a 20-minute speech. We know very well that Quebec asked for a veto for historical reasons. The Prime Minister gave all provinces a veto for a series of issues, like the future of the Senate.

A few weeks ago, a Minister in the Alberta Government said that his province would object to any constitutional reform unless it obtained an elected Senate with equal representation for all provinces. The veto that Alberta has obtained on several aspects of the Constitution will enable it to do so and block the constitutional development of the whole country.

So I ask you, Madam Speaker, is this the way to encourage the healthy development of the country? I am sure that many Quebecers and many Canadians will say no.

Madam Speaker, in the statements by the leaders earlier today, I detected a note of unreality, because they took the Meech Lake Accord as a fait accompli. But it is becoming increasingly obvious that the Meech Lake Accord will not be adopted in its present form. Indeed, more and more Canadians are asking questions about the Meech Lake Accord and wondering whether it is really the best way to ensure the country's future.

If you allow me to conclude, Madam Speaker, the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party are a step in the right direction because we will have to find a way out, some way to go beyond the Meech Lake Accord, since, as I was just saying, it will not pass in its present form. As I said, the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party are a step in the right direction but the amendments drawn up by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) and myself better reflect the philosophy and traditions of our Party.

Madam Speaker, perhaps on a point of order, I could make a few comments . . .

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: The debate is proceeding in an orderly fashion. It is time to make comments. I shall ask the Hon. Member whether he has further comments to make. It could be taken on his 10 minutes. Then, there would be no problem, because the debate is proceeding in an orderly fashion.

It is a personal comment which I wanted to make. We will thus keep the order in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Then, we have reached the period of questions and comments following the intervention of the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger). Evidently, he could answer a question put by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme). In concluding, I want to say that I understand the enthusiasm with which the signing of the Meech Lake Accord was received. When I say enthusiasm, I am referring to the enthusiasm of Quebecers, because Quebec got what it asked, and more. There is a lot in the Accord that is far removed from the initial positions. However, Quebecers are Canadians too. That is the point I am trying to make today. It is important for us to know what impact this Accord will have on Canada. We should consider the national as well as the provincial perspective, and realize that if Canada is weakened by the Accord, Quebec is the loser.

I want to ask Quebecers and my colleagues here in the House to reflect on the significance of the political achievements of Trudeau, Marchand, Pelletier, Sauvé and so many others. These French Canadians imposed their way of seeing things on the entire country. Our economic, social and cultural policies in this country were shaped and influenced by their philosophy. They showed by their actions what French Canadians can aspire to in this country. They can aspire to leadership roles, to positions in which they can influence the direction in which this country is going. We can and must ensure that our national institutions reflect the values, needs and aspirations of French Canadians. They were convinced, and I share their view, that the best way to guarantee the future of French in this country is to involve the entire country in promoting its existence. It is a role that is as appropriate for the Parliament of Canada as for the provincial legislatures and the Quebec National Assembly, and I am referring to the promotion of the French fact. It is a modern vision that recognizes the fact we are living in a global society and that Quebecers should not limit their aspirations to a single province.

As Quebecers and Canadians, we must realize that we do ourselves a disservice if we ignore the national interest and if we undermine the ability of the federal Government to act in the best interests of all Canadians.

• (2010)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, as I rise to speak in this historic debate, I want to say to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) that when he says Ottawa has had a role in promoting the French fact, it is fitting that he comes from the riding of Laurier. I think those are almost exactly the words Sir Wilfrid Laurier expressed as his philosophy of the role of French Canadians in Canada.

I am from western Canada and western Canadians in the past, and I think in the present as well, when they really think about it, have looked upon the federal Government to promote their interests and to help them when they were in need of help. The federal Government represents the larger entity that can sometimes deal with problems, both external and internal, which the provinces cannot. Of course that is the flaw in Meech Lake. In my view it creates not one distinctive Government but eleven distinctive Governments. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made this deal to get Quebec to accept the proposals in the 1982 agreement, he gave a lot of other powers to the provinces. In doing that he fundamentally weakened the federal Government.

Some of my colleagues disagree. I respect them, and I do not have a monopoly on wisdom. They may be right in the long run and I hope they are. However, my position is quite clear. I spoke in the House on October 22, 1987, as shown in Hansard at page 10287. I expressed my opposition to the constitutional Accord at that time.

To summarize, I said that I thought it was important to get Quebec's signature on the Canadian Constitution but it was not a priority such that nothing else mattered. The real priority was a good and sound Constitution. I felt the problem with Meech Lake was that it went beyond bringing Quebec into the Constitution. Under Meech Lake I believe the Senate would become a provincially controlled body endowed with enormous powers within 12 years, which would lead to a decline in the House of Commons. I think the Supreme Court will in effect be appointed by the provinces and, instead of a national institution, I see it becoming a protector of narrow provincial interests. I hope that I am wrong.

I see power as shifting away from Parliament, the provincial legislatures, and the people, to a constitutionally entrenched First Ministers' Conference which I see as a new level of super government, therefore weakening our power here in Parliament. By giving the provinces veto power in some key areas we make the amending formula too rigid and in certain key areas it will be impossible to change in the future.

If there ever was an egregious error it is in the treatment of northern Canada. Northern Canadians will not get a voice in the Supreme Court. Surely that is an egregious error. They cannot appoint Senators and cannot form new provinces without the unanimous permission of other provinces.

I said at the time that present and future spending programs like medicare and child care could be compromised because the provinces can opt out. Commentators differ on that, but some respected commentators say that it will be difficult to get the kind of national programs which progressive people in this country want.

There are people who say that women's equality rights, so hard fought for in 1982, could be put in danger by this Accord. There is dispute over that. The recognition of duality in Canada in the wording of the Accord neglects the original inhabitants and ignores the present reality of a multicultural Canada. Provincial power over immigration could result in a chequer-board of immigration policies across Canada with the possible restriction on people's freedom of movement from one province to another. I hope that does not happen. To some extent we will have to look to the future and trust that these things do not happen, but I see it as possible because of the Accord.

In my remarks tonight I do not want to repeat those arguments but to deal, instead, with some of the things the Prime Minister said today. I listened carefully to his speech and I share his desire to have Quebec sign the agreement. I share the obvious joy he expressed in being a Canadian. I shared his joy in seeing and experiencing this great country, yet I was disappointed by his speech. I did not think that it was very statesmanlike.

There was no mention—and I do not know that any of the Leaders mentioned this—that Meech Lake was in trouble. The fact is that Manitoba has said that it will probably not deal with it. Sharon Carstairs, who has the balance of power as Leader of the Opposition, says that it is dead.

Mr. Prud'homme: No, you have the balance of power.

Mr. Waddell: She said that. The Premier of New Brunswick said that he would not pass the Meech Lake Accord without amendments. However, the Accord must pass all the provinces, not just this House.

• (2020)

Yet I got the feeling, when I was listening to him, that it was sufficient for him to get this thing through the House now and deal with the by-election next week or the general election in the fall or the spring. The Meech Lake Accord and those people who believe in it in good faith will have to deal with the fact that it has to get through the provincial legislatures. I ask the people speaking in this debate why they and the Prime Minister did not talk about how it is going to get through. This debate is as though we are debating in a vacuum. The Prime Minister also said in his speech: "We would open the agreement if there were egregious errors and we have not found any".

Surely the provisions dealing with northern Canada, for example, as one of the provisions, are egregious errors and worth changing. Some of us were here in 1981-82 during that historic time when we debated the Constitution not only here in the House of Commons but in the country at large. The Trudeau Government said at first, it could not make any changes. Gradually the Liberals needed the New Democrats' support in western Canada, and they gradually started to listen about making changes. I cite two areas: native rights and women's rights. These are areas where Prime Minister Trudeau came around. The Premiers said that they were not going to make any changes. They threw out native rights and women's rights, but Canadians forced the Premiers to make the changes. When Governments and even Prime Ministers say "we can't make any changes", I say: "You have done it in the past and you can do it again". I think those changes made a better Constitution. I am very proud to have voted for the 1982 Constitution in this House of Commons. I am very sad that I cannot vote for this Meech Lake constitutional amendment.

The Prime Minister said in his speech today that Meech Lake is consistent with the federal nature of Canada. I do not think so. I think it is quite different from the federal nature of Canada. This Meech Lake Accord gets the provinces into federal institutions for the first time. I have heard people say in this debate that those of us who are against Meech Lake do not understand it, have not read it properly, or are missing something, but let me quote Tom Berger, former Leader of the provincial NDP in British Columbia and former Judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia. In The Globe and Mail recently we find that he said the following:

> But the provisions of Meech Lake relating to the North and to the Supreme Court of Canada also are of great concern; they may seem peripheral, but they go to the heart of the accord. Their impact is clear: they undermine the legitimacy of federal institutions.

That is a real concern. That is why I think it is different. It changes the federal nature of Canada by putting the balance too much on the side of the provinces. The Prime Minister said in his speech today that this builds on the previous constitutional accord. I kept thinking when he said that about our debate and our own Party, in I believe 1981, in Vancouver at our national conference in which the pros and cons in a very democratic and open debate were voiced on the 1981 proposals. It seems to me that in 1981 and 1982 those who spoke against the Constitution in that debate are now on the side of supporting the Meech Lake Accord. It was the decentralizers and that type of argument which lost the day in 1981 at our convention, and I think lost the day in this House in the vote on the debate, who are now for Meech Lake, with some exceptions.

I felt that the Prime Minister took the low road in his speech today. Let me give two instances. First, he said with respect to the native people that with the return of Québec into this deal it help aboriginal people. We have had three years of constitutional talks and no agreement with aboriginal people. Then we had one evening when the Premiers got together and there was power sharing. What the Prime Minister said today demeans the native people. What native groups are out here supporting the Meech Lake Accord? I cannot find any. How can the Prime Minister say that this will help the native people? That statement is demeaning and wrong.

His second cheap shot was against former Prime Minister Trudeau. The Prime Minister said that the previous Government put through the Constitution in 1982 with the notwithstanding clause in it; notwithstanding the Charter of Rights, the provinces and this Parliament could overrule the Charter of Rights. I saw Trudeau the night we passed the 1982 Constitution Accord in this House. I thought he would be a happy man but he was sad. I asked him why he was sad because it was his big night. He said he was sad because the Constitution was flawed, referring to the notwithstanding clause. The present Prime Minister came into this House today and said that we have a bad Constitution because the notwithstanding clause was inserted. He bargained with the Premiers but did not remove it. How can he come back to the House and take that kind of a cheap shot at the 1982 Constitution? When he was bargaining with the Premiers at Meech Lake he should have had the notwithstanding clause removed. I cannot see anything that the federal Government gained in this matter. I suppose the gain is having Québec included.

Perhaps we should be a little honest in this matter. I know that there are people in my Party who hold their views deeply on this matter.

Mr. Prud'homme: And they are all wrong, I suppose?

Mr. Waddell: In the executive meeting of the B.C. Party they voted against Meech Lake. When we had a provincial council meeting and an overwhelming vote of about 500 to 50 against it—

Ms. Mitchell: What about the caucus and the Leader?

Mr. Waddell: My colleague asked me about my caucus and the Leader. The caucus and the Leader have voted for Meech Lake. I want to put on the record—and I respect their vote—that the British Columbia Party, in spite of the leadership of the Leader, the provincial Leader, the party president and the caucus, voted against Meech Lake. Why? They obviously hold their views deeply. Similarly in Nova Scotia the Party voted against it. There is a lot of division on Meech Lake.

Let me ask what will happen now. I do not agree with Sharon Carstairs. I do not think Meech Lake is dead. I think Gary Doer's Manitoba is more correct when he says Meech Lake is in trouble and it needs some changes. I think the federal Government should think about how it will make changes to it.

• (2030)

From this whole debate and the amendments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett), by members of the Liberal Party and by others, some amendments can be distilled. I think this thing can be changed before it finally passes. I would suggest that the Prime Minister consider sitting down with Mr. Rémillard, the Interprovincial Affairs Minister from Quebec, Ian Scott from Ontario, the Attorney General of Saskatchewan, Mrs. Carstairs, Mr. Doer, a representative of the Premier of Manitoba, as well as the Premier of New Brunswick. Perhaps there may be some amendments that would be acceptable to the various groups involved so that a constitutional deal could go through in the Canadian tradition which is more by consensus than by having something rammed through. If that does not happen, I think Meech Lake will die, and the proponents of Meech Lake have to face that.

I would suggest that in the long term we have to change our method of constitutional amendment. The wheeling, dealing, last minute, back room bargaining is not the way a modern Constitution should be changed. I think there is sufficient good will to have accommodated Quebec and all the other interests, native, women, and multicultural. Some interests will clash, that is true, but other interests can be worked out and we could have an agreement that would have more support.

Meech Lake does not have the support of the people of Canada. Can Hon. Members not see that the emperor has no clothes? Some Members are reluctant to vote for it and will abstain. The whole tone of this debate is different from that of 1982. We as a country can do better. We can come up with a Constitution with which we can all live.

I want to close by saying that I do not know what the future holds for Meech Lake. I think it could be dead and we have to face up to that fact. I have said that Parliament and the Supreme Court are national institutions and the flaw in Meech Lake is that it provides that nominations to the court are to be made from a list prepared by the provinces, in effect giving them control of the appointments, and the same is true for the Senate.

The provisions relating to the creation of provinces in the North and to the Supreme Court of Canada reveal the thinking behind Meech Lake, and that is that national institutions are thought to be without legitimacy unless the provinces share in the power that the national Government used to exercise. This represents, in my view, a diminished federalism, an irresolute idea of Canada. I believe Meech Lake can be rewritten and it ought to be rewritten. It is not my idea of Canada, and I think we as a country can do better.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I would like to return to the question of the status of Quebec after the 1981 constitutional agreement was reached on November 5. The Hon. Member referred to that in his speech and mentioned the vote in the House. He said something about 75 Québecers, and then I said "70". Actually the number former Prime Minister Trudeau referred to in the Senate was 71, and he was referring to some research that had been done by someone else. I have not checked the record myself, but I think we can safely assume that there were 71 Quebec MPs representing the whole province who voted for the agreement, and four against.

The National Assembly of Quebec passed a resolution on December 1 opposing the patriation package, and that resolution was adopted by a vote of 70 to 38. Thirty-eight Liberal Members of the Quebec National Assembly refused to condemn the patriation agreement. So we have a total, therefore, of 109 elected representatives from Quebec, here in Parliament or in the National Assembly, who voted for the patriation of the Constitution and 74 who voted against it.

It might be of interest to the Hon. Member that the resolution that was proposed by the Parti Quebecois at the time reads as follows:

> The National Assembly of Québec, > mindful of the right of the people of Quebec to self-determination, . . . declares that it cannot accept the plan to patriate the Constitution unless it meets the following conditions:
> 1. It must be recognized that the two founding peoples of Canada are fundamentally equal and that Quebec, by virtue of its language, culture and institutions, forms a distinct society within the Canadian federal system and has all the attributes of a distinct national community.

This clause was opposed by members of the Quebec Liberal Party in 1981 when it was presented in a resolution by the PQ. That same Quebec Liberal Party, several years later, under the leadership of Mr. Bourassa, proposes the same thing that his Party voted against earlier, and that is the identical language we find in the Meech Lake Accord. It makes interesting reading and I commend it to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, we are coming at this from different parts of the country. People in British Columbia are asking if I can put it into the language of the street: "Why the heck are you giving Bill Vander Zalm and the likes of him power to eventually control the Senate of Canada, power to put their nominees on the Supreme Court of Canada"? They are asking: "Are you crazy, what are you doing?" This is how many of the people of British Columbia feel. I know that Premier Vander Zalm will not be there forever, but that is the feeling of the people of British Columbia.

The Hon. Member is an English-speaking Quebecer, and I realize the difficult position of English-speaking people in Quebec. There is a feeling in my part of the country that we are not opposed to recognizing Quebec as a distinct society, providing that minority rights can be protected in Quebec. We know it is a strange situation because the majority is really a minority. The French majority of Quebec is a minority in Canada, so it has to have powers to protect itself. I am not against that and I am not against Quebec signing this agreement. I want to clear this up in case I gave the opposite impression in my speech. I am damn glad that Quebec signed it. I was only saying that we should be realistic. Quebec did not sign before because it was a separatist Government and it was not going to sign anything.

When we make a deal with Quebec, as we did, let us not make it at the expense of the national institutions which protect, in the long run, both French and English. I said originally, if I can use the language of the street again: "You know, Canadians don't think of Mario Lemieux as Team Québec or Wayne Gretzky as Team Alberta; they think of both of them as Team Canada". I think that Trudeau proved that with his victories in Quebec, and so did Laurier. Canadians, both French and English, think of the whole country.

By rejecting Meech Lake, I am not rejecting Quebec or the distinct society of Quebec or Quebec in Canada. I am concerned about this wheeling and dealing that the Prime Minister has done which has fundamentally weakened the country by ignoring the legitimate aspirations of our native people, of women, and of multicultural groups, and by allowing the provincial premiers, the Vander Zalms and the Devines, into the Supreme Court and ultimately into control of the Senate. We will rue the day when that comes through. I hope I am wrong, but that is how I see it and that is how I think a lot of people in my home Province of British Columbia see it as well.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise tonight to speak on this amendment with mixed feelings. First, I am pleased that we are here to debate a constitutional amendment which will serve its first purpose, that is, to bring Quebec formally back into the Constitution. This is an extremely important part of Canadian history. I, people from my constituency, and others from the North support it, in that we know that it will greatly enhance Canada as a nation. Without Quebec formally in the Constitution, without recognizing the distinct qualities of Quebec, many of the contributions Quebec has made, and the integral part of the spirit, culture, and history of Quebec, we have not been a full and whole country.

While appreciating the accomplishment of that important historic event, I want to speak about some compromises that have been made which I do not believe, if addressed, would unravel this Accord or be in any way detrimental to the fundamental purpose of having the Province of Quebec formally in the Constitution.

As a northerner, as someone from a constituency which has neither been consulted nor has been a party or signatory to this amendment, I rise with some sadness and perhaps some anger to speak about my concerns. It is sad that in so doing it may seem that I do not support the main intent of the constitutional amendment. That is certainly not true. However, it is extremely important for Canadians as a whole to realize the depth of feeling, the depth of solidarity, and the commitment which northerners have to furthering the constitutional process.

The Quebecois could probably best understand the feeling of being on the outside looking in which northerners have about this process. They could in a sense become our soul mates and, I hope, understand that what I have to say does not in any way detract from the important historical event but puts forward a problem that we are creating by rectifying a wrong.

In order for the circle of Confederation to be complete, it is essential that Members of the House also welcome northerners and accept the rights of Canada's First Nations, the aboriginal people. I will spend my time this evening addressing several main issues concerning this amendment, which concerns have been addressed by my Party through amendments that were voted down by the Government. Northerners will not forget which Party voted against the North and against aboriginal rights.

There are four main parts of the amendment which I will address, the first being the unanimity clause regarding the creation of new provinces; the second being the clause relating to the extension of provincial boundaries; the third being the failure to include the territories in appointments to the Senate and the Supreme Court; and the fourth being the failure to include aboriginal issues as a priority for First Ministers' Conferences and to redress that particular outstanding federal issue.

First, turning to the question about provincehood, since 1871 provinces came into the Confederation in negotiation with the federal Government. The purpose, one assumes, of this is that it is intended that the federal Government should have a Canadian-wide vision. Provinces, quite understandably and quite responsibly, have a priority of a provincial vision. One must wonder why we have a federal Government if the federal Government's purpose is not to provide an integrated whole and not to have a vision which rises above a parochial provincial one. It is for this reason, I assume, that new provinces historically, the last being the Province of Newfoundland in 1949, negotiated this with the federal Government.

Not only this federal Government but the former Liberal Government did not have this Canadian vision. In 1982, when the Constitution returned to Canada, there was the same issue concerning the creation of new provinces. The current Constitution states that, in order for a new province to be created, seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population must give their assent. The amendment under discussion tonight says, of course, that there must be unanimity in that consent.

I would like to give some examples supporting my assertion that neither the former federal Government nor the current federal Government had a Canadian vision which included the North. In 1981 the former Hon. Member for the Yukon moved an amendment to delete the sections on the requirements for new provincehood as well as the sections on boundary extension. The Liberal Government of the day defeated that motion despite some very poignant pleas about why that should be deleted from the 1982 Constitution.

I quote, for example, one Member who said that should those measures, that is, the measures concerning provincehood and boundary extension, be enacted they would "virtually eliminate any hope that the two northern territories could evolve as a province, as did the rest of the country—this resolution—is offensive, repugnant and also ludicrous". That was said in reference to the provincehood resolution. That speaker went on to say that if these measures were to pass in the 1981-82 Constitution, the Territories "would be condemned to perpetual serfdom and to perpetual colonial status unless these offensive clauses are withdrawn".

The current President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) who made those statements in 1981 and six of her current cabinet colleagues obviously thought very strongly at that time that the clauses related to provincehood and boundary extension were seriously detrimental, since such terms as "serfdom" were used, to the furtherance of the northern parts of the country.

Both the Governments of the Yukon and of the Northwest Territories, for approximately the last two years, have been invited periodically to meetings of the Premiers on a number of various issues. They are signatories, for example, to a number of federal-provincial-territorial agreements. Very often Ministers from the Yukon and Northwest Territories attend joint federal-provincial-territorial meetings. In that forum the territories are regarded as a legitimate quasi-provincial Government, if not having all the provincial powers.

It is perhaps important at this point to reiterate that during the joint constitutional hearings held in the summer on the Meech Lake Accord it was clear that many people were surprised that both the Government of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Government were quasi-provincial Governments. The federal Government has devolved many powers to these Governments in the areas, for example, of justice, health, forestry, social services, and so on.

Therefore, in both the territories we have a government leader who is analogous to a premier and a functioning legislature which meets on the same parliamentary rules as this House. These government leaders are elected, as are government members, by the population of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. They are elected on the assumption that elected leaders represent the views of their constituents and will do so not only in the territorial forum but in the federal arena.

• (2050)

This assumption was somewhat rudely shattered when the Meech Lake Accord was under discussion. The government leaders of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon were not consulted, but they came to Ottawa to make their views known. They were not allowed to participate in the meeting to express those views and had to do so through the media and other means.

This is not the way for a country to reach a harmonious confederation. It simply is not at all conducive to the kind of harmony which this constitutional amendment strives to create.

Let me give another example to support my contention that the current federal Government does not seem to recognize that there are two territories in Canada. I received many letters from my constituency about a specific publication called Strengthening the Canadian Federation: The Constitution Amendment of 1987", which was put out by the Government in August, 1987. The front shows a lovely picture of all the flags of Canada. Of course, they are the flags of southern Canada and do not include either the flag of the Northwest Territories or the flag of the Yukon.

One can understand when northerners receive material like this that the message is very clear: "You can dress like us, you can come and talk to us sometimes and we will tell you it's okay. but you will not really be a member; you will be outside looking in".

I do not believe that is a principle which anyone in the House would choose to champion, nor would Canadians generally feel that this was a just and equitable way to treat 75,000 Canadian citizens. The unanimity provision in the constitutional amendment is unprecedented in our history. According to my research, it is unparalleled in other modern federations such as the United States, Australia, and India. None of them require that kind of unanimity for the creation of new states or provinces.

Should the territories become a province anyway? It is important to clarify that neither of the territories at this point are discussing becoming a province imminently. However, we recognize that constitutions lay the foundation for the future. They are not just to redress past wrongs constitutions are written to set the future path. Therefore, we are extremely concerned that we will be permanently locked out of the Confederation of Canada through this unanimity provision.

Some provinces seem to be concerned that if the territories become a province they will lose a greater portion of their federal revenues. I realize that equalization payments are entrenched in the Constitution, but I think it is important to look at what is actually happening. Both in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, at least 70 per cent of our budgets are federal funds. While we may be talking about a different formula, we are still talking about an amount of money which can be equitably divided. Therefore, I find the argument that allowing for the creation of new provinces detracts from the kind of fiscal equity for existing provinces simply specious. I believe it could easily be renegotiated.

I will use the Yukon as an example. In 1985 there was a successful negotiation of a three-year economic development agreement with the federal Government. Many aspects of that particular agreement parallel the equalization and transfer payments that take place between the federal Government and the provinces. We are not talking about a major effect or change. Many of these mechanisms in the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are in practice now.

A second argument about the creation of new provinces has been that it will create an imbalance regarding the amending formula and so on. Surely this is a relatively easy matter to address. Is it really being suggested that a country of this size cannot have 13 provinces, considering that the Northwest Territories will be going forward with a division into the eastern Arctic Nunavik and Western Arctic in a couple of years?

Is it really being suggested that this would be totally impossible and that the country could not cope with it? Again, it is simply not a valid argument.

In 1987 the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) said:

> I do not think that anyone can challenge the fact that my Party and this Government have taken a leadership role in respect to ensuring that as quickly as possible we move forward in this area of the territories controlling their destiny and attaining provincial status.

Currently programs are being devolved to the territories.

I do not suggest that there is any intention of duplicity when we see programs being devolved on the one hand and, on the other hand, being given some responsibility without belonging to the club. It certainly gives a message to northerners that they will never have full self-determination, despite what is happening through devolution of powers.

Let me also deal with the issue of boundary extensions. The Accord states that provinces may extend their boundaries, again under the unanimity provision. It was never contemplated in the British North America Act, the Yukon Act, or any relevant statute that any of the existing provinces would extend their boundaries northward.

I believe the idea was first expressed in the 1930s by British Columbia and was reiterated as late as the 1970s. At various times Alberta and Saskatchewan also made the same suggestions.

When I raised this issue with various provincial members and indeed with the federal Government, I was told that no one would ever use this provision. If so, I suggest that it should be deleted.

The practical consequences are ludicrous. For example, if British Columbia suddenly decided to extend its boundaries there would be an uproar.

In the minute I have left, I want to quote Trevor Lloyd because what he said is quite pertinent to this argument. He said: "For many years the Canadian North was governed in a prolonged fit of absence of mind". We have an opportunity to redress this absence of mind. The New Democratic Party has proposed excellent amendments which would address these matters.

Let me finish by stating why I think this issue is important. I held a contest for some Grade 6 students in my constituency. They drew posters depicting what Canada Day meant to them. I think they show why northerners are concerned about the future. Helen Weber of Christ the King School has a poster showing Indian people and non-Indians, the gold rush, the Canadian flag, and the past. For her, the future is a question mark. I think it is time to respond to that question mark.

Let me quote Rosanna Dick from Ross River, Yukon, who said: "To me Canada means the Yukon Territory, my home". For Rosanna Dick, Stuart Dolan, Helen Weber, and all those children who feel that Canada is their home and their country, we have an opportunity, through a just amendment that will not unravel the Constitution, to show these children that they have a future that is not a question mark.

• (2100)

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for the Yukon exactly what the amendment would entail. Where does she see the opposition to the amendment coming from? Is it simply in an egregious error that perhaps the provinces have not considered it, or does she think that the provinces in fact have their own agendas, in other words, they want to grab the North for themselves? Is it true that, for example, if one is a lawyer in northern Canada, one cannot be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada because under the Accord that is not permitted? I just wonder if the Hon. Member could tell me more precisely what the amendments would propose and where the Opposition, if any, would come from?

Ms. McLaughlin: There are several amendments that have already been proposed which I mentioned in my speech. In 1981, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) proposed an amendment regarding the boundary extension. It was in the previous discussions in the 1982 Constitution that boundary extensions should not take place without the consent of those involved, in other words, the residents of the territories. That amendment was, of course, voted down by the then Liberal Government.

In 1987, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) made an amendment in this House stating that aboriginal rights should be addressed and that section of the constitutional amendment under debate tonight should be changed to include acknowledgement of the concerns around aboriginal issues and the concern about the unanimity provision for provincehood. That amendment was voted down by the current Government.

Also in 1987, the Hon. Member for Skeena made an amendment stating that the Joint Committee on the Meech Lake Accord should travel to the North. That amendment was voted down by the current Government. It is interesting that when one reads the report from the Senate hearings, one finds that in fact the Senate committee travelled to the North, it heard what people had to say, and as a result the kind of amendments it proposed—I almost hesitate to say so with some of my personal feelings about the other place—first of all, are similar to the amendments proposed by my own Party and do address the issues I have raised.

I have put forward three Private Member's motions, one for the inclusion of government leaders in further constitutional talks, another for the deletion of the section on boundary extension and a third for the deletion of the unanimity provision with respect to provincial provinces. So Members, hopefully, will have an opportunity to show their solidarity with the North should these be chosen, as well as in voting for my Party's amendments when we vote on this constitutional amendment.

In terms of the question, where does the Opposition come from, it is hard to say. I was not invited to the First Ministers' conference. I probably will be next time, but I was not invited last time. From reading the joint constitutional hearings, I find there are certainly quotes from Senators that certain provinces were jealous of the trappings of provincehood the territories had. Others were concerned about equalization payments, and so on. So clearly it was not a mistake or forgetful lapse. It was deliberate.

One thing that is very important, I think, for people to recognize is that the treatment of the North in this amendment was not an oversight. It was a deliberate act. When it comes to the appointment of Senators, it is a curious thing because, yes, as I understand the amendment, the Yukon would not be able to appoint Senators. I am not sure if the one who is there gets drummed out in some sort of official ceremony—and as I understand it, it could not appoint Supreme Court Judges.

What is interesting about that particular section is that the Supreme Court Judges themselves, as you will know, backed by the Canadian Bar Association, supported a particular amendment to redress that particular issue. Therefore, it is difficult to say where the opposition comes from. I think clearly there are very few issues about which there is some unanimity in the North, and this is one.

I think I can say fairly confidently that we feel this has to be a federal territorial issue because it is the federal Government which is supposed to have the Canadian vision. We do not expect each individual province to have that kind of vision. The hope, I suppose, of First Ministers conferences is that there will be some kind of collective vision. If so, I would say it is limited because we in the territories have to be worried about the bargaining. We have been a bargaining chip before. That was certainly a point the former Member from the Yukon made in the 1981-82 debates on the constitutional Accord.

I think we have to be worried about what kind of powers, what kind of agreements, will be made if, indeed, at some point, 10 or 15 years down the road, the territories knock on the door and say: "We would like to become provinces". What will have to be traded off? I think you trade off in the national interest, not in a parochial interest.

It is difficult to say what the particular barriers are because they were closed meetings, of course, which is another interesting point about the process. It is interesting when one of the most historic documents in Canada is a very private matter. I appreciate the negotiations being private, but we are not really privy to the kinds of reasons people had for the very serious decisions they have made.

Ms. Jewett: Madam Speaker, may I join in the small but very attentive audience tonight and say what a very powerful statement our colleague has made. I do want to make two minor points that arose, I think, out of an error introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). It is not a matter that a lawyer practising in the Yukon or the Northwest Territories might not become an nominee for the Supreme Court Bench, it is if a province is willing to nominate him.

Mr. Forrestall: Listen to the Prime Minister today and you know differently. The decision will be made by the Prime Minister of Canada.

Ms. Jewett: I am sorry, I am talking about nominations. The Hon. Member has obviously not been in a state to listen. In the matter of nominations, the fact is, and I am sure the Hon. Member would agree, as I have outlined, and I just want to correct my friend, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway.

On the matter of Senate appointments, it was the Joint Committee's understanding, under the relative section—and it slips me for the moment—of the BNA Act, the federal Government is still entirely free to appoint Senators from the two territories. That section of the BNA Act would still be paramount.

I would like to conclude my comment with a question. There is an absence of will on the part of both the previous Government and the present Government to include at all conferences, leaders of the two territories, apart from the sort of jealousy that may be involved in provinces somehow including territorial leaders at First Ministers' meetings. I agree with the Hon. Member that there is not that much difference between 10 and 13, should we divide the Northwest Territories. Is there any other reason that the Hon. Member has thought of? Does it relate, for example—and I realize this is a sensitive point—to the possibility that there will be aboriginal self-government in at least one of the territories in the foreseeable future?

• (2110)

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Speaker, I cannot—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has actually expired. However, I think it would only be fair if the Hon. Member would take a minute or so to conclude and answer the question.

Ms. McLaughlin: Madam Speaker, I cannot intuit what is in other people's minds. I think the land claims issue is certainly a crucial one. Since there are land claims negotiations going on in British Columbia and in other provinces I cannot really see that that would be a reason why territorial leaders would not be included. In the self-government provision, this may have some bearing, although I would find it somewhat obscure. The self-government provision is basically supported by the Governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. It is an issue which they are dealing with through the land claims process. I do not see why that would necessarily affect the provinces.

Of course, as we all know, one of the concerns of aboriginal people generally is that the whole issue of self-government nationally must be settled and must be discussed by the First Ministers.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to join in the debate on the constitutional Accord which was made at Meech Lake something over one year ago and which was refined in the Langevin Building in the second meeting of the First Ministers of this land of ours. I appreciate the opportunity to speak not least of all because I have not spoken on the Accord in the House before. Circumstances of one sort and another have conspired against my doing so. Thus, at this late point, quite likely as the last person speaking on the debate in the House of Commons, I appreciate the opportunity to say something about the Accord and perhaps to do so more closely to the perspective I took when very soon after the Accord was arrived at I defended our support of it quite vigorously at a meeting of the Thunder Bay—Nipigon New Democratic Riding Association.

I will be speaking a little more closely to that line this evening than I have felt at times along the way that I would be. The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) and the Hon. Member for the Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) have expressed doubts and strong criticisms on certain aspects of the Accord. As the person in our caucus responsible for multiculturalism, I have inevitably at times felt some very real concerns about aspects of the Accord.

It has been said by a cynic that nothing ever really happens in Canadian history, that the same fundamental problems are there. We try different ways of solving the problems but we never really get there. If one had the time to do a history lesson one could go back, I suppose, to the constitutional Act of 1791, which is conceivably the first attempt to deal with duality and diversity of people as far as the British Empire was concerned, or one could go back to the Quebec Act and start there looking at the Act of Union of 1840-41 with its imposition upon the French-speaking population of what had been known as Lower Canada. One can certainly celebrate the achievement in Confederation.

Against that kind of background one would have a fair basis for considering what happened in 1982 when the Constitution of Canada was repatriated and when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was added to it. That was of course a novel development within a parliamentary Government. However, I think that all of those aspects would be less significant than the brutal basic fact of 1981-82 which is that a Prime Minister who had been working for a decade and a half to achieve one Canada and to maintain one Canada would have agreed to an arrangement that left the Province of Quebec out, especially when he had resisted any kind of special status for that Province. That failing, that fundamental flaw in 1982 is surely the most basic fact with which we really have to begin an exploration of what was done last year.

The creation of two Canadas, in a sense—if it is fair to say two Canadas when we think of Quebec had it not come into the Accord in 1982—accepted by a Prime Minister who had fought against special status all those years is the most profound kind of contradiction. For him to leave office with that reality can only leave one shaking one's head over the situation that existed.

Politically, that produced a result and a basis for the Accord of last year, a determination that was clear in a speech made by the now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), as well as in convention resolutions of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. It was clear that for the three political Parties of Canada the 1982 result could not be continued. That is the context, surely, within which one has to consider what was done in the spring of 1982.

It seems to me that the determination of that former Prime Minister to maintain one Canada is at the very heart of the Meech Lake Accord. Because of his insistence on all provinces being the same it was not possible to work at a different kind of solution. There were years of rejection of co-operative federalism as we all know from near the end of the Pearson years that had broken down by the kind of determination that Pierre Elliott Trudeau expressed time after time. On the one hand he expressed a strong federalism while on the other an insistence on each of the provinces being like the others.

It seems to me that when Quebec was brought in the political inability to concede to Quebec things that the other provinces did not have made it practically inevitable that the Accord would take the shape that it did. That is why in my opinion, if I may be allowed the two proper nouns here slightly out of order, as far as I am concerned the Accord is very definitely by Mulroney out of Trudeau. That makes the opposition of that former Prime Minister all the more ironic because of course his determination to have one Canada with all the provinces having similar powers is at the very heart of the constitutional Accord of 1987, rectifying the shortcomings of 1982.

As far as appreciating this in all of its complexity, I defer immediately to my colleague, our critic, the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam (Ms. Jewett). With her years of work in constitutional history, constitutional law and Canadian federalism she can do things with all of this that I would not do more than presume to begin with. However, the basic feature of Canadian federalism is that it is a quasi-federalism. It is a decidedly odd system in which the federal power has a very long reach which is not unique to our country but which is certainly a very Canadian feature. I refer to the use of the federal power of appointment in terms of appointment of lawyers to judgeships well down into the court system within the provinces.

Provincial Legislatures establish those courts while the persons who preside over them are federally appointed. That is only one of the features that makes our state not a true federal state. Of course, the Senate most obviously represents the same reality. When we roll into it the kind of nationalism that we Canadians feel within our own affairs, finding it so difficult to express our nationalism outside our borders, we devote practically all our nationalist energy to internal affairs. That, of course, makes some of these features of our system very attractive. It would make changes in them of the sort that the Accord would be more difficult for us in the federal House to accept than they we had a more genuinely federal state. Laying aside all of the prejudices that we in our tradition from the days of the CCF through the New Democratic Party have expressed against the other place, laying all of those aside as we have done in accepting the Accord, and insisting that the Upper House of a federal state shall be controlled solely by the central Government is a most unusual feature in a federal state.

To move to a system in which there is a larger provincial involvement serving here as the reality of our regional existence, to have provinces involved in the choice of Senators and Justices of the Supreme Court of Canada, is moving a little closer to a genuine federal state. One could worry this particular matter to and fro, having deferred to my good friend and her expertise in this area, I suppose I might refer to the historians who have wrestled with this, particularly through the 1960s and 1970s.

Professor Donald Creighton had his own particular narrow views of what the Canadian state was all about and what the determination of Sir John A. Macdonald was, loading all that significance on our first Prime Minister, as far as the very nature of the state back in the 1860s, 1870s, and 1880s was, and again I do not have time to explore that. One could think of the writings of William Morton on this same topic, another notable Conservative historian, and a breakdown of the imperial vision that Professor Morton in his time credited to Sir John A. Macdonald.

The breakdown of that vision came early on. What he failed to face up to in one of his most notable articles on this topic is the democratic reality that destroyed it. Although one may have a federal state, one may have a quasi-federal state, in our time one has certain democratic realities that one has to face up to. Those, of course, were the ones expressed by the determination of the three Parties and in the deliberations of the First Ministers.

In linking the First Ministers meeting to the democratic politics I may offend some people who see this as rather a closed session in which something was done very quickly. I think we exaggerate all of that. I realized afterward that there were certainly clues as to what may happen, such things as a speech made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to the Alberta Conservative Party not too many days before the Meech Lake Accord, which gave a pretty fair signal to those listening carefully as to what actually would happen. Again, we are in grave danger of exaggerating if we focus only on the reality of 11 men gathered around a table making this particular agreement.

If we have in the Accord a movement toward a more federal state, and that for all of us who are nationalists and concerned about the power of the federal Government, on the other hand we have something that is surely fully as significant as my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has indicated. He pointed to the clause dealing with the spending power and has asserted that here something is being gained.

If there is one thing that we on the federal scene have ignored for decades past, it is the manner in which the federal Government, certainly from the 1950s and perhaps even earlier, asserted itself in provincial areas of responsibility. One could debate how this was being done very easily. One could question the validity of it. Generally the arguments were made around the spending power of the federal Government and its being quite untrammeled. But when it is exercised in areas of social and cultural responsibility, which are quintessentially provincial, if one reads the BNA Act, the Constitutional Act of 1867, and puts it into a modern context, then all of this activity by the federal Government through all these years in areas of provincial responsibility, without a very clear basis for it, certainly could be debated.

Without spending any length of time on it, we know perfectly well from the Tremblay Commission of the 1950s in Québec, and probably before that in reactions, there was the most profound reaction in Québec to all of this. To have in the agreement negotiated by the First Ministers, the provincial Premiers, and the Prime Minister a basis for the federal Government to act in all of these areas in agreement with the provinces is more than just a tidying up of the constitutional scene. It is one that certainly deserves to be recognized, and to have the sense of national objectives. There are those who would have preferred national standards, taking us back to the 1930s and the Rowell-Sirois Commission considering the state of the Canadian federal organization, the weaknesses of the provinces in finances, and so on. In those days, national standards might have been preferable for many of us, but national objectives certainly go a long way toward what we want when we think of achieving programs of one sort or another in areas that are not immediately obviously in the federal area under section 91 of the Constitution Act of 1867.

Having said those things, Madam Speaker, about the evolution in a manner that indicates my basic support for what has happened, there are those areas of concern that have been expressed by various persons. Here we particularly have the politics of the situation.

If we consider the manner in which this agreement was arrived at, by contrast fairly quickly, and contrasted to the failure in three meetings of First Ministers to make any significant progress on aboriginal rights, one can understand perfectly well the outrage of the aboriginal peoples of Canada that something should be done so quickly here to take care of this when their long struggle to achieve recognition and clarification of what self-government means had not been achieved.

Given what I said earlier about the length of time that one can look back through Canadian history at attempts to solve the Canadian problem, one might conceivably argue that there is a longer background to the Accord than there is to the attempt to clarify aboriginal self-government, although that would require ignoring the earlier aboriginal history and a century, give or take, of the Indian Act in making such an assertion. I would not want to do it very loudly. Particularly, I would not want to do it in certain circumstances that we can all think of.

The definition of our duality, which is the reality which the coming of the United Empire Loyalists first made after the Canadien and Canadienne had been here, and to have that duality recognized as a fundamental characteristic of Canadian history, with all of our concern about what it may mean in practice in Saskatchewan, in Quebec, if I may be allowed that type of shorthand at the moment, was appropriate. There are persons who are not of Anglo-Celtic or French origin in this country who feel that 35 per cent of the Canadian population are all too neglected in federal institutions time after time, as I can assert categorically as critic for multiculturalism in our caucus, who have some sense of jealousy here about that term being taken and to see the restriction of that term, because we have a refusal in Bill C-93, the multiculturalism Bill which will shortly come to the House at report stage, by the Government to have fundamental characteristics applied to another reality which is the ethnocultural diversity of this country. Perhaps I speak with a bit more feeling because of my intense involvement in these matters, but that is something that should be set right.

When we deal with Bill C-93, given that the Accord says "a fundamental characteristic" as regards duality, why can we not say "a fundamental characteristic of ethnocultural diversity"? It is singular and a recognition that there will be others. Let us define them. Those are the realities this Accord does not deal with. It is necessary to make progress, as the Leader of my Party has declared, for multiculturalism in Canada. There needs to be this recognition and we should have a meeting of First Ministers in order to achieve progress.

Then of course there are the other matters which have been addressed so very well by the Hon. Member for Yukon As well, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), in his much briefer comments, spoke very forcefully about the possibility of an override of all the assurances of equality for women and minorities. That is surely in its way a flaw in the 1982 agreement. We need to find a time when the First Ministers will agree to limit this that so we cannot ever face that sort of experience.

Those are my comments and I thank you very much for this opportunity to comment on the Accord.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. Resuming debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Madam Speaker, I am proud to rise for a third time in this debate on the Constitutional Accord reached by Canada's First Ministers at Meech Lake and the Langevin Block, which today enables us to go through another stage in this country's constitutional process.

Madam Speaker, each participant in this debate tried to express his or her own vision of Canada, a more centralizing or a more decentralized vision of the country, and to me who live in a part of the country where my ancestors along with many others who settled in Quebec had to face major debates, those visions at times seem to be a somewhat irrealistic reflection of reality. But at any rate each one of us has his or her own vision of Canada. I respect each and everyone who does not share my views, just as I hope they will respect my own if they happen to be different from theirs.

Madam Speaker, to me Canada is both a union of citizens and a union of governments. Trying to view this nation simply as a union of citizens is wrong in my view, because this is negating the existence of shared powers between the two levels of government, the federal and the provincial levels.

So there is a union of citizens who, at various stages in this country's history, accepted to renew in a positive way their common will to live together as a nation.

To us in Quebec, this has led at various times in our history to major fights, but at no time did we experience this in a more specific manner than during the 1980 referendum that citizens will live within a country that is called Canada. That will was expressed in a fully democratic way after a debate that was stormy, that was difficult, and as indicated earlier today by my Leader the Right Hon. the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he rose in this debate, it was a referendum debate that divided many individual Quebecers, that divided families, that divided groups of friends.

So that union of citizens that is a component of this nation was strongly renewed by a majority of Quebecers and a majority of French-speaking ones during that referendum. That union of citizens is but one component of Canada as we know it. The second component is the union of governments. That is why the Canadian Constitution provides for and specifies the distribution of powers between the federal and provincial governments and contains an amending formula which sets out a number of criteria. These criteria ensure that our Constitution cannot be amended by referendum, because it would mean that a linguistic majority could impose constitutional changes on a linguistic minority or that the majority in Central Canada could impose constitutional changes on other less populated regions of the country.

This union of citizens and this union of governments make up a Constitution which distributes powers between the federal and provincial levels of government and contains an amending formula which, although somewhat complicated, ensures what the leader of the Liberal Party of Canada referred to, this afternoon, as a "balanced" federalism, a balance between federal and provincial powers and outline the way to go about altering ever so slightly this balance.

Madam Speaker, the Meech Lake Accord did not come out of the blue. It happened after long and intensive discussions between men and women of this country. It is the final touch to a symphony, some have called it the unfinished symphony of 1981-82, when we patriated the Constitution and adopted a constitutional amendment without the concurrence of Quebec. And to do this, Madam Speaker, the government of the day went to the Supreme Court and got quite a complex judgment. It interpreted this judgment rather narrowly in order to bypass the tradition which held that, in this country, the law or rule of unanimity prevailed. Mind you, I am not a first rate legal mind, I could be wrong, but as I see it, the government tried to interpret the judgment as much as possible in its favour in a way which allowed it to patriate the Constitution without Quebec's concurrence. When I say "without Quebec's concurrence", I mean without the concurrence of the democratic institutions which the people of Quebec give themselves every four years, that is the National Assembly which produces a government.

It is not fair either to say that this Quebec Parliament only expressed the separatist view: a great many Members voted against this unilateral approach, including such men as Claude Ryan and several of his colleagues who were in the Opposition.

This way of doing things, therefore, placed the democratically elected Members of the Quebec National Assembly in quite a delicate position.

That is why I was saying a while ago that this country is not only a union of citizens or a union of Governments. As one of these Governments, the Quebec National Assembly had expressed its disagreement; through its Government, the Quebec people had said no to this unilateral patriation of the Constitution.

Like a great many other Quebecers, I asked myself with considerable pain the following question: Is this a legitimate step forward? Should we consider the 1982 event as a positive development improving the situation in Canada and moving in the right direction? For quite a long time, I was very concerned about this notion because a great many fellow Canadians living in Quebec were deeply humiliated by this approach which the Federal Government had adopted at the time and which the House had confirmed.

Personally, I had come to the conclusion that it was a step forward and that we had to continue working towards a better balance federalism within a better Canada.

• (2140)

It is in this context, Madam Speaker, that I finally accepted the invitation of the Leader of the Liberal Party to resign my position in the private sector and to come here and try to represent this spirit of positive federalism, all the while recognizing Quebec's rights within the Canadian Constitution. It is in this context that I agreed to come to serve on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada in this Parliament.

Madam Speaker, some are blaming me—they did it again this afternoon—for a vision which they feel is much too province-oriented, when I state that I represent Quebec's interests in this Parliament.

Clearly, people may hold different views. Personally, I am not living in a dream world, Madam Speaker, and I do not think too many Hon. Members are. People who come to the House of Commons, have been elected by a specific group of people. They share the same roots in their way of life, in their culture and they come to identify with him. Madam Speaker, it is a fact that we do not hold a referendum each time we stand up to make a speech, but we feel that we are close to our voters, that we live in contact with ordinary people, that we have, as through osmosis, perceptions which make it possible for us to say that in some respect, we represent a democratic base, either an electoral riding, a metropolitan area or a province. We cannot live in a dream world and say that we represent the national interest. What is the national interest of Canada? How is it defined? Why should my Hon. friend from Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston) feel that his concept of national interest is better than mine simply because I represent Quebec's interests here.

And if the Canadian Parliament, if this country is not the juxtaposition of the aspirations, the feelings and the way each of the people we represent see things, just what is a nation then? What is a country? We have not been dropped here from the sky. We have been elected by ordinary people and we must represent them. I am proud to say so. Perhaps others will have diverging views. I trust they will respect mine, and as a representative of Quebec here in Ottawa I say that I am discharging my responsibilities as a citizen, that I seek to achieve what we call the national interest. As far as I am concerned the national interest cannot be served properly if in this country we call Canada, 26 per cent of the people are not included politically, as the Leader of the Liberal Party said earlier this afternoon, psychologically and emotionally part and parcel of this country called Canada.

If we do not have that feeling, how can we talk about national interest and Canadian unity? One of the major accomplishments of this accord is to make it possible for most Quebecers—if we rely on polls, but if I go by my own feeling, by my perceptions, by the findings of God knows how many trips throughout Quebec—to realize that to a considerable extent it represents the aspirations of a part of Canada which had been left behind in 1982.

Madam Speaker, this is why I should like to pay tribute to the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada who, in this debate, may have had to fight much harder than any other political leader in this Parliament.

An Hon. Member: And how!

Mr. Garneau: In some respects it would have been a lot easier for him to give up or let others impose a different vision of this country. The political risks he took were enormous but he realized that Canada could not exist without Quebec being a part of it, not only in the legal sense, but also psychologically, emotionally and politically. Were Quebec not in fact an integral part of this country, Canada would not be what it is as a result of the Meech Lake Agreement, which is indeed the culmination of a very long process. Those who think that it came about overnight are mistaken. We are talking about a process which began . . .

I was listening earlier as an NDP colleague mentioned the Quebec Act and the 1791 Agreement. This was the first instance of a certain recognition being given to the notion of a distinct society in Quebec. But Lord it was a process which stretched out over years and years, and generations I would say. When I hear people telling me that to recognize Quebec as a distinct society in the Constitution is to sow the seeds of independence, I say to myself: Good God, in some respects I wonder if we are living in the same country, or even in the same city. I submit that to recognize the distinct nature of Quebec is simply to be realistic. Trying to pretend that reality does not exist is not constructive since reality has a way of bouncing back at every turn. I therefore believe that to recognize Quebec as a distinct society simply amounts to taking our society as it is.

And that is what Mr. Turner, the leader of the official Opposition, was saying this morning when he talked about the Civil Code and the language used in daily life and at work by the vast majority. I could talk about our institutions and about how our democratic process is evolving. And we could also mention the Caisse de dépôt et de placement and the opting out formula to which Parliament agreed, not only for Quebec but for other provinces as well. All this came about through a necessary political adjustment process. With regard to our political party, I am happy to see that the process undertaken by the Quebec wing of the Liberal Party following what is now practically a landmark interview granted to Le Devoir in May 1986 by the leader of the Liberal Party . . . We picked up that very promising ball on a fine pass by the leader of the Liberal Party and we met in a place you know quite well, Madam Speaker, the city of Saint-Hyacinthe. And it is in Saint-Hyacinthe that the General Council of the Canada-Quebec Liberal Party passed a resolution that was very controversial within our own ranks to recognize Quebec's distinct society. Our goal was to find a solution acceptable to Quebec and the rest of Canada in that Constitutional vacuum left in 1982. That resolution passed by the Canada-Quebec Liberal Party in Saint-Hyacinthe was in response to the democratic process undertaken in Quebec not only during the December 85 election but also in the Quebec Liberal Party's platform which led to its election on December 2, 1985. We wanted to give an answer, an opportunity which would be quite generous but realistic. A series of discussions within our own party eventually resulted in our passing a resolution in November 1986.

I think that procedure, which the Liberal Party Leader referred to this afternoon as depoliticizing the debate, allowed the New Democratic Party to adopt a resolution which showed a certain open-mindedness. It also allowed the provincial Premiers to sit at a table with the Prime Minister knowing that if they went in a direction which had already been discussed in Victoria and during the 1981-82 Constitutional process, they had the support of the leader and the majority of the Liberal Party of Canada as well as that of the other political party, and I think it is this depoliticizing which made Meech Lake possible. Of course, there are things I would like to change. I want to ask a question to those who object to the Accord on the basis of its shortcomings. It wasn't perfect in 1981-82, but a lot of people compromised and accepted that it was still possible to go forward in spite of the shortcomings. And why do they think now, when it is so crucial for Canadian unity, that we can only solve the Constitutional problem so important to the Quebec of today when everything is perfect? There will be other Constitutional discussions and other steps to go through in the coming months and years.

I share the hope that one day our Canadian Constitution will recognize aboriginal rights and the importance of multiculturalism, for example. But in trying to do everything right now, we may lose an incredible chance to make a positive step for Quebec, for Canadian unity, and it is because I have a national vision that I persue the national interest and ask to all Members of Parliament and to all Members of the New Brunswick Legislative Assembly and of the Manitoba Legislative Assembly to really think twice before preventing us from taking that step, a step which in my opinion is important for the unity of our country and which is in the best interest of Canada.

Mr. Kindy: Madam Speaker, I heard with much interest the speech made by the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and I should like to put to him some questions and ask him for example what he means by distinct society. Does the formula of the distinct society implies two nations? Could he explain if he interprets the distinct society as including two nations or does he merely mean that it is a culturally different society? Also, I should like to know whether he thinks that native peoples are adequately protected under the Meech Lake Accord. A third question: we realize for example that the Northwest Territories and the Yukon are dissatisfied since, as a result of the formula, it will be extremely complicated for them to become a province. Does he find it fair for those peoples to be prevented from obtaining provincial status? Could he give a more specific definition of the distinct society? Is it, as I said, the concept of two nations as discussed during the sixties and was then rejected by most Canadians?

Mr. Garneau: Madam Speaker, in relation to the Northwest Territories, I think the 1982 constitutional agreement contributed as much to the difficulty as the Meech Lake Accord because it subjected the creation of a new province to the 50 per cent rule, that is, seven provinces representing at least 50 per cent of the population of Canada. With the Meech Lake Accord, it is the unanimity rule that applies, but the real difficulty, if any, was created in 1982. Personally I think that the matter can be corrected. We have an amendment that would bring us back to the 1982 rule of seven provinces and 50 per cent of the population. But even then the Northwest Territories and the Yukon will not get the same treatment as Saskatchewan and Alberta did when they became provinces. However I support the amendment that my leader referred to this afternoon which would reestablish the rule of seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population of Canada. It would make it a bit less difficult.

I can very well understand the position of the provinces. Our Constitution gives specific powers and responsabilities in terms of constitutional amendments and the provinces want to know how many partners will be sitting around the table, as part of the Canadian family. So they too have a say in that regard. But our amendment, which may be discussed later, would reestablish in that regard the amending formula based on seven provinces representing at least 50 per cent of the population of Canada.

Madam Speaker, the aboriginal rights are also part of our approach. As we said before, they were part of our constitutional resolution adopted by the Liberal Party of Canada during its November 1986 convention. But there again, the provinces must give their consent. We cannot amend the Constitution without consent according to the prescribed rules in the Constitution and in the amendment formula. And you are aware, as well as I am of steps taken by the former government that resulted in a constitutional conference on aboriginal rights. Unfortunately, there was no agreement. Consequently, I do not know exactly when we will find this open-handedness throughout the country, not only inside the federal Government but in all the provinces as well, so as to reach that recognition which I support.

As far as the theory of the two nations is concerned, Madam Speaker, I do not feel like dealing in semantics. For my part, the distinct society concept describes Quebec as it is now, with a majority of French-speaking people, with a minority of English-speaking people and also some representatives from different cultural communities. I think that is an accurate description of Quebec and it is the one I find in the Meech Lake Accord. And if that reality cannot be recognized, I think that Canada is in much greater trouble than some people would like to think. When one does not accept reality, one is on the verge of making big mistakes.

Mr. Berger: Madam Speaker, I wish first of all tonight to congratulate the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) after listening very carefully to his comments. I wish as well to address a few points he made during his speech.

He mentioned the idea of a referendum, rejecting it on the grounds that a majority would impress its will upon a minority. Such is the danger, as he described it, of calling for the opinion of the people in a union of governments and citizens.

It may be that my knowledge of the referendum concept suffers some want. But I still believe in the possibility that during a referendum process minorities might be protected in some way. For instance, a majority of votes could be the rule in each and every area throughout the country. The danger he mentioned might then be stunted. However, in order to settle a disagreement, he admits there still exists a possibility, in a union of governments, to finally let the people decide upon the issue.

Secondly, he talked about the unanimity clause as having been recognized by the Supreme Court. Madam Speaker, to my opinion which stands to be corrected, the Supreme Court found that there was no such unanimity clause. The Member went on to say that at the time, federal Government kept to a strict interpretation of the decision.

On the contrary, in 1981 the Canadian Government decided to meet again with the provinces because the Supreme Court had resolved that unanimity was unnecessary and that the Federal could go ahead with the support of only some of the provinces.

No one knew for sure the exact number of provinces required, and maybe the federal Government could have proceeded with only two of them, namely perhaps Ontario and New Brunswick. Nevertheless, the Canadian Government decided then to try again with all the provinces and see if unanimity or, at least, a large consensus could not be achieved.

Those are the two points I wanted to address by giving my own assessment of the facts.

• (2200)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides has one minute left.

Mr. Garneau: I do not want to enter into an argument. We can each have our own interpretation of the facts. The only thing I know is that the unanimity rule had existed ever since the Constitution Act of 1867, but that a major change had been made that went against tradition.

I said that, nevertheless, it could be considered a step forward, because of the importance of the Charter of rights. I believe, however, that we have to progress even further and it is for that reason that I support the Meech Lake Accord.

As to the other element, the referendum question, I think we will need many more conferences to define the kinds of referendums we might envisage, but in this case there was no need for such a procedure since there was unanimity of all First Ministers in attendance at Meech Lake and Langevin. With that kind of consensus and the sort of debate I am witnessing tonight, Madam Speaker... I participated in debates which dealt with historic crises, where the galleries were full and all Members in their seats. Why are we here, at 10 p.m. in front of empty galleries and lots of empty seats? The truth is, people have the feeling that the Meech Lake Accord has the blessing of a large majority of Canadians. That is the reason for the attendance we have tonight. We are not in a crisis situation. I note with some satisfaction that the Meech Lake Accord will take us an important step closer to Canadian unity.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments are now over. On debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) has the floor.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, on October 22, 1987, in this House I had the opportunity to express my views on the subject before us tonight. Therefore I shall not repeat the same speech since it is in Hansard on pages 10 291 and 10 292, for those who might be interested.

So, this is the end of the debate, or almost; a few other Hon. Members will probably speak after me but as my colleague the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) has said it is already 10 p.m. and you have been very patiently waiting for the end of the debate as well as a few colleagues I will not mention by name. As the Press Gallery is empty, it is less embarrassing to say that there are not too many of us here.

Some think that Canada is going through a terrible crisis although the debate ends very quietly tonight.

Sir Winston Churchill used to say this: "Why does the Mother of Parliaments, the British Parliament...

[English]

It may be very interesting to other people in Canada who speak English that I am talking in French about the Mother of Parliaments, the British parliamentary system and the British Parliament.

[Translation]

But as Sir Winston Churchill used to say... It is a fact that there are only about 300 seats or rather benches, in the British Parliament, to accomodate at least 550 Hon. Members. He used to say that when there was a crisis, you could tell because there was no room left. Paraphrasing him, I would say that there is really no crisis here tonight.

If there is no crisis, why all the fuss made by a small group of people who are very active, very sincere, I will admit, but who persist in seeing in the Meech Lake Accord things which are not part of it. They are wrong. I submit that you cannot build a country with weak hearts.

[English]

You build a country with daring people. I repeat, as I said in October and have said for the last 20 years, how daring the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson was when he went to Winnipeg and spoke for the first time as a Prime Minister of his determination to give this country a Canadian flag. Did he do it in Québec? Did he do it in Montreal, Quebec City, Chicoutimi, or Alma where we are going to win on Monday? No, he chose Winnipeg on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Royal Canadian Legion, and he was booed. Mrs. Pearson, Mary Macdonald, secretary to Mr. Pearson, I, and perhaps 10 or 15 other people applauded and over 1,000 booed. Yet he said that this country needs a Canadian flag.

[Translation]

And that is how for the first time, in 1964, Mr. Pearson said: "In the evolution of this country, the time has come to give ourselves a Canadian flag".

Who, Madam Speaker, especially in the West where it encountered so much opposition, would dare today turn back the clock and say that this flag which is now recognized everywhere in the whole world, in the West as in Quebec as everywhere else as the symbol of what unites us, who could dare remove it and say that we should go back to what we had before?

Then Mr. Pearson was gone. He also asked us to give ourselves a Canadian national anthem, the O Canada. I was appointed by him to the Committee established in order that we try and finally come to an agreement to proclaim O Canada as the Canadian national anthem. And, Madam Speaker, while this debate took place in 1966-67, it was only on July 1, 1980, that Parliament proclaimed O Canada as our national anthem; yet we from Quebec...

[English]

We from Quebec have been singing O Canada since 1880.

[Translation]

Mr. Calixa Lavallée and Mr. Routhier wrote both the lyrics and the music, and we from Quebec were taking it for granted, but it was only in 1980, 100 years later, that O Canada was proclaimed our national anthem. So you can see that quiet and difficult evolution, but always towards the Canadianization of our institutions. Then came Mr. Trudeau. He felt abnormal that we had to go to the British Parliament to beg for amendments. Let us be frank. The British Parliament was anxious to get rid of that, but it was the Canadians that could not get on together to decide what to do. Well, Mr. Trudeau, in a spite of all the difficulties this represented at the time, succeeded in patriating the Constitution. And then he had an extraordinary dream that I was sharing and still share, to have a Charter of Human Rights. He imposed it at the same time but it is not complete. The Prime Minister unwillingly had to accept the notwithstanding clause, but it was the price to pay to take another step forward towards the canadianization of our institutions.

I heard no one, Madam Speaker and my dear colleague from Laval-des-Rapides, launch great national campaigns since 1982 to ask that the clause which concerns a lot of people, myself as well as many Canadians and Quebecers, be removed from the Charter.

The notwithstanding clause was accepted by the parliamentarians in 1982 because they had no other choice. And today, we have the Meech Lake Accord. Madam Speaker, as I said, it is not the greatest achievement, it is still incomplete, but it is a step forward towards the complete Canadianization of our institutions. It is not perfect. I said in October 1987 as I have always said to my friend Max Gros-Louis, chief of the Hurons in Quebec City: Who am I and who are my French-speaking colleagues to deny our first citizens the right to be recognized in the Constitution? This will come. It is essential. All of us have to decide this evening that the next step should be aimed at our native peoples.

But I do not understand this vision which certain parliamentarians have, I was almost tempted to say, and I do not want to throw oil on the fire, but this obsession so aptly represented by the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), he ought to remember that he also represents Saint-Henri—not only Westmount—which happens to be the major part of his riding, the obsession to believe that things can be right only in Ottawa, that nothing good can come out of the provinces, that Ottawa bureaucrats are tops, that their provincial counterparts are nothing more than lesser entities. I find that insulting. I find that offending because we live together by choice. Madam Speaker, I suggest that a good many parliamentarians would stand to learn a lot simply by walking around Parliament Hill. They might learn the rudiments of Canada's history.

After tonight's debate let us take a walk around Parliament Hill and let me ask my colleague from Saint-Henri—Westmount and others to tell me more about the statue of Baldwin-Lafontaine located behind the Senate. What does it represent? Why is it there? Just who is Balwin-Lafontaine? Why did someone see fit—as it was, of course—to select Parliament Hill as the site of a statue of Canada's first Prime Minister, Conservative Sir John A. Macdonald? But why did we decide at the same time to erect a statue of Cartier on Parliament Hill? He never was Prime Minister of Canada. It is because some people quite simply fail to appreciate that we once agreed to a partnership in this country and that when the partnership is healthy, when those who contributed to build up this country agree with one another the country fares well, but when we lose sight of the spirit which promted us to live together—for better or for worse, as the saying goes—then the country is torn by dissension.

My colleague is trying to get us all excited by referring to two nations. Well, the only response that comes to my mind is this: There must be something different in this country because next Friday, June 24, the House will not sit to mark St. John the Baptist Day. Parliament will not be sitting. A week later Parliament will not be sitting either to commemorate Canada Day. I do not know what to make of all this. I often put that question to former Canadian Prime Ministers when they made speeches on the occation of the national holiday—one should not say "national" because it may be dangerous—on the occasion of the patron holiday, but that expression is badly outdated.

But there must be something that makes us different in this country, and because of our differences, we need special clauses. Being different does not mean that we are not as good a Canadian man or woman as the others. It cannot be said that my colleagues here are less Canadian because they speak French. That is the special touch that makes us different as Canadians, and to those who claim that the distinct society clause is a colossal mistake, I say: Don't panic. This is only recognizing real facts. That is what my colleague of Laval-des-Rapides said earlier with great eloquence in a courageous speech. You know, my dear colleagues, that is the few of you that are still here, the difficulties the leader of the Liberal party of Canada has had to express the views he considers acceptable. He said: Obviously, it is not perfect, but we will have amendments.

To my colleagues who think we want to draw a red herring across the trail, I say: "No way". What are amendments anyway? A proposed society. Canadians and Quebecers do have the right to know what you would have done in their place. And what would be your proposed society if Canadians and Quebecers decided to trust you at the next election? We say we would try to convince the provinces to move towards Canadianization and a better understanding, that would be our plan. We think the Senate should work this way. We think that, yes, we should accept more provinces, but in this way. We think that the Supreme Court should be . . . That is how you make up a political agenda. That is how you make an action plan. But actually we do have a piece of legislation. We are asked: Do you accept it, yes or no? Well, even though I do not like legislation, in England . . .

[English]

Those in the British parliamentary system do not like constitutions very much. I have learned from the British parliamentary system that they do not see the need to write everything down.

However, it seems to be different in this country. Everyone wants everything written down about what is their right and what is not their right. Each premier took a step. I hear people talk about them being hidden in the night, sitting all night in a dark room to come up with the Meech Lake Accord. It was the termination of a long process, as my colleague, the Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) said. It was discussed.

[Translation]

You must come up with something sooner or later. That's what they came up with. I'm telling you again it is not perfect and I think a lot of my colleagues share this opinion. In the past, I have voted for a lot of things which were not perfect. I remember voting in favor of flawed bills under the former Prime Minister of Canada. And, like they say:

[English]

You hold your nose and vote for the Bill because it is the best there is in the time available.

[Translation]

What I don't understand is the fact that people who call themselves Quebecers, who claim to understand us, are turning around and becoming very nervous when we talk about a "distinct society". After sitting for 25 years here in Parliament, I try to decipher the messages. I know that we, Quebecers, are loved by a lot of people but, as I said before, it is insulting . . . I am convinced many people would love us even more if we were on our knees. But I say no to that! We will be your equals!

I am looking at my colleague who is also my dear friend. He has his pride and so do I. That shared feeling, Madam Speaker, can make for a better Canada where all provinces will be equal.

[English]

I am not inferior to my good friend, Mr. Fennell. I am not his inferior, nor am I his superior. This is a federal House, but we are also attached to various parts of Canada.

• (2220)

We are building slowly, gradually, a new country and some people refuse to accept change. They are afraid of change. I am not. I claim that this country is still the best example we can offer to the rest of the world as a place where people very different can live together. I say to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Ontario (Mr. Fennell) that the Fennells and the Prud'hommes are going down in this country and being replaced more and more by new Canadians from all around the world.

It is our sacred duty—I say it in English and I will say it in French—to explain to these New Canadians what this country is all about, how this country came together, and why it is that French and English are the two official languages. It is not because they are the best languages in the world. Perhaps the Italian language is nicer than English. Perhaps the Spanish language is better than French. But the history of this country was developed in a way that English and French are the two official languages. Because we want to be different from the rest of the world, we believe that people who come here should be part of this country and should be respected and understood because they have a lot to offer in the process of building a new country with a new identity, a new civilization. So we say, yes, we will recognize multiculturalism.

But what does multiculturalism mean? We have to know exactly what it means. I see the Deputy Prime Minister here. His name is Mazankowski. It is not Prudowski. He is a very good Canadian of an origin other than French and English. He is no less Canadian because his name is Mazankowski, but he will accept with me that he is surely no better than me because his name is Mazankowski. So we are equal.

I will terminate this debate and thank you for your graciousness, Madam Speaker, in presiding over a very important debate. We will vote next week. I am not afraid, as some are, because there will always be, all across this land, young Canadians who are better than us. In my district we have new young Québecers who speak excellent French, who speak excellent English and because of the openness of the provincial Government in giving a lot of facilities, some speak excellent Armenian and some speak excellent Greek as well as excellent English and French. This is an enrichment. This is part of the process of building a new Canada and it is part of what we are trying to do tonight. I say to my colleagues, those who are still worried, especially my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), relax, there will always be Canadians who will stand up to defend this country if anybody tries to destroy it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Debate?

ACCESS TO INFORMATION

REQUESTS CONCERNING FORMER AMBASSADOR LUCIEN BOUCHARD—DELAY IN RECEIVING ANSWERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, since I was elected to Parliament in 1984, I have often had the occasion to use the Government's access to information services, and every time, or at least most of the time, I received piles of documents within the prescribed thirty-day period.

However, on May 12 this year, I asked the service for a breakdown of expenses incurred by the former Canadian Ambassador to France and candidate in the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean, Mr. Lucien Bouchard.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, to my great surprise I received a letter advising me it was impossible to provide this information within the prescribed period.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it was just a coincidence that I was denied this information just before the by-election. I am sure that by next Tuesday, the information will be available.

PAROLE

PROPOSED CHANGES TO SYSTEM WELCOMED

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, I have travelled across the country studying parole and sentencing. We have heard from a clear majority of Canadians of their concern about violent criminals not serving enough of their sentences.

I am encouraged by the proposals of the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) that the time all federal inmates must serve before becoming eligible for parole will be increased and the system of earned remission, under which inmates can receive up to one-third of their sentences off for good behaviour, will be replaced.

The time is right, the Solicitor General says, for us to demonstrate our primary concern for public safety and our collective commitment to improving the system with that in mind. I commend the Solicitor General for this initiative. I hope we will see legislation brought forward in this House to ensure that public safety is first and foremost a consideration when looking at parole and sentencing.

HIGHWAYS

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—UPGRADING REQUIRED IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government appears to be considering more spending on highways. Under agreements with each of the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, Transport Canada spent as much as $80 million in 1985-86 to improve the Trans-Canada Highway in each of these provinces. In 1987-88 Transport Canada added agreements with the four western province and spent $75 million on the Trans-Canada and Yellowhead Highways in nine provinces. The National Capital Commission similarly spent $69 million in highway construction in the 1979-87 period, all of it under joint projects with the Province of Québec.

The federal Government is now apparently discussing twinning of the Trans-Canada Highway across Newfoundland, and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has suggested federal assistance to complete the highway from Lac St. Jean to the James Bay power projects.

The people of Northern Ontario experience very little of southern Ontario's prosperity. They want the Trans-Canada Highway significantly upgraded through northern Ontario to encourage economic development in our region. The time has come for the federal Government to stop discriminating against northern Ontario in making agreements with the provinces to support highway improvement.

NATIONAL PARKS

BANFF—CITIZENS' VOTE IN FAVOUR OF SELF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Abraham Lincoln, in a speech in 1854 said: "No man is good enough to govern another man without that other's consent".

For 105 years, ever since Banff National Park was created, the people of Banff have been governed by a "Mayor" who lived in Ottawa 2,000 miles away. However, this week things have changed. The people of Banff voted for self-government and now the Mayor and Council of Banff will govern with the consent of the people and will be accountable to the people.

Self-government for Banff has been one of my objectives ever since I was a elected as their Member of Parliament. I want to thank our past "Mayor", the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), for his positive attitude and help, and a splendid school board, a visionary park warden and staff, the Chamber of Commerce, the Crag and Canyon, the Government of Alberta, and a host of Banff citizens for their tireless and relentless work which culminated in the favourable vote.

Ring out the old! Ring in the new!

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

CONSTRUCTION OF SEWERS—NEED FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I rise again to speak on sewers and submarines. According to the Science Council of Canada, less than 60 per cent of Canadians are served by sewage treatment plants. In Quebec the number falls below 20 per cent, and in Newfoundland to 12.7 per cent.

Often untreated sewage is discharged into our rivers and lakes or pollutes ground water. Every summer, public beaches are closed. For example, in August, 1987, beaches in Toronto were posted as unfit for swimming because of the risk to health posed by polluted waters.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities urges every year that the federal Government pay a share of the $15 billion needed to help municipalities build the necessary sewers. Ottawa refuses. This Government does not believe clean water and sewage treatment are national priorities. Instead, it prefers to build nuclear submarines. What a perverse set of priorities! By contrast, the Liberal Party is committed to pay the federal share in order to provide Canadians with clean drinking water.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

PROMOTION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, one of the three subsidiary agreements on official languages the federal Government has just signed with Saskatchewan concerns education in French.

To ensure that Francophones in Saskatchewan will be able to administer their own schools, the federal Government will provide financing of up to $26 million over a period of ten years.

The same agreement provides that $10 million will be provided over the next five years for a series of measures aimed at developing French educational services and offering Francophones better access to education in French.

The agreement also provides $17 million over a period of five years for establishing a language training institute that will play a major role in promoting French as the other official language.

Mr. Speaker, the agreements that have now been signed are not a panacea, but we must admit this is a very encouraging start, since the agreements concern education, an area vital to the existence of a language community.

Mr. Speaker, this is one more example of how the Progressive Conservative Government honours its commitments to the language minorities of this country!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORTHERN IRELAND—POLICE USE OF PLASTIC BULLETS CONDEMNED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, I recently met with Jim McCabe from Belfast whose innocent young wife was killed when struck by a plastic bullet fired by the police into a street crowd. These alleged non-lethal bullets used by the British Army and the Royal Ulster Constabulary have killed 16 and seriously injured 200 persons in troubled Northern Ireland.

Why has the British Government authorized the random use of these bullets against innocent persons? For those who think that these bullets are small, harmless projectiles, this is not the case. This is a plastic bullet which is fired by a high-powered shotgun, often at point-blank range.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Allmand: It is a large lethal projectile. That is why the relatives of those killed and injured want them banned as a means of crowd control. They have no place in the police tactics of a democratic country.

I would ask Members in this House to approach the British Parliament to stop the use of these plastic bullets as a means of controlling crowds and demonstrations in Northern Ireland.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SEXUAL ORIENTATION—OPPOSITION TO BILL C-212

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to read that on Saturday, June 4, 1988, the delegates attending the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec annual assembly voted overwhelmingly to oppose any plans by the federal Government to recognize sexual orientation in the Canadian Human Rights Act. The Social Concerns Committee presented a resolution to oppose plans by the federal Government to outlaw discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. This resolution passed by a three to one margin.

A federal Private Member's Bill, C-212, which would amend the Canadian Human Rights Act to include sexual orientation as grounds for discrimination, was first read in the House on October 8, 1986. I serve on the Standing Committee of the House of Commons on Human Rights but I would oppose Bill C-212, or any government initiative, to change the Canadian Human Rights Act to recognize sexual orientation.

As Members of the House of Commons we have an awesome responsibility to ensure that we maintain a wholesome, family based society in this great country of ours.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

MASSEY COMBINES—REMUNERATION OF VICTOR RICE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, Members on all sides of this House know that I have been doing my best to get help for the men and women who used to work at Massey Combine Corporation. They lost their jobs, medical benefits, and some pension income when the company went into receivership in March.

There is one former Massey employee that I do not have to worry about. That is Victor Rice, the man who created Massey Combines. He is now the Chairman of Varity Corporation. While he says Varity does not have any obligation to help his old employees, Mr. Rice is paying himself over $1 million in salary, bonuses and benefits.

Do not think that Mr. Rice has not learned anything from the fate of his old employees. He has also negotiated a golden parachute to keep himself from ever losing his salary and benefits if something goes wrong at Varity. Mr. Rice can use this termination agreement to get four times his annual salary, plus a bonus.

Thank God I will never have to stand in this House and plead for help for Mr. Rice. I just wish he would give the same kind of deal to Massey's other 3,000 former employees.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S SIGNING OF AGREEMENTS WITH SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the federal Government has signed four landmark language agreements with the Province of Saskatchewan. These 10-year agreements, totalling some $60 million, are a good example of the Government's commitment to work with the provinces in a productive, co-operative, and progressive way.

• (1415)

The agreements include a commitment to enhance our already well-received French immersion programs in Saskatchewan schools, an excellent opportunity for all young people of our province. The federal contribution will allow for the translation of Saskatchewan's statutes and regulations, and for wider use of French in the courts, as well as assisting implementation of the management of French schools by the fransaskois community.

These agreements allow all people of Saskatchewan access to the language of their choice. I commend the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) for his hard work in securing these agreements, and I thank the province for its co-operation and assistance.

DISARMAMENT

GOVERNMENT URGED TO REJECT ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was at UNSSOD III on Monday and was at great pains to exhort other nations to sign the non-proliferation treaty, and to lecture other countries about the principles and practice of non-proliferation.

One of the concerns that we have on this side of the House is that the Government has eroded its credibility, and Canadian credibility in general, on this issue by proceeding with the decision to purchase nuclear powered submarines. This is a violation of the spirit of the non-proliferation régime and a decision which has caused Canada's credibility to be eroded in this area.

I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Government to be consistent with their own rhetoric, to be consistent with Canadian policy in the past, and reject the proposal to buy nuclear powered submarines.

PROMOTION OF OFFICIAL LANGUAGES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as you know, the Secretary of State, Lucien Bouchard, has just made public the details of an agreement reached between the Government of Canada and the Government of Saskatchewan on the promotion of official languages in this province. It is a master agreement that involves three subsidiary agreements dealing with the courts and the legislature, the promotion of French and education respectively.

Under the first agreement on the use of French in the courts and the legislature, the federal Government is committed to spending up to $3,250,000 over the next 10 years. The second agreement provides for the establishment of an Office of Francophone Affairs and Translation. The Government of Canada has undertaken to spend $300,000 annually over the next five years for this purpose. Finally, under the third agreement, which is meant to give francophones management and control of their schools, the Government plans to spend $26 million over a 10-year period.

Mr. Speaker, I think that with these agreements, Canada has taken another step forward on the road of promoting our linguistic duality, and thus Canadian identity, always in the spirit of national reconciliation that is so important for the unity of our beautiful country.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is very wrong for the Minister of International Trade to continue to mock those Canadians who are genuinely concerned about the inclusion of water in the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States.

The Minister cannot continue to deny the existence of Article 2201 of the deal's Tariff Schedule which states: "Waters, including natural or artificial mineral waters . . . " It does not say only natural waters, or only artificial mineral waters, but all waters. The Minister has repeatedly given a wrong reading of that section to the House and to the country.

Can the Minister explain why he repeatedly gives a false explanation of that section to the country?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, can the Leader of the Opposition explain why he and members of his Party are continually giving a false representation of what the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has to say about water? In fact, he is in the league of McDonalds with the whoppers that he is producing in connection with these water provisions.

May I repeat that the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement does not commit Canada, does not force Canada, does not compel Canada, and does not impel Canada in any way to permit the export of water as a natural resource to the United States of America, or to anyone else. That is the plain state of the facts in connection with the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

• (1420)

The Hon. Leader of the Opposition has a contrary view. In his book of some years ago he says that in the future we might well proceed toward a negotiation using water as one of the positive advantages we have here in Canada. But there is nothing in the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement that commits or compels Canada in any way to sell water in its natural state to the United States. We have adopted a policy that we will not do that and the date of it was November of 1987.

Why this continual effort by the members of the Liberal caucus and the Toronto Star to convince the public that somehow all Canadian water is going to go to the United States of America under this agreement? It's pitiful and it's wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has repeatedly and consciously misstated both my position on water and the Government's position in this trade deal on water.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Remember the book.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I remember the book, and the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Prime Minister will recall when they recited words from my book printed in 1968. We laid that canard to rest before Your Honour about six months ago.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Oh, no you didn't.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Oh, yes we did. I want to say to the Minister for International Trade that a lot of things have happened in the last 20 years. My position against a continental water policy has never changed. In the same 20 years his political position has changed three times between the Liberal and Conservative Parties.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the Minister deny that Canada wanted an exemption from water specifically spelled out in the deal with the United States but caved in at the last minute? Will the Minister explain why Canada failed to get that specific exemption?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the position of the Leader of the Opposition on water, I quote from his document wherein he says:

> And if some day we can agree to the sharing of this continent's water by offering some of our water for export, we might want at that time to insist that if water is to be considered as a continental resource, markets should also be considered on the same basis. We might wish to export water not for money (as we sold power under the Columbia River Treaty), but in return for access to your markets.
> That, as I see it, must be our position.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition went on to say:

> Water will occupy the best minds of our two countries for the next generation.

It occupies the mind of the Leader of the Opposition which is now frozen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that speech was made to the United States Chamber of Commerce in 1967.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister is being selective. I said quite categorically that the "suggestion that the waters of North America should be considered as a 'continental water supply'"—as the United States Chamber of Commerce was then suggesting—"is where we in Canada say: 'Hold on a minute!' We say there is Canadian water, and there is American water (and there is Mexican water), but we do not like the new vocabulary which calls our water 'continental water'".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): As I said some time ago when the Deputy Prime Minister was quoting those same words, keep it up, we still have a few of those books to sell.

REQUEST FOR SPECIFIC REFERENCE IN WORDING OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a very simple proposition for the Minister. Since the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff, Mr. Burney, is apparently still in Washington and is now almost into the thousandth day of negotiations of this agreement with the United States, with the Government allowing us five days of debate after 1,000 days of negotiation, why does Mr. Burney not suggest adding two simple words to the deal: "excluding water"?

That will not make the deal acceptable over-all, but it will clarify that particular point. Why will the Minister not agree to a specific exclusion of water by adding two simple words: "excluding water"?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, first let me set the hon. gentleman's mind at rest. Mr. Derek Burney is upstairs in his office, doubtless watching the screen with one eye to see what kind of nonsense the Leader of the Opposition will come up with next.

To quote the Leader of the Opposition again, he said:

> We in Canada recognize that the United States is our closest neighbour, and we consider you to be a very good neighbour.

That is what he says when he is in the United States, Mr. Speaker. He continued:

> Our relations have always been friendly and we hope they will always remain so. We happen to share most of the North American continent—indeed we are co-tenants, as President Kennedy said to our Parliament in 1961 . . . We are both fortunate in our natural resources . . . There is no reason why we should not continue to make use of these resources to our mutual and individual advantage . . . I am sure that we will be able to resolve the future use of the water of this continent in a spirit of realistic friendship.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More, more!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—SERVICING COSTS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Mr. Lawrence Herman of SNA Canada Limited said that a fleet of 12 French nuclear submarines can be built for $7.5 billion. Mr. Jack Daniel of Vickers Shipbuilding Ltd. said that 10 Trafalgar class British submarines can be built for $8 billion in current dollars. We know this is just the beginning of a major, long-term commitment of billions of dollars for special harbour facilities and maintenance costs, among others, for the lifetime of a nuclear submarine fleet. The costs could run upwards of $25 billion.

Instead of just talking about the cost of construction of the nuclear submarines, will the Minister tell us how much it would cost for the construction of harbour and onshore facilities alone to service the proposed nuclear submarine fleet? Let us get all the costs out on the table.

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to inform the Hon. Member once again that he should take a look at what the practice has been. When we bought CF-18s we did not include the cost of the fuel those planes were going to use. You buy a certain product at the price it is then.

The cost of the 10 or 12 nuclear submarines will be $5 billion. We also set out that the cost of infrastructure, training schools, docks, maintenance facilities, will be $3 billion. That totals $8 billion. We are very satisfied with those figures.

DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, unknown to the Hon. Minister, we had airports for the CF-18s before they were bought but we do not have onshore facilities for nuclear submarines.

The Minister always glosses over the fact that his Government has totally failed to keep its promises of financial support to his Department. That is a fact of life. The Government has not only failed to keep its financial promises to the Department, at the same time it is mortgaging the Department for years to come.

How can the Minister justify a committed, even if not admitted, long-term expenditure on a nuclear submarine fleet when the Government has already cut the third batch of six Canadian frigates, when the Prime Minister has not kept his promise to bring the Canadian Forces to 90,000 personnel within three years of his election, and when the reserve forces are being cut back on training time? By the year 2000, 12 1/2 per cent of Canadians will be senior citizens and more money will be needed for them, and more money will be needed for agri—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: Why is the Government's nuclear submarine program more important than other areas of national defence, or the economy, or the quality of life for so many—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

• (1430)

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that was one of the finest and longest speeches I have ever heard in Question Period. I stopped counting at 12 questions.

If the Hon. Member would like to go out to Halifax to visit our forces out there, he will find that we do have some docks and some training facilities now. Just in case he is interested, we do have harbours. As a matter of fact, we have not built the submarines yet either, but we will have the facilities before that, just like we had airports before we had the CF-18.

BANKS AND BANKING

BANK OF NOVA SCOTIA—FORTY CENTS CHARGE FOR COIN CHANGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. The Minister has recently expressed some concern about bank service charges. Yesterday a small business man who should be close to the heart of the Minister, by the name of Rick Harman, who runs a Go-Go Pizza in Oshawa, received an interesting letter from the Bank of Nova Scotia. The Bank of Nova Scotia is Mr. Harman's next-door neighbour. They share the same building. Mr. Harman happens to have a $500 personal bank account with this branch.

Mr. Harman got a "To Whom It May Concern" letter that said that henceforth he will be charged 40 cents a roll for every bit of change he requests, so that if he wants 50 cents in pennies, he will have to pay 90 cents to get them. This has been applied to every bit of change that this man, who has a bank account with this bank, will acquire. Does the Minister think this is economic justice?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for bringing that example to mind. I would like to pursue it further on behalf of his constituent if he would like. I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that we are coming forward very soon with new legislation and regulations with regard to bank service charges, and I think he will be very pleased with them.

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA—VICE PRESIDENT'S LETTER TO PRIME MINISTER ON COMMITTEE PROPOSALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that the House Finance Committee made recommendations supported by all Members of the House, Members on the government side as well as on this side, and these proposals have been incorporated in a Private Member's Bill standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York—

Scarborough. It certainly has the support of this side of the House.

We have learned that the Vice President of the Royal Bank of Canada has written directly to the Prime Minister, going over the head of the Minister of State for Finance, urging the Government to do nothing about this. Given that, will the Minister give assurances to the House that he will politely tell the Vice President of the Royal Bank to take a hike, and will he give assurances to the House that the proposals being recommended by this committee will get prompt action in the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party knows that reports that are presented to Parliament by Standing Committees are responded to in the normal fashion, and in this case I think there is a 150-day time frame. I am sure the Minister of Finance, as he has indicated on previous occasions, will be responding to it very, very quickly.

I want to congratulate the leadership of and the Members on this side of the House who participated in a such an impressive fashion on the committee, and particularly the Chairman who, I think, has shown good balance and common sense in his leadership in this regard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second part of the question, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is asking that this Private Member's Bill be given serious consideration. There is a parliamentary process that it goes through. I am sure he would not want us to interfere or intervene in any way, but to the extent that it can be brought forth for quick debate, I am sure all Members of the House would want to co-operate in that fashion.

Mr. Broadbent: Whenever a Conservative Member does something good, we are only too happy to praise that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR EXPEDITIOUS PASSAGE OF PRIVATE MEMBER'S BILL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am asking for two assurances. One is that the Minister will reject the request made by the Vice President of the Royal Bank of Canada and say so publicly, and second, will the Minister respond to a proposal I am officially making on behalf of my Party to expedite this Private Member's Bill, to have it introduced quickly in the House of Commons, to have it passed after a couple of speakers from each side, and to ensure it becomes law quickly? Will the Minister give us that assurance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I said, the Minister of Finance will respond in a proper fashion, as is required by the parliamentary rules. With regard to the suggestion by the Leader of the New Democratic Party that we should circumvent the rules, I find that rather strange coming from him. We have had his House Leader saying how wrong it is to circumvent the rules.

Mr. Broadbent: I'm not suggesting you circumvent the rules.

Mr. Mazankowski: The process is in place. We are asking for additional hours and perhaps sitting into July. With that kind of support and co-operation, I am sure we will be able to deal with this very expeditiously.

INTIMIDATION ALLEGED ON PART OF BANK

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance and is about the same issue. The gentleman in question of the Go-Go Pizza, Mr. Rick Harman, received a note that advised him in part that a recent review of business accounts indicates that his company deals with another bank.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: We on this side of the House think that ordinary Canadians being intimidated by banks is an important issue, contrary to the heckling we hear across the way.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, this is the second time in a week that we have heard of this kind of intimidation. Last week a Canadian citizen was charged $2 to change a $20-bill so she could do her laundry at a coin laundry. This time a businessman is being charged 40 cents for a 50-cent roll of coins. When will the Government put its foot down and put an end to this kind of intimidation of ordinary Canadians and small businesses by the chartered banks of Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I have said to the Hon. Member for Oshawa, I would be very glad to help his constituent with regard to this matter. I should also remind the Hon. Member who just asked the question that the Bank Act will be changed with regard to these matters. The regulations will be changed, and that will be coming very, very soon.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ISSUE STATEMENT

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian people want the Government to put its money where its mouth is. Canadians want to know when the Government will order the chartered banks to put an end to this kind of intimidation. There are several other examples of it and all Members of Parliament are being made aware of them.

Again, I ask the Minister if he will immediately state publicly that the Government will not tolerate this kind of intimidation, with the chartered banks trying to punish Canadians and gouge Canadian consumers.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there have been many letters to the Minister of State for Finance, the Minister of Finance, and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, and on each case we mediate on behalf of the constituent. We want to go further than that. We want to formalize the process and make it stronger, and that we are going to do.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a question with the Minister for International Trade who continues to insist that water is a subject for "Laugh-In North" rather than a serious concern of Canadians. Michael Harrt of the Trade Negotiators' Office has said:

—a good legal argument could be made that water would be considered a 'good' under Article 409 of the Free Trade Agreement—

In view of that comment, and in view of the comments of David Rockefeller this morning on Canada AM who said that, under the Trade Accord, Canada could conceivably be forced to export water to the United States—

Mr. McDermid: No, he did not say that. Tell the truth, he did not say that!

Mr. Langdon: —will the Minister stand up and admit that water was part of the negotiating process and that it was given up in the final set of negotiations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see the NDP becoming disciples of David Rockefeller and believing implicitly in anything that David Rockefeller is supposed to have said. What a travesty, Mr. Speaker.

• (1440)

Mr. Broadbent: Are you calling him a liar?

Mr. Crosbie: Might I quote Ambassador Tom Niles who said—

Mr. Broadbent: Your friend.

Mr. Crosbie: The American Ambassador.

An Hon. Member: Quoting the boss again.

Mr. Crosbie: If the NDP can quote Americans, I can bloody well quote Americans.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I quote Ambassador Tom Niles who said: "Water was never, never raised at any point during the negotiations. It is not an appropriate subject". Then I quote Clayton Yeutter, the United States Trade Representative, who was interviewed on CTV Question Period, who said: "It would have to be negotiated between the two countries, so I don't think anybody in Canada should be concerned that our water supplies are now going to be committed to the Americans. Obviously that will not happen except by deliberate decision of the Government of Canada". That is quite accurate. It does not happen under the Canada-U.S. trade agreement, because nothing in the agreement obligates Canada to sell water to the United States. Nothing in the agreement obligates Canada to approve projects for diversion of Canadian waters for export.

Furthermore, on November 5, 1987, the Minister of the Environment—the first real one we have had this century—said that the federal policy prohibits large scale interbasin export of water, but not smaller scale exports—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): What about him?

Mr. Axworthy: Who was the Minister in 1979?

Mr. Crosbie: With the exception of my desk mate, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That is one.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): And Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: And the Speaker, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Never did a Minister deserve more to be cut off. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: We will definitely drink to that, Mr. Speaker.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, this is a serious subject which I think the Minister must take much more seriously than he is. Given the statement by a Canadian official, Michael Harrt of the Trade Negotiator's Office, that a good legal argument could be made that water is a good and therefore subject to the trade agreement, why is the Minister continuing to insist that water is somehow automatically ruled out by this agreement when every point in evidence suggests that it is part of what could be part of the agreement itself?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, surely the question is whether there is anything in the free trade agreement that obligates Canada to sell water to the United States of America. The answer is no, there is not.

With respect to bottled water, some kind of water that goes in a bottle like Perrier water, or bubbly water, or something like that, according to GATT bottled water is a product. We could sell bottled water to the United States if we wished. We could sell thousands of bottles of water if we wanted to sell bottled water to the United States, but there is nothing in the agreement that obligates Canada to divert our natural resource, to do anything with water that we do not want to do.

I know that we could not trust a future Government on the other side, but we have our environmental policy which states that we will not divert water as a natural resource to the United States or anyone else. What could be plainer than that?

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

PROPOSED BRITISH LABELLING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Knowing that the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development have made representations to the British Government with regard to the current legislation being considered that would have a tremendous negative impact on our Canadian fur industry, will the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House and thousands of anxious Canadians involved in the trapping and trading of furs whether he intends to raise the concerns of the fur industry not only with Prime Minister Thatcher but with all the leaders at the Economic Summit next week?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, first may I compliment the Hon. Member for the manner in which he has pursued this very important issue. I can advise him that the Government of Canada has repeatedly and very forcefully expressed its serious reservations and concerns over the negative impact that the initiative of the British Government would have with respect to the labelling regulation respecting furs.

As he has indicated, several representations have indeed taken place. The Prime Minister raised this issue with Prime Minister Thatcher last month. It has been followed up by a letter as a result of the emergency debate that was held here in the House. It will again be raised when Mrs. Thatcher comes to Canada next week. Hopefully she will react positively because she has undertaken to register those concerns with the appropriate authorities. I am hopeful that a satisfactory solution might be reached.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

ALLEGED IRREGULARITY CONCERNING ANNOUNCEMENT OF GRANT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Yesterday, because they were running scared in Lac-Saint-Jean, the Tories took patronage and abuse of public funds to new heights, when the Secretary of State, Mr. Lucien Bouchard, announced a grant of $1.4 million for a job creation centre that had yet to make a formal application to the Minister for a grant. I wish the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion would explain how a grant can be announced when the application hasn't even reached his Department, much less been analysed. This sounds like Quebec under Duplessis when they were ready to dig a river bed so they could promise to build a bridge. What is the Minister trying to do? Isn't he sick and tired of having Lucien Bouchard make ridiculous promises about the space agency and now about the grants his Department will give?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bouchard is running for election. Mr. Bouchard identified a project that he felt was a very valid one and that would create jobs in his riding. Mr. Bouchard indicated his support, and I would like to point out that he did say he was giving his support in principle for a major grant that would help this new projet to create jobs in one of the regions the Opposition Party had neglected for years, thus leading to extremely high unemployment rates. I think he is to be commended.

VERACITY OF CANDIDATE LUCIEN BOUCHARD'S STATEMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): The Minister confirms that no application was sent to his Department and that Lucien Bouchard announced a grant without the Department's authorization. In fact, it is clear this announcement was a pure falsehood. I want to ask the Minister whether the job creation centre in Alma has had an offer of $1.4 million. Yes or no? Did Lucien Bouchard tell the truth or was he just making promises?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we can already say that this non-profit enterprise, and I think it is important to mention this, has been very successful in creating jobs in the region and that with the future help of the Government, it will be able to create even more jobs. It was said from the very outset that the purpose was to create jobs, more and more jobs, and especially in Quebec's disadvantaged regions.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

GOVERNMENT PROCUREMENT POLICY—SASKATCHEWAN AND MANITOBA SHARE OF CONTRACTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. During the years of Liberal Governments, Conservative Members of Parliament particularly from western Canada protested vigorously and quite properly that the procurement policy of the then Government favoured Ontario and Quebec and discriminated against western Canada. Will the Minister explain why, in the last few years for which we have figures from the Government, Saskatchewan with 4 per cent of the population got only one per cent of government procurement, and Manitoba with 4 per cent of the population only got 2.7 per cent of all procurement spending?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I answered precisely the same question in the House just last week. At that time I pointed out that because the West had indeed been ignored for some 20 years by the previous administration there was a lot of catching up to do.

• (1450)

We are very proud of our achievements in the West. We have doubled in the last couple of years the number of contracts that have gone to the West. We have still not gone far enough, and both in consultation with the Minister for Western Diversification and other cabinet colleagues, we are now in a position to be on the verge of making some very important announcements which in fact are going to bring fairness to the West, as is the policy of this Government, to bring equality of opportunity to all regions of Canada.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we are in the fourth year, the last year this Government is going to be in office.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I point out to the Minister that it is not just Manitoba and Saskatchewan I am concerned about. British Columbia, with 14 per cent of the population, received just 4.1 per cent of the contracts. Alberta, with 9.6 per cent of the population, only received 3.7 per cent of the contracts. Western Canada has developed a very diversified economy. When is the Government going to live up to the promises it made when it was in the Opposition?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why did you vote against Western Diversification?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, first, by the comments the Hon. Member is making, it appears to me he is not supporting the initiatives this Government is making in the West—

Mr. Broadbent: Where are they?

Mr. Jelinek: —when he is saying we are not moving in the right direction.

Mr. Broadbent: No, you sure aren't with those results.

Mr. Jelinek: The Leader of the New Democratic Party, of course, only thinks of Oshawa instead of the West and that is why he is saying—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could complete his reply.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, because the Hon. Member in fact repeated his question, I will repeat my answer, and that is that great strides have already been made by this Government in respect to procurement in the West. We have doubled procurement contracts in the West in the last couple of years.

I repeat again that in the very near future the Minister for Western Diversification, other Cabinet Ministers, and myself will be making some very positive announcements that will bring equality of opportunity to the West and to the rest of the Canadian regions.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

SENATE TREATMENT OF BILL C-103

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Can the Minister confirm that some Atlantic Canadian business people are being denied assistance under ACOA because the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency lacks the authority to provide help pending passage of Bill C-103 by the Senate?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly confirm that this is an impediment to the operations of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The Liberal Opposition in this House voted against the Bill and that now has been followed up by obstruction in the Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Crosbie: The Speaker ruled that the Bill could not be split, that this would create two new Bills which would be viewed as originating in the Senate. The Liberal Senators voted to overturn the Speaker's ruling and have done just that. The result is that the spending of an additional $1 billion in Atlantic Canada in the next five years has been hampered, and that the flexibility the agency should have has been reduced—

Some Hon. Members: Speech!

An Hon. Member: Let him finish.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Leonard—Anjou.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

SUPERMAILBOXES—COST OF HOME MAIL DELIVERY—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for Canada Post Corporation. According to the study of the costs of home mail delivery by Canada Post, the increase in total cost for all pickup and delivery services is $1.3 billion and the increase in cost for superbox delivery is only one fifth of that amount. My question is: Why did the Minister mislead the House and Canadians by increasing the cost of superbox mail delivery, which Canadians find unacceptable?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the Hon. Member is referring to.

Mr. Nunziata: Wake up, Harvie!

Mr. Andre: The committee to which the Hon. Member, I believe, belongs, made a recommendation with respect to the cost effectiveness of door-to—door delivery and Canada Post provided a study to the committee that lays out in detail the cost of door-to-door delivery and the cost of extending that service to every door that does not now receive mail in that fashion. The figures are there. I am not sure what else the Hon. Member is referring to.

CORPORATION'S STUDY OF COSTS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the Minister be briefed by Canada Post because those figures released yesterday to the committee do not indicate supermailboxes but all the increases in all the costs of delivery and pick-up service. I want to know from the Minister if the cost of installing and buying supermailboxes is included in the study, because in the corporate plan the cost for the next three years that Canada Post will incur in buying and installing supermailboxes is $145 million. Is the $145 million included in the $1.3 billion?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are capital costs involved in proceeding to make the changes to which the Hon. Member is referring. They are all there in detail in the study. If the Hon. Member wants to re-examine that study, read it over, and then if he has some questions about the specific details, he need only approach me and I would be willing to discuss them with him.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS

ALLEGED PRICE FIXING BY SASKATCHEWAN GAS RETAIL COMPANIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I am sure the Minister is now aware that his officials are conducting a investigation into allegations of price fixing by gas retail companies in Saskatchewan. These allegations were made by the former marketing manager of Turbo Industries in that province. I wonder if the Minister at this time could confirm publicly that such an investigation is now under way. Can he bring us up to date on the status of that investigation? And can he tell the House whether or not he is satisfied that his investigators are having complete access to the documentation they need from the oil industry?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly satisfy the Hon. Member. I have complete confidence in the Competition Bureau and its qualifications, capabilities, and the fact that it will examine the situation and ascertain the true facts. Beyond that I will have to get back to the Hon. Member with the details of the questions he asks.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Ask him about Trailmobile.

Mr. Nystrom: It is surprising the Minister does not know the details of an investigation that is indeed going on into allegations of price fixing by gas retailers in the province.

PROGRESS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I want to know, and I suppose the Minister does not know, if this investigation is confined only to the Province of Saskatchewan. Or is this investigation going on elsewhere in this country? And can the Minister tell us at this time when the investigation is to be completed and assure the House that, once that happens, the results of the investigation will be made public so that all Canadians know what is going on?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in fact there is within the Competition Bureau a special group or team that examines petroleum pricing because accusations of price fixing and so on come up from time to time, not just in Saskatchewan but throughout the country. Because of that, and because of the concern of consumers and the nature of the business, there is almost an ongoing kind of watchdog operation. In terms of the specific details of where they are in this investigation, as I told the Hon. Member in answer to his first question, I will get back to him.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST THAT REGIONS BE DIVIDED INTO URBAN AND RURAL AREAS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

The Minister knows that the qualifying period for unemployment insurance in southeastern New Brunswick has been increased from 10 to 16 weeks, although the unemployment rate in the rural part of this region was 26 per cent in February, March and April. The problem for the rural areas is that the unemployment rate in urban areas is 9.4 per cent.

Would the Minister be prepared to take steps to separate the urban and rural areas for the purposes of unemployment insurance? Would she be prepared to make changes to accommodate the people of the rural region?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there is always the possibility that one can divide areas up smaller and smaller in a way to meet a particular objective to qualify for a particular program. I think the important thing to note about this region of New Brunswick is that unemployment over all has gone down quite considerably. That is why the region does not qualify.

I recognize within that there are differences, but the distances are not large and we cannot just divide up regions block by block and house by house to meet the Hon. Member's objectives.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR JOB CREATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Minister again that the unemployment rate in the rural region is 26 per cent and that it is very difficult to find work for more than 10 weeks.

So, given that the rural unemployment rate is three times as high as the urban rate, is the Minister prepared to share the money from the employment development program in the same proportions? Would it not be fairer to share the job creation funds in this way, i.e. by giving three times as much to the rural regions where the unemployment rate is three times as high?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the difficulty that there is in some of our high unemployment regions. I recognize the unevenness of the difficulty throughout some regions. At this stage I am not considering any changes to the system. I think it has been working well. Even where unemployment is high we have seen it come down quite considerably.

I would be very happy to look into the specifics of the Hon. Member's problem. However, I am not in a position to adjust the program.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain, a single question, please.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS FOR JOB CREATION IN LAC-SAINT-JEAN AREA

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Hamilton Help Centre in my riding cannot get funding for older workers. Nor can the West Kootenay Women's Association which has a program for severely employment disadvantaged women.

How is it that the Minister could miraculously find $1.4 million for the Lac-Saint-Jean area for job creation? Or is this just another way of buying votes for the candidate there?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there are programs available from which all Hon. Members can benefit. All of them can apply for various kinds of grants and various kinds of projects. I think it is a worthy candidate who goes out and says that he is going to fight hard for his region to get one of those projects.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CRIMINAL SENTENCING PROCEDURES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Earlier today the Solicitor General for Canada announced his intention to tighten up the parole system of Canada. Bearing in mind the fact that the Minister of Justice has now had the Archambault sentencing commission report in his hands for over a year, when does the Minister intend to follow the courageous lead of his colleague, the Solicitor General, and introduce changes in criminal sentencing procedures? Soon will not be soon enough.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Hon. Member in saluting my colleague who is bringing forward a draft Bill for discussion purposes in an area of exclusive federal jurisdiction.

The hon. gentleman will know, because I consult with him very often with respect to justice matters, and take his advice very often, that the matter of sentencing is a joint federal-provincial responsibility. The administration of justice is very much involved in this. As a result the Hon. Member will know and applaud the fact that I am taking leadership in arranging full and close discussion with the provinces on this sentencing initiative. I look forward to any suggestions that the Hon. Member may have in this process. They will be listened to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Now that the motion has been passed, is this not the time when I have an opportunity to explain what the nature of the Bill is?

Some Hon. Members: Explain.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member is quite right.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Bill that is about to be introduced is to transfer to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) the responsibility for the operation of the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act. By Order in Council dated May 14, 1971, pursuant to Section 26 of the Act, the Governor in Council delegated certain of its powers under this Act to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the Minister of Transport. This Bill would transfer all of those powers to the Minister of the Environment, a much more appropriate focus for northern environmental protection.

Mr. Riis moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-300, an Act to amend the Excise Act (exemption of home brewed beer).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The New Democratic Party has now forced a vote on three procedural matters which usually go on consent. These tactics have completely wasted the time of the House. We had intended to call the motion to extend the sitting this afternoon, but unfortunately we have been unable to have any debate on that motion.

I would suggest that the wasting of the time of the House is not something in which the Liberal Party is joining. Therefore, I give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the order of the day is called for resuming debate on the motion that is Government Business No. 26 on the Order Paper, and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, perhaps I could seek clarification on the point of order of the Deputy House Leader. Did the Deputy House Leader announce that the Government plans to enforce a closure motion, that it will no longer allow debate on the motion to extend the hours? Once again, are we seeing closure being used by the Government? I am simply seeking clarification to make sure that it is closure we are seeing as opposed to time allocation.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to clarify this for my hon. friend. My hon. friend and his Party, the New Democratic Party, have now moved three deleterious motions and votes which have completely wasted the time of the House. Had we not had these votes, we would be debating the very motion that my friend suggests we are eliminating debate on. If my friend wants to cease and desist on the delaying tactics, we would be glad to debate the motion right now.

• (1700)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, perhaps I could seek some clarification. The Deputy Government House Leader mystifies me. Was it not his Party that shut Parliament down for 16 days?

Mr. Gustafson: We had a good reason.

Mr. Riis: Was it not his Party that did that?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not believe that last intervention is really a point of order. I think the Hon. Member will want to explain his Bill which he has sought leave to introduce.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, the purpose of this Private Members' Bill entitled "An Act to amend the Excise Act (exemption on home-brewed beer)", is to remove antiquated requirements that are now imposed on home brewing of beer under the Excise Act.

The Act now requires that before beginning to brew beer for one's personal use, a person must give notice in writing to a collector of his intention to brew and to provide the collector with a list of equipment to be used.

Current legislation also restricts use of home brewed beer without a licence to a person or his family. Such requirements do not exist for home wine-making. The law does not restrict a person making his own wine from offering it to his guests inside or outside his home.

This Bill would amend the present legislation to bring home brewing of beer into line with the treatment of home wine-making. It is an effort to bring equity to those who make their own wine or make their own beer for their own consumption.

Mr. Riis moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 10, I move:

> That, commencing Thursday, June 16, until Thursday, June 30, the House continue to sit beyond the ordinary hour of daily adjournment and adjourn at 8 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, and at 3.30 p.m. on Fridays.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I would like to ask the Chair to consider the effect the motion before us might have on another motion that is already before the House. The Government moved its disgraceful motion to have the House sit all summer long. I subsequently moved an amendment whose purpose was quite similar to what was proposed by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). I wonder whether the Hon. Member's motion is in order, since its purpose is quite similar to the motion that was already before the House, in the form of an amendment to the Government's motion.

Perhaps the Chair could take the matter raised by the Hon. Member from Kamloops—Shuswap under advisement and consider whether his motion is compatible with the amendment I myself moved, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I would like to join with my hon. colleague and suggest that the motion is out of order since there is presently before the House, and in fact debate has commenced on, a motion which encompasses what my hon. friend is trying to do. I submit that if he wished to make any changes in the times when the House would sit between the passing of the motion and June 30, the proper route would have been an amendment to the motion which was debated earlier this week.

I also want to point out that we have had an afternoon of delay which serves no purpose to either Party or country. I suggest that we get on with the business of the House and proceed to Orders of the Day where we can debate the motion upon which we commenced debate this week. I do not think we serve any purpose by delaying action any longer. We have a busy schedule ahead of us. We are toward the end of the calendar year and we want to complete the business on the Order Paper. We want to debate the abortion motion, we want to debate the free trade Bill. We are prepared to work. We are not prepared to sit much longer and watch the delaying tactics of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I know it is quite unique for the Government Deputy House Leader to follow the Standing Orders, which is all I am trying to do. Standing Order 10 reads:

> On the tenth sitting day preceding June 30 a motion to extend the hours of sitting to a specific hour during the last ten sitting days may be proposed, without notice, by any Member during routing proceedings.

It goes on to provide for two hours of debate and so on. I am simply suggesting that we follow this Standing Order. I know this is at significant variance to the usual approach which the Deputy House Leader takes toward Standing Orders. He continuously wants to either suspend them, set them aside, or ignore them.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion moved by the Hon. Member is indeed similar to other motions that were brought before the House. However, the motion is more restrictive than the Government's motion, on which a decision has yet to be made. Although the motion moved by the Government proposes to suspend Standing Order 10, the House has yet to decide on this matter. As far as the Chair is concerned, the motion is in order, we can proceed and the House will decide.

Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to rise to debate the motion which you have now ruled on to indicate the intention of the New Democratic Party to debate a variety of pieces of legislation which would come before the House of Commons.

Perhaps this would be a useful time to indicate that on many occasions I have made the point that we in the New Democratic Party are quite prepared to debate expeditiously appropriate issues as they come before the House and to pass them expeditiously, to move in a most co-operative way.

I will use as examples two items. Yesterday discussions occurred between the House Leaders of the Government, the Official Opposition, and the New Democratic Party as to whether or not it would be appropriate for us to extend the sittings of the House last night to allow all of those Members who wanted to participate in the Meech Lake Accord debate an opportunity to do so. That required a departure from the usual sitting hours. It required co-operation between the Government, the Liberals, and the New Democratic Party.

I felt that that was an appropriate initiative, that it was an important issue to deal with. There were Members from all Parties available to speak. That willingness resulted in a cooperative decision between the three House Leaders representing the three political Parties to extend the debate into the evening and that was done.

A few days earlier willingness to co-operate was demonstrated when the Government House Leader inquired whether the opposition Parties would be prepared to consider as a package on the same day three different pieces of legislation dealing with native people in order to facilitate the passage of that legislation. As a matter of fact, I believe that one of the Bills was initiated by Chief Jules of the Kamloops Indian Band and was with regard to taxation on Indian lands.

That Bill moved through second reading, report stage, third reading, and Committee of the Whole all in one session. In addition, a number of other Bills were moved through various stages. That again demonstrated the willingness to co-operate on legislation which is obviously in the best interests of the country.

I could go on with a whole set of examples. As a matter of fact, I think the Government House Leader himself was indicating with some pride that in this session of Parliament we have passed more legislation than any session of Parliament in recent history. At the same time government Members say that the Opposition is holding up legislation. You cannot have it both ways, you cannot be passing extraordinary numbers of Bills and at the same time make a case that the Opposition is being obstructive. I want to make it clear that that is not the case.

There are Bills on the Order Paper which the Government has indicated interest in bringing forward and which we believe ought to have some debate and study in committee. They are Bills which we do not necessarily oppose in principle but would like to have improved. For that reason we are anxious to get on with it. However, the Government never brings them forward.

I use as an example the concerns of the disabled with regard to the National Transportation Act. We have been hearing for weeks that the disabled communities of the country want these changes to the National Transportation Act in order to facilitate movement of disabled people. We want to pass this legislation expeditiously and do what we can to co-operate. However, the Government never brings it forward and we cannot, therefore, co-operate. If the Government brought that legislation forward today, I can guarantee that we would pass it in 15 minutes. However, the Government does not bring it forward. It is fixated on the trade deal at the expense of all other legislation.

Today my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), said that if the Government brings forward a Bill such as the Private Member's Bill of the Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) to restrict the banks' ability to introduce service charges in the willy-nilly, comprehensive way in which they are, we will pass it in one hour. That is the kind of co-operation we are prepared to provide on this critical matter.

Let us go through the list. If the Government brings forward a Bill on bank charges tomorrow, it will be passed through all stages by the end of the day. If it brings forward a Bill on the disabled, it will be passed in an hour. We have not seen the legislation on child care so I really cannot indicate to what extent we are prepared to co-operate on that. We have been talking about proposed legislation for nearly four years. When we see the legislation we will certainly be willing to co-operate and move on it.

There is as well the trade Bill, Bill C-130. We as New Democrats feel that that Bill is a sell-out of Canada to the U.S.

• (1750)

I think it was on January 2 when I indicated we were not prepared to co-operate in that sell-out. We were not prepared to co-operate on a Bill that does away with everything we fought for over generations. This is one major piece of legislation we are not going to co-operate on.

I do not know what people are surprised at. We are trying to stall the legislation so the Government will call an election and give the people of Canada an opportunity to indicate how they feel about it. The Government lacks a mandate to proceed with Bill C-130.

Mr. Siddon: We have a mandate to do what we like.

Mr. Riis: Oh, now we hear it. The Minister says they have a mandate to do whatever they like. That is called a dictatorship. It is called a tyranny. It is called totalitarian Government. We will do whatever we want. Forget about Parliament. Forget about the responsibilities and obligations you have to all Members. The Government knows what is right and as the Minister says, it has the right to do whatever it wants.

Mr. Siddon: With a vote of the House.

Mr. Riis: If Members opposite do not like the Standing Orders, what do they do? Tear the pages out and throw them away. Ignore them. Suspend them.

Mr. Fennell: Live up to them and debate the motion.

Mr. Riis: They would rather tear them up than follow them. It is very clear that we are against that initiative, but to prove the point I put forward this motion. We are prepared to start tomorrow.

Mr. Fennell: You're acting like a child.

Mr. Riis: If the Government wants to sit late, that is what we will do. Let us recognize what is taking place. We are saying we are prepared to sit into the evenings to discuss and facilitate passage of legislation dealing with restricting the ability of the banks to impose service charges. If the Government wants to introduce legislation on flow-through shares, we are prepared to co-operate to facilitate its passage.

Mr. Fennell: You are not the Government, stupid.

Mr. Riis: Then there is the matter of pari mutuel betting. There is a whole list of legislation but the Government refuses to bring forward that on which we say we will co-operate. We will pass it in one hour, two hours or half a day. Yet every day the Government says it wants to bring in the trade legislation and jam it through the House. We refuse to do that. We are not interested in supporting the Government's initiative on the trade deal with the U.S. for a whole set of reasons.

Ms. McDonald: Explain the reasons.

Mr. Riis: Perhaps I will explain two or three just so it is clear to Hon. Members. Bill C-130 provides for the diverting of Canadian rivers to the U.S. That is the selling off of Canada's waterways.

Mr. Taylor: All you are doing is wasting time. Keep on going.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member is puzzled that I am wasting time. I told the Government House Leader we will not co-operate on the trade deal. Bring in good legislation and we will co-operate like you have never seen before.

Let me go on about what I think seems to have touched a nerve across the way. I do not understand it. We are saying extend the hours for debate.

Mr. Fennell: That is what we are saying.

Mr. Lewis: We will do it our way.

Mr. Riis: Extend the hours to six o'clock, seven o'clock or eight o'clock, Monday nights, Tuesday nights, Wednesday nights, Thursday nights. I do not understand why people are yelling at me. We are trying to do what the Government has suggested it wishes to do. We are trying to facilitate the process.

Mr. Taylor: You are trying to hold everything up.

Mr. Riis: I have to take exception to that. If the Government brings in legislation for the disabled, we will pass it in one day. If it brings in legislation to restrict the banks in imposing service charges, we will pass it in one day.

Mr. Fennell: You do not run the show.

Mr. Riis: I could go on and identify all the Bills presently on the Order Paper that we are prepared to move on quickly and co-operatively. There are other Bills like the refugee Bill or the immigration Bill, I suppose, that we were called back last August to deal with. That was the emergency last August. It is now almost a year later and we still have not passed it. It is still being debated in the House. I have yet to hear a single expert who understands the issue and who supports the Bill. Not a single witness. Yet the Government wants to jam it through Parliament.

In spite of what the Minister said, the Government cannot do whatever it wants to. We have a Parliament. The rights and obligations and responsibilities of the Opposition are clearly laid out, but unfortunately they are laid out in the Standing Orders. The Government has indicated its interest in throwing out the Standing Orders or suspending them if it deems that to be in the Government's best interests. We reject that. We have developed the Standing Orders over decades through unanimous consent. Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats and other political Parties as well as independents have co-operatively and unanimously agreed on the Standing Orders. We feel Canadians want that kind of tradition and they do not want a Government which throws it out.

I remember when the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor), who is speaking over there, stormed the Chair. He was part of the group in 1982 who stormed the Speaker's chair and disrupted the House of Commons of Canada for 16 days.

Mr. Taylor: Who did?

Mr. Riis: Muzzled it. You did.

Mr. Taylor: I did not. That is a lie.

Mr. Riis: All right, Madam Speaker, I will take it back. Perhaps he was absent, but the rest of his colleagues were there that day.

Mr. Taylor: You can sit down now, you have wasted the time. Shirley Carr will love you.

Mr. Lewis: Point of order, Madam Speaker. It is now six o'clock. I note the motion made by my hon. friend under Standing Order 10(1) does not provide for debate to be extended beyond six o'clock. I would suggest that if the Standing Order had meant that, it would be stated in the Standing Order. Therefore, I would submit that the House should be adjourned at this time and that the motion should then take its normal course on the government Order Paper.

• (1800)

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my hon. friend's interest in this debate. I would remind the Hon. Member that Standing Order 10(2) reads:

> Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

The word used is "shall", not "if", not "maybe". It seems to me that the Standing Order once again is perfectly clear. We could have a two hour debate if that were to be of interest, but at the end of whatever debate takes place, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the motion that has been put forward.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I would like to offer my contribution, very humbly, to this debate in the spirit of wanting to follow the rules of the House. I would read to the House the Standing Order we use every day for the daily adjournment, and that is Standing Order No. 9(1) which reads:

> At 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, and at 3.00 o'clock p.m. on Fridays, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

We are presently in Routine Proceedings, debating a motion under Standing Order 10(1) for the extension of sitting hours on the tenth sitting day preceding June 30. I submit that nothing in Standing Order 10(1) says anything about notwithstanding Standing Order 9(1). Therefore, Standing Order 9(1) supersedes, in my view, any other Standing Order unless explicitly stated. I would like to have the co-operation of the House in working within those rules. I agree with the member of the NDP who says we should be working within the rules, and I submit that you have no alternative, Madam Speaker, but to adjourn the House at this time.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, on the same point of order, before you make your ruling and as a result of the intervention of my friend from Ottawa—Vanier, I would draw your attention to Standing Order 9(3) which reads:

> When it is provided in any Standing or Special Order of this House that any business specified by such Order shall be continued, forthwith disposed of, or concluded in any sitting, the House shall not be adjourned before such proceedings have been completed except pursuant to a motion to adjourn proposed by a Minister of the Crown.

I submit that this particular motion should be disposed of before the House adjourns.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to a specific Standing Order, 10(2), because that is really the one that has to be interpreted. It reads:

> (2) Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion.

I think that we should take "after the commencement of proceedings" to mean two hours of actual debate. That is what it means. It means that the debate cannot take more than two hours. It does not mean that the debate cannot be interrupted by a lunch break or the normal adjournment of the House, like this evening, and be continued the next morning. What it means is that when Members have debated this question for a period of not more than two hours, the Chair has no choice.

The Speaker who is in the Chair must then rise, interrupt the proceedings and put every question necessary to dispose of the motion. I therefore maintain that since it is now after six o'clock—to continue along the same lines as my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier—the normal time for adjournment, the Chair should adjourn the House and continue tomorrow, in the first hour of the sitting, the debate on the motion very properly moved by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap. In this way, Members will have their right to debate the motion for a full two hours, the Chair will comply with the Standing Order by putting every question necessary to dispose of the motion before the House and the Chair will also comply with another Standing Order, namely that at six o'clock on a day like today, we call it quits.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I want to thank all Hon. Members. Their comments have been quite helpful. While listening to Hon. Members, I was also re-reading Standing Order 117. It seems to me that all other motions moved under Routine Proceedings including one under Standing Order 117 relating to time allocation are subject to the interruption of the hour of adjournment. The Standing Order reads in part:

> Not more than two hours after the commencement of proceedings thereon, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the said motion. Any proceedings interrupted pursuant to this Standing Order shall be deemed adjourned.

Considering this, I do not feel that the motion would overrule the normal Standing Order for the time of adjournment. Hence, I know it will be my duty to adjourn the House.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have a statement which I think should be read to the House. I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal (Mr. Corbett) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour for Private Members' Business on Thursday, June 16, 1988. It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 39. Accordingly, I am directing the Table Officers to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Since notice will be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be cancelled and, pursuant to Standing Order 39, the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

It being after six o'clock p.m., the House stands adjourned—

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It may very well be that the Hon. Member cannot be here Thursday, but it seems to me that we passed a House order, in view of the visit of the Chancellor of West Germany, that the business of Thursday would be treated the same as the business of Wednesday. Therefore, there would be no Private Members' hour tomorrow. I think it should be communicated to the Hon. Member that if he wants to be here Friday, he would still be in order and could take his normal position of precedence. I do not want the private Member to lose his right to move his Bill simply because he did not realize that we had made that change in Thursday's business.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Returning to Votes and Proceedings, the special order provided for Private Members' Business to be taken up between five o'clock and six o'clock, which is why we had to make that announcement and make the proper arrangements.

It being after six o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock, pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 2, 1988.

The House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Government has exempted lumber, unprocessed fish, and beer from the trade deal with the United States, but not water. Despite claims to the contrary by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), it is obvious that the trade deal does not explicitly prohibit the sale of water to the United States. Therefore, we do not know what the future might hold with respect to water diversions and export.

By not exempting water from the trade deal, the Government has left the door open for the United States to seek Canadian water in decades to come. If the Government will not amend the proposed legislation so as to exclude water from the trade deal, the consequences could be enormous.

The Government should include water in the proposed trade legislation so that Canadian water stays in Canada for present and future generations of Canadians

THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Over the past few days, Mr. Speaker, the business of the House has been perturbed by the Liberal-socialist tandem of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Futile and costly war of words and procedural wrangles! The Opposition has both the duty and the right to oppose the principle of our policies.

Why not debate basic issues? We would welcome that with professionalism. We are open to any legitimate representation concerning any issue on the Order Paper of the House, including the matter of free trade, among others.

I thank The Gazette's columnist William Johnson for his June 15, 1988 article from which I drew inspiration for my statement.

YOUTH

"THEY HAVE REACHED THE SUMMIT" COMPETITION—SCARCITY OF FEMALE WINNERS DEPLORED

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Earlier this week, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Youth announced the winners of the "They have reached the Summit" competition. Fifteen out of 1,000 young Canadian men and women were chosen to attend the Economic Summit in Toronto this weekend.

This kind of competition seems to offer a unique opportunity to young Canadians. However the distressing fact is that only three of the fifteen winners are women. Whenever this Government has an opportunity to offer young people a challenging experience it continues to perpetuate a sexist system which invariably bars women from institutions where political and economic decisions are made. It is very discouraging to find out that even today young Canadian women have no guarantee they will have equal representation and participation in our country's major events.

I want to extend my congratulations to the competition winners, particularly to the three young women. The name of the competition—"They have reached the Summit"—was quite appropriate, even though so few women did reach the top.

CANADIAN RADIO-TELEVISION AND TELECOMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION

BELL CANADA EXTENDED AREA SERVICE—DELAY IN ANNOUNCING DECISION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I was disappointed to learn that the CRTC has once again delayed the announcement of its decision concerning extended area service of Bell Canada.

The residents of the northern part of the new riding of Markham with telephone exchanges 727 and 841 are only able to make local calls to Oak Ridges, Aurora, and Newmarket, whereas many calls must be made regularly to the greater Metro area. Residents such as Roy Graham have been fighting to get this changed.

I now live in the Gormley area. We have an 841 exchange. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is inconvenient and costly for residents to make calls to the greater Metro area. Almost all the calls are to the south, not to the west and north. This patchwork quilt of rates is particularly costly to small businesses with clients across the York region.

I would urge the CRTC to examine its criteria in order to apply the extended area service to our community and to many others across the province.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

POSITION OF LIBERAL PARTY

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise to protest the decision of the Liberal Party to frustrate the operations of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. The result of this decision is that projects that might be eligible for assistance cannot be funded. This in turn means lost opportunities for Atlantic Canadians, lost jobs, and lost investment.

Atlantic Canadians support the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. They know it is a big improvement over the past Liberal strategies of economic development.

It is time for Liberal Members to stand up for the interests of Atlantic Canadians. To date, their performance has been shameful.

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I take the opportunity to report on the situation in Lac-Saint-Jean.

As you know, the Prime Minister appointed Lucien Bouchard thinking that he could walk on the waters of Lake Saint-Jean. But we have seen, over the past few weeks, that he is having trouble keeping his head above water. He now finds himself in such a bind that he can only rely on support from outside the riding. The fact is that he has little support inside the riding, which explains the obvious contradictions on the part of the government, the panic that has overtaken its ranks. Conservative members know that the government will never be able to invest as much in their own ridings.

The Hon. Member from Chambly, for example, knows that he will not get millions of dollars to buy votes, like Lucien Bouchard in Lac-Saint-Jean. Even the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion had to be bulldozed into agreeing to some grants where there was no program.

Mr. Speaker, I think this is an abuse of public funds. Never has so much money been spent in an effort to buy votes. But the government can be assured of one thing: the people of Lac-Saint-Jean will not be fooled by Conservative promises. And the sad thing is that we now see that Lucien Bouchard has obviously been to the same school as the Prime Minister because he tends to forget the truth.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO MINISTER'S COMMENTS IN REPLYING TO QUESTION ON RAPE

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Ontario Legislature when asked about a report on rape the Ontario Minister responsible for women's issues responded by saying that the Blue Jays were leading the Cleveland Indians 9 to 1. Liberal Members applauded.

Then when a Progressive Conservative Member of the Legislature said that he was shocked to hear the ball score when the question dealt with rape, the Minister put him down by saying he didn't know what the Member had against baseball.

If that exchange had occurred in this House, one can imagine the reaction of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), and rightly so.

HEALTH

LEVEL OF LEAD IN GASOLINE—QUICKER REDUCTION SOUGHT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a group called the Canadian Coalition for Lead-Free Gasoline presented a brief to the federal Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan).

In the brief the Coalition outlined the dangers, especially to young children, of lead poisoning. The Coalition presented evidence that even very small levels of lead in the bloodstream can hurt children, and have terrible effects such as low birth weight and hearing loss. Fifty-two per cent of children aged six and under have an unacceptably high level of lead in their blood. That is half a million Canadian children.

To combat this problem, the Coalition has asked the Government to reduce the level of lead in gasoline sooner than the Government's plan to reduce levels in 1992. Why should the Conservative Government drag its feet when the health of Canadian children is at stake?

The Minister of the Environment expressed a concern for the industries, saying that the Government would have to ask the industries if they could meet this target for reducing lead at an earlier date.

It is time this Conservative Government got the lead out, and told the industries to do the same.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

ASSISTANCE FOR SMALL AND MEDIUM SIZED BUSINESSES

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, as of June 3, the Western Diversification Office had provided funds for 382 projects across western Canada. These announcements have amounted to $305 million being injected into western Canada. It is important to realize that the vast majority of the projects funded are for small and medium-sized companies. These are the companies which create most of the jobs and are the driving force in diversifying the prairie economy. These companies have the entrepreneurs who bring new ideas and skills to both rural and urban areas.

An example of the impact that ingenuity and government support is having can be found in Saskatoon East. A Saskatoon engineer's unique mining conveyor system will become a reality with the help of western diversification funds. As a result of this co-operation up to 1,000 new jobs could be created in businesses over the next three to four years. This is an example of how individuals can build innovative and highly competitive industries while providing growth and development in Saskatchewan.

The western diversification initiative is beginning to enhance the development of a broadly based western economy. It is promising a brighter future for the west.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

RELOCATION FROM VANIER TO OTTAWA

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) went along with the suggestion of the Economic Council of Canada to move from downtown Vanier to downtown Ottawa. Big business, Mr. Speaker! It will cost one million dollars to move the offices of the Economic Council for purely egocentric and snobbish reasons. This move is totally unjustified. Today, we have at our disposal the telephone, facsimile and messengers, so, if they only wanted to be closer to Members of Parliament and senators, Mrs. Maxwell and her staff should come here on the Hill to meet us from time to time. May be then, we could know them better. And what do they have against Vanier, Mr. Speaker? Nothing!

VETERANS AFFAIRS

VETERANS INDEPENDENCE PROGRAM—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ADDITIONAL FUNDING

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, we are indeed fortunate in this country in having an outstanding Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). His understanding and compassion for this country's veterans, and his persuasive abilities with his cabinet colleagues, have resulted in unprecedented new initiatives to recognize and assist those men and women who have served Canada so well.

For example, at the Dominion Convention of the Royal Canadian Legion this week, the Minister announced that an additional $200 million has been approved by the Government in order that those veterans who served at least one year during wartime in Canada will be eligible for the Veterans Independence Program.

This will more than double the number of veterans who will be potentially eligible for the Veterans Independence Program which ensures that veterans receive assistance to help them remain independent in their own homes. He also announced that the Government has agreed to provide more chronic care facilities in order that, when needed by veterans, the beds will be available.

It is these efforts by this Government which are ensuring that our veterans face their future with dignity and security.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO MINISTER'S COMMENTS IN REPLYING TO QUESTION ON RAPE

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise to condemn the disgraceful and utterly reprehensible comments made by Ontario's Minister responsible for women's issues in the provincial Legislature yesterday.

In response to a question by an opposition Member concerning rape, the Minister had this to say: "I thought I might take the opportunity to advise my colleagues in the House that, as we debate these matters, at Exhibition Stadium the Blue Jays are trouncing the Cleveland Indians nine to one, and Stieb is pitching a one-hitter".

It is reported that Liberal Members of the Legislature applauded.

The Minister's levity betrays a profound and distressing insensitivity to the issue of rape. Each year thousands of Canadian women are the victims of sexual assault, a violent crime that should not and must not be trivialized.

Mr. Sorbara, Minister responsible for women's issues in the Ontario Government, owes the women of Canada an apology, and I call on the Premier of Ontario and the Liberal Party of Canada publicly to disavow this Minister's comments and attitude.

HUMAN RIGHTS

RUMANIA—TREATMENT OF HUNGARIAN MINORITY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, the Hungarian minority in Rumania is faced with an ever increasing level of discriminatory policies aimed at forced assimilation. Over two million Hungarians in this region have been subject to deprivation of their language, culture, religion, and historical traditions.

They have been subjected to compulsory resettlement, and recent reports indicated that entire Hungarian villages in Rumania are being demolished. The Ceausescu regime has found in the Hungarian minority a scapegoat for Rumania's disastrous socio-economic conditions.

The racist policies of the Ceausescu regime toward the Hungarian minority in Rumania are outrageous.

I call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Government of Canada to issue the strongest possible protest to Rumanian authorities, and to use every means at their disposal to press for the establishment of fundamental human rights for Hungarians in Rumania.

INDUSTRY

LOSS OF JOBS OF MASSEY WORKERS IN BRANTFORD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, instead of trying to buy his way into a by-election which he will never be able to save, I wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would start concentrating on some of the problems across the country.

I refer to a question raised yesterday in a telex that was sent to the Right Hon. Prime Minister with respect to the loss of hundreds of jobs of Massey workers in Brantford. There is an opportunity with an immediate meeting between the Prime Minister, Peat Marwick, the provincial Government as well as union workers, to try to save the bid of the Park Corporation. If that does not happen, we will see in Brantford what we saw in Hamilton. The picking apart of a company piece by piece that we saw at Firestone is on the verge of happening in Brantford.

There is a Minister and Government who are too busy—

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—ROLE OF CANADIAN TRADE COMMISSIONERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. I have a copy of a memo from the Department of External Affairs outlining the Government's massive propaganda sale of the Canada-U.S. trade deal.

The Prime Minister has stated, as has the Minister, that this trade deal will be part of the next election. We also know that the legislation has not passed Parliament and that there is a very divisive debate across the country.

Yet the memo clearly outlines that not only will the Government be spending millions of dollars, it will now be requiring public servants, including all the trade commissioners presently in the United States, to be flown to Canada at taxpayers' expense to team up with Conservative Members of Parliament to attend meetings across the country to sell the trade deal as part of that election platform.

How can the Minister possibly justify not only the outrageous waste of taxpayers' money but an attempt to force public servants to appear for blatant election political purposes? Does he not clearly consider this to be a destruction of the independence of the Canadian Public Service?

• (1420)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, apparently the Hon. Member has never heard of the fact that Canada has an export promotion program and we have been spending tens and tens and tens of millions of dollars in Canada for many years now to promote our exports. Since just about 80 per cent of our exports go to the United States of America, much of that money is spent on promoting exports to the United States of America, which is what we are doing in our campaign which will start next week with a series of 17 seminars across Canada. We will invite Canadian businessmen to them and the theme of these seminars is how they can increase their exports to take advantage of the opportunities of the free trade agreement.

Is there any point in negotiating a free trade agreement which starts next January 1 unless we encourage Canadian businesses, large and small, to take advantage of it, to see where the opportunities are and to follow up on them? We have had studies done now of 30 industrial sectors in which Canadians can increase exports to the United States, and we are spending the money on that purpose. It has nothing to do with the promotion of the free trade agreement, but it does show how valuable the free trade agreement is to Canada and Canadians.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the Minister that the trade deal is by no means a fait accompli. It has not been passed by Parliament yet, and he better not count his chickens until they hatch.

WARNING ISSUED TO PUBLIC SERVANT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question about the contrast. Three weeks ago, a public servant who works for Customs and Excise, Mr. Mike Clough, was give a written warning from the Government that he would face disciplinary action if he attended a meeting to debate the trade issue in opposition to the Canada-U.S. trade deal. He is still under investigation and hearing on disciplinary action dealing with that trade proposal.

How can the Government on the one hand justify gagging certain public servants who oppose this agreement while on the other hand it forces other public servants to go in attendance with Conservative Members of Parliament to sell the deal? Why the double standard? Why are public servants only given the right to speak on this crucial issue when they support the Government's message?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have trade promotion experts in the Government of Canada and we have trade commissioners stationed in the United States to help Canada's businessmen increase their sales to the United States. That is their job. When we ask them to come to explain to Canadian businessmen how their opportunities will be improved under a free trade agreement, that is a proper and legitimate expenditure of the Government of Canada and a proper and legitimate request to make of them. That is their job and they do it well.

I might point out as well that 43 per cent of all Liberals, by the way, believe that Canada and Canadians will be better off under the free trade agreement.

Ms. Copps: Call an election, issue the writ.

Mr. Crosbie: Thirty-six per cent of all supporters of the NDP believe the same thing. This agreement has tremendous support in all Parties in Canada, apart from the scattered few who are trying to obstruct the House of Commons in an undemocratic and dictatorial fashion.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in order to avoid the Minister having another cardiac arrest, as he just had, perhaps I would suggest that if he really wants to test that proposition he should call an election. We will see where the public opinion lies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: That is the real public opinion poll.

AWARD OF GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in this memo it says the Government has given contracts to five firms, untendered, unbidden, uncompetitive contracts, all of which companies have made major contributions to the Conservative Party or have very clear connections to the Conservative Party by way of appointments.

Considering that the $10 million the Minister is spending seems not only an attempt to dupe the Canadian people as to what a bad deal this really is, but is also being designed to provide major assistance to friends of the Conservative Party, how does the Minister justify using taxpayers' money simply to support his friends and prepare himself for the next election campaign?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, call an election? I would be only too pleased to call an election, but I am not in a position to do so. I am not the Prime Minister. He has not delegated to me that authority or I would have an election that would make your ears spin, I will tell you that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1425)

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, this effort to advise Canadians as to how they can best take advantage of the free trade agreement starts in Saskatoon on June 21 then in Vancouver on the 22, Edmonton on the 23, Winnipeg on the 24, London-St. Catharines on the 27, Montreal, Toronto and eastern Sherbrooke on the 28, Toronto and western Québec on the 29, Kitchener and Chicoutimi on the 30th, Charlottetown on July 1, Halifax on July 5, St. John's on July 6, and Saint John, July 7. Members opposite are invited to come to those meetings.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Shefford.

Mr. Crosbie: Thanks for the chance to advertise.

Ms. Copps: Stay out of Hamilton, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The only thing wrong with Hamilton is there are too many Copps.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

APPROVAL OF GRANT TO ALMA INDUSTRIAL INCUBATION CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, my question is for his sidekick. Yesterday in this Chamber, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion told us that the grant of $1.4 million to the Industrial Incubation Centre in Alma was promised only by the Secretary of State. After leaving his seat, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion was bulldozed into changing his mind and said on his way out that he had just approved a $1.4 million grant to the Industrial Incubation Centre in Alma. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know under what program the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion approved a $1.4 million grant to the Industrial Incubation Centre in Alma.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): What I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, is why the Liberal Party is against an incubation centre in Alma. Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, some 18 000 new jobs have been created in the Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean region, in contrast to the 17,000 jobs lost when Gimaïel represented that riding. The residents of that region have asked the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion for financial aid, for a development tool and, under vote 10 "Departmental Contributions", the Minister had full authority to grant to the Business Creation Centre in Alma the amount he mentioned.

CHOICE OF CITY OF ALMA FOR INCUBATION CENTRE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that no program exists and that even the official responsible for this area in his Department, Lise Moras, in Montreal, said, "We will have to set up one to keep the Minister's promise."

Some Hon. Members: That's right!

Mr. Lapierre: This is what I want to know: How come they could give Alma an immediate answer, whereas the Grand'Mère incubation centre has been waiting two years for a reply and other incubation centres have applied to DRIE. They have been refused until there is a national policy on this. Can the Minister explain to me why all the incubation centres in Canada have been refused, except Alma? Does he think this is proper administration of public funds or is it not just blatant patronage?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, when I see a Liberal get indignant about patronage—we have no lessons to learn from the Liberal Party, none at all! Mr. Speaker, when he says that there is no other incubation project in the country, the Hon. Member is misinformed. Let him do his homework, because there are some in other parts of the country.

As for the other question, why Alma? It is quite simple! The Minister was presented with a project. We are the Government that supports small business. We have created jobs throughout the country, and the Alma project was brought to the Minister's attention. He decided to approve it and he had full authority to do so. The Hon. Member probably does not remember, because he was not in Cabinet long enough, but there is a mechanism within the Department for the Minister to make such a decision, which is what he did. If you are against it, too bad for you!

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Leader.

Mr. Nystrom: I am sure you noticed that during the last few weeks both the Minister and his pet poodle, the Parliamentary Secretary, have been saying in this House that water was not part of the negotiation of the free trade agreement.

Mr. Masse: We want the Leader.

• (1430)

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you have noticed that both the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister have said that a water exemption was not part of the negotiations of the trade deal. The Minister is now, of course, trying to pretend that water is not part of this agreement.

I want to know whether the Minister will finally admit it in the House. Will he finally be open, honest, candid, and frank with the people of Canada and tell us that Canadian officials agreed to give up the water exemption in the free trade deal in order to get an agreement at the eleventh hour? Will he admit that in the House today?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, certainly persistence is a virtue of the hon. gentlemen opposite. It does not matter how many times you explain, how many times you tell them, they still ask the same old question.

Water was never discussed at the bargaining table in connection with the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Ms. Copps: That's false.

Mr. Crosbie: There is nothing in the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement that forces Canada to sell water to anyone or to sell anything to anyone.

I can quote again the two personages whom I quoted yesterday. Ambassador Niles for the United States said: "Water was never, never raised at any point during the negotiations. It is not an appropriate subject". The U.S. Trade Representative, Clayton Yeutter, interviewed on our own Canadian TV program, Question Period, said: "—I don't think anybody in Canada should be concerned that our water supplies are now going to be committed to the Americans. Obviously that will not happen except by deliberate decision of the Government of Canada".

That is the position. It wasn't discussed and the agreement does not affect it. You can harp on water all you like, but that is the position. Water was not a subject of negotiation at the U.S.-Canada free trade discussions. I ask the hon. gentleman who is acting for Shirley Carr to bring that message back to her.

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO CANADIAN OFFICIAL

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, if water was never discussed I want the Minister to explain why Mr. Frank Quinn, a senior federal government official on water, told the Associated Press recently that Canada wanted water exempted from the trade deal but abandoned the demand in final compromises with United States negotiators. He said: "In the eleventh hour, we didn't get all the changes we wanted".

Can he explain this statement from a senior Canadian water official, and also a statement of a former official of the former Minister who said recently: "I am surprised that the water exemption is not there".

Some Hon. Members: Name him.

Mr. Nystrom: Can the Minister get up in the House today and admit that Derek Burney or other senior officials of the Canadian Government agreed to allow the water exemption to be dropped at the eleventh hour to save the Prime Minister's political neck? Is that not the case?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is easy to see that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not here today or he would not allow this to go forward. The Leader of the Liberal Party wasn't even here this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Where's your Leader?

Some Hon. Members: Where's Brian?

Ms. Copps: You're never even here when you're here.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps the Minister could answer the question for those who are here.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with whatever statement was made by whoever was quoted by the hon. gentleman. I am not familiar with his statement. I am familiar with what I have been told by the people who were involved in the U.S.-Canada trade negotiations, that is, that it was never discussed at the bargaining table.

Our position was made clear by the Minister of the Environment in November of last year when he said: "Our policy prohibits large scale interbasin export of water but not smaller scale exports such as bottled water or shipments by boat container". That is the position, and nothing can force us to sell water to anyone if the Government of the day does not wish to.

It's water, water everywhere, but there's not a drop of water that is affected by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE DRAFTS OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I can send a copy of Frank Quinn's statement across to the Minister. This gentleman is in the Inland Waters Directorate and said that Canada wanted water exempted from the trade deal.

If the Minister is so confident of his position that water was not discussed, will he undertake to table in this House the previous drafts of this agreement so that we can see whether or not water was in one of the original agreements? Will he do that in the House?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations went on for a year or a year and a half, and the hon. gentleman wants us to table here in the House every document that passed between the parties. We are not going to do that. It is not necessary.

Water is not affected by the free trade agreement. This country is just as free to do what it wants with its water, to retain its water, to keep its water, to control its water, today as it was a year ago. While this Government is in office, Canada's water is safe just as all Canadians are safe.

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY—RENOVATION OF ALMA AIRPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the Minister who rose earlier in connection with the grant for Alma's industrial incubator did not answer the question. We still do not know under which program this grant was awarded. Mr. Speaker, Conservative candidate Lucien Bouchard—Mr. Clean—who was expected to give the Conservative Party a virginal image must now be very ill at ease with respect to the methods used by his own Party to prevent his election campaign from backfiring in Lac-Saint-Jean.

Mr. Speaker, I have here another press release dated May 27 concerning the expenditure of close to $1.6 million for repair work at Alma's airport. However, in French the release indicates that work would get under way only in 1990. In English . . .

[English]

"Construction is scheduled to begin in 1991".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether work is scheduled to begin in 1990 or in 1991, or perhaps the date work begins does not matter at all because the only important thing was that the announcement had to be made before next Monday, June 20, the day of the by-election?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to respond to the Hon. Member concerning the airport, but I will enquire and tell him whether it will be in 1990 or in 1991. One thing for sure, you will agree that any repairs to the Alma airport will be a boon to the region.

Liberal Party Members seem to think that we ought to stop government assistance to the regions whenever there is an election. That argument does not hold, it does not make sense. I do not think they would have done that in the past and I fail to see why Lac-Saint-Jean residents should be penalized because of the by-election in their riding.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, you will notice that the Minister doesn't know under what program the job creation centre in Alma was announced. The Minister doesn't know either when work on the airport will be carried out. It is clear that all these announcements were made only to attract votes. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will finally have the decency to stop these million-dollar promises which are being made for only one purpose, and that is to buy votes. What do you think the people of Lac-Saint-Jean are?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party must be afraid of Lac-Saint-Jean. You must be afraid of what is going to happen there. During the last three years, 18,000 jobs were created in Lac-Saint-Jean. Did the Liberal Party ever rise during that time to congratulate the Government or to accuse us of wanting to buy votes? Economic prosperity is coming back to Quebec's resource regions, and the Liberal Party deplores that fact. For sixteen years, Mr. Speaker, when the Liberal Party was in power, Lac-Saint-Jean was left to its own devices. Our Government is taking care of all the regions of this country and of all Quebec's resource regions, including Lac-Saint-Jean, and not because we are having a by-election, because this has been our policy since 1984.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AIR ALMA—FATE OF ENTREPRISE AND ITS SIXTY EMPLOYEES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Regional Industrial Expansion.

While the Prime Minister and his candidate in the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election are announcing regional economic development programs worth $1 billion, and while the Minister of Transport is distributing goodies in this riding, Air Alma may well be obliged to close down tomorrow, as result of competition from Inter Canadien.

What is the Minister going to do to save this local business and its 60 jobs?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, we know there would have been no problem for a socialist government, because it would nationalize everything. There would be no competititon. It would be a government . . .

In this case, the programs are in place. If under the Job Development or Job Strategy Program we can help workers that might be affected . . . This is hypothetical, since I don't have the details. But I am sure there are programs to deal with this.

The Hon. Member also referred to the Regional Development Program. One billion dollars has been announced for this program, with the co-operation of the Government of Quebec. This is an important measure for Quebec's resource regions. I am pleased that the New Democratic Party realizes the value of this program. In the weeks to come, programs will be developed in various areas, and perhaps one of these new programs can be used to provide assistance in this particular case, but so far I don't know.

QUERY WHETHER SITUATION WILL OCCUR IN OTHER REGIONS

M. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister, the mouth-piece of patronage.

In January 1988, when deregulation came into effect, the Conservatives promised us better service at lower cost.

What is going on with Air Alma reflects exactly what we have seen with the Conservatives, the rich are getting richer while the poor are getting poorer.

Can the Minister tell us if what we are seeing in Lac Saint-Jean will happen in other remote areas, like Sept-Îles, and Rouyn-Noranda?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, when I hear those people saying that the "rich are getting richer, while the poor . . . " One thing is sure, in this country, since 1984, far less people are living below the poverty level than before. A lot more people are working than in 1984, when we were elected. And that holds true for every region in this country.

The Government has embarked on a regional development program and has made some considerable changes which have resulted in a healthier economy.

Back home, that means more money to send the children to school, more money for other projects.

So, the rhetoric of the Socialist Party may look terrific in print, but we have seen the results of its application in Manitoba. I don't think Canadians want a piece of it, and that is fine with us. We will continue to implement programs in Quebec and in other regions, just as we have done since 1984, programs which benefit all Canadians.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CROSS-COUNTRY SEMINARS—GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister for International Trade. In order to sell his free trade salad, the Minister has hired no less than six public relations firms to do the cross-Canada trips. That is in addition to the seventh firm, of course, which just happens to be run by his former campaign manager. What selection process was utilized to hire these firms which, by happy coincidence, resulted in the fact that Prime Public Relations Inc. run by Mr. Garry Watton, a well-known Conservative, got the contract in Newfoundland; that Saga Communications Ltd., which contributed $3,000 to the Conservative Party, got the contract for the Maritimes; that Basin, Dumas, Dupré and Sormany, which contributed $3,000, got the contract for Quebec, and so on? What happy coincidence led to this? And can the Minister indicate to this House approximately how much it will cost to reward the few Tories left in this country who have not yet been rewarded?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can quite truly tell the House that I do not know who has been awarded contracts—

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, come on! Your nose is growing longer.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know who has been awarded contracts to assist with the seminars, but whoever has been awarded contracts is the best who could be found at the best price. I have no idea who has contributed to the Conservatives or who contributed to the Liberals.

Mr. Axworthy: The devil made you do it.

Mr. Crosbie: There wouldn't be anybody in the country you could hire if you excluded people who contributed to the Liberals, who were in power for 20 years and made sure that everybody who wanted to do a tap of business in the country with the Government had to contribute to the Liberals. But we are not going to eliminate anyone because of who they contributed to. Even if they contributed to the New Democratic Party, we would still consider their services.

In the meantime, there is someone called Garry Watton who is supposed to be a great Progressive Conservative down in Newfoundland. If so, I am delighted to hear about the man. I am going to welcome him as a new member the next time I see him. I have never met him in my life.

TIMING OF CROSS-COUNTRY CONFERENCES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister said earlier, in answer to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, that this promotion campaign had nothing to do with promoting the free trade agreement, per se. Given that the press release sent by FAX all over the country states:

> The conferences are being arranged in an incredibly short time frame and will call for a maximum of flexibility, goodwill and last minute preparation by our posts in the U.S.A., the regional trade offices—

And so on. Can the Minister tell the House if it is not a fact that the Government wants this program to be done quickly so it can get it over with before the election, so it can use this as political party propaganda designed to promote the Conservative Party and nothing else?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have seen an outline there of the Liberal philosophy and Liberal actions. The hon. gentleman exemplifies them in every word of suspicion he tries to transfer to someone else.

The agreement is going to go into effect on January 1. This is June. There are six months for us to ensure that every Canadian businessman, large and small, is advised of what his opportunities are in the United States.

There are 90 studies being done by the firm of Peat Marwick Mitchell on different sectors and industries in the United States to show how we will have an advantage under this agreement as compared to other countries so that we can sell where we are more competitive, and that is what we are doing.

We have six months to prepare. We would have had longer except for the obstruction on the other side, and the denigration on the other side, and the destructive tactics on the other side. But we are going to have 17 conferences now, and then 17 more, and then 17 more.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

BRITISH FUR LABELLING PROPOSAL—CANADIAN REPRESENTATIONS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. It has now been about two weeks since we had the emergency debate here on the British fur labelling proposal. A number of Members on the government side, as well as from the Opposition, spoke on this matter and expressed their concern.

Given the concerns, given the number of jobs at stake, could the Minister tell the House what specific steps his Government has taken to convey the results of that debate to British parliamentarians and, in general, our concern here?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think I responded to that question yesterday. It was posed by the Hon. Member for Timiskaming. There have indeed been representations made to the Prime Minister of Great Britain by the Prime Minister, and also representations made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Definitely, this issue will be raised during the bilateral discussions that the Prime Minister will have with Prime Minister Thatcher.

I should also indicate that I think there are consultations going on among the House Leaders right at this very moment about the possibility of this House moving a unanimous resolution that would reflect the spirit of the debate that took place a week ago. I hope that the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party would see fit to agree with this resolution so that it can be endorsed unanimously by all Members of the House. I think that that would send a very strong signal.

POSSIBILITY OF RETALIATORY MEASURES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I think that while the strong words that we have heard will be of some comfort to trappers and to the 105,000 members of the fur industry, they will not really address the problem. Strong words without strong actions are meaningless.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell us, in addition to diplomatic expressions of concern, what specific options or retaliatory measures he is proposing to the British Government should it undertake this labelling?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, here again we are hearing some implied suggestions that there should be other actions taken. Perhaps the Hon. Member, if she is serious, would outline what the position of her Party is. The other day we heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party say that rather than defending our oceans, in particular in the north, we should engage in diplomatic rhetoric. It is quite a different position from what the Hon. Member is implying today.

We are taking very strong and vigorous action with regard to the representations that are being made. I call again on the Hon. Member and members of her Party to support the resolution that is being proposed by the Government and, hopefully, supported by the Liberals. I think that the unanimous support of such a resolution by the House of Commons would be the very strong united signal that we need to help in the bargaining process.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—TWELFTH ANNIVERSARY OF SOWETO UPRISING

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Today is the twelfth anniversary of the Soweto uprising when police opened fire on students in South Africa's biggest ghetto.

Will the Minister recognize that there is absolutely no end to repression in South Africa and, in the words of many, it must now be treated as nothing less than a terrorist state? Will the Minister agree to act on South Africa, to match the Prime Minister's rhetoric with the sort of measures that have been proposed by the Leader of the Opposition? Will the Government finally agree to call back permanently Canada's Ambassador and impose full economic sanctions on this terrorist state?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the country knows—certainly the House knows—of the actions that have been taken in the last three or four years by the Government, the Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to put pressure upon and to try to exert influence upon South Africa with respect to its apartheid policy.

I might point out to the hon. gentleman that his Government was in power for eight years out of those twelve, this being the twelfth anniversary of that event. Yet I cannot think of one single action his Government took or anything that it said during that time about the situation in South Africa, certainly nothing comparable to the actions of the last two or three years.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PRESS FOR ECONOMIC BOYCOTT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot take refuge in the past. A succession of events took place, as well as an escalation of violence that has not been accepted anywhere in the world. The commitments that have been made by the Prime Minister are quite clear. He said that if there was no progress he would end diplomatic relations with South Africa. He has been paying only lip-service thus far.

I want to know from the Minister if the Prime Minister is going to use the summit in Toronto to raise the matter, and to impress upon the Prime Minister of Britain and the President of the United States to act in concert and, indeed, to boycott South Africa effectively?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the actions taken by Canada and the leadership that Canada has provided have been amply proved by the recognition accorded to the Secretary of State for External Affairs who was made the Chairman of the Commonwealth Group of Ministers acting in this matter. The Prime Minister's position has been recognized by the leaders of Zimbabwe and the front line States. The record is excellent.

We are now reviewing, and will continue to review, what is happening in South Africa and what our next steps should be, what can be most helpful, and what can be most useful to accomplish our objective which is to encourage South Africa to abolish the apartheid system and to treat its black citizens on an equal basis with all the rest of its citizens, of course the minority of whom are white citizens who have full privileges.

TORONTO ECONOMIC SUMMIT

METRO TORONTO POLICE ACTIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. As he knows, the Prime Minister as the host to the summit conference beginning Sunday has naturally expressed our pride in the Canadian traditions of democracy and free speech. Yet the Metro Toronto police have arrested a dozen students who were protesting peacefully at the University of Toronto overnight against the foreign and economic policies of the summit seven.

They have forbidden a peaceful protest march to use College Street, Yonge Street, King Street and University Street, all of which streets are outside the summit security area. They have forbidden organizers of a permitted rally in Queen's Park to use tables for literature, or chairs, or portable toilets.

My question therefore to the Deputy Prime Minister is this. Will he ask the Prime Minister to use his good offices with the Metro Toronto police so that, according to custom, the Metro police will enable the protesters to carry on a normal, peaceful protest on the streets of Toronto?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that I have kept in touch with security matters for this conference. I receive daily briefings on it. Indeed, I am attending in Toronto tomorrow for a further review. I will certainly be prepared to bring the matter up, and ask them to review the matter for me. But I am certainly not prepared to make any commitments. However, we will look at it.

CITIZEN'S RIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Solicitor General. Will he on behalf of the Prime Minister declare publicly that the people of Toronto are free to exercise their normal right of free and peaceful public protest on the streets of Toronto outside the summit security area?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that the precautions we are taking for this economic summit are commensurate with the risks as perceived by our intelligence. While we have no specific threats at this time in any respect, I said before and I will say again that there is a high level of risk. We must be very careful and make sure that nothing untoward happens which would damage the reputation of Canada, not to say the lives of the people involved.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF BRITISH PENSIONERS LIVING IN CANADA

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Over 50,000 British pensioners live in Canada, and some 6,000 Canadian pensioners are currently residing in Britain. The lack of a social security agreement between our two countries, however, means that their pensions remain frozen at the amount set when persons moved out of their own country. No adjustment is allowed for cost of living increases.

Can the Minister tell the House what, if any, progress has been made to secure a social security agreement between our two countries so that the pensions of these important citizens will begin to reflect the yearly cost of living increases?

• (1500)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, we are very much interested in getting an agreement with the Government of the United Kingdom. There are approximately 76,000 people who would be eligible for it.

I should mention that when the Government came into office we had six such agreements. We now have approximately 18.

I can tell the House that, as early as October 9, 1984, we made contact with the United Kingdom in order that an agreement could be reached. I cannot go through all the details other than to say that in 1986 Canada and Australia joined in an effort to convey to the U.K. Government that an agreement was absolutely necessary, keeping in mind that there is an agreement between the United Kingdom and the United States.

As recently as January of this year when I met with the Right Hon. John Moore I made this case again, and we will do so further.

PAROLE

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION TO IMPROVE SYSTEM

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, before time runs out, I would like to put a question to the Solicitor General. It concerns the announcements he made yesterday regarding parole.

The Solicitor General is trying to hoodwink Canadians into believing that something is being done to address the very serious problems in our criminal justice system. Rather than introducing legislation to deal in a comprehensive fashion with parole and sentencing in Canada, the Solicitor General is announcing proposals that will not affect the over 12,000 inmates who are presently in federal penitentiaries, and will not take effect for four or five years.

If the Solicitor General is truly concerned about the criminal justice system, and if the Conservative Government truly wants to take action, why are we not dealing with legislation rather than mere proposals?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous Government, this Government believes in consultation with the provinces, our provincial colleagues, with the member groups out there who are interested in this, and consultation with the standing committee.

We intend to proceed with that. It is my expectation and hope that following that consultation I will be able to introduce some legislation this summer.

I do not consider that that is an unreasonable period of time.

PENITENTIARY INMATES REQUIRING PSYCHIATRIC ASSESSMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, that is absolute nonsense and the Solicitor General knows it. This Government has been in office for four years and we have not had any meaningful reform to the criminal justice system.

When is the Solicitor General going to address some of the immediate problems in federal penitentiaries? For example, last year in Ontario alone 280 federal inmates were referred for psychiatric assessment. The system was only able to accommodate 118.

If the Solicitor General is truly concerned about public safety, will he today commit the necessary resources in order to ensure that all federal inmates who require psychiatric assessment and treatment will receive that treatment before they are released into society in order to ensure that society is duly protected?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member again, as I did yesterday before the standing committee, that I asked the new Commissioner of Correctional Services of Canada to look into this on an urgent basis.

I wish to reassure the Hon. Member that indeed I am concerned about the safety of Canadians, because presently 60 per cent of the people incarcerated in our system are there for crimes against persons. That is why we are concerned about the safety of Canadians. We are acting to do something about it, which is something the former Government never addressed its mind to.

PENSIONS

PLIGHT OF BRITISH PENSIONERS LIVING IN CANADA

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Given the seriousness of the question raised by the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East and the thousands of British pensioners who are living in Canada on as little as £10 a week, will the Minister personally ensure that when Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher is visiting Ottawa next week that he and his colleagues will urge her to sign an agreement, so that she will show her concern for her countrymen living in this country which they so richly deserve.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I mentioned earlier, we have been working diligently at every level to get an agreement. An agreement with the U.K. Government is absolutely essential, and it should be done. That is why we joined with Australia, for example.

We will again examine what the Hon. Member has stated, and see what other methods we could use, even with direct intervention, if that is possible, in order to see if we can get an agreement.

The Hon. Member is absolutely correct in showing the concern that she has. I just wish the Liberals sometimes would too.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGATION OF SLANDER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege today in relation to the contents of Hansard on June 14, 1988. I draw the attention of the House to pages 16427 and 16428 of Hansard in which you will recall, Sir, that my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) concerning the Department of Public Works.

As recorded in Hansard in reply to the question the Prime Minister stated: "... members of the Opposition in the Liberal Party have been doing is slander Mr. LaSalle and saying that he is guilty without... evidence... " Upon further questioning by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who asked: "Who said that?", Hansard records the Prime Minister as replying: "Boudria", meaning myself.

In Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Citation 320 states that the word "slander" and "slanderous" aimed at an Hon. Member is inappropriate and has been ruled unparliamentary by previous Speakers, namely, on August 8, 1960, as reported at page 7777 of Hansard.

On occasion I will ask questions in the House which are perhaps tough, and I will acknowledge that I do ask questions of the Government, as is, I believe, the role of every Member of the House to do. In asking those questions, I in no way slandered anyone, in my humble belief, and if it is the opinion of Members of the House that I have done so, even if it were true, which it is not, it could not be said in the House of Commons under the rules that this House has set for itself. If any Hon. Member, other than the Prime Minister were to make such a statement, he would be asked to withdraw, as is appropriate.

I would like to submit that no lesser behaviour should be acceptable from the Prime Minister. I now call upon the Speaker to request at the earliest opportunity that the Prime Minister withdraw these unfortunate remarks.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to my hon. friend's point of privilege, the first comment I wish to make is that if, in fact, there had been slander, and I will address that in a minute, it is obviously no point of privilege. But if my hon. friend was so aggrieved, one might note that the Hansard he is referring to is for Tuesday, and it is now Thursday—

Mr. Speaker: I must apologize to Hon. Members. I should have made this clear to the Hon. Minister of State. The matter was brought to me earlier, not today, but yesterday, as soon as Hansard was in the hands of Members. I agreed with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) that it would be heard today. I requested him to put it over until today because I had other obligations later yesterday afternoon.

I apologize to the Minister of State because I did not bring that to his attention, and I should have.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, that is fine. But one would wonder if it might not have been more appropriate to let everyone know in order that this matter could have been dealt with by all concerned.

The most important thing is that while my friend may wish to suggest that the shoe fits and he will wear it, there is no specific reference to my hon. friend. He may want to associate himself with the word "slanderous", and based on past practice I think that would be appropriate—

• (1510)

Mr. Boudria: You cannot even say that.

Mr. Lewis: There is no specific reference. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) named no specific person. He named the entire Liberal Party, which I think is appropriate. He did not name the Hon. Member.

Mr. Gauthier: Turn the page.

Mr. Lewis: That is afterwards.

Mr. Rossi: Even if he is the Prime Minister he is not allowed to use that kind of language here.

Mr. Lewis: Get up and speak to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to put in my grain of salt on this point of order which touches upon the privilege of one of my colleagues, specially since I was present when the events took place, and since I saw with my own eyes the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) make accusations, and given that along with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), as the record will show—the Leader of the Opposition and myself asked the Prime Minister on two occasions who he was referring to.

When the Prime Minister said, and that is also on the record in the official report:

[English]

What the Liberal Party has been doing is: "slander Mr. La Salle and saying that he is guilty without any evidence being brought forward". When we heard this, of course we were not happy because it is not true.

Second, we wanted to make sure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would say exactly what he meant, so our Leader is quoted as saying: "Who said that?" The Prime Minister further continued by saying:

> This has been said by Liberals in the House of Commons, and that is a disgraceful way to do it.

Then the Leader of the Opposition again asked, and I shouted too: "Who said that?" Then the Prime Minister is quoted in Hansard as saying: "Boudria". I know of only one Boudria in the House of Commons and he is sitting right here. He does not have the habit of slandering people.

[Translation]

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that on the very day of the incident I personally checked the videotaped recording of the debate in the House and it is clear, if Your Honour would care to look at the videotape, the electronic Hansard, that from his seat the Prime Minister accused the Hon. Member from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell by name, which by the way is unparliamentary: "Boudria" he said, calling him by his name!

So then, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that for the sake of maintaining order in this House and to ensure that proper respect is shown towards all Hon. Members, Your Honour has no other choice but to ask the Prime Minister to take the first opportunity to withdraw the disgraceful and unparliamentary words he used and to apologize to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I will take the matter under advisement. Again, I apologize not only to the Minister of State but to other Members who may have been caught a little unawares by my bringing this matter. However, I want to make very clear that it was brought this morning rather than earlier, at my request and through the courtesy of the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). I will examine the matter and report back to the House.

I might add that the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is unable to be here at the moment, but I hope that my remarks are extended to him and it may be that he wishes to address the Chair further.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, it being Thursday, I would ask the Deputy Government House Leader if he would be kind enough to let us know what business the Government intends to bring before the House in the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that today we will continue the debate on the motion to extend the sittings. I would hope that the NDP will let us proceed through Routine Proceedings and get to that piece of business. The House will know that yesterday we wasted an entire day without doing any business whatsoever. I would like to think that we can make some progress today.

Tomorrow we will continue debate on the Government's response to the Senate's amendments to Bill C-55, the Immigration Act. I believe there is an understanding among the Parties that debate on all matters with respect to Bill C-55 will be completed tomorrow.

On Monday we will either continue the debate to extend the sittings or commence the free trade debate, Bill C-130.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Government House Leader has indicated the business for the next few days. There was some suggestion that we might, at an early date, get to the legislation amending the National Transportation Act concerning the disabled. There has been some discussion among the critics and the Parties. I thought this was coming quite soon. Could he give us an indication when the Government will move on that?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to indicate to the Member that we have been discussing various items of business with a hope that the House could proceed to do business. Unfortunately, my hon. friend has been introducing Bills and his Party has been calling for votes about whether or not he should be allowed to introduce the Bills. That blew all of yesterday.

If we can get through today and pass a motion to extend the sittings, I give my hon. friend the undertaking that that and other Bills are very high on our list of priorities. I would say to him, however, that in order to do business we have to get through Routine Proceedings. We have to get through those proceedings without dilatory motions and votes.

My hon. friend is the captain of that particular ship, under today's circumstances, the Routine Proceedings being constructed the way they are. If we get through Routine Proceedings today and get this motion passed, we will be on to Business of the House.

Yesterday my hon. friend's Party delayed him from introducing his own Bills. It was rather tragic, because one likes to think that the House Leader of a Party has his Party behind him and will stand with him when he wants to introduce one of his own Private Members' Bills. But that did not happen yesterday. That may very well be the case today.

When my hon. friend has his team with him and can get us through Routine Proceedings, we will proceed to Business of the House.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think there must be some mistake. First, I want to say that my caucus, by definition, is behind me on these matters. I want to make it perfectly clear that if the Deputy Government House Leader wishes to bring forward the Bill that would see amendments to the National Transportation Act to assist the disabled of Canada, we would pass that very quickly, perhaps within minutes. However, when Orders of the Day indicate there is no intention, at least today, of introducing that particular legislation or other good pieces of legislation, then one is less than interested in indicating some co-operation.

I want to indicate clearly that when that appears on the Order Paper he can count on at least one Party in the House moving expeditiously. That will be the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I and my Party do not want to play politics with amendments to the National Transportation Act for the disabled. If the motion to extend the sittings passes before six o'clock tonight, that item of business will be called immediately thereafter and we will need one short speech to introduce it and it will have second reading debate tonight.

Mr. Gagnon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am glad to hear that both gentlemen would like to expedite things, but could you tell us why the clock shows the hour to be 6.15? Is someone trying to expedite matters in the House?

Mr. Speaker: I probably should explain to Hon. Members that once again the clocks have been moving more rapidly than time itself. I wanted to comment earlier that after the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) rose on his question and received his answer, the clock registered that the entire exchange had taken an hour and a half.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, there is a Bill that we in the New Democratic Party are very interested in expediting. I did not hear the Deputy Government House Leader deal with it. It is Bill C-82 dealing with lobbying, which has been promised for three years now. It was promised by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on an urgent basis. We have had first reading of the Bill. We are prepared to expedite that Bill because we believe, with the Prime Minister, that it is an urgent Bill and should be dealt with. I am waiting to find out when Bill C-82 will be brought for second reading.

• (1520)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend inadvertently referred to it as the Bill on lobbying. I believe Bill C-82 is the conflict of interest Bill.

Mr. Riis: Lobbyists.

Mr. Lewis: The Lobbyists Registration Act? That is at report stage. Yes, Bill C-82 is at report stage. It is on a list of Bills that we have agreed are priority Bills. Once we pass the motion to extend the hours and then move past the free trade legislation to the legislation we have agreed is priority legislation, legislation in which a great deal of time has been invested by Members of all Parties, we will debate it. It is on that priority list of legislation.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy House Leader a further question on Business of the House. A few moments ago, when addressing the legislation that will be brought forward for tomorrow's agenda, the Minister mentioned Bill C-55, and I believe he intimated that there was unanimous agreement to the passage of Bill C-55 through all stages. If that is the case, I would ask the Deputy House Leader to clarify the situation, because I know that on our side, there was no consent to do that. It was our understanding that Bill C-55 was being brought forward tomorrow and that Members of Parliament would address it and participate in the debate, but there was no agreement given by the Liberal caucus to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) that we would agree to passage through all stages tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I happen to have my notes still, and the wording I used was, "I believe that there is an understanding among the Parties that the debate will be completed Friday". If that is not the case, then I think I am still covered by my words. If I had had a firm understanding, I would have said that there is a firm understanding, but those are the words I used.

This Bill has been before the House for some time. There was considerable debate on it at second reading stage and considerable time was spent on it in committee. The Senate delayed it for a long, long time. I would hope that my hon. friend would see his way clear to help the Government complete its consideration of the Senate amendments so that this very important legislation could be passed.

Mr. Marchi: In response to my hon. friend's comments, there is no agenda on this side of the House to prolong the debate any longer than is necessary. One of the problems with the way this Bill has been brought forward has been the mad rush in the last number of days to bring upon the House an inordinate number of Bills.

Bill C-55 has had a roller-coaster ride. It has been introduced one day, yanked off the list for the next three or four days, and then put back on the list. I would suggest that a number of Members from all sides would like to address themselves to the Senate amendments to Bill C-55. It is not simply a question of prolonging debate. The fact is that the debate on the Senate amendments to Bill C-55 has not taken a long time.

Tomorrow, if Members of Parliament wish to address themselves to Bill C-55, we would like to give them the opportunity to do so, as opposed simply to saying that there is an understanding that the debate will end tomorrow.

PRIVILEGE

COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN'S RULING RESPECTING WITNESSES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of proceedings in and decisions made by the legislative committee dealing with Bill C-129 this morning. The committee began its consideration of the Bill on Tuesday. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) appeared before the committee and made a presentation. We had an opportunity to question him.

On Tuesday, the Chairman of the committee asked Hon. Members who wished to submit a list of names of possible witnesses who would be invited to appear before the committee to bring that list this morning. I came to the meeting this morning with a relatively short list of witnesses including people representing the unions, the workers of Air Canada, several academics who are expert in the field of transportation and some people from—

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member is a very experienced Member in this place and is expressing a complaint. I do not think the Chair needs to have a long list of all the witnesses he or anyone else would propose, but I would like to know what exactly it is that happened which goes to the question of privilege, which of course is something happening which makes it impossible for the Hon. Member to carry on his duties as a Member of Parliament, keeping in mind that we have a long-standing rule and many judgments indicating that unless it is something extraordinary indeed, the committee is master of its own destiny. Keeping that in mind, I would ask the Hon. Member to focus very carefully on his exact point.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the Chairman ruled, and the committee accepted his decision, that all the witnesses, some suggested by me and some suggested by the Liberal member from Cape Breton, be heard in one day. I suggest that that ruling breaches my privileges, and I have several citations from Beauchesne's which I think confirm my view.

Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, Fifth Edition, says in Citation 77 on page 24 the following:

> Witnesses before committees share the same privilege of freedom of speech as Members.

I would ask you to consider whether the restricting of evidence of those to be called before the committee to one day is not an abridgement of their freedom of speech. They will certainly not get the same consideration nor time that would occur if normal scheduling were allowed.

I would also ask you, Mr. Speaker, to consider that the constriction on our ability to question these witnesses also constitutes an abridgement of our freedom of speech. Citation 55 on page 20 of Beauchesne's reads:

> —"that the freedom of speech and debates or proceedings in Parliament ought not to be impeached or questioned in any court or place outside of Parliament".

This suggests that the members of the majority should not suppress the free speech of the members of the minority. I suggest that to insist that all witnesses be heard on one day and that the clause-by-clause discussion be completed in one day breaches my privileges and those of other Members of Parliament.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this morning I attended the meeting of the legislative committee on Bill C-129 concerning the privatization of Air

Canada. Representations were made by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan), by the Member representing the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North (Mr. Orlikow) and also by the government. And in all three cases, the list of witnesses presented was not retained in its entirety. The Parties present gave their consent and the assistant to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys was there. I cannot see how the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-North can have been denied his rights. The committee felt that a certain number of witnesses should be heard and therefore decided to have four sessions to hear witnesses during the same day, which is the same, Mr. Speaker, as having one committee sit during four days.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I would like to support the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). What he said has a great deal of validity, and it is a cause for concern to me.

• (1530)

Your Honour will recall that we had a debate recently about what was considered notice on second reading of Bill C-129. Since completion of second reading, it has gone to committee. A meeting was called for Monday to set up the committee. I was unable to be at the meeting, but my assistant was there and was told that the Minister was going to appear before the committee the next day. The committee had not even been formed but evidently the Government had made its opinion known to the chairman and set it up so that the Minister was going to be there the following day. It is a pleasure to have the Minister there at any time, but I think the Government should be a little more careful and not schedule meetings until the committee is formed.

The meeting to which the Hon. Member refers was at eight o'clock this morning. I was coming back from my constituency and unable to be there for the meeting, but as it turns out, all the witnesses are now scheduled for next Tuesday. One of the witnesses to whom I was speaking is very upset. He feels his rights are being violated because he cannot be there on a certain day and he cannot be a witness on Bill C-129.

There has to be a fair way of dealing with this without infringing on the democratic process.

Mr. Speaker: I have to say to Hon. Members that I am having a great deal of difficulty accepting this as a question of privilege. However, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who has been here for many years and contributed much to this place, in putting his procedural argument, brought up one quote from Beauchesne's which I want to look at very carefully. If I feel it is necessary I will return to the Chamber, but I want to emphasize again that there is a very fundamental rule in this place that unless it is something extraordinary indeed, it is not for the Chair to interfere with the majority decision of a committee.

We will now move on to other matters.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

DEFECTIVE MOTOR VEHICLE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-301, an Act respecting defective motor vehicles and to enact the Canadian lemon law.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I particularly appreciate the support of my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: It is very symbolic.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate its symbolic value.

The purpose of this Bill is to recognize that the manufacture or assembly of some new motor vehicles often results in a very defective motor vehicle that essentially falls apart in the first few months for a whole variety of reasons. There is no recourse for the consumer. This Bill, if passed, would provide to the owner of the vehicle a refund of the full purchase price for a new motor vehicle of a similar type. That is why it has been called the "Lemon Law". If a consumer ends up with a car that was called a "lemon" or became a "lemon", he or she would have some recourse to the manufacturer and the dealer.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Comox—Powell River (Mr. Skelly).

Mr. Skelly: This law is of such critical importance at this time in Canada, I wonder if I could ask you to seek from the House unanimous consent to allow the proposer to have an extended period to elaborate for another 5 to 10 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On point of order, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, on the vote just held, without commenting on the result of the vote, I wish to say that because of duties in the Transport Committee with the CNR I missed the vote, but had I been here I would have voted for my colleague's Bill, and I know that that would have encouraged my friends opposite to do the same.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I would like to sum up the situation. True, I was the only liberal Member in this House during the last vote, and I would like to suggest to the House that we do not appreciate the game being played by the Government and the New Democratic Party. We know that game. We oppose the Governement using this House to its own ends, and I believe the Government knows as well as I do that under Routine Matters they could have, after each item, moved that we now proceed to the orders of the day. They chose not to do so. That was intentional, Madam Speaker. They want to lose the time of the House, and they have the support of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Nystrom: The Government of Canada is to blame.

[English]

Mr. Riis moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like to point out once more that I was the only one to vote on this side of the House because we oppose the Government's strategy to lose the time of the House. The Government could have used the relevant Standing Orders, but they chose not to do so. That was their choice. But we regret that the House must sit for the kind of nonsense we have seen today. I say to the NDP also: Let us get on with the work, let us do something positive, let us stop that nonsense.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, I want to concur, in part, with my hon. colleague, the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that we would much rather be dealing with legislation which would benefit the people of Canada than providing for legislation which would result in the inevitable passage of the trade legislation.

I want to make it very clear that when the Government decides to put legislation on the Order Paper which is in the best interests of the people of Canada, it will be guaranteed our support and, I suspect, as my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier has indicated, the support of the Official Opposition as well. However, as long as we are dealing with legislation facilitating—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. That is not a point of order and I think the point has been made. Is the Hon. Member introducing another Bill?

Mr. Riis: Yes.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order in response to a comment from the other side. I want to place on the record once again the Government's position that private Members should always have the right to introduce their Bills and have first reading.

I would also say in respect to this Bill that our Party is always ready to support improvements to the Canadian Human Rights Act. We feel that it is dangerous to play Party politics with anything that involves human rights. I hope that members of the New Democratic Party will not force a vote on first reading of this Bill because it involves that very important principle of human rights.

Mr. Riis: Madam Speaker, as a member of a Party that has since its inception stood up for human rights whenever the occasion rose, whether it was the forced relocation of Japanese Canadians into the interior of the country, voting against the imposition of the War Measures Act or countless other examples, in the same NDP and CCF tradition, the amendment provided for in this Private Member's Bill would allow an appeal from decisions of a human rights tribunal or any review tribunal constituted under the Act on the merits of the individual case.

As the Act now reads, orders or decisions of a tribunal may be filed as orders or decisions of the Federal Court for purposes of enforcement. But this does not extend jurisdiction to the Federal Court to confirm, dismiss or vary such orders or decisions.

With that explanation, I am sure that it will have the unanimous support of the House next time as well.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I simply want to say as a member of the Party that introduced the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, I do not think we have to take a second seat to anyone, even the Government, in matters of supporting any Member of the House who wants to present a Bill at first reading, second or third. I believe the right to present the Bill at first reading is a democratic right in order to have the Bill printed so that we know what is in it. Now that we have heard the comments, I agree that it is a good Bill and should possibly be discussed by the Members. To that effect, I will vote in favour of having the Bill read now.

Mr. Riis moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

CONCURRENCE IN SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move that the second report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations, presented to the House on Monday, March 23, 1987, be concurred in.

I appreciate the opportunity to move and debate concurrence in the second report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations, but before I get into the specifics of the report let me give the context in which I chose to debate the report at this time. It is that the Government is seeking to extend the hours of the House and is making an unprecedented attempt to set aside the Standing Orders.

While the Chair has ruled that it has the legal capacity to do so, the Government is attempting to use this heavy-handed tactic in order to force through the House the omnibus Bill on the free trade deal between Canada and the United States.

That, to us and I believe a majority of Canadians, means a diminution of Canadian sovereignty. We on this side of the House are seeking to bring the Government to its senses and let it know that if it wants to undertake such a measure it ought to have the consent of the people before doing so. That is the context I wanted to lay out before getting into the specifics of the second report of the Standing Committee on Government Operations. This report deals with rural postal service. This is a matter that is of vital national importance, a matter which affects rural communities from one ocean to the other.

The committee of Members of the House of Commons had the Minister responsible for the Post Office before it in order to present his plan and his approach to the post office. We had the opportunity to question him. At that committee, there were Members from all three political Parties, members of the New Democratic Party, members of the Liberal Party and members of the governing Party. Witnesses from across Canada came before the committee to present their concerns with regard to rural postal services and the Government's plans to undercut them.

Interested Canadians, the Minister responsible and Members of Parliament participated in this committee. It was the Members of Parliament who drafted and submitted this report. There is a unique aspect to this report, for it is a report that does not simply point out the errors in the ways of the Government, although that in itself would be important because government Members were in a majority on the committee. However, this report had unanimous consent, and the minutes of the report bear this out. The minutes indicate that the committee is pleased to indicate that the report reflects the unanimous views of committee members.

This report on rural postal services had the support of every member of the committee, whether that member was NDP, Liberal or Conservative. That is significant because in the past, reports from the committee on postal services have been split between the governing Party and the opposition Parties. Of course, opposition Parties pointed out the errors in the ways of the Government and government members defended valiantly the Government's policy. However, this report is unique because both government and opposition Members spoke with a united voice about rural postal services.

This is a very short report, printed on just two pages in these minutes. Taking into account the fact that the report is in both official languages, it is really only a one page report. It was a very short, straight and to the point report. The heading of the report is "Closure of Small Rural Postal Offices". While the Minister is rising in the House day after day to deny that any rural post offices are being closed, the all-Party committee is acknowledging, recognizing, highlighting and protesting the fact that small rural post offices are being closed.

The first paragraph of the report indicates that Canada Post intends, over a 10 year period, to assess the configuration of its small rural post offices and, as a cost saving measure, to close many of them. The all-Party committee is sounding the alarm and saying that the Government and Canada Post are embarked on a 10-year plan that involves the closure of small rural post offices.

That these post offices are being closed is in itself of great significance. We all recall that Rural Dignity came to Parliament Hill a few days ago, after having gone all across rural Canada picking up petitions in every town and village, petitions from people who wanted to keep their rural post offices and did not want them closed.

The second paragraph of the report says that moreover, the committee is appalled by the heavy-handed approach taken by Canada Post in its attempts at closure.

Mr. Rodriguez: Tory Members said that?

Mr. Keeper: Conservative Members of this Chamber joined hands and voices, united with Liberal and NDP Members of Parliament, to say that Canada Post was closing rural post offices in a heavy-handed manner and was doing it as a cost saving measure.

We all agree that we need to be careful with the public's money. I am sure that if we were to ask the residents of rural communities if they want to save a few pennies by doing away with their rural post offices or if they want their taxes to go toward maintaining an essential public service in their communities, the residents of those rural communities would say clearly that they want their taxes which they will inevitably be paying to the Government to go toward maintaining a good postal service. I am sure that is the opinion they would express.

Mr. Brightwell: How much tax do you want them to pay?

Mr. Keeper: I hear a Conservative Member asking how much taxes do we want to pay. I can understand him saying that. We in the House know that since the Conservative Government was elected in 1984, it has continuously increased the tax burden on ordinary Canadians. Ordinary Canadians know that and the people in my riding know that. They are fed up with Conservatives laying on the taxes and at the same time seeking to win elections by laying out the pork, each day making a new announcement about how many million dollars are going to be given away to buy one riding. I think that reveals the Conservative Party's strategy for the next election.

If Conservatives could, they would not have a general election. They would have a series of by-elections. They would have 295 by-elections, and they would try to buy every one of them. Of course, this would bankrupt the country and every family in Canada, so in answer to my friend who asks how high the taxes should be, I say that taxes are too high now and Tory taxes are no better than Liberal taxes.

Mr. Gauthier: Watch it, watch it.

Mr. Keeper: Not wanting to provoke my colleagues, I will return more specifically to the report itself. There is the odd Member in the House who seeks to heckle. I must be getting under the skin of some Members. I would remind them that this report was a unanimous one supported by New Democrats, Liberals and Conservative members of the committee.

The most significant, fundamental aspect of this unanimous report is that the committee recommended that no closure of a rural post office or change in postal service be undertaken without meaningful consultation and the consent of the community affected. Even the Conservative Members of the House who were on the committee and heard the concerned witnesses from across Canada and who heard the Minister and the President of Canada Post present their cases recommended to the House that rural communities ought to be given the right to withhold or give consent before a change is made in a rural post office and before a rural post office will be closed.

This recommendation refers to a change in postal service because the concern of the committee was with the closure of rural post offices. We believe, like those who live in small rural communities and came to Ottawa to protest, that rural community life is valuable and ought to be supported rather than under cut.

We believe that over the last 20 or 30 years, as part of the process of centralization in Government and the private sector, many of the underpinnings of rural communities have been torn out from under them. That is true whether it be consolidation of schools or the loss of services in many other areas. Now it is the Post Office. That is the only federal presence in many of these rural communities. It is the only time the Canadian flag flies in many rural communities.

The Government is attacking and destroying rural community life. I am shocked. If there is one thing that I thought was fundamental to Conservative philosophy, it was the preservation of that which has stood the test of time. I never believed that the Conservative Party was like the Liberal Party, which is to worships on bended knee what is new and modern.

I am also astounded by the fact that the Cabinet holds such sway over the vast number of Conservative Members in this House. These rural communities which are being torn apart vote Conservative.

Mr. Fennell: Everyone votes PC.

Mr. Keeper: I mean up until now. Have the Conservatives no political antenna? Clearly they have brain trusters, people like Dalton Camp, but do they have common sense. When they walk down the street and people say they want to preserve rural community life, the Tories do not listen. Certainly members on the committee heard the rural communities and said we have to put a stop to this destruction of rural post offices.

The Tories are seeking to creep above 30 per cent, hoping to get another 5 per cent so they will have the courage to call an election. If they want that, I say start with the Post Office. Start governing this country in a sensitive, decent, human way. Stop undercutting your own political support. In the places where you have rockbed Conservative voters, what do you do? You slap them in the face, tear away their services, and expect them to vote for you.

As a New Democrat obviously I will be glad if those people observe clearly and fully the behaviour of the Government and reflect upon their allegiances. Maybe it is time for them to change. Maybe they will say they have been Conservative all their lives, for generations, but if this is the way they are going to be treated, they have to find an alternative.

We are here to say that we are speaking up for those communities. If they are looking for an alternative, we are ready to provide it.

Mr. Belsher: You used the right word, "if".

Mr. Keeper: I do not want to be arrogant but I also recommend to my hon. friend that he not follow in lemming-like fashion the lead provided by the Cabinet. Sometimes back-benchers, ordinary Members of this House, are more in touch with the feelings and sentiments and priorities of Canadians than those at the cabinet table. That was most clearly evident in the smoking legislation. The Minister came in with a Bill that took a step forward but only one. Then the Private Member brought forward a Bill that took three steps. Lo and behold, Private Members passed the legislation which said we will go three steps rather than the one step Cabinet wanted to go. The Cabinet could not read the mood of this House, so how is it going to read the mood of the country? They should listen to back-bench members of the Conservative Party and realize that people are saying they have had enough when it comes to tearing apart rural postal service.

I want to come back to the essence of the report, which is the recommendation that no closure of rural post offices or change in postal service be undertaken without meaningful consultation and the consent of the community affected. It also says that the consultation process include not only a discussion of Canada Post's proposed service changes but also a thorough review of alternative postal service plans proposed by the affected community.

That is a proposal for real democracy. The community ought to have a say in its own destiny.

Are you indicating my time is up, Madam Speaker?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, your time is up.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments.

Mr. Fennell: Madam Speaker, I would like to give a couple of instances of post office closings. I live in a rural community where I am very well served but I know of one post office that had only one customer. The postmaster was being paid a full salary. The one customer was himself. That post office was a logical one to shut down.

Another example is that on December 20 I was advised that the postmistress had decided to go to England to get married. She sold her store but had not told the Post Office. They decided they must move the post office to another place. I intervened and within 12 hours had arranged for the person who was going to buy the store to take over the post office, move in on a temporary basis and go on with it. Those people have done a superb job in servicing my community, which is RR 1, Ashburn, Ontario, if the Hon. Member wants to check it out. I am pleased to have that service provided by someone from the private sector who is creating a little business up there. It is a young couple and I trust they will do very well with it.

Believe me, the new process of privatization of the rural post offices is an excellent concept and provides the opportunity for young people to take a step up in the business world.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is with deep regret that I must interrupt the Hon. Member. There is a statement I must make to the House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have received written notice from the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that he is unable to move his motion during the hour of Private Members' Business on Friday, June 17, 1988. It has not been possible to arrange an exchange of positions in the order of precedence pursuant to Standing Order 39. Accordingly, I am directing the Table Officers to drop that item of business to the bottom of the order of precedence. Since notice will be removed, the hour for Private Members' Business will be cancelled and pursuant to Standing Order 39 the House will continue with the business before it prior to that hour until the ordinary hour of daily adjournment.

ADDRESS
DR. HELMUT KOHL
Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany to Both Houses of Parliament in the HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA on Thursday, June 16, 1988

The Chancellor was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate and Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): The Right Honourable the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Chancellor, Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Members of the Parliament of Canada, I have today the honour of welcoming among us the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany, His Excellency Helmut Kohl.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: His visit reminds us of and strengthens the ties that exist between our countries. We are partners in peace, partners in prosperity and partners in progress. The defence of Canada begins in the Federal Republic of Germany. More than 7,000 Canadian troops are stationed in the Federal Republic at Lahr and Baden. They stand the first watch on the front line of freedom.

[Translation]

We are partners in the Economic Summit group of leading industrialized nations, meeting in Canada next week in our great City of Toronto, a showcase of the Canadian economy.

In the Economic summit group, in the G-7, in the OECD, in the GATT, and other forums of the international community, Canada and the Federal Republic are often advocates of the same cause—from trade liberalization, to easing the debt burdens of the Third World.

Canada and the Federal Republic are trading nations, equally dependent on securing existing markets and creating new ones. We both depend on liberalized trade. We both suffer when protectionism grows.

The Federal Republic is our fourth largest trading partner, with two-way trade of $5 billion last year.

[English]

Shared and long-standing bonds of kinship and partnership between our two peoples and countries are the very foundation of our Atlantic bridge. Three hundred and twenty-five years ago, Hans Bernard purchased land near Quebec City and became the first recorded German settler in Canada. Then followed the Irish.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Lots of them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But waves of colonists from Germany followed him to make a homeland in a land of new opportunity. Canada has been enriched beyond measure by the contributions of Canadians of German heritage to the political, social and economic fabric of our country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1110)

Mr. Mulroney: The Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, Canada's thirteenth Prime Minister and an illustrious Leader of my Party in the House of Commons, traced his ancestral roots to Germany. He would be very proud, Sir, of your presence here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Today, many Hon. Members from both sides of the House are proud, very proud, of their German ancestry. In our Cabinet, Frank Oberle as our Minister of State for Science and Technology, helping to steer our nation through the high technology frontier of a new decade and a new century, was born in Forchheim in your country and came at the age of 19 to ours, eventually settling in Chetwynd, British Columbia. You lost a vote, and I got one.

His, Chancellor, is the story of 8 million Canadians, almost one-third of our citizens, whose mother tongue is neither English nor French. Indeed, it is the story of Canada itself, a nation of immigrants, a land of promise, a people of hope. Altogether, well over 2 million Canadians trace their roots to Germany, the largest group of origin after English and French-speaking Canadians. Ours is a nation of two languages and many cultures. Shared values and hopes stir us individually and collectively to seize the courage and the vision to challenge the uncertainty of our times.

In the past, the friendship between our two peoples has been interrupted by war. But today we recognize more than ever that we live in a time when war is, as you have said, absolutely unthinkable. We know that it is better to live with one another in peace and prosperity in a more interdependent world.

Under Chancellor Kohl's vigorous direction, the Federal Republic has resumed a vital leadership role in addressing issues on the global agenda. I have been present at many meetings of heads of government where security and strategic considerations have been paramount. I have not heard an analysis more cogent and thoughtful than that put forward by Chancellor Kohl. He brings to these discussions a unique and incisive understanding of both the challenges and the opportunities associated with the vital East-West relationship. His is a voice of reason. His message is one of clarity and strength. On behalf of all Canadians I salute you for that today, Chancellor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Federal Republic under Chancellor Kohl has made protection of the environment one of its most pressing priorities.

[Translation]

In the Federal Republic, as well as in Canada, environmental concerns are in the mainstream of public opinion, and the environmental agenda is in the mainstream of public policy. The Federal Republic is a signatory of the Montreal Accord to arrest the dangerous deterioration of the ozone layer. And we welcome German participation in the International Conference on the Atmosphere which Canada will be hosting in Toronto at the end of this month.

From our private discussions since your arrival, Chancellor, I know that we have similar objectives for the multilateral and bilateral agenda before us. At the Toronto Summit next week, we will cooperate with other Summit countries to maintain the present climate of non-inflationary growth, while at the same time helping to reduce the imbalances in the world economy. We will be encouraging our Summit partners to undertake additional measures to reduce structural rigidities in all of our economies.

[English]

We all recognize that the agricultural trading system requires fundamental reform. We share a deep concern that the Third World debt has reached an astronomical sum of a trillion dollars. We know that you share our concern for the poorest of the poor and are taking steps, as we have, to alleviate the debt of the hard-pressed African states.

Our commitment to an enhanced multilateral trading system is the cornerstone, and it always has been, of Canadian policy. At the core of this system is the current set of multilateral trade negotiations and the need to come to grips with the acute problems which exist in the area of agricultural trade.

I have twice visited you, Chancellor Kohl, in your capital, and now it is my privilege to welcome you to ours. This is a historic occasion, as well as a very happy one. Your visit marks the first time ever that a Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany has spoken to our Parliament.

You, Sir, are welcomed here as a friend, a good and a valuable friend of Canada. I bid you, Mrs. Kohl, and every member of your delegation, a very warm welcome. I invite you now, Sir, to address the Parliament and the people of Canada.

Dr. Helmut Kohl (Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House of Commons, Prime Minister, ladies and gentlemen, thank you for your kind applause and welcome. I should like to express my appreciation to you, Prime Minister, for your kind and friendly words of welcome. These were words of welcome, but they were also expressing a sense of friendship. I warmly reciprocate and return these feelings.

I am most grateful, Mr. Speakers, and Members of both Houses of the Canadian Parliament, for having invited me to address you here today in this venerable building which, since Confederation was formed in 1867, has been the seat of Canadian Parliament. This is the first time, and you said so, Prime Minister, that a head of government of the Federal Republic of Germany and of a country which currently holds the presidency of the European Community has been afforded such an opportunity to address you here. Therefore, I regard your invitation not only as a special honour for my country but also as a token of your solidarity with Europe as it progresses toward union.

I wish to convey to you, Members of Parliament, my warmest greetings from my fellow countrymen in the Federal Republic of Germany and of Europe.

You, Prime Minister, since the days that you participated in your first summit have played a most helpful role in bridging differences of approach among the partners participating in the economic summit. You have made an essential contribution toward enlarging the G-5, which today includes Canada as well, for the development of international economics. This was certainly an essential step.

In many of our meetings I have been struck again and again by your effort to contribute toward progress and to produce acts of solidarity, and in this way bring about solidarity among the participants in these meetings. I congratulate you as well for concluding the free trade agreement with the United States of America. This is a forward-looking sign. The European Economic Community, in 1992, will establish a single domestic market for 320 million people, an area not in terms of population but in terms of economic potential, which will be the strongest region. If this becomes a reality we will need particularly close consultation and relationship with the United States and Canada, and in particular with that important area in South-East Asia with Japan at the centre. These are the three important regions in international economic relations. I welcome the fact that Canada and we, the Federal Republic of Germany, have particularly close contacts and will help to promote this wonderful development.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: Your country, Canada, has always cultivated her political, economic, and human ties with Europe; intellectual and cultural life are rooted in European tradition. Your Prime Minister referred already to the fact that the great majority of your people are descendants of European immigrants. Since the middle of the 18th century and particularly following the devastating wars of this century, the First and the Second World War, countless Germans have emigrated to Canada.

Here they sought freedom and found freedom, political and personal freedom, freedom from poverty, and freedom from the constraints of the old continent. Those immigrants and their descendants, who today count for probably one-tenth of the population of Canada, have played a large part in your country's economic, technological, and cultural development. They have, and we are happy and delighted at it, preserved their links with their relatives and friends in their native countries, and they are proud of their new home country of Canada.

European visitors in particular are always impressed when they see how Canadians of different origin, and above all those whose roots are in western, eastern, southern and central Europe, live and work together harmoniously in their new homelands, and how, on the basis of the country's federal structure, they preserve the cultural heritage and traditions of their native countries whilst building their common future here in Canada, their new home country.

Here in Canada you have already achieved, to a large extent, what we in one part of Europe, the Community of the Twelve—and this is only part of Europe, the larger part of Europe, which for different reasons cannot yet join those who have formed the European community—are striding towards, sometimes with little steps, sometimes with big steps, namely, unity in diversity.

But let me also say to Canadians of eastern European origins here in this place: We have not forgotten your native countries either! When we speak of Europe, we always have in mind the whole of Europe, east and west of the Iron Curtain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: For this reason the central aim of the policy pursued by my Government, the policy of our friends and allies, is to overcome the division of Europe, and this includes the division of our German fatherland; to make the frontiers more permeable; to reunite separated families and facilitate human contacts; and to develop a lasting and equitable peaceful order in Europe in which all nations themselves can determine their own future and cultivate their relations in freedom.

Mr. Speaker, the free democracies of Europe and North America are linked by their common commitment to the inalienable human rights and to the principles of freedom and democracy enshrined in their constitutions, to the openness of their communities, and together we are resolved to defend our freedom. For my country, the Federal Republic of Germany, this is the basis of our policy.

The trans-Atlantic Alliance, NATO, the alliance of free democracies has, for over 40 years now, preserved the common peace, the common security, and the common freedom.

In this building a chapel reminds us that twice in this century citizens of your country have fought and sacrificed their lives in Europe. Only those who know the devastations of war, the disasters of war, can truly appreciate the fact that our Alliance has secured for Europe, and for us in the Federal Republic of Germany, the longest period of peace in its more recent history.

This has only been possible, and particularly in difficult phases of relationships between East and West, because the allies have shown the political will and determination to maintain adequate military forces, to pool their defence contributions and thus guarantee their common defence capability.

The North American democracies, at least Canada, have rendered an invaluable contribution to those efforts, especially by stationing troops in Europe, and I wish to take this opportunity here before this high House to express my thanks and appreciation for Canada's military presence in my country, and to express my appreciation and gratitude for the service rendered by your Armed Forces in my country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: Let me also address a word of very personal thanks to all Canadian servicemen and their families, whom I meet again and again when I am in Lahr, the Canadian base, who have lived in our country or are living in our country and fulfilling their defence mission side by side with our own troops in our own country.

This is important for us. We have a conscript army of more than 500,000 young Germans who are serving in that army. For them it is particularly significant and important to know that they stand shoulder to shoulder with comrades from other countries of the free world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1130)

Chancellor Kohl: I would also express my gratitude for the opportunities you are offering us in the way of training facilities here in Canada, which we do not have in our own country.

The Alliance's assured defence capability has always been and will be the basis for the other principal task to which we jointly committed ourselves in the Harmel Report 20 years ago. That is the quest for a constructive dialogue and closer co-operation with the countries of the Warsaw Pact, and in particular the pursuit of disarmament and arms control to reduce the stockpile of arms in a sensible disarmament and arms control dialogue.

In this respect, too, Canada has rendered outstanding contributions. Lester Pearson was one of the first of the Alliance's statesmen to begin a dialogue with Moscow.

Canada's commitment in the negotiations on security and co-operation in Europe, especially with regard to human rights, has left its stamp on the documents of Helsinki and Madrid.

Until this very day, your country is playing an active role in the arms control negotiations, particularly in the last months and years.

The correctness of the policy pursued in the name of Harmel has been strikingly confirmed. We are experiencing a dynamic improvement in East-West relations, which most of us would have considered to be inconceivable a few years ago.

Never before in the post-war era have the superpowers conducted such an intensive dialogue at the summit. I have asked for such meetings again and again, without expecting too much in the way of an outcome, but I am certain that summit meetings are a major driving force of East-West relations. I want to express my congratulations to the President of the United States and to General Secretary Gorbachev, and express our wish that that policy should be continued along this line.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: Never before have East and West discussed such a wide variety of subjects and worked together in so many areas as today, in spite of the continuing differences between their systems. We should admit that these differences are still great and considerable.

Seldom before have the possibilities for removing old obstacles to dialogue and co-operation been more promising. I believe there is an opportunity to reduce tensions in important areas. Afghanistan is an illustration of such an area. Above all, we see for the first time that the Soviets are willing to reflect on the threat posed by their superior military strength and their claim to an ideological monopoly, and to seek through negotiation the path to stable and genuine peace with fewer weapons. This is the course the West has always advocated in the last years and decades.

The INF Treaty is a milestone along this road. It stems from a western initiative. It was made possible by the solidarity and cohesion of the Alliance. Hence, it is, in the best sense of the word, our common success.

It is the first treaty in the history of arms control to provide for the destruction of a whole class and category of weapons. Its underlying principle that whoever has more weapons must scrap more, as well as its strict provisions on verification, are a model for further steps toward disarmament.

We can all congratulate ourselves on this treaty having been put into effect, and all of the treaty's provisions must now be strictly implemented within the prescribed time frame so that it can pave the way for further arms control agreements.

Particularly important in this context is a global and comprehensive verifiable ban on chemical weapons. The continuing proliferation and use of these means of mass destruction must be stopped immediately. In this aim we are at one with your country and greatly value Canada's major contributions to the Geneva negotiations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: Nonetheless, the basic problem of security in Europe, not the least the security of the Federal Republic of Germany, continues to be the conventional superiority of the Warsaw Pact, as well as its capability for launching surprise attacks and for initiating large-scale offensive action. Eliminating these capabilities must be the objective of future negotiations on conventional stability throughout Europe, from the Atlantic to the Urals. We are banking on these negotiations commencing before the end of this year. Here again, Canada and we agree.

Another objective of the Alliance is to reduce the American and Soviet short-range nuclear missiles to equal ceilings in conjunction with the global elimination of chemical weapons and the establishment of conventional stability in Europe.

This is a basic principle of the Alliance, that dialogue and co-operation between East and West should not be confined to matters of security and arms control or disarmament. Progress must be achieved in all fields: including political dialogue, in economic co-operation and cultural exchange, in preserving our natural environment and natural resources, in the solution of humanitarian problems, and particularly in realizing human rights.

This principle is a reflection of the experience of our countries and all our citizens: military means alone will not guarantee security and freedom. While we need the necessary military means because freedom cannot be had for nothing, it is important that our citizens support this principle and are convinced that their human dignity is respected most in a free society, that only in such a community can the individual achieve self-fulfilment according to his aptitudes and inclinations, and that only in a free economy it is personal achievement that counts and is rewarded, and that human solidarity and social justice are possible.

The English language has given us the word "commonwealth", a community of free citizens and free nations based on mutual prosperity. That is what we want in Europe. I repeat, we are convinced that an economically and politically united Europe, a strong European community, can render an inestimable contribution to the security of the West as a whole and to world peace and stability. A nucleus of this community is Franco-German co-operation. That co-operation at the end of this century will have overcome many hundreds of years of national egotism and bitter fratricidal wars.

Prime Minister, you referred to your Minister of State who comes from my home country. He comes from a part of the country where for more than 300 years, we had a war in practically every generation; hardly any generation has not seen the villages and the cities destroyed during Franco-

German wars. Today we are living in a period in which the generation of our children would consider it to be absolutely inconceivable that something like this could happen again.

• (1140)

When, three years ago, I met with François Mitterrand, the French President, in Verdun to commemorate the dead of the two wars, what impressed me most was not so much the number of these graves; what impressed me most were the 20,000 or 30,000 school children who had come from France and from Germany and were running about playing with each other. They found it absolutely impossible to imagine that their own grandfathers or great-grandfathers may have been buried in these graves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: If the French under the Elysée Treaty concluded between Charles De Gaulle and Konrad Adenauer are friends today, then their common policy is not directed against anybody and everybody is invited to join in, but without this nucleus, the core of European development, there will not be a united Europe. We, the French and the Germans, want to be a driving force, an engine, along this path toward a united Europe.

Close relations between a free Europe and North America based on mutual trust remain vital for both sides. I am therefore glad that a regular political dialogue with Canada has been formally agreed in the European community within the framework of European political co-operation on the proposal of the German presidency. This shows the special significance which the Twelve attach to their relations with Canada.

The European community's principal objective now is to complete the single European market by 1992. We aim to create an economic area embracing 320 million consumers, and this is also an important contribution to the development of international trade and commerce. This market offers huge growth opportunities for the European economies and hence for the world economy. It will be and will remain accessible to all. Not only that, it will make the European community an even more capable ally in the fight against protectionism.

The German presidency has energetically pursued this objective of completing the internal domestic market. As early as February, the European Council at its meeting in Brussels set the course, and at the end of this month in Hanover, other important decisions will be taken at the European summit. I am confident that, and I would like to pass on this message to you, when established, the internal market will also offer Canada fresh opportunities to expand her trade relations and her industrial and technological co-operation with Europe.

The U.S.-Canadian agreement on a free trade area, too, has established a new basis for future trade relations on the North American continent. We trust that our friends' expectations here in Canada of increased growth to everyone's advantage will materialize. We trust in the assurance of our Canadian friends that European companies, too, will be able to use the new opportunities for expanding trade. It is our understanding that the free trade agreement will be implemented in accordance with GATT rules. As always, we count on you here in Canada as staunch champions of an open, multilateral trade system.

Another major task of the community which we should also discuss here is the reform of its agricultural policy. I know that criticism of this policy has occasionally been voiced in your country. I think we should discuss this subject here, because particularly among friends, one should speak freely about differences in approach. I am particularly gratified to inform you that in February, the European Council took the necessary fundamental decisions to adjust past aberrations and in particular to limit surplus production.

It must be our objective to limit and to reduce productions in drastic measures. I am against permanent subsidies on principle. Let me add, ladies and gentlemen, when developments have taken a wrong course over 20 years, one cannot remedy the situation overnight. We must now try to attain the objective gradually to reduce the surplus production. Farm units must also have the opportunity in future.

The family-run farm must remain viable in the Europe of the future. However, we respect the decision to take land out of production and reduce farming activity, because this is the only way to ease the strain on the market. Agricultural policy will be one of the subjects on the agenda of the world economic summit in Toronto in a few days' time. The problem of overproduction and of the subsidies race on world markets must be solved.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Chancellor Kohl: In Toronto, we will be discussing the world economic situation, the perspectives for growth without inflationary pressure, and we should also dedicate ourselves to the study of the dangers of global protectionism which have by no means yet been removed. The participants in the summit meeting must together strive to ensure that the GATT Uruguay round will prove successful. This meeting will take place in autumn here in Canada, and it is of the greatest meaning and significance for future international developments in the economic sector, not least in view of the problems confronting the developing countries. We will have to discuss that in Toronto as well, the issues of hunger, poverty and indebtedness.

I am one of those who believe that in the first quarter of the 21st century, the hazards, challenges and risks of the North-South conflict will overshadow the East-West problems. This is not only a question affecting the economic situation. It is also a question of the quality of human policy.

I am making these remarks as a German because as a pupil I lived through the Second World War and I still have memories of what the situation was back in 1945 after the complete breakdown of our country. We were half-starved, and I felt at that time what it means for a country to receive help, help from Canada, help from the United States of America. We have not forgotten that. Since we are now among those countries which are better off in spite of the problems we still have not solved, we consider it important that the strength of a free system should also be shown in acts of solidarity vis-à-vis the poor countries.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1150)

Chancellor Kohl: Canada's foreign policy, especially within the framework of the United Nations, reflects in exemplary fashion the awareness that the different worlds on this planet cannot live in isolation from one another. On the contrary:

International solidarity is the dictate of the hour.

Mr. Speaker, not only must Governments and nations combine their efforts and their energies and develop North-South relations in a way that will hold out hope for the future. We must jointly master the challenges facing mankind as a whole:

—in the nuclear age we must prevent any kind of war;

—we must make constructive efforts to provide a new framework for peace;

—we must preserve the natural sources of life for ourselves and our children. We have inherited natural resources from our parents and we cannot allow them to be destroyed now. It is our moral duty to pass on what we have inherited and keep it in good shape;

—we must master new technologies and learn to apply them for the benefit of all states and nations in the service of man.

In view of the enormous dimensions of most recent developments, the risk of having these new technologies manipulated are of the greatest significance and we must ensure recognition of human rights and human dignity throughout the world.

What we need are new strategies which will meet these challenges now and for years to come. Twelve years from now we will live in the year 2000. This century was inaugurated with great hopes and has seen such misery and loss of life. We, on the threshold of a new century, together with all people of goodwill, are trying to live up to our responsibility to future generations. For their environment, for their opportunity at self-fulfilment, and their hope of living in human dignity, the decisions we are taking today will have an influence on their future. Future generations will judge us by whether we today are living up to that responsibility.

In history there are always periods in which far-reaching decisions are made. There is only a relatively short period of time when real decisions will be taken, very often over long distances. Nations have to suffer, to tolerate and accept the results of these decisions. We are living now in an age where such far-reaching decisions are being made. We should be aware of that and we should approach them together. In this context it is good to have exchanges with friends and partners who share the basic values, the basic faith, who share a vision of a peaceful and free world. While we have a common responsibility, it was in this spirit that I came here to meet and talk with friends, and I thank you very much for the friendly welcome you extended to me in your grand country. Thank you very much.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Mr. Chancellor, Mrs. Kohl, we are indeed honoured by your address to our Parliament, especially since we had not had the privilege of receiving in these precincts the Leader of the Government of the Federal Republic of Germany, since your Basic Law of 1949.

[English]

We are proud to welcome to this Chamber an international colleague with such a remarkable political career. You were a militant democrat even before you were of an age to vote. While helping to organize a political Party, you found time to study law, political science, history, and sociology. You must have been able to be in more than one place at a time, and you do not seem to have lost that ability. Were you not equally at home in the Bundesrat and in the Bundestag? Are you not simultaneously Party Leader, coalition leader, and head of Government?

With your devotion to reform, liberalism, and modernism, you are the archetypal citizen of that borderless Germany we have grown to love and admire for its many great artists; Bach, Beethoven, Mendelssohn and Schumann; Stockhausen, Fortner and Schnebel; Goethe and Schiller, whose lines have been as familiar to us as Shakespeare's or Racine's; Henrich Heine, that colossus of universal literature, who delighted us when we were students because he took pleasure in extravagance and luxury; Thomas Mann, whose incomparable passages about snow almost entitle us to claim him as one of our own; and Bertolt Brecht, whose plays are so often performed in our theatres.

[Translation]

Your history, Mr. Chancellor, has often been one of sudden change. This was very much in your mind when you selected the subject of your doctorate thesis, namely:

The rebirth of political parties in Germany after World War II.

After 1945 you had to rebuild. Your controversial historian, Oswald Spengler, when he wrote The Decline of the West in 1920, had predicted, despite his pessimism, the important role Germany would have to play in the renewal of Europe, the source of our civilization.

Thanks to politicians of your stature, Europe was rebuilt, and perhaps we should say that a substantial part of the credit should go to your country. Where would the Common Market be without your economic strength? Where would the North Atlantic Treaty Organization be without your determination, and where would the Council of Europe be without your strategic presence?

[English]

Your presence here is clearly an invitation to greater co-operation between our two countries. We already have so much in common: Democratic ideology, economic liberalism, a policy of detente and, I should add, our federal system of Government. While you are geographically in the uncomfortable position between East and West, we in Canada occupy a strategic area between the Soviet Union and the United States. From these observation posts, so to speak, we can more easily understand the fears which weapons engender in us.

• (1200)

Mr. Chancellor, we trust these expressions of friendship will convey to you not only the warm feelings with which our people regard the citizens of the Federal Republic of Germany, but also our respect and admiration for your sense of duty and your contribution to the well-being of your country.

[Translation]

Mr. Chancellor, we express our admiration for the modern country that you personify, and we offer our warmest thanks to you, as a statesman.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Chancellor Kohl, on behalf of my colleagues in the House of Commons and other honoured guests present, I wish to thank you for your speech and to extend warmest greetings to you and to the citizens of your country. In this often troubled world the friendship between our two nations, the result of our co-operation to ensure peace and security, and our significant bilateral trade is an example of what can be accomplished.

[Translation]

Despite the distances that separate us and despite our cultural differences, our commonality of ideas provides a ready basis for bilateral discussions.

Our citizens have the same concerns about world peace, the humanitarian needs of developing countries, trade and acid rain.

The fact that our two countries work together within the United Nations, NATO and a number of specialized agencies is an important factor in helping to solve these problems, while it also consolidates our friendship.

[English]

Another factor which has helped to develop our friendship is the presence of Canadian servicemen and servicewomen and their families in the Federal Republic of Germany as part of our NATO commitment. I say to you, Chancellor, as a Canadian who served modestly in the Canadian Armed Forces in your country in 1953, your comments today about the children playing together and finding it impossible to believe that their parents or grandparents could have ever been at war were very touching.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Over the years the large number of Canadian personnel who have served in your country have returned to ours with a better awareness of your country's vibrant culture and dynamic economy. In the meantime, your people have become more aware of Canada, not just through that military presence but also because of the growing recognition accorded to its writers, artists, and film makers, and the increasing numbers of contacts with Canadian business representatives.

In short, the cordiality of our relations is not simply the result of diplomatic niceties, but of our commitment to mutual goals and the tolerance with which we treat each other's views. Such friendship between countries is something to be cherished in a world still faced with significant problems.

We have made much progress in recent months in slowing down the arms race and easing international tensions, but there are still many difficulties to resolve and numerous issues to consider. I can say on behalf of the Members of the House, Chancellor, that we have been heartened and impressed with your remarks about the environmental challenges which we as the people on the globe face and must face together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: As parliamentarians we have the responsibility of conveying to world leaders the needs and aspirations of the people we represent. We must also explain to the latter the complexity of the problems and the implications of the proposed solutions.

Parliamentary democracy can be carried out successfully in chambers such as these or in the present temporary premises where the debates of the Bundestag take place pending the reconstruction of your old Assembly Hall, but freedom of speech and sense of duty are the essential features, not a building or ceremonies.

Our shared conception of parliamentary democracy can only underline how much our two countries have in common. We are, therefore, most grateful to you for honouring us with your presence and for your statement of the aspirations of your country and the understanding that you have shown of the aspirations of ours. We have no doubt that the bonds between our two countries, already strong, will be strengthened as a result of your visit among us. Thank you very much and our blessings go with you.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Monday, June 13, consideration of second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof; and the amendments of Mr. Marchi (p. 16341) and of Mr. Friesen (p. 16354).

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I seek Your Honour's advice on procedure so that I will not make a mistake and thereby delay—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Speak to Nelson Riis. We are only here to govern the nation.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Not for much longer.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if Hon. Members would let the Hon. Member for Spadina and the Chair work this out it would be to the general advantage of all.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I have two amendments that I wish to move to the main motion. I did not have the opportunity to move them previously since there was the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), to which I moved a subamendment.

Last week the House gave unanimous consent to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) to move a motion including certain other amendments which could not have been incorporated into the Minister's response because they were not amendments to the Senate amendments, they were further independent amendments. I would like to know how I should proceed.

One of my amendments is an amendment to the Minister's response. One of my amendments would be in respect of the new amendments. I would like to know whether I should ask that they be moved at this time or whether there would be a later time that would be more appropriate. I would also like on that occasion to ask for unanimous consent as was given to the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, it is not our intention to debate the amendments that we have tabled. We have not seen the amendments to which the Hon. Member has referred. Perhaps if he wants to table them—and I will be guided by you, Sir—then we can look at them and Your Honour can rule as to their admissibility. We could perhaps during that time take a look at the amendments.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to table them. I did, as the Parliamentary Secretary suggested yesterday, send copies of them over to the Minister's office. I am sorry the Parliamentary Secretary has not had an opportunity to see them yet. I would be very happy to table them now, if that would mean that we could later consider how to handle them.

Mr. Speaker: I think that there may be some disposition in the House to co-operate here.

Let me just begin by answering the question that the Hon. Member for Spadina has put to the Chair. I will then comment on the helpful suggestion made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

First, in answer to the Hon. Member for Spadina, as debate continues on the Parliamentary Secretary's amendment and the Hon. Member for Spadina obtains the floor on debate, then he will be in a position of course to move the amendment to that particular amendment.

With respect to the other matter, if the Hon. Member has consent, of course it could be done.

It seems to me that it might be appropriate to put this matter down for a couple of minutes until everyone takes a look at the form of the amendments which the Hon. Member is proposing. Then I have to advise all Hon. Members that it can all be done by consent at this time, which might, quite frankly, be of assistance to the Chair. It might be in the interests of general convenience.

I suggest that the Hon. Member have a further discussion and come back to the Chair. In the meantime I want to say the following to the Hon. Member for Spadina and other Hon. Members.

The Table Officers have considered the two amendments to which the Hon. Member for Spadina has made reference. I wish to advise the Hon. Member that the procedural advice that I have received is that they are acceptable.

• (1010)

Mr. Friesen: I am sure the Hon. Member wants to speak to his subamendments, and he could do so at this time. We could carry on the debate, whether it is on the Hon. Member's subamendments or the debate in general, in order that we can conclude the debate, as I think there was general agreement to do so.

Mr. Speaker: I do not want to read too far the mood of the House. I suppose I should ask if there is consent to have both of the amendments put at this time. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moves:

That the motion of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration be amended in the proposed amendment to insert a new Clause 32 into the Bill, by adding immediately after Section 123 the following new Section:

"123.1. Should Bill C-84, entitled an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be assented to during the second session of the thirty-third Parliament and section 16 of that Act comes into force before this Act, then, on the day on which this Act comes into force the reference in section 123 of the Immigration Act, 1976 as amended by this Act, to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2) and 83(1) shall be read as a reference to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2), 83(1) and 91.1(1)."

And:

That the motion be amended in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 4 by deleting in subparagraph (iii) all the words after "(2)(C)" and substituting the following therefor:

"who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada; or".

Mr. Speaker: Those are the two amendments. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Spadina on debate on both amendments.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, to put it mildly, the first amendment is a technical one. It relates to that part of Bill C-84 which is not before us at the moment but is connected with Bill C-55. Bill C-84 has a provision empowering the Minister to turn away ships at sea under certain circumstances.

In the amendments being brought to Bill C-84 there is an amendment that would restrict the Minister from delegating that power. In other words, there is Clause 123 in the present Act which states, in effect, that the Minister may not delegate to any lower official powers under certain sections of the Act, and it lists those powers. The amendments to Bill C-84 would restrict the effect of that power, that is, restrict the Minister from delegating the power to turn away ships.

My Party and I are in agreement with that restriction. We are not in agreement with giving the Minister the power to turn away the ships, but we do at least agree that it should be restricted, if it is there, to the Minister only, for the reasons that the Senate and the Minister have agreed upon.

However, it has been pointed out to me from legal advice, and I say that only because it is obvious that I am not a legal expert or a lawyer, that the power to turn the ships away will come into effect when Bill C-84 is passed. But if that comes into effect after Bill C-55, then that restriction of the delegation would be cancelled because there is a section in Bill C-55 which provides for another restriction of the power of delegation, but not for that one. In other words, the restriction would not be in effect, even though that restriction was intended by the Senate when it considered that Bill and agreed to by the Minister in responding to the Bill.

The amendment that I am proposing, which I hope will be found acceptable by all sides, states:

"123.1. Should Bill C-84, entitled an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be assented to during the second session of the thirty-third Parliament and section 16 of that Act comes into force before this Act,—

In other words, if Bill C-54 were to be passed soon and Bill C-84 subsequently.

—then, on the day on which this Act comes into force the reference in section 123 of the Immigration Act, 1976 as amended by this Act, to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2) and 83(1) shall be read as a reference to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2), 83(1) and 91.1(1)."

I apologize, Madam Speaker, for the number of numbers and brackets, but this appears to be the legal situation that we have. I have sought the advice of the parliamentary staff on this matter, and received it, and I am grateful for that. I have sought advice of the Journals staff on this matter, as a matter of form, and received it, and I am grateful for that.

To simplify it for Hon. Members who may not have had the opportunity to follow this through in detail before now, it is the intention of the Senate and the Minister, agreed to, certainly by my Party and I believe by the other opposition Party, to restrict the power of the Minister to delegate authority to turn away ships. Even though that authority will lapse six months after Bill C-55 comes into force according to the amendments that are being considered, this particular aspect of it, this restriction of the delegating authority, would fail to operate from the time that Bill C-55 is declared until that lapse. Therefore, during that time the power of delegation of the Minister would exist. The Minister could delegate to lower officials the decision to turn away ships. Since that is not the intention of the Senate, nor the intention of the Minister, as I understand her amendments, I would hope the Minister would find this subamendment acceptable.

• (1020)

If I may, I will proceed to the second amendment. In the Senate's amendments, there is an amendment concerning the relationship of the process for dealing with refugee claims and the process for dealing with a perceived security risk. What the Senate proposed was that there be a section created which says that among those who will not be allowed to make the refugee claim is (A) described in paragraph 19(1)(c) or (B)(iii):

> . . . a person described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g) or 27(1)(c) or (2)(c), if the Minister is of the opinion that the application of sections 45 to 48 and 70 and 71 to that person would be contrary to the public interest;—

It is those last words I propose to change. My motion would read:

> That the motion be amended in the proposed amendment to the Senate amendment No. 4 by deleting in subparagraph (iii) all the words after "(2)(c)".

That is to say: " . . . if the Minister is of the opinion . . . " The Minister has made a variation in the following words. Instead of saying "that the application of Sections 45 to 48 and 70 and 71", the Minister's amendment reads: "If the Minister is of the opinion that it would not be in the public interest to have the refugee claim determined under this Act". The Minister's words and the Senate's words have the same effect, but I am concerned with the ground upon which such a determination would be made. In Section 19(1)(ii)(B) the ground for rejecting the claim depends on it being a person who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada. I think that is a much more objective ground and, in that sense, a much more reasonable ground, upon which to base such an administrative decision. If the Minister has certified that a certain person is a danger to the public in Canada, there are limited provisions for having that decision reviewed by the Security Review Agency. There are some opportunities for the intervention of the normal procedures of justice such as habeas corpus and the right to counsel, even though the right to counsel is limited by the option of an in camera hearing from which counsel would be excluded. Nevertheless, the charge of being a danger to the public and the necessity of being able to show someone, such as a judge, the evidence of that danger, is a suitable limit on the power of either the Minister or the officials. It is the sort of limit that, for centuries, we have sought to develop and strengthen in our democracy.

Therefore, I believe the words used "who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada" are acceptable words, but the words used in paragraph (iii) below: " . . . if the Minister is of the opinion that to admit that person would be contrary to the public interest", is so undefined, so subjective and so general that I believe we should not allow that to creep into our law.

Parliamentary democracy in England became well established about three centuries ago when people decided they would not allow the King to use arbitrary power. They would not allow the King to just say, "I do not like him, so off with his head", or, "I do not like him, so kick him out of the country", or, "I do not like him, so remove him from office". There were military battles fought in England to establish the principle that even the King, or in this case the King's Minister or the Queen's Minister, must show some reason and not just use a blanket phrase such as "contrary to the public interest".

I believe that at the same time, three centuries ago, in France, the phrase used when the King was giving carte blanche to some servant to go and get rid of someone, was simply "reasons of state ". If the bearer has done what he has done through "reasons of state" then, of course, he is not to be accused or prosecuted even if he murdered someone. We rejected that three centuries ago. We did not want that in England and we do not want that in Canada.

Reasons of state or simply reasons of public interest are not good enough when a matter is very serious, and this is very serious. There could be a person with a legitimate refugee claim. He could also be a person who, because perhaps he came from a dictatorship such as Chile, was accused of having done subversive acts against the Government of General Pinochet. That is one of the causes referred to here. If he falls under certain clauses and the Minister says it would not be in the public interest to have his refugee claim processed, it could not be processed. What I am saying is that it is not enough for the Minister to say: "General Pinochet does not like him and neither do I". That is not in accordance with our democratic rules. It is also not in accordance with the UN convention with respect to the status of refugees which we signed 20 years ago and which the Government still boldly claims to support. If that person fell under the displeasure of General Pinochet or some other tyrant, he should be judged not according to whether the Minister does not like him, but according to whether it can be shown he is a danger to the public in Canada; not in Chile, not in Vietnam, not in the Soviet Union, not in Mozambique, not in South Africa, but in Canada.

This introduction of the phrase "the public interest" at this time is of particular concern because of a case that hit the newspapers a few weeks ago in which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was reported to have influenced the Minister and the Department of Immigration to exclude a Sikh refugee claimant by the name of Santokh Singh Bagga on the grounds that to allow him to make a refugee claim, to allow him to have his refugee claim heard, would be contrary to the public interest in Canada. In that case it was reported and never refuted that that person had received a security clearance from CSIS. It had been alleged by officials of the Government of India that they had no complaint against him. Yet the Minister, in correspondence with his colleague, the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, alleged that this person was wanted in India on suspicion of certain crimes. In other words, there was no agreement among our officials as to whether there was substance to the Minister's vague allusions. It was clear that, according to our existing law, the Minister had no right to ask that the opportunity of making a refugee claim and having it heard should be withheld from Santokh Singh Bagga.

It appears that the object of this change would be to give the Minister the power that he then undertook to use—although he did not rightfully have such power, and I believe that matter may come before the courts but I have not heard that it has as yet—the power to finger any refugee claimant that he did not like and say it would be contrary to the public interest to let that person make a claim. I believe that would be a very undemocratic precedent to establish. It would not only damage the cases of certain refugee claimants but it would also undermine a fundamental principle of Canadian law that a person should not be hurt without being accused of something to which he could answer. In that case the Secretary of State was also quoted as complaining about the fact that Sikhs had been given refugee status in Canada.

It would appear that if the Secretary of State for External Affairs had this clause to use he might simply ban all Sikhs from making refugee claims in Canada. There might be others, perhaps the Bangladeshis, the Chileans or the people from Mozambique. We do not know, but if the Minister said, "I don't want any of those people making refugee claims", their stories would simply not be heard by the refugee process in Canada. That would be a very unfortunate law for Parliament to enact and it might very well be challenged in the courts.

My concern at present, however, is with the responsibility of Parliament. I am asking that the words in subparagraph (iii), "if the Minister is of the opinion that it would be contrary to the public interest to have that claim considered under our present law", be replaced by the words, "who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there any questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak once again on Bill C-55 and have one more chance to show my opposition to government policy that I believe betrays one of the oldest Canadian traditions, a tradition of welcome to people who have been persecuted or oppressed in another country. This tradition goes back to the earliest arrival of non-indigenous people in Canada. It goes back to the arrival of the Huguenots in New France. The United Empire Loyalists came to Canada fleeing from the excesses of the American dream. We have a history of receiving blacks fleeing from slavery in the United States and coming through the underground railroad. We have members of the historic peace churches, the Mennonites, the Doukhobors, the Hutterites who came to Canada, sometimes by a very circuitous route, to escape the enforced militarism of various European countries. They wanted a new way of thinking and did not want to be bound by old European ways of thinking which prescribed how everybody should think.

Since the Second World War we have had refugees from war-torn Europe and from behind the Iron Curtain. Over 400,000 of them have come to Canada since the Second World War. In the last few years we have seen a great many refugees coming from Southeast Asia. Particularly in recent times, because of our traditions, refugees have wanted to come to Canada from Latin America. Two years ago the Canadian people were awarded the Nansen Medal for receiving refugees from other parts of the world. But this is not the only tradition in Canada. There is a counter tradition, a tradition of ethnocentrism, of xenophobia, a fear of the stranger. That goes back to the roots of our human psyche for all of us, an intolerance of differences, a preference for the known and for the comfortable, which sometimes degenerates into bigotry.

As individuals, political Parties, societies and churches, I suppose we all share both traditions. We have on the one hand a tradition of openness and hospitality toward other people. On the other hand we have this bigotry and intolerance, which every so often crops up and sometimes dominates our lives and society. Every so often I find myself betrayed by something that comes up, some bigotry or intolerance within my own life that makes me ashamed when I recognize it later on.

The question we have to decide when we are making conscious policy decisions, when we sit down to make rational decisions about the direction in which our individual lives should go or the direction in which our nation should be going, is which tradition do we follow? Certainly when we look at the situation of people coming to Canada claiming refugee status we know there is a problem.

Speaking on this issue the Minister told us that some 60,000 people are now waiting to have their refugee determination status clarified. It is time there was some clarification. There have been royal commissions and committees of this House which have looked at this issue. Recommendations have been made which, if followed, would have resulted in clarification and a fair and speedier process, preventing the backlog from continuing to build up, a process to ensure that everyone would have a full hearing and the right to appeal. We do not have that in Bill C-55. We have a Bill that follows the tradition of fear and intolerance. That is why we are so opposed to it on this side of the House. In attempting to meet a real problem as we all recognize, it resorts to fear and intolerance, and there are measures in this Bill that will destroy the openness that we in Canada have come to see as a hallmark of our society. The tradition we wish to enshrine is one of openness and of welcome to refugees.

Carlos Fuentes in his book The Old Gringo said:

> A muckraking reporter needs a robber baron as God needs Satan.

• (1040)

In the same way democratic socialists sometimes find it handy to have a right-wing ideologue as a convenient focus for our remarks. Sometimes we are even tempted to create straw men so that we can attack the straw men, but when it comes to Bill C-55 we do not create a straw man. We have a genuine right-wing ideologue who has stated the policy very beautifully, I am referring to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Last week, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), in response to a comment made by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), said, as reported on page 16348 of Hansard:

> The Member began, for example, by saying his forbear came here in 1848 as a result of the failed revolutions in Germany. I understand that since my grandparents and great grandparents came from much the same kind of background.
> However, he went on to say that the refugees today are the same as those in 1848, as if nothing has happened in the world since 1848 that would change the outlook or behavioural practices of people wanting to come to Canada.
> Let me list just a few of the concepts which have now formed the behavioural patterns of people. For example, nihilism, which basically says it does not matter since nothing matters anyway. So you can do what you want. It is all a black future. There is no good consequence of anything, anyway, so go ahead and do what you want. There is existentialism, which makes everyone's individual outlook paramount. There is no uniform absolute. Nothing is clearly right or wrong.
> Therefore, the expression of your own particular authenticity is the most moral thing you can do. There is no absolute morality so it does not matter if you incite violence or peace in its own self. That is a very popular concept.
> There is dialectical materialism. It began to be popular around 1848 but was not pervasive at that time. But for the last 150 years witness eastern Europe and the effect of dialectical materialism, where the state is supreme and individual rights are nothing. They have value only to the extent and to the degree they support the state. How about situational ethics, again where nothing is right or wrong except the situation in which you happen to be. It depends on the situation.
> Finally, the Marxist theology of Latin America which espouses violence for their cause. I want to remind the professor that when we have that cauldron of beliefs in the system, the thought forms of people coming to Canada have changed in the last 150 years, and Canada deserves some protection from people whose thought forms have changed, if they no longer hold to absolute rights and wrongs.

The key issue here, of course, is the Hon. Member's final statement. He said that people have changed in the last 150 years and that Canada deserves some protection from people whose thought forms have changed if they no longer hold to absolute rights and wrongs. I believe that we in Canada need protection from those whose thinking has not changed in the last 150 years, those who believe that their own way of interpreting right and wrong is the absolute law of the universe.

The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta listed five different concepts that he felt were dangerous to Canada. I am not sure how he sees Bill C-55 preventing these concepts from coming into Canada. Some have already sneaked in over the border from the United States. Perhaps we have to do something to tighten up the free trade agreement a bit.

The Hon. Member talks about nihilism, existentialism, dialectical materialism, situational ethics and Marxist theology. We do not know how Bill C-55 will keep these things out, but the point is that the statement made by the Hon. Member gives some idea of the thinking of some Conservative Members, at least, as to the reason behind Bill C-55. It is to keep out people who do not think properly. It is a question of ideology rather than of refugee determination.

I know that the Hon. Member has never had a dialectical thought in his life, so I will not talk about dialectical materialism. I will not ask the Hon. Member to tempt himself with the thought of nihilism, to look into the abyss and see nothing there. Just this morning someone defined a nihilist as a Conservative who looks into the by-election opportunities in Lac-Saint-Jean, sees that there is nothing there and is tempted to despair. I will not ask the Hon. Member to be tempted by nihilism or dialectics, but I would like him to think existentially for a moment.

Mr. Friesen: Oh, no.

Mr. Manly: Yes, think existentially, because existentialism is not a philosophy that began with people like Karl Jaspers, Martin Heidegger and Jean-Paul Sartre. Existential thinking, as the Hon. Member will know if he thinks about it, goes back at least as far as the Bible.

An ancient creed like the one found in Deuteronomy 26—

Mr. Kilgour: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You couldn't even spell existentialism, let alone Deuteronomy.

Mr. Kilgour: It is not a spelling point of order, it is simply to ask what possible relevance do the Hon. Member's musings on existentialism have to what we are talking about this morning.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will show a little bit of patience, and that the Hon. Member who is speaking will make the link.

Mr. Manly: You are absolutely correct, Madam Speaker. The link was established first by the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta who said that we had to beware of people who came to Canada espousing existentialism, and that some thought forms had changed in the last 150 years so we had to be very careful about these people coming here as refugees. I am now asking him to think about refugees from an existential point of view.

I am pointing out that existential thinking as a way of thinking is something that goes back a long time. I referred to the creedal formulation that is in the 26th Chapter of Deuteronomy, and the Hon. Member is very familiar with that. The ancient Israelites were told to begin their creed with this statement: "A wandering Aramean was my father; and he went down into Egypt and sojourned there".

The beginning of this creed was a remembrance of the experience as refugees. Again, there is the statement in Exodus: "You shall not wrong a stranger or oppress him, for you were strangers in the land of Egypt". Here we begin with a reference to an existential understanding of the situation.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This just underscores what I have felt for a long time. Israelites and Mennonites are about the same.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Member is absolutely correct. The history of the Mennonites of being forced from one country to another and finally finding refuge in Canada is so important to this whole debate. The commandment that you shall not wrong a stranger or oppress him for you were strangers in the land of Egypt means that you shall not wrong a refugee for you were strangers in Russia or wherever. Many people have different traditions in their own families and their own faiths. If they look back, they will see where they were strangers or sojourners or refugees. It is that kind of existential thinking that I appeal to the Hon. Member and to all Hon. Members to use. Let us put ourselves in the position of the refugees and look at Bill C-55 from that point of view.

What happens when we look at Bill C-55 from the point of view of a refugee? Let us look at it, for example, from the point of view of a Salvadoran who has escaped from the persecution, the oppression, the war and the death squads that exist in that country. In spite of the farce of elections that took place a few years ago there and the façade of a democratic Government, right-wing oppression continues in that country. We can imagine this Salvadoran making his or her way to the United States and living a precarious underground existence, knowing very well that if discovered, he or she could be deported. In 1982, for example, out of 12,000 refugees, or people who claimed refugee status in the United States, only 26 were accepted. The United States is not very hospitable towards Salvadorans. In the last year the United States has passed legislation which imposes very severe penalties upon anyone who gives employment or harbours illegal refugees.

• (1050)

Therefore, these people have a very precarious role in the United States and find their way to Canada. Once Bill C-55 is in place, instead of being able to come to Canada and have a full hearing they will be subject to a prescreening process. If it is determined that they came from the United States, there is a very good chance that the United States will be declared a safe third country to which they can be sent back. There is no guarantee.

The Library of Parliament studied this issue with regard to the safe third country, and said:

> Even when the wording of the provision is finally settled, it will probably still be very difficult to enumerate or explain the factors that will underlie the safe country list or how those factors will operate in any given case. For example, what are the implications if the general human rights record of a country is a criterion? It is not immediately apparent how human rights would be relevant. Some countries have a general record that is good (or reasonably so) for the majority of their citizens, but poor in respect of certain sectors of the population. Turkey is a case in point—
> Similarly, the general human rights record of a country in relation to all their own nationals might be excellent. The countries of Western Europe come to mind.
> Yet, in the special case of non-nationals who happen to be refugees or refugee claimants, the attitude may be quite different. Again, certain incidents in Europe in the last five years will serve as examples of this. Yet the criterion of the human rights record would imply that all of those countries should be placed on the list.
> The foregoing discussion illustrates the difficulties in establishing what a safe country is, in particular by referring to its general human rights record. If that is to be a criterion (a point not yet established at time of writing) its application may prove very difficult.
> Especially in view of the difficulties just discussed relating to general human rights, a country's record on refoulement will, and should, be the factor most central to a safe country designation, yet how will that be assessed?
> If individual examples of refoulement (probably indirect, but refoulement nevertheless) in relation to a country were sufficient to keep that country off the list, very few countries, even in Western Europe, would qualify.

We have again problems with what is going to happen. We have the concept of sending people back to a so-called safe third country, but what do we mean by that?

The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has pointed out the bias in Canadian policy. I am not sure whether it is as a result of bias or just of mistake that this morning's headline in The Globe and Mail talks about a Mozambican terrorist who has been granted refugee status in Canada even though he was not on the United Nations High Commission for Refugees list of refugees. It appears that the appropriate consultation was not taken, there was not a CSIS clearance, yet this person has been granted refugee status in Canada. On the other hand, a Sikh, a non-violent person, has been denied refugee status by the direct intervention of the Minister.

The Inter-Church Committee for Refugees has written, again underlining the need for legislation which would provide access for all claimants to a full, fair, and independent hearing and a meaningful appeal. They say:

> Legislation which compromises the level of justice accorded to refugees is unnecessary and should be resisted.

It is on that basis that we are resisting Bill C-55. It is not in accordance with the best Canadian traditions of openness and hospitality. It does a disservice to Canada and a disservice to refugees.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, we have a gallery full of young Canadians who have come to visit our Parliament and I would be very saddened if they went away from this place with the wrong impression which the Member is trying to give them of the legislation before us. First, we have before us a Bill on immigration—

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) has just accused the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat-The Islands (Mr. Manly) of trying to give a false impression, not of giving a false impression but of trying to give a false impression. I assume that she chose her words unintentionally and that she does not mean to accuse the Hon. Member of trying to give a false impression but that she disagrees with what he is saying. I hope she will correct that.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would not want any Hon. Members to jump to conclusions too quickly.

Mrs. Mailly: Madam Speaker, as I was saying, I do not want the young people to go away with the wrong impression which the Member was trying to give of this particular legislation.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. She has done exactly the same thing. She said he is trying to give the wrong impression. Would you please explain to her the basic rule of Parliament that we do not accuse a Member of wilfully misleading.

Mrs. Mailly: The particular piece of legislation we have before us, Madam Speaker, is Bill C-55 with regard to immigration. We have this legislation because we have done precisely what the Member who has just spoken has recommended. We have put ourselves in the place of real refugees who are waiting in camps overseas in Asia and Europe to come to Canada and cannot do so because we have a backlog here of some 50,000 cases, 80 per cent of which turn out not to be real refugees.

We have brought forward Bill C-55 so that in the future we will not have such a backlog which keeps real immigrants from coming to Canada. In our country we have recent immigrant stock and we would like the families of these new Canadians to be able to come and join with them. That is why we have this legislation. We are precisely carrying out our traditional approach of openness to people who want to come and settle in Canada.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): That's not true.

Mrs. Mailly: We are also carrying out our tradition of respecting the law. When people come to our country they find that we are a law-abiding people. They come here because they find here justice, freedom, respect for authority, and respect for individuals.

With this legislation we are trying to protect real refugees. There are thousands of real refugees languishing in refugee camps who want to come here but cannot because of the backlogs. We are trying to avoid having backlogs in the future. I cannot understand why the Member would want to give the impression that what we are doing is contrary to our traditions. It is right in the stream of our traditions. I do not understand why that approach is being taken. I would also like the Member to explain why he is confusing a Bill on immigration with a Bill on refugees.

• (1100)

These are two different areas. It is a package with which we are trying to approach the problem.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER—STANLEY PARK CENTENNIAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 19, the Board of Parks and Recreation of the City of Vancouver will be celebrating a century of service and marking the 100th anniversary of Stanley Park.

The first resolution of the First City Council of Vancouver petitioned the then Dominion Government to grant what was at the time a government military reserve to the city for a public park. Ottawa consented to lease the park to the city for 99 years, and Lord Stanley of Preston, then Governor General of Canada, gave his name to the park with these memorable words: "To the use and enjoyment of people of all colours, creeds and customs for all time, I name thee Stanley Park".

You and I know, Mr. Speaker, that Stanley Park is famous for its many features, from the zoo and the aquarium, to Lumbermen's Arch, Pauline Johnson's Memorial, the beautiful totem poles and, of course, the Lord Stanley Monument. But it is the park itself, an island of green shining like an emerald jewel in the middle of a large urban setting, which is the major attraction for tourists and citizens alike.

The fact that Stanley Park has retained much of its original natural and uncluttered beauty is a tribute to the people of Vancouver who have been vigilant over the years in their efforts to protect the park from overdevelopment and from commercialization.

I am sure I speak on your behalf as well, as a neighbouring Member of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, when I say that all of our constituents in Vancouver Quadra, Vancouver South, and other constituencies of Vancouver join me in congratulating the Vancouver Parks Board on its role in preserving Stanley Park over the last century and for future generations.

Mr. Speaker: I just might say that there are times when the Speaker needs others to speak for him. I thank the right hon. gentleman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

BRITISH LABELLING PROPOSAL COUNTERMANDED BY U.K. PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, this morning's announcement that Prime Minister Thatcher of Great Britain has countermanded her Trade Minister on the fur labelling issue which threatened the livelihood of tens of thousands of Canadian trappers and fur industry workers is welcome news.

This victory of commonsense will restore normal cordial trading relations between our country and Great Britain.

The diplomatic skills of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the parliamentary skills of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), who spearheaded the emergency debate in this House, played no small part in this achievement.

In addition, we must recognize the efforts of provincial and territorial Governments, native organizations, the fur trade itself, and the opposition Parties, all of which rallied to the defence of Canada's oldest and most honourable industry.

HON. STANLEY KNOWLES

EIGHTIETH BIRTHDAY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, today we are celebrating the birthday of a very honourable gentleman, one Stanley H. Knowles. We are celebrating his eightieth birthday.

As a young boy, Stanley would not have survived if it had not been for the fact that his family discovered that goat's milk was good for his health. As a young child he suffered when his father died as a result of not having a pension, losing it during the Depression.

Stanley learned from his suffering to care for people, and learned something that we do not often say these days—he learned to love.
