When Stanley grew up, he entered the ministry and responded to the social gospel. As a young man he saw senior citizens in poverty, without clothes, without the wherewithal to live a decent life. Stanley chose politics along with people like Tommy Douglas. He chose to follow J. S. Woodsworth. He brought integrity to politics. He fought for justice and achieved results.

He set an example for us all. At the foundation of all this was a very caring, loving personality. Stanley took time for me when I first came to this place where we are all so busy. It demonstrated to me how he is a caring person.

He took time for his constituents and did his case work himself. His files will attest to that. He persevered in the fight for decent pensions for seniors so that today seniors can live in dignity.

He has genuinely earned through a lifetime of politics the mantle of J. S. Woodsworth.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

PRESERVATION OF ROUGE VALLEY WILDERNESS AREA

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Government must be convinced to designate the Rouge Valley System as a recreational park or to participate with the federal Government and make it a Canadian heritage park.

This is a unique wilderness area of over 5,000 acres stretching north to Markham and to the Bruce's Mill conservation area. It is rich in natural and historic resources. It contains the largest forest in the Greater Metro area and numerous species of plant, fish, bird and animal life.

The Rouge Valley is also equally rich in our cultural legacy with archeological remains of Indian settlements dating back thousands of years, along with the earliest evidence of European settlements.

We must protect the Rouge Valley System from becoming the exclusive domain of a luxury housing development, or even worse, a dump, as has been threatened.

With the world's environment at a crossroads and with the public's unprecedented support for natural heritage preservation, let us take a leadership role to protect the Rouge Valley System.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NECESSITY TO PROTECT QUALITY OF DRINKING WATER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Science Council of Canada points out to Canadians that there is a need for urgent action to rehabilitate our waters. Shortages of fresh water and increasing pollution threaten our quality of life. The quality of drinking water is an acute problem in several parts of the country. Northern and native communities are particularly vulnerable.

Compare this assessment of water issues with the actions of the Environment Minister. This year alone he has cut 14 people from the Inland Waters Branch. He has also done away with the sewage treatment facilities construction program.

Last year he eliminated the water resources research program. What a sham!

While less and less has been done for water protection since the present Government took power, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) proposes to find billions of dollars for the construction of nuclear submarines. The priorities of the Government hardly reflect the priorities of Canadians.

HOUSING

CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECTS IN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago representatives of the Co-Operative Housing Foundation met with the Metro Toronto and area Progressive Conservative Caucus.

They asked for more support for low income housing. Last week the Minister responsible for CMHC announced a substantial increase in rent supplement assistance for co-op housing projects.

Because of skyrocketing real estate prices in the Metro Toronto area, they also asked for short term financial assistance to help co-ops buy land on which to build badly needed affordable housing. Last week the Minister announced the establishment of a stabilization fund to be used for just that purpose. Thank you, Mr. Minister. But that was last week, now about this week.

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

BRITISH FUR LABELLING PROPOSAL COUNTERMANDED BY U.K. PRIME MINISTER

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, today reports from Britain state that British Prime Minister Thatcher will agree to drop the unjust fur labelling proposal. If these stories are correct, we have achieved a victory of significant proportions.

This is a story of co-operation. Throughout the campaign I and others have worked with numerous groups in Canada and Britain.

The emergency debate which took place in the House a couple of weeks ago gave a clear signal of parliamentary unanimity on this issue. The Indigenous Survival Institute, Grand Chief of the Assembly of First Nations Georges Erasmus, the Fur Institute of Canada, the Governments of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, the British Fur Trade Association and British Labour MP, Gwenyth Dunwoody, all worked long hours to stop what would have been a gross injustice to aboriginal peoples and trappers in general.

While I am delighted with our achievement, we must not think that this issue is over. We must reassure people all over the world that Canada is a strong supporter of developing more humane trapping methods.

• (1110)

I call on the federal Government to increase funding for research aimed at creating more humane traps. We cannot rest in our struggle to preserve a way of life, an important cultural Canadian heritage in a substantial sector of our economy.

RELIGIOUS AFFAIRS

THE LATE RABBI DAVID FEUERWERKER

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, let us fervently bless the Creator's name in memory of "Chamir", the late Chief Rabbi of the French-speaking communities in Canada, David Feuerwerker Z".T".L"., who died in Montreal as the Sabbath candles were being lit on June 20, 1980.

He is resting on Mount Zion beside the Righteous of Israel and all of us in the House of Commons and in Canada pray with the believers of the world who, without disctinction of race, colour or religion, venerate David Feuerwerker's memory by earnestly reciting the Kadish for the salvation of our souls.

PRIORITIES

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received another request to intervene, this time from the Golden Age Council of the Saint-Maurice Valley.

The Council rightly deplores the closing of local post offices, to be replaced by supermailboxes.

With the support of 75 golden age clubs and more than 15,600 members, the council prefers that the present post office structure be maintained. Closing rural post offices or using supermailboxes causes many complications for our senior citizens.

The solutions proposed by the Minister responsable for postal services (Mr. Andre) to remedy the Corporation's financial problems run directly counter to the objective pursued by a national postal system. A decent service for all citizens, that's what they want.

I call on the Government to spend the billions of dollars planned for the purchase of nuclear-powered submarines on improving our postal service instead.

S. O. 21

Mr. Speaker, the Government's priorities leave something to be desired.

FATHER'S DAY

SEVENTY-NINTH OBSERVANCE

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, June 19, Canadians will observe Father's Day. Young children will deluge their fathers with hand-made cards, and hand-picked ties and socks. Older children will reflect on intimate childhood remembrances.

Father's Day observances appeared in several North American locations in the early 1900s. But the idea is generally credited to Sonora Louise Smart Dodd of Spokane, Washington.

In 1909, inspired by her own father, Mrs. Dodd suggested to her church pastor that a special day be set aside to honour all fathers.

Through the intervening years the Father's Day idea has been officially approved by one U.S. President; turned down by two; thrown out by the U.S. House of Representatives on two occasions; and abandoned by the City of Chicago. Against these odds, however, Father's Day survives.

In 1988, 79 years after its first observance, Father's Day is officially celebrated in 20 countries as the one special day of the year when children honour their fathers for their loving care and devotion to their families.

May I wish all Canadian fathers a very happy Father's Day—especially my own Dad.

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR SECRETARY OF STATE FOR EXTERNAL AFFAIRS TO APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) during his appearance yesterday before the Justice Committee declared again his refusal to appear before the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs has been told about terrorist activities. He has also heard about the concerns of the Government of India. Obsessed with these matters he has only contempt for the Standing Committee on Multiculturalism and its genuine concern about lack of respect in External Affairs for Canada's multiculturalism policy.

Canadians of many backgrounds have found the Department of External Affairs insensitive to the concerns of their communities, and unwilling to consider their desires. The Department of External Affairs has been far more sensitive to foreign Governments than to the needs of Canada's ethnocultural communities.

The Standing Committee on Multiculturalism is hearing representatives of Canada's Sikh, Armenian, Ukrainian, and Baltic communities. The committee is amassing evidence of insensitivity and worse on the part of the Department of External Affairs, and preparing for an appearance by External Affairs officials on June 28.

A Minister worth his salt would appear with his officials on June 28 and end this display of contempt for a standing committee of this House.

MULTICULTURALISM

CHINESE COMMUNITY'S CELEBRATION OF DRAGON BOAT FESTIVAL

Mr. Bob Pennock (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to offer my best wishes to the Chinese community as it prepares to celebrate the Dragon Boat Festival tomorrow.

Since the drowning suicide of a patriotic poet statesman in 276 BC, it has become a day of commemoration, uniquely celebrated by offering some special rice dumplings wrapped in bamboo leaves, and by holding dragon boat races.

The Chinese have enriched Canada's multicultural life with their colourful celebrations, such as the Dragon Boat Festival. I for one from Toronto, where we have a large active community, would like to take this opportunity to thank them for their tremendous contributions to our country and to Canadian society as a whole.

On behalf of the Government of Canada and my colleagues I would like to wish all the best to those of Chinese origin who will be celebrating tomorrow.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UTILIZATION OF STANDING ORDERS OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for days the socialist Members have been abusing parliamentary procedure. They always use the same technique. First, they move a motion, for which the unanimous consent of the House is required. Then one of their own Members refuses to make the vote unanimous. This has the effect of forcing a vote and wasting an hour and a half of the precious time of the House. They have used this tactic over and over again during the past few days.

Mr. Speaker, this is absurd, and I wish one of the smarter people in their group of anti-social excentrics would convince the others to speak to the substance of the legislation before the House. That is what we are here for. We are not in the House to obstruct systematically the business of this House. I hope the message will get through to the most intelligent person in their group, if that isn't too much to ask.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECEPTION HONOURING HON. STANLEY KNOWLES AND HON. GEORGE HEES

Mr. Speaker: Before commencing Question Period, I know Hon. Members will want me on their behalf to wish many happy returns to both the Hon. Stanley Knowles and the Hon. George Hees. The Hon. George Hees's seventy-eighth birthday is today, and Mr. Knowles's eightieth birthday is tomorrow.

In honour of this extraordinary event the Speaker is hosting, at 3 p.m. this afternoon in the Railway Committee Room, an appropriate reception for both hon. gentlemen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I know you will indulge me some latitude in the rules if I echo your tribute to Stanley Knowles and to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). A few moments ago I paid a tribute to the one hundredth anniversary of Stanley Park. These two gentlemen are almost as permanent, not quite as beautiful, but certainly as honourable.

I want to wish both hon. gentlemen a tribute from our Party, our admiration, our affection, and our wishes for continued good years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we will be delighted to accept your hospitality.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

LAC-SAINT-JEAN BY-ELECTION—PROMISED GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. I wonder whether he would be good enough to ask the Prime Minister to deliver to Parliament a complete accounting of the amount of money the Prime Minister has promised to spend in attempting to buy a seat in Parliament for his school chum, the ex-ambassador to Paris, the unelected Secretary of State.

The Canadian people have a right to know how many of their tax dollars the Prime Minister has promised to spend to get the former Mr. Clean into the House of Commons. Is it $50 million, $100 million, $500 million, or $1 billion? Would the Deputy Prime Minister prevail upon the Prime Minister to render an accounting to Parliament?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather silly question. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is simply trying to play politics in his final act of desperation. I noticed yesterday he promised the candidate who is running for his Party a Cabinet position.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not sure what that does to the other people there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that will not cost the country anything. I told the people of Lac-Saint-Jean that their choice was to have a Conservative Minister for four months or a Liberal Minister for four years.

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY—QUERY CONCERNING COST OF ELECTION PROMISES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I met people from Lac-Saint-Jean, from all over the riding, and I was struck by their pride and dignity. They don't like to feel they are being bought, and they don't like to be told who is going to be their next Member. The people of Lac-Saint-Jean want to know, and they have a right to know, what price the Prime Minister will pay in his attempt to buy their votes.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to inform the House and the voters in Lac-Saint-Jean of the total amount of taxpayers' money the Prime Minister has promised to spend on the people in this riding in order to buy their votes, so the Prime Minister's close friend, his school chum, the former ambassador in Paris and now former Mr. Clean, will be elected.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, maybe the right hon. gentleman would do the Canadian people a great service if he were to explain to Canadians just what his candidate is running under.

As we know, on previous occasions in the House of Commons he stated that in politics pragmatism is everything. He said if one has to be a socialist, one has to be socialist; if one wants to do certain things, one may even have to be a communist; sometimes one may even have to be a Conservative; sometimes one may have to be Liberal, or even NDP to achieve certain objectives.

What is the hon. gentleman's candidate running as? A Liberal, a Conservative, a communist, or a socialist?

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, our candidate, Pierre Gimaïel, the next Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, simply wants to represent the people of Lac-Saint-Jean.

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY—ETHICS—COST OF ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister appointed the former ambassador to Paris to his Cabinet, he stated that the Minister would be asked to do some housecleaning, introduce a new code of ethics for his Government and put an end to Tory abuse. However, instead of getting better, things have gotten worse, and we are right back in the Duplessis era.

I therefore want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether trying to buy votes is part of the Tory Government's new code of ethics. Is the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election an indication of what the Tory Government's attitude will be in the next general election? In that case, how much will the Prime Minister's new code of ethics cost Canadian taxpayers in the next election?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the Leader of the Opposition's frustration about this election, because there are not too many Liberals who are supporting the Liberal candidate that they are running. As I understand it, the Premier of Québec—

Ms. Copps: You are going to find out on Monday.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: How about Premier Bourassa?

Mr. Mazankowski: I understand that the Premier of Quebec—the Hon. Leader of the Opposition states that they bought the Premier of the Province of Quebec too, and I think that he may want to reflect on that.

The fact of the matter is that the Premier of the Province of Quebec who happens to be a Liberal is supportive of our candidate. I understand that the former candidate is supportive, and other political Parties are supportive.

I can understand and appreciate the Hon. Member's frustration. Again, it is his final act of desperation. When we talk about who is being a populist, it is quite obvious that our candidate has popular appeal and popular support, and that will shown on Monday.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF FRANCISCO NOTA MOISES AS REFUGEE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Immigration my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, and it concerns the admission into Canada as a refugee of an individual who is a high ranking official in a terrorist group responsible for the deaths of more than 100,000 innocent civilians in Mozambique.

Why did the Government of Canada allow Mr. Francisco Nota Moises into Canada as a political refugee when it knew that he is the chief information officer of Renamo, a reprehensible rebel terrorist group backed by the apartheid Government of South Africa, and when the Government of Canada knew that the United Nations High Commission for Refugees did not regard him as a genuine political refugee?

Can the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the people of Canada why this particular individual was allowed to come to Canada as a political refugee?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will learn sometime that there is more to responsible parliamentary behaviour than reading or seeking headlines. His question is based upon a story in this morning's The Globe and Mail that is wrong in several particulars. Perhaps of most importance it is wrong with regard to the attitude of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, which did indeed regard the individual in question as a convention refugee eligible for resettlement to Canada.

I think the Hon. Member will also know, when he goes beyond the headlines and looks at the facts, that this individual was sponsored by a Canadian church group, the St. Andrew's Catholic Church Refugee Committee in Victoria, British Columbia.

As are my colleagues in the Government, I am certainly prepared to answer questions on this and other matters. I would hope that the Hon. Member would do a little more research and not rely simply on spectacular headlines.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT START DEPORTATION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that this particular individual is a high ranking official with Renamo. The fact is that he continues to disseminate propaganda in support of Renamo while living and working here in Canada. The admission of this man to Canada could lead one to question the Prime Minister's and Canada's commitment to Mozambique, and the other frontline States in their struggle against apartheid in South Africa.

This gentleman has no right to be in Canada. He is persona non grata. When will the Government commence proceedings to have this individual removed from Canadian soil?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, on behalf of the Liberal Party, has come to a judgment without hearing, without process, a judgment that would be highly prejudicial to the rights of one individual in this country. Presumably, if they would act in that contemptible way with regard to one individual, so they would with all others. I hope that that lesson will not be lost.

The case has been referred to the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission. It is for the CEIC to determine whether there is any case for enforcement action. We believe that procedures should be followed and should not be catapulted over because a headline occurs in a newspaper.

With regard to the Government's position on South Africa, and with regard to the Government's position on Mozambique, I have had the opportunity to speak directly with officials of the Government of Mozambique. They know and appreciate fully the very positive support that is coming to them from the Government of Canada.

ROLE OF OFFICIALS IN ADMITTING INDIVIDUAL

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it concerns the same matter that has just been raised, the case of Francisco Nota Moises who appears to be undeniably a leading person in the Renamo organization, and continuing his active support of Renamo in Canada even though Renamo is known to be a terrorist organization acting against the Government of Mozambique, the Government which Canada strongly encourages, and acting with the support of the Government of Pretoria which Canada criticizes.

In view of the allegations that have been made that inadequate research was done by CSIS, in view of conflicting accounts of the status of Mr. Moises with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees, and in view of the fact that the Minister has oversight in the overseas offices of the immigration officers there who are subject to the head of post which is part of his Department, will the Minister report to this House on the status or the quality of the work that was done by immigration and other Canadian officials in admitting this man to Canada in what appears to have been an error?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I note and commend to the House the care with which the Hon. Member put that question. He said in a rather peculiar formulation, but I understand the difficulty under which he is operating, that the individual "appears to be undeniably . . . " something. The difficulty is, of course, that there is some very real dispute about the facts. One of the allegations that is not a fact had to do with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. I have responded to that question. There have been some other matters raised. I indicated that the question will go to the CEIC.

The Member asked with respect to CSIS. The Solicitor General will naturally be looking into the question to see if anything occurred here that should not have occurred. Naturally, when a controversy of this kind arises, it is my normal practice to review procedures, which I will do in the normal way. I would imagine that kind of review will also be undertaken by, among others, the reputable church group in Victoria which was involved in the sponsorship.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to have all those inquiries made by the authorities and some report given to us on the result, particularly given the fact that it often happens that a church group asks for a refugee, perhaps a refugee from a certain country, leaving the selection to our officials, since our officials are considered to have more knowledge in detail than the average parish can secure.

REPORTED SUPPORT OF TERRORIST MOVEMENT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): My further question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in the absence of the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since it appears that Mr. Nota Moises is continuing in Canada his open advocacy of Renamo, will the Minister tell us whether there is an inquiry being made as to what legal means are being used to prevent Mr. Moises from continuing support of a terrorist movement dedicated to the overthrow of a Government which is recognized by Canada? And what action is being taken to stop him from doing so, according to Canadian law?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take the Hon. Member's representations seriously and I will treat them that way. Because he has raised the question, I can certainly assure him and other Members that anything that is done will be done strictly in accordance with Canadian law. I do not think the Hon. Member would ask me to take any actions with respect to this individual which are not in accord with Canadian law.

REQUEST THAT INQUIRY BE CONDUCTED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs and I have not asked that anything be done except according to Canadian law. According to Canadian law, if Mr. Nota Moises gave false information, or withheld relevant information, at the time he was admitted by our Nairobi office for landing as a refugee, he would then be subject to an inquiry to determine whether his status in Canada ought not to be revoked.

I would ask the Hon. Minister whether he and his colleagues will ensure that such an inquiry takes place according to the normal procedures of Canadian law, and that this House is advised of what action is initiated?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think I have answered that, but for greater clarity, I will ensure that the relevant investigations are undertaken and I will find a way to report relevant conclusions to the Hon. Member and to other interested Members of the House.

I think it is very important, before we conduct some kind of inquiry based upon accusations in the House of Commons, that it be understood that some of the allegations made in that newspaper report were, indeed, false. The allegation regarding the UNHCR was false. I understand the individual did not seek or obtain political asylum in Canada. He already had asylum in Kenya. Indeed, the Kenyan authorities granted him a travel document which recognized his status as a refugee within the meaning of the 1951 Geneva Convention. That happened in February, 1986.

He subsequently applied for permanent residence in Canada as a Convention refugee. There may well be other errors in the story that has given rise to these questions. I think Hon. Members would want us to act on the basis of facts, not allegations.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER TABLE CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post, affectionately known as the Minister responsible for closing down post offices. Last week Canadians discovered that Canada Post had a plan to close down 5,221 rural post offices putting 8,200 women out of work. Another document has now been released which informs us that 734 urban post offices will be shut down.

I want to ask the Minister responsible for shutting down post offices if he will table in this House the complete corporate plan of Canada Post so that Canadians can be aware of the full intentions of the Government. Will he table that document today? I also want to know from him why the Government persists with these plans that are most unpopular in both rural and urban Canada.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the only such plans exist in the propaganda of the unions and in the Member's empty head.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Member wants the corporate plan. He received the summary of the corporate plan. I refer him to page 18 of that summary which says:

> The retail counter service objective is to develop an efficient, modernized, fully-rationalized network of retail outlets that will provide improved customer access, an enhanced corporate image and a better range, level and consistency of retail services in a cost-effective manner. This objective will be achieved largely by increasing the use of the private sector in providing retail counter services.

That is not secret. That is there in the summary of the corporate plan.

Mr. Boudria: The summary!

Mr. Andre: Would the Hon. Member start reading that rather than relying on these ridiculous outdated stories from Canadian Press which are based on a document which the reporter has been told has no relevance to what in fact is happening?

Mr. Boudria: I want to tell the Minister that a retail counter service objective does not a post office make, to use his own words.

CONVERSION OF POST OFFICES TO POSTAL RETAIL OUTLETS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I want to ask the Minister responsible for Canada Post a supplementary.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have here a copy of Canada Post's so-called planning document for converting post offices into retail counters for selling stamps. Why does the Conservative Government want to convert or close down post offices in Rimouski, Sept-Îles, Shawinigan, Drummondville, Pontiac, Trois-Rivières, Saint-Jean and, especially, the post office in Chicoutimi which serves part of the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): These newspaper stories which give rise to the Hon. Member's silly questions are based on a planning document, one of hundreds, the Post Office has. The story last week was based on data on the second last line. The story this week is based on the third last line. I presume we are going to have another story next week based on the fourth last line and the Hon. Member is going to stand up and ask his questions.

The Hon. Member gives me an opportunity to correct something I said to him last week. He talked about the closures and dismissal of postmasters, most of them being women. I pointed out to him that last year 218 new postmasters were hired and said 80 per cent of them were women. I misinformed the Hon. Member. Ninety-two per cent of them were women.

REQUEST THAT DOCUMENT BE TABLED

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Before the planning document was released, Canada Post denied the existence of a planning document for the privatization of urban post offices. The Corporation now denies the significance of this document, and the Minister is doing the same. Isn't it a time to let the public know what is going to happen to these post offices? Why won't the Minister table the document in the House?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out last week, the news story, based on a number of planning documents which have come into the hands of the reporter, stated that last year there were 269 rural conversions planned. In fact, there were 119. So that should be prima facie evidence that the numbers in here are not relevant to what in fact is happening.

The Post Office has stated explicitly in the summary of its plan its intention to open retail postal outlets because they are open longer hours and provide better service and more accessible service to the public. As the Hon. Member knows, in his own province when surveys by independent third party organizations have been taken of customers dealing with these retail outlets, the approval rating is very, very high. The customers like it. It is the unions that do not like it. The Member is representing union interests and not customer interests, nor the interests of Canadians who use the post office, in asking his questions.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the difference in the numbers between the planning document and what actually happened at Canada Post was a result of people protesting the closure of post offices rather than that this is not in fact a planning document.

WHITEHORSE POST OFFICE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): My supplementary question for the Minister responsible for Canada Post deals with the Whitehorse post office.

People in Whitehorse are worried about their post office. They have asked the Department of Public Works whether in the new federal building there has been a request for space for the post office. Public Works has said no, that there has been no request for space for the post office. People want to know whether it is the plan of the Government and this Minister to privatize the post office in Whitehorse. People want to know so they can express their opinions about the future of the post office in their community.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, without any notice from the Hon. Member I obviously cannot give him that kind of detail. He knows he should not be wasting the time of the House and should ask the Post Office that kind of information. It is within its responsibility as provided by Parliament.

Mr. Keeper: We tried that.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member says he has tried that. I will check to see if in fact he has asked the Post Office that particular question—

Mr. Keeper: She has tried that.

Mr. Andre: —because I do not believe very much of what that Hon. Member says.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is too close, and I would ask the Minister to withdraw.

Mr. Andre: I am not sure what I said—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —that would cause him to make that request.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Just leave.

Mr. Speaker: I can assure the Hon. Minister the Chair heard what he said and I think he is getting to the point where he is impugning the truth of what the Hon. Member said. It is too close for comfort and it moves toward disorder. I would ask the Hon. Minister to correct that.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, I, of course, have no interest in creating disorder. I believe I said that I do not believe what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You cannot say that.

Mr. Andre: I have difficulty believing what the Hon. Member said. I do not think that is contrary to any—

Mr. Cassidy: Withdraw. Don't provoke the House like that.

Mr. Speaker: In the opinion of the Chair and in the context of the remarks it was close enough to an allegation to create disorder, and I would ask the Hon. Minister to withdraw.

Mr. Andre: I was just getting to that part of my comment, Mr. Speaker, when you interrupted me. Of course, I will obey the edicts of the Chair in this regard. I simply wanted the record to show that I did not use any language that is contrary to the indications in Beauchesne of what is appropriate in this House. Of course, I do follow the Speaker's request and withdraw.

Oral Questions

UNITED NATIONS

PROPOSED NEGOTIATIONS ON FUTURE OF CYPRUS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As the Secretary of State knows, the Secretary-General of the United Nations is in the process of arranging a meeting in Geneva next month to try to bring about a solution to the problems in Cyprus.

Two of the key issues in those negotiations will be the guarantee of minority rights and also the possibility of setting up a federal system of government. Canada has had a peacekeeping force in Cyprus since 1963. We have had a lot of experience with minority rights in this country and with a federal system of government. We have an international reputation as a peacekeeper yet we have always played a passive as opposed to an active role in these negotiations.

Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs give the House his undertaking that Canada will play a very active as opposed to a passive role in these upcoming negotiations with a view to bringing about a solution of the problems in Cyprus?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in a matter that is of great importance to Canadians, not simply because of the presence of our troops in Cyprus in a peacekeeping role.

We are encouraged by the interest being taken by the Secretary-General of the United Nations. Certainly the Hon. Member would want the Government of Canada to support those measures fully and not to do things that might detract from the initiative of the Secretary-General. We will support his initiatives fully. If there is something more that we can do in the view of the Secretary-General that will contribute to a peaceful solution of a long-standing situation in Cyprus, then we certainly will co-operate fully with the Secretary-General of the United Nations with that in view.

The Hon. Member will know that every six months the question arises as to whether we should renew our presence of troops in the area. We have decided to do that. Last year we increased our commitment.

It would be in everyone's interest if Canada could contribute to a solution that would resolve the fundamental problem. We are very much interested in doing that in collaboration with the Secretary-General of the UN.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT— EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Since October when the Canada-U.S. deal was signed the value of the Canadian dollar has gone up from 76 cents to 82 cents. In the same period of time the value of our exports has fallen by 2.5 per cent. Last evening the spokesperson for the British Columbia lumber industry said that already $400 million had been lost as a result of that rise in the Canadian dollar.

Considering that the Government's own economic studies—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you want a 50-cent dollar?

Mr. Axworthy: —show that the marginal benefits of any trade deal will be a maximum of one-quarter of one per cent, will the Minister confirm that whatever marginal benefits are being proposed in the trade deal have already been wiped out?

Can the Minister tell us whether this topic of how the rising dollar will substantially affect Canadian exports is a topic that will be discussed at this week's Summit so we can get some remedial action to protect industries?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Vote Liberal for a 50-cent dollar.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I discern three questions in that presentation. First, the free trade agreement with the United States will secure access to the United States market. Therefore, the free trade agreement is good news and is in no way affected by the allegations of the Hon. Member.

Second, commodity prices have been rising and the Hon. Member knows this. As a result that situation has helped our export industries even in the face of a rising Canadian dollar.

What I finally have to say to the Hon. Member is that on January 16, 1986, his colleague, the Leader of the Opposition, stood up and criticized the Government for the dollar falling below 70 cents by saying it was bad economic management.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Different circumstances.

Mr. Hockin: Is he saying now that because the dollar is strong that is good economic management?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I detect in that answer three wrong assumptions and three wrong assertions. None are correct.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): If the Minister is replying in this case, will he answer the following question, Mr. Speaker?

The Export Association of Canada has already written to the Governor of the Bank of Canada pointing out that the value of the Canadian dollar has affected Canadian exports to the tune of 6 per cent over the past year. The trade documents themselves say that the impact of signing the trade deal will add another 4 per cent increase to it. We are now facing a minimum of a 10 per cent increase in the Canadian dollar which will have a devastating effect on our commodities as well as a whole series of goods and services.

Under that circumstance, what action does the Government intend to take? Will someone in the Government talk to the Governor of the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Do you suggest pegging the dollar?

Mr. Axworthy: The Attorney General wants to know what we are going to do. I presume that he is the Government at least for a few more months and the Government should have some answers. It is becoming a very serious problem for the export industry which will be accented and aggravated by the trade deal by a further rise in the Canadian dollar. What does the Canadian Government intend to do about it?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear what the Canadian Government intends to do. We will continue to follow these policies which will produce record breaking productivity in this economy. We have the fastest growing economy among the OECD countries in the last two years except for Japan. Unemployment is at the lowest level since 1981. Our interest rates are around 9.5 per cent instead of 22 per cent under the Hon. Member's Government seven years ago. We will continue on that course. The Hon. Member has to make up his mind. Does he want the dollar to fall through the floor or does he want it moderating?

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY—ETHICS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean.

Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister will remember that the theme of Mr. Bouchard's campaign in Lac-Saint-Jean was: The new political morality. After all the patronage, road repairs and expenditures announced in the past few days, could the Deputy Prime Minister explain to the House the difference between the new morality of the Tories in Lac-Saint-Jean and the old political morality of the Liberal Government?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, I have been following the events around the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean, but I was not aware the socialists were campaigning. It sounds as if they were interested!

The Hon. Member's question referred to the by-election. I realize they are on edge. They are like the Liberals under their present Leader. You have a problem. Monday, Mr. Bouchard will be elected as the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, and we will be delighted to welcome him here in the House, as soon as he is elected next week, by the people of Lac-Saint-Jean and not by the socialists in Ottawa.

PROGRAM ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Minister of State that he can hardly say there is a difference between the old political morality and the new political morality. And I also want to inform him that the voters of Lac-Saint-Jean don't want to be bought.

My question is this: Could he explain the difference as it applies to job-creation centres, when the needs of one centre that caught the eye of the Tory candidate in the riding are immediately met with a government grant?

Could he table the criteria for this program in the House, with all the necessary documentation, to prove that the centre in Alma met all the criteria in a process that would normally take six months, and also to prove that this is not just a miracle that was cooked up to try and buy the voters of Lac-Saint-Jean?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, a socialist like him has a lot of nerve to rise in the House and talk about political morality, when a few months ago, when he was visiting Quebec, he said he would take the frigate contracts away from New Brunswick, just to get votes in Quebec. He should talk about political morality in this House!

Canadians are fed up with this socialist rhetoric about public morality, especially coming from the Hon. Member. His argument just won't wash. He has given all Canadians a demonstration of the socialists' morality by threatening to take contracts away from poor little New Brunswick and give them to Quebec, for purely political gain. You should be ashamed, sir!

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

GOVERNMENT FUNDING FOR RESEARCH

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is for whomever is answering for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources today. In the election campaign of 1984 the Prime Minister promised all kinds of support for Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, and then less than a year later the Minister of Finance cut the research and development budget of Atomic Energy of Canada by 50 per cent or $100 million. To date, the Prime Minister's broken promise has cost AECL $60 million in lost research funds.

Because the company could not face another $25-million cut this year, the Government has reduced that cut to $11 million without any statement whatsoever about future financial planning for the corporation. Will the Government cease these devastating cuts and restore a positive outlook to the company so that its multiplicity of research and development projects can continue, so that Canada will not lose more top-notch scientists, and so that hundreds of other jobs will not be lost in addition to those that have already gone by the boards because of the lack of fulfilment of the promise of the Prime Minister?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows or should know that AECL is a private company, despite the fact that there are government connections, and we have been very aware of the necessity of ongoing R and D in that particular company. It has had some difficulties with sales and the like, we realize that, and it is for that very reason that we topped up its R and D budget in just the last week or two.

FINANCIAL FUTURE OF CORPORATION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited performs research and development in many areas. In cancer research, the cobalt therapy unit is its project. That is known around the world. It produces two-thirds of the radio medical isotopes used in the world. Its energy research has been unsurpassed anywhere, and its problem solving in many areas of advanced technology is its trademark.

Why is the Government not serious about planning the financial future of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited with all these major objectives in mind? Surely the Government understands that research and development are the engine that will drive industry and trade in Canada for years to come to benefit all Canadians. Why does the Government not do that?

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)): Mr. Speaker, the Government is certainly aware of the good work done by AECL, and it is for that very reason that we have been supportive of it. We are working with AECL to try to deal with its issues, and it is for that very same reason that we just finished topping up its budget, again reassuring it that it will be able to carry on with the very excellent R and D work that it is doing on behalf of Canadian citizens.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

ACCIDENT DURING CAMP GAGETOWN FIELD EXERCISES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Last Sunday, six members of the Armed Forces at Gagetown engaged in field exercises were hit by shrapnel from a shell which fell 500 metres short. One was hit with shrapnel in the eye, another in the stomach, and a third had shrapnel hit in the back which destroyed his right kidney, part of his right lung, and part of his liver.

While the base officials have said that there will be an investigation of the incident, will the Government ensure that this investigation will not be an in-house whitewash but will be an open inquiry conducted by an outside, impartial investigator?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take the Hon. Member's representation as just that and convey it to the Department of National Defence. I would not like, however, to carry the message that there is a suspicion that the Department of National Defence cannot be trusted to make an honest and fair evaluation or assessment of what in fact happened. I do not know on what basis we would reach that conclusion, but I will nevertheless carry the representation of the Hon. Member to the Department.

CONDUCT OF FIELD EXERCISES

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I think it is always better if incidents like this are investigated in an impartial way. A week earlier another soldier was killed, leaving behind a wife and young children, when his armoured personnel carrier flipped over.

Will the Minister find out if this investigation will look into suggestions that these field exercises are being run like a U.S. Marine boot camp where soldiers are continually being pushed beyond the point of fatigue so that the human error factor is magnified and the dangers are increased? Will the Government ensure that the personal safety of armed forces personnel receives a higher priority than it appears to have received at Camp Gagetown in the past?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the representation or the opinion of the Hon. Member that the Department of National Defence personnel are not sensitive to the risks to which members of the forces are exposed. Of course, preparing for war is a risky business. I do not see how one can—

Mr. Manly: Preparing for war?

Mr. Andre: That is what our military does, it prepares for war. That is what having a military is all about. Nevertheless, the substance of the Hon. Member's supplementary question was a representation to ask for outside investigators. I will carry his representation to the Department.

LABOUR RELATIONS

UNIONS DUES—OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH TRUST FUND

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Two years ago, Judge John White ruled that the use of funds deducted from workers' salaries at source under the Rand formula was unlawful. A year later, a second judgment ordered the unions to return the money to workers who so requested, if the money was not used for collective bargaining purposes.

We know that the New Democratic Party benefits, is in fact a "receiver" of money unlawfully collected from Canadian workers.

Mr. Minister, the unions refuse to stop this practice and give the money back to the workers. Do you intend to ask them to put those funds in trust, to prevent the socialists from being politically immoral, something they accuse us of being? This is important, because the workers want their money to be well managed and not used against us, to their own disadvantage.

• (1200)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware that the $2 million union campaign against the Government has been challenged by some of its members. The Post Office has taken the matter before a court with regard to some of the advertisements which were planned by the union. Mr. Lavigne's case is now being taken to an appeal court. I am sure that we all await with interest to see how this is dealt with.

In the meantime I will pass on the Member's representation to the Post Office to see whether there is anything it is able to do.

LAC-SAINT-JEAN CONSTITUENCY—REQUEST THAT DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER GUARANTEE POST OFFICE WILL NOT BE CLOSED

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have in my hand a list of 66 Canadian cities where post offices will be closed over the next three years, including Sudbury, Timmins, Thunder Bay, Fredericton, Nanaimo, Barrie, Peterborough, Chatham, St. Catharines, Greater Toronto and Niagara Falls. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, since he has already given out thousands of dollars, if he would be prepared today to do something that would not cost the Canadian people a cent, namely to guarantee that at least the post office serving the people of Lac-Saint-Jean will not be closed, as suggested by the plan I have in hand.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in its corporate plan the Post Office indicated that over the next eight years 6,000 new, additional post office outlets will be opened in Canada raising the current number of about 12,000 to about 18,000.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What number corporate plan is that, Harvie?

Mr. Andre: If the Hon. Member had been interested earlier this week she could have gone to the committee of this House which had Mr. Lander, the President of the Post Office, before it and asked that particular question. If she had she would have been told by the Post Office, as I have told the House on many occasions, that the plans of the Post Office are to increase the number of postal outlets from the current approximately 12,000 to about 18,000 over the next eight years.

CHICOUTIMI POST OFFICE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have in hand the secret plan which the Minister refuses to table in the House. The secret plan shows that we are going to be replacing post offices with so-called dealerships and we are going to be closing post offices in 66 cities across the country.

I would like to ask the Minister a very simple question. His Government has dropped millions in the last few days in a desperate bid to save a dying candidate who should go back to France where he can solve the problems that—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Ms. Copps: Will the Minister, at the very least, promise that the post office which is currently serving the citizens of Lac Saint-Jean, which is scheduled for closure, that is the post office in Chicoutimi, will not be closed? Can we get that little promise from the Minister?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have said repeatedly in the House, and according to Beauchesne's that is supposed to be accepted, what the President of the Post Office has said on many occasions. I gave the document I had to the Hansard reporters, but the Hon. Member can read the summary of the corporate plan. She can read with her own little eyes in plain language that in fact post offices will be increased in number, not decreased, not closed. She should stop trying to scare the people of Chicoutimi. They are not going to lose their post office. They will have improved service.

BRITISH FUR LABELLING PROPOSAL—POSITION OF U.K. GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the Minister confirm that the Government of Great Britain has now agreed to withdraw its controversial fur labelling proposal, a move which would have cost thousands of jobs of trappers and fur workers in Canada?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it appears that the British Government has in fact decided not to proceed with the proposed regulation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That owes a great deal to the initiative of Members in all parts of this House. I think all Members of this House would join me, if that indeed turns out to be the case, in expressing our appreciation of the sensitivity of the British Government to this very important industry in Canada and the effects that the proposed regulation would have had upon that industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon and that will close off Question Period.

FUTURE OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. A press report this morning indicates the intention of the Government to abandon support in perpetuity for the Newfoundland Railway as promised in the Terms of Union with Newfoundland.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister confirm the accuracy of the press report? Is the Government planning to offer Newfoundland assistance for Trans-Canada Highway construction in order to buy its way out of the constitutional commitment? Will Newfoundlanders find the perpetual support replaced by one-time assistance for highway work?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, in response to the excellent question of the Hon. Member, as indicated by the Deputy Prime Minister on June 10, discussions are still ongoing. There are discussions taking place on the issue. The moment the discussions come to fruition we will make the information available to the House.

POINT OF ORDER

DELAY IN GOVERNMENT RESPONSE TO COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to bring to the attention of the House a breach of the Standing Orders. Standing Order 99(2) reads as follows:

> Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

On January 19 of this year the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry presented a report on the storage and disposal of high-level radioactive waste. The title of the report is The Eleventh Hour. It contains 15 recommendations that deal with the nuclear fuel cycle. It is an important, in fact critical, report. I repeat that it was presented on January 19.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) who asked me to raise this point in her absence today, has been informed by the clerk of the committee that today represents the 150th day that has passed since the presentation of this report.

At the time the report was presented the committee requested a government response. The arrangement for such a request was an innovation under parliamentary reform which was intended to upgrade and reinforce the real influence of parliamentary committees.

We in this Party participated actively in the parliamentary reform process. We believe in parliamentary reform and believe in operating within the rules of this House of Commons, unlike the Government which has no hesitation in suspending and throwing out the rules at the slightest opportunity.

The Government has not responded to the standing committee's report within the 150-day deadline. It has, therefore, breached Standing Order 99(2).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a valid point of order. The rules provide for no exceptions. Where a response is requested by a committee to its report the Government must table the response in 150 days. There is no doubt that this is the last day for filing such a report within the rules.

We are talking here about the first report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry entitled High-Level Radioactive Waste in Canada: The Eleventh Hour. Quite apart from the rules, this report should have an early response because of its importance. I regret to say that one can only wonder why the Government has not been able to table such a response in view of the importance of the subject matter of the committee report.

Equally serious is the seeming unwillingness of the Government to live within the rules. These are rules which I have often characterized not only as part of parliamentary reform but rules for which the Government takes credit for that reason.

We are dealing with an effort by the Government to suspend the rules, but at least in that case, which we do not accept, the Government is waiting until the House agrees, if it ever happens, to a motion to suspend the rules and do something other than is what is provided for in the rules. Here, with respect to the failure to file a response to the report of the Standing Committee on Environment and Forestry, the Government is simply ignoring the rules, not even seeking and obtaining the agreement of the House in an effort to do something for which the rules do not provide. I regret very much that I have to bring to your attention this breach of the rules. I hope the Government will realize that it has the same obligation to live within the rules, unless and until they are properly changed. It has not done so. This is another deplorable act by the Government.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if one were to examine the record I think one would find that in almost all cases the Government has met the deadline of 150 days. I am advised that this report is in the final throes of preparation and that it should be tabled in the House shortly.

At all times we have tried to meet this requirement. Unfortunately, due to the complexity of this report, we were unable to meet the requirements of the rules. I assure my hon. friend that it was not a wilful matter. It was simply that we wanted to get the best reply possible to a very comprehensive committee report. Therefore, I submit that it is correct that we are in breach of the rules, but I think it is the exception rather than the rule and I can assure the House that it will be tabled shortly.

Mr. Speaker: I want to tell the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) that the point is accepted by the Government. This has happened before once previously. I think it is fair to say, as the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) has said, that it is an exception rather than the rule. However, I urge upon Ministers and all their officials to note that this rule is there with the consent and support of both sides of the House. I would ask that every effort be made to ensure that it is complied with.

I might also say that if it cannot be complied with for some legitimate reason, the appropriate step to take is to have some discussion with the committee that asked for the response. That is a fundamental courtesy. I would hope that that procedure would be followed.

I might also say for the edification of Hon. Members and the public that is listening, that while the rule does require a response within 150 days, the rule does not say anything about what the Speaker ought to do if that response is not made. Perhaps that is something that might be looked at by others at another time.

In any event, the matter that has been raised is legitimate. The Government has quite quickly and appropriately conceded that it is in breach. The word of the Minister is that the Government is working as fast as it can to deliver the report. I think that closes the matter.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETITIONS

THE THREAT OF NUCLEAR-POWERED SHIPS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition from a number of Canadians, mostly from Salt Springs Island, who are concerned about the danger of accidents from nuclear-powered or nuclear-armed ships in Canadian ports. They point out that this is a threat to the environment and Canadian citizens. They call upon the Government not to purchase nuclear-powered submarines for Canada.

ABORTION—SUPREME COURT OF CANADA DECISION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition signed by almost 600 residents of the Borough of East York, the City of Toronto and the City of Scarborough in Metropolitan Toronto, emanating from the great efforts of Mrs. Mary Kierans and generally from the parishes of St. Dunstan, St. Bridgets and Canadian Martyrs.

It relates to the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Canada regarding abortions, and calls upon Parliament to define human life as being created at the moment of conception and to reflect that in any newly created law.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Madam Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106 with respect to the proposed Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. It is particularly apropos considering the number of Canadians who were previously supportive of that deal and are now turning against it.

These petitioners are from my area and from other parts of southwestern Ontario.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I have a petition signed by residents of the City of Thunder Bay which shows that schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada, costing Canadian society more than $3 billion in direct health care or other support costs.

They further say that recent research findings, including those obtained in Canada, show the illness to be a biochemical brain disorder, in part caused by a genetic malfunction.

Whereas schizophrenic patients, relatives and friends desperately hope that a cure and method of prevention can be found as soon as possible, but Canada's research's efforts are very limited in this area, they call upon Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in the future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A DAY OF THE CHRONICALLY ILL

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Madam Speaker, I too have a petition signed by many citizens, mostly from my riding, but also from neighboring ridings, who, considering that many chronically ill people in institutions are abandoned by their families, that the movement for the rights of the chronically ill wants to make the public aware of this indifference and that a date written on the calendar would help families remember their sick and plan visits to them, ask Parliament to designate the first Sunday after Easter as the day for the chronically ill every year in Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 320, 330, 338, 342 and 345.

[Text]

PRIVATIZATION OF AIR CANADA

Question No. 320—Ms. Jewett:

Since September, 1984, has Air Canada commissioned public opinion surveys or polls concerning the sale or privatization of Air Canada and if so (a) (i) at what time (ii) at what cost (iii) by which pollster were these polls or surveys undertaken (b) what were the findings of the polls or surveys?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: The information requested is of a proprietary nature.

REMOVAL OF CANADIAN TROOPS FROM EUROPE

Question No. 330—Mr. Blackburn (Brant):

Since September 17, 1984, have Ministers of the Government discussed with any official or representative of any NATO-member Government the removal of any Canadian troops stationed in Europe and, if so, which Ministers and, in each case (a) on what dates (b) with (i) which representatives or officials of (ii) which governments (c) what response was received?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Canadian Defence Ministers have held discussions with their NATO counterparts since 1984 as part of the defence policy review. The outcome of such discussions was reflected in the Defence White Paper. You will appreciate that national security considerations and the confidentiality of ministerial discussions preclude the provision of details of discussions with foreign governments.

WOMEN'S PROGRAM

Question No. 338—Ms. Dewar:

1. Since the tabling in November 30, 1987 of the Secretary of State's response to the report of the Standing Committee on Secretary of State regarding the Women's Program, have any women's groups received multi-year operational funding and, if so (a) what is the total number of such groups (b) what are their names (c) in each case, what is the length of the period for which the funding was received?

2. Since April, 1987, have any publications received funding from the Women's Program of the Secretary of State Department and, if so, which publications and, in each case, what amounts did they receive?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism)): 1. (a) (b) and (c) Multi-Year Operational Funding. As indicated in the Government's response to the report of the Standing Committee on Secretary of State, multi-year operational funding will be introduced into the Women's Program.

The 1988-89 fiscal year is a transition year for the implementation of the renewed Women's Program. Multi-year operational funding will be operationalized in the next fiscal year, that is 1989-1990. Therefore no multi-year operational funding has yet been awarded.

2. The Women's program has funded the following publications from April 1, 1987 to May 2, 1988:

Name of Publication	Amount
Éditions Communiqu'elles	$ 4,265
Éditions Communiqu'elles	$ 7,000
La Parole Métèque	$15,000
Briarpatch Inc.	$ 3,800
Perspective Newspaper	$24,500
Tiger Lily	$30,000
Women Healthsharing	$67,745

TRIP TO NORTH POLE

Question No. 342—Mr. Boudria:

1. Did the Minister of Energy travel to the North Pole on or about April 25, 1988, and, if so, what was the (a) total distance travelled (b) total cost for travel (c) cost for lodging (d) cost for hospitality, if any?

2. What was the (a) name (b) function and purpose of each person accompanying the Minister on this trip?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In so far as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is concerned: 1. Yes, on April 25, 1988. (a) 8,800 miles, (b) $8,000, (c) $125 (lodging cost for one night for the Minister and his communications advisor), (d) None.

2. (a) Bob Evans, communications advisor. (b) Mr. Evans' function on the trip was to handle media relations between the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and the group of more than 30 journalists who travelled to the North Pole, including representatives of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Toronto Star, Pravda, Izvertia, Tass, Novosti, and others from the United States, Japan, Italy, France and several East European countries.

SOUTH MORESBY—EXPLORATION BY DIAMOND RESOURCES

Question No. 345—Mr. Caccia:

1. Was the Government notified of an intention of the Government of British Columbia to issue an exploration permit to Diamond Resources for their holdings on South Moresby and, if so (a) on what date (b) what employee or member of the Government was notified (c) was the notification made by (i) telephone (ii) letter (iii) meeting (iv) another means and, if so, which?

2. Did the Government reply to the Government of British Columbia and, if so (a) was the response made by (i) letter and, if so, what was the text (ii) other means and, if so, what was the substance of the message (b) what employee or member of the government authorized the delivery of the message (c) on what date was the response (i) approved (ii) forwarded?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes. (a) March 21, 1988, (b) Director General, western region, Canadian Parks Service, Department of the Environment, (c) (iv) by form letter.

2. Yes. (a) (ii) By telephone. When the federal parks official spoke to the B.C. mines official, it was determined that exploration drilling, not mining, was being proposed and that the exploration was to occur on valid claims to be excluded from the proposed parks and under provincial jurisdiction. It was also learned that it was to occur on an area of former mining activity and that there would be no new disturbance. On the basis of this and on the understanding that the application would be reviewed by other resource agencies and that in accordance with the B.C. Mines Act, special terms and conditions would be established on the permit, and a performance bond would be required to ensure there would be no significant environmental impact, the parks official indicated that he would not be submitting any comments. No approval for the drilling was given nor was it requested.

(b) Special Advisor, western regional office, Canadian Parks Service, Department of the Environment, (c) (i) April 13, 1988, (ii) April 13, 1988.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration relating to amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof; and the amendments of Mr. Marchi (p. 16341), of Mr. Friesen (p. 16354) and of Mr. Heap (p. 16534).

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When debate was interrupted, there were five minutes left in the question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech.

• (1220)

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I simply want to respond to the comments raised by the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly) who said that I was trying to give the wrong impression about Bill C-55. To review briefly what I said in that speech, I talked about the two traditions that there are in Canada. There is a tradition of openness and of welcome to strangers and to refugees, and another tradition which, unfortunately, we share to some extent, of being more fearful and closed toward people with differences.

I highlighted the comments of the Hon. Member for Surrey-White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) in the debate last week wherein he talked about the need to protect Canada against people who had certain ways of thinking that had arisen in the last 150 years and with whom he did not happen to agree.

I talked about the lack of access in Bill C-55 to a full hearing before a person is denied refugee status. I talked about the lack of an appeal process. I talked about the fact that we still have this possibility of sending someone back to a third country, and yet we do not have any real guarantee that he or she will receive adequate treatment in that third country.

The Hon. Member for Gatineau talked about real refugees as being those who are in refugee camps somewhere else in the world and that that is where Canada should obtain its refugees from. The fact is that refugees do not originate in refugee camps. They appeal to some country for refugee status and are placed in camps. Canada in the past has often been able to pick and choose which refugees we wish to accept. But there have always been two streams of refugees who would come to Canada. There were those who would be in refugee camps where we would go and select certain refugees who had come to Canada. There were those who themselves would come and appear on our front doorstep as it were, claiming refugee status.

This is where the problem has been, when a number of people have claimed refugee status, some of them being bogus claimants, and we did not have an adequate system for dealing with that. Thus we have built up a backlog of people who are claimants for refugee status, some legitimate and a great many of whom we all admit are not legitimate.

What the Government has done over the last number of years, beginning with the Liberal Government, has been inadequate to deal with this situation. The Liberal Government appointed a royal commission under Rabbi Plaut to investigate this matter. He brought in a very good report in 1985. When the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration studied the report it brought in another report that contained some very good recommendations. They would have resulted in a much shorter, more expeditious process, but it would still have been a fair process for refugee claimants, a process which would have given them full access to a hearing within Canada. They would also have a fair appeal process.

The Government did not choose to act on that report. Instead, it brought in Bill C-55 which, as I pointed out earlier, does not have access to a full impartial hearing by a refugee determination board. It does not have any possibility of an adequate appeal. It is on that basis that the Government is really closing down this second stream of refugees so that it will be very difficult for people, particularly from Latin America, to come to Canada and claim refugee status. The great majority of refugees who come and present themselves to Canada asking for asylum come from Central and South America. I refer to legitimate refugees. We have had some bogus refugee claimants who have flown in here from other parts of the world. That issue needs to be addressed.

In trying to address that situation we have practically shut off this second stream of refugees. As the Hon. Member said, we should be getting all our refugees from refugee camps. That is one stream of refugees, but we still have to retain the openness of Canada to people who come to our doorstep asking for refugee asylum.

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to rise in this debate on Bill C-55 in order to speak with my colleagues in support of an amendment to the Bill as it has come back from the other place, and amendments from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), as well, which are very limited attempts in a Bill that is so bad in many sections. They are worthy attempts to try to restore something of the humanity that is required in our refugee legislation.

I note that the Parliamentary Secretary is present in the House. I trust that he will be with us a little while longer. I, too, would like to say something about the debate that took place here last Friday in which he articulated some thoughts about the kind of supervision that we should be providing at the borders in order to be sure that we did not bring into the country and find settled among us as neighbours and eventually as fellow Canadians persons who might have one dangerous notion or another.

There was an exchange of views. In particular I am thinking of the response of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), in which he suggested that what the Parliamentary Secretary was really suggesting would require thought police sitting at the borders looking for traces of nihilism, existentialism, particularly Christian existentialism, and persons who believe in dialectical materialism, and so on. That was a fair comment. It was a most appropriate response by my colleague to the suggestions of the Parliamentary Secretary.

I trust that he is listening since he has stepped out of the Chamber. I do not want to transgress the rules. However, I hope most devoutly that I have his ear since he and I are both, as it happens, of Mennonite origin. We happen neither of us to find our homes in Mennonite churches these days, having made other choices, as we are free to do in Canada. However, I confirmed with him earlier this day that his ancestors had come to Canada during the 1870s. His spouse's ancestors had come in before the Great War, around the turn of the century. That may perhaps give him a less keen appreciation of exactly what he was pointing to in his suggestions about people's ideas.

As I told him, I happen to combine the two traditions among Mennonites in Canada. My mother's ancestors, too, arrived in the migration to Manitoba in the 1870s. There, they faced the rigors of pioneering in the southern part of that province. My father's ancestry is that of the 1920s migration to Canada, refugees from Soviet Russia who were very happy to have escaped the Bolshevik revolution and what followed from it. They escaped with their lives although they were affected in health by the rigors of those years.

The fact of the matter is that it was a near thing that they got to Canada because, following the Great War of 1914-18, there was in Canada a fair amount of aversion to Mennonites. After all, they have a belief in conscientious objection. They do not want to participate in war. They seek alternatives to service in the army, navy and air force. That particular principle, the aversion to taking part in war and joining in the war effort against the empires of central Europe, aroused a great deal of reaction among neighbours of the Mennonites in Canada. It aroused a reaction which reached such a pitch that the Government of Canada decided to exclude Mennonites from migration to this country.

In the 1920s a new Government came to power after the unionist Government was defeated in 1921. The new Government happened to be Liberal and, to its credit, it recognized the need for agricultural settlers. It was busy settling the veterans and the soldiers who were returning from the front, but it also saw the need for other farmers. That Government decided to allow Mennonites to migrate, but it imposed a restriction which affected the life of more than one young Mennonite man for all his lifetime, and that was very much my father's experience.

The Mennonites who came to Canada in the 1920s were required to stay on the land. For many of them that might have been quite a satisfactory restriction of experience, and they may have been quite content to farm as their ancestors had done in the Ukraine, in East Prussia, and all the way back to Friesland. For others that was not something that was easily accepted. I know that my father would have preferred to have been an engineer, or work with machinery. In fact, after almost 30 years of farming in southern Manitoba he sold his farm and bought a welding shop in the Town of Carmen. He spent the last four or five years of his working life blissfully happy, overworked, and not charging enough for his labours, I am quite certain, but blissfully happy working with machinery and helping farmers with the repair of their machinery, and other welding work.

From the 1920s, the prejudices of the Great War, through to the experience of one Mennonite Canadian in the 1960s and 1970s we have the consequences of prejudice expressed in the law of Canada, the regulations, and the requirements laid on Canadians. I do not know if this particular requirement was legislated or made a regulation. The fact that the Government had made this a condition of the return to migration was sufficient for most of the Mennonites. They are honourable people, and if that was the commitment that they had given, then that was what they were going to do in Canada, or at least they would do so for 30 or 40 years and perhaps eventually, when there was no possibility of the farm being continued in the family, like my father, decided to do something else.

I use this particular experience at some length to illustrate to the Parliamentary Secretary that to suggest dangerous notions is something that he should be profoundly uneasy about doing. If his ancestors did not face that type of prejudice on the part of fellow Canadians, others of his ethnocultural community did. He should certainly know better than to suggest that Canada wants to put thought police at the borders to check people out to ensure that they will not be a danger to the country.

In this context, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has served up similar fears to us in the last month in reaction to another community in Canada, the Canadian Sikh community. I wish to say very carefully on that particular point that to have the law enforcement agencies of Canada ensuring that the law is not broken, to ensure by one means or another that Canadians are not involved in support of violence in Canada or elsewhere and that those who participate in violence are punished, are all necessary things for the appropriate agencies of the Canadian Government to carry out.

But to suggest that because someone has lived with terrible experiences or lived in terrible situations and has come to a certain view of the world, and that that person should not have the right to come to Canada or should be stopped from coming into this country, because presumably those ideas are so ingrained that they will continue to work in that person's mind and make him a threat to this country, is surely to misunderstand the psychology of practically all persons. It is to miss the key point that people are driven to desperate views of the world, to desperate measures by circumstances in which they see no other way of dealing with it.

In this country we provide constitutional means. We allow freedom of assembly. We allow freedom of speech. We expect persons to use those means to express their viewpoints. We are opposed to ostracizing any group. We are profoundly opposed in law to guilt by association. We want to allow people the opportunity to seek the objectives that they are prepared to state with clear face, without having to blush or be embarrassed about their goals. I mean by that goals that can be stated in a meeting without embarrassment. They should be able to pursue those goals by legitimate means, and we are not involved in questioning the thoughts or philosophies involved here.

I am sorry that I do not have the opportunity to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), who is, after all, an ordained minister of the Church of Canada, whether he had some further thoughts. He cited the Old Testament to splendid purpose in supporting the necessity to offer refuge to those in danger of life and limb. I would have liked to ask him what his further observations were on the attitude of someone who thinks that ideas must be kept out, and presumably that means keeping out persons who may hold these ideas, and that we might as a consequence see lives sacrificed. We might see a person suffering loss of limb or loss of life, as is all too possible in country after country these days, simply because we are suspicious of the ideas held by some persons or perhaps even political Parties in that country that they have come to in desperate response to the terrible circumstances imposed on them.

Perhaps the Parliamentary Secretary will respond to those observations. I expect he is with us in ear as well as in spirit. He may have some observations of his own on the suggestion that it is bad ideas that we will keep out without regard to the persons who happen to hold those ideas, and that somehow human life, which I have no doubt he would hold very sacred, would be maimed or lost because he is preoccupied with ideology. That tells us a good deal about attitudes that are behind the Government's Bill.

Perhaps you will remember, Madam Speaker, that about 17 months ago I had to say something in the House that was not pleasant and which aroused a certain amount of reaction when the then Minister for Employment and Immigration made a free-time speech on television in the Province of Quebec in which he was celebrating his own area, very close to where the by-election is currently under way, and he spoke of a region in which people are rather untouched by immigration and some of the other world realities. I suppose there is some truth to that, perhaps there is a great deal of truth to that. I do not think it is the total truth for the Lac St. Jean—Saguenay region of the Province of Quebec. No part of the country is free of persons from other continents of this world who have come to find refuge. I know there are multicultural organizations in that area to which the Minister might have been sensitive.

When the Minister went on to talk about an area that was demographically pure in population he aroused terrible fears in many people. I know very definitely that for members of Canada's Jewish community these were reminders of what had been said in the Nuremberg trials. What is most distressing is that requests from the Canadian Jewish Congress to withdraw those statements were not acted upon. I do not know what was in the Minister's mind in refusing to do so, but the fact that he insisted on standing by those statements for some reason of lack of support for any withdrawal on the part of his colleagues in the Quebec caucus of the Conservative Party, I find quite troubling, as I expect you would also, Madam Speaker, as someone who is very well acquainted with many members of that caucus.

The possibility of racism in Canada, supported and expressed in legislation such as this, is something people of many backgrounds across this country find intensely troubling. The woman who is now Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) cannot say that the constituency she represents in Metropolitan Toronto is free of the knowledge of the diversity of our country and the needs of people who are in danger of life and limb in other parts of the world. That makes it all the more distressing that she can become Minister, carry these Bills, and refuse to take up with her colleagues significant changes. Her comments in presenting the Bill are found in Hansard of June 3, 1988, page 16095. She said:

> These two vital Bills, which I consider a complementary package, have been considered from every possible angle by parliamentarians, non-governmental organizations, legal experts, the media and many others. As a Government, we have encouraged the scrutiny and appreciate the efforts and sincere concerns of those who have contributed to the examination of these Bills.

She does not say that practically every person who appeared and practically every organization which made a representation to the committee—and I have this on the authority of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Spadina—and he can correct me if I am exaggerating—was opposed to this Bill. Practically every presentation was profoundly critical of what the Government was doing. How can one, in all honour and with any kind of integrity, say the words I have just read and not recognize that this process of consultation was profoundly critical of the legislation and called for fundamental changes which the Government has refused to carry through? How is it possible for an honourable Minister to do that?

We have lost a great deal in time and we have suffered damage in the attitudes of Canadians by reason of what the Government has done. The Government promised a campaign against racism in the fall of 1986. One would expect that sometime in 1987 it would be accomplished. But instead of such a campaign being undertaken, there was a whipping up of feeling, after a ship of Sikh refugee claimants landed on the Nova Scotia coast. The Canadian Government whipped up that feeling and there were incredible responses. I lived in astonishment and distress for days having heard what the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said in apparent acceptance of the Government's suggestion that these people should be sent away. It took days before he changed his stance. Such a yielding to racism in this country, may I say with care, is not surprising coming from someone who represents a Vancouver riding, because on the West Coast these feelings of concern about Asians coming to Canada have existed for a long, long time. I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would eschew any such motive in himself, but that was just one demonstration of the effect of the Government's actions.

We have seen more than a year pass without anything like a campaign against racism. The present Minister for Multiculturalism promised, trying for some support for the Government in the context of the upcoming election, whenever it happens to be, more money for multiculturalism, and a good chunk of that money, a couple of million dollars, perhaps, will be put into the area of work on race relations. This Government shamefully neglected race relations for most of the time from September 17, 1984. It left a couple of people in the area, but there was no program, no strategy, no resources to do anything. Now when the next election draws near, after the Government has done its damage with this legislation, it will belatedly spend some money in this area to try, if it can, to rescue things. It is terribly late to do that.

All those persons across the country who recognize what the Government is doing with Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, and who have been hoping that at some point the presentations by all those groups, by churches and by those concerned about refugees from wherever they may come, those persons who want to work in the Canadian tradition that brought us the Nansen Medal, those who have been waiting for some evidence that the Government has changed its mind, will not be impressed by more spending on race relations. They want real action in which this Government will arrest the feelings of racism that exist in the country and return it to the traditions of openness about which my colleagues, the Hon. Member for Spadina and the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly), have already spoken so very well earlier this day.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I was a little surprised to hear the Member saying that the citizens of British Columbia for some reason are more racist than citizens of other parts of the country. I wonder if the Member could give us his reasons for stating that?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon)): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question. This is the sort of thing that should never be done easily or loosely. It always deserves to be done carefully. I speak, of course, from my background as a teacher of Canadian history, Associate Professor of History at Lakehead University, on political leave, and also as someone who has lived and taught in the interior of British Columbia. I want to be very careful because the feelings of prejudice and racism have existed in many parts of Canada. I respect the desire of my colleague from southern Ontario not to have anything said unfairly. I think the fact remains, perhaps because British Columbians live across the Pacific from Asia and because Japanese immigrants and, before that, Chinese workers who built the railway, settled there, may have had more experience with Asians on the Pacific coast. I think of a man who was one of British Columbia's Lieutenant Governors, James Dunsmuir, whose family owned large coal mines on Vancouver Island. The Dunsmuirs were capable of bringing in labour that could be discriminated against, as in law one could in British Columbia. They used that labour to break strikes by British-born workers in those communities, and that, of course, built up terrible feelings of resentment. So there are these factors in the history of the province to be noted.

If there is any question about the validity of suggesting that British Columbia may be more racist, it would surely be seen in the laws of the province that apply to citizenship and voting rights and so on. After all, these were laws that, for a long time, were left to the provinces to establish. The Canadian Government has not always filled areas of its own jurisdiction very well, and in matters of voting, when a province discriminated deliberately against Asians, denying them voting rights and citizenship, in those professions where one could not enter unless one were a citizen able to vote, this exclusion actually closed doors. This was discrimination in law, British Columbia style.

The last thing anyone wants in these areas is to have any possibility of having an attitude of being holier than thou. I think one can quite fairly recognize in British Columbia's history the whipping up of feeling against Japanese Canadians particularly that led eventually to the action in 1942 of uprooting a community, seizing property, selling it off for whatever and relocating people into detention and work camps et cetera. Japanese Canadian redress is one of the final expressions of the racism that prevailed in B.C. to which a Canadian Government tragically yielded in the midst of war, or which, in retrospect, we would surely say was against racism, first of all the racism of the Nazi system.

Mr. Manly: I have a brief comment on the same subject, Madam Speaker. I remember once when Robin Sears, who at the time was the federal secretary for the New Democratic Party, and a grandson of Colin Cameron, a distinguished Member of Parliament for Nanaimo—Cowichan—The Islands, asked his mother what happened when his grandfather had opposed the expropriation of Japanese property and the expulsion of Japanese from the coast of British Columbia. She described how she and her sister were spat upon by other children in the community and that their father, Colin Cameron, lost the next election. There was a price to be paid at that time for standing up against racial intolerance. That is certainly not exclusive to British Columbia. I think it is probably a fact that people are most intolerant of those next to them.

I was brought up in a situation where there were no blacks. I never learned to be intolerant of blacks. There were very few Asians on the Prairies where I grew up. I did not have that kind of prejudice. We tend to have prejudices built into us when we are face to face with a situation. I think what the Hon. Member is saying is that we have to stand up against it.

Mr. McCurdy: I am here!

Mr. Manly: We have blacks next to us now, Madam Speaker, but not in sufficient numbers, I might add.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manly: We have prejudices that have built up. We have to learn to overcome them and have policies that stand against them rather than go with the flow of prejudice.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) want to respond?

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I will cheerfully accept someone else's question or response. I appreciate the comments from my colleague.

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, I appreciate the historical perspective which the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) has given, but I understood the Member to say that currently, today, British Columbia citizens are more racist. He was not talking about 1942 or 1932. Could he give some proof of that?

The trouble I have with that type of interpretation is that if we take the attitude as Canadians that, yes, racism exists in Canada but it is off in British Columbia or somewhere else, we tend to neglect looking in our own backyards. I did understand the Member to say that the citizens of Vancouver specifically were potentially more racist than citizens in other communities. I would like the Hon. Member to clarify that point.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question she put temperately and with care. What I said was one of those asides. It came in the course of observations about reactions of various persons, specifically the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition who, for some days anyway last summer, left us with the impression that he was in support of sending shiploads of Sikhs back to wherever if they arrived on our coasts. I find that troubling. I speak for Canadians,we do not want any Party including the governing Party to be committed to any such view. Having expressed concern about what seemed to be his acceptance of the kind of campaign being whipped up by the Government, a concern I will say from which he did withdraw—he did not hold with that stand in the long run, it was just that period of time—what I said in passing was in recognition of the fact that he is of course the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra.

Given B.C. traditions of the past, this perhaps was not quite so surprising given whatever he may have been hearing in his constituency office, but it might be worth recognizing that even in these days the maintaining of human rights in the Province of British Columbia is difficult and it is made more difficult by reason of the Government's lack of support for it. After all, the Human Rights Commission in that province has been abolished. If that does not suggest in the ruling Social Credit Party circles some kind of lack of respect for human rights of varying sorts—I recognize the commissions do not just deal with complaints of racism—then I do not know what would.

I do know from conversations with Mr. Azis Khaki, who heads the Committee for Racial Justice in British Columbia, that that committee is currently making an effort to ensure that all of us are sensitive to ethnocultural and racial diversity and that our actions reflect those needs in the Province of British Columbia. That is a task for all of us and one in which the New Democratic Party in British Columbia joins, having of course in its membership a black member, a south Asian, and a native member in the caucus to reflect the province and to ensure that the New Democratic Party recognizes the need for action.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Madam Speaker, the reason I asked the specific questions of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) is that we have to get back to the main point, it being Bills C-55 and C-84. I see this not on the basis of a particular political philosophy, but it bothers me when I hear Canadians say we have racism, but it is somewhere else; "We have racism but it is not in my community. It is out in British Columbia" or somewhere else. It is quite clear that racism exists in every community. As Canadians I think all of us have to recognize that the existence of racism is not isolated to a particular part of the country. It is not isolated to British Columbia, albeit there may be certain government policies of the B.C. Government that may not work to reduce racism. But it disturbs me when a Member suggests that a particular part of the country is more racist than another part.

Mr. McCurdy: There are all kinds of studies to confirm that.

Ms. Copps: If there are studies that confirm it, maybe the Member can table them. That is the question I asked the Member from Thunder Bay—Nipigon. Specifically, he referred to Vancouver when he said that Vancouver was more racist than other communities.

Mr. McCurdy: That is not the question at all.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member over there was not here. I heard it. I wondered whether there were some specific studies referred to today to outline that. I am not familiar with them. Maybe I should reconsider my position. I do not think any community is blameless.

Mr. McCurdy: He did not say that either.

Ms. Copps: Unfortunately, when we tend to point the finger at somebody else we reduce the capacity to look within ourselves as Members of Parliament. Every person in this room is probably carrying a certain amount of prejudice—

Mr. McCurdy: Table those documents.

Ms. Copps: —either prejudice against other persons whether they be on the basis of race, creed, religion, colour, gender, et cetera. Many of the people in this Chamber probably face potential racism themselves whether they be Francophones working in an Anglophone atmosphere, women working in a predominately male atmosphere or men working in a predominately female atmosphere. For us to tackle the problem of racism, we have to look within ourselves.

I say that because by looking within ourselves we have to look at the content of this legislation before us today. In particular, in dealing with Bills C-55 and C-84 it is pretty clear that the Government has responded to concerns in a racist way. We recall that last summer there was supposed to have been an emergency going on because a couple of hundred refugees were seeking solace and refuge on our shores.

I think many people had hoped that there would be some fundamental changes to Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 when the Hon. Member for St. Paul's (Mrs. McDougall) took over the portfolio of Employment and Immigration. I thought she would return with legislation which would exclude the possibility of turning a boat away. I would have thought that she would have done that because in a period of war this country, not Vancouver, not Toronto, not a specific community, responded in a racist way by turning away a ship full of Jewish refugees who were seeking solace here. Eventually that ship was sent back and those people went to their deaths. That is a tragedy that should hang on the consciences of all Canadians, because that decision was made by a Government representing the people of Canada. We have made mistakes, and that one was a deadly and racist mistake that resulted in sending people to their deaths.

Why should we today, through a new piece of legislation, grant future Ministers the right to commit the same deadly errors that were committed in the past? Unless amendments are accepted, the Minister will actually be able to give responsibility for such a decision to someone else. A Minister or even a civil servant would be able to decide, on behalf of the people of Canada, to turn away a ship full of people.

I do not think anyone is suggesting that owners of ships who trade in human flesh and are trying to milk desperate people for hundreds and even thousands of dollars should not be dealt with, but surely the best way to achieve the dual objectives of opening the arms of our country to refugees and at the same time making sure that those who exploit them are dealt with in a severe fashion is a different way than the one proposed by this Bill. We can do it in a better and more humane way.

We can achieve those goals by permitting those who arrive on a boat to land in the same way as any other refugee. At the same time, we can bring in legislation which permits the seizure and sale of ships so that those who actually try to trade in human flesh will realize that they cannot sell passage to desperate people and walk away from it.

The owner of the ship that came in last summer walked away with hundreds of thousands of dollars. He was never dealt with. If we had seized that ship, fined the owner, and perhaps imprisoned him, that would have been the right way to deal with the culprit without victimizing the victims who are genuine refugees or, at the very least, people who have the right to be heard. These people had the right to plead their case without having a political decision being made by a Minister responding to the hot political climate of that particular summer. There should not have been a sudden determination that anyone who comes to this country of a different colour or race might not be desirable and therefore may be sent back.

I do not think we want to repeat the racist mistakes that Canada made in the past and for which we are all responsible. If we pass this legislation as it is currently written, we will be conferring on future Governments the ability to commit the same deadly errors that were committed when we sent a boatload of Jewish refugees to their deaths during war. I do not think we want to do that.

I do not think the Government has thought through the impact of the legislation it is asking Canadians to accept. All Canadians are proud of the fact that Canada is the only country that has actually been awarded international recognition for our contribution to the resettlement of refugees from Vietnam. Individuals have been recognized over the years, but Canada is the only country to have been awarded such international recognition.

With these two pieces of legislation we will destroy, in one fell swoop, Canada's reputation as a country with a humane policy toward people who are desperate, people who are without a homeland, people who are so desperate that they will pay someone thousands of dollars to get on a ship that may lead to nowhere. These people could be put on a life-raft out in the middle of the ocean, but they are so desperate because they are homeless and stateless that they are willing to take that chance. As a native born Canadian, I cannot even conceive of the desperation that I would feel if I would have to pack up my family—

Mr. Nickerson: Sit on this side; you will know what desperation feels like after listening to this nonsense.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says that if I sit on that side I will know what desperation feels like. I can understand how he feels, given the potential results on Monday.

I cannot imagine how desperate some people must be that they would pack up their families, pay thousands of dollars to someone who at the very least has a questionable business background, and head off on a boat going God knows where, maybe nowhere, potentially to their deaths. Yet we are being asked to pass legislation which will tell those people that they will not even be given a fair hearing in this country. That is one provision of the Bill which absolutely must be changed.

The second area of concern deals with the safe third country concept. Because the Government does not wish to give potential refugees the opportunity to have their cases heard in our country, they will be sent to a third country.

The Government believes that the list of safe third countries should be drawn up by a committee which ultimately reports to the Minister. First, I would suggest that the safe third country concept is not a functional concept in the turbulent political time in which Canada finds itself in relation to other countries. Let us take the United States, as an example.

Most of us would consider the United States a safe country. However, is it safe for a refugee who comes from Central America, lands in Canada, and is then sent to the United States? Do we have any kind of guarantee that the United States will not send that person back to a place like El Salvador where he may in fact be facing certain death, or to a place like Chile where people have disappeared by the thousands? What kind of a guarantee do we have that in the turbulent political climate in the Americas, a safe third country concept should include the United States?

If it were left up to the Minister, with the so-called advisory committee, the Minister would be under a tremendous amount of political pressure to include the United States as one of the safe countries. We have a renewed, terrific relationship with the United States of America. Imagine what kind of a backlash there would be if we issued a list of safe third countries for refugees from Central America and the United States was absent from that list. Imagine what kind of pressure we would have from people like George Shultz and the President of the United States.

I do not think it is viable to suggest that the Minister who is subject to those kinds of political pressures should decide something like this about an issue we have tried to depoliticize. I do not think we want to place upon the Minister the responsibility for determining these so-called safe third countries. We would be setting a dangerous precedent. In very many instances what is a safe country to a Canadian is not necessarily a safe country to a potential refugee. That is another reason that this legislation, as it is currently drafted, is simply unworkable. The safe third country concept does not work. If the Minister is given the power to determine what constitutes a safe third country, the question will be a political one rather than a moral one.

The third area of the legislation which was not changed and with which we can absolutely not agree is that dealing with the Government's intention to provide an exclusion for a person who is "contrary to the public interest".

In other words, a refugee coming to this country can make application and say "I am a bona fide refugee; I have come to this country with nothing but the shirt on my back, my children, and my husband" or "my wife". The refugee determination process is set in motion and the refugee board can determine, after all the appropriate security checks, et cetera, that in fact the person is a bona fide refugee. Yet, the Government is reserving the right for an amendment for the exclusion of a person who is "contrary to the public interest".

It seems to me that that is exactly the kind of exception that we want to avoid. We have seen the case most recently of Santokh Singh. Indeed, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) may be called to report before the House because he refuses to appear before the committee and clear up the discrepancy of the refugee determination process as it relates to Santokh Singh.

Your Honour will recall that Mr. Singh went through the process. He in fact was cleared by the security people; he got clearance from CSIS as well as the general clearance carried out by the RCMP. He was also cleared by the refugee determination process. Then, all of a sudden, a foreign Government, which happened to disagree fundamentally with the political views of a minority in its own community, allegedly contacted the Minister and said that this person should not be allowed into Canada because it was not in the public interest.

Even though the refugee determination process, in an independent fashion, had given clearance to this individual, by virtue of a foreign Government calling and saying that the person was not to be allowed in because he was "contrary to the public interests", the person can be sent away.

There are constituents in my own constituency of Hamilton East from the Ukraine who may not be the most beloved former citizens of their own country from which they were forced to flee and which was taken over by the U.S.S.R. According to the amendment in this legislation the Soviet Government could call up and say "I don't think Zenon Kramer should be allowed into your country because he might be working contrary to the public interest". I am sure that Ivan Boyko, the current President of the National Congress of the Ukrainian Canadians, is not working in the public interest of the Government of the Soviet Union.

Do we think that by bringing in a Bill which permits the Minister to override the independent findings of a refugee board and respond to the alleged concerns of foreign Governments we will be able to maintain the independence, depoliticization, and integrity of the refugee determination process?

We do not think that is possible. That is why we cannot support the concept of an overriding amendment which would allow any Minister, if the political climate gets hot, notwithstanding what the refugee board may have determined or the security clearance of CSIS and the RCMP may have determined, to reserve the right to get rid of a person if a foreign Government calls up and says that we should. The Minister would be able to disregard the due process which has been the hallmark of the refugee determination process in Canada.

There are certainly three major concerns, some with which I have dealt. One is the safe third country concept. The weak appeal process is also of extreme concern. People who come to Canada to make refugee applications have approximately 72 hours in which to apprise themselves of the fact that they may be able to appeal the case. That was, in fact, extended from the original plan of 24 hours. In three days they may not be able to have access to counsel. They may not learn what opportunities they may have to appeal a decision of the Government. In fact, it seems to me that it is a fundamental flaw in the Bill to give them such a short pre-screening period and immediately to ship them out to the so-called safe third country. I am very surprised—

I am quite disappointed, after more than 30 years of progress by the Canadian Government on human rights and refugee policy in Canada, that on the matter of Japanese Canadians that was just mentioned, all Canadians should be ashamed of what our Government has done. Madam Speaker, because my own daughter has a Japanese grandmother, according to the rules that were in effect during the Second World War, she could have been put in a prison camp by the Canadian Government. I think it is a disgrace for all Canadians that during the war, we reacted so strongly that we put bona fide Canadian citizens in prisons and concentration camps, just because they had a Japanese great-grandfather. They were put in a concentration camp for that. I do not want us to adopt retrograde policies that would allow us to turn back a ship. I think that the Bill as it stands is a step back, and Canadians and Members of the House should reject it.

[English]

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I wonder whether the Hon. Member could elaborate a bit upon why the Government has chosen to bring in such badly drafted legislation with regard to refugee determination. It is hard to understand why, when there is a need for an effective refugee system, the Government would bring in legislation which is condemned by a wide group of Canadians. Does the Hon. Member have any ideas about why the Government is bringing in this legislation?

Ms. Copps: Madam Speaker, often in Parliament we hear the Government complaining about opposition criticism and how we are too tough on the Government because we ask some pretty tough questions. In fact, the people who have spoken out against this Bill, including the two Parties in the Opposition, are not only political people.

Among non-governmental organizations which have spoken out is the Canadian Council for Refugees that is made up of 96 different groups. It has turned thumbs down on the legislation. The B'nai B'rith of Canada has said that the legislation is open to legal challenges because it is unconstitutional. The Coalition for a Just Refugee and Immigration Policy has condemned the process and condemned the Bill as politicization of the refugee process. In fact, the Canadian Bar Association, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Canadian Labour Congress, and the Canadian Ethnocultural Council all consider that this piece of legislation is so fraught with drafting problems that it will be snarled up in the courts for years.

Rather than passing the Bill and letting it be challenged in the courts, the better route to follow is for all Members on all sides of the House to make the necessary amendments, to respect the constitutional rights which have been invoked in the Charter, and to respect the opinion of not only the Opposition but many church organizations and community groups across the country which say that this Bill is simply going too far.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate. This is not the first time I have spoken on this legislation in the House, but it is necessary to keep debating it until the Government gets the message.

I was asking my colleague why the Government has brought Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, into this House. The legislation has been widely condemned. I conclude that the Government has brought in this legislation because it has been playing to the fear that people have about false refugee claimants and immigrants. It has been appealing to the mass audience in trying to score political points. That was evidenced by the fact that Parliament was called back into emergency session last summer to deal with the question of immigrants in response to the headlines in the newspapers.

The Government is playing a mean spirited type of politics with refugee policy. It could follow an alternative. It could take advantage of the democratic process rather than play to mass audiences through the media and try to take advantage of fear about false refugee claimants and of the frustration felt by immigrants who are trying to reunify their families by bringing relatives to this country legitimately while others are trying to come in through the back-door.

Instead, the Government could implement a generous and genuine policy of family reunification, which it has promised time and time again. There are many immigrant groups in my riding with a genuine need to reunify families in this country. It should do the hard work that is necessary to develop an effective, fair, and generous refugee determination process. No Government can do that by itself. It must conduct public hearings to deal with the current refugee determination process which is clearly ineffective. It takes years to process people through that system. After two years, even if someone were found not to be a legitimate refugee, he has already begun to be integrated into the country and it is difficult to remove him. There are many other reasons the present system does not work. There must be a consultative process to develop a workable and generous refugee determination process.

The Government should produce a paper on its refugee determination policy on which groups concerned about refugee issues can comment. Those groups in our society working with refugee claimants on a daily basis should have input into the policy so that we can develop a process that will work, that will screen out those trying to come in by the back-door and take advantage of the generosity of Canadians, while providing safe haven for legitimate refugees whose lives are in danger for expressing their political views.

A refugee determination process must accomplish two goals. It must separate the wheat from the chaff so that the generosity of Canadians is not taken advantage of, while providing a safe refuge for genuine refugees.

An open door refugee claimant policy would only create a backlash in which Canadians would want to slam the door to prevent abuse of the system. Then we will have hobbled the possibility of establishing a real effective and generous refugee determination system.

The Government should take a democratic approach to the development of a refugee determination policy by allowing public discussion in which the Minister and interested groups can receive attention in the media. That would only be the beginning of the process. Real consultation could take place behind the scenes in which the Minister could have real dialogue with the church groups that work with refugee claimants, with lawyers who work with refugee claimants, with concerned citizens, as well as with members of the Opposition. For instance, the Minister could meet with our critic in order to get the benefit of his consideration in this area and thereby improve the legislation.

The Government has chosen not to do that. Instead, it has taken a much more traditional route of policy development, which is to seize a political opportunity. It has to announce action, strong action which will eradicate this abuse from the system. Therefore the development and the writing of the legislation is conducted behind closed doors. An announcement will come before the legislation is drafted. The call of Parliament will then come before the legislation is even ready. The Government will scramble to put something together. It does not have a real opportunity to meet with people to consider this matter in depth and to obtain some studied comments on the type of policy it is bringing forward.

In choosing to approach the refugee determination question from a political perspective, political in the sense of taking advantage of headlines and trying to get the attention of television cameras, the Government has lost the opportunity to obtain a genuinely democratic policy development process. It has lost the opportunity, thrown it away, to develop a policy in this very difficult area that could actually work, a policy that could combine both compassion and effectiveness.

I know that when the Government made announcements with regard to its legislation it added a footnote with respect to family reunification. It promised a more generous family reunification regime. I assume that it has done this because of what I have heard from people in my riding. I am sure that members of the Government hear the same thing in their ridings. When people from the immigrant communities in my riding go to the Department of Immigration to ask to have a member of their family come to join them, they tell me that it is like banging their head against a brick wall. I am told that the process is very slow and difficult. I know from the case work in my riding that when we seek information from the Department of Immigration to try to assist on some occasions we are successful and we can facilitate the process. However, it is an incredibly slow, cumbersome, and difficult process. There is a need to be more compassionate with regard to those people who are already in this country as immigrants. They are here. They are established. They want to live a decent and humane life. Part of achieving that is by having their whole family here rather than just parts of it.

Rather than the Government stating that it will do something about family reunification as an add-on to an announcement about refugees, it ought to take the whole matter very seriously. It ought to take the opportunity to do something real in the area and to be much more generous in terms of recognizing that families are the backbone of the country. The Government should realize that immigrants have made a great contribution to the country. If we want those immigrants who are here to enjoy the benefits of their own hard work, then we ought to allow them to bring their relatives here.

Rather than seeking to take advantage of headlines and rather than playing to people's fears, the Government ought to be performing some real policy development in the area of family reunification and in the area of developing an effective refugee determination process. In short, it ought to be governing the country. It ought to be developing policies that will work. It ought to be examining the policies that are there, recognizing where the policies do not work, and going through the process of developing a policy that can be effective. That is called governing.

If the present Government were to concern itself more with governing the country than it does with the public opinion polls and the latest headlines, I think it would do better politically. It would do much better in the public opinion polls in the direct result. However, when it seeks, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appears to be doing most of the time, to play to public opinion and to the headlines as well as to raising of the stature of the Government in the polls, it is seen to be doing just that. The people then simply refuses to give it their confidence. What is needed for the country is a Government that is committed to devising policies that are necessary to meet the problems the country faces.

If the Government were to set its agenda, recognize that we need to have an effective determination policy, and go about developing it, obviously it would receive criticism in the process as well as some publicity. Fundamentally it would build confidence among Canadians in their own capacities, intentions, and values. As an indirect result it would gain in popularity, if we can call it that, and in the polls.

Maybe one of the reasons it is so desperate to use every political opportunity in order to rise in the Gallup poll result is that it was elected on such a wave of public approbation. Members of the Government were so high in the Gallup polls when they were first elected that I am sure it was some sort of a record in polling history. They got so high that when they came crashing down to earth it must have been a pretty hard experience. Thus it desperately sought a quick-fix political answer to its desperate straits in the public opinion polls when what it ought to have been doing was concerning itself with governing the country. Having been elected its job was then to solve the problems that faced Canadians, or at least to face up to them and do the best it could about it.

There is one characteristic about the Government which stands out to a great many Canadians, simply that it does not appear to have a real agenda. It seems to go around like a ping-pong ball. It is battered this way and that. If it could ever establish a real agenda and follow, then people would have confidence in it and it would not have to take political advantage in the area of refugees and immigration.

When the Government was elected it said that it would husband the financial resources of the public. It said that it would be very careful with the way that it would spend money. In the last few days we have seen the Government throwing money around like proverbial drunken sailors. If we could have by-elections in every region of the country, then maybe all Canadians could benefit from this behaviour. What this demonstrates is the fact that the Government has no consistent direction. It just seeks political favour. What we need from the Government is a commitment to govern, to develop the policies that Canadians need and, most particularly, we need a policy with respect to refugee determination.

The hard work that it takes to meet with groups of people and to consult with them in regard to refugee determination legislation and to go through public debate is naturally a part of developing policy in a democratic society. That is what we need from the Government. We need a process that will work, that will be effective and efficient, and that will have compassion.

In light of the fact that so many groups with experience in refugee determination have condemned this legislation, I would ask the Government to withdraw the legislation and start over. It should with a White or Green Paper, throw out some ideas, consult, and start the long, hard work that is necessary to come up with a law that will work.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): In his comments the Hon. Member suggested that the Government should have done the work of refining Canada's immigration laws dealing with refugees far more carefully. It should not have pandered to whatever prejudices there might be in the country, at least as we see it, but there should have been a careful inquiry. A Green Paper would have encouraged that process. A White Paper would already spell out government policy. In both cases there is abundant opportunity for debate, as we are seeing these days with regard to the White Paper on Defence.

In the 1970s the Liberal Government followed that course with a Green Paper on immigration, eventually proposals in a Bill, and changes in law. Changes on the side of the refugee determination process were attacked at that time as carrying within them the seeds of their own destruction. The process was likely to become cumbersome in practice, and it would require a good deal of personnel. It was quite legalistic and with these characteristics it had the potential to bog down. At that time there was much criticism of it.

Could the Hon. Member comment on that aspect? The Hon. Member is the long-time encumbent of the riding of Winnipeg North Centre. Another Member who represented that riding is at the Table now. We have all joined in recognizing his eightieth birthday, in wishing him well in celebrating that, and in wishing him many more years of service to the Canadian people. Living in that constituency are refugees who have fled from one country or another in order to find refuge in Canada.

Could the Hon. Member tell us something about the potential of persons for adding to our nation? There have been reflections by the Parliamentary Secretary on the ideas that these people might have. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor has suggested that if the Parliamentary Secretary's ideas were to be followed we would need to have thought police at the border. Perhaps some of the persons in Winnipeg might be regarded as doubtful from the perspective of the Parliamentary Secretary. Yet, I imagine those persons make their own contribution to the City of Winnipeg and will become, or are already, good Canadian citizens who will strengthen our commitment to democracy and our devotion to the freedoms stated in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Could the Hon. Member provide some comments along those lines?

Mr. Keeper: It is clear that the people who come here as refugees, whether they are from Chile, the Philippines, or another country, are like Canadians. They are good people and like all of us they are unique individuals. Each of us is like a snowflake. We are unique. There are no two people alike. A person's fingerprint is his or her own, no one else's, even though there are now four or five billion people on this planet. Each of the people who come here is unique and has a unique contribution to make to Canada.

These refugees would prefer to stay in their own country and to have made their contribution there, but they did not have that option. Many of the people from Chile live in my riding. Even though they have been here for quite a few years now, they still think of Chile as home. They would like to see democracy return to Chile in order that they could return there.

In the meantime while they are here they are contributing together with other groups to the vitality of our community. We appreciate the uniqueness of each of them and the contribution they make. The fact that each is different and unique provides us with the challenge of understanding. We can appreciate differences in another person, celebrate and enjoy them. At the same time we understand that there is a demand, a requirement that Canadians understand someone who may be different. Of course we are all different and we are all unique.

People from the Philippines have a passionate commitment to democracy. I am sure all Canadians are aware of this fact; they can easily remember the bloodless revolution that took place in the Philippines. The people rose up against a dictatorship and were able to overthrow it and replace it with an electoral democracy. It is incredible witness to the power of the human spirit that, without guns, they were able to overthrow a brutal dictatorship that was abusing their country. Those people who are here in this country, and people from other parts of the world, have a tremendous contribution to make. Each and every one has a unique contribution to make and much to teach us about the democratic process. We enjoy the democratic process. It is worth while to have people here who have experienced dilatory dictatorships and great poverty in other counties. They bring an experience to our society that we do not have first hand. Therefore they enrich our life and at the same time challenge us to understand the differences among the people. In balance, we ought to come down upon the fact that these people make a unique and important contribution to our society, to our politics, and to our culture.

Mr. Heap: I have listened to the Hon. Member's remarks, and I would like him to enlarge on one aspect. He has shown that he has a great variety of people in his constituency in Winnipeg. He probably has had acquaintance with some people who might be considered not the most popular with the powers that be, but nevertheless perhaps are not in fact a danger. The amendment before us would replace the idea of excluding somebody from a chance to make a refugee claim because he or she is considered to be such that to allow a refugee claim would be contrary to the public interest, or to narrow that down to say that he or she would only be excluded if he or she were a danger to the public.

Would the Member comment on whether from his acquaintance with people in his constituency, and not of course to identify individuals, he can see some who might have been acceptable if they were being examined only as to whether they would be a danger to the public, but perhaps might have been unacceptable if they were being examined as to whether their entry into Canada or into refugee status would be contrary to the public interest? Can the Hon. Member reflect on that?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired, but I will allow the Hon. Member one minute to comment briefly.

Mr. Keeper: I must say that the phrase "contrary to the public interest" as a criterion for refusing or admitting a person to refugee status sounds to me like as very vague concept. If we are to have a refugee determination policy that is effective, that can draw the distinctions between someone who is in genuine need of refuge and haven those who are simply trying to come in the back-door, trying to take advantage of our refugee determination policy, we must have clear and effective criteria. The notion that a broad phrase like that could be abused is of great concern to many Canadians.

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to commence my remarks this afternoon by indicating to the Speaker and to the House that the essence of this Bill is as a result of a problem that commenced one year ago when boat loads of refugees landed on our shores in Atlantic Canada. At that time there was considerable public debate in the nation with respect to our existing refugee laws. As a result, last summer the Government recalled Parliament to deal with what it termed to be an emergency situation.

What has led us to debate the immigration laws and what has led us to begin the debate today in the final stages of a new refugee law? Perhaps one should go back to our roots as a nation and find ourselves in terms of an historical perspective with respect to the immigration policy Canada has developed since its birth 121 years ago.

I think most Canadians acknowledge that Canada has developed a reputation in the international community as a haven for refugees. Many people have immigrated to this country to build a new life consistent with the values we hold dear to ourselves. From a personal standpoint, I happen to believe that perhaps the reason Canada has such an enviable reputation in the international community is our tolerance for minorities.

I personally believe that our roots in terms of our treatment of minorities go back to the great battle of the Plains of Abraham. For the first time in history, the conqueror allowed the conquered to keep their own language, culture, and system of laws which was quite different from the British system. The French Canadians in Canada at that time accepted the Napoleonic Code of Laws, as they do today.

It was the beginning of Canada as a nation showing much tolerance for minorities. It was the beginning of the development of a reputation that Canada has justly acquired over the years as a country that is very tolerant toward minorities.

If we examine our immigration policy since 1867, we find that there were cycles or waves of immigration beginning in the late 1800s when a number of refugees and immigrants came from the Ukraine. That led to the expansion of Canada, particularly western Canada. In post war years Canada has been very open in terms of its immigration policy to immigrants from Europe and the Third World. I recall the way in which Canadians opened their doors to the people of Hungary during the revolution of 1956 when thousands of Hungarians fled that country because of suppression by a totalitarian regime. They largely fled—and I will elaborate on this with respect to our concerns about this Bill—to a so-called safe country. Most of them fled to Vienna and to Austria, and from Austria they immigrated to other parts of the world. Canada accepted a great many of those Hungarian refugees.

If one looks at the 1960s when we had the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia, we find that Canada again led the way in the international community by accepting a large number of refugees from Czechoslovakia. One has only to look at the 1970s when we had a similarly grave situation in the Far East. We again opened our hearts and our arms to the boat people.

I think there is a recognition by Canadians that our tolerance toward these refugees has developed our reputation in the international community. The difficulty that has arisen in the last 12 months is that, to some extent, Canadians' faith in the immigration system has been tested. Most Canadians have indicated to Members of Parliament that what they want in terms of a bona fide refugee and immigration law is to ensure that our basic sense of fairness as a nation is being applied and that the integrity of the immigration system is intact. I think that is the prime focus of the review of the existing immigration law. That is the reason we are having this debate in the House of Commons today.

Most Canadians expect their Members of Parliament to ensure when a new immigration law is passed that the sense of integrity of the system and the degree to which Canadians adhere to it, the basic fairness of the Bill, will be addressed by Parliament. This is where the Liberal Party has such difficulties with the legislation presently before the House. We have concerns in three particular areas, namely, the pre-screening section of the Bill, the concept of a safe third country, and the appeal process itself.

It is fundamental that all three political parties acknowledge the need for changes to the existing immigration laws. To some extent, Canadians' faith in the system has been undermined by refugees. I am not talking about bona fide refugees but about refugees with very weak claims who are using the weaknesses in the existing laws to circumvent the system of immigration to this country. Many Canadians feel that, provided genuine refugees are addressed, the rest who are questionable in terms of their bona fide refugee status go through the same process that all other immigrants are expected to follow.

I can go back to the Diefenbaker Government years when the Prime Minister at that time, John Diefenbaker, introduced the Bill of Rights. Subsequently, in the 1981 Constitutional Amendment Prime Minister Trudeau introduced, for the first time in a British parliamentary system, the Charter of Rights. The Charter of Rights, in essence, allows for the supremacy of the individual to take precedence over government. Therefore, it is very important to remember that in the process of passing immigration laws whatever laws we pass ought to be subjected to a test of the principles of the Charter of Rights.

All of us as Members of Parliament should listen to the eminently qualified organizations which have testified not only before the House of Commons committee but before the committee in the other place that dealt in a very compassionate and creative way with the immigration Bill in terms of the amendments it put. To some extent I am very disappointed the Government has chosen to deal with only four of the eighteen amendments recommended by the Senate, but that is the prerogative of the Government.

Surely we must have a great deal of concern when qualified organizations such as the B'nai Brith and the Coalition for a Just Refugee Program indicate to the committees that significant segments of the Bill will contravene the Charter of Rights and Bill of Rights. I believe the test for this Bill should be the application of the Charter of Rights to each and every part of the Bill.

Let me now deal with the three major concerns of the Liberal Party with respect to the Bill. I indicated previously that the Senate advocated 18 amendments. Four have been addressed by the Minister and I will deal with three of them in my remarks this afternoon.

First, there is a great deal of concern about the pre-screening process itself. In terms of the legislation it is a step forward in the creation of a new refugee board that will act at arm's length from the Government to deal with the question of what constitutes a bona fide refugee case and what constitutes a bogus case. However, it seems to me in the process of creating a positive step, namely, the refugee board, we have taken away from the refugee board part of its responsibility by allowing a pre-screening process to take place with an adjudicator and a member of the board. This is ostensibly to cut down on the number of cases that go before the board. That is a major flaw in the Bill. From the standpoint of fairness and equity in the system, it leaves a lot to be desired when at the very beginning of the process two people will be able to determine—and I am sure they will not ask for a long history of the refugee's claim—whether or not a person can then proceed to the refugee board for clarification.

When we talk about a pre-screening process or the application that will come before the refugee board, it is important to realize that in a world in which we have a number of undemocratic regimes large numbers of organizations are seeking autonomy in their own home countries. In effect, we have as we witnessed in the Central American region, death squads of far right and far left ideologies that have terrorized many people and created a large number of people seeking refugee status throughout the world.

Canada has taken a leadership role in immigration, witnessed by the awarding of the Nansen Medal by the United Nations. To some extent this Bill is an abandonment of the principles upon which the Canadian immigration policy and leadership role assumed by Governments, Conservative and Liberal alike over the years, has been founded. By introducing a pre-screening process we have subjected ourselves and are open to the accusation that we say one thing in assuming a leadership role in the international community, but when it comes to this Bill dealing with refugees we are taking away from our advocacy of a just and fair immigration and refugee policy.

With respect to the safe third country concept, the Liberal Party recommended that an arm's length advisory board to Cabinet be established. It would be solely the prerogative and responsibility of the organization at arm's length from the Minister that would be in a position to determine what constitutes a safe third country list. Others have spoken in this House today and previously about the politicization of the process when we allow Cabinet to be the sole arbitrator of what constitutes a safe third country in dealing with a refugee claim.

Let us put this in perspective. People and Members of Parliament have spoken earlier about the United States. All of us assume—and I believe we accept the fact—that the United States will also be a haven for a number of refugee claimants, but even in the United States refugees from El Salvador and from Central America are regularly turned away. Having declared the U.S. to be a safe third country, does it mean that a refugee from El Salvador who claims refugee status in Canada and who commenced his journey to this nation from the U.S. would be deported to El Salvador from the U.S.?

Similarly, in the United Kingdom there has been indiscriminate turning back of Tamil refugees. Would it mean a Tamil who claims refugee status in Canada would be turned back to Britain? Would Britain be considered to be a safe third country?

These questions ought to be clarified before passage of the legislation. The whole concept of a safe third country is an integral part of this legislation. In the international community the concept of a third country list is now accepted. It probably will be the focus of international co-operation in the years to come.

It seems to me that in developing the idea and following through the legislative process it would be much more effective and perceived to be fair and accepted by Canadians, if the decision to determine what constitutes a safe third country were made by a body of experts at arm's length from Cabinet. That is the second point that gives a great deal of concern to us who have been opposed to many parts of the immigration Bill since the Government introduced the draft legislation a year ago.

Much has been made of the fact that in one individual's case the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) intervened and asked that the refugee in question not be granted refugee status. Concern was voiced here in the House of Commons, and it is legitimate. For that very reason the Government ought to accept the amendment to allow the establishment of a body of experts at arm's length from the Government to determine what constitutes a safe third country.

The last area of great concern is the appeal process itself. The appeal process presently in place allows an appeal to take place by a refugee. The appeal goes to the Federal Court of Canada, but the Federal Court can only determine whether the laws of this nation are being applied. The Federal Court is not, in my opinion, the proper place for an appeal process on a refugee claim.

We are not simply talking about questions of law. They are questions of life and death to many refugees. If one looks at history, over the last 10 years those in Iran who practice B'hai have been persecuted. They face death. It is not a question of a point of law. The question is life or death. If a person of the B'hai faith were refused to be considered a bona fide refugee under this legislation, the only point of appeal for that person would be to the Federal Court of Canada, which would only be able to determine whether or not Canada's laws have been fairly applied. The court would have absolutely nothing to do with the political part of the equation, namely, what constitutes a bona fide refugee claim.

It is important that there be established in the immigration law an appeal process where political points of reference can be applied and tested, and not just simply points of law. Canada has established itself in the international community and has an enviable reputation of being a leader on how to come up with a solution to the refugee problem. This problem gets worse by the day. We have more and more conflicts in various regions of the world that have added to the number of people who will be seeking refugee status. It is important that we have faith in a system that will apply the criteria fairly so that bona fide refugees will be allowed refuge in Canada.

At the same time, at the end of the process of legislative change we also have to ensure that Canadians have faith in the immigration system. I share with all Members of Parliament the concern that to some extent there has been a deterioration in the faith Canadians place in the existing system because people without bona fide refugee status have circumvented the law and have queue jumped. In our haste to solve that problem, we still want to ensure that at the heart of the new law that comes into place, we adhere to the Charter of Rights so that all refugee claimants are dealt with in a fair, just, and compassionate way.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, no one questions the fact that the problem of refugees internationally is a daunting problem demanding an international solution. It is complex. It deals with the lives of thousands, indeed millions of people, who face prosecution, the threat of death, and all manner of dangers and threats to survival.

We also know that Canada has been faced with large numbers of people who have claimed refugee status. There is no doubt that there are those who are not refugees and could lay no credible claim to refugee status who have used our refugee laws to circumvent the immigration process. This is a problem that has been appreciated by all sides. It was a problem that was recognized, for example, by the Employment and Immigration Committee which proposed a new refugee Act that we on this side of the House believe would have addressed the problem adequately and fairly, consistent with international standards and consistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Instead of listening to the sound advice submitted by parliamentarians after listening to expert and concerned opinion, the Government introduced Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, Bills which on a number of grounds cause us on this side of the House and many people in Canada a great deal of concern.

We heard earlier the exchange that occurred between my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on the issue of racism as it has arisen in this debate. I suppose that if one wanted to encapsulate the kind of exchange that went on, it was that we understand that in this country, racism is not altogether dead. On the other hand, it does not characterize the country as a whole or all of its people. Allegations of racism must be directed with a great deal of care at any portion of the population. At the same time, we must understand that there are a few of us, while not being racist, nevertheless in our efforts to find simple ways of categorizing everyone all too often resort to zenophobic tendencies.

Those of us who are concerned about racism and those of us who have from time to time experienced its ugly effects must conclude that all too often zenophobia, racism, or a kind of vague suspicion that lurks in the hearts of all too many about foreigners, is all too easily exploited for what must be considered crude political purposes.

This concern is only made greater by the fact that we understand that it was not the Portuguese who circumvented the immigration laws and claimed refugee status, nor the Turks who circumvented the immigration laws and claimed refugee status, but the Tamils and Sikhs, sharing only one thing in common apart from the fact that they came by boat, and that is that they are of a different hue, who provoked a strong reaction. There are certainly many of us in Canada who felt that that very strong reaction in those circumstances contained within it far too much zenophobia, perhaps far too much unconscious racism, and certainly a different kind of concern applied to one class of people as compared to another who appeared on our shores.

These kinds of reactions come easily. However, they are reactions that most people, upon a little reflection, hasten to correct. We would hope that a Government would not hasten to exploit such feelings.

There can be no doubt in the minds of those with whom I have talked among the Asian community, the West Indian community, or the African community that these two pieces of legislation would not have appeared under different circumstances. On the other hand, it is a hopeful and encouraging sign that these two pieces of legislation, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, upon the reflection of the vast majority of Canadians, elicited not support but opposition, opposition to legislation not only because of what provoked it but because of its very character.

I have talked about the opportunism involved in choosing the particular time and circumstances of these two pieces of legislation. One must wonder if there really is a motive that would separate the Government and its legislation on the one hand from those involved in dealing with the refugee problem and the Committee on Employment and Immigration on the other hand.

The other day, this debate elicited remarks from the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen), who expressed real concern that we might let in too many nihilists, that we might admit too many existentialists, that we may be overburdened by Christian Marxists, that our purity of thought might be affected by dialectical materialists. One wonders if what we are really reflecting in this legislation is some basic attitude toward the kinds of refugees we ought to let in. One wonders whether there is not reflected in those remarks a basic agenda, a kind of selectivity in the minds of those who have brought forth this Bill in terms of who might appropriately be entertained as refugees.

As Hon. Members know, some events have occurred recently that give pause in that they seem to confirm the suspicions elicited by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. It has been reported today that one Nota Moises, the information officer of Renamo, is residing in Canada after some rather peculiar concatenation of circumstances that has not favourably affected refugees from Guatemala, El Salvador, and most particularly from India. This is a man who is easily identifiable with the right wing efforts supported by South Africa and the United States in Mozambique which have resulted in the deaths of hundreds of thousands of people, with no purpose in mind. As you know, Madam Speaker, the American State Department commissioned a study which ascertained that Renamo had no purpose other than to cause chaos in Mozambique, chaos which had the wide support of right wing factions all over the world. Somehow he found his way into Canada as a refugee, under circumstances which indicate that he circumvented all the rules, and probably, one must suspect, with considerable complicity on both sides of the Atlantic.

On the other hand, let us consider the case of Santokh Singh, an individual whose refugee status was established. He is a legitimate refugee denied admission to this country by virtue of the intervention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

On the one hand we have a legitimate refugee who had his refugee status properly determined having that refugee status determination overruled by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Indeed, there is before us an amendment to this Bill which would make it possible for the action taken by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to be legitimized. This is an unsavoury set of circumstances which we think this legislation will only allow to continue.

We have suspicions with regard to the definition of a safe third country. What is a safe third country? Is it a country which the Secretary of State for External Affairs is concerned will in some way look upon Canada unkindly with respect to our bilateral relationships because we have chosen to act in a legal, humane, and appropriate way in terms of international standards as we did in the case of Santokh Singh? Will our refugee status determination be affected by the peculiar decisions made by Americans with respect to refugees in the context of their agenda in Central America?

The legislation before us would deprive refugees of a proper determination and a proper basis for an appeal period. In terms of its history and its content, this legislation should be rejected as all too many have suggested it should be. We should, this afternoon, reject this piece of legislation; we should get rid of it.

This piece of legislation, along with another, required us to return here on an emergency basis. It is now a summer later.

Mr. King: Why?

Mr. McCurdy: Because the opposition to this legislation all over the country delayed its passage.

Mr. King: Not true.

Mr. McCurdy: The Member should recognize where the Government has failed.

The other interesting aspect to these two pieces of legislation is that the turning the boats back bit is going to lapse in six months, a clear concession of wrong-headedness and injustice.

This country was the winner of the Nansen Medal. It is just shameful that we have been unable to deal with the problem in the way in which so many have said we should; so many who have been concerned about refugees, so many who have been concerned about the abuses of our system, so many who are concerned about international standards for the treatment of refugees, and so many who are concerned about the meaning of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I stood in this House just the other day and wondered aloud about the implications of the override clause with respect to Section 15 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which section, of course, deals with equality among peoples and guarantees against discrimination.

There are those of us who see that failure there is not unrelated to the suspected motivations for and the manner of introduction of these two pieces of legislation, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. We want to clear away all the suspicions. Let us go back, regroup, and adopt the consensus legislation which was recommended by a parliamentary committee. Let us satisfy the need for this country to control immigration and refugee admissions but at the same time ensure that Canada's conscience remains clean and consistent with its historic values.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The first question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have been doing a lot of things by consensus today in relation to this matter. We have a bit of a dilemma in that Members opposite or Members on this side, depending on the voice vote, may wish to stand to force a vote to be deferred to Monday night. I wonder whether we could have unanimous consent that if that happens all five questions before us would be put at the same deferral time. If the matter is dealt with one way or another by the voice vote, that is fine; but, if not, all five questions, the two main motions and three amendments, would be stood and voted on on Monday night.

I thought it might be wise to seek unanimous consent for that before we get into the voting procedure. I wonder whether that was the intent of the discussions with the opposition Parties. Unfortunately I was not party to those discussions.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion made by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, we have no objection to the suggestion. However, I do not think the matter has been officially discussed among the three Parties. Therefore, perhaps we need to hear whether anyone else has any objection.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is hesitant at this point. I think I heard that there was not unanimous consent. Did I hear correctly, or is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Therefore the question is on the amendment.

Mr. Heap moved:

That the motion of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration be amended in the proposed amendment to insert a new Clause 32 into the Bill, by adding immediately after Section 123 the following new Section:

"123.1 Should Bill C-84, entitled, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be assented to during the second session of the thirty-third Parliament and section 16 of that Act comes into force before this Act, then, on the day on which this Act comes into force the reference in section 123 of the Immigration Act, 1976 as amended by this Act, to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2) and 83(1) shall be read as a reference to paragraphs 19(1)(E) and (2)(A), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1)(E)(iii) and subsections 82.1(2), 83(1) and 9.1(1)."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the amendment negatived on division.

Amendment (Mr. Heap) negatived.

• (1430)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is as follows: Mr. Friesen moved:

That Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be further amended in Clause 14

(a) by striking out line 38 at page 18 and substituting the following therefor:

"landing of that person and any member of that person's family who is in Canada at the time of the application, unless the Convention refugee is"

(b) by striking out lines 24 to 26 at page 19 and substituting the following therefor:

"cant and any member of the applicant's family for whom landing is sought if the immigration officer is satisfied that neither the applicant nor any member of the applicant's family who is in Canada is a person"

(c) by adding, immediately after line 8 at page 20, the following:

"(8) for the purposes of this section and section 48.05,

(a) a person is a member of another person's family if the person is

(i) the spouse of that other person, or

(ii) the child of that other person, or

(b) "child", with respect to a person, means

(i) a person of whom that person is the natural parent, whether the person was born within or outside marriage, and who has not been legally adopted by any other person, and

(ii) a person who was legally adopted by that person, but does not include any person who is or has been married;

(c) "spouse", with respect to a person, means a person of the opposite sex to that person who is married to that person by a marriage that is recognized by the law of the country in which it took place, other than a marriage occurring at a time when either person was already married."

(d) by striking out line 17 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"mining eligibility to be grant-"

(e) by striking out line 23 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"for a determination whether the person or any member of that person's family who is in Canada at the time of the application is,"

(f) by striking out line 28 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"shall determine that the applicant and any member of the applicant's family for whom landing is sought is, but"

(g) by striking out line 32 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"member of the applicant's family who is in Canada is a"

(h) by striking out lines 12 to 15 at page 21 and substituting the following therefor:

"(d) the person or any member of the person's family for whom landing is sought was determined not to be eligible to be granted landing for a reason other than the removal order; or

(e) the person and each member of the person's family for whom landing is sought were determined to be,"

(i) by striking out lines 25 to 29 at page 21 and the following therefor:

"(a) grant landing to the person and each member the person's family for whom landing is sought, where the person is a person described in paragraph (5)(d) or (e) and the adjudicator is satisfied that, but for the removal order, the person and each member are eligible to be grant-"

That the Bill be further amended in Clause 18 by striking out line 37 at page 28 and substituting the following therefor:

"hold office during good behaviour for a term not"

That the Bill be further amended in Clause 29 by adding immediately after line 46 at page 55 the following:

"(7) Section 115 of the said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following subsection:

"(5) The Minister may establish and appoint the members of a committee to advise the Minister with respect to the prescribing of countries under paragraph (1) (r)"

and

That the Bill be further amended by adding immediately after line 31 at page 56 the following:

"32. Section 123 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"123. The Minister or the Deputy Minister, as the case may be, may authorize such persons employed in the public service of Canada as the Minister or the Deputy Minister deems proper to exercise and perform any of the powers, duties and functions that may or are required to be exercised or performed by the Minister or the Deputy Minister, as the case may be, under this Act or the regulations, other than the powers, duties and functions referred to in paragraphs 19(1)(e) and (2)(a), subsections 39(2) and 40(1), subparagraph 48.01(1) (e) (iii) and subsections 82.1(2) and 83(1), and any such power, duty or function performed or exercised by any person so authorized shall be deemed to have been performed or exercised by the Minister or Deputy Minister, as the case may be."

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Friesen) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the next question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is the following one: Mr. Heap moved:

That the motion be amended in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 4 by deleting in subparagraph (iii) all the words after "(2)(c)" and substituting the following therefor:

"who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada; or".

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the recorded division stands deferred until 6 p.m. Monday, June 20, 1988.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)) moved that Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport.

He said: Madam Speaker, first I want to thank the opposition for their co-operation in proceeding with this legislation at this time. It is truly a pleasure to rise in the House today and introduce for second reading a Bill which provides the means for ensuring that Canadians with disabilities are provided fair and dignified access to our national transportation system.

Bill C-131, an Act to amend the National Transportation Act, 1987, will give the National Transportation Agency the power to regulate accessibility for disabled persons to all transportation services and facilities under federal jurisdiction.

This will expand on a power that the agency now has to regulate accessibility for the carriage of disabled persons on airlines. The existing power for airlines resulted from an amendment proposed by the Standing Committee on Transport and concurred with by the former Minister of Transport, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), during hearings held on the Act when it was Bill C-18.

The committee was responding to submissions made to it by representatives of disabled persons, and the Minister of Transport was responding to recommendations from his transportation of disabled persons implementation committee. The Minister's committee included representatives of the industries affected as well as disabled persons.

As a result of the amendments, the agency will be able to prescribe regulations for the purpose of eliminating undue obstacles in transportation to the mobility of disabled persons. By regulation, the agency will be able to establish standards for the design, construction, and modification of means of transportation and related facilities, premises and equipment; respecting the use of signs, for the training of staff; respecting terms and conditions for carrying disabled persons; respecting the communication of information to disabled persons.

The amendments will also provide the enforcement provisions that will enable the agency to make a finding of undue obstacle and order corrective measures and compensation for expenses incurred. They will provide a defence where an applicable regulation has been met or has not been contravened and make the contravention of a regulation an offence which, on summary conviction, will be punishable by up to one year imprisonment and by a fine of up to $5,000 for an individual and by a fine up to $25,000 in the case of a corporation.

I would also point out that the amendments will require the National Transportation Agency and the Canadian Human Rights Commission to co-ordinate their activities in relation to the transportation of disabled persons. Both these agencies, as well as the Office of Privatization and Regulatory Affairs, have been consulted on these amendments.

Accessible transportation is a key to providing persons with disabilities the opportunity for full integration into the mainstream of Canadian life. Accessible transportation provides greater access to housing which, in turn, provides greater opportunities to education. This leads to greater employment opportunities and ultimately to greater self-sufficiency and independence, and the right to lead a full productive life with pride and dignity regardless of one's challenge or age.

The Standing Committee on the Status of Disabled also deserves mention for its tremendous efforts in having the public and private sectors report on activities undertaken to enhance accessibility for disabled persons. In the transportation field, Transport Canada has appeared before the committee and it provides periodic status report on its activities. As well, VIA Rail and Air Canada recently appeared before the committee.

The introduction of this Bill today is the culmination of the co-operation of efforts of industry, disabled persons, and government representatives in a true demonstration of how public and private sectors can work together.

The laws of a country are a reflection of the values of its people. I invite Hon. Members today to join with the Government in this co-operative effort so that this legislation can be placed alongside the other laws of Canada that reflect its tradition for protecting human rights and values in Canada.

I have kept my delivery very short so that members of the Opposition can respond. Again, I want to thank opposition Parties for their kind co-operation in dealing with this Bill expeditiously.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Douglas C. Frith (Sudbury): Madam Speaker, in the spirit of co-operation, let me indicate to the Minister that the Official Opposition is prepared today to take this Bill to Committee of the Whole and complete third reading stage, if the Government wishes to do so this afternoon.

I want to say a few words about the provisions contained in Bill C-131. They are aimed at improving access for Canada's disabled communities to various passenger transportation services in Canada. As the House is aware, the Liberal Party has consistently supported laws that will improve access to transportation for Canada's handicapped.

In December, 1985, when the Conservative members of the standing committee were waivering to some extent on the principle of improvements for Canada's disabled, the Liberal Party at that time issued a minority report. I want to refer to some passages in the Liberal minority report dated December 18, 1985. We stated that we support all proposed legislation that would increase the accessibility, comfort, safety, and rate structure for the handicapped on all modes of transportation. In particular, we support the prompt implementation of the relevant recommendations of the Equality for All and Obstacles reports.

Our report goes on to say that we want to stress that mandatory minimum safety and access standards for the handicapped be incorporated into the National Transportation Act. The recommendation of the committee only goes as far as saying that the Government states its commitment toward the handicapped. We believe the recommendation should provide that statutory recognition be given to the right of access to transportation modes for the handicapped. Such a statement would legally bind transportation companies to modify their various carriers to ensure accessibility for the handicapped.

I am delighted to say, on behalf of the Official Opposition, that we recognize that Bill C-131 is a step forward for Canada's handicapped. For that reason we would like to have prompt passage of the Bill. I hope that the Minister will take advantage of our good mood this afternoon and proceed to Committee of the Whole and third reading of the Bill.

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party and particularly on behalf of the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) who has been very much involved in all matters relating to disabled people, I would like to say that we, too, wish to see the Bill proceed through all stages this afternoon.

I think that sometimes Canadians who have not had any disability at all fail to realize or have not yet realized that in fact, over three million Canadians are reported to have a disability, according to the Transport Canada study entitled Transportation of Disabled Persons: A Canadian Profile. Almost 70 per cent of all disabilities reported by Canadians 18 years of age and over are related to mobility or agility.

According to another study entitled the Canadian Health and Disability Survey conducted by Statistics Canada, the likelihood of having a disability rises very sharply with age as 38 per cent of Canadians aged 65 and older report a disability. It is therefore very important that we continue to take steps to improve access to those who have a disability. Bill C-131 is an important step in that direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petitions Nos. 332-4510, 332-4539, 332-4559, 332-4560, 332-4564 to 332-4569 incl., 332-4591 to 332-4593 incl., 332-4595, 332-4604, 332-4607, 332-4608, 332-4612, 332-4613, 332-4617, 332-4619, 332-4624 to 332-4635 incl., 332-4640, 332-4670, 332-4747, 332-4782 and 332-4783, and, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That this House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. Orders of the Day.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the debate on Government Business No. 26, and on any amendments proposed thereto, shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND SITTINGS

The House resumed consideration, from Tuesday June 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.00 o'clock p.m., and on Wednesdays at 6.00 o'clock p.m., and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended;

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 22;

That, following the adoption of this motion, no motion under Standing Order 10(1) shall be receivable; and

That this special order shall not apply on any allotted days designated in the supply period ending June 30, 1988.

And the amendment of Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques):

That the motion be amended by deleting in the first and second paragraphs the words:

"Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That, during such period," and substituting the following therefor:

"Thursday, June 30, 1988".

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we have just voted on a motion that gags the House, invokes closure and, in my opinion, reveals the extent of this government's incompetence and total inability to manage the House's time. For several weeks, it has been resorting to unparliamentary and almost undemocratic practices.

Mr. Speaker, this vote to invoke closure of the debate on motion No. 26, that is on a government motion to extend this sitting which, as we all know, began on August 11 of last year, effectively extends this sitting until Friday September 9, 1988. This means that the House will not adjourn for the summer, in accordance with the Standing Orders. Moreover, daily sittings will be extended until 10 p.m., creating, as we know, problems with families who, in many cases, are not here in Ottawa. MPs will therefore not be able to spend time with their children.

I want the government to know that I think the motion before us is shameful and goes against parliamentary practice since it invokes closure and places the Opposition in a difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, what the Government did today when they moved to consider the orders of the day at 11 a.m, at the beginning of the proceedings, well they could have done that last week, on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday at 10 a.m., when the Government order was called. The fact is they didn't.

Why? Because it suited their purpose to prolong the debate a little, to make Canadians think that there was some resistance on the part of the Official Opposition or the NDP. But their primary intention was to attract the media's attention. There was one editorial on the subject this morning, and I have spoken to several Conservative Members who have said to me:

[English]

"We have an editorial in The Globe and Mail. Did you read it?" I did, Sir. I read it, yes. I was not very much impressed with it because the facts of it are not very impressive. The Government has been snapping its suspenders and saying, "we have an editorial, finally," after holding the House of Commons for three solid days last week, a waste of time—

Mr. Belsher: We were not holding it.

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, you were. Members of the Government held the House of Commons last week for three solid days. They now have an editorial in The Globe and Mail. How much begging that cost, I do not know.

I remind government Members that The Globe and Mail is the national newspaper—if they are going to hold this up as anything more than a piece of paper—that was found in contempt by the House on December 22, 1976. I wish to put the matter into context.

I wish to read the motion adopted unanimously pursuant to Standing Order 43. It was moved by Mr. MacEachen and seconded by Mr. Baker, the former Member for Grenville—Carleton, who is now deceased, that a statement contained in an editorial in The Globe and Mail was a gross libel of Mr. Speaker, and that the publication of the article was a gross breach of the privileges of this House.

That was the only time in the history of Parliament that I know of, in my 15 years here, that a newspaper was found to be guilty of contempt of the House of Commons. Members opposite are waving this morning's editorial saying, "Look at that. We have a great newspaper article saying that we were right last week". They were not right last week, and they know it. They did it intentionally. They left the House hanging because they refused to use the rules to assist their purpose, which is to order Government Business.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I said it last week, I said it last Wednesday and again last Thursday in the House, after each vote in which only the Liberal Party Whip participated, the government could have used a provision in the Standing Orders which would have allowed it, during Routine Proceedings, to call the orders of the day. Why didn't they do this either on Wednesday, Thursday or Friday?

Ms. Copps: Because they didn't want to!

Mr. Gauthier: I don't know, but they wanted to shift the blame for the delay to the Opposition. Well, Mr. Speaker, they showed poor judgment, as usual, and in my opinion, they acted irresponsibly and displayed their incompetence and inability to manage the time of this House.

It's so obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this Government is awkward . . .

Ms. Copps: Clumsy!

Mr. Gauthier: . . . clumsy—I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton-East (Ms. Copps)—when it comes to managing its affairs. They looked like a bunch of fools about a month ago, Mr. Speaker . . .

Mr. Rossi: They are!

Mr. Gauthier: . . . when they sent a letter to the Official Opposition House Leader dated May 30. That was barely a month ago—no, I'm sorry, it was in fact only a few weeks ago. In this letter dated May 30, they indicated their desire to see the three parties in the House reach an agreement to pass 23 bills at different stages, and said that five Bills on the Order Paper could perhaps be adopted . . .

[English]

I should read this because it is in English. There were 11 Bills not yet introduced, something which was contained in the letter of May 30 signed by the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis). There was everything from the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, to child care, to film and video, disabled persons, transportation, and income tax reform. We finally got the Bill on income tax reform. It was in the form of a Ways and Means motion. It is a huge package.

Members of the Government want this, plus those 11 pieces of legislation not yet introduced, plus a major debate on abortion, a major debate on Meech Lake, and a major debate on free trade. They want that, all in the space of less than 20 days. How foolish can they take us to be? How do they play the Canadian public to eat this up and to believe this nonsense?

Just to give the House an idea of the complexity of the tax reform Bill, I looked into it.

I looked into several Standing Orders to see if it was possible, in the space of a few days, to go through the entire Bill. Mr. Speaker, I will give the benefit of the doubt to the experts in this field, namely the Joint Committee on Taxation of the Canadian Bar Association—these are no fools—and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants, who also are very knowledgeable in this area. Here is what they had to say about this Bill in a brief submitted in May 1988, not two years, but rather barely one month ago, and I quote: "The provisions of the draft Bill pertaining to automobile costs and related benefits are extremely complex. A total of 30 different amendments had to be made to the Act and the relevant regulations to translate into legal terms the proposed measures contained in the White Paper as amended in December 1987.

These provisions are full of technical errors, which proves that even those who wrote them have a great deal of trouble understanding the regulations". These are not my words, but rather those of Canada's accountants and lawyers who examined the bill, the voluminous, 500-page Bill that the government wanted to pass in just a few days. That makes no sense at all, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of tax reform as to simplify matters and make them less complex. That has not happened, Mr. Speaker. They have complicated matters, even for the Canadian Bar Association and for our country's accountants. And here in the House of Commons, we would like to settle this matter quickly, in a matter of days! That is our idea of democracy.

We love to have things done our way. We said: "Just a minute. The people of Canada want to hear the debate. They want to have this thing looked at sincerely and with the intent of possibly strengthening it and avoiding some of the mistakes we know the Government is prone to making".

The Government called us back on August 11, last year, for an emergency session. A boatload of Sikhs landed in Nova Scotia and an emergency was declared. Those two Bills are still before the House.

Mr. Lewis: It is the Senate's fault.

Mr. Gauthier: Those Bills have not been approved.

Mr. McDermid: Because of Allan MacEachen's stalling.

Mr. Gauthier: All right, it is the Senate. I have got someone excited over there.

Mr. McDermid: The legislation has been two hundred days in the Senate.

Mr. Gauthier: It is true we have not finished. Even today the Government is proposing amendments, amendments which are difficult and complex. These people want it their way. It is the old "mother knows best" attitude.

Ms. Copps: It is a racist move and they know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the motion will . . .

Some Hon. Members: Oh! oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please! The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier has the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: They don't like to hear the truth, Mr. Speaker. Motion No. 26, which would suspend the Standing Orders and allow the government Order, effectively cancels the summer adjournment. We the Members of the Opposition are prepared to work diligently. If the Government wishes to call bills and to debate them seriously, then we are prepared to work with them, to deal with the legislation on the table. We are quite prepared for daily Question Period and quite willing to let journalists report what they see and rap the government on the knuckles when it deserves it. And it very often deserves it.

[English]

We do not mind that, Mr. Speaker. It would cost us a fortune to have that media coverage every day. "Go ahead", I say to the Government, "sit all summer; sit July and August". We will have, I think, the benefit of having Members over there down in the polls in August while we will be going up. It is an old truism that when the House sits, Governments go down in the polls and the Opposition goes up. So I say: "Go ahead. Do you think we care?" We would just as soon be here, and we will debate this.

Mr. McDermid: Sit down and let's get on with things.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear someone shouting "sit down". That is the Government's position. "Sit down, shut up", the Members say, "we will have it our way".

Mr. McDermid: You cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Gauthier: Muzzlers.

Ms. Copps: We want to see the new federal Member for Lac-Saint-Jean, Mr. Pierre Gimaïel!

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we, the Official Opposition, also want Pierre Gimaïel to take a seat somewhere in the back as the Hon. Member for Lac-Saint-Jean. Sometime in the next few days, we will receive confirmation once and for all that the Member for Lac-Saint-Jean is Pierre Gimaïel and we will be proud to have him take a seat with us.

Now then, the House will sit without interruption. Perfect. No problem. We will debate bills. But what does the government want to debate? We must seriously ask ourselves that question. The government passed 106 bills during the first session and 89 so far during the second session, for a total of 195. A total of five Private Members' Bills were passed during the second session and three during the first session, for a total of eight. In all, 203 pieces of legislation have been passed by the House. That's not so bad. That's about average, when we look at past governments.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Gauthier: The numbers for the past four years are around 200, 210, 215. No more, but no less. I hear some nos. You weren't here at the time, so how could you know! I say to you that this is about average. We might not have worked miracles, or invented a better mousetrap, but we haven't done too badly. The reason is because the Opposition has been willing to work with the Government. When the Government is serious, we are more than willing to go along with it. However, when the Government behaves irresponsibly, like some of the hon. Members before me, we can only do so much. When the Government proposes, we dispose. However, when the Government doesn't propose anything, how can we do anything?

There is a series of Bills now before us, Mr. Speaker. A while ago, I reminded the House of the 39 or so Bills that the Government wanted to take up, in addition to two or three important debates. It's sad to say, Mr. Speaker, but the Government is being irresponsible if it thinks that the House of Commons should deal with 40 Bills in less than one month when, as I just explained, it has dealt with nearly 200 over a period of four years. It means that the Government wants us to accomplish in one month's time what normally takes us about one year to do! It's trying to push and hurry the Opposition, don't you see! It's trying to influence public opinion through an editorial in the Globe and Mail and trying to fend off the Opposition. Well, Mr. Speaker, it's going to take more than an article in the Globe and Mail to fend us off when we know that the government could, if it had had any guts and backbone, have tabled these Bills in an orderly fashion in the House.

They are asking us to spend five days on the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement, that is the free trade agreement with the United States. This agreement has the potential of altering Canada's business and economic future. They want us to spend only a few days on tax reform. I Assume that the Government was serious when it stated in its letter of May 30 that it wanted to spend a few days on this subject. The fiscal and economic future of our country is at stake here! They asked us to deal with Meech Lake quickly and we did. The Government got its way, and the first vote has taken place and the other ones will be taken on Wednesday at 3 p.m. The official languages Bill has been before the House since June 25. It was called last February 8 or 9. It was referred to a committee on March 9. The committee met in an emergency session on March 17. It's now June 20, Mr. Speaker, and the Bill has been before the committee for three months. The Government is not even scheduling meetings of the committee. Why is this? Because the Conservative caucus disagrees on the scope of the Official Languages Act. They are putting their personal interests before those of Canadians. The passage of Bill C-72 is being delayed, through no fault of the Opposition. We have told them to pass the bill as is. But they answer that they have some issues to resolve between themselves. That particular piece of legislation will also affect our country's future.

Ms. Copps: Arguments between Neanderthals.

Mr. Gauthier: Indeed. And here we are being asked to move quickly on 40 Bills, including those that I just mentioned, and some others as well. It's ridiculous! And they know it is. Can the Government be so incompetent as to suggest that the House do the impossible? If this it true, then it's sad for the country.

Mr. Speaker, the government was very pleased with its tax reform proposals.

You remember the government supported tax reform. We have seen the tax reform bill and it will take more than three days to wade through it and pass it. The government has to be reasonable. If it is prepared to refer it to a committee after a serious debate in the Commons, we have no objections to that.

The Government also claimed to support parliamentary reform. A committee chaired by Mr. McGrath considered reform for two or three years and did a good job of it. The Government couldn't say enough about how a reformed House would be a great improvement and how backbenchers on both sides would finally have more power to change things. But, we know that nothing has changed. They have even trampled the Standing Orders with motion no. 26. And why have they done this? To impose their will and their ideas on the House.

It's a shame, Mr. Speaker, but democracy will only be better served when this Government is defeated and replaced by another.

Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with incompetent people. Bourinot speaks of "evidence of the lack of foresight and the tyranny of the majority". The Government is using its overwhelming majority to push its agenda through the House, something it is unable to do by acting in a democratic, proper and parliamentary way. They have thrown out the Standing Orders to achieve their objective.

The Government tells us that the situation is urgent and that passage of these Bills cannot be delayed. It brings up the issues of tax reform, free trade, abortion—there's an issue of great importance to the country, Mr. Speaker! We would like to resolve that issue, but the Government has neither the heart nor the courage nor the expertise to table a Bill. What does it want? It would like to table a motion, something lukewarm. We don't quite know what the government's intention is because it is incapable of leading the country or of proposing something concrete to the House. It would prefer to poll Members and when it has a clearer picture, to ask some legal experts to draft a Bill.

In the Globe and Mail,

• (1240)

[English]

It is quoted. The Globe and Mail says that the Liberal Deputy Whip, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), thunders that the Government is trying to do an opinion poll of Members of Parliament, an awful precedent. That is true. Government Members are. They are unable to make up their minds. They are unable to come forth with legislation. I believe they should be replaced. I believe this is wrong. This Government has absolutely lost control. It does not know what it is doing. It is now in a situation where it wants to push through everything in the hope that Canadians will buy that. Canadians will not buy that nonsense.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to Motion No. 26 that will extend the sittings of this House into the summer with extended sitting on Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays. We see that this motion is being pushed through the House by closure. We can be sure that this is only the first of many attempts by the Government to ram things through the House in violation of the tenets of democracy.

I oppose this motion first of all personally. I oppose it because it interferes with my own personal agenda as a human being, and I think that is important.

Mr. Lewis: It interferes with your vacation, 10 weeks.

Mr. Manly: That is important because it disrupts my plans. It disrupts my plans for life with my family and it disrupts my plans to do things in my constituency. I might say that in my case my children are grown up, so it is not as important to me as it is to many other Members. The disruption of family life is very serious.

Second, unless the Government has enough guts to call an election in the next two or three weeks, I will not be running again. I have said quite plainly that I will not be running after redistribution, so I am not as involved as other Members are in election work.

This is a violation of the rights of Members to be able to plan their lives, their constituency work, and their family and vacation time so that there is a degree of rationality introduced into all this.

A few years ago we brought in parliamentary reform, putting an end to this whole business of vacation roulette, with both the Opposition and the Government playing games with vacations. This whole process—

Mr. McDermid: It's like voting on first reading. Tell us what your constituents think about that.

Mr. Manly: You will get a chance to speak later. You had a chance to speak earlier after the Liberal Member. Why don't you shut up now and listen? You are not only trying to push this through on closure; you are not prepared to listen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands.

Mr. Manly: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to speak with some degree of rationality about parliamentary reform, and I will be addressing the Chair. You yourself, Mr. Speaker, know how important it was when parliamentary reform was introduced a few years ago. It meant that Members, both on the government side and the opposition side, could plan their lives with some degree of certainty. The Government has now tossed that out the window. It did it first last August by calling us back on a spurious refugee crisis. A boatload of Sikhs had arrived off the coast of Newfoundland.

It is interesting that just a week ago the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) indicated that the refugees he is really concerned about are existentialists. He is concerned about having a boatload of existentialists arrive off the coast of Vancouver Island. He is afraid that some nihilists or some people who believe in situational ethics will arrive. Those are the people the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta indicated Canada had to protect itself against when he spoke a week ago Friday. Perhaps you were here for that memorable event, Mr. Speaker.

In any event, we were all called back last August to deal with this so-called crisis. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there was no real crisis at all. Now, once again, we are throwing the parliamentary calendar out the window. We are throwing out any vestige of parliamentary reform that would let Members of Parliament plan their lives with any degree of certainty.

The Government is planning to use a platoon system. Government Members are not all planning to be here during summer sittings. In committee last week we were talking about a report, and the chairperson was very insistent that this report be tabled by June 28. I said: "Well, since the Government plans on having us here into July and August, why the rush?"

He said: "Well, I'm not going to be here; I'm not planning on being here". This is an abuse of the Government's majority. It has 208 Members to 72 opposition Members, though there will probably be 73 after today. The Government wants to abuse this system because government Members outnumber opposition Members by three to one, more or less. They think they can have one platoon here and another platoon out campaigning.

Of course, there are some pretty good candidates who are not Members of Parliament out there campaigning. They will do a number on those people for the abuse of democracy that this represents.

The Opposition has not been obstructionist in the House. The Hon. Member who spoke previously pointed out that we have passed a good number of Bills on a wide range of issues over the past number of months. Just this past Friday, the Opposition co-operated for speedy passage of Bill C-131 dealing with transportation for disabled people. Two weeks earlier, we co-operated by pushing through five different Bills dealing with Indian affairs. We have co-operated on such things as tobacco legislation.

Whenever there is some issue with which we agree, we will give every bit of co-operation to the Government that we possibly can, even to the extent of forgoing making speeches on issues about which we feel very strongly. On issues to which we are opposed, we do not obstruct. We have degrees of opposition, as the Government knows. Sometimes we will put up only two or three speakers when we are opposed to a Bill. At other times we will put up more.

The one area in which we are quite firm and have said we are not going to let the Government push through is the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. We oppose this with everything we have and every method at our disposal under the rules of Parliament because we see it as a sell-out of the Canadian people and a sell-out of Canadian sovereignty.

That is what this motion is all about. Motion No. 26 is really the attempt of the Government to push through Bill C-130 dealing with the trade deal. The Government has mismanaged its agenda which is so important to the Prime Minister and now wants to bring in extended days of sitting in order to push through Bill C-130 which was only introduced in this House on May 24. Everything about this trade deal illustrates an abuse of democratic process, and the motion to have extended sittings of this House is only the latest chapter in this abusive process.

You yourself, Mr. Speaker, were a delegate at the convention in 1983 at which the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated that he was opposed to any trade deal with the United States. He said that the people of Canada opposed it in 1911 and would oppose it in 1983. In our Party we believe that the people of Canada will oppose this particular deal very strongly in 1988 when they finally get around to having an election.

In 1984, when the Prime Minister was campaigning across Canada, he campaigned on a program of opposing patronage, on honesty in government and things like that, but he did not campaign on having a trade deal with the United States. Far from it; he indicated that he was opposed.

Mr. Lewis: You just didn't listen.

Mr. Manly: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said that I did not listen. Perhaps he could get up after me and tell the people of Canada when in 1984 the Prime Minister said that there was to be a trade agreement. He knows very well that the people of Canada were listening to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister was talking about an end to patronage and an end to pork barrel politics, and we have not seen an end to that. However, he did not talk about a trade agreement.

Ms. Copps: That's a Minister saying that too, not just a Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Manly: Yes, he is a Minister. Suddenly in 1985 we had an initiative to discuss this trade deal with the United States. For the next year and a half secret discussions were going on. The people of Canada were told very little of what was happening. The provinces were given only minimal information. The House of Commons was kept in the dark and when we were told anything we were not told the whole story.

I remember an opposition day debate on the trade agreement a year and some months ago. We wanted to know what was in that agreement. The then Minister for International Trade stood and said that she would tell us what was in the agreement, but she did not mention such things as the energy sell-out, which is such an important part of this deal. She never mentioned that although she was a former Minister of Energy and knew how important it was to the Canadian economy and the Canadian people.

Last fall over some Kentucky Fried Chicken there was a last minute agreement on the deal. The deal was cut as though by a used car salesman trying anything just to get a deal: "I'll throw in this, I'll throw in that; you give me this, I'll give you that". What a way to negotiate Canadian sovereignty.

Following that agreement we did not have the final text but only the elements of the agreement. There was a farce of committee hearings across Canada, one day in British Columbia and one day in each of the other provinces. We were not able to hear all the concerns of people about this matter. The people did not have the final text. It only arrived in the last couple of days before the committee had to report. The committee was under the gun. It was supposed to report before Christmas so that everything would be in order for the Prime Minister and President Reagan to sign on January 2. It was rushed through committee without giving the people of Canada an adequate chance to hear, to study, and to make their views known.

In Question Period we have seen the stonewalling of the Government on the questions which we have asked to try to get answers on what this deal is really all about. Instead of the Government coming forth and telling us what this is all about, we have a multimillion dollar deal to advertise it to the people of Canada, to try to sell it like soap. At the same time we have the refusal of a great many Tory Members of Parliament to debate the issue at the local level in local forums, to stand up with opponents of the deal and say what is right and what is wrong about it.

On May 24 the Government finally tabled Bill C-130, and now it wants to push it through. It is using Motion No. 26 to have extended hours and extended days of sitting to push through this ill-advised Bill which will spell the end of Canada's right to manage its own economy. It is a form of legislation by exhaustion.

When we agreed a number of years ago to parliamentary reform and a set parliamentary calendar, there was an element in the agreement which allowed for extended sittings in the last two weeks of June. That allows the Government to get a lot of its business done and, at the same time, allows Members of Parliament to plan their schedules. The Government is now violating that agreement.

We will still have extended sittings during the last two weeks of June, and this creates some difficulty for the New Democrats with only 32 Members and the Liberals with only 40 Members trying to cover all bases. However, we are prepared to accept that kind of limitation. We are not, however, prepared to accept this kind of legislation by exhaustion into July and August. This is reminiscent of the 1956 pipeline debate when C. D. Howe and Louis St. Laurent pushed the pipeline Bill through this House of Commons.

In four years the Conservative Government has grown as arrogant and as uncaring as the Liberals did in 1956 and 1957 after 22 years in power. I can assure them that when the Canadian people finally get a chance to vote on this issue the results will be exactly the same. Tory Ministers are as abusive of the rights of Parliament as were the Liberals in 1956.

Perhaps I could refer very briefly to the record of the Tories when they were in opposition in 1981 and to how strongly they opposed Liberal motions of closure. The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister who was going to be pushing this legislation through, said:

> This comes from a closure-crazed government, a government which suffers from the crime of parliamentary bestiality. It cannot wait to force these kinds of things through the House.

Further he said:

> The same little group comes in here on every closure motion. The same little group of parliamentary eunuchs—

I have some trouble with this mixed metaphor. On the one hand he talks about parliamentary bestiality and on the other he refers to a group of parliamentary eunuchs. Apart from that, he said:

> —the same group of parliamentary assassins—are in here all the time, assassinating this House and removing the good from the House. That is why I call them the parliamentary eunuchs. The good has already been removed from them.

Perhaps I could call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and finish my remarks after Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Yes, the Hon. Member will have two minutes left for debate. It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY DISBANDMENT

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, in 1978 the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) attacked the then Minister of Transport, Mr. Lang, as an ogre, the most untrustworthy and most heartless Minister he had ever met. Yet today, the same Member, the Member for St. John's West, has sold out the Newfoundland Railway for a mere $6 million. The $6 million man.

The Sullivan Royal Commission recommended twinning the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland, recommended a compensation package, and recommended a highway across Labrador. None of that has been lived up today. This is a complete and absolute sell-out of the worst kind as far as Newfoundland is concerned.

The Government of Canada should have lived up to the terms and recommendations of the Sullivan Royal Commission, twinned the Trans-Canada Highway, put in a compensation package for the workers, and built a road across Labrador.

The $12 million allocated to the Trans-Labrador Highway is crumbs from the master's table, and the people of Labrador will not forget that they have been forgotten again and been treated as second-class citizens.

EMPLOYMENT

SHORTAGE OF QUALIFIED LABOUR

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business advises that 42 per cent of its 80,000 member firms report a shortage of qualified labour and that in about half of these the cause was a lack of qualified skills. The irony is that at the same time a million Canadians are unemployed. The newspapers of the nation carry pages of advertisements of jobs available while Governments spend billions of dollars on discretionary grants to businesses and organizations.

Why all these apparent contradictions? Is it because Governments and business are asking for unnecessary qualifications such as bilingualism when only one language is required, or is it a lack of basics in the three R's? Whatever the reasons, it is high time that a review as recommended by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration is carried out. Surely such a review will recommend that some of the government grants be allocated to upgrading basics under the job development and re-entry programs.

TAX REFORM

NEED FOR SIMPLIFIED FORMS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Concise Oxford Dictionary defines "simplify" as meaning to "make simple, make easy or easier to do or understand".

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) talked about tax reform he said it would also include tax simplification, that is, he would make it easier for Canadians to understand and fill out their tax forms.

Earlier this year he brought out the new TD1 form that every Canadian who receives an income must fill out. In my riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan I was recently told of a pensioner who receives a tiny sum each month by way of a private pension. We are talking about $10 a month, hardly enough to pay for bus fare let alone pay tax. However, under the Minister of Finance's new tax reform, this pensioner is still required to fill out this new form consisting of no fewer than 16 questions. This is tax reform? This is a simplified tax form?

I suggest that the Hon. Minister, if he wants to make taxes easier to do, apply a little commonsense to the process. Either that or he should read the dictionary before he uses words that have more than two syllables.

MULTICULTURALISM

OPENING OF MOOSE JAW MULTICULTURAL COUNCIL'S PARK PROJECT

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, it was my pleasure to participate in the opening of a park in Moose Jaw yesterday afternoon. Happy Valley is a new picnic ground in an area of the city that was once residential but was abandoned because of occasional flooding during spring run-off.

This project was unusual because it was arranged and brought to its present stage with very little funding by either the federal, provincial or municipal level of government.

The sponsoring body of this project is the Moose Jaw Multicultural Council. At the opening ceremonies, flags from the homelands of the various ethnic groups that are members were proudly flying in the breeze.

I salute the hardworking president, Mr. Rudy Namtu, and all members of the council for this very worth-while project. I would also like to recognize the students of Ross School who assisted in the planting of hundreds of trees this past spring.

I am sure this example could be followed in many communities across Canada.

DISTRIBUTION OF COOKIES MADE WITH IRRADIATED FLOUR

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, Atomic Energy of Canada has become the cookie monster. But unlike its Sesame Street counterpart, AECL does not hoard cookies, it gives them out freely.

This publicly funded body is distributing chocolate chip cookies made with irradiated flour. Why chocolate chip cookies you may ask? Think about it. How much irradiated liver could one give away?

Some recipients of these treats have discovered that if the cookies are not eaten right away, and left in the light for a week, they turn bone coloured. If they are stored in the darkness, the cookies still become a light tan colour. Some were afraid that irradiated products would glow in the dark. Now it appears they are whitening with daylight.

The reason for irradiation is allegedly to enhance the food's longevity in storage. Grandma's chocolate chip cookies never lasted beyond a few hours before they were eaten. Perhaps irradiation does overcome that problem.

YOUTH

BENEFITS PROVIDED BY FONDATION-FAVREAU

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of this House a new organization that was created in November 1987. The purposes of this unique new organization are to give young people aged 8 to 18 from low-income families access to all cultural, sporting and artistic activities by offering them financial support and to provide follow-up to evaluate the positive, preventive impact that developing their talents will have on these young people.

Encouraging better cooperation and interaction among those working to help young people and their families is also one of the goals of the Favreau Foundation.

The Foundation operates through financial sponsorships from business and professional men and women and others who care about the welfare of these thousands of children in full physical and mental health who only want to fulfil themselves but who, for lack of money, are in danger of losing the desire to pursue their own education and of falling into juvenile delinquency.

It is therefore up to all of us to ensure that these thousands of Canadians, tomorrow's adults, can help build for all Canadians a future to match their achievements.

TAX REFORM

STUDY'S FUNDINGS OF EFFECT ON DISPOSABLE INCOME

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we have seen once again today that the Tory idea of tax reform is to let the rich pay less and the poor pay more. As a result of Tory tax reform, the average family in Canada earning between $29,000 and $35,000 a year, is actually losing about $680 in disposable income. On top of that, the average family earning between $35,000 and $43,000 is losing $840 in disposal income.

An amount of $840 may not mean a lot to people in this Parliament or to the thousands of rich taxpayers who will not pay a penny in tax, but for a family of four in the community of Hamilton it means no possibility of buying a new refrigerator or any new appliance, creating jobs in our own community.

For a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who was elected on a platform of no tax increases, this Prime Minister has stuck it to the people of Canada in a worse way than any Prime Minister in the history of this country. It is another broken promise. It is another "une trahison de la population". All I can say is Tory times are tax times.

ECONOMIC SUMMIT

OPENING VENUE IN TORONTO

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the seven Heads of Government at the Economic Summit held their first working session last night at the historic Toronto Hunt. They could not have chosen a more inspiring place to begin their deliberations, with its location at the crest of the imcomparable Scarborough bluffs and, I add, in the heart of the federal constituency of Scarborough West.

The Leaders may not yet know where the Summit is going, but the people of Scarborough West certainly know where it started. I add, in all parts of Metro it is clear that, traffic inconveniences aside, this great conferences recognizes how Metro has become a great world centre.

WORKERS MEMORIAL DAY

COMMEMORATION OF WORKERS KILLED AND INJURED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, today, June 20, has been declared Workers Memorial Day by the Mine Mill Union Local 598 in Sudbury. This day was established by this union after the tragedy of June 20, 1984, when four men lost their lives in one fell swoop at the No. 5 mine shaft at Falconbridge.

We take this opportunity to commemorate those brothers and sisters who were killed, injured, or disabled on the job over the past years in Canada and throughout the world. Fortunately, great strides have been made in mine safety. Even so, 10 miners lost their lives in northern Ontario so far this year.

Across Canada, 744 workers lost their lives in industrial accidents in 1986, the most recent year for which we have statistics.

We are constantly exposed to rhetoric from business and government about the great contribution capital is making to developing Canada. All too often we forget that it is the working people who have done the most to help build our country, often at the cost of their own lives and health. We must recommit ourselves to a safe and healthy work environment, and fight to ensure that the Government show leadership on this issue.

• (1410)

I most sincerely hope that on June 20, 1989, we can stand up and say that Canadian workplaces are healthier and safer than they ever have been.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, we read an excellent editorial in this morning's Globe and Mail. The Liberal and socialist opposition has run out of arguments to use against our proposed legislation. By common agreement, they are now opposing the democratic system itself. It is a sorry triple alliance of unelected Liberal senators, a federal Liberal Party turned against itself, worn out and penniless, and the socialists, whose ideas change and vary.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—LICENSING OF LIMOUSINE SERVICES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Economic Summit leaders are lucky that they did not have to take limousines from Pearson International Airport into our city. If they had, they would have discovered a virtually disastrous situation in which more and more of my constituents and people from the Toronto area are missing airplanes, are being forced to go to one terminal, and walk to another terminal because of the poor system and the deterioration of the system that has been allowed to take place.

The federal Government is responsible for this. It issues limousine permits. A decision was made months back to issue an additional 70 permits. To our astonishment, these licences were all issued to the corporations that presently control the entry and access of limousines into the airport. No licences were made available to the operators, the people who know the traffic system, the people who were looking forward to the opportunity to break through what is a very small club of four companies that control, and should not be allowed to continue to control, the entire federal limousine service into Pearson International Airport.

ABORTION

SACREDNESS OF LIFE

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, according to the United Nations, abortions outnumber deaths among the world's population. For every two pregnancies brought to term at least one is aborted. Abortion has become a tool to control population growth, and this is outrageous. Abortion is nothing but cold- blooded murder.

Consider that right now in Canada it is legal to kill a baby up to birth, but illegal to kill the same baby once it is born. Even humans found guilty of committing the most heinous crimes are allowed by law to continue to live. In fact, our tax dollars pay these murderers to abort innocent lives. There should be no right to choose once life is created, for life is the only thing that is sacred in this universe.

POLITICAL PARTIES

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY ON CONDUCTING BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, there have been some accusations that the New Democratic Party is holding up the business of the House of Commons. I wish to clarify what it is that we are doing.

On Friday a request came to consider amendments to the National Transportation Act to assist the disabled in terms of travel. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that with the co-operation of the New Democratic Party and the Official Opposition, the Government passed that legislation expeditiously. As a matter of fact, it was passed in less than one hour.

I wish to make it clear that, if it is good legislation the Government brings forward and in the best interests of the people of Canada, we will co-operate 100 per cent. We will work with the Government and we will work with the Opposition.

But when the Government brings in a motion to pass the trade legislation, that is where we differ. That is why we will use whatever procedurally acceptable opportunity we have to frustrate the Government in order that an election can occur to allow the people of Canada to indicate how they feel about this sell-out to the United States.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

MATHEMATICS USED IN CALCULATING SERVICE FEES

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, service fee charges continue to multiply. However, it is now the banks and trust companies charging each other with having the highest service fees.

It is obvious that over the past few years both banks and trust companies have become very proficient at subtraction as they take money out of customers' accounts more and more frequently. However, the question raised last week is whether they can add. A real division now exists over which institution is subtracting the most from customer accounts.

My initial reaction was that they needed a higher form of mathematics, for example, differential calculus, to settle the dispute by calculating the velocity at which money is leaving customers' accounts. However, even differential calculus appears inadequate to settle this issue.

Only the most advanced calculus, residue theory, is adequate to settle this issue once and for all. For those not familiar with residue theory it is also used in calculations involving material close to an unlimited black hole in space.

• (1415)

Perhaps the banks and trust companies will cancel their charges at least against each other if not against consumers, and refer the dispute to the universities.

Oral Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

EMPLOYEES' SUMMER HOLIDAYS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, later today, or perhaps tomorrow, Parliament could adopt a motion calling for us to sit throughout the summer months. In as much as I am not in favour of that particular proposition, I rise today to speak on behalf of the employees who work for us here on Parliament Hill.

Some of the 3,000 or so employees on Parliament Hill have already received notices stating that they will not be able to take any holidays this summer and therefore will be unable to be with their families. I trust, Mr. Speaker, that you will make at least some time available for the staff of Parliament Hill so that they can have at least one week off, or something in that order, so that they can be with their families. Unlike the Conservative caucus the staff cannot work on a roster, with one week on the Hill and three weeks off.

TRADE

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT RULING ON IMPORTED URANIUM

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, last week in a decision of major importance to Canada the United States Supreme Court reversed the finding of a lower court and ruled that the United States Government does not have to place restrictions on imported uranium to help to protect domestic producers. Canadian uranium producers and American users will no doubt greet the news with jubilation.

In more general terms this decision helps cement the spirit of free trade. It demonstrates that the dispute resolution mechanism contained in the free trade agreement is viable and will work to the advantage of both nations.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DISBANDMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, this morning Newfoundland and Labrador witnessed the abandonment of the Newfoundland Railway. An announcement authored by the Hon. Member for St. John's West and by the Premier of Newfoundland was an announcement that represents nothing less than a supreme act of hypocrisy and betrayal of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador by the Government of Canada, and by the Government of Newfoundland.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Tobin: While this Government was dishing out many millions of dollars like candy in a by-election in Quebec to try to elect the Prime Minister's friend, Mr. Lucien Bouchard, today in Newfoundland and Labrador a railway over 100 years old was being buried by the Newfoundland Government and by the Government of Canada for an inadequate amount of compensation spread over a period of 15 years.

In 1978, the Conservative Party, and specifically the Hon. Member for St. John's West, took the position that the abandonment of the Newfoundland Railway was unconstitutional, and could not be done under the 1949 Terms of Union between Canada and Newfoundland. Indeed, a Royal Commission of Inquiry, the Sullivan Royal Commission, stated: "If the Province refused to co-operate in the required constitutional change, then, in the opinion of the Commission, there would be no choice but to continue full rail service".

Given that constitutional guarantee I ask the Deputy Prime Minister why was the Hon. Member for St. John's West in St. John's, Newfoundland, this morning announcing the abandonment of the Newfoundland Railway? Why was the Hon. Member on behalf of the Government of Canada unilaterally revoking the Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada, refusing to recognize the constitutional requirement to provide a railway service and future transportation services in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talked about the support that this initiative had, he failed to include that this initiative has the support of the workers and many communities in the Province of Newfoundland.

Ms. Copps: Call an election; we'll find out.

Mr. Mazankowski: I quote from the press release where the Hon. Member for St. John's West has made the following statement. It says:

> This agreement is a reflection of our common desire to work toward the provision of a safe, efficient, productive transportation system to meet the present and future needs of the people of Newfoundland and Labrador.

It goes on to say that this initiative will firmly establish a transportation system that will allow Newfoundland and Labrador to meet transportation obligations into the 21st century.

• (1420)

This is an initiative that has been worked out with the province in consultation with the various communities and with the workers. I think it is a good solution and one that will allow a proper transportation system to develop in the province so it can take advantage of the tremendous economic opportunities in the future.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, "We are not losing the rail service. I do not care what any Royal Commission recommends. There will be a rail service in Newfoundland. It will not be taken away from us. Unless the rail service is totally abandoned in Canada, it will not be abandoned in Newfoundland". Those are the words of the Member for St. John's West in 1978. What hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, if the Newfoundland Railway service were to continue to operate, it would cost the federal Government, according to its own estimates this morning in its announcement in St. John's, $40 million a year to operate. That is $600 million over the next 15 years.

In closing the railway, the federal Government proposes to spend in transportation upgrading, in exchange for abandoning the railway, a little over $700 million in the next 15 years. In other words, the reality is that Newfoundlanders are being asked to abandon the railway for an additional $6 million a year in federal government spending over 15 years. Newfoundlanders have been stabbed in the back for $6 million a year and the hand on the knife is the Member for St. John's West and the Premier of Newfoundland, traitors to their province.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member probably on reflection knows he has gone a little further than he would wish. I would like him to take back the word "traitors" because he referred specifically to one of the Members of this place, and then he can put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, in the interests of abiding by the Speaker's advice, let me say that there has been a somewhat miraculous, miraculous transformation of the Member for St. John's West from 1978 to 1988. It is amazing what a few years in Cabinet at the knee of the Prime Minister can do to what once was a proud Newfoundlander fighting for his province.

An Hon. Member: Where is he today?

Ms. Copps: He is hiding.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister how can the Government of Canada justify the action being taken today, this insult today, to the people of Newfoundland and, in particular, justify shutting down the railway in two months time, September 1, 1988, shutting down that railway years before any additional highway capacity can be built in order to accommodate the extra freight traffic that will be moved from rails on to the highways? How can that be justified? Why the bloody big rush?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about hypocrisy. It would be rather interesting to know what his privately held views are because I think there would be some variance to what his public views are—

Ms. Copps: He doesn't have two views.

Mr. Mazankowski: —because I have had many discussions with him about the future of the Newfoundland Railway. I find his private views somewhat at variance with his public views, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Copps: He doesn't have two views.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is important is the fact that—

Ms. Copps: Table your face.

Mr. Mazankowski: —the package includes some $405 million for improvements to the Trans-Canada Highway, something that Newfoundlanders want; another $235 million for regional trunk roads, something that Newfoundlanders want; $75 million for labour adjustment and related expenditures on the closure of the railway, which the workers want; $15 million for community adjustment, which the communities want; $8.1 million for ports development, and a federal contribution of $62 million to enrich the existing economic regional development or ERDA program which will be supplemented as well by the province.

All of these initiatives have been discussed with the Government of Newfoundland and with the people affected. This is a package supported by the province, the provincial Government of Newfoundland, by the workers, and by the vast majority of the communities.

ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my private views on the railway are the same as my public views which have been known for months. They are that any question of abandoning the railway ought to involve, first, recognition of our rights under the Terms of Union and proper compensation, not accounted for today. It ought to recognize the need for a maintenance agreement continuing in perpetuity to maintain those highways after they are built, not accounted for today. It ought to recognize the need for a meaningful retraining program for these hundreds of employees about to be laid off, not accounted for today. Those are my private views and those are my public views.

• (1425)

The Royal Commission of Inquiry into transportation of 1978 said that the federal Government should be required to ensure that sufficient funds are available to maintain the entire Trans-Canada Highway in the province and also to increase port facilities. It recommended as well that this maintenance money ought to be provided in perpetuity, as it is now provided in the case of the railway. In fact, we will have $6.6 million per year for 15 years and then we are on our own.

The Deputy Prime Minister knows my private views. He now knows my public views. Why have those reasonable conditions which this Party adheres to, and which the Leader of this Party publicly endorsed in St. John's, Newfoundland, not been met in the agreement signed today? What kind of chicanery is the Government involved in in trying to rip off the poorest of all the provinces of Canada with this agreement signed today in Newfoundland?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this is not a rip-off and the Hon. Member knows it. If the Hon. Member reads Article 31 and Article 32 of the Terms of Union, he will find that the undertakings that were made at that time are being in fact fulfilled in this announcement by the Government of Canada. Furthermore, there was also a provision to guarantee some protection with respect to freight rates. That too has been included in this package.

We are getting a lot of rhetoric here, and a bit of fanfare coming from the Hon. Member. I think that on reflection, when he studies the package thoroughly, he will find out that this is done in the best interests of Newfoundland.

FUNDING OF TRANS-LABRADOR HIGHWAY

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In 1978 the Hon. Member for St. John's West called Otto Lang an ogre, untrustworthy and heartless. However, Otto Lang built the airstrips along the Labrador coast and started the Trans-Labrador Highway.

Why is it that only $16 million has been allocated to that Trans-Labrador Highway in spite of the fact that the Sullivan Royal Commission recommended, if the railway was closed down, that a highway be built across Labrador? Why is it that Labrador is being treated as second class in this compensation package? Why is Labrador being sold out?

Judas Iscariot got 30 pieces of silver, and adding inflation that is more than we got today.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, under this agreement Labrador is not being sold out, neither is Newfoundland being sold out. The people of Labrador and of Newfoundland are not being sold out. Transportation services will be provided in the future.

As a matter of fact, the steps that are being taken here will build for the future and will provide the kind of competitive transportation system that will in fact enhance the economic opportunities for Newfoundland and Labrador. I think the Hon. Member recognizes that. The fact is that the road network will be improved. That is something that the Newfoundland Government believes is desirable and that is something that the people of Newfoundland believe is desirable. The Hon. Member will have an excellent transportation system that will handle people and goods.

OBSERVANCE OF CONSTITUTIONAL OBLIGATIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, last week I asked the Deputy Prime Minister if the Government of Canada would live up to its constitutional obligations, and he said yes, it would, as reported in Hansard. Today we have seen that the Government of Canada has failed to live up to those constitutional obligations.

Those obligations require the Government of Canada to maintain a transportation system at national standards across the province, not just Newfoundland but across the province. That has failed to be done. Why did the Deputy Prime Minister say in the House a week ago that he would live up to the constitutional obligations of 1949 but today the Government has sold out the province so cheaply? Why?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, on reflection, may want to restudy that point because the fact is that Article 31 and Article 32 of the Terms of Union have been lived up to and fulfilled, as has the commitment to provide some protection for freight rates. That, too, has been incorporated in the agreement. I would invite the Hon. Member to re-examine the agreement. He will find that that is the case.

• (1430)

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. In view of the well known policies of the Government to privatize, deregulate, close down, and abandon the public services of Canada, it should come as no surprise to Newfoundlanders today to hear that the Government is going to close down the Newfoundland Railway.

The people of Newfoundland want to know today why their province alone has to put up with the abandonment of constitutional rights as spelled out in the agreement, that is, that this agreement and the funds are offered in full satisfaction of all Canada's constitutional obligations related to railways on the island of Newfoundland.

Why is Newfoundland, of all provinces in Canada, required to give up its constitutional rights in order to get a decent road system?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Terms of Union are being lived up to.

Mr. Tobin: You bought them for a few baubles.

An Hon. Member: Shut up.

Mr. Tobin: I won't shut up. Try and shut me up.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Mazankowski: As I said, Mr. Speaker, Articles 31 and 32 are in fact being lived up to as is the commitment to provide some guarantee and protection for freight rates.

The objective of the Government has been, is, and will continue to be to provide better transportation services to more Canadians from coast to coast. I think the record clearly speaks for itself in terms of the overhaul of the National Transportation Act, improved air services, and the more competitive nature of our transportation system.

Doing this will provide a better opportunity for more Canadians from coast to coast to take advantage of the economic opportunities available through an enhanced transportation system. That is the objective and the reasoning behind this agreement which is supported by the Government of the Province of Newfoundland, by workers, and by many people who live in the affected communities of Newfoundland.

I invite the Hon. Member to re-examine the arrangement in order to see the positive benefits which will flow from this very good agreement which has been negotiated by the two levels of government.

AMOUNT OF FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the 1987 Newfoundland Royal Commission on Employment and Unemployment concluded that it would require $64 million a year, $40 million of which ought to be indexed to inflation, in perpetuity in order to compensate the people of Newfoundland for the loss of the railway. That is in addition to the requirements of compensating the 500 Newfoundlanders who will lose their jobs as a result of this.

This agreement provides for about $700 million over 15 years for transportation, only about $50 million a year, and nothing after that. Why are the people of Newfoundland being ripped off by the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the people of Newfoundland are not being ripped off by the Government. We are putting in place a program for an improved transportation service which will allow Newfoundlanders and the people of Labrador to take better advantage of the economic opportunities available to them. The Hon. Member should be applauding that rather than ridiculing it.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister said that this agreement is supported by the workers. Well, all the workers are getting under this agreement is what they are already entitled to under agreements they themselves have negotiated over the last number of years. They are getting nothing from the Government over and above that. The railway is being closed down September 1, 1988, but there will be no money spent on the TransCanada highway until 1992.

Why is the Government taking advantage of the unfortunate economic situation of the Government of Newfoundland and forcing it to accept this agreement and give up its rights for inadequate compensation? Why does the Government not deal fairly with the people of Newfoundland?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong when he suggests that the federal Government is taking advantage of the people of Newfoundland. This agreement has been negotiated—

Mr. Tobin: The Government is looking for a few bucks to try to win an election.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: This agreement was negotiated with the Government of Newfoundland after extensive consultation. Such consultations have been going on for years. The agreement is put forth in the best interests of Newfoundland with the best opportunities for it to enhance its economic opportunities and have a first-class, up-to-date, efficient, safe, and competitive transportation system for the future.

EFFECT ON NORTH SYDNEY, N. S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is likewise for the Deputy Prime Minister. If this is a stab in the back of the Province of Newfoundland, it is a stab in the heart of the Town of North Sydney. The Government has at least made a pretence of compensating the Province of Newfoundland and Newfoundlanders, but it has not given one cent to Cape Bretoners who will be losing their jobs as a result of this railway closure.

Why does the Government not admit that it is going to be devastating the economy of the town of North Sydney and costing the people of North Sydney jobs? Why does the Government not at least have the courage to admit that this is only the first step in the closure of the railway in Nova Scotia between Truro and Sydney?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is categorically wrong in that assumption. The fact of the matter is that CN will continue to maintain rail service to North Sydney. At the moment trains between Truro and Sydney have an average of 80 to 90 cars per day. The fact is that we will still have a multi-modal transportation service in this area.

As the Hon. Member knows, CN has probably one of the most generous and comprehensive adjustment, retirement, and retraining programs of any corporation in Canada. I am sure that he will be most helpful to his constituents in ensuring that if there is any adjustment he will be there to assist them, as will I.

CANADIAN NATIONAL LAY-OFFS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, what the Deputy Prime Minister is saying is the most insidious thing I have heard in this House of Commons in a long, long time. If there is to be no problem in Cape Breton why are four CN workers being laid off as of July 21? Why are two more being laid off as of the middle of September?

Why does the Deputy Prime Minister not then commit right now that there will be no rail closure of the line between Truro and Sydney? Will he guarantee right now that that line will remain open and that there will be no job losses in industrial Cape Breton?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is talking about adjustment and protection for the workers. There is a $75 million labour adjustment and related expenditure program as a result of this announcement. There is a $15 million community adjustment program and an $8.2 million development program for ports.

Mr. MacLellan: The ports are in Newfoundland.

Mr. Mazankowski: There is a $62 million ERDA agreement.

Mr. MacLellan: There is nothing for Cape Breton.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is in addition to the very generous employee benefits of the CNR.

Mr. MacLellan: Your nose is growing.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Member knows that. The fact of the matter, which the Member conveniently overlooks, is that the massive lay-offs which took place before 1984 make the adjustment which may occur now very miniscule by nature. He sat there and did absolutely nothing about them.

WORKERS' SEVERANCE PAY—EFFECT ON ELIGIBILITY FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the unemployment insurance program. It was announced today that the Newfoundland Railway will be closed on September 1, 1988. The workers were never involved in the negotiations and were, in fact, informed at eight o'clock this morning of the deal. They will all be out of jobs on September 1, 1988, and their severance packages will not allow them to collect unemployment insurance. Because the unemployment insurance program was changed by this Government severance pay and all other remuneration they will receive will be applied to benefits.

Can the Minister stand up and tell me whether we are going to punish Newfoundland railway workers three times?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, unemployment insurance exists to help workers who become entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. This Government has created programs to assist the social reintegration of the unemployed. Under the specific programs like the one mentioned by the Hon. Member, we have allocated special funding on a shared-cost basis with industry, and we intend to do everything we can to ensure that the dignity of the Canadian worker is respected.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER CHANGE ELIGIBILITY REGULATIONS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, prior to September, 1984, severance pay and any other emoluments paid to workers when they lost their jobs through no fault of their own were never considered income for unemployment insurance purposes. It was the present Government that made that change and discriminated against unemployed workers.

There are no provisions in the unemployment insurance program to give benefits to workers. It will be mostly older workers who will be affected. They will never be able to get a job as quickly as when they were younger.

Will the Minister tell the House if she is prepared at least to go back and change the regulations so that any unfairness of this sort will be eliminated?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that unemployment insurance exists for people who are looking for a job, for people who are laid off, and that is why this Government has created programs to assist social reintegration, and we intend to continue creating jobs at the same rate we have maintained since 1984.

EFFECT OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT ON NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, today will go down in the books as a dark day for Newfoundland because Newfoundland becomes the only province in Canada without a railway. I am wondering why.

Why is Newfoundland the only province in Canada that is forced to give up its railway, with hundreds of permanent employees, in exchange for some money to upgrade its roads? Québec did not have to give up its railway when the Prime Minister announced $900 million two weeks ago to upgrade its roads. Why is Newfoundland the only province in Canada that is forced to trade rails for roads?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this agreement was not forced upon the people of Newfoundland or the Government of Newfoundland. It was negotiated with the Government of Newfoundland which speaks on behalf of the people of Newfoundland. It was negotiated very simply because it was considered to be in the best long term interests of the people of Newfoundland, with economic development and a good transportation system so that Newfoundlanders can have the same opportunities as people in every other part of Canada. That is why the deal was negotiated.

EFFECT ON FREIGHT TRANSPORTATION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this is not the closure of a branch of a railway or a portion of a railway, this is the closure of the entire 960 kilometres of the railway in exchange for 166 kilometres of pavement. That is only 18 per cent of the entire Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland.

Does the Minister really believe that Newfoundlanders will believe this is a fair deal? Does the Minister not realize that as a result of this deal every single bit of freight that crosses Newfoundland will have to go on that road? This includes all the dangerous substances, explosives, dangerous chemicals, the whole shebang will have to go over that one road with only 166 kilometres of new pavement.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is such an advocate of the railway why did he not get out and campaign with the shippers and the producers of Newfoundland to get them to utilize the railway? Quite frankly, the fact of the matter is that traffic volumes have declined to such an extent that it is totally non economic to continue the operation. Rather than pouring more money into the support of that operation it was considered to be more effective to build a better transportation infrastructure which would allow Newfoundlanders to take full advantage of the economic opportunities that are available to them.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MILITARY COUP D'ÉTAT IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

M. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Our hopes and the hopes of Haitians that democracy would come to Haiti have been dashed by a military coup and by statements made by General Namphy, to the effect that he will establish a non-democratic, military junta. Four of Haiti's major donor countries are at the Summit in Toronto. Has the Canadian Government raised this issue so that these governments can prepare an effective response?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to answer on behalf of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and to inform the Hon. Member that we are monitoring the situation very closely. The issue was indeed raised at the Summit in Toronto, and we will have news about the discussions on the present situation in Haiti very shortly.

QUERY WHETHER CANADA WILL RECEIVE PRESIDENT MANIGAT AS REFUGEE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, there were some rumours to the effect that Mr. Manigat plans to come to Canada to seek asylum. Is this true? What would the Canadian Government's response be to his request?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is a very hypothetical question. Of course, when we have a situation like the present one in Haiti, Canada is always mentioned as a possibility. At the present time, however, we cannot assume that the deposed president is now actually on his way to Canada. We will have to follow the same immigration rules that all other people have to follow when they want to come here. However, it is all very hypothetical at this time.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT JUSTIFY POLICY OF PRECEDING 10 MONTHS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. After the coup, it was obvious that General Namphy would once again proclaim himself to be Haiti's Head of State. This is the same gentleman for whom the Canadian Conservative Government had high hopes, the same gentleman the Canadian ambassador trusted so implicitly. The Parliamentary Secretary must be pretty embarrassed on behalf of his Government today! I want to ask him how, in the light of recent events, he can justify the Conservative Government's lack of coherence in its policy vis-à-vis Haiti during the past year or so.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very much surprised to hear the Hon. Member qualify a situation we are analysing as events unfold as being perfectly obvious. I find it even more surprising since Canada's policy will be affected, especially by the unanimous report we tabled, a report to which the Hon. Member was a party. As far as the assistance program is concerned, what is now happening in Haiti merely reinforces our position, and we have no reason to be embarrassed. I would refer the Hon. Member to statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in the House in which he expressed considerable reservations about the electoral process. We did not say we recognized this or that president. We recognized a State. In fact, this was made clear in our initial recommendation that Canada should maintain the present level of its diplomatic representation in Haiti. I signed that report, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member opposite signed as well, and I believe our report remains relevant. The people of Haiti need help.

SAFETY OF CANADIANS IN HAITI—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, what the Haitian people need above all is democracy, real democracy. I want to ask the Parliamentary Secretary what kind of concrete measures the Canadian Government will consider to support the upright citizens who wish to create a democracy in Haiti. And especially, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether he can give the House the assurance today that the safety of Canadians working in Haiti, and I am thinking especially of missionaries, is assured at this time. Are the people who had the courage to ask publicly for democracy in Haiti threatened today by this dictator who has just come back to power, and what will the Conservative Government do to help Canadian nationals who may be at risk today in Haiti?

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, reports received from Port-au-Prince, from our ambassador who is still posted there, indicate there is no danger to Canadians at the present time. Of course, since it is an emergency situation, we must always analyse events as they unfold, and the Department of External Affairs is constantly in touch with our ambassador in Haiti. We are analysing the situation, and as in other instances when difficult situations arise, we will be able to take steps as required to protect the lives of Canadians who are in Haiti and who are doing humanitarian work and a magnificent job.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—TOTAL COST

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Today we learned that Rear Admiral John Anderson, who heads the Minister's own nuclear submarine acquisition program, has indicated that the Minister's $8 billion price tag for the nuclear attack submarines fails to include a number of critical components, including ship-to-shore communication systems, the missiles that will be used on the ships, the cost of making nuclear fuel and a whole range of items.

As the Deputy Prime Minister well knows, when a Canadian goes in to buy a car, that individual wants to know what the full cost will be before he signs on the dotted line. Before the Minister of National Defence signs on the dotted line and locks Canadian taxpayers into a multibillion dollar package, would it not be appropriate to know what the actual total cost is before he makes that commitment?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Indeed it would, Mr. Speaker, and indeed we do. There are a number of elements in the Hon. Member's question that are simply false. For example, it is not our intention to acquire anti-ship missiles. Were we to do so, however, they would replace the Mark 48 torpedo we are buying for the submarines and an anti-ship torpedo would cost less money than a Mark 48 torpedo. Is the Hon. Member suggesting we should do that? If he is, we would actually be saving money.

Second, with respect to fuel fabrication, we do not intend to fabricate it in Canada although we will have the ability to load the fuel in Canada—

Mr. Riis: You are going to buy it?

Mr. Beatty: —and that is included in the $8 billion figure. Third, with respect to the VLF communications with the submarines, these submarines will be capable, as are our three Oberon Class submarines today, of receiving these messages. At the present time we use allied communications systems. We have taken no decision on whether to build our own or to continue to use allied communications systems. If we do, we would take that into consideration and it would come off the $8 billion figure.

Mr. Riis: Perhaps what the Minister of National Defence should do is sit down with Rear Admiral John Anderson and explain to him that, although he heads the Minister's own nuclear submarine Hunter Attack Submarine Task Force, he obviously does not know what he is talking about. One or the other is not being straight with the people of Canada.

PRICE QUERY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. In terms of the acquisition of nuclear fuel, can the Minister tell us what the actual price tag will be, the price tag for the actual purchase of the updated communications system, the price tag for the missiles that will be used, the price tag for the new port facilities, which are not included, and the price tag for the training of the crews, which have not been factored in? Will the Minister now simply be honest and straightforward with the people of Canada and tell them precisely what the price tag per sub will be?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply wrong again. The fact is that upgrading of port facilities is included. The fact is that a range of other items mentioned by the Hon. Member are included in the cost. To carry on the Member's analogy with respect to a car, with respect to the total program cost of $8 billion, we are including not only the cost of the car but the cost of the garage, the driveway, of drivers' ed, of licensing, of a driver's licence and of insurance. That is a pretty good start.

HOUSING

SALES TAX ON HOUSING MATERIALS—REQUEST FOR RE-EXAMINATION

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. An objective of tax reform is to help people of modest means. In the past some of us in this House have advocated the removal of the federal sales tax on housing materials as a way of doing that. So I ask the Minister, in light of the critical shortage of affordable housing, especially in our large metro areas, will the Minister take a fresh look at this dimension of the tax system and seek ways of reforming it to help people who now despair of ever realizing a home of their own?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. friend for the concerns he has expressed about affordable housing in Toronto. Clearly, the issue of housing prices in tight markets is a very important one. I have to tell my hon. friend, however, that tax reform is premised on the basis of not increasing preferences and deductions but in fact removing them, broadening the base and lowering the tax rate. As a result of that, we will not be in a position to do precisely what he has asked. However, I have to tell him that we will have, as he knows, a refundable sales tax credit. That will be put in place to allow middle-income Canadians and lower-income Canadians, after tax reform, to be better looked after.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—COST OF INFRASTRUCTURE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. In answer to one of my questions last week, the Associate Minister of National Defence stated it would cost $3 billion for infrastructure and $5 billion for the submarines, but the Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of materiel, Mr. Eldon Healey, stated it would cost $4 billion for the submarines and $4 billion for the infrastructure. Obviously, there is only a $1 billion differential between the Associate Minister and the Assistant Deputy Minister—

Mr. Boudria: What's a billion?

Mr. Hopkins: —and this begs the question, who knows what is going on in the Department of National Defence? Who is right? Is the Assistant Deputy Minister right or is the Associate Minister right? Surely the Conservative Party today is coming out and saying "what is another billion?" That is exactly what they are saying, and what is another billion to them?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Liberals are not very good at mathematics, as is evident from the financial shape of their political Party. Whether it is $3 billion and $5 billion or $4 billion and $4 billion, it adds up to $8 billion, which is equal. The exact ratio will depend on the exact model of submarine which is chosen.

All of this does beg a question, though. It begs the question, what is the policy of the Liberal Party of Canada? Canadians know what our policy is. They know what the cost would be. We know what the Liberals are against. When are they going to state with some honesty what they are for?

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, if it was not for the budget put together by the Liberal Party here in this House of Commons, the Conservatives would not have anything to go on today—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hopkins: —because they have not put enough in to buy ammunition.

COMMUNICATIONS SYSTEM

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Admiral Anderson mentioned other items besides the very low frequency radio system that was required on the submarines. After he finished his shopping list, he said that the moneys would have to be found somewhere else in the Department of National Defence. This was precisely the reason for my questions last week when I said this massive expenditure could be a detriment to other areas of the Defence Department.

Will the Minister tell us where these additional moneys are going to come from for the submarine program? And why is the Minister so enthusiastic about purchasing a fleet of nuclear submarines at a cost of $8 billion when he cannot even talk to them when they are under the Arctic ice? Is he going to wait for them to come up to get a report?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, while we are talking figures here, we are dealing with a political Party on the other side that is bankrupt in terms of its finances and in terms of its policies.

I made it abundantly clear earlier today during Question Period that, for example, if the Hon. Member is proposing that we should purchase anti-ship missiles, we would have to remove some of the Mark 48 torpedoes which we plan to have in our weapons load. An anti-ship missile actually costs less money than a Mark 48 torpedo. If the Hon. Member is proposing we do that, we would be saving money. Additionally, I have already indicated to the Hon. Member, and it has been done before committee as well, that while we will have the ability to load fuel in Canada, it is not our intention at the present time to fabricate the fuel in Canada. I indicated that to him already.

Third, as I indicated previously, both the Oberon Class submarines we have today and our new submarines will have the capacity to receive very low frequency communications. At the present time what we do is rely upon allied networks for transmission. And if we take a decision to do otherwise, this money would be taken out of the $8 billion figure. Now, perhaps the Hon. Member will make clear what the Liberal policy is? My friend talks about the Arctic. How would the Liberals defend the Arctic?

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER TAX—LEGAL PROCEEDINGS LAUNCHED BY MANUFACTURERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who will be aware that 25 independent softwood lumber manufacturers and re-manufacturers are suing the Government because of the tax they had to pay under the softwood lumber export tax while 20 other companies in very similar circumstances received an exemption.

• (1500)

Can the Deputy Prime Minister tell Canadians why the Government forces an industry group into court in order to obtain fair treatment when surely that should be a direct objective of the Government and of the tax system?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it would not be appropriate for me to comment further on this matter because it is before the Federal Court.

I will say that examinations for discovery are to take place this summer to allow counsel for both sides to establish the facts. The case will then be heard by the British Columbia division of the Federal Court. It is not open to us to discuss it at the moment.

DETERMINATION OF TAX POLICIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. The Government is aware of the degree to which this type of different treatment has eroded confidence in the Government's willingness to defend Canadian plywood standards against representations from the United States.

Can the Government assure the House that taxation policies will be set in Canada rather than in the United States?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find that comment rather amazing coming from the New Democratic Party which criticized the Government for taxation policies in Canada. The New Democratic Party wanted us to let it stay in the United States and let the tax go to the United States. I find it interesting that the New Democratic Party would say that.

Yes, we can give the assurance that taxation policies will be established here and will be carried out here in Canada.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN DROUGHT—HERD MAINTENANCE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. It concerns the western drought situation. Although there has been rain in some areas of the West, most areas are still desperately short of feed for cattle, and pastures.

When will the Minister and the Government announce a herd maintenance program in order that livestock owners will be able to keep their herds and provide feed for them during this drought period?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the fact that the Hon. Member's Leader took time on one of his western trips to visit the drought area of western Canada, as did the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

I have received questions from both Parties on this subject. I indicated that the work of the federal-provincial drought co-ordinating committee continues to go forward. In fact, they are meeting today in Winnipeg.

The Hon. Member should know that the Canadian Cattlemen's Association put forth another option prior to the weekend and over the weekend in place of a per head payment. The federal-provincial committee has invited the Canadian Cattlemen's Association to make a presentation to their meeting today in Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Algoma, and this will be the last question.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE TAX DEFERRAL SCHEME

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. Since the Minister is not prepared to announce a herd maintenance program today, is the Minister prepared to recommend to the Government, and get the Government to put in place, a special tax arrangement in order that farmers who do have to disperse their herds will be able to put receipts from that sale into a special reserve fund which, if used for the purchase of replacement herds within three years, would not be liable for taxation?

Is the Government prepared to provide such a program to assist those farmers who have to disperse their herds this year due to the drought circumstances?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that this question has been raised. I indicated some 10 days ago that this was one of the many options that the federal-provincial committee was studying.

As far as the timing of an announcement is concerned, there is a timetable of the media, there is a timetable of the Opposition, and our timetable will be that established by the industry people themselves.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

INTERJECTION OF HON. MEMBER FOR HAMILTON EAST

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this morning in the heat of debate while we were discussing the motion presently before the House, in checking the "blues", the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), in referring to Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, the immigration Bills presently before the House, stated that it is a racist move and they know it. I believe that those comments are totally unfounded, totally untrue, and are unworthy of the Hon. Member accusing the Government of such a thing. I would ask that she unequivocally withdraw those remarks.

Ms. Copps: No way.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will have a look at the "blues" myself and rule on it later today or tomorrow.

Mr. Gauthier: You can't have that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the "blues" are referred to—

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Why don't you listen to the other side for a change—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I beg your pardon. Would the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques like to repeat what he said?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): —to hear the other side?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the Hon. Member rises I will hear the other side, otherwise there is not very much I can do. Now that the Hon. Member has risen I will listen to her. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think you will realize that two Members on the opposition side have risen. Indeed, I referred to a racist move by the Government. Perhaps you could refer to Beauchesne's, Mr. Speaker. First, I did not state an individual. I did not say the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) was racist, although he could very well fight the deal. I said that it was a racist move on the part of the Government, and I stand by that. There is absolutely nothing unparliamentary about that comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have no problem with those remarks. I will check the "blues" tomorrow, and if there is a problem I will naturally rule.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 16379) and the amendment of Mr. Guilbault, Saint-Jacques (p. 16387).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock p.m., the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands had the floor, and he has three minutes left to complete his debate.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was speaking to Motion No. 26 which will extend the sitting of the House into the summer with extended hours. Our contention, of course, is that the Government wants this motion in order that it can force through Bill C-130 which puts into place the Mulroney—Reagan trade deal. The Government is using this legislation by exhaustion to force upon the people of Canada a piece of legislation for which the Government has no mandate. Instead of pushing this legislation through the Government should call an election.

I urge the Government to reconsider its whole approach to this legislation. The Progressive Conservatives have a proud record in opposition of opposing this type of imposition of law through closure. They are trying to push through Motion No. 26 today by closure. In 1956 the Progressive Conservatives stood very strongly against the imposition of closure by the Liberal Government of Louis St. Laurent. In the Trudeau years the Conservatives were very strong against the Government's use of closure. As I quoted earlier in my speech, the Progressive Conservatives used inflammatory language, speaking of jackboot democracy and so on. Now, when they are on the other side of the House, they are using exactly the same tactics.

I ask government Members to reconsider their approach. They will be in opposition soon enough themselves. They will regret the fact that they have thrown the whole parliamentary calendar, the whole business of parliamentary reform, into the ashcan for the sake of a very short-term advantage in the House where they can use their parliamentary majority to push through legislation on which, that by rights, the people of Canada should have an election before it comes to the House.

I urge the Government to reconsider the importance of the parliamentary calendar to individual Members, to Members who have families, from the point of view of democracy as a whole. We want intelligent people to be able to stand for office. When intelligent people look at the manner in which this Government is demeaning the process of democracy, having a process of legislation by exhaustion, having a process by which individual Members of Parliament are denied the right to be with their families during the summer, they will simply say: "This is not for me".

I urge the Government to consider the fact that it will be in opposition itself and will not want this type of precedent to be forced back on it, to consider its own history of opposition to this type of jackboot tactics, and to consider the basic process of democracy. If it does that, I am sure it will withdraw this motion.

• (1510)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to speak because I had made a speech in proposing the motion. However, I have been moved by the "Government is bungling everything" speech of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the "I want to get to the swimming pool" speech of the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly).

I want to say that we did not bring in closure without a great deal of thought. In fact, we regret the necessity to close this debate, but here is the situation with which we were faced, and I wish to refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the Debates of last week.

On Monday of last week from 11 a.m. until 1 p.m. the House was delayed by the delaying tactics of the NDP. When one of their Members moved to introduce a Bill, half the Party said "yea" and the other half said "nay" and thus forced a vote. They did the same thing with respect to the question on whether or not the Bill should be printed. Unfortunately, that was a Bill to confer on Raoul Wallenberg honorary Canadian citizenship. We objected at the time, as did the Liberal Party, to the NDP playing politics with that very important matter.

On Wednesday of last week from 3 p.m. until 6 p.m. the House Leader of the New Democratic Party introduced two Private Members' Bills, forcing votes on the introduction and forcing votes on first reading, thus delaying away the entire day.

On Thursday of last week it was a short day because of the speech by Helmut Kohl, Chancellor of West Germany. The NDP did the same thing and delayed so that the whole day was wasted.

Thus Members of the New Democratic Party wasted two full days and one-half day last week. They now come in here and talk about legislation by exhaustion. They cannot have it both ways. If they delay and delay and do not allow for debate, then one cannot say: "Well, we are not getting our opportunity to debate".

My hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier said that we should have moved earlier last week to do today what we did. I want to refer my friend to the precedent in this matter which occurred back in April of 1987. I want to refer my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier to some of the comments of the Speaker when he made his ruling that it was within the rules to move, during Routine Proceedings, that the House move to Orders of the Day.

The Speaker made reference to the fact that the fundamental rights of Members can be violated by the tactics of obstruction as well as by unreasonable restriction of debate. He said that sooner or later every issue must be decided, and that the decision will be taken by a majority. The point to remember from the Speaker's decision is this. He said that he did not make the decision with a great deal of joy, and that the decision was made in such a way that if Member's wished to refer to it in the future, and if it was to be resorted to as a precedent, then the Chair will interpret it in the light of prevailing circumstances with a view to maintaining the essential balance to which the Chair referred earlier in its decision.

The reason we did not do this last week was to give members of the Opposition an opportunity to see if they had made their point by delay and delay and delay, by not allowing the House to do anything. Obviously, they had not made their point. We just did not feel that it was appropriate to waste any more time of the House. They wasted two and a half days last week. We felt that the circumstances were there to bring into effect what the Speaker said was a precedent that cannot be abused.

We allowed for the delay last week. When the time of the House was being abused, that is when we brought in the motion to move to Orders of the Day.

My friend from Ottawa—Vanier quoted at length from the first letter of a series, that is, the letter of May 31, which I wrote to the two Opposition House Leaders. He took great glee in referring to the large number of pieces of legislation that were referred to in that letter, some of which—and this is admitted—had not even been introduced on the Order Paper. What my hon. friend forgot to talk about, which I will do for him now, is the letter of June 9 from myself to the Opposition House Leader.

Ms. Copps: I have that one right here.

Mr. Lewis: Have you got that one?

Ms. Copps: Right here.

Mr. Lewis: That is fine.

I want to point out that in that letter we referred to 11 Bills on which there is a great deal of agreement between the Liberal Party and ourselves and which we feel can go forward. These are Bills that are either at third reading stage or report stage. There are also some four other Bills which, as was pointed out by my hon. friend, the House Leader of the Liberal Party, would not take a great deal of debate. We added five Bills which we felt we had to have before the House rose for the summer. I think it is fair to say that we have had a great deal of progress to this point.

My hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier then went on to talk about the delay in passing Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. We have had those Bills out of this House for some time. Yes, we came back last August because of the emergency situation created by the arrival of a boatload of so-called refugees who did not want to go through the normal procedures. We moved to correct that abuse.

The abuse has shifted from the boat landing on the shore of Nova Scotia to the Senate of Canada. Bill C-84 has been delayed and delayed and delayed by the Senate. Bill C-55 has been delayed and delayed and delayed by the Senate. That is from where the delay is coming. We have acted to correct those problems, but the delay is coming from the Senate. If my hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier wonders why those Bills have not passed, he need only raise on Wednesday that matter in the Liberal caucus, which after all is controlled by Senators, to see if he cannot try to free up the log-jam.

I want to review briefly some of the reasons we are bringing this motion to extend the sittings, so that we can put them in the perspective of what has happened since we originally brought in the motion and discussed this matter with Opposition House Leaders. I pointed out in my original remarks that we were on track with our agenda despite comments to the contrary by the Opposition. I pointed out that we were well ahead in our plans—

Mr. Manly: This is the way you planned it?

Mr. Lewis: —and that we had produced more legislation in the last two long Parliaments but that we had recently run into a great deal of delay from the Opposition—not delay by way of debate but delay by way of delay.

We put that on record. We pointed out, as I have just now, that there were several Bills at report stage and third reading stage which could be finished off. There is a great deal of agreement that these can be finished off quickly.

We pointed out that our agenda had been disrupted somewhat by the need to revisit the Meech Lake debate. We extended hours last week, with the consent of all Parties, to finalize that debate. The vote on the Meech Lake response by the Government will take place on Wednesday of this week.

I know that this is something we have out of the way. I do not know how many Liberals will be here to vote. We do not know which way they are going to vote. The topic of the week just after the summit will probably be just how badly the Liberal Party is going to split on the Meech Lake Accord.

I will refer to the abortion motion in a minute.

Next, we come to the importance of our free trade initiative. Members of the Opposition have made no bones about the fact that they do not want to debate this item. They want to delay it. They cannot win the debate.

Mr. Manly: Call an election on it.

• (1520)

Mr. Lewis: We will take the 48 per cent in favour of free trade, and the Liberals and the NDP can split the 34 per cent. Not bad. I do not know where my friend learned his sums but that does not work out to a win. We are saving opposition Members from that election if they want to play it on free trade. Opposition Members will split 34 per cent between them.

I have made reference to the delay in the Senate. As I suggested earlier, from 1980 to 1984 the Senate never had a sober second thought. Suddenly the Senate is having all sorts of sober second thoughts.

Ms. Copps: I wouldn't say that if I were in your shoes.

Mr. Lewis: The Senate has discontinued the practice of pre-studying Bills. All these things brought us to the point where we had to put this motion on the Order Paper.

I want to deal now with where we are headed. We intend to call the free trade debate for tomorrow. That will be day one of the debate and it will be the day when we will see just whether or not the Opposition is ready to debate free trade or ready to delay it. Tomorrow is the day of decision for the Opposition. Opposition Members have to decide whether to put their case to the people by way of debate—

Ms. Copps: Call an election.

Mr. Lewis: —or by way of delay. Let us see tomorrow, because that will be day one. It will be a long day. We should be able to knock off quite a bit of debate from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and from 3 p.m. to 10 p.m. unless my hon. friends want to delay. If they want to delay, it will be an abdication of their responsibilities as Members of Parliament.

Wednesday will be an Opposition Day and Thursday will be another Opposition Day. We will then call free trade the following week in an effort to complete the debate on that very important matter. I say to my hon. friends who suggested we are going to go right through the summer that at that point we will have discussions with the House Leaders of the Opposition Parties. Discussions are teed up for tomorrow afternoon with respect to legislation about which we are basically in agreement about and on which there might be some movement. I suggest that that legislation could take most of the week of July 4 to July 8. With a bit of co-operation we can knock that legislation off and send it to the Senate that week. That will leave us to begin on July 11th debate on the abortion motion.

I want to dwell on that for a moment. The abortion motion was put on the books some time in May, and it was met with a great deal of initial "oh, my goodness, you are usurping the rules of democracy" talk from the Opposition. There was great wailing and gnashing of teeth because we were forcing the Opposition to be part of a free vote. Yet here was a reasonable way to get a sense of the House which could guide the Government in drafting the legislation, in the general framework for it, and in whether Members voting their conscience or the wishes of their constituents.

Mr. Manly: Bring in a Bill.

Mr. Lewis: We could then draft a Bill. My hon. friend objects to that. I appreciate why he objects. My hon. friend objects because his Party will vote the party line on a very sensitive and emotional issue.

Mr. Manly: Bring in a Bill for a free vote.

Mr. Lewis: We do not intend to play politics with this particular motion, not at all. It is too important and too sensitive to do that. We feel we have a very fair way of dealing with it. My hon. friend says: "Bring in a Bill". Let me tell my hon. friend the basic difference between the opportunity to debate this motion and the opportunity to debate a Bill. On a motion every Member of the House has 20 minutes to put his or her case. On a Bill speeches are restricted to a maximum of 10 minutes after eight hours of debate.

Mr. Manly: Unanimous consent can change those rules. We could have 20 minutes for everybody on a Bill.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend is now talking about unanimous consent. He now has a different idea. The Opposition objects mostly to the free vote.

Ms. Copps: It has nothing to do with the free vote.

Mr. Lewis: We intend to proceed with that motion after the legislation is out of the way, and we will have a free vote. I understand why my hon. friend does not want a free vote on this matter. Unfortunately it will cut into his swimming pool time. I do feel badly about that.

Mr. Keeper: You are all wet.

Ms. Copps: He is still able to swim in Canadian waters.

Mr. Lewis: The rest of us were sent to work on behalf of the people. My hon. friend resents anything cutting into his 10-week vacation. Is it in the manifesto that he gets 10 weeks' vacation? Is it in the first paragraph of the manifesto that thou shalt have 10 weeks' vacation? My hon. friend better go back to his riding. He will find that most people who work in his riding do not get 10 weeks' vacation.

That is where we are, Mr. Speaker. This motion would never have had to occur if the opposition Parties had not delayed. The question of closure would never have had to come up if the opposition Parties had not delayed. We intend to allow this debate to progress and then we will have a vote.

As I indicated to the House, tomorrow we will start with the very important issue of the free trade Bill, Bill C-130.

Mr. Riis: That is the sell-out Bill.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a proposition—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I can give the Hon. Member an offer he cannot refuse.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I want to smoke out these Tories who are saying, "Let's sit all summer". I do not know what the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) does when he is not in the House of Commons, but there are some Members who work outside this place in their constituencies. Maybe that is why he squeaked through by the skin of his teeth in 1979 by 66 votes. I do not want to be that close.

Mr. Lewis: I don't blame you.

Ms. Copps: I want to do a little better preparation. But I have a proposition, Mr. Speaker.

I come from a steel working town where people work on shifts. I know what the Tories have up their sleeves. They have already developed a roster system. At any given time in the House one-third of the Tory Members are here and two-thirds are off travelling the country and on vacation. I will move a proposition that, sure, we will sit for extended hours. We will sit all summer. We will work as hard as anybody, but the Tories who are not here should not pick up a paycheque. The 70 people here will be holding the can for 140 others who will be off playing and on vacation.

An Hon. Member: Where is Axworthy? Where is Turner?

Ms. Copps: The Minister claims that the Government is ready to work. The Government is merely trying to beat the Opposition into the ground. The Tories know that for the last four years 40 Liberals and 30 New Democrats have had to hold up the work of the House,—

Mr. Angus: Thirty-two New Democrats. Get the number right.

Ms. Copps: —the work of 28 committees, the work across the country of political Parties. In the meantime we have tried to create make-work projects for tired Conservatives who have had nothing to do. Right now I have been making quorum for the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare because there is not a Tory in the list of Tory members of the committee who is interested in coming on a consistent basis to the standing committee. We in the Opposition have been making quorum for one of the most important committees.

We are certainly prepared to work and do our share, but we are sick and tired of watching 140 Tories running around the country on vacation, leaving only 70 people here at a given point in time. Let us call a spade a spade and let us call a Tory a Tory. Let us start looking at the voting and attendance records of Members. There are Conservative Members from the Hamilton area, Conservative Members who were elected in the last election, who will be "de-elected" in the next election and who have never spoken in the House or, if they have, it has been once or twice.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): No, that is not right.

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) can stand up and speak. I can talk about the people in the Hamilton—Wentworth area. Frankly, most of them have never spoken out in the House on a single issue of substance.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): That is not true.

Ms. Copps: The Member for Niagara Falls will have a chance to have his say. He better take it quickly because he will be replaced after the next election.

Mr. Gottselig: The voice of doom from Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: There have been members of the Opposition who have been working day and night on committee, in the House, and with respect to other commitments to their political Parties and to to the people of Canada across the country. It is very easy for the Conservatives to say that they want to sit all summer because they have a roster system. At any given time two-thirds of the Tories are not in the House of Commons. Let us call a spade a spade and say that those two-thirds of Tories who are out of the Commons at any given point in time will have their paycheques cut by two-thirds. Why should we be paying Tories who are off gallivanting in swimming pools in their areas? Let us move a motion to cut their paycheques by two-thirds. I will support it. I am prepared to sit here and do the work of the House of Commons. I cannot stand the hypocrisy of the Government which claims that the Opposition does not want to work. We want to debate substantive issues. All the Government wants to do is ram through legislation.

• (1530)

Let us look at the so-called tax reform document that the Government wants to put through immediately. With one sweep of the hand, we are supposed to pass this legislation. Let me read just one little passage from the 500-page document to which the Parliament of Canada has not had an opportunity to give its full attention. This is the definition of an individual:

> For the purposes of subsection (5), an individual shall be deemed to have supported a person in a particular month of a taxation year if
> (a) the person is a child of, or is dependent for support in the particular month on, the individual or the individual's spouse; and
> (b) where the individual is married at the end of the particular month,
> (i) the individual's income for the year (computed without reference to subsection (5) and section 63) exceeds that of the individual's spouse; and
> (ii) the individual's spouse was not, by reason of a breakdown of the marriage, living separate and apart from the individual at the end of the particular month and for a period of at least 90 days commencing in the year.
> (7) For the purposes of subsection (5), where an allowance referred to in that subsection is paid in respect of a person for a particular month of a taxation year and no amount in respect of the allowance would, but for this subsection, be included in computing the income for the year of any individual, the individual to whom the allowance is paid shall be deemed to have supported the person in the particular month."

That is the simplified tax Bill. This is page 94 of the English version of this 500-page document. Yet the Government has introduced a package of legislation including the trade Bill, the abortion legislation, and the tax reform legislation. It says that Parliament should pass it, or the Government will try to hammer us by sitting day and night.

Government Members are not interested in quality debate. They are not interested in a real examination of the substance of tax reform. They are interested in ramming through a bunch of Bills because they intend to break the Opposition down through fatigue.

Let us consider the tax reform Bill alone. I believe that the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano) has done a tremendous job in mobilizing the small business community to point out some of the loopholes and inadequacies of this particular legislation.

Mr. Speaker, we can say about automobile expenses alone . . .

[English]

Small business people in Canada are extremely concerned about changes which relate to automobile expenses. In fact, a number of groups has come before the Finance Committee to point out the inconsistencies in the legislation that is supposed to be rammed through by the end of this month.

[Translation]

And we can say, for example, that the groups that appeared before the Finance Committee all found these new rules very complex. The so-called simplification of the tax system is not really that, Mr. Speaker. Even the experts cannot understand it. Not just the factory worker in my riding, but even lawyers and chartered accountants cannot understand the "simplified" tax system proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the best illustration of this complexity was provided by the Joint Committee on Taxation of the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants. Here is what they said about the May 1988 tax reform: "As regards automobile expenses and related benefits, the draft legislation is terribly complex. It required 30 different amendments to the Act and Regulations to translate into legal terms the measures proposed in the White Paper as later amended in December 1987. These provisions are full of technical errors, which proves that the writers themselves had great difficulty understanding the rules."

[English]

We are not simply talking about the false proposition of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that this is a simpler process. We are also talking about the technical errors which exist because the Government is intending to ram through this legislation with about 20 or 30 other pieces of legislation in the next couple of weeks. The Government is threatening that if we do not buckle under, if we do not cave in, it will pull the plug and we will sit day and night. Government Members do not care about the quality of tax reform legislation. All they want to do is stick it to the taxpayers.

The Institute for Research on Public Policy makes it very clear that as a a result of so-called Tory tax reform average taxpayers will be paying more, depending upon their income levels. If they are earning between $29,000 and $35,000, they will be losing, over the course of the Tory mandate, almost $700 in purchasing power. If their income is in the neighbourhood of $35,000 to $40,000 per year, they will actually be losing close to $900.

The only people who gain and gain substantially as a result of the so-called tax reform are the big buck earners who earn over $117,000 a year. How can the Minister claim that we should pass this legislation without giving a fair shake to the ordinary steelworking men and women of my riding who want to know why they are now paying more in taxes?

Some of these Members have been silent for four years. I was very happy to hear the Member from Toronto rise today to talk about the tax on building materials. Where was that Hon. Member when the first Tory Budget introduced a tax on building materials at the federal level? Where was that Hon. Member when this Minister introduced a plan to cut out the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan? Where was that Hon. Member when the same Government doubled insurance fees for CMHC from 1.5 per cent to 3 per cent on average adding hundreds, if not more than $1,000, to the cost of purchasing a home? I did not hear that Hon. Member complaining about a tax on building materials. He sat silently. Now he and his colleagues are involved in a conspiracy to try to convince Canadian taxpayers that we do not want to do the work of the House of Commons.

What we want is fair tax reform. We do not want to have the kind of tax reform that will tell ordinary taxpayers that they will have to pay an extra $1,200 as a result of the tax reforms of the Conservative Government. With tax policy friends like that, I would hate to be on the receiving end of the Government's enmity. The Government has hit, right between the eyes, middle class working men and women of Canada who try to keep the economy alive.

The Minister of Finance himself called sales tax the silent killer of jobs. Yet, since he has come to power along with his cohorts, individual Canadian families are paying an extra $500 a year, simply as a result of increased sales taxes and excise taxes on gas. That has to be coupled with $600, $700, or $800 extra in taxes as a result of the Government's so-called tax reform.

How can the Minister have any credibility? How can he try, with a straight face, to convince the people of Canada that it is the Opposition that is somehow preventing the work of Parliament from being done? Considering the complexity of the trade Bill, I daresay that we could use all the time between now and the beginning of July to detail our very specific opposition to it. It is such a bad Bill, that we are convinced the people of Canada will realize that once they have time to read the fine print.

Commercial blood banks are included in the free trade deal. The Minister from St. John's West sold out Newfoundlanders today. Obviously he does not care about selling out the national health care system. It is right in the annex of the trade deal that blood banks of a commercial nature will be allowed, and that will result in the destruction of the Canadian medicare system as we now know it.

I am not saying that next year we will have to pay for blood, but we will soon, if a private market captures 5 per cent to 10 per cent of the Canadian market for the sale of blood. If I set up an office in downtown Toronto and offer people fifty bucks for a pint of blood, how long do you think, Mr. Speaker, the voluntary sector of the Red Cross will be able to continue the well developed national network of voluntary blood clinics which has become a hallmark of this country?

Yes, we would like time to debate the substantive issues. The Deputy House Leader for the Government said that the Opposition was obstructing real debate. Since last week we have been wanting to have a real debate on this issue, and the Government itself has determined that it would rather be faced with the ringing of the bells on procedural matters. I am one of those who thinks the public wants to hear a debate of substance, and we would like to debate the substance.

In the space of two weeks I cannot represent the people of Hamilton East on the tax package alone. How can I be expected to stand silent while I watch this rip-off and the padding of the rich? According to the Government's own figures we know that even after this so-called tax reform more than 60,000 profitable corporations will still be paying no tax, even though the Government promised a minimum tax on the rich. We also know that 5,220 rich individuals will be paying no tax, even though the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised a minimum tax on the rich.

Yes, there are points we would like to raise on tax reform and literally dozens of other Bills on which would wish to have a chance to articulate.

How does the Government expect us to deal with the trade Bill, the abortion resolution, the tax reform legislation, the national parks legislation, the mutual legal assistance legislation, the proceeds of crime legislation, the official languages legislation, the Canada-Nova Scotia offshore petroleum resources legislation, the registration of lobbyists legislation, the Canadian Wheat Board legislation, the Canadian National Trade Tribunal legislation, the divestiture of Eldorado Nuclear Limited legislation, the Canada Labour Code legislation, the Bretton Woods Agreement legislation, the National Housing and CMHC Acts, the Canadian Grain Act, the conflict of interest Senate and House of Commons Act, the Department of Industry, Science and Technology Act, the Multiculturalism Act, the Immigration Refugee Act, the Immigration Refugee Illegal Act, Air Canada privatization, pari mutuel betting—the Government is moving into pari mutuel betting through a new Bill which has come forward—the National Transportation Act, and amendments for disabled persons?

That only includes the Government's list of demands for the next two weeks of legislation already on the Order Paper. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) promised that he was going to come forward with a child care Act, but we have not seen it yet. We have also been waiting to hear about a number of other Acts which have not yet come forward. The Government is demanding that they be passed before we even see them.

If we as Members are to take our responsibilities seriously, surely we owe it to the taxpayers who are going to be footing the bill for this monstrosity to examine every clause in a detailed way and to ensure that whatever legislation is passed is good legislation, or at least that the arguments on both sides will have been well aired.

The Government is not interested in real debate. It was already talking closure when we had had six speakers, I believe, and it had had six or seven speakers on one Bill. The Government is really interested in muzzling the Opposition and ramming through a rather poor quality of debate.

I heard government Members laughing during Question Period when the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) spoke about the work of the employees of the House of Commons. They laughed because most of them sit in their offices and do not have to do anything anyway. I have spoken to a number of employees of the House of Commons. Those sitting right in this room who work in translation are not even covered by the Canada Labour Code. They do not even have the basic conditions of their workplace guaranteed, which is the minimum basic right given to every other Canadian worker. When the Government introduced the legislation on unionization of employees on the Hill, unfortunately it forgot to proclaim the part which dealt with working conditions.

Translators work at a very high stress job. God forbid that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) should get his "blues" with the wrong phrase or he will be on his feet on another false point of order. These individuals work extremely hard and deserve support rather than the cackles and guffaws which we heard from Members of the Conservative Party who seem to think that no one else in Parliament knows the meaning of work. If the debate continues until ten, eleven, twelve, or one o'clock in the morning and the quality of it continues to decline, the employees have to continue to take the notes and translate the Debates.

I think they and the taxpayers of Canada are at least entitled to a quality of debate which is being denied by this legislation. This is in fact a false way for the 140 Conservative Members of Parliament who know they will not be back in the House of Commons after the next election to enjoy an extended vacation.

While my colleagues are here in the House to continue the debate and maintain quorum as we have done over the last four years, this is a make-holiday program for tired Tories who know that they have no hope and might as well live out their last days in their swimming pools.

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, keeping in mind what the last speaker said, as I look around I see that the Government cannot even muster up a quorum in the House to hear what I have to say.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has been around here a long time and knows that he should not indicate who is and who is not in the House. There are Members in the lobby watching the Hon. Member on television, and they are liable to come in here and express their views on this. I hope the Member will extend courtesy to the House.

Mr. Rodriguez: I know the rules, Mr. Speaker, and I see they have all come crawling out from under the chesterfields in the lobby. There is only a small fraction of them here. I am surprised that their consciences allow them to collect a paycheque. They believe that it is all right to keep employees here on Parliament Hill all summer long while the Tory hacks and flacks fly off to their ridings and collect their paycheques and expense allowances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. Courtesy is the code of the House. I would like to hear the Hon. Member. I cannot seem to hear him very well.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that we will keep them here.

The question in my mind is: Why are we debating a motion to extend the sitting of this House until September 9? What is the justification for this? The Government says that it has run such a successful Parliament that 197 Bills received Royal Assent as well as some Private Members' Bills, perhaps 203 or 204 altogether. It boasts about how successful this Parliament has been. There was no question that the Opposition was blocking the work of Parliament. It was obviously a very hard working Parliament which passed so many Bills.

What is the justification for this? We know the justification. It is that the Government now wants to pass the free trade Bill, Bill C-130, and we have said: "They shall not pass". We have said that quite clearly, because the people of Canada have not had an opportunity to participate in the discussion about the free trade agreement. Was it raised in 1984? Not on your bippy, Mr. Speaker, it was not raised at all.

• (1550)

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was running for Leader of the Conservative Party in 1983—and I do not know why anyone would want to run for the leadership of that Party—he said: "free trade with the United States is like getting into bed with an elephant. If the elephant rolls over you are dead". That is all he was on record as saying with regard to free trade. It is clear and unequivocal opposition to free trade.

Now that he is the Prime Minister we are being told that we have to sit through the summer so that he can ram Bill C-130 through Parliament. We all know now why he cannot be trusted. He speaks out of both sides of his mouth. Someone said that one can always tell when the Prime Minister is not being straight with the folks, because he moves his lips.

The Prime Minister is trying to put free trade through the House of Commons at the last moment before it breaks on June 30. The Government is extending the sitting of the House so he can ram through Bill C-130. We are saying that that is not fair to the people of Canada. Canadians have a right to participate in a deal which will be so important to the future of our country.

We have challenged the Prime Minister to call an election and make this an issue, but he will not touch it. Here we have this phalanx of Tories gathered here to try to extend the sitting. We have opposed it.

The Government has even brought in closure in order to get the motion through. It is the tyranny of the majority on 70 members in the Opposition. Those 200-odd Members on the government side should be ashamed of themselves for picking on so small an opposition. One would think that their conscience would at least bother them, but Tories do not have consciences.

This is what the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) had to say about closure in 1981, with regard to the Excise Tax Act introduced by the Liberal Government. As reported at page 10409 of Hansard on June 9, 1981, the Hon. Member for St. John's West, the present Minister for International Trade, said:

> This comes from a closure-crazed government, a government which suffers from the crime of parliamentary bestiality. It cannot wait to force these kinds of things through the House.

He went on to say:

> The same little group comes in here on every closure motion. The same little group of parliamentary eunuchs, the same group of parliamentary assassins—the House leader, the assistant House leader, the hon. member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Evans), the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Bussieres)—are in here all the time, assassinating this House and removing the good from the House. That is why I call them the parliamentary eunuchs. The good has already been removed from them.

Then he says:

> This is an illustration of what has happened to Canada. Today we have a parliamentary system of government without any checks and balances and without the separation of powers. The Prime Minister has a group of docile sheep in his caucus who keep him in power, no matter what he is doing. They just say "Baaa, sir, baaa, sir, pass it through the House, sir". As long as they do that, he has absolute power. This Prime Minister has absolute power as long as the majority in his caucus give him that unlimited power. They are so busy with their noses in the patronage trough and the power trough that they neither know nor care what happens to this Parliament, and we can expect nothing from them.

Can you believe that, Mr. Speaker? That was stated by one of the power brokers in the Tory caucus when he was in opposition. Now he is in government and the eunuchs have moved over from the Opposition. Look at all the eunuchs on the back-benches. "Baa, baa".

The Prime Minister had to go to Paris to get the ambassador to run in Lac-Saint-Jean to save the Government's skin in Quebec. What message is he giving to the eunuchs in the back-benches who have been elected from that part of the country? He is telling them that they are a bunch of eunuchs who he cannot trust to save his skin. He went to Paris for Lucien Bouchard.

An Hon. Member: He is going to win tonight and you are going to finish third.

Mr. Rodriguez: You fellows will never make it to Cabinet. You were overlooked. I suppose they are fulfilling the function for which they were elected, which is to flip their flippers like trained seals.

The Government is only extending the sitting of this Parliament in order to pass its trade deal. It is not interested in what Canadians think. Otherwise it would provide an appropriate time to debate the Bill properly throughout the land. The parliamentary committee should be travelling throughout the country to receive briefs from Canadians, to listen to their concerns, and to inform them.

The Government has put millions of dollars in the trough while the Minister for International Trade hires his best friend to spread the propaganda to Canadians before the Bill has even passed second reading. The Government is only interested in the propaganda. It is following all the same practices which brought down the Liberal Government and for which the Conservatives condemned the previous Liberal Government. It has introduced time allocation numerous times in this Parliament and has brought in closure many times in the exact same fashion as have the Liberals. The Conservatives promised a new era but they have not done anything different.

The Conservatives promised that there would be no more patronage. Canadians still remember when the Prime Minister said to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner): "You had an option, sir". Lo and behold, the patronage machines are still operating.

The Prime Minister said that it was reprehensible to buy Canadian voters with their own money.

Yet we have the spectacle of the Prime Minister on a sojourn to Lac-Saint-Jean trying to buy the by-election for his friend. It seems the only people who can get anywhere in this country are classmates or room-mates of the Prime Minister. The treasury doors have been opened. Where is restraint? Out the window. We do not hear too much talk now about the deficit. The Conservatives are on a spending splurge, trying to buy a friend a seat in the House of Commons, all because the Prime Minister could not trust Members of Parliament who were elected under the Tory banner from the Province of Quebec.

What he is really saying to them is: "You can't be trusted". What the Prime Minister is attempting to do is to buy the voters of Lac-Saint-Jean with their own money. I do not think the people of Lac-Saint-Jean are going to fall for that. The Conservatives tried to buy St. John's East and that did not work. But did the people of St. John's East get the $30 million? They sure did. So the people of Lac-Saint-Jean could boot Lucien Bouchard out and still get the money because the other Bouchard has to come across because he is in a nearby riding. How can the Conservatives turn off the tap? They promised it, and if the people do not vote for their candidate, they still have to be given the money.

Today we heard about the Newfoundland railway. It is gone. They are going to replace it with highways. Just imagine, we can have a new highway built all the way from Alma to Labrador, and then we can put a causeway over to Newfoundland and we can make it the Trans-Canada. That is the spectacle. We have to extend this sitting because the Government wants to pass Bill C-130, which will put the free trade arrangement between the Prime Minister of this country and Ronald Reagan into effect. It is a giveaway of this country to the United States. It is a sell-out.

Canadians have many questions. First, they are not aware of all the details of this agreement and what they have been hearing, they do not like. They do not believe, for example, that a foreign government ought to dictate to a Canadian Government, which was elected by the people, as to how our energy should be priced. That ought not to be a prerogative of any foreign government. Second, what Canadians do not like is the virtual elimination of all review of American investments in this country. At a time when the Americans are becoming very concerned about Asian investment in the United States, the Canadian Government is turning over the country to the United States. I think Canadians are very concerned that we will become the fifty-first State.

This deal should not be proceeded with until the Canadian people have been consulted. There are enough Bills on the Order Paper that our caucus is prepared to support. For example, we said we were prepared to support the lobbying Bill. The Prime Minister committed himself to that two years ago on an urgent basis. He said: "We will bring in a lobbying Bill, a Bill to register lobbyists", because he was concerned. He wanted to establish a Mr. Clean image and his friends, Doucette and Ouellet the card-player, all of them wanted to create a clean image, so he promised the Lobbying Registry, Bill C-82. It is called the Frank Moores Bill. We are all set to pass Bill C-82. So why does the Government not bring forward the Frank Moores Bill? We are ready for it.

We had a report on bank service charges. The Government has promised us a Bill. Bring it on and if it is patterned along the lines of our report, we will pass it. The Government does not have to extend the House in order for us to pass it. We will pass it because we recognize that there are some Bills on the Order Paper about which we agree. We can pass those Bills.

I just mentioned Bill C-82. We are prepared to pass that. We passed Bill C-31, the Railway Act, on Friday. We passed it through all stages. We can do that with Bill C-82 and with the amendment to the Bank Act, along the lines of the committee report. After all, we even drafted the report and entered it as a Private Member's Bill. All the Government has to do is present it. We will pass it. In fact, if the Government does not want to do that, it can go the private Member's route and we will pass it that way. But the Government will not do that because the banks are its friends. They are the government's bankers. I see the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), here. He is very useful to have in the Tory caucus because he can walk both sides of the street. He is the enemy of the banks but he is a Tory at the same time. It is a nice game, but it will not wash.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret the Hon. Member's time has expired. Debate.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) prompted me to rise and say that there has been some co-operation on some matters that have come out of committees and elsewhere, and I take his co-operation with respect to the Bill drafted by the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs and presented in the name of the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). I know he and I would be most pleased to see that Bill through, or a Bill equal to it.

Mr. Rodriguez: Bring it on.

Mr. Blenkarn: I suspect that before there are too many moons through the sky, a Bill of that nature might be before us. However, the issue today is in connection with what amounts to unrealistic delays in the basic program of the Government. Every time we have tried to move ahead with that basic program, the coalition represented by the Liberal New Dinosaur Party has done everything it can to make sure that this House is hijacked to the effect that the thrust of the government's move on privatization, the thrust of the government's move with respect to a trade agreement, the thrust of the government's move with respect to cleaning up the problem of illegal immigration and the thrust of the government's work on a free vote on abortion, has been stymied, held up and delayed unrealistically. The Opposition knows that. It has made a point of declaring that it would use every conceivable delaying method possible to prevent debate, discussion, committee meetings, that it would do everything to force those Bills and those government initiatives to be stopped.

Clearly, a Government which intends to run the country has to ensure that Parliament works and that it has a chance to debate the issues before it, particularly the issues brought to the attention of Parliament by the Government. I do not think we had one sensible debate all last week. We had one motion after another as to whether a private Member should be entitled to introduce a Bill and one vote after another as to whether that Bill should be printed and circulated. That is an unrealistic waste of time for which the taxpayers paid in hiring us to be their representatives in this House of Commons. There is no justification for it. That time has to be made up. Unfortunately, that time is going to have to be made up in July. None of us like that. None of us want that. That make-up of time is totally unnecessary.

In other Parliaments in this Commonwealth serious matters that are in complete debate between one side or the other, where both sides have their own firm position, are handled in one day, perhaps a day and a half with perhaps two speakers from each side, perhaps not even that, and a vote is called. That is what happens in Great Britain. Here we have one filibuster after another, one delaying tactic after another. There may be a point in that, but the point is that we have to sit longer than we should have to sit, because we do have to come to grips with the issues. We do not solve the problem of Parliament by delaying techniques that prevent us from coming to grips with issues. We are paid to come to grips with issues. We are paid to make decisions. We are paid to show leadership. We are not paid to vote on whether or not a Member should be able to introduce a Bill.

The coalition has brought us to this. We have been forced by the coalition to extend the hours of the House, to extend the sittings of the House in order that the Government-needed legislation can be dealt with. The coalition says: "Call an election". There are signs out that state: "Trade Mulroney and call an election". Sir, they will have an election. But they want an election before the fourteenth of July, because they want to have a Parliament elected improperly. They want a Parliament that is not representative of the people. They want to force on Canada a Parliament based on a 1971 census. That is the extent of their idea of democracy.

This coalition has nothing to offer Canada other than delay, other than harping criticism. They have no program, no philosophy other than socialism, state ownership, as the means of production and distribution. This is a coalition of those who believe in big government. This is a coalition of those who believe in big brother. They will have an opportunity to present their ideas of big brother, probably before the snow flies, but not before we have redistribution. They know that, and this hollow call for an election is exactly that, a hollow call from hollow minds. The issues in the election, Sir, will be the trade issue, whether Canada is going to offer opportunities for young people, or whether those opportunities will only be available in the United States.

We are a nation of 25 million people. There is presently a meeting of the G-7 in Toronto. Our trading partners all have markets in excess of 100 billion people at home. We have a market of 25 million. How do we ever expect to be world competitive without at least a basic home market? Yet, the coalition says: "Don't worry about that. Put a big fence around Canada and make sure we have a little Canada." We will have an opportunity to discuss that with the people of Canada. The people of Canada will vote for a big Canada, a future for their kids. That is the type of Canada we want, and that is the type of Canada that the people will have a chance to vote for. But, they will get a chance after redistribution, not before. They will get a chance after the trade Bill is passed at least the House of Commons.

In this Bill we will be able to show exactly what we intend to do, and we will be able to have the people vote on this Bill and the trade issues. The coalition will have to say that they do not want to deal with the United States. One of them is going to tear it up, the other is going to tear it down. I do not know how the tearing is going. But I can tell you, Sir, the tearing is going to be the tearing of the Liberal-New Democratic coalition, the tweedle-dum and the tweedle-dee of the House.

The Government has a program of privatization. We have been moving the Government out of the affairs of individuals. In the last three and a half years we have privatized more Crown corporations than all of the Governments put together, both federal and provincial, in the history of Canada. Before the House we have a major privatization Bill involving Air Canada. That Bill is demanded by over 80 per cent of the employees of Air Canada. It will enable our national airline to compete in the world without having its hands tied behind its back as an agent of the Crown. It is important to the people of Canada that that Bill goes through. We can have a vote on it and the coalition can renationalize it, if they want to, if the people of Canada direct them that way. But the airline employees will not vote for them when they have an opportunity to buy stock in their company.

I come now to the immigration matter. This House was called back in emergency session on August 10, 1987. It was recalled to deal with the flagrant abuses of our immigration laws whereby people would come across our border and say: "I am a refugee", because they knew that under the present system, a system formulated by the Liberal Party, they could stay in Canada for five years and work anyway, because they could go from one appeal and one delaying process to another. As a result, our immigration system is now clogged with more than 50,000 people claiming refugee status, most of them improperly.

It is not that they do not want to come to Canada, and not that most of them might make good immigrants, but they are trying to jump the queue. We have Bills that have been delayed in the Senate for more than 200 days that would deal with that problem. The issue in the election will be the Senate, directed by Allan MacEachen, which believes that it does not need to be elected in order to stymie the will of the elected people and be responsive to the electorate. They will get their election all right, and the election will be on the Senate that has done its darndest to hamper and prevent democracy from working, since 1984 only.

Sir, we have to have an extension of hours. I do not like to have an extension of hours. It is unfortunate. But when there is continual blocking of the activity of the House by a coalition on the other side, determined to prevent matters from coming to a vote, determined to prevent open and free debate, and determined to make sure that an agenda reasonably put to it by the House Leaders is negotiated and worked out, then the Government has no choice except to move to set aside the rules on a temporary basis to give that opportunity demanded for debate.

They do not want debate. They only want to play blunderlog, a game we used to play with cub scouts. They want to destroy things. They do not want to build a Canada. They do not want to get at the problems of Canada.

We have an abortion resolution on which they state: "Don't give us a free vote on it." That would be undemocratic to vote freely! That is a mark of the Liberal-New Democratic Party coalition: no freedom. In the New Democratic Party they say: "There can be no free vote. We will control our Members. They will march to one drum only". On issues of moral conscience we always believe that the will of the Members ought to prevail. Surely, on this matter or any matter it ought to be brought forward for an open discussion in this House in a realistic time frame and a vote should be taken, a vote which would give every Member of Parliament the opportunity to take one or the other propositions put to him or to her.

The point of the whole matter is that we need to have the opportunity as a Government to govern. We cannot have that opportunity to govern stymied by misuse and abuse of the rules. What we have had to do today is to move a closure motion to temporarily change the rules, something which will enable us to come to grips with the problems that affect this country.

Mr. Manly: You should be ashamed of yourselves.

Mr. Blenkarn: My friend says that we should be ashamed of ourselves. He is saying, as Liberals or New Democrats say, that we should be ashamed of ourselves for governing the country. Sir, I say that we have an obligation to govern the country. We have demonstrated our ability and our will to do that. My friend has demonstrated absolutely no policy, no thrust or no leadership.

Members opposite will have an opportunity in the debates in the weeks ahead if they want to continue to talk. But this motion gives them a lot of opportunity to talk. Let us hear what they have to say. If they are sensible, let us get the matters that are before the House dealt with so that we can get on to more important issues, and perhaps an election.

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, Motion No. 26 in the name of the Government is a motion which seeks to set aside a certain number of our Standing Orders so that the House may sit as late as September 9, and with extended hours. This motion has been justified by the Government on several grounds. These Government arguments for Motion No. 26 may be quickly summarized as follows.

First, we need Motion No. 26, these extra days and these extended hours, because there has been considerable Opposition obstruction; and this obstruction has come in this Parliament not only from the two Opposition Parties but it has come as well from the Senate.

The second argument is that extra days and hours are needed in order to clear the Order Paper.

Third, the Government says that it has had foisted upon it some unanticipated measures. It refers to the ghost of Meech Lake which has returned from the Senate, let us call it Meech Lake II, which has now been partly demystified and shown, I think, by the other place to be a bad piece of constitutional amending. Second, the Supreme Court of Canada has struck down the abortion law and made it necessary for this Parliament to decide what must be done with this political, this social, this moral issue.

Fourth, it is said that we must sit through the summer and late into each night because it is in the public interest so to do.

Finally, the Minister of State said that Parliament must deal with the free trade question.

I intend to look at those arguments and test their validity to the best of my ability. First, I will deal with obstruction.

I would like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, whether this Parliament has really been characterized by excessive, by unusual, by unwarranted obstruction tactics by the two Opposition Parties. We know for a fact that the Government has vigorously used time allocation and closure, plus a variety of new methods not frequently used in the past which have allowed it to push ahead with its plans and its schedule.

In 44 months of this Parliament, 204 Bills have been passed.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Penner: The Minister of State bragged about that accomplishment. He pointed out to Hon. Members that in the Parliament of 1974-79 and in the Parliament of 1980-84 only 177 Bills were passed in each case, and those two Parliaments sat longer than has the current Parliament.

I want to ask this question. Where is the Government's case for obstruction? It cannot be proven because there has been no obstruction, unless the Government argues that the legitimate role of the Opposition is in itself obstruction.

Perhaps the huge majority that it acquired in 1984 has whetted its appetite to have a one-party state. I want to say that if that is the case it is not going to happen by any decision made in this Parliament. It will only happen when the Canadian people decide that every constituency should be represented by a Progressive Conservative and not by the representative of any other Party. You know and I know, Mr. Speaker, that that is highly unlikely to happen. It is far more likely that this Government will be ejected from office.

The Minister of State also referred to his problems with the Senate. He says that the Senate has used its constitutional powers in this Parliament, and quite legitimate powers, I would say. They have been used, and I would say, generally speaking, they have been used effectively and responsibly. I am now absolutely convinced that in a federal state we need a bicameral system. We need two Chambers in order to check more effectively a powerful administration, an excessively strong executive branch of government which exists in the Canadian system. If two Opposition Parties cannot do it, then we may have to alter our system so that it can be done regularly and systematically. We have to check power because we have seen in this Parliament the abuse of power.

However, the second House, the Senate, I believe must have legitimacy. I believe that can only be acquired by means of election.

I have no sympathy with the Government when it claims that it is having problems with the Senate. It has had four years up until now to do something about it. It could have reformed the Senate. Yet all it did at Meech Lake was to transfer appointments from the Prime Minister to the Premiers, thereby guaranteeing that we are highly unlikely ever to see an elected Senate in this country.

When the Canadian politburo met at Meech Lake to declare Québec a constitutionally distinct society, why did it not at the same time move to abolish an appointed Senate and put into place mechanisms that would be required for an elected Senate? We all agree that an appointed Senate is an anathema to democracy. But why has the Government not moved to change it? It did not do so because it knows that it would be cutting off its own nose to spite its face. It, too, uses the Senate for its own partisan purposes. Given this situation, any ranting and raving from particular Ministers or the Government collectively about the Senate make no impression at all on this Hon. Member. Thus we can set aside the obstructionist argument. There has not been any from either the House of Commons or the Senate.

The second proposition from the Government is that we need Motion No. 26 in order to clear the Order Paper. The Minister of State has written to the Opposition House Leaders with a list of what he considers on the Order Paper that it is necessary to dispose of in this session of Parliament. Sir, there are 41 Bills and/or motions that he has put forward. It is an imposing list. But it seems to me when I looked at that list that there is plenty of room there, as the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) said, for some negotiation, for some bargaining, for some compromise, in order to achieve a workable schedule.

The only requirement in order to do that, Sir, would be to have some skill, some openness, some flexibility, some common sense and some reason displayed by the three Government House Leaders.

On top of this we have had these two unanticipated issues, Meech Lake II and the abortion question. The first of these will be disposed of Wednesday of this week when the House will divide on the Meech Lake motion. That leaves abortion, Mr. Speaker. We could have been using these June evenings to debate the abortion question. It would have been helpful to all Hon. Members if we had known what the Government's position was. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) promised he would give leadership.

This Government has a position on absolutely everything. That position that it takes is ironclad. It says: " We have to get the motion through. We will use our majority to get it through". The Government has a position on everything except when it comes to a delicate and sensitive issue like abortion. Suddenly, isn't it amazing how democratic and open the Government gets? Why isn't the Government like that on a lot more issues?

That leaves two of the Government's arguments yet to be considered, those that I outlined at the beginning. Let me deal with the public interest. The Government says it is in the public interest to keep the House in session all summer, sitting each day, late into the evening. I would say to you, Sir, that no elected Member of this House can ever play down or argue against the public interest proposition. We are here in the public interest. The public interest is paramount. It takes precedence over partisan interest. It takes precedence over personal interest. We are here in the public interest. The question is how do you judge which particular item or group of items are absolutely in the public interest? How do you decide that? You cannot do it arbitrarily. You cannot do it unilaterally. Governments tend to run on the notion that the more they do the more efficient and effective they are. Some other day I would like to challenge that proposition.

Not everything that is proposed is in the public interest to such an extent that the House must sit day and night well beyond what the Standing Orders call for. Public interest can really only be decided by way of negotiation among the House Leaders. It can be decided by bargaining, fair bargaining, between the government and the opposition Parties, or if that fails, as it has in this case, through some kind of arbitration. Obviously, the current situation, negotiating and bargaining, has broken down. The House Leaders have failed to reach an agreement to come to a settlement.

What has the Government done? By using its muscle it has forced Motion No. 26 upon us. In retaliation, the Opposition has used obstructive methods to protest. This in turn has called for even more repressive measures from the Government. What we have done is turn this House of Commons into a kind of parliamentary Beirut or Belfast without the fire power, thank goodness. In such a situation, it is really better for all Parties concerned to back off and to seek some kind of arbitration rather than to impose on the House a kind of martial law or a War Measures Act or, as I think Motion No. 26 says, using something like the notwithstanding clause in the Constitution, setting aside rights and privileges of individual Members.

Who can arbitrate in a situation like this? Thank goodness our Standing Orders have anticipated exactly such a situation. Who can decide what is in the public interest that ought to keep Parliament sitting for additional days and hours? Standing Order 5 tells the House how it ought to proceed in such a situation.

> Whenever the House stands adjourned if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet—

Standing Order 5 is meant to prevent the kind of situation which we currently have in the House of Commons. The Government has ignored that route and instead has gone by way of Motion No. 26. I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I think Motion No. 26 is really an attack upon the judgment and the discretionary power of the Speaker. It undermines his authority. The Government is really saying: "We can't trust the Speaker to make a decision about what is in the public interest requiring the House to sit longer than the Standing Orders call for. Therefore, because we do not trust the judgment of the Speaker, we will impose our own will upon the House".

I call these in plain language dirty tactics. Dirty tactics whenever they are used call for a fierce response from the opposition benches, fierce because the job of the Opposition is to keep this place honest. If Hon. Members opposite doubt that, let them listen to the words of the Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker speaking in this House in November, 1962. The late John G. Diefenbaker said: "Oppositions clean and purify those in office and we in the Opposition are in fact the detergents of democracy".

Who would have thought of that except the Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert? How appropriate it is, the detergents of democracy. The Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) in supporting Motion No. 26 said: "We have an agenda as a Government which has been well thought out and we believe"—we believe—"it is in the interests of the country".

During the election of 1984 I failed to become aware of any carefully thought out agenda presented by the Progressive Conservative Party to the people of Canada. It is true there was a plethora of promises, most of which have not been fulfilled. But when and where was this carefully thought out agenda revealed to anybody? For example, when the question of free trade was raised during the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and some of his leading Ministers vigorously denounced it. It was not part of any agenda. You know, Mr. Speaker, and I know that free trade does not possess a national consensus. It is highly, highly controversial. Many Canadians are strongly opposed to it. Why then is the Minister of State calling for only a five day debate in this House?

When the British decided that they were going to join the European Common Market, the Bill in 1972 was preceded by an election. Then a few years later they had a referendum to decide whether they wanted to stay in Europe or pull out. Our free trade Bill must involve the whole nation. Before we proceed with it, there must be a general election. My hon. friend opposite who suggested that the Opposition is trying to have an election before redistribution was simply making a lot of noise and he knows it.

Canadians must first be consulted before we proceed with a Bill that will fundamentally change the structure and the foundation of this nation. What I am saying about the free trade Bill would apply equally to the question of Meech Lake.

It is really regrettable that at times the Canadian Parliament functions as poorly as it does. It is too bad that we so often have to choose between the repressive force of a Government with a big majority and Opposition tactics which can be destructive of this institution itself. I ask, where is the middle way, where is the golden mean?

Governments, I believe, should seek mandates for major items which will alter the very nature of the country itself. When we run up against a situation such as the one we are in now, we should seek arbitration through the Speaker of the House by using Standing Order 5. So I conclude by saying simply that what has happened to Parliament in the last several weeks is deeply regrettable. It is an institution of which I am proud, and I hate to see what is happening to it. However, I think you can see why it has happened, Sir, and I have tried to outline that in my speech.

When negotiations break down, when common sense and good reason does not work, then we can only do what is left open to us and that is to seek arbitration, first through the Speaker, and then, on the very big items, we have to go to the people of the country to get their opinion on whether they want to proceed with matters so vital as free trade with the United States of America and a Meech Lake Accord which is changing the basic law of this country.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention, when I entered the House earlier today, to get involved in this debate. I think it is advantageous for government Members not to speak because opposition Members are making quite a spectacle of themselves. I think it is good for Canadians from coast to coast to see the two opposition Parties, side by side, hand-in-hand, telling the people of Canada that they do not want to work this summer. They all want to be up at their cottages, beside their swimming pools, out at the lake. They do not want to be here working. I should point out to them that that is why they were elected. They were elected to come to Ottawa and to be in the House of Commons to promote the legislation that will help Canada.

Mr. Manly: Do you have a family?

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I could say that to them, but I will not. They are making a spectacle of themselves. The longer this debate goes on, the more advantageous it is to me as a government Member and to other government Members. However, that is not why I entered this debate.

Mr. Manly: Will you be sitting here all the time when the House is sitting?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is such a thing as courtesy when it comes to debate. The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) has the floor.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): That is good for Canadians to see and hear as well. That kind of behaviour is helpful to the Government.

I decided to enter this debate because of comments made a little earlier by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). Those of us who were sitting in the House will recall that she said something to the effect that there had been no contribution made by the Hamilton-area Members of Parliament. She went so far as to say that there were Hamilton-area Members who had not said anything of substance on some of the major issues. When I hear nonsense like that, it behoves me and everyone who is present in the House on a day-to-day basis and is involved with committee work and constituency work to challenge statements like the one made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

As the Hon. Member was saying that, I had to think of my four colleagues from the Hamilton area and of some of the contributions I know they have made. You are well acquainted with the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), Mr. Speaker. I do not have to remind you of the contributions of the Hon. Member for Burlington as chief government Whip in the Cabinet in which you served in the Thirty-first Parliament. He is presently the Chairman of the private Members' committee.

The whole idea of parliamentary reform may be out of fashion. We have seen on a day-to-day basis the actions of the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party and how they are trying to thwart parliamentary reform, but Members like the Hon. Member for Burlington, who is the chairman of the private Members' committee, are spearheading reform and are true to the spirit of reform for private Members. That Hon. Member should be congratulated on that account by all Members of Parliament.

I thought as well of my good friend and colleague, a good friend of this House and, I would suggest, a good friend of Canadians, the Hon. Member for Hamilton West (Mr. Peterson). We are aware that he is Vice-Chairman of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We know of his contributions on that committee and of his contributions in the House. One of the things that has always struck me about him, and I met him just shortly after being elected, is that he is one of those individuals who works day and night on behalf of his constituents in the Hamilton area. Not a day goes by that he is not involved in some way in trying to solve problems. I ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and other members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties, is that not the kind of Member that Canada wants? Is that not the kind of Member that Canada should have in the House of Commons? I know that the people of his riding are very pleased and honoured to have the Hon. Member for Hamilton West represent them in this House.

I thought as well of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott). I am aware, of course, that he is Chairman of the Standing Committee on Secretary of State. I know how involved he is in the day-to-day operations of this House and of his many valuable interventions on behalf of all Canadians and particularly on behalf of the people of Hamilton—Wentworth. As someone who does not come from the Hamilton area, I think of all he has done and said on behalf of the Hamilton airport in order to improve service there. I am sure that the people of the Hamilton area and indeed the people of the Niagara area from which I come appreciate the very valuable service he has done for that area and for many other areas over the past 10 years.

Finally, I come to the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin). I would guess that I know her the best of those four Members of Parliament, having served with her on the special committee on child care. I know as well that she is the Chairman of the National Progressive Conservative Party and I know of the valuable work she does there.

I do know as well that long after the Hon. Member for Hamilton East is but a footnote in the Thirty-third Parliament, the contributions of the Hon. Member for Lincoln in the area of child care will not be forgotten. The report of the committee of which she was chairman is something that will be of lasting contribution to the well-being of Canadian children and something that will live on far beyond the life of this Parliament.

What Canada needs is more people like the Hon. Member for Lincoln and more people like the Conservative Members from Hamilton. If we had more Members from the Hamilton area as effective as the four Progressive Conservative Members, it would be better for the Hamilton area and certainly better for Canada.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East says that the Progressive Conservative Members from the Hamilton area do not speak enough. I just wonder if it has ever occurred to her even once that perhaps she speaks too much, that she speaks too much for the good that she does.

Members of the Opposition are saying that we should call the election right now, dissolve the House. That is their solution to the problems that face Canada. The Hon. Member from Mississauga made a very good point. If we called an election now, redistribution would not be in effect. There are presently two Members of Parliament from the Mississauga area. In the Brampton area, and in Mississauga as well, there are as many as four times the national population average for one riding. It is easy to say that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown (Mr. McDermid) and the two Members from Mississauga are four times as effective as Members from the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party, but I do not think that is an answer. I do not think it is fair to the people from those areas to have the opposition Parties call for an immediate dissolution of Parliament.

I think of the abortion question as well. For a number of my colleagues, this is a very important issue. There is no abortion law on the books of Canada right now. That means that unborn children are being killed because there is no protection for them. On whose conscience would it be if this Parliament fails to act on that?

I am aware that the very reasonable approach of the Government, one that was alluded to in the editorial in today's Globe and Mail, is being fought in the name of democracy by the members of the New Democratic and Liberal Parties. I think it is a shame that they are opposing bringing forward that resolution that can and will do so much to protect unborn children.

I think as well of the refugee Bills. We would be much further ahead if we did not have this stalling. Who is to blame for the fact that Canada does not have a rational, working refugee determination system? It is the Members of the Liberal Party, the Party of the Member for Hamilton East How many thousands of people have come into this country and abused the system because Bills C-55 and C-84 have not long since been passed?

With regard to the complaints of the Liberal Party, they should tell their colleagues in the Senate that they should be sitting every day, they should be spending 24 hours a day down the hall in order to get this legislation through Parliament because that is what Canadians are demanding.

Mr. Kilgour: They don't sit Mondays.

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): I am informed that they do not sit Mondays. They should be sitting Mondays, Saturdays, and around the clock to clean up the backlog of legislation which has been sent to them by this House.

Members of the Opposition do not want to be here and it is good for Canadians to hear that. Members of the Opposition want to be in their ridings across the country. The nonsense that you hear on a day-to-day basis in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, is only equalled by the nonsense, misinformation, and fear they are spreading across the country.

My own riding of Niagara Falls is no exception. Recently the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was in town. I do not know how often he has been to the Niagara Peninsula. He is like some of those self-proclaimed experts on the Niagara Peninsula. They blow in for a cup of coffee, stay for an hour, and say: "I'm an expert on the Niagara Peninsula, I'll tell you that free trade is no good for the area". Every time they open their mouths in that way they show just how little they know about the Niagara Peninsula.

They make comments about the grape and wine industry. I see the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) in the House. He is going to bring forward a proposal which will assist that industry. It will be one of the most constructive things that has happened to that industry in years.

The Leader of the Opposition and other Members come to the Niagara Peninsula and say that the free trade agreement is no good, it should be torn up, it is bad for the Niagara area. That is nonsense. They only say that because they never talk to anyone on the Niagara Peninsula. They pretend that the Niagara Peninsula is a one-industry area and base their comments on that single industry.

That is absolutely wrong. The Niagara Peninsula is as diverse as is any other area in Canada. If they spent two hours on the Niagara Peninsula instead of one they could drop by the Ford Motor Corporation. The Ford Motor Corporation has approached me and told me that as their representative I must support the free trade agreement because everything they make in Niagara Falls is shipped across the border into the United States. That is why they need open access to the borders and that is why they support the free trade agreement.

The general manager of General Motors has sent a letter to every single employee of General Motors Canada saying that this agreement is good for General Motors, good for the auto industry, good for Oshawa, good for St. Catharines, and good for Canada. Members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties never refer to that. They forget about that.

If they spent a little more time in my area they might drop by the TRW plant. I was there and at the Hayes Dana plant. I asked the managers and people who work there whether they can compete in an open market. They said that they will not only compete but will do very well. They do not compete only on a North American basis. The auto parts made on the Niagara Peninsula are world competitive. They tell me that my job is to ensure that the border remains open and they will do very well. That is never referred to by the NDP or the Liberals.

They never stopped in at Brunner Manufacturing, another company with huge exports to the United States. I was at Edsha Corporation two weeks ago. That company is only one year old and at that moment was hiring its one hundred and forty-first and one hundred and forty second employee in the auto parts industry. Their message to me was the same, keep the border open. They are there in order to export into the United States.

Members of the New Democratic Party and Members of the Liberal Party are interested only in spreading fear and misinformation in the Niagara Peninsula. I will not stand by while misinformation and fear is spread by socialists and Members of the Liberal Party. I will not stand by while those who do not know a thing about the Niagara Peninsula blow in and proclaim themselves experts. I will fight that, here in the House of Commons, in my riding, and across Canada.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to enter into this debate. I would like to explain to the Canadian people watching the proceedings of the House on television this afternoon what this debate is really all about. The Government has requested, through a motion, to extend the sitting hours of Parliament in order that Parliament can deal with pieces of legislation which the Government insists it needs.

One of the chief pieces of legislation is the legislation which would put into law the agreement signed between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of this country, the Reagan-Mulroney trade deal. The Opposition, both the Liberal and New Democratic Parties, are quite opposed to this piece of legislation, mainly because we believe that the Government has no mandate to proceed with this.

We believe that by extending the hours of Parliament and the number of days that Parliament will sit in the summer, the Government has torn up the rule books by which Parliament governs itself. As opposition Members it is our duty, in the parliamentary system, to try to prevent the Government from proceeding with its plans. We have heard government Members state that the Government needs this legislation to extend the sitting hours because the Government was elected to govern and needs this extended sitting in order to do so.

There is so much in Canadian parliamentary democracy which depends upon consensus. It is true that there are fundamental differences between political Parties in terms of our outlook on how the country should be governed. However, there is also a general agreement—and that is why Parliament can work—that the Government should be able to govern, that the Opposition does have a role, and that Parliament should be able to function.

Very often this consensus is unstated. We will rise in our place in Parliament and object to particular pieces of legislation, but at some stage we recognize that it is the Government's right to proceed with its legislation and allow the vote to occur. Thus, legislation becomes law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have 14 minutes for debate after the division is called this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order! It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT ACT

PARTICIPATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN ELECTORAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should keep its promise to permit public servants to participate in electoral activities by amending the Public Service Employment Act in order to implement recommendations numbered 11.1 through 11.7 of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle) for seconding my motion M-149 dealing with the political rights of public servants.

Mr. Speaker, I do not need to tell you that this question has been the subject of many Private Members' Bills in the last few years.

The purpose of all these bills was to broaden the political rights of federal public servants and to seek a fair balance between the political rights and freedoms granted by our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the political neutrality of public servants, i.e. their impartiality and ability to serve the state without political bias.

Many Private Members' Bills and motions over the last ten years at least have always been to the point. It is simply a matter of clarifying Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act, a section that is restrictive and open to interpretation and which in every election causes us problems, in the National Capital anyway, because we are never sure whether or not public servants can participate in politics. I am one of those who think that it is time for this House, this Parliament, to take an unequivocal position on this issue. First of all, we would settle an important matter once and for all. Second, some 200,000 public servants would know exactly what their rights are in future and to what extent they can take part in the democratic electoral process.

Mr. Speaker, the main reason I am speaking today to debate a motion presented to the House last October 2 is to report where matters stand. We all know in this House that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) has a Bill, C-273, now before a committee and it has been thoroughly studied. I think that it will come back to the House in a few days—at least, I hope so—because the last time we met, we agreed to adopt a somewhat amended Bill, but one which I think represents serious work by Members of the House and their professional advisors, including many witnesses who came to speak to us about this political Bill.

The federal Government has, from time to time, been made aware of the need to expand and clarify political rights. The D'Avignon Report ordered by the previous government followed a thorough study by parliamentarians on labour relations in the Public Service of Canada. It took nearly a year to examine problems relating to the need for changing, and especially updating, regulations and legislation governing employee-employer relations.

The Report of the Special Committee on the Review of Personnel Management and the Merit Principle was published in 1979. The report contained a complete chapter on political participation—Chapter 11. In the introduction to the Special Committee's report, we see on page 9 one of the issues examined by the Committee, and I am referring to political participation. I quote, from page 9:

> Employees should generally enjoy greater freedom to participate actively in the political process, unless an indication of an employee's partisan political interests would compromise the reputation of the public service for impartiality or would place the individual in a conflict of interest with effective job performance.

That is very clear and succinct. In his report, d'Avignon makes seven recommendations which I refer to in my motion and which I would like to see Parliament incorporate in a new bill.

I think that with Bill C-273 introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West, the Government now has a Private Member's Bill that has been properly tested and proven in committee and which will come back to us in its amended form. I would like to ask the Government to examine this Bill, after which it could perhaps take the essential part and submit it to the House as a Government Bill. I am asking the Government to do so because I know that as Private Members we only have one hour from time to time, and it is not always easy for backbenchers to get their bills passed.

Luck is of course a factor, because items of Private Member's Business are selected by random draw. That is in fact how my own motion No. 149 was selected, and Bill C-273, which is a full-fledged Bill, will have to go through the same process. In other words, it will be a matter of luck, not of necessity. Earlier, on my way here, one of my assistants, Pierre Tremblay, reminded me of an expression used by a famous biologist, Jacques Monod, who says in his book "Le hasard et la nécessité" that sometimes chance decides but it is not always easy.

In the case of Bill C-273, the Government should eliminate the chance factor and let necessity cast the deciding vote. It should say: We will make the Bill our responsibility. We will introduce it under Government Orders and Members will be able to consider this Bill in the House very shortly. Otherwise, it will be a matter of luck, and we may not be lucky enough between now and the next election to consider Bill C-273 on third reading, Mr. Speaker. I may remind the House that when the Bill is next called for consideration in the House, it will be for the report stage and third reading.

In fact, the Bill is almost home free. That is why I don't think we should leave the future of this item of Private Members' Business to chance.

As I said earlier, the purpose of my motion is to increase the awareness of Hon. Members and the public listening to us of the political rights of public servants. There are many myths and misconceptions about the rights of federal public servants. In my final comments, I will try to summarize what the situation is to date with respect to the rights of federal public servants.

Mr. Speaker, I will not read to you from the D'Avignon Report. Basically, D'Avignon was in favour of the British system. Public servants are divided into three groups, and the senior group, consisting of those persons who advise the Government, is excluded.

Intermediate groups are allowed to exercise their political rights, subject to approval by the Public Service Commission. The third category, which includes the vast majority of public servants who do not give advice on matters of Government policy, would be entirely free to participate in partisan political activity.

Bill C-273 in the name of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West reflected the same concept, to a certain extent, but I think it will be amended. In fact, I know it will because the Committee, after hearing a number of important witnesses, intends to simplify the process.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at how this matter has evolved, there have been many items of Private Members' Business here in the House, as I said before. In fact, there was Bill C-231, introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for first reading on October 20, 1986; Bill C-247 was introduced for first reading by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on January 26, 1987; and finally, Bill C-273, introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West for first reading on November 26, 1987 and for second reading on February 9, 1988.

There are now before the House four bills dealing with the same subject matter, plus several motions including mine, which was intended to provide firm and sustained support for the expansion of political rights.

Mr. Speaker, I think this proves people's is interest in this matter. Actually, Bill C-273 has passed the second reading stage in this House. This is a plus, because as we all know, these Bills are often literally killed by anyone who wants to talk the Bill out, which means the debate ends without a vote and the Bill is dropped.

I am therefore pleased the House agreed to adopt the second reading stage of Bill C-273 and that we have finished consideration of the Bill in committee.

There have also been public servants who appealed to the courts. We remember the decision handed down by Judge Walsh this spring, I believe, in a case where Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act was challenged. Very briefly, I would like to recall that Judge Walsh of the Federal Court said that he did not question the constitutionality of Section 32 but would expand, in his interpretation, the political rights of public servants.

So, as I said earlier, we have had several items of Private Members' Business, as well as representations by the unions and by individuals who went as far as the Federal Court.

I mention Judge Walsh's decision because it compelled the Public Service Commission to clarify its position by issuing a series of instructions to public servants on May 11, a little over a month ago. In a letter which I suppose it sent to all Members— in any case I received one—the Commission indicated that it was essential at this time to inform public servants about the kind of political activities in which they could be involved under the present legislation. Consequently, the Commission was sending a document containing general guidelines that would help to define the limits to political participation by public servants.

Mr. Speaker, the aim of the Public Service Commission, Bill C-273 and my fellow Members of this House is to maintain public trust in the federal Government and also to ensure the freedom of expression and participation that all Canadians have under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Public Service Employment Act already authorizes political rights, as we know. I bring it up briefly here, because it seems important to me. Public servants are not deprived of rights; rather, they are limited. Among the acceptable rights, which I think it is worth reminding everyone of, are the right: (1) to sign a candidate's official nomination papers; (2) to express their personal opinions openly, without making partisan public statements that would openly show support for a political Party. Mr. Speaker, I took them from the Commission guidelines that are as recent as May 11.

(3) to speak as a member of the public at meetings where representatives of the political Parties take part and to question the candidates and assist them; (4) to attend political meetings; (5) to make contributions to a party's election fund; (6) to hold membership in a political Party; (7) to participate in policy-making discussions of a Party; (8) to be a delegate to a political Party's leadership convention; (9) to help a candidate or a Party without attracting attention to themselves, as for example, by addressing correspondence; and (10) to run for nomination or election, provided that unpaid leave has been sought from the Public Service Commission for this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, those are the rights that exist today. They are in fact quite broad, but for some of us, they are still too restrictive. I am one of those who think that they could be broadened some more and that is what we here in this region, anyway, who are most affected, wish to do with the help of our colleagues from all parties: to pass Bill C-273, which in our opinion would be much more generous and clearer in the application of political rights. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I shall support Bill C-273 when it comes up for debate in the House soon. With the support of the Government Members, I suppose, we may together be able to convince the Government that it is a necessity and that this most important question should not be left to the luck of the draw.

Mr. Speaker, I received some telephone calls recently on Bill C-273 as amended. I know that it is not customary or proper procedure to speak to Bill C-273 at this stage. But I would just like to point out to the House that some public servants have told me how important it is for the law to protect "whistleblowers."

• (1710)

[English]

I would like to end my remarks by saying that I have participated in debate in this House this year, I think twice in January, trying to explain about whistleblowers, those who report publicly on an employer who does things which, in their mind, could threaten the security and safety and health of the country. There may be a need for us to look attentively at this amendment to protect public servants who may report on wrongdoing by the employer.

I would like to just go back to a debate we had in this House in January of this year and state that, indeed, I believe there should be a disposition in the Bill to look after and protect those public servants who honestly believe the employer is asking them to perform duties which would not be, in their view, in the best interest of the country.

I think some way has to be provided. In my speech in January, I spoke of an ombudsman, someone to whom public servants could go to talk about their fears, their concerns, with no danger to themselves. A public servant who in good faith thinks that his employer is asking him to do something contrary to the public interest would at least have somewhere to go and report the actions or instructions or directions that he thinks contrary to public security and therefore the national interest. I do not think that this is in Bill C-273. I would be happy if there were some way to include it and I think that some public servants would feel much easier.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I wish to say that this issue is of the utmost importance for me. It is a basic question. This is a matter that requires a continuing interest, as Members in this House have found over the last few years, and I believe we are all agreed to proceed. I would ask the Government once more to accept the recommendations made by the Committee of the House that examined Bill C-273, to make it its own and to put it before the House for consideration at the current stage, in other words. I can assure them that the Liberal caucus, for whom I am speaking in my capacity as Public Service critic, will support prompt and quick passage of the measure.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to speak on the motion of my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), a motion which states:

> That, in the opinion of this House the Government should keep its promise to permit public servants to participate in electoral activities by amending the Public Service Employment Act . . .

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government does keep its promises. It has kept more than 80 per cent of them so far, with a significant amount of time left in our mandate. With a little more co-operation from the opposition Parties, particularly the Chief Opposition Whip perhaps the rest of those promises could be fulfilled before we go back to the people.

What was our promise in 1984 on the issue before us this afternoon? Let me read briefly from our campaign statement on this important issue:

> The Progressive Conservative Party favours a general removal of the restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants covered by collective agreements. These restrictions are unnecessary and may not be justifiable under the terms of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms.
> There are some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature, and whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest, but we are confident that these people could be covered separately, without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process.

That was our Party's position in the 1984 general election, and I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, and in particular to my colleagues on the government side that our Party and the House is on the threshold of fulfilling that commitment, thanks to the second reading and all-Party committee support for Bill C-273, a Bill that I introduced on November 26, 1987, and which received approval in principle on February 9, 1988. I particularly urge members of my own Party to give this Bill their support when it comes back to the House, hopefully at the earliest possible date.

You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that I have spoken on this issue a number of times in this Chamber. The first time was in my maiden speech in November, 1984. I have since spoken on a number of occasions both inside and outside the House. I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier who, long before I arrived here, spoke on this issue and did his best to ensure a change in the law to improve the situation for his constituents and mine. I congratulate him for introducing the motion today and for his support in the legislative committee on Bill C-273.

I would also like to take the opportunity to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) for his support and helpful suggestions for amendments, and my Progressive Conservative colleagues on the committee, the chairman, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) who was a consummate chairman, and the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for Nepean—Carleton (Mr. Tupper), the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Ms. Mailly), and the Hon. Member for Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle (Mr. Moore), all of whom worked very hard to improve the Bill that I introduced. The product which is coming out of committee now is a much improved Bill which merits the support of the whole House.

I would also like to thank the many witnesses who appeared before the committee, many of whom had helpful suggestions and ideas, a number of which were incorporated into the amended Bill.

I would like to take a few minutes to explain why I think that Bill C-273 is worthy of support and meets the objectives of the motion before us today. As the quote that I read from our campaign promise indicated, reference was made in particular to those public servants who are covered by collective bargaining rights. That essentially is the approach which the amended Bill C-273 has taken. How has it done that? It has done it by basically adopting the distinctions contained in the Public Service Staff Relations Act in a new definition of politically restricted employee contained in Clause 3 of the Bill. The definition section states that a politically restricted employee means any employee who comes within the meaning of "a person employed in a managerial or confidential capacity" as defined in the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

There are a number of references in the PSSRA to other categories which have not been incorporated, but specifically included are employees employed in a position confidential to the Governor General, a Minister of the Crown, a Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, or the Federal Court, the Deputy Head of a Department, or the Chief Executive Officer of any other portion of the public service; and also an employee who has executive duties and responsibilities in relation to the development and administration of government programs; and finally, an employee employed in a position confidential to any person described in subparagraph 2 which is the executive officer.

In addition, there is a designation provision similar to that contained in the Public Service Staff Relations Act which empowers the Treasury Board under certain criteria to designate another employee who would otherwise be politically unrestricted.

The power of the Treasury Board is one which we have found in the law and in the administration of the public service for a number of years. In my view, it gives us the balance that as parliamentarians we should be looking for. After all, we are trying to balance two competing principles here, one the individual rights of public servants, and the other the need to maintain an impartial, neutral, and effective public service for the country.

I am pleased to tell the House that those objectives are set out at the outset of the Bill in the purpose clause which states that the purpose of the Act is to extend to deputy heads and employees who are subject to the Public Service Employment Act a fuller measure of political rights while adhering to the principle of the impartiality of the public service.

The political rights that have been given are set out in clauses 4 and 5. All employees have the right to vote, to make financial contributions to Parties, to be a member of a political Party, to attend and participate in any political meeting and, subject to subsection 6, to express opinions on matters of public interest.

Clause 5 gives to unrestricted employees the additional and central right to work in a campaign for or against and to demonstrate support for or opposition to candidates in federal, provincial, or territorial elections, or federal, provincial, or territorial political Parties; to be a candidate in such an election; to collect funds for a political Party in such an election; and to hold office in a political Party.

There are certain prohibitions on public statements for Deputy Ministers, and for all employees not to make statements that conflict directly with the duties of the employee. The designation provisions found in Clause 14 of the Bill give to the Treasury Board this power to designate as politically restricted an employee who has responsibilities for providing advice directly to senior levels of the public service and the Government on policy and program development. There is a procedure set out with the provisions of natural justice applying, adequate notice, and so on which allows an employee so designated to appeal that designation.

In summary, my view is that this Bill meets the concerns of the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. It should meet the support of all Members of the House because it deals with the essential liberties of Canadians: whether a group of Canadians has the right to free speech, free assembly, and the right to work peacefully and lawfully for democratic change.

The current provisions of Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act go too far to be reasonable. The law turns the basic rights of a large number of Canadians over to the whims of unelected officials. The interpretation and implementation of this law have resulted in unreasonable limitations on even the smallest and most innocuous of political activities for public servants.

Public servants are people. They grow sick. They grow old. They are widowed. They are parents. They are taxpayers. Public servants, like other Canadians, benefit from social programs and pay for them. They have the right like everyone else to participate in the decisions that affect their lives.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to participate in this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I think that the motion of the Hon. Member is somewhat irrelevant given the presence before the House of Bill C-273.

Mr. Gauthier: It was put there before it.

Mr. Harris: It may well have been there before that. However, I want to talk about the process of this whole issue before Parliament. By now, it seems that there is no disagreement whatsoever among the political Parties about the basic fact that public sector workers in Canada ought to have political rights. It is a position which was advanced by this Party many, many years ago, going back as far as 1970 or 1971, in our conventions. It is a position that we have taken consistently over the years.

In the last Parliament there were two pieces of legislation presented under Private Members' Business by our caucus. That was when the Party of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier was in power. However, they did not get anywhere.

In the election of 1984, as the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) quite readily pointed out, when asked by the Public Service Alliance of Canada what the position of the Conservative Party was, the Conservative Party said that, yes, it favoured a general removal of restrictions on political activity, especially for those public servants governed by collective agreements. Members of the Party said that there are some senior public servants whose job responsibilities are very political in nature and whose rights should be somewhat restricted to prevent conflict of interest. We are confident, they said, that these people could be covered separately without disenfranchising over 200,000 public servants in the process. Nobody could disagree with that, the position of the Conservative Party back in 1984.

Why is it, then, that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West who has done very stalwart work over the last number of years on this very issue has to come here today to urge the members of his Party to give support to Bill C-273 when it comes back to the House? Why is that? He brought in a Private Member's Motion. He supported the Private Member's Motions of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) who presented two of them in Private Members' Business.

The reason for that is because the Conservative Government has not brought forward such legislation. The legislation had to be brought forward by individual Members of Parliament. Thus it comes as no surprise that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West has to get up to urge Members of his own Party to give support to it when it comes back to the House. Not only that, he has to bring it in as a Private Members' Bill, Bill C-273, in order to get this legislation debated and, hopefully, put into practice.

The Conservative Government has not kept its promise which it made to the people of Canada in 1984. The Hon. Member for Ottawa West has kept a promise that he made to his constituents when he was seeking election, but the Conservative Government has not.

Again in a period of two weeks we are reminded of the importance of the activities of the committee of this House which was chaired by the former Member for St. John's East which brought about reforms to this House. Those reforms allow the type of initiative taken by the Hon. Members for Ottawa West and Ottawa Centre to come before the House and, hopefully, if Conservative Members of the House support the party policy, to become legislation.

There was an example of that just two weeks ago in the form of a Bill brought forward by the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald). She brought forward legislation on a matter of controversy which received the support of the House as a result of the reforms to Parliament that were brought about by the all-Party committee chaired by the former Member for St. John's East.

It is unfortunate that in light of the Conservative Government's unwillingness to include a piece of legislation on political rights for public sector workers as part of its agenda—an agenda about which we heard the Deputy House Leader speak today, so much so that it has to extend the sittings of Parliament over the summer to get some items through—that this Bill was not part of the 204 Bills that the Government brought forward since September of 1984.

Why did it take the Hon. Member for Ottawa West and the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre to bring forward Private Members' legislation to try to get through this House policy and legislation which reflects, apparently, the policy of the Conservative Party, apparently the policy of the Liberal Party, but certainly the policy of this Party? This is something for which we have fought consistently since 1970 at least.

In the last Parliament New Democrats brought forward legislation in the form of Private Members' Bills to gain political rights for public servants in Canada. In that session of Parliament, and because there is a one-hour time limit on Private Members' Business, the person who talked it out on that occasion was a former Liberal Member of Parliament who represented Ottawa Centre. He talked the matter out beyond the hour so that the legislation died. We now apparently have support from some Members of the Liberal caucus, most notably the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, who supports this legislation as a result of his motion today.

There are other Members from the Ottawa area who vigorously support the idea of political rights for public sector workers. However, it is time that the Government made a commitment to bring forward Bill C-273. I understand that in the all-Party committee there appears to be a general agreement. Some details remain to be worked out. However, it appears that that legislation will be ready to be brought back to the House very soon.

If we are looking for legislation that this Party is prepared to co-operate with the Government on, if the Government is prepared to bring it forward, and if the Government is prepared to instruct Members of the Cabinet to vote in favour of it and to follow up on what is said in black and white as Conservative Party policy, then we should see that legislation very quickly. We should see support from Members of the Government, not just from diligent back-benchers of the Government.

It is an important right. If the Conservative Party was willing to admit back in 1984 that the restrictions on the rights of public servants may not be justifiable under the terms of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, then why has it not brought forward legislation to put an end to that discrimination? Why has it left it to private Members to do this type of work?

I wish to commend all those private Members, especially the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre who has done yeoman's service on this issue, in that he brought forward two Private Members' Bills and has taken a court case on it. I also commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Ottawa West. I hope that this legislation, Bill C-273, gets through the committee quickly and back to the House to be passed before the next election.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) ... or rather the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly).

Mrs. Claudy Mailly (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I love my constituency ... and I would not feel inclined to represent the constituency of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

I would like indeed to commend the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for introducing in October 1987 that motion inviting the Government to allow public servants to participate in electoral activities by amending the Public Service Employment Act.

I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) who just rose that it is indeed because of the parliamentary reform initiated by his predecessor Mr. James McGrath, the then Hon. Member for St. John's East, that the Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) very soon will be before the House for enactment.

This is because the Government really believed in parliamentary reform, and I must remind the Hon. Member that the Prime Minister himself (Mr. Mulroney) appointed Mr. McGrath, knowing him as a person really commited to parliamentary reform, someone also who had a lot to contribute to parliamentary reform, a very independent-minded man, with very progressive ideas on the role of MP's. This is why the Prime Minister appointed him to establish a Committee with colleagues from the House in order to examine parliamentary reform.

During that exercise, we looked at the role of Hon. Members during the hour provided for Private Members' Business and we concluded that in order to enhance the role of Members during this hour, the hour itself should be enhanced to bring much more direct and specific results. We had to make sure that more bills would be referred to legislative committees, for at the time bills were considered by the standing committees of the House. So it was important that these bills be referred to legislative committees, and it was precisely to enhance the role of Members that the Government, having already begun studying a bill to extend the political rights of public employees, examined the measure sponsored by my collegaue from Ottawa West and decided to promote his bill to increase the standing of Private Members' hour and speed up parliamentary reform.

Therefore I fail to see why the Hon. Member for St. John's East would want to suggest that the Government did not live up to its promise, while in fact it killed two birds with one stone.

We have a bill which is very well drafted and meets the standards set forth by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, a bill which indeed will give . . . I should not say give because we are talking about rights, but give back or acknowledge that public employees are properly entitled to wide-ranging political rights while at the same time respecting what we have always advocated, namely the professional objectivity of public employees.

Mr. Speaker, you know that federal employees serve the public, so their professional attributes must be protected if they are to do a good job. This is why it was not easy, it was not black and white as the Hon. Member for St. John's East is suggesting, we had to state that one day we would eventually do the proper thing and acknowledge their political rights, that it could be done right away to show respect for professional attributes and for the public at large because it is entitled to objective services from federal employees.

As the Government measure was progressing, our colleague from Ottawa West introduced a Bill which was very much along the lines of the work we as Government Members of the National Capital Commission, had been doing as a group. So we contacted our colleague and told him: "David, if you were to change certain things, if you were to amend your Bill this way or that way, if you agreed to that perhaps we migh concentrate all our efforts on your Bill, precisely because we want to enhance the role of the individual Member". And that is why we did that. We were very consistent and, as I said, we killed two birds with one stone.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, in January 1984, I had the honour to be appointed Executive Director to our National Advisory Committee on Policies which prepared the so-call "Bible" for the election which was to be held in 1984. This committee was chaired by Senator Arthur Tremblay. It was made up of Canadian men and women involved in and committed to public life and it prepared our party platform. One of its main elements was to recognize the political rights of civil servants in addition to suggesting a Parliamentary reform. Because Mr. McGrath was at the time a Member of the Opposition, he made a very worthwhile contribution to our National Advisory Committee on Policies. Again, I repeat, consistency. This dates back to January 1984.

When we assumed power, we immediately took action to recognize these political rights, as we had promised we would. I personally drafted a private bill, because I wanted to make sure that in line with the work we had done—for as you know, Mr. Speaker, a newly elected Government has a lot of work to do to finalize a great many Bills left over by the previous administration . . . I just could not see how the new Government could introduce a Bill dealing with this issue before at least a year or two. So, I said to myself, I am not going to wait.

I had drafted a Bill, but I was appointed Parliamentary Secretary in September 1986, and as you know, the practice in the House does not allow Parliamentary Secretaries to use Private Members' Hour to introduce private bills. So, I withdrew this Bill together with a number of others which I had introduced. Then, the Government started to work on its own.

When the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) introduced his Bill in November 1987, we worked on this Bill which, I think, will meet the needs of our civil servants while respecting the public's right to their professional attributes.

I should like to emphasize once more the efforts made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in this area, because, contrary to what the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) said, I do not think it is for lack of trying that he failed to convince the Government of the importance of all his efforts. It was due to a combination of circumstances. The House is called upon to address a great many issues. Public life itself suggests priorities. The fact that some bills must wait their turn does not reflect on their value, because emergencies occur, and budgetary legislation must be dealt with. The House must deal with supply, Mr. Speaker, irrespective of the schedule.

For this reason, I find it unfortunate that the Hon. Member for St. John's East, who replaces a man whom the House held in such high esteem, who was appreciated for his open mindedness and great generosity and who would never have looked down on the efforts of his colleagues, because I feel he would learn something by reading everything the former Member for St. John's East said in this House, and by listening to our colleagues who had the pleasure to work with him, for he would realize that the spirit of the House does not allow this kind of small-minded remarks, when today, thanks to the efforts of the Hon. Member for Ottawa West, we are going to achieve an objective of the Progressive Conservative Party who wanted to recognize the political rights of civil servants as well as the wishes which have been expressed before by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, to recognize the political rights of civil servants. It is a great day, Mr. Speaker, which we should not be marred with petty remarks.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, it was not my intention to speak tonight but given the importance of this issue for the National Capital Region and given the fine speeches made by my colleague, I have decided to also take part in the discussion and offer my comments on this subject. Indeed, I must tell my colleague from Ottawa-West (Mr. Daubney), who I take this opportunity to congratulate for his Bill C-273, that I hope he will be successful, but until everything is wrapped up, Mr. Speaker, one can hardly trust in victory. The issue is not a new one, it is in fact quite old, almost as old, I believe, as the Public Service itself. And there is a simple reason for that. Those who have stood up for civil servants in this House, are for the most part the federal members or representatives of the two or three Parties who live in the National Capital Region.

I can remember that we fought vigorously some years ago for civil servants. Whether in the case of retired civil servants or past and present civil servants, we have always been at their side and this is normal since most people in the National Capital Area are civil servants. In the final analysis, we must defend our constituents and since they are federal civil servants, we are at their side and always will be.

I do not think that this should be made a political issue as such. Issues dealing with federal civil servants should be dealt with in non partisan fashion, and all the more so when the issue concerns political activity.

Attempts have been made to change the situation for I don't know how long. Jolly well if it works and I don't care one bit if it is an election promise, just as long as the majority of our civil servants get what they want.

And this is why I submit that we are in an awkward position as members representing their constituents, simply because we are always caught up in a partisan issue when we have a regional interest to protect, and I say regional, not local. The National Capital Region is after all a region of some importance and how can we be blamed for representing people who happen to be civil servants.

We have already had severe problems with Section 32, mainly concerning the referendum issue in 1980. I remember asking the Solicitor General of the day several questions. He would have been willing to do something but had his hands tied by the vagueness of the term "political activity". The word "refedendum" was not included in the Public Service Employment Act. What does "political activity" actually mean? Does that mean that it only happens during an election? I think so, in accordance with section 32. Then again, is applauding the Hon. Member for Gatineau in a political meeting a political activity which warrants a suspension? I know that gesture could also be interpreted in all its glory, so to speak.

Some people interpret words. That's why I say that political activities should be clearly defined, because there have been abuses and there will be more. Is this legislation or the proposed reform going to allow political activities across the board? I don't think so. I think we should get down to business, like the committee did, and determine whether all activities should be permitted or not within the Public Service.

I know some people will always try to exercise their right to democracy in all its magnificence, which is also quite normal, but we will have to put some restrictions in certain cases. I recall when the federal Liberal association of my very own and very lovely constituency of Hull—Aylmer had in fact elected, I would not say inadvertently, but enthusiastically, someone thought to have political activities simply because he was active in union matters within the civil service. So, he received threats, he was told he would have to resign, that Section 32 did not allow such things, and so on. The point I want to make is that civil servants, as someone else mentionned it earlier, are people too. People who live in the National Capital Region, and who work for the federal Government. And that is very evident during an election. Those people do not talk much, they are very reserved, they don't want to be identified with any political Party in particular, and rightly so. They should therefore be able to exercise their rights to democracy just like any other citizen of this Region.

I know it's an old chestnut. People always say: "When you were in power, you didn't do it". Others say: "When you're in power, you don't do it". The reason is simple. It might prove also that, if we were to change the system with a view of strengthening it, backbenchers from a particular region would be able to influence the Government so that legislation beneficial to a region, whatever its politic allegiance can be adopted.

That is my opinion. I think we should seek ways to amend Section 32 of the Public Service Employment Act. I would add that this should not be valid only during elections, but all the time. Civil servants should be able to participate in the democratic life of their community, their riding or their region just as any other citizen. Many have gone into municipal politics, and I think that they make excellent politicians even if they work for the Public Service. Again, certain restrictions should be imposed. Their activities should not give rise to conflict of interests. There is a long list of activities which are out of bounds to them.

Mr. Speaker, this is an excellent motion in my view. I thank my friend from Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for giving me this opportunity to make a few comments on that very important subject. I know he has been promoting this for a long time, as all other Members from the area. I can even suggest to the Hon. Members for Ottawa West, for St. John's East (Mr. Harris) and for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly), and even for Ottawa Carleton (Mr. Turner) that when we were in power, some Liberal Members from the area voted against the Government, along with some Conservative Members at the time. We did this generously and sincerely, but it was hard for us and it was hard also for the then Government. It would be just as hard today if this were to be repeated. But I think that one must have the will to defend one's own ideas, one's own philosophy, and above all else to be a good representative of the people. If we do not do that, we fail in our duty as Members of Parliament, we fail in our oath of office because we no longer defend the interests of the people we are representing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the period provided for Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Friday, June 17, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Employment and Immigration relating to amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof; and the amendments of Mr. Marchi:

That the motion be amended:

(a) in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 3 by deleting all the words after the word "be" in subparagraph (II) and substituting the following therefor:

"admitted to that country, if removed from Canada, and would have the right to have the merits of their claim determined in that country;".

(b) in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 11 by adding the following words at the end thereof:

"and in regard to an advisory list of safe countries as drafted and defined by the convention refugee determination division;".

And of Mr. Heap:

That the motion be amended in the proposed amendment to Senate amendment numbered 4 by deleting in subparagraph (iii) all the words after "(2)(C)" and substituting the following therefor:

"who the Minister has certified constitutes a danger to the public in Canada; or".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 13(5), the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) in relation to the message of the Senate on Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Heap), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Pursuant to the agreement reached Friday, June 17, 1988, the next question is on the amendment of Mr. Marchi.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Speaker, if Your Honour would take the result of the vote that was just held on the motion of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and then apply it in reverse on the main motion, I believe there would be unanimous consent to proceed that way. However, there would have to be added the vote of the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) who just joined us.

Mr. Hamelin: And mine also!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And also the vote of the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), who votes on the Government side, I presume!

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Is there unanimous consent, therefore to apply the vote we have just taken on Mr. Marchi's amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Marchi), which was negatived on the following division:

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis (p. 16379) and the amendment of Mr. Guilbault, Saint-Jacques (p. 16387).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The floor will be given to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). Perhaps he will wait for 30 seconds to allow Members leave who wish to do so.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, before the vote and before the Private Members' Hour I was centering my remarks on the Government's motion to extend hours of sitting and to extend sitting days into July. The point I was in the process of making is that a large part of our tradition in this House, even though there are three different Parties with different philosophies, is a certain level of consensus and agreement, and it is the level of consensus and agreement that allows our parliamentary system to function. I was also in the process of making the point that at certain critical times, when the Opposition feels that a measure being introduced by the Government goes beyond the bounds of what a Government should normally be doing, it is the duty of the Opposition to try to prevent the Government, within the rules of Parliament, from proceeding with that legislation.

We have seen this on several occasions in the past. One of the historic debates, of course, was the great pipeline debate during which the Liberal Government of the day tried to ram down the throats of Parliament a plan to build a pipeline. In the process, it tore up Parliament's Standing Orders. We saw the same thing again when the Liberal Government of the day, under former Prime Minister Trudeau, brought in its first constitutional proposal. The Opposition, especially the Official Opposition at that time, the Conservative Party, felt that what the Government was doing in that legislation was beyond the normal bounds.

Again we saw the Opposition playing that role when the Liberal Government brought in its National Energy Program. The Opposition at that time claimed that the omnibus Bill the Government introduced was too wide in scope and used the tools available to it to stop the Government and force the Government to back down and introduce several Bills rather than one omnibus trade Bill.

We believe that Parliament has reached another one of those historic points where it is the duty of the Opposition to use every available rule in the book to stop the Government from proceeding with its legislation, namely, the passage of the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States. As members of the Opposition we feel that the Government has no mandate to undertake such an historic change, not only in the economic and trading patterns of the country, but also in the power structure of the country.

The legislation that the Government has introduced changes the relationship between the federal Government, provincial Governments, and municipal Governments. The legislation gives power to the Cabinet to disallow legislation, whether it is municipal, provincial, or federal, if that legislation is not in agreement with the free trade agreement. This we find intolerable. Therefore, we must use every means at our disposal to thwart the Government in its attempt to change the power structure of the country so radically.

The Government has no mandate. As opposition Members have pointed out in the debate, there was never a mention of such a free trade agreement with the United States in the last election. I seriously wonder if, had this proposal been in front of the electorate in 1984, the results of the election would have been the same. Certainly, everybody would be in agreement that the Government has no mandate to alter so radically the power structure in the country.

Government Members say it is necessary to have this legislation because the Government should be able to govern, and that a handful of Members in the Opposition should not be able to thwart the Government in its attempt to govern. That is not the case. If it was ordinary legislation necessary for governing the country, we in the Opposition might rise and offer some objections or criticisms, but then, through our system of consensus, that legislation would invariably pass. It is not only a case of legislation enabling the Government to govern. We are faced with legislation that dramatically changes how the country is governed. We believe that the Government has no mandate for that. That is why we call upon the Government to have an election before it passes this legislation.

Earlier this afternoon I heard the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) mentioning how unfair this would be because calling an election immediately would mean an election being called on the old boundaries. We do not want to see an election called on the old boundaries. That is not the issue here. However, if the Government did not insist on passing the free trade legislation and held it back until after an election, it could call an election in mid-September or the end of September. We could then proceed and hold an election during the campaign of which this issue would be widely debated and all the ramifications would be explained to the Canadian public and they would have an opportunity of voting and deciding upon such a major reorganization of the power structure of the country. If the electorate decided to elect a majority of members of the Conservative Party, the Government could then reintroduce this legislation and it would be passed.

The Government does not want to face the electorate on this issue. It wants to ram this legislation through Parliament. I wants to see it enacted before it has the courage to face the Canadian public. As opposition Members, we cannot accept that. Therefore, we will oppose this with every means at our disposal.

Understandably, many Canadians watching this debate will find it very frustrating. They expect Parliament to debate issues and to decide upon matters. In raising points of order and stalling the House in conducting its business the opposition Members take the political risk of doing this. An Opposition does not oppose with all the rules and all the means available to it on a whim. An Opposition recognizes that it takes a tremendous political gamble. An Opposition must play that role if it feels strongly that what the Government is attempting to do is wrong and outside of our tradition and of consensus politics in the British parliamentary system.

We feel very strongly that what the Government is attempting to do negates the essence of parliamentary democracy. Never before has such a major decision on the future of the country been made without direct opinion and representation from the Canadian people. As such, we are opposed to this. We will use all the means available to us to force the Government to backtrack, take back its legislation, and to break it down rather than having a huge omnibus Bill that changes many different Acts and Bills. We will attempt to force the Government to hold an election on this issue and consult the Canadian public about its future that is contained in the Bill that the Government wishes to propose.

The Government has also claimed that the Opposition has thwarted the Government in its ability to govern by holding up many pieces of legislation. The Government is somewhat contradictory on this issue. On the other hand, it claims how successful it has been in passing legislation, and how successful it has been in governing. The Government cannot have it both ways. It cannot say, out of one side of its mouth, that it has governed well by pointing out the many pieces of legislation passed, and at the same time, out of the other side state that the Opposition is preventing it from governing. That just does not wash.

One of the items that the Government has brought up is the immigration Bill that we have just voted on. I remember that last summer there was a great crisis facing Canadians. Canadian shores were going to be invaded by boatloads of refugees. In many ways we were sympathetic to the plight of the Government. Certainly, people coming in under false pretences claiming to be refugees and not being valid refugees were coming to Canada and jumping the line, so to speak, ahead of those people who had applied for immigration status and were waiting. Some action was needed. Whether it was an emergency, I really doubt. Certainly, the legislation has not been in place and we have not seen boatload after boatload of false refugees invading our shores, be that as it may.

We have heard government Members accusing the Senate of thwarting the will of Parliament and the elected representatives. Indeed, this has disturbed me. The initiatives of the Senate I find disturbing. I find it disturbing that a group of unelected people have the power to thwart the will of the elected representatives. I find this an absolutely terrible situation.

However, has the Government done anything about it? It has been in power now for almost four years. It is on record as being willing to ensure either that we have an elected Senate or that the appointed body of political hacks and flacks does not interfere with the democratic process. On several occasions my Leader offered the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) our support to rectify the situation. But of course the Conservative Party is not interested in rectifying the situation. It wants its own hacks and flacks in the Senate. The only thing it does not like is the group of Liberal hacks and flacks which now controls the Senate. The Government does not want to change that. It does not want to change the structure of the Senate. It just wants to hold on and hope that those hacks and flacks will die off so that it can appoint its own Tory hacks and flacks.

I do not think that anyone seriously believes that if the shoe were on the other foot, if there was a majority of Tory hacks and flacks in the Senate with a Liberal Government in the House of Commons, the Tories would not use the Senate to thwart the will of an elected Government. The Tory hacks and flacks in the Senate would be playing parliamentary games. They would be attempting at every turn to thwart the will of an elected government. For us to believe seriously that the Government wants to see genuine Senate reform is something I do not think the Canadian public believes, as I think it does not believe the Government on many other issues as well.

There is another issue that was raised in the House as to why we need this legislation. I refer to the abortion issue. When the Supreme Court made its decision we had government spokesmen, in particular the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn), giving us all the assurances that the Government would act and that it would provide leadership. We heard that refrain for a number of weeks and months. But the Government could not quite decide whether to provide what type of leadership and in what direction. It thought maybe that it should be this way or that way or even a combination of two ways, three ways, or four ways. It thought that it could find a way to duck its responsibilities. It said, "Look, what we are going to do to parliament is to offer it all sorts of choices, have a free vote, and whatever choice gets the most number of votes will be our position". I am afraid that that is not leadership. I am afraid that what we have seen from the Government is a lack of real leadership in many, many areas.

I now come to the sorry state in which the Government is tearing up the rule book that governs us, our Standing Orders. It is now the Government and not the Speaker which will decide whether Parliament sits in the summer recess. It has torn up the rule book. It has introduced closure. It has attempted to stifle the voices of members of the Opposition and of Members of Parliament. It will use its majority in a ruthless way to try to suppress the voice of opposition. It will use its vast majority as boots to stomp down the voices of dissent. But we will stand in our place and we will oppose the Government, because what it is attempting to do is against not only the traditions of parliamentary democracy but the Canadian tradition, a tradition of consensus.

This Government wants to force us into a political regime with the United States which is unacceptable, I believe, to the Canadian people. It should have the guts to go to the Canadian people and to get their permission before it acts.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say a few words on this motion. The Government has talked a great deal about its agenda. I submit that that is precisely why Parliament will sit this summer. It is because the Government has never had an agenda of its own. It has never been able to put any program into place. It really does not know where it is going half the time. It flips from one subject to another. It cannot come to grips with its own priorities probably because there are a great many Members opposite on the back benches who have their pet subjects that they want to get through Parliament before it rises. As a result, and in order to get along with everyone, the Government puts everything on the Order Paper and everything becomes a priority. That is not leadership. That is not a good reason for having Parliament sit on and on for months.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we came back here in the first part of August of last year in a great crisis situation concerning an immigration matter. We were going to deal with it forthwith and in forthright terms. It is rather ironic that just a few moments ago the House voted on Bill C-55. That is the immigration Bill that came up last August which we were here to deal with at that time in order to settle the crisis. It has now been returned to the Senate. It will be debated further and will, undoubtedly, finally be passed.

However, the Government lists as one of its first points to have Parliament continue to sit all summer debating items in its agenda which has been well thought out and which it believes is in the interests of the country. That is about the weakest excuse one could put forward when there is a Government in place that does not know what its own priorities are or what it wants.

To this Government everything is a crisis. Yet what does it do? It does away with the rule book. This is a Government made up of members of the Party which, when in opposition, did not want to play by the rules at that time either. When the constitutional debate was being settled and when the votes were being taken Members of the Opposition at the time, members of the Conservative Party, stormed the Speaker's chair. They stood up around the Speaker shouting at the Speaker when the votes were being taken. That was totally out of order. There was chaos in the House as we watched the votes being taken on various amendments to the Constitution. Some of the very people who were standing up around the Chair shouting at the Speaker are today trying to say that the Opposition in this House is holding them up and that the Opposition is being too blatant and too much of a problem.

Let us remind those Members of the day that they walked out of the House and let the bells ring for 13 days. Many of those Members who were in opposition at that time are sitting opposite supporting the Government today.

The Government has decided that it will dispense with the rules of the House of Commons. People might say, "What do you mean, dispense with the rules of the House of Commons?" The Lefebvre Committee made up of representatives from all Parties in the House sat for 153 meetings in order to bring in new rules for the House of Commons that would put some order into our business here. It considered what days we would sit and what days Members could go to their constituencies. It considered other changes to the rules of the House that would give private Members in the House more authority and more rights to go ahead with Private Members' legislation. Then, on top of that we had the McGrath Commission more recently, another plethora of meetings of members on a committee representing all Parties in this House. What happens? Both Chairmen Lefebvre and McGrath must be wondering what in the world they and all the people on the two committees, which sat for 153 meetings—or whatever it was—that went on and on and on, were doing. Today those rules are totally ignored by the Government with 208 Members in this House of Commons at the present time. That was the first reason.

The second reason put forward was the amount of time and effort that all Members of the House in government and in opposition have invested in legislation presently on the Order Paper, either at committee stage, at second reading, at report stage or at third reading. We realize that Members put a lot of work into committees. They have been doing it since day one around here, Mr. Speaker.

If the Government feels that those committees were so important and if the legislation is important, all the Government had to do was seek agreement with the opposition Parties to have the items transferred to the next sitting of the House. Or is the Government planning to do everything this summer and then call a fall election? I guess we will soon know about that because the results of the by-electon in Lac-Saint-Jean will start coming in any minute and the Government will know whether or not it has any intention of calling an election this fall.

What will the Government do with the parliamentary program for the fall? Normally we come back to this House the second Monday in September. The Order says the Government wants to sit through to September 9. What will happen to the fall sitting if the Government does not call the famous election? This is what I mean when I say there is really no planning in the Government's programs.

The third reason is the importance of putting certain issues before the House and country which could not be foreseen when the Government laid out its agenda. Those are the words of the Government House Leader. Is the House Leader saying that some of the legislation brought in has turned out to be a surprise to the Government? Has the Government decided now it was actually worthwhile to bring in legislation, and suddenly finds it of value and wants it passed?

The fourth reason is the importance of the free trade initiative. Some parts of that free trade initiative we could do without. The U.S.-Canada agreement, that famous free trade agreement, is not free trade at all. What about access to markets? Canada has not received access to American markets in this trade agreement. It is not a free trade agreement. It would be better for Canada and many areas of our economy if we never saw it. There is the famous 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber. That was going to disappear when it came the final part of the agreement. That has not disappeared. Today we have American companies shipping lumber into parts of eastern Canada cheaper than those same Canadians can buy from Canadian industry here in Canada. Why? Because of the 15 per cent tax which the Minister of trade of the day brought in and laid on Canadian industry.

We heard talk about a level playing field. What you have to do is kick Canadians, tie one hand behind their backs while they are down and then tell them to go to work and compete with Americans who have a wide open arrangement to make use of our industries, to invest in our resources, to invest in our banks and to invest in anything in Canada. Americans can bid on contracts. We do not even have open access to bid on all the defence contracts in the United States. The small business set aside program is still in place. The Pentagon decides which contracts will be offered to Canadians to bid on and which are not. That is not free trade. It is putting handcuffs on Canadian business beforehand.

We have the Senate, which is the age old problem of the Government. The Government is paranoid about the Canadian Senate. Canadians recognize that our Senate is the only body sitting between this massive Government and real democracy. The Government has suddenly discovered that the Senate is not a democratic institution because it is not elected. We have never heard Tories worrying about that in days gone by, not at all. It is only when the Senate decided to exercise its constitutional right that we heard about it. The Senate has a constitutional right to oppose. It has a constitutional right to make amendments. It has a constitutional right to discuss these matters because it is the second level of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Boudria: It is the Senators' duty.

Mr. Hopkins: It is their duty to do so, as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has just said. The Government is using the Senate pure and simply as an election ploy. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has it in his craw that the moment the Senate dares to bring out the weaknesses in the Canadian economy in his so-called free trade agreement he will start crying foul and say that this unelected body is holding up legislation and he will go to the country for an election. That will be just fine because then all Canadians will have a chance to express themselves.

The sixth comment of the Government House Leader is the inflammatory remarks about the delaying tactics of the Opposition. Isn't that something, Mr. Speaker? Does that mean the Opposition should be so nice as to lie down and keep quiet? Is the Opposition not supposed to criticize the Government? Is the Government so all-perfect that nothing should be said about it at all? Are we supposed to roll over and play dead? That is not the role of this Opposition, nor was it the role of any Opposition in this House of Commons. Many members of the Government sat in the Opposition not long ago. They should not talk about inflammatory comments and delaying tactics of the Opposition when it was the Tories themselves who were the very ones who walked out of this House of Commons for 13 days and left the bells ringing. They are the ones who stormed the Speaker's chair like a bunch of kids shouting and screaming at the Speaker as he called each vote on the Constitution in the early 1980s. Now the Tories are talking about the Opposition's stalling tactics. Does that mean we are being too tough on the poor people over there? Does it mean they do not have enough backbone to be the Government of this country? Does that mean they cannot stand on their own feet and stand behind their own legislation when they are being criticized?

We had an example today when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) was asked a question about his nuclear submarines. He forgot to put a communication system that would work under the Arctic ice. I have his answer here. He went into a tirade that is one-and-a-half pages long. The Minister of National Defence and his Party think they are so all-perfect in matters of the defence of this country that no one should criticize them. Yet one of their own admirals talks about what has been left out. A very low-frequency radio system should be in the submarines if they are to operate under the Arctic ice. With the existing system, the radio will operate in the Atlantic and in the Pacific. The Government is bragging about bringing in a system that will cover three oceans while it has a communication system that will only work in two of them.

The Minister of National Defence has been caught on this issue and he is embarrassed about it. One of his admirals brought that fact out in a newspaper interview. So the Government that looks upon itself as being so perfect that it should not be criticized and that the Opposition should not be tough on it is the same Government that will spend $8 billion on a nuclear submarine fleet which does not even have a communications system that will work once the submarines go under the ice in the Arctic. Talk about perfection.

Let us talk about the Prime Minister What did the Prime Minister say during the election campaign of 1984 about what he was going to do? The Prime Minister promised in August of 1984 that he would increase the members of the Armed Forces personnel to 90,000 within three years of having been elected to office. He has not even come close to matching that figure, and his time is up. However, we do not hear anything about that. My goodness, we should not attack the Government about those things.

There was a lot of talk about upgrading Canada's reserves. We were going to have reserves such as we have never had before, and the reserves would be perfectly equipped. People took the Government seriously and joined the reserves. Then there was no money for training and training exercises have been cut back. The fact is that the Government is not financially prepared to handle this issue.

It will be said over and over again, every time the Government brags about its national defence record, that the Government should be ashamed of that record. During its first year in office, in 1985, the increase in the budget of the Department of National Defence never even met the rate of inflation. The purchasing power of the Department actually declined in the first year under this Government.

How is it that the Government has any money at all to spend on these programs? You are giving me the signal, but I must put this on the record before I leave. The Government has money to spend because between 1980 and 1984, the Liberal Government increased the defence budget in real terms by 7.1 per cent per year. Using the full 10 years prior to 1984, it would average out to 4.7 per cent per year. This Government did not even come close to that figure in one year in office.

The previous Liberal Government built a good base for this Government to build on. It is certainly not because of its own commitment to defence that it is buying anything today. It is because the budget was put in place for this Government by the previous Government.

The Prime Minister brags about the great thing he does. The other day, in answer to a question I put, the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Merrithew), who was answering for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), said that they had topped up the budget of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. I mentioned the fact that the cut in that budget was supposed to be $25 million this year. In fact, the Government did not top up the budget at all. All it did was to stretch out the pound of flesh a little farther.

The Government will take $40 million out of that corporation over the next four years instead of taking $25 million this year and $15 million next year. That is what the Government calls topping up a budget. It says one thing and does another. To the Government, topping up a budget means stretching out the pain over a longer period of time.

The biggest problem for this Government is its own credibility. That is what the Prime Minister is worrying about and why he wants to sit all summer to get the trade Bill and other Bills through. We saw how much backbone the Government had when it brought in the proposed legislation on abortion. It simply could not do it.

The only reason the Government has to extend the sittings of the House, thereby not letting us go home to talk to our constituents, is because it has failed to bring in a program for its own legislation and it has failed to set its priorities. As a result, we will continue to sit even though the House has been sitting constantly since August of last year. We just passed the Bill dealing with the crisis that we were called back to look after last August. It took 10 months to settle this great crisis. We have seen what backbone the Government with the largest majority in Canadian history has. What strength and dynamism we are seeing in the weakest Government that this nation has ever seen!

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I have been listening to various Members, particularly those from opposition Parties, address themselves to government Order No. 26. I would like to respond to some of the points that I have heard Hon. Members make.

One point is that Members of Parliament need vacations, that we must defeat Order No. 26 because the Members must go home—

Mr. Boudria: Who said that?

Mr. Riis: Who said that?

Mr. Stackhouse: Several Hon. Members said that. Read Hansard, the MPs need their vacations, they need to go home. The Hon. Member who just spoke said that they need to go home to speak to their constituents.

Mr. Riis: That's not a holiday.

Mr. Stackhouse: He just said that.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member is reading things into other people's remarks, and I would think more of him if he did not. I do think a lot of that particular Member.

The longer the Hon. Member is in politics, the more he will realize that it is every bit as important to have meetings with your constituents and to get around the country to find out what Canadians are thinking as it is to sit on Parliament Hill month after month putting through the kind of legislation—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) has the floor.

Mr. Stackhouse: Obviously the Hon. Member did not have a point of order. He did say that Members needed to go home to speak to their constituents, and that is a vacation. A vacation is vacating this place and getting out.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, come on now.

Mr. Stackhouse: Absolutely. The French equivalent of vacation is vacance, and that is the word for recess. The Hon. Member knows that. If the Hon. Member cannot face reality, that is his problem.

Several Hon. Members have said that this motion should be opposed and defeated because Members need vacations. They need to get away. They have said they need to get away for family reasons as well as for constituency reasons. They need to get away for personal reasons. One Hon. Member of the NDP said that he had his own personal agenda and that this motion was interfering with it. That is the kind of reasoning that has been put before the House in opposition to this motion.

Of course, we do need vacations. We need opportunities to go home, and the Hon. Member who just spoke has certainly been home to speak to his constituents. I believe he just won a hotly contested nomination battle, and that is to his credit. He certainly had to go home and speak to his constituents to do that, and he had time to do so.

This motion, along with the rest of the business of the House, is not preventing Members from getting home to speak to their constituents and to do their work. This motion requires that the House stay in session to deal with the business of the Government and the business of the House. Surely that is our priority, and it must be our priority.

We were called back last August to deal with an emergency occasioned by false refugees. This House dealt with it. The Senate tried to thwart the will of the House, even as the Opposition tried to delay it by filibuster. We dealt with this Bill today in its final form because of those delaying tactics, not because of the lack of will on the part of the Government or lack of dedication on the part of Members of the House.

• (1910)

A second reason has been raised, namely, that instead of extending the sitting of the House this summer the Government should call an election.

Mr. Boudria: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stackhouse: I am shocked that a member of the Liberal Party would applaud that when he knows that it would rob certain communities of this country of the right to the representation they need through redistribution. After the middle of July the City of Scarborough will be entitled to five seats. I take it that the Liberal Party wants to deny the City of Scarborough that. They want to deny other parts of the country the enlarged representation which redistribution will give them.

A lot of us recognize that there is merit in extending the life of this Parliament until redistribution can take effect. The Province of Ontario can have more seats, the Province of Alberta can have more seats, the Province of British Columbia can have more seats, and people can have the representation that their population justifies.

The real reason the Opposition wants to have an election before we can pass the legislation that is the purpose of these extended sittings is that they want to deny the Government the record of achievement which will be represented by passing the legislation and resolutions which will be part of this summer's work. Oppositions know that Governments get credit only for what is passed by the House. Oppositions benefit from delaying it beyond any possibility of being passed.

I have to believe that the Opposition does not want the forthcoming election to be fought on the Government's record. Instead, they want it to be fought on what has been the basis of so many Question Periods, that is, sleaze, scandal-mongering, and character assassinations. By sitting into the summer we will have the opportunity to deal with the major issues which will be before us which need finalization by this House.

Finally, I want to respond to a point which has been made by the Opposition over and over again, that is, that Order No. 26 represents tyranny by the majority. It is a curious definition of democracy that the majority making a decision is somehow tyranny and that, by implication, the minority should have the right either to make the decision or to see that no decision will be made.

I can quote one outstanding authority on this. I wish there were some Liberals here to hear this. I can remember the former Liberal Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, objecting that after a reasonable period of debate there should be an opportunity for the House to make a decision, there should be an opportunity for a vote to be taken.

The reason we have the log-jam with which we are faced now, which requires us not to recess next week but to continue into the summer, is that the majority has been prevented from making the final decision which the majority should be able to make a decision on free trade, a decision on tax reform, a decision on Meech Lake, a decision on Air Canada, and decisions on other issues before us.

It is right that members of the Opposition should have time in which to make criticisms and constructive suggestions. It is right that they should have time to debate the issues in order that public opinion be informed and aroused. However, surely we do not need any imagination to realize that we have had more than sufficient time for the opposition Parties to do precisely that. Everyone knows that the Liberals and NDP Members are against free trade. They really do not need to hold this matter up any further. Everyone has heard the arguments for and against it and it is now time for this House to make a decision on that issue and others which are before us.

In Order No. 26 we are not seeing tyranny by the majority but, in the resistance to it, we are seeing the threatened tyranny of the minority. It will be within the tradition of the Parliament of this land and others if the House is allowed, in the very near future, to make a decision by each of us doing what is our right and our duty, that is, to vote on these issues which have been so long before us and so long debated without each of us having the right to stand up and say yea or nay.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I always listen with interest to the Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) because even though I sometimes do not agree with him, he has a reputation for coherence, something which was absent tonight. In fact, I have never heard him so desperate. One could only be amused by someone who cites opposition obstruction to Meech Lake as one of the problems the Government was having when we know full well—

Mr. Stackhouse: I didn't do that.

Mr. Blaikie: He did, he cited Meech Lake. We know that there has been all-Party agreement. There has been some dissent within caucuses, but basically Meech Lake has proceeded through this House with indecent haste. People have criticized Parliament in general for the lack of attention it has received. I point that out only to show how desperate the Hon. Member is for an argument tonight.

I want to speak a bit about what is happening in context of the parliamentary reforms which have taken place since 1982. After the bell-ringing crisis, a special committee of the House was struck chaired by the former Member of this House, Tom Lefebvre. I had an opportunity to serve on that committee and subsequently in this Parliament on a special committee on the reform of the House of Commons chaired by the former Member for St. John's East, Jim McGrath, who is now the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland.

I want to put before you this evening, Mr. Speaker, my analysis of why what has happened here in the last week or so has been so damaging to both the spirit and the substance of those reforms. A lot of it is centred around the issue of the parliamentary calendar. There have been attempts made to trivialize opposition concern about the breaking of the parliamentary calendar by suggesting that people are only interested in their personal vacations, or whatever the case may be.

However, there is a much larger issue here, that is, whether, by virtue of the action taken by the Government last August when we were recalled to deal with what has obviously turned out not to be an emergency, and now being pushed beyond the end of June, again not as a result of any self-evident emergency but rather a perceived emergency in terms of the Government's own agenda, we will ever be able to return to the point where we have a parliamentary calendar. There are those who think that that was a good idea, not because of vacations but because it gave some form to the parliamentary year. I think there is a legitimate concern to be expressed here, and not only in terms of losing the notion of a parliamentary calendar.

I might remind Hon. Members, and particularly the Government, that when the special committee selected this calendar, it included in it one more week of parliamentary business than the average number of weeks per year of parliamentary business over the 10 years preceding the recommendation of the committee. The time that the Government has had available to it under this calendar, in addition to the time which it created for itself by bringing us back in August, is far greater than was the average in the 10 years preceding the recommendation of the committee. My point is that it is not as though the Government has had only a small or limited amount of time. The special committee on the reform of the House of Commons erred, if you like, on the side of lengthier sittings.

The other point I want to make with respect to the parliamentary calendar is that it was part of a package. As I look back on those reforms and ask myself whether our expectations were ill-founded, I can say a number of things. I believe the reforms directed to private Members have worked reasonably well. There have been more free votes on Private Members' Bills the outcome of which we do not know. That is something the reform committee set out to create, and I believe it has been a success.

Perhaps the greatest example of its success, regardless of where one stands on the issue, was Bill C-204, the anti-smoking Bill.

The parliamentary calendar was part of a package of reforms which was agreed to in good faith and pursuant to which the Opposition gave up certain tactics at its disposal to delay business of the House. These included shorter speeches, and a requirement to have 15 Members present in order to prevent the extension of hours, a procedure which has been used increasingly as an indirect form of closure by the Government, which was not its intent. The Opposition gave up the power to ring the bells at great length, as the Conservative Opposition did in 1982. The Opposition forfeited a number of other procedures as part of that whole package in return for the notion of a parliamentary calendar.

In lieu of these concessions by the Opposition was the notion that there would be a set calendar regardless of whether the Government with its majority was able to pass legislation by a certain time of the year. There is nothing illegitimate about that. Those were the rules of the game.

We now have the parliamentary equivalent of the Government moving the goal posts. There was a consensual arrangement between the Parties for a package of reforms in which the Opposition and the Government made certain concessions. Only the Government has the power to take back unilaterally what it gave up in those negotiations. The Opposition does not have the power to take back what it gave up.

This motion is wrong because the Government is taking back elements of the package that was arrived at subsequent to 1982. If the Government is unable to pass legislation on its agenda by the June 30 deadline, there is a provision in the Standing Orders whereby it could appeal to the Speaker and make a case that there is an emergency. The Standing Orders as a result of the package have not left the Government with no recourse in a genuine emergency.

It is ironic that the Conservative Government should be taking this action because it has made somewhat of a parliamentary career for 30 years of condemning the Liberals for unilateral action with such things as closure. It is ironic that it is a Conservative Government that is attempting this final victory for unilateral action.

We have seen unilateral action in the past, such as when the Liberals revised the Standing Orders in 1969. But we thought we had surpassed such action in the early 1980s, and reached a new era of parliamentary reform. As recently as last year, when the Government was considering amending certain Standing Orders unilaterally, it was prevailed upon to come to an agreement rather than break the consensus which had been reached in the early 1980s, that parliamentary reform should only occur with unanimous consent. Finally, after we bargained and negotiated, there was an agreement, and that period of true parliamentary reform was extended.

Now it has been broken by the motion to extend the sittings. We are becoming used to closure motions as part of parliamentary life. It does not bring the same outrage as it did during the pipeline debate in 1956, when closure had not been used for decades before.

The repeated use of closure is partly a problem of the Government's impatience, but is also due to the fact that we have never really grasped the nettle of legislative planning. The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) is here and he knows that one of the matters with which the reform committee did not deal was the whole question of legislative planning. A new committee on parliamentary reform should concern itself with that issue because it is one of the problems with this place. Rather than a process whereby we can agree what will be discussed and when, we are reduced to a game of cat and mouse each day when matters are brought up for debate when critics are not available or have been given little notice.

That is hardly a responsible or intelligent way to run the business of the country or of this Parliament.

The problem of legislative planning must be addressed.

In the final analysis, I am concerned about the spirit of unilateralism by which the Government, through the use of this motion, has declared that it can basically change any Standing Order it wishes. The Speaker argued, perhaps quite properly in a technical sense, that this power exists within the standing Orders. However, I ask Hon. Members, particularly Conservative Members, to reflect on the great emphasis they placed on the notion of convention in the 1982 constitutional debate. While many things are technically possible, whether under the Standing Orders in Parliament or under the law outside of Parliament, are all things permissible? What we see here is the victory of Nietzsche over Parliament. If it is technically possible, do it.

It is a parliamentary equivalent to Dostoevsky's Raskolnikov in Crime and Punishment. The Government has to prove itself in the way Raskolnikov wanted to show he was above ordinary morality and killed the old woman.

In this case, a parliamentary majority wants to show that it is above the morality of opposition or minority rights in Parliament. It is parliamentary ubermenschen. That is actually what is happening.

What is incredible about it is that because of this motion and the use of the Standing Orders in that way, everything is possible and, in the eyes of the Government, everything is permissible. The Opposition is no longer seen to be operating within an agreed upon set of rules which it uses to advance what it thinks to be in the interests of the nation.

If we happen to think that retarding the progress of the free trade agreement is in the interests of Canada, we have every right to do that here in the House of Commons. That is what the House of Commons is for. The Government has every right to use agreed upon rules to advance its view that the free trade agreement is good for Canada. What it does not have the right to do is to say to the Opposition: "When you start to get the better of us, we are going to change the rules on you all by ourselves, unilaterally". Everything is permissible. That is the problem with what we have before us. The Opposition does have a right to play within the rules.

I can remember when the Liberal Government used to talk about the Conservative Opposition in the early 1980s. I came here in 1979, but in 1980, during the constitutional debate, the heat was really on. People would heap scorn on the Conservatives for using every parliamentary tactic at its disposal. Believe it or not, I used to come to its defence. I defended the Conservatives by saying that as long as they were within the rules, they are demonstrating to the Canadian people how strongly they feel about the particular measure the Government was taking and they will be judged accordingly in terms of politics. That should be the final arbiter. It should not be the Government which decides whether or not the Opposition deserves to be reprimanded for holding up the government's agenda. It should be the people who decide. It is a political judgment. If we hold up the free trade agreement or the legislation pertaining to this or that, and the people happen to agree with the Government, we are going to pay a political price. That is a choice that Oppositions have to make and it is a choice that Government's have to make.

The problem is that it is not being left to the political process. The Government will decide it. What is happening here is that the public is having its role eroded. The Speakership is having its role eroded, because if anyone lost in this motion, it was the Speakership, when the Government said: "The powers entrusted to the Speaker by the Standing Orders to decide whether or not the parliamentary calendar will be broken will no longer reside in the Chair. They will reside in the Government".

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Blaikie: I hear a Conservative Member of the Government yelling "right on". That is the problem.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the Member making his arguments however he may see them, but I do have some concern about his reflections on the ruling of the Chair. That is certainly what I have been hearing in his last few sentences. I would ask that that be brought to the attention of the Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I did not understand the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) to be making any reflections on the Chair.

Mr. Blaikie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Peace River is known as a great defender of the Chair, and for that matter, so am I. That is why I make the remarks I do. The points I wanted to make, I have made, that is, that I think we have crossed a boundary by the use of that particular Standing Order to override all the other Standing Orders. We have crossed the boundary. Perhaps that power always existed technically, but no one ever thought of using it before in this particular way. It is like a lot of other things in that respect. Once that line has been crossed, it is easy to cross it again and again and again.

So I say to my colleagues on the other side, many of whom I believe have a genuine respect for Parliament, that they have fallen victim to the tempter's power, if you like. They should have done otherwise and voted against their own Government with respect to this motion to extend the sittings of Parliament. It was not done to deal with an emergency or anything like that. It was to deal with the fact that the Government was not able to complete its own agenda within the times and procedures set by Parliament, and that is the Government's fault, no one else's.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense with the reading?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The next question is on the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion and until no later than Friday, September 9, 1988, the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 3, but not on August 1;

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays at 10.00 o'clock p.m., and on Wednesdays at 6.00 o'clock p.m., and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 66 relating to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended;

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 22;

That this special order shall not apply on any allotted days designated in the supply period ending June 30, 1988.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

TABLING OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN CANADA AND CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): I am pleased to table copies of a Memorandum of Understanding between Canada and Czechoslovakia, in both official languages, as well as in Czechoslovakian.

This agreement will enable Canadian officials to gather evidence in Czechoslovakia, and includes the conditions recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes to assure the obtaining of such evidence in accordance with Canadian procedures and safeguards.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BILL C-273—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-273, an Act respecting political rights of public employees, in both official languages.

I believe it would benefit all Members if I presented a short explanation of the action taken by the legislative committee with respect to Bill C-273 which will enact a new public employees' political rights Act.

Bill C-273 was introduced as a Private Member's Bill by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney) and received substantial attention and support. There were two important developments prompting this interest. First, those active in political life now believe public employees should have a code of political rights along the lines recommended by the D'Avignon report in 1979. Second, existing statutory restrictions may violate the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms enacted in 1982.

The task of the legislative committee was to balance the demand for enhanced political rights with the tradition of independence and neutrality in public employment. I believe the revision of Bill C-273 by the legislative committee has achieved this delicate balance.

The amendments respond to the advice and the recommendations brought to the committee and resulted in all-Party agreement. The revised provisions are supported by a committee membership whose mutual belief is that public employees merit all the rights of Canadian citizenship with narrow exceptions to protect the public interest. In the result, we believe the Bill commands the support of all Members of the House of Commons.

HUMAN RIGHTS—REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages the First Report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights concerning human rights behind the Iron Curtain. The report notes that the people of countries behind the Iron Curtain do not have many fundamental rights, and your Committee requests that the Government of Canada make a comprehensive response to the report.

[English]

This report is released at an important time in the East-West relationship. The Vienna follow-up meeting of the Helsinki Final Act process is still ongoing. In the Soviet Union there are signs of change reflected in the phenomena of perestroika and glasnost.

Tabling of Documents

The committee has examined the human rights situation behind the Iron Curtain and has concluded that there is still much headway to be made. The real litmus test of the genuineness of glasnost and perestroika will be seen in the degree of real change in relation to freedom of religion, the rights of national minorities, and immigration for family reunification.

BILL C-30—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table the report of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-30, An Act to amend the National Parks Act and to amend An Act to amend the National Parks Act.

[English]

The committee agreed to 23 amendments during the study of this Bill, and I am sure that as a former Mayor of Banff and Jasper and former Minister of the Environment you will be very pleased with most of these amendments, Sir. We look forward to having more when we get to report stage in the House.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings.]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have not had an opportunity to ask my hon. colleagues for permission, but I wonder if there might be consent to revert to Tabling of Documents in order to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy to table the annual report of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1987. If there would be such consent, I would ask to revert to that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think that is a reasonable request. You would certainly have our consent to revert to Tabling of Documents to allow that to be tabled.

LOWER CHURCHILL DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I am pleased to table, in both official languages, the annual report of the Lower Churchill Development Corporation for the year ending December 31, 1987.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I was not in my seat when you began to read the motion. However, if I had been, I would have voted with my Party.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I was in my seat. I abstained from voting. I refuse to participate in the kind of silly charade that the NDP is up to today.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, just so that there is no misunderstanding, the intention of this is to introduce Private Members' Bills that we feel strongly about, as well as to do what we can to frustrate the Government's effort to introduce and to debate the trade legislation, so that a national general election can intervene to allow the people of Canada an opportunity—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that my hon. friend has explained that. We thought that the delay on these Bills was to heighten public awareness of the breakthrough of the NDP in the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election.

Mr. Gauthier: I guess I should explain, Mr. Speaker, that unless the Whips walk in, the bells do not stop. But it is normally 30 minutes. The reason that we have been taking 30 minutes is that the Government would not give me its assurance that it will call in all Members, including those in committees.

We have 15 committees sitting today, and I find it totally unacceptable that the Government would not give me its commitment that it will call in all Members to vote in the House of Commons, as is required.

If the committees persist in sitting while the bells are ringing, then it creates a difficult situation for us. I have to call our Members back in, and sometimes members of the Government stay in committee and pass a whole lot of clauses while we are absent. We do not like that. We think we should have participation in the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fennell: Mr. Speaker, it was only today that the Whip of the Opposition agreed that he would only have the bells ring for five minutes, if we would get everybody out of the committee. However, I stated that for dilatory motions such as we have had over the last few days from the NDP there was no point breaking up the committees. In particular, there was one committee where the Minister attended, who had been ill before, and it was his only chance.

Now that we have a deal that at any time the bells ring we can come back within five minutes, I accept that and I will get all Members from our committees.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hope my hon. colleague who proposed a five-minute bell realizes that we have a south block in which Members of Parliament have their offices and from which, if one is a brisk walker, it takes six minutes to get here.

An Hon. Member: Take the bus.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will continue with the Introduction of Private Members' Bills.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

FUNDING OF SEWER AND WATER INFRASTRUCTURES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to lend support to the request made by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities. It has made a request to the Government of Canada to cost share with the provincial Governments and municipalities to provide needed expenditures for the basic infrastructure that is required throughout this country, namely, sewer and water.

There are a number of municipalities, both large and small, which are in need of cost sharing with the provinces and the Government of Canada to provide these necessary services. In my own province, communities such as Halifax, Dartmouth, smaller communities such as Sydney, New Waterford, and the municipality of the County of Cape Breton, are all in need of government funding to provide these necessities which have become very, very important over the last number of years.

Members should recognize, particularly government Members, that this request, if fortified by the Government of Canada, would not only provide necessary services to those small and large communities, but would provide needed employment in many of those communities. It would also add to the environmental impact throughout the country.

I believe this to be a positive request and I would hope the Government through its Members would see the light of day and pass sufficient programs to provide the necessary water and sewer services across the country.

BY-ELECTIONS

ELECTION OF LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the voters of Lac-Saint-Jean yesterday decided massively in favour of Conservative Lucien Bouchard. He obtained 16,986 votes, or 55 per cent, compared to 10,726 votes for the Liberal candidate of Leader John Turner.

The big loser in this election is the NDP candidate of Leader Ed Broadbent, who did not manage to get 3,000 votes.

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) said last night, "It is an impressive victory. Lucien Bouchard is an outstanding Quebecer and Canadian, who will do great service for Canadian unity."

Mr. Speaker, we Conservatives of Quebec are all proud of this great victory in Lac-Saint-Jean.

Mr. Speaker, Lucien Bouchard has already started his work as Member of Parliament for Lac-Saint-Jean. He is a man of action. Congratulations, Lucien Bouchard!

BANKS AND BANKING

SERVICE CHARGES—ROYAL BANK'S DEDUCTION FOR COMPUTER SERVICES

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, ever since the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs tabled its report on bank service charges, my office has been inundated with complaints about bank service charges. What I have decided to do, starting today, is to read into the record letters from Canadians complaining about bank service charges.

Dear Sir;

I noticed on TV news this morning an item on excessive bank charges. Yours was the only name I picked up, other than that of Robert McIntosh, who is paid to support excessive bank charges.

I too am a low income person and have little money in my account with the Royal Bank. To my astonishment they deducted $20. When I asked why, the manager informed me it was for computer services. I hadn't used any computer services at all, except my account number is likely on it. I had no way to fight it. It was just done out of the blue and without any notice to me about it. I felt I was robbed. I was robbed. If one is of low economic resources then it seems we are ripe for picking.

Am enclosing a zerox of deduction.

It is signed Mrs. Georgenna Ferguson, Calgary, Alberta.

WELFARE

EFFECT OF PART-TIME JOBS ON WELFARE PAYMENTS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of would be employers are frustrated and angry when a Canadian refuses a part-time job offer because acceptance would mean their welfare or UIC would be cut off and they would be left high and dry. Why are government policies not flexible enough to permit such people to work part-time without cutting off their entire income? If such Canadians could benefit by a reduction of less than the amount they would earn, a recipient would be ahead and the Government's expenditures would be reduced.

Present policies force Canadians to stay on welfare and UIC as long as their payments permit. No wonder the jobs offered by 42 per cent of the firms belonging to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business remain unfilled.

THE LATE FERNAND SÉGUIN

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to mourn the passing of a great Quebecer and Canadian, a scientist, humanitarian and great communicator, Fernand Séguin. Mr. Séguin gave us years of enthusiastic service. Who does not remember his program Le sel de la semaine? For some of us, the world of science was mysterious and inaccessible, but Mr. Séguin opened the doors for us; he let us into the world of scientists, to understand their ideas and their discussions, even what they were doing. He helped us to explore our own ideas as well and to ponder our origins and our future in a changing world.

In these times when science occupies an important place, both for our comfort and for our security, he gave us a thirst for knowledge.

To his wife and family, I offer my sincerest condolences. It is with great regret that, on behalf of all Quebecers and Canadians, I say to him, "Farewell and thanks."

EMPLOYMENT

WELFARE RECIPIENTS HIRING PROGRAM

Mr. Marcel Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I am proud to have this opportunity to mention a very useful program initiated by this Government to help welfare recipients re-enter the labour market. This job development program enables selected employers to receive federal assistance in hiring workers, which is an essential adjunct to the development of their enterprise and at the same time provides welfare recipients with a substantial salary, increased training and an excellent opportunity for social reintegration.

Mr. Speaker, I may point out here in the House that under this innovative program, seven businesses and organizations in my riding will be offering twenty-five new jobs to welfare recipients, thanks to a contribution of $201,478. It is because Canadians want us to maintain these initiatives that they continue to trust and support us.

EFFECT OF SUBSIDIES ON GRAIN HANDLERS

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the layoff of more than one-third of Thunder Bay's grain handlers earlier this month has renewed concern about wheat exports through the St. Lawrence Seaway.

As many as 600 of Thunder Bay's 1,800 elevator workers lost seniority rights during the slow years 1984-85 and 1985-86. Employment recovered during the record 1986-87 year, and reached 1,300 this spring.

Earlier than usual layoffs this month have combined with very dry prairie weather to arouse fear of crop failure and a slow fall in the elevators. The real problem, however, is a glut of wheat in our traditional markets resulting from subsidies.

Little more than a decade ago the European Economic Community had a grain shortfall of 24 million tonnes. By 1986 high farm support prices had transformed this into a surplus of 14 million tonnes.

The Economic Summit is considering the problem of agricultural subsidies. The European Economic Community spends 80 per cent of its budget on such subsidies.

It is time Governments find other means of maintaining farm incomes in Europe and the U.S. too, than those that lead to hardship for western farmers and Thunder Bay grain handlers.

BY-ELECTIONS

LAC-SAINT-JEAN—PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE'S VICTORY

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, politicos across Canada are wiping at least some egg off their respective faces today as the tight race in yesterday's by-election in the constituency of Lac-Saint-Jean never did materialize. The Secretary of State easily outdistanced his rivals and sent the Hon. Leaders of the Opposition back to the old drawing-board.

The Secretary of State's reputation, ability, and resources should not have been taken lightly. He is an able campaigner who employed a unique system of political contributions—1,500 contributors, no union contributions, no corporate contributions, just the support of the people of Lac-Saint-Jean at the grass roots level.

IMMIGRATION

PRESENCE IN CANADA OF RENAMO INFORMATION CHIEF

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, news that Mr. Francisco Nota Moises, Information Chief of the Mozambican rebel organization Renamo, has been granted asylum in Canada should be of concern to all Canadians. Mr. Moises' presence in Canada once again demonstrates the glaring deficiencies in Canada's immigration and security system.

To allow such an individual into this country, particularly when Mr. Moises' activities for Renamo were widely know, is completely unacceptable. It is obviously high time that the Government got its act together.

In addition, Renamo is a particularly reprehensible group that has been accused of killing 100,000 Mozambican civilians in the last two years, and is responsible for a systematic campaign of rape, torture, and terror in Mozambique.

Renamo is also a proxy army for South Africa in its efforts to destabilize the front line States, particularly Mozambique and its critical alternate railway to the Indian Ocean.

Canada has a policy of support for the front line States. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) would do well to clear this issue up at once lest his position of support for the front line States be made into a laughing-stock.

CULTURAL INDUSTRIES

FORMER MINISTER'S POLICIES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of Communications understood that to develop strong Canadian cultural industries strong legislative measures were needed. He understood that money was not a substitute for policy. It was in that spirit that he introduced the Baie Comeau book publishing policy. He recognized that it was essential that there be Canadian control of publishing.

His film industry task force recommended that there be 100 per cent Canadian control of film distribution and that an end be put to vertical integration between film distributors and film exhibitors.

It is regrettable that the Mulroney-Reagan deal trade has changed those well-founded Canadian objectives. It is time the close encounters this Government has with the Americans become close encounters of another kind. It is too bad that the former Communications Minister isn't still writing the film policy script, for he saw the big picture. His successor is being directed frame by frame by Jack Valenti. As a result, Canada's film industry is being left on the cutting room floor. It's a sham and a shame.

BY-ELECTIONS

ELECTION OF LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, voters in Lac-Saint-Jean elected the Secretary of State, Lucien Bouchard, with a strong majority. This warm, intelligent and sincere gentleman will, together with his colleagues, continue to defend the interests of Quebec. This election is a great victory for the great team of Brian Mulroney who is putting down strong roots in Quebec and is showing great leadership on issues that are extremely important to this country. We are delighted with the support we received from all sides yesterday, both politically and financially.

Yesterday, Broadbent's NDP candidate lost his deposit, Mr. Speaker. The NDP is seeing its hopes fade away in Quebec, and after being the great loser in the federal election, yesterday it was completely swept off the map in two provincial by-elections in Quebec.

As for the federal Liberals, I say to their leader, whose leadership is still being questioned by twenty-two of his Members in the House: Keep dragging your feet on issues that are of great importance to this country: Meech Lake and free trade. I would invite Mr. Turner to come to the boundary of my riding, at Sainte-Marie de Beauce, to tell the people he intends to tear up the free trade agreement!

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

WINNIPEG—NEED FOR FEDERAL FUNDING

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, in Winnipeg there is a program called the Core Area Initiative which is funded by all three levels of government, civic, provincial, and federal. This program has been very effective in funding local community groups and community development activities.

Now with a Conservative Government in office it is dragging its heels with regard to the funding of those local groups. The very existence of some of those groups is threatened. They have been waiting for a decision on their funding since last January, and they need the Government to get off its backside and approve the applications for funding. Some of the groups, for example, the Chilean Information Centre and the Native Youth Centre, do good work in the community and they need the Government to make some decisions and allocate the money.

Do we have to call a by-election in Winnipeg in order to get these groups funded?

BY-ELECTIONS

ELECTION OF LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in 1984, our party, the present Government, had a great plan: to create jobs and reduce unemployment. This plan was based on some key ideas and principles: national reconciliation—i.e., good relations with the provinces—, strengthening international relations, making our country safer through a stronger national defence. So it is no accident that 1,300,000 new jobs were created. Nor is it any accident that the people of Lac-Saint-Jean yesterday voted for the Conservative Government—it is no accident that they elected Lucien Bouchard. He is a very major asset, another plus for our Party, the great team now in power. He will help further improve our relations with the provinces and thereby the status of all Canadian families. I welcome him to our Party.

SMALL BUSINESS

RUSSELL TOWNSHIP, ONT.—BUSINESS INCUBATOR PROPOSAL

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, for a long time the Township of Russell in my constituency has been wanting to establish a business incubator. Unfortunately, it was told recently that there was no program by which it could have a business incubator.

• (1415)

The Rotary Club asked me to intervene on its behalf under the same program that was used in Lac-Saint-Jean so that the community could get the business incubator.

Although no formal application has been forthcoming from my riding yet, I would expect that the funds will be rolling in anyway because, after all, no formal application was ever filled out in Lac-Saint-Jean either. If it is good for one area, then surely it is good for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

BANKS AND BANKING

CLOSURE OF BOY'S $10 ACCOUNT

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Canadian consumers are up in arms over the unjustified service charges being imposed by banks and have now begun to voice publicly their long-standing frustration over this unacceptable situation. One case in particular brought to my attention concerns a 15-year-old boy with a small account containing $10. Without notification, the bank proceeded to levy service charges against the account and then closed it because it considered it an inactive account.

What kind of message is being sent to young people by such actions? Why should they bother to save at all when what little they can put aside is suddenly seized without notice or warning? No one should have to pay a maintenance fee on seldom used accounts. Why should consumers be charged for closing accounts or for the errors banks make?

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has proposed both fair and necessary recommendations to curb bank charges. I urge the Government to take immediate action on these recommendations and to put an end to this institutionalized rip-off of consumers.

THE LATE FERNAND SÉGUIN

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, Quebec and Canada have just lost an eminent journalist, Fernand Séguin. During his 30-year career, Mr. Séguin dominated the field of popular science.

Since television began in Canada, he was the first to initiate us to the world of science, unpretentiously and with warmth.

He was a man of vision who knew that the future would involve both communication and science and he paved the way for the excellent journalists of whom our country is so proud today.

I want us to pay him tribute today in this House.

TRANSPORT

COMPLETION OF MATTE BOULEVARD IN BROSSARD

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, I was very pleased to find out yesterday that decision 1988-R-47 of the National Transport Agency gave the City of Brossard, in my riding, permission to continue construction of Matte Boulevard in its industrial park up to the intersection of the Canadian National Railway right of way. The roads system in the industrial park will thus be greatly improved.

This NTA decision reflects the dynamism of one of the fair cities in my constituency.

Congratulations to the City Council and Mayor Georgette Lepage for their continuing tireless efforts on behalf of my beautiful riding of La Prairie.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—ANNOUNCED DISBANDMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the last spike was driven into the Newfoundland Railway yesterday. The final spike was driven into the coffin of the Newfoundland Railway by this Government yesterday, June 20, 1988.

June 20 was an interesting day. There was a federal by-election with the Prime Minister throwing around taxpayers' money as if there were no tomorrow. As well, the International Economic Summit was taking place in Toronto. Perhaps the Government thought that Newfoundlanders would not pay too much attention to the announced closure of the railway with these other items monopolizing the news. Well, the Government was wrong. Newfoundlanders are outraged with the details of this agreement.

I ask the Minister who made that announcement, the Minister for International Trade, former Minister of Transport, and the real father of this infamous deal, why did the Government of Canada decide to close the Newfoundland Railway before the necessary highway improvements could be made in anticipation of the increased tractor-trailer business?

• (1420)

The Minister knows that, according to the Department of Transport, one eighteen-wheeler tractor-trailor on the Newfoundland highway inflicts as much damage on the highway as do 4,000 automobiles.

Given that this is the worst highway in Canada for 1,000 kilometres, why did the Government decide to close the railway before the highway could be improved?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, how short some persons' memories are. Why, I remember in 1968 when the Liberal Government of the day closed the Newfoundland rail passenger service and there was no compensation for Newfoundland or Newfoundlanders, only a bus service provided.

I am glad to admit to fathership of this concept. It is not the last spike, it is the golden spike that Newfoundland received yesterday—$800 million. I am proud to have achieved that for the province.

The hon. gentleman opposite and his Party voted against $1 billion for Atlantic Canada when they voted against the ACOA legislation at third reading in this House.

The people of Newfoundland are delighted with the $700 million for roads over the next 15 years, an average of $50 million a year. What roads does the hon. gentleman not want proceeded with? Is it the road from Branch to St. Bride's? Is it the twinning of the highway from Deer Lake to Corner Brook that he objects to? Is it the twinning of the Trans-Canada Highway from Donovans to the Argentia overpass? Is it the access road from the Trans-Canada Highway to Argentia?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: More? There is $800 million more; that is why the people of Newfoundland are supporting this 100 per cent.

ASSISTANCE PACKAGE FOR EMPLOYEES

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, according to the Minister's own announcement, the majority of that money to be spent on roads is to be spent as follows: "$35 million each fiscal year from 1995 to the year 2003". The Minister has created a new space odyssey, Space Odyssey 2003. There won't be any roads left in 1990 let alone the year 2003.

Getting back to the agreement, in announcing the assistance package for employees the employees were told that their expenses and severance package will be negotiated between Canadian National and the unions from now until September, 90 days.

Why were the workers not consulted and an agreement reached before the announced closure of the railway?

While the Minister is at it, can he verify that the money for this settlement will not come from the federal Treasury but from the budget of Canadian National? Canadian National is not going to go out of its way to be generous to these employees. What do they do now if they are not happy with the offer? The railway will be closed. Is the Minister saying they can go on strike?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in 1979 there were 1,350 employees of the Newfoundland Railway. When we became the Government of Canada in 1984, 708 of them were gone and there were 642 left under the hon. gentleman.

There are now 642 employees. One hundred and forty will remain working with CN on the road cruiser service and intermodal freight service, 155 are eligible for early retirement, and the other 347 will get a variety of benefits under present collective agreements and special agreements that will be entered into. Forty other employees laid off between 1986 and 1988 will be covered under the same generous arrangements. One hundred and nine employees who are seasonal will get generous assistance as well.

We are going to ensure that this occurs. CN is putting up a $70 million fund to accomplish this. If that is not sufficient it will put forward more.

When the rail passenger service went, honourable donkeys opposite didn't even bray as they are braying today, much less get compensation for anyone.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Government may unrail the Newfoundland Railway but Newfoundlanders are going to derail the Government in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, let me ask this Minister the key question. Why is it that Newfoundland is the only province in Canada which has to give up its railway in order to get some money for road improvements? Why is that, Mr. Speaker?

I am sure that the Hon. Minister knows that when the Prime Minister announced $900 million two weeks ago in Quebec for the by-election he did not say that the road improvements would be done in the year 2000, as this Minister has, or that Quebec would have to give up its railway. If he did, it would be back to Paris for le nouveau MP.

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of record, the Government of Canada entered into a Trans-Canada Highway and roads agreement under ERDA with the Province of Newfoundland in 1985, to the tune of $186 million. That has been increased by $100 million yesterday together with $235 million, 100 per cent federal dollars, for regional roads and $405 million, 100 per cent federal dollars, for the Trans-Canada Highway. Nothing like it has ever occurred in the history of Canada.

Yesterday the hon. gentlemen opposite were "Bouchard-ed" in Québec and "Crosbie-oed" in Newfoundland. They are certainly stung by that because this is the best and most popular move that has been made in the transportation field in this country for any one province since Confederation.

FATAL EXPLOSION AT CFB CHILLIWACK

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. All Canadians have been shocked to learn about the tragic deaths of six bright young officer cadets and the injuries sustained by three other cadets while they were being taught how to deal safely with explosives at CFB Chilliwack.

I am sure all of us in the House at this time want to extend to the parents, to all other members of the families and their friends, our deepest sympathy and condolences on their great loss.

In view of the fact that this is the third explosion at Canadian Forces Bases in the last six months alone, and that it goes without saying these have to be given absolute serious attention, will the Minister give the House and all Canadians a brief interim report at this time with regard to the recent catastrophe at CFB Chilliwack? What action will take place in the wake of this tragedy?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I know that all Members of the House will join the Hon. Member and me in expressing our deepest sympathy to all the families and friends of the victims of this tragic accident. I expect that at three o'clock Members of the House will have a chance to express these sentiments more formally.

However, I can indicate to the Hon. Member that we have asked that a board of inquiry be set up immediately. Training of this nature has been suspended at CFB Chilliwack pending results of that board of inquiry. On the basis of what we have seen to date, there is no evident connection between the other two incidents referred to by the Hon. Member and the tragic incident at CFB Chilliwack.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF BOARDS OF INQUIRY

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, all of us in the House will fully appreciate that the two major issues here are safety and accountability. Not only should thorough inquiries take place, and not only should the results of any investigation be made public through the Minister of National Defence who is responsible for reporting for the Department to this Parliament, surely specific recommendations should also be made at that time.

Canadians want to be assured that effective preventive measures are being followed and that lives are not been endangered unnecessarily. Will the Minister give the House a commitment that any recommendations that come out of the three boards of inquiries into the accidents at CFB Val Cartier, CFB Gagetown, and CFB Chilliwack will be implemented and effectively administered? I am sure he will also be looking for the co-operation and work of the Defence Committee in the House in this regard.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the boards of inquiry in all three cases have the scope and authority to make whatever recommendations they feel are appropriate. Indeed, the whole point in setting up a board of inquiry is to get the appropriate information as to what the cause of an incident of this nature was and what can be done to ensure that it does not take place in the future.

The safety record of the Canadian Forces is exceptionally good, notwithstanding these three tragic incidents. If there is any information or recommendation that comes out of any of these boards of inquiry which could allow us to prevent a repetition of this sort of incident in the future, it will certainly be acted upon.

I can give the House the assurance as well that the results of these boards of inquiry will be made public and that the Canadian Forces will be taking whatever actions are appropriate to ensure that such accidents do not take place in the future to the best of our ability.

BANKS AND BANKING

TORONTO DOMINION BANK—BABYSITTER CHARGED $5 TO CASH CHEQUE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Last week I brought a situation to the attention of the Minister with respect to a branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia which charged a constituent of mine 90 cents for a 50-cent roll of pennies. The Minister offered to investigate. I have another case today for him which was brought to my attention yesterday in my constituency.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: This time it is the Toronto Dominion Bank.

Some Hon. Members: Sh-h-h!

Mr. Broadbent: At least Members on this side of the House are interested in getting fairness out of the banks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: It appears that a Mrs. Meicheldeck—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa has been recognized to put questions and I know Hon. Members would want to give him the appropriate courtesy of listening to his question. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mrs. Meicheldeck lives in Ajax. She gave a cheque to her babysitter on her personal account at a branch that happens to be in Pickering. It was a cheque for $45. When the bank cashed the cheque for the babysitter, it gave the babysitter only $40 saying there would be a $5 service charge on the $45 cheque.

Does the Minister think that a $5 charge on a personal account in which there was money is acceptable to the people of Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks an important question on behalf of, I gather, his constituent. I am very happy to respond to him. I would like to remind him that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, and the Hon. Member for Don Valley East, have all worked very hard on this whole subject.

Mr. Orlikow: What are you doing?

Mr. Hockin: As a result of their fine work, I am very happy to tell the Hon. Member that my report on this matter, and recommendations, will be coming forward the first of next week.

With regard to the specific complaint the Hon. Member has raised, I think the example he has brought forward is absolutely outrageous and I would be very happy to look into it.

POLICY OF FINANCE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Minister, but unfortunately, he said the same thing last week about the Bank of Nova Scotia, and in that situation, the Bank of Nova Scotia announced it did not intend to change its policy.

I would like to ask the Minister whether the Government intends to table legislation in the House of Commons reflecting the policy proposed by the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, a policy that had unanimous support and was suggested by the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough, because if the answer is yes, we intend to give our immediate support to this legislation which is badly needed in Canada.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, as I said last week, we will have someone who can defend the interests of the consumer, and next week we intend to put in place the appropriate mechanisms.

[English]

COMMITTEE'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it is encouraging that the Government is going to act on this matter. The Minister knows that a unanimous report has come in from the committee chaired by a Member on the government side, with support on this side. Is he telling the House that what is included in that Bill, everything that is in that Bill, will be government policy? We hope the answer to that will be yes.

Second, will the Minister be announcing, in any case, a 1-800 number immediately which the people of Canada could call if they have complaints about excessive charges by the banks so they can at last get some justice from our banking system?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to tell the Hon. Member that there are many, many ideas in that report which I will be happy to accept, plus I have some more good ones of my own.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY—ANNOUNCED DISBANDMENT—EFFECT ON NORTH SYDNEY, N. S.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister for International Trade said that CN and Marine Atlantic had assured him that the closure of the Newfoundland Railway would not result in any lay-offs in North Sydney. Yet lay-offs in the area have already begun and CN has said that it is going to be providing a direct route from Halifax to St. John's, and that the markets and frequency and volume of traffic are going to be redefined.

Why is the Government misleading the people in the North Sydney area into believing that the closure of the Newfoundland Railway will not result in any lay-offs in the North Sydney area?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if there is anyone misleading the people in the North Sydney area, it is one of the honourable colleagues of the hon. gentleman, who said 300 people were going to be laid off in the North Sydney area as a result of the closure of the Newfoundland Railway. That is completely unfounded and harmful speculation.

I am advised by CN, for example, that it is still going to operate a rail service to North Sydney, and on the line between Truro and Sydney trains have an average of 80 to 90 cars per day. It estimates that, at the most, this multimodal option might divert 15 to 20 container movements per day to Halifax for St. John's and Avalon Peninsula destinations. That will have to be seen.

In the meantime it is expecting other traffic on that particular line which will more than compensate for any lost traffic there might be to Newfoundland. It is going to operate through Halifax. It is going to operate through North Sydney. It is going to operate to St. John's. It is going to operate eventually to Corner Brook as well as to Port aux Basques. This is what CN has to do to provide an adequate, economic, and efficient multimodal freight service. CN does not expect any lay-offs at Port aux Basques or North Sydney.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ASSURANCE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said previously that the former Government did not offer any compensation. Well, the previous Government did offer compensation for pre-retirement through the Industrial Labour Adjustment Program to workers of Marine Atlantic, both in North Sydney and in Port aux Basques, and this Government refuses to implement such a program, even now, with the facts there, to the people of North Sydney.

Is the Minister prepared to give an assurance, to give a promise, that the railroad will not be closed in Nova Scotia between Truro and Sydney at any time in the indefinite future? Is he also prepared to say there will not be any lay-offs at Canadian National or Marine Atlantic in the indefinite future? If he is not, will he not rethink the policy and provide adequate compensation for the North Sydney area and those who are going to be laid off? At least have the courage to do something for the people.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am going to do exactly what I have done, give the House the information that I am given by CN. Now, there could be lay-offs. It will depend on traffic in the future, traffic patterns in the future. There could be, if there is any lessening in the amount of traffic going across the gulf from North Sydney to Port aux Basques, some lay-offs of Marine Atlantic personnel. That is not planned at the moment and that is certainly not known at the moment.

I repeat, the hon. gentleman should be very careful about what he says. In 1979 and 1980 when his Party came back into office, there were 1,350 persons working for the Newfoundland Railway. When it left office, there were 642. I am not going to make any statements about what might happen in the future. This is the best information we have at the moment.

In the meantime, 600 to 800 jobs a year in the highway construction industry in Newfoundland will be created, with another 300 or 400 jobs for people in associated intermodal services, and the 347 people laid off, who are not entitled to early retirement, are going to get special assistance, special training assistance, and they are going to be entitled to all the benefits of CN's collective agreement, plus a special arrangement in addition to that.

CHARTERED BANKS' SERVICE CHARGES—ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. All last week the banks of Canada ran large ads in all the major newspapers across the country. In these ads there was a graph showing that the median annual cost of a basket of services for clients having a minimum balance of $600 was $28.54 at the banks and $97.78 at trust companies.

The research team that studied this matter for the Finance Committee came up with the figure that a typical consumer spends, which was $100 a year, on routine financial services. It also found that there was little difference between that cost and the cost at trust companies.

In light of the fact that the banks must be spending hundreds of thousands of dollars on these advertisements—obviously the money is being taken from the Mrs. de Gruchy's, the Go-Go Pizzas, and all the average Canadians across Canada—can the Minister undertake to get in touch with his friends over at the Bankers' Association and ask them to cease and desist from this misleading advertising and return the money to the clients of the banks?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a bit late in catching on to this whole issue. Members on this side of the House have been working very hard on this matter for a number of months.

Mr. Riis: Have you talked to the banks?

Mr. Hockin: With regard to this particular advertisement, the basket of charges that the banks used for their ads is a special basket. I do not know whether it is representative of services that the Hon. Member would use or not. However, it is a basket they chose. It may be accurate for that basket. Whether it is accurate for making their point or not, consumers can find out on their own.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS—REQUEST THAT DEPARTMENT INVESTIGATE ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who has a responsibility for misleading advertising under the appropriate legislation.

In light of the fact that this advertisement which the banks have been putting in the papers across the country is very misleading, is the Minister prepared to instruct his investigation team within the Department to look at this advertising with a view to having it withdrawn?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that kind of advocacy advertising does not invite the consumer to purchase a particular product so it does not fall under the ambit of misleading advertising legislation.

However, I am disturbed about the quality of advocacy advertising that I see, particularly that put out by the Hon. Member's friends in CUPW and the CLC.

Mr. Broadbent: But not the banks?

PAROLE

AUDIT OF HALFWAY HOUSES IN METRO TORONTO

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. The Minister will know that this past weekend an 11-year old Brampton boy, Christopher Stephenson, was murdered. An ex-convict on mandatory supervision has been charged with this brutal murder.

As the Minister will know, the same individual had been previously convicted of sexually assaulting an 11-year old Ottawa boy. In light of this most recent tragedy, and concerns for public safety, will the Minister release the results of his audit of halfway houses in the Metro Toronto region and will he take immediate action to put into force the parole reforms which he announced last week?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the House that the Hon. Member for Brampton—Georgetown spoke to me about this matter yesterday. On behalf of all Members of the House I wish to express the sympathy of all here to the family on this tragic incident.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I received the preliminary audit report of the Pepino Commission. That particular report recommended a follow-up audit, which is presently being done. I hope to have it in my hands within the next few weeks.

I can also tell the Hon. Member that I have instructed the new Commissioner of Corrections, on an urgent basis, to address the parole system problem within the Toronto area to prevent tragedies such as this in the future.

TRADE

EXPORT CONTROL POLICY—SALE OF HELICOPTER ENGINES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade in the absence of his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

In recent years we have repeatedly raised in this House questions concerning the loopholes in the export control policy that allow Canadian manufacturers to send military weapons to countries such as Chile, Iran, Iraq, and other places which are engaged either in major war or in repression of their civilian populations. We have received commitments from the Government and from the Secretary of State that the loopholes would be closed and that changes would be made.

We now have a report which is soon to be released by Project Ploughshares which shows that the loopholes continue to exist and that Pratt & Whitney is continuing to send engines for its helicopters to a wide variety of countries engaged in human rights violations or in major wars or civil wars around the globe.

Why is it that the Government has reneged on its commitment to close these loopholes? Why has it not proceeded with a very major change in its export control policy so that Canada will not be an accomplice in major human rights violations and military oppression in these types of conflicts?

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member implied, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has often, both inside the House and on other occasions, explained the Canadian Government's policy on exports. Exports of military engines and engines with strategic technology are governed by the Export Act. As far as we are concerned, the claim that Pratt & Whitney circumvented Canadian law is absolutely false. However, should the Hon. Member have new allegations by Project Plowshares to submit, we should be happy to examine them.

[English]

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand a publication of the Government of Canada entitled "The Canadian Defence Products Guide". It clearly outlines that Pratt & Whitney engage in the manufacture of engines which have dual military purposes. The engine is used in the Cobra airship, which is an airship being used by many air forces in countries which are repressing human rights.

On the one hand we have a Canadian Government which in its own publication advertises the sale of these weapons which are being used in these countries, while on the other hand we have the Minister saying that we are doing all that we can about it.

Why the two-faced policy? Why does the Government not get its act together and either stop advertising these products or do something about closing the loopholes so that we will not be an accomplice in these major crimes against humanity?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, it is a recognized fact that Pratt & Whitney is one of the major suppliers of engines for civilian and military aircraft, and that Canadian legislation on military exports is very strict and on no condition permits the voluntary export of military goods. Of course, it is very difficult to control items imported by a third country. Consequently, as I said before, if the Hon. Member has any new allegations of wrongdoing by Pratt & Whitney, we would be glad to consider them.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Crosbie: All an engine does is move something around.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to—

Mr. Crosbie: It does not have a knife in its hands.

Mr. de Jong: Are you finished?

Mr. Crosbie: Are you?

Mr. de Jong: I just started.

Mr. Crosbie: Get going, then.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—LICENSING OF RAFFERTY AND ALAMEDA DAM PROJECT

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. Yesterday the Deputy Premier of Saskatchewan announced that the Minister has issued the licence for the Rafferty and Alameda dam project. In exchange for this licence the Saskatchewan Government gave in on the French language rights and the Grasslands National Park agreement that was signed in 1981.

We have seen this Minister succumb to the blackmail of Vander Zalm when it came to South Morseby. Now he is succumbing to the blackmail of Devine.

• (1450)

When is the Minister going to stand up to environmental thugs like Vander Zalm and Devine, or is he going to resign?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is totally and utterly false and wrong.

I do not know, Sir, whether you would wish me to dignify the question by answering. I suspect, Sir, if you had the freedom to do so, you would rule the question out of order.

ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT AND REVIEW PROCESS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Minister is not going to stand up to thugs like Vander Zalm and Devine—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, in an earlier answer to a question I posed on April 19 the Minister assured me, and I quote:

> I can tell the Hon. Member, in response to his question, that the Federal Environmental Assessment and Review Process is now being followed.

Was the Minister telling the truth at that time, or did he just not know what he was talking about?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Process applies to projects within federal jurisdiction, on federal Crown land, subject to federal regulation, or in which the federal Government has money.

In this particular case the relevant Hansard quotes me as saying the "Federal Environmental Assessment Review Process". At the time I gave the answer I meant the Saskatchewan Assessment and Review Process. So I stand corrected.

Mr. de Jong: Get off it. What a sell-out. Why don't you resign? What a Minister of the Environment! Shame on you!

CITIZENSHIP

SITUATION OF CANADIAN WOMEN MARRIED TO NON-NATIONALS PRE-1947

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State, the Hon. Member for Lac Saint-Jean, but he is obviously not with us yet. We look forward to welcoming him within the next few days.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: Perhaps the Deputy Prime Minister would be able to respond—

Mr. Rossi: Go back to show business where you belong.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Capilano.

Mrs. Collins: I am sure that other Members of the House will also be concerned about this issue.

We have learned that under the old British Naturalization Act Canadian women who married men who were not British subjects prior to 1947 automatically lost their Canadian citizenship. That is a horrendous situation which obviously needs to be changed.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, what can women do who find themselves in this situation? I am sure there are hundreds of Canadian women who do not even know that they have lost their Canadian citizenship as a result of this. What can they do to retain their citizenship? What can the Government do to remedy this situation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that since the Canada Citizenship Act came into effect on January 1, 1947, married women have had complete authority over their nationality status.

In addition, under the current statute, Part III, the Act of 1977, women who lost their Canadian status, such as the people to whom the Hon. Member referred, can have their citizenship restored simply by advising of their intention to do so.

DISASTERS

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF AIR-INDIA CRASH—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. While the Prime Minister is talking tough about terrorism at the Economic Summit in Toronto, his Government is doing precious little to bring to justice those responsible for the downing of Air-India Flight 182 when 329 lives were lost.

Thursday, June 23rd, will be the third anniversary of the worst mass murder ever in Canadian history. During the last three years the Government has botched and bungled the criminal investigation. There have been false affidavits, erased tapes, mass confusion, but no charges.

Will the Government finally admit that the criminal investigation has come to a standstill? Will it order an immediate public inquiry to look into all aspects of this horrendous and heinous terrorism act, and also to look into the conduct of the Government itself?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the Hon. Member that indeed this has been a very tragic incident. But I do not accept or agree with the premise in his question that this matter has been botched or bungled.

The Royal Canadian Mounted Police has been carrying out an intensive investigation since the incident occurred. At no time have there been less than 50 officers working on the case, and at times up to 250.

The Chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee stated in recent testimony that it would be an error now to become involved or to stop the investigation. We are continuing. We will try to bring these people to justice. I would ask the Hon. Member to have patience.

PUBLIC INQUIRY RALLY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, on numerous occasions over the last three years the Solicitor General assured the House that the criminal investigation was progressing. Here we are three years later and the Citizens' Coalition for Public Inquiry into the Air-India disaster will be meeting on Parliament Hill on Thursday afternoon.

Why do the families of the victims have to go to such lengths in order to achieve justice in this particular case?

Will the Solicitor General be attending that rally on Thursday afternoon? Will he explain to the families of the victims why his Government has given such low priority to this act of terrorism?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, to say the least, I resent the suggestion of the Hon. Member that I or the Government have given this particular horrendous incident a low priority.

I have repeated on many occasions that we have given it an extremely high priority, and we are continuing to do so. This tragedy is not the type of matter with which the Hon. Member should be playing politics.

HIGHWAYS

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY—UPGRADING NEEDED IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I expect the Minister is aware of the fact that the federal Government has agreements with every province except Ontario to provide federal funding to make improvements in their highway systems. Only Ontario, which is responsible for 30 per cent of the Trans-Canada Highway coast-to-coast, has no such agreement.

Has the Minister had an opportunity to consider the request of the Ontario Minister of Transportation to negotiate a federal-provincial agreement for Trans-Canada Highway upgrading in the Province of Ontario through northern Ontario?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the agreements that we have—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard: I am very delighted to hear the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. You had a lesson yesterday, 6,200 votes!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Welcome back.

Mr. Bouchard: I am very pleased to be back in the House, Mr. Speaker.

The agreements that we have for the highways with different provinces have been discussed and signed by different Ministers and different Governments. Some agreements were signed before 1984.

With respect to Ontario, I have not personally had any discussions with the Minister of Transportation for Ontario. When I am requested to meet a provincial Minister about any issue, I always agree to do that. Of course, if the Minister of Transport from Ontario asks for any meeting, I will be very pleased to meet the Minister.

REQUEST THAT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL NEGOTIATIONS BE STARTED

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to encourage the Minister in that. He is well aware of the importance of avoiding any kind of a sense of unfairness among the people of Canada.

May I have the Minister's explicit commitment to take up the request which is on file? I have a number of letters from the Minister. Will he respond actively and get in touch with the Hon. Ed Fulton, the Ontario Minister of Transportation, to begin the negotiating process toward a federal-provincial agreement for funding assistance to the Province of Ontario for the upgrading of the Trans-Canada Highway, that one-quarter of the national system which crosses northern Ontario?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as I just said, I am not at all closed to any discussions with Ontario, but at the federal level we have different agreements with the provinces. These agreements could be about health or about transport, not just roads.

Once again, I am not saying that we will sign an agreement, but I have never said that I would refuse to have discussions. In the meantime, I believe that yesterday there was a very wonderful announcement in Newfoundland about the transportation system in that province. We have an agreement with New Brunswick and one with P.E.I. Once again this Government has the best record in terms of agreements with provinces, and we are not opposed to any other agreements. We deal with the provinces, and we have a lot of proof of that.

Mr. Speaker: I want to ask the Hon. Minister of National Defence to rise to speak briefly to speak on a tragic event which recently occurred, and I think there may be other Hon. Members who will want to respond.

FATAL ACCIDENT AT CFB CHILLIWACK

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank you and my colleagues in the House of Commons for this time. I regret to have to inform the House of the tragic death of six officers in an accidental explosion at Canadian Forces Base Chilliwack, British Columbia. Three other officers were injured in this same accident.

I am sure I speak for all Members of this House as I extend sympathy to the parents, families, and friends of these Canadian Forces members. I share their sense of profound loss in the wake of this terrible tragedy.

At this point there would appear to be nothing which would suggest a relationship to two other recent accidents, the accidental detonation of an old artillery round at CFB Valcartier, Québec, and misdirected mortar rounds at CFB Gagetown, New Brunswick. These two accidents are being addressed in separate boards of inquiry. However, a new board of inquiry is being convened to investigate thoroughly this most recent tragic loss of life. Results of all three inquiries will be made public on completion.

General Paul Manson, Chief of the Defence Staff, has asked Major General Frederick Sutherland, Chief of Personnel Development, to be his personal envoy. General Sutherland will immediately proceed to Chilliwack to represent General Manson as the families and colleagues of these service people recover from this tragic loss.

This latest tragedy is a vivid reminder of the dangers that are present for the men and women who volunteer and train to defend Canada and Canadians. I still hold the conviction that our safety procedures are the best in the world. However, I am directing the Department of National Defence to review these procedures to ensure their continuing refinement in meeting the challenges which increasing technology places on our training system.

I know that all Members of the House and all members of the Canadian Forces join with me in extending sincere condolences to the families of those service people who were killed or injured in this tragic incident.

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) for sending me a copy of his remarks well in advance of his statement. That was appreciated. We join him in extending our sincere condolences and deepest sympathies to the members of the families and to the friends of the bright young people who lost their lives.

I think this brings back to all of us thoughts of youth, their ideals, their goals, their ambitions in life. There are many young people today who have a great desire to have a career in the Canadian Armed Forces, and we join with the Minister in his remarks about having a review of the procedures relating to safety measures within the Department. We know that within the Armed Forces, there are many, many dedicated people, and I am sure that today they are as distraught as we in this House are at the accident that occurred at Chilliwack, B.C.

As a follow-up, I think we have a good opportunity to work together to do some very constructive work. Three inquiries are ongoing now into the three accidents that have been mentioned today, the ones at Gagetown, Valcartier, and Chilliwack, and when these reports come in we will want to take a good look at them together to see what can be done to improve the safety measures dealing with Armed Forces matériel.

The Minister mentioned in his remarks that today's high technology presents greater challenges, and we are aware of that. We must always be prepared for that, and I would hope that as the cadets and the reserves go out for summer training this summer we will bear in mind the need for extra precautions, and that there will be a safe summer of training for the Canadian Armed Forces from here on in.

Once again, we extend our deepest thoughts to the members of the families and pay tribute to the young people who had such high aims and ambitions in life. We wish those other three young people who sustained injuries all the best in their recovery.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I and members of my Party join in expressing sympathy to the families, friends, and comrades of the six young men and women killed in yesterday's tragic accident at CFB Chilliwack. We share the concern for the three injured survivors and offer best wishes for their early recovery.

In times of peace we often forget the dangers that members of our Armed Forces face in the course of their duties. Yesterday's tragedy reminds us of those dangers. It underlines the concern I expressed last Friday when I asked about recent accidents at CFB Gagetown.

Canadians want to know and be assured that their Government is doing everything possible to ensure the safety of our servicemen and women. While military boards of inquiry have been called to investigate these and other accidents, I repeat the call for an additional full and open investigation by an outside investigator. This tragic loss of life demands more than an in-house inquiry.

As all Members of the House join together to extend their sympathy to the families and friends of those who were killed or wounded, I urge the Government to establish this impartial investigation. It may help prevent future tragedies.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my remarks to those of Members who have already spoken about the dreadful accident that occurred at CFB Chilliwack yesterday. I know this base personally. I know the staff and the officers who work at this base, and I know of the pride they take in what happens in training exercises. It is indeed a tragedy that six young people have met an untimely death.

I join with the others who have extended their sympathies to the families of these young people, and we want to pass on our condolences to them. More important, we also want to think in terms of the remainder of the class that is still in training and of the trainers who must train that class and continue on in their exercises. We wish them the very, very best in future.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is a distinct pleasure and privilege, as well as a duty, to rise to introduce this Bill on second reading. It is just as it says, "an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America". It has 153 clauses and 123 pages. The Bill is devoted to doing just that, to implementing the free trade agreement.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that in reaching this stage the negotiations commenced between Canada and the United States to reach this agreement on June 17, 1986, just over two years ago. On October 4, 1987 the elements of this agreement were agreed to by the two contracting parties, the United States and ourselves, and the agreement was signed by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the President of the United States of America on January 3, 1988.

We are not dealing with a piece of legislation or an agreement that contains any unknowns or any major changes to what we have all understood since the agreement was signed, the elements agreed to, and the legal text made available. It has been a two-year process.

I want also just to point out that in the Senate, in the Upper House, in June of 1978 there was a report—of course, the majority was Liberal then, just as it is Liberal now—that urged the Government to consider seriously the option of bilateral free trade. We are not introducing something new or strange or startling to the Senate when our legislation reaches the Senate.

I want to point out that in March, 1982 a Senate committee, chaired by the same chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee as is now chairing that committee, recommended bilateral trade with the United States and dismissed fears about any possible reduction in sovereignty that might be suffered in Canada as a result of such a free trade agreement. I think the same Senator, Senator George Van Roggen, is still the Chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee. These were his recommendations and those of the committee in March of 1982.

I might even point out that on November 5, 1987 a Senate Committee began to study the free trade situation with an order of reference from November to March of 1989. They have met to date 34 times and have heard 71 witnesses. This agreement is not a strange document or an obscure document to our Upper House. There were four days' debate on the elements of the agreement as a result of a motion of Senator Gigantes on October 29, 1987.

As a matter of fact, on May 4, 1988 the Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs of the Senate reported on constitutional jurisdiction pertaining to the free trade agreement and concluded that the Government of Canada had the legislative and constitutional jurisdiction to carry out, to implement, and to pass into law that agreement here in Canada, under our trade and commerce powers, interprovincial and international, as well as other powers given to the Government of Canada by the BNA Act. It was in the House of Commons, that this agreement and this subject has had great consideration.

On October 26, 1987 the House committee started hearings on the elements of the agreement. They heard 158 witnesses in 24 days of testimony. They reported on December 15, 1987. There have been six Opposition Days devoted to this subject in this House, including September 23, 1987 when the Leader of the New Democratic Party proposed that Canada walk away—a very peculiar proposal—from the trade deal.

On October 26, 1987 the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) proposed that the agreement be torn up. It was the most feeble, the silliest, the most supercilious, the most damaging suggestion ever made by the Leader of a national Party in our history, that a major international agreement be torn up, and that he, if he got the chance himself, would tear it up, it is shows such an abysmal lack of information about this agreement. The hon. gentleman wants to engage in a feat of strength, attempting to tear up this Bill and all additions to it, which have a height of about this; Charles Atlas himself could not tear it up.

The facts are that if this agreement is implemented by this Parliament and by the U.S. Congress, under the terms of the agreement only a six-month notice needs to be given by either one of the contracting parties to result in the cancellation and the ending of the agreement anyway.

If the hon. gentleman, God forbid, is ever in a position to carry out his threats, he won't have to tear it up; he will just give a six-month notice, and of course the American President will give him a one-year notice under the terms of the U.S. Auto Pact that he is terminating the U.S. Auto Pact.

It will be a pretty close race to see who tears up what the quickest if either one of these "tear them up kids" gets into power in the next election, which is highly unlikely.

That is just some background, Mr. Speaker, to show you we are not dealing here with something new, something of first impression, something that has to be looked at in great detail for a great length of time. As a matter of fact, in getting to this position we have had day after day of negative obstructionism on behalf of the New Democratic Party, in a display of anti-democratic action carried to ludicrous extremes.

With the start of second reading today our country and our citizens move one step closer to the economic benefits that we will realize through this more secure and enhanced access to the largest market in the world, which is the U.S. market.

We are acting in the national interest, as is shown by the broad degree of provincial-government support—we have eight of the ten provinces—and public support for this free trade agreement across the country. The results of carrying this agreement into effect will be, over time, lower consumer prices, additional new jobs, real income gains realized in each region of the country.

This is one of the few pieces of legislation where we can say that every region of the country is going to benefit, Mr. Speaker, as a direct result of this agreement. There have been studies by the Department of Finance. There have been studies by the Howe Institute. There have been studies by a western group by the name of the Canada West Foundation. Independent institute after institute have studied the agreement, and all have come to the same kind of conclusions.

I won't go into the details, Mr. Speaker, of all of that. There has been great detail in all of these studies.

Business investment will go up. Canadian exports will increase. Our total Canadian manufacturing output will increase. There will be a net gain of jobs by Canadians.

I am not going to engage in the debate on how great a net gain—is it 120,000, is it 180,000, or whatever? Everyone is agreed that there is going to be a net gain in new Canadian jobs in the next two years as a result of this action that we are starting to take today. This is confirmed, of course, by studies made by the Economic Council of Canada.

What we are doing in this Bill is approving the agreement and amending such Canadian laws as are necessary to meet our obligations under the agreement.

As an example, Mr. Speaker, the Special Import Measures Act is amended to provide for binding dispute settlement in countervail and anti-dumping cases. In all, 27 federal statutes are amended.

To implement the free trade agreement only one change is needed that normally comes under provincial jurisdiction, namely, the listings and mark-ups for American wine and liquor. The Government of Canada continues to hope that those provinces whose wine and liquor practices do not conform to the agreement will make this needed change themselves.

Of course the Province of Quebec has made it plain that they, for their part, will do this, that they intend to do this, and that they are going to do it.

We will only need to use any powers which we ask the House to give us in Clause 6 or Clause 9 of the agreement if a province absolutely refuses to make any change in listings, mark-up practices, and the like. This would not only be contrary to The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement but has already been found contrary, to the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade which the opposition Parties say they support as they believe in the multilateral trading system. If that is the case, I hope they will urge the Province of Ontario to observe the finding of the GATT panel that their practices with respect to mark-ups, listings, and the like for wines and liquors are contrary to the GATT and have to be changed.

We will only act in that area if the province itself refuses to act. We have been told, of course, by the Province of Ontario that it will refuse. I hope that it is ready to reconsider that.

The Bill provides for the making of federal regulations to bring listings and mark-ups for wine and liquor into conformity with the free trade agreement if this is necessary in order to implement fully the agreement by December 31, 1988. We are confident that this is within the power of the federal Parliament. We are prepared to put it to the test if anyone wishes to. The judiciary will settle these disagreements if they cannot be settled by the parties to them.

Negotiation of the agreement involved the most extensive consultations for any international trade agreement in Canadian history. In addition to the listing I have already given you, Mr. Speaker, there were quarterly meetings of First Ministers and over 150 meetings between federal and provincial representatives over this two-year period.

Let us compare that with the negotiations of the Auto Pact about which we hear so much. None of that took place in those negotiations, and the NDP adherents to the union movement opposed it for the most part, of course, although they now support the status quo. They want no change in anything.

Let us consider the situation in 1946 when MacKenzie King, then Prime Minister, had free trade negotiated with the United States in dead secrecy for months. No one in the Cabinet was privy to these negotiations, only MacKenzie King and the officials he appointed. Finally he consulted about the free trade deal which he had by then just about concluded with the U.S. Who did he consult with? I am told he consulted with his mother and she had been dead for something like 20 years. That was the only consultation which took place before MacKenzie King decided against free trade with the United States. Having initiated the negotiations and having had them conducted for six or eight months in total secrecy, he decided he was not going to go ahead with it.

We have consulted closely with the provinces in negotiating this agreement. My colleague, the President of Treasury Board (Miss Carney), with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) coming in at the end, and Simon Reisman did a great job for Canada. They along with Mr. Gordon Ritchie, the Deputy Ambassador, negotiated the agreement on which we are going to work co-operatively with the provinces to implement and administer. I have written to the premiers outlining how we propose to do that.

Parliament now has this Bill before it. Parliament has the right to debate this legislation and also has the right, after due deliberation, to decide on it. The minority in Parliament cannot deny that right to the majority.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I have described the process and said that we have now had the full legal text since last December. The Bill contains no surprises. It sets out in legal language the obligations set out in the agreement.

The Bill before us now has one central issue. We have to decide one main point: do we approve the free trade agreement and therefore want to implement all of the obligations of the free trade agreement, or do we reject the agreement? This is not a case in which Parliament can pick and choose among pieces of the Bill. You're either for it or against it. We're for it, and we're going to put that to the Canadian people this year or next year. Those who are against it can creep out of their corners into the open and we will see who has the popular side of this argument. You can vote yes to the free trade agreement or no to the free trade agreement, but you cannot continue weaseling. You cannot say you are for free trade but against this agreement. You're for it or against it. You have a backbone or you haven't. You have to stand up and be counted.

Why is free trade with the U.S. so important to Canada? Why should we be concerned about the rules of the game for our exports to the U.S.? Our trade figures tell the story. We are one of the most export oriented countries in the industrialized world. About 25 per cent of our wealth, our GNP, and more than three million jobs arise from exports.

In 1987, 76 per cent of those exports, over $90 billion worth, went to the United States. That is why we are introducing this legislation today. That is why we want to save the Canadian people and give them an assured future by assuring that market in the United States. If anything goes wrong with our trade relationship with the United States, we stand to lose 25 per cent of our wealth.

I want hon. gentlemen opposite to explain that to the Canadian public when they tell them why they are against this agreement. They want to endanger one-quarter of all the wealth generated in Canada every year with their weaseling ways and silly questions in the House every day. They ask about what this Congressman and that Senator have been introducing when the only protection Canadians have against that is before them now. They want to sabotage that even though every day they pretend to be concerned about the protectionism in the U.S., yet they vote against the only protection we have against the very menaces they bring up every day.

All provinces depend heavily on exports to the U.S. In Atlantic Canada over two-thirds of exports went to the U.S. in 1986; 65 per cent in Newfoundland, to a high of 71 per cent in Nova Scotia. In Quebec 76 per cent of all exports went to the U.S., $2,280 per capita or over 13 per cent of its GDP. In British Columbia 46 per cent of exports went to the U.S., $7.2 billion worth or $2,471 per capita. In the prairie provinces 63 per cent of exports went to the U.S.; 44 per cent of Saskatchewan's, 56 per cent of Manitoba's, and 73 per cent of Alberta's, with an average per capita value of $2,782.

Note well, Mr. Speaker, that in Ontario 89 per cent of exports went to the U.S., $5,646 for each person in Ontario, accounting for over 27 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product of Ontario. Of all the wealth generated in Ontario every year, over a quarter of it, 27 per cent, comes from exports to the U.S. It is the Government of this province which is against the free trade agreement, which wanted to sabotage it by not agreeing to the wine and liquor listing changes and by other patterns of conduct we have seen. That is completely inexplicable from the province which has the most to gain from this agreement.

Continued access to the U.S. market for what we produce in all parts of Canada is critical. Newfoundland plus P.E.I. plus Nova Scotia plus New Brunswick plus Québec plus Ontario and Manitoba plus Saskatchewan, Alberta, British Columbia, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, plus free trade with the United States will make for a more prosperous Canada. I invite Hon. Members sitting opposite to realize that today, to join us in supporting this Bill, and to whistle it through without any more hesitation or attempts at sabotage.

What threatens this prosperity? It is threatened by U.S. protectionism. The people who work in our resource industries know about U.S. protectionism from the safeguard actions against cedar shakes and shingles and the countervail case against softwood lumber. American trade lawyers believe that both the safeguards actions on shakes and shingles and the softwood lumber countervail cases would have been decided differently had the free trade agreement been in place. Better still, the U.S. sponsors of those trade actions might well have been discouraged from bringing those trade actions in the first place had we had The Canada-U.S. FTA.

Therefore, one form which U.S. protectionism can take is politically inspired distortion of trade remedy law. Another form is direct limitation of trade as proposed in earlier versions of the U.S. omnibus trade bill which I do not have time to go into now. That, of course, is on the boards again with some changes and will have to be dealt with if it becomes law. If it becomes law, the free trade agreement will be more crucial than ever to shielding Canada from recurrent American protectionism.

As our ambassador to Washington, Allan Gotlieb, who has done a splendid job, has said:

> (The FTA) is intended to address deep and persistent protectionist forces at work in the United States.
> To counter the influence of declining industries in the U.S. system, it encourages long-term solutions rather than short- term fixes.

We are after long term solutions here. I congratulate Ambassador Gotlieb. He has done a splendid five year's work for his country, in the highest traditions of the Canadian diplomatic service. A grateful House of Commons and a grateful public should make sure that is realized.

• (1530)

This agreement is about long term solutions based on reciprocal principles, not raw political power, to give Canadian businesses secure access to the U.S. market. We cannot base it on raw political power because we do not have it. It must be based on reciprocal principles. The threat of American protectionism is one reason for free trade.

Another reason, just as important, is to reduce existing trade barriers so that we create new opportunities for Canadian industry. That is why we are having a conference in Saskatoon today. That is why there will be 17 more between now and the middle of July, so that Canadians will learn what the new opportunities are for Canadian business in the United States under The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. What is why our trade commissioners and our personnel will be there.

We are doing studies to develop where the opportunities will be under this new regime. We must tell Canadian businesses, including small, large and medium, and any other Canadian who is interested, how to take advantage of those opportunities. What is the good of creating new opportunities for Canadian business if we do not then tell Canadian business where the opportunities lie? That is why we are spending what is in my opinion a puny sum of $10 million, to make sure they understand where those opportunities are. All Members of the House are invited to St. John's on July 6. We will show you how to put on a free trade seminar.

This is important for our resource industries because tariffs have been quite prejudicial to our ability to process raw materials here. This was testified to by Mr. William MacNess who is now Dean of the Faculty of Management of the University of Manitoba. He points out that we are allowed to ship raw resources duty free but the more value one adds the higher the tariffs.

In energy, forest products and metals, the American tariff system encourages Canadians to sell their raw resources for refining there, then buy them back in the finished form. While about 80 per cent of our exports enter the U.S. duty-free, scores of products face a mark-up high enough to make them uncompetitive. We are now making the other 20 per cent of Canada's exports competitive in the United States.

The fishery is another industry which will adapt to the new structure like a duck to water. The duty on processed seafood like fish sticks, prepared meals and other value added products, ranges from 10 per cent to 20 per cent. That is why Vic Young, President of Fisheries Products International, said:

> At the moment Canadian seafood companies have been forced through a series of trade barriers to build secondary processing plants in the United States to add value to Canadian fish products. With the reduction of tariffs on such products over the next several years, there is little doubt that we will see a growth in the market for Canadian fish products and an increase in the production of these products in Atlantic Canada.

In other words, free trade will mean an increase in employment opportunities in the Atlantic Canada fishery. That is why the Atlantic Provinces support this, with the exception of Premier Ghiz of Prince Edward Island who apparently is fixated with the energy thesis he did some years ago, and supports the old national energy policy.

The third major reason for the free trade agreement is the positive effect of our having secure access to a combined North American market of almost 275 million people. We are the only major industrialized country in the world that does not have secure access to a market of at least 100 million people. We cannot depend on our own small Canadian domestic market of 25 million or 26 million people if we are going to have growth and diversification of manufacturing services and technology.

Greater specialization with longer, lower cost production runs will strengthen our position in our own market, the U.S. market and in global markets. That is why I expect the hon. gentleman to have a conversion today when he finishes listening to me.

Those who say Canada should choose the Pacific Rim or Europe instead of the U.S. as our target market are wrong. We do not have to choose one over the other. That is why the Liberal policy is so silly, stupid, supine and ignorant of all the lessons of the past. We do not have to choose. There was the pitiful Liberal alternative last week. Now they are not going to have a free trade agreement with the U.S. at all. As the Economic Council of Canada has stated:

> Many believe that freer trade and expanded trade with the United States precludes expanded trade with other countries. There is no logical basis for this view. In fact, expansion of our export sector to serve U.S. customers could well facilitate the economies of scale needed to reach more distant markets.

In other words, free trade with the United States will help Canadian business reach the Pacific Rim and European markets. It will help attract more investment in Canadian facilities to serve the North American market, because with our agreement, clear access to the American market does not mean having to locate in the United States. One can locate here in Canada and investment will give similar access. This is critical in investment decisions where the target is the North American market, not not just the Canadian market.

We are not putting all our eggs in one basket. In 1985 we started two sets of trade negotiations, bilaterally with the United States, a success, and multilaterally under the GATT. We are still in that process. The mid term conference will be held in Montreal in December. We want to achieve new trade opportunities for Canadians both bilaterally and multilaterally.

The Liberal Opposition said that we should have confined the trade initiatives to the multilateral trade negotiations. That is a senseless statement. Even if everything goes wonderfully in the multilateral trade negotiations, and it is not, can we afford to wait the years needed to complete those negotiations to find out? What if the multilateral trade negotiations founder on the issue of agricultural subsidies or access for manufactured goods to the Japanese market? How then will we be helping our trade relations with the United States?

I remind the House that every concession granted by the U.S. to Canada in the multilateral negotiations would have to be paid for by Canada but would then be extended by the U.S. to all other countries. There is no realistic prospect that the multilateral trade negotiations could have given rise to the comprehensive scope of our bilateral agreement with the United States.

Furthermore, the free trade agreement strengthens our position vis-à-vis other countries within the multilateral trade negotiations. With access secure to our major market in the United States, we can turn our full attention to bringing down barriers erected by other important trading partners like Europe, Japan and newly developed countries on the Pacific Rim.

We do not know what will be the results of the multilateral trade negotiations for several more years. We have the results of the Canada-U.S. negotiations before us today for the approval of Parliament. The best thing Hon. Members could do for this country is to pass this today and not wait for any further obstruction or delay.

The question Canadians should be asking is: Are we better off with or without the free trade agreement? The answer from Canadian business, the people who will have to compete, is clear. Small business representatives support the free trade agreement. Big business supports the free trade agreement. Resource producers support the free trade agreement. Manufacturers support the free trade agreement. Almost everyone in Canada who produces and exports supports the free trade agreement. Is there any need for any other character witnesses to the free trade agreement? Of course not.

There are those industries and individuals who will have to adjust to the increased competition from the United States. In addition to the phasing in of tariff reductions, in many cases over 10 years, there will be a complete array of programs to assist them in this adjustment. Many of those programs exist within the Department of Regional and Industrial Expansion and the Department of Employment and Immigration. For particular groups like grape growers and wine producers, a special adjustment program will be announced soon. To ensure that adjustment needs are met, an advisory council on adjustment was appointed, headed by Mr. de Grandpré, with business, labour and academic representatives to ensure that no gaps or inequities remain in that adjustment picture.

Over all, here is what Donald Macdonald, former Liberal Minister of Finance and Chairman of the Royal Commission on Canada's Economy, had to say:

> The free trade pact ... is the beginning of a golden era for Canadian businesses and workers ... Canadian businesses and workers now have an opportunity to crack the huge U.S. market, free from the protectionism other world traders will confront.

Donald Macdonald is a patriotic Canadian citizen. He said he is not going to run for the Liberal Party in the next election, he is not going to support it, because of its twisted policy of being against this vital, central economic policy we are asking the House to approve today.

Another patriotic Liberal, of course, is Mr. Gerald Regan, former Premier of Nova Scotia, former Minister for International Trade. He said in an interview on April 10, 1988, with CTV-CJOH, and I refer to page 12 of that interview: "There is a large amount of support for free trade at all levels of the Liberal Party". He referred specifically to Ed Lumley, Don Macdonald, Don Johnston, those people who held economic portfolios and responsibility, and people like Dr. Evans, who was a Parliamentary Secretary. They are all supportive of the free trade. In other words, the people in the Liberal Party who knew anything are for free trade. The no-nothings left, the remnants left in the House, are against it. What a testimony to the situation.

Mr. Regan was asked: "If you were a Maritime Premier again, you would be for it?" Gerry Regan, Premier of Nova Scotia for seven or eight years, answered: "Whole heartedly. I think it is the best way of combating regional economic disparity that I can think of because Nova Scotia can do very, very well in that sort of regime". That is the kind of testimonial we have for the free trade agreement. Not just from the scared or the ideological, or from those who have a bitter desire to get back into power or edge somebody else out, but from the people who are now in the position to be impartial and objective.

What about free trade with respect to the New Democratic Party? The Liberals say they want to tear it up. The New Democratic Party wants to tear it down. Why? For ideological reasons. The NDP is against changes in the status quo. The New Democrats are now the fat cats of the status quo and we Progressive Conservatives are the revolutionaries of Canada.

The New Democrats oppose free trade. They want Canadian industries to displace imports in our domestic market, a form of protectionism that would make Canada into an economic backwater producing over priced and out-of-date goods. The New Democrats do not recognize the creation dynamism of entrepreneurship in open markets. Their thinking is the thinking of Clement Attlee of 1945. That is where they are, back 43 years ago, struggling to come out of World War II. That is where their minds are.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party represents the district of Oshawa. He is fat cat No. 1. No unemployment, $8 billion in U.S. money invested in Oshawa by General Motors over the last 10 years. He is satisfied, but he does not want to let those benefits go to other Canadians. It is all right in Ontario, but forget it in Alberta, forget it in Quebec and forget it in Newfoundland. What is good for the Oshawa goose is no good for the Canadian gander. That is the slogan of the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party from Oshawa.

The Liberals said they favour free trade, but they oppose this agreement. They now say they are against any agreement. What is the reason? One of the things they say is that we did not achieve a complete exemption from U.S. trade remedy law. That is like saying that you married someone and you are going to tear her up because she did not turn out to be completely perfect. I am one of the few lucky enough to have married a woman who is completely perfect, but from what I have seen, that is not the experience of most. Are we to boot them out, kick them out, have nothing to do with them, because they are not perfection? The argument that the Liberals will be against the FTA because it is not perfect really does not ring too well. Nothing in life is perfect, Mr. Speaker, believe me. Nothing is perfect. Not even being Minister for International Trade is perfection. Frankly, I am getting a bit fed up with it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: You just joined the majority of Canadians. They share your view.

Mr. Crosbie: It's a majority view. The Liberals say that Canada did not achieve a complete exemption from U.S. trade remedy law. We would love to have done that but we could not achieve it. We still have the chance to achieve it in countervail and subsidies over the next five to seven years. But we have achieved two dispute settlement mechanisms of very great value to Canada. The first dispute settlement mechanism is the compulsory review by the Joint Trade Commission, whenever there are amendments proposed to the U.S. Trade Law. If Congress proceeds with a new Trade Law against the recommendation of that commission, it applies to Canada only if we are specifically named in the legislation. Otherwise it applies to the rest of the world and not Canada. That is a great step forward.

The second dispute settlement mechanism relates to the application of the rules for trade in specific cases. A Canada-U.S. panel will give fully binding rulings on the application of trade law for countervail, anti-dumping and safeguard cases. What is giving us the trouble is the unfair application of countervail law, not just the content of the law itself. That, for example, led to the difficulties we had with the softwood lumber decision. We now have something uniquely beneficial for Canadians, a means to reduce greatly, even if we cannot eliminate, the threat of U.S. protectionism.

I mention those who want to tear up the deal and how they go on every day complaining in Question Period, and the inconsistencies of all these complaints. When a solution comes along, perhaps not a perfect one, they are against the solution. All they want to do is knock the Government. Apparently, they do not want to help Canadians.

The NDP just want to complain here every day about U.S. protectionist impulses and then when along comes someone with a helpful solution, they are going to knock the solution. The New Democrats are going to stop the House from functioning. They are not going to let us have a vote. They are going to align themselves with the Senate. The NDP aligning itself with the Senate. What a disgraceful exhibition, the NDP and the Senate together.

Some Hon. Members: Shameful.

Mr. Crosbie: When you vote against this legislation, you vote to abolish the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission, you vote to abolish the binational trade courts, you vote to abolish the Canada-U.S. group working to replace our trade laws with shared rules for bilateral commerce, you are voting to trigger the reimposition of U.S. tariffs and you are voting to drive away Canadian and foreign investment intended to serve the U.S. market from production facilities in Canada. That is what you are doing if you vote against this.

Doing all this would place Canadian businesses and employees at the mercy of U.S. protectionist sentiment. How this can be said to help Canadians, I fail to understand. I have never heard a member of the Opposition explain yet how that could be the case.

As for Canadian businesses that have borne the brunt of trade law harassment in the U.S., they strongly support the dispute settlement provisions of the agreement. For example, Gordon Cummings, President of National Sea Products Limited, said:

> The most important aspect to us was the dispute settlement mechanism and we got that. It is a hell of a gain for Canada . . . As it stands now, we cannot get fair treatment in the United States. The binational trade panel will bring a more sane approach from the United States . . . This is a straight win situation for us.

Gordon Cummings from Halifax leads the Great National Sea Products Company and National Sea and Fishery Products. Those two great Canadian fishery companies both strongly support this.

What about the Auto Pact? Some people in Ontario have been weeping and wailing that the auto industry in Canada has been done a dirty deal. That is not so. The Auto Pact safeguards remain in place and the Canadian auto parts industry has been given new opportunities for expansion. Albert Matthews, a Vice-President of Ford Motor Company of Canada said in January in London, Ontario:

> Free trade will act as an incentive to foreign owned car plants in Canada to buy more Canadian parts and materials to qualify for duty free shipments into the U.S . . .
> It's the Canadian parts makers who will see the most dramatic benefits of free trade. Without a free trade agreement, the foreign companies can continue to assemble, in Canada, parts and sub-assemblies that are designed and largely manufactured overseas—the alternative is that they continue to get a free ride at the expense of those Canadian companies.

That is the proper analysis of the effect on the auto parts industry. The Government is confident that the Canadian auto parts industry will prosper by the changes requiring higher North American content. In 1982, Canadian parts manufacturers had 8.9 per cent of the North American market. In 1986, that had grown to 13 per cent. The free trade agreement gives new opportunities for continued growth in the Canadian auto parts industry.

Another point opposition Members consistently overlook is that the Auto Pact, now incorporated in the free trade agreement, is better protected from attack by interests in the northern U.S. Those interests want to have not free trade in automobiles and parts, but managed trade, so as to transfer benefits to the northern U.S. and deprive Canadians of the jobs they have now by virtue of their productivity and their high standard of workmanship. The Liberals and the New Democrats say that they do not like more liberalized U.S. investment in Canada, but all existing Canadian ownership requirements remain in place, the exception of the threshold for takeovers having been raised.

Controls on investment will still cover Canada's 500 largest firms controlling 87 per cent of assets in Canada. If they want to go back to the Foreign Investment Review Agency, then let them clearly say so. They will join the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. de Corneille) who will not be back after the next election. More's the pity, he was scuppered, but that is what happens in the Liberal Party. One gets scuppered and nobody puts out a hand to succour one in the Liberal Party.

I am nearing the end of my time, thus I have to skip some of my speech. I was going to mention that the Liberals and the New Democrats say that they do not like Canada getting secure energy markets in the U.S. in return for giving some security of energy supply for Americans, including a proportionately reduced share of production in the case of shortage. But the Liberals had agreed through the International Energy Agency to export more petroleum to the U.S. in the case of shortage. What the energy component of the free trade agreement really does is to piece together longer term reliance on market forces. If the Hon. gentlemen opposite want to go back to the National Energy Program, then let them tell the world. Let us all in on the secret.

This national free trade debate is not a contest between those who count and tally, plain men of business, in favour of the agreement against those of larger vision, of more profound appreciation of what it means to be Canadian, which is what the opponents like to pretend. The larger vision, the more profound appreciation among those who support free trade is of a coming of age in Canada, a maturing of confidence in our ability to make our way in the world.

Mr. Speaker, I notice that you are poised. Do Hon. gentlemen mind if I take another few minutes to conclude?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will try to end my remarks in two minutes.

This confidence has two parts. One relates to culture and sovereignty. The other relates to commercial competitiveness. First, let me speak about culture and sovereignty.

Cultural industries are essentially exempted from the deal. Our ability and our commitment to support them remains unchanged by the FTA.

With respect to sovereignty, to mention it shows how silly it is.

Mr. McCurdy: Sovereignty is silly?

Mr. Crosbie: We have a dozen free trade blocs around the world. No one has lost their sovereignty. We have the European community. no one in the European community has lost their sovereignty. It is far more than a free trade association. France has not lost its sovereignty. The United Kingdom has not lost it. Even Luxembourg has not lost it. Belgium has not lost it. There is nobody who will lose their sovereignty. As Gerry Regan said in Halifax in December:

> I regard arguments to the effect that Canada will lose its culture, its sovereignty or its social welfare system as a result of this kind of pact as downright silly.

That great Canadian artist, Christopher Pratt, said that the "nationalistic, chauvinistic posturing" of free trade critics is "unproductive and hypocritical". He is not afraid that Canadians will lose their cultural identity. Nor should any confident Canadian be. In Newfoundland we are confident. Our artists are confident. Our musicians are confident. Our publishers are confident. Our writers are confident. Newfoundland culture has never been stronger and more vibrant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We did not just enter into a free trade agreement with you buckos in 1949; we joined lock, stock and barrel. We have never been stronger culturally than we are now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: One minute.

Mr. Crosbie: The arguments about cultural identity and political sovereignty are appeals to emotion born in confusion and fostered by lack of confidence in the maturity and stability of Canadian society. That is what is demonstrated by the antes.

The other emotional argument offered up against free trade also discloses a lack of confidence in Canadians, something which says that Canadians cannot hack it. As the Leader of the Opposition said in Moncton in December:

> If the FTA is going to open up market forces completely without an attempt to build a nation and maintain a nation, the stronger market centres, like Ontario, like Quebec, will profit at the expense of Atlantic Canada.

That is what happened in 1867. The FTA now gives Atlantic Canada a chance to break its bonds and to start exporting to the United States without tariff impediments. Again, this is a great chance for Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Langdon: That is far more than two minutes.

Mr. Crosbie: We will continue to build on our social values such as medicare, our cultural values, and our uniquely Canadian goals such as official bilingualism. We preserved our agricultural marketing boards and supply management, which will not be compromised in the free trade agreement.

In ending, let me say this. For those in the NDP or the Liberal Party who share some kind of dark fantasy of political and cultural domination by the United States, no rational argument will succeed, no statement of the facts will persuade them. Sir Wilfrid Laurier said of those who claimed in 1907 that free trade would make us into Americans that they were "freaks of unreasoning panic". This is true today in 1988. The opponents of the free trade agreement are freaks of unreasoning panic. Look at them panicking over across the House.

Mr. Harris: He was talking about the Conservatives then, was he not?

Mr. Crosbie: I agree in one respect with the Opposition about this issue. This issue is not about business, nor is it about patriotism. It is about the future of our country. The choices are clearly drawn. While there may be three federal Parties, there are only two choices open to Canadians. On one side there is an alliance between the Turner Liberals who believe that somehow they can stand still in time, and the NDP who seek economic isolationism in a regulated society—the NDP, the Neanderthal Dinosaur Party of the status quo. On the other side are those who believe that when the tariffs come off Canada can compete and win, those who know that Canada must compete.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We must move ahead or we will fall behind. We cannot stand still. We Progressive Conservatives face the world with pride and confidence in Canada. On one side it is tear it up or tear it down with no alternative. On our side it is creativity, conciliation, caring and constructive Conservatism preparing Canada for a brighter tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, listening to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) reminds me of the old saying that when one is in a fight with a skunk, remember that it only has one weapon. In that regard we should take five minutes to clear the air in the House.

The fact of the matter is that we have to ask ourselves what is the purpose of this debate. We did not find out from the Minister. He was too busy tripping over his tongue to really tell us what the Conservative Party is attempting to achieve in what we all admit is a very historic, very important, very crucial debate in the House of Commons.

The Minister for International Trade ended off his remarks with a quote from Mr. Laurier. I would like to begin my remarks with another from a more thoughtful Leader of our Party, Mr. Edward Blake, who wrote to his constituents—I see that the Minister does not want to listen to the other side of the case, unfortunately.

In 1891 Mr. Blake wrote to his constituents in West Durham the following words:

> Whatever you or I may think on—whether we like or dislike, believe or disbelieve in political union, must we not agree that the subject is one of great moment, towards the practical settlement of which we should take no serious step without reflection, or in ignorance of what we are doing?

He said:

> Assuming that—free trade with the States, best describes commercial union, may and ought to come, I believe that it can and should come only as an incident, or at any rate as well—understood precursor of political, union for which, indeed, we should be able to make better terms before than after the surrender of our commercial independence.
> Then so believing—believing that the decision of the trade question involves that of the Constitution issue, for which we are unprepared and with which you do not even conceive yourselves to be deciding—how can I properly recommend you how to decide of commercial union?

In 1891 Mr. Blake had it correct. There was one very simple, clear, basic issue dealing with this debate, and that was the question of ultimate political union with the United States. That is what the issue and the real debate is all about. That is why the country is torn and divided, and so many Canadians feel anguished and anxious. They recognize that the step that has been initiated by the Government is the precursor to political union with the United States.

It has to do with the fundamentally different view of what Canada is and the vision we have, and whether we want to continue in the historical mission of Canadians, which is to carve out of the North American continent a northern region which has its own values, institutions, market-place, commerce, and its own way of doing things, or whether we want to allow, step-by-step, the integration of Canadians within their southern neighbour.

By the way, Mr. Blake's letter was instrumental in defeating the proposal in 1911. When the Minister for International Trade calls those who opposed the matter of 1911 "freaks of unreasoning panic", he was referring to members of the Conservative Party who opposed it at that time, as well as a large number of Liberals who also opposed it at that time. He forgets history very quickly.

In 1911 Canadian voters understood what the issue was all about. They understood that we were debating the independence of Canada. In 1946 the Liberal Government understood what the issue was about when it rejected that initiative. In 1972 when the same initiative was presented, the Trudeau Government understood what the issue of independence was about, because it also rejected it. In fact, a number of prominent Conservatives once understood what the issue was about.

In 1979 the then Leader of the Opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), stated on the question of free trade with the United States: "Free trade with the United States is like sleeping with an elephant". He could have used another euphemism: "When the lamb and the lion sleep together, the lamb does not get much sleep". That is the type of problem we face. He also stated: "Canadian plants would not be able to compete. Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911, and they will do it again in 1983".

When presented with proposals on free trade put forward by his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) stated: "Presented as they are I find his proposals dangerous". The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated:

"Talk of bilateral free trade strikes me as simplistic and naive". I could go on, Mr. Speaker, and read the testimony of a whole range of prominent Conservatives who, at that point in time, were dead set against the whole notion.

There was one who was consistent, the Minister for International Trade. There is no doubt that the Member for St. John's West has been consistent right back to 1949 when he and his family fought against Newfoundland joining the Canadian union and fought instead for Newfoundland joining the United States. For 40 years he and his family have been consistent in attempting to have an integration, a union, with the country south of us. The Minister for International Trade is consistent to this very day. He understands the consequences. He knows what he is doing. When he rises, forget the blarney, knows what he is after. He is after the same thing that he was after in 1949, economic and political union with the United States. That is what the Minister for International Trade stood for then, and that is what he stands for now. I give him credit. At least he has been consistent, if stupid and wrong.

It is interesting, and one has to ask: "Why is it that all those prominent Conservatives, all the front bench of the present Government were so dead set in their opposition in 1979?" The conversion took place there. Somehow or other they changed their minds. Somehow or other they made that magic transformation to discovering that this trade arrangement was going to be the great bonanza of all times. One has to ask why. What is it that prompted that radical departure, that turn around, that denial of Canadian history, that denial of the objectives set by their own Leader, Sir John A. Macdonald, back in 1867 which have been supported by successive Canadian Governments of all stripes ever since? This is the first Government, the first Party, that has ever rejected that historical mission of Canada. What are the reasons?

A lot of mythology has grown up around this issue, fuelled by the propaganda machine; the $30 million that has been spent to create both fear and trembling in the Canadian public, and at the same time offering all kinds of candies on the tray. What is it that they are really saying? If one buys the mythology, which I do not, and I do not think anybody else will after this debate is over, the first thing is a promise of economic bonanza time. The Prime Minister and his Ministers are out there saying that there will be more jobs, more growth, more consumer spending. They create an image of people rushing down to Buffalo and buying cheap VCRs. All of a sudden there will be an incredible expansion and explosion of jobs in every region of the country.

The problem is that their own studies and reports completely deny those facts. When one looks at the economic growth figures, the economic benefits put forward by the Economic Council, by the Department of Finance, what do they say are the best optimistic assumptions? Let us look for a moment at the Department of Finance which is on the same side as the Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister. After all, they are in the same Government. What do they promise? What does the Economic Council say will be the maximum economic growth? They say 1/4 of 1 per cent per year. That is not even within the margin of error of the best computer forecaster. That type of margin could be wiped out by a change in the interest rate from week to week, or a change in the exchange rate from day to day. Yet, it is on that they are basing their great promise of cornucopia. Heaven will open for a 1/4 of 1 per cent. Not many Canadians will go out on to the streets and sing "Hallelujah" for a 1/4 of 1 per cent growth per year. Those are the Economic Council's figures.

I have read the Government's pamphlets on the consumer benefits. Those pamphlets are very skillful and sly. They never talk figures. I refer to the statements of Dr. Kerton, an economist for the Consumers' Association of Canada, who stated that the maximum saving, in other words, the best possible scenario that might accrue to consumers, is less than 1/5 of 1 per cent a year. That is a change that can take place in 24 hours in this country.

Pierre Racicot of the National Federation of Consumers' Association pointed out in front of the House of Commons standing committee that a household earning $20,000 might save $32 on this trade agreement over a 10-year period. Hallelujah! We have been saved. The great trade agreement, the great bonanza might save us $32 over a 10-year period, if we are lucky, and if it really works in the manner that they say it will.

At the same time what the Minister for International Trade did not talk about in all those economic promises is what the Conference Board talks about, and that is that it could increase the deficit by $2.5 billion. We saw the example in the last Budget. There was $500 million of additional taxation, one cent a litre on gasoline, to pay for the lost revenue in the first three-quarters of a year of the trade agreement. We either increase the deficit or raise taxes. There goes 1/5 of 1 per cent in consumer savings wiped out in a flash by the action of the Minister of Finance last February.

What the Government does not talk about are the job losses. Never is it mentioned that there will be industries affected. I was somewhat amused by the quotation used by the Minister for International Trade from Mr. Young, President of National Seafood, a good Maritimer. I have a letter here that was sent to me by Mr. Archie McLean, the Executive Vice-President of McCain's Foods, the largest Canadian food processor. He is a good Maritimer from New Brunswick. This letter was at the time when the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) was the Minister for International Trade. He wrote:

> Dear Ms. Carney:
> I am writing to you as a member of the Agricultural Sagit and as a hard-core Tory.

He is not a Grit, not a socialist but a hard-core Tory. He says:

> A comprehensive trade liberalization agreement between Canada and the U.S. which would remove tariff barriers and phase out non-tariff barriers would devastate the dairy, poultry or feather, horticulture and beer and wine industries.

That is a hard-core Tory, head of the largest food processing firm in Canada, speaking. He says 70,000 jobs are at stake. Why? He says it is because the trade agreement neglects to take into account a couple of key points called weather and geography.

• (1610)

Mr. McLean points out in his letter that growing potatoes in New Brunswick or Manitoba costs $120 a tonne. They can be bought down south for $90 a tonne because there is a longer growing season there and less expense. He says he has a choice. He is either going to shut down or move south.

What does the Economic Council of Canada point out about jobs? It says that 186,000 jobs will be lost. Where will they be lost? They will be lost in key industries, electrical, machinery, manufacturing, printing and auto parts.

The Hon. Minister said that this would be a great salvation for the auto parts industry. Why is it then that Mr. Vic Lonmo, the President of the Auto Parts Manufacturers Association, appearing before our task force, said that 20,000 jobs are at risk as a result of this agreement? Who do we believe, the gentleman who heads this association or the Minister for International Trade a well-known extrovert?

The fact is that this Government has not been honest or straightforward in outlining these so-called economic benefits. It has hidden the real damage and the real costs and its own figures, studies and institutions totally deny the promises made. Time after time, the Prime Minister promises all these things. No wonder he can get away with it. The latest survey showed that 60 per cent of businessmen in Canada have not read the agreement yet. They are simply going on a wing and a prayer. They have not bothered to take the time to read the details of the agreement.

Canadian businessmen would not do that if they were signing a contract with a competitor or a client. They would hire the best lawyers. They would sit down and read the agreement fine point by fine point and decide if it was a good deal or not. In this case, they are going on theology, religion. They are going to take the word of honour, that sacred trust, of the Prime Minister for which he has become so well known. How can we disbelieve the Prime Minister who promised that he would not deindex senior citizens' pensions or that he would not enter into a free trade agreement?

When the Government begins to look at its own figures and those of the Economic Council, it will realize that that promise is not sufficient to even begin to warrant the kind of fundamental change that will be brought about in Canada. Those benefits are so meaningless as to be almost immeasurable.

What are we doing this for? We go to the second great ambition put forward by the Prime Minister. We remember that he said that we must gain secure access, a guarantee to the U.S. market. In the House of Commons, the Right Hon. Prime Minister said that our highest priority is to have an agreement that ends the threat to Canadian industry and that a new regime on trade remedy laws must be part of the agreement. Is that what we got? Have we got a secure, guaranteed, fool-proof access for Canadian goods? It is an interesting case. Let us examine it.

First, let us examine the fear tactics the Government has used. It has tried to put forward the argument that, somehow, we have this evil presence to the south of us. It is kind of comical that government Members accuse Members of the Opposition of being anti-American, but they are the ones who have been going around the country saying: "Beware, the wolf is at the door. If we don't do something, those American Congressmen will violate us in our beds and therefore we need this deal in order to protect ourselves".

I went back and looked at the figures because I was kind of curious as to what in fact was going on. In the last 10 years, there have been some 40 trade remedy actions out of 600 taken by the Americans against Canada. Only eight of them came to a final decision and they included clothes-pins, nuts and bolts and optic sensing equipment. That has been the sum total of the American attack upon our economy, clothes-pins and nuts and bolts.

What the Government does not talk about is that in the same period of time, remedy measures have been available to us and we have taken six of those cases to GATT. We have won three of them. Two of them the Government plea-bargained outside the GATT process, and we know what happened on softwood lumber. That smart trick will cost the softwood lumber industry $800 million to $1 billion.

Over all, there has been a modest number of cases against us and we have succeeded in fighting off many of those cases. In the groundfish case of 1972, we were able to get a total withdrawal of the American legislation through a GATT ruling. The Americans have respected those rules and obligations.

Where is the fear coming from? It was primarily in the mind of the government spokesperson. In fact, there have been more initiatives by the United States Congress and the United States administration against Canada since 1984 than in the 10 years previous. Since the Tories came to power, there have been far more trade remedy actions against Canada than in double or triple the life of previous Governments.

After saying that, let us look at the insurance policy that we bought. The so-called dispute settlement mechanism applies U.S. law. We are still subject in every way, shape and form to the harassment techniques of U.S. industry when, if and how it wants to use it. Nothing has been gained. An American industry can still take an action before the International Trade Commission. It still has to go to the Commerce Department for a ruling. It still has to come back. It will still take one year to two years to get a decision. In the meantime, all those Canadian industries will still have to pay all their expenses and deal with the harassment. Nothing has changed one iota except that what has changed is that if we go ahead with this agreement, we forgo our right to go to GATT which can provide a much quicker solution than the one put forward in the trade deal.

Under the present international rules, we can apply for an international panel after the first decision taken by the International Trade Commission. We will not have to wait for a year or two years. We can go right away and get a ruling.

Mr. Layton: Wait 10 years.

Mr. Axworthy: Oh, here is a voice of wisdom. It takes five and a half months on average to get a panel decision. That is how much Hon. Members know. The stupidity and ignorance surrounding this deal bothers me. They simply do not know what they are talking about. They have not bothered to examine the alternatives. They have not bothered to examine the real facts. They simply buy the hocus-pocus. They are engaged in voodoo economics and therefore they believe in all the magic that goes with it.

The fact is that it takes an average of five and a half to six months to get an agreement. Therefore, I make the case that we will be worse off under the provisions of this agreement. It will take longer and cost more for Canadian business under this agreement than under the present arrangement.

What is the debate about? We did not get security of access. The Americans will still apply their laws and will slam-dunk us at every opportunity. In fact, they will be more encouraged to do so because they will have seen what a bunch of patsies we are. They know how much we have backed down, retreated and withdrawn every time the Americans get tough.

Naturally the Americans will use these instruments. In fact, the most important consequence of these negotiations is that in the implementing legislation the U.S. Congress is now considering, it has brought in a new trade measure directed against Canada, a measure which will give it the right to monitor all Canadian imports that may have a subsidy. If it does not like what it sees, the U.S. administration can take unilateral action and will not have to wait for an industry to do it.

The birth of the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement has resulted in a new monster to attack us. That is the end result of this great negotiation by the Prime Minister and his cohorts. We have an added problem that we did not have before.

Adding up the two levels of supposed benefits, the economic and the secure access, I think we have to admit that it is pretty questionable. If these "freaks of unreasoning panic" the Minister for International Trade spoke about had applied their rationality, they would have seen that it is a minor-league deal. It just does not have much in it.

Remember when the Prime Minister was on television one night? He got his make-up on, his flags around him and a picture of the kids. He said: "Look, folks, you buy this deal, we're going to have access to a $750-billion procurement market." What did we get? We got the difference between $170,000 and $25,000, about 1 per cent of that of which he promised. Not even close. That was a Class C effort, Mr. Speaker. He could not even make the majors on that. That is what is being sold across the country, as the great economic salvation for Canada.

They say, those are not the reasons why we have this trade deal or the Bill before us. That is not the reason why this Government has gone pall-mall into negotiations. The only way that we can fully determine the real reason is to look at the other side of the ledger, the cost side.

They do not talk about that. I have read their publications carefully. They do not tell you about the cost side. They do not tell you about the fundamental change that will take place in the policies dealing with foreign investment in this country. They try to pretend that somehow that is simply a small, trifling matter, that Mr. St. Laurent doesn't change anything, really.

I want to remind you of something, Mr. Speaker. Since the Tories came to power in 1984, there has not been one rejection of an application for foreign investment, not one. Not one has in any way troubled the minds of the monitoring process. Far more important, of the $22 billion of foreign investment that has come into this country since 1984, 94 per cent has been in takeovers and acquisitions, not new business, not creating new enterprise in Canada, but in takeovers and acquisitions of existing Canadian businesses.

This deal will entrench that kind of policy in an international agreement so that future governments cannot get at it. The whole agreement is based upon perpetuity. Doesn't that begin to tell you something? Doesn't that tell you that the real reason for the agreement has nothing to do with trade, but has an awful lot to do with trying to entrench, in perpetuity, a new kind of Conservative economic framework in this country, the market-driven framework, so nobody that else can get at it? That begins to tell you a little bit about what the real cost will be.

Let's look at other angles, energy and resources. That, as far as the Americans are concerned, is the centrepoint of the agreement. They will take everything else. What they have got is what they wanted for 40 years, total, free, complete, open access to Canadian resources untrammelled, unheeded, unrestrained, and unlimited. They got what they want.

This deal goes back to a proposition put forward by something called the Paley Commission in 1952 under President Eisenhower, when they said the number one priority strategically for the United States is to get full control over North American resources. Well, they got it. The Mulroney Government has given it to them right here. What does it mean? What it really means is this. In the crucial area of energy, it is perhaps the most valuable resource that we have as a country in terms of our future economic development. What do we do? We freeze the price for ourselves. We can't use it to our advantage. We can't say that we will use the power of the public sector to create an advantage for Canadian industry in the use of our energy resources. That is prevented and prohibited in this agreement. We cannot have an export price for our mineral resources.

If we want to establish further programs to enhance value added of our natural resources, this agreement prohibits us from doing it. The whole idea of getting more jobs out of our natural resources is limited by this because the big resource corporations do not want it. They just want to ship that stuff as quickly and as fast as they can across the border.

What we are dealing with is the dismantling of a mixed economy. We are dealing with the evisceration of a political economy. We are dealing with an abandonment of the historic tradition of this country which is that we use a mixture of public and private initiative to build Canada.

The whole emphasis of this and why it gets support by the powerful forces and the economic corporations and the big players, is because they see this as a way of putting a straitjacket around the federal and provincial governments of Canada. That is what they really want. That is the purpose behind the trade agreement. That's the sell-out of our independence. If we don't have that, we don't have our independence.

Once we deny and reject and withdraw the ability of Canadians through their democratically elected institutions to set public policy on economic and social questions, we no longer have a country worth a name.

An Hon. Member: The Tories sold it out.

Mr. Axworthy: If you don't believe me, go back to the agreement and read some of the other Articles. According to Clause 6, which gives the federal Government the override on any provincial jurisdiction, if any action, regulation, policy, piece of legislation, in a provincial legislature, does not accord with the terms of the agreement, the Government has an override. It can bring them to account bring them to heel. This brings a third partner to the whole federal-provincial relationship, the United States of America.

We now have the federal Government, the provinces and the Government of the United States negotiating our Constitution and negotiating our federal-provincial relations. When it comes to the issue of the division of powers or who has jurisdiction, it will not be a question of the balance between federal-provincial rights. The Americans will say: "We have a right here too. It is called the international trade agreement". We have a brand new Constitution being debated in this House at the very moment, bringing a brand new outside partner to the table.

As the upholder of the traditions of this House, Mr. Speaker, let me ask you this. Why, if you look at Clause 8 in the Bill, does Clause 8 say that the trade agreement supersedes any Act of Parliament, any decision that we make? Now, the American Congress isn't quite so dumb. Their implementing legislation says the opposite. Their implementing legislation says that all Acts of Congress supersede the trade agreement. We are just now debating the giveaway of the sovereignty of this institution. Whether it is freedom of information or equity rights or any of the Bills we have passed, if they don't accord with this agreement, then forget it, they don't count.

When the Minister for International Trade tries to disparage the concerns raised by millions of Canadians about what this Bill will do, tries to laugh it off, tries to make a joke out of it, he is simply demonstrating a lamentable lack of understanding of his own legislation and what it means. He simply is trying to smokescreen, to cover up, the real purpose and intent of the Bill before us.

We have had debates in this House about the question of water. I want to deal with that for a moment. The Minister for International Trade and the Prime Minister, in all of their righteous indignation, have said there is absolutely no impact upon water in this agreement. Well, let me just go to the Bill. Let me go to the schedule of the Bill. Tariff item 22.01 states that it includes "waters, including natural waters". What does the interpretive note that is going out to all the custom officers across the Canadian borders say? This is the publication of the Government of Canada. The interpretive note on the new customs system says tariff item 22.01 covers ordinary natural water of all kinds.

The Hon. Minister has not dealt honestly with this House. That is the reading of his own document that he himself is responsible for. So, when he says it does not include water, there it is tariff 22.01 and the interpretive note that goes with it. It is quite telling that the question was asked of the Government: "Well, if you are so sure that water is not included, then you have a very easy recourse. Simply include an exemption in the Bill."

The American Congress has the right to include all kinds of new amendments but the Minister says we cannot do the same, we are not as good as they are. We asked the Minister to try one teeny one, an exemption for water. In response we got blank stares and silence. It was the only time in his life that the Minister for International Trade did not explode with a mounting pressure of fuminous gas.

He had no answer to that because they know full well that this agreement will give the Americans the right to demand the use of our water resources and that Canadians will no longer have the right to decide or choose otherwise because the agreement will be part of our Constitution, it will supersede every Act of Parliament. It will tell us what we can and cannot do in this country. That is the reality of it.

The Government says that social programs are not touched whatsoever. Well, the Bill clearly enunciates the principle of national treatment in the health management area. Taking away the trade jargon terms it means that we cannot in any way provide a different set of rules or standards for Canadians than we provide for Americans. We have to treat them exactly the same. If an American management firm in health sciences, laboratories, or blood clinics want to set up a private operation, we cannot say no.

I predict that this area will become one of the major sources of combat in this country. As province after province begins to discover how their powers have been usurped to set credentials for their professionals and standards for their health care systems, they will rise up in revolt. I suspect that, like a lot of the business people, they have not yet read the agreement. They have not begun to understand the implications of it.

Aside from the specific question there is the much larger issue of harmonization. When the agreement comes into effect, if it does, and Canadian businesses find themselves dealing with competitors from the southern states where there are no right-to-work laws, no minimum wages, no taxes, and no social programs, they are going to ask how we expect them to compete with manufacturers who do not have to carry the same costs of health care.

The President of the Canadian Manufacturers Association, Mr. Thibeault said: "It's simply a fact that as we ask our industries to compete toe to toe with American industries, we in Canada are obviously forced to create the same conditions in Canada that exist in the United States, whether it's an unemployment insurance scheme, workmen's compensation, the cost of government, the level of taxation, or whatever".

I have page after page of similar quotes from Canadian businesses saying that when the deal is in place they will naturally have to ask the federal and provincial governments to change the rules on environment, workmen's compensation, and unemployment insurance.

For the Prime Minister and the Minister to say that there is no impact on social programs, that we will not see a change in the very carefully constructed, very important and creative network which we have built up in this country, is pure and simple conniving. That is the only word which can be prescribed. They are simply not telling it as it is. Their own business allies contradict them. The Americans contradict them. The whole thesis is that if they can only get this Bill by without telling the truth, if they can only keep the smoke machine running, maybe Canadians will not realize the implications of what they are doing.

In this debate my colleagues, in each of their roles, will be debating sector after sector, culture, energy, resources, social programs, and the environment, and pointing out how the deal encrusted in this legislation is a basic and fundamental restriction on the freedom and rights of Canadians to choose their own programs and policies.

It is not a matter of being for or against free trade. The fact is that there are other alternatives. We have put forward what we believe is a real and practical set of proposals on how to bring down trade barriers without doing it at the price of our sovereignty and independence. We can do it in a way which will allow us to maintain an active, positive, and creative role in world affairs. We can build bridges to the Third World, design our own industrial strategies at home, and ensure that our relations with the United States and other trading partners are proper, creative, and expansive, all according to our own demand.

We are not arguing isolationism or continentalism, but for a form of internationalism. That is the real exciting, ambitious opportunity for Canadians who do not want to lock ourselves in fortress America. We do not want to start down the slippery road to further and further integration and further and further reduction of our powers, our rights, and our abilities to choose. Rather, we want to expand those opportunities. Canada has a rare opportunity in this day and age. We are seen by so many other countries as a potential leader of a coalition of other countries which will not engage in the game of power politics where "might makes right".

I reject the thesis which is coming out of the Summit that there is going to be an international triad of North America, Europe, and Japan which will run the world and the rest of the people can take the crumbs from the table. It is a thesis expressed by so many of the neo-Conservative leaders. That has not been the Canadian tradition. Dating back to World War II we have fought for internationalism, for small and large to be treated the same, for no discriminatory rules but a rule of law which treats everyone equally.

By this action we contribute to that North American fortress, to the idea of a triad, the idea that the big guys with muscles are going to determine and choose and all the rest of the countries can be dependent upon us. It is a new form of 19th century colonialism which is being talked about at the Summit, a kind of noblesse oblige, that we'll take care of the poor and disadvantaged.

I reject that, Mr. Speaker, and my Party rejects it. If we agree to this kind of deal we will be giving away the weapons we have. The fact of the matter is that there is another real option. We have said that we can get better security of access and better guarantees for our markets by strengthening and developing the international trade system, by using it in an effective way and being seen as strong supporters of that system rather than trying to scurry into the sanctuary of the continental market-place.

We have put forward proposals in that regard. We have put forward proposals on how to diversify our trade. The Minister for International Trade has said that this deal will lead to greater global opportunities. If that is the case, why is it that since 1984 when the Tories came to power our trade deficits with the Pacific Rim have gone from $700 million to $4.6 billion? Why has our trade with Latin America dropped close to 30 per cent and with Europe 20 per cent? Why is our trade surplus, which in 1984 was $17 billion, now down to $8 billion?

The reason is that our trade in every part of the world except the United States is going kaput. We are closing trade missions, stopping the funding for small businesses, and rejecting opportunities in the global market-place because we are so occupied and obsessed with the American market. That will be our future if this deal goes ahead. Canadian businesses will not expand, they will shrink and retreat. They will see the market in Akron, Ohio, and forget that there is one in Accra, Africa. That will be the problem.

We think we have to diversify our international market-place. We can only achieve that if we begin, as a national entity, to invest in the very means to create a competitive international player. We must put money into training, research, and universities in order to build up human resources. That is the key to our international competitiveness.

Instead, in the last four years the Government has been cutting back on training programs, cutting back on aid to universities, and cutting back on research and development. The Government has been pulling back on the very investments which would make this country strong, able, and competitive.

There is a very clear alternative, Mr. Speaker. There is an option and a choice. It is not a matter, as the Government is trying to say, of being for or against opening trade markets. It is, rather, a question of how we are going to do it. Do we do it by burrowing ourselves into the continental fortress, or do we do it by expanding and opening our opportunities in a world-wide way?

As I pointed out, the reason why the Government rejects the much broader and more noble ambition is because that is not its agenda. Its agenda is to constrain the sovereign rights of future Canadian Governments. That is what is on the line with this legislation and that is what we will fight.

I say to my colleagues opposite that they are in for the fight of their lives, not in terms of procedural wrangling, but through a hard fought debate on the floor of this House and in the committee. Canadians will ultimately know the consequences of the Government's action and they will begin to understand what the debate is about. It is about the independence of this country. Whether we win or lose, we owe it to the future generations to make sure they understand what is happening here today. We are really fighting for the kind of Canada which we have known and believed in rather than for a pale, branch-plant imitation that has come forward under the leadership of the Prime Minister. That is the real debate before us. It is the most important debate to take place in this Chamber for generations to come.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It is my understanding the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) wishes to present a reasoned amendment at this time.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, in view of my statement about our preparedness to fight, I move:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

This House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner in the absence of a mandate from the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Continuing debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I was going to begin by making some harsh comment about the long-winded speech of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). I may have to extend that to include my good friend, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Thacker: And you?

Mr. Langdon: I will try to emulate both. Will that satisfy my friend?

Today's performance by the Minister for International Trade illustrates that he has completely lost sight of the importance of this legislation to the country. One can only say in the strongest possible terms that the Minister has not lived up to his responsibility to put before the House in a sensible manner the legislation we are debating today. Instead, we have seen an example of fear mongering, of blustering, of inaccuracy, irrelevancy and long-winded pomposity which has given us absolutely no insight whatsoever into this Bill.

It is a disgraceful performance. The Minister owes the House an apology for making that kind of speech at the beginning of such an importance debate.

This debate is one about choices. Canadians will have to decide which of three choices they want to make. First, do we follow this Accord with the United States and make ourselves essentially their resource periphery, dependent far more than we are now on their economy? If so, we accept the blustering pomposity of the Minister for International Trade as the prophet for the future of this country.

Second, do we follow essentially the same old path of the past with the Liberal ad hoc interventionism which consists of no strategy, no direction, no sense of leadership toward a new way to deal with our economy? It is an approach that hopes for the best and relies on GATT.

Third, do we accept that we finally try to build in this country an independent, fair economy and society using our rich resources? Do we try to develop an industrial game plan, a sense of direction which gives us a high tech future in the world? Do we look at full employment as a dominant objective over everything? Do we want to take the path that will make us proud of ourselves in the world as a country that is independent and can stand on its own feet to operate successfully on an equal basis with every other country in the world?

I think that is the course we want to take. I believe that is the course that will be chosen when we finally get the election that is deserved on this issue. That is the course that this Party offers and that this Party has presented and will continue to stress to Canadians as this debate continues.

The Conservatives have lost faith in Canada. The great Liberal guru, Donald Macdonald, said: "Let's have a leap of faith". The Tories have gone one better and have had a leap of lost faith. Consequently, what we have is a branch plant manager, a branch plant Prime Minister, a branch-plant Party, and a branch plant policy that gives no sense of direction or future for this country and our children.

This Bill lets Canadians down, just as the past government let Canadians down with its gross patronage appointments. It is not just New Democrats with perhaps a partisan perspective, who see this deal this way. There was a statement from a group of completely non-partisan Canadians this week. They are people like Geogik Notsiof, one of our most senior former Ambassadors to the Soviet Union, a former Chancellor of the University of Toronto, Edgar Gallant, who is the former Chairman of the Public Service Commission, Eve Dubey, the former Dean of Social Sciences at Laval University, Louis Philip Blanchard, Director of the University of Moncton, G.W.F. McCain the head of McCain Foods, J.M. Kerion, the former Dean of Social Sciences at the University of Ottawa. They said very clearly, having looked at non-partisan observers who know something about politics and economics, who have no axe to grind, this statement of our concern is in no way motivated by anti-American considerations but rests only on our strong belief that the continuance of a distinct and prosperous Canada is important for Canadians and for the world as a whole.

They then went on to say that in their view, this accord with the United States, results in the following conclusion that our ability to survive as a distinct society in the world of tomorrow fades away and we could be caught in an irreversible process of complete absorption by our giant partner to the south.

That is not a statement that comes from partisans. It is a statement that comes from concerned Canadians who have looked at this deal and have seen not the great statistics about trade presented to us by the Minister for International Trade. They have seen the tremendous giveaways, the absurd sell-outs, the disgusting surrender of our independence as a country which is shown at virtually every page in this accord with the United States.

The Minister did not talk about those things, but they are here and they will kill us as a country in the future as surely as our children follow us and their children will follow them.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I must say that this does not come from a political party; it is a statement by individuals who have studied this Agreement, people like Yves Dubé, former dean of the Faculty of Social Sciences at Laval University, Louis-Philippe Blanchard, rector of the University of Moncton, J.-M. Quirion, former dean of Social Sciences at the University of Ottawa, who concluded after much study that the price of this Agreement for Canada is high and the risks for our future as a distinct society very great. So our ability to survive as a distinct society is in danger of declining rapidly and we would be caught in an irreversible process of integration with our giant partner.

[English]

That is the reality which exists and that is the reality which has to be seen by Canadians in the election that will come. They have to see that reality, but they also have to see the tremendous anti-democratic process by which the Conservatives have tried to jam this Bill through the Parliament of Canada. This is the same Government which, as a Party before the election, were against free trade with the United States. Yet at the Shamrock Summit, less than eight months after their election the Conservatives in concert with President Reagan, yes, we want free trade with the United States.

We had to fight to get a full committee that summer to even look at Star Wars and free trade so there could be a chance for Canadians to speak out before the Government locked us in at that stage. Finally, we were able to win that fight. We got a committee which came up with conclusions, but his Government decided to ignore the conclusions. This Government was told that the Auto Pact should not be included in any negotiations with the United States. Yet the committee's recommendations were rejected by the Government and anyone who reads the agreement sees not only the Auto Pact included, but a full chapter on it, which weakens the ability of Canadian producers to guarantee jobs for themselves in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I think this might be a good time to point out that it is five o'clock. When the debate resumes on this particular motion, the Hon. Member will have 30 minutes remaining.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since it was possible for both previous speakers to take some extra time to present their speeches as an entirety, might it be possible, since we have extended hours anyway, for me to complete my speech at this stage?

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The reason the Hon. Member was given 30 minutes was so that it would bring his time to a total of 46 minutes which is comparable to the time taken by the two preceding speakers. However, if the Hon. Member wishes to carry on a bit further with unanimous consent of the House, then he will be able to do so.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As I hear the Hon. Member, he is asking if we would be prepared to use his 30 minutes until 5.30 p.m. and to defer Private Members' Hour until that time, with unanimous consent. We would certainly be in agreement with that.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. The Private Member's Motion is in my name. I would be more than happy to give my colleague the time now to complete his remarks, provided that Private Member's Hour has a full hour commencing immediately upon the termination of his remarks.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House and you. In particular, I thank my colleague. I also thank my colleague from Winnipeg—Fort Garry. I shall not accuse him of being long-winded in the future.

It is important to see the extent of the anti-democratic approach which the Conservative Party has taken with respect to this trade deal. We have not just the promises before the election. We have not just the rapid reversal at the Shamrock Summit. We have not just the very tough fight which we had in 1985 to get a joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate to look at these questions. We have not just the fact that the recommendations of that committee were not followed by the Government.

We have an incredible record of secrecy with respect to this issue which I doubt has been equalled in past regimes. We had a situation in which it was necessary for us again and again and again to go to the Information Commissioner and to get her to take cases before the Federal Court before the federal Government would finally release studies which were paid for by the taxpayers of Canada dealing with a crucial issue of importance to them. When those studies came out we often found that there were vast numbers of pages which had been crossed out, made blank, because of the Government's paranoia that the Opposition might find out some of the nasty tricks in which it was engaged in this negotiation.

Then, when the whole charade was finished, the charade of Simon Reisman pulling out of the talks and the last minute rush to Washington by our supplicant Ministers, we had in front of us a 30-page brief which was supposed to somehow set out for us in summary reform what would be in the final agreement. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade had but 10 days to go across the country to allow the people of Canada to comment, not on the agreement itself but on this mere summary which had been released. It happened that the actual text came out shortly before the committee was supposed to report.

Would the committee with its massive Tory majority even look at the actual agreement? Would it look at the differences between it and the summary? Not a chance. It would keep to its shameful summary and to the Canadian testimony which it has heard on that.

The shameful reality is that there has not been a chance for a single Canadian to testify before a House of Commons committee of any type with respect to this trade agreement, despite the fact that many of the people who came before us and who talked about the summary said that it was not possible to talk about a summary agreement. They said: "We have to see the final document. We have to get our lawyers to look at it. We have to see if it makes sense. We have to see the real product. Where's the beef?"

Once the brief appeared, what we found was that there was not a single committee of the House that was prepared to hold hearings on this crucial issue and to see to it that the Canadian people had a chance to react to some of the vicious surrenders of our independence as a country that forms part of this agreement. That is in tremendous contrast with what has happened in the United States.

I have in my hand a list of some 40 committees in the United States which held public hearings on this Bill—40 different chances for the American people and American interest groups to be able to speak. There were 40 chances for American experts to be able to speak. There was not a single chance given to Canadians to testify in this whole seven-month period since the agreement came out.

I just could not have believed before I came to the House of Commons that any Government could be so high-handed, that any Government could be so absolutely crass in its willingness to avoid the capacity of the Canadian people to speak on an issue as has been the case in this Parliament. It is absolutely shameful. It is just the last shameful act of this whole process of secrecy, of cover-up, of attempting to control the message going out so that people in Canada do not get a chance to see and to hear clearly the tremendous surrenders which have occurred as a result of this trade deal. That is at the heart of this trade deal. It is at the heart of the worries which exist across the country among average families concerning this deal. It is at the heart of the worries that I heard from grape growers in the Okanagan Valley, and from students in Montreal concerned about their jobs for the future. They saw the surrenders within this deal and for their potential future nothing but a trek south to some lower paid job in the southern United States.

I saw it among the worries of workers in my own home constituency in the Town of Amherstburg, a town of approximately 8,000 people where the largest employer has said that he will almost certainly have to shut down as a consequence of this trade deal and devastate the economy of that town.

I saw those worries among small oil producers in Alberta who told us that this was an unbalanced and unfair deal which left the National Energy Board completely stripped of power, and left the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission in the United States still able to fully control what happened to oil exports into that country.

I heard it from wood workers in New Brunswick who faced tremendous inequities in the softwood lumber situation, so much so that they had to sue the Government because of the manner in which they suffered unfairly under this trade deal, and the fact that the trade deal kept the softwood lumber Memorandum of Understanding continuing as part of the reality of our trade relations with the United States.

I heard it from women clothing workers in Québec who asked us if there was some chance, at least, to receive some support for adjustment, and who were told no, no chance.

I heard it from nurses who told us that they were deeply concerned about the profit-oriented U.S. medical care system sweeping north into Canada as a consequence of the details of this deal.

If Members on the opposite side wish to debate, I hope they do, because there are parts within this report which make it absolutely clear that virtually every part of the health system is open to U.S. management companies taking over and running those health systems as they have done in the United States in a manner that has hurt nurses, doctors, and patients very badly in that country.

Mr. Crosby: How many Americans come to Canada for medical treatment?

Mr. Langdon: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to rise and speak on that. I am talking about people who have spoken to me and to New Democrat trade groups across the country, and who have told us their concerns and fears. If the Government is worried about those concerns and fears, then I suggest that it start talking honestly and openly in response, instead of attempting to cover things up, as the Minister for International Trade attempted to this afternoon.

Let us also look at the incredible list of sell-outs which exist within this deal. It has to be a record in terms of sell-outs and surrenders for any one treaty, any one agreement made with another country. For instance, we have given up tremendous potential power to shape our regional development and social policies because we have not come to any agreement with respect to subsidies. That agreement will come into force in seven years, and in seven years our economy will have been restructured if this deal goes forward. At that stage, the United States, frankly, will have us over a barrel as far as its subsidy approach is concerned. Therefore, we can expect to see ourselves clobbered in those negotiations. We can already see indications which have come out in the Senate and in the House in the United States where it has indicated the things that it wants to negotiate. They want to get rid of all the subsidies we presently provide.

Perhaps those Members who represent areas that presently benefit from regional development help will all be defeated in the next election anyway and they do not have to worry about it, but if they think that in seven years it will be possible to defend those regional development subsidies, frankly I think that they have spent far too much time under the hot sun.

Let us talk about the rules within this document against performance requirements on U.S. subsidiaries. At the present time U.S. subsidiaries under conservative law can be required to make performance commitments before they are permitted to take over a company. That goes. It is chopped away. The consequence is that the extra jobs, the extra exports, the extra investments, the extra benefits to Canada which would have come from those performance requirements also disappear.

We can also talk about agriculture. Remember, agriculture was not supposed to be touched. What do we see? Where has our two-priced wheat gone? It has disappeared. It is surrendered because of this deal. The same thing applies to seasonal tariffs on vegetables and fruit. Agriculture has been hit just as every other sector has been hit. We did not hear the Minister talk about that, but that is part of the deal.

The United States has the right to retaliate against any cultural moves which we take to safeguard our distinct society in the future, but, no, we write it right into our agreement. We signed it. How could our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) ever sign such a document permitting the United States to take action against this country if we take distinct steps to safeguard what is Canadian about our culture? But he did. He took those steps and signed it. If this Parliament accepts what is in this Accord, the consequences will be a tremendous axe hanging over our cultural industries.

One could continue with respect to the monopolies clauses, for instance, which make it impossible for any provincial Government in the future to set up an auto insurance scheme without paying compensation to the United States. These are the surrenders the Minister has refused to recognize or to admit.

• (1720)

And those are not the only things that this Government has done. For example, we must also say that this Government has decided to include in this Bill clauses to allow the federal Government to change any provincial law that differs from the contents of this document. For me, this is not equal federalism. It is unfair. It is unequal. It is very dangerous for all provinces in the future.

[English]

Those are the surrenders.

What did we get in return for those surrenders? We made no gains whatsoever. We had said that there were two key objectives. We had said first that we had to get exemptions from U.S. trade law and we had said second that we had to get agreement on what was an acceptable subsidy. Well, a funny thing happened to Simon on his way to the fair. Simple Simon met a pie man, perhaps, but we found that neither of those objectives were achieved. Instead, we saw a save-face solution which sets up a panel system which will do absolutely nothing more than the court system presently does. The consequence is that in return for all our surrenders of liberty, we have not achieved any safeguards or secure access to the U.S. market.

We heard the Minister suggest this afternoon that we have secured tremendous safeguards. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and those who are watching us on television today, to simply read the document, if you can get a hold of it. It is very hard to do so. The Government keeps it very close to its chest.

Mr. Thacker: You were criticizing us for too much information two days ago.

Mr. Langdon: But not this information. What the Government sends out is summaries which do not deal with the points which are in the actual deal itself.

Mr. Thacker: Do you agree with us printing more copies of the actual agreement?

Mr. Langdon: Absolutely. Print them, send them out. See to it that the Canadian people can actually see that there is no gain whatsoever with respect to secure access to the U.S. market.

What we have is a failure. It is a failure which will hurt the Canadian people very, very badly. It will put us in direct competition with southern U.S. states and the Mexican free trade zones where there are very low wages and poor or non-existent social benefits.

We will lose any chance of having local control of our future, either by communities or by country. Instead, Canadian corporations will use the U.S. competition which they will have to face to push hard to get our laws changed, to reduce our social benefits, to weaken our labour laws, to cut off our health and safety standards. We will see in the future a much, much tougher world which our people will have to face.

There is a different approach, an approach which could have been taken and yet was not taken. There is an approach which could, and I hope will, be taken after the next election. This approach first will make full employment the central goal of economic policy. It will use our resource wealth as a base to develop a more diversified economy. It will upgrade our industrial potential at the national level by taking seriously commitments to research and development. It will give some sense of strategy to our industrial plans for the future.

It is an approach which can encourage increased investment in Canada by cutting interest rates instead of raising them as this Government has been doing. It can encourage increased investments by using energy resources as an advantage to producers in our market and by assisting key industries, building block industries, to serve the domestic market and on the basis of that, to export of course to the United States but to export throughout the world.

We feel confident enough in Canada that we do not want to tie ourselves to this American market alone. We want to see instead an expansion throughout the world of Canadian business, of the exports of Canadian products and of the benefits of Canadian technology which we can develop here in Canada, not just through large business but through small firms as well. In fact, it is often small firms which are more successful in penetrating these new markets than large, rather hide-bound companies.

We want to see to it as well that foreign investment comes to Canada, of course, but that it provides the most possible benefit to Canadians, to Canadian jobs and to Canadian communities. That requires bargaining with those foreign investors, not just permitting them to come into Canada, take over a Canadian plant and shut it down because it is a competitor. This has happened far too often already.

We want to see the Auto Pact not as something about which we are worried, because Ontario has benefited from it. Instead, we want to extend the principle of the Auto Pact across the country to different sectors, to different regions, to see to it that there is a regional fairness which does not exist at the moment.

We want to work with other countries to restore health to our trading system so that fundamental reforms take place which assist the entire world. With these words in mind, I would like to move:

That the motion be amended by adding in line 9, immediately after the comma the following:

"including our valued system of social and regional development programs,"

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I will reserve on this subamendment and come back at 6.30 p.m. with a decision. The House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

TRADE

EXPORT OF WATER

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should enact legislation to prohibit the large-scale export of water from Canada to another country.

He said: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to be able to rise and present this motion today, calling upon the Government to bring forth legislation that would prevent the large scale exports of water from our country to another.

The reason for the motion, Mr. Speaker, is that today there is no legislative mechanism available to the people of Canada to prevent a Government, whether it is this Government or the one that replaces this Government, or another Government years from now, from arbitrarily allowing the large scale export of water. I liken it to a municipal and a provincial law, which is a zoning by-law, which establshes the rules but provides for the ability to change that in a public forum.

If this Government would live up to its policy statements—and I will come back to those in a moment—and enact legislation, it would be like a zoning by-law that would force the Government of the day, if it decided that for whatever reason the export of water was appropriate, to come back to this House to receive the approval of the duly elected representatives of the people of Canada.

There is no doubt that water is increasingly being recognized by Canadians as not just another resource, but as a common property of immeasurable value. It is increasingly becoming the focus of our attention, in terms of Government policy, and I suggest it will and should continue to do so.

Front and centre in this debate is the issue of water exports and inter-basin transfers. While this is only one aspect of the immensely complex problems facing us, in terms of water policy, it is an aspect which synthesizes the approach and the commitment to protecting our water resources.

I want to begin my comments today, Mr. Speaker, by commending both the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan), and the Liberal environment critic. The recently released federal water policy states, definitively: "The Government of Canada emphatically opposes large-scale exports of our water". For this, the Minister should be commended.

As well, the Liberal critic, the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), introduced a private Members' Bill a couple of years ago which called for a ban on water exports. While we had some problems with some of the aspects of the Bill, the sentiment was very appropriate, and I commend him for that.

I want, to read into the record some comments made by people who have examined this issue, have researched it, and have offered their thoughts for public consumption. The first is from the American Review of Canadian Studies, 1986. It is a paper called: Canadian Water Exports, A Controversy in the Making written by Geoffrey R. Weller, the Vice-President of academics at Lakehead University, in the community of Thunder Bay. He writes:

> The Canadian economy has long been heavily dependent upon the export of natural resources ranging from fur, lumber and grain to minerals of all kinds. Up until now water has been regarded differently and not exported in any large amounts. However, Canada is entering an era in which there is mounting pressure to change the generally held view of water as being beyond market forces and not available for export.
> Canada is regarded by some as having abundant supplies while other nations have increasing shortages and Canada is seen as being, therefore, in a position to gain significantly from the export of a valuable commodity, much as if it were what might be called "blue gold".
> Perhaps the most notable exponent of the benefits of exporting Canada's water resources both directly and indirectly in the form of hydro-electric power is the current premier of Quebec, Mr. Robert Bourassa. Not only is he identified with the massive James Bay project but recently, with the publication of his book Power from the North and his becoming premier, he has been associated with a desire for further large-scale hydro developments in northern Quebec and the Kierans Grand Canal scheme.
> The latter involves making James Bay into a freshwater lake, diverting the water from there to the Great Lakes and from there to arid regions in the United States and Canada.
> There has been concern in Canada about the issue of water exports before but it has never been as great as it is at the present. Some large-scale schemes were proposed in the mid nineteen-sixties that caused public concern.

I remember well the committee called Damn the Dams, which formed in northwestern Ontario, to prevent the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers from proceeding to survey our watersheds, with a mind to developing a system to divert water through Lake Superior into the United States. Mr. Weller continues:

> In addition, books have occasionally appeared on the subject in the past two decades, most notably D. Bocking's Canada's Water for Sale?, in 1972, and Foster and Sewell's The Emerging Water Crisis in Canada in 1981, and these have kept some awareness of the issue alive. Water export never, however, really reached the forefront of the agenda of industry, environmental and other pressure groups, or government. This was partly because the schemes devised seemed so grandiose and fanciful, even in the era of mega-projects; partly because the need for water in dry areas was not seen as an urgent or immediate one (especially in Canada); and partly because water was regarded as a public good that was and should be free of market forces.

Many Canadians, hearing more and more of the degradation and usage patterns of water in both Canada and the United States, are becoming increasingly aware that water is not a limitless resource. It does possess considerable value, and may therefore be eyed covetously by those who are short of it and by those who can make money by exporting it.

A further reason water exports are being taken seriously is that the new orthodoxy in economics is no longer sympathetic to an object such as water being a public good, and free of market forces. Consequently, it is entirely possible that if it were to be viewed as a consumption good, like any other, it could well be available for export, under the right terms and conditions.

One of the elected representatives in the United States thinks that way. Jim Wright, who is now the Speaker of the United States Congress, wrote in 1966:

> There is to the north of us a stupendous supply of water, enough to satisfy our predictable wants for years to come, which is simply going to waste. We need the water. We need to develop the means of getting that water.

There are politicians south of the border who are looking northward. I would suspect, because of the increasing drought situations in the United States, as well as in Canada, that there, too, will be people who will be eyeing us, with envy, wanting to get our water.

An acquaintance of mine, a Professor at the University of Minnesota, in Duluth, UMD, is working in co-operation with Lakehead University, developing Nordic studies and developing Great Lakes basin studies. Douglas Nord, who is one of the professors there, heading the Political Study Section, wrote a paper entitled Managing a Regional Resource, the Case of the Great Lakes. In the section entitled "Marketing a Regional Resource—Exporting Water From the Great Lakes", he writes:

> In speaking before a 1982 Great Lakes Water Conference former Wisconsin Governor Lee Sherman Dreyfus, observed:
> Over two hundred years ago Ben Franklin said, 'We know not what the well is worth until it runs dry'. We in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Ontario, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Quebec, New York must now look to our well.
> God and the glacier created the Great Lakes but Ottawa and Washington, D.C., will try to claim it. If we don't stand together now and protect and preserve that which by historical chance belongs to the people within whose state and provincial borders these lakes exist, then I say we will be letting loose the greatest resource ever given to any people on this continent.

He further quotes a Canadian, Ralph Pentland of the Inland Water Directorate of Environment Canada who feared that:

> "Once the tap is turned on, you can't turn it off. If you start a diversion of water, you build up a whole economic infrastructure dependent upon that source of water . . . At that point, you can't stop. You've sold your sovereignty, your heritage and your future.

That is why I bring forth this motion today. I want the Government of Canada to come forth with legislation which will very clearly indicate in law—not in policy but in law—that our water is not for sale, that our water is not going to be massively shifted from Canada to another country. The country which would most logically come to mind would be the United States, although there is the potential for large scale shipments by seagoing vessels to move water elsewhere. I am concerned that while the Government may make all the right sounds in its heart it is not prepared to go the next step.

I would like to refer to comments made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was interviewed by Fortune magazine a couple of years ago. He indicated that Canada would consider water exports to the U.S. if such an idea were mutually beneficial and economically feasible. "Why not?", he was quoted as saying. That is the kind of response which makes me worried.

It is not only the Prime Minister. It is well known, also, that Canada's negotiator for the trade deal, Mr. Simon Reisman, is an avid supporter of the Grand Canal scheme. He told an Ontario Economic Council seminar a couple of years ago that linking water exports to trade would be a brilliant way of getting the U.S. enthusiastic about the trade deal. Did he carry out this brilliant idea? Well, the Government has steadfastly denied that there is any connection. It has repeated often that there is nothing in the trade deal which forces us to sell water to the United States.

You may have noticed that that is an interesting way of putting the case for the protection of our water. In fact, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) took the wind out of his own argument when he went on to say that there is nothing in the trade deal which forces us to sell anything to anyone.

The Government had the option of insisting that there be an exemption in the trade deal which would specifically exempt water exports. It has been suggested by senior government officials that the Government had, in fact, wanted a water exemption but that it caved in at the eleventh hour. Why? We can only assume that it was in order to get the U.S. to agree to a deal.

The Minister for International Trade can bluster all he wants, but as long as the trade deal simply looks at water as another resource, the same as all the others, it remains open to exploitation as a marketable commodity.

That is why I have put forward this motion. I am not asking for a lot. I am simply asking the government Members and the Official Opposition to give their support to this legislation so that we can protect our water and entrench that will in legislation.

There is a sense of urgency about this motion. Even if we were to begin today, with the best of efforts, to enact policy to protect our water, we would still be facing many years of continued pollution and overuse of a dwindling supply of accessible fresh water. Despite many years of warnings by environmentalists and scientists, as a nation we have been very slow to come to terms with the deplorable state of our water supplies. We have not grasped the urgency that this problem demands.

Perhaps this is due, in large part, to an understandable misconception about our water supplies. When you stand on the shore of Lake Superior outside my home in Thunder Bay and look out toward the horizon it is very difficult to believe that Canada is not a water rich country. However, that is exactly the case.

The Government's federal water policy sets out a compelling case in this regard. It points out that Canada, which occupies about 7 per cent of the world's land mass, has 9 per cent of renewable water, just about a fair share. However, about 60 per cent of that fresh water drains northward, away from our population, and is inaccessible. That which is accessible is mostly polluted.

There has always been a feeling that the need to get serious about protecting our water supplies was a problem for the future. Well, Mr. Speaker, the future is here. We cannot afford to put off any longer addressing this issue which quite literally is a matter of life and death.

I submit that the place to start is with a ban on exports. I say this for a variety of reasons. To begin with, water comes predominantly under the jurisdiction of the provinces. Any legislation, any progressive moves toward cleaning up and protecting our water supplies, must be subject to negotiations with provincial governments. However, water exports come under the purview of the federal Government. While I believe it is still beneficial to consult with the provinces on this matter, it is an area in which the federal Government can move quickly, demonstrating leadership and setting the groundwork for the approach that must be taken.

Let me add to the argument the words of Robert Fournier, the Chairman of the Water Resources Committee. He says:

> Water is a vital element in Canada's past; it is equally vital for its future. Where once water determined the pattern of exploration and settlement, it now enhances the beauty and character of the landscape and plays a powerful role in Canadian identity. For all these reasons, and in the sheer abundance of our waters, Canadians can and do take pride.
> Thus it is cause for particular concern that the impact of current trends and future events on Canada's waters is uncertain. Climatic change, rise in sea levels, increasing abuse, and a potential export demand all place the future availability of water in doubt. This highlights the fact that Canadians are not owners of water, but hold only limited stewardship rights. Water returns to us both the benefits and disasters of our civilization. Technology can and does impact on our waters in more than one direction. Given the importance of water, the development and application of science and technology to assure wise management is vital to meet national needs.

The Minister, in his response to the federal water policy said:

> That is why the Government of Canada emphatically opposes large-scale exports of our water. We have another reason for our opposition; The inter-basin diversions necessary for such exports would inflict enormous harm on both the environment and society, especially in the North, where the ecology is delicate and where the effects on Native culture would be devastating.

I think it makes an awful lot of sense for us to support this motion in order to send a message to the Government that this House desires legislation which will control, prevent or restrict—whatever terms we want to use—the export of water from Canada to another country. I urge all Members of this House to give it their support and allow it to come to a vote.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, you have been around this House a long time and you know how the water issue stirs the emotions of all people including parliamentarians, and there is no exception today. The Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has certainly done us a service by bringing forward his motion which is very simple and straightforward. It asks the Government to enact legislation to prohibit the large scale export of water from Canada. It could not be clearer than that. The message has been elaborated upon by the Member. I wish to thank him for his kind words and to express my support.

The timing of this motion, I hope you will agree, Mr. Speaker, is particularly appropriate because we are debating today the trade deal between Canada and the U.S.A. For that reason alone the issue of water becomes charged with emotion because there are in that trade deal certain commodities spelled out for exclusion from it but we do not see water among them.

I refer to the fact that there is in the trade deal a specific reference for exclusion from the application of what the trade deal would be all about to beer, lumber, and unprocessed fish.

Evidently one wonders if it was desirable for the Government of Canada to identify these three items. The chief negotiator for Canada has a record of making public statements in favour of major water diversions. Two years ago, the National Research Council made a grant of some $30,000 available to the Grand Canal Company, which now and then raises its head to propose a diversion scheme of monstrous dimensions and implications. Considering all of these precedents, it is no wonder that the question of water export becomes increasingly acute in parliamentary and political terms. Therefore, there is a convergence of legislative proposals that we are required to address here today.

Why should there be legislation? It is very simple: One does not want governments of the future to perhaps approve a measure of water diversion or export on a large scale without parliamentary approval. Presently, this is possible because there is no legislation to give Parliament these powers. We must deal with that vacuum. That is why the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan is moving his motion and it is for the very same reason that two years ago in February, 1986, we debated my Bill C-257 which had the same intention.

This matter is still unresolved, despite the fact that the Government has had an opportunity to examine and reply to the Pearse water report that was published in 1986. It has not taken the necessary legislative initiative to give a future Parliament the opportunity to intervene with the help of legislation and discuss any proposal of this nature emanating from the executive, as we are doing today with the trade deal. That opportunity is denied parliamentarians unless they have the required legislation.

The importance of keeping waters within the boundaries of Canada has already been stressed. Let me repeat for the record what was said in 1947 by then Minister St. Laurent about water export policy: "Can we in fairness to Canadian generations of the future allow such natural wealth to be diverted from our own territory and put to uses from which it would be extremely difficult afterwards to withdraw it?" That well expressed thought today finds a modern meaning in terms of dependence. Once we create a dependence for water in other national jurisdictions it becomes virtually impossible to turn the tap off.

The Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan has already referred to General McNaughton's statement to this effect. Not only does the importance of water have an impact on the Canadian psyche, it is significant to the national identity of this country, particularly with respect to its economic uses.

Obviously, at the point we would become involved in large scale diversion and export of that water, we would also be exporting a considerable amount of jobs and economic interests. That is not in the short-term or long-term interests of Canada.

Evidently, the water that would be exported in a large-scale export would come from areas on which native people depend for their lifestyle. It would have a disruptive effect and would create an even greater dependence on non-aboriginal society. It would cause significant cultural dislocation. Therefore, it is no wonder that native people have frequently expressed their natural and understandable opposition to water diversion. To them, water is part of their lifestyle and not just another commodity.

In conclusion, let me summarize the points that have been made in advancing this motion and other Bills during the life of this Parliament. It signals to the Government that it must come to grips with the necessity of putting forward enacting legislation on this very important subject.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to add a few comments to the motion which has been proposed that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should enact legislation to prohibit the large scale export of water from Canada to another country.

Let me explain the evolution of the federal policy on water since we formed the Government in 1984. In 1985, a year after we became the Government, the priorities and planning committee of Cabinet empowered the Minister of the Environment to act for the Government in formulating a federal water policy. He gave that matter a very high priority. Cabinet further decided that until this policy was in place there would be no major interbasin diversions or large scale exports of water.

The first step in developing the water policy was an inquiry on federal water policy headed by Dr. Peter Pearse of the University of British Columbia, which reported to the Minister of the Environment in September, 1985. Its mandate was to consider the nature of emerging issues, the state of the resource, future requirements for water, interjurisdictional dimensions and scientific and research expertise, with a view to ensuring enhancement of the health, well-being and prosperity of the people of Canada.

In conducting its work, the inquiry actively sought the views of provincial, territorial and federal Government Departments and their agencies, of private citizens and public groups, of industry and of the academic community. Between late September and early December of 1984, 201 presentations were heard in 33 days of hearings in 17 locations across Canada. Over 300 written submissions were received. In addition, the inquiry commissioned 22 research papers on special problems related to this topic. The inquiry made 55 recommendations in its final report entitled Currents of Change. Three of those dealt with water export. The inquiry concluded: "It would be imprudent for the federal Government to reject all exports out of hand". It went on to say that the Government "... should clearly set out the conditions that must be met for any proposal to be acceptable", and that there should be "clear procedures for assessing export proposals".

Those are three specific points made with respect to the export of water should Canada consider it. The inquiry simply said it would be imprudent for the federal Government to reject all exports out of hand, that we must clearly look at all of the factors that would be involved and all the procedures necessary.

In November, 1987, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) released Canada's first comprehensive federal water policy statement. I would like to quote some of the comments made by the Minister at that time. He stated:

> The truth is that Canada, which occupies 7 per cent of the world's land mass, has 9 per cent of its renewable water. Further, about 60 per cent of Canada's fresh water drains north, while 90 per cent of our population lives within 300 kilometres of our southern border. In other words, to the extent that we Canadians have lots of water, most of it is not where it is needed, in the populated areas of the country. In those populated areas where it is plentiful, water is fast becoming polluted and unusable. The over-all problem in the country is compounded by drought in certain regions. Put simply, Canada is not necessarily a water rich country.

The Minister went on to say:

> That is why the Government of Canada emphatically opposes large scale exports of our water. We have another reason for our opposition; the interbasin diversions necessary for such exports could inflict enormous harm on both the environment and society, especially in the North, where the ecology is delicate and where the effects on native cultures could be very harmful.

The Minister further stated:

> The Government of Canada has the constitutional authority to block large scale export proposals. We can exercise this authority through various pieces of existing legislation. These include the Fisheries Act, The Navigable Waters Protection Act, the International River Improvements Act, and the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act.
> And, as the policy makes clear, the federal Government is reviewing existing laws, administered by various federal agencies, with a view to strengthening federal legislation, to the extent necessary, to fully implement the water policy. When this review is complete and if further legislation is needed to give effect to the federal policy against large scale exports of water, then that legislation will be placed before Parliament.

From these excerpts from the Minister's speech I think we can see that he has expressed some very serious concerns. Although we appear to have lots of water, it is in our far North and it drains towards the North, but it is in the South that we need it. Further, he is saying there is a very serious concern about the diversion of our water with respect to environmental factors, ecological effects and the impact that large scale diversion of water would have on our native population, particularly in the North.

The Minister went on to say that we have within our jurisdiction the ability to deal with this question and that when that review is complete, any further legislation that is necessary would be brought before the House. So I think the position of the Government is very clear. We are concerned with protecting our water and the impact diversion could have if we were to enter into any large scale export.

I would also like to make a few comments to the Member who introduced the motion. He talked about the timeliness of his motion, in his mind. I think he was relating the sense of his motion to the debate we are having on the free trade agreement. Much has been said in the House of late about the impact of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement on the export of Canada's supply of fresh water, and misleading statements have been made. I think it is important to say that the free trade agreement explicitly recognizes that the Governments of both countries have the right to protect their environment and conserve their natural resources. Nothing in the free trade agreement affects the federal water policy announced by the Minister last November. That policy clearly states that the Government will not permit the large scale export of water or the diversion of Canada's rivers to the United States.

I find it interesting that just because something is not explicitly excluded in the free trade agreement, somehow it is implicitly included. With that kind of logic, the sun, the moon and the stars are included. With that logic, the Liberal Opposition is included. With that logic the NDP is included. I cannot understand why these people constantly get up in the House and tell us that we have to exclude it. It is not in there. They are trying to make people believe, through their fear and propaganda and so on, that somehow it is mysteriously there. My goodness, the air is not excluded so I guess we had better add that too. Some of the hot air those Members produce over there should definitely be included.

We have to come to grips with what is fact and what is not fact. We have to start to recognize what is clearly there. Water is not in the free trade agreement other than bottled water, and the tariffs on that will come off. We have every right and every power under the free trade agreement to preserve our natural resources, and we shall do so.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): We will now hear from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mrs. Duplessis).

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the Hon. Member's interest . . .

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, one always assumes there is a rotation, and I would presume one of my colleagues should go next. I do not mean to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I say that just to keep the normal process.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): I thought the Member might have noticed that there were two members of the Opposition who spoke, and I am now recognizing two members from the government side.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, this is Private Members' Business, not government business, therefore, with respect to the rotation of government opposition there is not necessarily any hard and fixed rule. You are able to move about the Chamber in a way that is different from having to hear from the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): It is not a hard and fixed rule, I agree. The Parliamentary Secretary.

• (1810)

Mrs. Duplessis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to see the interest in Canada's water resources shown by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). The Government and indeed the vast majority of Canadians share his concern over large water export projects. Let me deal with these concerns for a few moments.

Canada is without doubt one of the most favored nations in the world for its abundant fresh water resources. However, despite what most observers think, these resources are far from inexhaustible or indestructible. The situation of our underground waters is not as well understood as that of some other countries, mainly because we have relied a great deal on our surface waters. Canada probably has more lake area than any other country in the world. Our lakes play a major role in regulating the flow of our waterways seaward, and they provide a rich habitat for our fauna and flora and for our own enjoyment. However, most Canadian lakes are a one-time gift we were left after the last ice age. They are not renewable, except at the expense of the streams and rivers that feed and drain them.

Hence, the best way to measure a country's water reserve is to measure the renewable water supply from spring water and ground water. If we consider the average annual flow, Canadian streams and rivers represent nearly 9 per cent of the world's renewable water supply, or roughly 100,000 cubic metres per second. Considering the population of Canada which is only 1 per cent of the world's population, this supply is indeed a generous gift of nature, but these figures are not so out of proportion if we compare them with Canada's surface area which corresponds to approximately 7 per cent of the world's territory. In any case, these figures are well below the 25 to 40 per cent of the world's water supply often attributed to Canada in new reports that neglect to make a distinction between renewable and non-renewable sources.

For the sake of comparison, the total run-off from American streams and rivers, including Alaska, is estimated at approximately 94,000 cubic metres per second, or nearly 8 per cent of the world's supply, while the renewable supply of the USSR is 139,000 cubic metres per second, or nearly 13 per cent.

Despite the apparent abundance of water in Canada, there are other factors that shape our perception of these water resources. For instance, about 36 per cent of annual precipitation in Canada falls in the form of snow, most of which stays as such for several months until spring thaw. There are times when the run-off is many times greater than average, sometimes causing flooding, while there are also times when it only amounts to a fraction of the average figure. The geographic distribution of water is another problem, in that nearly two-thirds of the total run-off flows North, far from the more populated regions in the South.

The variations in precipitation from month to month and from year to year also affect the availability of water, and this summer is a case in point. These variations force us to consider not only the average flow but also the less reliable flow on which we can count only nine years out of ten.

The message we get from all this is that the total flow of Canadian rivers and streams does not constitute a realistic estimate of the water supply available to Canadians. Today, however, we do, on the whole, have annual reserves that are greater than our draw-off at the national level.

Thermal generating stations and the manufacturing industry are responsible for the greatest draw-off. As for irrigation, not the quantity of water drawn off but the quantity consumed is important, and the fact that irrigation is concentrated in the arid Prairies. In this region, Mr. Speaker, irrigation represents 87 per cent of all water consumption. The use by the manufacturing and mining industries and by towns and cities is another major source of draw-off. This, however, is not the sum total of water use.

It is difficult and sometimes impossible to calculate accurately local water use so as to ensure the survival of fish and fauna, protect our heritage, and provide for recreation, navigation, and the dilution of effluents.

Like the rest of the world, we Canadians are barely beginning to realize just how much water we will need to maintain the natural habitat, especially in light of efforts made by environment defence organizations, reports such as Global 2000 and the World Environment Commission.

Mr. Speaker, we do not usually consider water in a continental context but I believe it would be appropriate to compare our situation with that of the Americans. However I am making this comparison after seriously reflecting upon the situation of water quality which might further reduce the supply of water that is acceptable and can serve for various uses. As I said earlier, we must also keep in mind the fact that we did not figure out local water needs.

An examination of the balance between reserves and consumption reveals that some Canadian regions already experience water shortages despite the fact that the world's renewable reserves exceed current consumption. The main region facing such problems is the southern part of the Prairies, particularly the north and south basins of the Saskatchewan River, the Red River, the Assiniboine River and the Milk River where they are considering proposed water supply storage facilities and small projects to transfer water between basins.

With respect to demand, water consumption trends closely parallel our two countries' demographgic densities and different needs. To meet the water consumption requirements of people, municipalities or thermal energy producing companies as well as those of the industrial and agricultural sectors, the United States now take from surface and underground reserves quantities of water which are about 12 times larger than those we use in Canada, yet they outnumber us 9 to 1.

Right now, thermal energy production and manufacturing activities in Canada account for most of the consumption. Irrigation projects rank first in the United States and if that trend should continue for a number of years it might lead to disputes between those who favour energy production and others who are more supportive of local consumption in the southwestern United States where most of the irrigation facilities are located.

Without Alaska, water reserves in the continental United States are 60 per cent of Canada's. If we consider reserves that are reliable nine years out of ten, the flow in the United States is declining even more and represents slightly more than twice the draw-off. At the regional level, the ratio is in many cases even less promising.

According to a national assessment carried out in 1978, the Americans predicted there would be serious water supply problems between now and the year 2000 in seventeen subregions, which means in most of the Great Plains and the Southwest. This explains the sustained interest shown by certain "unofficial" circles in Canadian water "surpluses" that would enhance the demography and economy of these regions.

Mr. Speaker, in concluding I may add that major water exports, including diversions from one basin to another, were discussed in the Federal Water Policy published by the Minister of the Environment last November. I would like to quote briefly from what the Minister said in his introduction to this policy, and I quote: "To put it bluntly, Canada is not a country with an adequate water supply. That is why the Canadian Government is firmly opposed to large-scale exports of water. There is another reason, however. The diversions between basins that such exports would require would be extremely harmful, both to the environment and to society, especially in the North, where the natural environment is fragile and such projects would have disastrous consequences for our native cultures".

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's motion is generally in line with the present Government's policy on water exports. However, we already have substantial legislative power that we could use in this respect, and I am about to finish Mr. Speaker. We are now looking at the situation to determine whether we should reinforce those powers, and if that is the case, I can assure you that the present Government will take any action necessary to preserve our invaluable water resources.

[English]

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to participate in the timely motion of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). We heard spokespeople from the Government, that is, the Parliamentary Secretary, and before him we heard from the Hon. Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer). Both government

Members made a great deal of the policy statement on water that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) released in November. In fact, both Members quoted extensively from the remarks made by the Minister at that time.

Certainly, if one accepts what the Minister stated, and if one accepts those statements at face value, one could be assured that the Government indeed had the best interests of Canada in mind, that it was not going to be in favour of diverting water or selling water to the United States, and that they were dead set against any inter-basin diversion of water.

At the same time that those Hon. Members were speaking, at the same time that the government policy supposedly exists, the Government of Canada and the Government of the Province of Saskatchewan were involved and continue to be involved in a $1.7 million study on the South Saskatchewan River. Part of that study is diverting water from the South Saskatchewan River Basin to the Souris Basin. In that study there has also been some discussion of diverting water from the Qu'Appelle Basin to the Souris Basin.

The Government is now under the political gun of the Premier of the Province of Saskatchewan. Earlier in the day I called him an "environmental thug", and I stand by that statement. For entirely political purposes the Premier of Saskatchewan wants to build a power plant in his riding called the Shand Plant, which will be a coal-fired plant, and for that he needs water to cool that plant. He is proposing to dam the Souris River, and two dams and reservoirs are proposed: The Alameda being one, and the Rafferty being another.

The Souris River depends entirely upon run-off. If that dam had been built in 1912, the first year they started to measure the flow of the Souris River, those reservoirs would not have been full until 1948. That is how much water is in the Souris River. Various studies have shown that, if Mr. Devine's reservoirs are to fill up, he will need water from some other sources. Of course, the nearest source is thousands of acres of wetlands. He is going to drain that, with tremendous impact on the environment in that area, but that will not be enough, especially in dry years. The Government of Saskatchewan's own study shows that there is a 20 per cent chance of not having a sufficient amount of water in the reservoir.

One cannot go ahead with a project of over $1 billion with that high a percentage of chance that there will not be enough water. Of course, they are now actively studying taking water from the Qu'Appelle River and the Qu'Appelle Basin in the heart of my riding. There is not enough water in the Qu'Appelle River and the Qu'Appelle Basin. I could take you there, Mr. Speaker, and show you that the level of the water in the river and in those lakes has dropped.

If the plumbing is in and the Qu'Appelle Basin is going to be connected to the Souris, when it comes time to determine if water is going to be taken out of the Qu'Appelle Basin, and there is over $1 billion invested in a power project, one knows darn well they will be taking water out of the Qu'Appelle rivers and lakes.

There are studies undertaken by the federal Government and the provincial Government that will also divert water from the South Saskatchewan River Basin via Diefenbaker Lake into the Qu'Appelle chain down into the Souris River.

While the Government talks about being opposed to the inter-basin transfer of water, it is actually involved in studying that in order to allow Mr. Devine his political rewards by building a power project and the accompanying dams that have no economic justification, that are environmentally damaging, and the only reason is pure and simple pork-barrel politics. The Government and the Minister of the Environment have knuckled under to the political blackmail committed by the thugs in the provincial Government in Saskatchewan, and it is disgraceful. For government Members to rise in the House and assure us how virtuous the Government is in terms of water policy I call hypocritical.

The other aspect that is most disturbing is that when water is diverted and the connections are done between the Souris River, the Qu'Appelle River, and the South Saskatchewan River, the plumbing will be in place to divert water to the United States. By treaty we are committed to sending 50 per cent of the historic level of what flows through the Souris down into North Dakota. That means that in a dry year like this year North Dakota will be assured of a steady supply of water. No wonder the Americans are going to give $40 million to the Saskatchewan Government to help with that dam project.

Mr. Gustafson: For flood control.

Mr. de Jong: North Dakota first wanted to build this dam for flood control purposes, but they were not allowed to do so because of the environmental damage that the dam would have created. Canada, like any good Third World country will now have to suffer the environmental damage that the Americans would not allow on American soil. That is how subservient we are to the Americans under the present Government and the likes of the Premier of Saskatchewan, the Hon. Grant Devine.

The motion of my colleague is indeed a very timely one. I urge the House to accept it. If such a motion had been passed, and if the Government had the political will to ensure that water from the South Saskatchewan River and from the Qu'Appelle River would not flow into North Dakota, we would not need this. But the Government does not have the political will.

On one occasion I rose in the House and asked the Minister to give his assurance that water from the South Saskatchewan and the Qu'Appelle Rivers would not flow into North Dakota under the proposals that are being considered by the Government of Saskatchewan. He could not give us that assurance. In fact, he refused to give us that assurance. The only interpretation one can take from this is that the Government is actively considering diverting water from these basins, moving it into the Souris Basin which eventually will flow into North Dakota.

Water is the most precious resource of southern Saskatchewan. Government studies have shown that as the greenhouse effect becomes more of a reality, southern Saskatchewan faces the danger of becoming a desert. We must conserve and husband our water resources as best we can. The proposed reservoirs will mean that in an ordinary year there will be a 30 per cent evaporation rate of water. In a dry year like this year 60 to 70 per cent of the water in those reservoirs will evaporate over the summer period. That we maintain, is a wasteful use of a very scarce resource. Therefore, we call upon the Government to use its powers under the International Water Boundaries Agreement and to prevent this project from occurring.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): There are two minutes left. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has the floor.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I have no longer than two minutes, but in those two minutes I would like to make a few points. First, I would like to support strongly the recommendation of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) that the Government enact legislation to prohibit the large scale export of water from Canada. I would suggest that the Government return to the legislation that was brought to the House by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), Bill C-257, which would have given Parliament power over water exports and the diversion policy.

The problem is that the issue is totally unclear. The Minister has said that water is not in the trade agreement. Others have said that it is in the trade agreement. I believe that the Minister is wrong and that it is well hidden in the tariff schedules, like hundreds of other commercial goods.

I would ask the Government to take into consideration very seriously Section 22.01 which indicates that waters include natural or artificial mineral waters, aerated waters not containing added sugar or other sweeteners, not flavoured, and then ice and snow are added. If ice and snow are not water, I would like to know what is. I would recommend that the Government take another look at Section 22.01 or else acknowledge that it did put water in the free trade agreement.

All the talk about water policy of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) is not in the form of legislation. I will conclude by drawing your attention to one last point, Mr. Speaker. Ontario wants and is proposing legislation that would protect its water supply. Under Section 8 of the free trade agreement, we have a problem.

I hope we will give serious consideration to these particular matters. They are very important to the well-being of Canada, not only in terms of decertification but in terms of cultural policy and the general well-being of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. McKinnon): When we debated the trade Bill previously, we had received an amendment from the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). Mr. Langdon moved:

> That the motion be amended by adding in line 9, immediately after the comma the following:

This amendment has been found to be acceptable from a legal standpoint. Are there any differing opinions? Then debate continues.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to take part in this historic debate. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) have made clear, this is much more than a debate about establishing a stronger, more secure trading relationship with the United States. This debate in fact is about building a stronger and more secure Canada, a Canada that is better able to meet the needs and fulfil the hopes of people in every part of the country in the 1990s and in the new century beyond.

I take particular pride in speaking in support of this legislation. It was three and a half years ago that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought forward on behalf of the Government a comprehensive agenda for renewal of the Canadian economy. At the heart of that agenda was the belief that Canadians must and would rise to the challenge of the increasingly competitive international environment in which we make our living.

This challenge was met by the Government, and we embarked on a wide-ranging series of actions to create a better economic framework for risk taking, for innovation and for hard work. Of course, this is what has always made the difference between economic success and failure, but we need a framework for that to happen, a framework in which Canadians have both the scope and the incentive to seize economic opportunities, to give their best to the creation of new growth, jobs and a higher standard of living.

That is why we acted to restore fiscal responsibility to the federal government; to reduce, through deregulation and privatization, the burden of government intervention; to foster a healthy and receptive climate for private sector investment; to make regional development more sensitive to local needs; and to establish a more effective policy for the promotion of science, technology and innovation.

To further improve the framework for growth and job creation, Mr. Speaker, we embarked on comprehensive tax reform to make the tax sustem fairer for individual Canadians and more effective in supporting productive economic activity.

The Bill we are debating today is another crucial plank in our program for economic renewal that will ensure Canadians the greatest possible scope for their economic efforts. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will open up Major new opportunities for Canadians to benefit from expanded and more secure access to the richest market in the world.

The key word, Mr. Speaker, is benefit.

I want to outline the economic benefits that this bill opens up for Canadians in every part of the country.

[English]

The extent of these benefits is large. One of the most important benefits of the free trade agreement is lower prices and more choice for Canadian consumers. Our Department of Finance study estimated that the effect of the agreement will be to reduce over-all consumer prices in Canada by about 1 per cent by 1993, and these lower prices will in turn boost real personal disposal income and increase consumer spending.

As a result of lower prices and increasing wages, we are projecting a 2 per cent increase in consumer spending by 1993 over and above what would otherwise occur. Once all bilateral tariffs have been fully eliminated, the cost of consumer goods imported from the United States will be reduced by about 5 per cent on average. Business will gain from these lower prices and intermediate goods imported from the U.S that go into their production will also gain. Consumers in turn will benefit from lower prices on these goods. We hear a great deal about the other parts of the free trade agreement. Let us not forget that it means lower prices for consumers right across Canada.

As Canadian firms restructure and retool their factories to take advantage of new opportunities which will be brought to them through free trade, because we will secure strong access to the American market, business investment in plant and equipment is projected to rise by more than 4 per cent in real terms by 1993. Of course, that means economic activity, greater wealth and increased opportunities for employment.

The favourable impact of free trade on real personal incomes as well as on profits and consumer spending will translate into faster growth and job creation. As the Minister of State for Finance, that is a part of my responsibility, and free trade is part of promoting that. We estimate that 120,000 net new jobs will be created by 1993, the fifth year of the implementation of the agreement.

Just as important as the creation of new jobs is the fact that the thousands of existing jobs will be protected as a result of this agreement. These are jobs that would otherwise be jeopardized by increases in U.S. protectionism. This is too often forgotten. Not only will more jobs be created, but one of the greatest reasons for locking in a trading arrangement like this with the United States is to lock in access to the American market, and that will protect Canadian jobs.

In fact, the figures on job creation understate the over-all gains to be made. They are conservative in comparison to other reported estimates. There are many unquantifiable benefits as well that will further enhance the job gains to be made as Canadians take advantage of new economic opportunities that will be created.

Thinking of my own city, General Motors Diesel, for example, will be closing its locomotive plant in Illinois and expanding production in London. It could not do this if it were not able to move those locomotives back across the border into the United States with no tariffs and with less secure access. Another example is 3M which is also located in London. It has some facilities in Iowa that it is thinking of closing down and moving to Perth and London because they are closer to the over-all heart of the North American market.

Southwestern Ontario is one-day's truck drive from 62 per cent of U.S. payroll. We are beautifully situated in Canada to take advantage of new opportunities in the American market. We cannot quantify all of these opportunities, but they are there over and above the basic projections of the Department of Finance, and they also will, I think, increase further because of reduced production costs due to the rationalization that will occur. As a matter of fact, the third volume of the Macdonald Royal Commission points out that rationalization has already taken place in our economy just waiting to take advantage of free trade.

Some of this was put together before free trade in order to deal with the European and Japanese competition. It is in place. It wants free trade in order to be fully effective.

Lower prices for intermediate goods will make Canadian industries much more competitive as well, and let us not forget that. That, too, will create jobs not only in Canada and in the U.S. but in overseas markets as well. With a greatly enlarged market for Canadian goods, production in Canada could expand by almost 3.5 per cent by the time the agreement is fully implemented.

Among our industrial sectors, the favourable impact will naturally be largest for manufacturing. It used to be that that sector that was the weakest in Canada. It is here under free trade that there will be the best opportunities to take advantage of the economies of scale, and by the time the agreement is fully implemented, Canada's manufacturing output should grow by about 11 per cent, according to the Department of Finance study's conservative projection. Even Canada's more highly protected industries can gain from the progressive elimination of tariffs.

It is quite right to stop and look at our industries that are sheltered behind high tariffs. What is going to happen to them? Well, these industries will gain because these are the same industries that tend to be highly protected on the other side of the border.

Petrochemicals are a very, very good example. Six of the 10 most protected industries in each country are common to both, and the remainder are in similar industrial categories. For many industries, tariff reductions will leave their relative competitive positions largely unaffected, but I would predict that huge American tariffs against our petrochemical exports are going to be removed in five years. In 10 years, this is going to be a bonanza for the petrochemical valley of the Sarnia area.

Our study shows that real income would rise by about 2.5 per cent once the economy is fully adapted to the free trade agreement, and this represents a permanent increase in real income of $12 billion in today's dollars. This is equivalent to a permanent real income gain of about $1,800 for a Canadian household of four, and this is not a one-time gain. This will be there year after year after year. That is what it means to the average Canadian household.

The free trade agreement is good in these macro economic senses, but it is also good for the different regions and provinces of Canada. The Atlantic region with its smaller manufacturing sectors will gain substantially because of the lower prices of manufactured goods purchased from other regions of Canada as well as the U.S. The FTA will also give greater scope for the further processing of resources. The fishery, food processing and resource-based industries, in particular, stand to benefit considerably. Now the Americans are quite happy to take the raw fish. Removing their tariffs on processed fish will allow us to do that processing. Trade liberalization will not only protect these industries and protect these jobs, but it will open the door to new opportunities and further expansion. That is the basic message.

[Translation]

Ontario and Quebec will gain through the increased and more secure access to the large U.S. market which will create more opportunities for investment and will allow their industries to reap the benefits of specialization and large scale production.

[English]

The energy agreement creates exciting new opportunities for western development. We know how keen westerners are on oil, natural gas, uranium and hydro electricity. Enhanced and more secure access to U.S. markets will allow the prairie provinces finally to really secure their export opportunities in the U.S. and to enhance them.

Further benefits will be gained as well through diversified growth of agricultural exports on the prairie provinces, and in a similar fashion the economy of British Columbia will benefit from increased opportunities. Tariff reductions will make mineral exports more competitive in the U.S. market. These reductions will increase the scope for further processing of minerals and other resource-based products.

Free trade will lead to more processing. That is also something that all Canadians have been hoping for. There is a great deal of appreciation, therefore, in all parts of the country of the benefits of the agreement, but there have also been misconceptions that the agreement is somehow not good for Ontario. I want to take just a moment to deal with this issue.

Ontario enjoys the advantages offered by quite a diverse economy. It has a strong manufacturing sector and a strong industrial sector in addition to well developed farming and natural resource sectors. It has a very balanced economy as a whole. "Booming" is the adjective that is used most often to describe Ontario's economy. A good part of the reason for this boom is the fact that Ontario has highly developed trade relations with the United States. We cannot deny that Ontario has deep relationships with the United States in terms of trade, and that has helped to produce this boom.

In recent years, all of this has had a cloud over it because of the threat of protectionism. Ontario has already experienced first-hand the pinch of U.S. protectionism, for example, in steel products. Protectionism results in lost jobs, weakened competitive abilities, higher prices and restricted growth. No Ontarian, no Canadian, no political leader regardless of political Party can remain indifferent to the threat of U.S. protectionism, least of all Ontario. Securing access to the U.S. markets and removing all tariffs between the two countries by 1998 augurs very well for many sectors of Ontario economy and particularly for the development of an even stronger, more competitive manufacturing sector.

I want to underline in this regard that the Auto Pact will be made stronger by the free trade agreement. If there is a spine that runs through the Ontario economy, it is the Auto Pact. With the conclusion of this agreement, auto workers, auto parts suppliers, automobile companies and consumers in both countries will benefit greatly from the liberalization of trade in this sector.

Since its inception 22 years ago, the Auto Pact has been subject to review and cancellation upon one year's notice. We cannot forget this. The Auto Pact will not be there forever. It can be cancelled in one year. By wrapping the free trade agreement around the Auto Pact, it has been preserved. It cannot be cancelled now without cancelling the FTA itself. Indeed, the agreement will expand free trade to include new sectors in the industry, replacement parts and tires.

• (1850)

Resource-Dependent Northern Ontario in particular has not always been able to share fully in the overall health of the Ontario economy. The reduction of tariffs, particularly of finished products, will help reverse that situation. It will expand export opportunities and provide increased scope for further processing in Canada of resource-based products.

[English]

Ontario farmers, whose output is the largest of all the provinces, will benefit by more secure access to U.S. markets. At the same time, the interests of the dairy, poultry, fresh fruit and vegetable producers have been safeguarded in this agreement and many more sectors stand to benefit as new opportunities arise to do business in the largest and richest market in the world, and that means new growth and new jobs.

We have also worked out something very interesting for all provinces, but especially for Ontario, a new code to cover trade in services, the first international agreement to accomplish this. At present, Canada's service industries employ 70 per cent of our labour force and are concentrated in Ontario. We know that the province is particularly strong in telecommunications, engineering, computer services, management consulting, insurance, and banking.

This is very important. When we think of trade we think of trucks filled with goods being taken across the border, but trade is also people with briefcases and training who can give advice, repair a product, or set it up. That will also be part of a new code for freer trade under this agreement. Much of Canada's future employment opportunities will spring from this service sector. Ensuring free trade in services will be crucial in providing further opportunities for people in all parts of the country.

Finally, I want to underline the fundamental importance of investment for the future of the Canadian economy. With or without the free trade agreement, Canadian business and industry can be competitive with the best in the world only by upgrading its capacity to produce high quality goods and services at an attractive price.

The key to improving that capacity is investment. The free trade agreement provides a powerful incentive for that. Many of the benefits which will flow from this free trade Bill are implicit in its provision. However, let us be clear that it is the response of Canadians to new opportunities that will determine just how successful this agreement will be. It is equally clear from the overwhelmingly positive response of Canadian business people that they are more than ready to meet the challenge.

Some opposition Members have made clear that they do not share the Government's confidence in this. They have not listened to the millions of confident Canadians who believe in their own ability to make the most of their opportunities. To those Members I say, look more closely at what Canadians have accomplished in the past three and a half years.

Ms. McDonald: You're selling out the country.

Mr. Hockin: Don't say we're selling out the country, look at what we have accomplished in response to the new approach that the Government has brought to economic policy. Look more closely at the competitive reality of the world we live in. Stop pretending that Canada can hide from that reality and still maintain the high standard of living and of public services which Canadians have come to expect.

Members opposite should stop dwelling on our weaknesses and insecurity of the past. They should start building on the strength and the confidence which will ensure Canada's economic future. They can begin that process by supporting this Bill.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, not the weakness and our insecurity about which we are concerned but the immense weakness and insecurity within this trade deal as far as the future of a country is concerned.

I would like to ask a set of questions of the Minister which tie together. The first is a fairly crucial question. The finance study suggested that there will be 120,000 new jobs after five years. That finance study was carried out at a time when the Canadian currency was significantly lower than it is now. I would be interested to know what the change in the job impact would be at the present value of our currency which, I believe, is up by about 7 cents.

I would also be interested in the Minister's comments on the latest business lobby which descended on Washington led by one Robert Beeby, the President of Pepsi Cola International who, among other things, said the agreement is almost ideal. He dismissed critics who say that Canada and the United States are creating a regional trading block. He said, "That's what it is, let's not hide behind it". He went on to say:

> I think ultimately we're probably going to have a linkage of the currencies. If we sign this treaty, you know this just has to be, doesn't it.

That linkage of currencies would very rapidly wipe out, in the very model which the Minister is using from the Finance Department, any of the benefits about which he was talking.

The last point I want to raise with the Minister is his incredible statement that the Auto Pact has been made stronger. He says that the Auto Pact, which was subject to a one-year cancellation, is now stronger because it is part of an agreement which is subject to a six-month cancellation. That is an interesting leap in logic, especially since there have been changes in the way in which the Auto Pact can be put into effect from our side which prevent us from putting the Asian and European car producers, who get a significant market share in this country, into the Auto Pact itself.

If they were part of the Auto Pact they would have to meet 60 per cent Canadian content. That would be 60 per cent Canadian jobs, parts producers, contracts, and so forth here in Canada. That is not something that is permitted any longer. It is a significant weakening of the Auto Pact along with the reduction of the tariff penalties which formerly supported the Pact.

I am especially surprised to hear the Minister say that, because he was chairperson of a committee which said in 1985 that the Auto Pact should not be touched. Yet the Auto Pact was very significantly changed. I would ask the Minister to explain that contradiction as well.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to respond to my hon. friend's question. He asks probing and serious questions which deserve a serious and extensive set of answers.

First, with regard to the currency, the study done by the Department of Finance pivoted, I believe—although I will have to get this verified—around an 80 or 85 cent dollar. He is asking what would happen to our competitiveness with the United States if the Canadian dollar went up higher. If he is suggesting that we should have a 50, 60, or 70 cent dollar secured forever, he will find very little support in Windsor or elsewhere for such a proposal.

In the first quarter of this fiscal year investment in Canada has been at record breaking heights. It was up by 17 per cent on an annualized basis in the first quarter. That is because of the great confidence people have in the Canadian economy. That means as well that we are importing more. As a matter of fact, our imports were up by 1.3 per cent over the first quarter of the previous year as compared with exports in which there was more than a 3 per cent increase over the first quarter of the previous year.

That has happened because there is so much confidence in our economy and our export performance is so strong that our dollar is strengthening. If free trade is a great success for Canada, the dollar will continue, little by little, to strengthen. This will, of course, be in relationship to the rest of the world. As we strengthen in relation to the rest of the world we can do what the Hon. Member has often told me we should do, that is, export outside of North America and be competitive against the rest of the world. Therefore, the strengthened Canadian currency is a result of confidence in the Canadian economy and nothing else.

The Member tied regional trading blocks to the issue of currency. He tried to create a scare by saying that we are trying to create a regional trading block which will eventually lead to a fixed currency vis-à-vis the United States. That is a hypothesis so remote that it really does not deserve an answer. First, we are not a market. We are not even negotiating a common market. The Hon. Member knows that the Common Market allows the free flow of labour and other elements of production besides goods and services. We are not negotiating that, and they do not even have fixed currencies among them. We are three or four steps from that.

The Hon. Member refers to the Americans. One moment they will believe the Canadian dollar is too low and the next they will say that it is too high. The Hon. Member may quote the President of Coca-Cola but he could quote someone else with a different view another month. They change, depending on the predicament they are facing. They do not want a Canadian dollar pegged to the American dollar. The Hon. Member could find just as many Americans, if not more, giving the opposite advice from what the Hon. Member just quoted.

The Hon. Member asked about Auto Pact cancellation. I listened carefully to him because he is from Windsor and has an interest in the Auto Pact. I noticed that he did not criticize too much what we have negotiated. He was somewhat worried about the rules of origin, but he did not mention that the rules of origin regulation will be on a stricter basis which, in fact, increases the amount of North American content.

It is also very interesting to note that he said the free trade agreement can be cancelled with six months' notice and therefore the Auto Pact is less safe than it was. He is admitting that the Auto Pact could be cancelled with one year's notice. The free trade agreement, which the Hon. Member has said will develop long-term structural relationships in this economy, will be very hard to change. That is what gives it much more permanence than six months. The Auto Pact is as secure as one could want, with its being included in the free trade agreement.

The Hon. Member asks about the Auto Pact in general. There is no doubt that this agreement improves upon the Auto Pact. We stated in the special joint committee report that we do not want the Auto Pact weakened. It is strengthened. I do not believe the Hon. Member is against strengthening the Auto Pact, which is what we have done.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what we heard in both official languages was a sophomoric, mellifluous 20-minute adoration of what the dollar stands for and how values relate to the dollar. During his speech the Minister carefully avoided saying how this trade deal will affect Canadian wine producers, how it will affect shoe and textile workers, and how it will affect the computer industry. More important, the Minister failed to address the basic issues that have been put on the table in discussing the trade deal itself.

It seems to me that the trade deal is a test of credibility of politicians in the first place. The House will recall the statements made in 1983 by two important political figures then and, even more important, now. They were the Leader of the Official Opposition and the finance critic at that time, both of whom took a position that has been widely quoted here and in other places in opposition to any trade deal with the United States. Therefore, this very debate includes a test of the credibility of politicians who take a stand in the opposition and reverse it 180 degrees when in power. What does that do to public opinion about our action? It certainly has an impact.

Second, the debate on the trade deal is one on values we hold dear as a society and as Canadians. On the one hand there is the mind set that only understands the dollar sign, as demonstrated this afternoon by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) in his speech. Nothing else counts except economic performance. That is the philosophical position that he and members of his Cabinet adhere to and which they have embraced in advancing this Bill.

The other side of the debate in dealing with Bill C-130 is not a question of the economy but a question of sovereignty. It is whether Canadians would hold more dear the notion of the dollar value or the value of sovereignty. That will be the test when we judge the very essence of this measure in the next election. The sooner there is an opportunity to do so by way of an election, the better. It is absolutely essential that this matter be debated and voted upon by Canadians during the next election, in light of the lack of credibility in statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), when they were in opposition.

Third, this debate on free trade puts before Canada a fundamental choice: The choice between going the route of continentalism as a nation, which has been rejected on a number of occasions in the last decades, or taking the multilateral trade path that allows us the advantages of trade through the GATT system with all nations of the globe.

Fourth, the debate on this Bill reveals the ineptness and incompetence on the environmental front of both the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) and the Government as a whole. This was demonstrated first by the complete silence of Environment Canada on the trade deal. It is one of the few Departments that has not produced any literature or document in support of the trade deal, and that should say quite a lot. Second, while the Minister of the Environment endorses the world commission report on environment and development, which is an environmental and economic report, while he endorses the National Task Force on the Environment and the Economy, he says that trade and the environment are not related and therefore has no comment to make about the trade deal with the United States.

Fifth, the debate on trade is one that exposes a massive energy sell-out on the part of the Government of Canada.

Mr. Hockin: Nonsense!

Mr. Caccia: The Minister says nonsense. I will put questions on the record and I will be very interested to hear his answers.

Sixth, and particularly important, it is a deal generating resistance by an increasing number of Canadians. That is mainly caused by the fact there are going to be losses in jobs because there will be, in the long term, a dismantling of our political powers and the uncertainty this trade deal is bringing about on the security of our social policies and programs. If we put together the basic elements that have to do with this trade deal, we can understand why the speeches of the Minister of State for Finance and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) are so disappointing and why 20 minutes is not enough to deal with this subject.

In the limited time available I will have to concentrate on the environment. It was in January, 1986 that the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council raised some questions with the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). The trade deal was just in its infancy at that time. It made some seven points, and I will briefly put them on record because they are interesting. These issues were raised, but they were never dealt with by the Government.

First, the council said there is an obligation for public consultation, input and education on the environmental implications of freer trade and the negotiations on which actions should be taken. What was done with that recommendation? Nothing. The council went on to say that there are no readily available comparative data on environmental standards and regulations in Canada and the United States and on the levels of implementation. It said that there is a need for comparative data on other environmental management programs, and urged that these be developed and established. This recommendation went by unnoticed.

Third, the council said that Canada should benefit from the experience of other nations in relation to the environmental implications of freer trade by reviewing the experience in other relevant areas such as the European Economic Community. Nothing happened on that.

Fourth, an expanded set of environmental principles was suggested by the council, which could be accepted and used as a guide by the negotiating teams during bilateral and multilateral negotiations. That recommendation went unheeded.

Fifth, the council said that to ensure that Canada's essential environmental concerns are protected, the Canadian negotiating team should be provided with a list of environmental non-negotiables. That was an eminently good suggestion which was not dealt with. It would have removed a number of anxieties and uncertainties that still exist here in this Chamber today. While the Government found it necessary to exempt beer, unprocessed fish and lumber, it did not include water in the exemptions. That is why we have this enormous question mark with respect to water. Why was water not included in the exemptions? I see the Minister walking out of the Chamber. Evidently, he has had enough.

This recommendation was made in January, 1986, not just a few months ago. Yet nothing happened. Nothing was acted upon. Finally, in view of the major role played by provincial Governments in renewable resources, which is a recognition of the constitutional reality of our country, environmental management and the commitment to provincial consultation, the council suggested that consideration should be given to discussions on the environmental implications of freer trade by the Canadian Council of Resource and Environmental Ministers. Unfortunately, and it is highly regrettable, all the suggestions contained in the report by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, which is now two and a half years old, went by unnoticed. No attention was paid to it.

What happens then? We examine the document which is now the object of our debate and we find, for instance, a chapter on pesticides. In that reference to pesticides in the trade deal, the word "harmonization" pops up several times. It is given an important position because there has to be eventually a coming together of regulations and standards. But the word "harmonization" is loose and floating in the air because no one knows how to interpret it. What does "harmonization of pesticides" mean? Will it mean the adoption of your rules and regulations, Mr. Speaker, or will it mean mine?

I am inclined to agree with the view expressed by the Canadian Environmental Law Association in Toronto. In its issue of November-December it states, on the question of harmonization of standards, that, given the greater size and power of the United States Government and industry lobbyists, the standards to be set are more likely to serve American interests than Canadian. The negotiation of the deal, with no consideration of the environmental impacts, can give us no confidence in our Canadian negotiators' ability to hang tough in the face of any future American pressures to reduce our standards where they are higher. Nor should we rely on them to institute new standards to protect our particular environment. Further, who will decide and on what criteria which U.S. goods meet the objectives of Canadian environmental standards?

These questions could have been dealt with and answered in a satisfactory manner, I submit, if the report of the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council had been heeded and implemented at the time it was put to the Minister over two years ago.

Also with respect to the environment, we asked at the time of Estimates a number of questions of the officials from the Department. Unfortunately, it turned out that they were given no leadership by the Minister. They were left alone to decide whether or not and to what extent there will be environmental impacts as a result of the trade deal. Therefore, the net consequence of that lack of leadership has been the fact that Environment Canada has not carried out one study, not even an internal study, to determine what will be the net effect of the trade deal on our natural resources, on our environmental standards, on our assessment procedures and on the pollution control measures that at the present time exist in Canada and which could come under pressure once the agreement becomes law.

The situation is so bad that in the January-February issue of the Network News by the Ontario Environmental Network publication, I find the following subtitle: "We are to become the suppliers of the raw materials which Americans need, having depleted many of their own resources". This is a commentary, of course, on the implications of the sharing of natural resources, which may be criticized, perhaps, but nevertheless is the result of the darkness in which Canadians have been left over time on questions of such importance, particularly those who are keen and active in the field of the environment.

Time forces me to move on and deal specifically with the question of energy. I was really hoping the Minister of State for Finance would still be here. He denied that under this trade deal we would be entering North American energy markets in which we will be giving away our natural resources in such an unheard of manner. I am quoting from a publication that came out of Edmonton published by the Council of Canadians on February 11, 1988. I am glad that there is a Member from the West on the government side listening to this. It put forward some of the basic questions which deserve to be put on the record, such as the following.

"What a foolish strategy to abandon our ability to attract new jobs and new investment through new petrochemical plants, fertilizer plants, chemical plants, and the attracting of new energy-intensive industry. All other countries in the world use their energy for a comparative advantage to attract new business and create new jobs and to diversify their economies".

"How ridiculous to say that we are now going to continue to sell energy below replacement cost. How absurd to agree to supply non-Canadians even if Canadians run short. How nonsensical to weaken our tests for Canadian long-range energy needs. How preposterous to abandon the aspirations for establishing a self-reliant trade policy. How utterly irresponsible to say that our elected Government can no longer charge fees to produce higher revenue for export of energy. How ridiculous to sign an agreement to guarantee the pro rata export of hundreds of thousands of barrels of fine quality, accessible, low-cost Alberta crude, and accept a firm limit of 50,000 barrels a day of unusable Alaska sludge in return".

"How foolish to abandon energy pricing as a means of aiding regional development in Canada, or to abandon the ability to have a two-price energy policy, one for domestic consumers and another for export. How nonsensical to bargain away the control of our natural resources in return to access to a market that will soon be pleading for more Canadian energy".

That is quite a list of relevant questions that the Government has not even started to address in this debate. I am looking forward to hearing from the western Conservative Members in tackling that position.

It is therefore no wonder that at this stage there are Canadians who are developing a resistance to this trade deal, a group of concerned Canadians which consists of people such as retired public servant Ed Gallant; George Ignatieff, the former Ambassador to the UN and Chancellor of the University of Toronto; John Halstead, a career diplomat who served as our Ambassador to West Germany and NATO; Roger Guindon, a former director of Ottawa University; Yves Dubé, former Dean of Social Science at Laval; Louis Blanchard, Director of the University of Moncton; Wallace McCain of McCain Foods, Farley Mowatt; and Mel Clark. These people are now developing opposition to the proposed trade deal because they see the destructive effect it will have on Canada's future as an independent nation.

What we are debating here is not a trade deal. We are here debating whether or not Canada should become integrated in North America and become part of a North American continental policy at the expense of the alternative that we have advanced in our Party, namely, a global approach, an approach that would enhance our capacity to reach out globally and not just within one continent.

Of course, to do that we need a national economic strategy, something which I am sure my colleagues in the course of debate will advance, flesh out and thus demonstrate that there is an alternative for Canada. The one that is being proposed by the present Government is not the road to go, namely, to withdraw behind the walls of fortress North America and abandon the rest of the globe, creating the impression that in North America alone lies our future. We are already sufficiently dependent on trade with the United States. If anything, we should find ways of expanding our interests and putting our eggs in many more baskets. We should ensure first and foremost that we do not abandon our capacity to define and determine our economic and political destiny.

This Bill is infringing upon the future of our capacity to make decisions that affect our independence and our ability to determine our future as a nation. In that sense, we would be committing a very serious mistake by adopting it.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I simply cannot let my friend get away with some of those comments, which were really quite outrageous. He knows better in his own mind. He surely remembers that the Depression of the 1930s was not really brought on by the climatic disaster we faced in the West. It was brought on when the United States Congress put tariffs up by over 40 per cent. Every other country in the world had to respond. Everyone was impoverished. In this country there were tens of thousands of young men and women who travelled back and forth across the country because they could not get a job. Why could they not get a job? Because no one could afford to purchase products. In 1935, Canada and the United States signed the agreement that started to reduce those tariffs. Jobs started to be created. The war came along. After the war we got into GATT.

The tariffs have moved from over 40 per cent down to something in the order of 9 per cent, which is now the average Canadian tariff. Every time we reduced those tariffs, more Canadians went to work.

The magic of trade between nations is that the wealth of everyone rises. It is during that reduction of those tariffs that we have generated enough wealth in the country that this Parliament could make independent sovereign decisions to bring in medicare, family allowances, social welfare programs and all sorts of regional development programs. The wealth of every Canadian has increased as a result of that.

The reality is that the U.S. Congress is becoming more and more protectionist. Everyone acknowledges that. If it drives those tariffs up again, we will lose jobs. It is one thing to say that we might go into a global situation, and I would like my friend to comment on that, but the fact of the matter is that the world is coming increasingly under trading blocs, pursuant to GATT. It is legal under GATT for two or more nations to get into a free trade agreement. Seventy-one nations in the world have got into free trade agreements. Not one has ever backed out of a free trade agreement. In every instance the smaller nation has benefited more than the greater one.

Ms. McDonald: They were not energy giveaways.

Mr. Thacker: Indeed with respect to Europe, and my friend is intimately aware of this, not only is there a free trade agreement, there is a customs union and a common market, which by 1992 will have 320 million people locked into a trading arrangement. Yet would anyone say that an Italian is any less Italian? That is just ludicrous. We are Canadian because we have a unique history in terms of our Constitution, our politics and our religion. We have a school system that is different. We have bilingualism and multiculturalism.

Ms. McDonald: And they are all threatened.

Mr. Thacker: All of these things will keep us Canadian.

There is nothing in the free trade agreement that stops Parliament from imposing taxes on our own people to do what we want to do that is uniquely Canadian. There is nothing in the free trade agreement that stops us from increasing taxes on ourselves. If we want to pay more to be able to tax money into the centre in order to fund a health care system, then we are entitled to do that, in the same way the Americans are free to leave the taxes in the hands of their people and to pay it directly. We happen to think that we are better.

I have one comment to make. In the environment field I want to assure my friend that Canada's ability to introduce environmental standards has not been affected by the FTA. There is no requirement in the FTA to harmonize environmental standards. The introduction of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, which strengthens provisions for safeguarding the environment against toxic substances, is concrete proof that the federal Government is committed to taking whatever measures are required to protect the environment. Canadian standards are equal or higher than those of the Americans, and there is nothing in the FTA that will drive that down.

I will not go on because I do not want to abuse my privilege to comment. However, I could get into the energy sector and show my friend how it was that his Party, which destroyed tens of thousands of jobs in western Canada as a result of an ill-conceived national energy policy, was not prepared to put on its own people in Ontario and Quebec in terms of electricity. Nor was he ever prepared to sell an automobile for one cent less than world price to us in the West? Yet he expected westerners to sell energy to him and his people for less than world price. We will never forget that, and we will never forgive.

• (1930)

Mr. Caccia: The Hon. Member states that there is no requirement to harmonize under the so-called free trade agreement. I must object to that statement which is incorrect and misleading. I am sure that the Hon. Member did not do it on purpose. Under the schedule for pesticides, Schedule 7, the word "harmonize" is used in the text of that schedule more than five times. By virtue of the presence of the word "harmonize", therefore, there is a reference to a requirement to harmonize. Evidently the Hon. Member has not read that section of the agreement.

Second, the question is one of profound difference as to what type of trade policies we want to have. On this side of the House we believe in diversifying our markets, not in retreating behind the four walls of continentalism. That is the difference between the Hon. Member and myself.

He started very well by making a strong case for GATT in his historical review as to what happened after the thirties, and we fully agree on that. GATT has been good for Canada. Why abandon GATT at this stage? Why not maintain our policy of diversification on markets? Does the Hon. Member realize that between 1984 when his Government came to power, and now, we have lost trade opportunities, and we have lost millions of dollars in exports to the Pacific Rim? Our exports have gone down because of our obsession with the U.S. market.

Does the Hon. Member realize that we have been retreating on almost every continent since 1984, because we abandoned the diversification policy of Canadian exports to concentrate only on the North American continent? That is where we differ. The Hon. Member has a profound belief that we should wallow in the comfort of a market in North America which, by indication of the basic statistics, is already on the decline. This is a retreat from the global scene. Instead, we should be taking a completely different tack. Instead of retreating within North America, we should be expanding and intensifying our efforts on all continents, and develop a policy of trade expansions and marketing policies all over the world. We are not. We have been retreating since 1984. We have been losing foreign markets. That is the reality.

If the Hon. Member denies that fact, then I would urge him to look at the statistics from Statistics Canada, which cannot be accused of being a figment of the imagination of the Opposition, and verify for himself what has happened in the last four years to Canadian exports. That is the result of the retreat and the mind set of the Government of today which believes that the future of Canada lies within North America, at the expense of the other opportunities that are waiting for us on other continents.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for questions and comments has expired. Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton East on a question or comment.

Mr. Lesick: I was listening with keen interest to the dissertation of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and the twisting of the ideals of free trade. We are supposed to be retreating into continentalism, or within our continent. We are not. We are ensuring that we do not lose trade in order that hundreds and hundreds of wood workers in British Columbia do not lose their jobs. We are endeavouring to agree on free trade and assured trade with the Americans so that we can work together with the Americans. They are our greatest customer, despite our greatest efforts to trade with the European Economic Community, Japan, the Pacific Rim, and China. In China we are increasing our trade, but we are having difficulties because of the protectionism within the European Economic Community. In some areas we are trading less. We are working harder than ever to trade with them. But at the same time let us not be blind and let us not think negatively about our greatest trading partner, the wealthiest country in the world.

As a Government we would be doing a disservice to the people of Canada if we, through looking far away, forgot our neighbour, overlooked our neighbour, and did not appreciate the fact that it has the wealth, the desire, the ability, and the need for Canadian products. Whether those products are manufactured in central Canada, or whether they are national resources, natural gas, oil, gasoline, petrol products from the West, lumber from Alberta, British Columbia, and from the central provinces, the Americans want them. They are asking for them. Why should we turn away from that?

The Hon. Member talks of the environment. In the last four years we have done more for the environment together with the Americans in a positive manner. We have worked hard. In November, 1987, the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement was renewed. The federal Government of Canada, the Government of the United States, the New York State Government, and the Ontario Government signed an agreement toward resolving the problem of toxic chemicals in the Niagara River. Two months later the Government announced a series of Canada-U.S. bilateral measures to deal with the problems caused by the high level of the Great Lakes.

We are constantly working with our neighbours for the betterment of Canada, for the betterment of the United States, for the betterment of all peoples here. It is important that we work together. We have and they need, therefore this trade is essential. The free trade agreement between the United States and Canada will solidify prosperity in Canada through increased trade.

Any country that trades is successful. Any country that trades becomes richer. We want to ensure the existence of this trade. That is why the Hon. Member knows, deep down, that without trading with the Americans, Canada will lose over one million jobs. I ask the Hon. Member, why does he not admit that free trade is better than what he is suggesting, global trade with people who cannot afford our products and who do not buy? This is where we trade. We want assured trade, and that is what this is all about.

Mr. Caccia: It would take too long to deal with every item raised by the Hon. Member. Coming from Alberta, I wonder if the Hon. Member is not upset to learn from the text of the agreement that we are at the eve of signing an agreement guaranteeing the pro rata export of hundreds of thousands of barrels of fine quality, accessible, low-cost Alberta crude oil, and accept a firm limit of 50,000 barrels a day of unusable Alaska sludge in return. How does that grab him as an Alberta Member? Does that convince him that this is a great deal with the Americans?

Moving to the other point the Hon. Member made, does he not realize that the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement has been with us for a number of years, long before the Government and his Party were elected to power? Does he have any historical sense of what has happened in this country in the last few decades? Does he really believe that it is in Canada's interest to retreat behind the four walls of the North American continent and to tell the rest of the world that we are just part of this North American region and eventually we will be swallowed up by the larger of the two partners? Is that the kind of vision the Hon. Member has for his children and his grandchildren?

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the debate on the so-called free trade agreement, Bill C-130, is a debate about the future of our country. It is a debate as to whether we will continue as an independent and distinctive country with the powers and capacity to make the decisions we want to make to control our environment, natural resources, culture and social programs and to provide jobs for Canadians from coast to coast and stimulate development in regions that have high rates of unemployment. It is about our capacity to make our decisions ourselves.

In effect, Bill C-130 is a constitutional amendment that itself cannot be amended and that will change the course of our history for the rest of time. Yet it is not being debated as such, it is being disguised as simply a trading arrangement with our American partners.

Many church groups, unions, voluntary organizations, women's groups and environmentalists have protested this trade deal. I simply want to refer to a statement made by one such group, the Anglican Church of Canada, incidentally my own church, which I think symbolizes very well what is at the core of what is wrong with this trade agreement. Four points were made in the Anglican Church's condemnation of the free trade agreement and its urging of federal reassessment of it.

> Economic plans must not affect negatively the most vulnerable members of our Canadian society or of our global family.

Surely it is the most vulnerable who will be affected, the people in regions which are economically underdeveloped and the people who depend vitally on social programs.

> Economic or social agreements should not be undertaken if they limit society's members from making future decisions on behalf of the common good.

We will be limited in the decisions that we can make in the future and certainly limited in the decisions we can make for the common good, because it will not be our society through our elective representatives who will make these decisions. It will be market forces and dispute settlement panels.

> Economic agreements should not be undertaken which reduce our ability as a society to be good stewards of our environment and rich heritage of natural resources.

There are serious environmental implications in the agreement. Natural resources including non-renewable resources will be treated as ordinary commodities, as widgets to be traded across our borders. They will not be regarded as part of our heritage, part of the environment that must be protected and over which future generations have a very reasonable and just claim.

Finally, > ordinary citizens must be allowed an opportunity to understand what is at stake and to take part in a meaningful way in decisions of major importance.

That too is one of the aspects of the betrayal in this trade deal. Ordinary Canadians have not had the opportunity to understand this. Even the Premiers were deceived about vital aspects of the so-called trade arrangement.

People have not had a chance to go over the agreement. It is complicated. It requires books and books and appendices and appendices. The Government of Canada has not dealt squarely with Canadians. It has hidden the deal by calling it one that is merely about trade. It turned out to be not just about trade in goods but also in energy, investment, culture, services and social programs.

It is about how the federal and provincial Governments will or will not get along together, because in future, if the trade deal goes through, it will be the federal Government that will be bossing the provinces and municipalities and enforcing the trade agreement on behalf of the United States, the other party to the agreement. The federal Government will be forcing compliance on the provincial, municipal and territorial Governments. Indeed, if there is ever Indian self-government, Indians too will be affected because all these rights are given away in this shameless deal called the free trade agreement.

One of the worst parts of this deal is the part dealing with energy. That is one of the surprises in the deal. People did not know that continental energy would be part of the arrangement. It was supposed to be a deal involving manufactured goods and other ordinary subjects of trading arrangements that other countries have entered into. It was certainly not supposed to be about continental energy.

Even some of the advocates of the trade deal are worried about energy supply. The Ontario Natural Gas Association favours the trade deal because it can see that there will be opportunities to make money of it. We know that the owners and suppliers have interests which are very different from those of the consumers, just as the banks love service charges, but are they good for consumers? Money that can be made by selling non-renewable resources as a commodity is certainly to the advantage of the companies, but it is not to the advantage of consumers and it is certainly not to the advantage of young Canadians who will have to grow older in a very cold climate and in a country that needs its fuel resources very badly.

This advocate of the deal, the Ontario Natural Gas Association, nonetheless points out what the disadvantages of it are for Canadians. In effect, while the National Energy Board retains the authority to review export applications and to identify potential inequities or market anomalies, its ability to act appears to be severely limited. Once we start selling it, we will have to keep selling it. Proportionate reduction of this supply is permitted, but proportionate reduction is not quite as proportionate as one might think.

Canada now supplies approximately 5 per cent of the total natural gas consumption in the United States, whereas virtually the entire Canadian market is dependent on domestic supply. A 10 per cent reduction in natural gas supplies would affect fully 10 per cent of the Canadian market compared with only 0.6 per cent of the United States market in national terms. If we have to conserve our resources because of some kind of crisis, it would be only fair to cut back proportionately. It will not be fair, though. The cut-back for Canadians is very much greater than it is for Americans because they have other suppliers. We can hurt ourselves, but they will be largely untouched. It is a deal that is very much to their advantage but not to the advantage of Canadians.

In effect, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement creates a North American market for natural gas. The U.S. currently has a 10-year reserves-to-production ratio, while Canada has 30 years. If the United States has equal, unfettered access to Canadian supplies, the result is a combined 13-year ratio. We do not believe Canadians have yet realized that their natural gas supply security margin could overnight be more than cut in half, and this Government has not been square with Canadians and told them that.

The same could be said for conventional oil. I will not go into that example because there is not time, but that is a disaster too. Canadians do not know that the supply we have is a very fragile one and it will not last or we will have to go very much farther afield to areas which are much more difficult to work in.

The association says that it does not believe that sufficient consideration has been given to the impact of a rapid increase in the number of long-term, large volume contractual arrangements. This is a very serious matter indeed. Potential shortfalls could occur by the close of this decade. Has the Government talked to Canadians fairly about that? Yet we are treating this as an unlimited supply of a resource that we want to give away cheaply.

Another aspect of betrayal that Canadians did not know was in the trade deal and had to find out by reading the fine print over a period of time had to do with water. Water is not supposed to be in the trade deal, we were told by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). He said, before the full text had been revealed: "The subject of water has never been negotiated in the free trade talks. The subject of water is not part of the free trade agreement, nor will it be". However, water is in the free trade agreement. Article 409 says that once you start to export a good you have to continue to export it. Anyone who begins to export will be obligated to continue.

The schedule to the trade agreement, Tariff Item 22.02, includes waters. The Minister responsible for International Trade tries to make a joke of it and make it sound as though we were only talking about soda water and fizzy pop. That is not so. We are talking about regular water; rivers, lakes, tankers full of water, water that we very badly need as well.

Once a mistake is made it cannot be unmade. One of the very bad parts of this deal is that it freezes those kinds of decisions. Instead of the situation of having a government which can be thrown out and replaced by another government which will change the policy, this decision will be permanent.

This is a subject about which I think our Liberal friends ought to be a little embarrassed because they have talked rather freely about the desirability of water exports and water in the trade deal. This is a subject absolutely vital to our environment. Yet there is no provision in the trade deal for protecting our water sources for purposes of protecting the environment. That is not allowed. It will be treated as any other ordinary commodity.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-130 is no ordinary Bill. It is an amendment to the Canadian Constitution. This amendment affects twenty-seven Acts of Parliament. It is an amendment that involves a reduction in powers at the federal, provincial and municipal levels. The federal Government, which is party to the agreement, will become the U.S. Administration's agency for implementing the agreement.

The Premier of Quebec favours the FTA. He says that his Government will make the requisite legislative amendments, and that the federal Government would not have to force him to do so. But what do we do tomorrow, about free trade and the present Quebec Government's policies? If these change, what do we do? The FTA constitutes a freeze on political change in this country. Once that choice is made, we can no longer make any changes. However, a government has no right to tie down future governments.

It is antidemocratic. People should have the right to replace a government and its policies with another government and other policies, something that would no longer be possible after the FTA is signed. The federal Government, supported by the Province of Quebec, will tie all future governments: federal, provincial and municipal. The issues involved are important and include energy, investment, culture, social programs and regional economic development. What if a Quebec government wants to launch a social program? What if it wants to promote economic development in a disadvantaged region? It would have to ask the federal Government to make new representations to the U.S. Administration. We would have to consider whether the proposed development constituted unfair subsidies under the terms of the agreement. This is against the level playing field principle. We would have to consider whether the measure constituted a monopoly prohibited under articles 2010 and 2011.

In that case, economic retaliatory measures by the United States are to be expected. Or the province may be ordered to compensate the U.S. companies involved for their loss of business, including any future losses. In any case, it won't be Quebec or Canada that will decide but the Canada-U.S. Trade Commission. Canada does not have a majority on this Commission, and Quebec would not be represented.

The sovereignty of Quebec is endangered along with Canadian sovereignty. Any government will lose the power to make decisions for its citizens. It would be a victory for the private sector and its values and a defeat for the people and the values of our society, especially social solidarity.

With the Meech Lake Accord, Quebec will again join the Canadian Constitutional family. How ironic! Quebec is joining the Constitution at the same time as the Constitution is being weakened by free trade. The men and women of Quebec must say no to this Agreement with the United States. We say yes to Meech Lake, yes to cooperation between the federal Government and Quebec and no to selling out our political sovereignty to the Americans!

[English]

This is profoundly a question of constitutional change. I think the Attorney General of Ontario put it very well in his analysis of the impact of the deal. He said:

> What does this mean to federal-provincial relations within Canada? The agreement threatens our traditional system in part by inserting a third party, the United States, with the right to insist on legal solutions to problems of economic regulation, problems that Canadians have tended to settle among themselves without recourse to legal remedies . . . The present agreement may effectively require that many provincial policies be approved by the United States before they are put in effect.

That is a shocking intrusion into the normal way in which we conduct ourselves in this country, the normal, co-operative arrangements with which we have achieved all of our social programs—sitting down, negotiating, and figuring out something which suits Canadians and Canadian conditions. I quote further:

> The free trade agreement between Canada and the United States has an extensive impact on the power of the provinces to control their economy. This impact is not merely incidental or temporary but involves a systematic reduction of the freedom of Canadians to make policy.
> As a consequence, the agreement effects a change of constitutional dimensions in federal-provincial relations in Canada, even though it does not touch the wording of the Constitution . . . The ability of the United States to insist on legal rights where Ottawa and the provinces have often compromised and co-operated fundamentally alters the Canadian tradition.

That is what is so profoundly wrong with this agreement. It changes how we do things. It changes the Canadian way, the way of solidarity, the way of co-operation. We do not want the law of the jungle. We do not want legal remedies and market forces determining everything. We do not want American crime rates. We cannot have it both ways. If we want to have our kind of society, we have to pay the price, and we have done so with our social programs. You cannot have the law of the jungle and do it that way.

I am sorry to say that there have not yet been any Conservatives who have bolted from the caucus. There have not been any who remember the Canada of Sir John A. Macdonald, the Canada of using the state creatively to find solutions to our problems. That has not happened.

However, I appeal to Conservatives across the country who did not vote for this Government in order to give it a mandate to bring in free trade, to Conservatives who love their country, to realize that it must now be saved by throwing out the Government. The Government is not going to vote free trade down. It has the power and is using closure. It is going to get free trade through. Perhaps the Senate will slow the process down, but the Government, with no mandate to do so, nonetheless has the power to change our Constitution forever if it gets away with it.

I hope that many Conservatives will regret the decision they made to bring in this Government. I hope they will see the betrayal of trust in so many ways, in patronage, lack of honesty, and lack of openness in all of these respects. I hope that these Canadians will want to keep Canada Canadian and will change their vote in the next election.

When they are deciding between the Liberals and the New Democrats I urge them to be very careful because the Liberals are not so sure about where they stand on trade. A former Liberal Minister of Finance was one of the instigators of it, and the Liberals in Quebec are supporting it actively. If Canadians want to be sure that this deal is defeated, they must support the New Democratic Party because we will tear up this deal.

In a few seconds remaining to me, Mr. Speaker, let me say that this is a profound decision about the future of our country. We are not urging that the status quo remain. We are talking about having the power and the ability to change and to adapt to changing conditions. The world is changing and we must change in response to it. However, we must have the power to do that. This free trade Bill, C-130, takes those powers away from the federal and the provincial Governments. We must defeat the free trade deal, if not in the House, at the next election.

• (2000)

Mr. Lesick: Mr. Speaker, I listened with rapt interest as the Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) gave her dissertation about her Party's view of what they believe Canada should be like. I share her concern that we must look after our social programs.

The previous government, together with the New Democratic Party, gave us many social programs and spent money like it was water under the bridge. As our deficit ever increased, they never said how they would pay for their programs.

Our Government agrees that we need social programs, but we will pay for them. In the last Budget we were a fraction of a percentage point within paying for all our debts, including all our social programs. We can only look after our social programs with strength, trade, good management and employment. We cannot pay for our social programs with wishful thinking or myopic views whereby we look after ourselves and no one can touch us. We will only be vassals of the Americans if we are weak and think only of ourselves.

We have proven that we are stronger today than ever before as a result of good management of the economy which this Government is providing for the first time in 40 years. We can address all the concerns the Hon. Member has raised by good management, and a free trade agreement that allows greater trade with the strongest nation in the world, the United States.

The Hon. Member's figures dealing with energy are fictitious. We have more oil reserves in Alberta than all the Middle East combined. A 30 or 40-year oil supply is a figment of her imagination. We have enough oil in Alberta itself to supply the United States and Canada until our grandchildren are grandmothers and grandfathers. We only have to develop it and sell it. Furthermore, we control what we sell. It is only given away if we are weak and myopic. Nothing is given away by this free trade agreement. It is a guarantee to provide our citizens with prosperity and the opportunity to work while controlling our destiny.

The Hon. Member talked about social programs and energy. We need to provide leadership through knowledge, and good business and labour management so that Canadians will have confidence that we can trade effectively not only with the Americans but with the rest of the world.

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have seldom heard such nonsense in many of the points that were made. I will attempt to answer them.

The Hon. Member talked about controlling the deficit when, in fact, there are still deficits in the area of $30 billion in Conservative budgets every year. A good example of social programs and deficit control is CCF and NDP Saskatchewan governments which pioneered social programs and reduced the public debt. They proved it is possible to have humane and fair government while balancing the budget. I challenge anyone to follow the example of Tommy Douglas and his successors there.

The Hon. Member talked about oil. My examples concerned natural gas and social programs because I only have 20 minutes in this debate to talk about the future of Canada. One cannot cover all the issues. While I chose to talk about natural gas, oil is another question.

The Hon. Member believes that there is an ample supply of oil. That may be true when one includes such far-away places as the Beaufort Sea and other fragile areas in terms of the environment, the tar sands where oil is difficult to retrieve, and oil in the offshore where it may ruin the fishery. The large amounts of oil about which the Hon. Member talks are not readily available.

The Hon. Member said oil would be available until our grandchildren grow up. I remind him that civilizations have lasted for thousands of years and the sun will not burn out for another four billion years. He should not set his sights so short as to say that the oil companies should sell off all the oil in two generations. We are talking about shortages within the next 10 years, which is a dangerous prospect. Although the Hon. Member suggests that there is a lot of easily available energy resources, they are non renewable resources for which even the oil companies predict there will be shortages within the next 10 years.

Even the producer provinces are disadvantaged by this trade deal. The Constitution clearly specifies that these natural resources are under provincial jurisdiction. Yet their right to control these resources is being taken away by this trade deal. They will not have the opportunity to charge lower prices within the province to stimulate economic development and create jobs. They will lose power to create manufacturing while we will be more dependent on selling the resources quickly at the lowest possible price. I suggest that is not a wise use of natural resources.

The Hon. Member brags about social programs. His Party opposed every one of them and only gradually came on board when public opinion polls showed they would be thrown out if they continued to oppose them. Indeed, the Conservatives moved to deindex the family allowance and tried to deindex the Old Age Pension. The Conservatives lost an election over the Old Age Pension because the Senate turned it down. This Conservative Government would have been thrown out if it continued its plan to deindex the Old Age Pension.

Social programs were on the table and were referred to as disciplining monopolies by the Americans. I do not begrudge the Americans their way of operating. The United States is a sovereign country and can do what it wants. However, we have chosen to do things differently in Canada and we have our social programs, including the Old Age Pension, Canada Pension Plan, Family Allowance, unemployment insurance and medicare. We would not have had medicare if a free trade agreement was in place at that time.

Social programs are challenged in several ways. One is the unfair subsidy section of the deal. We will not know for some five to seven years whether the Americans will consider these as fair or unfair subsidies.

They are also challenged under the monopoly section of the free trade deal. I hope other Members will address that aspect, in which provincial governments must beg the federal Government to make representations to the Americans. They may be ordered to compensate American companies for loss of business because profits to corporations are the most important consideration in the free trade deal, not services to people or planning a humane society. If an American corporation will lose money, then it is a violation of the free trade deal. That could interfere with social programs. This free trade agreement is a travesty. It is inhumane and should not be allowed.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this evening to take part in a debate that is very important to this country. Free trade with the United States is neither a luxury nor an intellectual exercise. It merely states the obvious. First of all, Quebec sends two-thirds of its exports to the United States. Second, two million jobs depend directly on our trade with our neighbours to the South. Third, our access to this market of 250 million people must be protected and guaranteed by an official and duly-signed agreement.

Of course, our opponents got carried away by their rhetoric. They maintain that we are selling Canada's independence in order to gain access to the U.S. market. Mr. Speaker, Canada exists by the will of its citizens, and we underestimate Canadians if we think their will is particularly vulnerable.

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was not signed on a whim. It was the fruit of careful negotiations during which we did not give in on essential matters.

The agreement does not put any restrictions on grants to businesses or on regional development. Marketing boards will continue to exist, which means that Canada will retain the right to determine its agricultural marketing programs.

The agreement also provides for a dispute settlement mechanism. As for the adjustments that will be necessary in certain businesses, my colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and I announced the creation of an advisory committee on adjustment last January. Mr. Speaker, the committee chaired by Mr. Jean de Grandpré will ensure that Canadians take advantage of the new opportunities offered by free trade, while identifying any adjustment problems that may arise.

• (2010)

The agreement signed with the United States provides the catalyst Canadian business needed to go the extra mile and rise to new heights. With the agreement, Canadians and Quebecers have gained secure and permanent access for their products in key sectors, including agriculture, resource processing, manufacturing, energy and services, all of which will be given a fresh boost.

More secure access to the U.S. market will make Canadian industries more dynamic, more innovative and more competitive, because being able to count on access to this market will give investors the necessary confidence to create new companies, consolidate existing ones and meet the competitive challenge.

The economic impact of the FTA has already been assessed. Experts at the Department of Finance predict an increase of 2.5 per cent in the real income of Canadians. This represents $12 billion more in the Canadian economy and the creation of at least 120,000 new jobs over the next five years.

Mr. Speaker, it is up to the investors and the entrepreneurs, to this country's businessmen and women, to make these figures come true.

Free trade is a challenge, not for government, but for all Canadians who will have to make sure they get the most out of this agreement.

Mr. Speaker, for four years Canada's economy has outclassed the economies of all other major industrialized countries in terms of growth and job creation. We want to use free trade to secure the future economic development of this country.

Mr. Speaker, speaking of job creation, I wish to point out that as Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, I am very interested in small and medium-sized business, needless to say. While big corporations have been streamlining their operations for several years now, small and medium-sized businesses have taken up the slack and are the real driving force of the economy throughout Canada. These companies with less than 100 employees account for 99 per cent of all Canadian companies and 70 per cent of jobs created, on average. Furthermore, they generally spend more on research and development, proportionately, than big corporations.

It is therefore not surprising that they can adjust quickly to technological changes and also transform their industrial infrastructure very rapidly if market conditions change suddenly.

So, Mr. Speaker, I listen to small businesses. Naturally, I talk to them about free trade and do you know what they tell me, these men and women who one would think would be vulnerable and afraid? They are eager for tariff barriers to come down completely. They are eager to see a significant reduction in non-tariff barriers. Yes, these men and women want to take on new markets in the United States and then new markets elsewhere. They have been preparing for months to face this new challenge.

These business men and women are looking for new forms of partnership with the Americans, and also with other countries. They are searching for new markets. In short, they are eager to diversify and broaden their customer base.

My colleague, the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism and Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Valcourt), agrees with this; it is his role to defend the interests of small business in Cabinet. Neither he nor I have met systematic resistance to free trade, quite the contrary! Our small businesses have learned to be increasingly competitive. Believe me, Mr. Speaker, they are more than eager to fight on a new trade front, and why not! In many fields already, there is a kind of free trade.

The Canadian and U.S. markets present opportunities shown by these rough figures: 80 per cent of our Canadian exports go to our southern neighbors, while 70 per cent of our imports come from the United States. And I will say something that we too often seem to forget: four fifths of our exports to that country are duty-free. So why a free trade treaty, you will ask me. It is to complete the picture and to ensure access to a market of 250 million consumers. It is to make sure that we can continue to deal with the Americans, and rather than charge into it, we will have 10 years for both sides to adjust.

The complete lowering of tariff barriers will therefore be the end of a long process. The purchasing power of Canadians will gradually increase over the period, by 3 to 12 per cent, according to economists who have estimated the impact of free trade on the standard of living of our fellow citizens.

Have you thought about what salary increase you would need to increase your net purchasing power by 3 to 12 per cent? We will achieve these gains with the help of the country's small and medium-sized businesses that will have to be more productive and offer consumers a wider choice of products. This is also true for U.S. consumers, because they too will have access to more Canadian goods, from which they will of course benefit. One must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that in any agreement, especially one dealing with trade, both partners' interests must be satisfied. Just because Canada will derive great benefits from free trade does not mean that the United States is not entitled to something in return!

I would also like to point out that one provision of the Agreement facilitates the two-way movement of several occupational groups between Canada and the United States. In fact, it is a set of clauses that are very favorable to the service industries, in other words, the products and services that support exports.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on how I see the economic outlook. At the same time, the enterprising spirit that the Government of Canada is always trying to encourage will be stimulated by the prospect of an almost completely open American market; this will contribute to job creation and consolidate Canada's trading base. And a sounder economy automatically means stronger national finances. Citizens who are better able to take charge of their affairs will, I am sure, become better Canadians. Men and women who are more sure of themselves and their abilities and much more certain of their future and their children's and grandchildren's.

The Free Trade Agreement also guarantees us the privilege of keeping our social programs and the right to launch new ones. In short, Mr. Speaker, we will continue to do as we please in our own country. And that, to my mind, is the best definition of sovereignty.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, farmers in the main fruit and vegetable-growing regions expressed some doubts about their ability to adapt to the new rules. We therefore agreed to the temporary restoration of customs duties for these crops over a 20-year period, if these growers experience hardship due to the transition.

The Government negotations have never been one-sided. We consulted the representatives of the major farmers' associations and we really took their demands to the negotiating table as much as possible.

Again, I would like to summarize briefly the four main objectives of our negotiations with the United States. First, guaranteed access to the U.S. market; second, trade rules that will eliminate improvisation; third, a binational mechanism for speedy settlement of our respective national problems; and fourth, maintaining our institutions that reflect our indentity.

Mr. Speaker, these objectives have been realized. They are the very backbone of the Bill before the House today. These objectives, now that they have been realized, are the cornerstone of the future for generations to come.

Mr. Speaker, today I want to appeal to the solidarity of all Canadians. Let us forget our differences, and once we have this unprecedented agreement with our most important trading partner, we can legitimately aspire to take our place among world trade leaders. I am convinced that this first step will pave the way for any further developments we may wish to add. Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, depends on today's plans.

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology and Member for Berthier—Maskinongé—Lanaudière. He is not often referred to in those terms, Mr. Speaker, but the Federal Liberals and Canada's New Democrats claim that Canada will lose its right to have regional development programs. However, not long ago, the Minister announced a joint program with Quebec for remote regions. The purpose of this program is to help the regions in Quebec, both the outlying and central regions.

Mr. Speaker, I can say that our vast region, including the two other Members, gave this new program an enthusiastic reception. I am sure the Liberals must have been very embarrassed, considering the fact that they completely neglected this region for twenty years because they thought it was too big.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, these are obvious plants, as they say, but the Hon. Member's comments are not relevant to the debate on free trade. I would ask him to stick to free trade and stop making propaganda for the Conservative Government.

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to plants, but I see my personal notes and that is what counts.

An Hon. Member: They are ashamed!

Mr. St-Julien: Mr. Speaker, when we talk about this shameful situation that lasted for twenty years, we see them rising in the House and reacting, especially one Member from Montreal who never set foot in this great Northern region.

To get back to this program which represents an injection of $91 million in Abitibi, Témiscamingue, Pontiac, Gatineau and Labelle, comments received thus far from the three Members concerned were that people were really enthusiastic about this joint program with the Province of Quebec. In addition to this new program, other opportunities are being offered to entrepreneurs in my region and throughout Quebec and I am referring to free trade. My own riding gets the full benefit of open and direct access to the U.S. market. The United States are our biggest market, and the FTA will make that market secure. Mr. Speaker, if we really take the trouble to read the agreement and understand it, we notice that Quebec, and of course Abitibi, Témiscamingue, Pontiac, Gatineau and Labelle, have everything to gain under free trade, as was pointed out by the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Robert Bourassa, and by the majority of Quebecers.

I would like to ask the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion what other regional development initiatives he will be announcing very shortly, such as the recent announcement of the creation of this new department.

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to comment briefly on my colleague's remarks. I would like to suggest that his comments were very relevant to the debate, because a few minutes ago we heard comments from the Opposition that regional development was clearly affected by the free trade deal. Of course this is not the case. It is not the case when we look at this Government's program that has a tremendous stake in regional development, as evidenced by the Bill establishing the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

Let me summarize briefly, Mr. Speaker, some of the initiatives we have taken over the last year on regional development: we can refer to the Atlantic Agency, the Western Diversification Program, the Northern Ontario Regional Development Program, in addition to the more than $1 billion program that has finally been announced jointly with Quebec just recently, a program that was being negotiated at the same time we were negotiating free trade. So there we have a program and a series of initiatives that clearly show the legislation now before the House in no way hinders the Government's ability, alone or jointly with Provincial Governments to undertake new and major initiatives concerning regional development.

I would also like to emphasize that the free trade deal, as submitted in the legislation, in no way hinders Provincial Governments nor the Canadian Government under those agreements to extend grants to corporations in the same way various levels of Government could do before, should I say, the proclamation of the legislation now before the House.

Therefore, on those two levels, I would like to reassure Hon. Members opposite—there is absolutely no danger for Canada, there is absolutely no obstacle to the freedom of action of the Canadian and provincial Governments in those areas.

• (2030)

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: I have listened to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. de Cotret)—who also wears a few other ministerial hats. I would very much like to believe the Minister. I would like to believe the Government. I would like to feel comforted that my concerns as a Canadian, and general Canadians out there, are being protected and considered by you and your Government when you go to negotiate.

Mr. Fretz: Order.

Mrs. Finestone: What I would like to know from you, Mr. Minister—

Mr. Fretz: Order.

Mr. Rossi: Why order? Are you the president?

Mr. Fretz: Through the Chair.

Mrs. Finestone: What I would like to know from the Minister, through the Chair, is if cultural industries were not on the free trade table, if cultural industries were protected, supposedly, somewhat like logs and beer, why was it not clearly identified in Bill C-130? As this is the thousandth day coming up that you have been involved in the free trade agreement and there are 1,000 pages of documentation—

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would ask that you listen to what the Member is saying. She is referring to the cabinet Minister as "you". The Hon. Member should know, since she has been here for a considerable length of time, that her questions and comments should be addressed to the Chair.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Finestone: If cultural industries were not on the free trade table, if cultural industries are to be protected and maintained, how come in a document presented to the U.S. Government, put together by the Senate and the Congress, and presented to the Executive to determine the directions of this Bill, we have as an objective clearly enunciated—and it only took them 18 pages, not 1,000—which states that the elimination of direct investment screening—is the Member not the Minister of direct investment screening? I would like to ask the Minister whether he intends to continue investment screening in the cultural industries.

Mr. de Cotret: There are a number of issues raised by my hon. colleague. I would like to return to something I said in my opening comments. Throughout the negotiations we were very careful to ensure that our institutions that make Canada what Canada is today would be safeguarded. I can give the assurance to my colleague that, to the best of my knowledge after having gone through those negotiations, and I was on the trade executive committee throughout, I am personally convinced that all our institutions, whether we are talking about cultural industries, social programs, agricultural policies, and what makes Canada Canada, are certainly preserved.

In relation to the very specific question raised by my colleague at the end of her comments, I refer her to the Investment Canada Act. It is very much a piece of legislation that is in force, and also the Baie Comeau policy. We certainly intend to apply the Baie Comeau policy and the Investment Canada Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have two short questions, because we do not have much time. The first is directed to the Minister: How can the Minister state there is no danger for our regional support when we have five or perhaps seven years to reach an agreement on the matter of support that may be acceptable to both countries?

[English]

It seems to me if one takes this seven years, or possibly five years, it is quite conceivable within that period of time, in fact quite likely given some of the information that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was referring to, that the United States will attempt to limit as strictly as possible the subsidies which are permitted to both countries with respect to regional development.

I would like to ask the Minister, as a Member from Quebec, how it is possible for him to justify Clause 6 within the Bill itself. It indicates that it will be possible for Parliament at any time, with reference to any Bill or any regulation, including those of the provinces, to pass a regulation or law to overcome those provincial regulations or laws and make them conform with the trade deal.

How is it possible to see that as a fair and just system of federalism when there is so much power in a sense grabbed by the federal Government through this approach?

[Translation]

Mr. de Cotret: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member somewhat lacks faith in the future. And above all he greatly lacks faith in the Canadian people. He also greatly lacks faith in the relations that exist between the Canadian Government and provinces. Therefore, in answer to his second question, as I understand it, Mr. Bourassa and Mr. Parizeau both are strong supporters of the free trade deal. Both stated publicly it was of real benefit to Quebec. It was essential to Quebec's future.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there is no concern about that in my view. On the other question, I can assure the Hon. Member there may be negotiations in the future, there are always negotiations, but in the area of regional development, subsidies to corporations, we can do in the future exactly what we could do in the past.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): The period for questions and comments has expired. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on debate.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate. We are discussing here the future of Canada, a change in the way the country will function, and a very significant trade deal which is essentially a change in the constitutional concepts of this country. We are talking about implementing legislation in Bill C-130.

If we look at Bill C-130, at the very outset we understand why I refer to the fact that this is almost in the same nature as a constitutional change.

Clause 8(1) states:

> Notwithstanding anything in any other Act or law, in the event of any inconsistency or conflict between
> (a) this Act, or any regulation made under this Act, or the Agreement . . .

That this Act will have a primacy. I heard the Minister's speech which preceded mine. I have listened, asked questions, and I have wanted to be a believer. Basically and fundamentally I believe in freer trade. I believe in a country that should open up and be consistent with its growth and development over a long period of time. Trade is the nature of Canada. But this is not a good trade deal. This is not a free trade deal. It is a terrible contract. It is a contract which damages Canada, which damages Canada's integrity, and which damages Canada and Canadians' right to make their own laws. It is an interesting conundrum.

According to Part I, Clause 8, Canadian law is subject to the free trade agreement. I have before me a document that was released on Friday, May 27, put together by Senator Bensten of the U.S. Senate Finance Committee and Congressman Rostankowski of the Committee of Ways and Means of the House of Representatives entitled "Finance and Ways and Means Committee's Recommendations on the U.S. Canada Free Trade Area Agreement, its Implementing Bill". This document has been sent to the White House.

This 18-page document sets out what the Americans see for themselves in the free trade agreement. This is the direction that it is being recommended the administration take, though it is not the implementing legislation. However, both Houses have come to agree on this direction and are telling the President how to proceed.

It upsets me to hear some of the questions being asked by the Ministers and the Parliamentary Secretaries. These questions indicate to me that there is little understanding, knowledge or reading of the temperament of our good neighbour to the south. A good neighbour it may be, but good trading partner it is not with respect to the free trade agreement, this concept of what is in the best interests of Canada. It is not in the best interests of Canada.

The first thing we see in this document to which I referred is the relationship of the free trade agreement to federal law. It provides that in the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the free trade agreement, U.S. law shall prevail. It is interesting that we wimps here in Canada say that the free trade agreement will prevail. In the United States, American rights under the Constitution come first. The elephant spoke, and did we mice roll over? We forgot to get out of the way of the elephant.

This is the thousandth day of the debate. We have a thousand pages of documents supposedly outlining the process. I loved the debate we had earlier informing us that water was not part of the free trade deal. Then I read into the record how Section Item 22.01 included ice and snow, and I always thought that they were made up of water. There was somewhat of a lack of veracity and forthcomingness there.

Article 16(10) of this 18-page document is called "International Agreements". If Members of the House would learn how to read, they would be outraged by this. I cannot understand how the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien) and Hon. Members from points north, south, east and west of northern Québec can say that they fully support and agree with the free trade agreement. First, they have not seen the American document. Second, I am sure they have not bothered to read this document that was just sent to the White House.

Those Hon. Members did not know what Article 16(10) of this document indicates. It says that they authorize bilateral negotiations to liberalize investment rules, require consultation with diverse U.S. interests and establish the following negotiating objectives, and the first is the elimination of direct investment screening. I just finished asking the Minister about direct investment screening. He spoke with great pomp and circumstance about Investment Canada which he has denuded. He spoke about his book publishing policy which he has not applied.

Article 16(10) goes on to talk about the extension of the free trade principles to energy and cultural industries to the extent not now covered. This is here in black and white on page 9 of this document. I recommend that the Ministers and Hon. Members read it carefully and take it back to their ridings. I recommend that they show it to their riding executives and see if they will be jumping with joy for the loss of Canadian rights to self-determination.

Government Members can says that we need only five days of debate because this is such a simple, fundamental principle. Yet here we can see where the free trade principles are being extended to energy and cultural industries to an extent not now covered. I suggest that there are a series of very important cultural initiatives that need to be protected if we want to keep any part of our market. If the Government had been straightforward, it would have acknowledged that the cultural industry was on the table or it would have given it the kind of exemption that was given to beer and logs and to ships by the U.S.. However, the Government did not do that. Now we will find that in the next five to seven years, every one of those subsidies will be subject to change.

In Article 16(10) of this document, point 3, "International Agreements", it mentions elimination of technology transfer requirements and other performance requirements not currently barred by the free trade agreement. I hope the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) is listening to this. I would like to have him explain what that means to videos, VCRs, new technologies and electronic book publishing. Does he think that members of the Canadian public are so stupid that they do not understand that they are in jeopardy because the things that define us as Canadians are those things that are found within the book publishing, film, sound recording and broadcasting industries?

It is a sheer disgrace that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is trying to make Canadians feel as though they are entering into a free trade agreement when it is nothing of the sort. I would strongly recommend that Canadians read this document.

Let us not forget that Senator Bensten and Congressman Rostankowski presented this document as a joint effort. Article 2005, "Cultural Industries", says that the President shall endeavour, if he takes remedial action, to fashion a response that discourages creation of similar barriers in third countries. The Prime Minister has handled Canada as if it were a wimpy country. First he was a wimp with respect to how he would handle social policies. Thank goodness, the grey and white-haired people of this land stood up and made him back down on the deindexation of Old Age Security. We need them to come up here and talk to him again.

If we take action against big American corporations, particularly with respect to film and cultural industries, they will take an action that will be a blockbuster to teach us a lesson so that third countries will not do likewise. This reminds me of a magazine entitled Cinema Canada. The May 1988 edition at page 19 has an article about something called the domino game. I suggest all Hon. Members read what Mr. Jack Valenti wrote on pages 19, 20, 21 and 22 of this magazine.

The head of the Motion Picture Association of America, Jack Valenti, told fellow members of that association and the President of the United States what they should do, and that is exactly what President Reagan did. Jack Valenti told the President that the Canadians banished from the free trade agreement U.S. films, television and home videos. Because of Canada's insistence, films, television and home videos were exiled from the free trade agreement. I thought they were not in it in the first place. How could they have been exiled?

The Canadians refused to go forward with the agreement unless American movies, television programs and home videos were kicked out. So that is precisely what they did, they kicked them out. The chief crisis in Canada is a matter of survival for the U.S. film industry, says he. Mr. Jack Valenti says that if we Canadians have the nerve to threaten and propose any kind of action the Americans should have swift retaliatory action to ensure the survival of the U.S. film industry.

Can you imagine the survival of the industry if Canada wants to have some part of non-proprietary film distribution in this country? I think, if it wasn't so sad, we could laugh. This is what he has ended up by saying, Mr. Speaker. It goes on to talk about the damage of the proposed Canadian restrictions. He is talking particularly about the film industry. He says: "the Canadian proposal has world-wide ramifications for the U.S. movie industry".

If Canada gets by with imposing trade restrictions on how U.S. film companies operate in Canada, that pattern will surely have a ripple effect and quickly spread to other countries. France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom, Japan and other countries could decide to adopt the Canadian proposals in their country. If this occurs, our $1.1 billion annual trade surplus, derived from the export of U.S.-distributed films, would be severely shrunken, perhaps by several hundred million dollars. The U.S. movie industry would suffer a massive economic haemorrhage. That is just in case we Canadians would like to make a mistake and be masters somewhat of our own destiny in the field of cultural development.

It is a sad day in this country when all we are prepared to do is to examine, over a very short period of time, very serious legislation that will have a serious impact on many sectors of our economy. I chose to look strictly in the short time that I had at some of the aspects of the cultural industries. My concern is the trust that this country can put into this Government. Can Canadians trust a trade deal signed by a Government that tried, but luckily failed, to blind-side our seniors with old age pension cuts, a trade deal signed by a Government that socked Canadians with more new taxes than ever before in the history of this land? The last count was $27 billion out of our pockets.

The Chairman of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture is discomforted. He should be outraged at what is happening to the cultural industries. I think it is very important that we have the opportunity to debate the implications in this Bill, to debate at length and at large, what is happening. If you look at the so-called American irritants with which this Government has dealt, with respect to cultural industries, they neutered the well conceived Canadian-owned book publishing policy, they effectively suppressed the Canadian film industry, a good, solid Canadian film industry, not only through the kind of legislation but also through the cutbacks on capital cost allowance for film production. They watered down, as I said, our film distribution policy. I would like to know what else we expect with our new upcoming broadcast policy with respect to Canadian content. What are we doing and what else do we have to do to please these American cousins?

I really feel we have taken a terribly weak-kneed approach to our relationship with the United States, and it is an approach that has forgotten that Canadians are a strong, proud, unique, independent people, spread across a massive land mass, speaking two languages, in a multicultural milieu, who have aboriginal backgrounds and who have a lot to be proud of and a lot to promote, and who have no reason to take a back seat in the development of trade with the United States, of course, but with other parts of the world as well.

I would suggest to you that it is ironic, we did have free trade with the United States and the cultural industries, but we are not going to have free trade any longer, with the way things are set up.

Should we have left without getting something back from the Americans in this policy and in this undertaking? When you look at the fact that 77 per cent of all news-stand periodicals sold in Canada originate from foreign countries, primarily the United States, 61 per cent if mail copies are included. Three out of every four books sold in Canada are published outside of Canada, mostly originating from the United States. Foreign controlled companies account for three-quarters of the revenues generated by movie distribution companies in Canada. We are talking in the billows. Ninety-seven percent of the screen time across this country is booked for Americans with a sprinkling of other foreign country films.

What other western country has only 3 per cent of its film time taken up in its theatres by Canadian films? The eight largest sound recording companies in Canada are foreign owned. Nine out of ten recording companies in Canada use foreign master tapes. Depending on the market, anywhere up to 70 per cent of Canadian English language television viewing time is spent watching non-Canadian programs, primarily U.S.

By the age of 12, Mr. Speaker, researchers tell us that the average Canadian child has seen 10,000 hours of American programs and a bare 2,000 hours of Canadian programs. What does that say with respect to the future development of this country? One has to realize, if one is looking at a very pervasive mass medium, that can have a very serious impact on the formation and the thinking and the development of the philosophy and the mentality of our children.

The Canadian market, for all intents and purposes, with respect to the cultural industries in particular, is absolutely an American gravy train. If we want to have the right to choice, and that is what I am talking about, the right to choice, then we need to have options. We need policies that will maintain the right to options and choices.

However, according to what we have just finished reading under Section 2005, they can take a sledge-hammer and literally kill us by making an example out of us for third countries. I find that this is a very serious problem that is not being dealt with in the way that is most conducive and helpful. I should really talk about the textile industry in my riding, and the apparel in my riding, and how this Government can't be trusted even in that area. They were promised great help from this Government and ended up getting peanuts. That is another area. Never mind cultural industries. What did they do to the fishing industry and to the lobster industry? The Government should be ashamed of itself. How can we possibly trust it to negotiate this agreement, even if it had been a good agreement? Unfortunately, it is a rotten one.

This document also deals with retransmission rights. This Bill contains the implementing legislation for that. The essential elements of the retransmission rights are not well addressed. There is no definition of local and distance signals or small retransmission systems. These definitions are, for the most part, controversial elements and are being left to cabinet regulations. Four major issues are being left to cabinet regulation including directions to the CRTC.

Why is the Government not forthcoming? If the Government does not want to do it through a Bill and legislation, then it should at least print the regulations rather than leaving them in secrecy. It should be stated forthrightly for the Canadian public to make decisions on.

This is a disgrace. The Government should be ashamed of itself. I hope that when the Canadian public votes they will remember this by putting their X in the proper place on the ballot sheet.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest and admiration to the speech of the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone). I would like to say two things. First, one of the great myths which this Government, among many others, is throwing out about the trade deal is that it does not touch culture. It, of course, has all sorts of clauses in it which touch upon the cultural concerns of Canadians and key factors which maintain the distinctiveness of our country. It includes points affecting the recording industry, the printing industry, and a wide range of segments of our cultural heritage.

Second, as I suggested earlier, there is a tremendous axe which hangs over any cultural initiative which we might choose to take in the future. The need for these cultural initiatives is evident when you look at the status quo at the moment with respect to Canadian culture. Only a miniscule level of Canadian films are actually distributed among our movie chains. There is only a miniscule proportion of Canadian material played on the radio and only a miniscule portion of Canadian artistic activity given its place in this country.

No other country in the world would put up with a situation of having the great bulk of what is seen on its television sets, a high proportion of what is seen in its newspapers, and the great proportion of what is seen in its movie theatres coming from foreign countries. Yet that is the situation in this country. It cries out for action and new initiatives. Yet, if new initiatives are taken under the measures in this trade deal, they themselves will be subject to commercial moves by the United States in an attempt to counteract them.

Is the Member for Mount Royal as shocked as I am by the notwithstanding clause and its potential for damage? We have talked to quite a number of cultural groups in the last few weeks and have felt the deep concern of virtually all of them. Has the Member likewise had that sense of concern communicated to her? Does she believe that the Government's claim that culture has been left off the table is in any sense justified?

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate that question. If the Government thinks it has pulled the wool over the eyes of the cultural industry; the artists, the singers, the songwriters, and other creative intellectual peoples in Canada, it is sadly mistaken. I suggest that Members opposite read a book called If You Love Canada. They would find out that there is not a sector of the Canadian artistic community, from the music creators to the film producers, the actors, and the technicians, which is not concerned. That is why I feel so sad that there is this tremendous insensitivity.

I appreciate the Member's question about the notwithstanding clause because it is pretty obvious that, aside from a few Members of the Cabinet, government Members have not bothered to understand the implications behind the notwithstanding clause. As I said in my speech, it is very clear that it is to discourage the creation of similar barriers in third countries. In addition, all subsidies will have to be rethought over the next five to seven years. As I believe the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) once said, the hobnailed boot fell, but only one of the pair.

We were told to be quiet and not to worry for the moment. However, this document from the Congress to the White House indicates very clearly that subsidies are to be negotiated and renegotiated in the energy and cultural sectors. Read the document. I do not understand how government Members cannot read what the Americans are saying.

For the sake of my children and my grandchildren I would dearly love to believe them. This is a sixth generation Canadian talking to government Members they are deaf as can be. It says: "extension of the free trade agreement principles to energy and cultural industries to the extent not now covered". It could not be clearer than the noses on their faces if they would only read or look in the mirror.

I am very concerned because a whole series of Canadian cultural development subsidies are at risk. They include the book publishing development subsidy, the postal rates subsidy, the museum assistance program, the Indian cultural development and art program, the Canada Council program, the Telecom program, funding for the development of our recording industry, public use payment for authors for their works in public libraries, cultural initiative grants, performing arts assistance, capital cost allowance—rotten as that may be right now—and broadcasting subsidies for our public sector. All of these have been put in place by Governments over time. They had to fall into the lap of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) with his lack of comprehension of Canadian pride. That is why we are in this juggernaut right now.

The Member is perfectly right. Our cultural industries mean Canada. The Americans wrap themselves in their defence flag. The only defence we have as Canadians is our cultural uniqueness, and that the Government does not understand.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-130, the Bill which proposes to put into effect the treaty which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed at the beginning of the year with the President of the United States. The Bill consists of 123 pages which propose to amend 27 statutes of the Government of Canada ranging from the Western Grain Transportation Act, the Seeds Act, the Meat Inspection Act, the Meat Import Act, the Loan Companies Act, the Excise Tax Act, the Bank Act, the Canadian Wheat Board Act, the Canadian Agricultural Products Standards Act, the Canada Grain Act, the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, and on and on.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) described this treaty as a revolution. I believe he is right. It is a neo-Conservative revolution that proposes to turn over our existing society.

The Minister for International Trade is talking about a movement that espouses freedom, as do most revolutionary movements. In this case, however, it is freedom for corporations and multinational firms. It is freedom so that they can get the Government off their backs, become deregulated and take their profits wherever they wish. It is freedom so that they will not be forced to provide services in outlying rural areas of our country, like those I represent. It is freedom so they can make their money wherever they choose, whenever they choose.

It means privatization so they will not have to compete with government agencies, which they say is unfair competition. Corporations say it is unfair to compete with companies like Air Canada that has the highest return on investment of all three airlines in this country. They want to be able to share in those profits. However, they call for privatization when Crown corporations happen to lose money, using the argument that they cannot compete and will be forced to cut their prices accordingly.

The third leg of the neo-Conservative revolution is tax reform. Corporations have succeeded in convincing many Conservatives that the corporate sector should pay no income tax, using the argument that profits should go to shareholders who should pay the tax. Unfortunately, most developed countries have a practice of maintaining retained earnings, which then become earnings which have virtually no tax. Under those circumstances, large multinational corporations with almost no taxes have a distinct advantage over ordinary business people who try to enter the market and compete against them. The Conservatives are attempting to invert the way the economy functions.

This is a complete change from the economic theories of the western countries in the last 80 years. One of the best examples to describe the system of economic development we have been following is Henry Ford. Just prior to World War I, Henry Ford decided to pay his workers another $1 an hour, something which his competitors and federal industrialists questioned. His workers seemed to have a place to stay warm, seemed not to be too hungry when coming to work, and seemed to have enough clothing. They asked Henry Ford why he would give them more money when they would only waste it or save it. Henry Ford said that they may save the money, but they probably will buy cars with it. He used that theory to increase the amount of cars he sold.

Successive Governments have followed that policy of increasing incomes through such things as the minimum wage, better services to people, better education, health care and standards of living to the benefit of everyone. Productivity and the economy increased and everyone lived better.

The new Conservatism seems to be shifting in the other direction and focusing its attention on reducing labour cost and input costs, avoiding taxation, and turning the economic development strategy on its head. That is what Margaret Thatcher, Ronald Reagan and our Prime Minister are attempting.

The Prime Minister has been following his three tenets of Conservative philosophy: Deregulation, privatization, and tax reform. However, I believe he has been pressured into making this a long-term proposition by corporations who are concerned about what may happen if the Conservatives lose the next election. Their solution was to persuade the Government to sign a free trade agreement with the United States because American Governments have been easier to manipulate than most other Governments, especially those in Canada.

When I heard the Minister for International Trade this afternoon, I could not help but recall an old Al Capp comic of L'il Abner because Senator Fogbound immediately came to mind. I remember him thundering: "What is good for General Bullmoose is good for the U.S.". Of course, he was parroting the famous line by one of the big business people of the era who said that what is good for General Motors is good for the United States. It is still true in the United States that what is good for big business is good for the U.S.A., because big business essentially controls the policy of the United States.

If we are linked with the United States through a treaty, then Canada is not very likely to be able to back out of some of the changes the Government has attempted to make. The agreement goes much beyond the removal of a few tariffs between our countries. If that was all there was to it, the hue and cry would be loud and sharp but not so prolonged.

I was told by one analyst that there are 21 segments to this agreement, 11 of which have nothing to do with tariffs. They are more concerned with setting prices, control and deciding the future policy of the country. They have nothing to do with a normal free trade agreement. Rather than reassurance from big business, there are phrases in the Bill, such as those at page 99, which state: "Every reference in those provisions to Canadian shall be read and construed as a reference to American", and "every reference in these provisions to non-Canadian shall be read and construed as a reference to non-Canadian, other than American". There are statements like: "Canadian-controlled shall be read and construed as a reference to American-controlled". It is a blatant attempt to combine the two countries and make American policy, American law and the whole American ethos one with Canada.

The Minister for International Trade said that he was proposing this legislation which he described as a revolution to save the country from stagnation and save it from the New Democratic Party. During Question Period today I heard members of the Government say that there was no stagnation of this country, but that we had a healthy and vibrant economy. The free trade agreement is not even in effect, so what is he fighting against? Perhaps he is fighting against the NDP and against our policy of interfering in the economy for the good of people, so that we can look forward to improving living standards and health care, services and education.

That is what we see with the Japanese and the European economy. Japan probably epitomizes a country that interferes in the economy. It is probably the closest thing to the antithesis of a free trader that exists on the earth at the moment, and who has the leading economy? Who has the highest living standards by most measures right now? It is the Japanese, and many of the European countries are right behind them. By one standard of measuring economic growth I saw recently, the United States was either ninth or tenth, and rested in about the same place in terms of living standard.

Why is it that the Government insists on trying to push us into this particular kind of deal except for ideological reasons which I have spelled out? What is it that it is saving us from? When the Government began these negotiations it said it was saving us from countervail actions. We all recall that there were countervail actions against our softwood lumber, our shakes and shingles, hogs, pork, salt fish, raspberries, specialty steel, potash, and those were just while the negotiations were going on. What did we come out with? Did we get saved from countervail actions such as those? No, we did not. We had the same process in place. We did not change it. But the Government is now happy with the agreement. I wonder why.

The Government told us it was entering into the negotiations to get a better dispute settlement method, that the dispute settlement system had to be changed and improved. Did we get that? No, we did not. We got no change at all. It is the same dispute-settling mechanism with one little change, after it is all over, we can drag it out even longer by putting in a tribunal which will decide whether or not U.S. law was adhered to.

We were told that with these negotiations we would get greater access to the U.S. market. Now that it is all over, is that what is going to happen? Before the negotiations began, we had access on about 80 per cent of our trade, free of tariffs. We had access to most of the U.S. market. If there was an inequity between the access to the American market and their access to our market, it was in our favour because their tariffs were slightly lower than ours. Now that the walls are coming down, it means, by my simple deduction, that they have better access to our market as a result of this agreement. Most people who have spent any time analysing the deal agree.

We have been told the Government had to do it because it was saving Canada for future generations and it just had to stop what was going on. We have been reasonably well off and we seem to be growing quite fast, but the Government has to put a stop to that. It is not good enough. It was stated by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) that this will result in lower cost of consumer goods. Think about it for a moment, Mr. Speaker. Think about the neo-Conservative philosophy that demands and expects lower wage rates, lower resources, access to lower priced raw materials. Why will consumer goods be lower? Most of them are set by oligopolies that generally price what the market will bear. I submit they will be lower because there will be lower demand. People will not have as much money to spend and therefore prices will be lower. Is that such a good thing? I think not.

We have argued with, I think, correctness, according to the agreement after we analysed it, that signing this agreement and approving this legislation will tie us not only closer to the American economy but would subject us to American power, influence and policies. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills (Mr. Thacker), said: "Do not worry. We will still be able to tax ourselves". Hurrah. What good is being able to tax ourselves if we are limited in how we can spend the tax dollars?

Mr. Thacker: Sovereignty.

Mr. Althouse: What sort of sovereignty can we have if we cannot any longer increase our unemployment insurance programs or our health care, if we can no longer form Crown corporations, which this agreement says we cannot, if we cannot engage in regional development for those areas which are badly hit by economic disruption? We cannot do that because they are a form of subsidization, and we have signed in blood that we will not subsidize. We have said we will not subsidize, that we will follow the same rules and the same processes they have in the United States.

I believe that if the Hon. Member wishes to argue, he would spend his time better reading more than the thousand pages that have been produced at this point between the two parties.

Mr. O'Neil: I have read more of it than you have.

Mr. Althouse: We were told that this was a better way than maintaining our own independence and trading with all of the world, that we should restrict ourselves to this one country, focus all our attentions there. We still insist that this country would be better, more independent, more wealthy, more healthy and in a much better financial, fiscal, economic and political shape if we maintain that kind of choice.

What we are arguing is that we need a real choice. What the country needs is a real revolution continuing on the paths to which the New Democratic Party has been trying to direct us.

Mr. O'Neil: Revolution?

Mr. Althouse: Without that kind of revolution or evolution, we will not have the continuation for future generations of better incomes, better security, a better country in which we live.

Mr. O'Neil: Higher taxes.

Mr. Althouse: I want to complete my remarks by saying that I am a third generation farmer from Saskatchewan. When I took over my land, I was taught well. I was told that my job was to maintain the land and to manage it for future generations. I have attempted to do that in my career as a farmer.

I see my duty as a Member of Parliament towards this country to be very similar. I think we have to maintain our land and manage it for future generations. This agreement, in my mind, ignores the future generations. It does not permit them to manage it in a way that we were able to manage it. It restricts the amount of policies future generations will have open to them, and I cannot support this treaty with the United States. For me, this is a sell-out of future generations. It is a sell-out of their future right to govern Canada. It is a sell-out of their future right to develop their economy as they wish. It is a sell-out of the rights of their inheritance of this great, still independent land.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I was surprised, perhaps, by my colleague's speech tonight which was very much looking at the philosophic choices which this deal is presenting to us and the losses to this country of future independence and freedom of choice. That is really, I guess, what the trade deal debate is all about. I want to ask the Member, since he is one of the few farmers in the opposition side of the House—

Mr. Thacker: He is the only one.

Mr. Langdon: You should not talk about the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) in quite that way. I suggest it would be very useful, especially in view of the commitment this Government made to farmers across this country, that agriculture like culture, like the Auto Pact, would be off the table, that they would not be negotiated and then end up being sold out just like other parts of the agreement.

I would like to ask my colleague if he would spend just a few minutes telling us about some of the damage which farmers across this country, in his view, are going to endure as a result of this unfair trade deal.

• (2130)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be brief. I made a speech on this on an Opposition Day several months ago. At that time I spent most of the full 20 minutes I had describing that. However, I think there are a number of things that disturb me a great deal about the deal as it applies to agriculture.

My friend will be aware that a great many of our agricultural products have been traded freely across the border with the United States, products such as red meats, agricultural implements, chemicals and fertilizers. Quite a number of agricultural items have been traded freely.

Those that were not are those with which we have some disadvantage geographically and, therefore, economically in competing, namely, fruits and vegetables, and poultry and dairy products. Some of the things that our Government proposes to do with this trade agreement are very hard for me to accept.

Show me, Mr. Speaker, another trade agreement wherein a country has guaranteed another country that that other country will be able to ship in "no less than 7.5 per cent", in this case, of the poultry requirements of that country. It is not that there is a window of opportunity there but that it shall be "no less than", and into perpetuity. What a way to stifle economic development in one's own country, to invite in 7.5 per cent of one's own poultry consumption needs from another country and to write that into an international agreement stating that it will never be less than that. It may be more. In fact, it probably will be more if this Government stays in power.

Why put such a thing in an agreement? It is there. We did not get any such reciprocity. Even those in the oil and gas industry who think that this agreement is a good thing because it gives them access to the United States market, which they had, will see that there is not a line in the agreement stating that they will get "no less than 10 per cent" of the total market in the United States. This is utter foolishness and utterly unnecessary.

We have also pretended that marketing boards are not in danger. Yet anyone who thinks ahead or can analyse can realize that there is no way we will be able to maintain the slightly higher prices in our country because of our higher costs and still maintain our processing industry. I think that the McCains have put that very clearly. They have quite publicly stated their options. They have said: "If we are going to make frozen pizzas and frozen chicken dinners with product produced in Canada under supply-management which comes to our factory at a slightly higher rate than what we could get in the United States, then we have no choice but to move our factory, our processing plant into the United States". They go on to state: "Unfortunately, it is easy to move a factory, but it is not easy to move our workers." It is virtually impossible to move our farmers. Thus they will be left sitting there in Florenceville or Portage la Prairie without a factory to haul their product to and there will be no point in their continuing to produce chicken, potatoes or cheese.

Those are the problems with the deal. The Government says that marketing boards are still in place, and they are. However, they will not be able to exist for very long. The Government says that the Wheat Board is still there, and it is. However, the Government has taken away a great many of its powers which kept it a substantial institution which was able to do a good job.

These are some of the items that I think have created long-term problems for farmers and about which farmers are very upset.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have the views of my hon. friend opposite with respect to the NDP position on the multilateral negotiation. I think it is fair to say that members of that Party argue against the free trade agreement which really just reduces the tariffs further than they have already been with the Americans. As well, it puts into place a dispute settlement mechanism. There are rules to govern our trade rather than it being subject to the whim of a very whimsical Congress which, at the moment, is responding to the very powerful interest groups in its own country.

Members of the NDP often talk about the GATT and how we need international diversification. However, under the GATT Canada is truly being pressed on all fronts. I am wondering how the Hon. Member can square with that. Our grape growers are being hurt by the GATT rather than by the free trade agreement.

Mr. Althouse: I am glad the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills asked that question. It brings out a fact that is sometimes ignored by both sides of this argument.

I have functioned in trading with the United States as a farmer. Even though we had free trade in the commodities that I was trading in it was not any field of roses, so to speak. There were always disputes and tough spots. There were times when one could expect to have one's product stopped at the border. That was with free trade, with an agreement that had been in place for 45 years at that time. The dispute settlement mechanisms have not really changed. The methods that the Americans have to stop this trade have really not changed as a result of this deal.

If we are to be international traders then we have to be prepared to put up with occasional interruptions in trade by the recipient country, whether it is in the United States, Japan, China or the European Economic Community. It does not matter very much whether one is under GATT or a bilateral agreement, these things will happen.

I think the Government fooled itself into thinking that it could improve those minor disruptions and reduce them by signing this agreement. When we analyse what it has got with the agreement, we find it has not got anything any different in reality than what we had before. The words have not improved. They are no stronger than they were before. The process is no different from it was before. All the Government has done is to kid itself that it has something better than it had before. There will still be opportunities for disruptions of trade at the border, at the behest of anyone from pork growers to a feed council to a processor. The U.S. is even more subject to political pressure in terms of its trade policy than we are. That has not changed. Nothing in this agreement can change that.

Congress is not changing its attitude. It is not changing the Constitution or its expectations with respect to what it sees as its role in trade. Thus disruptions will continue to happen after the new agreement comes into effect, or if we stay under the existing agreement. We will have the same problems under the GATT as well. The only advantage under the GATT is that we have an opportunity to form alliances with other members who are being treated by some of the same countries in the same way. We are no longer the only little country dealing with a big country which chooses to act in such a way. We can form alliances with other countries which are similarly affected and eventually we will get some justice.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I disagree in principle with the Hon. Member. I believe the binational dispute panel will be a far better mechanism than what exists now. Now, we have to go to the courts. If we feel that there has been an abuse, we have to go through the court system in that country. It is the judges of that country who deal with these disputes. At least if we have a binational panel we will have a couple of members on it, as will the United States. There will be a neutral chairman. That in itself will stop all sorts of these frivolous actions in which the Americans have been responding to pressure groups. For example, consider the lumber issue wherein one year the Americans lost and the next year they won on the very same grounds. I do not think that that would happen if a binational panel were in place. I think that that is a significant difference.

• (2140)

Mr. Althouse: I think the Hon. Member should read the agreement a little more carefully. If the U.S. initiates the complaint, we still go through its court system the same as we do now. If we put in the complaint, then it works under our system. As I read it, the only time that the bilateral dispute-settling mechanism comes in is after all the decisions have been made and they get a chance to review the court process and see if American law was complied with or, if it was on our side of the border, if Canadian law was complied with.

We have never had any argument about whether or not American law was being complied with. The argument was with the American law.

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate of historical significance for the future of both the workers and businessmen of the Louis-Hébert riding as well as for all those who want Canada to have a future consistent with the skills of our people and the industrial, economic and technological potential of our country.

We have before us a bill which faithfully incorporates the elements of the Free Trade Accord which was signed between Canada and the United States. If I may, I should like to point out its purpose:

> 3. The purpose of this Act is to implement the Agreement, the objectives of which are to
> (a) eliminate barriers to trade in goods and services between Canada and the United States;
> (b) facilitate conditions of fair competition within the free-trade area established by the Agreement;
> (c) liberalize significantly conditions for investment within that free-trade area;
>
> (d) establish effective procedures for the joint administration of the Agreement and the resolution of disputes; and
> (e) lay the foundation for further bilateral and multilateral cooperation to expand and enhance the benefits of the Agreement.

There is nothing in this bill which was not part of the Agreement signed by the Prime Minister and the President on January 2. We have now reached the turning point. What motives will influence our destiny? Fear and insecurity? Or confidence and a powerful thrust towards the future? That is the choice we have to make. In this debate on free trade we see a confrontation between right wingers and forward looking idealists whose vision of Canada is altogether different.

I can assure you that most people in my riding and my province support the Agreement which was signed between Canada and the United States. Although Quebec City is called the Old Capital, the men and women who live there are not prisoners of the past, they have modern ideas, and they have both the wisdom and good sense to look beyond the old walls surrounding them.

Quebec businessmen are demonstrating a similar open-mindedness. For instance, when dealing with free trade, the President of Shermag, the most important Quebec furniture manufacturer, remarked: "It is a matter of attitude: either you freeze or you charge ahead ". Well, Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what free trade is offering to our workers and our entrepreneurs, the tools to succeed not only in North America, but also in Europe and in Asia.

We can find that same spirit and confidence everywhere in Quebec. Alain Dubuc, a reporter from La Presse, is a very good example. He stated: "Quebec will greatly benefit from the agreement. We can even say that our province has hit the jackpot." All recent surveys show that a strong majority of Quebecers are in favour of the agreement. Moreover, the results indicate that young people are the most supportive. Why? Because the young people of Quebec are looking to the future, seeking individual freedoms and opportunities on the world market. In fact, we are in the second stage of the Quiet Revolution. In the first stage, Quebecers were able to assert themselves in their own territory.

We have now reached the second stage, the conquest of the foreign markets. In fact, numerous Quebec firms, small and large, are already making progress in the American market and increasingly in Europe and Asia. The confidence Quebecers feel towards the Free Trade Agreement speaks for the maturity and the competence of our entrepreneurs and workers. All those strongly in favour of free trade have realized that we have the economic, technological and industrial capability to take full advantage of a market ten times our own. Moreover, those supporters of free trade know that in order to be recognized as one of the economic and industrial leaders of the world, we need to have privileged access to a market of at least 100 million people. Well, the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States would give us privileged access to a market of 250 million consumers.

Those who would say no to this historic agreement would in fact be turning thumbs down on the growth and competitiveness of our industries and the jobs they provide. Basically, free trade is nothing short of the liberalization of Canadian and Quebec businesses.

Having been a member of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Canada's International Relations which, during the summer of 1985, held hearings throughout Canada on the possibility of concluding an agreement between our two countries, I can tell you that these hearings made us realize that most Canadians in all sectors of activities were in favour of such an agreement. We heard all groups and individuals anxious to give evidence—cloose to 300 witnesses. The hearings enabled us to find out what Canadians thought and wanted before our Government undertook serious negotiations with the Americans, the negotiations which finally led to the agreement we are talking about today.

Throughout the hearings most witnesses invariably raised the issue of the very strong American protectionist trend which was a source of very deep Canadian concerns—and I need only refer to lumber, potash, chicken, just to name a few. In addition we ought to keep in mind the fact that, as I speak, 175 legislative measures and the famous omnibus bill—all protectionist initiatives—are pending before the American Congress and the Senate. We therefore had to act promptly to counter this protectionist movement which can be traced back to a number of factors, not the least of which is undoubtedly the slow and vacillating worldwide economic recovery after the recession of the early 1980s, and which is also due to the transition period now being experienced by the international economy.

The Free Trade Agreement therefore offsets and protects Canadians against these measures which Americans were advocating and would have continued to impose had the FTA not been signed.

The importance of trade relations between Canada and the United-States also concerned the Trudeau government, which set up, in 1982, the Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects. This Commission chaired by Donald Macdonald, former Liberal Cabinet minister costed Canadians 20 million dollars . . . Its report, published in 1985, concluded that Canada had to negotiate a Free-Trade Agreement with the United-States.

Let me tell you what this important and voluminous report had to say on the matter: "The world offers Canada enormous challenges and opportunities. Jobs in Canada are threatened by the rapid growth of imports from developing countries, by changes in trade policies and by internal pressures on our trading partners in favour of new forms of protection. Inversely, the growth and technical progress in foreign countries open up new export opportunities and allow us to obtain cheaper and better goods.

Further on, the report says: "The pursuit of Canada-U.S. free trade is not at odds with efforts to strengthen and improve the existing multilateral framework. Rather, Commissionners see it as a complementary approach, involving concentration of our efforts and scarce resources on our most important market.

We see multilateral negotiations proceeding in parallel. In our view, such a two-tiered approach is the best way to ensure that Canadian industry will win sufficient acccess to foreign markets to invest and grow with confidence. At the same time, it will allow us to open our market in an orderly fashion and thus ensure that trade policy does its part in encouraging the development of a more competitive and more productive economy.

Following this introduction, here are the recommendations made in the Macdonald Commission Report: "Canada is sufficiently strong and independent, however, to pursue bilateral initiatives, including better economic relations with the United States, within the framework of multilateral relations.

Commissioners recommend that the Government of Canada, at the same time it undertakes an initiative at the multilateral level to eliminate trade barriers, open negotiations with the Government of the United States to reach agreement on a substantial reduction of barriers, tariff and non-tariff, between Canada and the United States."

The report goes on to mention that "such an agreement would have to stand within the terms of article XXIV of GATT, protect Canadian culture and that an approach should be developed to use measures of contingent protection by establishing a new Canada-U.S. intergovernmental body to settle potential disputes."

That is what the Macdonald Report recommended.

To show that the free trade agreement is good for Quebec and Canada, and that the overall approach followed by this Government is successful, let us remember that Donald Macdonald, a previous member of the federal Cabinet and chairman of that Royal Inquiry, as well as Gerald Regan, the former Liberal Minister for External Trade, today are among its strongest supporters.

The free trade agreement opens to us Quebecers the door to futur success. And Quebecers have seen all the opportunities that agreement opens up for Quebec. Premier Robert Bourassa is a strong supporter, as well as the former Ministers of Finance Mr. Parizeau and Mr. Landry. Robert Campeau, one of our greatest Canadian entrepreneurs stated, and I quote:

> Free trade is the single most important political action in Canada since the turn of the century.

The chairman of Telemedia, Philippe de Gaspé Beaubien, stated:

> That agreement is the key to our future prosperity and strength as a country.

In Quebec we have shown our know-how over these last 30 years, both provincially, nationally and internatinally. Our confidence has led to major economic development and success stories like Hydro-Quebec, Bombardier . . .

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Citation 309 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms indicates that the growing practice in the Canadian House of Commons is that a Member must address the House orally and not read from a written, previously prepared speech.

Mr. Gormley: And you've never read a speech, Marion?

Ms. Dewar: No, I never have.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: ... La Laurentienne Insurance Company, and so on and so forth.

Mr. Speaker, engineering firms such as Lavalin, SNC, Roche and Associates, and ADS here in Quebec, to name a few, show our capacity to achieve major goals, and we must be especially proud of that.

However, we should not stop at that success, however outstanding. We must constantly push forward, and this is why, on the strenght of past experience, we must have confidence in our potential, and unite our efforts to provide our young with a promising future.

I will never insist enough on that point. The conclusion of that agreement does not mean we can quietly wait for the rest of the world to come to us. We will not sell our products because people like us.

Mr. Speaker, on two occasions I have interrupted, which used part of the time available to me.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, quite the opposite, I was trying to help. I was watching in the lobby the speech made by my colleague from Quebec, and it seemed to me that the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Mrs. Dewar) ...

[English]

The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) made a point of order referring to Beauchesne's, saying that the Hon. Member was reading, but I think we are all wrong. The Hon. Member is not reading her text, she is using copious notes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has the floor.

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: People are not going to buy our products because they like us but because they are high-quality products that are competitive on international markets. That has been Canada's strength in the past and will be in the future as well.

We must break out of our isolation and go out to conquer new markets. This is an appeal to collective excellence. We say to Canadians: Dare to be the best, and I have no doubts about how Canadians will respond to this appeal. We are people who like a challenge, especially Quebecers.

I am very concerned about the future of the science and technology sector, and I am convinced that our high-tech industries cannot survive without privileged access to U.S. markets. As the President of the Canadian Technology Association said so eloquently: "The market for computers, telecommunications and information technology is international, and if you don't aim for the international market, sooner or later somebody else will come and wipe you out on your domestic market".

That is a harsh truth, Mr. Speaker. If we want to compete with the Americans, the Europeans and the Japanese, we need the basic elements of international competitiveness. The most critical factor for Canadians is to have free and secure access to the richest market on earth.

As Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for Science and Technology, I am interested in research and development and the industrial applications of research. This Government, together with the provinces and all parties concerned, has for the first time in Canada's history developed a national policy on science and technology. The Prime Minister has taken an active part in preparing this policy and in the subsequent follow-up.

We know for a fact that Canada's great challenge is not scientific or technological research as such but the industrial applications of this research. Our businesses and high-tech industries must produce for a market of at least 100 million people to operate on a profitable a basis. This is just what the Free Trade Agreement offers us.

Before concluding my speech, I would like to talk about the impact of the Agreement on Canadian women. Mr. Speaker, I find deplorable the campaign of fear, if not terror, waged by some Opposition Members and union representatives. It is one thing, Mr. Speaker, to oppose a Government project. It is something else to lie knowingly to millions of women in order to terrorize them.

What are they telling Canadian women? That they will lose their jobs; that our health and welfare system will be destroyed; that the violence one finds in the streets of Detroit, New York or Miami will come to the streets of our great cities; that we will not be able to have child care facilities.

Frankly, Mr. Speaker, one would have to be desperately cynical to wage such a campaign! We know, because we have the final text of the agreement, that all those statements are imaginary. Nothing in the agreement affects our health and welfare system. Nothing in the agreement threatens our social programs, including child care. Nothing in the agreement changes our Criminal Code, our legal system and our social values. I conclude, Mr. Speaker, it will not take too long ...

On the contrary, the Free Trade Agreement will help our economy grow more and create more jobs than ever. This means that we will have more wealth to distribute through our social programs. It also means that women will have better opportunities to pursue their careers or launch their own businesses.

I am proud of this great Bill introduced by the Government to implement the Accord and I intend to vote for it. It is a declaration by the people of Canada of their confidence, abilities and national maturity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Layton): It being ten o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 10 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you would find that there is unanimous consent for the House to call now for Statements by Ministers with respect to a statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs followed by replies from both opposition spokespersons, an agreement to proceed to Statements by Members and Oral Questions for the usual period of time, after which the House shall proceed to the deferred division, and that any time taken on the Minister's statement and replies be added to the end of the day in the usual manner.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the Hon. Minister of State. Is the House in agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL SECURITY

EXPULSION OF SOVIET OFFICIALS FROM CANADA

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise to report on a matter of national security.

On the Government's instructions, a senior official of the Department of External Affairs informed the Soviet Ambassador on June 15 that seven Soviet officials were to leave Canada within 48 hours, and that one official, who was then outside Canada, would not be allowed to return to this country. Those seven officials left Canada on June 17. A further nine Soviet officials, who had already left Canada on completion of their assignments, were declared persona non grata and will not be permitted to return to Canada.

With the consent of the House, I will now table a list of the names of the Soviet officials concerned, and the Soviet establishments in Canada where each worked. I regret that the only copy being tabled is in English. However, a French translation will be tabled immediately it is received by myself.

The Government acted after thorough investigations and analysis which led us to an inescapable conclusion that the Soviet officials concerned had engaged in unacceptable activities which were a threat to the security of this country. I do not intend to provide details of these activities except to say that some appeared designed to secure clandestine access to classified information or sensitive technology with commercial or military application.

Another operation was intended to penetrate the RCMP Security Service and, subsequently, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. We are confident that Canadian security was not compromised.

Investigations are continuing in a number of the cases in question. I am confident that Canadian authorities have acted to preserve our security, and that the House would want me to express our appreciation to those authorities.

The 17 Soviet officials were not engaged in a single, large conspiracy, but several unrelated Soviet operations which were the subjects of parallel but distinct investigations. The investigations were complex and occurred over time.

Last Tuesday, the Government decided to take action on all the cases at once to bring them to an end.

[Translation]

Hon. Members may be aware of speculations about the Soviet citizen who was with the Secretariat of the International Civil Aviation Organization in Montreal.

I can now confirm that Mr. Yuriy Smurov has decided to apply for resident status in Canada, with his wife and daughter. His application is being examined by the Employment and Immigration Commission. I am advised that Mr. Smurov gave our security services useful information. However, I do not intend to elaborate on the kind of information provided.

[English]

Sir, we have impressed upon the Soviet authorities the seriousness with which we view the improper activities of Soviet officials and warned them against any resumption. The Canadian Government will not tolerate any activity by foreign powers which undermines the security or the sovereignty of our country.

At the same time, we indicated to the Soviet Union that we were prepared to put this matter behind us and get on with the business of conducting our bilateral relations in accordance with our mutual interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for his statement this afternoon. I must say that we on this side of the House had been expecting a statement for nearly five days, especially since in the past, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has tended to make such statements far more quickly.

Yesterday, at the end of the Fourteenth Economic Summit of G-7 countries in Toronto, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) confirmed that eight Soviets had been expelled for improper and unacceptable behaviour. We also heard that the eight had engaged in industrial espionage.

Today's statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, five days later, is of course welcome, and we thank him for it. However, there are still several question marks, although I realize that in the circumstances it may be difficult to reveal certain aspects of this matter.

In recent years, cases of industrial espionage have become increasingly frequent. Western advanced technology continues to attract industrial spies. In fact, the industrial espionage carries a high cost, not only for the industries and companies that are the target of such activities but also for the competitive position of a country like Canada.

• (1410)

Espionage, whether at the level of national security, at the level of industry, or at the level of scientific research, is reprehensible and deplorable. It strikes at the very heart and sovereignty of our country and leaves Canadians feeling helpless and vulnerable.

I recall that in 1978 the Hon. Don Jamieson, the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, rose in the House to reveal the details of a Soviet attempt to infiltrate the RCMP. At that time no risk was posed to our national security, and thanks to the alertness and effectiveness of the RCMP this Soviet espionage activity was nipped in the bud.

Today the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has revealed a few details of another disturbing espionage incident. Although we have obtained his reassurance that there was no threat to national security, we are nevertheless still extremely concerned about the impact that this may have, not only on our relations with the Soviet Union but also on the Canadian industries which will be the true victims of these deplorable actions by the Soviet Government. I would like to deal briefly with both those issues.

In the last few years, the Soviet Union has taken steps to reform both its domestic and foreign policy. East-West relations are becoming increasingly cordial, but we have to ask ourselves why the Soviet Union continues to threaten Canadian sovereignty by engaging in industrial espionage. One also wonders whether the Soviet Union is serious about its desire to improve relations with Canada.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs tells us that he sent a protest note to the Soviet government. I hope the Minister is willing to table the text of this diplomatic note in the House, as Minister Jamieson did in 1978, at the specific request of the Leader of the Opposition at the time, who today is the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hope he will do what Mr. Jamieson did at the time.

The second point I referred to earlier concerns the victims of these breaches of security. I am sorry the Secretary of State for External Affairs did not bother to tell us whether the industries affected by this espionage were informed of the fact, but I hope the Government is considering ways to prevent any recurrence.

[English]

The timing of the announcement is, for us, something difficult to understand. Although the Secretary of State for External Affairs has not said anything about it, we suspect that there were probably consultations with the Americans or with other allies in this regard, wondering how Canada would cope with a possible retaliation that is normally the case when such action is taken by the Soviet Union. I hope that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is prepared to cope with this, without undermining at all the good reputation and position of Canada world-wide.

• (1415)

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking the Minister for making a statement in the House on this matter, as is his custom.

We in the New Democratic Party, based on what we know at this time, have no criticisms to make of the Government's action. We trust that this is something the Government has good reason for doing.

We are glad the Minister was able to say that Canada's security was not compromised. We regret, as does the Government, that this kind of unacceptable activity has been carried out by Soviet officials within Canada, putting Canadian security, sovereignty, and industry at risk.

These kinds of activities are always regrettable, Mr. Speaker, but given the new era in Russian domestic and international affairs being ushered in by Mr. Gorbachev, it is even more regrettable. Perhaps this is what the Minister had in mind when he said on behalf of the Government that he was prepared, to put this matter behind us and look forward to a new day when the spirit of perestroika and glasnost, the INF treaty, and the recent Summit in Moscow will result in a world in which this kind of international intrigue is the stuff of stories about the bad old days and no longer grist for current affairs or the undermining of vital relationships between countries.

IN MEMORY OF JEAN ROCHON

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, Jean Rochon died yesterday. He dedicated his whole life to public affairs. He was first elected as Member of the Quebec Legislative Assembly in 1935, then as Member of the Parliament of Canada for Laval in 1962, 1963 and 1965 and for Ahuntsic in 1968. In 1972, when he could easily have been re-elected, he graciously gave up his seat to help elect one of the first women Members from Quebec to Ottawa, Jeanne Sauvé, who today is our gracious Governor General.

The people of Montreal, Laval and Ahuntsic wish to remember a good servant, Jean Rochon.

SENIORS

PUBLICATION OF GUIDE TO FEDERAL PROGRAMS AND SERVICES FOR SENIORS

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago, I received a new guide to federal programs and services for seniors. This publication was made possible by the seniors themselves. In discussions that the Hon. George Hees had with seniors and their representatives over the past several months, they suggested publishing this complete, detailed guide that would include all possible information on the federal programs available to them.

This guide will be available for the next six weeks at some 6,000 supermarkets in Canada. It may also be obtained by filling in the order form attached to last month's old age security pension cheques.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all seniors, especially those in Québec-Est, to obtain this guide, which I am sure will be very useful to them.

FORESTRY

SPRUCE BUDWORM INFESTATION IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the Government's attention, especially to the attention of the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew), the extremely serious infestation by the spruce budworm in the forest lands of central British Columbia.

Within the Kamloops forest district alone, defoliation by the spruce budworm has exceeded 800,000 hectares, a doubling of the invaded area since 1986. Locations of the infestation include Heffley, Old Fadear Mill, Louis Creeks, Clearwater, Little Fort, Barriere, Adams Lake, Paul Lake, and Little Shuswap Lake areas, the Highland Valley, the Bonaparte Plateau, the Chase Region and many others. Recent Canadian forestry service reports indicate that an additional 600,000 hectares are under intensive budworm attack at this time.

This serious crisis is posing a major threat to the timber resource in central British Columbia and I urge the federal Government, through the Minister of State for Forestry, to initiate a special joint federal provincial emergency program immediately to combat this infestation in an effort to preserve these valuable timber lands and especially to maintain the thousands of jobs dependent upon this very important resource.

TRADE

HOG EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, a recent preliminary American trade ruling, once ratified, will have major benefits for Canadian hog producers. It is recommended that the existing American countervail duty on Canadian hogs be cut in half, going down 2.2 cents per pound from 4.39 cents per pound. This reduction will be retroactive to March, 1985.

• (1420)

This decision is of extreme importance to Manitoba hog producers. Manitoba exports a large number of hogs to the United States every year.

The preliminary ruling is also evidence of our need to continue to work toward establishing solid duty-free trade relationships for all of our commodities we trade with the United States. By establishing a good trading relationship, all of Canada will benefit from the solid economic gains free trade has to offer.

Manitoba hog producers know the benefits of free trade with the Americans. How can the Opposition suggest to them that export duties are good for their industry? Manitoba farmers do not believe in the Opposition's nonsense.

Canadian hog producers produce the best bacon in the world, Mr. Speaker.

HUMAN RIGHTS

REPORTED VIOLATIONS IN SINGAPORE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the human rights situation in Singapore is rapidly deteriorating, and the Canadian Government should be doing more than merely monitoring the situation.

Since 1984 there has been a noticeable decline in human rights in Singapore. For the first time in 20 years, in 1984 two opposition Members were elected to Parliament. Prime Minister Lee was said to have been disturbed by this development and is still upset that he does not control all the seats in Parliament.

Last May 22 people, mainly young church workers, students, lawyers and artists, were arrested for supposedly being involved in a Marxist conspiracy to overthrow the Government. Subsequently, international human rights groups rejected the charges as a pure fabrication stating that these individuals were merely exercising their civil rights within the law. After providing the Government with televised confessions of their involvement in this alleged conspiracy, all but one of them were released.

Eight of these people were recently rearrested by the Government after they stated that their confessions were false and were the product of long hours of interrogations and beatings. Once back in prison, however, the Government quickly succeeded in having the dissidents retract their stories of coercion and mistreatment, and they are still incarcerated.

Canada cannot sit idly by and watch the ongoing human rights abuses in Singapore, a state which is also a member of the Commonwealth.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

FREE TRADE—RESULT OF BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the socialists suffered four major setbacks this week.

The G-7 countries endorse free trade and say it is a historic example to be followed throughout the world.

This is an expert opinion that is worth much more than the incredible statements from the socialist intellectuals.

The Prime Minister of the United Kingdom proved to us here in this House this morning that collective wealth and a better standard of living are made possible when citizens are free in a system that allows for creativity, ability and excellence.

Closer to home, in Lac-Saint-Jean, although he was looking for an upset, the socialist candidate lost his deposit.

In the riding of Anjou in Quebec, the provincial leader of the socialist party got 483 votes, 2 per cent of the total. He too lost his deposit.

Mr. Speaker, our society no longer wants the crazy world of Broadbent.

BANKS AND BANKING

ROYAL BANK—FEE CHARGED FOR CREDIT RATING SEARCH

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, today's bank special features the Royal Bank, Hanmer branch. My constituent, Marie June Ewen, had a loan at the branch and it was practically paid off this spring when she decided to renew the loan and increase it to pay her property taxes and insurance. She made that arrangement on May 9 and the bank deposited the amount into her account on May 11.

When she received her May bank statement, lo and behold, she noticed a service charge, $7 to register the loan, and $3. When she went to the bank to inquire about the $3, she found out from the manager of the bank that this was "the federal Government, by regulation, had asked for a credit rating search," and the bank was charging her $3 for the search.

This is another example of why we need an autonomous, independent ombudsman such as was recommended by members of this caucus.

TORONTO ECONOMIC SUMMIT

NEWSPAPER SUMMATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, according to The Toronto Star, the winners at the Economic Summit included our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) because he showed that he could wheel and deal with the world's best, Toronto because it hosted this summit, and Canada because the summit was a superbly staged affair. This must be so, Mr. Speaker, because The Toronto Star says it is.

• (1425)

Another winner appears to be our environment because the Summit leaders encouraged all countries to sign and ratify the ozone layer treaty, urged priority action on water pollution and acid rain, and endorsed the concept of sustainable development. It is unfortunate, however, that any reference to the environment was conspicuously absent from President Reagan's speech last night.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR UNIFORM SYSTEM OF ADMISSIBILITY TO BENEFITS

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, during the last weeks, I have received many requests about the variable eligibility weeks for unemployment insurance benefits.

The problem is the following: In my region, the unemployment level reaches 11.4 per cent. However, in some subregions, the level is above that. Now, the waiting period for the subregions is based on that of the region. Instead of having a waiting period in accordance with the subregion unemployment level, which is often higher, some people have to wait longer because of the lower unemployment level for the whole region. People living in these subregions are therefore penalized whenever their unemployment level is higher than the level for the region.

Because of this unfair situation, people generally feel dissatisfied.

The Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration prepared a report in which a specific solution to that unacceptable situation was recommended.

I therefore ask the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to act on that recommendation so that a uniform system may be put in place which would not wrongfully penalized the citizens of this country, and especially my constituents.

SPORTS

SEOUL OLYMPIC GAMES—REQUEST THAT CANADIAN BADMINTON FEDERATION CORRECT ALLEGED INJUSTICE TO DENISE JULIEN

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Badminton Association has no respect for athletes from Quebec. In not letting Denise Julien of Rouyn—Noranda take part in the Olympic Games in Seoul, it belittles our athletes and their parents, our volunteers and coaches as well as the Abitibi—Témiscamingue and Quebec sports organizations. When it asked Denise Julien to compete in the last Pan-American Games, she won the Triple Crown.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Badminton Association used the Pan-American Games results to apply for a place in the Seoul Olympic Games. Journalist Luc Adam of La Frontière wrote: "Injustice! Injury! Insult!" There is still time for the Association to redress that grave injustice against Denise Julien who has probably been the most dedicated champion of Canadian badminton in the past few years.

DESTRUCTION OF RAIN FORESTS

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, Canadians join with environmentalists the world over to deplore the rapid depletion of the rain forests, especially the tropical rain forests so vital to the maintenance of existing patterns of wind and rain. At present rates of destruction there will be little left after the next five years. Yet it is we, in the cooler, non-tropical areas, who are likely to suffer the most from the climatic changes predicted with the loss of our global air conditioner.

We in the developed world are most responsible for this depletion in the name of progress and development. Canadians indeed help to finance this destruction through aid projects financed by the World Bank. We even give tax relief to Canadians living abroad to organize this slaughter in the name of development.

We live in a fragile, interdependent world. We must reassess our role in financing rain forest destruction. We must, with environmentalists everywhere, become part of the solution to this urgent global environmental problem. We must end our own complicity and work with others to protect the rain forests for our own sake and that of the whole world.

NATIONAL FILM BOARD

DEMAND FOR WITHDRAWAL OF FILM THE KID WHO COULDN'T MISS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, is the National Film Board a law unto itself? If not, how much longer is the Government of Canada going to permit this Board to defame one of our greatest military heroes?

Scores of Canadian Legions and thousands of Canadians have asked the NFB to withdraw the odious film, The Kid Who Couldn't Miss. The Board refuses and thinks that placing the words "docu-drama" at the beginning and offering to produce another film on Air Vice-Admiral Bishop will erase its guilt.

This film denigrates Billy Bishop, pains his living relatives, and defames every man and woman who wears or ever wore the Canadian uniform.

If the National Film Board still refuses to withdraw this disgraceful film from circulation, I ask the Government to appoint a new Board that will listen to the people.

BY-ELECTIONS

VACANCY IN ROSEDALE CONSTITUENCY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the people of the Toronto area have watched with interest while the by-election unfolded in Lac-Saint-Jean. Why has the Government not yet called an election in Rosedale? Why are the people of Rosedale jeopardized by not having a Member of Parliament representing them here? Furthermore, why are they jeopardized by not having the government formula of largesse and generosity which accompanies the Government's style for calling by-elections, with $164 million of new promises in Lac-Saint-Jean and over $1 billion indirectly?

Does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) have a good friend left whom he has not yet taken care of? If so, let that friend run in Rosedale. I urge the Government to direct its promises into the much needed area of housing where, in the past, federal government assistance has been very valuable.

SAGUENAY—LAC-SAINT-JEAN

150 YEARS OF HISTORY—GREAT RALLY OF THE TREMBLAYS—TRIBUTE TO FOUNDERS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean region will be holding an important event this summer as we celebrate our first 150 years of history. All sorts of activities and events will be taking place throughout the summer. Among others, this week the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean will be hosting the great rally of the Tremblays which will coincide with our "fête des Québecois" festivities on June 23, 24 and 25. Did you know, Mr. Speaker, that Tremblay is the surname of almost 15 percent of the people, some 45,000 in all, in the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean area?

On the occasion of this 150th anniversary, Tremblays from all over the world will congregate to the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean to celebrate together our 150 years of history. Alexis Tremblay, familiarly known as "Picoté", was one of the founders of our region. Some 150 years ago, Alexis Tremblay decided that the Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean would be where his family would take root, and it did, Mr. Speaker!

In the name of all my colleagues here in the House, I would like to pay tribute to this great family on the occasion of its anniversary celebrations being held this week in Saguenay-Lac-Saint-Jean.

HELSINKI ACID RAIN AGREEMENT—NON-SIGNATORIES BRITAIN AND UNITED STATES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, how could President Reagan and Prime Minister Thatcher agree to the Toronto Summit communiqué calling on strengthened international co-operation among all countries to protect the environment when the United States and Great Britain have not signed the Helsinki Protocol to cut acid rain-causing sulphur dioxide emissions? How could Reagan and Thatcher keep a straight face while agreeing to the Summit statement at a time when they are stalling negotiations in Geneva on another acid rain-causing pollutant, nitrous oxides?

Our natives speak of people with forked tongues. If Reagan and Thatcher do not speak with forked tongues, then they should practise what they preach by joining Canada, France, West Germany, Italy and 17 other nations in signing the Helsinki Agreement on Acid Rain. Next, they would instruct their negotiators in Geneva to reach an international agreement to control acid rain caused by nitrous oxides.

We heard statements on the environment from summits before. Neither Reagan nor Thatcher has so far showed any willingness to put their theory into practice. Will they this time?

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that Question Period, which will now begin, will end at approximately 3.20 p.m.

UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER'S COMMENTS ON CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House share the great respect there is in this country for Prime Minister Thatcher and we value our relationship with Great Britain. We were glad to welcome her to this House of Commons this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Did the Prime Minister of Canada have prior knowledge of the text of the speech—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —delivered by the—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You have to do better than that.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did the Prime Minister of Canada have prior knowledge of the text of the speech delivered by Prime Minister Thatcher to Parliament this morning? If so, did the Prime Minister, despite his own views and despite the views of his Government, advise her that her comments on the trade deal with the United States were inappropriate—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —were inappropriate in that she interfered in our national debate on an issue that is likely to dominate the next general election in Canada?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that is the most insulting question I have ever heard in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Answer it.

Mr. Forrestall: Shame on you.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should be ashamed of himself. The answer is no.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would hope that the Deputy Prime Minister would have been proud enough to stand up and defend the sovereignty of this nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT GENERAL ELECTION BE HELD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canadians admire and respect Great Britain and we admire and respect the United States. However, I want to tell the Deputy Prime Minister that we are no longer a colony of Great Britain and we do not want to become a colony of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister that Canadians no longer need the advice or approval of any foreign power as to how we will conduct our external and trade relations. We need nobody else to help us make up our minds as to how we will solve Canadian issues.

The Government's trade deal with the United States is an issue to be decided by Canadians in Canada, debated by Canadians in Canada.

Mr. McDermid: It is before the House right now.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Under the circumstances, does the Prime Minister not think the time has arrived to go to the Canadian people on this issue and have Canadians decide the trade issue with the United States now, before we go any further with this issue in Parliament?

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): What we are seeing is an act of desperation, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is fundamentally different between the Liberal Opposition and members of the Government—

An Hon. Member: We stand for Canada!

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Mr. Mazankowski: —is the Prime Minister, the Cabinet, the members of the Government, all have respect, and show it, for visiting dignitaries. Whether it is the Prime Minister of England, the President of the United States, the President of France, the Chancellor of West Germany, we treat our visiting dignitaries with respect. We give them the honour they deserve, and I am surprised that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition would not do likewise. I find that very, very strange.

He says this issue should be debated in the House of Commons. I agree. The Opposition has used every trick in the book to prevent it from being debated in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Leader of the Opposition was so interested in the debate, he could have been here yesterday to debate the issue when it was brought to the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I don't notice the Prime Minister here to report on the Summit or to defend himself today.

An Hon. Member: He'll be here.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I hope so.

Mr. McDermid: You got the report and you don't like it.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister that if any Prime Minister of Canada, 15 years ago, had showed up at Westminster, the mother of Parliaments, and delivered a speech recommending to Great Britain, or advising Great Britain, whether or not to choose the Common Market, or join the Common Market, he or she would have been thrown out of Westminster and told to go back to where they came from.

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—MANDATE TO NEGOCIATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not up to Great Britain to tell Canada what to do.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister was wrong to take the applause from his Conservative backbenchers today and this morning as a sign of approval from the Canadian people. The approval of a foreign visitor, however distinguished he or she may be, cannot replace that of the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister never received a mandate from Canadians to negotiate this trade agreement with the United States. Everyone knows very well that he never mentioned the agreement, that he did not mention free trade during the last . . .

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to put his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And he himself, his own behaviour during the race for the leadership of the Conservative Party and at the convention—he was against free trade. So I ask the Deputy Prime Minister: Does the Prime Minister, despite the advice of his Conservative friends, not realize that the Canadian people are entitled to speak out now either for or against this Agreement with the United States?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find the analogy of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition rather perplexing when he talks about how he would deal with visiting Heads of State. If we were to use his analogy, we would have to throw out all the Summit Leaders. We would have to run them out of the country because they all very strongly support the free trade agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: You're whipped and you know it.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can only assume either he's going through his second menopause or he's cracking up, one of the two.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: You're sick!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They still think we are a colony of the United Kingdom.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER INVITED TO WESTMINSTER TO SPEAK ON NORTHERN IRELAND

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, following the line of questions, we still have not received answers from the Deputy Prime Minister when questions were posed about whether the Canadian Government in fact had foreknowledge of what the Prime Minister of Great Britain was going to say in relation to an issue that is crucial to the domestic position of this country and the rights of Canadians to make the decision. We simply want to ask, was an agreement made before the speech that, if Prime Minister Thatcher was to speak as she did on the trade issue, the Prime Minister of Canada was going to be invited to Westminster to speak on the Northern Ireland issue next week or next month?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Supporting the IRA.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question. If you could tame the jackals behind you, you would get the answer.

Mr. Axworthy: The bad temper of the Deputy Prime Minister and his comment about Members of this House should not be construed as an answer.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): What we are simply asking is this fundamental question. Why is the Government of Canada using the opportunity, a privilege, in fact, for people to appear in this House to talk about issues of mutual interest—

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Order!

Mr. Axworthy: —to propagandize its own initiatives? Why are you abusing the privileges of this House?

Mr. Foster: Right on!

Mr. Jelinek: Have you ever heard of free speech?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we invite the Speaker, we together as Members of Parliament invite visiting dignitaries to come to this House and to address us. We do not vet their speeches, Mr. Speaker.

POSSIBLE SCENARIO FOR VISIT BY CANADIAN PRIME MINISTER TO GREAT BRITAIN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The issue involved, I want to say to the Deputy Prime Minister, is not a matter of vetting speeches, it is whether a guest of the Parliament of Canada, not the Government of Canada, should come to this Chamber and make highly partisan, highly divisive speeches about domestic matters. That is the issue, I say to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that Mrs. Thatcher was a guest of the Parliament of Canada, not the Government of Canada, does the Deputy Prime Minister think it would be appropriate in reciprocating this gesture, that the Canadian Prime Minister go to Great Britain, take three issues that are of great debate—and I won't prejudge who is responsible in Great Britain—the division of Great Britain between a rich south and an increasingly poor north, the destruction of British universities, the destruction of the British health system, and make a speech and talk about those things? If not, what right does she have to come here and meddle in Canadian affairs?

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I can only interpret that question, as I am sure all Canadians would interpret it, as a direct attack upon the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is, you are absolutely right. That is what it is.

Mr. Mazankowski: And his Members applaud.

Mr. Speaker, if the New Democratic Party—

Mr. Tobin: Don Mazankowski, "the wild colonial boy".

Mr. Mazankowski: If the New Democratic Party and, in particular, the Leader of the socialists, want to take issue with the contents of the speech that was delivered to the House today, they are perfectly entitled to do so. We notice as well that certain members of the New Democratic Party took issue with the contents of a speech that the President of the United States made in this country in this same House of Commons. They were perfectly entitled to do so.

I remind the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that the Prime Minister went down to the United States and spoke to the joint Houses of Congress—

Ms. McDonald: And nobody showed up.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and talked very frankly and very bluntly—

Mr. Fulton: The House was empty.

Mr. Mazankowski: —about the United States position with respect to environmental issues. We did not hear any whining and complaining from the United States. You are nothing more than a whiner and a complainer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I just say to the Deputy Prime Minister that I would rather be a complainer for the people of Canada than a colonial Conservative for the Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN AFFAIRS—PRINCIPLE OF NON-INTERVENTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister did not answer the question. The vast majority of Canadians are against the policy of buying nuclear submarines. Both Opposition Parties are against the policy, but Mrs. Thatcher nevertheless decided to meddle in our domestic affairs.

My question is this: According to the Deputy Prime Minister, does our Prime Minister have the right to go to Great Britain and comment on the situation in South Africa, yes or no?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a tradition that was established for the first time in England, a tradition of free speech, and that tradition is also very strong here in Canada. It is a Canadian and a British tradition. The Prime Minister of Great Britain exercised that right of free speech here in the House of Commons today, as her predecessors have done in Britain. We on the Government side have a great deal of respect for the principle of free speech, and as the Deputy Prime Minister just said, it is a policy we ourselves followed when the Prime Minister of Canada visited the United States and spoke frankly and directly about acid rain. That was the same kind of approach, and it was in fact recommended by the socialist party here in the House.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, before my last question to the Deputy Prime Minister I want to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that he should remember what his Leader at the time said about Charles de Gaulle meddling in Canadian affairs. Look that up, Mr. Clark.

CONTENT OF U.K. PRIME MINISTER'S SPEECH

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this, since he did not answer the question. Does he think it is appropriate as a House Leader in Parliament that a Prime Minister of Canada would go to Great Britain and make a speech and devote more than half the time on British domestic issues that are highly divisive?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Will he answer that question? Does he think it is appropriate? If not, would he inform Mrs. Thatcher that her behaviour in the Parliament of Canada was unacceptable to the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker,—

Mr. Broadbent: Have an election on this.

Mr. Riis: Stand up for Canada just once.

Mr. Broadbent: The last colonial Party in Canada.

Mr. Riis: Stand up for Canada just once, Joe.

Mr. Axworthy: How many subs did you buy?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the basic fallacy here of course is that the question of trade is simply a domestic issue. The question of moving toward more liberal international trade, as the elected Leaders of the Summit just indicated in Toronto, is a matter of fundamental importance to all countries in the world, and an appropriate matter for the Prime Minister of Great Britain or, indeed, any other freely elected Leader to speak of.

I must say that if Hon. Members opposite think that Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher lets other people tell her what to say, then they know a different Margaret Thatcher than I do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: Why didn't you say something back? Why are you caving in?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston.

RELEASE OF PENITENTIARY INMATE WITH HISTORY OF PSYCHIATRIC PROBLEMS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It involves the case of Joseph Roger Fredericks, who has a history of psychiatric problems dating back nearly 30 years. He also has a dangerous criminal record.

In November of 1984 he was convicted of gross sexual assault on an 11-year old Ottawa boy. He was sentenced to five years in penitentiary. He was released on day parole in November, 1987. In March of this year he was released on mandatory supervision.

• (1500)

In a letter to Mr. Fredericks dated November 16, 1986, the National Parole Board stated: "You have earned the support of the institution and the case management team. We believe the risks of releasing you are assumable".

On Monday Mr. Fredericks was charged with the first degree murder of an eleven-year old Brampton boy.

I would like the Solicitor General to explain to the House what went wrong. How was it possible for this man to be released? How was it possible for a dangerous sexual psychopath to be released prior to his sentence expiry?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree that what has happened here is a terrible situation. Yesterday I expressed the sympathy of all concerned to the family.

I certainly do not intend to indulge in a review of this man's record when the case is presently before the courts, and when the man has been charged. I think the Hon. Member should be much more temperate in his remarks in the House in that regard. A man is considered innocent until proven guilty, notwithstanding how abhorrent the crime may be.

The man was released on mandatory supervision, which I may remind the Hon. Member was something I have recommended be abolished in the parole reforms which I brought forward last week. I can also advise the Hon. Member that I have asked the head of Correctional Services Canada to do a complete audit on this file for me. I expect to have that by the first of the week.

QUERY ON REASONS FOR RELEASE

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, in July, 1986, Parliament was recalled in an emergency. According to the Government that emergency was to deal with dangerous offenders who were being released on mandatory supervision. Parliament passed Bill C-67. The Department of the Solicitor General had the authority to detain this man, yet he was released a year and a half before sentence expiry.

How was it possible for this man to be released? Would the Solicitor General not agree that, in the circumstances, given his record, given the fact that he had psychiatric problems dating back 30 years, his Department ought to have exercised the authority that Parliament gave to him two years ago, and detained this man?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that the authority was not given to the Solicitor General. The authority was given to the National Parole Board.

I have already advised the Hon. Member that I have asked the head of Correctional Services Canada to get the file, do a complete audit, and report to me. I expect to have that report early next week.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNITED KINGDOM PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO JOINT SESSION OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Government House Leader, from one House Leader to another House Leader. I wish to ask him a serious question, because I do not think he responded to the questions put by my Leader. My Leader asked whether or not he, as a House Leader of Parliament, felt it was appropriate for the Prime Minister of the U.K. to be a guest of Parliament and raise the type of issues that she did.

Does he believe that it would be appropriate for our Prime Minister to go to Britain, not address a Conservative gathering, but address the Parliament of Britain and talk about highly divisive domestic issues? Does he really think that that would be an appropriate thing for our Prime Minister to do?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs stated in response to an earlier question, the trade deal is an international treaty which has implications world-wide. If that is what the Hon. Member is referring to, surely she is within her right to express a view, as have all seven summit leaders who, incidentally, strongly support and welcome the free trade arrangement.

I also noted that the Prime Minister of Great Britain had some criticisms about Canadian agriculture. Is the Hon. Member taking issue with that? She said what was on her mind. As the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs has suggested, she speaks with an open mind, and she speaks as she wishes. I am sure that all Hon. Members would wish her to be that way.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, may I suggest that Margaret Thatcher did not speak with an open mind, but spoke what was on a Conservative mind. That was the mind that she was talking about.

The trade deal with the United States is not like the drought situation in western Canada. It has not passed Parliament. It was not raised during the last general election a single time. The Prime Minister even stated that he was against it. The people of Canada want an election on this deal.

My supplementary question to the Deputy House Leader is the following. When Charles de Gaulle was in Canada raising domestic issues, not in the Parliament of Canada, the Government of the day spoke out strongly against his intervention. Why is the Government not prepared to stand up for Canada and speak out strongly in favour of Canada on this issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I remind the House of Commons that not many nights ago Members of the House from all Parties gathered here to take part in a special debate about a proposed regulation to be implemented by the Parliament of the United Kingdom respecting fur labelling, which affected Canada, in the same way that the movement towards international trade agreements will affect the life of Great Britain.

We had a right to speak about the fur industry in this Parliament. Margaret Thatcher, as the Prime Minister of Great Britain, and indeed all of the summit leaders who gathered at the Economic Summit, have a right to express themselves on important issues that affect international trade.

It may be that the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap does not agree with the view of the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The Prime Minister of Great Britain, in this free country, in this free Parliament, has the right to express her views.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RELEASE OF PENITENTIARY INMATE WITH PSYCHOLOGICAL RECORD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question refers to the Fredericks case, and to the Solicitor General's responsibility for the application of Bill C-67, for which he is the responsible Minister.

In this case we have an individual whose criminal and psychological record was such that, if anything, the Minister should have known that this was a case where Bill C-67 was designed to be of use.

Does the Solicitor General take any responsibility at all for ensuring that this legislation, for which the Government recalled Parliament in the middle of a summer break, will in effect be applied, and why it was not in this case? Is he not responsible for his Department?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not require the services of that Hon. Member to remind me of my responsibilities as Solicitor General.

As I have already explained in answer to an earlier question, I have gone to the head of Correctional Services Canada and asked that a complete audit be done on that file. As a matter of fact, I spoke to him again at noon today. He tells me that the audit has started, and that he hopes to have it in my hands in a few days. I will then be in a position to give an answer. Certainly I cannot at this point, because the audit has not been completed.

REQUEST THAT REPORT TO MINISTER BE TABLED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister to give an undertaking that that report, when received, will be tabled in the House unedited?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would again like to remind the Hon. Member that I am certainly prepared to carry out my duties in a proper way. The audit is being done. I will review the report and make my decision at that time.

SASKATCHEWAN DAM—QUERY ON NEED FOR TREATY WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My question is addressed to the Minister of the Environment. My understanding is that before the Minister of the Environment could issue a licence to allow the construction of the Rafferty and Alameda Dam he first had to conclude a treaty with the United States concerning the quality and quantity of water for Manitoba and to make sure that waterfowl and water quality requirements are met.

Can the Minister of the Environment tell us whether such a treaty had been concluded with the United States before he signed the licence?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the premise of the question is wrong. It is not necessary to have such an international treaty before the permit is issued. We are negotiating with the relevant jurisdictions and we expect a treaty to be completed very soon.

OBSERVANCE OF LICENCE CONDITIONS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): My understanding is that it would be a condition of the licence that certain water quality and quantity standards be met.

If Saskatchewan does not live up to those requirements and those conditions of the licence, does the Minister expect Saskatchewan to dismantle the dam?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, very stringent environmental conditions were woven into the fabric of the permit. Those conditions will have to be met. If not, the permit will be revoked.

FISHERIES

COMMERCIAL HARVESTING OF CLAMS ON WEST COAST BEACHES

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, in her excellent and inspiring speech to the House of Commons this morning, the Prime Minister of Great Britain failed to mention the problem with clam diggers in British Columbia. I would like to raise that now.

The Minister of Fisheries should be aware that hundreds of pounds of clams are being commercially harvested from recreational beaches on the West Coast. For a $10 licence fee well organized teams of 30 or 50 pillagers can systematically take as much as they want, go anywhere they want, and haul out the harvest by the truck load.

Where is the protection for the recreational clam digger? When does the Minister intend to control and protect the beaches of British Columbia properly?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree with the preamble to the Hon. Member's question. I am glad that he was able to raise such an important issue relating to bivalves on his beaches.

In the past three years there has been a tremendous increase in demand for the beach clams of British Columbia and that, coupled with the influx of a number of new Canadians who have been able to obtain commercial licences to harvest these clams, has led to considerable pressure on local residents of British Columbia beaches.

We are at present developing new regulations which, in fact, will bring in size limits, and toughen up restrictions as to bag limits and the activities of these beach clam diggers, both commercial and recreational, so that the Hon. Member's interests and those of all British Columbians will be properly respected.

INCREASED COST OF CERTAIN SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister responsible for Canada Post.

Mr. Speaker, if you think that the banks are going overboard with service charges to their customers, Canada Post should get first prize for charging Canadians exorbitant rates for their postal needs.

How could the Government authorize increases from $1.59 to $15 for a change of address, Mr. Speaker? Is the Government competing with the banks?

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou forgot to mention that for the first time since the Canada Post Corporation was established, it will make a profit, and it is making a profit today by substantially increasing it services. That is what the Hon. Member tends to forget when he talks about Canada Post.

[English]

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF CHANGE OF ADDRESS FEE INCREASE

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post increased the service by delivering mail to the supermailboxes by closing post offices in rural Canada. Canada Post is behaving worse than the banks. How can it justify an increase from $1.59 to $15 for a change of address? Will the Parliamentary Secretary ask the Minister to appear before the Government Operations Committee to explain this scandalous increase?

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why the Hon. Member for Saint-Léonard—Anjou insists on giving us false information.

Since this Government came to power, 2,000 new service outlets were opened in Canada, and when asked about the service, Canadians say they are very satisfied, Mr. Speaker, and that is what the Hon. Member always tends to forget in his questions.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—TORONTO SUMMIT DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In discussing the trade deal with Summit leaders, did the Minister tell those Summit leaders or their representatives that the deal stops us from using performance requirements like Britain does, that it stops us from bargaining with foreign investors like France does, that it stops us from having two-price agricultural products like Japan does? Did he, in fact, tell those leaders about the surrenders which this trade deal has within it?

Mr. Shields: What about two-price oil?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, obviously the leaders at the Summit know more about the trade agreement with the United States than the Hon. Member does.

Mr. Broadbent: Now, answer the question.

Mr. Langdon: I am interested to hear that deeply informed answer from the Parliamentary Secretary.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs the following question. The trade deal with the United States has never been endorsed by this House of Commons. It has never been given a chance to be judged by Canadians themselves.

Why did the Prime Minister of Canada pressure so hard to get Summit leaders to endorse this deal when he has not permitted Canadians themselves to have a say in the deal?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the reality is that leaders of the Summit who know the importance of making progress against protectionism of their own initiative in their own interests, and knowing that it is in Canada's interest, themselves vigorously endorsed the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States—

Mr. Broadbent: Read the transcript.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —not simply on its own but because of the signals it sends to the rest of the world that the way for this world to prosper is to bring down barriers and not to build them up.

NARCOTICS

TRACING ILLEGAL DRUG PROFITS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I find it insulting that the Conservative Party of Canada cannot fight its own battles.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The Liberals like to fight.

Ms. Copps: I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns another grand pronouncement of our Prime Minister in the Economic Summit's announcement of the war on drugs. The Canadian Government's war on drugs has all the force of a pop gun.

Why specifically on the one hand does the Secretary of State for External Affairs say that we have to put in place mechanisms to trace the laundering of money while on the other hand the Government of Canada rejected recommendation 22 of the all-Party committee which required Canadian banks to report transactions of $10,000 or more, which would have permitted us to follow the tracing of drug money?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member raised the question because it allows me the opportunity to say that the Liberal Party knows how to carry on fights, but unfortunately they are all internal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for her own benefit and edification that, if she would check with her justice critic, she would find out that we have probably the most progressive legislation with respect to the seizing, freezing and forfeiture of the illicit profits of crime of any country in the western world. I think that we can give leadership in terms of our international obligations and are, in fact, entering into arrangements with other countries in the G-7 in order to make sure that we have a very strong and effective set of laws to crack down on people who make a profit on drugs. I hope the Hon. Member will assist us in getting this legislation through the House so we can have Royal Assent early.

NATIONAL DRUGS STRATEGY—FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party does not sink so low as to use the kind of language which the Deputy Prime Minister uses.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1520)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put her question.

Ms. Copps: We don't use "menopause" as a slight across the floor of the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put her question.

Ms. Copps: I have a very specific question. Does the Government really expect the people Canada to believe that we are conducting a war on drugs when in the fiscal year 1987-88, after the Minister of National Health and Welfare announced the multimillion dollar National Drugs Strategy, the amount of money to the Province of Ontario, Canada's largest province, dedicated to drug rehabilitation was less than $25,000? Is that not an absolute joke?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister made his statement in Vancouver on the drug crisis, that Hon. Member along with other members of her Party said that there was no crisis, there was no need for a drugs strategy, and she condemned the Prime Minister at that time. Today we hear this version. Every time there is a different version. She is as consistent as her Leader.

This weekend, for instance, the first international anti-doping conference is being sponsored by the Canadian Olympic Committee. Additionally, this year $70 million will go for rehabilitation for youth.

That Hon. Member, if I can still use that term loosely, really should not be believed around here too much, because anything she says is only partisan. It is ridiculous and it is idiotic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

WITHDRAWAL OF COMMENT DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the course of Question Period the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) as either suffering a second menopause or of being a crackpot. Although menopause may not be included in the specific list of unparliamentary remarks, it is an absolute insult to women. It is a sexist remark, associating the word "crackpot" with the word "menopause". I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister to withdraw that statement.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if those words are unparliamentary, I will withdraw them.

PRIVILEGE

RESPECT FOR BILINGUALISM

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a short question of privilege. Earlier today, before we had that unbelievable but very warranted discussion the kind of which I had not seen in my 25 years in this House, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tabled a document. I must recognize, having taken a copy in English, that it is very short. But my question, Mr. Speaker is not whether that document is very long or very short, it deals with a sacred principle in this House on which I always insist. That principle is that no document should be tabled in only one of the two official languages, especially by a Minister of the Crown.

However short, the document was tabled in English only. I object. And the reason for that is, as I have always stated in my 25 years in this place that if there is a Department that should be aware of bilingualism, it is the Department of External Affairs, which must reflect the policy of bilingualism on every occasion and in every area.

If that Department could not find the time to translate two short pages on undesirables, even though we have been knowing since yesterday the Minister would be rising today to table the document, I wonder what is going on in External Affairs. I let that go by. Mr. Speaker, this is unacceptable, and I repeat unacceptable from any Minister of the Crown, but especially from the Department of External Affairs.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I accept the intent with which the Hon. Member spoke. I believe he fully recognizes all I have done in my public life in order to encourage and respect the official languages. I regret having submitted to the House today something that was initially in one official language only. The document now lays on the Table in both languages. And I remain committed towards the respect of Canada's official languages.

THE CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

CONSTITUTION AMENDMENT, 1987

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn:

WHEREAS the Constitution Act, 1982 came into force on April 17, 1982, following an agreement between Canada and all the provinces except Quebec;

AND WHEREAS the Government of Quebec has established a set of five proposals for constitutional change and has stated that amendments to give effect to those proposals would enable Quebec to resume a full role in the constitutional councils of Canada;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto sets out the basis on which Quebec's five constitutional proposals may be met;

AND WHEREAS the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto also recognizes the principle of the equality of all the provinces, provides new arrangements to foster greater harmony and cooperation between the Government of Canada and the governments of the provinces and requires that conferences be convened to consider important constitutional, economic and other issues;

AND WHEREAS certain portions of the amendment proposed in the schedule hereto relate to matters referred to in section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

AND WHEREAS section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982 provides that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and the House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province;

NOW THEREFORE the House of Commons resolves that an amendment to the Constitution of Canada be authorized to be made by proclamation issued by Her Excellency the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada in accordance with the schedule hereto.

SCHEDULE

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1867

1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 1 thereof, the following section:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(2) The role of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(3) The role of the legislature and Government of Quebec to preserve and promote the distinct identity of Quebec referred to in paragraph (1)(b) is affirmed.

(4) Nothing in this section derogates from the powers, rights or privileges of Parliament or the Government of Canada, or of the legislatures or governments of the provinces, including any powers, rights or privileges relating to language."

2. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 24 thereof, the following section:

"25.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, the government of the province to which the vacancy relates may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada the names of persons who may be summoned to the Senate.

(2) Until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 41 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the person summoned to fill a vacancy in the Senate shall be chosen from among persons whose names have been submitted under subsection (1) by the government of the province to which the vacancy relates and must be acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

3. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 95 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"AGREEMENTS ON IMMIGRATION AND ALIENS

95A. The Government of Canada shall, at the request of the government of any province, negotiate with the government of that province for the purpose of concluding an agreement relating to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province that is appropriate to the needs and circumstances of that province.

95B. (1) Any agreement concluded between Canada and a province in relation to immigration or the temporary admission of aliens into that province has the force of law from the time it is declared to do so in accordance with subsection 95C(1) and shall from that time have effect notwithstanding class 25 of section 91 or section 95.

(2) An agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) shall have effect only so long and so far as it is not repugnant to any provision of an Act of the Parliament of Canada that sets national standards and objectives relating to immigration or aliens, including any provision that establishes general classes of immigrants or relates to levels of immigration for Canada or that prescribes classes of individuals who are inadmissible into Canada.

(3) The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms applies in respect of any agreement that has the force of law under subsection (1) and in respect of anything done by the Parliament or Government of Canada, or the legislature or government of a province, pursuant to any such agreement.

95C. (1) A declaration that an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) has the force of law may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement.

(2) An amendment to an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized

(a) by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of the province that is a party to the agreement; or

(b) in such other manner as is set out in the agreement.

95D. Sections 46 to 48 of the Constitution Act, 1982 apply, with such modifications as the circumstances require, in respect of any declaration made pursuant to subsection 95C(1), any amendment to an agreement made pursuant to subsection 95C(2) or any amendment made pursuant to section 95E.

95E. An amendment to sections 95A to 95D or this section may be made in accordance with the procedure set out in subsection 38(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, but only if the amendment is authorized by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of all the provinces that are, at the time of the amendment, parties to an agreement that has the force of law under subsection 95B(1)"

4. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 96 thereof, the following heading:

"GENERAL"

5. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately preceding section 101 thereof, the following heading:

"COURTS ESTABLISHED BY THE PARLIAMENT OF CANADA"

6. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 101 thereof, the following heading and sections:

"SUPREME COURT OF CANADA

101A. (1) The court existing under the name of the Supreme Court of Canada is hereby continued as the general court of appeal for Canada, and as an additional court for the better administration of the laws of Canada, and shall continue to be a superior court of record.

(2) The Supreme Court of Canada shall consist of a chief justice to be called the Chief Justice of Canada and eight other judges, who shall be appointed by the Governor General in Council by letters patent under the Great Seal.

101B. (1) Any person may be appointed a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada who, after having been admitted to the bar of any province or territory, has, for a total of at least ten years, been a judge of any court in Canada or a member of the bar of any province or territory.

(2) At least three judges of the Supreme Court of Canada shall be appointed from among persons who, after having been admitted to the bar of Quebec, have, for a total of at least ten years, been judges of any court of Quebec or of any court established by the Parliament of Canada, or members of the bar of Quebec.

101C. (1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court.

(2) Where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada.

(3) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) of any of the three judges necessary to meet the requirement set out in subsection 101B(2), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the Government of Quebec.

(4) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) otherwise than as required under subsection (3), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person whose name has been submitted by the government of a province other than Quebec.

101D. Sections 99 and 100 apply in respect of the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada.

101E. (1) Sections 101A to 101D shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws under section 101 except to the extent that such laws are inconsistent with those sections.

(2) For greater certainty, section 101A shall not be construed as abrogating or derogating from the powers of the Parliament of Canada to make laws relating to the reference of questions of law or fact, or any other matters, to the Supreme Court of Canada."

7. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto, immediately after section 106 thereof, the following section:

"106A. (1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Government of Canada after the coming into force of this section in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a program or initiative that is compatible with the national objectives.

(2) Nothing in this section extends the legislative powers of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislatures of the provinces."

8. The said Act is further amended by adding thereto the following heading and sections:

"XII—CONFERENCES ON THE ECONOMY AND OTHER MATTERS

148. A conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year to discuss the state of the Canadian economy and such other matters as may be appropriate.

XIII—REFERENCES

149. A reference to this Act shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

CONSTITUTION ACT, 1982

9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part."

10. Section 44 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"44. Subject to section 41, Parliament may exclusively make laws amending the Constitution of Canada in relation to the executive government of Canada or the Senate and House of Commons."

11. Subsection 46(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"46. (1) The procedures for amendment under sections 38, 41 and 43 may be initiated either by the Senate or the House of Commons or by the legislative assembly of a province."

Constitution Amendment, 1987

12. Subsection 47(1) of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"47. (1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada made by proclamation under section 38, 41 or 43 may be made without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if, within one hundred and eighty days after the adoption by the House of Commons of a resolution authorizing its issue, the Senate has not adopted such a resolution and if, at any time after the expiration of that period, the House of Commons again adopts the resolution."

13. Part VI of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"PART VI

CONSTITUTIONAL CONFERENCES

50. (1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened by the Prime Minister of Canada at least once each year, commencing in 1988.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

(b) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries; and

(c) such other matters as are agreed upon."

14. Subsection 52(2) of the said Act is amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (b) thereof, by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (c) thereof and by adding thereto the following paragraph:

"(d) any other amendment to the Constitution of Canada."

15. Section 61 of the said Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"61. A reference to the Constitution Act 1982, or a reference to the Constitution Acts 1867 to 1982, shall be deemed to include a reference to any amendments thereto."

GENERAL

16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25 or 27 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution Act, 1867.

CITATION

17. This amendment may be cited as the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

And the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra):

That the motion be amended

(a) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2. (1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with

(a) the recognition that the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec, constitutes a fundamental characteristic of Canada; and

(b) the recognition that Quebec constitutes within Canada a distinct society.

(c) the recognition that aboriginal peoples constitute a distinctive and fundamental characteristic of Canada;

(d) the recognition of the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures as well as the differing regional identities that helped shape Canadian society; and

(e) the recognition of the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union."

(b) in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 2.(2) and substituting the following therefor:

"(2)(a) The role of the Parliament of Canada to preserve and promote, and the role of the provincial legislatures to preserve and, subject to subparagraph (2)(b) to promote, the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a) is affirmed.

(b) The role of a province in relation to promotion applies from the time it is adopted by a resolution of the legislative assembly of that province."

(c) in paragraph 2 of the Schedule by deleting section 25 and substituting the following therefor:

"25. Where a vacancy occurs in the Senate, and until an amendment to the Constitution of Canada is made in relation to the Senate pursuant to section 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982, the government of Canada shall, within six months after the vacancy occurs, call an election in the province or territory to which the vacancy relates for the purpose of filling that vacancy, and, notwithstanding the provision of section 29 of the Constitution Act, 1867, for a term of nine years."

(d) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsections 101C.(1) and (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.() Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province and the elected government of each territory may, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of the province or territory and are qualified under section 101B. for appointment to that court.

(2) Subject to subsection (5), where an appointment is made to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Governor General in Council shall, except where the Chief Justice is appointed from among members of the Court, appoint a person whose name has been submitted under subsection (1) and who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

(e) in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where an appointment is made in accordance with subsection (2) and, if within a period of three months, no name which has been submitted under subsection (1) is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, the Chief Justice may make an interim one-year appointment from among justices of the Federal Court of Canada or provincial Superior Courts."

(f) in paragraph 7 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 106A.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"106A.(1) The Government of Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to the government of a province that chooses not to participate in a national shared-cost program that is established by the Parliament of Canada after the coming into force of this section, in an area of exclusive provincial jurisdiction, if the province carries on a compatible program which meets minimum national standards."

(g) by deleting paragraph 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 40 to 42 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

40. Where an amendment is made under subsection 38(1) that transfers legislative powers from provincial legislatures to Parliament, Canada shall provide reasonable compensation to any province to which the amendment does not apply.

41. An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the right of a province of a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(c) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(d) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(e) the Supreme Court of Canada; and

(f) an amendment to this Part.

42.(1) An amendment to the Constitution of Canada in relation to the following matters may be made only in accordance with subsection 38(1):

(a) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators; and

(b) the number of members by which a province or territory is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators.

(2) Subsections 38(2) to (4) do not apply in respect of amendments in relation to matters referred to in subsection (1).

42A. Notwithstanding subsection 42(1) of the Constitution Act, 1982, the establishment of new provinces and the extension of existing provinces into territories shall be a matter exclusively for the Governor General in Council and the elected government of the territory affected."

(h) in paragraph 13 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 50.(2) and substituting the following therefor;

"(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters;

(a) the aboriginal and treaty rights of the aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(b) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators, representation in the Senate.

(c) roles and responsibilities in relation to fisheries at the first meeting only;

(d) such other matters as are agreed upon."

(i) by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in the Constitution Amendment, 1987 derogates from any of the rights and freedoms guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms or affects Part II of the Constitution Act, 1982".

And the amendment of Mr. Broadbent:

That the motion be amended

(a) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(1) the words "and the elected government of each territory" immediately after the word "province";

(b) by adding in paragraph 2 subsection 25(2) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(c) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(1) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(d) by adding in paragraph 6 subsection 101C.(4) the words "or the elected government of a territory" immediately after the word "province";

(e) by deleting in paragraph 9, section 41 paragraph (i);

(f) by adding to paragraph 13 subsection 50(2) the following new paragraph:

"(c) aboriginal rights, in particular self-government;"

(g) by adding to paragraph 13 section 50 the following new subsection:

"(3) The Prime Minister shall invite to the Conferences designated in section 50 subsection (2)(c) representatives of the aboriginal peoples of Canada and the governments of the Northwest Territories and Yukon Territory and those groups and governments shall participate fully in all matters that affect aboriginal rights."

(h) by deleting paragraph 16 and substituting the following therefor:

"16. Nothing in section 2 of the Constitution Act, 1867 affects section 25, 27 or 28 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, section 35 of the Constitution Act, 1982 or class 24 of section 91 of the Constitution.—

And the amendment of Mr. Caccia:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule

(a) by deleting Section 2.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"2.(1) The Constitution of Canada shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the recognition that Canada consists of aboriginal and multicultural societies, with English and French as the official languages of Canada, French-speaking Canadians being centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada and English-speaking Canadians concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec",

(b) by deleting Section 2.(3).

And the amendments of Mr. Johnston:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 1 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"1. The Constitution Act, 1867 is amended by adding to the preamble thereto, the following "AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to maintain and reinforce across Canada the bilingual nature of the Canadian federation;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the distinctive character of Quebec as the principal but not the exclusive source of the French language and culture in Canada;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the multicultural nature of Canadian society, and in particular their respect for the many origins, creeds and cultures, as well as the differing regional identities that help shape Canadian society;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the contribution of Canada's aboriginal peoples;

AND WHEREAS Canadians recognize their commitment to the advantages of developing the Canadian economic union;""—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 3 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 95C (2) and substituting the following therefor:

"95C.(2) An amendment to or the termination of an agreement referred to in subsection 95B(1) may be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada only where so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons."—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting section 101C and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada and the Attorney General of Canada is considering a person for appointment to fill the vacancy, he shall inform the attorney general of the appropriate province.

(2) When an appointment is one falling within section 101B or the Attorney General of Canada has determined that the appointment shall be made from among persons who have been admitted to the Bar of a specific province, he shall make all reasonable efforts to reach agreement with the attorney general of the appropriate province, before a person is appointed to the Court.

(3) No person shall be appointed to the Supreme Court of Canada unless the Attorney General of Canada and the attorney general of the appropriate province agree to the appointment, or such person has been recommended for appointment to the Court by a nominating council described in subsection (5), or has been selected by the Attorney General of Canada under subsection (5).

(4) Where after the lapse of ninety days from the day a vacancy arises in the Supreme Court of Canada, the Attorney General of Canada and the attorney general of a province have not reached agreement on a person to be appointed to fill the vacancy, the Attorney General of Canada may inform the attorney general of the appropriate province in writing that he proposes to convene a nominating council to recommend an appointment.

(5) Within thirty days of the day when the Attorney General of Canada has written the attorney general of the province that he proposes to convene a nominating council, the attorney general of the province may inform the Attorney General of Canada in writing that he selects either of the following types of nominating councils:

(a) a nominating concil consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee and the attorneys general of the provinces or their nominees;

(b) a nominating council consisting of the following members: the Attorney General of Canada or his nominee, the attorney general of the appropriate province or his nominee and a Chairman to be selected by the two attorneys general, and if within six months from the expiration of the thirty days they cannot agree on a Chairman, then the chief justice of the appropriate province or if he is unable to act, the next senior judge of this court, shall name a Chairman; and if the attorney general of the province fails to make a selection within the thirty days above referred to, the Attorney General of Canada may select the person to be appointed.

(6) When a nominating council has been created, the Attorney General of Canada shall submit the names of not less than three qualified persons to it about whom he has sought the agreement of the attorney general of the appropriate province to the appointment, and the nominating council shall recommend therefrom a person for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada; a majority of the members of a council constitutes a quorum, and a recommendation of a majority of the members at a meeting constitutes a recommendation of the council.

(7) For the purpose of this section "appropriate province" means, in the case of a person being considered for appointment to the Supreme Court of Canada in compliance with section 101B, the Province of Quebec, and in the case of any other person being so considered, the province to the Bar of which such person was admitted, and if a person was admitted to the Bar of more than one province, the province with the Bar of which the person has, in the opinion of the Attorney General of Canada, the closest connection.

(8) This section does not apply to the appointment of the Chief Justice of Canada when such appointment is made from among the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada."—

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 7 of the Schedule.—

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 8 of the Schedule by deleting section 148 and by renumbering the following sections accordingly.—

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"9. Sections 38 to 47 of the Constitution Act, 1982 are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"38. Amendments to the Constitution of Canada may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assemblies of at least a majority of the provinces that includes

(a) every province that at any time before the issue of such proclamation had, according to any previous general census, a population of at least twenty-five percent of the population of Canada;

(b) at least two of the Atlantic Provinces;

(c) at least two of the Western Provinces that have, according to the then latest general census, combined populations of at least fifty per cent of the population of all the Western Provinces.

39. Amendments to the Constitution of Canada in relation to any provision that applies to one or more, but not all, of the provinces may from time to time be made by proclamation issued by the Governor General under the Great Seal of Canada when so authorized by resolutions of the Senate and House of Commons and of the legislative assembly of each province to which an amendment applies.

40. An amendment may be made by proclamation under section 38 without a resolution of the Senate authorizing the issue of the proclamation if within ninety days of the passage of a resolution by the House of Commons authorizing its issue the Senate has not passed such a resolution and at any time after the expiration of the ninety days the House of Commons again passes the resolution, but any period when Parliament is prorogued or dissolved shall not be counted in computing the ninety days.

41. The following rules apply to the procedures for amendment described in sections 38 and 39:

(a) either of these procedures may be initiated by the Senate or the House of Commons or the legislative assembly of a province;

(b) a resolution made for the purposes of this Part may be revoked at any time before the issue of a proclamation authorized by it.

42. The Parliament of Canada may exclusively make laws from time to time amending the Constitution of Canada, in relation to the executive Government of Canada and the Senate and House of Commons.

43. Subject to section 44, a legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to the amendment from time to time of the Constitution of the province.

44. Notwithstanding sections 42 and 43, the following matters may be amended only in accordance with the procedure in section 38:

(a) the office of the Queen, the Governor General and the Lieutenant Governor of a province;

(b) the powers of the Senate and the method of selecting Senators;

(c) the number of members by which a province is entitled to be represented in the Senate and the residence qualifications of Senators;

(d) the right of a province to a number of members in the House of Commons not less than the number of Senators by which the province was entitled to be represented on April 17, 1982;

(e) the principle of proportionate representation of the provinces in the House of Commons prescribed by the Constitution of Canada;

(f) subject to section 43, the use of the English or the French language;

(g) the Supreme Court of Canada;

(h) the extension of existing provinces into the territories;

(i) notwithstanding any other law or practice, the establishment of new provinces; and

(j) an amendment to this Part.

45. The procedure prescribed in section 38 may not be used to make an amendment when there is another provision for making such amendment in the Constitution of Canada, but that procedure may nonetheless be used to amend any provision for amending the Constitution, including this section, or in making a general consolidation and revision of the Constitution.

46. In this Part, "Atlantic Provinces" means the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland, and "Western Provinces" means the Provinces of Manitoba, British Columbia, Saskatchewan and Alberta.""

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 13 of the Schedule and substituting the following therefor:

"13. Part VI of the Constitution Act, 1982 is repealed and the following substituted therefor:

PART VI

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCES

50.(1) A constitutional conference composed of the Prime Minister of Canada and the first ministers of the provinces shall be convened not more than once each calendar year by the Prime Minister of Canada or by resolutions of the legislative assemblies of at least two-thirds of the provinces that have, in the aggregate according to the latest cencus, at least fifty percent of the population of all the provinces.

(2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:

(a) an elected Senate with equal representation for the provinces and territories, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of electing Senators and their term of office;

(b) the method of appointing Supreme Court of Canada justices including the use of provincial advisory committees;

(c) the establishment of national shared-cost programs by the Government of Canada in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction;

(d) the repeal of section 23(3)(a) of the Constitution Act, 1982;

(e) the repeal of section 33 of the Constitution Act, 1982;

(f) the aboriginal and treaty rights of aboriginal peoples of Canada, including self-government;

(g) the application of sections 16 to 20 of the Constitution Act, 1982 to all of the provinces and territories;

(h) such other matters as the Prime Minister of Canada or any Premier may wish to add to the agenda for one meeting only."

And:

That the motion be amended by deleting paragraph 16 of the Schedule.

And the amendments of Mr. Roman:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 1 of the Schedule by deleting paragraph 2(1)(b) and substituting the following therefor:

"(b) the recognition that within Canada, Quebec constitutes one distinct society within a confederation of distinct societies."

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by deleting subsection 101C.(1) and substituting the following therefor:

"101C.(1) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada, the government of each province shall, in relation to that vacancy, submit to the Minister of Justice of Canada the names of any of the persons who have been admitted to the bar of that province and are qualified under section 101B for appointment to that court."

And:

That the motion be amended in paragraph 6 of the Schedule by adding immediately after subsection 101C.(4) the following:

"(5) Where a vacancy occurs in the Supreme Court of Canada and the governments of the provinces have not submitted names under subsection (1), the Governor General in Council shall appoint a person who is acceptable to the Queen's Privy Council for Canada."

Mr. Speaker: It being after three o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order adopted Tuesday, June 14, 1988, the House will now proceed to the taking of deferred divisions on the amendments and on the main motion in relation to the motion on the Constitution Amendment, 1987.

Mr. Roman: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like the permission of the House to withdraw the amendments that were proposed by me with respect to the Constitution Act and the amendments thereto.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner, Vancouver Quadra), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

● (1620)

Mr. Johnston: I have a number of other amendments, Mr. Speaker, that are to come before the House. I would be prepared to accept the vote on the first amendment as applied to the other amendments on the assumption that all Members have read those proposed amendments and realize what they are voting against. If the House gives unanimous consent to that, I would be prepared to dispose with votes on the other amendments.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to have my vote recorded in favour of the amendment proposed with respect to clause 7 of the Accord.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Johnston), and it is agreed, subject to the vote of the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: I declare all of the amendments lost. For the record, we have voted on one. There are seven others. I declare those seven amendments lost.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I stand to be corrected, but I think that there are six other amendments not seven. It is just a technicality, but it is something that you may wish to check.

Mr. Speaker: In answer to the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger), I wish to make it clear that the House has voted on the first of eight amendments, and that means there would be seven further amendments. As I understand it, it is the wish of the House that those seven further amendments be treated in the same way as the first. I declare those seven amendments lost.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Johnston), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Point of Order

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I appreciate the opportunity afforded a Member who has abstained to make a brief statement and give an explanation.

I am profoundly opposed to those provisions of the Meech Lake Accord which may weaken the important role—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: There is a tradition in this place according to which Member who has abstained may rise briefly to give an explanation. I would ask Hon. Members to extend that courtesy.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am profoundly opposed to those provisions of the Meech Lake Accord which may weaken the important role of the federal Government and allow for the possibility that fundamental rights of women and minorities as set out in the Charter may be overridden, diminish the status of the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and show a lack of recognition and respect for the aboriginal peoples of Canada.

[Translation]

But at the same time, Mr. Speaker, I regretted Quebec's exclusion of the Constitutional Accord of 1981, as well as I have always favoured the recognition of Quebec's distinct society which requires, for a fundamental part of this character to be guaranteed, that the principles of Bill 101 be obeyed and applied.

[English]

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I have abstained on this most important vote.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLOTTED DAYS—PRECEDENCE OF OPPOSITION MOTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to suggest that this should not be an allotted day. I refer to the terms of Standing Order 58(5) and Citation 478 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition which reads:

> Under the terms of S. O. 58(5), twenty-five days are allotted to the business of Supply in each year. Although technically the business under discussion is government business, motions given precedence on these allotted days may be moved only by Members in opposition to the Government. To this extent, there is a distinction between the business of supply and other government business with respect to S. O. 18.

I submit that, as a result of today, the motion given precedence was, of course, an initiative by the Government. For that reason, I believe that today ought not to be an allotted day.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I caught my hon. friend's argument but I would submit that the wording of the motion on allotted days is entirely within the control of the New Democratic Party or the Liberal Party, whichever one has the allotted day. It is my understanding that today's allotted day was for the New Democrats. Surely having drafted the order themselves, they, cannot then argue that what they have put on the Order Paper is, therefore, out of order. It has been accepted by the Table Officers for discussion, and I think that although my hon. friend may find himself in an awkward position, I think it is one of his own making.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the Hon. Member's point. I think what the Chair would prefer to do would be to proceed with Routine Proceedings now. When we come to Orders of the Day, I will hear the Hon. Member further.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

BILL C-264—REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report of the legislative committee on Bill C-264, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (instruments and literature for illicit drug use), in both official languages.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—FIFTEENTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifteenth report of the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business, in both official languages. The fifteenth report deals with the selection of votable items pertaining to the thirteenth draw which took place on June 13, 1988.

In accordance with its mandate, under Standing Order 36(1)(a), your committee recommends the following item of Private Members' Business to be designated as a votable item: Bill C-292, an Act to amend the Bank Act.

May I note that, pursuant to Standing Order 36(1)(b), this fifteenth report is deemed adopted when laid upon the Table.

[Editor's Note: See today's Votes and Proceedings]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I seek some clarification. Last day I received authorization of the House of Commons to have leave to introduce a Private Member's Bill entitled an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act. I wonder if I could now have permission to introduce the Bill for first reading.

• (1640)

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) will understand the difficulty the Chair is in. I do not remember who seconded the motion.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap) moved that Bill C-304, an Act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act (corporate and political office prohibited), be read the first time and printed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion adopted.

Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise to indicate to the House that today was designated as an allotted day.

Ms. McDonald: Not the whole day.

Ms. Mitchell: Half an hour.

Mr. Lewis: It is normally a day in which the Opposition chooses a motion to debate, puts it on the Order Paper for debate and then allows the debate to go forward. Today the House Leader for the New Democratic Party has argued that his motion, which was placed on the Order Paper by his Party, is out of order. Failing a quick decision on that, and I do not for a moment blame the Chair for reserving, the New Democratic Party is now stalling by calling for votes on whether or not its Members' Bills can be introduced.

In view of those circumstances, I want to point out, Mr. Speaker, that if this persists through the day, the day will be lost as an opposition day. Therefore, that day will be wasted.

Mr. Benjamin: You can't do that.

Mr. Lewis: Bear with me, Sir. That day will be wasted, and I am, therefore, notifying the House that Thursday will be an allotted day. That would be the ninth allotted day, if in fact we do not get to Orders of the Day or if the motion put on the Order Paper by the New Democratic Party, which it argues is out of order, is ruled out of order by yourself, Mr. Speaker. Then I would point out to the House that Friday being St. John Baptiste Day, Monday would be the tenth and final allotted day.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I rise on the same point of order. I was trying to be recognized to react to the point of order raised by the Hon. Deputy House Leader for the Government. I would like to point out that most of the items he appeared to have announced are hypothetical. They depend upon the ruling of the Chair. So on this side of the House we are taking nothing that is said as anything firm. If the Government plans to call for an allotted day, and so on, we would expect a clear announcement in the House, because these are all ifs and buts.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I seek the leave of the House to introduce my Bill regarding the international boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could indicate to the Chair who is seconding the motion.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Introduction of Bills

AN ACT RESPECTING THE INTERNATIONAL BOUNDARY BETWEEN CANADA AND THE STATE OF ALASKA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce a Bill entitled an Act respecting the International Boundary between Canada and the State of Alaska.

Mr. Speaker: is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I notice that after the question had been put certain Hon. Members entered the House. In all fairness, I cannot say that they attempted to vote, but is a very important principle that people cannot vote unless they are in the House before the question is put.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that you will remind Hon. Members about the importance of this principle established as it is, I think, in our Standing Orders.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) for bringing this matter to the attention of all Hon. Members. Of course, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. Once the vote is called, Hon. Members who have not taken their places must stay away until a new vote is called. This is a long-standing rule and tradition in this place and I know that other Hon. Members, at least for the next minute or so, will want to rise to approve of the comments made by the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I see other Hon. Members seeking the floor. I may be able to assist all Hon. Members by saying that it is six o'clock.

This House now stands adjourned until eleven a.m. tomorrow morning.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ADDRESS

of

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE MARGARET THATCHER

Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Great Britain and Northern Ireland to

Both Houses of Parliament

in the

HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA

on

Wednesday, June 22, 1988

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE MARGARET THATCHER
Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Great Britain and Northern Ireland
to Both Houses of Parliament
in the
HOUSE OF COMMONS CHAMBER, OTTAWA
on
Wednesday, June 22, 1988

The Prime Minister was welcomed by the Right Honourable Brian Mulroney, Prime Minister of Canada and thanked by the Honourable Guy Charbonneau, Speaker of the Senate and the Honourable John A. Fraser, Speaker of the House of Commons.

Hon. John A. Fraser (Speaker of the House of Commons): The Right Honourable the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker of the House, chers collègues, chers amis:

Today we welcome to our midst the Prime Minister of one of our mother countries, the Leader of the Mother of Parliaments and a truly outstanding spokesperson for the western world—the Right Honourable Margaret Thatcher, Prime Minister of Great Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We salute you, Prime Minister, as you can see, as warmly as we welcome you. The mother country has bequeathed to us an enduring tradition of British common law and our valued British cultural heritage. The Mother of Parliaments is the foundation upon which we have built our own parliamentary democracy here in Canada. We have adopted or adapted most of the customs of Westminster in the daily life of our own Parliament, with a few notable exceptions.

At Westminster, the Prime Minister is expected to attend Question Time twice a week, and the questions are submitted in advance, in writing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: As I have always said, Prime Minister, there is much to be admired in British parliamentary democracy—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and I hope that we can initiate such a reform here in Canada, perhaps as early as this afternoon.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Prime Minister, you are no stranger to this House having addressed a joint session five years ago. Today, you become the first British Prime Minister to address Parliament on two occasions. Historians will note that your first address followed your re-election in 1983 and that your second follows your re-election in 1987. If you, in that memorable turn of phrase, "go on and on", we expect to see you back here about 1992.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As the senior statesperson of the western world, Mrs. Thatcher commands respect everywhere for her strength of character, force of ideas, and of course political durability.

[Translation]

She is the first British Prime Minister to win three consecutive mandates in a century and a half and believe me, Prime Minister, that is something everyone in this Chamber understands, respects and envies.

By the end of her present term, she will have governed Britain in three decades, the 70s, the 80s and the 90s.

• (1110)

[English]

Mrs. Thatcher has personally presided over the transformation of Britain from a nation that lagged to a nation that leads.

Britain is back as a world economic power, as a motor of economic growth, as a model of economic development, and every person in this country and in this House knows that the responsibility for that magnificent achievement is here in the person of Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: On the world scene, I can testify first hand to her strong and persuasive leadership. She has just come from Toronto and her tenth Economic Summit. At Toronto, we sought to return to some of the informality and spontaneity of earlier summits. To the extent that we were able to do so, and to keep the focus primarily on economic issues, Margaret Thatcher played a genuinely impressive role, and I thank her for that.

The Prime Minister has also struck a balance between a determination to provide for security and a deep yearning for peace.

As you said, Prime Minister, in your previous address to this House, "our desire for disarmament is profound, but it is matched by an unshakable resolve that our way of life shall be secure".

In NATO, she has stood at all times for the solidarity of the alliance and strengthened her nation's contribution to the collective security of the West.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: But equally, Mrs. Thatcher was the first western leader to recognize the possibilities of change and reform in the Soviet Union. It was she, even before the change of course in the Soviet Union, who pointed out that Mr. Gorbachev was "a man we can do business with".

Between Canada and the United Kingdom there is, of course, a special relationship. The ties that bind us stretch across an ocean and reach across the generations.

The United Kingdom is now our third largest trading partner, with two-way trade in excess of $7 billion last year. Canadian exports to the U.K. rose by 5 per cent last year to $2.8 billion, representing nearly one-third of all of our exports to the European Community. Canada, with less than 1 per cent of the world's population, accounts for nearly 5 per cent of the world's trade.

[Translation]

Not surprisingly then, we are ardent proponents of trade liberalization.

As you know, Prime Minister, we have concluded a free trade agreement between Canada and the United States, the world's two largest trading partners, which we believe will give powerful impetus to the multilateral talks now underway in Geneva.

[English]

We are working very hard, and Mrs. Thatcher is providing great leadership, for reform in the area of agricultural subsidies. I am pleased with the clear signal of will which emerges from our deliberations in Toronto on this vital topic.

Of course, we maintain our familial and our very affectionate ties with Britain through the Commonwealth, and we strengthen them through the other multilateral institutions to which we bring a common heritage and in which we make common cause.

Prime Minister, we admire you as one of the world's most inspiring leaders. Your career has been one of confronting great challenge and difficulty and emerging with skill and resolve on a new plateau of accomplishment. You have stood firmly for freedom. You have fought hard for democracy. You have earned our genuine respect.

Colleagues, cher amis, I present to you a true friend of Canada, The Prime Minister of Great Britain, The Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher (Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, Great Britain and Northern Ireland): Mr. Speaker of the Senate, Mr. Speaker, Prime Minister, Hon. Members of the Senate, Members of the House of Commons:

[Translation]

First of all I would like to thank you for the great privilege and honour of being invited to speak before you a second time. Longevity has its advantages . . .

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Margaret Thatcher: I also want to take this opportunity to thank you and the Canadian people for the truly exceptional welcome extended to me and to the many foreign visitors who have come to your country in the past twelve months.

[English]

It has indeed been an extraordinary year in which world leaders, sportsmen, businessmen, and many others have flocked to Canada—the Francophone Summit, the Commonwealth Heads of Government Meeting, the Economic Summit, and the Winter Olympics. The British team may not have returned with any gold medals, but I think we can claim to have been represented by the most famous competitor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: All this is a tribute to Canada's success and to the high regard in which your country is held world-wide and most especially within the Commonwealth.

A Canadian Prime Minister at the turn of the century predicted that "the 20th century would be the century of Canada". The last 12 months have certainly shown his prophecy to be true.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: I should like to pay a particular tribute to the skilful and creative chairmanship of those meetings by your Prime Minister, Brian Mulroney, most recently at the highly successful Economic Summit. Few have the privilege of feeling that they have moved the world's fortunes a step forward. He has done so and deserves our thanks and congratulations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, our two countries are metaphorically, and often literally, members of the same family. Like a family, we have experiences in common that go back to our beginnings. A Canadian rode at Balaclava in the charge of the Light Brigade. Canadian boatmen ferried British soldiers down the Nile in their attempt to rescue General Gordon at Khartoum a century ago. It was an engineer from Québec, Sir Percy Girouard, who built the railway that was so valuable in opening up the Sudan.

Above all, we remember together our war dead by wearing poppies every November because a Canadian soldier, Major John McCrae, wrote the poem In Flanders Fields in the early morning of the 3rd of May, 1915, while the first battle of Ypres was raging.

Forty-three years after VE Day, we honour the valour and sacrifice of Canadian fighting men in two World Wars. That is something which we in Britain will never forget, a debt that can never be repaid. So too is the enormously generous help which you gave Britain in the post-war years.

Four Canadian Prime Ministers including Sir John A. Macdonald were born in Britain, and the only British Prime Minister born overseas came from New Brunswick.

We are delighted that today, Canada's involvement in our national life is as strong as ever. There are no less than 160 Canadian firms active in the United Kingdom with nine banks and thirteen security houses. Individual Canadians—Paul Reichmann, Conrad Black, Graham Day—are making a great contribution. Most exciting of all is the major Canadian investment in Canary Wharf, the remarkable architectural and commercial renaissance of London's docklands.

Last month, I opened the construction phase myself by sinking the first concrete pile—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: —with a little help from a pile-driver.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: When it is complete, it will be the largest commercial development in Europe. We welcome the confidence and the commitment on the part of Canadian enterprise which it represents.

• (1120)

Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of being among family is that we can compare ailments. Some years ago, we in Britain invented a disease. Its symptoms were a combination of stagnation, inflation, financial problems, labour troubles, and loss of confidence. They called it: "the British disease".

A Canadian commentator, Goldwin Smith, provided an excellent clinical definition of the malady nearly a hundred years ago. He spoke of countries that were "rich by nature, poor by policy". Today, many of us in the developed world realize that in varying degrees we have quite needlessly been "poor by policy".

We have come a long way since the days when people thought that you could spend and borrow your way to prosperity, that you needed a budget deficit and a bit of inflation to get economic growth.

Now it is understood that the Government's role is to keep downward pressure on inflation and to create a sound financial and legal framework in which enterprise can flourish.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: We have learned that it is not Governments which create wealth, but people, provided we have policies which encourage them to do it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: We have also got away from the debilitating concept of the all-powerful state which takes too much from you to do too much for you, constantly substituting the politicians' view of what the people should have for the people's own view of what they want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: We have had our own perestroika. As a result the economy has been growing steadily for seven years, soon to be eight, there are more resources available for the community's needs, and we have a budget surplus with which to repay debt.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Mr. Speaker, you can never do that except by first restoring the spirit of the people. The great economists of the past knew this. Adam Smith was not a professor of economics. He was a professor of moral philosophy. He understood how to work with the grain of human nature. He knew the heights which it could reach, which is why his policies for creating the Wealth of Nations will endure throughout the years.

Today you can feel the pride and confidence both in Britain and in Canada. Both our countries have learned that lesson. As a result we have achieved remarkable economic success, and today we jostle for the top place in the OECD's growth stakes.

Among the Economic Summit seven countries, sound money, lower taxes, and freedom for enterprise are now common form. It was not always so; but every year since the second cycle of summits started in 1982 the Heads of Government have committed themselves to those policies as the best basis for stable and long-term growth.

We have put behind us the financial irresponsibility which made the 1970s a decade of missed opportunity. I do not believe that the world could have withstood the shock of last autumn's fall in stock prices so well if our policies had not been built on sure foundations. We have established a new orthodoxy.

Low inflation and prudent financial policies need to be supported by open markets and flourishing world trade. Here too the Toronto Summit took important steps forward. We committed ourselves to the success of the GATT-round trade negotiations and encouraged measures to free up world trade.

Mr. Speaker, by 1992 every firm in Europe, whether engaged in manufacturing or in services, will have a single market of 320 million people. What a dramatic development that is going to be! To add to it, the Channel Tunnel will give Britain for the first time in our history a land border with Europe.

There will be new opportunities of every kind, not just for member countries of the European Community themselves but for those countries which trade with the Community.

Let me reassure you: it is not Britain's intention when removing barriers within Europe to see them raised against our other trading partners outside Europe.

Canada and the United States are pointing the way with a Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement which the Economic Summit warmly endorsed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: I understand that it may be a controversial matter in this Chamber. I will only say that I do not underestimate Canada's courage in taking this step in partnership with its giant neighbour. On the basis of Britain's experience of joining the European Community, you need have no fear that Canada's national personality will be in any way diminished. Fifteen years of European Community membership have left our people no less British and no less proud of their history and independence. Moreover, protectionism is not a life-belt which keeps an economy afloat. It is a millstone that drags you down and penalizes consumers and workforce alike. Subsidize the inefficient and soon that is all you have; you lose the competitive edge to export abroad and keep prices down at home.

There is another major world problem which we committed ourselves to deal with at the Summit. Agriculture will have to bring supply and demand more into balance. Until we do that, farmers will not feel secure in their future.

Look at the situation now. Countries compete with each other to give bigger and bigger subsidies. Farmers in Japan are being paid eight times the world price for rice. In the United States, in 1986, one single state received more loans and other aid from Washington than all the nations in Africa got from the World Bank. In Europe, the subsidy per cow is greater than the personal income of half the world's people.

• (1130)

Even Canada is not a model of absolute virtue, though may I take this opportunity to express my sympathy for the plight of your farmers who are suffering so badly from drought.

Abba Eban once said: "History teaches us that men and nations behave wisely once they have exhausted all other alternatives". Well, with agriculture we have exhausted all other alternatives. In Europe we have made a start in cutting back surpluses and reducing stockpiles, in some cases with dramatic results.

At Toronto we all recognized that setting realistic goals for reducing subsidies on a fair basis in all our countries offered a way forward, a way forward which will offer a surer future for our farmers, a better deal for our consumers, and hope for the Third World countries whose markets are unfairly saturated by the sale of our subsidized surpluses.

Mr. Speaker, here in this Chamber we are all privileged to be active in government and politics at a time of unprecedented hope and opportunity in relations between East and West. President Reagan's recent Summit meeting in Moscow with Mr. Gorbachev was an historic success. A new chapter in East-West relations has been opened.

We owe that to President Reagan because of his firmness and the way he has stuck resolutely to his convictions and beliefs. We owe it also to Mr. Gorbachev who, with a rare insight, has seen that communism has not been able to deliver the standard of living, of social services, of technological advance which its originators promised.

He has had the vision and resolve to embark on a course which, by mobilizing great personal responsibility and initiative, will bring greater benefits. It is not going to be an easy path for the Soviet Union and its allies in Eastern Europe. Those who engage in great endeavours never find the going easy, but it is in our interests as well as those of the Soviet people that he reach his goal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Every enlargement of liberty serves the interests of all mankind. The foundations of this new hope in East-West relations were not laid in recent months. They were built up over the last four decades by the resolve of the Governments and peoples at the heart of the western world—the United States, Britain, and Canada pre-eminent among them—to defend liberty, justice, and democracy however heavy the burden and whatever the price.

Now we are beginning to reap the rewards: the Agreement to reduce Intermediate Nuclear Forces and the Soviet withdrawal from Afghanistan. Who would have thought, five years ago when I last spoke in this Chamber, that either of these things would come about?

The more hopeful signs from the Soviet Union are bound to raise questions in people's minds: Can't we take a chance? Do we need to go on with the present level of spending on defence? Hasn't the time come when we can relax our guard? Mr. Speaker, nothing could be more dangerous.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: First, we cannot base our defence on hope, only on reality, and the reality is that Soviet military spending continues to grow and their weapons systems are being constantly modernized and updated in every field. Their forces are far in excess of what they need for defensive purposes alone.

Second, we do not know whether Mr. Gorbachev will succeed in his new policies. Old ways die hard and there is still little evidence that the Soviet Union's long-term foreign policy objectives have changed. We can hope for the best, but a prudent defence must plan for the worst case.

Third, modern weapons are so sophisticated that they take many years to plan and to produce. A mistake or miscalculation now could leave us vulnerable and unprotected at a time when our potential enemies are continuing to increase their military strength.

Fourth, we are in a position to welcome the changes taking place in the Soviet Union because we know that whatever happens our defence is sure.

For nearly 40 years that remarkable organization, NATO, has kept the peace. It has done so because everyone knew that an attack on one member would be an attack on all and we would respond accordingly and because we have had an effective mix of nuclear and conventional weapons and kept them up to date.

I pay particular tribute to Canada's contribution to NATO's strength and success by the way in which she welcomes our troops to train and exercise; by the resolute manner in which she agreed to test Cruise missiles over her territory, a demonstration of resolve which was crucial at that time; and by her intention to modernize her Navy by acquiring nuclear powered submarines we very much hope from Britain.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Thatcher: They are quite the best, and Canada must have the best.

Mr. Speaker, wars are not caused by strength or by armaments. They happen when nations are weak in the face of others who are both ambitious and strong.

Our duty is to preserve NATO's strength by constantly updating our weapons, both nuclear and conventional; by maintaining as you do highly professional and trained armed forces; and by demonstrating our united resolve.

Peace with freedom and justice is the most precious thing we have, both for our generation and for our children. That is the trust they place in us and we must not fail them.

Mr. Speaker, we always remember what lies at the very root of the differences between the Soviet system and the free world. It is a fundamentally different view of the role of the individual and his rights in society.

History has not equipped the Russian people with the capacity to escape easily from the incubus of state socialism. They know nothing of personal liberty, have never experienced an independent judiciary, and are strangers to tolerance and the checks and balances which operate in a free society.

People used to believe that dictatorships had the advantage of being more efficient and better able to act decisively than the democracies. They were wrong. Now they understand that you cannot plan and regulate everything, and that if you try, you lose the driving force of human nature and its inventiveness and creativity.

In modern societies success depends on openness, on free discussion, and on easy access to information. We in the West could never have experienced the great surge of technological advance without them. Once you try to suppress and restrain them, then not only are you unable to change, you are unable to respond to change.

Mr. Speaker, the example of what freedom has achieved in the open societies of the West is a powerful incentive to the closed societies of the Eastern bloc to extend it to their people and to accept restraints on the power of those who rule, but the case for freedom can never be merely a material one. It is a moral crusade.

The communist societies still see human rights as something given by the state, which can be taken away by the state. For us, they are something so fundamental that they cannot be given or taken away by any Government or human agency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Thatcher: Those who would have us believe that speaking out about human rights runs counter to the aim of better relations play into the hands of the enemies of freedom.

As President Reagan recently said in an inspired speech in London's Guildhall immediately after the Moscow Summit: "When free peoples cease telling the truth about and to their adversaries, they cease telling the truth to themselves. In matters of state, unless the truth be spoken, it ceases to exist".

Mr. Speaker, freedom is on the offensive as never before, a peaceful offensive pursued by example and by persuasion. Its triumph is our highest ambition.

• (1140)

In taking his leave of you in 1952, Winston Churchill did not say goodbye. Rather, he said:

[Translation]

"Goodby, my Canadian friends. Tomorrow a splendid future awaits you."

[English]

It is indeed a splendid future that awaits Canada, one filled with opportunity and pride. I know that Britain and Canada will walk that road together, unswerving in our purpose, strong in our joint defence, and firm in our abiding friendship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Charbonneau (Speaker of the Senate): Prime Minister, the Parliament of Canada takes pride in having you as one of its illustrious guests. We are delighted with the decision to welcome you every five years, until the end of this century. You will go down in history with Robert Walpole and his twenty-two tenacious years, and especially William Pitt, who in 1783 decided to hold the reins of power until the beginning of the next century. Typically, contemporary political historians always try to compare you with your illustrious predecessors, two of whom I just mentioned, and I may also include Disraeli. After listening very attentively to your speech, we understand the reason for these flattering comparisons.

[English]

In greeting you today, Prime Minister, we have been mindful not only of the fact that you are Britain's first woman Prime Minister—and we applaud this—but also of the remarkable place you have carved for yourself in the history of British Prime Ministers. The characteristics which have contributed to your success are legendary. Conviction, tenacity, firmness: in the shifting winds of political fortune, these are the ballast that leaders must carry with them, and when they are combined with vision, patience, and an inexhaustible capacity for hard work, one can expect that the ship of state will sail forward.

Your success in putting your country back on the road to prosperity is so evident that your name is always invoked in every discussion of international affairs and economics. Many debaters, not knowing whether they should refer to England or to Great Britain or to the United Kingdom, take a short cut and say quite simply "Thatcherland".

The world knows that you are a leader of determination and that very often you discard consensus politics. In that, you remind us of our Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, counting the votes in his Cabinet and saying: "Thirteen against my proposition, one for; the yeas have it".

A century ago, Oscar Wilde, in his humourous way, dared to write: "The Lords Temporal say nothing; the Lords Spiritual have nothing to say; and the House of Commons has nothing to say and says it". Had he been living today, he might have added: The Prime Minister has something to say and says it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charbonneau: Madam Prime Minister, on behalf of my colleagues in the Senate of Canada, I wish to thank you for honouring us with your presence today.

[Translation]

It was indeed an honour and a privilege to hear you, as a distinguished representative of the Mother of Parliaments, address the Parliament of Canada, and we are most grateful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Madam Prime Minister, let me add my own words of appreciation, on behalf of all Members of the House of Commons, and to thank you for your eloquent words and the message you have left with us.

The rare assemblies of both Houses of our Parliament, such as this, are reserved for very special and honoured guests. You, Madam Prime Minister, are among the foremost of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Indeed, as has been remarked, this is your second address to us in five years—a mark, surely, of the mutual interests and good will that exists between our two countries.

[Translation]

Thank you, Prime Minister, for having given us this opportunity to further strengthen the ties of friendship that exist between Canada and the United Kingdom.

[English]

It is not every day that we are privileged to listen in this Chamber to one of the longest serving leaders in the democratic world. You have given us much to reflect upon.

I believe I speak on behalf of all Members of the House when I say that one of the continuing benefits of these high level exchanges is to reinforce the positive aspects of international relations between our two countries, and to give a political impetus to resolving those irritants that may arise in any complex relationship.

It would be appropriate to remind ourselves that our Members of Parliament and yours are meeting constantly in the closest and most effective relationship.

[Translation]

Prime Minister, you are among friends.

[English]

In closing, may I say that we look forward to further dialogue and the continuation of vibrant relations between our two nations. The warm association which binds us is a precious asset not only for today but also for the challenging world which our children will inherit. You are among friends. We wish you to come again. God bless you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Anthony Roman (York North): Mr. Speaker, last week three students, Theresa Scaini, Carmen Lopez and Warren Ho from St. Robert's Catholic High School in Thornhill, Ontario, travelled to Ottawa to request that I present in the House of Commons this petition. It is signed by 3,496 of my constituents. They wish to convey to all Members of Parliament their concern that since the Criminal Code of Canada no longer provides any protection for the preborn child, and since it is the responsibility of the federal Government to guard the right to life of all its citizens, they humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass legislation protecting the right to life of all Canadians from conception until natural death.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Charles Hamelin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, I wish to table a petition from 3,000 working men and women in the riding of Charlevoix. The people of Charlevoix are extremely satisfied with the economic performance and climate in my riding: unemployment is at a 10-year low. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this has the effect of increasing the number of weeks required to be eligible for unemployment insurance. Since 25 per cent of the labour force, who are seasonally employed, depend on unemployment insurance benefits, I would humbly ask this House to endorse the principle of maintaining the unemployment insurance eligibility period at 10 weeks.

It is a wonderful riding that depends on seasonal workers and I therefore ask this House, Mr. Speaker, to adopt the general principle of 10 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance. This is the will of 3,000 working men and women in the riding of Charlevoix.

[English]

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I have the honour to present a petition signed by some 450 constituents of Okanagan—Similkameen, who wish to express their grave concern about the issue that is paramount in their mind, and that is the abortion issue. They ask that this House immediately prepare legislation to the effect that no unborn person shall be deprived of the right of life except where medical procedures are required to prevent the deaths of the mother. As in duty bound, your petitioners humbly pray.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present petitions deploring the fact that in southeastern New Brunswick the unemployment insurance qualifying period has risen from 10 to 16 weeks despite the more than 26 per cent rate of unemployment in that southeastern rural region.

Wherefore the residents of Rexton, Richibouctou Village, Pointe-Sapin, Bouctouche, Sainte-Anne-de-Kent and Cocagne humbly call upon Parliament to make the necessary changes so that the qualifying period remain at 10 weeks.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have other petitions from the people of New Brunswick.

[English]

These people are claiming that they are being discriminated against in that they are not allowed to claim tax deductions under the northern allowance. These petitioners are from North Head, New Brunswick, from Castalia, Grand Menan. They are also from Grand Arbour, Ingleshead and Woodward's Cove. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to designate their communities in New Brunswick as eligible under the northern allowance tax deduction program.

An Hon. Member: Only after hours.

OPPOSITION TO CANADA POST PLANNED ACTION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I too should like to present a petition signed by 30-odd residents of the electoral riding of Laval-des-Rapides who humbly call upon Parliament to reject the Canada Post plan and direct management to deliver priority post, registered mail, certified mail, and parcels to 550 Henri-Bourassa Blvd. West, not to 10005 Saint-Laurent.

[English]

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jim Jepson (London East): Mr. Speaker. It is my pleasure this morning to submit a petition on behalf of many Canadians, from indeed right across Ontario, exhorting the Government of Canada to bring in strong legislation to protect the life of the unborn. This is petition No. 332.

A second petition, Mr. Speaker, as well, once again exhorts the Government to bring in strong legislation to protect the life of the unborn. Once again, it includes signatures from a very, very wide range of cities, right across Ontario, from Kitchener, Brantford, Windsor, right through to Ottawa.

Once again, I have a third petition as well. All are for the same purposes. It is my pleasure to table those today. Thank you very much.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today. Nos. 334, 341 and 348.

[Text]

GRANTS OR LOANS WITHIN METROPOLITAN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 334—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of the Treasury Board make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, to which ones and, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Pat Carney (President of the Treasury Board): In so far as the Treasury Board Secretariat is concerned, yearly grants were made to the Institute of Public Administration: $150,000 fiscal year 1985/86, $150,000 fiscal year 1986/87, $150,000 fiscal year 1987/88.

The purpose of the grant is to provide financial assistance to the Institute whose main objective is "to promote amongst members of the federal, provincial and municipal public services in Canada and Canadian universities and colleges the study of public administration with a view to better service the public interest". This relates directly to the objective of the Treasury Board Program, by providing a forum which is seeking to improve the processes of Government and the performance of public administration.

PAROLE SUSPENSIONS IN METRO TORONTO REGION

Question No. 341—Mr. Nunziata:

Since January 1, 1987, have there been any parole suspensions in the Metro Toronto region and, if so, how many and, in each case (a) which community residential centre was involved (b) did the National Parole Board lose jurisdiction?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Since January 1, 1987, there have been 972 conditional release suspensions in the Metropolitan Toronto area. In 665 of these cases, the offender involved was not residing in a community residential centre.

(a) Community Residential Centres (CRC) involved

Elizabeth Fry	15
Archibald Center	50
Toronto House	14
My Brother's Place	4
North Beaches	11
Montgomery Centre	36
St. Leonard's Peel	9
St. Leonard's Crossroads	14
Exodus Link	41
Greenwood House	25
Clancy House	24
Total CRC suspensions	243

Community Correctional Centres (CCC) involved

Keele	64
Total CCC suspensions	64

(b) The National Parole Board lost jurisdiction on eight of these suspensions.

TASK FORCE ON TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED AREAS

Question No. 348—Mr. Penner:

1. For each of the (a) chairperson (b) two vice-chairpersons (c) ten full-time staff members of the Task Force on Tax Benefits for Northern and Isolated Areas, what are the (i) salary, stipend or honorarium (ii) amounts allowed for expenses (iii) other terms and conditions attached to the appointments?

2. Are the amounts in part (ii) additional to those in part (i)?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): 1. and 2. As the Minister of Finance announced in his press release of April 29, 1988, the task force will have a staff of 10 full-time employees and a total budget of $2.8 million. The task force will be required to complete a final written report by no later than October 31,1989.

The chairperson will be paid a salary in the range of an assistant deputy minister. The vice-chairpersons will be paid an amount in the same order of magnitude. They will also be provided with living expenses in accordance to the Treasury Board guidelines.

The staff members remunerations are set in accordance to the Public Service Commission guidelines and are based on their knowledge, ability and experience in the area of responsibility.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—BANK CHARGES—CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt) moved:

That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in, and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I can get the Parliamentary Secretary's attention across the way. We have done the normal consulting around the Chamber. We would like the vote deferred until six o'clock Monday, if possible. I understand this will take unanimous consent of the House.

I have done the consulting with the Government's Deputy House Leader of the Liberal Party. We all agree with that. We might as well do it now.

Mr. Hawkes: As usual, Mr. Speaker, this reflects the accuracy of our conversations. Yes, we think it would be in the House's best interest to defer the vote to Monday. We do concur.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) also consents. Therefore, the vote on this motion is deferred until next Monday at 6 p.m. by unanimous consent.

• (1120)

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, in beginning the debate on this motion I want to point out a very important aspect of it. Normally a vote on an allotted day is considered a question of confidence in the Government. I want to make it crystal clear that in the motion which I have put forward today it is specifically spelled out that a vote in favour of the motion is not to be considered a lack of confidence in the Government. That is justifiable because the motion is to concur in the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, which committee represents all sides of the House.

As a matter of fact, the Conservative Chairman was dubbed a socialist by the Bankers Association. Robert MacIntosh called the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) a socialist. I am prepared to adopt him. I will baptize him and call him a socialist for this interregnum. He is indeed a red socialist.

The report represents the opinions, after study, of all sides of the House. The motion I put forward reflects the view arrived at in the committee. Conservative Members may try to hide behind the veil that they must vote against this motion in order not to show a lack of confidence in the Government. I want to make that clear. The motion specifically says:

That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in, and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

Members must recognize that voting to concur in a report of a committee comprised of members of all Parties of this House does not indicate a lack of confidence in the Government. This motion goes beyond the usual lack of confidence we have in the Conservative Government. The point I am trying to make is that this goes beyond narrow Party politics.

Why did the committee get involved in studying bank service charges? Was it, as Mr. MacIntosh said, a desire to bash the banks? Was it a desire to secure our seats about which we are so insecure? Was it because Members of Parliament are on a power grab? Is that why we undertook to study bank service charges? They are hardly the stuff which Conservatives would motivate themselves to study under normal circumstances. Something very vital must have driven them to undertake this study. I suggest that it was the complaints coming from ordinary Canadians from coast to coast; the Mrs. de Gruchy's, the Go-Go Pizzas, and the thousands of letters which were arriving on Members' desks.

We on this side of the House were asking questions back in October and November of 1987. Government Members were asking questions of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) and the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin). Day after day members of the Official Opposition were asking questions about the rapacious activities of the white-collar loan sharks, better known as the banking institutions of this country, in dinging and donging their clients.

That is why we got involved in investigating bank service charges. One of the complaints was about the increasing number of service charges. You are charged to put money in the banks, to take money out of the banks, and to leave your money in the banks. You are charged and charged until your money disappears if you do not do anything with it.

If you asked for a $10 bill to be changed into quarters, you were dinged $2. You were charged 40 cents to get 50 pennies. It was getting absolutely ridiculous. The increasing number of service charges and the spiralling cost of them is what motivated the committee to get involved in this. When people received their statements from the bank they saw that if they were charged $2 last year, they were now being charged $3.50, with no explanation for the increase.

The third issue was notification. In many instances clients of the banks were not properly notified. In fact, there was a great deal of concern that Section 201 of the Bank Act was being breached. Banks would put up a notice in a branch at ten o'clock in the morning, start charging for a service, and take the notice down at 10.05. The banks considered that people had expressly agreed to these service charges. That is why the Finance Committee undertook the study.

The committee discovered, first, that bank service charges had increased by 19 per cent a year since 1982, far in excess of the inflation rate. When the banks appeared before the committee they said that we had to keep in mind that the increase was caused by volume. The banks also informed us that volume accounted for 7 per cent. Taking 7 per cent away from 19 per cent leaves 12 per cent, which is still three times the inflation rate. In response to this issue the committee said, as reported at page 167:8 of its report:

> The Committee has examined this matter to show that the alarm on the part of consumers is more than a temporary protest by a few unfortunate people and is soundly based. This is the only reason for comparing the changes in service charges with the inflation rate.

Therefore, after we discount the percentage for volume we find that there is in fact justification in the complaints of consumers that they were being zinged by the banks.

The committee discovered further that the computerization of the banking system ought to have been providing considerable savings to the banks. We state very clearly:

> The regional data centres where cheques are cleared use advanced, highly automated processes. Consumers now do a large share of their banking at automatic banking machines (ABMs), where the cost to the bank of a transaction is lower than at the counter in the branch. Indeed, banks have been able to make banking far more convenient through ABMs and extended banking hours, as they justly claim, and probably without an increase in their average cost per transaction!

The banks claim that costs have risen. When we asked for a clarification of what caused those increases, we found it very difficult to pin down.

It is important to touch on the relationship which has always existed between consumers and banks. When I started out working in the Royal Bank many years ago there was no computerization in the banks. It was a personal relationship, a relationship of trust. People deposited their money in the bank and there was a relationship between the customer, the bank, and the bank's employees. It was a relationship of trust, in which the customers expected their money to be safe and the bank would adhere to its policies. For example, if it charged a certain interest rate, it would stick to it. If it said it provided services for free, it would do so.

• (1130)

I believe that that relationship of trust has broken down. The banks are not careful enough with the notification process. There is no time taken to communicate with the customers and not only inform them of an increase in service charges but explain the rationale behind those increases.

If there is a new service charge, the banks ought to explain that. The banks are not interested in demonstrating the fairness of their charges to their clients. The banks have violated that trust.

The banks take money from their customers' accounts without permission. I call that legalized theft. The case of Mrs. Gruchy was an example of legalized theft. It is legalized theft when the banks seize people's accounts that have been inactive for a period of years.

It is not only my opinion that the banks have broken the relationship of trust. A Decima poll in the Financial Times last March asked a number of questions about bank services. The headline is: "Canadians show no sympathy for the banks' service charges". The first question is:

> Bank service charges have been rising. What is most responsible for these increases?

Forty-two per cent of Canadians said the banks are trying to increase profits without having people notice. Thirty-one per cent said it is costing the banks more to perform these services, so they are simply passing on costs to the consumers. Twenty-five per cent said the banks are trying to make up for money lost on loans to poor countries.

The next question was:

> Can you name any one bank that has increased service charges more than the rest?

Twenty-nine per cent said all demand the same rate. Eleven per cent picked the Bank of Montreal.

The third question is interesting:

> Should the government step in to protect consumers from increased charges? Or should banks and consumers try to work things out themselves?

Fifty-two per cent of Canadians said the Government should step in. Another Gallup poll concurred in this Decima poll. It showed that 50 per cent of Canadians said that their banks appear to be levying unreasonably high service charges. Sixty-nine per cent said the probe by the committee was either very necessary or quite necessary.

Canadians are crying out for the Government and Parliament to act on the way the banks are treating them. The committee was very clear in its response. After listening to all of the complaints from consumers, the committee said:

> The committee views the consumers' reaction to the behaviour of the banks and other financial institutions with regard to service charges as justified.

The committee agrees that consumers' complaints are justified. Charges are coming fast and furious without adequate notification and without any rationale. The charges were exorbitant.

Let us consider what the banks did in response to the criticism from the committee. While the committee was holding its hearings, the Bank of Montreal introduced new basic accounts. The Royal Bank froze any increased charges for seven months.

The committee made very wise recommendations. First, it recommended that the banks should provide basic accounts for which no charges shall be levied for maintaining the account, making a limited number of deposits into or withdrawals or payments by cheque from the account, providing the current balance of the account, and transferring to the basic account the balance of any other account of the customer with the financial institution.

We believe there is a lot of competition for the banking services of the wealthy, but very little concern about the basic banking needs of the poor. We believe that the banks must be forced to provide that basic banking service.

The committee went on to recommend the prohibition of certain charges. These are the charges about which people commonly complained. The committee recommended that there ought to be no charge for the closing of the account, if the account has been kept for at least one year.

We also recommended that there be no service charge for the failure to make transactions on the account, although a financial institution may charge for issuing any notice sent to holders of inactive accounts, as required by law. The committee recommended no charge for the deposit of a cheque under a prescribed amount that is returned because of an error or because there are not sufficient funds credited to the drawer's account. In other words, there should be no charge back on the NSF.

There should be no charge for any transaction which results from an error or unauthorized action by the bank. There ought to be no charge for maintaining a savings account during a period when the balance falls below an amount specified by the bank.

The committee also recommended that financial institutions be prohibited from introducing a new charge or increasing an existing charge in respect of any deposit made for a fixed term during that period.

After studying the issue, we believe that our recommendations are justifiable.

In addition, we recommended a new system of notification. There should be 30 days' notice of any change or new service charge on a statement account. It ought to be 60 days' notice for a deposit account, by means of a posted notice within the bank branch. It must be 30 days' notice in writing by mail it the bank wishes to do it differently.

We believe this would correct the problem about adequate notification and information with respect to bank service charges. We believe that the consumer must be well informed and that it is the responsibility of those with whom we have placed our money on deposit in a relationship of trust to inform consumers about any changes in the agreement to administer and keep that money.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs appeared before the committee. Before his appearance before the committee he sent his investigators to 71 branches across the country and discovered that in fact disclosure was badly lacking. No notices were placed in most of those 71 branches and it was difficult to get information when requested.

• (1140)

What was the response of the banks? Mr. MacIntosh, who represents the banks, said that Members of Parliament were insecure about their ridings and were trying to bash the banks to get re-elected. He said, "You have to yell at the Chairman of the committee because he has a tin ear, and that is the only way you can get through to him". He said we were in a power grab. That is the lobbyist for the banks talking. What an image he creates for the banks, and he wants to come on Parliament Hill and lobby Members of Parliament!

He did not like the NDP minority report which is attached to this report. I believe our minority report would complete the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs.

First, there is the role of the ombudsman. We believe there is an need for a independent, autonomous ombudsman, not attached to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, not attached to the Ministry of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, but an independent, autonomous ombudsman with a 1-800 number. He would have the function of arbitrator and referee in trying to resolve a lot of these problems.

We believe there should have been short-term redress for all those people who have been taken to the cleaners by the banks, who have been nickeled and dimed. that is why we recommended the freeze for one year from the date of introduction of the report into the House. After all, the Royal Bank accepted the principle of a seven-month freeze. We thought that was a good idea and we ought to extend it to its logical conclusion.

I would also point out that it is now up to the Government to act. The committee has introduced its report. A private Member on that committee has taken that report and patterned it into a Private Member's Bill. The Private Member's Bill is all part of the report. What we are doing here today is debating that Private Member's Bill which incorporates the changes to the Bank Act which would provide justice for consumers. We have no problem in supporting that, but the Government has to act.

I recognize that there is a special relationship between the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the banks. In fact, we can look at the contributions the banks have made to the Conservative Party in 1986. The Conservatives received $35,000 from the Bank of Montreal, $35,000 from the Bank of Nova Scotia, $35,000 from the Royal Bank, $35,000 from the Toronto Dominion Bank and $35,000 from the Bank of Commerce. In an election year those amounts are doubled. In 1986, the Liberals received $35,000 from the Bank of Montreal, $35,000 from the Bank of Nova Scotia, $36,000 from the Toronto Dominion Bank, and $37,000 from the Bank of Commerce. The Royal Bank did not give anything to the Liberals. I understand the sensitivity of that situation. We all know why. There is a renegotiation going on. They have to roll it over.

It is now up to the Government. The Government can release its Members to vote freely on this motion today. I plead with the Government to put aside the financial considerations it has heard from Mr. MacIntosh and his henchmen. Do not act like a vampire at the rise of the sun. Do not run and hide. I ask Members on the Conservative side to come forward and vote freely on this motion so we can pass the Private Member's Bill of the Hon. Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) which incorporates the recommendations. We can put it into law. It is sensible. Justice demands it and Canadian consumers support it wholeheartedly.

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we have a peculiar motion before us today that borders on not being acceptable at all, but I am not going to talk about the unacceptability at this point. I will merely point out to you, Sir, that this motion is made on supply. Supply is an opportunity for opposition Parties to test the confidence in the Government. That is the rule, that is the practice,and that is the intent of the rules.

My friend has said he has put in the motion that this is not a matter of confidence. The way to handle that, of course, is to move to amend the rules of the House. If he wanted to do that, if he wanted to change the nature of the motion coming before us, then he could have done so. Indeed, he could have brought this motion on a non-votable Supply day and used it as a matter of bringing the issue to public attention. What he is trying to do is to make political hay out of that which is not political, not intended to be political, but is intended to get at a serious problem which affects citizens of this country.

The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has been meeting in quite a different fashion from that of other committees of the House of Commons in this Parliament. The Finance Committee has operated in a very consensual type of way because the issues brought before it have been issues involving tax, whether corporate, personal or excise tax, issues involving financial institutions, issues involving credit cards, this particular issue involving bank services, and issues involving takeovers. These are issues that are important, Sir, to all people in this country whether they are Conservatives, Socialists or Liberals.

It really does not matter what one is in terms of one's politics, if you put your money in the bank, you want to be able to draw it out. If you deal with a bank, you want to make sure that the service charges are not a rip-off, that someone is not dipping into your account improperly. You want to make sure the tax system is fair, equitable and simple. These are the issues this committee has dealt with, and largely dealt with them unanimously. It has largely dealt with them in a manner, so to speak, that even after the report of the committee has been tabled, the committee would continue to deal with the issues in such a way as to push the Government, to persuade the Government, to direct things to happen that would work out in the interests of the committee and the interests of Canadians, generally.

Fortunately, we have before this House today a motion that breaks that consensus. It is an attempt by a political Party to really make political hay out of something that was not intended to be political. It was originally determined not by a question from the New Democratic Party because it did not know anything about bank service charges.

Mr. Rodriguez: Not so.

Mr. Blenkarn: It was the Hon. Member for Don Valley East (Mr. Attewell) who brought the matter to the attention of the House in the first place. The Member opposite says, not so.

This issue was brought to the attention in the House in November. The committee decided in November to launch an inquiry. The committee engaged its research staff. The research staff met with the committee on a number of occasions because the committee members wanted to contribute to that research. On March 29, the committee made public its research document and made public its terms of reference under which an inquiry into bank service charges would be held. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was not there—The Member for Nickel Belt, Johnny come lately.

Let us talk about the motion for a moment. This is a motion for concurrence. There are provisions in the rules for concurrence motions to be brought. The Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs has used concurrence motions as one of the arrangements whereby the committee could get something going on a particular issue that bothered the committee and was part of a committee study. We used concurrence motions successfully with respect to tax and with respect to corporate concentration. We have done that for only one purpose, and that has been to move the political process forward. The political process is now moving forward. We do not need to use this kind of method today to move the process forward. In question after question from sides of this House the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) responsible for this matter has indicated to the House that the Government will be bringing forward legislation and regulations at least as tough, if not tougher, than the regulations and legislation proposed by my colleague from York Scarborough.

Sir, this motion is a motion designed to embarrass the Government. It is a motion designed for political purposes. It is not a motion designed to help the cause of the little person who has problems with bank services charges. This is a motion to try to make the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt look good—johnny-come-lately look good.

Mr. Rodriguez: So you will vote against it, right?

Mr. Blenkarn: We are asked to vote on this motion. Let us go back to the report of the committee. The New Democratic Party decided at the last minute on the committee decision that it would like to file a minority report. At the last moment members of that Party produced what they call a minority report. Committees do not have minority reports. They have reports, but not minority reports.

The New Democratic Party states in this so-called minority report: "We believe the committee's response falls far short of its harsh criticism".

Mr. Rodriguez: Right!

Mr. Blenkarn: Why then, Sir, are we asked by the New Democratic Party to support the committee's report? Because it falls far short? What does it mean? What kind of New Democratic Party is this? It is the new dinosaur Party designing its program for one purpose—political marks.

Members of that Party have accepted Robert MacIntosh. Dear Bob said we were only in it for politics. The New Democratic Party is only here for politics.

Mr. Rodriguez: What are you here for?

Mr. Blenkarn: Members of that Party do not care about Mrs. de Gruchy. They do not care about people who are dipped a dollar a month because they bank in a bank that decides that if one does not have more than $200 in the bank then one will lose a buck.

Mr. Rodriguez: How are you going to vote on this?

Mr. Blenkarn: They are only interested in saying: "How are you going to vote? How are you going to vote?" The Hon. Member does not want to bother about the rules of this place. He does not want to bother about Supply. He just wants to embarrass.

The embarrassment is this. This New Democratic effort to try to cause difficulty is not really going to accomplish much at all. Obviously, we are required to support the Government if we intend to have a government in the country. If we were to support the motion for Supply, then we would in fact be voting non-confidence in the Government, notwithstanding what the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt would like to say.

Mr. Rodriguez: Nonsense.

Mr. Blenkarn: I think it is important to go over the committee report. The Finance and Economic Affairs Committee is a committee of the House composed of 13 Members. Nine of them are Progressive Conservatives. If this is going to be a political report, then this is a Progressive Conservative report. The report could have been passed by the opposition Members. The report was initiated by Conservatives. It was produced by Conservatives. It was not even supported by New Democrats. Now they want to force a vote on it. What kind of drivel is that?

Mr. Nystrom: How are you going to vote on it?

Mr. Blenkarn: Let us go over briefly the recommendations of the committee. First, the committee proposes that the banks be required to offer an alternative to an intricate account that has many service charges and to provide, in effect, a basic account so those who are perhaps disadvantaged in society will be able to take part in contemporary banking activity.

Mr. Nystrom: Are you going to vote against that?

Mr. Blenkarn: Second, the committee would prohibit certain charges outright that the banks have been making. Frankly, it is amazing that most of these charges are still being levied. There is a charge for putting money in the bank, for example. There is a charge for writing cheques of a minor nature. There is a charge for transferring money from one account to another. There are a number of charges that are being made that are really unconscionable.

Third, the committee proposes a very strong legal notification change with respect to the changes in service charges under Section 201 of the Bank Act.

The committee also proposed certain draft regulations. The committee Members on the government side have been working very closely with Cabinet to effect the changes and proposals set out by the committee.

It has been interesting over the last number of weeks, particularly with respect to the nature of change that is taking place, to see that people had no idea in many cases just how arrogant were bank presidents and how their lack of understanding of the ordinary person existed.

Sir, I want to read into the record a letter that was written by J. A. G. Bell, President of the Bank of Nova Scotia. This is a letter in reply to a lady by the name of Sandra Hanmer of 120 Golfview Avenue in Toronto. Mrs. Hanmer was after the Bank of Nova Scotia concerning the appearance of a branch at Gerrard and Woodbine. I will just read a couple of paragraphs of Mr. Bell's letter. It reads: "We have had the future of that branch under consideration for some time, and expect to make a decision in the very near future on whether or not it should remain open. Quite frankly, the branch is not a profitable operation since the customer base consists largely of senior citizens who receive their banking services free of charge. It is also worth noting that our client base includes a large number of welfare recipients who now use our low cost banking services. These services were referred to by the House of Commons Finance Committee as life-line banking."

Needless to say, Mrs. Hanmer was shocked. I want to read a couple of lines from her reply to Mr. Bell. "I write you because the facia of one of your branches is falling off into the street, potentially endangering people's lives, and you tell me that the branch is not a profitable operation because it is only welfare people and senior citizens who use it and therefore it is quite okay for you to let it fall into disrepair and endanger passers-by. Is this the type of defence you would present in court had someone been injured and sued you?"

Clearly, as members of the Finance Committee we would have preferred to work out a voluntary arrangement concerning changes in bank service charges and bank practice. However, clearly, the kind of arrogance and lack of sensitivity expressed by the President of the Bank of Nova Scotia in his letter and other letters as a result of other actions, leave the Government with very little alternative except to proceed with the legislative hammer and regulatory control. It is important that that regulatory hammer and control be effected properly.

While the committee has drafted a Private Member's Bill, and that Private Member's Bill will remain on the books and be debated within a week if something is not done pretty quickly, it is important that the Government move ahead, because it is the Government that controls the machinery of enforcement, and the machinery of regulation. Therefore, it is important that we give the Government the benefit of the doubt and the support it needs in order to bring forward that legislation and regulation that has been promised by the Minister, which I am advised will be at least as tough, if not tougher and more demanding than the position of the committee. Indeed, I suspect that, had the committee report been before the committee today, it would have been harsher than it is.

I am sure most Members would have thought that a committee report that was doing things that were largely agreeable, or that should be agreeable to anybody with any sensitivity in Government or in banking, would have been accepted as fair and decent. We were charged with being schizophrenic. One becomes very schizophrenic over the type of approach by bank presidents that were given to Mrs. Hanmer, Mrs. de Gruchy, and others who have had their accounts dipped into and dinged as we have seen, not only in the period leading up to the preparation of the report, but since the report itself.

Ordinary Canadians look to Government in cases where there is oligopolistic activity for regulation to protect them. We believe, if at all possible, that business ought to be able to regulate itself and ensure that that regulation is in the public interest. Clearly the banking industry, with respect to service charges, has not been able to come to grips with the reality of what it is doing, and it will have to be pushed. The only agency that can push it is the Government, and the Government has agreed to do that.

This motion is improper at this time. It does not help the cause of moving change forward. It is designed by the New Democratic Party to create problems in the process by which we address the problem of service charges in a manner that makes handling those problems work. It is our preference to have a government Bill. It is our preference to have the Government move ahead. We have been working to do that. To move concurrence at this point in this fashion is wrong and not productive.

This Party will be voting against the motion for the simple reason that this motion is brought forward to create a political arm for the New Democratic Party that did not care about service charges until we handled the matter, and now it is trying to recoup and get aboard what it thinks may be a bandwagon. They are johnny-come-lately. They are lately, lately, lately.

Mr. Rodriguez: Surely, Robert MacIntosh was correct and it is a lot of bombast, a lot of yelling, condemning, and personal attacks on the New Democratic Party to attempt to project the image that somehow or other the Hon. Member is the father of bank service charge changes in the interest of consumers.

I wish to point out that the New Democratic Party was asking questions on this issue back in November, 1987. The standing committee commenced hearings on April 28. As the consumer critic for my caucus I joined the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee in the study of these bank service charges.

The Member stated in his speech that perhaps if the committee were writing its recommendations today it would be harsher. That is why we put in our addendum to the report, and that is why we want it approved and in the motion. Since our addendum is attached to the committee report, that would be acceptable. The Hon. Member wants redress. Of course, there has to be concern for an immediate redress for consumers. That is why we recommended the one year freeze. That is the redress. The Hon. Member cannot say that it is water under the bridge and what has happened has happened. There is a need for justice to be served to those consumers who have been dinged and zinged, as the Hon. Member has said. That is why we put that in.

The Chairman of the committee, as an afterthought, wanted an ombudsman. He was not thinking of the ongoing interests of the consumers. He did not want an ombudsman who was going to be effective or an advocate for consumers. His whole approach in the committee was to put the ombudsman in the Superintendent's office, stick him up in the attic. We know that the Superintendent of Financial Institutions is only interested in the solvency of banks, not in the problems of Mrs. de Gruchy, Mrs. Hanmer, or other people like that. That is the point.

I ask the Member, in light of the fact that we are in the dying months of a Government and we are getting ready for an election, is this not an opportunity for the Chairman of the Finance Committee who just spoke to put aside his desire to be seen as the father of this legislation? Can he put aside that narrow, selfish view and see that this motion, if approved, would immediately do the things that should be done? It commits the Government.

We know that the pressure has been on the Government not to tell the banks what to charge and what not to charge. I have no problem with regulating them. The Member for York Scarborough has no problem. It is in his Private Member's Bill. But I honestly think that the Ministry of Finance will not accept a regulatory principle where the banks are told what services they shall charge for and what services they will not charge for. That is not part of its philosophical agenda.

I say to the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) and all Members on the government side: support this motion and you will achieve what you say now, that we should be tough with the banks. The other route is long and it may never come to a conclusion.

Mr. Blenkarn: I attempted to follow the convoluted rationale of the Member for Nickel Belt, but it was virtually impossible. First, the motion is that the House support the Finance Committee report. The Finance Committee report is not the minority piece that is put in an appendix, it is the report. My friend believes that what he wrote in an appendix is part of the report. He does not even know what he wants us to vote on.

If we take him at his word, and we are supposed to vote in favour of his appendix, I can say that we would not do that for the same reasons that we refused to support his suggestions at the last and dying moments of the Finance Committee hearings. The reason is very simple. The Hon. Member decides he wants an ombudsman, but he does not say where or how that will happen. The report does. The report states it will be a branch of the Superintendent of Financial Institution's office that is funded already by charges against deposit taking institutions. Therefore, it will not cost the taxpayers any further money. They do not think of these things. They do not work those things through. Obviously we could not support what the Member deems to be part of the report.

• (1210)

Mr. Nystrom: No.

Mr. Blenkarn: Clearly, Sir, the Member is so far off base that to support this concurrence motion, brought in terms of Supply, when the rules clearly say Supply is confidence in the Government, makes any support for my friend impossible.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend across the way. He has been around Parliament for a long time. Why does he not just vote on what is on the Order Paper before his very eyes. The question is very simple. I remember Stanley Knowles years ago saying that you vote on what is before you. What is before the House in this motion is:

> That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee—be concurred in.

It is a report of the Hon. Member's committee to be concurred in. He knows what that committee report is saying. Just read very carefully what it says:

> That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in.

You vote yes or no as to whether or not you agree with what is in the report. The Member is the author of the report as Chairman of the committee. He has to vote now on whether or not he concurs in that report. That is the first part of the question.

The second part of the question reads:

> —and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government.

The Member across the way is right when he says that usually a Supply motion is a non-confidence motion, but the House here is saying that if we adopt this report it is not a question of confidence. I repeat, it is not a question of confidence. You vote that this is not a question of confidence.

What the Hon. Member is trying to argue, with respect, is that we call night day and we call day night or we call Wednesday Thursday or we call Thursday Monday. You vote on what is before you. It is very clear. It is black or white. We vote concurrence in the report. If the Member does not do that, he is voting against his own report. This is not non-confidence in the Government. I say to the Member, respond to that.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, all one has to do is to take a look at the note immediately below the report. It says:

> Note:
>
> Ninth of ten allotted days and fourth votable motion for the Supply period ending June 30, 1988.

Mr. Nystrom: That is not the motion.

Mr. Blenkarn: It continues:

> (Eighth of eight votable motions for the three Supply periods provided pursuant to Standing Order 82(5)).

There is no provision in Standing Order 82(5) for the introduction of a no-confidence motion in the Government. The purpose of Supply is to allow the Opposition a chance eight times during the year to test the confidence that Members have in the Government. That is how we run our system. For one Party to decide of its own, without some changes in the rules, that it can use words like, "this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government" to somehow try to trap Members into voting against the Government is pretty simple and pretty foolish. The answer is very clear. The Member from Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) ought to know that.

Some Hon. Members: He does.

Mr. Blenkarn: He is an important person in his Party and he ought to know that what he ought to be proposing is a position that opposition Parties should be entitled to introduce motions indicating their confidence in the Government.

If the Hon. Member wants to introduce a motion indicating confidence in the Government, that might be a different matter. Perhaps he could organize the rules in that fashion. How he would do it would be to introduce a motion of some kind indicating that his Party has confidence in the leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government. That is exactly what they are doing here, only they are not. They are saying, "Sucker, sucker, sucker, come and vote for this motion". And then say, "Sucker, sucker, sucker, we are going to say you vote to defeat your own Government". We are not going to buy that, baby.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can only recognize the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a point of order.

Mr. Nystrom: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. My friend across the way referred to the note under the motion. I am sure you could clearly indicate to the House that we do not vote on notes in the House of Commons, we vote on the motion before the House. The motion before the House is very clear. The motion before the House does say that it is not a question of confidence. Obviously one does not draft a motion to say we believe that Brian Mulroney is the greatest thing since sliced bread.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nystrom: You vote on the motion before the House, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we voted on Meech Lake. Because we agreed with the Meech Lake Accord does not mean that we think Brian Mulroney walks on water. You vote on what is before the House. My friend across the way does not know what he is talking about, and I am sure you could put him straight, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have been associated with the work of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee on this issue of charges to clients since the beginning. It is a complex issue and it has been handled, I consider, with care and sensitivity by the Finance Committee, a committee which, like the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, generally works in a non-partisan fashion and tries to come up with solutions that are in the public interest that can be supported by all members of the committee.

For this latest round of hearings on service charges and financial institutions, we were joined by the New Democratic Party Member whose motion is before us today. He and his colleague had a minority report because they did not consider that the consensus report fully met their requirements and views. It is quite puzzling today to find that they are now moving a motion to support the committee report which at the time they could not support without reservations.

I welcome the opportunity to talk about this matter of service charges to consumers because it is an important and a delicate issue. I think there are some matters that should be put to the House that are worthy of more care than the kind of bank bashing which we customarily hear from the New Democratic Party. Having said that, let me say I hold no brief for the banks or any other financial institutions and, indeed, I did share in the criticisms made by the Finance Committee.

Let me go back and repeat the history of this issue. In November the matter of service charges to consumers and financial institutions, particularly the question of notification or lack of it, was referred to the Finance Committee. The staff of the Finance Committee prepared a research paper. I may say that the financial institutions generally, the banks and the trust companies, were reasonably forthcoming with facts, which aided in the preparation of this research paper. On March 29, the paper was made public, together with the terms of reference of the inquiry. What was becoming very clear by that time was that as competition in the financial institutions increased, as banks, trust companies, caisses populaires and credit unions all competed harder for business, they chose to pay higher interest rates and to provide new services like daily interest rates. This was the way in which they chose to compete, to keep their existing customers and to attract new customers.

• (1220)

To balance this expenditure, the banks started to unbundle their fee structure and to move more and more in the direction of user-pay. The Finance Committee came to the conclusion that the banks and other financial institutions had moved too fast, too vigorously, in the direction of user-pay, and that there should be a correction.

Insensitive things had been done. The public relations of financial institutions have not been good. Instead of responding to consumer complaints, they have tended to be defensive.

A particular area that the Finance Committee was interested in was the question of notification. There is a section of the Bank Act which requires notification to consumers of any changes in fee structure. A regulation was passed several years ago which provided that simply posting a notice in the bank or financial institution would meet the requirements of this particular section, namely, Section 201 of the Bank Act. It may have at the time, but in this day and age, when most people use machines and go into banks less and less often, the notice is simply not seen. Then consumers find it rather a shock when they are suddenly paying for some service for which they had not previously paid.

One of the things that irked consumers enormously, of course, was when they found that money was being deducted for inactive accounts. It is very difficult for any reasonable person to justify this. How can financial institutions charge a fee for an account in which there has been no activity?

These were some of the things that consumers were writing about and that the financial institutions were not responding to. When the Finance Committee set the terms of reference for our public hearings, we did focus very much on the whole question of notification, whether financial institutions are entitled to dip into people's accounts without warning and without specific authorization.

As a result of the hearings, some very specific recommendations were made by the committee to strengthen the legal notification requirements of Section 201 of the Bank Act which is clearly inadequate in present-day circumstances, and to prohibit certain charges. The committee also recommended that financial institutions provide limited basic banking services free of charge. We recommended that they provide what one of our members described as accounts "without bells and whistles".

The response of the financial institutions to this has been very negative. First, they say they are already doing this, that as a gesture of good will to their consumers, they already have about four million accounts for senior citizens which have no fees or very limited fees. Most banks also provide accounts for young people under 18 which have limited or no fees. The position of the financial institutions is that as a gesture of customer good will, they already provide accounts with no fees and few frills, and that they should not be legislated into doing so any more than any other commercial organization should be required to provide free services.

The Finance Committee takes a different approach. We have seen that in the United States there is a requirement in many states for financial institutions to provide what they call life-line accounts, very basic, minimum accounts. This is the direction in which the Finance Committee has leaned.

I want to mention a few of the highlights of the committee's report. In spite of the banks' protestations that they now provide services that have minimum fees, the committee was not able to accept that as satisfactory or to accept that they would do it as a good-will gesture, because we had so many letters from people who did not know about these accounts. We heard from students who had put money into the bank at the end of their summer jobs and then went back at Christmastime to draw the money out for Christmas shopping and found that, because the accounts were below a certain minimum amount, they had been docked quite a bit of money. In many of these cases, when the students or their parents complained to the banks, the charges were reversed. At that point, the families learned that these particular institutions offered services for students whereby charges were not applied. However, the public information provided has not been satisfactory, and we heard from many consumer groups and from many consumers who had gone to their financial institutions to ask for information about charges and had not been able to get it or to get it easily.

On the question of the increase in service charges over recent years, the banks put forward the view that the increase was related to increased volume and to inflation. The committee was not able to accept that entirely, because it appears that charges related to personal banking services by domestic banks have increased 18 per cent to 19 per cent over the past five years. The banks said that the volume of transactions increased by 7 per cent a year, so that means that there is 10 per cent or 11 per cent unaccounted for.

The committee came to the conclusion that the alarm on the part of consumers was more than a temporary protest and that there was a serious problem with a lack of information. In fairness to financial institutions, one must point out that although their service charges have increased, the greater part of their operating costs is still covered through the interest spreads. Nevertheless, service charge income has been increasing rapidly, and this is something that is a concern, particularly to low-income consumers.

Charges for personal financial services have been increased both in level and in number. The key, of course, is that the banks and the other financial institutions, as I said earlier, are offering higher interest rates because of the increased competition and therefore they are trying to balance some of this by increasing service charges. Unfortunately, the service charges have a way of hitting the people with low incomes and minimum balances in their accounts.

The Chairman of the committee has spoken of his dislike of regulations. Since I am not a Conservative, I cannot say that I have the same dislike of regulation, but, like many people who think they have more taste and talent for negotiation than for confrontation, I really do see regulation as a last resort. I would have hoped that the banks, faced with the evidence of a number of unhappy, dissatisfied consumers, would have been more ready to say: "We went too far, too fast in the direction of service charges, we are willing to make some changes". Instead, the spokesman from the Canadian Banking Association chose to attribute bad motives to the members of the Finance Committee, and this has not made for an easy situation.

• (1230)

Regardless of the attribution of motives and the hyperbole, we still have to deal with the issue. The question is, how best to deal with the issue. The consensus that the Finance Committee reached—I was part of it and I reached it reluctantly—was that it was necessary to move to provide better consumer protection, and, most certainly, better consumer information.

Again, may I just quote from the committee report. The committee believes that the rapid escalation and proliferation of fees was far from inevitable. The banks have pushed their user-pay approach too rapidly and too far. Unbundling and service differentiation have been carried to an extreme.

So that, Mr. Speaker, while we fully understand that indeed the banks and the other financial institutions have many, many thousands of satisfied customers and consumers, and most Canadians have great confidence in their banks, and have probably not had reason to complain in the course of 20, 30 years of dealing with them, nevertheless senior citizens are complaining that they have their accounts assessed for charges, simply because they did not have much money in them—there was no transaction, no activity, and yet there is a penalty for that—this is not justifiable.

Then you find that a senior citizen had money taken out of his account because his account was under $500, and when he died and his widow tried to close his account, she was charged a fee for closing it. These are small amounts, but they are large to the people concerned.

I am sure that from the point of view of the financial institutions—the complaints and the criticism they get for this nickeling and diming—it has been difficult and painful, and they may feel this is very small stuff in the face of the thousands and thousands of satisfied customers, but I think Members in this House have to be very concerned with the right of the consumer, especially the low-income consumer, the person with few resources, who may not have the social skills and adroitness to go and complain to the bank in a way that gets the charge reversed.

People who have been able to write letters to bank presidents have almost invariably had their charges reversed, and they have received an apology for this unfairness. But the people who do not have the resources to do that, who simply talk to the teller, or who do not talk to anybody, go unsatisfied. Hence, the need to have this matter regulated in some way.

Now, the committee adopted a three-pronged approach. I need hardly say that we put a lot of emphasis on information. Obviously, an informed consumer can make choices. We had a recommendation that the banks be required to provide an alternative to the intricate accounts with many service charges, and provide one very simple account with few—well, as the Member for Scarborough said, with "no bells and whistles", and for that, no charges.

Perhaps our most important recommendation is the need to strengthen the legal notification requirements of Section 201 of the Bank Act. Because one can hardly repeat it too often, if consumers have information, they can protect themselves and they can make their own choices. Increasingly, we found that an awful lot of this difficult and unsatisfactory situation could have been avoided if consumers had known about the special accounts for senior citizens, the special accounts for youth, because that is where the bulk of the complaints came from.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for York—Scarborough on debate.

Mr. Kilgour: I have a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. Kilgour: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was listening with some interest to the Member. I wonder if she would tell us—since we learn in the first introductory economics course that chartered banks have an ability to create money by taking deposits and issuing loans and so forth—whether she thinks that the banks should be entitled to cover all of their expenses by service fees, or does she—I notice that her colleague, who used to be a bank president, is sitting near her. Is she defending the banks today, or is she criticizing them in part and defending them in whole, or where exactly is she coming from in her speech today? I was not too clear.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member is unclear about where I was coming from. Let me try to summarize. I do not hold with the kind of bank-bashing we hear from the New Democratic Party, because I think it is irrational. At the same time, as I summarize the evidence that the Finance Committee had before it, after very careful examination it is quite clear that the banks have moved too far too fast in the direction of user pay.

When the financial institutions were faced with increased competition, they chose to compete by offering better interest rates. That is how they chose to try to attract new business and maintain their existing customers. They tried to balance that by some user-pay.

I said that still, most of the expenses of personal banking come out of the interest spread. We had been led to believe by some people that the banks were financing the whole thing by service charges. That is not true. What is clear is that the service charges have proliferated and have increased, affecting harshly the senior citizens and those who maintain minimum balance accounts.

I say that I would have preferred to have seen the banks agree on the fact that they have moved too fast on this, and I would prefer to see them agree to move back. They are not prepared to say that and, therefore, I see no choice except to legislate in the way that the committee has recommended.

As I said from the beginning, the committee report was unanimous. I have quoted in my speech parts of the committee report including the following: "The committee holds the view that stronger measures are needed than increased awareness by consumers, and sensitivity to public pressure on the part of the banks. Therefore it proposes changes to the Bank Act and regulations, and corresponding changes to statutes regulating other financial institutions". I support those recommendations.

• (1240)

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member across the way who is occupying the Conservative benches for the applause.

The point which government Members have brought up in opposition to our motion is that it is a non-confidence motion and they are, therefore, not prepared to support it. One wonders, as well, whether government Members have real interest in this. Government Members have accused us of playing politics with bank charges. I really wonder whether it is not government Members who are playing politics with the issue of bank charges.

We are all aware that this Parliament is most probably in its dying moments and that there will be an election called, conceivably this fall. Anything on the Order Paper which has not been dealt with at that time will die. In fact, I suspect that this is the major reason the banks turned down the offer of the Finance Committee to enter into a fair personal banking practices agreement. They were not interested in voluntarily complying with basic set standards because their calculation was that the Government is not going to last until the end of the year and that all the concerns about bank charges will wash away like water under the bridge and they will be able to continue in their practices.

I suspect as well that government Members know this. The Minister has promised to introduce legislation. Yet I did not notice, on the list which was provided to our House Leader of legislation which the Government was prepared to bring forward and have passed before the summer recess begins, an Act dealing with bank charges.

Our purpose in moving this motion today is for the House to tell the Minister and the Government that we want this legislation now. The House now has an opportunity to instruct the Government to do so before Supply is passed. Monday is the last day of Supply.

I am indeed very confused when I hear the tortured reasoning of the Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), who is the Chairman of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee, in trying to explain why he will be voting against the recommendations of his committee. There is no explanation for that other than, perhaps, that the Tories wanted to make a lot of noise about bank practices but were not prepared to act. Perhaps they wanted to create the impression for the folks out there that they are not really the friends of Bay Street and the bankers. They are willing to talk tough about bank charges, but the reality is that they are not prepared to act on them. The fact that Tory Members continue to talk tough about bank charges but will not ensure that legislation is passed before the calling of an election indicates where their true intentions are.

In this debate the Tories attempt to claim that New Democrats are johnny-come-latelies to the issue of bank charges. The spokesperson for the Liberal Party has just said that she does not side with the New Democrats when it comes to bashing banks. We have always been accused of bashing the banks, but now the Tories say that we are johnny-come-latelies on the issue of bank charges.

Historically the New Democratic Party and its predecessor, the CCF, have always been critical of how banks have moulded the economic development of this country to ensure that there are half a dozen very powerful banks. We have always been critical of the practice of the banks of investing where money becomes available, very often to the detriment of our regions. We have historically been critical of how banks have dealt with the average Canadian customer.

The Canadian public will not believe the Tory accusation that we are johnny-come-latelies on the issue of banks. But then there are so many other things about the Tory Government that the Canadian public does not believe or accept. In fact, when we look at the polls we discover that one of the major reasons the Canadian people will not be returning this Government is that they do not believe the Government or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is telling the truth.

Another reason we are introducing this motion today is an old concept which existed in the mother of Parliaments, the Parliament of Great Britain. That concept is that there should be an address of grievances before Parliament addresses the Government's request for Supply. In other words, the grievances of the citizens should be dealt with before the Government is given the money it wants in order to run the country. The Government has until Monday to get its Supply. We believe that the Government and Parliament must address the grievances of thousands of Canadian citizens.

Every Member who has spoken today has raised some of these grievances. The Member for Mississauga South went on at some length about the grievances which have come to his attention. In fact, he accused the banks of arrogance.

We all know the story of the retired person in Ottawa who needed some change. She went not to her branch, but to her bank, with a $20 bill. She needed $10 worth of quarters and the bank charged her $2 for changing the $20 bill.

My Leader, the Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), brought to the attention of the House a pizza parlour in his constituency which was charged way beyond what one would normally expect to be charged for basic bank services. The list goes on and on.

Of course, when we met with the executive officers and presidents of the banks they said that these are not their policies, that these are perhaps the mistakes of their branches. Well, surely the head office is responsible for the branches. However, the banks operate in such a way as to give the branches a lot of manoeuvrability to nickel and dime their customers.

We also discovered from many days of hearings in the Finance Committee that if a person complains loud enough, writes to his or her Member of Parliament or whatever, very often the branch manager will reduce or nullify an unjustified charge. Does that mean that whenever someone is nickel and dimed, 40 cents here or $1 there, on an invalid charge, he or she should write to their Member of Parliament? You and I know that in most cases people will say "Well, why bother?"

The banks also say that if people are not happy, they can go across the street. However, we have discovered that every branch engages in this nickel and diming. Average depositors realize this, shrug their shoulders, and accept it as the cost of doing banking business in this country. What is required is action by Parliament. What is required is action by the Government. We have known of this situation for a long time. It is simply not good enough for the Minister to promise us legislation. We want legislation. Hopefully our motion today will hasten the Government in that direction.

• (1250)

There are other examples of abuse which the committee has not studied. In fact, a whole other kettle of fish has not been investigated but deserves thorough examination. It is the treatment of small businesses by the banks.

Small businesses which depend on loans are very often captives of the banks which can call in a loan at any time. Therefore, many small businesses are forced to put up with all kinds of ridiculous charges.

One case that was brought to my attention concerns a small cattle auction mart and feed lot in Saskatchewan. They wrote:

> We have an operating loan of $150,000... Occasionally we require an extension. October, November, March and April are our bigger months as more cattle are moving during that time.
>
> Our local bank has to call Saskatoon to get approval for an extension. Each time they call they charge us $100. Last year it was $150 per call. I find this charge outrageous. One long distance call (100 km), someone's consent to a day or so extension and it's another $100 on top of interest, and overdraft interest.

That is outrageous. Yet the Tories will vote against this motion. The letter goes on to say:

> The explanation I receive is that it is not a service charge, it is a handling charge with someone taking the responsibility of the extension. They can call it what they like. It costs us $100 for a telephone call. Please note the enclosed debit memo to our account for two telephone calls in March.
> We have to handle $10,000 worth of cattle to gross $200 in commissions.

This feed lot and cattle auction mart will not make much money with a rate of $100 per telephone call.

It is another example of a bank doing almost anything it wishes to a small business. In this case, it is charging $100 for what may be a $2 or $3 call. The Finance and Economic Affairs Committee will hopefully conduct a thorough study into the treatment of small business by the banks. I believe it will result in an even stronger indictment of the banking practices of the big banks.

We should honour an old British parliamentary practice of dealing with grievances before Supply. However, I do not expect any action from the Tory Government. It may rant and rave and create the impression that it is thoroughly disgusted with these bank charges. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) may state to the committee and the House that he is outraged. The Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) may warn the banks that he will introduce tough legislation. However, let the Canadian public not forget who are the friends of the banks.

Let us consider bank donations to political Parties in 1986. The Bank of Montreal donated $35,000 to the Tories and $35,000 to the Liberals. The Bank of Nova Scotia donated $35,000 to the Tories and $35,000 to the Liberals. The Royal Bank donated $35,000 to the Tories in 1986, however, it did not give anything to the Liberals because it is holding the $5 million to $6 million debt of the Liberal Party. Perhaps they will make another deal.

The Toronto-Dominion Bank paid some $35,000 to the Tories and some $36,000 to the Liberals in 1986. The Bank of Commerce paid $36,000 to the Tories, and gave the Liberals $37,000, $1,000 more. We know who are the friends of the banks. It is no wonder the Liberal spokesperson disagrees with the New Democrats and suggests that we are bank-bashing.

I suspect the sincerity of the Tories when they discuss the unfairness of the banks to their customers. The Government will not take any action. It may introduce legislation, but it will never be enacted before an election is called.

It is also interesting to note the similarity of the contributions made by the banks to both those political Parties. They will probably double in an election year.

Mr. Nunziata: How much did the NDP get?

Mr. de Jong: I am proud to announce that the NDP got nothing.

Mr. Nunziata: Because you want to nationalize the banks.

Mr. de Jong: I would add that the NDP would turn them down if they offered money because we believe one cannot accept $35,000 from the Bank of Montreal without being beholden to it.

Mr. Jepson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Will the Hon. Member tell us how much the NDP got from the Canadian Labour Congress?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong).

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can ask that question in the 10 minutes for questions and comments after my speech. I know that four years is a not long term and it will probably be his only four-year term, but surely he has learned that there are 10 minutes in which he can ask questions after a speech.

The New Democratic Party does not solicit funds from the banks because we believe that one cannot take almost $200,000 in contributions from the five major banks without being beholden to them. That is why I believe that the Conservatives will not introduce banking legislation. I also believe that the Liberals are very happy about that because they do not want to see their friends restricted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments will be held after Question Period.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ST. JEAN BAPTISTE FÊTE

CELEBRATION OF FRENCH CULTURE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, the people of Québec are celebrating their heritage with various celebrations marking St. John the Baptist Day.

A typically French holiday marked by the lighting of bonfires, the feast of St. John is part and parcel of the traditions handed down to the French-speaking people of America by their ancestors. For the people of Québec, it is a day of celebration but also an opportunity to reflect upon themselves, to show their pride in speaking French and to think back on their origins.

As the prime source of French language and culture in Canada, Québec represents an essential thread in the great tapestry which our country constitutes. One only has to travel in that province to see how truly different it is from the others. It is the only one where French-speaking Canadians are a majority. Québec also operates under the Civil Code and its culture is unique and definitely distinct.

The vitality of the French fact in Québec and Canada is now unquestionable. Now we must ensure the development of the French language and culture in the other provinces with a view to promoting one of the fundamental characteristics of this country.

I am very proud to join with my fellow citizens from Québec in celebrating their national holiday. May you thoroughly enjoy this day with your family and friends in an atmosphere of fraternity.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—LEGISLATION TO ALLOW SALE OF HOSPITALS' ASSETS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, Premier Vander Zalm's irresponsible Bill 53, which was introduced yesterday, will allow British Columbia hospitals to sell equipment to the private sector and then lease it back. Under this agreement, cash-starved public institutions which have a tax exempt status will sell expensive equipment purchased with taxpayer dollars to the private sector which then uses it as a tax write-off. The taxpayer pays twice.

The Treasurer of Ontario estimates that institutions receive 10 per cent of the benefit while intermediaries receive 90 per cent. The federal Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) calls this an inappropriate use of tax dollars. Ottawa and the provinces have agreed unanimously to a moratorium on such sales and lease-backs of assets of hospitals, yet British Columbia ignores this agreement.

This approach to supplementing hospitals' budgets will not address the root cause of under funding of health care. The federal Government has cut $2 billion from health and education funding. This must be restored, and the Canadian public should know that this kind of B.C. privatization scheme is ripping them off.

YOUTH

GALA OF EXCELLENCE IN AMOS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on June 13 at the Amos Social and Cultural Centre, La Forêt Pavilion of La Mosaïque Comprehensive High School presented its first great annual gala for excellence.

The ultimate purpose of the organizers of this event is to instill in students at La Forêt Pavilion the desire for excellence, which is the art of performing one's duties and tasks to the best of one's talents and abilities.

Isabelle Breton was the "Wayne Gretzky" of the students. She was proclaimed outstanding student at La Forêt Pavilion, in addition to winning the Governor General's Medal and the Pierre Tardif and J.P. Norrie Scholarships.

Mr. Speaker, the list of students honoured at this gala for excellence is impressive: the 146 winners deserve our hearty congratulations. Hats off to the administrators and teachers at La Mosaïque Comprehensive High School in Amos!

DISASTERS

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF AIR-INDIA CRASH

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, a simple memorial in a Canadian newspaper asks all of us to remember a tragic event now fading into memory. The destruction of Air-India flight 182 on June 23, 1985, resulted in the deaths of 329 persons.

Mention of the mere numbers lost does not disclose the fact that the victims included entire families. Fathers, mothers and their children perished in this senseless criminal conspiracy. These families included the wives and children of Dr. Kurian Thomas and Gnanendran Murugan, of Halifax West, but virtually every community of Canada was touched by the tragedy.

Canadians will not forget the horror of the Air-India disaster, nor the special loss suffered by the Indo-Canadian community. We must do more than recall this event. We must protect Canadians by acting to ensure that those capable of evil acts of terrorism and violence are apprehended and punished.

THE ADMINISTRATION

STUDY'S REVIEW OF GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the annual analysis of the Government's record by the School of Public Administration at Carleton University was recently released. The Tory Government's four year old fiscal restraint slogan has been labelled an illusion.

At the beginning of its mandate, the Government was insensitive to questions of regional disparity and other social issues. These issues were ignored for too long. The Government is now hastily trying to catch up. Money was poured into Quebec before a by-election and funds are being committed hastily without much evidence of an organized plan.

• (1405)

On June 3 the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) said the tax system could not be both fair and simple; we can only have one or the other. It also seems that the Government cannot control the purse-strings as well as maintain social and regional programs; we can only expect one or the other.

TRADE

PROTECTIONISM ENJOYED BY BRITISH FARMERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher advised Canada to get involved in free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Althouse: She left the clear impression that such a move had been good for the United Kingdom. However, the fact is that British farmers gave up free trade to join the European Common Market. They now hide behind the high wall of protectionism under the Common Market's agricultural policies, and receive two to three times the price they were getting under free trade.

Let there be no mistake. Protectionism has been good for British farmers, and for the British economy. With the extra income generated by artificially high farm prices there has been an economic revival in Great Britain. When combined with the discovery of North Sea oil, the economic effect was more than enough to offset the negative economic and social aspects of Thatcherism.

Yes, the Common agricultural policy has been good for Britain. But Canadians should keep one point very clearly in mind—it is not free trade.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON GLOBAL ATMOSPHERE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, a major international conference is being held in Toronto next week to discuss the health of the global atmosphere. This conference is a result of initiatives taken by the Government in response to the call for action by the World Commission on Environment and Development.

Over recent years, leading world scientists have reached a consensus that increasing human activities will cause inevitable alterations to the world climate. There is growing recognition that the atmosphere is our most pervasive global commons. Climate change and other major air pollution issues require international action if we are to make progress on the road to sustainable socio-economic development.

This world conference is the first of its kind, and is expected to be a key step in developing international agreements and strategies which will assist humanity in adapting to these expected environmental changes.

This is yet another example of this Government's world leadership in issues crucial to our common future.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CLEAN-UP OF ST. LAWRENCE RIVER

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government will spend $110 million over the next five years to protect, conserve and clean up the St. Lawrence River, which was polluted by the previous Government and which will be cleaned up by the Conservative Government. Mr. Speaker, this is the most important federal environmental initiative in Quebec.

The Governments of Canada and Quebec have agreed to implement the appropriate coordination mechanisms to ensure that the action taken by each side to clean up and develop the St. Lawrence River is complementary.

To restore the quality of the River to what it was in past years, the federal Government intends to implement a dynamic four-part action plan and to create a marine park for the protection of endangered species and sensitive habitats. Six million dollars have been set aside to protect the beluga whales at the mouth of the Saguenay. I am proud that my Government recognizes the priceless value of the St. Lawrence River, which has always been a source of great pride for Canadians and is a living heritage.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, where the NDP was at the time when it inspired and passively endorsed the lack of concrete policies from the federal Liberal Government.

HOUSING

SITUATION IN METRO TORONTO

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the crisis of affordable housing in Metro Toronto is approaching the point at which people cannot even begin to dream about owning a home. While the average cost of a home surpasses the $225,000 threshold, the federal Government continues to remain irresponsibly silent.

Surely the Government has heard the calls from ordinary Canadians who cry out for immediate and sensible reforms, and the many recommendations offered by Members on all sides of this House.

Surely the Government has also considered the Downsview Air Force Base, or surplus federally owned lands, for potential housing sites. Yet the federal Government has been incredibly negligent in its absence of leadership. Perhaps it believes in the Thatcher approach of allowing pure market forces to dictate the price.

• (1410)

The ability and opportunity to own and live in an affordable home are more than a financial transaction. This is also a question of human need and dignity.

I call upon the federal Government to stop this moral bankruptcy and to move to stem the tide before Toronto becomes a tale of two cities: one for those who can live there, and one for those who can only work there.

TRIBUTE TO QUÉBECERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): On behalf of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate all Quebec men and women who will honour their patron saint tomorrow on St. John the Baptist Day. Tomorrow, my Leader is planning to go to the Montreal area to join them in their festivities.

I find it particularly revealing that in 1988, it was only yesterday, with a large majority and hardly any resistance, that the House of Commons finally agreed to the Meech Lake Accord, a document which finally recognizes Quebec as a distinct society, something which Quebec men and women have known for decades and generations, but which will be recognized at last by the rest of Canada. I feel it is a development which should have occurred a long time ago, but it is good that it is now a reality. The fact that Quebec men and women have kept their own traditions and language on an English speaking continent, and that Quebec culture has endured over three centuries, is quite an achievement, Mr. Speaker.

EXTRADITION

CANADA-UNITED STATES TREATY—CALL FOR UPDATING

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Extradition Treaty signed by Canada and the United States in 1971 is badly out of date. For instance, this Treaty contains a list of offences, and if the offence is not on the list the person cannot be extradited. The list does not contain offences such as computer crimes, some drug crimes, or parental abductions. I recommend to the Government that this list be scrapped and replaced with words like "any criminal act" or "criminal conduct".

The present treaty contains Clause 6 that may prevent the Government of Canada from sending a serial murderer back to the U.S., because that country provides death for convicted murderers while Canada does not. I strongly recommend that this section be removed.

Canada should not interfere with the justice system of another country. More important, Canada should not provide a haven for murderers from other countries.

The present section is an invitation for serial murderers and fugitives from the law to come to Canada. We don't need to import murderers. Out with Ng!

FUR TRAPPING INDUSTRY

TRIBUTE TO MINISTERS' EFFORTS ON LABELLING ISSUE

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I wish to welcome our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) back from a highly successful Economic Summit in Toronto. The inroads the Leader has made in coming to a resolution on the important issues of agricultural subsidies and Third World debt are indeed notable accomplishments.

I rise today to commend the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), for their successful efforts, perseverance, and obvious negotiating skills in having the British Government drop the harmful fur labelling legislation. Our Prime Minister's personal intervention is indeed appreciated by hundreds of thousands of trappers and fur traders across Canada.

As mentioned yesterday by British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, our Prime Minister's resolve is a tremendous asset for Canadians. He has won the admiration of our allies and the respect of the global village.

Again, Mr. Prime Minister, thank you for your efforts on behalf of the fur industry.

DISASTERS

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF AIR-INDIA CRASH

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, three years ago today Air India Flight 182 crashed off the coast of Ireland killing all 329 people on board. It was the worst act of terrorism in aviation history. Of the 329 people who perished, 280 were Canadians. One of those who perished was 16-year-old Mukul Paliwal of Ottawa, the son of internationally recognized plant virologist, Dr. Yogesh Paliwal.

Early this morning, on the third anniversary of the death of his son, Dr. Paliwal, an employee of Agriculture Canada's Plant Research Centre, died of a heart attack at age 46.

Over the last three years Dr. Paliwal had been very involved with the families of victims of the Air India tragedy. Later today a peaceful demonstration will be held on Parliament Hill to call on the Government to hold a public inquiry.

Three years have passed since Flight 182 was blown out of the sky. There have been no arrests. No one has been brought to justice. Some very important questions remain unanswered. There have been serious allegations that the Government had advance warning of a threat. There have been serious allegations that important wire-tap evidence relating to the case was destroyed. There have been serious allegations of shoddy police work, and of political interference in the case.

The Government must immediately convene a Royal Commission of Inquiry to provide some basic answers. Anything less will be a denial of justice.

INNOVATION

CANADIAN EXAMPLE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): In the House yesterday, Mr. Speaker, during Question Period we had a display of what I think was the most degrading demonstration of Liberal-Socialist opposition I had ever witnessed since my election.

The official representatives of 700 million citizens of the free world had agreed that Canada had shown initiative and should be commended for its Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

The G-7 told us that this Agreement will be used as a model by the GATT, an organization consisting of 93 member-countries, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday, I saw some Liberal Members actually cheer when their Leader made some negative comments about our major trading, social and cultural partners. I thought that some of these Liberals would know better.

Mr. Speaker, who are closer to the truth? The crazy highbrow Socialists, the outdated and ill-assorted Liberals, or the elected representatives of the free world?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

DISASTERS

THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF AIR-INDIA CRASH—REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION UNDERTAKE INQUIRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Three years ago today on June 23, 1985, Air-India Flight 182 crashed in the Atlantic Ocean killing 329 people, of whom 280 were Canadians. The families of the victims of that disaster have had no answers from this Government in three years; no answers and no facts.

Why hasn't the Prime Minister appointed a Royal Commission of Inquiry into this tragedy, and will he do so immediately?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have said on many occasions in this House, and I will repeat it again today, there is an extremely active investigation being carried on into this tragedy by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. At no time have there been less than 50 officers working on this case, and on occasion there have been up to 250 officers.

I think it would be wrong at this time while an active investigation is being carried on to have an inquiry such as that suggested by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. Indeed, Mr. Atkey, Chairman of the Security Intelligence Review Committee, advised the standing committee that to conduct a Royal Commission of Inquiry at present would be counter productive and now is not the time to do that.

[Translation]

DEMAND THAT ROYAL COMMISSION OF INQUIRY BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service erased tapes of telephone conversations about the disaster which had been intercepted, and failed to provide any satisfactory explanations for this mistake. The Security Intelligence Review Committee investigated the work done by CSIS but its conclusions were unsatisfactory. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board was unable to provide satisfactory answers. A royal commission of inquiry was appointed in India, and another one in Ireland, but none was appointed in Canada, although 288 victims were Canadians. This while Canada has established and appointed commissions of inquiry subsequent to other tragedies such as the Hinton disaster and the Ocean Ranger case. Why not in the case of the Air India crash, this tragedy that occurred three years ago?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, the question just posed is basically the same as the previous one only this time it was put in French. I will repeat the same answer.

There is an extremely active investigation ongoing by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, utilizing no less than 50 officers at any given time and up to 250 on occasion. The matter has been looked into and reviewed by the Security Intelligence Review Committee, which is an independent body, chaired by Mr. Atkey, and composed of other former members of the Privy Council of Canada. They feel, after their investigation, that a Royal Commission of Inquiry at this time would be premature and would have nothing but bad effects on the investigation presently being carried on by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, premature, after three years of getting nowhere?

CONDUCT OF INVESTIGATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and now two Solicitors General, the Security Intelligence Review Committee, the RCMP, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and the Canadian Security Intelligence Service have all failed to provide answers about the reasons for the deaths of 280 Canadians. All we know for certain is that no charges have been laid and that an investigation has been made into the quality of the original investigation.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister once again, was the investigation into the crash flawed? Were errors made? How much longer does the Prime Minister intend to wait before he inevitably has to call a Royal Commission? Surely the families of the victims, on this anniversary, are entitled to at least that.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to repeat for the benefit of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and other Members of the House the evidence given by Mr. Atkey before the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General, on December 17, 1987. He said:

> We believe that if we launched an inquiry now, we would disrupt the investigation by forcing law enforcement agencies, security service, and individuals engaged in those agencies to concentrate on defending themselves rather than finding sufficient evidence to convict those guilty of these terrible events.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the real reason the Government will not initiate a Royal Commission of Inquiry is because it is trying to cover up its own negligence and gross incompetence in this matter. We know that the Government received advance warnings. We know that this tragedy could have been averted. We know that false affidavits were sworn in order deliberately to mislead a court. We know that crucial evidence was destroyed by way of the erasing of tapes.

My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it not true that the Government is afraid of a Royal Commission of Inquiry? It is afraid because a Royal Commission will indicate how incompetent and grossly negligent the Government was.

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, regrettably there is only one part of that question with which I can agree and that is that yes, indeed, it was a terrible tragedy. Yes, indeed, we all feel and express today a great sorrow for those families on the anniversary of this terrible, terrible accident.

With respect to the allegations the Hon. Member has made, let him come forward with some proof. We have been working very hard and diligently on this matter, and if he has evidence of the allegations, if he has proof of those allegations, then he should come forward in the House, come to see me in my office, or come to see the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to try to assist them in this investigation, instead of making unfounded allegations in the House.

STATEMENT OF CLAIM IN AIRLINE'S SUIT AGAINST GOVERNMENT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General wants evidence. Here is the evidence. The Solicitor General knows that Air-India is suing the Government of Canada, alleging in Paragraph 30 of its statement of claim that the Government of Canada was negligent, and because of the Government's negligence its aircraft was destroyed. It says that in the months of May and June, 1985—this is preceding the crash itself—the existence of circumstances posing a threat to Air-India's operations was brought to the knowledge of all the defendants in the form of letters and verbal communications from the plaintiff.

• (1425)

Is the Solicitor General denying here today, in the House of Commons, that Air-India did not provide advance warning to the Government of Canada that there was a threat to its operations, that there was a threat to Air-India? Is the Solicitor General saying today that the Government of Canada had sufficient security in place in order to prevent this type of tragedy?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in one sense I am amazed at the question of the Hon. Member because he is supposed to be a lawyer and understand about statements of claim. On the other hand, I am not at all surprised by the question.

The Hon. Member should know that that is an allegation contained in the statement of claim. That is not proof of the allegation made therein. No evidence has been laid as yet before a court of law. Statements of defence have been filed by the federal Government. The action has not as yet come on for trial. It is presently before the courts and we will have to await the outcome. At this point there is no evidence whatsoever to support the allegations made by this Hon. Member.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD PRICING SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. I have obtained today a draft interpretive document produced by the U.S. administration on the free trade agreement which offers drastically different views of Articles 701, 705, and 706.

It says in effect that the U.S. now claims to have review powers over the Canadian Wheat Board's pricing system. It claims that it is conducting consultation directed toward establishing a method to determine the price at which the Wheat Board is selling. It goes on to say that the ideal method would be a public price-setting mechanism transparent to the U.S. Government, producers, and processors.

Can the Government tell us anything about this particular set of consultations and the direction that the U.S. is trying to take?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, it is no secret that the Canadian Wheat Board is a very well run organization and has served Canadian farmers very well, especially in the last number of years in the face of international difficulties in sales. As such, the Americans do not like it because we have been succeeding in selling where they have not.

I am not familiar with the documentation about which the Member speaks. I am familiar with the terms and conditions in the free trade agreement which essentially leave the Canadian Wheat Board exactly the way it is. It gives us more secure access to the United States market.

I am sure that the Wheat Board, based on its ability to sell, very much welcomes the ability to compete in the United States away from the political uncertainties which we now have. On that basis it is good for the Canadian Wheat Board and is going to be good, as a result, for Canadian farmers.

U.S. GRAIN EXPORTS—PRICING PRACTICES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the pricing differences which exist between the two countries, can the Minister explain to the House the Government's interpretation of the price-setting mechanism used in the United States?

Does a shipload of grain owned by Cargill leave the United States with a known value on the particular shipment, or is it privileged information for business purposes as that information is on Canadian shipments by the Canadian Wheat Board? Do producers in the United States in fact know the value of the grain being exported in each shipment?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, that is a strange kind of question and I am not so sure it has anything at all to do with the free trade agreement. It has to do with the different ways in which Canada and the United States sell grain. I am aware of circumstances under which international grain trading companies buy grain on speculation, hold it for a period of time, and then resell it.

The Canadian Wheat Board operates in an entirely different fashion. It operates in the sole interests of the producers who fund it and therefore have a lot at stake in terms of how the Canadian Wheat Board operates.

I am not so sure that I totally understand the question, especially if the Hon. Member is trying to relate it to the free trade agreement. I suspect that the substance of the question, to the extent that it is a question, has absolutely nothing to do with the free trade agreement at all.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES NATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF WHEAT PRODUCERS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, this seems to be the whole point of the discussion as far as the National Association of Wheat Producers and the U.S. administration are concerned. They seem to be of the opinion that they know the value of the grain as it leaves their ports, yet under the Canadian Wheat Board system that is not known. In fact we all know, from watching the data, that we are just as ignorant of the value of grain leaving their ports as they are of the value of grain leaving ours.

• (1430)

The National Association of Wheat Growers seems to have given the administration most of the points in this particular agreement. It seems to believe that Section 22 of their Agricultural Adjustment Act of 1933 is still in effect and can override any such agreement that the administration might sign with Canada, giving them the power to restrict imports into their country at any time those imports increase. Is that the understanding of Canada? What is the Government doing to change that particular understanding on the other side of the border?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the National Association of Wheat Growers in the United States, and its president, Jim Miller, have been critical of the free trade agreement because he is concerned that we will be even more competitive with the United States after the free trade agreement is signed because of our quality of product, our reliability of supply, and our reputation.

The Hon. Member refers to Section 22 of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. I do not have the free trade agreement in front of me, but if memory serves me correctly one of the provisions of the FTA is that the United States agrees not to reintroduce or introduce measures that quantitatively restrict our grain at the American border. I suggest that answers the Hon. Member's question about Section 22 of the American Agricultural Adjustment Act.

We believe we produce as high a quality product as anyone in the world. We have a very good system of grading through the Canada Grain Commission. We have a good system of selling. Fair access to the American market and rules that will enable us to sell successfully into that market on a fair minded basis will be to the benefit of Canadian farmers. This will be to the benefit of that Member who is a farmer himself and to the benefit of his neighbours who produce some of the highest quality product in the world.

ETHICS

MERIT PRINCIPLE IN PUBLIC SERVICE—POSITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, Canadians already knew that it cost Secretary of State Lucien Bouchard millions of dollars to buy his victory in the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean. We thought that was the end of it.

Not at all! Our so-called Mr. Clean is now paying his debts. This morning in the Journal de Québec, he had this to say about ex-MP Clément Côté who gave up his seat for him:

> It isn't true that my predecessor is unemployed! In fact, he is now working for the Conservative Party in Ottawa. As I said during my campaign I promised that Mr. Côté would get a job, either in the federal Public Service or at one of the Crown corporations. Our Government pays its debts, and we are going to take care of this very shortly.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he doesn't think it is unethical for his Secretary of State to pay his political debts by violating the merit principle with respect to public service hiring. Is that the new image of honesty and frankness the Government thought it would project after the election of "Mr. Clean"?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is immoral about an individual wanting to secure a job and make a living. If that falls into his category as immoral, then I guess it is. However, I would think that it is in the interests of any individual to pursue a career of his or her choice. That is one of the freedoms we have in this country. I would think the Hon. Member would preserve that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): It seems the Deputy Prime Minister fails to understand that this job was promised in exchange for the resignation and for the seat. He may find that kosher; we do not.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS—PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Let me remind the House and Canadians what the Prime Minister said during the last election campaign. On July 16, 1984, he said:

> The method of making appointments could be corrected by dramatic measures . . . We are going to bring in a brand new dimension to them of objectivity and representation and fairness for all Canadians.

My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Has his Party forgotten about this statement I just quoted? Will we finally know the total amount it has cost Canadians in taxpayers' funds to buy the seat in Lac-Saint-Jean?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talks about promises. His own Leader went there and promised the Liberal candidate a Cabinet position if they were elected. I suppose the Hon. Member would find that immoral as well.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): He was not appointed beforehand.

Ms. Copps: You gave him one before he was elected.

Mr. Mazankowski: The fact is that a number of changes have been made in the appointments process. All Governor in Council appointments can be screened by the respective parliamentary committees.

Mr. Rossi: Can you say that without a smile?

Mr. Mazankowski: I do not know why Hon. Members are so touchy about this situation. If they have any strong feelings about the appointments we have made, they have the perfect right to call appointees before the committee and examine their credentials and talents. I do not think they are doing a very good job at that.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—POWERS OF CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to return to the question asked by the Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre.

I have a copy of a document, as does he, prepared for Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. Trade Representative. It is the American interpretation of Chapter Seven of the Trade Agreement. It is a clear violation of Chapter Seven, as we read it. It deals with the trade agreement restricting the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board and the powers of the marketing boards in this country.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada stand up for the farmers of this country and protest to the Americans that we do not want the power of the Wheat Board diminished or the power of the farm marketing boards diminished? Will he stand up for Canada and Canadian farmers, or will he continue to sit on his backside?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find it rather strange that the Hon. Member would suggest we should stand up for farmers. The farmers know which Government and which Party has stood up for their interests. It certainly has not been his Party.

I do not know to what document the Hon. Member refers, but it is rather strange, considering the anti-American attitude of NDP Members, that they rely very strongly on American documents floating around to defend specific American interests.

The Hon. Member should read the legislation. If he can pinpoint in the legislation where there is a diminishing power in the operations of the Canadian Wheat Board, or pinpoint where the marketing boards are undermined, then he would have a case. But I will challenge him. It is not contained in the Bill. He should start dealing with Canadian documents and Canadian legislation, and stop relying upon American propaganda.

Mr. Nystrom: I am not anti-American, I am pro-Canadian.

INTERPRETATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister could not even deliver on subsidies for the farmers of Canada at the Economic Summit. Clayton Yeutter's own document states that Articles 705, 706 and 707 would restrict the powers of marketing boards in our country. In light of the fact that the Prime Minister of Canada has said that nothing in the agreement would diminish the powers of marketing boards, why is the Government not protesting the American interpretation of the trade agreement which they say will restrict the powers of Canadian farmers? Why do you not stand up and fight for Canadian farmers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation of the trade agreement is documented in the legislation that has been tabled before the House. Why does the Hon. Member not deal with it, rather than some phoney document floating around in American hands?

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

COVERAGE OF INVESTORS' SAVINGS

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Canadians who have wisely saved and invested their money are now becoming increasingly insecure with respect to the safety of their investments, particularly GICs. The Government must take a leadership role and make the public aware of what investments are secure through the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation, and what is not insured.

Can the Minister tell Canadian savers and investors when their money is safe and when it is not?

An Hon. Member: Don't give it to the Liberals.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): I have just been provoked, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition is asking me whether I would invest in Liberal victory bonds. Those are not covered by the CDIC and I don't know that they are very safe investments.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, GICs up to $60,000 and up to five years maturity are covered by CDIC, the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Ms. Copps: Thank you for that information. Order Paper!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In answer to the second part of the Hon. Member's question, the CDIC is embarking on a campaign, working with the member organizations of the CDIC, to make sure they advise investors in the savings certificates and saving instruments that are issued by these corporations which are covered by CDIC and which are not covered by CDIC.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—U.K. PRIME MINISTER'S ADDRESS TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. On the floor of this Parliament yesterday, the Conservative Prime Minister of Great Britain went out of her way to try to prop up the credibility of this Conservative Government in Canada. Now that Mrs. Thatcher has inappropriately given her support to the Canada-U.S. trade deal, is the price to Canadians for that endorsement going to be the purchase by Canada of British submarines?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members opposite may not like hearing the truth from Mrs. Thatcher, but their objections won't change the truth. The fact is that the Canada-U.S. trade deal is a good deal for Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What was the price for the speech?

Mr. Beatty: The navy will be completing its evaluation with respect to the two competing models based on which model could best serve the needs of Canadians. I will be carrying that recommendation to Cabinet.

Mr. Hopkins: Well, Mr. Speaker, I realize that it is very difficult for the Government to have praise heaped on it one day and valid scorn the next.

DECISION ON CHOICE OF SUBMARINES

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Did the Prime Minister at any time during or after the Summit have a discussion with Mrs. Thatcher about the possible purchase by Canada of British submarines? Did they discuss at that time what should be in Mrs. Thatcher's speech to this Parliament? Again, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister if the price for that is the purchase of British submarines? Or was the good old mother country simply propping up the colonial Prime Minister of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): It is a delight to see that even after that by-election disaster earlier this week the Liberals have still maintained their sense of humour—with the exception of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, possibly.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, both the President of France and the Prime Minister of Great Britain put the merits of their respective cases to the best of their abilities. The navy will make its judgment as to which one best serves the needs of Canada. I appreciate the recommendation of the Hon. Member as to his choice and we will certainly take it into consideration.

TESTING OF LETHAL GAS AT SUFFIELD, ALTA.—1986 INCIDENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of National Defence. As the Minister knows, deadly nerve gases used in chemical weapons are being tested in the open air as well as inside the experimental station at Suffield, Alberta. The Minister has stated these tests pose no danger, but Beryl Kirk, the Deputy Director of Mountain Region of Labour Canada, has confirmed that on May 26, 1986, there was a near fatal accident at Suffield involving two researchers who were exposed to lethal nerve gas. In fact the experimental station was evacuated and the researchers were hospitalized, one for a lengthy period.

Would the Minister advise the House how this squares with his statement that the tests at Suffield pose no health risks?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the incident in 1986, I understand that in 1986 a World War II shell which contained nerve gas was found on the range. In the process of decontaminating it one of the technicians had an accident and two technicians were exposed to gas. Both of them were taken in for medical treatment and both of them were released virtually immediately afterward. In follow-up studies, neither one suffered long-term damage at all.

REQUEST THAT OPEN-AIR TESTS BE HALTED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would hope the Minister is referring to the same incident as Beryl Kirk. My supplementary question is with respect to an independent analysis of the threat posed by the field tests of nerve gas at the Suffield range. A professor of chemistry at the University of Alberta, Dr. Mark Hollingsworth, states unequivocally in relation to the Tabun, Sarin and Soman test:

> . . . these releases constitute real and immediate public health threats to communities near the base, including Medicine Hat itself.

In light of the near fatalities at Suffield, and the severe health threat to communities like Medicine Hat, will the Minister order an immediate halt to any further open-air tests of these deadly nerve gases?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, first, with respect to the incident mentioned by the Hon. Member, in one case one technician spent one day in hospital. The technician was given an additional three days off. The junior technician returned to work the following day. That is hardly an indication of "lengthy time in hospital" as a result of this. Both technicians are working for DRES at the present time. Neither of them had any long-term effects from this at all.

With respect to the scare tactics being used by the Hon. Member to prevent defensive research designed to protect members of the Canadian Forces, the public is well protected. If the Hon. Member is suggesting we should be closing down this defensive research which is designed simply to ensure that, if Canadian troops are exposed to deadly agents, they are properly protected, then the Hon. Member should have the honesty to say so.

From the point of view of this Government, until the day we succeed in having a ban on all chemical weapons we have an obligation to ensure that members of the Canadian Forces, who are defending freedom on behalf of Canada, have adequate protection against nerve agents which are possessed by the Soviet Union.

THE ECONOMY

EXCHANGE VALUE OF DOLLAR

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister for International Trade. When the Tories began discussions on the disastrous free trade deal, Canada had a 69-cent dollar in relation to the U.S. When the deal was signed last December, the dollar had risen to 77 cents. Yesterday, as a result of the secret monetary agenda related to the Canada-U.S. trade deal, our dollar rose to 83 cents.

Does the Acting Minister not realize that this policy, combined with the trade deal, has already caused a disastrous loss of jobs in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there are so many inaccuracies in the preamble of the question that it is hard to know where to start. But what I can say is there is absolutely no connection at all between the free trade agreement and the rise in the Canadian dollar except for the fact that investors from many parts of the world are looking at Canada and saying Canada is a good place to invest.

If the Hon. Member was here yesterday she would have heard the Prime Minister of Great Britain saying that these are the things, free trade agreements like what we have just agreed to with the United States, that will lead to a strengthening of the economy. People are investing here because Canada is going to grow as a result of the free trade agreement. That is the message the Hon. Member seems to miss.

Ms. Copps: Unlike the colonials on the Conservative side of the House, this Party examines the deal and the worth of the deal.

EFFECT OF MONETARY POLICY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, if in fact this monetary policy is so successful, can the Minister of Finance explain why last Friday 150 workers in St. Catharines were laid off from TRW Canada? One of the reasons for the lay-off, as stated by a company spokesman, was every time the Canadian dollar rises one cent, the company loses $1 million in profits annually. Is that what the Minister thinks of this so-called support of a monetary policy?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on individual and specific situations.

Ms. Copps: I bet you aren't.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): But I will comment for the Hon. Member, that when asked for their evaluation of the local economies, the economy in their local regions, 73 per cent of Canadians said they were pleased or very pleased. Twenty-four per cent said that they were not.

• (1450)

Mr. Nunziata: That's the Anacin commercial.

Mr. Beatty: To clear the headaches of the old Liberal Government.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I can understand where the Hon. Member for York South—Weston—no, it is not York South—Weston—York West—

Mr. Marchi: York South—Weston.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I keep forgetting. I know why he needs an Anacin. It is because he is getting a headache from all the good things that are happening to the country. Canadians are on a roll, and it is making the Hon. Member feel very, very uncomfortable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

FRENCH IN ALBERTA—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Deputy Prime Minister about Bill 60 in Alberta.

The Government stated it was very disappointed in the Bill because it gives practically no recognition to the needs of the Francophone community in Alberta.

What does the Government intend to do to ensure that the Government of Alberta gives at least the same rights and services to Francophones in Alberta as were granted Francophones in Saskatchewan, in other words, that it will translate into French those provincial laws that are important to the public, consult with the Comité franco-albertain, improve Government services for the Francophone community in Alberta and improve education services for the Francophone minority in that province.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Government Leader in the Senate indicated yesterday, the Government would have preferred a more generous response by the Government of Alberta. We have indicated to the province, as we have to all provinces, our willingness to participate in supporting the English and French linguistic minorities in the areas of education and translation. We are prepared to provide the kind of assistance that would be necessary to achieve the goals and the objectives.

As the Hon. Member indicated, we have been successful in negotiating a satisfactory framework agreement with the Province of Saskatchewan. I know that the Secretary of State will be in touch with provincial authorities in Alberta to reaffirm our willingness to work toward a more generous approach to the rights of Francophones in the Province of Alberta.

[Translation]

APPARENT INDIFFERENCE OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Is it really in keeping with the spirit of the Meech Lake Accord that was passed in the House yesterday for the federal Government to express its disappointment and then tolerate this decision by the Government of Alberta to do practically nothing about providing the services that are necessary to protect its Francophone minority?

What does the Government intend to do, aside from voicing its good intentions? Does the Government have other plans or is it going to tolerate this intolerable situation in the Province of Alberta?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it is a matter of trying to determine who is right and who is wrong. What is important is an indication on the part of the federal Government to sit down to work out a package with the province that would be satisfactory and would reflect the reality of that province. That has been our policy in the past. I think it has worked quite well. I am confident that it can work again in the future.

In so far as his reference to the Meech Lake Accord is concerned, certainly once it is ratified the official language minority groups will be able to invoke the linguistic equality clause. Therefore that would certainly add further strength.

I can assure the Hon. Member, and reiterate and reaffirm, the federal Government's position is that it is willing to sit down to work out a satisfactory agreement together within the context of the goals and objectives that clearly are desirable and attainable.

SEARCH AND RESCUE

FACILITIES AVAILABLE TO NOVA SCOTIA FISHERMEN

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence concerning the search and rescue facilities available to Nova Scotia fishermen and others. I am sure the Minister is aware of the concerns that have been expressed by fishermen with respect to the response to their needs in dire circumstances.

Has he taken the opportunity to discuss this concern with his colleagues, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans? If not, will he take up the matter again to determine whether he can find a quicker way to respond to difficult circumstances in which fishermen find themselves, and provide a more flexible system of search and rescue for the benefit of fishermen and all persons who go down to the sea in ships?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for a very good question. The issue of search and rescue, particularly on our East Coast, is a very important one for the Government. I visited Summerside, Prince Edward Island myself just a couple of weeks ago in order to get a first-hand view of search and rescue and the operations that we have there. I am convinced that with the equipment available the structure that we have at the present time best serves the needs of people in the area.

From time to time, obviously, we will dispatch equipment to specific areas to try to help out as there are changes, in terms of patterns of fishing and other activities taking place.

We also are constantly reviewing with other Departments and within the Directorate of Search and Rescue the way in which resources are used. We will keep it under constant review for the future. If improvements can be made, we will certainly make them.

HOUSING

LACK OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING IN METRO TORONTO

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of Public Works. Given that the lack of affordable housing is a serious problem in Metro Toronto now, and given that the Government's tax reform will add 9 per cent to the price of a new home by 1990, and given that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is now an also-ran rather than a leader in the field of housing, does the Minister have any intention at all to deal seriously with this housing crisis?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the premise of that question at all.

Mr. Marchi: Then you don't know what's happening in Toronto.

Mr. Jelinek: The Government, through CMHC and the Minister of Public Works, under the direction of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, has taken a leadership role. We have provided more dollars for affordable housing in the country than ever before.

We are currently in the process of continuing to discuss the matter and encouraging the Government of the Province of Ontario, and other provincial Governments, to co-operate in a co-ordinated effort with us. We are hopeful that progress will be made in that direction.

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON BILL C-111

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, the Government has had a Bill on the Order Paper for some time, Bill C-111, which would assist people with low down payments to buy a house. Even though there are other problems with the Bill, if the Government is serious does it intend to bring this Bill forward for debate?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to stand up to let the Hon. Member know that the Government has taken a leadership role. The facts and the record speak for themselves. If the Hon. Member wants to aid any progress toward the success that the Government has made, then she would be supportive of the initiatives that the Government has taken in that regard.

BROADCASTING

CONTENTS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications who today tabled a policy statement and a Bill on broadcasting that reflect very much a rejection of the main principles of the Caplan-Sauvageau Report, and those of the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture.

Would the Minister explain in respect to her position on human rights why the Bill does not reflect the strong recommendations for balanced representation in Canadian society?

She may remember that Bill C-20 even talked about promotion of equality.

Would she explain to women, native people, multicultural groups, and visible minorities why she has abandoned them? Why is there no strong statement in the Bill as proposed by the standing committee?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, today I had the honour of introducing a new broadcasting Bill, and a new broadcasting policy for Canada, with an additional expenditure of some $250 million in new funds toward those goals.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, for the first time in broadcasting legislation, will refer to those groups which in the past have been disadvantaged. I am referring particularly to women, multicultural groups, aboriginal peoples, the handicapped, and linguistic minorities. For the first time, all of these groups are addressed in the Bill.

• (1500)

Ms. McDonald: Mr. Speaker, they are not addressed very adequately or as thoroughly and precisely as had been recommended.

GOVERNMENT FUNDING OF CBC

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Would the Minister explain what this new money that she has referred to really means? Is it above increases in the cost of living? Are they real increases, or not? I suspect that they are not real increases.

Would the Minister confirm that her spending plan for the CBC means that the cut-backs, instead of being 15 per cent from when the Conservatives came into office, will now be a mere 5 per cent cut-back since the Conservatives came into office? Is that good enough?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to explain this to the Hon. Member.

First, let me assure the Hon. Member that we are talking—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Take her to lunch.

Miss MacDonald: The Leader of the Opposition says: "Take her to lunch". I will give him that privilege.

The $250 million is new money. The allocation for the CBC to increase its Canadian programming to 95 per cent, the allocation of $20 million for English-language programming and $15 million for French-language programming, is what the CBC considered necessary. Quite frankly, I did not think it necessary to go beyond what the CBC put forward as its requirement.

In addition, we have put $31 million into the extension of services in the North, to remote communities, and to persons who are handicapped. We have also put additional funding into Telefilm to increase the broadcast development fund of Telefilm in order that there will be more Canadian production in our programming.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be one question from the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell to close off Question Period.

ACQUIRED RIGHTS OF ALBERTA FRANCOPHONES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the unfortunate decision made yesterday by the Government of Alberta which removed most of the vested rights of the French- speaking community of that province.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, himself a minister and a member from Alberta, the following question: Does he intend to personally contact the premier of Alberta in order to express the dissatisfaction of his governement, and also, I hope, of all members of this House, about the initiative of the Government of Alberta? Will he ask the premier to at least offer the French-speaking citizens of Alberta the same services given to the Fransaskois, even though those services are far from satisfactory? Can he promise us to at least ask the Government of Alberta for those services?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in response to an earlier question the willingness of the federal Government to participate in the framework agreement.

I do not become personally involved in every issue with respect to the Government of Canada. There is ministerial responsibility, and there are processes that are followed.

The Leader of the Government in the Senate, whose responsibility is federal-provincial affairs, has been in contact with the Government of Alberta. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in touch with the Government of Alberta to see if there is anything further that the federal Government can do in co-operation with the Government of Alberta to further the interests of the francophone community.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Deputy Government House Leader to give us a statement of government business for the coming week. In particular, I would like to mention the point raised by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), and ask about the Government's intention to bring forward Bill C-111, a Bill devoted to changes in the Government's housing policy.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow will be St. Jean Baptiste day, and naturally the House will not be sitting.

On Monday we will call the tenth and final allotted day for Supply. I will be proceeding with a motion, which I understand has all-Party agreement, to postpone today's vote to Monday at 6 p.m., and also to adjourn the House at 6 p.m. on Monday, with a further adjournment next Thursday, which I will address in a moment.

On Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday the Government will be calling Bill C-130, the free trade legislation. The intention is to adjourn at three o'clock on Thursday.

My friend makes reference to Bills which might be on the Government's legislative program. If the Hon. Member will turn to the Projected Order of Business he will see that there are several Bills on which we have made considerable progress. There may be one or two that come up.

I take with great interest the question of the Hon. Member for Trinity vis-à-vis Bill C-111. That is something that we can get together on and ask the Minister and his spokespersons to see if there can be quick debate and perhaps put that through in all stages. In any event, I will certainly take that up with my colleague.

There have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you would find, Mr. Speaker, that there is unanimous consent to put the following motion immediately. I move:

That on Monday, June 27, 1988, the House shall adjourn at 6 p.m.; and—

That would be after the divisions on today's vote and after the divisions on any necessary Bills on the final allotted day.

—that on Thursday, June 30, 1988, the House shall adjourn at 3 p.m. until 11 a.m. on Monday, July 4, 1988.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion proposed by the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to ask the Deputy House Leader if he can explain why the child care legislation has been taken off the legislative list of priorities.

Mr. Lewis: The House will be aware that the Minister of Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) negotiated with the provinces the first comprehensive child care package that this country has seen.

Ms. Mitchell: We have not seen anything in four years.

Mr. Lewis: There are ongoing discussions with the provinces. The legislation which will come forward will be enabling legislation. I have the caveat that there may be additional pieces of legislation we can deal with quickly. I would hope that my hon. colleague from the New Democratic Party might be disposed to give us quick passage of this Bill once we have the enabling legislation and all negotiations are finished.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—BANK CHARGES—CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez:

That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in, and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There are ten minutes left in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong). On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez).

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I believe that I had the floor to ask a question before you called it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I will recognize the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt, and then the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona (Mr. Kilgour) immediately thereafter.

Mr. Rodriguez: I would like to address a question to the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), who gave an excellent speech this morning. In the response that the banks had to the standing committee's report on bank service charges, Mr. MacIntosh et al stated: "Of course the Government should not force us to provide services free. The grocery stores are not asked to provide free groceries. There is no such thing as a free lunch."

I would like the Hon. Member for Regina East to comment on the fact that the banks have been getting a free ride on the taxpayers of Canada. Did the Government and the people of Canada not allow the banks to write down their Third World debt to the extent of $3 billion, and defer their taxes? I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the free ride and the free services that the banks have been getting out of the Canadian taxpayers.

• (1510)

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank my colleague for a very good question. For the banks to say that there is no free lunch—of all groups in Canadian society to say that—is silly. The banks have been one of the most privileged groups in the country. They get special rights from Parliament as contained in the Bank Act. They have been allowed to accumulate an amazing amount of wealth and power, especially on a per capita basis, more than the American banks have. We have allowed them to develop into an almost monopolistic position in this country. They were described by the consumer groups as an oligarchy. For the banks to say there is no free ride, is a little amusing. The banks have paid very little and in some years no tax at all on the hundreds of millions of dollars profit. If anyone is having a free ride in Canada it is the banks.

My colleague mentioned the Third World losses which the banks will experience. That is true. But again, those losses all become tax deductible. Even if the banks are taxed at the 50 per cent level, half of those losses will be paid for by the Canadian taxpayer. If one looks at the profits the banks have made and the dividends they have been paying out one will see that there have been no substantial decreases in dividends. In fact, the banks' profits have been up even though they have been writing down and are potentially in a position of writing off many Third World losses.

The type of financial world that Governments in part have created has been to the benefit of the banks. I remember as a youngster working in a clothing store. On Saturday I would get paid in cash. Now almost everyone is paid by cheque, and that is a help to the banks. Low-income Canadians, the young and the old, do not have big amounts in their banks. They are the ones who suffer the high charges under the banking system.

In committee we proposed having basic accounts without charges for certain people. For the banks to say that poor people, old and young people and those on low incomes should not expect something free from the banks is somewhat obscene and shows insensitivity. It shows that the banks do not realize or appreciate the tremendous benefits they get from doing business. Banks do not seem to be willing at all to help share the wealth they have gained by helping out low-income Canadians by providing a no frills, free bank account-type of business.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, does the Member's Party still have a policy to nationalize one of the banks, and which one is to be selected if that is the case? While I am on my feet let me tell him that in 1981 when the Mitterrand Government was elected in France a number of banks were nationalized. A friend of mine who worked for a small export bank in Paris told me that once his bank was nationalized it was told to get rid of its clients and to take on a friend of the Government of the day who was to be the preferred client. That was done. About two years later when the policy was reversed the Government then told the bank in question to get back its former clients. They were, of course, no longer available.

Would that be the intended policy of the New Democrats in the incredible situation either ever being elected as a Government? Would the New Democrats do that sort of thing? Would the Member tell us whether or not the New Democratic Party has since abandoned its policy to nationalize banks in favour of our policy, which is to try to get a grip on the banks' performance? Will the Member tell us which bank the New Democrats would intend to nationalize?

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I understand it was the Conservative Government of the day that nationalized the banks.

Mr. Andre: It was a socialist Government—Mr. Mitterrand's.

Mr. de Jong: No, the first banks nationalized in France were nationalized by a Conservative Government. With the election of the Mitterrand Government and a socialist majority they finished off the job, so to speak. If the Hon. Member would look at the records in France he would find that the nationalization of the banks was done originally by a Conservative Government.

The resolution on our books concerning the nationalizing of banks occurred when interest rates were at the 18 per cent, 19 per cent and 20 per cent level. It was felt by delegates at our convention that the Government needed a handle on the financial sector and that nationalizing a bank or banks would do the trick. I would tend to think that an NDP Government would not have as its top priority the nationalization of a bank, and I do not think we will reach into a hat for a name. It would seem to me the money which the Government has spent bailing out banks, particularly in Alberta, would have brought us some financial institutions.

Mr. Cassidy: We could have one now.

Mr. de Jong: Irresponsibility occurred, particularly because of the Tory Government of Alberta, which led to amazing losses in money to the individual investors through CDIC—

Mr. Cassidy: We bailed out foreign speculators.

Mr. de Jong: But had that money not been used to bail out other banks which had money on deposit in those financial institutions, it could have bought assets and we would have had a public bank.

Another area to explore to which some serious thought should be given, which several other countries have, is to have a type of savings institution connected to the Post Office. Perhaps we can make our Post Office a little more viable. Certainly it needs some imagination and some imaginative leadership. This is an option that should be explored.

Mr. Shields: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member across the way would not want to mislead the public. The federal Government did not bail out banks. If it had, I imagine the CCB and the Northland Bank would still be there. The Government bailed out credit unions, teachers' unions and municipalities. It suffered the loss for those. That is what happened. I think the Hon. Member would like to correct the misrepresentation that he made.

Mr. de Jong: Not at all, Mr. Speaker. As far as the Canadian Commercial Bank is concerned, many deposits were made by some of our biggest banks. They deposited in the CCB because it was paying a fraction more in interest, and the Government paid them off.

We have a strange situation. The Canadian Government has a deficit. We borrow money from the banks and pay them interest in order to pay the banks the money they lost when they were speculating. Can you understand that logic, Mr. Speaker? We borrow money from the banks to pay them off on money they lost while speculating in CCB, and we pay interest on that. That, I suppose, makes some sense when you are a friend of the banker. When you are in charge of looking after the public interest and the public purse, I would suggest that that is irresponsible. I suggest this Government has been irresponsible.

• (1520)

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate being able to participate in this debate this afternoon. Perhaps I could just mention something the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong) seemed to have glossed over a little quickly in his comments. He mentioned the irresponsible actions that led to the bank failures in Alberta, and I think every credible person in this country would agree that, indeed, there were irresponsible actions, but it was the introduction of the National Energy Program, supported by the Hon. Member's Party, which destroyed the economy of Alberta. The economy of Alberta was sent downward before any other area of the oil patch in the world as a result of the measures taken with the support of his Party.

Today, we are discussing an NDP motion to concur in a report of the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. This is a report which I, along with the Hon. Member who moved the motion, played a part in drafting. I would like to argue first, for the benefit of those following the debate on television, that this motion is particularly inappropriate and unsupportable today. I will go through the reasons why it is both inappropriate and unsupportable today in some detail—

Mr. Cassidy: That's totally ridiculous.

Mr. McCrossan: I would be happy to take questions from the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: We get along so well in committee, why are you abandoning the committee now?

Mr. McCrossan: I am not abandoning the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: You talk with forked tongue.

Mr. Andre: And you listen with empty head.

Mr. McCrossan: There is a procedure of which all Members are aware for moving concurrence in a committee report, and that procedure is provided for under Standing Order 56(1)(b). Indeed, at any time, an Hon. Member is within his or her rights to move concurrence in a report. However, there has been parliamentary reform introduced into this House, and I would argue that bringing this motion forward today is inappropriate for several reasons.

First, under Standing Order 99(2), the committee can ask the Minister to respond in Parliament to the report. Indeed, the committee has asked the Minister to respond, and the Minister has indicated that he will respond in the House on Tuesday of next week. Since parliamentary reform has taken place, to the best of my knowledge, this is the first time any member of any committee has tried to move concurrence in a report before the Minister has given the ministerial response to the report. There have been instances of concurrence being moved following the Minister's response, and indeed, members of the Finance Committee have moved concurrence in a report following a Minister's response to bring onto the floor of the House of Commons the fact that they are dissatisfied or wish to proceed with this argument.

The second reason it is inappropriate is that we do not require an opposition day to do this. Indeed, while I did not raise this as a point of order today, I believe, had it been challenged, that the Speaker might well have found that today's motion was out of order. I refer specifically to Standing Order 82(3) which reads:

> Opposition motions on allotted days may be moved only by Members in opposition to the government and may relate to any matter within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada and also may be used for the purpose of considering reports from standing committees relating to the consideration of estimates therein.

This Standing Order is quite clear that it is foreseen that opposition Parties may choose to use their allotted days to move concurrence in a committee report which deals with the Estimates, but there is no indication in the Standing Order that it should be used for today's particular purpose.

I indicated that I might have been willing to make such a procedural argument, but I did not because I think it is important that we have the opportunity to discuss this report today. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) was the first speaker on this motion today, and in his introductory remarks, he raised another ambiguity which has to do with the motion, and that is exactly what we would be voting on if we were to vote in support of this motion.

The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt indicated on several occasions during his speech that he was seeking approval of the report including the recommendations made by members of the New Democratic Party in that report. One of those recommendations is that the Government place a freeze on all bank service charges with the exception of those prohibited by the Finance Committee majority report for one year effective on the date of this report's tabling in Parliament. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt indicated quite clearly that he would interpret a vote in favour of this motion as a vote in favour of the recommendations he placed in the report of the Finance Committee. Of course, neither members of the Liberal Party or of the Conservative Party could support those particular recommendations when we put together the report.

There is an argument that today's motion should be acceptable to government Members because, after all, government Members endorsed the vast majority of the report, which of course they did. However, the NDP Member who moved the motion today has tried to take it one step further and has indicated that he views his motion as encompassing his recommendations, and he said so on several occasions.

There is another reason, of course, why I view this motion as being inappropriate, and that is that the House is already seized of the majority report. Yesterday, the Chairman of the Private Members' Business Committee tabled a report in the House indicating that the majority report of the standing committee encompassed in the Bill tabled in my name and seconded by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) would be made a votable Bill and that that Bill would be debated, I believe, on July 12, in just over two weeks' time. Already we can eliminate the ambiguity in today's motion. We can see that Members will have every opportunity to express their views on, and indeed to vote for, the majority report, the part of the report with which we all agreed, on July 12 when this Bill comes before the House.

Indeed, perhaps I could make a comment as an aside, because I see the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) in his seat, a very distinguished member of the Finance Committee. From time to time when he was a candidate, he indicated that he felt that some of the support for the Conservative Party had historically come from the Orangemen of Ontario. July 12 happens to be regarded by those people as the glorious 12th, and I would hope that if we have not resolved the issue by unanimous consent before that date, following the adoption of Bill C-292 on July 12, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides and I might indeed go out to celebrate the glorious 12th together after we take a major step for Canadian consumers.

I would like now to review why the Finance Committee decided to take up the issue of bank service charges and what is in the report, because I believe that the majority report deserves the support of all Hon. Members. The complaints to the members of the Finance Committee and indeed to individual Members of Parliament started to arrive in large numbers last May, and it was not by coincidence that they started to arrive in large numbers last May. One of the major chartered banks instituted massive increases in service charges in May, and indeed instituted a whole series of new service charges in May, and this led to consumers being hit with charges about which they did not know and charges which they had no reason to believe would ever be applied to their accounts.

The basic problem arises out of a section of the Bank Act which has been around for 65 years. Any person who hears me speaking might think he or she knows what these these words mean, but obviously they do not mean what every layman thinks they mean. In the Bank Act it says in Section 201(2) that a bank shall not in Canada, directly or indirectly, charge or receive any sum for the keeping of an account for the customer unless the charge is made by express agreement between the bank and the customer.

One might well ask how a customer can be surprised if the only way a bank can levy a charge is with the express agreement of the customer.

• (1530)

The reason is the following. For years the only way a person has been able to open an account in a bank or indeed in a trust company has been by signing a form saying that notwithstanding what may be in the Bank Act, the bank has the right to change any charge at any time, as long as it is charging all of the customers the same charges and indeed, it has the right to introduce any new charge at any time, without necessarily giving any notification to the customer.

It is obvious that this can lead to a host of problems. I will quote a portion of a letter from one constituent, because it deals with all four major areas of the bank service charge report. This particular customer had everything that could possibly go wrong with an account go wrong. I quote the letter:

> Recently I withdrew all the money except a few cents. Now they transfer money from my chequing account to this other account just so they are able to cover their one dollar service charge every month. I did not authorize this transfer of funds. Nor at any time was I informed that a minimum balance was required for that account. Since this account is not often used the one dollar charge was not detected for eleven months. This meant eleven dollars less in the account.
> When this problem first occurred I phoned the bank on three separate occasions. Each time I was told that the Manager would return my call which he never did. They are now refusing to return the money transferred without authorization.

The issues that are dealt with in this one consumer's letter to are the following: First, charging fees without agreement of the client. Second, charging fees without notice to the client. Third, unauthorized actions by the bank, in this case transferring money from one account to another without notice to the client. Fourth, the need for an ombudsman. Even when the client brought this action to the attention of the bank, the answer at the branch was; "Sorry, we are keeping your money".

Once I made a phone call to the vice-president of this particular bank, it refunded the charges and sent a letter of apology to the client. I think all members of the committee will agree that in order to get simple justice in this country, customers should not be required to write and ask their MP to take up an issue with the vice-president, executive vice-president, or president of a bank, to get back $11.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCrossan: It is not very productive—

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you support the motion?

Mr. McCrossan: I do support the content of the majority report, unequivocably.

Mr. Cassidy: Why don't you support the motion today?

Mr. McCrossan: There is a Bill standing in my name to this effect. I would like to review what is in the majority report because I think it is important that consumers know what the Finance Committee is pressing for. The first area has to do with information, getting notification and disclosure of what on earth is happening. Certainly the Conservative Members on the committee are committed to the free market system. We recognize that the only way a free market system can work is if customers can actually find out what the costs are of the services which they wish to buy.

First, when a customer opens an account at a deposit-taking institution, he must be told the complete list of charges applicable to that account. It does not seem too radical that you are actually told what is going to be charged.

Mr. Cassidy: Why would you vote against that on the vote on Monday?

Mr. McCrossan: Second, regardless of what form the bank or trust company makes the consumer sign, waiving his rights, there is a provision in the Bill standing in my name saying they cannot waive the rights to protection under the Bank Act. Third, there is established a consumer-complaint procedure, first at the branches, and then at the head offices. Finally, if the consumer cannot achieve simple justice, the bank has an obligation to notify the customer of the right to take the complaint to the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to have the Superintendent pursue the complaint on the customer's behalf.

In addition, there is a requirement that the Superintendent report annually to Parliament on the nature and number of complaints that are received by him, and how they were resolved. What we have provided for, in addition, is that when fees are about to change, the bank or trust company, the deposit taking institution, has a choice of how they notify the customer. They can do it directly in writing, in which case there is a 30-day advance period, or they can post notices, prominent notices, in the bank branch. If they don't contact the client directly, they have to post the notice 60 days in advance. This all designed to ensure that the customer has available to him or her a complete list of the charges so that if they see a charge that they do not like, they know well enough in advance that they can move the money to another institution.

There are a number of practices occurring among deposit taking institutions which the committee feels should be prohibited, as they are against the public interest. The first of these is charging for closing an account after the account has been opened for a long period of time.

It is the feeling of the committee that if we are to have an efficient system where consumers can indeed shop, they should have the right to take their money out of the bank and indeed shop with it rather than having a deterrent-fee levied on that account simply because they want their money back.

The second type of transaction which we found repugnant was the concept of charging consumers for not doing anything. We didn't have a particular problem with charging the consumers for utilizing the bank services, writing cheques and things like that. We did find the practice was creeping in of charging consumers for not doing something, after they had not written any cheques or made any deposits for a year, or for a matter of months in some cases. We felt that these practices should be prohibited. After all, if the money is just sitting there, the bank is earning interest on that money. The fact that you don't cause the bank any work should not be a reason for it to levy a charge.

We have had no problem whatsoever with banks or trust companies charging people who wrote NSF cheques. When we get to the person who deposits an NSF cheque, this person is already a victim a victim of the person who wrote the NSF cheque. We do not feel the deposit taking institution should apply a further penalty on the depositor. If they are going to collect money, let them collect every cent that it cost them to cover the transactions with the bounced cheque by charging the person who wrote the cheque.

Similarly, banks have recently introduced charges simply because the balance is small. We think this should be prohibited. On savings accounts, the bank do nothing. It does not process cheques or send out monthly statements. The money is left in the bank. The bank should not apply a charge to a consumer just because there is a low balance.

In summary, to incorporate these recommendations, we have recommended prohibiting five specific transactions. We have recommended that a basic or lifeline account be established for those of modest means who have modest needs in the banking system. We would allow up to six deposits or withdrawals monthly without any charge for maintaining the fee with this basic account. The reaction of the banks has been fairly extreme on this. They suggested that allowing people to have the right to make deposits and withdrawals—a very small number, six a month—is somehow requiring them to offer free banking.

These are the types of accounts that the banks lived on for the first hundred years in this country. To the best of my recollection, at no time during those hundred years were the banks ever registered as charities.

• (1540)

Finally, it is evident that there will be questions in the future as to whether or not the banks are complying with the Act. Since 1923 the maximum fine which could be imposed for non-compliance by the banks has been $1,000. Obviously, $1,000 is worth a lot more in today's dollars. Therefore, the majority report recommends that if banks do not comply with the recommendations of the committee in the future, they should be subject to a fine of up to $10,000 for the first occurrence—that is the shot across the bow—and, if they continue to repeat within a three-year period, to a fine of up to $100,000.

In summary, I will give my full support to the majority report of the committee. However, the motion standing in the name of the Member for Nickel Belt is premature, ill-advised, and possibly procedurally destructive of the parliamentary reform process because of the timing and the way in which the motion is put.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, will the Member who just spoke, who is an actuary, tell us something about what the banks call balance of revenues in terms of the concept of profits which most of us know? While he is doing that, again as an actuary, would he tell us something about the way the banks create money and, if he is able, what kind of profits this unique ability they have has generated for them?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the committee commissioned a report from Dr. Terry Thomas, an economist, with the Library of Parliament, on this specific subject. Banks, of course, have available to them essentially two sources of profit. One is the spread on interest rates and the second is service charge fees.

We found that the rate of increase of service charge fees had been averaging nearly 17 per cent a year, considerably in excess of the rate of inflation or the rate of transaction growth. We also found that while the combination of interest spreads and service fees had remained stable for many years, giving a legitimate argument to the banks that as they raised service fees they were decreasing their interest margins, in 1987, the year in which all the complaints arose, there was in fact a quantum jump in the total profitability of the banks.

The combination of the interest spread fees and the service charge fees jumped total bank profitability on Canadian operations by 35 per cent over 1986 and the profit on Canadian operations in 1987 was the highest recorded since we have been keeping statistics. It is, therefore, no wonder that bank consumers were very aware that this massive increase in service charges was going through.

One additional thing occurred. We also commissioned a study on domestic profitability versus profitability on foreign operations. We found it very interesting to observe that while historically the profit on foreign operations had been large and sustained, in 1987 there was a very sharp drop in the profitability on foreign operations which just happened to offset the very large jump in domestic operations. There was roughly a 35 per cent jump in charges to Canadian consumers per $100 of assets administered and at the same time there just happened to be a drop of 25 per cent per $100 of assets administered in the foreign branch. Over-all, the total profitability of the bank per $100 of assets administered was virtually unchanged from the year before.

So there certainly appears to be a case to question whether that rise in the charges on Canadian operations was not introduced in part to offset the losses which were occurring particularly from South American and Third World loans.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am a bit disturbed by the comments of my friend and colleague on the Finance Committee, the Member for York Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan). He stated in length why he supports the recommendations of the committee and in the same breath said he is going to vote against them by opposing the motion before us which calls for concurrence in those recommendations and makes it clear that this is not a question of confidence in the Government.

His procedural arguments are both unnecessary and specious. I am very concerned to see that Members on the government side seem to be backing away from taking on the banks on an issue which has made Canadians from coast to coast more angry on any particular issue than almost anything else I have seen over the last three or four years.

I would assume that the Member's statement about favouring the recommendations stand. He is obviously undermining his own credibility by voting against this. However, rather than going into that in too much detail I would like to ask him a very specific question.

In the NDP's report we recommend that there should be a financial services ombudsperson who would in fact protect consumers when they get into the kinds of situations which many Members have raised in debate in the House of Commons during the course of this debate. We have argued cogently that to leave the Superintendent of Financial Institutions as the relevant officer for complaints would not work particularly well. There are conflicts of interest and conflicts in terms of functions, et cetera.

Does the Member support the concept of a financial services ombudsman, someone to whom Canadians can turn if they continue to have problems with the banks after, one would hope, concurrence in the report which is before the House today?

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, the Member raised two issues. In his questions he explained the rationale for why the motion before us is not supportable. First, the NDP itself would not concur in the majority report of the Finance Committee. The NDP chose to add a minority report to that.

His subsequent question reinforces the point I made in my speech. Both this Member and the Member for Nickel Belt have suggested that support for the motion before us today would indicate support for their ideas in their minority report and the Member has just now asked me to support their minority report. The answer is that I do not support their minority report.

The concept of having an ombudsman, without a capital "O", is contained in the majority report. I support the idea of having a person to mediate, to represent the consumer, a person to whom the aggrieved bank customers can turn in the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions. That is contained in my Bill and in the majority report. There is no question about that.

The Member has gone one step further and asked whether I support the NDP minority report to establish an independent office of an ombudsman. The answer is no and it is no for several reasons.

First, by putting it in the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, as contained in my Bill, we provide for the banks themselves to fund the operation. If we establish a separate government operation—

Mr. Cassidy: Just like the Conservative Party.

Mr. McCrossan: No, no, this is because the Superintendent's office is funded from levies on the banks themselves. The NDP would argue that we should set up another elaborate government bureaucracy which would have to acquire expertise in dealing in banks and would have to represent the consumer. We believe that there is sufficient expertise in the office of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and that by applying the discipline of an annual report to Parliament whereby the Superintendent has to bring forward all of the complaints which were brought to him together with how they were resolved, Parliament will be able to keep its finger on the pulse of what is happening in the banking community by ensuring that if a significant problem is occurring in large numbers the parliamentary committee or the Government can take immediate action.

No, Mr. Speaker, I did not sign their minority report. I do not support their minority report and the fact that they are trying to include that minority report in this vote today is precisely why I cannot support this motion.

Mrs. Browes: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan), my neighbour, on his comments today. As you know, in Scarborough we have had a number of public forums on this issue of bank service charges in which my colleague, the Member for York—Scarborough, has taken a leading role. About six or eight weeks ago, prior to the Finance Committee meeting on this, Members of Parliament from Scarborough held a public forum. It was certainly obvious at that time through hearing from residents of Scarborough that there is a need for some action on bank service charges.

• (1550)

They cited some examples of horrendous problems. I am interested in the proposal of an ombudsman that was brought forward by the Finance Committee and mentioned by the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough. This would provide a third party to whom people could bring their complaints and have them resolved.

Britain introduced an ombudsman a couple of years ago. Has the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee had an opportunity to determine the effectiveness of that system in Britain? What could we expect from an ombudsman in Canada to look after some of the problems that have arisen from bank service charges?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ellis): I will give the Hon. Member for York-Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) a minute to answer. The Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) is to speak next but he is out of the House at the moment. I will give him a minute, then go to the New Democratic Party for the next speaker if he does not show up.

Mr. McCrossan: Mr. Speaker, indeed, the committee looked at the British ombudsman and we were quite impressed by that approach. The situation is somewhat different, however. In the United Kingdom, the banks themselves fund the office of ombudsman directly. The ombudsman in the United Kingdom is not a mediator between the banks and the consumer, but is, in effect, a person who can make a decision and impose a fairly large fine directly on the banks under the legislation.

While we considered this approach and thought it interesting, we thought we would rather go the mediation route because a person cannot be both mediator and the one who imposes the fine if they do not agree with the mediator.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. During his remarks, the Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) referred to comments I made in my speech, that the NDP minority report was part of the report. I want to correct the record and read from the "blues" what was said: "He", meaning the Member from Mississauga, "... did not like the NDP minority report which is attached to this report. I believe our minority report would complete the report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs". It goes on to deal with those recommendations in the minority report.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) pointed out, the concurrence is with the report. What was published as a report is the recommendations made by the committee as a whole, in which the New Democratic Members concurred. It was a unanimous report. There was an addition by the New Democratic Party in an effort to elaborate and improve the recommendations in the main committee report. That did not mean we did not concur with the thrust of the report. We are asking for concurrence in the report. The report itself includes several appendices which are attached to provide information and not to represent a position from the committee. The committee's position is in the text of its report.

I am rather concerned about the comments of my colleagues from the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee which suggest they are backing off on this particular subject. They have shown a good deal of political initiative in this area and have, as in other areas, been innovative and prepared for the committee to take its own line. It has been clear for some time that the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) would much prefer that the committee do something else than look at the question of bank charges. They would much prefer that the committee simply scold the banks and then go away, to be deep sixed until after the next election, and hopefully never see the light of day again.

The Member for York—Scarborough (Mr. McCrossan) and the Member for Mississauga North (Mr. Blenkarn) and others on the committee are not known for kowtowing to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of State for Finance. Those Members have taken an independent line on such issues as deregulation of financial institutions and banking centres, as well as on other matters. That is why I am puzzled that their courage seems to have suddenly run out in this particular case, and they have decided not to support this motion to concur in the report of the committee.

It is not true that this procedure has not been done before. My colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt moved concurrence in a report on the unemployment insurance system which came unanimously from the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigrant prior to having had a response from the Minister. Furthermore, our motion allows the House of Commons as a whole to state our opinion about the way the banks have been gouging Canadians steadily in the last few years by the unsupportable and unsustainable increases in service charges. A simple debate on concurrence which is permitted under the rules of the House does not lead to a vote and would not have the same force in sending the message to the banks that they have been singularly asinine in their reaction to the concerns of Canadians as reflected by the committee.

Monday will be the final day on which to deal with the question of Supply and the Estimates. It is a parliamentary tradition dating back to the Magna Carta that the grievances of the citizens are heard by Parliament before Supply is voted. Banking is a federal responsibility in this country and citizens have a real grievance with respect to the performance of the banks. The federal Government has the power to stop the gouging, the deception and misinformation. It has the power to ensure that the banks deal honestly and fairly with their clients and customers. I do not know of another grievance that is as legitimate as that for airing at this time.

I am concerned that the Government Members, most of whom come from the Finance Committee, are continuing an elaborate web of explanation in order to vote directly contrary to that which they purport to support in the unanimous report of the Finance Committee. While the Government Members talk tough, I daresay they are turning into wimps. That is unfortunate.

It has also been suggested that New Democrats are Johnnys- come-lately with respect to this subject. The chairman of the committee suggested that we have tried to jump on board with this issue. The New Democrats raised the issue of interest rates in the early 1980s, and fought on the issue of the unfair retail credit card rates. That issue continues to persist. New Democrats fought on the issue of bank profits. We complained that the chartered banks had made profits of hundreds of millions of dollars but paid no tax on those profits.

• (1600)

When we have talked about the abuse of oligopoly of power by the chartered banks, on many occasions we have done so alone. It is a pleasure to welcome members of the Government in airing the grievances of their constituents on this particular subject, but it is wrong to suggest that the NDP has not been there on these issues for a long time.

I am struck by the absence of a representative of The Canadian Bankers' Association in the House of Commons today. I am looking around the galleries and I do not see anyone from the Bankers' Association. Frankly, I think that is too bad. I am sure if there is a representative here, he would silently raise his hand to indicate that I have made an error. Perhaps there is a representative of one of the chartered banks in the gallery? Apparently that is not the case, either.

Perhaps they think the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) is here to look after their interests in view of the fact that the five major banks contribute $175,000 a year to the fund of the Progressive Conservative Party and a slightly lesser amount to the Liberal Party. When the debate over bank service charges in the spring and summer of 1988 has passed, when this House has taken effective action to outlaw and stop some of these unacceptable practices, I suspect there will be studies at business schools such as York University, of which I am a graduate, on corporate public relations with some awful examples of how not to act. One of the worst examples of corporate public relations, I am sure, will be the mishandling of this particular issue by the Canadian Bankers' Association and the Canadian chartered banks.

The President of the Bankers' Association, Mr. MacIntosh, is a man who is well known to many Members of Parliament, particularly those of us who deal with economic issues. He is a man who not long ago had a reputation as being the lobbyist's lobbyist, one of the most effective lobbyists in Ottawa. But he has blown it this time, with what he has said on radio, television and in the press. He has even called the chairman of the committee a socialist, a charge which I can categorically deny. I know the chairman of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs well and if he is a socialist, then I would have to abandon my Party, and I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that there will be no need for me to do so.

Mr. MacIntosh has talked about the power grab by the Finance Committee without recognizing that under the reformed rules of this Parliament, the Finance Committee was simply doing its job when it took the reference to look into bank service charges. This esteemed lobbyist has attacked the press, particularly the Toronto Star. He has suggested that everyone makes a few mistakes and the press is simply dealing in horror stories. He has not recognized the anger that is out there among Canadians. As the committee put it, one of the major reasons for all this is that there is a whole generation of Canadians of the age, perhaps, of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) and myself, who were brought up to trust the banks. There was not a lot of variety of financial institutions in those days. When I started a bank account, it was with the Toronto Dominion Bank some time in the 1940s. I fully expected to stay with that bank for most of my life at the time and did so, in fact, for something like 20 or 25 years until I became so annoyed with the way they were dealing with me as a customer that I switched to another bank.

I have to say that for all the courtesies I receive from the other bank that from time to time I have problems. For me, as a Member of Parliament, someone with perhaps a larger income and more financial dealings than many Canadians, it is difficult to know who the devil is in charge. I also get these quixotic service charges from time to time. I have found that if I go to the bank and pound my fist on the table a couple of times, I can get the charge reversed. I think bank managers have that particular discretion. But that is not a privilege that is available to a lot of Canadians. They feel afraid to do it. They feel they are in the grip of the banks and because they are powerless they feel this frustration and anger which has grown and grown.

There have been a number of cases cited. One of the cases is about a woman who was charged $2 to convert a $20 bill into change so she could go to the launderette. She was a woman who eventually got so mad she called up my constituency office. After this matter was raised the transaction was reversed. The bank said: "Gee, I guess someone made a mistake". But these cases are not mistakes if they occur and reoccur. What is happening, of course, is that the banks are being hypocritical on this particular subject. They have given instructions to the local branch managers to improve their fee income without much regard as to how that would take place. Senior managers have blinded themselves. They have covered their faces and told their subordinates: "Go ahead and do it, but if you get caught apologize and turn it around".

A case came into my office just the other day from a student who lives in my constituency. She had problems with the Bank of Montreal just across the street from Parliament Hill. She gave her landlord a post-dated cheque for her July rent because she was going on holiday sometime in June. When she came back from holiday she found out that the cheque had bounced. It had been presented by the landlord, possibly in error, prior to the time for which it was dated. The bank had refused to honour it and, therefore, there was a $6 charge and the cheque went NSF. When the student complained that it was the bank's mistake, she was told by the bank's customer service officer that the banks do not check the date on cheques under $1,000. I deal with that particular bank and they have never told me that they do not check the date on post-dated cheques that are under $1,000. That raises the question of what kind of service it is when those people who can afford to write cheques for $1,000 or more receive one service from the bank and those people who cannot receive another service.

That particular $6 charge was refunded after we spoke to the bank manager. We were told that the charge that was imposed does represent the usual practice. In other words, it is not even a mistake in this particular case, it is the usual practice. How was the public to find that out? They would find out when they were dinged by the bank.

There was another case of a particular constituent who teaches at Carleton University. Without any instructions, the bank had begun to cover the overdraft on their account not by a transfer from their savings account, which had been the practice in the past, but by transfer from their Visa account. They had not even been able to find out what was happening with the Visa account unless they went to the money machine. This was a person who was seeking to manage his financial affairs so as not to pile up a lot of credit card charges, but here was an unannounced change in policy by the bank which hurt that particular constituent.

I have another case which I am still trying to track down. A small business in my constituency deals a lot in coins. The coins are rolled but its branch is refusing to accept rolled coins despite the fact that those coins are and should be treated as legal tender and should be accepted at any bank.

There was a suggestion already cited here in the House. The Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto suggested it would close branches in areas where there was a substantial number of senior citizens or people on welfare because those bank branches would not be profitable. These persons would have to go to the banks of marble in downtown Toronto, I presume, in order to get service.

We already have a problem in my constituency in areas where there are significant numbers of senior citizens and people on welfare. They find the time it takes to cash a cheque is so long that they wind up in the hands of the cheque cashing services where they pay from 3 per cent to 6 per cent of the value of a government cheque or some other cheque in order to get it cashed. I think it is wrong that someone should pay up to $15 or $18 to get their monthly cheque cashed. I think there is something seriously wrong with that.

I believe that if the banks really cared about the people they are supposed to be serving, if they really felt they had any responsibility to their clientele, after all, they do perform a service, I would assume, on behalf of all Canadians, particularly as we move into a cashless society, they would not tolerate that kind of competition and would provide a service that was sufficiently adequate.

• (1610)

I have to accept that the banks are not the only villains in this particular piece. I note, for example, that Government of Canada cheques are extremely difficult to cash for cash and that in many cases the banks have a hold of a week, two weeks or three weeks on them because of the Government's own practice in terms of clearing those cheques and passing on responsibility if the cheques are fraudulently presented. That is a problem which could be solved if the banks cared about the people on whose backs they make hundreds of millions of dollars of profit every year.

What we are seeing is where there used to be a relationship of trust people now feel that they are being exploited by the banks and being pushed around by a bank oligopoly.

I have another case which came to me today. I talked to a constituent. It is very interesting that this constituent said: "Please do not identify me. Do not give the details of my case. Do not indicate which bank I was dealing with". The constituent said: "I may need a loan from the bank in the future. I may need my mortgage rolled over or renewed. I am afraid that if I went public with my concerns that the bank would blackball me and I would be driven out of business because I would not be able to get loans on any reasonable kind of basis".

This constituent, who has a substantial income, had a series of misfortunes which I do not need to go into. The result was that about a quarter of this person's monthly income was garnisheed by the bank in order to pay off a debt. Whatever happened, was not the subject of complaint. The complaint was the following. Earlier this year the outstanding amount of the debt of the loan which had been called was paid off because of the garnishee. The constituent went to the bank and said: "Well, would you please stop collecting that money. According to the court order you have your pound of flesh, you have your money". The bank refused. It refused for about four months running, through the late winter and spring of this year until finally just a few days ago matters came to a head. By that time the bank had received several thousand dollars more than was its due, according to the court order. The constituent finally went to the bank and said: 'Enough is enough. If you won't deal with this, then I am going to talk to my Member of Parliament. I am going to talk to the press. I will raise it with the newspapers in places such as Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa. Something has to be done. This is not right".

The bank then responded. It said that it was sorry. It gave the constituent the excessive amount of money back. It stopped taking the money that was being garnisheed and said: "It was just a clerical error. It was a mistake".

We have to bring such situations to an end, situations in which banks rip off their clients and then when they are finally caught out, when the clients or customers finally rise up in anger, they reverse the charge, refund the money and say: "Well, it was a mistake". That kind of excuse will not wash any more. We need to get away from a situation in which millions of Canadians have to come to their Member of Parliament in order to get redress in such cases.

The bank fee for service income has been by about 19 per cent per annum. This represents a 10 per cent or 11 per cent increase in the level of rates. Banks have been having about a 7 per cent increase in their volume of business. The cost of doing business has been going up at about the same rate as their volume of business, about 7 per cent. They are benefiting in terms of more efficient operations because of computerization, the public not seeing that. The public is being charged more and more and more.

It is as though I went to The Bay to buy a suit and I had to pay $2 to get in, $1 to ride upstairs on the escalator, $20 an hour for the sales clerk for consulting fees while deciding what suit to buy, a charge to have the suit fixed, another delivery charge to have it delivered to my home, and something else when I went out the door to leave the place. That is the concept that the banks have. It does not work in commerce. I expect to pay $300 or $250 for a suit, and those charges are rolled in.

But the banks are saying that every nickel that it costs to run a local branch it will rip off from the customer by means of these service fees. That is not the way it should be done. That is not the way other people do business. I do not believe it should be done in the case of banking as well.

We need not just concurrence in this report, we need support for the concept of a genuinely independent and effective financial services ombudsman who can bring to an end the kind of abuse of power which we are seeing from the banks, something which we have been seeing over the past few years. Let us not forget the banks have a federal charter to fulfil their responsibility. They have a privilege which no other institution has, that is, they are able to create money at the stroke of a pen. I believe that they have obligations to the people of Canada in return for the enormous privileges and profitability that they enjoy because of the charter they have from the Government of Canada through this Parliament.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). I would like to suggest to him that he is criticizing the banks because he does not like banks. He does not like private ownership in regard to banks as they epitomize the commanding heights of capitalism. On this side of the House we are trying to get the banks to clean up their act and stop abusing their customers, for example, older people. We will ensure, and Hon. Members will see this very shortly, that we are not going to put up with the type of abuses they have been carrying out in terms of user fees in the past little while.

Mr. Cassidy: By voting against this report.

Mr. Kilgour: Whether we vote for or against this motion, which is quite different from the report, as the Member should know as an experienced parliamentarian, is entirely beside the point.

The Hon. Member will recall that this morning his colleague, the Hon. Member for Regina East (Mr. de Jong), indicated that nationalizing a bank was, I think his phrase was, not a priority of an NDP Government. What rank would it have on the list of priorities? Which bank?

I noticed that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre was shaking his head when I was trying to tell something about what happened in France when the Mitterrand Government nationalized a number of banks after 1981. Was he disputing that? Was he denying that this experience of my Paris friends happened? My friends lived through it and saw what it was like to have political interference with commercial banks. They did not like it. It did not turn out well for exporters. Finally, they abandoned it. I believe, however, that the nationalization of banks was not abandoned when the Chirac Government took office.

Will the Hon. Member answer another question for me since it is one with which I have a personal problem. My bank happens to be the Bank of Nova Scotia, which has done well for many years. However, the Chairman of that bank, Mr. Ritchie, as the Hon. Member will know, has been basically trying to do what he can to stop the free trade agreement. As someone who believes that the free trade agreement is very much in the interests of western Canada, central Canada and Maritime Canada, I take, as I have indicated to Mr. Ritchie, considerable offence with that position. Would the Hon. Member advise me to transfer my account to another bank, or would he advise me to transfer it to the Democratic Party account? What recommendation would he give me in light of this conundrum I face?

The serious question I ask is if it is not a priority to nationalize a bank, or banks, will the Hon. Member explain to us exactly what the policy of his Party would be if it ever took office with respect to nationalizing a bank or banks?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wishes to deposit his wealth in the coffers of the New Democratic Party to help us in the next election, all contributions are gratefully received. I anticipate, as I have told him on platforms earlier, that the next Member of Parliament for Edmonton—Strathcona will in fact be a New Democrat. If he wants to join our Party, that might be himself.

The motion states:

> That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in, and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

This is the motion that the Hon. Member who says he wants to bring the banks to heel intends to vote against. How contradictory that is. I do not know what the Hon. Member has in mind when he talks about how his Government will bring the banks under control. If he is not prepared to support a committee report, I think that his credibility is particularly weak.

• (1620)

The Hon. Member has asked me about the NDP's position on financial institutions. As the finance critic I have been developing and putting forward positions and terms of limiting the ownership of large financial institutions, be they banks or trust companies, including the ones which are presently grandfathered according to proposals coming from the Government. I would hope to have the support of the Hon. Member in that particular area.

We will be outlining our priorities in terms of our platform during the course of the election campaign. At that point we will talk about financial institutions, and other areas.

One of the key priorities that we will talk about is quite specifically the issue we are presently discussing, which is when it came to the crunch the Progressive Conservatives, with 210 seats, were not prepared to take effective action to protect Canadians from being mauled and mishandled by the chartered banks. New Democrats are prepared to take that effective action. We have made a number of proposals in that direction. There is still time, and I invite the Hon. Member to join with us in order to take the necessary action through the House of Commons so that we can control abuses by Canada's banks now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a question, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. Kilgour: Perhaps I was not present earlier when you ruled on this question, Mr. Speaker, but I would ask the Hon. Member whether a motion to concur in the particular circumstances we face today is proper under the present rules of order in the House. If Your Honour will advise if that question has been ruled upon, then I would specifically ask the Chair if there has been a ruling, or if I should assume, since there has not been a ruling, you have made a presumption of validity and allowed the debate to go ahead today.

My understanding from people who know the rules is that this motion we are discussing today is most improper under the rules, and we should not be discussing it on an opposition day, or on any day in the House, given the fact that the Government has not yet had a chance to reply to the report with which we are asked to concur today.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is no need to hear the Hon. Member on that point. The motion is obviously in order, otherwise the Speaker would not have allowed it to come forward. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: In reply to the question or comment from the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker has made it very clear that this motion is in order. Perhaps that clarification was needed in order to expose exactly what game the government Members are up to. Since eleven o'clock this morning government Members have been arguing that this motion was improper, that it should not have been put forward, and that they feel it is against the rules of order of the House. For those reasons they will oppose it, rather than dealing with the substance of the motion.

I would ask the Hon. Member to deal with the substance of the motion. Is the Hon. Member in favour of the report of the Finance Committee, which has been made clear does not include the minority report, or does he oppose it? If he is in favour of it, does he intend to vote for the motion, which the Speaker has clearly indicated is in order, or is he going to be hypocritical and confusing in his position by voting against something which he purports to agree to?

Mr. Kilgour: My understanding is that if, under the bizarre rules that we have in the House, a supply matter—

Mr. Rodriguez: You are reflecting on the House. You are reflecting on the Chair.

Mr. Kilgour: Those rules cannot be blamed on the Speaker, and the Member knows it.

Under the bizarre situation that we live under in this House, if Members on the government side vote for the motion this afternoon, I understand—and if I am incorrect, I hope that the Hon. Member will tell me where I am incorrect—that would constitute non confidence in the Government.

An Hon. Member: No.

An Hon. Member: Yes, it will.

Mr. Kilgour: I am fully in sympathy with the position of the Member.

The Member was present one month ago when we debated on this side of the House that NATO was not an important part of Canada's defence, and the Members all know on that side that most of us found that simply preposterous that we were asked to do that. It was explained to us by knowledgeable Members like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) that that would have constituted non confidence in the Government.

I hope the time will come in the next Parliament, as they have done in other places like the Bundestag and other assemblies in the world, when there will be a free vote on every matter except when it constitutes non-confidence in the Government, that it will be specified very clearly for all Members what those situations are, and we can get away from situations where all of us on this side of the House who support the report of the Finance Committee as strongly as does the Hon. Member, I trust, would like nothing better than to support it with our vote. But because of the rules which I understand we operate under in this particular case, we cannot vote for it because we would therefore be voting non-confidence.

Mr. Cassidy: Perhaps this is the final round of this interesting turnabout. I very much appreciate the response of the Hon. Member to my questions. I would point out to the Hon. Member that the motion states specifically: "... that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the Government".

I would also point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that where a motion is put forward by an opposition Party and states quite specifically that it is a matter of confidence, then I believe the established practice is that it is a matter of confidence and should the Government be defeated on that particular motion then the Government falls. That is done in the normal way with words such as "and for the following reasons this House has no confidence in the Government". That can be initiated by the opposition Parties.

Where the motion is not explicit then the Government can treat a motion as a matter of confidence or not. Where a motion is explicit that it is not a matter of confidence then I would assume that anybody understanding plain English would assume or draw from that that it is not a matter of confidence.

If the Government deems a motion to be a motion of confidence then it is a motion of confidence, and it is possible that a motion can be deemed to be one of confidence by the Government, even if the motion itself states that it is not a motion of confidence. I have to draw from all that that the Member for Edmonton—Strathcona has been told by the brilliant parliamentary tactician, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), that a motion here which is explicitly stated by the Opposition not to be a matter of confidence has been declared by the Government to be a matter of confidence.

In other words, at the highest level of the Government, the House Leader or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), heard what the Royal Bank told them and decided to make this into a motion of confidence in order that they could get the Member and his colleagues who want to vote for the motion to vote against it. That is preposterous. Perhaps the Hon. Member could clarify that. I can only assume that he has been told by the Government that it is a motion of confidence, because nobody else would be able to declare it so.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Kilgour: I rise on a point of order. It should be cleared up that, when I indicated that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had indicated something about the earlier matter of NATO, the Minister had said nothing to me or, to my knowledge, to anyone else on this side about today's motion.

The problem is that the last time when the NATO matter was raised, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) gave an interview in which he stated that if we win this vote the Government will fall on a vote of non-confidence. At the same time, the Member will recall that last time the NDP motion also said that the passage of this motion will not constitute a vote of non-confidence. That is where we get into the hypocrisy on all sides of the House, an hypocrisy which is created by the rules and practices of the House, and which in the spirit of the McGrath Commission I hope very quickly we will have resolved.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), on a point of order.

Mr. Rossi: First of all, Mr. Speaker, since the period provided for questions and comments has now expired, I would, if I may, like to take this opportunity, as a Quebecer, to wish a Happy Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day to all French Canadians across this beautiful country of ours, and Quebecers especially. Happy Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day! Tomorrow is a day of pride for all Quebecers!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me to participate in this debate. It gives me a welcome opportunity to discuss a very important issue. I wish I could congratulate the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) as warmly for the way he has chosen to raise the issue. Bank service charges are important and deserve to be considered by the House, so does the larger issue of consumer protection.

• (1630)

I want to spend some time addressing both of these issues. This motion brings up the matter in a way that is unacceptable to the Government. The Hon. Member can word his motion as he pleases, but he cannot thereby slip out from under the precedents of this House. As the Deputy Government House Leader pointed out just three and a half months ago on a motion moved by the Liberal Party, under the provisions of Standing Order 82(9), we have no choice but to consider this a matter of confidence. Therefore, despite our appreciation for the work of the committee, the Government will be voting against this motion today.

I do want to say a few words about the work of the standing committee. Members of the committee are to be profoundly congratulated for their work. They have brought this issue clearly and concretely to everyone's attention. If I may say so, they have done so in a non-partisan way which did not make the issue a tool of perceived political advantage, such as members of the New Democratic Party are attempting to do today.

Mr. Cassidy: You are making it partisan.

Mr. King: We know that all those who deal with financial institutions have a stake in knowing that their interests are well served. They are all affected by service charges. It would be an error to think that this is a minor issue, and some of the credit for ensuring that no one can stand aside on it is due to the work of the committee.

Let me begin by looking briefly at the context in which this whole question has arisen. We need to have a firm understanding of the issue and the full implications of any possible action before accepting any detailed recommendations. We also have to understand the recent history of the financial services industry and the way it has developed in recent years.

This Government has a proud record of action in defence of consumer rights. We have consistently put it as one of the goals of our reform of the financial institution sector. Legislation has already been passed by Parliament to implement the first stages of that reform. A significant part of the package contributed to strengthening the protection of consumers, depositors and policy holders. Still further measures are part of the remaining legislation on financial institution reform as has been clear since the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) released his draft of the new trust and loans company Bill last December. These measures will go even further to protect consumers from conflicts of interest and will encourage competition. They will ensure that the present high standard of corporate behaviour is enhanced in the interests of all those who participate in the financial system, which are most Canadians.

There is a valid role for Government in ensuring that individuals are treated fairly. When we look at how that responsibility has been carried out in the past, it is fairly clear that the existing provisions in the Bank Act and in regulations do not go far enough. They need to be updated to take account of current conditions. At the same time we must be careful not to go too far with regulation. Unnecessary detailed regulations must be avoided. Instead, we must remember that market competition is the best way to obtain fair pricing practices.

I want to note that competition has already produced positive changes for consumers in certain institutions. We also must emphasize that disclosure of information is the foundation of the effective exercise of consumers' rights. Disclosure enables individuals to exercise their own rights without having to rely on the Government. I want to return to this in a few moments.

One key element in understanding why service charges are before us today is the recent history of the financial industry. I want to very briefly go over some of the key points in the way the industry has been developing. We all remember the days when there were no service charges for most bank services at banks—at least I remember that. Of course, there was very little interest paid on deposits because, as we all know, the banks used the difference between what they earned from deposits and what they paid to depositors to cover their expenses.

Those were also the days when you had a simple choice going into a bank. You could have a chequing account or a savings account. On one you got next to no interest even in nominal terms, and on the other you had the privilege of depositing in person and making withdrawals in person. You also had a simple choice of where to bank. Outside the big cities you could go to whichever of the one or two or three chartered banks had a branch near you. In the cities the choice was larger. There might be a branch of each of the big banks near you. If a local trust company had a branch, you might be able to use it for some services. If your province had established a savings bank with a local branch, you could go there, or if you lived near a credit union you could get some banking services there also. But that was about it. The point I am making is that in the last two or three decades the financial services system has changed enormously. The number of choices each participant in the system has to make has multiplied many times. There is vastly increased flexibility, and there is far greater capacity to get the services that you need. There is also much greater competition.

The trust companies, and we now have many more trust companies operating across the country, are into the provision of service and what amounts to direct competition with the major chartered banks. Credit unions have grown in number and are also offering a far wider selection of options. Today as a consumer of financial services, you have a choice of institutions. You are not limited to just one bank even in small communities. You have a choice of instruments. The two or three types of accounts of 20 years ago have been replaced by dozens of types of accounts with different terms and conditions and with different advantages. You are not even limited anymore to bankers' hours. The automatic tellers machines and competition between institutions has brought Canadians longer hours of service, Saturday service and, in many areas, 24 hours a day service.

There is always a price to pay for improvements on this scale, and in the case of the financial system more competition and more choices for consumers has meant greater complexity and a much more elaborate infrastructure. But most of us benefit very considerably from the new situation. I have heard no widespread demand that we go back 30 years. I do not believe that the people want that. I know that our economic health would be considerably impaired by any attempt to return to the simpler, but less flexible, less adaptable, less competitive system of an earlier period that I remember so well. As there is therefore no going back, the question is only about how we pay for what we get.

Specifically, do we extend the "user-pay" principle which enables individuals to "buy" the services they need, or do we revert to a system which spreads the cost of all services over all customers? Or do we recognize that no single approach is appropriate in this less than perfect world and look for a solution that combines elements of both approaches?

• (1640)

The committee report has left us in no doubt about what has happened, and it describes very accurately the process that has brought us to where we are today. Let me quote very briefly at this point from the report itself which reads:

> The Committee is not interested in turning back the clock. In principle explicit pricing is a welcome development.

The committee has accepted that greater choice must be paid for, and that service charges by and large make an acceptable and appropriate contribution to the cost of doing business.

The committee has highlighted flaws in the system, at least in terms of the requirements for disclosure. It has brought to our attention that the present system does not always work without error or mistake. It has indeed pointed to specific cases where obvious injustice has occurred, either because of individual mistakes or because an institution's system has been too rigid.

The Government's proposals have to take into account that the basic system is sound and not in need of major structural changes. Whatever is wrong will not be fixed by forcing the whole system backward. We do not want to interfere needlessly in one aspect of the sector's activities.

We also have to take into account what in the sector has caused the confusion and problems. It is perfectly clear that the real problems arise from a lack of communications. I say that without in any way denying that mistakes and wrong decisions may have been made, and I do not mean to suggest either that the problem is not real, that it is a question of how we look at it and that a good public relations job will make everyone happy. That would obviously be very wrong.

I do mean that when we listen to the people on the street or the people who have been writing to the offices of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister of State for Finance and individual Members of Parliament, including the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Lesick) and me, the biggest question we hear is: "How was I supposed to know what the financial institution was going to do to me"? The cry, heard over and over again, is: "I just didn't know".

We can all appreciate the problem. People must know when they have choices, and must have sufficient information to make their choices. They must have the proper information to allow them to shop around to find the best deal possible and to take advantage of the options and flexibilities now provided by the system, and of which the system is justly proud.

This is basic to any idea of natural justice. It is fundamental to any system of free enterprise and free competition. So, as I said at the outset of these comments, we come to disclosure and we come also to the thorny question of the best way to ensure that full and proper disclosure occurs.

The Government does not believe that it is all black or white. Beyond a certain point, we cannot force people to learn or understand what they need to know. Beyond a certain point, we cannot effectively force institutions to do things without interfering to an unacceptable degree in their activities. We have to find a way that combines elements of prescribed regulations with good corporate citizenship.

It is in the institutions' own interests, after all, to have contented customers. It would be unprofitable for institutions to offer new options to customers, to attract them and then to alienate them by clumsy or careless provision of essential information. It would be curiously short-sighted for any institution which is based on dealing with people and selling them services fundamental to the operation of our economic system in the long term to write off one group in society or one potential customer.

I think it is quite reasonable to talk about options and possible ways to proceed, so long as we do not talk ourselves into impractical or unreasonable corners. We must not base an entire system of regulation on admitted injustices or absurdities, though we must strenuously work toward a system without such flaws.

We must recognize that there is a great diversity in the practices of institutions, a diversity which benefits their customers, and we must be careful not to legislate or regulate that diversity away. We have to remember that past experience teaches us to be leery of the practicality or benefits of any system of controls on prices and fees.

The Minister of State for Finance has made clear a number of times that the Government's response to the committee report will be forthcoming as quickly as possible, and hopefully by the end of this month. The Government's action, when it comes, will be developed after considering the interests of both the institutions and the customers in the system.

In shaping these proposals, the Government will benefit considerably from the work of the committee. We will be moving as quickly as possible to correct errors in the system and to ensure that the customers of our financial institutions are equipped with the information they need.

I regret very much that the Opposition has made this a partisan issue, and needlessly divided the support this House should be giving to the committee's goal of better protection for the customers of financial institutions.

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I want to first compliment the Hon. Member for his well documented speech. I think we all enjoyed going down memory lane about how the banking system developed. I think it is important to remember where we were and how far we have come in the banking system.

The Hon. Member, of course, represents a rural riding, as I do, and represents it very well. I am sure he comes in contact with many farmers, and farmers also complain about our banking system. I would like the Hon. Member to comment on whether or not he feels the banking system is better today than it was. Is it as personal as it used to be?

Today, when we go to banks, we have to go through a maze of ropes and flashing lights telling us which way to go, and it seems to me to be very impersonal. We also find when we get to the teller and ask for our balance that the computer is down. Does the Hon. Member think that the services are any better today than they were 30 years ago?

The Hon. Member also has to point out that farmers as a group are one of the biggest borrowers and users of banks, and of course, in the past three or four years, there has been a rapid decrease in interest rates the farmers have had to pay. I am sure the Hon. Member also knows that for every percentage drop in interest rates, agriculture in Canada is saved $150 million. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes how much farmers have saved on interest rates over the past number of years.

The question I would really like to ask the Hon. Member is if he feels that the banks today are as personal as they used to be, perhaps when he was a younger man farming back in the Okanagan.

Mr. King: Mr. Speaker, I would not think that there is the same personal touch in any business today that there was when I was a boy. I can remember when we used to go to the drugstore and were able to go up to the counter and order malted milks. We can no longer do that. We simply do not have the same kind of personal relationships with the people with whom we do business that we did when I was a youngster.

Mr. Nystrom: When was that, Fred?

Mr. King: That was a long time ago. I didn't have any money so I didn't deal with banks. I was so poor in those days, you would think I would have turned out to be an NDPer, but—

Mr. Nystrom: What went wrong?

Mr. King: My father taught me that even though we had little money, there was only one way to get it and that was to work hard and make your own way in life. Don't wait for the Government to do things for you, do them yourself.

I might mention that yesterday, June 22, my father celebrated his 99th birthday.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. King: Regrettably, I was not there to help him celebrate because there seemed to be some important things to do here. Anyway, I thank the Hon. Member for helping me reminisce about the good old days.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a couple of brief comments with regard to the question that is before us today. I would remind Hon. Members that we are dealing here with an opposition motion that is not to be considered a question of confidence in the Government, because we want to maintain the non-partisan debate that came about as a result of the recommendations of the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. That committee was able to make recommendations with regard to bank charges that were supported by all three political Parties.

• (1650)

I want to briefly note the kinds of problems that led the committee to investigate what the banks were doing. Here is one simple example. The Bank of Nova Scotia at 225 Red River Road, Thunder Bay, for example, charges 40 cents for each deposit into an account that has a minimum balance of less than $500. Here, we have banks charging customers to deposit their money in their own accounts.

A second example is in the riding of Oshawa. Mrs. Yvonne Mitchelldeck of Ajax was upset because her Toronto-Dominion Bank branch at the Pickering Town Centre had charged her babysitter $5 to cash a $45 cheque. Here is a bank charging a young babysitter $5 to cash a cheque of $45. These kinds of shocking incidents is what motivated the Finance Committee to investigate the kinds of user-fees or service fees that the banks have been laying on people as of late.

Having studied this problem and the fact that banks are charging people for basic banking services, the committee came up with some recommendations. I do not want to go into the details of them, but they said that basic banking services ought to be available to people. You ought to have a right to a basic bank account. You ought to be able to deposit money in your account. You ought to be able to have a small balance. You ought to be able to have an inactive account. You ought to be able to close out an account without getting dinged, without getting an extra fee laid on you. Those are important recommendations.

These recommendations really come out of one basic principle, and that is a question about money, whether money is a public good or simply a private product, a private commodity. The banks are treating money—and their services are a part of what money is—as simply a private commodity, that they can sell willy-nilly, without considering the interest of the community, and that they can charge anybody as much or as often as they would like to. I would like to suggest that money is a public good. The dollar bill is something that was established by the Crown. The dollar bill is not some private thing that a banker can go around and sell. In effect, that is what they are doing when they charge you a fee to deposit money in your own account, or charge you an enormous amount to cash a cheque. They are treating the dollar bill as their private plaything. I think that is a fundamental mistake.

We are being challenged on that to say: "Where do you guys stand with regard to the nationalization of banks? Aren't you really going to nationalize all the Canadian banks? Isn't that the real problem?" No. That is a red herring. If you want to talk about public versus private interest with regard to money, you ought to ask how come banks over the last couple of decades have been able to privatize the dollar? That in effect is what they have done. What they have done is create something which is very popular, something which we all use and that is the credit card.

I have a Visa credit card with the Commerce. They have managed over the last few decades to privatize the dollar. They charge us enormous interest rates for using these cards, using what is a public good.

The central, fundamental question here is whether or not money is a public good or whether it is a private plaything. We ought to congratulate the Finance Committee for waking up and responding to the complaints of ordinary Canadians who are saying that they want to get the banks off their backs and that they want the banks to remember that they have a service to deliver. They are not only there to make a profit—and goodness knows they make enough of that—but they are there to provide a basic service, that is to assist the Canadian people in the circulation of money, and to help us in meeting our basic needs.

I just wanted to remind this House that the Finance Committee was doing the right thing when it started to investigate these exorbitant fees. There is a public interest when it comes to money, and there is a public interest when it comes to banks, and that public interest has to be represented by this House. We ought to vote in favour of this resolution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? Questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Edmonton—Strathcona.

Mr. Kilgour: Mr. Speaker, I couldn't believe my ears. Was the Member from Winnipeg suggesting that we should nationalize credit cards? Was he suggesting that we should not have credit cards?

An Hon. Member: You are privatizing Air Canada.

Mr. Kilgour: Is it also in one of the resolutions of his Party? Would he tell us whose banking system he likes? Is it in France or is it in Spain? What country is it in?

An Hon. Member: How about a credit union?

Mr. Kilgour: If it is going to be Sweden, because that is always what the New Democrats like best, would he tell us what he knows about the Swedish banking system?

Mr. Keeper: The banking system that I like is the public's banking system. That is a banking system that offers a service to ordinary people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: It is a banking system that does not try to bilk them, does not try to rob young babysitters when they get their hard-earned money. That is the banking system that I want.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: When I mentioned credit cards, I was pointing out that before we had this plastic dollar bill, we had this paper one, which was issued by the sovereign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: We didn't have to pay 18 per cent interest on this dollar bill. This has become the dollar bill of the day. The rates on that have become so high that they are a burden.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keeper: We ought to be looking at the rates on credit cards, not treating it like a private commodity like something you could sell, whatever the price they bring.

Mr. Nystrom: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if you might consider, before we vote on Monday, making a ruling on whether or not this is a motion of confidence. I suggest that only the Government itself can decide whether or not a certain vote is a motion of confidence. I remember, before I came to this House in 1968, in February of that year, the Pearson Government was defeated on a Finance Bill. That was interpreted by Mr. Pearson not to be a confidence vote. He came back before the House a day or two later and moved a motion of confidence in his Government. He specified that that was the confidence vote.

Another thing, when the Government of Joe Clark was defeated in December, 1979, he was defeated on a subamendment proposed by our Party, and the Prime Minister that day deemed that to be a confidence motion. I see in the House now the Assistant Government House Leader. I think the only way that this would be a confidence vote is if the Government House Leader, or the Assistant Government House Leader, or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), were to get up and deem that this indeed was a confidence vote. Only the Government itself, according to our practices and our customs of this country, in the British Parliamentary system, can decide whether something is a confidence vote or not. Perhaps the Speaker can get up and confirm that that is a proper interpretation of our rules. According to our practices I am quite sure that it is.

• (1700)

If this is not a confidence motion it may make it a lot easier for Members of the House of Commons to get up in unison and support this report of the Finance Committee. This report was supported by Members of all three political Parties. The motion is very clear. My friend from Nickel Belt does not consider this to be a confidence motion, nor do other Members on the opposition side.

If we can get that confirmation from the responsible government Minister, then this is indeed not a motion of non-confidence. It might be useful, Mr. Speaker, if you could comment on whether my interpretation of the rules is correct and proper.

I want to make one more point which may not be relevant to the debate. The Member for Okanagan—Similkameen (Mr. King) said that this was similar to a Liberal motion on NATO. That Liberal motion on NATO did not specify that it was not a confidence motion. At that time the Government made it clear that it interpreted the motion to be one of non-confidence. Therefore, that was altogether different than the case today.

Would you, Mr. Speaker, be kind enough to confirm that, according to our practices and traditions, this is not a motion of non-confidence and the only way it would be is if the Government were to indicate in a very clear way that it considers this motion to be one of non-confidence in the Government.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will address a few remarks to this particular point. We have had a very useful debate on the issue of the nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs respecting bank charges. However, I would suggest to my hon. friend and the House that the House may have voted unanimously if my hon. friend had taken the course of action open to him, that is, to move under Motions on the Order Paper that the House concur in the committee's report. That may very well have received the unanimous consent of the House and would have sent the message to the Government which my hon. friend sought.

Second, I have not examined the report in detail as other Members of the House will have, but I do understand that there is a minority report of the NDP included in it which may confuse the House as to exactly what it was voting for. Members on the government side, at least, may not have been sure whether they were voting for all of the things the committee recommended and/or the items recommended by the New Democratic Party.

Finally, we adopt the position of the previous Government with respect to this particular order. We will be moving ourselves on things of this nature, perhaps imminently. We do not want to make history for my hon. friend. For that reason we will be considering this a matter of confidence and the Government will be voting against the motion. Our position on bank charges has been made clear by the majority members of the committee.

Mr. Cassidy: Hijacking the private Members.

Mr. Lewis: This is not Private Members' Business. The Government has a perfect record on Private Members' Business. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) will tell the Member that the Government has a perfect record on Private Members' Business because the first Private Members' Bill to go all the way through the House was that of an NDP Member. If the Hon. Member wants to debate Private Members' Business and how we are handling it, we can do that at another time when my friend has had some time to prepare his argument.

I just want to point out that the Government will be voting against this particular motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To answer the question of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), the question of confidence is one entirely in the hands of the Government and not of the Speaker.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement reached earlier this day, the recorded division stands deferred until six o'clock, Monday, June 27, 1988.

It being six minutes after five o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 3(2), this House stands adjourned until Monday, June 27, 1988, at eleven o'clock.

The House adjourned at 5.06 p.m.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from Canadians who reside in Toronto, Scarborough, Mississauga, Richmond Hill, and a few other places. They exercise their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance.

They say that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised, in the course of bilateral trade negotiations, that Canadian sovereignty would not be compromised and that the proposed trade agreement denies Canadians secure access to the U.S. market which was the key objective in these negotiations.

Therefore, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Petitions

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House. The first is from the Pentecostal Assemblies of Canada and contains signatures from residents of Havelock, Norwood, and Peterborough. It deals with the issue of abortion.

The petition calls upon Parliament to pass into law legislation which will protect the life of the unborn child from conception through all stages of development, with the exception of the extremely rare situation in which an abortion is performed in order to save the life of the mother.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition from the Peterborough Chapter of the Friends of Schizophrenics. It contains over 500 signatures and deals with research into schizophrenia.

The petition calls on Parliament to ensure that research efforts related to schizophrenia will in future be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION RESPECTING ESSIAC TREATMENT

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound—Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition signed by over 5,580 residents of the riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka. The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to pass into law legislation respecting Essiac. Essiac is a remedy which has had very encouraging effects on cancer patients. My constituents believe that this treatment should be made available across Canada at a reasonable cost for the millions who may suffer from this dreaded disease.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon the House of Commons to ensure that the Government of Canada proceeds swiftly with such legislation.

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Toronto who call on Parliament to raise its voice with respect to the trade deal between Canada and the United States because it would reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural program which Canadians need; because it would integrate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base; and because they believe that the very fabric of Canadian sovereignty is threatened by the proposed trade deal.

Since the Government had no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States, they call upon Parliament to ensure that there is a national debate and that this debate results in a national general election before any trade deal with the United States is signed and ratified.

Mr. Speaker, I have two further petitions, also from residents in Toronto and surrounding areas who believe that the Conservative Government had no mandate from the Canadian people to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States.

They believe that the promise of secure access to the United States market, which was the key objective in the negotiations, has not been achieved. They fear that hundreds of thousands of jobs in Canada will be affected and they, therefore, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to dissolve and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during a national general election.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present, on behalf of a number of citizens of Canada, mostly from the Toronto area, a petition which calls upon the Government of Canada, since it has no mandate to conclude a free trade agreement with the United States, to put the issue before the people in the form of a national general election and give the people an opportunity to accept or reject the proposed free trade agreement during such an election.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a number of petitions which have come to us from Hamilton, Toronto, Scarborough, Guelph, and Peterborough, all of which have been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions according to Standing Order 106.

The petitioners point out to Parliament that the free trade agreement would compromise Canadian sovereignty, that it would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future, and that it would undermine our ability to build a society distinct from the United States. The proposed free trade agreement denies Canada secure access to the U.S. market, which was supposed to be the key objective of the negotiations.

Therefore, the undersigned ask of this Parliament that there be an election in order that the people's will can be determined with respect to the future of Canada on whether it will be an independent country or another state of the U.S. union.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have the honour to present a petition signed by Canadians who express their concern that the free trade deal would threaten sovereignty. They point out that the Government has no mandate to negotiate a free trade deal with the United States.

We know, of course, that the Government actually campaigned against a free trade deal with the United States. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and many leading Ministers actually said that this would not be an acceptable idea and that it would threaten Canadian sovereignty.

Therefore, the people who have signed this petition ask that there be a national debate on the trade deal and that the debate result in a general election before such a deal is ratified.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CONCURRENCE IN THE MAIN ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1989

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before proceeding to consider the motion of the Hon. President of the Treasury Board, today being the last day for the supply period, the House will proceed as usual to consider and pass a supply Bill.

In view of recent practices, do the Hon. Members agree to have this Bill distributed now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, laid upon the Table, Tuesday, February 23, 1988, less the amounts voted in Interim Supply, be concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend opposite has asked for a copy of the Bill. It would be our intention to debate the concurrence motion through the day and then move to the Bill. However, as a matter of courtesy, I have absolutely no objection to the Bill being distributed now.

I welcome the opportunity to participate today in the debate on the 1988-89 Main Estimates, because it gives me an opportunity to describe to Hon. Members of the House the broad policy thrusts and the certain specific expenditure measures which are reflected in our spending plans. The Main Estimates, which were tabled in the House by my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), last February 23, is a clear expression of the Government's commitments—its commitment to controlling expenditure growth, its commitment to increasing public service efficiency, and its commitment to introducing new initiatives which respond to the needs of Canadians in a number of high priority areas.

• (1120)

The spending plans which are detailed in these Estimates confirm the Government's ongoing commitment to its program of economic renewal. It is a program which we firmly believe could only be successfully implemented if we regain control of the federal Government's fiscal situation.

Details of our spending plan highlight the successes we have achieved in our sustained and continuing efforts to reverse the previously uncontrolled spending growth and ever-rising deficits and to make public sector management more responsive and productive.

We believe that results matter more than good intentions, and it is specifically about results I wish to speak today. The total budgetary Main Estimates of $119.4 billion are 7.7 per cent higher than the comparable Estimates of the previous fiscal year. In addition to Main Estimate expenditures, which are by far its largest component, the Government's total spending plan for 1988-89 includes reserves for Supplementary Estimates to be brought to Parliament during the course of the year, and certain expenditures that will be financed through separately funded special purpose accounts or will arise from the re-evaluation of the Government's assets and liabilities.

The 7.7 per cent increase in the Main Estimates over last year is fully covered in the 5.5 per cent growth in planned budgetary spending for the year. The growth in the Main Estimates is larger than originally targeted for total spending for the year because the Government has included more of its new initiatives in this year's Main Estimates than it was able to do last year. This means that fewer resources will be needed for adjustments during the year through the course of Supplementary Estimates.

Total budgetary expenditures in 1988-89 are forecast at $132.3 billion. That is an increase of 5.5 per cent over the estimated expenditures of $125.3 billion in 1987-88.

I want to point out to the House that while those numbers may not seem very impressive, what is impressive is that since 1984-85 the average annual increase in budgetary expenditures has been 4.9 per cent. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to contrast this to the average increases of more than 15 per cent a year over the preceding five-year period of the previous administration which was in control of government spending. In fact, if one excludes public debt charges built on the deficits of the previous years and focuses exclusively on program expenditures, the average increase is only 3.7 per cent between 1985-86 and 1988-89. That is less than the rate of inflation over the same period and a mere fraction of the average annual increases between 1980-81 and 1984-85 which ran at more than 14 per cent.

When we took office in the fall of 1985, we launched a three-part strategy for economic renewal. It was focused first on restoring fiscal responsibility, second on removing obstacles to growth, and third on encouraging new investment.

As part of the first strategy, we realized the pressing need to reduce the size of the deficit in an orderly, balanced, and fair manner and to control the growing burden of the public debt.

Our first priority in achieving these goals was to get spending under control. I believe the results to date and the intentions set out by my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his last Budget provide ample proof of our achievements and continuing resolve.

In 1984-85, after five years of uninterrupted increases, budgetary expenditures peaked at nearly 25 per cent of Canada's Gross Domestic Product. Since then budgetary expenditures have consistently declined as a share of the Gross Domestic Product. For the current fiscal year these expenditures are forecast to represent 22.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product and, as my colleague, the Minister of Finance, indicated in his medium term projections in the February Budget, their proportion is expected to decline substantially to just over 19 per cent by 1992-93.

Not since the late 1970's have the federal Government's expenditures consistently represented less than 20 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. Our determined and unrelenting efforts to control expenditures have paid off. They have paid off with increased prosperity and decreased pressures on the Treasury.

Reduced expenditure growth, along with increased revenues, largely the result of greater economic activity across Canada, have led to systematic reductions in the deficit. While it is not where we want it yet, there is no question that the trend line is positive.

With budgetary expenditures of some $132 billion and revenues of over $103 billion, the projected deficit for 1988-89 is less than $29 billion. That is a reduction of $9.4 billion over 1984-85 when it was a massive, unworkable $38.3 billion.

Our commitment to controlling expenditures, reducing the size of the deficit, and responding to the needs of Canadians in a challenging and changing environment shows in the major elements of the 1988-89 Main Estimates.

Of the $119.4 billion in total budgetary Main Estimates, $78.5 billion or two-thirds are for statutory programs. The remainder, some $40.9 billion, is what is included in the appropriation Bill to be approved at the end of today.

More than 90 per cent of statutory spending is by four Departments: Finance, Health and Welfare, Employment and Immigration, and Secretary of State.

These statutory expenditures include public debt charges, major transfer payments to individuals, transfers to provinces, grants to municipalities, the Government's contribution to the unemployment insurance account, and agricultural and transportation subsidies.

Public debt charges at $32.1 billion are the largest single component of expenditures. They represent 41 per cent of the statutory spending and nearly one-quarter of the Government's total projected spending in 1988-89. That is the legacy left to us by the previous Government. The increase of nearly $3.9 billion in these charges accounts for approximately two-thirds of the total increase in statutory estimates.

Other statutory payments, such as transfers to the provinces and territories for hospital insurance, medicare, extended health care, post-secondary education, and social assistance and services, are all projected to rise this year. Federal Government cash payments to the provinces for health and post-secondary education are included in the Main Estimates at just over $9.4 billion, an increase of some $200 million over 1987-88.

Canada Assistance Plan payments, covering half the cost of provincial social assistance and social services for people in need, will amount to nearly $4.5 billion in 1988-89. That is a $280 million increase over last year.

• (1130)

Fiscal transfer payments, contained principally in the estimates of the Department of Finance, are made up essentially of the unconditional fiscal equalization payments to the poorer provinces. These are expected to rise by over $800 million in this year.

[Translation]

In addition to these cash payments from the federal Government, the provincial Governments will benefit from fiscal transfers that should exceed $9 billion in 1988-89. Thus, federal assistance for health care, education, welfare and other public services should total nearly $30 billion this year.

[English]

Nearly $1 billion has been added to this year's Estimates to meet the higher benefit payments to Canada's elderly under Old Age Security and the Guaranteed Income Supplement. These increases are the result of two factors—higher monthly payments indexed to changes in consumer prices and the growth in the size of the eligible population. Combined income support payments to Canada's elderly will account for $15.5 billion in expenditures this year. They represent the second largest component of the Government's total spending plan.

Since taking office our Government has introduced a number of measures to improve the incomes of elderly Canadians. These have included modifications to the rules governing private pension plans, among them higher RRSP contribution levels,—

Mr. Cassidy: What about deindexing?

Mr. Lewis: —changes to the Canada Pension Plan, and improvements in benefits to the elderly.

Mr. Cassidy: Let's make sure your efforts in deindexing are recorded in Hansard.

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has arrived. It is nice to see you here, Sir.

In that regard I would remind the House that we extended the spouses' allowances program to cover low-income widows and widowers between the ages of 60 years to 64 years, a move that increased benefits to a great number of elderly Canadians, the majority of whom were women.

I want to turn now to the voted expenditures. Over one-quarter of the nearly $40.9 billion in voted expenditures contained in the 1988-89 Main Estimates will be made by the Department of National Defence. The remaining 75 per cent or $30.6 billion is some $1.5 billion or 5.3 per cent higher than last year's corresponding amount. The annually voted expenditures category, in addition to containing the costs associated with the operations of government, also includes the costs of several new initiatives to respond to the pressing needs of Canadians announced by the Government over the past year.

I want to detail some of these initiatives, if I may. They include the $306 million for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. That Bill is presently held up in the Senate. We certainly hope that it will be released by the Senate so that we can do for the Atlantic provinces what my good friends opposite know should be done. It is unfortunate that it is delayed there. We hope my friends opposite will use their best efforts with the Liberal Senators to free that particular Bill as soon as possible.

There is $312 million for the Western Diversification Office and $197 million in increased regional development funding for regions such as northern Ontario.

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and the Western Diversifiation Fund include the 1988-89 portions of the Government's $1.5 billion and $1.2 billion five-year commitment to the Atlantic and western regions. With these and other regionally directed initiatives this Government will continue to promote the diffusion of economic well-being to all areas of Canada.

Excluding the almost one-half billion dollars in incremental funding for these new agencies and the voted expenditures of defence, the remaining annual appropriations in the Main Estimates exhibit an annual increase of only 3.6 per cent, which is below the projected increase in consumer prices. We have been able to achieve this lower growth in voted programs by reducing the cost of program delivery, on the one hand, and by curtailing and eliminating programs that have outlived their usefulness, on the other.

Reduced program delivery costs are a direct result of determined efforts to improve management in the federal public sector. Public service managers have been challenged to find ways of improving the productivity of government administration, and the results show that their efforts have been successful. Operations throughout government have benefited from improvements in both efficiency and effectiveness. High standards of program delivery have been maintained with fewer human and financial resources. I will return to this point in a moment.

I would like to emphasize that our efforts have not been a blind pursuit of lower growth rates in federal expenditures. If we take a look at the details of those expenditures in the 1988-89 Main Estimates, along with the record of our actions since September, 1984, we find they clearly show that notwithstanding a determined commitment to control spending growth and reducing the size of the federal deficit, this Government is aware of and responds to the special needs of various groups as and when they occur. Wherever possible, we have reallocated resources to provide better increases than average in certain priority areas.

Over the years these areas have included defence spending, official development assistance funding for regional development, and assistance to particular groups such as Canada's grain producers. With its foreign aid the Government has moved resolutely to give concrete expression to the concerns of Canadians about the peoples of less developed countries.

Mr. Cassidy: By deferring your commitments?

Mr. Lewis: Deferring our commitments? Is that like saying we are going to stay in NATO for the first term in office and then get out the second term? Would that be a deferral? Would you like to ponder that for a moment?

Canada's Official Development Assistance in 1988-89 is expected to reach nearly $2.9 billion. This represents an increase of 8.3 per cent over 1987-88. In the four years since 1984-1985 Canada's Official Development Assistance is up by nearly $800 million or 37.3 per cent. These increases clearly reflect our Government's determination to meet Canada's commitment to maintain Official Development Assistance at one-half of one per cent of Gross Domestic Product to the end of the decade.

Our international development and assistance efforts have been strengthened by decisions to provide all financial assistance in the form of grants rather than concessional loans, to declare a debt moratorium in favour of sub-Saharan African countries, and to put in place the Caribcan agreement. This particular agreement recognizes that Canada has a special relationship with the Commonwealth Caribbean countries. Among other things, it provides them with duty-free access to our market for a number of specified goods.

The budgetary Main Estimates for defence at $11.2 billion are projected to increase by $860 million or 8.3 per cent over the 1987-88 Main Estimates. This increase is essential if Canada is to meet its sovereignty objectives, honour its international defence commitments within NATO and NORAD, and promote international stability by providing military assistance to United Nations sponsored peacekeeping operations.

Re-equipment and modernization of the Canadian Armed Forces, priorities of this Government, are proceeding in a staged and orderly manner. Some $188 million of the total increase of the budget of the Department of National Defence has been allocated to capital. At nearly $3 billion in 1988-89, National Defence's capital budget is intended to support normal capital and construction requirements and to contribute to the costs of major capital acquisition programs. I am referring to the Canadian Patrol Frigate Program, the Low Level Air Defence System, the Tribal Class Update and Modernization Program, North American air defence modernization, and the CF-18 fighter aircraft. This much needed re-equipment and increase in the size of the Forces will serve to meet our goal of enhancing the operational effectiveness of the Canadian Armed Forces and maintaining a strong defence capability.

The Main Estimates are full of other examples that demonstrate how the Government has been able to reallocate resources to respond to those priority areas it has identified. I would like to describe a few of these examples briefly, for the benefit of my colleagues.

If there is one area of economic progress about which we are particularly pleased, it is in the creation of jobs. Since the Government took office 1.3 million jobs have been created, and we are continuing to devote considerable funds to the Canadian Jobs Strategy, a comprehensive approach to training and job creation which we adopted in the summer of 1985. Our goals are to create lasting employment and to increase the level of skills of Canadian workers.

• (1140)

If I may just digress from my notes, Mr. Speaker, the interesting thing to note is that 87 per cent of the jobs which we have created have been full-time jobs, whereas 80 per cent of the jobs created by the previous administration were part-time ones.

I appreciate that I am drawing to the end of my time.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, in office.

Mr. Lewis: I close off by saying that I could go on and give my colleagues figure after figure, but what we want to point out is that these Estimates clearly reflect a commitment by the Government to control the rate of expenditure growth, to enhance the efficiency of the Public Service, and at the same time be in a position to respond to the needs of Canadians.

In so doing we have made some difficult choices, but we have succeeded in reducing that growth rate, especially in the day-to-day operations of the Government. These Estimates continue to reflect our commitment to controlling government expenditure, as well as the deficit, while at the same time improving efficiency in the federal Public Service.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to reply to the Minister. He has just taken the opportunity to recount the progress that the Government has made in accordance with its policy measures. He made two points to which I wish to refer.

The Minister talked about getting the debt under control. One of the main objectives of the Government has been to get the debt under control. The question is: Who has borne the burden of getting it under control?

I submit that it is those people and those areas of the country which can least afford to bear that burden. I say that because if government programs are cut everyone is not equally affected. The people who are affected most are those who depend on government programs.

Which parts of the country depend on government programs? It is those less developed areas of the country which depend on them. I submit that when cuts are made in transport, fisheries, and in programs of the Government of Canada in terms of transfer payments, those areas of the country that have weak private sectors and which depend on government programs are impacted upon negatively.

It is all very well to talk about getting the debt under control, but if we look behind the lines and read between the lines—which is a rather mixed metaphor; one cannot do both at the same time—we see that getting the debt under control has been borne by those people in the country who can least afford to bear it.

Let me take an example to consider. The Minister talked about an increase in EPF, which is true. However, what is the increase? The increase is 5 per cent, whereas there was a signed agreement between the Government of Canada and the provinces to increase EPF by 7 per cent. Thus over $1 billion less was going to the provinces for post-secondary education and health than was anticipated. All of that will have to come out of the provincial budgets which will impact on students, young people who have the highest unemployment rate of any sector in the population in the country. For example, in the Province of Newfoundland, according to Statistics Canada, youth unemployment is close to 50 per cent. That is the type of impact that there is on the regions when government programs are cut.

I wish to make some comments about another point that the Minister made, that is, the removal of obstacles to growth. I want to take this opportunity to dwell on it at length, because we do not get very many opportunities in the House to talk about things that are important to our areas and to us. The Government just removed what it thought was an obstacle to growth. It was called the Newfoundland Railway. I want to comment on the amount of dollars that were allocated to that province in supposed compensation for what was considered to be an obstacle to growth.

The post-mortems are just starting to come in on that particular move by the Government of Canada. Here is what The Sunday Express stated yesterday in the province. It polled the other Maritime provinces to see how they felt about what had happened. Mr. MacKenzie, Director of the Transportation Division for the Prince Edward Island Government, said:

> I guess most people feel that when they look at the $800 million figure, Newfoundland has been dealt with generously. However when you stop to analyse it, it is not such a great deal.

The other provinces are now looking at the deal and saying that it is not a good one and that, in fact, the Province of Newfoundland has been sold out. It has been sold out in what

The Sunday Express called "The great train robbery". This is an example of getting the public debt under control and removing obstacles to growth. This is what was written in The Sunday Express about the latest measure taken by the Government of Canada:

> Why should Newfoundlanders have to trade their railway in order to get an upgraded Trans-Canada Highway? No other part of the country had to face that demeaning choice. Following the same logic, will Ottawa suggest, and the province meekly agree somewhere down the road, that Newfoundlanders must accept cuts in their postal service in order to upgrade their ferry service. Will improved air service be linked to cutbacks in the RCMP? Absurd, yes, but it is exactly what happened in the closure of the Newfoundland railway.

No other province has had to do that. No other province will do it. New Brunswick says that it wants $1 billion to upgrade its portion of the Trans-Canada Highway, but Premier McKenna will not be bargaining away the province's main rail lines to get it. He said that they would never sign a deal like the one Premier Peckford agreed to.

The Sunday Express went on to state:

> The great train robbery has not gone unnoticed in Newfoundland. The road-builders association sees the deal as too little too late. As a short term analysis of the situation that is a devastating indictment. Port aux Basques fears for its civic life, and rightfully so; seven million dollars can never replace the towns raison d'être. From cabin owners who will now not be able to reach their summer places, to ordinary citizens who realize that something has been taken from the province that every other Canadian province takes for granted, there is an oceanic sense that politicians have sold the province out.

What are the factors here? First, there was an obligation, a constitutional obligation on the part of the Government of Canada. What was stated in the Terms of Union in 1949 when we joined this country was that the Government of Canada would relieve the province of the burden of providing a transportation system up to national standards. That is what was written in the Constitution of Canada according to the Terms of Union which was signed in 1949.

In 1949 there were no roads.

An Hon. Member: We had the Bullet instead.

Mr. Rompkey: That is right, we had the Bullet. What happened?

An Hon. Member: You cancelled it.

Mr. Rompkey: The Bullet stayed and Liberal Governments not only maintained the Bullet but built roads. It was the Pearson Government that built and constructed totally the Trans-Canada Highway across the Island of Newfoundland. That is what the Pearson Government did.

It was the Trudeau Government that started the Trans-Labrador Highway. So road-building has gone on under other programs, not in a trade for the railway but under other programs of the Government of Canada. For example, there was the Atlantic Development Agency going back to the 1960s, and then after that there was DREE. More recently there was the Department of Economic and Regional Development. All these agencies of the Government of Canada had built roads in areas where they were needed without any trade for the railroad. But this particular Government has said: "If you want to go on building roads now and in the future you must trade your railway for that".

What does the trade involve? What do we get in the trade? We get $700 million in federal dollars over 15 years. This is how the Government of Canada reduces debts. This is how it removes obstacles to growth. We got $700 million over 15 years. After 15 years that is the end. That has never happened before. When John Diefenbaker dealt with term 29 involving transfer payments to the province, he agreed that there was an obligation in perpetuity, not ending after 15 years. Here we get $700 million over 15 years. What does that involve? The Government of Canada was paying $40 million a year to support the Newfoundland Railway anyway. I was never strong on math, and it is a wonder therefore that I was ever appointed Minister of Revenue, but if I divide 15 into 700 it is approximately $46 million a year. The Government of Canada was paying $40 million a year anyway, and what we are getting is $46 million a year. The Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has bargained for an additional $6 million a year, the $6-million man. That is what is happening. I do not see how anybody in his right mind can say that that is a fair, just, and equitable deal for the province.

Out of that $700 million how much is going into the area of Labrador? Twelve million dollars is going into the Trans-Labrador Highway, an extremely important initiative for that particular area of the country. It does not have a train except the one built by the company that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was formerly president of—the Quebec North Shore and Labrador Railway which is a private operation. Apart from that there are no trains at all. We do have the start of a highway system. What did the Government of Canada do? It put $12 million into the Trans-Labrador Highway which is less than was put in in 1983. When that road was started in 1983, $14 million was allocated. If one adds inflation to $14 million, one gets probably twice as much as the $12 million that was allocated under this particular deal.

That is what we get in exchange for that trade-away. That is what we get in spite of the fact that the Sullivan Commission, which was set up to recommend on the terms of phasing out the railroad, said that one of the conditions should be building a road across Labrador. What did Sullivan actually say? He made many important recommendations. He recommended the termination of the Newfoundland Railway, and no one is objecting to that. What we are objecting to is the terms of how the railway is being terminated.

Sullivan recommended the termination of the Newfoundland Railway in return for appropriate guarantees for alternate federal commitments to provide transportation service; the upgrading of the Trans-Canada Highway; the strengthening of the role of direct water shipments, port development in St. John's, Corner Brook, and in the Baie d'Espoir area; improvements to air services to remote communities on the coast of Labrador, which is already being done at the cost of some $40 million; and a total transportation plan for Labrador to support resource development. That included the building of the Trans-Labrador Highway from the Straits of Belle Isle through Goose Bay and on to Labrador West. None of that has been addressed in this particular transportation package. What we have received is a token amount of $12 million, nothing at all close to what Sullivan recommended.

Again, I point out that this is a trade in spite of the obligation of the Government of Canada. At the present time the Government is spending money to sell this deal. This deal is so bad that there is a necessity to have a public information program, and ads are now being published in newspapers to tell the people how good this deal really is. If some of that money could be used to build roads or to advance the cause of the Trans-Labrador Highway, how much better off would we be?

The post-mortem is still not complete on this particular deal. What we are hearing so far, from those who build roads and from those who use them, is that this is absolutely and completely inadequate and a total sell-out as far as the Province of Newfoundland is concerned.

In terms of the record of this particular Party, we have always taken the position that one does not trade one for the other. One builds the roads and the railway exists at the same time. It was the Pearson Government who built the Trans-Canada Highway in Newfoundland, and it was the Trudeau Government who allocated the first funds for the construction of the Trans-Labrador Highway. Our position as a Party is that that type of policy must continue.

If we were the Government of Canada, here is what we would have done; if we become the Government of Canada, here is the position that we will take. We would consider respect number one for constitutional obligations. We would not hold the people of Newfoundland and Labrador liable for the signatures on Section 10(1) of the Memorandum of Understanding which relieves Canada of all constitutional obligations with respect to the Newfoundland Railway.

It is one thing to build a road, but how is that road maintained? The Government of Newfoundland has the least fiscal capacity of any Government in this country. Yet the Government of Canada now states that it wants to build a Cadillac road and not give the province a Chevette maintenance plan, not give any maintenance plan at all. How will that province maintain such a highway once it is built?

We think that the Government of Canada must continue its constitutional obligations, not only to build a transportation system of national standards, but to maintain a transportation system of national standards, whether it be rail or road.

Second, we think that there should be an amendment to the Terms of Union to transfer Canada's constitutional obligations to the Newfoundland Railway to a new federal obligation to maintain the Trans-Canada Highway. We recognize that the present financial compensation package is grossly inadequate. We believe that there should be a renegotiating to a more realistic and equitable financial package for the people of the province. We recognize that the present financial compensation of $15 million for community adjustment is totally inadequate. We believe that this amount should be renegotiated with the provincial Government in consultation with those communities affected by the closure of the railway. We believe in the principle of the reconstruction of the Trans-Canada Highway. In that regard we see the Labrador highway as an integral part of any such highway system. We believe that federal funding must be made available for its completion.

This railroad has been phased out without putting any roads in its place. What is now happening is that the railroad is going as of September 1; as of September there will be no more railroad in Newfoundland, yet the reconstruction of the highway does not start until 1991. In other words, the Government of Canada is taking something away before it has even started to put something else in its place.

For all those reasons, we can only condemn this particular initiative on the part of the Government of Canada. First, it does not meet the Government's constitutional obligation. Second, it treats Newfoundland differently from any other province in that it asks it to trade a railroad for another system of transportation. Third, the package is completely inadequate and does not address the needs of the whole province, particularly the area of Labrador which will receive 2 per cent or $12 million of the total package in order to construct the Labrador highway, and it does not nearly meet the recommendations of the Sullivan Commission set up to advise on the phase out of the Newfoundland Railway.

• (1200)

Truly the Government of Canada has the debt of the country under control, and truly it is removing obstacles to growth. However, the unfortunate thing is that the Government is doing that on the backs of those people of the regions of Canada who can least afford to bear it.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk a bit about the Estimates. This is a frustrating exercise. We are now being asked to consider Estimates of over $100 billion and to do so in a very short period of time, according to a time honoured ritual, one which in my opinion does not give adequate scope for Members of the House of Commons to get into the nitty-gritty of the Estimates of individual Departments.

I am a Member of Parliament who has had a great deal of experience at the provincial level as well. As such, I believe that when we look at the reform of the rules of the House of Commons anew as we should after the next election, in addition to the general discussions of policy, there should be opportunity for the different committees to look more specifically at the spending of the different Departments. In my view the current situation is not satisfactory. Ministers are expected to defend their Estimates for a matter of a couple of hours before a committee and then are expected to do no more.

The Estimates represent the heart of the priority setting exercise of any Government. We are not at all at ease with the priorities of this particular Government. We will oppose the Bill which will be coming forward this afternoon for concurrence in the Estimates because we are very disturbed at the directions taken by the Government in economic management and in spending. As I have suggested, I think that there must be a better way. I believe as well that there must be a way for Parliament to look at spending without the Government simply saying that this is a matter of confidence and therefore no change, no scrutiny, and no information will be provided in any meaningful way.

I think we have moved a fair distance since 1984 when the Government indicated that the deficit above all would be the priority for the Progressive Conservative Government. There has been some economic recovery since that time, but it has been largely concentrated in central Canada and, more specifically, in southern Ontario. If I travel 25 miles outside my constituency of Ottawa Centre, I begin to see the problems of the other Canada, those Canadians who do not have access to job opportunities in the way those in southern Ontario have started to have.

The Government has taken the view that it is all hunky-dory. It seems to have taken the view that because things have started to move in southern Ontario, things are under control and it does not need to worry about the rest of the country. The Government has also changed its view with respect to the importance of bringing down the deficit.

Hon. Members will recall the rhetoric that came from both the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) when they were talking about economic renewal and about bringing changes into force in a way "that is fair, open and consistent with the basic sense of compassion, tolerance and justice that is characteristic of Canadian society". They said in 1984 that "we will not weaken the basic income support programs that have served Canadians well. Indeed, we will seek to provide even greater assistance to those Canadians who truly need it".

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that it was not long after that that the Government began its effort to try to undermine the basic income support for senior citizens by deindexing old age pensions. I was struck by the selective amnesia demonstrated by the Government House Leader in his introduction just a few minutes ago. He forgot the Government's efforts to deindex the old age pension, the centre-piece of its 1985 Budget.

I am also struck by the fact that the Government said in 1984 that after two or three years of economic recovery real action would be needed on the deficit. The Government brought the deficit down below the $30 billion mark and then stalled. Perhaps it stalled because of the realities of Canadian politics. Perhaps it ran out of ideological fervour. I am not quite sure, but it stalled in its attempt to bring the deficit below the $29 billion mark. There was always a reason why it could not be done now. The impact of the Minister of Finance in pursuing that particular quest became less and less until we came to the situation we have seen in recent weeks.

The Government, in some despair, because of the failure of Canadians to respond to its management of the economy, has decided that the way back to power is not by reducing the deficit but is in fact by seeking to spend its way back into the affections of Canadians from coast to coast. We saw an example of that in the Lac-Saint-Jean by-election. I am really struck by what I saw there.

[Translation]

It was a clear demonstration that the Government is prepared to spend whatever it takes to win seats in the House of Commons and to come back after the next election.

Mr. Speaker, if we look at Lac-Saint-Jean, they promised to pay for a new highway that would connect the riding with James Bay, for all those people who want to go to James Bay from Lac-Saint-Jean. Frankly, I think people in the area would rather have a better highway between Alma and Quebec City, but the fact remains they were promised a highway to James Bay.

After considerable procrastination, a promise was made to help Saskatchewan Francophones. The Government promised $120 million for regional development in Lac-Saint-Jean. After ignoring the needs of this area since 1984, all of a sudden the Conservatives felt it was time to do something.

Did the Tories launch any programs to improve the economy in Lac-Saint-Jean under former MP Clément Côté? No. Did they set up regional development programs for the people of Lac-Saint-Jean? The anwer is no. Did they worry about the 14 per cent unemployment rate in Lac-Saint-Jean? The answer is no.

However, during the by-election that was held to win a seat in the House of Commons for an old friend of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), former Ambassador Lucien Bouchard, the Government felt that no price was too high.

[English]

The Government demonstrated that if the Prime Minister could spend three days in a riding and could spend $160 million there, the riding would probably be won for the Progressive Conservatives. We expected to see—

Miss MacDonald: Is that what happened to the NDP?

Mr. Cassidy: —an amendment to the Elections Act in order to provide that the next Canadian election campaign would be more than 480 days long to permit the Prime Minister to spend three days apiece in 160 ridings across the country. At the rate of spending in Lac-Saint-Jean, he would spend some $40 billion of Canadian taxpayers' money in an effort to try to get the Conservatives back to power with a majority in each riding. Across Canada, it would have cost $40 billion in election promises to duplicate what happened in Lac-Saint-Jean.

Miss MacDonald: Nine per cent for the NDP.

Mr. Cassidy: I notice that the Conservatives are beginning to respond a bit. This is the Party that said that the deficits had to be controlled. This is the Party that said that we had to bring down government spending. This is the Party that said that the Liberals had been profligate. Yet it was prepared to spend, at a national rate, $40 billion to bring Mr. Bouchard into the House of Commons.

Mr. Blenkarn: Where's your deposit? You lost your deposit.

Mr. Cassidy: My friend, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), is beginning to protest a little bit too vehemently. I was reading about him in Air Canada's magazine the other day. It was about the Conservatives' Conservative, and how it is that us lefties like him. I ask myself that question when I look in the mirror as well.

The real fact is that the Government has abandoned many of its principles over the course of the last three or four years in order to get itself re-elected. No one demonstrates that more clearly than the new Secretary of State, Mr. Clean, who said that he would clean up election financing.

• (1210)

He was going to collect his money from the people, he said, with a maximum of $3,000 from all those who could afford it from their back pockets to help in his election campaign. How Mr. Clean compromised his principles. I did not see him protesting when the Government came up with $120 million for the electors of Lac-Saint-Jean. I did not see him protesting when the Government promised $40 million for a road to nowhere. In fact, the Secretary of State was wandering through his constituency and he enunciated a new principle. He said that the need for an incubator for economic development in his constituency happened to hit him in his eye. Celui qui la frappé. He happened to notice that this new centre needed $1.4 million. Almost before the request was in the cheque was wafting its way to Lac-Saint-Jean, while a number of other incubators had been waiting for months until a government program and a policy was in place to encourage economic development.

Miss MacDonald: Seventy-five seats and 9 per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: This is a very serious question in terms of government spending priorities. When the Secretary of State happened to notice and feel a political need, he responded by writing a cheque, and $1.4 million was granted right away.

I spoke to a meeting of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. Back in 1983 the Federation of Canadian Municipalities came to the Government of Canada—and it has come back every year since—with a request to try to renew the infrastructure of our Canadian cities and towns. This is a program which has been very carefully costed and thought out, a program which would have the effect of ensuring and putting in place very substantial renewal of roads, sewage systems, recreational facilities, and municipal infrastructure of all kinds in order to maintain our Canadian cities and towns as liveable places for our Canadian families. That is also a program which can be regionally oriented toward areas of high unemployment. The Federation of Canadian Municipalities was looking not for $40 billion, not for $20 billion, not for $16 billion; it was looking for the federal Government to share in a portion of the total costs spent. What happened, Mr. Speaker? The Federation was given the back of the hand from the Government of Canada.

On the other hand, let us look at when a few admirals and generals got going in trying to reorient Canadian defence priorities. Where these cities and towns of Canada could not get the federal Government to share one-third of the $7 billion cost of renewal of infrastructure of Canadians cities and towns over the course of a five or six year period, the admirals and generals were able to get in the defence White Paper a commitment to a new fleet of nuclear submarines, which is currently costed at $8 billion and which every Canadians knows will cost $12 billion or $15 billion or $16 billion before that fleet is built. Over the course of the weekend the Environics poll indicated that support for the proposal had dropped to less than one-third of Canadians and that 60 per cent of Canadians said that $16 billion or $8 billion was too much to spend on the nuclear submarines. Canadians are saying that it is a priority which the Government should drop.

What is happening in this particular Estimates exercise today is quite clear. On the one hand, spending on defence prior to nuclear submarines is going up by $860 million, an increase of 8.3 per cent, the largest percentage increase of any major Department of the Government of Canada. Let us look at the contrast. We spend $800 million or $900 million on defence in 1988-89 while the increase in the budget for CIDA, the Canadian International Development Agency, according to the Estimates, is approximately $122 million. We spend seven times more on defence than we spend on our major aid granting agency, CIDA.

Recently it has come to my attention that the percentage of Canada's Gross National Product going into aid this year is down by a fraction of a per cent from what it was a year ago. Rather than moving steadfastly and determinately to increase our spending on aid, we are reducing it. At the same time the proportion of our GNP which is going into spending on national defence is equally and steadfastly going up year after year after year.

The admirals went public back in 1983 asking for nuclear subs, but have they come back to meet with Cabinet year after year and been turned away? Have they been ignored in their requests? They did not need to because they had the inside track. Canada cannot afford to renew a road to a sewage system and that kind of thing. The federal Government turns its back on the efforts of Regional Municipality of Ottawa-Carleton to renew the Green Creek collector sewage treatment system here in my City of Ottawa, yet it can come up with $8 billion nominal and $16 billion in actual terms for the nuclear submarines, infrastructure, training, and other things. A very serious debate is taking place within Cabinet over this issue between the hawks and the doves. As a Canadian, I hope the doves win.

If the doves win it will not, I suspect, mean that the Government will abandon the proposal for nuclear submarines but will mean that the proposal will be stretched out, knowing that a new Government will scrap it because it is unlikely the Conservatives will have a majority after the next general election. As my Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), indicated in Thunder Bay over the course of the weekend at the Ontario New Democratic Convention, some priorities once selected by government have to be respected by an opposition Party, but where an opposition Party indicates clearly that it is in fundamental disagreement with a priority of government and will not go along with it, we are entitled to abandon a commitment even if the commitment is signed under contract, which I believe some of the Conservatives want to do. We are making it clear that Canada does not need to spend $16 billion on nuclear submarines. That is not a priority of the New Democratic Party. If we form the next Government of Canada we will scrap that priority; if we are part of the next Government of Canada we will scrap that priority. We will not be a part of that, and 60 per cent of Canadians agree with us that that should not be a priority.

I would point out that currently the New Democratic Party, according to the latest opinion polls, is locked in a battle—

Miss MacDonald: In last place.

Mr. Cassidy: —for government in the next election. We are one of the three major Parties in this country with strength from coast to coast. That was the situation that prevailed during the course of the last election campaign and we came up 10 per cent. If that same situation were to occur during the coming campaign we would, in fact, form a majority Government.

I want to conclude by talking about another priority of the Government. It believes that it is okay to have two Canadas. Unemployment is down to 3 per cent or 4 per cent in certain parts of southern Ontario. At the same time it is upwards of 13 per cent in Lac-Saint-Jean and upwards of 16 per cent or 17 per cent in the interior of British Columbia and in parts of Newfoundland. Will the Government tolerate that, Mr. Speaker? Yes, the Government has and it has continued to do so over a number of years. The Government is in agreement with the monetary policy of the Bank of Canada which has seen us jack up interest rates to substantial levels, and has seen the Canadian dollar rise from 69 cents three years ago through 72 cents and 76 cents. Since the trade agreement was signed last October the dollar has gone up by some 10 per cent relative to the United States to 83 cents.

• (1220)

Premier Bourassa and Premier Peterson are objecting to this policy. The resource industries are objecting, the Canadian Exporters' Association is objecting, and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is protesting. Yet, the Government does not listen. The consequence is that we are tolerating the actions of the Bank of Canada, which are largely directed to southern Ontario and are perpetuating underdevelopment and unemployment in most of this country.

Not only that, if we ask whether everyone in Toronto is prosperous, the answer is definitely no. There are homeless people in Toronto, which never occurred when I was growing up in that city in the 1940s and 1950s. That did not occur in the 1960s and 1970s, but there are now homeless people and food banks. There are hundreds of thousands of Toronto residents who cannot afford a BMW or a Mercedes. They cannot afford the policies which are being pursued by the federal Conservatives and the provincial Liberals. They cannot afford the average price of a home which, in the City of Toronto itself, has now risen to more than $200,000. Such a home used to be considered a working-class house and would rent for a couple of hundred dollars a month.

The Progressive Conservatives believe in two Canadas just as Mrs. Thatcher, who came here to preach her gospel last week, believes in two Britains and just as President Reagan believes in two United States. I do not accept that at all. A society is judged by how it deals with its unemployed, its poor, and its disadvantaged. It is not judged on how the very rich live but on how the very poor are treated. A society is judged on whether there is compassion and social justice or a Government which ignores the real needs of average people.

By jacking up interest rates, making our industries uncompetitive, failing to act in terms of regional development, and failing to act for the needs of the million Canadians who are still unemployed and the half-million Canadians on social assistance who have been discouraged from finding jobs, the Government has demonstrated that it is not qualified to govern with social justice for all Canadians.

Those are several of the reasons my Party is opposed to the priorities in these Estimates. You, Mr. Speaker, are generally impartial, particularly when sitting in the chair. Why do you not join with me and suggest to your erstwhile colleagues on the Conservative side that we take the $16 billion allotted for nuclear subs and use it for child care, for renewing municipal infrastructure, for social services, for adequate postal services, for foreign aid, and for peace and development? Those are the kinds of priorities we should be pursuing rather than putting Canada's dollars into building submarines to keep the Americans out of our Arctic.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was very disturbed by the inaccuracies in the comments of the Hon. Member. There were so many of them that I could continue to ask a variety of questions all afternoon. However, I will single out one or two areas which particularly disturbed me.

One area had to do with his comments about building roads in northern Québec. I think he said that it would be a road to nowhere. That reminded me somewhat of comments that the Liberal Party made back in the days of the Diefenbaker Government when Mr. Diefenbaker's Government was suggesting building roads to resources. The Liberal Party of that day talked about roads from igloo to igloo.

That policy, as you know, Mr. Speaker, laid the basis for the great prosperity which Canada is experiencing today, albeit not universal but certainly greater than it has ever experienced before. That led the way to the development of oil and gas resources in northern Canada. It certainly was not roads from igloo to igloo, and I am sure that roads in northern Québec would similarly open up northern Québec and would not be considered roads to nowhere as the NDP is suggesting.

That comment brought to mind, as well, comments made in this House not too long ago by the NDP Member for Regina West who said that no more businesses should be allowed to open in the Metropolitan Toronto area because things were just too good there. He implied that the NDP would not allow any more businesses to open in Metropolitan Toronto.

I was also reminded of asking the Minister of Finance a question a few days ago in this House on the subject of deductibility of mortgage interest to assist crisis housing areas such as Metropolitan Toronto. The NDP Member for Brant shouted at that time: "Absolutely no help for Toronto, there shouldn't be any help for Toronto".

In view of all these comments, what is it that the NDP has against northern development in this country and what is it that the NDP has against Metropolitan Toronto?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my hon. friend failed to notice the very strong and effective efforts of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin), in leading the battle in the House by going personally to the British House of Commons to fight the misguided effort by the British to legislate adverse fur labelling restrictions, which would have had an enormous negative impact on northern development and the livelihood of tens of thousands of fur trappers. I was proud that all Members of the House of Commons joined in that particular effort. To suggest that New Democrats are opposed to northern development is, of course, to misrepresent the facts.

I was simply pointing out that I believe that the electors of Lac-Saint-Jean would have preferred improvements on the road from Alma to Chicoutimi, which has been badly in need of improvement for many years, than improvements on the road from Chibougamau, which I believe is about 150 miles away from Lac-Saint-Jean in the direction of Baie James. In relative terms their orientation is toward Chicoutimi and Québec. I was only trying to suggest that that would be their priority.

The Hon. Member suggests that New Democrats are not concerned about what is happening to Toronto. Perhaps he was not listening when I pointed out that there are two Canadas, not only in terms of the disparity between the rich in Toronto and people who are unemployed or having trouble earning a living in Newfoundland or western Canada, but in terms of the disparities between the rich and the not so rich in Toronto itself.

My friend from York East has from time to time raised questions about housing. I would have liked him to have commented on the fact that the government agency responsible for housing, the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, has in these current Estimates a reduction in its spending from $1.548 billion to $1.523 billion, a reduction of 2 per cent. While we have money for an 8 per cent increase in defence spending, there is no money even to maintain, let alone increase, spending on social housing through the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

The Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) prides himself on raising the plight of the homeless and people in need of affordable housing in Toronto. Yet I have not heard him say a word about the fact that the Government's spending priorities, far from supporting his concern, go directly opposite. If he is prepared to join with my Party and vote against these Estimates, we can get a new set of Estimates in place which will ensure more adequate spending on housing and will also mean that we can take effective action for those Torontonians, including people in the riding of York East, who cannot afford housing and for whom affordable housing, co-operative and non-profit housing, is it not being built because of the cut-backs in the Government's own spending.

However, if the Hon. Member for York East persists in supporting these Estimates we will know that he is being hypocritical, because on the one hand he preaches the need for more housing in Toronto and on the other hand votes against effective efforts in this regard. He votes for the Government's decision to provide less rather than more for housing in the current Estimates.

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity today to speak to the Main Estimates for the year 1988-89, layed upon the table on February 23 by the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mazankowski).

Mr. Speaker, before I start my comments on the Main Estimates, I must say I have just survived one of the most trying 20-minute periods of my life, but I suppose that is the price you pay for democracy. It means listening to silly speeches by people who don't know whether they are coming or going. Every morning I say to myself: Fontaine, you have to put up with the socialists because that's the price you pay for democracy!

Mr. Speaker, today we can announce to the people of Canada that we have a balanced budget that is based on Canadians' ability to pay. In fact, the Government, through the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), has released information about our tax reform, and today we can inform Canadians that because of the Government's good management, we have been able to control our budget; the annual deficit has declined from $38 billion to $29 billion; and as of July 1, 1988, on the first paycheck of that week, around July 8 or 9, each Canadian will have more money to take home because for the first time since 1917, there will be a significant change in the application of our income tax legislation.

And this is thanks to a Conservative Government, a Government that provides good management. Retroactive to January 1, 9.7 million Canadian households will pay fewer taxes. They will notice it on the paycheck they get around July 8 this year. I say to all Canadians, Mr. Speaker: Around the beginning of July, when you get that additional money in your pockets, remember you are getting it thanks to the good management of the Progressive Conservative Party. And 850,000 Canadians will no longer pay income tax. This again is thanks to good management, and I would also like to take this opportunity to congratulate my colleague, the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald). Because of this Government's excellent management, the Minister was able to find more money so that she could announce to Canadians how we can further enhance our culture and our Canadian identity and how the CBC will protect that culture and give all Canadians a chance to enjoy its benefits.

If we hadn't put a stop to the reckless spending of the previous Government, the Minister of Communications would never have been able to table that kind of legislation today.

Mr. Speaker, what else did we do? But first I would like to comment on what was said by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). During his 20 minutes, the Hon. Member attacked my riding in a very destructive way when he said, and his Leader and his Party have said the same: "No submarines for Canadians." And we all know that the riding of Lévis will be able to live on this magnificent Government contract for twenty-five years.

I find it particularly annoying to be faced daily, both in this House and in the media, with negative comments on the greater Quebec City area and on the province of Quebec, because it is a fact that the submarines will have to be built in the province of Quebec.

When Members of the other Party, the socialists, tell us this would cost $16 billion, that is just not true, Mr. Speaker. Experts with the Department of the National Defence have told us the submarines would cost $8 billion, and $8 billion spread over twenty-five years is $300 million annually, while in Canada, we spend $60 billion annually on social benefits.

This means that the budget for submarines is 0.5 per cent of the amount spent annually on social affairs in this country. So when we are accused of spending indecently, the representatives of the socialist party should once again explain their position to the people.

I also want to point out a comment on the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre. Mr. Speaker, the result in Lac-Saint-Jean is a real opinion poll, a wonderful sampling of public opinion. In Lac-Saint-Jean, we saw the socialist candidate, who we must admit was an intelligent man, a local man, a scientist involved in the community, a son of a former mayor, a union activist in a region where there are many unions. So in theory, he had everything going for him, Mr. Speaker, but he did not even get enough votes to avoid losing his deposit. That is the real opinion poll and that is what the members of the socialist Party deserved.

That is the message they deserved to get from Canadians. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, another by-election was being held in Quebec, in the riding of Anjou, and there, one of the candidates, the socialist candidate—we know that the socialist Party does not distinguish between the provincial Party and the federal Party, it is the national party throughout the country; it was a candidate from this Party who ran for the thirteenth time in Anjou, and the thirteenth consecutive defeat for Mr. Morin, the socialist candidate in Anjou! He got less than 2 per cent of the votes, about 440 votes. This shows that the public has had enough of this party's wild ideas. This shows that the people see that for the past two weeks, this Party has used the time of the House of Commons in a completely disagreeable, shameful way, by proposing Bills whose only purpose is to take up the time of this House and delay our free trade legislation.

And here too, I comment on a remark made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre, who unfortunately has left, Mr. Speaker, to the effect that there are two Canadas. Two Canadas—that makes me think of the official position of Bob White, President of the United Auto Workers, in the riding of Oshawa. Bob White is the one who takes money from the workers to finance the socialist Party. So the definition of Canada that Bob White and the Hon. Member for Oshawa have is really two Canadas: there is Oshawa and southern Ontario where free trade has been in effect successfully since 1965, resulting in $30 billion of sales to the United States, and the rest of Canada, where these people, the highly paid United Auto Workers, do not want all Canadians to benefit from free trade, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. So they are the ones who have a vision of two Canadas: a rich and powerful Canada in Oshawa and a relatively poor Canada in all other parts of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I come back to our legislative effort and budgetary control. Our budget has increased at a rate of 5.5 per cent since 1984, which is very different from the 15 per cent in the years before we came to power. Our Government's expenditures have increased at less than the rate of inflation. That means that our expenses have been cut, which is all the more difficult because many of our expenditures are statutory.

For example, we spend $60 billion for social affairs and we can do very little about that.

There is also interest expense. You know that when we took power, our Government was $200 billion in debt. The interest alone on that was $20 billion. Today, debt service amounts to nearly $30 billion because we got into the habit of spending unaccountably when the Liberals tried to govern this country.

• (1240)

We have also established a number of priority areas. For instance, spending cuts do not mean that the elderly should benefit less from our collective wealth. We have decided to send a clear message to the elderly. They will not be allowed to suffer the negative impact of a difficult financial situation in this country. In fact, the $60 billion available for the elderly, the disabled, young people, and federal participation in provincial social programs will be maintained.

However, we have tried to stop the incredible growth of our bureaucracy by aiming for leaner government. The Liberals tried to create Crown corporations that would compete with the State. Under this Government, the role of the State is to distribute our collective wealth, but the State will no longer compete with the private sector. That is why, for instance, we have divested the Government of corporations like de Havilland and Canadair. At the time, these companies were responsible for spending not millions but billions of dollars. These billions were borrowed and handed over to administrators who were accountable to Parliament, not to shareholders. They were accountable to something that to them was very remote, and that is why Crown corporations have never made a profit. That is why we decided to privatize them, to return them to the private sector where they will be responsible to their shareholders and will have an obligation to make a profit.

When a Government decides to privatize, it is sending a message that the State is now a partner in the distribution of wealth and no longer competing with the private sector, because it is wrong for the State to compete with private enterprise. It is wrong for a company that manufactures aircraft to compete with a private company that also manufactures aircraft and has to make a profit, while the other company can ask Parliament for funds at the end of each year. That is why we are turning over manufacturing and services to the private sector.

The purpose of our program to enhance productivity within the Government and the public sector is to regain control over the growth of government spending, improve labour relations, negotiate responsible collective bargaining agreements, restructure the supply of government services, review activities to determine the function of the private sector, abolish undue regulatory contraints and reduce the paper burden on the private sector, introduce a better management philosophy—I will get back to all these topics later on, Mr. Speaker—and give managers increased responsibility so they can be more effective.

I referred to controlling the growth of government spending and the public sector, and I must say that, since 1974, the number of public service employees has never been as low as it is now. In fact, in 1984 we told Canadians that the Canadian public service had to be trimmed of its "excess fat". The departments have 235,000 employees, and we thought that an initial reduction of 15,000 was necessary. We also reduced the rate of growth of expenditures, as I said earlier, to a level below the inflation rate.

Labour relations have improved. Since 1986, sixty collective agreements were signed involving annual increases of 3.6 per cent, which compares favourably with the private sector and the provinces, where the average was, respectively, 3.3 and 4.7 per cent. Why is this, Mr. Speaker? Because we feel that public servants should be treated the same way as people who work in private enterprise; we owe it to people in private enterprise who, for all practical purposes, create our collective wealth. Why should we give the public sector preferential treatment, since wealth must first be created by private enterprise, by those who manufacture, provide services, trade, hire Canadians and pay taxes, which are later used to pay Public Servants?

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, we have a new agreement for some 180,000 public servants. We shall try to settle it by negotiating and our goal is a negotiated settlement, not an imposed one, so that we can continue to enjoy excellent working relations with our Public Service and so that Public Servants will be motivated to do excellent work for us.

Another thing we did, Mr. Speaker, was to restructure the provision of government services. In many cases, Canadians who needed government services obtained them at a price that was clearly insufficient and less than the cost of production. That means that if I needed information from Statistics Canada, I obtained it at a lower cost, but I was in a way being subsidized by the taxes of other Canadians to have access to this source of information.

So we have increasingly asked our officials to evaluate the cost of the services provided by the Government and to set the rates accordingly so that those who really benefit from these services pay for them.

We have also sent a message to private enterprise about the burden of procedures and regulations they have to bear. We have put in place systems that put the burden of proof on the Minister before new regulations or procedures can be implemented.

Previously, a Minister would decide one morning to impose additional regulations on Canadians, to impose additional costs on them and often excessive production costs, although this contributed nothing to the community. That is not possible anymore, because the Minister has first of all to prove to his colleagues on the Treasury Board that he was justified in asking for additional funds and in laying down new regulations applying to Canadians.

For example, the 15 000 different forms Employment and Immigration Canada was using before 1984 are now down to 3 500. This means a very sizeable decrease in the costs the firms had to incur in order to fill those forms. All our efforts serve that purpose. That is why we are able each year to reduce our operational deficit.

Finally, we have changed our managerial philosophy. In the past, everything in the federal Government was controlled by the Treasury Board and a handful of ministers. For every administrative matter, the rest of the ministers had to consult with the Treasury Board, and to ask permission. It was the same story inside the departments, whether it be the deputy Minister, the directors generals, or even the specialists dealing with a particular file. In no way was it possible to give greater accountability to civil servants.

Now that we have changed that philosophy, the departments are more autonomous, and the Government does not audit the means, but rather the results. The liberals, while they were in power, would never have developed such a concept, it would never have crossed their minds. They were evaluating the means, with no consideration whatsoever for the results.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, for all these reasons, we can say that our Government is gradually regaining control over its budget. I will conclude by saying that we went from a deficit of 38 billion dollars a year in 1984, which would be 50 billion dollars this year if the Liberals were still in power, to an annual deficit of 29 billion dollars this year. We succeeded in reducing the deficit and we will continue doing it. Today, we ask the two Opposition parties to speed up the process so that we can vote on these Estimates.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments? Debate.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) was speaking this morning, he patted himself on the back for having cut government spending. What the Minister did not say was that very often the wrong programs were cut. He did not point out how this Government promised to spend approximately $165 million to win the by-election in Lac-Saint-Jean, nor did he explain in detail why the Government will spend over $10 billion to purchase nuclear submarines while at the same time cut programs for employment and training by 32 per cent since 1984. This Government has cut a budget which stood at $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.5 billion in 1988.

The principal program for training and employment under this Government is the Canadian Jobs Strategy. In the Estimates before us today the Government has made a cut in employment and training in real dollars of $125 million from last year. That is a cut of 7.3 per cent. However if we add in the inflation component, the fact that inflation has increased by 4 per cent to 5 per cent between 1987 and 1988, that cut amounts to 11 per cent or approximately $188 million. The Government is making cuts such as that while we still have over one million Canadians unemployed.

In a Gallup poll survey taken in this month of June, the following question was asked of Canadians: "What do you believe the biggest single problem in this country to be?" Well, 27 per cent of all Canadians felt that unemployment was the single largest problem in the country. That stood well ahead of 14 per cent who believed that inflation or the economy was a major problem. If we look at the breakdown in those figures we note that in Atlantic Canada 57 per cent thought that unemployment was the major problem, in Quebec it was 26 per cent, on the Prairies it was 31 per cent, and in British Columbia it was 37 per cent. It was only in Ontario that it was not considered to be a major problem.

Why do Canadians feel this way if the Government is doing such a wonderful job with employment? Day after day it brags about the jobs it has created and how the unemployment rate has come down. Canadians feel this way because these figures, which are quoted very often by the Government, are an illusion and do not tell the whole story. To begin with, the great majority of those new jobs have been created in Ontario, particularly in southern Ontario. I do not have the up-to-date figures for this year, but in 1987 more than 95 per cent of the additional jobs created in that year were located in the Province of Ontario.

In an article in Le Devoir French business counsellors are advising business investors in France to invest in Ontario and not in Quebec. The headline in Le Devoir reads:

[Translation]

Quebec is no longer with it, it is now in Ontario that we must invest.

[English]

That is one reason Canadians feel that unemployment is still the major problem. The great decrease in unemployment has taken place in Ontario. It has not taken place in Atlantic Canada, in most parts of Quebec, in British Columbia, and in many parts of the Prairies. Another major reason for the unrest of Canadians with respect to unemployment can be found in a report published last week by the advisory council to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall). The report was tabled on June 22. The opening sentences of the press release relating to the report reads: "The problem of unemployed older workers is becoming more severe as the Canadian population ages and as new technology and other economic factors force older worker lay-offs".

The report goes on to say: "It is evident that the employment situation of older workers, particularly those in the 55 to 64 age group, has not improved since 1985". That is when the same advisory council made a report entitled Older Workers: An Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market. In fact, since that report was published the situation has deteriorated. That is another example of why Canadians are concerned about the unemployment situation. They are concerned because the improvement has basically been in Ontario, but it has not helped older workers.

A third reason is that the improvement has failed to help the youth of the country. Again I quote from a report that was tabled in Quebec at the end of last week. It was published by the La Foundation Rennaissance-Jeunesse au Quebec. The study showed that one out of three unemployed persons in Quebec was between the ages of 14 years and 25 years. While one out of three of every unemployed person in Quebec between those ages only makes up one-fifth of the population in Quebec, the report goes on to say that it is a very serious situation in Québec.

It is interesting but sad to note that the situation of unemployment among young people in Québec goes hand in hand with an increase in suicides. A recent report from Quebec points out that there has been an increase of 400 per cent in suicides of those between the ages of 15 years and 20 years of age in the last 10 years. This is a very disturbing figure. One must wonder why the Government is so complacent with those kind of unemployment and suicide figures relating to youths. One would think that instead of cutting training and employment budgets and instead of cutting education budgets, particularly budgets for post-secondary education, the Government would be vastly increasing those budgets.

I note that it is one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, and I will continue my speech after lunch.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NON-OBSERVANCE OF SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT CONCEPT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in Toronto last week as you know the Summit Leaders endorsed the concept of sustainable development. The United Nations General Assembly did the same last December. Yet, despite having twice endorsed sustainable development, the U.S.A. and the U.K. continue to pollute and dump their acid-rain causing gases on their neighbours. In addition, Italy now sends toxic wastes to Africa. Europe has no pollution control measures on automobiles. Japan continues to hunt whales, while here at home we still over-harvest our resources.

Almost one year ago the National Task Force on Environment and Economy wrote a report. Of the 40 recommendations made, so far none has been implemented. As we all know, actions speak louder than words. To endorse environmentally sustainable economic development is one thing. To implement it is another.

Rhetoric is coming out our ears. What really counts is when the Summit Leaders will start practising what they preach.

ABORTION

POSITION OF MEDICAL PROFESSION

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the medical profession has a long-standing tradition of responsibility for caring for people. However, the medical profession is now in danger of self-destructing unless it ceases to be prostituted to bestow an appearance of supporting the anti-child, non-medical, and non-therapeutic act of abortion.

Conducting abortions in which the patient is not suffering a life-threatening situation has nothing remotely to do with healing, or the healing arts, at whatever stage the pregnancy is terminated. As one doctor stated: "It is now past time for doctors and medicine to dissociate themselves from both abortion on demand and from the abortion of the unborn who are thought to suffer from grave mental or physical disability". This doctor also advocated: "Physicians performing an abortion when the life of the mother is not in jeopardy should have their licence suspended".

There is now an ever-growing list of Doctors for Life who will not perform abortions because they believe that unborn children are, indeed, human beings. It is our hope that more and more doctors will join Doctors for Life for the sake of all our unborn children.

TRADE

FREE TRADE BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY CONFERENCES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow and Wednesday we see the Conservative propaganda machine in action as the Free Trade Business Opportunity Conferences start in Toronto. "Canadian business," the ad states, "needs to know about the opportunities flowing from . . . " the U.S. trade deal. So there will be "experts on exports" there, especially the keynote speakers, those well-known trade experts, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. MacDougall).

Will they tell their audiences about the tragic loss of independence that this deal would bring Canada? Will they explain how we will not have the right to require performance requirements from foreign firms? Will they explain how U.S. health management companies and labs will get the right to come forth and undercut our not-for-profit health system? Will they explain the risk to our regional development programs?

I bet that the answer is no. The program ends at 3 p.m.—early for a serious export conference, but just in time for television deadlines.

HIGHWAYS

RESOURCES REQUIRED FOR MAINTENANCE AND EXPANSION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the sinews of a nation are its transportation links. We move over 250 billion tons of freight annually over our highways. Over the last 15 years the number of registered trucks per kilometre has nearly doubled.

We expect more from our highways but are spending less. If our highway system is to be kept up to date and expanded, then all levels of government must be prepared to allocate more resources to this end. In particular, funding for roads in the Territories has slowed to a trickle. This is unacceptable in an area where there is a desperate need for new and improved highways.

THE LATE DR. STANLEY HUDECKI

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the whole of Hamilton mourned yesterday when we heard of the death of former Member of Parliament for Hamilton West, Dr. Stan Hudecki. Although Dr. Hudecki was here in Parliament for a period of only four years he touched the city of Hamilton in a much greater way. Dr. Hudecki was well respected throughout the community for his work with St. Joseph's Hospital, and for his strong commitment to his religious and family values.

I can remember knocking on doors with Stan and as we went from house to house, in his stolid way, those of us who knew Stan, would say: "Come on Stan, let's get to the door". Stan would say: "I operated on this woman", or "I knew this man."

He had a reputation in the community that spoke above Party lines. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that he was one of the few Members in the Liberal Party who did not support the repatriation of the Constitution because of his strong belief in the values and the rights of the unborn.

He was a man of principle. Although he was a representative of one particular political Party, he had valour and integrity that rose above Party lines. I see my colleague, the Hon. Member for Muskoka (Mr. Darling), nodding his head.

Stan will be missed. To Leona and family we send our sympathies. He had a strong community and family commitment with literally the whole family behind him. Stan, we will really miss you.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

OPENING OF NATIONAL OPTIC INSTITUTE IN SAINTE-FOY

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I had the pleasure, along with the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle), to officially open the National Optics Institute in Sainte-Foy in the riding of Louis-Hébert.

During the electoral campaign, I had promised to have this important institute settle in Sainte-Foy and I am very proud to say today that I have delivered the goods.

I must mention that this 35 million dollar project was made possible through the co-operative efforts of all interested parties: Laval University, CRIQ, GATIQ, INRS, the Chamber of Commerce, Inter-Port, the private sector, as well as the constant co-operation of the Quebec Government and the Federal Government.

Today I would also like to thank the Minister of State (Science and Technology), the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. de Cotret) for their relentless support and to recall the vision of Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he visited Louis-Hébert in 1982: In this riding and in this region, he said, you have everything it takes to become a key research and development center.

Today, the vision has come true thanks to the commitment of our Prime Minister and our Government and this shows once again that the Progressive Conservative Government keeps its promises.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

F-5 FIGHTER PLANE REPAIR AND UPGRADING CONTRACT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the F-5 fighter repair and upgrading contract was awarded to Bristol Aerospace in Winnipeg, Winnipeg was promised a world-wide mandate for upgrading and repair of these airplanes.

Now we hear through Canadian press reports from Northrop Corporation, Bristol, and from federal government sources, that no such mandate ever was possible. An industry official was quoted as saying:

> "I've been hearing all this talk about all this work they're going to get and I'm just not sure it's there . . . I think they're talking about a big deal that just doesn't exist."

It is time for the Government to come clean and admit that it was making inflated promises to Winnipeg. It is time for the Government to get serious about aerospace in this country and develop an aerospace strategy that will be fair for Winnipeg and effective for Canada.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

SENNETERRE ENTERPRISE AID CENTRE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Senneterre Business Assistance Centre was established thanks to an Employment and Immigration Canada program and especially to persons concerned with the economic and industrial development in the Barraute, Senneterre, Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Malartic areas.

The Centre began its operations on July 15, 1985 and has responded to more than 350 technical and/or financial assistance applications. It has co-operated with promoters and owners of small and medium businesses in the investment of 1.1 million dollar in loans. These promoters and owners have themselves invested 1.3 million dollars. This co-operation has generated total investments of 5 million dollars. The 38 assisted businesses have created 66 jobs and maintained 54 others, for a grand total of 120 jobs.

Mr. Speaker, such is the excellent work accomplished by Mr. Jean G. Gobeil, Director General, his permanent staff and the board of directors.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY DISBANDMENT—PROVISIONS OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, Newfoundlanders witnessed the signing, a little over a week ago, of an agreement between the Government of Ottawa and the Government of Newfoundland to phase out of existence totally the 100-year old Newfoundland Railway. This deal was done by putting forward a package of dollars to be spent over 15 years to upgrade the highway, amounting to some $700 million, and to shut down the railway almost immediately, effective September 1, 1988.

Newfoundlanders accept the notion that a railway can be phased out for a better highway system if it is not competitive. What we cannot accept is that the amount of money involved will not upgrade the highway. More important, as part of the deal the Government of Canada forced the Government of Newfoundland, and the Government of Newfoundland accepted this, to give up an obligation under the 1949 Terms of Union between Newfoundland and Canada for the Government in Ottawa to provide part of the cost of a national transportation system in the Province of Newfoundland. Ottawa, with the Government of Newfoundland, negotiated away that obligation under the Terms of Union.

We in this Party do not accept making the poorest province in Canada pay that kind of price for a decent transportation system. We commit ourselves to effecting a constitutional amendment to ensure that that Term of Union of 1949 is protected in the Constitution of Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Ron Stewart (Simcoe South): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) favours free trade. The President of the U.S. extols free trade. The "Iron Lady" Prime Minister of Britain praises free trade. The Chancellor of West Germany epitomizes free trade. All of these people spoke eloquently and convincingly in this Chamber of the great future of this nation with free trade. The remaining Toronto Summiteers exuded confidence in free trade, praised our deal with the U.S. and decried protectionism.

The majority of Canadians favour free trade, with numbers increasing daily in lock-step with growing Conservative popularity. Who opposes free trade? It is left-wing jingoes, the two Leaders of the opposition Parties, and the fast-slipping in popularity Premier of Ontario.

Who favours free trade? Eighty per cent of Canadian manufacturers by poll, Liberal Senator Van Roggen and ex-Liberal Minister of Finance Donald Macdonald. Now Milton Harris, Liberal bagman, has left the Party because he favours free trade and in opposition to the head-in-the-sand attitudes of the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), uncontrolled by their Leader, and destroying fund-raising efforts as well. We Canadians win with free trade with more and better jobs and a real future.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

AFTERNOON CLOSURES OF POST OFFICE IN HAMILTON MOUNTAIN RIDING

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, on three separate occasions last week, Westcliff Mall Post Office in my riding was closed for the afternoon. While this fact may not appear to be of great importance, it was significant to the customers who entered the mall expecting to get services from the post office. There had been no prior notification of the closures and no explanation, just a sign on the window saying "closed".

The two clerks who work in the post office had received a telephone call from their wicket supervisor asking them to close up immediately in order to perform relief work in other parts of the city. What else can this be but a blatant attempt by Canada Post to discredit the service provided by the Westcliff Mall Post Office? Customers entering the mall would understandably become upset when they realized that postal services were not available. It is another example of the corporation's insidious efforts to implement its corporate franchising plan by undermining the image of the Westcliff Mall Post Office.

CHILDREN

CRIMINAL TRAFFICKING IN KIDNAPPED CHILDREN

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, a report to the Western European Justice Ministers states that over one million children are kidnapped and sold into prostitution each year as part of a billion-dollar international sex racket. The trafficking in children is becoming the fastest growing criminal activity in the world.

This type of crime, in my eyes, is no different from murder. One cannot imagine the anguish, terror, and suffering that the children and families involved go through when these kidnappings occur.

I strongly urge the Minister to review the Criminal Code to bring in tough penalties of equal value for those who kidnap and for those who avail themselves of their services. A minimum of 25 years with no possibility of parole should be the starting point. Our society must be protected from these human flesh predators.

CANALS

SAULT STE. MARIE SHIP CANAL

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, almost a year ago the Sault Ste. Marie Ship Canal developed a fault which closed it down and resulted in the lay-off of over one dozen employees. The canal has been stabilized but no decision has been made to replace it.

The City of Sault Ste. Marie and other people concerned have called on the Government to replace this major shipping link between Lake Superior and Lake Huron, yet the Government has failed to act. It has not even committed enough money for the engineering to take place to decide whether a project should go ahead. When a decision is finally made it will take over two years for construction.

I call on the Government to make a commitment today not only to do the engineering to determine that the ship canal should be replaced but to go ahead and complete the replacement and rehabilitation of this major tourist and shipping link in Sault Ste. Marie.

INCOME TAX

TAX REDUCTION FOR CERTAIN TAXPAYERS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, for the first time since the implementation, in 1917, of the Income Tax Act, Canadian citizens are paying less income tax.

Effective January 1, 1988—as every Canadian will find out from his or her paycheck covering the first week of July 88, 9,7 million households representing over 85 per cent of Canadians will benefit from an average tax savings of $490 and 850 000 low-income citizens will no longer pay any income tax.

While cutting down the deficit and maintaining service to our citizens in need, we managed to reduce income tax. It is welcome news for Canadian consumers and a boost to this country's builders.

Many thanks to our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)!

EXTERNAL AID

ERITREA—CALL FOR DIRECT EMERGENCY RELIEF

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, today the Eritrean Canadian community is holding a demonstration on Parliament Hill and at the Soviet Embassy in support of emergency relief and Eritrean self-determination and in opposition to Ethiopian aggression and the massacre of civilians by Soviet supplied napalm and cluster-bombs.

According to the Eritrean Relief Association more than 180,000 Eritreans, mostly women and children, have been displaced from their villages. Emergency relief aid is desperately needed.

I call upon the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) to send emergency relief directly to Eritrea on an urgent basis and call upon the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to demand that the Ethiopian Government stop using Soviet napalm and cluster-bombs on women and children.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT IN WESTERN PROVINCES—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE REQUESTED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On the one hand, today in Toronto the Prime Minister was talking about world drought, the greenhouse effect, and the problems posed for the entire world by climatic change. On the other hand, Canada has a disastrous drought in western Canada. Twenty-four thousand farmers have left the land in the last year and the Government spends almost three times more on propaganda for its trade deal than it does on a concrete program for western farmers and the drought.

Why doesn't the Government introduce a really comprehensive program to aid the farmers of western Canada who are being driven from the land because of drought?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am really quite surprised by the comment of the Leader of the Opposition because Canadian farmers will be happy to tell him that aid from Ottawa to the agricultural community has increased by about 400 per cent since our Government took office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: With regard to the very special problem of the drought which is debilitating many parts of western Canada and the industrialized world, the Minister of Agriculture has already put together the first part of an important package to assist farmers. The second is on its way and will be announced just as soon as we can.

PROPOSED DISASTER RELIEF FUND

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was speaking in general terms about global climatic change in Toronto today. What might have changed is also affecting in a long term way the future of Canadian farmers. Increasing droughts and a hotter world climate are not something the Prime Minister surely discovered today in Toronto. Granted, we cannot solve the problems alone, but there are things that the Government can do for Canadians within our own territory.

• (1420)

Three years ago, during another drought season, I called upon the Government of Canada to promote and present a federal-provincial agricultural disaster relief fund. In response to that, on November 27, 1985, the Minister of Agriculture announced, in his words: "We are working toward having a long term disaster assistance program in place for this year's planting season".

1985 has gone by as well as 1986, 1987, and half of 1988, and we still do not have in place a long-term program for agricultural disaster relief. How is that delay going to be explained to the farmers of western Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have been working with regard to programs such as soil conservation and water resource management with provincial Governments on behalf of farmers. We have worked very closely with the farm organizations.

I met them again just before the Summit and I believe one of them pointed out publicly that that was the seventh meeting I had held with them since I had become Prime Minister, and that it was the first time the Prime Minister of Canada had held such a series of meetings with agricultural leaders across Canada.

We have provided, as I think we should have, a great amount of assistance with regard to drought, when there were floods, and when the problem of grasshoppers arose in western Canada. We provided the largest single deficiency payment in the history of Canada to the agricultural community.

When the agricultural community has been in difficulty it has known that this Government would respond to assist in its problems. We have in the past and we will again in the future.

REQUEST FOR LONG-TERM ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is all very well for the Prime Minister to go to Toronto and talk in general global terms about the problem, but western farmers are still awaiting the results of a promise made by his Government two and a half years ago to come up with a long-term drought program.

When I was in Saskatoon last week I received questions which I am now going to put to the Prime Minister. Where is the long-term drought assistance program? Where is the support for long-term water storage programs in western Canada? Where are the projects to move water to the drought areas? Where are the programs to move feed to the drought areas? Where are the programs to move cattle to areas outside those areas?

Those are the programs western farmers are asking for and they are not going to be overly impressed by the Prime Minister's speech in Toronto.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my recollection is that in the Prince Albert declaration a little more than four years ago we made some 57 or 58 commitments to western agriculture. We have delivered on between 85 and 90 per cent of the entire package.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know, Mr. Speaker, why my right hon. friend suggests that it was inappropriate for me to go to Toronto this morning to discuss the important matters of the environment. Surely he would not disagree with my obligation to do that. We certainly do not do this to the exclusion of the agricultural industry or without profound sympathy for it facing the drought which is affecting Canadian agriculture at the moment.

Even my right hon. friend would not blame me for the drought. I know he blames me for everything else, but even he wouldn't try that one.

Mr. Tobin: Well, it's caused by hot air.

Mr. Mulroney: If my hon. friend visited with western farmers he would find that most of them would tell him that this Government has done more for western agriculture than any other Government.

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT OF LIVESTOCK STABILIZATION PROGRAM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, since last fall the moisture reserves in western Canada have been at an all-time low. The Minister of Agriculture has been talking about committee meetings since the first of the year. It is almost the first of July. Many crops are not even being planted this year.

When is the Government going to announce a program for stabilization of the livestock industry? Feed prices are going up. Cattle prices are going down. Western farmers want to know when the Government is going to put in place a livestock stabilization program so that they will know they can keep their herds throughout the summer.

• (1425)

The Government has been talking about committee meetings and consultations. Western farmers want to know when there will be action.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, unlike the previous Government, our Government believes in consultation because in the end the results demonstrate its utility.

Some four weeks ago the Minister of Agriculture, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister and myself met with our counterparts and industry representatives in Calgary. We worked out a timetable which we have been following very closely since then.

Since those meetings some four weeks ago, industry representatives, in consultation with the federal Government and the provinces, have worked closely on a package that we suspect will be put in place soon. In the meantime, we announced in Calgary some $12 million to assist PFRA, which is part of a long-term strategy to work closely with the cattle industry and effect the transportation of water. In addition, there have been some changes to regulations with respect to crop insurance, which are also designed to meet the needs of the farmers in the short term.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIMING OF PROGRAMS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, we heard the Parliamentary Secretary and the Prime Minister give a recitation of what they are talking about and thinking about. Western Canadians want to know when the Government will act. When will the Government bring in a livestock stabilization program? When will it provide an income tax deferral mechanism for herds that have to be dispersed? When will the Government provide assistance for moving cattle out of the drought area? We want to know when the Government will act. Why does it refuse to act?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member talks about the Government refusing to act, I can only assume he is looking back into history. Unlike that administration, this Government, this Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and others—

Ms. Copps: You have been there four years.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): —have been working on behalf of Canadian farmers since we were elected in 1984. We will continue to do so.

In addition, there is a crop insurance program that was not in place a year ago.

Mr. Foster: Twenty-four thousand have left.

Ms. Copps: Issue the writ.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): We are following the advice of people like Stan Wilson, who are giving us a timetable—

Ms. Copps: Call the election—

Mr. Foster: Twenty-four thousand have left.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The farmers are looking for action, not for advice such as they are receiving from Hon. Members like those from the Hamilton area.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): This Government has been there on behalf of Canadian farmers in the past and we will continue to be there in the future.

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FOR LIVESTOCK PRODUCERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister said a few weeks ago that something would be done soon about the impact of the drought on western producers. The Parliamentary Secretary said a month ago that something was put in the works and a timetable established.

When I was there two weeks ago, farmers in western Canada were saying that they had been waiting two weeks which, for them, was already two weeks too long in meeting the needs of the cattle producers in particular.

A one-shot deal of perhaps $80 to $100 per head of cattle would cost the federal Government about $100 million now. The federal Government has only spent $12 million since the drought began, to deal with the problem. Will the Government commit itself to a one-time assistance program of $80 to $100 per head now so that western producers can make the decision either to get water and feed to their cattle, or get their cattle to the water and feed? Will the Government make that decision now rather than some point down the road?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the farmers on the Prairies, through their Governments, asked us to respond to very serious problems some time ago with respect to grain production, we responded, as my friend knows, with the largest deficiency payment in the history of Canadian agriculture. So I think that indicates the sensitivity that we try to bring to bear to these very legitimate problems affecting Canadian agriculture.

There is not a problem more legitimate than the one being discussed now and we view it with great care and concern and will continue to do so. My hon. friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, has indicated we are following, with the concurrence of agricultural leaders, a very strict timetable. I can assure my hon. friend that the farmers of Canada who, through no fault of their own, are suffering severely because of these climatic conditions, will find in the Government of Canada, as they have in the past, a strong friend and ally.

FEDERAL FUNDING REQUEST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that the farmers are looking for an immediate answer to their needs. The Prime Minister referred to the large deficiency payment the Government granted. He did not mention this announcement was made in the middle of a Saskatchewan election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: It was delivered, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Considering the Government did not hesitate to promise to spend $163 million to the voters in the by-election at Lac-Saint-Jean recently, will the Government commit itself to what would amount to $63 million less than this amount for all four of the western provinces affected in this particular circumstance? Will the Government spend that money now when it is needed instead of waiting for by-elections to be called in every region across western Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sort of surprised to hear my hon friend speaking so disparagingly of by-elections. He was calling for one and he predicted he was going to win.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: One of the best 10 you have in Quebec.

Mr. Broadbent: No, let's have a general one!

Mr. Mulroney: Then I find my hon. friend is saying that the farmers are looking for some quick answers. I am informed by the Minister of Justice that, when the Leader of the New Democratic Party was in Regina, he was asked for his drought program and he said it would be issued during the next election campaign.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is exactly right. We had to wait a long time.

An Hon. Member: That will be a drought for the NDP.

Mr. Mulroney: I can't think of anything more offensive than issuing those things during election campaigns. My hon. friend, if he has anything to say on behalf of the farmers, should say them now. Canadian farmers, east and west, have found in this Government a ready friend and trusting ally. We have responded with alacrity before and we will again. Right now the farmers are hurting and this Government will help them.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that the Minister of Justice is wrong again. If he had attended the press conference, he would have heard that we called on the federal Government to produce the $80 to $100 per head of cattle. We also called for an emergency program of the kind the Government promised in 1985 and still has not delivered.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE ANNOUNCEMENT OF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the need is pressing now on the Prairies and since the Government could find $163 million to spend in a by-election, will it announce the $100 million that is badly needed by the farmers on the Prairies today instead of waiting for an election when the Government can find money to spend?

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is more and more disturbing to see the socialist leader reproach the federal Government for spending money in Quebec or elsewhere, whether during an election campaign or not. That fact is, as he very well knows, that the Canadian Government in no way spent $163 million in Lac-Saint-Jean—he knows that very well. It is a falsehood that he is no doubt repeating inadvertently.

Regarding farmers in western Canada, Quebec and throughout the country, they know very well that unlike the previous Government, we never told farmers that they could go sell their own wheat.

[English]

We never said: "Go sell your own wheat". We said we were going to help the farmers of Canada and that is what we have done consistently since we have been here.

AIR CANADA

REPLACEMENT OF 727 AIRCRAFT FLEET—CRASH OF AIRBUS A-320

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, if manure production is the mark of expertise in farming, the Prime Minister takes the hat hands down.

An Hon. Member: Look whose talking!

Mr. Tobin: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns Air Canada's announced planned replacement of its fleet of 727s. The reported leading candidate for replacement of the 727s is the Airbus A-320. The Deputy Prime Minister will know that yesterday in France, during a demonstration flight, an Airbus 320 crashed resulting in three deaths and nearly 100 injuries. Indeed, I am sure all Members regret the loss of life and the injuries. The cause of that crash is yet unknown.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister assure the House that Air Canada will not proceed with what is reported to be a $3 billion purchase of new aircraft until a full and complete investigation is undertaken to ensure the air worthiness and safety integrity of the Airbus 320 aircraft?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, like the Hon. Member, we would offer as a Government our sympathy to the victims of that unfortunate incident in France.

With respect to the Member's question, I believe it is best answered by reading the press release of Air Canada. President Pierre Jeanniot has said no decision has been made on which new aircraft it will buy. The airline is also considering planes from Boeing and MacDonald Douglas. No decision has been made at this point and I believe it would be premature to pass judgment on any decision at this time.

REQUEST DECISION BE POSTPONED PENDING INVESTIGATION OF CRASH

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): The Airbus 320 is the first non-military aircraft in the world to use a fully computerized flight control system. Outside of military aircraft that kind of system is not being utilized anywhere else. Today in France the company's official spokesman indicated that the crash may have been caused by pilot error. That comment was made before any investigation whatsoever was carried out. The company has an interest in saying that.

Once again, can the Minister of State for Transport give the House the assurance that Air Canada will not consider, nor will it take any decision to buy the A-320 Airbus aircraft until such time as a complete investigation has been carried out and that investigation has been verified independently by Canadian officials to ensure that, if that aircraft flies in Canada, it is an aircraft that meets with the kind of standards we set in this country?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the investigation of the French civil aviation authorities is under way. I think it would be premature for anyone in this House or anywhere else to pass judgment or to make any comment with respect to this investigation because it may prejudice the investigation.

As far as the decision being made is concerned, I cite the words, I have full faith in the board and the management of Air Canada. They are still in the process of making their evaluations. They have not made a choice. We have said this in the House before and we are saying it today. I am sure all in this House would agree that a thorough evaluation should be done before a selection is made.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN DROUGHT—CATTLE FEED QUERY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Agriculture. More than two million head of cattle are caught in the severe drought zone in western Canada. Farmers and ranchers have been moving old hay at considerable expense to maintain this herd. Has the Government yet decided what the crop insurance rule should be for turning cattle into the dried out crop as cattle feed before it, too, turns brown and blows away?

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in response to an earlier question, there have already been some modifications announced by provincial officials with respect to crop insurance. I do know, and the Hon. Member will appreciate, that the recommendation he suggests is one which has already been offered by the industry and is a point of the discussions currently taking place between the federal Minister of Agriculture, the provincial Ministers, and those officials representing them. I would suspect there will be some announcement in the very near future.

• (1440)

SUGGESTED USE OF PASTURE LAND IN WILDLIFE SANCTUARIES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that we will eventually hear an announcement on this matter. For several weeks people have been waiting. Some crops have now gone beyond the pasture stage and have been completely lost to those cattle.

Is it the Government's intention to make any use of the close to 40,000 acres, or 15,600 hectares, of pastureland in the wildlife sanctuaries, including the Last Mountain Bird Sanctuary in my riding, since the birds do not eat the grass and will not be using it in July and August anyway? It would be a nice reciprocal arrangement in this time of stress since they were eating and have always eaten farmers' crops in the surrounding areas in years past.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do know that with respect to the Hon. Member's last point certainly one of the ongoing conflicts between the farming community and the supporters of the wildlife community is the type of conflict of which he speaks.

Having said that, I know that officials are trying to find all available resources for feed which can be used in the short-term. As the Hon. Member knows, a number of cattle have been moved off the range to northern areas. Some have been brought into Manitoba. In addition to that—

Mr. Benjamin: No thanks to you.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The Hon. Member for Regina West says: "No thanks to you". One of the things that farmers in western Canada know is that when the drought took place in 1984-85 we were there with assistance to cattle producers with respect to so much per head. They also have faith in our record. They know that because we were there in the past we will be there in the future. They believe in us. Quite frankly, they are very grateful. One of the things for which they can be grateful is the fact that we are the Government of the day rather than the Party of the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NORMALIZATION OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH U.S.S.R.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and concerns our relations with the Government of the Soviet Union. The diplomatic saga is taking on very worrying and regrettable proportions and I would like to ask the Secretary of State whether he intends to take measures to restore normal relations with the Soviet Union as soon as possible.

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and the House know that the Soviet Union was involved in activities here which were unacceptable to Canada. I addressed those in a statement in the House the other day.

This afternoon I will be meeting the Ambassador of the Soviet Union to Canada. I have called him into my office.

The Hon. Member will also know that I have been in touch with him, representatives of the New Democratic Party, and with the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House, with respect to a confidential briefing this afternoon on some of the circumstances which have led Canada to take this action.

NATIONAL SECURITY

STATUS OF INTERNAL SECURITY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, on June 22, the Minister told this House:

> We are confident that Canadian security was not compromised and that Canadian authorities have acted to preserve our security.

Can the Minister still maintain this position and confirm for us that this statement made last week still stands today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY DISBANDMENT—COMPENSATION FOR WORKERS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister stated in this House last Monday that the railway workers of the Newfoundland Railway supported the financial package which closed the Newfoundland Railway and would provide $70 million for labour adjustment. Was it because they had been deceived by the statements of the Minister for International Trade and the President of CN into thinking that the $70 million was available for negotiated benefits over and above what their collective agreement or employment contracts required?

Will the Deputy Prime Minister end the uncertainty among workers and confirm, first, that there is no extra $70 million available to the employees in addition to the contractual obligation of CN; and, second, that this money is not part of the Government's contribution since CN is already obliged to make these payments to its workers?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member knows that the negotiations will take place on July 5. I think anything that we do at this point in time could possibly damage any negotiations that will take place. The package that will be put in place will be one of the most generous that this country has ever seen.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the confusion that the Government has created among the workers of CN in Newfoundland is astounding. The workers were convinced that the Government has a package of $70 million over and above their contractual obligations. I now hear that this is not the case. Why does the Minister not come clean and tell the people the truth?

Hon. Gerry St. Germain (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I repeat again that it would be premature and irresponsible to make any statements until we have sat down and properly negotiated the agreements as laid out.

HOUSING

DISPOSAL OF SURPLUS FEDERAL LANDS IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Treasury Board. It involves the disposal of federal surplus lands. When the federal Government is disposing of surplus lands it has a policy of offering them first to provincial Governments, and then to municipal Governments, before making them available for housing.

Will the Minister direct the Bureau of Real Property Management of the Treasury Board to adopt a housing first policy so that when surplus lands are disposed of, particularly in areas where there is a housing crisis such as Metropolitan Toronto, they will be offered first for badly needed housing before anything else?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the House should know that since we took office in 1984 we have adopted a policy of reviewing the federal Government's landholdings and wherever possible disposing of excess federal property. To date we have sold some 492 properties. That has returned to the Treasury some $171 million.

Specifically with respect to the Hon. Member's question, I would tell my hon. friend that a review of federal landholdings in the Toronto area is presently under way. Once that is completed it is a question of discussing the matter with the provincial and municipal authorities and deciding on the best use of that property. That decision will be taken at that time.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BELL CANADA STRIKE—SERVICE FOR THE HANDICAPPED—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise the issue of the operators' and technicians' strike at Bell Canada, which threatens to affect telephone services for about seven million Canadians who reside in Quebec, Ontario and the North West Territories. Those most likely to be affected are people with a hearing disability and the physically disabled who need operator assistance to make a call. Furthermore, people who are trying to communicate an emergency situation cannot make do with a tape recorder that answers "This is a recording".

Mr. Grisé: Don't call us, we'll call you.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint Jacques): I therefore want to ask the Government, which certainly has a responsibility to ensure that such services are maintained, to inform the House what it intends to do so that the disabled can continue to make calls during the strike and emergency situations can still be reported.

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I understand from my colleague, the Minister of Labour, that officers of the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service have been in contact with the parties and are following the developments in the dispute. There was a conciliation process in place earlier that failed to win the support of the union members.

I understand that under its terms of licence the company must continue to provide service and that it is prepared to do so.

We will of course continue to monitor the situation. It is a legal strike. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, will be following the situation to ensure that for those in need there will be the necessary services.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, while I was asking my question, the Member for Beauce thought he was being funny when he said: "Don't call us, we'll call you!" That shows the extent of his concern for the disabled.

Ms. Copps: The clown from Beauce.

CONCILIATION COMMISSIONER'S REPORT

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): We are aware that a report had been commissioned from Mr. Warren Edmunson, a conciliation commissioner. We know the Government has a copy of the report in hand. I would like to ask if the Government is in a position to table the report forthwith, or at least to release the essential elements of the report in order that Canadians may better understand the issues at stake, especially as they threaten a service that they have paid for and to which they feel entitled?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am clearly not in a position to commit my honourable colleague to releasing a report, and the Hon. Member knows that.

In other very sensitive situations like this, I know that he has taken a very active role behind the scenes in a way that has been helpful to the parties. That will continue in this case. I am sure when he returns he will be able to respond directly.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

POSTAL SERVICES REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. For some time Canadians have been protesting the Government's destructive post office policy which has meant the closure of rural post offices, and the denial of door-to-door service in suburban areas in an arbitrary fashion.

Does the Minister believe that Canadians will accept, as a substitute for a change in policy, the appointment of a paper tiger that has no decision-making power, headed by a known Tory who makes donations to his political Party?

Does the Minister not realize that Canadians will see through this effort to escape the political heat on the eve of an election?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the rhetoric in the Hon. Member's question is evidence in itself why it would be useful to have an independent third party evaluate questions as to changes in service policies, rates, and so on.

For example, the Hon. Member talks about concerns regarding changes in rural post office delivery mechanisms, yet in his own province independent polls indicate that those affected by the changes find them quite proper and over 85 per cent approve the changes. It is far preferable to have an independent third party look at those questions than to have the type of rhetoric put forward by the Hon. Member as some basis for making decisions.

APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. If this Committee is going to be as objective as those polls were then Canadians are in for a mean surprise.

If the Minister wanted this committee to be independent and wanted the Post Office to operate independently, why did the Minister not give it decision-making authority? Why did he choose to appoint a known Tory to head this committee, if he wanted it to be seen as an independent body?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the board will have five members. The appointments were made today of Mr. Alan Marchment, who did an excellent job of studying the Post Office and task force report, and who is clearly one of the Canadians most knowledgeable about the operation of the Post Office; Mrs. Sally Hall, past President of the Consumers' Association of Canada; and Mr. Claude Senneville, a former member of the National Energy Board. To suggest those three people, plus the other two who have not been appointed yet, are somehow not to be trusted, are going to do all kinds of damage, as opposed to the kind of advice the Hon. Member is getting from Jean-Claude Parrot, is an absurdity.

EMPLOYMENT

SITUATION OF OLDER WORKERS—ADVISORY COUNCIL REPORT

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Last week, on June 22, the Advisory Council to the Minister of Employment and Immigration submitted a report which stated: "It is evident that the employment situation of older workers has not improved since 1985 when the Advisory Council report on Older Workers was published and, in fact, it has deteriorated".

In the 1985 report the Advisory Council made 10 recommendations to assist unemployed older workers. After three years none of those recommendations has been implemented, including the Program for Older Worker Adjustment promised by the Government in February, 1986.

When does the Minister intend to start listening to her advisory council? Why is she ignoring older workers?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government has not in any way ignored older workers. My colleague, the Minister of Labour, has been developing a policy on older workers. The unemployment rate among older workers is improved, as it is throughout the whole economic system.

In respect to the report that the Hon. Member speaks of, I met with the advisory board this morning at its meeting in Ottawa. We discussed older workers, among other things. I am prepared to take all of its recommendations into account.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, there has not been an improvement for older workers. That is why last week the Minister's advisory council recommended that she take action on the 10 recommendations that it made in 1985, on which nothing has been done.

The Minister states that a new program for older workers is being negotiated. The Minister and her predecessor have been doing that for two years, and the Minister has not got agreement with the provinces. She should have kept in place the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program which was helping older workers, and not cancelled it before the other program was ready.

I wish to ask the Minister, what are her reasons for not acting on the advisory council report? What reasons does she have for ignoring this problem?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are not ignoring this problem. The Hon. Member, as usual, is not correct. The unemployment rate for older workers is 5.2 per cent, well below the national average for all workers. Employment among older workers has increased by 119,000 jobs.

We do regard this as a particular problem, and we do understand the uniqueness of older workers. Older workers also qualify for all of the programs within the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and many of them have been taking advantage of it. That is one reason that many of them are able to find new occupations.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISPOSAL OF NEWFOUNDLAND RAILWAY'S NARROW-GAUGE EQUIPMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. As a result of the closure of the railway in Newfoundland a great deal of equipment suitable for narrow-gauge railways will be available. There are indications that South Africa has expressed an interest.

What will Canada's response be if South Africa does indeed enter into negotiations in an attempt to purchase this equipment?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is bringing that possibility—and he made it clear that it was no more than a possibility, no more than a hypothesis—to my attention for the first time. I will look into it.

SOUTH AFRICA—POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTING FRONTLINE STATES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, when looking into the issue of possible South African purchase of this equipment, will the Secretary of State also engage in consideration of the possibility of making that equipment available to the frontline States where narrow-gauge equipment is also employed?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows two things which I will take the opportunity to bring to his attention again. One, the Government has been very active and remains very active in the fight against apartheid, and in seeking practically and positively to indicate to that regime in South Africa that it should change a policy which Canadians find unacceptable. Second, the Government has been very active in providing practical help to the frontline States.

If it turns out that there may be some other practical help that we can provide to them, we will in the future, as we have in the past, do that.

I will take the Hon. Member's representations in that light and see if there is any action that should be taken.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

RIGHTS OF FRANCOPHONE MINORITY IN ALBERTA—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the fate of the francophone minority in Alberta. If I am not mistaken, the Government of Alberta intends to agree to give its language minority rights it already has under the Canadian Constitution and only in two areas: the courts and education. Could the Prime Minister give the House the assurance that any accord, agreement or contract signed by the federal Government and the Government of Alberta will include a requirement by the federal Government of full accountability on the part of the Province of Alberta, so that once and for all, we can be certain that educational rights as defined under Section 23 of the Constitution will be assured, and that we will see some progress on access to the courts very shortly in Alberta?

• (1500)

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member will know, the statement made by the Province of Alberta has been responded to by the Minister of State for Federal-Provincial Relations who has set out, as has been confirmed by the Deputy Prime Minister in the House, our disappointment with respect to the response of the Alberta Government. Having said that, we are quite prepared to co-operate, as we have demonstrated with the Province of Saskatchewan, in entering into arrangements with the Province of Alberta to make resources available to ensure that minority rights in the Province of Alberta are in fact protected.

Indeed, I am very pleased to be able to announce that the Secretary of State has today entered into an agreement with the Province of Prince Edward Island with respect to a general agreement on official languages. The Premier of the Province of Prince Edward Island said that he was delighted that Prince Edward Island had obtained the Canadian Government's co-operation in its efforts to increase its capability to interact with the French-speaking people of Prince Edward Island in French.

We are taking action. This is another example of the way in which we have been able to work with the provinces to ensure the rights of minorities in the provinces.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that an agreement was signed with Prince Edward Island which has a Liberal Government in place. I can tell the Minister right now that it was much easier to settle with Prince Edward Island than it will be to settle with the Tory Government of Alberta.

Since Alberta has refused to concede and to open its arms generously to its minority, as Saskatchewan, the Minister's own province, did, will the Minister at least give the House a guarantee that if the Government accedes to some request from Alberta in terms of the language of the courts and educational rights, rights which are at this time in the Constitution but which for the last seven or eight years Francophones in alberta have been refused, will the Minister make sure that the federal Government is accountable to the House and to the people of Canada for the expenditure of those funds?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member's observation with respect to the political stripe of the Government of Prince Edward Island was in jest. I know that he of all people in this House would not want to politicize this very important issue.

Mr. Gauthier: I didn't ask about P.E.I., you raised it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I raised the fact that we in the federal Government indeed had entered into another agreement, first with Saskatchewan, now with Prince Edward Island. We have committed ourselves to a full process of consultation and discussion with the Province of Alberta. Indeed, these discussions are ongoing and we are quite prepared to do the same thing we have demonstrated we have been able to do in the other provinces. I think the Hon. Member would be the first one to compliment the federal Government for the progress in Saskatchewan and Prince Edward Island, and we are going to make progress in Alberta as well.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties, and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent to revert to presenting reports from committees to consider the presentation of a report.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I just want to make sure that the report we are dealing with is the one about Bill C-72, the new official languages Bill. If it is, then it is in keeping with the spirit of today's question, and I would approve it.

Mr. Speaker: Is there such agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—CONCURRENCE IN THE MAIN ESTIMATES FOR THE FISCAL YEAR ENDING MARCH 31, 1989

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Miss Carney:

That the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, laid upon the Table, Tuesday, February 23, 1988, less the amounts voted in Interim Supply be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East had the floor.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, when this debate was adjourned for lunch, I was saying that it was wrong for the Government to cut funds for employment and training when unemployment was still a serious problem and felt to be a serious problem in Canada. To support my position, I referred to the report published last week by the advisory council to the Minister of Employment and Immigration with respect to older workers.

As Hon. Members know, we do not have much opportunity during Question Period to respond to the answers of the Minister. We have two questions and she has two answers, and she gets the last answer. She said that the unemployment rate for older workers went down. Obviously she has not read the report.

It is true that the official unemployment figure went down, but the Minister did not say that 41 per cent of older workers between the ages of 55 and 64 who had lost their jobs in the last number of years had withdrawn from the labour force because they had given up hope. Consequently, they are not counted in the unemployment figures. If the Minister would take the time to read the report which was published last week on June 22 entitled Unemployed Older Worker Phenomena: A Problem That Will Not Go Away, she might be stirred to action.

In my remarks this morning, I pointed out that the unemployment figure of 7.8 per cent is misleading and does not tell the whole story because the great improvement in the employment situation has occurred in southern Ontario. There are still five provinces with serious unemployment rates. In addition, we have the problem of older workers. I also referred to the report just published on Thursday in Quebec pointing out that one out of three unemployed persons in Quebec is a young person between the ages of 14 and 25. Once again, we have a serious employment problem that deserves more investment and funding, not less.

All of this goes toward explaining the Gallup poll results published last week indicating that 27 per cent of Canadians believe that unemployment is the biggest single problem in Canada. That figure of 27 per cent leads the percentage for all the other problems identified in the survey. One would think that the Government would take serious note of these Gallup polls.

If everything is going as well as the Government says it is, why does 27 per cent of the population indicate that unemployment is still the most serious problem? These people are saying that it is the most serious problem because the improvement has other been regional and there is still serious unemployment in the regions. They are saying that it is serious because it is a very drastic problem among older workers.

I have here the report on older workers entitled Older Workers: An Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market. The advisory council to the Minister is calling this an imminent crisis in the labour market. That is why we get Gallup poll results like the results to which I referred. We also get those results because of the report published in Québec dealing with young people in that province referred to in this morning's Le Devoir.

There are other serious underlying problems with respect to employment that are hidden by the national figures published from month to month. One such problem is the growing trend toward part-time and temporary work. This type of work has been increasing since about 1979 or 1980. The previous Government appointed the Wallace Royal Commission to study this phenomenon and to come up with recommendations, which it did, but the recommendations have not yet been implemented by the Government. Wallace and her commission recommended that unemployment and other benefits be prorated for part-time workers because of this growing phenomenon.

It is these kinds of things which are providing insecurity to Canadian workers in the labour market. Even if Canadians workers have jobs they are fearful of what will happen tomorrow because they are working usually in part-time or temporary work. Now, as opposed to the past, these jobs are at minimum wages, are low paying, non-union, and without benefits.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, during the recession of 1982-83 many full-time industrial jobs were eliminated and were replaced by a high percentage of service jobs which on the whole, do not provide the wages, the benefits, and the security provided by the former industrial jobs. This is a serious problem to be addressed by the Government, and the Government is not addressing it. With the unemployment rate alone at 7.8 per cent, it is really nothing in which to take great comfort. Certainly, as a national figure, it is an improvement over the rate we had in the depth of the recession in 1982-83, when we registered the highest rate of unemployment in January, 1983. In the year prior to the recession, in 1981, the rate of unemployment nationally was 7.5 per cent in Canada. It jumped to 11 per cent in 1982 and to 11.9 per cent in 1983; then unemployment started to decline after January, 1983. This Government takes a laissez-faire approach to the problem and believes that if it withdraws from the market and from its spending and intervention into the economy everything will turn out well. Of course it is turning out well in the Golden Horseshoe surrounding Toronto and in southern Ontario generally, but that approach is not helping the Atlantic provinces, B.C., Québec, or pockets in the other provinces where there is still very high unemployment.

I should point out that in the period 1965 to 1980, a period of 15 years under a Liberal Government, the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. That is what the Government should be comparing itself with, not with the figures in the depth of the 1982-83 recession. If the Government had a policy and the political will, that rate of 7.8 per cent would be lower than it is. This morning the Minister of State for the Treasury Board stood in the House and boasted that the Government had cut spending on government programs. As I said then, we have to examine which programs have been cut and which ones have not been cut. We note that the Government has promised to spend over $10 billion on nuclear submarines, whereas it has cut by 32 per cent the programs for employment and training while still over one million Canadians are unemployed.

In 1984 we were spending $2.2 billion on employment and training programs. This year we are spending $1.5 billion which is a cut of 32 per cent. That is not an acceptable situation when we still have the problems to which I referred—high unemployment rates in five provinces, high unemployment rates and getting worse for older workers, high unemployment rates for our youth, and the growing trend to part-time and temporary work which is low paid, non-unionized, and without benefits. No wonder we get Gallup poll results which indicate that Canadians still feel that unemployment is the biggest problem in the country.

It is not good enough for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), whenever we ask a question about this serious problem, to stand and continually repeat the global figures that apply to the whole country. Of course Ontario has a 4.5 rate of unemployment. Good for Ontario, Mr. Speaker. There is a Liberal Government in Ontario which is willing to intervene and do something. The rate is good in Ontario and in a few western provinces, but the policies of the Government to lower the rate of unemployment right across the nation are inadequate. The advisory council to the Minister, appointed by the Minister and her predecessors, is saying very frankly that what is being done is not enough.

The Government's neo-Conservative, laissez-faire economic policies are misguided and are not working. The rate of full-time job creation is inadequate. It is overwhelmingly centred in southern Ontario and it has bypassed youth and older workers; nor is there any political will to deal effectively with part-time work, regional development, functional illiteracy, labour market adjustment, and the transfer from school to work by young people.

I urge the Government to increase its spending on training, employment, and education rather than to cut those budgets. Let the Government start by cutting the program for nuclear submarines and putting the money into something that will benefit all Canadians.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was most interested in the comments of the Hon. Member urging us to put more instead of less money into the government Estimates. I note that over the last few months there has been a number of suggestions by the Liberal Party for the Government to spend more money. For instance, at one stage the Liberal Party called for an increase in the budget for Indian Affairs and Northern Development. At another stage the Liberal Party called for more money to be spent on multiculturalism. Then another Liberal Member of Parliament called for $3 billion to be spent on child care spaces. In addition, I understand that the Liberal Party, if it is ever re-elected, will institute home delivery for everyone. As well, today we heard the Liberals suggesting very substantial farm subsidies. We know the Liberals want an increase in foreign aid spending, and they have called for more people to be eligible for spouses' allowances. They also want the unemployment insurance system to provide more benefits. They have suggested subsidization for prices paid to oil producers. Those are only a few of the suggestions for increases in spending made by the Liberal Party in the last few months.

Could the Hon. Member tell us how much all that will likely cost the Canadian taxpayers and from where will the money come?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, it is correct that we have suggested there be additional spending in many areas, areas which we believe would stimulate the economy because it is expenditure on investment rather than expenditure on matters which will do nothing to help the economy. It will be very difficult for us as Liberals to match the side-show put on two weeks ago when the Government decided to spend $163 million in one constituency simply to win one by-election. That has been worked out to, I think, around $6,000 per elector in Lac-Saint-Jean. When the Government wants to win a by-election it starts spending money like crazy without any attention to what the outcome of the expenditure will be.

Let me say that there are areas where we must spend more money. We must do it in order to bring about social justice, and we must spend more money to stimulate the economy. The area I was talking about, training and education, is as much an investment in infrastructure of this country as investment in airports, ports, roads, and economic infrastructure. A trained work force is essential for a modern economy. To cut money in training our work force and putting people to work is complete nonsense. It is the kind of thing one cannot stop and start easily. Once it is stopped it is very difficult then to start it up and hope to bear the fruit of that start-up in a short period of time.

We all know that it takes five to six years to train an engineer after university. It takes a long time to train archaeologists, metallurgists, and so on. Trained personnel are not trained overnight. Once you cut programs for these people and they become unemployed, or there is no opportunity for young people and middle-aged people to go into these fields of work, you are left without skilled workers and professionals for a period of time. I see, in Toronto, in the area from which the Hon. Member comes, there is now a shortage of skilled workers. Of course, what happens is, we have a shortage of skilled workers in Toronto and a high rate of unemployed unskilled workers in Atlantic Canada and elsewhere.

• (1520)

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, not enough attention has been paid to training, employment and education in this country by this Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York East.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member referred to money announced to be spent in the Province of Quebec recently. The Hon. Member is aware that on June 9, the federal and Quebec Governments signed a Regional Economic Development Agreement for some $970 million over the next five years, and that agreement, of course, was one of a number of agreements, with every province and region in the country and that agreement was in fact replacing a prior ERDA Agreement with Québec, that was signed originally in 1985, and due to expire next year.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell the House if he believes that the federal Government should not enter into ERDA Agreements with the Province of Quebec, or other provinces, but should just let those funds lapse.

Mr. Allmand: Of course not, Mr. Speaker. We in this Party have been urging the signature of new agreements, with respect to regional development, for over a year now. It is unfortunate that we need a by-election to move the Government off their seats to sign the agreement.

Some Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I personally applied to this Government for an Employment Incubator Assistance Grant for my area, about two years ago, and I couldn't get one. I have heard other Members havetried to get them. We have here in the middle of the election campaign, without any application forms or any set program announced, all of a sudden an Employment Incubator Program approved for the Lac-Saint-Jean area. We are happy for Lac-Saint-Jean, but there appears an unevenness of approach to all constituencies in this country. If the Government had a policy, they would let us know what the policy was, and we would all be able to apply and take advantage of the program.

The way this Government is acting, simply trying to buy votes at a time of a by-election, or a general election, is not acceptable by the people of this country.

Mr. Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Guelph.

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to be able to participate in this debate today on the Estimates for the fiscal year 1988-89. In the time available to me, Sir, I would like to discuss one portion of the Estimates, mainly transfer payments. In doing so, perhaps I might indicate to the House and to members of the general public just how much money we do transfer to individuals, to other provinces, to organizations, during the course of the year.

The federal Government is involved very deeply in the whole question of transfers and in particular say to individuals. But if we look at the Main Estimates for this year, we will find that $57 billion, nearly half of the total federal Government budget, $57 billion, is included for transfer payments. Also, grants to individuals, groups, associations, other levels of government, but unlike the operating and the capital expenditures, these grants that are made to these organizations or individuals are not made in exchange for any good or any service. They are outright transfer payments.

Generally, the transfer of payments can be grouped into broad categories. Individuals, subsidies, payments made to organizations and groups and, finally, the payments made to other levels of government.

The dynamic, as we now know, the dynamic economy of this country, certainly for the last four years, is recognized as a challenge to this Government in particular. We must sustain it and we must be prepared to respond to the positive thinking of Canadians. Effective social policies will continue to be needed. If we look at the spending in the area of transfers to persons, to individuals, it represents over $22 billion. Twenty-two billion dollars, or 40 per cent of all the transfer payments made, are made to individuals.

I don't have the time here this afternoon to go through all of those transfer payments. I would like to pick out just a few and give some numbers. I don't think most Canadians realize just how much is involved. Canadian seniors, if we look at them, Sir, what a marvellous group they are. They need and deserve our support. Payments made to the elderly in the form of Old Age Security benefits, Spousal Allowances, Guaranteed Income Supplements, those alone will exceed $15 billion this current year. That is an increase of over $900 million over the previous year.

Mr. Speaker, that tells me that you have a Government sensitive to the needs of the people growing a little older, sensitive to the social needs of our time. An increase of $900 million in one year alone, that is over 7 per cent, Sir.

Let me break those down. Old Age Security payments, as you know, they are made to all eligible Canadians who are over 65 years of age. They will exceed $11 billion in the year in which we are talking. This is some 8 per cent more than last year. More people coming into the group and, of course, the amount going up, in terms of the CPI. The total Guaranteed Income Supplement, which many Canadians regretfully must be on, will amount to almost $4 billion this current year.

Spousal Allowances. As you know, we took a dramatic action in terms of Spousal Allowances early in our mandate. They are forecast at $525 million in the current year. You remember, as I said earlier, we extended that down to 60 years of age, so people between the ages of 60 and 64 could take advantage of that significant program.

Now, I think all Members of this House know that this Government is dedicated to defend and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family. The Main Estimates for 1988-89, include $2.6 billion in Family Allowance payments, to families with dependent children. Beginning in 1986, you will remember that the Child Tax Credit was increased and it will reach a level of $524 for each child in 1988, an increase of $140 a year since we restructured that particular tax section. Further, beginning in 1989, the Child Tax Credit will be indexed to increases in the CPI, in excess of 3 percentage points. Another one, obviously, and somewhat dear to my heart, is what we have done for veterans. The contributions and sacrifices made by Canadian veterans have long been held in deep respect by all Canadians. The Government continues to provide benefits, some $1.2 billion, to this group through Veterans' pensions, training and education assistance to the children of those who gave their lives for our protection, in World Wars I and II. This assistance is provided always through the Department of Veterans Affairs. It covers the cost of the Aging Veterans' Program, health care services not provided by the provincial schemes, and one of the ones that have been, in my estimate, Sir, the most significant. The veterans in the Home Program, improvement to the home program, which I know hundreds of veterans in my riding have taken advantage of.

There are other examples of transfers. Some examples of agricultural subsidies include those grants to producers which are under the Special Canadian Grains Program, freight assistance on western feed grains for livestock, assistance for the storage costs of grain, premiums on livestock, and subsidies on milk and other agricultural commodities. Payments to producers for named agricultural commodities under the Agricultural Stabilization Act will be in the order of $300 million for 1988-89.

We have demonstrated over and over again our commitment to producers and farmers, particularly in the West, through an additional contribution in 1988-89 of $289 million to the Special Canadian Grains Program. That is the balance of the $1.1 billion assistance package for 1987. In addition, as you know, we contributed over $1 billion in 1986 to help overcome the subsidy problem. The total support to grain producers for 1986 and 1987 under the Special Canadian Grains Program amounted to over $2 billion.

I could include as well, Sir, the $663 million for subsidies to railway companies under the Western Grain Transportation Act for this fiscal year alone. This reflects again the positive outlook of the Government in terms of helping those in difficulty and generating the Canadian economy across the country.

We make transfer payments of another $10 billion to various organizations and groups of people under a wide variety of programs including, for example, our Official Development Assistance Program to developing countries. Canada need not take a back seat in terms of our ODA or external aid. We contribute 0.5 per cent of our Gross National Product each year and not many countries do better than that. We continue to support the International Monetary Fund, and the Government is now embarked on a major change in how we develop our Official Development Assistance Program as a result of what Canadians told us when we travelled the country.

On another matter, we must recognize that almost $2 billion will be paid to organizations, corporations, groups, communities, employers, and businessmen to help improve the employability of Canadians through training and work experience programs, which programs are designed to take people from one job to another, to update people, to move them into the age of current technology, even to help people who, in many cases, do not know how to work. They have never had the opportunity to work and have to be told how to do it and what is required of them. We must teach them the discipline of the workplace.

I do not have the time today to go into all the details, but no review of the federal Government's expenditure plan, and in particular the broad category of expenditures called transfers, would be complete without some mention at least of the transfers to other levels of government. In 1988-89, cash transfers to the provinces, territories, and municipalities will amount to nearly $23 billion. This represents roughly 40 per cent of the total transfer payments or nearly 20 per cent of total budgetary Main Estimates. This does not include tax sharing with the provinces to give them tax room. The federal Government has backed off in certain areas so that the provinces can take them over. I think that is what all federal Governments must do in order to be fair in terms of tax distribution across the country.

Payments to other levels of government will, as in the past, continue to be channelled through a wide variety of transfer programs. There are unconditional programs, or general purpose transfers; general support arrangements, such as those in health and post-secondary education; and a variety of specific purpose transfers.

It is not my intention to deliver a history lesson to Members of Parliament, many of whom, I am sure, have more experience in this than I. I would, however, like to spend a few moments describing the mechanisms that have been implemented over the years to promote the other two aspects of intergovernmental fiscal relations and indicate how this Government has furthered their development.

With regard to fiscal harmonization, the measures that have been put in place, such as the tax collection agreements, the reciprocal taxation agreements, and the grants in lieu of municipal or local taxes—and I may say that in some instances that represents a lot of money to municipalities—are all intended to permit the federal and provincial Governments to exercise fully their respective taxing powers in such a way as to foster fiscal harmonization and eliminate needless complexity in the income tax system. It is always going to be complex, but the very fact that the federal, provincial, and municipal Governments have been able to share some of these responsibilities has made it much simpler than it might have been.

Over the years the federal Government has recognized the provinces' demands for greater flexibility and autonomy in pursuing the achievement of certain social and economic objectives. We have agreed to various changes which have been requested such as tax credits and tax rebates. However, in permitting these changes the federal Government has had to be selective in order to ensure the progressivity of the combined federal and provincial tax systems, to maintain the administrative benefits which accrue from an integrated tax system, and to avoid compromising the operation of the Canadian economic union by the erecting of fiscal barriers to the normal flow of capital. We must recognize that the provinces have their rights as well. I think all federal Governments have tried to be very sensitive to that.

I spoke earlier about the Municipal Grants Act under which the federal Government will transfer funding to certain municipalities in lieu of the collection of taxes on federal property. That is of some significance in my riding and I know that it is of very great significance in the ridings of some Members where there is a preponderance of federal government land and buildings. Consider the situation right here in Ottawa if the federal Government did not follow through on its promise under the Municipal Grants Act.

It is true that much of Ontario has been very prosperous and that some other provinces are doing very well. However, that prosperity does not extend across the whole of the country. The equalization program is meant to overcome that regrettable situation. It has been a major source of revenue for certain provincial Governments. Transfers under the Canada Assistance Plan and Equalization Payment Fund represent 40 per cent or more of total provincial revenues of the Atlantic provinces, one third of the total provincial revenues of Quebec and Manitoba. In the past, EPF and CAP payments represented between 20 per cent and 25 per cent of the provincial revenues of Ontario, Saskatchewan and British Columbia, and about 15 per cent in Alberta.

It would be a mistake for someone to believe that all is well in Ontario and that it receives no funding at all from the federal Government. Ontario is a great recipient of EPF alone for health care and post-secondary education. Probably 50 per cent or more of the post-secondary system in Ontario is funded by the federal government transfers.

The most important component of current federal-provincial arrangements for lower income provinces, with which we should be concerned today, is the fiscal equalization program which has been referred to as the cornerstone of Confederation because it shares across the country. It was introduced as a distinct program in 1957 and has continued to receive the support of all Parties in this Parliament since that time. We recently extended it for a further five-year period.

The Constitution of 1982 states that the purpose of these payments is to ensure that provincial Governments have sufficient revenues to provide reasonably comparable levels of public service at reasonably comparable rates of taxation. That is an important point in terms of our Confederation.

Payments under this program raise the per capita revenue generating capacity of the lower income provinces to a prescribed level which is currently the average per capita revenue generating capacity of the Provinces of Québec, Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and British Columbia.

There are absolutely no conditions applied to these funds. Provinces are free to use them as they wish, to raise their level of public service, lower the level of taxation, or undertake some combination of both. The largest transfers are those arrangements made through Established Programs Financing. That is the program I mentioned earlier and about which I grew to know a great deal in my career. Under these arrangements, the federal Government, via a combination of cash and tax transfers, contributes on an equal per capita basis to the financing of provincial and territorial insured health services, extended health care services and post-secondary education. The total cash and tax transfers under the EPF arrangements is expected to be $18.5 billion in 1988-89. That is a 5.3 per cent increase over last year. The provinces may do what they wish within that general bound.

In conclusion, the Government has repeatedly stated its commitment to the objective of national reconciliation, social justice, economic renewal and constructive internationalism. These Estimates that were tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) show a reaffirmation of those objectives and a reaffirmation of what this Government has and will continue to stand for.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have news for the Hon. Member for Guelph (Mr. Winegard) about the deeds of the Government he supports that will most likely dampen his unwarranted enthusiasm.

I will put it in the context of the environment, particularly the environment in Toronto where the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spoke to an international scientific conference. The Prime Minister attempted to portray the Government of Canada as a great protector and defender of the environment.

In these very Estimates before us in the House today for debate, the facts and figures reveal the real face of the Government, which has mercilessly cut the Department of the Environment since it took office in 1984. Let me give the facts that will remove the facade the Prime Minister attempted to erect this morning.

First, let us look at the over-all picture. Since September, 1984, when the Government took office, the Department of the Environment has steadily and systematically lost to inflation. Its estimates have not managed to keep at par with inflation while other Departments have managed to do better than inflation. The net result of this erosion caused by inflation has been a loss of $71 million in revenue to Environment Canada just to keep at par with where it was. The Member for Guelph and the Member for York East (Mr. Redway), who is very keen on the environment, will be interested in those figures.

What does that mean in terms of people? The net result is that over 300 person-years have been lost to the Department. When we raise this matter in committee, the Minister defends his position by saying that while his Department is not doing well with inflation, other Departments are developing environmental policies across the board. While this may sound good in theory, the fact is that these Departments have been carrying out these functions for virtually the last 10 years. Whether it is the Department of Agriculture, CIDA, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Energy, Mines and Resources, Fisheries and Oceans, National Health and Welfare, Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the National Research Council, the Science Council or the Department of Transport, those functions are nothing new. There is nothing new going on here in terms of environmental programs and mandates that other Departments have.

• (1550)

Who is the Minister trying to fool with that kind of explanation? The fact is that when one starts to analyse the situation, one finds that, in addition to loss to inflation in the range of $71 million and 336 person-years over the last four years, there is cancellation of programs. For example, there is the cancellation of the Guelph-Toronto Toxic Chemical Research Centre in the very city from which the Hon. Member for Guelph comes. That was an $8 million project. We find a cut of $3.8 million, resulting in a loss of 72 person-years, in the Canadian Wildlife Service. We find the termination of the Water Resources Research Grants Program. There is the elimination of research of renewable energy sources at the National Research Council. This is at a time when we are becoming more and more conscious of the fact that in the long term non-renewable sources of energy will be running out and we must develop the know-how and technology needed to replace gradually non-renewable sources of energy. But the Government cuts research in that field. That is a shame.

Research on PCBs was eliminated. Research on toxic chemicals at the National Research Council was eliminated as well. On top of that, as you know, Mr. Speaker, there was the closure of the Marine Ecology Laboratory in Nova Scotia in recent months.

If Members would like a detailed analysis of what happens this year in the Estimates before us for debate and scrutiny, I will take Members through them step by step. Referring to the 1988-89 Estimates of Environment Canada, first, we find that the Department of the Environment this year has lost 1 per cent to inflation. It has lost 78 persons. The breakdown is rather revealing. In conservation and protection, we find in the field of inland water activities, Environment Canada this year is losing 14 persons. In the field of conservation of wildlife, budget cuts mean the elimination of five officials. In the field of management and common support, which is a general term to describe technical people, support people and office staff, no fewer than 36 people will be lost this year. So much for conservation and protection.

Let us move to the weather services. Here we find a reduction in weather services of 32 person-years this year. Last year there were 1,925 people employed across Canada. This year there will be 1,893, a loss of 32 persons. In addition to that, in the climate services, which is an emerging issue—we hear and read in the media about the greenhouse effect, the changes in climate in the years ahead—one person is eliminated. To make it even more ironic, this year the Government will close the weather stations in Vancouver harbour and in Sachs harbour. That is not all.

We can look at Parks Canada which plays an important role for a variety of reasons. Canadians enjoy our parks. There is a recreational and cultural component there. There is also a number of jobs that depend on the activities of Parks Canada. Nine individuals will be out this year in the Resource Protection Branch of Parks Canada. In the very necessary activity of providing information and interpretation services to visitors, the Government is laying off 21 individuals from Parks Canada. When it comes to parks maintenance, we find in the Estimates a lay-off of 25 individuals. With respect to research and planning and policy development, which is very important in a Crown agency of that size, we find a lay-off of seven persons. That is not the end of it.

We used to have a Wildlife Toxicology Fund. This fund was meant to carry out research in wildlife that would give us signals and information as to what is happening inside the bodies of wildlife species with respect to accumulation of toxic chemicals and traces of toxic substances so we know what is happening in the food chain. It is a very important alert system for human beings. It is highly regrettable to discover that this fund was reduced from $1 million a year to one-third of a million dollars in the Estimates of 1988-89.

In addition, there will be the termination of the Sewage Treatment Facility Construction Program. Last year there was still left something like $2 million. This year we find nothing. I see present here a former Mayor of York East who is, I am sure, extremely receptive to this kind of problem. He has demonstrated that in committee on a number of occasions in a very progressive and helpful manner.

The Government of Canada, at a time when everyone is increasingly preoccupied about the quality of our water, at a time when the Science Council of Canada produces a report called the Year 2020 and the condition of our waters at this time, we find in 1988 the elimination of such a program. The municipalities every year at the convention of a Federation of Canadian Municipalities repeatedly asked for a federal participation. My Party is committed to provide the federal share in an amount that runs into the billions of dollars.

We find the cancellation of the Sewage Treatment Facility Construction Program, but the Government is capable and has the political will to find the necessary money to build nuclear submarines. For that project the priority is valid, but for the protection of our waters, the political will has disappeared. There is nothing left. This is the first year in my recollection that the fund available for the construction of sewers is zero. That is quite an indictment. It is a sham and a real disgrace.

The last item in the review of Environment Canada's budget for this year is in its development budget. Parks Canada has lost almost $4 million. In other words, it has lost the funds that are required to maintain and expand its network. It is interesting to compare the performance of Environment Canada, the issue which the Prime Minister invoked as being a high priority in Toronto only a few hours ago, in terms of its Estimates with that of other Departments. What do you find? You will find, Mr. Speaker, that in this fiscal year the budget of Environment Canada goes up 3.6 per cent, which is roughly one percentage point below the rate of inflation.

• (1600)

How does the over-all Government increase in performance run this year? We find that the spending of the Government of Canada increases by 8 per cent in this fiscal year. Yet if we start to examine Department by Department we find some pretty startling information.

For instance, we find that the budget of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources goes up 30 per cent, while that of the Department of Agriculture goes up 24 per cent. We find that the budget of the Department of Fisheries and Oceans increases by 23 per cent while the budget of the Department of Finance manages to command an increase of 13.5 per cent. We find that the budget of the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs goes up 11.5 per cent, while the Department of Communications budget goes up 11 per cent. We see that the budget of the Department of National Defence increases by 8.3 per cent, while the budget of the Department of Transport increases 7.3 per cent.

Yet what does Environment Canada get in this fiscal year? It gets 3.6 per cent. At the same time we have in Toronto the Prime Minister of Canada making grandiose speeches about his Government's priorities for the environment, a grandiose mask that he puts on. Contrast that with the reality of the figures that are embedded in the Estimates where the facts are to be found. What a sham. What a Government we have.

It is a Government of public relations, of claims that are not supported by facts. It preaches one way and acts another. It is simply disgusting. That is all I can say to you, Mr. Speaker.

It is the same Government that in 1985 decided to impose a 6 per cent tax on insulation materials and equipment that go with the maintenance and construction of renewable energy machinery. It is the same Government which in the Budget this year had not one item that directly or indirectly related to the protection of the environment or incentives that would give encouragement to the development of an environmental industry in Canada. There was not one word on accelerated write-offs on pollution abatement equipment to create new industries and new jobs for which competitors, such as Japan, are extremely active these days.

Japan knows that there is an emerging market in this area. It knows that there is a potential for new jobs and for markets abroad. Yet there was not one word in the Government's Budget despite the great claims of the Prime Minister in Toronto this morning. There was nothing in the Budget of this year on energy efficiency—not one word on energy conservation. Yet we know that Japan, for instance, is a very clever and capable energy efficient nation. It is capable of producing at lower costs its products because it knows how to use to its maximum the limited energy that it is dependent upon.

There was nothing in the Budget, something which I said before and something which I will not belabour unduly, with respect to helping municipalities modernize and build sewers and water treatment plants.

One conclusion is only fair and justified in relation to these Estimates and to the Budget this year. It is that they make a mockery of the claim of the Minister of Environment, which he made in 1986 in this House when he said: "We continue as a Government to be totally committed to protecting the environment". It makes a mockery of that sentence. It puts the Prime Minister in a most embarrassing position for saying one thing in Toronto in the presence of an international audience, claiming that the Government gives environment a high priority on its agenda, compared to the reality of the Estimates and the reality of the Budget of this year.

I would like to say a few words if time permits about trade because under the Estimates we have to deal as well with current issues. Trade is a very important matter that has an impact on the environment despite claims to the contrary made in the House by the Minister of the Environment.

It is very revealing to notice that if there has been one Department that is silent on the question of trade, a Department which has not produced a brochure claiming the miracles that the trade deal would achieve for Canada, it is the Department of the Environment. That is very revealing. There is not only that to consider but the fact that at Estimates time officials of the Department have confirmed that no internal study has been conducted as to what the impacts of the trade deal would be and how they would impact upon the environment. I am referring in particular to the question of pesticides which is included in the trade deal and the requirement in that section that American and Canadian regulations be harmonized.

What does harmonize mean? No one knows. What will be the repercussions of harmonizing American with Canadian regulations? No one knows because no one has studied them.

In Question Period there have been a number of questions in your presence, Mr. Speaker, on various occasions in which we have asked from this side of the House why beer is excluded from the trade deal. Not a word has been mentioned about water. Why has lumber been referred to in the trade deal as being exempted but there has not been a word about water? Why was processed fish mentioned as an item to be exempted by the deal and not water?

We cannot get an answer to those questions. Yet we find it very strange that the Government would go to great lengths to identify and itemize three items in our economy to be exempted but has not mentioned water which is such an important natural resource to us.

Time does not permit me to go into greater depths in a debate such as this on the implication of the trade deal on the environment. I thank you for the opportunity to speak, Mr. Speaker, as well as for your patience.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I have had a good deal to do with the Hon. Member in the past four years. I have come to feel that he is a most sincere Member of Parliament, particularly in his dealings with the environment. I know of his commitment to the environment. However, as he went through the Estimates of the Department of the Environment for this year I had the sense that he equated wholly and solely the question of an effective federal environmental policy with the question of how much money is being spent on it.

One of the items I noticed, for instance, was that he talked about the fact that the weather service was going to be reduced by one person. In May of this year I had occasion to travel to the Northwest Territories and to visit Resolute Bay, among other places. We have a weather station at Resolute Bay. I had an opportunity to see that weather station. It was pointed out to me that a very sophisticated computerized piece of machinery had been installed recently at that weather station which would give us a great deal more information about the weather than we had ever had before. It would give us a great deal more information about the ozone layer over the Arctic than we have ever had before. In fact, it had already disclosed important new facts about the ozone layer in the Arctic. The strange and interesting part is that all of this was going to be accomplished with the elimination of one person from the weather service. I do not think the Hon. Member's conclusion follows that, by throwing more money at a thing and by having more people on staff, automatically there will be a better Department of the Environment, by any manner of means.

• (1610)

The Hon. Member is most sincere in his comments. I know that he is really expressing a frustration with the Liberal Government of which he used to be a member. As the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) said earlier in the debate during the five years that preceded the Government taking office, when the Hon. Member was a member of the former administration, government spending went up an average of 15 per cent a year across the board. In spite of that, as the Hon. Member is aware, there was no program developed with targets for reducing acid rain emissions, as there has been with this Government. There was no program with targets for reducing nitrogen oxide emissions, as there has been with this Government. There was no agreement between Canada, the United States, the State of New York, and the Province of Ontario with respect to reducing the amount of toxic chemicals going into the Niagara River and the Great Lakes, as there has been with this Government. There was no national park on Ellesmere Island under the previous Government, in spite of that 15 per cent increase in spending each year, but there is under this Government. There was no national park on the Bruce Peninsula, but there has been under the Government. In addition to all of that, there was not a Canadian Environmental Protection Act under the former Government of which the Hon. Member was Minister of the Environment, but there has been under this Government.

I would like to put it to the Hon. Member, does he not really wish that he would be, should be, and could be a member of this Government, a Government with a truly effective environmental policy?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) is a good politician, but a poor psychologist. In interpreting people's frustrations he should do better. I am sure he could do better if he were to try a bit harder.

The point that he made on the sophistication of computerized equipment in weather reporting is quite accurate. The statistics of the Estimates this year that I put on record refer to a cut of 32 people in the weather service and one person in the climate service for a total of 33, which is a considerable cut that cannot only be attributed to sophisticated computerized equipment. In addition to that, in Vancouver the closing of a weather station is a development which is rejected very strenuously by the fishermen's union because they have had a number of instances where even the most sophisticated equipment could not forecast a sudden change in weather as a human being does by way of binocular observation. Therefore, that is a very serious matter from the point of view of preventing the loss of life.

In analysing the performance of the previous Government—the Hon. Member was not in Parliament at that time, otherwise he would know—one finds that in March, 1984, the Liberal Government launched two initiatives, a federal-provincial one in which all seven provinces including the Province of Ontario, which was represented by the Party to which he belongs, agreed to a reduction program of sulphur dioxide. That commitment in March, 1984, was renewed in June, 1984, when the economic and financial distribution of responsibilities was tackled.

In the same period Canada also launched an international initiative on sulphur dioxide, which led to some 21 nations getting together and agreeing that we should have a protocol, which was subsequently signed in Helsinki in 1985. In regard to sulphur dioxide, it is on record as being a good day's work before the Government of the Hon. Member came to power.

On NIX I cannot say the same. That summer we launched the concept of having a public consultations force first under the auspices of Transport Canada on car and truck emissions. Those consultations were conducted and completed in December, 1985, and then carried out by way of regulations which came into effect under the present Government. I am glad and readily recognize that evolution, but the Hon. Member for York East should not make the mistake of thinking that the world began in September, 1984. It would be historically naive, and he is too sophisticated a man to be naive. I know him well enough and I respect him for that.

On the creation of parks, we are happy that Ellesmere was created. It is in addition to the 21 or 22 national parks that were created in preceding decades by successive Liberal and Conservative Governments. I do not think that national parks is the monopoly of any Party. We all believe in that policy. We are glad to see Ellesmere added. In addition, both Ellesmere and Bruce Peninsula came pretty close to being announced before September, 1984, but things being complicated in life, one does not always get his or her way when he or she wishes things would happen.

Nevertheless, I do appreciate the question from the Hon. Member. I can assure him that I am very happy where I am.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity this afternoon to say a few words in connection with the matter before the House, which is officially referred to as an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1989. That is a large mouthful. In simple terms it boils down to something that we know in this House and the federal Government talks about as the main spending Estimates for 1988-89.

To the average Canadian it is not a question of spending Estimates, it is something that they know in their own terms as their Budget. Every Canadian has a formal or informal budget by which he or she spends his or her money. By and large Canadians know where their money is coming from, how much they will earn in a year, and how much they have available to spend. Therefore, they set their spending priorities in terms of their own budgetary arrangements in order to spend a certain amount and hopefully save a certain amount of that total income.

One of the things that differs between the average, ordinary Canadian and Government is that the ordinary Canadian cannot spend more than is coming in, whereas Government always seems to have that facility. In fact, on a regular basis it seems to spend more than it earns, or that it takes in through the tax system whether it be income taxes, customs or excise taxes, or federal sales taxes. The Canadian public knows one cannot spend more than is taken in, unless one borrows some money to pick up the difference. That is what has been happening for a substantial number of years. That is why we have the enormous accumulated deficit that we have, and that is why we have an ongoing series of annual spending deficits. Fortunately, however, in the last four years, those have been getting progressively less, and now we are under $30 billion a year, but $30 billion a year is still a heck of a lot of money and it is still a great problem for the Government and for all Canadians when trying to get a handle on the finances of Canada.

I have always tried to follow the principle in public life, whether municipal or federal, that Canadians as a whole want to see the Government looking after their money and spending their money as effectively and as efficiently as possible and keeping the waste down to an absolute bare minimum, if not eliminating it altogether. That is a principle with which all of us would agree. When we look at the spending Estimates or, in layman's terms, the Budget for 1988-89, that is the sort of thing that I feel and that I believe the Canadian public feels we should always keep in mind. If we are going to collect money in taxes and then spend it, how can we keep those expenditures to an absolute minimum and still do an effective job? How can we make sure that not a dollar of it is wasted?

This year, the proposed Main Estimates total something that, to the average Canadian, would boggle the mind. It totals something in the vicinity of $119 billion. That amount is broken down into a portion which is called statutory spending. That means that we have already passed laws saying that no matter what else happens, we will have to spend that money each and every year unless we repeal those laws. Then there is a portion called discretionary spending, and in that portion, we do have some leeway as to whether we spend more, less or the same amount in a given year.

Statutory spending is the kind of spending that most of us would not quarrel with whatsoever. It is spending on things like social transfer payments. I see the Hon. Stanley Knowles sitting at the Table. He knows how hard he fought for old age security, for unemployment insurance and for family allowances. All of these things are part of what we know as statutory expenditures, and part of the statutory authority for those expenditures involves indexation according to the Consumer Price Index or according to inflation.

Each year, regardless of what sort of deficit we are running and what kind of money we are bringing in, we have to continue to spend money in accordance with statutory requirements, and each year we have to spend more money because the statutes providing those funds provide for indexing in each and every year. That portion of the annual expenditures, the annual Estimates or the annual Budget of the Government, continue to rise as long as the Consumer Price Index continues to rise, and no one seems to have been able to do very much about that for a long time, probably since the 1930s, and none of us would want to go back to that time. It is inevitable that that portion of our expenditures will keep going up each year, whether we like it or not.

The second part has to do with discretionary expenditures. When we talk about discretionary expenditures, someone always suggests that we reduce some of them. We hear our colleagues in the Liberal Party and the NDP saying, "Oh, no, you can't reduce that expenditure, you should actually be spending more money on it rather than less". Whatever it is that we try to reduce, tighten up or spend more effectively and efficiently on, someone in either the Liberal Party or the NDP will say: "No, no, don't cut that, cut something else. We don't know what you should cut but don't cut that. In fact, you should be spending more money on that".

Mr. Nicholson (Niagara Falls): They only want to cut defence spending.

Mr. Redway: That's right. They do not want to do that either, though. Although members of the NDP say that we should not be spending money on nuclear-powered submarines, they do say that they themselves would spend at least that amount if not more on conventional weapons and another kind of defence system. They are not suggesting that anything should be cut; they are suggesting that there should be more expenditures.

How do we go about trying to ensure that the money we spend as a Government and as a Parliament is spent as efficiently and as effectively as possible? I could spend a long time on that, but I would like to touch on just two things. The first has to do with taking a close look at the way Government operates and seeing if there is not another way of doing it better. In that respect, I would like to single out one example of how Government can do something better, and in fact, how Government has been doing something better in the last four years.

I am talking about the question of cash management, the management of the cash the Government takes in and the matter of how it expends that cash. That is something that has been commented on before by the Auditor General. In his 1984 report, he had a good deal to say about the way we were managing our cash flow in Government and about the savings that could be effected if we did it differently.

The Public Accounts Committee, of which I am a member and of which I was a member in 1985, examined officials of the Treasury Board, the Finance Department and the Department of National Revenue. Through our questioning, we were able to identify and get commitments from these officials about things they would do to try to improve the cash management of the Government. In fact, as reported in the press in 1985, we got out of them that in the next year, the 1986-87 fiscal year, they would commit themselves to savings of something like $40 million through better cash management.

It is interesting to note that in March of this year, the President of the Treasury Board (Miss Carney) made an announcement on the steps that had been taken in cash management. Even better than the commitment made back in 1985, the President of the Treasury Board indicated that a progress report on cash management in the Government of Canada showed estimated savings by the end of the last fiscal year of some $220 million, and there was a forecast of further savings of $120 million for the current year, the year for which we are now debating the Estimates, and another $419 million in cash pulled back into the Consolidated Revenue Fund from Crown corporations.

It was estimated at that time that the total savings from improved cash management in the Government would reach the figure of $1.2 billion. That is a very substantial savings in revenue. It is a savings that has been accomplished by doing things better, not by doing things the same old way. This has shown that we can spend the people's money more efficiently and more effectively and not waste as much as we have been wasting. It shows that we can do things better, save some money and help cut back on the deficit without savaging the other spending Estimates that concern the Opposition so much.

How has this been accomplished? A number of things have been brought to bear. A number of new policies have been instituted, and I would like to touch on just a few of them. The first of these has to do with the way the Government pays its bills. In the past, as soon as the bill arrived, the Government issued a cheque. Even if the bill provided 30 days to pay for it, right away the cheque went out and the bill was paid. In fact, by using a process that all business utilizes, namely, paying bills due in 30 days in 30 days so that you do not have to pay an interest penalty but you are then not putting out money ahead of time, losing interest that you would get on it if it were sitting in your own bank account, by making payments on time rather than ahead of time it is estimated that the Government will save approximately $50 million each year.

• (1630)

Second, there is the whole question of making payments to Crown corporations, which need some extra infusion of cash because they are not taking in enough money to pay for all the things on which they spent. In order to save some money, to do things better and to manage our cash more effectively it was suggested that, instead of handing Crown corporations a lump sum payment once a year, perhaps we should make periodic payments to them when needed and not just hand money over to them when we get the bill which says we are supposed to pay them some money. The Government has been following that procedure in the last three years or so. As a result, instead of Crown corporations having a surplus of cash in their bank accounts while the Government was borrowing money to cover its immediate expenditures, money has been sitting in the Government's bank account. In the meantime, it is earning some interest. That has amounted to a saving of more than $400 million.

Other practices have been instituted as far as money management is concerned. One is the use of travellers' cheques and travellers' credit cards, a standard business and personal practice on the part of most Canadians, something which the Government had not been doing in the regular course of events. That is significant because each year the Government spends something in excess of $500 million on travel expenses for its employees. Any particular savings in that area obviously will be significant.

Another area is modern banking methods, the use of direct deposit of cheques and the electronic transfer of funds. This is something which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was Leader of the Opposition spoke about prior to the last election. He spoke about the way in which money could be saved. The Government is now starting to institute this sort of policy and there is more coming down the pipe very shortly of which I am personally aware. Again, there is more money to be saved by doing it better through better money management.

Another method is to ask people to pay the money owed to the Government. Instead of being slack and letting things slide we are now starting to ask for the money when it is due and getting it in. That has amounted to a savings of approximately $100 million over the last three years by asking people to pay their bills.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has amended the requirements with respect to withholding taxes by large corporations. Instead of the payments being made monthly they are required to be made twice monthly. That has had a one-time revenue impact of $1.2 billion for the Government of Canada. You can see that in all of these ways the Government has acted during the last three years on the advice of the Public Accounts Committee, the Auditor General, the initiatives of the President of the Treasury Board and other Ministers, and it has come up with some very substantial savings and ways of doing things better. That is the sort of thing in my view that I am looking for as a Canadian taxpayer. I am sure all other Canadians are looking for that as well.

I would like to comment on another way that we can do things better to make sure taxpayers' money is not wasted and is spent as effectively and efficiently as possible. It has to do with the way we treat the estimate or budget process as far as Government is concerned. The estimate or the budget process as you know, Mr. Speaker and as I know, is really at the root of the British parliamentary system. This is a process whereby, theoretically at least, you and I and the other Members of Parliament sitting here are supposed to control the expenditures of government. The Government is supposed to come to us cap in hand and say, "We need money to spend this year. Will you please grant us the spending authority?" That is not the way it works in practice. The Government puts together its spending Estimates. Hopefully, the Government is very careful in the way it is put together, and the Minister of State for the Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) indicated in his comments that that has been the case in the last four years because the average increase in expenditures in the last four years, as I understand it, has been only 3.7 per cent, less than inflation, whereas with the previous Government, for the five previous years the average increase was 15 per cent.

The Treasury Board and the Government have been careful, and I commend them for that. But we should be looking at a better way of doing things as far as Parliament and Members of Parliament are concerned. We should be looking at a process whereby there is a true estimates-budget committee which examines in detail the budgets of each Department and has the authority and the right to reduce spending expenditures and budget items so that Canadians can feel that Parliament is there to protect and to look after their dollars to make sure money is being spent effectively and not wasted. The only way we can really do that is if the Government will concede that its spending Estimates are not absolutely and essentially a matter of confidence in the Government. There is no reason why Parliament as a whole cannot act to reduce the Government's spending Estimates on any particular item or across the board or why the Government should have to feel that it is a vote of non-confidence in the Government. For heavens' sake, the next day or the same day a motion can be put before the House saying, "Does this House have confidence in the Government?" I am sure that 99.99999 per cent of the time the House would pass that motion of confidence notwithstanding the fact that it felt the Government could have been cut back on its expenditures in one or two items.

That is why the Public Accounts Committee, in its twelfth report to Parliament, recommended that sort of process. That is why the Public Accounts Committee approved the other day a special study on improving parliamentary control of the budgetary process. That is why I hope that in the fall we will have a new type of budgetary process with an estimates committee which can actually reduce government expenditures without causing the Government to fall. That would be a very significant step forward in assuring the people of this country that they have a Parliament which will make sure and do everything in its power to see that their hard earned tax dollars are spent as efficiently and effectively as possible and are not wasted.

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to the speech made by the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway). Would he care to comment on the following situation, of which I am sure he is aware being a diligent Member of Parliament? He will know that in the City of Toronto in his own riding the unemployment rate, the last time I looked, was 3.9 per cent. It hovers between 3.5 per cent and 4.2 per cent. In some parts of Newfoundland the unemployment rate is around 28 per cent in some large regions, according to officials of Statistics Canada. The Member will also know, having listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) last August talk about the OECD report on Canada's performance and growth, that part of the report said that in Canada in the last year the economic disparity between the regions was noteworthy for its starkness. The Member will also know that the Economic Council of Canada in October said that uneven regional growth in Canada is the most serious economic problem facing the country.

In view of those facts, of which I am sure the Hon. Member is well aware as are you, Mr. Speaker, would he care to comment on the fairness to the Atlantic region of Canada which contains one-tenth of all Canadians? Would he care to comment on the fairness of this Government putting into the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, an agency supposedly designed to assist Atlantic Canada to overcome the economic disparity, putting into that part of the budget 15 per cent of 1 per cent, a very, very miniscule commitment from this Government to a problem that has been identified as the most serious economic problem in Canada? To say that we will spend an additional $200 million, 15 per cent of 1 per cent of the national budget of Canada, surely does not sound like a commitment by this Government to overcome this problem.

I know the Hon. Member is from Toronto, and I know the people of Toronto are doing very well financially in this country, in terms of unemployment rates and whatnot, but the people of Atlantic Canada are still suffering. I am afraid this Government has not seen fit to do anything about it. I would like to ask for his comments on that. I am sure he is sympathetic to that, even though he is from a part of the country that is doing very well.

Mr. Redway: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his comment, his question. I am pleased that he has drawn attention to the fact that, according to OECD figures, which represent figures for the industrialized nations of the western world, over the last four years Canada has had the best rate of job creation of any country in the industrialized western world. Over those years, Canada has had the best rate of economic growth, generally, of any of the countries in the industrialized western world.

The Hon. Member pointed out the fact that in the Metropolitan Toronto area, in particular, the employment situation has been extremely good, and there is no question about that. In fact, the latest figures that I have show that the unemployment rate is in fact less than what the Hon. Member referred to. I believe they are presently at the rate of 3.2 per cent, and traditionally, economists have considered 3 per cent as full employment.

So, it is quite clear that in the Metropolitan Toronto area, there is full employment even in the traditional sense of the economists of the Second World War era, that now, the economic situation in Metropolitan Toronto is excellent, indeed. That can be seen regularly by the fact that there are signs in virtually every business window, help wanted signs, asking people to come in because they desperately need help.

I am aware that there is a very substantial rate of unemployment in the Province of Newfoundland, but I am also aware that that has fallen as well over the last four years. The most recent figures, and unfortunately I don't have up-to-date ones—but the most recent figures I have in front of me are from December, 1984, to January, 1988. In that period of time there was a drop in the unemployment rate in the Province of Newfoundland by 6.4 per cent, over the rate in September of 1984, when this Government took office.

Now, I realize that people in Newfoundland do not necessarily want to come to Toronto to work, even though there are jobs in Toronto. That is understandable. I certainly would not want to contribute to the depopulation of Newfoundland by suggesting that all Newfoundlanders, or a good portion of them, should come to Toronto to seek employment.

We do have a very interesting problem now in this country, where we have an actual shortage of help in a good many areas in the Metropolitan Toronto area, while we have a surplus of people who are unemployed in other areas of the country.

The employers in Metropolitan Toronto would dearly love the people from Newfoundland to come to join them and to obtain work there. Alternatively to that, the employers in Metropolitan Toronto say to me, "If the people of Newfoundland and other parts of the country, where there is unemployment, do not want to come to Toronto, we need workers. We understand that they would not want to come. We understand that they do not want to depopulate their own communities and their own provinces, but if they do not want to do that, we do need workers. We do need them desperately. Please allow an increase in immigration from other countries so that people will come to Toronto and fill these jobs that are desperately needed".

I agree with the Hon. Member, that there is still a problem, in spite of the fact that progress has been made, not only in Toronto and in Newfoundland and all across the country, as the Hon. Member knows, but there is a very substantial improvement. In fact, we have in the country today, I think everyone would have to agree, the greatest prosperity that Canada has ever experienced, although that does not say that it couldn't be better and that there are not other parts of the country where we wouldn't like to see it better.

I wonder if the Hon. Member would be prepared, in return for further commitments of effort and assistance on the part of the people in central Canada, in Metropolitan Toronto, to support a policy of increased immigration to this country so that we could actually get more people to do the jobs that are there waiting to be done in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

Mr. Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I found that exchange a very interesting one. It is no wonder that the people of Newfoundland, the Maritimes and the West look with such aggrieved eyes upon the City of Toronto. The Hon. Member just suggested that if the people from Newfoundland, and presumably the rest of the country, do not want to move to Toronto, and presumably in large numbers constitute a portion of the food lines and victims of a housing shortage there, then we should fill the need in Toronto by inviting more immigrants. No one more than I favours increased immigration to Canada, under the proper circumstances, in which we have the kind of economic growth that would allow that immigration not only to occur but to lead to the prosperity of Canada.

First of all we should take cognizance of the fact that, in all probability, those invited to Toronto from Newfoundland or elsewhere to fill the job vacancy needs, would likely not have the kind of training they ought to have in order to fill those jobs, and that would be because of the decrease in expenditures for training that this Government has forced upon the country since it came into office.

My hon. colleague on the Liberal benches indicated earlier that they have cut, since coming to office, programs for training from $2.2 billion to $1.5 billion. It seems to me that it is impertinent and arrogant for Toronto to say, "We are doing great, come on down, and if you don't want to come down and leave your home, then come on, let's have somebody take your place in Toronto". I think that is just unacceptable. But, Mr. Speaker, that would be consistent with the attitude of this Government and is related indeed to some of the questions that I had hoped to have had an opportunity to explore in my intervention this afternoon.

In thinking about this debate, I became aware of some speculations about the purposes of free trade. You will recall that at the time that this Government came to office, there was a great deal of optimism in the big business sector of this country that this was a Government that at last would give the cutting of the deficit a high priority, cut the number of civil servants, cut down on social programs, and in general use as victims the poor, the elderly, and others, in order to enhance the profitability of major industry and major investors.

• (1650)

You will recall, however, that among the initiatives was the cut-back on pensions through deindexation. I am sure you will remember the confrontation between a little old lady and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) before these very doors. She convinced the Prime Minister that it would lead to a rather severe political punishment if the Government proceeded with the approach of enhancing the comfort of big business in Canada at the expense of ordinary Canadians who have perceived this land for a very long time as being socially just. For all three Parties, until this Party came to office, social justice had a very high priority and it was not tampered with in the interests of the relatively few rich. This lesson learned by the Prime Minister was kind of disappointing but gave the Prime Minister an opportunity to think in other terms.

Someone has suggested a scenario during the meeting between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States. The Prime Minister was expressing a great deal of regret that he was unable to pursue this kind of approach to cutting social expenditures, and the President of the United States said, "Well, Brian, if you were more like us you would not have problems with people protesting when your Government attempts to cut back on social programs".

He suggested an approach which would permit the Government to fulfil the requests of its large contributors, the big business people and big corporations which have wanted cutbacks in government expenditures and lay-offs of civil servants and so on. He said that one of the first things to do was to start privatizing and start deregulating. He said that in order to deal with the question of social expenditures, unemployment insurance, medicare, pensions and all the rest, he was going to have to become more like the United States, and that the only way to become more like the United States was to become commercially part of the United States. He said that if the Government did that, business decisions would be made in the American competitive context in which there is no medicare, no unemployment insurance, no proper workers' compensation program, and no family allowance. He said that the pressure which would be exerted by the threat of American companies saying that they would bring their subsidiaries home and so on would ensure that we cave in, but that it would be business pressure and the inevitable consequence of the competitive, market-driven environment which will be established when free trade is established.

The President of the United States said, "By God, Brian, you won't have to stand up as the Prime Minister and as a government and say that this is being done, it will inevitably be done". The Prime Minister said that that was a good idea, that up until now he has been against free trade but if that is the only way he can cut social expenditures without suffering the political consequences, then maybe this is what we should do.

My hon. colleague says that that is not what the Prime Minister described as the reasons for entering into the free trade agreement. He said that the free trade agreement would allow Canadian businesses to have a larger market. To those of us who said that that is not what this is all about, that it is about all that Canada is about, he said that those who oppose this do not believe that Canadians can compete, that we are the Chicken Littles who think the sky will fall in if we are faced with competitiveness with the United States.

We had to look at this seriously. Did the Prime Minister really think that Canada would be in a position to survive in a competitive environment? Let us look at what has been transpiring in this country as a consequence of government action or inaction and see whether there is any realistic opportunity for us to compete.

One of the clear elements of competitiveness in international trade is research and development, the availability of a highly educated workforce and a well trained workforce. If we are going to compete with a country like the United States we had better have the capacity to innovate, to create new products, and to enhance our manufacturing.

The question which must then be posed is whether Canada is now or is likely in the immediate future to be in a position to compete effectively and whether the Government is doing the things necessary for that competition. In other words, the question is whether the Government really believes that the country is in a position now, or will be in the short term, to compete with the United States or any of the other OECD countries on the basis of what exists or those initiatives which have been taken.

Let us look at our situation. It has been repeated over and over again in this House that Canada's rate of expenditure for research and development is only one half of that of the other OECD countries. Canada spends only 1.34 per cent of its GNP on research as compared to about 2.5 per cent spent by other countries. We rank twelfth in the rate of research expenditure among the OECD countries.

Japan has 240 scientists and engineers per 100,000 population, the United States has 260 per 100,000, and we have 90. With regard to the percentage of research investment in this country done by industry as compared to the other players, Canada's research effort is funded by industry only to the extent of around 50 per cent as compared to as much as 70 per cent in, for example, Switzerland.

This is a ridiculous situation which obtains in our country which is symtomatic of our failure to have made the investments in research and development which we ought to have. It is ridiculous that 80 per cent of the equipment used for resource extraction in this country is imported. Eighty per cent of the equipment required for getting our oil, coal, and minerals out of the ground is imported.

I am sure my hon. colleague from St. John's East understands that if we were really being competitive those big business people, mainly foreign-controlled, would have invested in manufacturing capacity. In fact, this country suffers a $7 billion technology deficit in trade. This figure has doubled in the last 10 years. The whole thing deteriorates.

When we look at government promises to increase the commitment to research and development, what do we find? Since the present Government has come to office, research and development expenditures have actually decreased. They have decreased as a percentage of government expenditures in every year since the Government has been in power, this in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister has made innumerable promises to make Canada a leader in research and development. He has failed utterly. Granted, there has been a lot of symbolism and a lot of rhetoric.

We must congratulate the Hon. Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) who has done a journeyman's job of trying to sell the notion that research and development ought to be increased in this country. However, he has failed utterly with the Prime Minister. For example, the Prime Minister promised in January that an additional $1.3 billion would go into research and development and that of that some $200 million would go to the granting councils.

One of the interesting things which the Prime Minister did was to form an advisory committee on research. A member of that committee wrote a report which said that over the next two years there ought to be a doubling of the investment in the granting councils and that thereafter there ought to be a rate of increase of 1.5 per cent, the rate of increase in the Gross Domestic Product. Instead, $200 million has been spread over five years. That results in a 2.7 per cent increase for NSERC. There has been a significant increase in the commitment to the expenditure on the space station. It was supposed to cost $800 million. There was a great deal of concern expressed that this would distort expenditures in other areas of research and development which the country just as desperately needs.

• (1700)

Now we discover that it will not be $800 million, but $1.2 billion. A great part of the increased expenditure will come from the $1.3 billion in additional money in research and development that the Prime Minister promised. We learn further that there are likely to be increasing demands for increased expenditures for that space station.

The Government has set aside $240 million of that $1.3 billion for centres of excellence. A great deal of those expenditures will be concentrated in Ontario and Quebec which, as the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) has already recognized, have benefited to a great extent already.

Our comparative position with the rest of the world with respect to research has not significantly improved as a result of government action. I have cited the $1.3 billion promised by the Prime Minister, spread over five years. When the Government first came to office it cut expenditures in the Departments of Fisheries and Oceans, Environment, and Agriculture. It ravaged the National Research Council. Much of the increased expenditures being touted now really are a compensation for cuts made in the past.

The core of the issue is that there has been no net increase in the position of this country with respect to its competitiveness in research and development and consequently its general competitiveness, since the Government came to office. Free trade is supposed to be a great boost to our competitiveness. We understand that competitiveness is founded on capacity for innovation which, in turn, is dependent upon research and development. Everyone recognizes that as a consequence of free trade there will be a good deal more dominance in our economy by American owned companies.

One must recognize that one of the reasons for our pitiful performance in research and development has been that many of our industries owned by American and other foreign investors do very little research. Compared to Canadian-owned companies, American-owned companies spend about half for research. The rate of investment in research and development by Canadian-owned companies is about 9 per cent or 10 per cent of sales. However, the rate of investment in research and development by American-owned companies in Canada is about 4 per cent to 5 per cent of sales. The deficiency in the amount of investment in research and development by industry in this country is largely because our industries are dominated by foreign, particularly American-owned industries that have no reason to do research in Canada.

It is of particular interest to note the example of the Auto Pact. Although the Auto Pact has provided assurance of a certain level of employment and production in the automobile sector in Canada, one result has been the repatriation of all engineering design and research to the United States. My City of Windsor, which had a significant engineering and managerial capacity, no longer has it because of the tendency for the parent plants to concentrate research and development and management in the United States.

In spite of the fact that the Prime Minister said we were minor league with respect to research and development, little has been accomplished in this area in the last four years, whether it be in universities or industry.

This contrasts with a very vigorous and concentrated program to enhance research and development in all the countries against which we must compete. Of course, there is the question of universities themselves. I am sure the House is familiar with reports emanating from all across the country, most recently from Ontario, which indicate that our universities are in a sorry state. The Government has failed to ensure that the provinces have an adequate level of transfer payments. It has also failed to come to grips with the necessity that the provinces must pay their share. It is another example of tragic neglect.

If one looks at what has happened in the United States as compared to Canada in the last several years in terms of the recognition of the need to have a solid level of investment in universities and colleges, one must fear for the fate of our country's future when we are confronted with direct competition with the United States. The United States spends 25 per cent more of its GNP on universities than we do here.

The rate of increase in the level of funding of universities in Canadian provinces since 1983 has ranged from about 5 per cent to about 10 per cent. On the other hand, there has been roughly a 50 per cent increase in the rate of expenditure in places like Alabama and California. Through the United States there have been increases in the rates of funding for post-secondary education from 10 per cent to 60 per cent. In Canada it has been much less.

Surely this indicates that the Estimates we are discussing today, and the Government policy with respect to competition, have ignored an elemental fact in any trading relationship we will have with the rest of the world, let alone the United States. It is a prescription for dependency and for failure to obtain the kind of growth from innovation we might have had if we maintained our future independence and placed the investment in research and development and education and training to make this a prosperous country in the twenty-first century.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to comment on a couple of remarks made by the Hon. Member. Unfortunately, some of his assertions are false. I know he would be the first to want to correct them.

He said that over-all spending for research and science-related activities in Canada has decreased every year since the Government assumed its mandate. That statement is false. The over-all spending in these areas is measured in accordance with the Gross Domestic Product. We have experienced a spectacular growth in the economy. This rate of growth has outclassed every industrial nation in the world. If one measures our performance in research and development spending in accordance with the GNP, the Hon. Member would agree that spending has increased. I admit that we only made marginal gains in terms of the percentage of GNP we are spending on research and development. But we did keep pace with the growth, and it is a nominal 3.5 per cent. So there has been a 3.5 per cent real growth in the spending of R & D before we talk about the additional increases that have been made. Likewise, the Hon. Member said we have only boosted the granting council's funding from previous years by 2.7 per cent. That, too, is absolutely false. If the Hon. Member looked at the real figures he would discover that in the current five year projection, the rate of increase will be in the neighbourhood of 16 per cent.

• (1710)

The Hon. Member has been selective, but I do not blame him for that. It is true that the $1.3 billion has been made available as a result of the Prime Minister's announcement in January for research and development this year. There was a substantial increment last year, and I cannot predict, because I do not know what the growth of the economy will be next year, what moneys will be available to boost that effort next year. However, $1.3 billion is available this year. Of that amount, $200 million is given to the granting councils to be allocated to universities in the normal fashion. I am certain all of that money will go into basic theoretical and curiosity type research.

In addition, the Hon. Member knows we have announced a Centre of Excellence Program to which we have committed $240 million. That money also will be allocated by the funding council directly to universities. It is true that the program, of course, seeks to establish these critical linkages between government laboratories and the private sector, but any private sector participation in any of these programs will be supplemented with private sector contributions to the program. So the $240 million, I hope, will become $500 million, I do not know, but the federal Government is putting in $240 million and that money goes to universities.

In addition, the Hon. Member knows we have announced in connection with this program a scholarship program which will cost $80 million over a four year period. It will give 10,000 students over the four year period a scholarship that will encourage them to pursue these future oriented careers of which the Member spoke and in which there are critical shortages, such as engineering and the natural sciences. It will entice women to aim for those kind of future careers more than they did in the past. All in all, it is not a bad record when we compare it with what we inherited when we came on the scene.

My performance is measured against what we did before. As the Hon. Member knows, the performance of the previous Government was measured in bricks and mortar. The previous Government built buildings all over the place. I confess I am pleased we have facilities such as the Biotechnology Centre in Montreal, the Marine Dynamics Institute in St. John's, Newfoundland, and the Industrial Technology Centre in Winnipeg. Tens of millions of dollars were spent. But that was not research, it was construction.

As well, we had a so-called SRTC Program. When it was first started it was designed to encourage the private sector to spend more money on research. It did spend a lot of money, but it spent it on innovative tax accounting instead of industrial innovation, and $2 billion was lost over a 18 month period in property flips. We stopped that program. What I have put in place is a program that truly does give the private sector the incentive to do research. In fact, next to Singapore, Canada today has the most lucrative and advanced tax regime to encourage private sector research, and the results are showing in the sense that private sector has increased by 16 per cent its effort towards the total national research effort since I came on the scene.

Mr. McCurdy: The Minister of State for Science and Technology is a man I admire for his efforts not only on behalf of research and science but for what little success he has achieved with this Government. But in fact it has to be measured against the target which was described by the Prime Minister. He said: "In my term, Canada will achieve 2.5 per cent of GNP in investment and research". That has not happened.

The Minister says that I fail to tell the truth when I say that the rate of government expenditures for research and development have decreased. My God, these are figures from his own Department. In 1985-86, the rate of government expenditures for research dropped by 2.5 per cent. In 1986-87, it dropped by .3 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: False.

Mr. McCurdy: In 1987-88, it dropped by 1.3 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: False.

Mr. McCurdy: Those figures come from the publications of the Minister's own Department. With respect to this great $200 million that is going to be given to the granting council, what the Minister did not say is that that is going to be back end loaded. NSERC will receive 2.7 per cent in the next fiscal year out of the $200 million. The Minister no doubt will say there is additional money available from matching funds in the Industrial Matching Program. That is fine, but I am talking about the $200 million. Dr. Lortie, a member of the Prime Minister's own advisory council, said the level that has been accorded by Government should be doubled not only over five years but over two years. The Prime Minister's own advisory council is saying that what Government is doing is not nearly enough. We could have all of these weasel words that, yes, we have increased over-all Canadian expenditures for research and development because our percentage of GNP rate of expenditures has been maintained, but that is no excuse. What are we going to do, double the GNP next year and have our percentage devoted to research and development and once more claim that, yes, we spent a little more?

This country is far behind every other country against which it must compete—most particularly, the United States—in research and development. All the weasel words and all the little progress that has been made is not going to meet the needs of this country if it is going to compete, particularly in a free trade environment. The fact is that the Minister knows that in a free trade environment, our chances of ever developing in terms of adequate science or research will be utterly killed because the United States Government right now spends some $70 billion a year on research and development. Almost half of that is for defence research, or it uses defence research as an excuse for expenditures. We are expected to compete against that with a Government which puts pennies here and there and still has not decided what it is going to do with the other half of the $1.3 billion the Prime Minister said we are going to make available for progress.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I begin, I cannot help but regret publicly the inclination of some within the House to equate progress and expenditure money as necessarily being synonymous because, unfortunately, as you know, Mr. Speaker, that type of comparison in itself can be very incomplete and can in fact be very misleading. Unfortunately, when one looks at Estimates, one talks entirely in terms of the dollars and cents. So there is, naturally, this inclination to think in terms of money spent as somehow demonstrating in itself a commitment or lack thereof on the part of any Government towards the objectives of those moneys being spent.

• (1720)

I would suggest in passing that that type of philosophy while it might be, to some degree politically popular can, in the long run, be injurious to a country. It has led to some of the excessive spending which we have seen in this country and in others in the last decade or so.

The objective before the House today is to talk about the Estimates. I am pleased to be able to do so with specific reference to the Estimates of the Department of Agriculture. In the absence of the Minister I am pleased as his Parliamentary Secretary to be able to explain and, if necessary, to defend the Estimates before the Members of the House.

Having done that, and without any excessive remarks on my part, I can say in all conscience that I believe that this Government's record and commitment to agriculture is unprecedented in the history of Canada. I readily concede that the problems which we have encountered have been very substantial. That certainly justifies the expenditures of the moneys which we are now presenting to the House.

I can also say that this is not the first time in Canadian history that we have had problems in agriculture, nor will it be the last time. While we cannot resolve those problems through the mere expenditure of money, I feel that the commitment of the Government, and the commitment which is most evident in the work and leadership provided by the various Ministers responsible for agriculture and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is unprecedented. The Prime Minister has met with national farm leaders on, I believe, seven different occasions.

I say to those who are directly concerned with these Estimates that I think that the number of new programs which we initiated and the support which we are providing financially and otherwise does without a doubt indicate the commitment which the Government has to agriculture, and appropriately so. Because of the problems to which I have already referred it is no surprise that our support of agriculture financially is increasing. Despite the partisan differences that sometimes surface in the House I think that that type of financial support is welcomed by all Members of the House.

Spending plans for Agriculture Canada this fiscal year total some $2.16 billion, an increase of $421 million over last year's Main Estimates of $1.74 billion. In addition, there is also provision in this year's Estimates for a net increase of 66 person years, which is a point worth stressing. I hear on occasion people speaking of cut-backs within the Department of Agriculture. Of course, the reality is that we are talking about 66 additional person-years rather than a reduction in personnel.

The largest single new item in this year's Estimates is some $296 million, the bulk of which is the last part of the $1.1 billion program which will be expended during the course of this fiscal year. In fact, if I recall correctly, about 85 per cent or 90 per cent of the final cheques are being mailed this week. The balance is being mailed next week which is, of course, good news for farmers wherever they may be located. Within this $296 million there is some provision for additional personnel to be hired to administer the Special Grains and Oilseeds Program No. 2.

In 1987-88, provision for the $1 billion program which, of course, at that time was unprecedented, was provided through the Supplementary Estimates. By the end of June a total of 208,000 grain producers will have received payments under the Special Grains and Oilseeds Program No. 2. While the average payment works out to some $4,500, statistics are often misleading. I know that the farmers in my constituency are receiving on average substantially more than that. I can also report that I have had many farmers say to me quite candidly that if it were not for this program and for the payments under the Western Grain Stabilization Program they would not be able to continue farming as they are at the moment.

The purpose of the Special Grains Program is to reduce—not to eliminate—the impact on Canadian farmers of the trade war which has been taking place between the European Economic Community and the United States. It is a trade war which in all minds is evidence of the insanity which is in the international grain trading community. While we cannot match the resources of others, we are trying to lessen the impact. In addition, and something which is probably more important, we are trying to provide the necessary leadership which we hope will mean the end of that trade war at some point in the reasonably near future.

Within this year's current Estimates there is $26 million for payments into the Western Grain Stabilization Fund, and $5 million for payments into the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Program. These programs fall within the jurisdiction of the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer).

Elsewhere, a spending increase of just under $20 million is foreseen for various provincial agri-food agreements. These are regional development agreements which are intended to improve farm productivity, to explore export opportunities, and to help develop secondary industries. These are programs which are very important, particularly to the primary sector of agriculture which is in such difficulty. Our share of these agreements amounts to $40.3 million in 1988-89.

Another program provides $11.5 million which is needed to help tobacco producers adjust to the market realities of the 1980s. This is an industry which has undergone in many ways revolutionary changes over the last two to three years.

The alternative enterprise initiative encourages research, new crop development and market development projects in tobacco-producing areas in Ontario and Quebec. There is also a tobacco transition adjustment initiative program which provides payments to producers to help them leave the tobacco industry. This program applies also to Prince Edward Island producers, as well as to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick farmers.

Estimated statutory payments under the Agriculture Stabilization Act this year are expected to total $65 million.

The Main Estimates reflect our continuing commitment to agriculture, to the farm community and to the agri-food system through new initiatives and the maintaining of long-standing programs. It is important that I take a moment to mention some of the other initiatives which the Department of Agriculture is undertaking.

In April of this year the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds officially opened the National Grains Bureau in Winnipeg. Last year, a grains and oilseeds branch of Agriculture Canada was formed because of the very large and very special role these commodities play in Canadian agriculture. The National Grains Bureau is the policy and planning arm of the grains and oilseeds branch. Its purpose is to serve as a focal point for the federal Government to participate more effectively in and to respond to grains issues. It made sense that this National Grains Bureau should be located in Winnipeg which is in many ways the heart of the Canadian grain industry.

We have also started a new program called Grains 2000. The name says it all. This program will help us design long-term policy options for grains. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the focus during Question Period on the appropriate need for long-term policy. I am delighted that Grains 2000 is working in that direction. I think that it is an initiative welcomed by others in the House. The idea is to give people within the grains industry, farmers, representatives of the various grain buying companies, universities, provincial Governments, and other agencies a chance to participate with the federal Government in policy development.

Having attended a number of meetings with the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds in which he has consulted with the industry on an informal basis, I find this type of consultation to be very effective. I think the investment which we are making as a Government and as a country in this type of program, and others, will be money very well spent.

Also in effect now is a transfer of the Grain Marketing Bureau to Agriculture Canada from the Department of External Affairs. There are a number of people certainly within the farming community who think that that is a change which is certainly warranted. This results in an increase in expenditure of $3.9 million, which includes 27 person-years.

For more than a year Agriculture Canada has been developing a strategic plan to guide the research branch into the 21st century. The plan is founded on something that the Minister and I, as well as everybody else interested in agriculture, really believe in—a stronger partnership between Agriculture Canada research stations and the agricultural industry, as well as our research partners in the provinces and universities.

What the plan hopes to do is to strengthen the links between Agriculture Canada research stations and organizations in the agri-food industry to bring about more joint research ventures. What is happening is that there is more of a realization that world research should indeed be a world in which government and others participate as partners. Certainly, the federal research station which has been an integral part of our history in Canada, since 1886 if my memory serves me correctly, has made an invaluable contribution. Nevertheless, having said that, we believe quite strongly that there is a role for the universities and for the provinces. For example, the University of Manitoba has a very valuable agricultural research activity. One of my alma maters, the University of Saskatchewan, also has a distinguished record in the same area. In the future, this type of partnership will be quite fruitful. We have had joint ventures before, but this type of plan will spark more research in the agri-food industry, especially for private food processing firms.

• (1730)

It has been said before, but it is worth saying again that Agriculture Canada has no intention whatsoever of relinquishing its historic role as a leader in the agri-food industry, but wishes a clear definition of where others fit in. That is an appropriate request, and it is probably also an objective with which it will be comfortable. It also sees government and research as being areas where there is an opportunity for partnership, and it simply wants to know what its role and the rules will be.

In accordance with the Government's commitment to deregulation, discussions on the privatization of the record of performance programs will continue with groups from both industry and provincial Governments. Privatization of recording activities is already well under way in the swine and dairy sectors. Generally speaking, it has been well received.

Our very important five-year dairy policy, outlined in January, 1986, continues to ensure that efficient producers of milk and cream receive a fair return for their labour and investment. This fiscal year the federal commitment to that program is $227 million.

Another area where we have put a great amount of effort, and perhaps to some degree with slightly disappointing results, although we see progress, is in the area of tripartite stabilization. The progress has certainly been slower than we wished, but indeed there is progress. In recent weeks there have been a number of meetings. The federal Minister will be meeting with provincial counterparts in Toronto on the 12th of July, or the week thereof, and I hope there to be more progress at that particular time. These meetings have become even more important since meetings last March in which the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) met with his provincial counterparts. There are differences, but there is a continuing commitment to resolve those differences. We will see some progress in the not too distant future.

Every Member of the House, whether a representative of urban Canada or rural Canada, is well aware of the international crisis which exists in the grain industry and is also aware of the leadership that the Government has been attempting to provide.

In our opinion, the trade agreement negotiated with the United States is helpful both as an example to the international trading community, and also in lessening some of the trade impediments which have plagued agriculture in the last two to three years.

We also believe that our participation in the current round of multilateral trade talks is exceedingly important. It is through those types of discussion that we will find the long-term solutions that we are seeking. All too often in politics the media, and to some degree the politicians, focus on the crisis of the moment. This morning's The Globe and Mail carried a story on the drought which is so significant on the Prairies. Predictably, and borne out by what happened in the House a few hours ago, much of the thrust of Question Period focused on that drought, in part because of the publicity provided to the issue by one of Canada's leading daily newspapers.

The problems which exist in agriculture exist irrespective of whether they receive the attention of journalists, or indeed the attention of Members of the House. That is why discussions which have been taking place in the international trade community are so vital. Those ongoing discussions are absolutely essential if we are to end the war in subsidies, which means that Canadians who produce a very high quality product have been compelled to sell the product at substantially reduced prices. That is why the GATT round is so important. Our commitment and support of GATT is of absolute importance. In many ways we see that as being the real solution that the farming community and those of us who are interested in the farm community are seeking.

Those of us who are interested in agriculture, particularly those of us from the Prairies, know that we live in a world where exports are predominant. Fifty per cent of agricultural income comes from exports. Sometimes members of the urban community look at the supply management sector and ask: "Why do we not use that as a strategy to resolve all of our problems?" I have heard people on phone-in programs suggest that we sell in Canada and build a trade wall around Canada and meet the needs of the Canadian farmer. Tragically, that would mean a loss in agricultural income of 50 per cent. It would automatically mean a reduction in personnel of 50 per cent.

Our future in agriculture lies in the development of markets. To a large degree those markets will be found outside the country. There are really only two industrialized nations in the world that do not have guaranteed access to a market of at least 100 million. We are one, and Australia is the other. That is why the trade talks are so important, and why the free trade agreement is important. It provides us with an example to the rest of the multilateral trading communities of a direction in which we can go.

The GATT talks are of the utmost importance. The meetings in Montreal which will take place, the mid-term evaluations meeting in December, will give us an indication as to where we are headed. Our future lies in that type of activity. I am proud to be part of a Government that has made this a priority.

The main Estimates do not include all the expenditures which will take place in the world of agriculture. Some of those will be included in Supplementary Estimates after program specifications are provided by the Treasury Board. We are extending the Farm Debt Review Boards until 1991, which represents a further commitment of $39 million. I wish we did not need Farm Debt Review Boards, but the reality of the matter is that we do. I have spoken to many constituents who are able to stay in farming because of that type of program and financial commitment on the part of the Government and the people of Canada.

The main Estimates also do not show an additional commitment of $270 million through 1991 to the Farm Credit Corporation. That will enable FCC to enter into arrangements reached with the Farm Debt Review Board process to give it some much needed extra flexibility. FCC has been in a very severe financial crisis. If it operated within the private sector it would have been out of business some time ago. We as a Government are attempting to provide it with the necessary financial support to give it the flexibility which it needs to address its programs.

Another program we might wish that we did not need, but which is exceedingly important, is the Canadian Rural Transition Program. It has also been extended to 1991 at a cost of $28 million. Certainly, it is very difficult to think of this program in terms of successes because it is addressing the needs of people who have to leave the farm. When some must, or some choose to, it is very important that someone be there with a helping hand. That is basically where the rural transition program fits in.

In Manitoba, as a model, there have been services provided through a research institute which is located in my own community. I know the people who work there. I know many people who have made use of the service. It is money well spent, and money that is necessary to help in that type of transition.

Last December the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a $75 million National Soil Conservation Program to be carried out over the next three years. This is subject to matching funds from the provinces. All the evidence indicates that the provinces are extremely interested. Anyone who travels the Prairies these days is exceedingly conscious, perhaps even painfully conscious, of the need for soil conservation programs. In some areas the ditches are full of quality soil that is the victim of soil and wind erosion. This will be an investment in the future of the country. The Farm Fuel Tax Rebate Program often talked about in the House will save farmers approximately $440 million.

When we talk about the farm community today we talk about men and women working together. That has always been the case, but perhaps we are more conscious of it today than we have been in the past. One of the expenditures in this program which pleases me is that there will be some more money, not an awful lot, but some more money available to support Agricultural Canada's farm women's program this year. That will facilitate farm women coming together to discuss the problems that are so crucial to them. Furthermore, we hope that it will also provide them with an avenue by which they can approach the Government of Canada and be part of the consultative process.

Quite frankly, the objective of all of us and of the Government is to serve the needs of the Canadian farm community by working in co-operation with them. Too often in the past Governments have attempted to devise programs which were allegedly going to solve the problems of the people of Canada. We are attempting to work with the people of Canada in order to address the problems of the day.

• (1740)

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate because our Party will oppose the Estimates that are before us. Many of the things the Hon. Member opposite has suggested are happening in his community are certainly not happening in our communities. First and foremost, the Government is going to spend, at a minimum, $8 billion on nuclear submarines. Yet it cannot find the money to increase the Estimates for the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy has been cut by $125 million. That $125 million could have gone toward providing programs for older workers. Three times I have heard a program announced for older workers. First, a program is announced and then a year later, the Government says that it has to negotiate with the provinces. Then when it is asked what the provinces are doing, the Government says that it is just on the verge of an agreement, so it announces again that there will be a program. Sometimes Canadians are not aware of the details of what happens here, and they keep thinking that there is a program for older workers.

I want Hon. Members to know that 1,300 employees of Firestone in Hamilton were laid off this past year. I also want Hon. Members to know that many of those workers were older workers and there is no program for them. The federal Government is using the excuse that it cannot get an agreement with the provinces. It has agreements with many of the provinces now, but until it has an agreement with all the provinces, it simply will not worry about older workers. That is a very callous attitude and it is one to which I take great exception.

I also feel very strongly about the fact that the federal Government made a promise during the last election campaign of a child care program for the children of Canada. We know that two million children do not have child care spaces. There is no money in the Estimates to increase the child care that is provided to Canadian children.

I think these Estimates are a classic example of hypocrisy on the part of the federal Government. Yet, the Government can afford to put another $20 million into propaganda for selling a trade agreement with the United States that the Government calls a free trade agreement. Yes, it is free. It freely gives our country away. The Government is willing to spend money in order to convince Canadians with their own money that they should give their country away. That certainly does not make very much sense to me.

Looking at the Estimates, I recognize that the Government wants to provide some money for transition houses. I know that a million women are being battered, and the federal Government said during the last federal election campaign that money would not be an issue when serving the needs of battered women. Unfortunately, all the Government can find now is $10 per battered woman.

The Government talks about making allowances for the needs of society today. It says that it will reach out to the people. Words are cheap and the Government has been able to use those words during election campaigns. What we are looking for in the Estimates are programs. We are looking for dollars that will implement programs to give relief to the people who are suffering. The Government is not doing anything to provide for people's needs. It can spend all the money it wants to win a by-election. It can spend all the money it chooses to buy nuclear submarines. It can spend all sorts of—

Mr. Crofton: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member who is addressing the House referred several times in her speech to expenditures in the present Estimates for nuclear submarines. I would invite her to tell us just where in the Estimates these numbers are contained. She is talking about hypocrisy and falsehoods. I would suggest that that is a large one, because those figures are not in the Estimates.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, it is a matter of debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar) has the floor.

Ms. Dewar: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and certainly we do not want to confuse the issue with reality, reality being that the Government has not only defended nuclear submarines in the House but has also said that the submarines would not be in any conflict with the environment. The Government has no expenditures in the Estimates to clean up the environment. At the same time, it has announced several times that it will spend money on nuclear submarines. It is in the process of letting the contract for those submarines in the next couple of months. It seems to me that the Government certainly has its priorities skewed, and I am very concerned about the fact that with that kind of hypocrisy that is being sold to the Canadian people, this Government does not deserve to govern. I hope we will be able to put an end to it in the not-too-distant future. It will not be too long before the Canadian people will realize that the great fear of this Government is dealing with what the Canadian people really want.

I would also suggest that we do not see spending programs for housing in the Estimates. We know that housing is job creation. We know that the needs across Canada for housing are crucial. Certainly looking at what is happening in my own community makes me recognize that. A study has shown that applications for social housing in Hamilton are up by 25 per cent over this time last year. With the Hamilton-Wentworth housing authority, there are 1,253 families on the waiting list for non-profit housing.

What can the federal Government do? Certainly Canada Mortgage and Housing could look at the situation and act on some solutions. Educational programs to improve community acceptance of social housing are very important. There has been a program like this in the City of Toronto. Certainly we could use this kind of program in Hamilton. It is something that not only creates jobs but gives people a sense of security in their own communities.

I have just been looking at Canadian Business of June, 1988, not necessarily a New Democratic publication, but certainly one that has taken a very good look at the problem with employment in Canada. This publication says that politicians focus too much on job-creation programs and not enough on policies that address the more fundamental problems in the economy, and that without such direction, lower unemployment rates will only be temporary. I think it is really important—

Mr. Redway: Free trade.

Ms. Dewar: No, if we look at what the trade agreement does, it deals with low-paid trades and the creation of low-paid jobs. It is a fundamental erosion of our economic base.

According to a survey done in 1982 by Labour Canada's micro-electronics task force, we were investing 25 hours per worker on annual retraining programs and education as compared to 35 hours in the United States and 65 hours in Japan. We must recognize that when dealing with the long term, we have to look at skills training that is outside that provided by the companies that look at the short term. Certainly these are the kinds of recommendations that came out of the study done by the micro-electronics task force.

A positive way of spending money certainly would be to invest in labour and in what the real jobs are in society without giving our country away. That would be the proper way to put the Estimates before the House. Rather than that, the Government is setting the priorities it thinks are important, not those that are important to the Canadian people, and expecting that the Members of the House of Commons will support those Estimates. I think we would be irresponsible as Members of Parliament if we approved these Estimates. Certainly with the majority that the Government has, it can do what it likes, or so it keeps telling us, both through the procedures of the House of Commons and the spending of the money of the people of Canada.

It is really important to recognize that it is the money of the people of Canada that is being spent. Certain things are not available. I see, for instance, immigrant women in this country who cannot get language training or access to the labour market and find it very difficult to integrate within society itself. They have children in schools and have to go for interviews. They need help from the health care system but cannot get access to it because of language problems. This is not a surprise to the Government. Studies have been done. We have asked questions in the House and constantly we have been told there will be movement on those programs, yet the Estimates before us do not allow for any language training for immigrant women.

These are the kinds of things that demonstrate whether or not a country cares about its society and the people who live in it. These are the kinds of programs that say not only that we welcome immigrants into society but that we want to assist them become full participants. Because of the lack of programs people coming into the country often feel intimidated and feel they are second-class citizens because they cannot participate with their family members because of a very rigid language barrier. There is discrimination between men and women. There are language programs for men but not for immigrant women. This is not only a very serious economic obstacle but also a serious social obstacle hindering people from participating full time in society. It is more than discouraging; immigrant women are thus unable to be the kind of care deliverers for their families which they could be if there were adequate programs for them.

It is a disgrace to be asked to accept the kind of Estimates we are being asked to accept today. Those Estimates do not reflect the promises given by the Conservative Government during the last election. Things have not come to fruition. What have we got instead? We have a great PR program which is trying to tell Canadians what they should like whether they like it or not, trying to put them in a situation where they are threatened, whether they are threatened or not. We are supposed to be imagining some kind of great attack from over the Arctic Ocean, and therefore we are supposed to put all our resources toward saving us from that. We would be a lot better off if we were building a really constructive multilateral kind of trade policy to say that the country is important, that Canadians are competitive and can be multilateral traders, instead of having only one trading partner. But that is exactly what the Government is trying to do.

What is happening? The Government is spending money foolishly. It is cutting back on useful programs. The Canadian Jobs Strategy Program, as I have said often in the House and in committee, has taken on the proper direction, but it needs to be fine-tuned. It does not need cut-backs. That kind of investment will not only help reduce the deficit in the long term but it will also help build a stable economic base, which is much more important than spending $25 million telling Canadians they have a good agreement with the U.S. when it is a lousy one. That kind of hypocrisy is not what we stand for on this side of the House.

We look at programs that are important for people. We look at those things that will build a caring society and a society with some stability. When we look at those things we realize that the priorities in these Estimates are all wrong. This is not the kind of Canada we look toward. It is not the kind of spending we think is responsible spending of Canadians' own money. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we will oppose these Estimates. We hope they will be the last Estimates that ever come forward to the Parliament of Canada by this Government.

Mr. Redway: Mr. Speaker, I was overwhelmed by the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). First, on a number of occasions she indicated the question of nuclear-powered submarines were in the current Estimates. Of course they are not, as you are well aware. All of her remarks with respect to that were irrelevant and out of order because they had nothing to do with the issue before us, that of the spending Estimates for 1988-89.

Second, the Hon. Member referred to the fact that the Estimates and the expenditure plan of the Government was a disgrace because it did nothing for people. As you are well aware, Mr. Speaker, the expenditure plan and the policy of the Government over the last four years have had a significant effect on those living below the poverty line. In fact, the incidence of low income people has decreased from 17.3 per cent of the population in 1984 to 14.9 per cent, which is the latest figure for 1986. It is quite clear that the policies of the Government as reflected in the spending Estimates have been a significant helping hand to low income people about whom the Hon. Member has expressed concern.

In job creation, Canada has led the industrialized western world in those four years. Canada led in economic growth in those four years. All of the things which the Hon. Member has spoken about seem to imply that her Party, the New Democratic Party, has a different approach to things. The New Democrats would have a different industrial strategy for the whole operation.

In this House recently the member of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin), made a statement. He said that the NDP's industrial strategy:

> —could well mean less growth, or a bit of a standstill in growth, in the golden triangle form Québec to Windsor.
> I put this question. Why do we want Toronto or Montreal to get any bigger? What for? Glorified anthills is what they are. Why would one want to establish another manufacturing plant in that part of the country? As far as I am concerned Toronto needs another manufacturing plant like it needs a hole in the head.

Is that the Member's policy and the policy of the NDP as set out by the Hon. NDP Member for Regina West recently in this House?

Ms. Dewar: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) certainly does not have the authority to make or break a policy of the New Democrats, and I think we all know that. As New Democrats we have spoken about making sure there are economic policies to reduce regional disparity.

We are very concerned about the amount of unemployment existing in the interior of British Columbia, northern Canada, Newfoundland and Atlantic Canada. The present Government should be appalled by its actions which have allowed the level of unemployment to grow as it has in those regions of the country while there is an overheated economy in southwestern Ontario. It is certainly bad economic policy.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock p.m., pursuant to Order made Thursday, June 23, 1988, it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the Business of Supply pursuant to Standing Order 82(11).

Accordingly, the question is as follows: Mr. Lewis (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that the Main Estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, laid upon the Table Tuesday, February 23, 1988, less the amounts voted in interim Supply, be concurred in.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-138, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1989, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Danis in the chair.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the President of the Treasury Board personally to assure the House that she has personally inspected this Bill, and can confirm to the House that it is in the usual and proper form. Do I have that assurance personally from the President of the Treasury Board?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the President of the Treasury Board, I am pleased to advise the Hon. House Leader of the Official Opposition that the form of this Bill is the same as that passed in previous years.

The Chairman: Shall Clause 2 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 82—BANK CHARGES—CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

The House resumed from Thursday, June 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Rodriguez:

That the Nineteenth Report of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs, respecting bank charges, presented to the House on Monday, June 6, 1988, be concurred in, and that the adoption of this motion shall not be considered to be a question of confidence in the government.

Mr. Speaker: The House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in relation to the Business of Supply. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion, which was negatived on the following division:

CUSTOMS TARIFF

TABLING OF REMISSION ORDERS

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 67(2), I have the honour of tabling seven tariff remission orders. Five of these orders will remit over $20 million in duty on textiles and apparel during a ten-year period. One will remit over $20 million in duty on tires over a five-year period.

The tabling of these remission orders meets the commitment made to the Standing Committee on Public Accounts with respect to greater accountability and transparency in the tax and tariff systems.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

PRESENTATION OF THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present, in both official languages, the third report of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This report deals with the subject of misleading advertising and recommends major changes to the Competition Act such as the inclusion of a class action procedure and appropriate administrative remedies to ensure consumer redress for misleading advertising.

After hearing witnesses on this subject for several months and travelling to Washington to see how they deal with misleading advertising and deceptive marketing practices, your committee came to the conclusion that Canadian consumers should be better protected against those engaged in misleading advertising.

Our objective during the investigation was to find ways to improve the current system. We believe our recommendations do just that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleagues from all parties who participated in our work over the past several months. An atmosphere of genuine co-operation prevailed at all times. This report reflects a consensus of opinion and we hope it will lead to a renewed debate on the issue of class action suits.

PETITIONS

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure, indeed honour, to present pursuant to Standing Order 106 a petition on behalf of a number of constituents who are of the opinion that the Government lacks a mandate from the people of Canada to conclude a trade agreement. I suspect these people have actually read the agreement and have come to that conclusion, unlike the Minister.

They believe that the proposed trade deal would deny Canada the policy freedom to determine its own economic future and therefore undermine Canada's ability to build a society distinct from that of the United States. Since the trade deal failed to provide us with secure access to the U.S. market and threatens a loss of hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs, they call upon Parliament to dissolve now and allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade deal during a national general election.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present two petitions from Canadians from Toronto, Scarborough, Brampton, and other points in that immediate area. They humbly pray and petition Parliament. Whereas the trade agreement negotiated by the Mulroney Government threatens the very fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty by removing the power of the Canadian Government to control foreign ownership effectively, to develop Canadian energy resources in the best interest of Canada, or to equalize opportunities between the regions, the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to allow the people of Canada the opportunity to accept or reject the proposed trade agreement during a national general election.

NORTHERN TAX ALLOWANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition from residents of Seal Cove on Grand Manan Island in New Brunswick, where the residents claim that the federal Government is discriminating against the community by not allowing them tax deductions under the northern allowance.

They also claim that they have just as much right to the deductions as residents of dozens of communities in Nova Scotia and hundreds of communities in Québec and Newfoundland. Therefore, they pray and call upon Parliament to designate and add Seal Cove, New Brunswick to the eligibility list.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR RETENTION OF 10-WEEK QUALIFYING PERIOD FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I also have several other petitions from New Brunswick residents, in particular from the villages of Saint-Antoine, Saint-Paul, Buctouche, Cocagne, Shédiac, Saint-Thomas, Richibucto Village, Sainte-Marie, Saint-Louis-de-Kent, Grande Digue, Sainte-Anne-de-Kent, R.R.1 (Buctouche) and again, Sainte-Anne.

These petitioners contend that they, as residents of rural areas in New Brunswick, are the victims of certain injustices and that the federal Department of Employment and Immigration failed to take into consideration the differences between rural and urban areas when it increased the period of eligibility for unemployment insurance benefits from 10 to 16 weeks. They are demanding that the governement revert to the original 10 week eligibility period.

[English]

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present petitions on behalf of a number of citizens from Toronto, Vancouver, and Halifax. They suggest that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal will affect the very fabric of Canadian society, that the Mulroney Government does not have a mandate to negotiate such a deal, that it will reduce Canada's ability to plan the economic, social, and cultural programs we need, and that it would implicate Canada further into the North American defence industrial base.

Therefore they believe the House of Commons should ensure that a national debate take place and result in a national general election before the agreement is signed.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present four petitions to the House of Commons on behalf of residents mainly from Halifax West but also from other parts of Halifax County in the Province of Nova Scotia and other centres across Canada.

The concern in each petition is about the Supreme Court of Canada decision rendering invalid Section 251 of the Criminal Code of Canada. Each petition asks the House of Commons to consider a law that will protect the life of the unborn.

SUPPORT FOR BILL C-204—NON-SMOKERS' HEALTH ACT

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have another of the many petitions that have come to the House on behalf of my Bill C-204. I suppose this should now be a message to the Senate rather than to the House. Nevertheless, these petitioners are from Deer Island, St. Andrews, and St. Stephen, New Brunswick.

Whereas cigarette smoking is Canada's major preventable health hazard and is responsible for 35,000 Canadian deaths each year, and whereas secondary smoke is implicated in the deaths of 500 involuntary smokers each year, they request that Parliament pass the Non-Smokers Health Act, Bill C-204, to protect the health of Canadians by restricting the promotion of tobacco and guaranteeing smoke-free air to Canadian workers and travellers.

PROTECTION OF RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition on behalf of residents of Powell River, British Columbia, who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to pass legislation immediately that will protect the unborn child from the moment of conception.

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present two petitions containing a total of 301 signatures from five Calgary ridings and the riding of Bois River, organized by Wolfgang Rochow and Reverend Hilsden.

The petitioners are asking Parliament to protect the life of the unborn child.

CONSTITUTIONAL PROTECTION OF PROPERTY RIGHTS

Mr. Paul Gagnon (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition bearing 118 signatures, which was sent in by Jean Thompson.

The petition states that whereas a motion to provide for the entrenchment of property rights in the Constitution Act, 1982 passed the House of Commons on May 2, 1988, and whereas the outcome of this vote reflects the true sentiments of Canadians, wherefore the undersigned, your petitioners, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to act upon the issue of constitutional protection for property rights by bringing forth and passing requisite legislation.

RESEARCH INTO PREVENTION AND CURE OF SCHIZOPHRENIA

Mr. Elliott Hardey (Kent): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to rise and present these petitions which have been properly certified.

These constituents who reside in the riding of Kent recognize that the condition known as schizophrenia is a major illness in Canada affecting about 1 per cent of the population, causing severe mental anguish to patients as well as their families. However, research efforts dedicated to schizophrenia are extremely limited.

• (1120)

Therefore, the undersigned humbly pray that Parliament will ensure that research efforts in the future will be commensurate with the seriousness of this illness in Canada.

REQUEST FOR URGENT SETTLEMENT OF HOMELESS SITUATION

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, Canadians continue to be concerned about the plight of our country's homeless. It is my duty this morning to present these petitions signed by residents of Fort Erie, London, Toronto, Ontario, Kelowna, B.C., Mississauga, Ontario, Kingston, Chicoutimi, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Richmond Hill, Ontario and Halifax, Nova Scotia.

The signatories to these petitions object to the fact that more than 100,000 Canadians were homeless last year and that the number of homeless is steadily rising. They also deplore the ever-shrinking number of affordable housing units and the government's failure to take action to resolve this problem.

For these reasons, the signatories to these petitions humbly request that Parliament take immediate action to provide all Canadians with clean, affordable housing and to establish social reintegration programs so that these disadvantaged Canadians can once again become members of society.

[English]

CANADA-U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty and privilege to submit three petitions signed by a number of electors from the Province of Alberta and the Province of Ontario. These petitions have all been properly certified by the Clerk of Petitions.

The signatories protest the free trade agreement. They believe that it constitutes a threat to the fabric of Canadian political and economic sovereignty. They also protest the Government's failure to consult the people and demand that an election be held so that the views of the people of Canada may be ascertained in respect of an agreement they have not, up until now, had an opportunity to consider and upon which they have not voiced their opinion heretofore.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred Questions Nos. 358 and 359.

These answers are very lengthy, and I would ask that you consider that these answers have been read.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK AND NORTHLAND BANK

Question No. 358—Miss Nicholson (Trinity):

What is the final cost of the inquiry headed by the Hon. Willard Z. Estey into the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank (CCB) and the Northland Bank?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The final cost of the operations of the inquiry headed by the Hon. Willard Z. Estey into the collapse of the Canadian Commercial Bank (CCB) and the Northland Bank was $1,493,000. This amount does not include the legal expenses incurred by the Department of Finance and the Office of the Inspector General of Banks which total $1,785,000.

COLLAPSE OF CANADIAN COMMERCIAL BANK AND NORTHLAND BANK

Question No. 359—Miss Nicholson (Trinity):

1. Were lawsuits involving the Government initiated by individuals or other bodies as a result of the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank (CCB) and the Northland Bank and, if so (a) how many (b) how many of these are still ongoing?

2. What are and what will be the total legal costs incurred by (a) individuals or other bodies who have initiated legal action (b) the Government?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): 1. Individuals or other bodies have not sued the Government as a direct result of the failures of the Canadian Commercial Bank and the Northland Bank. However, the Government is involved as a defendant in three lawsuits indirectly relating to the failure of these banks, and these are still ongoing.

2. The legal costs of those who brought the lawsuits are unknown, and not likely to be ascertainable, being subject to solicitor and client privilege. The Attorney General is defending two of the above lawsuits while outside counsel has been engaged in the third. Legal costs of the outside counsel to date amount to $4,878.67, and it is not possible to estimate the total legal costs at this time.

[English]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-135, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff (code 9956), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present to the House today Bill C-135, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, for second reading. This Bill has being introduced in order to extend for a specified period the statutory authority which allows Canadian customs officials to prohibit the importation of obscene material and hate propaganda into Canada.

The Government is bringing in this Bill at this time because the authority provided under the Customs Tariff which prohibits the importation of hate propaganda, as well as obscene, seditious or treasonable materials, expires on June 30, 1988. This provision allows the Government to prevent the importation of the most virulent forms of violent, degrading and dehumanizing materials such as child pornography, depictions of violence against women, and many other things which are so repugnant to Canadians.

As Members of the House will recall, a sunset clause was initially inserted under this authority in 1985 in anticipation of new legislation on pornography which was to include amendments to the Criminal Code. The original sunset clause has since been amended on two separate occasions in order to extend the prohibition authority while the proposed pornography legislation was under consideration by Parliament.

While the provisions of Bill C-54 may be a matter of some debate, I do not believe that any Member of this House would want pornographic materials to enter the Canadian market unrestricted. I believe that as Members of Parliament we owe it to the Canadian public to ensure that such materials continue to be prohibited from entry.

Therefore I urge all Members to join with me this morning in giving unanimous and speedy approval to this technical amendment to extend the period of effect of this provision until December 31, 1989 and thereby ensure that there will be no lapse in the prohibition on the importation of obscene material and hate propaganda. The content is not changed. We are staying with the status quo. All we are doing with this Bill is extending the deadline for 18 months to December, 1989.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make a few comments on Bill C-135, which amends the Customs Tariff by extending the period during which a definition of pronography may be used by customs officers to stop at our borders pornographic material that someone is trying to bring into Canada.

Unfortunately matters are not quite as simple as the Minister who has just spoken would have us believe. The Minister is bringing before the House Bill C-135, which at first sight is designed simply to extend the definition for this tariff code for one year.

However, things are a little more complicated than that, and Bill C-135, which is being brought in by the governement, is intended not merely to extend the tariff code but also to conceal the government's failure to bring before the House a real bill dealing with pornography and hate literature.

This is not the first time the government has brought back to us a measure aimed at extending these provisions. To sketch in the background of the situation, Mr. Speaker, . . .

[English]

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that under the Customs Tariff Act customs officials are empowered to forbid entry into Canada of material of an immoral or indecent character. The definition of what constituted obscene material under the Customs Tariff Act used to be broader than the definition of obscenity contained in Section 159(8) of the Criminal Code.

This did not pose a problem until March, 1985 when the Federal Court of Appeal found that the obscenity provisions of the Customs Tariff Act were so vague as to be an unreasonable limit on the freedom of expression guarantee contained in Section 2(b) of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Therefore the court struck down these provisions and, until Parliament acted in April, 1985, there were no restrictions on the importation of obscene materials.

The Tory Government came into power and in April, 1985, instead of bringing in comprehensive legislation dealing not only with the entry into Canada and the dissemination within Canada but with the printing in Canada, the showing of obscene materials, and the dissemination of hate propaganda material, the Government decided to operate by way of a stop-gap measure which at the time was known as Bill C-38. Bill C-38 in fact incorporated the obscenity and hate propaganda provisions of the Criminal Code into the Customs Tariff Act. I think the Minister will have to agree that this is what happened in April, 1985.

The problem is that Bill C-38 was introduced for only one year and it lapsed on June 13, 1986. In other words, during the course of that one year the Government did not find time to put together a comprehensive piece of legislation dealing with obscene material, with pornography, and with hate literature.

• (1130)

What did it do a year later since it had not found the time to do the proper thing? It brought before the House Bill C-111, as Your Honour may remember, because Your Honour is very assiduous in attending this House. Your Honour must remember that in June, 1986 Bill C-111 was brought in, which Bill extended the application of these obscenity and propaganda provisions of the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff Act until December 31, 1987.

However, after a second year the Government had not yet brought before the House and passed a proper piece of legislation, so what did it do? In December, 1987 it came forward with Bill C-87 to extend further the stop-gap measure by one year.

What is happening this year? The Government is bringing forward Bill C-135 to further extend the provisions by one year. The real reason for all these extensions is the failure of the Government to pass new pornography legislation which would address the definition problems contained in both the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff Act.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Government's new pornography legislation, Bill C-54, which I must admit it tried to pass through the House, did not wash. The legislation was decried. It was criticized by several elements in our society. It was depicted as backwards and Victorian. I also remember Members in this very House saying that it went much too far, that it would impose undue constraints even on libraries which would have to post signs stating that certain books contain material purported to be either obscene or pornographic because of an ill-advised piece of legislation, Bill C-54. In the opinion of some it would even criminalize normal adult sexual activity.

[Translation]

What happened is very simple: the government did not pass Bill C-54, it left it on the Order Paper. The government saw the country was against Bill C-5 and it didn't try to get it passed.

So today we have reached a point where the last extension of a definition of obscenity, of pornography, which allowed our customs officers to stop such material at the border, is running out, since Bill C-97, which was brought in last year, "expires" this week, on June 30, in two days, in other words, as it's already June 28.

The government, having failed to bring in a reasonable piece of legislation, containing definitions of pornography that would be acceptable in Canada (unlike Bill C-54, which was not acceptable to a majority of Canadians), now finds itself obliged once again to extend this provision for a year, to gain time. I don't wish to impute motives to the government, but this does give the impression that the government is trying to buy time so it can come before the people at the next election without really having tackled the problem of pornography in Canada, without having done its duty by bringing in legislation that would also cover hate literature.

This is what really lies behind Bill C-135, which at first sight is perfectly innocuous since it consists of exactly one line. I'll read it to you, Mr. Speaker, it's extremely simple. It has only the one clause, clause 1, which reads as follows:

Code 9956 in Schedule VII to the Customs Tariff is amended by striking out the works following paragraph (d) thereof and substituting the following therefor:

and I quote:

"(This code expires December 31, 1989.)"

So all this mysterious language, which at first sight seems very simple, contitutes not just an extension of a customs tariff but a way for the Government to shirk its responsibilities and try to make it to the next elections without really having tackled the problem of pornography and hate literature in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable that the Government is putting off the admission that it made a mistake in presenting an unacceptable piece of legislation like Bill C-54, and putting off the drafting of another bill that would be more reasonable, more in line with the views of the majority of Canadians today, in the Canada we live in now. It is quite obvious that without an adequate bill defining appropriately what is obscene, what is pornographic, we don't have much choice but to vote for this extension of the customs tariff, so that at least unacceptable pornographic material doesn't get into Canada from other countries. But that doesn't really solve the problem of pornography, which can be home-grown. The government is evading its responsibilities.

It is thus with regret that we are going to support Bill C-135, but I wanted to review for you, Mr. Speaker, all the events that led up to this Bill, events the Government has no right to be proud of.

[English]

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to represent my Party on Bill C-135 this morning. My remarks will not be long. I feel that this is an experience that we have endured—and I use the word advisedly—before, in regard to the extension of the expiry date of the Customs Tariff respecting the prohibition on the import of pornographic materials and hate literature. It is a rather sad irony that we are forced to do this again, for I believe the third time, and particularly that we are forced to do so because of a judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal.

That judgment, after all, ruled on the applicability of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I believe that when that Charter was passed most of us thought that it would be something that could be used to protect the weaker members of our society against the sort of aggression that the importation of pornography and hate literature represents.

By the perverse machinations of the legal system it came up with a ruling that rather made it easier to import pornography and hate literature into Canada. I think that it is a sad reflection on the way in which power has been vested in the judiciary in our society and taken away from the democratically elected organs of society that we are forced to do this now again, as I said, for the third time.

I should take this opportunity to point out to Canadians and to Members of the House the very narrow distinction, if any exists, between pornography and hate literature. We in this Party believe that much of what is today termed pornography is in fact hate literature aimed at women and children and that the function of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms should be to protect society, and thus women and children, from those forms of hate literature.

Because of the striking down of provision 99210 in the Customs Tariff which prohibited, and I quote, "the importation of books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, photographs or representations of any kind of a treasonable or seditious or of an immoral or indecent character", we have amended the Customs Tariff. The other reason we are amending the Customs Tariff is of course the fact that we have not had a Bill passed in this House which defines and outlaws pornography and hate literature.

My hon. friend from Saint-Jacques pointed out that simply the importation was governed by the Customs Tariff and that there was no provision in Bill C-135 that would effectively control locally produced obscene or hate propaganda materials.

• (1140)

The Government has been successful to a limited degree by providing a tighter definition of obscene material in the Customs Tariff. I do not believe the insertion of a sunset clause was unwise, but it is because the sunset clause and its latest reincarnation expire this weekend that we have to come forward with this motion to extend that sunset clause for 18 months, and it has to be by means of a Bill.

I sincerely hope, and I am sure all Canadians share this sentiment whatever are their views on the matter of pornography and hate literature, that within 18 months either this Government or our Government which will succeed it, will manage to bring in a workable definition of pornography and hate literature that can be widely supported within the Canadian community and can be applied not only to prevent the importation of such materials but also to prevent their local production.

By the operation of Bill C-135, obscene material according to Section 159 and hate propaganda according to Section 281.3 of the Criminal Code, always assuming the perverse and capricious other House does not interfere with the passage thereof, will be prohibited from introduction into Canada for a further 18 months.

Let us not lose sight of the objective that we should have in this House, the objective of producing a workable definition of what is pornography, what is hate literature, what is erotica, and of enshrining that definition into law so that we can safeguard Canadians, particularly women and children, from the effects of what I believe can ultimately be included in the definition of hate propaganda.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think you have the consent of this House to refer Bill C-135 to Committee of the Whole.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Do I have the consent of the House? The Honorable Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, before going to Committee of the Whole, I would like to make a few comments at second reading, as I am entitled to do. I would also like to explain to my constituents and to those who are listening to us the reason for Bill C-135, An Act to amend the Customs Tariff (code 9956). This kind of thing is all Greek to a lot of people, and I would like to make sure that it's at least clear.

What the government is proposing, Mr. Speaker, is that the expiry date for the application of the Criminal Code to code 9956 of Schedule VII of the Customs Tariff be extended. It reads as follows:

> Books, printed paper, drawings, paintings, prints, or representations of any kind which:
> a) are deemed to be obscene within the meaning of section 159(8) of the Criminal Code.

You have to look at the Criminal Code to understand what that means, and section 159(8) of the Criminal Code reads as follows, Mr. Speaker:

> (8) ["Obscene".] For the purposes of this Act, any publication a dominant characteristic of which is the undue exploitation of sex, or of sex and any one or more of the following subjects, namely crime, horror, cruelty and violence, shall be deemed to be obscene.

Mr. Speaker, section 9956 continues as follows:

> (b) constitute hate propaganda within the meaning of subsection 281.3(8) of the Criminal Code.

Section 281.3(1) of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

> (Warrant of seizure) A judge who is satisfied by information upon oath that there are reasonable grounds for believing that any publication, copies of which are kept for sale or distribution in premises within the jurisdiction of the court is hate propaganda, shall issue a warrant under his hand authorizing seizure of the copies.

Thus it is possible for a judge to take action. I return to section 9956, and I quote:

> (c) are of a treasonable character within the meaning of section 46 of the Criminal Code.

Now, section 46 of the Criminal Code states:

> 46. Everyone commits high treason who, in Canada,
>
> (a) kills or attempts to kill Her Majesty,
>
> (b) levies war against Canada,
> (c) assists an enemy, etc.

It goes on at length, Mr. Speaker, but essentially it covers treason and other offences against the authority and person of the Queen.

> (d) are of a seditious character within the meaning of sections 60 and 61 of the Criminal Code.

That is, persons who take part in an organized rebellion against public authority.

Sections 60 and 61 of the Criminal Code read as follows:

> Sedition
> (1) Seditious words are words that express a seditious intention.
> (2) A seditious libel is a libel that expresses a seditious intention.

It explains what is meant by seditious words, libel, conspiracy and intention, and section 61 sets out a few exceptions.

Mr. Speaker, the government has introduced Bill C-135 in order to extend the life of the aforementioned sections because it does not have the courage to bring forward Bill C-54, which promised and proposed amendments that would provide Canadians with better legislation on pornography and hate literature.

Mr. Speaker, this is yet another sign of a government that is continually wavering, unable to make a firm decision and proceed with a bill it originated, devised and drafted itself, a government that is indecisive because it lacks courage.

Naturally, we will not oppose Bill C-135. I would like the government to know, however, that its lack of courage, its inability to act, to make decisions, to put firm legislation before the Canadian people, were discussed on television again yesterday.

I could recite the history of the bills that have languished in the House for a year or more. Already three bills have been passed to delay introducing provisions dealing with items that may be pornographic or seditious.

[English]

There was Bill C-38, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff Act. It received Royal Assent on April 13, 1985. At the time the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) argued that while the Liberal Party supported the Bill it was only a stop-gap measure. We said that in 1985. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal pressed for a response, in terms of legislation, to the Badgley and Fraser reports. I recommend Members read Hansard at pages 3604 to 3606 of April 2, 1985, wherein the Hon. Member for Mount Royal made a very good and thoughtful speech on the subject.

Later on, Bill C-111 further extended the code until December 31, 1987. It received Royal Assent on June 26, 1986. Again, I invite Members to read Hansard at page 14,306 to page 14,311. Still later, Bill C-87, an Act respecting the harmonized tariff system, received Royal Assent on December 17, 1987, and extended the code to June, 1988. Now, two days before the expiry of the code, government Members come into the House and say: "Hey, quickly pass this Bill, please, because we would like to act", and conserve or reserve, or pickle code 9956 of the Customs Tariff.

We only have a small number of MPs on this side. It will not be long. We do not mind telling the Government with its large numbers that if it decided to have it its way democracy would possibly be at work. They have to make decisions. They have to make up their minds what they want. They have Bill C-54 before the House, which indeed they probably will not call; they do not have the courage to call it.

As a lady said on TV last night, "if you don't like it, at least let us look at it to amend it or withdraw the darn thing and come in with something stronger, more in keeping with Canadian expectations". However, putting off and extending things is a sign of indecisiveness, a sign of those who do not know what they want, a sign of those who should not be governing the country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary requested that the Bill go to Committee of the Whole instead of to a legislative committee, which would require unanimous consent. Is that agreed?

Mr. Gauthier: Considering the urgency of the matter and the Government's intention to have this legislation proclaimed early, we will so agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Very well. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-135, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff (code 9956).

Shall Clause 1 carry?

On Clause 1

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I will ask the Minister a simple question. It has been the practice of the Government to ask for the code to be extended for one year, from 1985 to 1986, from 1986 to 1987, from 1987 to 1988. Now we see that it is to be extended until December 31, 1989.

Could the Minister explain why he wants it to go for a year and a half now? Are they stretching things even further now and the next time it will be two or three years? I just want to know.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Chairman, we are not asking for two or three years. We are asking for 18 months. The Hon. Member is quite right. It is not 12 months; it is 18 months. We want to work with Parliament to make sure that Bill C-54 is properly debated in Parliament and that it receives proper consideration in the country at large. We felt that a period longer than 12 months was necessary to do it. To go beyond 18 months would be saying something else. It would be saying that we do know when the change will be occurring. The 18 months is our attempt to consult widely, to listen to Parliament, but to get it done as soon as possible.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister is confirming what I was thinking. He is telling us that Bill C-54 is as dead as a doornail and that the election will intervene before its discussion in the House.

They are not actually talking about serious discussion of the Bill at this time. Indeed they are canning Bill C-54, aren't they?

Mr. Hockin: Not at all, Mr. Chairman. We are determined to move ahead with this Bill, but we also are determined to make sure that proper debate is held and that Members do not feel pushed with an unreasonable time frame in this regard.

If in fact we were shelving the issue as the Hon. Member says, we would be asking for unlimited time, for three or four years, or whatever. Eighteen months will give us the time to do proper consultations.

Mr. Gauthier: I suggest to the Minister that in that case, if he wants serious debate, why not call the Bill now?

Mr. Hockin: We have had this Bill before the House on five separate occasions already. The Opposition has not seen fit to give approval to the Bill. We will continue to bring it forward and hopefully find some co-operation.

Mr. Gauthier: Co-operation is what you are getting. Serious debate is what we are looking for. Don't put the blame on the Opposition.

The Government proposes the agenda to the House for study. We just try to dispose of it in a democratic way and in a serious manner. If the Minister is asking for serious commitments on this side, he will get them. He will also get serious debate.

Bring on Bill C-54. We will amend it, possibly, because we do not like it in its present form. We are not the only ones; I think the Minister himself and many of his colleagues are also hesitant about Bill C-54 at this time.

Clause agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When shall the Bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hockin moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. Bill McKnight (for the Minister of the Environment) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

INDIAN ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENT

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act (designated lands).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I just want to rise at this time and express to the House my appreciation for the way we have been able to co-operate on this important piece of legislation. It sets a milestone. I want to indicate to my colleagues in the other two Parties that it will benefit all as we proceed down this road.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we certainly support the amendment coming back from the Senate on Bill C-115. I want to take this opportunity to say that this was a result of co-operation by a large number of people representing different levels of government, the Minister, his associates, the opposition Parties, and the initiative, I might say, of the Kamloops Indian Band. The Minister will recognize that it was the Kamloops band many years ago which first brought this initiative forward. Under the very positive leadership of Chief Manny Jules, as the Minister has indicated we now see the completion of a very important step for native people in this country, an important step toward the realization of self-government and self-determination for native people.

Motion agreed to, amendment read the second time and concurred in.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gerald. S. Merrithew (Minister of State (Forestry and Mines)) moved that Bill C-137, an Act to provide for incentives to assist in financing exploration for mineral resources and hydrocarbons in Canada and to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to put before you for second reading today Bill C-137 to establish the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program. At this point I would like to thank the Opposition for agreeing to deal with this matter expeditiously because it is an important program for Canada.

[Translation]

The program I announced on May 3 will be of great importance to the petroleum and mining exploration sectors of the Canadian economy. In that sense, the program has a specific target, but from a broader standpoint, it will have more widespread significance since all Canadians benefit, in the long run, from higher profits earned by any industry.

[English]

The oil and gas industry employs many thousands of Canadians directly and indirectly. When we include the oil and the gas downstream and the metal fabrication components, we are really talking about one-quarter of a million direct jobs and many more thousands of indirect jobs for Canadians.

The purpose of this Bill is very simple. It is to provide an opportunity for junior exploration companies to maintain an adequate level of exploration financing by raising new equity through the use of flow-through shares. In this way they can continue to contribute to our economic objectives and to the type of country we hope to share into the 1990s and beyond. The program will provide a positive environment in which our exploration industries are free to do what they do best, namely, explore for, develop, and market Canada's mineral and hydrocarbon wealth.

My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), retained the flow-through share mechanism in the tax reform package which he introduced last year. We in the Government know that flow-through shares work. They provide funds efficiently for exploration and they have brought prosperity to many of the outlying regions of Canada. Even before tax reform the Government moved on a number of occasions since 1984 to improve flow-through share financing. We extended the period of eligibility so that expenses made in January and February could be claimed for taxation purposes for the previous year. The flow-through share mechanism was thus more responsive to the realities of winter drilling. With tax reform we also lowered taxes for the mining industry in line with general rate reduction, and the industry as a whole has started to do very well.

However, with the unforeseen downturn in the stock market on October 19, economic conditions changed all equity markets including the market for exploration issues. Funds became more difficult to raise. This, combined with the planned phasing out of the Mining Exploration Depletion Allowance or MEDA over the next few years, gave us cause for concern. If I had to capsulize what this program is all about, I would say that it will bring sustained and ongoing growth for the mining and oil and gas industries.

CEIP, the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, will provide an estimated $210 million per year to these resource exploration sectors so that junior exploration companies, be they looking for oil and gas or minerals, will be able to maintain an adequate level of financing or exploration. This translates into about $700 million annually for exploration activity for projects which go ahead as a result of this program. It can be expected to generate about 12,000 person-years of employment. As Hon. Members of the House realize, most of those jobs will be in areas of Canada where we desperately need new job creation. The program will begin on January 1, 1989 for mining companies. For the oil and gas industry, the program will kick in on October 1, 1988. The different commencement dates stem from the different phase out schedules for MEDA and the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program on the energy or hydrocarbons side.

Eligible companies will be able to claim 30 per cent of their eligible exploration expenses, up to a maximum of $10 million in expenses per company per year. This is a direct incentive payment. It is not within the tax system. After all, a fundamental principle of a responsible Government is that public expenditures are not hidden in the tax system if at all possible. Otherwise we would lose the fiscal responsibility which the Government promotes because we believe that Canadians have a right to know how their money is being spent.

Let me say a word about the $10 million ceiling per company. We can target the money to smaller companies by placing a cap on individual claims. It is a fairly generous cap including a 30 per cent payment which would limit an applicant to receiving 30 per cent of a maximum of $10 million, or about $3 million a year. This meets the requirements of most exploration programs for junior exploration companies.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have planned to phase out the Mining Exploration Depletion Allowance over the next few years. The 30 per cent under CEIP is somewhat more generous than the previous depletion incentive, but we felt that this was warranted by current market conditions and as a result of what happened to the equity markets since October 19.

However, to allow us time to consult with industry and to implement this program, the Minister of Finance agreed in his announcement of May 3, 1988 to extend MEDA for individuals to the end of this year, December 31, 1988, at a full rate of 33 and one-third per cent. This will allow us time for a smooth transition from MEDA to our new program, CEIP. The industry likes the particular arrangement very well. The 30 per cent rate will be guaranteed for two years until the end of 1990, after which it may be adjusted up or down according to market conditions and how much incentive is required to maintain healthy levels of exploration.

Mineral exploration expenses that will be eligible for CEIP include those incurred on primary or grass roots exploration by qualified companies financed through issuing flow-through shares. Those expenses are the ones that currently qualify for the Mining Exploration Depletion Allowance which can be flowed through to the investors. In the oil and gas sectors expenses which are purely exploratory in nature and financed by means of flow-through shares are eligible. CEIP will strengthen the flow-through share concept. Exploration companies or limited partnerships acting as their agents will apply for the incentives. Therefore, for all practical purposes the program reaches the same client groups that purchased flow-through shares before, and it brings approximately the same benefits which the earned depletion deduction would have provided to June, 1988.

• (1210)

While CEIP is aimed at junior companies that issue flow-through shares for exploration activities, it is nevertheless acceptable by both public and private companies. However, CEIP is designed to encourage new investment capital for exploration. The regulations must include special rules to ensure that only exploration activity rather than developmental financed by this equity will qualify. These rules will be covered in the regulations which will be developed after consultation with industry and the Department of Finance, hopefully sometime this summer or very early fall.

For most investors the program will provide greater benefits than earned depletion. Repayment will be just as fast because firms will be able to submit applications four times per year. They will be able to submit them through five new regional offices that will themselves make a contribution to regional economic development.

Since announcing CEIP on May 3, we have been in constant consultation with the industry. In fact, at the end of May, we sent out a discussion paper entitled Proposed Rules for Canadian Exploration Program to obtain the views of the relevant industry associations, provincial and territorial Governments, and key investment community planners. In general we have received in general very favourable responses to this paper.

Over the summer months while officials in my Department are drafting regulations for this Bill, we will address the technical questions arising from our consultative process. Consultation rather than confrontation is a very important policy of this Government and it will be continued. Reasoned discussions about problems will lead to equitable solutions within the spirit of this program.

In conclusion, this program provides financial incentives that do not run counter to the Government's tax reform initiatives. It maintains a balance between the oil, gas and mining sectors with respect to opportunities to raise funds for much needed exploration. It allows the industry to make decisions and allows the investors to make decisions. It is not a discretionary, bureaucratically driven grants program.

[Translation]

Historically, flow-through shares have enhanced prosperity in many isolated regions in Canada where there is often only one industry other than mining or oil and gas.

In particular, this program will ensure that these regions will continue to benefit from the profits earned through exploration financed by flow-through shares.

[English]

In my opinion, when economically disadvantaged regions of our country benefit from such a program as CEIP, then all of Canada benefits as well. The program we are establishing by passing this piece of legislation today is a good one and is supported by the mining industry, by the equity industry, and by the exploration industry. It fulfils a need and will ensure adequate exploration in Canada over the short term and mid term. This legislation deserves our full support.

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, we in this Party have no option but to support this legislation because in fact the initiative began with this Party. A rose by any other name smells as sweet, and that is the situation we have here. This is not simply a name change but a change in the mechanism to a system of passing out cheques rather than a system of allowing people to withhold taxes. In any case, it amounts to the same thing.

To listen to the Minister, one would think that suddenly a light had gone on in the Government's head with regard to a great new regional development incentive. The fact is quite the opposite. As a matter of fact, the March 12 edition of Daily Press, northeastern Ontario's daily newspaper, contains the following headlines: "Liberal critic watches Wilson", "Finance Minister dismantling tool", and in a separate item, "NDP finance critic changes his tune on funding scheme".

The reality is that this measure was brought in by this Party when we were in government in 1983, a measure which has been eminently successful. After 1983, it took off as the source of 70 per cent of the financing behind mining exploration. It was a successful regional development tool. It was an idea that worked. It brought in hundreds of millions of dollars of investment to small mining companies in remote regions of Canada, and it created thousands of jobs.

What happened to it? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) saw fit to discontinue it. Yesterday, in the debate on the Estimates, we heard of all the jobs that had been created in Canada by the present Government. Jobs may have been created, but where have they been created? They have been created mostly in Toronto, not in the regions.

This was an initiative that created jobs in the regions where jobs were needed. The Minister just said that in his speech, and that is quite true. However, the purpose of the Minister of Finance was to do away with that program which provided hundreds of millions of dollars to small mining companies and therefore to put into jeopardy the thousands of jobs that had been created and the new jobs that might be created.

This was not really a deathbed repentance on the part of the Government, either. It was only through a great deal of pressure from a very formidable lobby headed by people from Kirkland Lake and Timmins in northern Ontario, and from Val d'Or and other mining areas in Quebec, a coalition of concerned mayors, company executives and individuals from all of those regions, that the Government was forced to change its mind.

As a matter of fact, this is really a rerun of the drama of pension deindexing. The very same thing happened. The Government decided to stop the indexing of old age pensions and there was a hue and cry across the country. Grey power rose up in the thousands all across Canada, and there was enough pressure in support of the Opposition's attacks upon the Government that the policy was changed. The same thing happened on flow-through shares.

The Minister of Finance decided that creating jobs in Toronto was enough, and he decided to do away with flow-through shares. This powerful lobby came together and supported the Opposition in its attack on the Government. As a result, the Government's policy was changed. That is the reality.

We met with this coalition, the Canadian Save Flow Through Committee, on March 1. The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner) and I met with that group. It explained to us its great concern that the regions would be affected and that small mining companies which had work in progress would not be able to bring that exploration to fruition.

The Minister is quite right. It is not just northern Ontario and northern Quebec that benefits from this measure. In my own province there is gold exploration and exploration for other minerals on the island of Newfoundland. That exploration is about to come on stream, and it was thrown into jeopardy by this move.

We met with that coalition on March 1, and our finance critic, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), emphasized in his speech to the group that the retention of this deduction would constitute an important facet of the regional development strategy of future Liberal Governments. It was this Party that brought in the initiative in 1983. It will be this Party that continues to have that initiative in our program as a successful tool for regional development.

The Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides also noted that flow-through shares represented a practical instance of cooperation between the private sector and the Government since, as the Minister said in his speech as well, and on that point he was quite right, they avoided the bureaucratic red tape which often comes with direct subsidies. That is the reality, and we in the Liberal Party not only want to continue this initiative but to see it created as a box of tax incentives which perhaps would function in a manner similar to RSPs.

• (1220)

This is not something that the Government has suddenly discovered. It is not a light that has gone on in the Government's head. Rather, it is a baseball bat that was beaten over the Government's head to bring it to its senses with regard to a sensible regional development policy. It is an idea that worked. It is an idea that the Government wanted to stop. It is an idea that, thank God, is going to be continued because of the pressure from this Party.

I would like also to quote from the March 12 edition of the Daily Press which carried the following headline:

> NDP finance critic changes his tune on funding scheme.

The article went on to say:

> Michael Cassidy is not one to make apologies.
>
> The personable New Democratic finance critic in the House of Commons readily admits he was totally against the concept of flow-through shares as recently as December 1986.

I will read that again.

> The personable New Democratic finance critic in the House of Commons readily admits he was totally against the concept of flow-through shares as recently as December 1986.

The article continued:

> At that time, he said he felt flow-throughs benefited only Bay Street and large investors.

Who does he represent? Not the place I come from. However, he has changed his mind and thank God for that. The article went on to quote him as saying:

> "I have given a lot of thought to flow-throughs and the depletion allowance in the last year or so,"—

If it takes a year, then let it take a year as long as they come up with good policies. He said:

> "But they have turned into quite a regional development tool."

That is true. We knew that in 1983. That is why the then Liberal Minister of Finance brought in this legislation. It has worked, so we support it. We have no option because it is creating jobs in eastern Canada, northern Ontario, northern Québec, and northern B.C., as well as, obviously, in the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Those areas need job creation.

This is not a hand-out. This is an investment that is paying off in jobs. It is one that this Party, the originator of the idea, fully supports now and well into the future.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak in this debate. Of course, I would not like the occasion to go by without remarking on the Government's conversion. Despite the efforts of the Hon. Member for Abitibi (Mr. St. Julien), at the time the White Paper was issued almost one year ago today the Government turned its back on northern Canada, including his riding, and decided to phase out the earned depletion allowance which was an essential part of the flow-through share program. Therefore, I suppose it is incumbent upon me to congratulate the Government for having come around—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: —to the point of view expressed by the NDP. While it might take some interpretation, I appreciate the endorsement and I know that when we form the Government Members opposite will continue to endorse our policies in as generous and open way as they just did.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Strike the applause.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point to the minority report that we submitted at the time the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs issued its report on tax reform. You will recall that the committee itself had a number of questions about the flow-through mechanism and recommended changes in what the Government was doing. Recommendation No. 9 of the NDP minority report urged the development of tax measures specifically targeted to smaller companies and to regions in need of investment. We stated in the fall of last year that the flow-through share provisions had benefited small companies but were so broadly designed that large, well-established corporations which did not need the assistance had also benefited.

When my friend from Labrador speaks to this issue he suggests that the Liberal program of 1983 was sufficiently desirable that it should have been maintained in its entirety. However, it was the abuses that arose under that program which eventually led to the need to take some action. When companies like Falconbridge, Inco, and Cominco took advantage of the flow-through provisions meant to benefit junior mining companies and promote new investment and new mines, it was clear that something was wrong. However, just as the Liberals had thrown away billions of taxpayers' dollars on the scientific research tax credit, there was also the threat that that would occur with the flow-through provision as designed by the Liberals and perpetuated for a while by the Progressive Conservatives.

The Hon. Member is correct that in the fall of 1986 my Party questioned the whole flow-through mechanism as it existed because of the abuses which had been put in place by the Liberals and perpetuated by the Progressive Conservatives. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) then turned around and decided to throw out the baby with bath water by throwing out the whole mechanism in a very brief phase-out. That created enormous inequity since there was a continuing program for the oil and gas industry similar to what is being enacted today which was not provided for the mining industry. It created enormous concerns in areas of northern Quebec, northern Ontario, and the West which had simply not benefited. They had not had a chance to benefit from any regional development programs from the Liberals or Progressive Conservatives. Yet this was a program, as they pointed out so effectively, that was working. I will cite the estimates made by prospectors in Quebec, for example.

[Translation]

A study done by the Association des prospecteurs du Québec, for example, found that the flow-through share mechanism, an incentive associated with the mining sector, had contributed to 71 share issues in 1985, of which 33 involved flow-through shares, and to 25 strikes. It is estimated that these strikes will generate profits and jobs in the future. The projections are for about 66,000 jobs, a value added of $2,8 billion and a gross increase of about $300 million in federal and provincial government revenues.

Mr. Speaker, the residents and the communities that would like the flow-through share program to continue have shown how effective this program has been in depressed areas where the rate of unemployment was running as high as 20 per cent, as was the case in the riding of the Honourable Member for Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien).

An Hon. Member: Twenty-eight per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: Twenty-eight per cent. But this rate of unemployement fell from 28 per cent to, I believe, about 7 or 8 per cent.

An Hon. Member: Six per cent.

Mr. Cassidy: Six per cent, according to the Member for Abitibi, all as a result of this program, Mr. Speaker. And what did the Conservative government do after dismantling the program in terms of providing specific benefits to regions such as the Abitibi and northern Manicouagan? It abandoned these regions. And it abandoned the Members representing these regions, Mr. Speaker. A campaign was launched by the New Democratic Party, by the Liberal Party, by prospectors, by the junior mining companies, by the chambers of commerce . . . For instance, a coalition was formed in Quebec. It included universities, CEGEP's, unions, chambers of commerce, mining associations, junior mining companies and so forth. Everyone was involved, even the Quebec government. The municipalities also jumped into the fray.

[English]

In the end reason prevailed. When I say that reason prevailed, I refer to the recommendations which we made about eight or nine months ago to urge the development of tax measures specifically targeted to smaller companies and regions in need of investment. Through Bill C-137, the Government has come up with a program which provides for a substitute for the earned depletion allowance in the form of the 30 per cent incentive payment on qualified exploration expense. The term "Qualified corporation" has been defined and this will require some study. I hope this Bill has a chance to go to committee briefly because I would like to ensure that the words are okay. However, "qualified corporation" has been defined, as I understand it, in such a way as to ensure that major mining companies will not be able to draw tens of millions of dollars from this program as they were able to do from the flow-through share mechanism which existed previously under the Liberals and Conservatives. The Hon. Minister says that they will probably not bother because the maximum incentive in a year will be about $3 million.

They have not eliminated but have certainly limited the use of the flow-through mechanism for step out exploration by companies like Falconbridge and Inco, which I believe was a major abuse. At the time mineral prices were low, Falconbridge stepped in and took advantage of this program for its routine annual program of exploration, designed to ensure that 10 or 12 years of reserves are always available as a part of the normal functioning of its mine in Sudbury. I felt that was an abuse.

There is, therefore, a limitation of $10 million and a cap on maximum expenditure, although I am not quite clear what happens if the applications for funding exceed the cap. The Minister may want to comment on that at a later date. This means that the Government has now accepted the type of advice it was receiving from the industry and communities affected which saw that so much of this activity was coming from junior mining companies that would not have been able to carry out the exploration expenditure without the incentive of the flow-through program and the mineral exploration depletion allowance which are now being replaced with the incentives in this particular program.

In other words, we now have a program specifically targeted to smaller companies. It is not regionally located, but most mining activity does not take place on the outskirts of Toronto. It takes place in northern Quebec. It takes place in Labrador. It takes place in northern Ontario. it takes place in the northern parts of the Prairies and Territories, and in the interior and north of British Columbia, areas which otherwise would be suffering from high levels of unemployment, areas which have been ignored by government far too long, and in many cases areas where there are single-industry towns whose only hope under existing Governments of continuing to thrive and prosper is the discovery of new mineral deposits and the development of them within reach of their workforce, in order that people can move from one mine to another as old mines become less productive and profitable.

I make no apologies for the fact that the New Democratic Party, and myself as spokesperson, questioned the generosity, the scope, and the lack of focus of the flow-through mechanism in 1986; nor do I make any apology for the fact that we as a Party which has a skeptical view of corporate tax incentives listened to the people, the communities, and the industry concerned with respect to whether or not there was a means by which the flow-through mechanism could be enhanced, maintained, and targeted in the way which is being proposed today.

My Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), dating back to the 1984 campaign and before has been challenged on this very question. People say that New Democrats are opposed to the corporate sector, any form of incentive, and any type of so-called tax give away to business because we are basically, it is said, anti-business. It is one thing to be skeptical and another to be ideologically blinded. I believe that skepticism is entirely appropriate when we are talking about defending the taxpayer and having regard for who is paying for corporate tax incentives as opposed to the benefit.

Mr. Boyer: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: I appreciate the applause of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). I am not quite sure what it means, except that the Conservatives anticipate who is going to form the Government after the election and are seeking to establish a friendly working relationship. I appreciate that very much.

Mr. Boyer: Don't read that much into it.

Mr. Cassidy: It is one thing to be skeptical and another thing, as I said, simply to say "no" categorically under any circumstances. My leader has made it clear that where it appears that an incentive to business is working effectively in terms of promoting jobs, research, economic development, and equality for women and minorities, to which I believe every Member of this House in all Parties would subscribe, and where it is clear that the benefits equal or exceed the cost of that particular incentive, that particular program should be considered very seriously.

That does not mean that it should be automatically accepted. There may be other means of better using the public's dollars. We must always remember that a dollar put into an incentive for junior mining corporations, for example, is a dollar which cannot be spent on other programs such as a national child care program, an affirmative action program for women or, dare I say it, a contribution to peace and common security by means of an improvement in our foreign aid program.

We must be careful with these dollars. However, we have said very consistently that where it is demonstrated that there is a real benefit, it makes sense to consider the matter very seriously. It is in that spirit that the New Democratic Party supports the principle embedded in Bill C-137 which is before us today.

I believe that the Government and the Liberal Party are to be criticized for the fact that the Government turned topsy-turvy on this and for the fact that both the Government and the Official Opposition from time to time have been totally blind to the wasteful use and misuse of incentives to the corporate sector. The Liberals brought in the scientific research tax credit about 1981 or 1982 and it was a bonanza. The stock markets and promoters in Vancouver, Montreal, and particularly Toronto, rubbed their hands with glee. In short order they had put together programs which have successfully taken $700 million or $800 million out of the pockets of average Canadians and put it into the hands of promoters for research, much of which has proven to be useless, not well founded and, in many cases, not well intended, and which under any circumstances have been an arrogant and total waste of public funds.

The Liberals drew on a very strong tradition which began with the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was Minister of Finance in the early 1970s. He began this tradition of give aways to the corporate sector for which there was no ground at all. That has been carried on by the Progressive Conservatives. In fact, they let another $1 billion or more go out the door through the scientific research tax credit before they finally stopped up that tax loophole. It was as if they had cut an artery and let the taxpayers' money flow into the pockets of people who are now sitting back and laughing at the stupidity of the Liberal and Conservative Parties.

• (1240)

Let me come back to the question of flow-through shares and the tax reform proposals. The Finance and Economic Affairs Committee did a useful job in its work on this particular subject in the last year and a half. In our study of the White Paper on tax reform during the summer and fall last year we closely considered this question and said that there had to be an alternative mechanism. We argued strongly that the Department of Finance timetable for phasing out the earned depletion allowance was unfair, far too short, and would create enormous difficulties in the mining sector. Of course, that has occurred.

I believe that has occurred not solely because of the stock market collapse in October last year but because there has been a general continuation of economic activities. Most sectors have not experienced a sharp cut-back because of the stock market crash.

However, this announcement has hung like the sword of Damocles over the Canadian mining industry, particularly the junior mines for some time. The large mining companies have not been affected because they returned to profitability a year or two ago. Their mineral prices have been high and rising rapidly. Their profits have been quite substantial, and they were able to write off their exploration and development expenditures from their profits. They did not need to take advantage of the earned depletion allowance and flow-through share system.

However, the smaller companies that were not in a tax paying position were badly affected. What has occurred since then could best be described as a pre-election strip-tease by the Government. In December, in response to the recommendations of the Finance Committee, the Government decided to extend by six months the final phase out of the 16 and two-thirds per cent earned depletion allowance to the end of 1989. Originally it was due to expire at the beginning, then the middle of 1989.

It is my understanding that the Hon. Minister is announcing that the present rate of earned depletion allowance will be extended to the end of 1989. I believe that is a change from what was already intended. Finally, we have legislation which I have indicated my Party supports.

There should be a lesson from this. We had a program that was well intended, had proven to be effective in terms of helping the mining industry in remoter parts of Canada, but which had faults at the same time. Too much of the benefit was going to either very wealthy investors or large mining companies, rather than junior mining companies developing new mines.

That program has been substituted with a program that will be substantially more modest in its cost. It is estimated to have an annual cost of about $70 million a year. The Minister's White Paper estimated that the cost of the flow-through mechanism might have been as high as $300 million a year. We have effected a substantial saving to the Treasury and have a program that is more targeted.

The third point is that the industry came to us, as it went to the Minister of State and the Government, to say that it does not want a program whereby it must make an application every time it believes it can do exploration. It does not want a program like the regional development incentive in which it must pass proposals by a bureaucrat in order to gain approval. It would like an assurance that its judgment would be trusted. Therefore it is prepared to spend $7 or $8 on an exploration program on which it can get back some money. For every $10 of qualified expenditure there will be a 30 per cent incentive or rebate. That means the industry will spend $7 and the Government will be prepared to chip in $3 in incentives.

The industry also said that it would prefer such a program. The New Democratic Party listened to that proposal carefully and looked at some of the alternatives. It is proving possible to focus the program in such a way that that particular wish of the mining industry is being satisfied. The industry will make the decisions about where explorations should go and what kind of exploration should proceed. If a mining company finds a promising new prospect and does not want to tip off its competitors about it, it can proceed with its drilling and stake its claim prior to notifying a government official about what it is doing, and still qualify for the exploration incentive. I believe that reflects how the program is being designed to be sensitive to the needs of the original industry.

There were legitimate questions about the cost of the program and its focus. It seemed that too much money was going to large companies that did not need the incentives and that the program should have focused on smaller companies. If it is possible to take that program and improve it, it should be possible in other areas as well.

• (1250)

[Translation]

My party believes that an exploration incentive program would ensure the health of the mining industry, and in particular the health of the smaller companies. This program is an example of what other incentives could do for manufacturing industries. For instance, instead of handing out all kinds of incentives to people in the hope that jobs will be created, specific areas could be targeted to ensure that the taxpayers' money is not being wasted and that the benefits arising from the federal program are in line with the costs to the taxpayer.

I believe that in future, when we have, I hope, the opportunity to design a fairer, more equitable tax system than the old one, even though it was instituted by the Conservative Party's white paper and tax reform proposal, it will be possible in many sectors to effect the same kind of reform as that proposed today in Bill C-137.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying to my friend from Abitibi (Mr. St-Julien), who worked for this with the Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall) . . . it should be remembered that those Members had to seek support in industry and the Opposition parties.

Our party, as the Honourable Member for Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) noted in his quotation from the North Bay Nugget, I believe, or the Timmins Press, affirmed its support for the flow-through shares program in March 1987, only two or three months after objecting to the previous program as a whole. However, it took the Minister of State (Forestry and Mines) (Mr. Merrithew) and the Minister of finance (Mr. Wilson) until May 1988 to issue a joint statement to the effect that, finally, the government would do something to meet the needs of regions affected by the government's decision to eliminate flow-through shares and previous incentives.

Mr. Speaker, it has taken 14 months, and it is only through the efforts of the people of the minig regions, such as my friend the former rector of the University of Quebec at Abitibi, Mr. René Trudel, that this issue has come before the House of Commons. It is through the efforts of the Association des prospecteurs du Québec and other associations, of all the flow-through share committees, the people who came here with their "Go with the flow" buttons to support flow-through shares. It is primarily through their efforts, Mr. Speaker, that the government was finally persuaded.

If the Member for Abitibi and his colleague from Timiskaming, Ontario, had had to go it alone, there would have been no change and mining areas would be in very difficult economic straits because of the decline in exploration that is ending already and will become worse in the coming months.

It is because our party was prepared to look at the region's needs objectively, to work with people there, to indicate, as we have done today, that we are ready, despite the Free Trade Agreement, despite everything else we are opposed to, to cooperate in ensuring that this bill is passed. Mr. Speaker, it is thanks to all that, ultimately, that this step forward has been taken.

As I just said, I believe the details must be given some consideration. I don't know how this could be worked out, perhaps a legislative committee could spend two or three days on it. I don't know what discussions have been held among the House Leaders of the three parties regarding referral of this Bill to Committee. I have some questions about that, simply to reassure myself that, for example, this is really a program for junior mining companies and not a disguised program with hidden benefits for the big mining companies that won't be getting benefits. But although I'm suggesting referral to a legislative committee, I know we are committed to ensuring passage of the Bill before we adjourn in July for the summer recess, for the holidays, and we will keep that promise.

Thank you for your patience and attention, Mr. Speaker. I think it's an historic occasion to see the support we are showing for a Conservative Party bill, and to see how generously the Conservatives applauded our Party's support for their motion.

Mr. Richard Grisé (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, following consultations with the various leaders of the various parties, I think you will find that there is unanimous consent in this House to immediate referral of Bill C-137 to Committee of the Whole.

[English]

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, we would be agreeable to passing the Bill in all stages today. I would simply ask whether there is an opportunity now for questions and comments on the last speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions or comments. Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read a second time and, by unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Paproski in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-137, an Act to provide for incentives to assist in financing exploration for mineral resources and hydrocarbons in Canada and to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act.

Shall Clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask for the indulgence of the House. It might be simpler if we agreed that we would not watch the clock too closely and if we went a couple of minutes past one o'clock to go through the committee stage. It would be more efficient than to leave the matter tied up with the free trade debate this afternoon.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cassidy: My questions really relate to the two points I raised in my speech. Perhaps I can raise them with the Minister who is here now. To what extent is the definition of eligible expenses reduced? To what extent is it still possible for these large enterprises in Vancouver and Toronto to continue to package flow-through investments under this particular program? Is that a healthy kind of situation or not? To what extent, if at all, can large companies benefit under this particular program?

There is a $70 million cap on expenditures. What is the intention of the Government if it finds that the rate in which this fund is drawn down is going more quickly than had been anticipated? Is it the Government's intention to judge that the program is a success and reduce the percentage rate of incentive from 30 per cent to a lower figure? Or, is it the Government's intention that this in fact is an open-ended commitment?

Those are the major questions I had hoped might be answered. I might come back to one or two of them, but if the Hon. Minister has some comment on those questions now it would be helpful.

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, just on the first point, the Act spells out very, very carefully under Section 5 that the eligible expenses which can be used by a qualified company using a flow-through share mechanism are exactly the same as they were before and as defined under the Income Tax Act. There are no changes whatsoever. It worked before. It is exactly the same mechanism.

Second, the Member asked what the role would be, whether CMP and some of those very large equity raising companies would be operating about the same. Yes, they will. In fact, they have already gone to the equity market-place with some packages. Limited partnerships will be put together as in the past. There is no change there.

Third, the Member asked to what extent large companies would be able to utilize this particular program. I can tell him that I have talked with quite a lot of seniors in the Mining Association of Canada. It is very unlikely that they would use it at all. It makes no sense for them. First of all, they may not have losses which they can write off, and they are unlikely to want to deplete their own share ownership and give it to investors through a limited partnership. They would much rather hang on to their shares and invest out of their cash flow. I have an idea that they would be very unlikely to undertake that. I guess the good side of it is that the larger companies will tend to have their own exploration programs as they mostly had in the past.

This program, because of the cap, is designated for junior mining companies. I believe those are the three or four issues the Member raised.

• (1300)

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the fourth question I raised was with respect to the $70 million amount. Is that for the first fiscal year that this measure will be in force? Perhaps the Minister could give some further estimates of how much the Government anticipates might be spent under this program.

Should the draw downs of money go above the $70 million at the current rate of 30 per cent, is it the Government's intention, should it still be the Government, as a matter of policy that the incentive rates would be adjusted to keep the annual draw down at about $70 million? Or, is it the Government's intention that this is an open-ended type of commitment?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the Hon. Member that there will be a Government, probably of the same political stripe.

Mr. Cassidy: Probably? You change your stripes every six months anyway.

Mr. Merrithew: Hardly. It is the NDP which changes its stripes.

I want to tell the Hon. Member that the amount that was to be drawn down from the Consolidated Revenue Fund, which is mentioned in this particular Bill, will cover the draw on it through the hydrocarbon part which is a replacement for CEDIP effective October 1 and through to the end of this fiscal year, March 31, 1989. Because this new program, CEIP, will kick in on January 1, it will be whatever draws will be made on that between January 1, 1989 and March 31, 1989 on the mining or the mineral side. Although no one will know, we think that there will be a adequate number of dollars in there to finance both programs. If not, we can always undertake to raise money the way we normally do if one program happens to be running short of cash.

I can tell the Hon. Member that the 30 per cent of the contribution on the incentive toward eligible expenses will be in place for two full years. At the end of that time we will have a look at it to see if the level of exploration is satisfactory. If it is, we will continue. If not we can either lower it, raise it, or whatever, depending on what the markets look like at that particular time.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, for the fiscal year 1989-90, how much is it estimated that this program will cost? How much will be paid in incentives? Of that, how much is it estimated will go on the petroleum side and how much on the mining side? Is there any substantive change on the petroleum side from the existing incentive which I believe was put in place a year or so ago? If so, what is that change?

During the calendar year 1989 there will be a continuation of the 16 and two-thirds per cent earned depletion allowance. How does that relate to the incentive? Is there a doubling up, or does the existence of the earned depletion allowance effectively undercut by an equivalent amount the incentive payable? Rather than getting a maximum of 30 per cent incentive, can one only get 30 per cent minus the end of year depletion allowance which is claimed?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, the first question had to do with the relative levels of expenditures that would be required to fund this particular initiative. It is very difficult to know because who has a crystal ball to look and to say "here is the number of millions of dollars that we spent in exploration in the year 1989"? Based on previous experience we estimate that it will be around $210 million for a full fiscal year for both programs, the replacement of CEDIP which starts October 1, 1988, and of course the new program, CEIP, which will begin January 1, 1989.

Mr. Cassidy: How much on each side?

Mr. Merrithew: It is about $150 million for CEIP and about $60 million for CEDIP, the oil and gas CEDIP.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, was that $150 million on the mining side and about $60 million on the oil and gas side?

Mr. Merrithew: That is correct.

Mr. Cassidy: Could the Minister say what is the status of these subsidies under the trade agreement? If a mine which has been developed with this particular subsidy were to begin exporting to the United States, would its production be subject to countervail by the United States if it chose to do so on the grounds of there having been a federal government subsidy? Is that the position in which the Government is putting mining companies which take advantage of this particular incentive?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, just to make sure that we understand the figures in the previous question, it is around $150 million for the mineral exploration side and about $60 million for the oil and gas or hydrocarbons. It is for a total of about $210 million for a full fiscal year. That is with the proviso that we do not know what it will really cost, because we do not know the level of activity. We think it will be adequate.

With respect to the Hon. Member's question on whether or not I think there is any conflict with the free trade agreement which is being worked out now, no, we do not think that there is at all. As the Hon. Member probably knows, this initiative is directed toward juniors, or very basic grass roots exploration. It is not a subsidy given to, for example, gold, zinc, antimony, or potash. It is available for just general grass roots exploration. From every source which we have checked we anticipate that there will be no conflict at all.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, first I want to commend the Minister on this legislation, Bill C-137. I am sure that the program will assist small and medium sized explorers to raise capital. However, I have two concerns. The first has to do with arm's length and the other has to do with eligible expenses.

In his remarks the Minister mentioned that the regulations would be forthcoming at perhaps the end of the summer or early fall after consulting with the industry. I wonder if the Minister would give favourable consideration to the removal of the words "where the corporation and investor are at arm's length from the eligible expenses". There are numerous privately owned oil and gas exploration companies in the industry. I believe that this consideration would provide privately owned oil and gas exploration companies the same opportunities as provided for public companies under the present terms of the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program. Some small private companies will find it very difficult to issue more shares. It will really cause dilution of the company.

I want the Minister to comment on what expenditures qualify. Using the Income Tax Act, which the Minister mentioned in his remarks, really discriminates against the petroleum industry. The problem with the Income Tax Act is the threat of a potential retroactive assessment by the tax Department. That is sort of reclassifying a well from exploration to development.

This happens when a well appears to strike a new oil or a gas pool and then later when the geology is better understood it is decided that it hit upon an existing pool. A reassessment is then made under the provisions of the Income Tax Act. The entitlement that is paid through the CEIP, which has probably gone out to the investors, is really null and void and would have to be collected back. Would the Minister talk about arm's length also in regard to what expenditures qualify?

Mr. Merrithew: Mr. Chairman, first I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Calgary South. She has been very assiduous in trying to protect the interests of those small privately owned exploration companies on the oil and gas side.

I want to say what we have tried to do. The industry asked us in our consultations to use the same type of criterion under eligible expenses that would be given under Section 66 of the Income Tax Act. The industry said: "Leave it as it is. It is working now". We are happy with that so we will leave it that way. There will be no retroactive assessments. We are attempting to ensure that that does not happen.

• (1310)

The other one is a much more difficult one to resolve. That is the issue of small exploration companies on the oil and gas side. We have to remember that CEIP is not like CEDIP which is essentially an activity program. A tax mechanism is being used here. When the program was designed we wanted to ensure that it utilized the flow-through share mechanism. It was very important that we maintain that as a means to flow through those benefits to individual shareholders. If that is not done, there is some concern that there could be a potential for abuse. For example, one corporation could flow shares to another shareholder, perhaps other small shareholders within the same corporation, or a wholly owned subsidiary. There is more potential for abuse using the other route and not having it at arm's length.

I wish it to be fully understood that CEIP is utilizing a tax mechanism. The idea is to find a way to raise equity for exploration. We do not want this to move in and find another way of doing it, if we do not have to use the tax system form. The rules do not preclude a private company making a private placement to existing shareholders, providing that shareholder is not the majority shareholder in that corporation or a member of a related group in which he would be a majority shareholder. In other words, while it might preclude the majority, it does not preclude any small company from utilizing the mechanism, providing it is not to the majority shareholder who already has control of that company.

There is one thing I will make in accommodation to the Hon. Member for Calgary South. We have had many consultations with the industry, not only the exploration industry on the oil and gas side but on the mineral side and through the investment community.

We will undertake to continue that type of discussion with them. We understand their concerns. We too have concerns about it. Perhaps something might be able to be worked out. I am not sure. We will undertake, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Calgary South and on behalf of other Members who share those views, to consider the interests of those small privately owned exploration companies on the energy side. We will undertake to work out the regulations with them. Hopefully we can come to a meeting of minds. We wish to be very careful that we do not, in some way, leave ourselves open to potential abuse by manipulating the shares between one company or a corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries. We have to be careful of that, and we will do the best. I appreciate the Hon. Member's views in this matter.

Mr. Rompkey: The previous program was called CEDIP. With the type of turnaround that the Government has done, the new program might very well be called "CEDIP-CEDOO-DLE".

In the unfortunate event that the Party of the Hon. Member is likely to form the Government after the next election—

Mrs. Sparrow: You bet!

Mr. Rompkey: I notice the Hon. Member for Calgary South is wearing red today, which is no doubt a harbinger of things to come.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: —what type of dipsy-doodling will be done in 1990 when the review is done? What will be the factors in the review? Will it take another stock market crash before we see a continuation of flow through? Can we assure the industry now, particularly the Prospectors and Developers Association?

I think it should be put on record, the contribution of the Prospectors and Developers Association and of the flow-through share committee with its chairperson, Eveline Kasner. I would particularly mention the mayors of Kirkland Lake and Val d'Or who did an excellent job in the lobby process.

The question really becomes: Will we have to go through the lobby process in 1990? Will it take a stock market crash in 1990, or on what factors will the review process be done? What weight will be given to those various factors?

Mr. Merrithew: Like the Hon. Member, I have no crystal ball to see what the conditions might be like in the equity markets generally in Canada at the end of 1990. One thing we can assure the Hon. Member is that we will consult, as we have now, with groups such as the prospectors and developers, APQ in Quebec, the Mining Association of Canada and, of course, the CMPs, and the NIMs. on the investment side. We have already consulted widely with them. We will continue to do so.

Essentially, the reason we might have to change the level of contribution either up or down would be the level of mining exploration activity that we might have going on. We were forced to take this particular step. It was something totally out of the hands of anyone. That is what happened on October 19 in the stock market. Obviously we saw what was probably going to be a very adequate level of exploration expenditure suddenly disappear. This group will need help. We immediately started to consult with them and ask: "How can we do this?" We extended MEDA to the end of 1988 and brought in this program. Those two things would determine what we would have to do with the 30 per cent. There are two full years in which to deal with the level of expenditures, the grass roots expenditures, and the need for raising of equity by those small companies that do not have many other mechanisms by which they can raise equity for exploration.

Mr. Cassidy: I ask the Hon. Minister what would be the interplay of the earned depletion allowance continuing in 1989 at the lower rate and of the new incentive programs coming in for mining at the same time. Will the regulations be designed in such a way that it is not possible to stack one on top of the other, but that the total benefit will be in the order of the 30 per cent incentive? How will the Minister handle that particular problem?

As a final comment, because I believe it is time that we started going through the sections fairly quickly, as a finance critic I am uneasy that a complex piece of legislation similar to tax legislation should be adopted by the House within a matter of a day or less from it being introduced in the House. I believe that the delays were due to the Government. It has taken from May 3 to June 26 or June 27 for the Bill to be introduced. That is inadequate. I hope the Senate has a more profound look at it and will abide by the agreement that we gave to see this through. It is not good to legislate in this particular manner. I sincerely hope there are no egregious errors in the Bill as a consequence of its hasty passage. It is a bad way to proceed. I hope that the Department of the Hon. Minister and the Department of Finance together ensure that this type of hasty treatment is not given to such future complex and important legislation. After all, we are engaging in the expenditure of $200 million a year. In anybody's language that is a lot of money.

Mr. Merrithew: I do not share the view of the Hon. Member that there has been any inappropriate hastiness in this particular program. It is a complicated program because it does utilize other references to different pieces of legislation, for example the Income Tax Act and CEDIP. It was not an easy piece of legislation to put together. We wanted to take our time at it, and we did, in order to consult with the industry, and it appreciated that. We will continue that type of process. Most of the detail will come out in the regulations under the Act, not this piece of legislation which by itself is reasonably general.

On the Mining Exploration Depletion Allowance, under CEDIP on the energy side, that will continue at 16 and two-thirds per cent. Applicants who wish to utilize this particular mechanism will have a choice of going with one or the other. They can use either or an accommodation, but they cannot exceed the level outlined in the Act which is 30 per cent of a maximum of $10 million of eligible exploration expenditures.

On the mining side MEDA will continue at 33 and one-third per cent until the end of 1988 and will then be phased out to zero. They will go immediately into the new program which is as rich or even a bit richer.

Mr. Cassidy: The point that I make on the process is that if it is a complicated piece of legislation as the Minister states, and if it required a great deal of preparation, what is the basis of the assumption by his officials that Parliament can then turn around and pass it in the blink of an eye? If there were consultations widely within the industry, there could have also been consultations within the House of Commons. If the industry were only consulted narrowly, then there will be many companies that may have wanted to make some comments but would have been excluded from the consultation process.

Therefore, I suggest as a general rule that it is not good to legislate in this manner. I am afraid that all of us are familiar with the problems that arise when legislation is rushed through the House too hastily. I am saying this at the same time as recognizing that my Party has called for this type of legislation and is happy to see it go through. In process terms we run severe risks because of the way this is being handled.

ARMED FORCES DAY

TRIBUTE TO WORK OF SERVICE PERSONNEL

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, Saturday, June 25, was Armed Forces Day in Canada.

The members of our Armed Forces are called upon to perform many tasks and, as a result, they have developed an expertise and professionalism in a very extensive variety of duties and responsibilities. Whether they are called upon to handle natural disasters caused by floods, fire, or earthquakes, they assume those duties with poise, efficiency and good naturedness.

Because of their ability to be good soldiers, and diplomats in their understanding of international politics, they have performed peacekeeping duties whenever called upon to do so. Their emphasis on training and their ability to meet new challenges make them an efficient and respected security force in the international community.

All Canadians I am sure will recognize that the members of the Canadian Armed Forces do Canada proud as they perform their duties of national and international security, with diplomacy and tact, anywhere in the world.

This Parliament of Canada thanks them for their dedication and efforts.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

POSITION OF ALBERTA GOVERNMENT

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, in 1905 a great Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, refused to entrench French in the Alberta Charter as the vast majority of the population in the new province were English-speaking Canadians

In 1988 a great Premier, Hon. Don Getty, and his Attorney General, Hon. Jim Horsman, and their PC supporters made English the language of legislation in Alberta because 97 per cent of the population are English-speaking Canadians. After all, a real democratic Government reflects the thinking of the majority of its electors in its laws, and both Laurier and Getty have done this. Furthermore, Premier Getty is operating within the Constitution, and Alberta's treatment of its minorities, including the French minority, is equal or better than that found in any other province.

I support the position taken by the Alberta Government as it is in direct accordance with the thinking of the people of the province to whom the Government is accountable, and that is democracy, Mr. Speaker.

LA CENTRALE DE L'ENSEIGNEMENT DU QUÉBEC

WOMAN ELECTED PRESIDENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, the Centrale de l'enseignement du Québec set a precedent yesterday by electing a woman, Lorraine Pagé, president. Ms. Pagé becomes the first woman in Quebec to lead a large labour union. The openness of the union movement to women is remarkable. We see Ms. Pagé's accession to the highest position in the Centrale de l'enseignement du Québec as a result of the evolution in thinking that, we hope, will occur in all segments of our society.

The CEQ did not elect a token woman but a real president who sees her election this way, "I am rather inclined to believe that the fruit falls when it is ripe."

Ms. Pagé has proved her ability and leadership as president of the Montreal Teachers' Alliance. We wish her every possible success in her new duties, because we know that she will devote all her enthusiasm, determination and energy to them. I am sure that Ms. Pagé as president of the CEQ will represent the workers well, as does Shirley Carr, president of the Canadian Labour Congress.

SERBIAN DAY

CELEBRATION OF SERBIAN HERITAGE

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, today the Serbian community in Canada celebrates Serbian Day, a day on which Serbian Canadians celebrate their rich culture, heritage, and tradition, and commemorate an important event in Serbian history, the Battle of Kosovo.

Serbian immigration to Canada began in the second half of the 19th century. Many of those who followed came in search of the freedom denied them in their homeland. Over the years, Canadians of Serbian descent have made significant contributions to the cultural, social and economic development of Canada and have taken great pride in their dual heritage. They have retained, enhanced and shared their heritage, and today the Serbian community in Canada invites all Canadians to join them in celebrating Serbian Day.

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE—HIRING PRACTICES AT HAMILTON WAREHOUSE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, Firestone has done it again. It ought to get the worst citizen of the year award in the country of Canada.

Having collected upon a $13.5 million interest free grant for five years, and after picking up stakes, it has gone to the United States and left the Canadian workforce high and dry. To add insult to injury, this week we discovered that at the Hamilton area warehouse where it should be hiring laid-off Firestone workers, some of whom have more than 30 years' service, Firestone has decided to hire scabs to work in the warehouse.

Why doesn't the Government collect over $6 million in interest that it gave to this company so that it could rip off Canadian taxpayers, rip off the workers and go to the United States with machinery that was actually paid for by the people of Canada? Why doesn't the Government demand an immediate repayment of the $6 million in interest so that the workers in that company could at least get a fair shake by setting aside that particular money for a pension, retirement, and replacement fund?

Start fighting for the workers of this country, not fighting for American based multinationals that pick up stakes when the going gets tough.

HUMAN RIGHTS

U.S.S.R.—PLIGHT OF BORIS BENDERSKY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, in this period of glasnost there are still hundreds of Jewish families who are suffering inhumane treatment at the hands of the Soviet authorities, and for what reason?

I speak particularly of Boris Bendersky and his family who were brought to my attention by one of my constituents. Mr. Bendersky is seriously ill with a kidney ailment that can only be treated by doctors in the West. However, the Soviet authorities refuse to let this family leave.

We must insist that the Soviet Union honour its signature on the Helskini Accords, that it act in a humane way and let these people have their freedom.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OPPOSITION TO ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, despite his best efforts the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has failed miserably in his attempt to convince the Canadian people that this country needs a fleet of nuclear powered attack submarines.

In fact, it seems he is having a great deal of difficulty convincing even his own caucus colleagues of the need to spend billions and billions of dollars on these submerged nuclear power stations. Many of his colleagues are wisely urging him and the Government to abandon this dangerous proposal. Tory Members of Parliament are belatedly realizing what we on this side of the House have known for some time now, that Canadians don't want these submarines at any cost.

A recent slew of public opinion polls certainly must be discouraging to the Minister. One poll, done only last month, found that opposition to his megadollar proposal had soared to 60 per cent nationally. It is clear that Canadians have passed judgment on the Minister and his proposal. They see no need for Canada to get involved in the nuclear sub game. It is time the Government listened to this wise counsel.

STATUS OF WOMEN

ETOBICOKE ROTARY CLUB—ADMISSION OF WOMAN TO MEMBERSHIP

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, Canadian women have been second-class citizens in law and still in many ways are second-class citizens in fact.

While Governments, including successive Governments here, have taken steps to see on the long journey to equality that this is changing, often progress comes when individuals and private organizations and individuals, men and women, join in this battle for true equality in Canadian society.

Today on the floor of the House I would like to pay tribute to the Etobicoke Rotary Club as being the first in Ontario to admit a woman to its membership and to point out that it intends to withstand the efforts being made by the head office of Rotary International in the United States to correct this development which they refer to as "a mistake", and to say through private organizations, like the Etobicoke Rotary Club, that we are seeing the spirit of equality of the sexes being achieved.

Not only do I pay tribute to this Rotary Club, I would also like to point out that I am very proud of the fact that the first woman to be admitted is the publisher of Etobicoke Life newspaper and my cousin, Lynne Boyer Parks.

TRANSPORT

INFRASTRUCTURES IN MONTÉRÉGIE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, last Sunday, I had the opportunity to take part in a peaceful demonstration of officials from the south shore of Montreal. There were representatives from nearly 250 municipalities, several Members of this House and several Members of the National Assembly. And they were all together to denounce a situation that has gone on much too long, holding the people of the region hostage on the transportation issue.

Mr. Speaker, Highway 30 was promised several years ago and the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) when he was Minister of Transport made a commitment that a bridge would be built in the Salaberry-Valleyfield region, but this has not been done. Another transportation issue on the south shore of Montreal is the commitment made by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) concerning the tolls on Champlain Bridge.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the people of the south shore are getting impatient, and rightly so, because of two commitments that this Government has not kept and unfortunately, last Sunday, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), unlike his provincial counterpart, did not have the courage to come and explain his position to the people of this region.

Mr. Speaker, the voters on the south shore will not let themselves be bought at the last minute by another series of promises from the Conservative Members. There must be a signed agreement and they must act immediately.

FREE TRADE

WISH OF ONTARIANS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Ontario is using every trick in the book to harm the free trade agreement, including legislation on health centres and legislation on exports of natural resources. The Liberal Premier of Ontario is trying to isolate Ontario from the rest of Canada. But that is not what will happen. What will happen is that the Premier of Ontario, together with his Government and his Liberal supporters in Ottawa, supporters in both Chambers, will be isolated from the rest of Ontario. He will be isolated because Ontarians want free trade. Ontario's consumers want free trade. Ontario's business people want free trade, and with the kind of negative legislation it has introduced, the Government of Ontario will wind up in the opposition, Mr. Speaker, and I certainly hope so.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

AIR TRANSPORT

SERVICES IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, deregulation has led to a continuing deterioration of airline services throughout northern Ontario. Since deregulation, jet service has been discontinued to Dryden and drastically reduced to Sault Ste. Marie and Sudbury. Air Ontario has pulled out of Geraldton and Canadian Airlines has abandoned Dryden. Schedules have deteriorated, connection delays have increased, and transfers and overbooking have become more common.

In the meantime the major alternative, the Trans-Canada Highway, suffers from increasing truck traffic, is neglected by the provincial Government, and is totally ignored by the federal Government which provides funds for the Trans-Canada Highway in every other participating province.

I call upon the Government to abandon its slavish addiction to the ideologies of privatization and deregulation, to look at what is happening in real life to travellers in northern Ontario, and to establish a commission to examine the effect of deregulation on northern Ontario.

AEROSPACE INDUSTRY

ORDERS RECEIVED BY DE HAVILLAND SINCE ACQUISITION BY BOEING

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, once again the doom and gloom scenarios painted by the Opposition when the Government sold de Havilland failed to materialize. The Opposition predicted that Boeing would shut down the plant, thus making thousands of workers unemployed as well as crippling Canada's aircraft industry. So much for their ill-informed rhetoric.

Last week de Havilland announced new orders for Dash-8 totalling $116 million, with options for more if delivery time can be shortened. Along with the increase in sales due to Boeing's international contacts, production has been streamlined and made more efficient, employment has increased by 1,000 with the possibility of more, and the company will be profitable before the end of 1989.

The Opposition should congratulate the Government for giving Canada's aircraft industry and its employees a secure future.

BY-ELECTIONS

ELECTION OF LUCIEN BOUCHARD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, today is an important occasion. It is the first time that the House of Commons welcomes a Member elected in a by-election that has been the most expensive proposition ever for taxpayers in Quebec and Canada. This is the first time one of the Tory cronies from Lac-Saint-Jean, a native son who went first to Quebec City, then to Paris and then back to Lac-Saint-Jean to try and show people that the Party is pure as the driven snow, and who used the most underhanded tactics to win the election in that riding.

Mr. Speaker, he even promised Montreal would get the space agency. I would like to inform the new Member who has just arrived and who already has something of a reputation that as far as the space agency is concerned, the people of Montreal will not accept an empty shell. They will accept a space agency with contracts . . .

AGRICULTURE

CHANGE IN TWO-PRICE WHEAT SYSTEM

Mr. Don Ravis (Saskatoon East): Mr. Speaker, the two-price wheat system has been abolished and grain farmers will receive compensation in the 1988-89 crop year to ease the process of adjustment. However, the real issue has become why the two-price wheat system was changed.

I have been disturbed by the recent comments of some western Canadians that the reason for the change was the free trade agreement. This hollow argument ignores the fact that the policy was no longer doing what it was intended to do. The two-price system was artificially distorting the production patterns for wheat in Canada while also taxing food.

Why should the Government continue to tax consumers and encourage the growing of grain outside the Wheat Board region when 17,000 Saskatchewan farmers and farm workers have left the land in the last year? Clearly the policy had to be changed because it was not helping the majority of grain farmers while it was hurting other sectors of the Canadian economy.

This Government has made a sustained commitment to agriculture that is based on sound judgment. The reality is that since this policy was no longer sound, it was ended for all Canadians.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S DISMISSAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade, the man in charge of selling the Prime Minister's trade deal, the Government's chief huckster, has admitted that he has not even read the whole deal.

• (1420)

What would you say, Mr. Speaker, if that man were your lawyer and you were up on a criminal charge—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —and after you were convicted he admitted to you that he had not read all the evidence, interviewed all the witnesses, or even read all the relevant law?

What would you say if that man were your doctor and gave you a clean bill of health, but then admitted he had not looked at all your tests?

Mr. Speaker: It is not my place to say to the right hon. gentleman what I would say, but the right hon. gentleman might put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I was trying to put myself in your position with respect to what you would do if that man were an accountant, did an audit, and then admitted he had not read the books. I know what you would do. You would want that lawyer disbarred, the doctor charged with malpractice, and the accountant run out of business.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, when is the Prime Minister going to fire that Minister for International Trade, a man who has been living a lie, going across this country trying to support this deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I might say that what I said yesterday was that I had not read the entire text of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I once sold the Encyclopaedia Britannica and I never read every article in it to sell it, believe me. I once sold vacuum cleaners and I never once vacuumed a house.

This document has 2,106 articles, 195 pages, 12 pages of letters, and 500 pages of customs tariff changes. There is another 500—why, I can hardly lift it, much less read it all.

I have read all parts of this document which are of any importance. I left out a few pages. I will give you an example. I refer you to page 56:

where:

A = acreage idled under the acreage reduction program

B = yield per acre on idled acreage in bushels

where:

B = [(G + 0.85 x A) x (H - 0.85 x—

It's right here! Do you want to read that?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing funny about a Minister who does not do his homework.

Mr. McDermid: Have you read it?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There is nothing funny about this deal that changes the whole future of Canada.

[Translation]

READING OF AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister didn't even take the trouble to read an agreement that drastically changes twenty-seven laws of this country. That is blatantly irresponsible. It is an abuse of trust. It is an incredible affront to the Canadian people.

The Government is hiding behind a misleading façade. The Minister is praising the benefits of the agreement across this country, an agreement he hasn't even read. No wonder the Tory Ministers are in favour. No wonder they can't answer direct and specific questions, because they haven't even read the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, why should Canadians believe what they are being told by this gang of impostors who haven't even read the agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition isn't upset because the Minister for International Trade isn't doing his job. He is just disappointed that the Minister for International Trade is doing his job too well.

Since the Leader of the Opposition raised the issue, we just had a little referendum on his position on the free trade agreement. In Alma, he said he would tear up the free trade agreement, and the people of Lac-Saint-Jean gave him a memorable reply!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at least I read the text! And the Minister isn't doing a good job if he doesn't do his homework.

[English]

REQUEST THAT ELECTION BE CALLED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade has not read one of the most important documents in the 121-year history of our country. It is a document that diminishes our cultural integrity, diminishes our national sovereignty, and diminishes our political independence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: What a crock.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And he has not read the document. What hypocrisy! What incompetence! What incredible—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the point is that the Minister knows, as does every single Member of this House, that he should have read the deal. He should not have been selling it if he had not read it. The Prime Minister smiles and the Minister jokes but it brings shame to the idea of responsible Government that the Minister defends a deal, advances a deal, and attempts to sell a deal he has not even read.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, why should Canadian taxpayers tolerate a Government that spends $30 million on propaganda in an attempt to sell a deal which the Minister in charge has not even read? If the Prime Minister is so confident, why not go to the country now and ask Canadians to say whether or not they have confidence in a Government trying to sell a deal it has not even read?

Mr. McDermid: It will be your swan song, John.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is a question by a person who hopes to be Prime Minister. It is the same kind of question he asked about Mrs. Margaret Thatcher last week. Perhaps he is going to allege she has not read the deal either.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said he read the agreement. He could not have read Article 2106 which says the agreement shall remain in force until terminated by either party upon six months' notice to the other party. If he had, he would not have gone around the country saying he was going to tear the deal up. Donald Macdonald said this about that threat: "I think it says more about the strength of his wrists than it does about the strength of his judgment."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, obviously he did not read Article 2006—

Ms. Copps: It is your deal.

Mr. Crosbie: Look, the braying from the Member for Hamilton East continues.

Article 2006 says that cultural industries are exempt from the provisions of the agreement. Read the text, Mr. Leader of the Official Opposition. Don't just pretend you have.

THE CABINET

STANDARDS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

He can laugh all he wants at the lousy jokes of his clown for international trade, but I would like to ask him whether he thinks his Minister has done his job too well. Is the Prime Minister telling the House it is normal practice for his Ministers not to read the documents for which they are responsible and to be ignorant of the issues they are supposed to defend?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is extremely gratifying to know that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has such a diligent and literate caucus behind him. Every one of them have apparently read the free trade agreement and every line of it. Well, I have not. I have read the analysis. I have read all the important points of principle. I have read John Crispo's book. I have read memorandums to the Cabinet. I have read analyses. I have read about previous free trade deals. I could not find the text of the Mackenzie King free trade deal because no one living was ever consulted by him.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER WILL DEMAND MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

The Minister for International Trade has just admitted a second time that he did not read all the documents he defends in the House before us and before the Canadian people. Once again he has admitted his crass incompetence.

Will the Prime Minister ask the Minister to resign immediately, on grounds of incompetence?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister made it abundantly clear that in a set of documents with a number of schedules that are very—do they want an answer, yes or no? I was asked a question!

An Hon. Member: We want the truth!

Mr. Mulroney: Do you want an answer? I am trying to answer the Hon. Member.

The Minister said that he may not have necessarily read every single letter of the provisions in the schedules or elsewhere, but that is hardly surprising. He has read and understands perfectly well every provision the document contains.

I think it is clear he is defending the document and what it entails very effectively across this country, and I think we just had another opportunity to defend the agreement.

I personally went to the riding of Lac-Saint-Jean where Quebecers showed what they thought of the agreement in general, and the result is here before you, the new Member for Lac-Saint-Jean.

QUERY WHETHER MINISTER READ AGREEMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious question for the Prime Minister. Since, it wasn't the Minister who signed the agreement but the Prime Minister, I want to ask him this question: Did the Prime Minister read the agreement before signing it?

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I then ask the Prime Minister why he would not expect his own Minister for International Trade, who is selling this deal across the country, to have done exactly the same thing. Why is that fact not such a shameful admission that the Prime Minister will stand up in this House and demand the resignation of the Minister for International Trade for his inability to recognize the responsibilities of his position?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious from the questions which come from the New Democratic Party and the Official Opposition that not a Member over there has read this agreement in total. What they have read they completely misunderstand and try to mislead the Canadian public about. At least I tell the truth about the parts that I have read, the important parts. Why does the hon. gentleman not try to do the same? He will find it to be much more effective.

Mr. Langdon: I expected, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister was going to stand and give us his resignation. My regrets.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has described himself as a revolutionary and a Trotskyite. Let me ask the Minister, as a Trotskyite, just exactly what he sees in this deal—in the parts which he has read, as opposed to the parts he has not read—which is so tremendous for this country, when we lose the ability to control our energy, the ability to control our culture, and the ability to control—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman claims that he has read the agreement it must be some different kind of agreement that he has read, or he has completely misunderstood it.

Some Hon. Members: How would you know? You haven't read it.

Mr. Crosbie: I am resigned to having a continual barrage of silly questions from the hon. gentlemen opposite who do not want to spend the time of this House on something realistic, who cannot deal with honesty when they hear it, who cannot deal with real life, and who cannot deal with the facts.

Has Bob White read the agreement? Has Shirley Carr read the agreement? Has Ed Broadbent read the agreement? Has one soul in their caucus read the agreement? Obviously none of them have.

MINISTER'S RADIO STATEMENT

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the real reason the Minister refuses to read the trade deal is that deep down he really does not believe in it.

Does the Minister recall saying on VOCM in St. John's, not very long before taking over this portfolio: "We had a very interesting trip to Singapore, to Southeast Asia. Most of our trade is, as you know, going to the United States, over 78 per cent now. We have a very dangerous dependence on the United States. Southeast Asia is one of the very few areas where we have improving prospects"?

Does the Minister still secretly "sing a song of Singapore"?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is the most serious question we have had today in Question Period. It illustrates that our policy is one of two sectors. One is the multilateral negotiations at GATT where we are expanding our trade with the rest of the world. That part is supposed to be Liberal policy until there is a GATT panel ruling against Canada, and then it ceases to be Liberal policy. The other of the two tracks is the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

I am afraid the hon. gentleman is off the track. He has gone on a "Singapore sling".

A QUESTION OF LITERACY

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, the Minister long ago confessed that he is incapable of speaking French, even English for all that. I suspect that after today we can come to the conclusion that perhaps he is incapable of reading, that he did not get past Dick and Jane. Fascinated with Dick and perhaps infatuated with Jane, he didn't go any further.

While the Minister goes from town to town singing "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy", when he puts the feather in his hat will he call it what it is, baloney?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we were sorry to hear that the hon. gentleman had a fire in his library. He lost all two books, one of them before he finished colouring it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The other one was Playboy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

Mr. Crosbie: We have heard that the Leader of the Opposition has a new song: "I've got a lovely bunch of caucus-nuts".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

READING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it has been six months since the trade deal was originally initialled on January 2. The Prime Minister has indicated on a number of occasions that he feels this is the most important trade deal in world history. This is not a minor, typical piece of legislation, but, by the Prime Minister's own words, the most important trade deal in world history.

The Prime Minister felt it was appropriate that he read it. Since he felt it was important enough for him to read, and considering its importance in terms of the future of Canada's economy as well as social, cultural, and perhaps even political policy, does he feel it would not be unreasonable to expect the Minister responsible for international trade to have sat down and read it, having had the document in his hands for six months?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that is just as sensible as saying that the Minister of Finance—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Reads his Budget before he presents it?

Mr. Crosbie: —has to read every page of every tax Bill and every finance Bill that goes through the House.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Do you not do that, Michael?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He does his homework.

Mr. Blaikie: You should have read your 1979 Budget.

An Hon. Member: How long did you have that job?

Mr. Crosbie: I made the mistake of reading the 1979 Budget, and I will not do that again!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: It is obvious that the Minister did not read his 1979 Budget. If he did, perhaps he would not have brought Mr. Clark's Government down with him. I suggest that if he read this trade Bill he would not be bringing down Canada with this particular Government as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He felt it appropriate, in his busy schedule as Prime Minister, to read this deal. I suspect that most of his other senior Ministers would have read the deal at least once.

The Minister for International Trade has indicated publicly that he did not feel it was important enough for him to read through it at least once. Will the Prime Minister do what I suspect is the appropriate thing in the eyes of Canadians and ask for that individual's resignation?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, what would be appropriate for the Minister for International Trade would be a promotion, but he is already so high in the regard of the people of Canada that there is nothing I can do to elevate him any further.

An Hon. Member: That is what you said about Eric last year.

Mr. Blaikie: Give him the job he wants—yours.

Mr. Tobin: He will take over as Leader of the Opposition once you are gone.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend knows full well that the Minister made his comment in reference to very substantial annexes that go along—

Mr. Riis: You read it.

Mr. Mulroney: Not only has he read it and understood it and debated it—

Mr. Riis: He has not read it. He said he has not read it.

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend is completely misstating the Minister's case and distorting the Minister's statement. Not only has he read it and defended it with great brilliance and success across Canada, the G-7 leaders read it and strongly welcomed the free trade agreement both for Canada and for the liberal effects that it would have on world trade. My hon. friend knows that. He knows that the NDP and Liberal position against the free trade deal is going absolutely nowhere because of the tremendous efforts of the Minister for International Trade.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CO-OPERATIVE PROJECTS OF CANADIAN DIRECT MAILERS ASSOCIATION

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. The Canadian Association of Direct Marketing which was here today in Ottawa, an industry that employs 200,000 Canadians, submitted to Canada Post a series of co-operative projects that would reduce the deficit on a permanent basis and it also asked the Government to make no changes in the postal system until such time as the projects have been assessed.

My question to the Minister is very simple. Has Canada Post assessed the projects submitted by the Association, which would have dealt with the deficit problem? If so, what is the conclusion?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that is an appropriate question to put to Canada Post. When it was before the committee the Hon. Member should have been there to put those questions.

This gives me an opportunity to point out that the Postal Services Review Board which I announced yesterday will provide the kind of mechanisms to allow the Direct Mailers Association and other interested customers of postal services to present their ideas and suggestions and to have them evaluated in an objective fashion which will hopefully lead to improved services and a contained cost of the stamps.

Mr. Gagliano: This is another case of a Minister who does not even read his correspondence.

REQUEST THAT RATE CHANGES BE POSTPONED PENDING STUDY BY REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Association of Direct Marketing recommends that the new proposed increase of rates by Canada Post, published in the Canada Gazette on May 14, be delayed until the new board is in place and can review this proposed rate. Will the Minister guarantee to the House today that all rate changes and service changes will be delayed until the new board he introduced yesterday will have time to look at them?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a spokesman for his Party said that the new board would not do any good. Now he does not want me to do anything until the new board goes into action.

The fact is that the Post Office and all those dealing with the Post Office require some planning time. Rate increases scheduled for January 1 have to go ahead, otherwise it would create a chaotic situation. In terms of any further adjustments to rates, it will be done on the basis of recommendations made by this independent review agency. I think everyone will benefit from that process.

THE ENVIRONMENT

MEASURES TO REDUCE GREENHOUSE EFFECT—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the contradictions in his statement to the World Conference on the Changing Atmosphere in Toronto. The Prime Minister said that Canada would promote measures to reduce the greenhouse effect, which is mainly caused by the use of coal, oil and natural gas. However, the free trade agreement encourages fast exploitation of these resources and is thus against reducing the greenhouse effet and against sustainable development.

Is the Government aware of this contradiction and how does it intend to resolve it? Is the Government in favour of reducing the greenhouse effect or in favour of the fast exploitation and use of resources that causes the greenhouse effect and is incompatible with sustainable development?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction between the two. These positions can be harmonized, and that is what we are proposing, with the collaboration of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and my Cabinet colleagues. There is no contradiction at all!

[English]

SUSTAINABLE DEVELOPMENT POLICY

Ms. Lynn McDonald (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister would consult some experts who would tell him something about what causes atmospheric change. He would discover what this contradiction is.

If the Prime Minister is really serious about dealing with the greenhouse effect, will he bring in a policy of sustainable development? Will there be a real change in our energy policy in the direction of conservation and the use of renewable resources of energy that do not pollute and cause the greenhouse effect? Are we going to be seeing a real commitment to a safe energy policy and sustainable development?

• (1450)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for the advice that I consult experts with respect to this very difficult and challenging area. I try to do that and have done so with respect to a sensitive area of our national life, namely, the protection of the atmosphere, particularly with respect to the conference ongoing in Toronto.

In fact it may please my hon. friend to know that, contrary to the suggestion implied in her observation, Prime Minister Brundtland of Norway congratulated the Government yesterday for its leadership role in this respect and also paid a modest compliment to the Ministers who have been involved in developing this quite effective policy.

EMPLOYMENT

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST OLDER WORKERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This morning, I, as well as the Liberal caucus, had the honour to meet members of the Quebec Coalition, mainly from the St. Maurice region. This coalition is opposed to the Government's decision to discriminate against older workers. They gave me a petition supported and signed by 70,000 people from the region. These people, some of whom are here in the gallery, would like to know—and I would remind the newly elected Member for Lac-Saint-Jean that he promised to help these people.

So I ask the Minister if she would be prepared to announce immediately that her Government will amend Bill C-50 so as to eliminate discrimination against older workers who lose their jobs and are not entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits under the so-called Bouchard law?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, with respect to the transition period in which we dealt for those older workers, many of those people have been reviewed and changes were made for many of them. The changes that were not made were all very carefully reviewed by my Department and by myself. I should point out, as I pointed out yesterday, that the unemployment rate among older workers is below what it is for the population as a whole, and we will continue to take action for older workers.

[Translation]

ELIGIBILITY CRITERIA FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have the feeling that all of them in that Cabinet have the same problem—they do not read the bills that they defend.

Ms. Copps: Right on!

Mr. Malépart: I have the feeling that the Minister is like the Minister for External Trade.

Can the Minister tell us what kind of social justice says that an older worker in Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, Vancouver . . .

Ms. Copps: Alma.

Mr. Malépart: . . . who loses his job and looks for work is not entitled to unemployment insurance because he has withdrawn his pension plan? Another older worker, like friends of the Minister, who are richer, who are in management, has an RRSP. He gets a lot of money and is entitled to full unemployment insurance benefits. What kind of social justice is that? Explain that to the people here in the gallery who have lost $10,000 through your mistake!

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the problems with older workers that we have seen over the past few years is not that they are older but that they have joined the long-term unemployed as a result of a very long recession that was there in the early 1980s. They then became discouraged workers and long-term unemployed through policies that had to do with the people on the other side of this House that brought about that recession.

Let me say as well that 119,000 new jobs have been created for older workers within the last year. There are 34,000 who have come off the unemployed rolls. We spent $1.5 billion on job development through the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and all older workers can apply for that and are eligible for it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH AFRICA'S ACTIONS IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last night, The Journal showed how the South African Embassy uses lies, distortions, intimidation, threats and even murder as tools in its propaganda war in Canada to support apartheid. The Government rightly acted against the Soviet Embassy for its unacceptable activities. Does the Government consider the actions of the South Africa Embassy to be unacceptable also, and if so, what action will the Government take against the South African Embassy?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the actions of the South African Government mentioned last night on The Journal were not of the same kind as the Soviet actions that brought the response from the Canadian Government. I believe that is well established and well accepted by all Members here in the House. But personally, I am pleased that The Journal has begun to point out the propaganda activities of the South African Government, here in Canada and elsewhere. As the Hon. Member well knows, I believe, the Commonwealth Conference of Foreign Affairs Ministers to be held in Toronto in August will try to encourage the media and others to monitor the issues, the propaganda tactics used by the Government of South Africa.

[English]

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN AMBASSADOR BE RECALLED FROM SOUTH AFRICA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, surely the documentation of threats, intimidation, distortions, lies and, in fact, murder, against those who have testified before CBC cameras are enough to justify some kind of action on the part of the Government right now. If the Government has difficulty in defining what action it should take, would it not be reasonable, at least, to recall the Canadian Ambassador from South Africa to plot the course of action that this Government should take to ensure that this kind of activity in Canada which, by the way, threatens all of us in many ways, can be brought to an end?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that The Journal last night focused attention upon the propaganda activities of South Africa that occur in Canada and elsewhere. I hope that other members of the media in Canada will follow that very important story. Sometimes it takes great courage on the part of the Canadian media to follow that story. I hope that will be done. The Government of Canada has been pursuing the question of propaganda quite vigorously—

Ms. Copps: That's right!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): There is some derisive laughter from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. I take it that is her personal problem and not one that relates to the rest of the House or to the serious question of apartheid.

The Government of Canada has been pursuing the question of how we might effectively combat the propaganda activities of the Government of South Africa. We have been doing that at the Commonwealth Conference in Vancouver, chaired by the Prime Minister. We are doing it in a special committee of Foreign Ministers that I have the honour to chair, which will be meeting with a focus on this particular topic in Toronto in August.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK NATIVE FOOD FISHERY—REPORTED THREATS AGAINST FISHERY OFFICERS

Mr. W. R. Bud Jardine (Northumberland—Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. The Minister will be aware of the present difficulties associated with the native food fishery in New Brunswick. Conflicting federal regulations, illegal salmon fishing, and seeming disregard for the authority of fishery officers, have exacerbated an already tense situation. Can the Minister advise what action the Government may be considering to defuse and finally resolve this problem?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the serious question raised by the Hon. Member for Northumberland—Miramichi. We have a situation in northwestern New Brunswick where the Eel Ground Band of Indians have a food fishing allocation, but it does not include an area in which they have been active for some two or three weeks, known as the Big Hole Track. This particular band is apparently alleged to be fishing illegally by net in this area. Shots have been fired and I am told that threats against the lives of fisheries officers have occurred. We have the situation under surveillance. We are very concerned, of course, about these circumstances, and appropriate actions will be taken as required.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

COMMERCIAL AND FINANCIAL LINKS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. It concerns the reform of financial institutions. The Government proposed in its December Blue Paper that in the future commercial and financial links be banned, along with the retailing of insurance by financial institutions. However, two weeks ago the Minister in a press release seemed to back away from these policies and it is not at all clear what the Government's policies are. So I ask the Minister to clarify his position. Will commercial and financial links now be allowed under the financial institutions' reform?

• (1500)

Second, will the Government allow in its reform the retailing of insurance by financial institutions?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Two weeks ago I released to the press the information that in considering our draft trust and loan Bill we have reacted to the input we have had from across the country. We are going to place less reliance on the financial and commercial links part of that policy. Of course, the policy has 90, 100 or 120 principles in it. They remain.

The draft trust and loan Bill, as the Hon. Member has seen, will be largely the same except for some changes we might make to less reliance on commercial and financial links.

In terms of the banning of the retailing of insurance by banks, I am very pleased to tell the Hon. Member that in no way am I going to change my view on that matter.

[Translation]

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the reform of financial institutions has been expected now for more months than I care to count, indeed since 1985. And in recent years we have seen companies such as L'Alliance and L'Industrielle merge and give up their federal charter. Lately another company, Les Coopérants, has done the same. And now Montreal Trust is giving up its federal charter and we may be called upon to make a decision in this case.

I shall therefore ask the Minister: What is the Government waiting for to make its final position known? The legislation should have been introduced months ago and we still have nothing before us; in the meantime companies are giving up their federal charter in favour of provincial charters.

Does the Federal Government intend to abdicate all responsibility over financial institutions and introduce legislation only when all companies have left the federal jurisdiction?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Hon. Member is not against consultation. As a result of the draft trust and loan Bill, we have had the consultations that have allowed us to make some modifications in our policy which will make its passage more speedy when it comes to the House.

With regard to charters moving, Montreal Trust has made it very clear, and the Hon. Member knows this, that it has nothing to do with federal or provincial jurisdiction and the new framework. It has to do with its internal organization.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

ADMINISTRATION—STATEMENT BY PRESIDENT

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post has produced a video entitled: "Delivering on the Promise". In that video Donald Lander states:

> Nobody in the Government is telling us how to run Canada Post. Contrary to what you hear in the media and so on. It's a bunch of crap. We run Canada Post and there's no politician telling us what to do.

My question to the Minister responsible for Canada Post is this. Can the Minister tell Canadians why he has let Canada Post close rural post offices, cut back on home delivery, and proliferate supermailboxes? Is it because he is afraid of Donald Lander? When will he stand up for the rights of Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when Canada Post Corporation was created by Act of Parliament passed by unanimous approval of every Party in the House, the object was to have a Crown corporation that would act like a corporation at arm's length. Donald Lander is saying that he has the same authority in terms of Canada Post as Pierre Jeanniot has in terms of Air Canada. That is what Crown corporations are all about. It is not shocking. It is what this House asked should happen in 1981.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has failed to stand up to Canada Post as it runs roughshod over millions of Canadians because, as Donald Lander says; "no politician will tell us what to do".

When will the Minister finally accept his responsibilities and stand up for the millions of Canadians who are being denied full postal service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the accusation is patently false. It is difficult to understand where the New Democratic Party is coming from. I have a letter here from the Hon. Member's colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, who writes to Canada Post about a temporary post office box on Camrose and Tyndale in Burnaby. He says: "I am writing to request that you expedite the installation of a permanent box at Camrose and Tyndale." He then states: "Understandably, the people living in this neighbourhood are anxious to have a permanent box installed as quickly as possible".

Mr. Rodriguez: That's a group mail box.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member stood up just a moment ago saying that the people do not want it. Yet his colleague is saying that that is exactly what they want.

INDUSTRY

GOODYEAR COMPANY—GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. Eight weeks ago in the House I asked the Minister if ,in light of the fact that the Government of Ontario was giving a $32 million interest free loan to Goodyear, and the fact that the federal Government was giving up to $50 million under a remission order to Goodyear, and contemporaneously with that the head office of Goodyear in the United States was taking an additional $25 million to $30 million out of the Canadian subsidiary, something which I described as an outrageous arrangement, the Minister of State for Finance would look into the matter.

I am asking the Minister today if he would now report to the House on what he found when he looked into the matter, and whether or not he has anything else he wishes to report.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his important question. I want to thank him, too, for his continuing interest in this matter.

On May 26 I made it clear that after my examination of these levies and of inter-corporate transfers at Goodyear that the levy was not out of line. The inter-corporate transfers in that company have been generally very modest.

Ms. Copps: You are justifying that rip-off?

Mr. Hockin: Therefore this will have no bearing whatsoever on the duty remission which will be available for Goodyear as part of the existing industry-wide duty remission programs for that industry.

I might tell the Hon. Member that my tabling of the duty remissions this morning and the order today brings to a conclusion a process which will result in 800 jobs and $350 million worth of investment in eastern Ontario.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"this House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-130, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner in the absence of a mandate from the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada."

And the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "political institutions of Canada," the words "including our valued system of social and regional development programs,".

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-130 was last before the House the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert had completed her speech. The question and comment period following the Hon. Member's speech is now available to Members, otherwise the Chair is prepared to recognize another Hon. Member on debate.

If there are no questions and comments, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Algoma on debate.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak on Bill C-130. We believe this to be the most important economic agreement which Canada has ever signed. It is regrettable that we have this Bill before the House when we have not seen the United States legislation which would enable this agreement to become law. It is those types of concerns that cause great distrust among the Canadian people, not only of Government but of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this whole agreement.

They are equally concerned because only five years ago when the Prime Minister was seeking the leadership of his Party he said in very determined and candid words that he was opposed to free trade with the United States. In fact, he said: "Canada rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They will do it again in 1983".

My Party is not opposed to the liberalization of trade. We are opposed to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. We do not think that the Government got a very good deal out of it. It is not a free trade deal as such. It is a trade deal in which we did not get a great deal, and we gave away a lot.

• (1510)

The arguments that the Government is making for spending $30 million trying to sell this deal across the country are that it will give great access to the United States market, it is going to give secure access to the United States market, that it will give tremendous economic advantage to Canada, and that there is no alternative. Things are in such a terrible state that, even though the President has already vetoed the omnibus trade Bill, we have to jump off the cliff at any risk and accept this deal.

If we look at the deal itself we see what we have given away. We have given away or essentially aligned ourselves with the economy of the United States to make all of North America one economy in which Canadian economic, trade, and industrial programs will be harmonized with those of the United States. We are turning over our water resources and our energy resources on an equal share basis. We are jeopardizing our social and environmental programs. When we start to harmonize economic policies, many other policies have to be harmonized, including social, cultural, and other programs.

In foreign investment the minimum goes to $150 million. Foreign investment will be able to come in and take over most Canadian companies without regard to providing any benefits to the Canadian economy. Our regional development programs will be affected because most of them under American trade law would be judged subject to countervail duties or anti-dumping duties. We will leap into the same economic basket with the United States service industry and financial institutions. All in all, we will give up a great deal.

I would like to look at the deal from the view of agriculture and the claims that the Government makes with regard to access to the U.S. market. Before doing so, I would like to mention the drafting instructions provided by the U.S. congressional committees, the Senate and the House committees, that went to the administration. They are very instructive. They tell us that this trade deal is subject to all other United States laws. It is interesting that our Bill C-130 is subject to the trade deal. Therefore, there is an inequity there. Not only is Bill C-130 subject to the trade deal, but any conflicts there are with provincial legislation will be subject to the trade deal as well, whereas on the American side, although we have not seen that Bill yet, its law will be superior to the trade deal.

Turning to the agriculture sector, if at some stage it is negotiated that we will do away with provincial marketing boards for the dairy industry, then Section 6 of the agreement on the implementing legislation or regulation can be drawn to do away with it. Those drafting instructions have a profound impact on all of agriculture.

Under Article 706 the administrative action recommended is that we get rid of all barriers for poultry and eggs. In Section 1901 there is a provision where the United States industry can put in place a permanent monitoring arrangement with reports to both industry and Congress in order that countervail or dumping duty actions can easily be taken by the United States industry.

Under these drafting instructions there is a section relating to the potato industry. It authorizes the United States administration to negotiate limits on imports of potatoes. There is a great deal in those drafting instructions to the United States administration which will end up in the United States Bill and will have a profound influence on Canadian agriculture.

Let us look at the argument the Government makes that we will have profound and great new access to the U.S. market. In the broad range of commodities traded with the United States the most commonly quoted one is the pork and beef industries. They will have great new access. Let us examine that situation. With regard to beef, over a five-year period we will remove the 1 cent per pound tariff on beef going into the United States. Essentially we have free trade now. I do not understand how we will have massive new access to the U.S. market with only 1 cent being removed over five years. Likewise, there is a countervail duty against hogs of $5 per hog. That stays in place. How will there be great new access?

The most troubling aspect and one of great concern to all exporters, whether in relation to beef, hogs, or any commodity, is the appreciation that has taken place in the Canadian dollar against the United States dollar. There has been almost a 15 per cent appreciation in the Canadian dollar. That was forecast, but most people did not think it would happen as rapidly. Clearly the Economic Council and some other agencies predicted that our dollar would appreciate from 70 cents in relation to the United States dollar during the next five or six years to toward 94 cents or 95 cents. Already we have seen an appreciation of 10 cents on our dollar against the United States dollar, which is far larger than any tariff advantage that will result from this trade deal.

In the Canada-U.S. meat import law, American meat import law drafting instructions suggest that the U.S. will still be able to use its meat import law if it is to carry out the impact of a third country importing that is subject to their meat import law, whereas our law does not provide for it. In fruits and vegetables, I have heard the Minister say that we may have an opportunity in a couple of commodities such as mushrooms, but generally our opportunities in fruits and vegetables are relatively limited in the U.S. Our controlled commodities of dairy and poultry products are far higher priced and there is little opportunity there. In the grains sector there is a tremendous market building up in the Pacific northwest for Canola meal. The western grain transportation subsidy is being removed almost immediately, whereas the tariff in place will be phased out over 10 years. There may be some increased access to the U.S. market, but it is extremely limited.

Let us look at coming the other way for the Canadian agriculture industry. In poultry, eggs, and turkeys, the U.S. has scored a major increase in its imports into Canada. The removal of tariffs on highly processed foods will increase that dramatically, as well as when those tariffs are removed. The CEMA organization has pointed out that there is a major problem with regard to surplus eggs, and that that will mean a further deterioration in the quota available in that sector.

In the dairy sector, the Government has moved to put in place import control regulations, but I think that we will wait a long time before we actually see any quantitative limitation. The grocery products manufacturing industry has made it clear right across the board that we cannot have supply managed and controlled commodities such as poultry and eggs and the goods processed from them being sold in this country and have them compete with eggs, poultry, and dairy commodities produced in the United States. The SAGITS told the Minister that in a report, and it has been ignored. Most processing food companies in this country are American controlled. Clearly 21 out of the 26 companies are. The industry sent a very definite signal that unless the Government gets rid of supply management in this country, within a matter of six or seven years it will be moving to the U.S. The pressure from the free trade deal, and through the GATT negotiations will be to get rid of supply management, which I think will be a disaster for the dairy industry and the poultry industry.

In the grain sector, we see that our two-price wheat system is going by the boards. Instead of consumers paying for their wheat when they buy their bread or grocery products, the Government will be providing a subsidy in that regard. Many people in the industry believe that the Canadian Wheat Board will be severely weakened, that it will not have the power to have import end use certificates, that they will be handled by the Canadian Grain Commission that in the long haul the Canadian Wheat Board will lose its power, and that we will come under the control of the multinational grain companies, which will gain greater and greater control. It is interesting that when the Government lists subsidies in the free trade agreement it lists the Western Grain Transportation Act as a $700 million subsidy. That is an historic arrangement that has been with us almost since the turn of the century. It is given to western farmers to make up for the costs of transportation. Nowhere in this agreement is it mentioned what the corps of engineers spent on the Mississippi River system. In the GATT negotiations the American industry will be trying to get rid of the Western Grain Transportation Act, transportation assistance.

There is no provision in this agreement to list what is spent on the Mississippi River transportation system. Perhaps in no area do we see a greater impact than in the fruit and vegetable industry. That industry will be severely hampered. It will lose its seasonal tariff it will not be able to keep it. The snap back provision to the most favoured nation tariff is a cumbersome, crude device which will not work. It is designed to replace the tariff that existed. If the price of fruits or vegetables in Canada drop below 90 per cent of the five-year average, a device like that which takes five to seven days to be put in place is a total joke. Once the price breaks on fresh fruits and vegetables, is gone for the season. No industry, of course, has suffered more than the grape industry, the wine industry. Even though this deal does not come into effect until next January, that industry is going through tremendous strife already. I talked to a producer in the Niagara escarpment over the weekend who has some 800 acres. I believe he is the largest producer of grapes in Canada. He said that his vines will have to be cut and removed. To give up those special fruit, vegetables, grape growing areas, to say that we can sacrifice them and that they are not very important is not a criminal act, but I think it would be a terrible decision for a Government to take. We would become dependent in future on the wine and grapes produced in California.

If the Government were to do this—and it is its decision—it should have had those adjustment programs well in place and even had them listed in the agreement so that they could not be countervailed themselves. This trade deal was a signal to the GATT that they could lower the boom on the Canadian wine industry, and in fact they have.

Fortunately, at least in Ontario, the Ontario Government has brought in arrangements to reduce the tariffs over 12 years. That is what the B.C. wine industry pleaded with the Minister to do. That is what the Minister said she would do and understood she had to do. If they had the 10 to 12 years they could have survived, but if they lose half the differential in price in one year they will not survive.

Similarly, this agreement is a signal to the GATT to get rid of Article 11 which in the get rid of supply management in this country, within the next seven or eight years.

With the pressure coming from the Americans at the GATT, the Cairns Group the grocery products manufacturers and others, I think the whole supply management industry will ultimately be destroyed.

A monitoring mechanism should be put in place as well in this drafting instruction so that countervail and anti-dumping can be applied as well. In the long haul the Canadian Wheat Board will be destroyed, as well as our supply management in other commodities. Massive new access to the U.S. market will not occur, in my opinion, because we have already seen an appreciation of the dollar by some 15 per cent. We will probably see another 15 per cent over the next few years, which will make it that much more difficult for Canadian producers.

I believe that we will ultimately see the destruction of our supply management system which has a tremendous regional development diversification aspect to it. We have a healthy dairy industry in Atlantic Canada and in other parts of our country. We will not see that if we harmonize with the United States vertically integrated system. I believe GATT and this trade deal will have a very negative impacts on agriculture, the whole idea of a family farm and of moderate sized, efficient units. I do not think we want it. It is not good for Canada. We intend to oppose it in every way possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member who probably is one of the most negative people in the House of Commons—"nothing is right in Canada. We can't compete. We are not very good. We must withdraw into our little shell here in Canada and hide behind barriers and hide behind this, that, and the other thing".

First of all, let us talk about the supply management program and some of the comments that he made about supply management. He said that we dramatically increased the importation of chicken under this agreement. What in fact happened is that chicken remains under quota. It went from about 6.3 per cent of production in Canada to 7.5 per cent. Do you know how they arrived at the 7.5 per cent, Mr. Speaker? They took the average of the last five years of actual importation of chickens into this country to reach that number.

That is in fact an historical figure. There is not a huge influx of chicken production coming into this country. The Hon. Member is a doctor of veterinary medicine. He should know that the production of chicken in this country has increased dramatically over the last number of years. That particular industry is healthy and is doing extremely well. We know that the egg hatching people are looking now at a marketing system which, I might point out to the people watching, is permitted under the free trade agreement.

• (1530)

The Hon. Member talked about the demise of our marketing system. I might point out that people around the world are looking at our marketing systems. They see farmers getting a fair return for their product under the marketing system. As a matter of fact upper state New York is looking at putting in a dairy program much like the one we have in Ontario. For the Member to talk about the demise of all these marketing systems is pure folly.

I might say one other thing. Yesterday John Swan, President of Hillebrand Estates Winery Limited, spoke on free trade in St. Catharines. Here is a little of what he said:

> Hillebrand Estate Winery promotes the fact that here in the Niagara Peninsula we can compete with the wines of the world. We provide a strong in-depth marketing strategy to sell our wines in Canada and abroad. We have grown from sales of 6,000 cases a year to 200,000 cases in four years time. All Hillebrand wines are produced from French hybrid and vinifera grape varieties.

These grape varieties are grown in the Niagara Peninsula. Listen to this:

> Eight thousand cases will be exported this year either to Japan or the United States.

Mr. Swan delivers a good speech on the free trade agreement and says what a challenge it is and how well he will do. With all the Hon. Member's doom and gloom and how terrible this whole deal is for agriculture, why is it that the majority of the agricultural groups in Canada support it? Why are the cattle producers, the pork producers, and the Canadian dairy industry supporting it? If this agreement is so bad, why are all these agricultural associations supporting it?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Parliamentary Secretary has not read the Bill or the agreement very well.

Mr. McDermid: I have read the agreement more than you have.

Mr. Foster: He is just like the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). Let me point out to him that in poultry meat alone the increase in the quota is some 21 per cent. It has gone from 31 million kilograms to 37 million kilograms. I am glad the Member raised the question of the hatchery egg marketing board because that board, established a year or so ago, had been pleading with the Minister to put in place import controls. The Government has refused to do so month after month after month. In the Ontario region alone three egg hatchery marketing producers have gone broke because of the Government's refusal. Why does the Government refuse to put in place those import controls, Mr. Speaker? It is because it is still negotiating and will be negotiating for the next five to seven years.

Mr. McDermid: You are wrong.

Mr. Foster: I would like to draw to the Parliamentary Secretary's attention a letter written by Archie McLean, the Senior Vice-President of McCain Foods Limited. He points out that he was a member of the Special Advisory Group on International Trade for agriculture. In a letter last December, the day the documents came out, he described himself as a member of the Minister's SAGIT, Special Advisory Group on International Trade for agriculture, and a hard core Tory. He launched into the worst denunciation of the agreement that I have read any place. In a letter he writes:

> I believe the Free Trade Deal in its present form, is a bad deal for food processing and will be a bad deal for Canadian farmers whose products are supply-managed or for farmers who produce fruit and vegetables.

This is a guy in the industry. He has served on SAGIT. He knows exactly how the deal runs. He goes on to point out—

Mr. McDermid: He wants the abolition of marketing boards.

Mr. Foster: —that the industry is organized from the United States. He points out that most of the food processing industry is nearly all American, at least 20 of 26 processors are, and that they will simply pull back their manufacturing and processing to the United States and just have a distribution system in Canada. When they do that, from where do you think they will get their food supplies? They will get them from outside the supply-managed system. Let me read his final paragraph:

> As a member of the agriculture SAGIT, I'm committed to improving and expanding our trade potential for primary and further processed agricultural products. I believe the Free Trade deal in its current form, however, is a bad deal for food processing and ultimately, will be a bad deal for farmers whose products are a) supply-managed products or b) fruit and vegetables.

Clearly those sectors are sectors which will be severely hurt. What do we get in return? We give up on poultry.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Foster: We give up on fruit and vegetables.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Cadieux: Totally wrong.

Mr. Foster: We give up the whole wine industry. Even worse than that was the signal sent to the GATT on the grape and wine industry. The Minister wrote a letter to the B.C. grape industry in October last fall and said: "Look, we understand this industry will require at least a 10-year period to be phased in". What did it get? Within one year, between January 1, 1989 and January 1, 1990, the industry will lose half its differential in pricing. The GATT decision to phase out the differential pricing over 12 years is why B.C. producers said they could have adjusted. They would have moved to a higher quality grape production which could have found certain niches in the market. This deal is phasing out half the differential in one year.

The Parliamentary Secretary is trying to put a gloss on something that is just unacceptable to Canadian farmers. I did not hear him telling us about how well the Ontario Federation of Agriculture liked the deal.

I had the opportunity to attend the annual meeting of the Canadian Horticultural Council in January. A panel of people outlined the opportunities of the free trade deal. I listened for two hours and heard a diatribe against how the industry would be destroyed, whether from Gerald Green of the B.C. tree fruit producers or others. When you get into the drafting instructions on how the Government will put in place a monitoring mechanism so that information will be available to pork producers, beef producers, or any other sector allowing a countervail or dumping duty to be imposed—all the subsidies are listed in this book—you will see that we are in for an extremely rough ride. There does not seem to be any adjustment programs in place. Fifteen or seventeen grape producers have been moved out of operation this year already in Ontario, yet there does not seem to be any adjustment put in place for them. People who served on SAGIT for agriculture and food production say that if we have highly processed food in Canada produced under supply management competing with highly processed food coming in from the United States that not produced under supply management mechanisms, we need import controls. Even though that was recommended by SAGIT, import controls have not been put in place by this deal.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired. Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the hon. Minister of Labour.

• (1540)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on a bill that will implement the historic agreement we have signed with the United States. Mr. Speaker, I intend, and I am sure this will come as a surprise, to vote in favour of the Bill.

At the Toronto Summit, heads of Government from the United Kingdom, Japan, France, Italy and the Federal Republic of Germany, and of course Canada and the United States, spoke out in favour of the free trade agreement. They felt that the agreement was a positive step, not only for Canada and the United States but for all our major trading partners.

Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, the free trade agreement is often discussed from a single perspective, as though it affected North America exclusively. In fact, we are talking about an agreement negotiated under the provisions of Article 24 of GATT. Furthermore, practically all the issues discussed by Canada and the United States during the bilateral talks are on the agenda of the multilateral trade negotiations now going on in Geneva.

That is why the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was right to say in his speech to the Americas Club in New York, and I quote:

> At the multilateral level, a trade agreement between the two biggest trading partners on this planet has exceptional significance. In fact, the outcome of the GATT negotiations depends very much on this agreement.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may name a few of the issues: putting a stop to the introduction of new protectionist measures; preparing new rules for international trade in agricultural products; reducing or eliminating tariff and non-tariff barriers in order to improve market access; and developing basic principles for so-called new issues such as trade in services, intellectual property and trade-related investment.

The vocabulary is impressive and the concepts are high-sounding but basically, Mr. Speaker, it all boils down to this: All exporting countries are now part of an integrated world economy. As a result, they have to adopt trade policies that take into consideration the interests of their trading partners. For all practical purposes, the national market we have known for centuries is a disappearing bread.

That is the international reality that our country must fit into, Mr. Speaker. That is the reality on which the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States is based. However—and this will surprise you too, Mr. Speaker—some among us refuse to see this reality.

Mr. Speaker, they are dealers in a big illusion. According to them, Canada can fully enjoy its interdependence with the world's main markets without at the same time exposing its companies and industries to international competition. They are greatly mistaken when they say that we can adopt trade and industrial policies without considering our trading partners. They are greatly mistaken, Mr. Speaker, when they say that we can adopt discriminatory laws, regulations and practices against the products, services and capital of our trading partners.

You konw, Mr. Speaker, according to an old law of physics, for every action, there is a reaction. This same law applies to international trade. If a country imposes barriers on other countries' exports, it will have barriers imposed on it. If a country is prepared to negotiate freer entry of goods and sevices from other countries, it will get the same treatment for its own goods and services. Action, reaction!

The so-called nationalists will one day have to realize the interdependence not only of Canada but of all the major industrialized countries.

It is fine to talk about national self-assertation, Mr. Speaker, as long as one can see beyond a narrow parochial view.

Mr. Speaker, to deal with the real world, we need global attitudes and especially a worldwide vision.

To take up our place in the world, Mr. Speaker, we need a world-class industrial structure. What does the Official Opposition propose to ensure the competitiveness of our businesses and industries? They want to resurrect a department which they dismantled as they propose to tear up the Agreement, if they can. As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, they want to create a new department or resurrect one which they cut into pieces just six or seven years ago. They want to hire hundreds of public servants to look after international trade and industrial development. They want to spend more than 100 million dollars on God knows what bureaucratic initiatives to accomplish God knows what.

In other words, this proposal is typical of the liberal Party: when faced with a national challenge we see the federal public service, skyrochet, new allocation of funds and greater government interference in everybody's lives. We are all too familiar with the results of such an approach. Look at what happened between 1970 and 1984. The national debt incressed exponentially. And in spite of theire so-called national policies and their speeches on the famous third option, our reliance on the American market increased from 65% or so to more than 75%. That is what they call diversifying our export markets, Mr. Speaker. That is what I call blundering!

One need not look any further, Mr. Speaker, to get an idea of the Liberal party's economic expertise. We only have to look at how they manage their own funds. The key to economic growth and prosperity is not a bigger Canadian Government. The key to industrial productivity and international competitivity will not be found in the drawers of the bureaucracy. The key to our economic future lies in the entrepreneurship, the inventiveness and the initiative of our entrepreneurs and workers.

However, they need open and secure access to a world scale market in order to compete around the world. It would be extremely difficult over the next few years for our firms, our industries and our workers to compete with the Japanese, the Europeans and the Americans without a privileged access to the richest and most dynamic market in the world. This, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what we secured through the Free Trade Agreement.

[English]

Some say that we should rely exclusively on the multilateral trade negotiations under the GATT. They think we are too small, too weak, and not sharp enough to negotiate one on one with the Americans. That is simply a contradiction in terms. Just imagine, if we cannot negotiate with the Americans, how can we hope to negotiate with the European Community and other powerful trading partners such as Japan?

Others insist that the free trade agreement threatens our sovereignty. These are the same people who insist that we negotiate trade liberalization exclusively through the GATT. What they do not say is that each time we introduce a new policy, law or regulation related to international trade, we must ensure that it is consistent with the provisions of the GATT.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, does that mean we are any less sovereign? Definitely not! Does that mean we cannot maintain, much less improve our health and welfare programs? Not at all! Does that mean we cannot maintain or improve our regional industrial expansion programs? Definitely not! Are our cultural programs threatened? No, Mr. Speaker, our cultural programs are not threatened. The same goes for our trade agreement with the United States.

Since that Agreement was signed by the Prime Minister and the President last January, we have announced a number of new initiatives in all those areas. For example, Mr. Speaker, our national policy on film distribution and production, our new Copyright Act, our national policy on daycare, our new policy on women subject to marital abuse, our very recent agreement with Quebec on the St. Lawrence River clean-up and the development of fringe areas. Whether it be culture, welfare, health or economic and industrial development, Mr. Speaker, we are totally free and sovereign.

The FTA does not say anything about economic or political union. Mr. Speaker, it is simply a matter of creating a free trade zone as defined under GATT. Canada and the United States will indeed continue to have different policies, different laws, and different regulations. Mr. Speaker, the day the FTA comes into force there will not be any more snow in the Keys than there are palm trees in Chicoutimi.

However, one thing for sure, Mr. Speaker, is that there will be more jobs and more wealth in Canada, the kind of wealth which will enable us to maintain existing programs and introduce new ones. All independent research organizations are at one on this, including the Economic Council, the Conference Board, and Informetrica, just to name a few. To those who are concerned over the issue of sovereignty, Mr. Speaker, I say that political sovereignty without economic clout is nothing more than a mirage. All regions of Canada will benefit from the many free trade spinoffs. Industrialized regions will have freer and more secure access to the American market, and less industrialized regions will finally have an opportunity to diversify their local economy.

So what is at stake as far as Quebec is concerned, Mr. Speaker? In 1986, Quebec exports were estimated at roughly $21 billion—$3,500 for each man, woman and child in the province—or to put it another way, Mr. Speaker, $14,000 for a family of four. Perhaps you are wondering how much of that the American market accounted for? For about 76 cents of each dollar earned through Quebec exports, Mr. Speaker.

That is why we say that the Free Trade Agreement is the key to our economic future. That is also why the Premier of Quebec is one of the staunchest supporters of free trade. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, when some people tried to use Clause 6 in the Bill to sow discord, the Government of Quebec responded by annoucing that it would take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that provincial acts and regulations are in accordance with the Agreement's provisions.

The Government of Quebec fully understands what is at stake and knows that Quebec industries such as the newsprint industry, the automotive industry and those involved in the production of aluminium, telecommunications equipment, softwood lumber, railway and transport equipment or high tech equipment such as semi-conductors, all need access to the American market not only to grow but to survive.

• (1550)

[English]

Given the size and complexity of our country and our interdependence with the world's largest markets, not only the U.S. but also the European community and the growing markets of the Pacific Rim, our horizons must be large and our vision must be global. We simply cannot afford to withdraw into a protectionist shell. More important, as journalist Richard Gwynn has written, free trade represents "the ultimate declaration by Canadians of self-confidence in themselves, confidence both in their ability to compete and their ability to continue as a distinct political and social unit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in this age of advanced technology and integrate world economy, we need free and secure access to the world's markets. Trough the Free Trade Agreement, we will have unfettered access to the world's richest and most dynamic market.

As the economist Rodrigue Tremblay has said, and I quote:

> The United States and Canada have an historic opportunity to go foward in the direction of economic progress and to help North America become the most prosperous territory in the world.

For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, I will vote in favour of the historic Free Trade Agreement and the bill to implement it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a few questions to the Minister. My first point is that he should show that there is something for us in this agreement. The Tory Minister should do that because a number of his cabinet colleagues have yet to read this agreement themselves. The Minister stated that our health scheme is not at risk. I must say that here, on page 203 of the Agreement, there are health facilities which are covered. Also, when we take a closer look we realize that American laboratories and clinics will be able to set up shop in Canada. These Americans will kill our own approach to health services in Canada.

[English]

The Minister suggests that there is no threat to our regional expansion system. Let me point out that we have not reached a satisfactory agreement with the U.S. on the question of what constitutes an acceptable subsidy. We will negotiate this for seven years and then, when our economy will have restructured itself, it will be very difficult for any Canadian Government to stand up to the U.S. if it says that our regional development subsidies have to go. For us to withdraw from the deal then would have devastating consequences for our economy.

[Translation]

The Minister also said that our cultural life is not at risk. Again, there is on page 297 of the Agreement the nothwithstanding clause—

Mr. Cadieux: "La disposition dérogatoire"in French.

Mr. Langdon: —which states that if we insisted on doing something to protect our cultural life in the future, the United States would be able to take trade actions against Canada to respond to these changes.

[English]

One must also say, when one talks about GATT, as someone who was at the start of the present GATT round, that we are a respected and fully accepted member of GATT, with many allies and many countries which look to us for leadership. That is not the case in a one-for-one negotiation with the United States.

• (1600)

[Translation]

The Economic Council of Canada did not compare the results of this Agreement to a freer trade under GATT without having all the information concerning the give aways to the United States which are included in the Agreement. These are the facts and they are not as mentioned by the Minister.

[English]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague has referred to the reading of the agreement. It is important to read the agreement, but it is also important to read it carefully and to read it the way it is written in order to understand it and not misrepresent what one believes is written in the agreement but in reality is not.

My hon. colleague posed about 25 questions. I will try to address a few. He refers—

[Translation]

—that Canada is a respected member of the GATT and, for once, I agree with something which was suggested by a Socialist. It is a fact that Canada is a respected partner within the GATT, as it is a respected partner of the United States. Mr. Speaker, it is not because Canada has signed an historical Free Trade Agreement with the United States that Canada is no longer seen as a respected partner within the GATT.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member, because he forgot to mention this, that the G-7 leaders who met recently in Toronto and whose countries also members of the GATT, have great respect and even admiration for Canada because they unanimously supported the Free Trade Agreement. Not only do they support free trade, but they stated this should help indeed the GATT negotiations which include Canada and which are scheduled to extend over a number of years.

It is my hope that the Hon. Member, who was here when the current round of GATT negotiations started, will still be here at the end of those negotiations to see how much more Canada will be respected at that stage, for reasons that include such initiatives as that historical accord reached with the United States.

Mr. Speaker, every day during Questions Period, which you follow reverently, you hear Members from the Official Opposition and the unofficial or not so official one rise and try to distort and sow fear among Canadians on items that are not written into the Free Trade Agreement, which again I suggest the Hon. Member should read again, Mr. Speaker, because there is nothing that prevents us as a sovereign nation to look after our culture indeed.

Mr. Speaker, how often do they rise across the aisle to shout that Canada's culture is threatened! My colleague, the Minister of Communication (Miss MacDonald), recently tabled two important pieces of legislation, one of which deals with film distribution in Canada. If we were to believe hon. Members on that side of the House that is sometimes referred to as the unofficial opposition, culture would be threatened by that Free Trade Agreement, but such is not the case. And I suggest to the Hon. Member that if he reads the Free Trade Agreement and if he claims to understand it, he should read the film distribution legislation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Time allotted for questions and comments is now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar).

[English]

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this Bill I am concerned that it will, in 20 minutes, be very difficult to explain comprehensively what is wrong with the Bill. I will try to define certain aspects of it which may help the people who are watching understand some of the implications of it.

As I talk to people in my riding and other ridings I am continually asked what the trade Bill is all about. People say that they do not understand it, that people are not explaining it to them, that some are saying it is good for Canada, others are saying it is not good for Canada, and they are left out in the cold.

The process which took place with this agreement has left people asking why the Government was rushing to get it signed when we did not have the text. The committee held hearings without knowing the specifics. When a government attempts to do that without allowing full discussion and debate, it is clear that there is fear. There is no question in my mind that the Government has been operating under an intense amount of fear. It has put legislation before this House which comes from a base of nothing but fear.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said that we have to pass this Bill because one form which U.S. protectionism can take is politically inspired distortion of trade remedy law and another form is direct limitation of trade as proposed in earlier versions of the U.S. omnibus trade Bill. We know that the trade Bill did have implications which certainly would make trading very difficult for Canada. We also know that protectionism exists in the United States because its economy is in such a dreadful state. The United States has a dreadful deficit in trade not only with Canada but with Japan and the European Common Market as well.

I heard the Minister say recently that our horizon must be large and our vision global. If we are looking for large horizons and a global vision, we are certainly not looking at a North American fortress. Yet that is exactly what I hear from the government side of the House. I keep hearing the word "harmonize" from each speaker. If you look up "harmonize" in the dictionary you will see that it says "become more like, become similar". That is certainly not what we on this side of the House want.

Over the years Canada has built up a very special value system and a very special country. Our ancestors sacrificed a lot to ensure that trade above the 49th parallel was able to create a society which had its own integrity and which did not become totally dependent. The wars which we fought in 1776 and 1812, and the declaration of our independence in 1867 were all statements that we as a people can be a little bit different but can be strong. We have had great success in doing that.

I heard my colleague from Algoma talking about supply management and the Government saying it was protected. My understanding is that Article 7(10) of the agreement says that both the United States and Canada are protected by Article 11 of the GATT. I agree with that. However, it does not go on to say that there has been a constant move by the Reagan administration and the Canadian delegation to remove Article 11 from the GATT rules. The Government is, on the one hand, saying that we are protecting our supply management system by Section 7(10) of the Accord and, at the same time, is moving to remove the clause in the GATT which gives us that protection. That is the most devious kind of hypocrisy that I can think of. I do not think that all the Members on the government side have looked at the agreement in detail and recognized that that kind of thing is happening.

• (1610)

I question whether the Minister for International Trade is as committed to this as he seems when he says that he has not read it. He seems to form a policy with his friends through jokes rather than serious thought. When asked to make a concentrated response about the deal, rather than any serious analysis we see witticism that attempts to put people down.

What will be the implications of this Accord on women? There are those who say there will be wonderful benefits for women. They will only be wonderful for women who are presidents of multinational corporations, because multinational corporations do not want to be restricted by borders.

I am concerned about women in the service and manufacturing sectors, and women in the labour force who perform minimum wage and lower paid jobs. I cannot believe that members of the Government who have seriously considered this legislation believe the deal will help those people. We have known for some time that the United States wants a trade agreement in order to reduce barriers to services. We also know that Brazil and India, along with Canada, have strongly opposed that until now.

Now we find that services are included in the trade agreement. Our concern about services does not refer to hairdressers moving from one community to another, as has been suggested, but the future of data processing, health and education services and the variety of jobs that are being created today. Eighty-two per cent of our economy is in the service sector, and most of those jobs are the better paying jobs held by women. Yet the Government has gone ahead to trade the service sector.

Currently, information in the data processing industry must be collected in the branch plant or at the company where that information is being collected. Many of those jobs exist in Canada. According to a study conducted by the Computer Association of Canada, over 180,000 jobs in data processing will be gone when companies are no longer required to collect that information here. That is the consequence of part of the trade agreement in terms of trade in services. It is important that we consider those details.

The Minister who just spoke talked about all the studies that had recommended this trade agreement as a way to increase the employment base for Canada. The Economic Council of Canada admitted that it did not look at any studies that included the service base. The Macdonald Commission, which rationalized many reasons to support free trade, did not take into account one study on the service industry.

Last night I met some women from the National Organization of Women in the United States, as well as some of the executive from the Feminist Majority. They were very concerned about what could happen to our population in light of all we have worked for over the years. They do not have income security programs, minimum wage requirements or the same working conditions for women for which we have worked so hard.

They were impressed by our ability to have a national old age pension in spite of our small population. Many of those living in poverty in Canada are women over 65 years of age. The women whom I met were amazed at our ability to have developed our social programs over the years. It was with some pride that I acknowledged that we have a reasonably good social network system, particularly for women. It is frightening to realize that all of these programs could be at risk. There does not seem to be any concern or discussion about it on the other side of the House.

Women who work in the goods producing sector often fill the lower paying jobs. They are particularly vulnerable under the trade agreement. This sector includes the textile, clothing, leather products and small electrical appliance industries. These are the kinds of industries in which women are employed in my riding. Not only will there be a rapid loss of jobs in those industries, there has been no concerted effort to devise an adjustment strategy.

Some members of the Government have suggested that these matters will resolve themselves in 20 years. What will happen to the people who are affected in the meantime? There are enough homeless people who are already getting their food from the food banks. Surely those Members are not willing to ignore a whole group of people who will be dislocated from industries.

While there was great support for the free trade agreement at the Summit, I did not hear anyone talk about the importance of the trade agreement and the developing world. An agreement like this closes the doors on some innovative trade agreements that Canadians can enter not only in our own interest but in order to have a global vision, in the words of the Minister. No longer will we be able to get into special programs like auto insurance or dental care without asking permission of the United States. The agreement states clearly that we can no longer implement such programs if they affect American firms.

Many of our insurance companies are American, and we welcome them here, but we certainly do not intend to implement our own programs only by the grace of the United States. We would like to make those decisions on our own, as we have in the past. Without our health care plans, we would be facing the same situation as the United States. They cannot deliver health care as cheaply as Canada or cover their whole population. We have learned to conduct these programs well, and this agreement jeopardizes that.

The service industry in the United States allows for private management firms in health care. This will affect all our social services except child care. However, it will not be long before there is great pressure to provide child care services for profit.

Canadians have recognized over the years the importance of being able to deliver non profit services. We have delivered those non-profit services with a lot of efficiency and caring. Some of our social services need amendments and need to be addressed, but we can do that.

• (1620)

I become very worried when I hear that this trade agreement means we have confidence in ourselves. If we have confidence in ourselves, we do not have to run in a corner and decide there is only one partner we can trade with and we have to get into an agreement with them. If we have confidence in ourselves, we can stand up proud and tall, believing that Canadian workers can deliver anywhere in the world. We can get into a multinational kind of trade agreement. We do not have to get tied into American foreign policy. We do not have to get tied into every multinational that wants to exploit our people and resources. What we do understand is that our environment is sacred. There is dignity to the work our people do and they should have, and do have in most cases, a quality of life commensurate with the dignity of work they perform. It seems to me that if we are just going to get into the economic constitution of President Reagan, that is not what the majority of Canadians want. It is not what the majority of women in this country want and it certainly is not the future we want to build for our children. I think we understand that very clearly.

I have been very concerned about the fact that not many members on the government side have taken the Accord particularly seriously because, I believe, they trusted some of their cabinet Ministers had read the agreement. However, they are beginning to recognize, I would hope, that this is a very serious document, and not only must we read this document but we must look at every analysis of it. If those Members could convince me that this agreement would build a stronger Canadian economy, giving us the kind of sovereignty we had in the past, giving us the ability to have some direction over our own lives, to protect our environment and ensure our native people do not get caught into the whole economic development of our North that could very easily result in a further industrial militarization of our North, if they could convince me that that is what we were going to have, then I would say, yes, we would support it.

I think every one of those things are at risk now. The financial institutions can now come to Canada and purchase any part of the Canadian economy they choose. Can we go down there and set up our banks in the United States? No, we cannot.

Mr. Malone: Sure you can.

Ms. Dewar: No, we cannot. Read the Act. You obviously have not read it. We cannot do it because the American Bank Act is in contravention of the Canadian Bank Act. It was that Member's side of the House which changed that Bank Act in the last 18 months. That is why we cannot go there and set up a bank in the United States. That is the kind of agreement we have got ourselves into and government Members do not even understand it. That really does concern me.

I think we are looking at the ability of this country to govern itself. We want a country that has the kind of economy we have some say over. We want to be able to provide programs when we know that there are certain needs in our society that we collectively can deliver for the betterment of perhaps the weakest in our communities. Certainly, we will not be able to do that if we are tied into what the American companies are delivering in our country. It would be impossible. We would have to ask the permission of those American companies.

I could take examples of banking, women, telecommunications, resources, manufacturing, and go through the agreement paragraph by paragraph. There are thousands of pages. It seems to me that is what we should be doing in this House instead of cutting off debate. I think it is crucial we take every paragraph, analyse it, and then perhaps we would change our minds on some things and perhaps the Government would change its mind on some things. At least, our country would be better served. Certainly, the reason I ran for Parliament and the reason I want to represent the people of Hamilton Mountain is because they have great faith and confidence in this country and in the future. I am not going to let any government destroy that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Mr. Langdon: I have a question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member would get in his chair, I would be able to recognize him. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for a question or comment.

Mr. Langdon: I apologize, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malone: No one else could dignify that speech.

Mr. Langdon: I would have hoped that the Conservatives, since they were heckling so vigorously, would have had some constructive questions to raise. Since the Hon. Member comes from an industrial city and since that city has experienced a great many takeovers of Canadian companies and eventual problems that resulted from those takeovers, I wonder if she would deal with some of the threats that exist, especially for a city like Hamilton and for industrial cities right across this country from the West to the East? Will she comment on what we have given to the United States as part of the agreement, that we will no longer have a system of review for the massive takeovers of Canadians companies, and we will no longer ask for any commitments, any performance requirements? What in her experience and in the experience of her constituency is likely to be the consequence of this?

Ms. Dewar: My colleague raises a very serious question. What we have seen since the early 1980s is the shutting down of plants and the relocation of plants that are not Canadian owned to the United States so factories that are under capacity can be filled. The Firestone situation has shown that its Canadian experience was more efficient, less labour costly and certainly the market was here for the factory in Hamilton. Yet, they made the decision south of the border that they would close that plant and fill a plant in the United States that was over-built and operating under capacity. That was of very great concern at the time. However, we were able to get back the money that had been given to Firestone to modernize in Hamilton. With no review, with the ability of plants to come and go whatever way they like and without any value standards to be looked at, what will happen? At the beginning of my remarks I noted that the United States economy is in very serious shape. We know there are a lot of parent companies operating under capacity. There will be absolutely nothing to stop them from filling up those factories completely without any worry whatsoever about what is happening in Canada.

Something else that is very serious is that we have seen a company come into Hamilton when Canadian Ceramics was closing and the workers themselves wanted to buy that plant. Of course, the American company said it would operate the plant but within two years it is closed. They undermined the competition that was there and off they went after they got a monopoly on the market. There was nothing to stop them. That is not free trade, Mr. Speaker, that's total exploitation of Canadian workers.

Something else we have to look at, and the Minister for International Trade referred to it in his speech the other day on this Bill, is the fact that we now send our resources out of the country and then import them at a value added and tariff. He seemed to think that we would be able to stop doing that because the tariff would be reduced. There is absolutely nothing we can say with this trade agreement that they must process in Canada. What we have done is put up more obstacles. Of course, we become, again, just the hewers of wood and drawers of water. We have limited ourselves of the ability to put any kind of regulation in because of this trade deal.

I heard from some of the steel people in Hamilton that their hope was that they would have great access to the American market. They said that it is so large that it would be great for people to have that kind of access. However, we then looked at the agreement and saw that there is nothing in it that says that the countervail has been removed. We are being asked now to put a voluntary export limit on our steel. Up to this point we have been agreeing to do that, even though we do not have to do it. We know that if we take the voluntary export limit off, that quota off, we could be subject to countervail. Then we thought that at least there would be a dispute settlement mechanism. We thought that perhaps this would protect our workers and even if it took a year or two we would be able to do it.

What did the Minister for International Trade say? He said they hoped that the agreement would stop unfair laws. The agreement does not stop any laws. What the agreement states with respect to the dispute settlement mechanism is that the Americans will interpret whether or not the laws are being properly interpreted.

Mr. McDermid: That's right.

Ms. Dewar: Yes. So they can put the most unfair trade laws in place. As long as they are being properly interpreted, then that is fine.

Mr. McDermid: Wrong. I do not think that you have read the agreement.

Ms. Dewar: I do not think that you have read the agreement clearly. It certainly is true.

Mr. McDermid: They have to abide by GATT. Read the agreement.

Ms. Dewar: Not only have I read it, but we also have two legal opinions with respect to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The time allotted for questions and comments is now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on debate.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are debating second reading of Bill C-130. Its purpose is to approve the Government's comprehensive trade agreement with the United States.

Should this House and should the Canadian people approve this agreement? Let us take a look at the deal that was made. Let us ask ourselves a basic and simple question. Is it a good deal for Canada? There are two ways to find an answer to this question, two ways to assess it. One is to look at the objective the Government set for itself when it began the negotiations and see whether or not it was achieved in the deal that was concluded. The other is to identify the benefits and the costs of the deal and to see to what extent the benefits, if any, will outweigh these costs.

What was the Government's primary objective in seeking a comprehensive trade deal with the United States? It was to ensure secure access to the American market. This secure access, the Government said, would be achieved by complete exemption for Canada from United States trade remedy laws. This would mean that Canadian exports would no longer be hit by American anti-dumping or countervail duties.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated this primary objective of his Government very clearly and categorically in an interview with The Wall Street Journal in April, 1987, when he said: "Trade remedy laws cannot apply to Canada period . . . "

Was this objective achieved in the deal covered by Bill C-130? Clearly not. Even with the Government's trade deal Canada's exports will continue to be subject to all current American anti-dumping and countervail laws. In fact, the deal also states that Canadian exports will be subject to any new American trade laws adopted before January 1, 1989. Even though President Reagan vetoed the omnibus congressional trade Bill, if another version is passed that he accepts or if his veto is overridden, then it will apply to Canadian exports to the United States in spite of the Government's trade deal.

Therefore everything remains the same. We are not exempted from U.S. trade remedy laws. They do apply to Canada, in spite of the Prime Minister's words, which are shown to be empty and meaningless, as has happened all too often in the past. However, there is one difference, one change brought about by his deal. There will be a new dispute settlement mechanism. What does this mechanism do? How does it work? What will it accomplish? It comes into effect only at the very end of the presently existing and very lengthy process provided for by the American trade remedy laws now on the books.

The process that has sometimes troubled Canadian exporters remains the same, except in effect it has been lengthened and will have added to it this dispute settlement mechanism which involves the setting up of a panel. However, this panel can decide only if the American law has been correctly applied in terms of its own language. The panel will not have the power to decide whether the American law itself conflicts with the international trade rules created by the GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and therefore could be rejected as being contrary to those GATT rules. This will not be able to be done by the provisions of the Prime Minister's trade deal.

A key issue when it comes to secure access to the American market is the definition of a subsidy. What government payments, what government programs should be considered as a subsidy of the kind that should be subject to countervailing duties to American trade penalties? Under the Prime Minister's trade deal this question, this key issue is left completely open. It is to be negotiated between Canada and the United States for a period of five years and even up to seven years. We are left in total uncertainty as to what the situation will be at the end of this seven-year period.

How will subsidy be defined as a result of these negotiations? What leverage will Canada have at the end of seven years from now to reject American demands that its definitions be accepted, even if these demands mean that Canada's social programs, medical care, pensions, industrial and regional development programs will be considered to be unacceptable subsidies? How can business in Canada make plans for investment and production with this uncertainty hanging over it?

Clearly, the Government did not achieve its primary objective of secure access to the American market in the deal it negotiated with the United States. Let us take a look at the deal in terms of its benefits and its costs.

One benefit supposedly coming from this deal is the elimination of all tariffs, all customs duties on goods moving between our two countries over a period of 10 years. However, 80 per cent to 85 per cent of all goods moving between the United States and Canada already do so duty free. This has been accomplished through the periodic rounds of international trade negotiations under the GATT since the Second World War. The average level of the remaining tariffs has been reduced from some 40 per cent to some 10 per cent.

Surely, even further substantial reductions in tariffs and customs duties would have been achieved through the new round of international tariff negotiations presently under way without the necessity of the massive concessions, the massive costs to Canadian sovereignty, and the massive risks to the economic well-being of this country that have been created by this deal. The Government's claim that the trade deal would bring tremendous benefits to Canadians as consumers through the elimination of customs duties on goods brought into Canada from the United States on examination is just another Conservative Government sham.

If the deal is implemented Canadians will not be able to rush over to the United States on January 1, 1989, and bring back anything they want free of duty. They cannot do this in spite of the suggestions raised by the Government that this will be possible. Instead, what they will buy will still be subject to federal and provincial sales taxes. Customs duties will still be payable if the goods are not manufactured largely in the United States. I am not sure that people realize that many of the consumer goods, the clothing, the appliances that they would like to buy when they see them on sale in the United States are in fact not manufactured in that country. Again, I say that this trade deal is a gigantic sham when it comes to consumer benefits.

What about jobs? The Government originally claimed there would be substantial economic benefits, that large numbers of jobs would result from its trade deal with the United States. Its own Economic Council is showing how wrong these claims are. Before the deal was concluded, the Council predicted 350,000 net new jobs would be created if a deal were entered into. After it looked at the deal that was actually negotiated, the Council revised its estimates sharply downward. It said the elimination of tariffs would create only 76,000 net new jobs over 10 years. Then it said that, if one could assume a three-fold increase in productivity—and it did not say exactly how and why Canada would achieve this—the number of jobs created by the deal would be 250,000. This is quite a reduction from the 350,000 originally estimated, and it amounts to only 25,000 net new jobs a year over 10 years.

This is within the normal margin of error for economic forecasting. Therefore, this degree of net new job creation is very small and could easily happen as a result of the operation of normal domestic fiscal and monetary policy without having the trade deal of the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in place.

If the benefits of the deal are so slight, can it be said that at least the cost of it for Canadians is not high? Unfortunately, this is not the case. The price for Canadians far outweighs any benefits. In brief, that price is a severe limitation on the right of Canadians to make decisions about and policies for the direction of their country through their governments, both federal and provincial.

The policy areas covered by this deal include energy, investment, regional development, industrial policy, agriculture, financial services, and cultural industries.

Let us look at what this deal means, if it goes through, when it comes to energy. If the deal is constitutionally valid, a province would no longer be able to offer a preferential price for its energy to encourage industrial development in that province. The federal Government will no longer be able to ensure that, in times of world energy shortage or crisis, Canada is supplied first, that Canada's needs are taken care of first with its own energy. Instead, under the Government's trade deal, the United States will be entitled to the same proportional share it received from Canada before there was such an energy crisis.

When it comes to investment the deal further reduces, and in some ways wipes out forever, the ability of the federal Government to screen or review American takeovers and to set performance requirements as a condition of their acceptance.

The Government claims over and over that cultural industries are exempt from the deal. It says that is what is stated in clause 2005. However, the very next subclause of 2005 makes clear that if the United States does not like any new Canadian cultural policies or programs it can retaliate against those programs or against some other sector in Canada. Some exemption! It is a meaningless exemption, no matter what the words of the deal say.

The Government makes the same claim of exemption from the deal for our social programs: medicare, pensions, and unemployment insurance. How can we be sure of this when the deal leaves open for seven years of negotiation the definition of subsidy. The United States may yet force on Canada a definition of subsidy that includes and puts at risk these crucial and important social programs for Canadians.

The Government promised Canadians that the Auto Pact would not be touched by any trade deal with the United States. It said over and over during the negotiations that the Auto Pact was not on the table. Now that the deal is public, Canadians should ask whether the Government told them the truth. Canadians can judge for themselves. Even though the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has not read the deal, Canadians can do so. They will see that there is a whole chapter in the text of the agreement on the Auto Pact and the auto sector. The Auto Pact has worked well for Canada and the United States. It has brought about a tremendous expansion of production of cars and parts both in Canada and in the United States, and a tremendous increase of jobs in our country, and in our neighbour's country as well.

There are some 150,000 direct jobs in the Canadian auto industry, and many more indirect jobs in related sectors. Contrary to what the Government claimed, the Auto Pact is not a free trade agreement. It is an agreement that manages our trade in cars and parts with the United States and provided safeguards to ensure production of cars and parts and, therefore, jobs in Canada. It says if a North American automobile company did not provide at least 60 per cent Canadian content on cars and parts sold here, full duties would have to be paid on all imports that those companies bring in from the United States.

This deal will eliminate the duties the Government used in the past to enforce compliance with the content safeguards. In fact, it changes those safeguards from a Canadian content rule to only a 50 per cent North American content rule. This means that the North American auto companies still under the Auto Pact would not have to manufacture one car or one auto part in Canada in order to sell their products duty free in this country. This deal rips the guts out of the Auto Pact. It puts at grave risk tens of thousands of jobs that directly and indirectly depend upon the Canadian auto industry. It is a real sell-out of Canada's interest when it comes to the auto industry, a foundation of our economy.

When the Conservative trade deal is fully examined it is clear that its costs, its price for Canadians, far exceed any possible benefit for our country. As a deal it is simply not a good deal for Canada. What we have here is a massive giveaway of Canada's sovereignty and independence. No wonder we call Bill C-130 nothing more than "the sale of Canada Act".

The Prime Minister recognized what this type of deal with the United States would mean when he said, while campaigning for the leadership of his Party in 1983, that the kind of arrangement with the United States contemplated by this deal was an intrusion into our sovereignty, and he would have none of it now or at any other time. Canadians will ask why did he go back on his word in this important matter with so little for Canadians in return.

In effect, this deal brings about a massive change in our Constitution, not by the process provided for in that Constitution, but by an agreement with another country. It is an intrusion into the jurisdiction of the provinces. Most serious of all, it takes away from present and future generations of Canadians many of the rights that they now have to decide through their Governments what kind of country they want.

There is a better alternative to this deal, the Liberal alternative set out in documents we have published. I do not have time to go into that alternative in detail, but I do wish to say that it is to expand trade, lower trade barriers with the United States and with the world through negotiations, not only with the United States, but at the same time with many countries in the world using the GATT system. Under the GATT system it is not only Canada and one other country, the United States, 10 times Canada's size, in which much of Canada's economy is controlled. In the GATT we are joined by many other countries to balance the size, the impact, and economic clout of the United States.

Surely we should seek out the markets of the world as well as the markets of the United States and not lock ourselves, as this deal would do, into a new form of continental protectionism. We should have enough confidence in ourselves to reject this continental protectionism and reach out to the world. Surely this approach is better than what the Government's deal is all about. It is not about trade or tariffs, it is not just a trade deal, it is really about our sovereignty and independence. It is about our future. It is about the economic integration of Canada with the United States. If that happens we also face the eventual cultural, social, and political integration of our country with the United States.

Expressing concern about this does not mean any lack of friendship or regard for the United States. On the contrary, it simply means that we believe there is something that we have built here as Canadians that is worth preserving, and much for us yet to do in this country. Basically this agreement binds future generations of Canadians and their Governments to the current Conservative Government's narrow ideological view of Canada. Surely this is contrary to the fundamental principles of democracy. It should be open to future generations to decide what approach to take to energy, regional development, investment, or social policy. They should be able to say what the balance should be between the operation of market forces and the role of governments in the unfolding of their lives, and not have their rights to do this fixed and limited forever by this Conservative trade deal.

• (1650)

Let future generations of Canadians decide on the values that they consider important, for example, whether they want the American approach to medical care in which a Doctor checks your wallet before he checks your pulse.

I say by way of conclusion that because this agreement is such a sell-out of—

An Hon. Member: He didn't find your pulse.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West):—our sovereignty and independence, of our economic well-being, even this government should have the courage and the faith in Canada not to proceed with it at all. Certainly it should not do so unless it first has a full and clear majority mandate through an election, something I am convinced that when an election comes—and I hope it is soon—it will not get.

This deal, and therefore Bill C-130, is contrary to the best interests of Canada and its people.

I call on the House to defeat this Bill and to defeat this Conservative Government's trade deal in the interests of the future of this country and its people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I listened to my hon. friend's speech. I did not hear him thank the Parliamentary Secretary for allowing him to get in an earlier slot to speak tonight so that he would not have to stay this evening. I understand that he wanted to get all his speech in.

I welcomed his remarks because it shows that he has not read the agreement. or if he has read the agreement, he does not understand it. The nonsense that he is passing around that the Government does not retain any rights any more to control its destiny, or Canada's destiny, is just totally, totally wrong. The free trade agreement does not do that to Canada, as he would suggest. We have a wide range of powers. General taxation policy, fiscal, monetary policy, regional development incentives, all these policies remain intact. They like to say that they are not going to remain intact. Nonsense. They are going to remain intact.

The Hon. Member knows that. He is a very intelligent man. He has been here a long time. He knows that 80 per cent of our trade with the United States today is duty-free. We are talking about the last 20 per cent. He knows full well that services covered under this agreement are under negotiation at the GATT as well. He talked about relying on GATT. He said we should rely on GATT. Well, we are negotiating at GATT. We are playing a very meaningful role, especially the leadership being provided by this Government.

The agricultural community problems that we are experiencing are global problems. It is Canada that is leading the charge at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. I had lunch with Willy De Clercq, the Chief Administrator at the GATT. Do you know what he said? He said that this is a marvellous agreement. Do you know what the GATT partners were doing? They were watching this negotiation very, very carefully. They said that if the two largest trading partners in the world could not reach an agreement, then how in heaven's name did they ever think they would reach an agreement at GATT? That is exactly what they said. The partners were very pleased to see what happened in the free trade agreement. They are using that. It was a hopeful sign that negotiations would carry on in GATT in a very positive way.

My hon. friend from Windsor West is nodding his head. I talked to the people from GATT. I know he hasn't. I know what they are saying. They are very pleased with this agreement.

The other point that the Liberals and the New Democratic Party failed to mention is that the free trade agreement was negotiated under the GATT rules, and that GATT rules still pertain to trade. I listened to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar). She said, these rules are just for us now, that we won't have any GATT rules any more.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is commenting on somebody else's speech. I wish he would direct his comment and his question to the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I was getting heckled over here. I was answering that. I apologize, and I apologize to the House. In any event, I want to ask the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), first of all why he disagrees with negotiating a free trade agreement with the United States, why he would put all his eggs in the GATT basket, why he would bring in a policy, which the Liberals have done, which is 10 years old. It is just going back to the same old stuff.

When the Liberals started their diversification of trade for Canada, we were at $17 billion in trade with the United States, and when they finished governing this country, thank God, in 1984, we were doing $80 billion of trade from Canada with the United States, after their diversification program.

What makes him think that this 10-year-old policy that the Liberals are resurrecting, or trying to resurrect, is going to do the job?

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in reply I am tempted to say that if trade went from $17 billion to $80 billion under this 10-year-old policy, I rest my case. I would like to take a few more minutes to deal with my hon. friend's comments. If we are doing so well, I repeat, under the existing policy, why do we need this deal?

Mr. McDermid: To do better. We want to get better.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): How can we do better than a move in 10 years from $17 billion to $80 billion? When, as my hon. friend says—

An Hon. Member: You were in office. The U.S.-Canadian trade—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): There are tariffs to be removed. Those tariffs came off in the past under the GATT negotiations, without the tremendous price we are paying. We are giving up our right to make our own energy policy, our own investment policy. We gave up our right in many other areas. My hon. friend says that the Government has many powers. I didn't say all the powers are gone.

Mr. McDermid: You sure made it sound like it.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): But look at Article 2011, the nullification and impairment clause, which says to the Americans, "If there is anything you don't like about Canadian policy that isn't mentioned in this agreement, you can hit us about it. Set up a panel and if—"

Mr. McDermid: And vice versa.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): "If the Canadians don't agree, you can hit back at us".

Mr. McDermid: And vice versa.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): My hon. friend wants to know what is wrong with having a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States. We are dealing with a fundamental imbalance, with a country 10 times the size of ours, where much of our economy is controlled.

Mr. McDermid: Here we go. Inferiority complex.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The dynamics are wrong. This is proved by the weakness of the agreement. No, it is not a matter of weakness. If my hon. friend does not have enough brains to know that if you are a light-heavyweight you don't get into the ring alone with a heavyweight, but you can join together with others.

Mr. McDermid: Inferiority complex.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): He says, lock ourselves into a system of continental protectionism.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

An Hon. Member: He should be over on the NDP side.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): The issue is not tariffs. This is not simply a deal to remove tariffs. If that was the case, we would be having a very different discussion.

This agreement is the broadest agreement of its kind between our two countries. It touches much more than the removal of tariffs. If this was only for the removal of tariffs, you would have the tariff schedules attached to a one line agreement and a one line bill. This deal calls for the integration of our economy with the United States in matters of energy, investment, financial services.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): This is what the Americans say. That is why they signed it. That is what this deal says. If my hon. friend does not understand this, then they are the ones who ought to spend more time reading the deal. No wonder the Minister for External Trade does not want to read the deal. If he read it, even with his interest in becoming closer to the United States, he would shrink back from it in horror. The facts are clear. This deal is not simply about tariffs, it is about the integration of our country with the United States. It is the limitation of our sovereignty and our independence. It is about the limitation of the ability of Canadian Governments on behalf of the Canadian people to make the kinds of decisions that they have made in the past.

Mr. McDermid: That is silly.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): You know that is not true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION PROTECTION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Taylor that Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When Bill C-205 was last before the House, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton (Mr. James) had the floor. As he is not in the House, we will continue debate with the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure that I will take a few minutes to address Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations. The object of this Bill is self-evident and laudable, the preservation of Canada's heritage railway stations. I would like to compliment the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) for his unceasing efforts to preserve Canada's heritage and, in particular, his initiatives aimed at saving Canada's heritage railway stations. These stations are close to the heart of most Canadians and I am sure that all Members of the House, no matter what their political stripe, support the intent of Bill C-205.

The Hon. Member for Bow River has certainly done more than his share to awaken Canadians to the value of threatened heritage railway stations. Regardless of the ultimate fate of Bill C-205—I certainly hope it passes—by raising consciousness on this issue the Member has made it easier for concerned citizens to organize and take effective steps necessary to save their heritage railway stations. He has helped people to care about these stations and as more and more of them are saved because of his initiative, the thanks we owe him can only grow larger in the future.

To return to the Bill, its purpose is to provide effective mechanisms that would allow concerned citizens to make timely objections to the alteration of railway stations of historical or cultural value. That is a very worthy intent of the Bill and I wholeheartedly accept the principle of it. Bill C-205 is similar to Bill C-211, a Private Member's Bill which in 1985 was introduced by the Hon. Member for Bow River. Heritage railway stations are close to the hearts of many Canadians, including Members of Parliament who have often spoken movingly of the need for their preservation. When such stations are destroyed it is a loss for all Canadians, too many of whom have seen their local railway stations disappear. It would be difficult to underestimate the importance of the contribution that railways have made to the Canadian heritage. In all of Canadian history, in all the ways that Canadians have left a mark on the continent, nothing rivals the importance of the construction of our railways.

In Canada, the railways fulfilled a unique role not only because they brought our country into existence but also because they helped shape our fundamental character. Because of Canada's vast size, geography, dependence upon trade and twin needs for settlement and political identity, efficient modes of transportation have been of vital importance to us. Railways have been the very backbone of our nation. Pierre Berton, although we do not always agree with him, was certainly correct from both a psychological as well as a realistic point of view when he called Canada's railways our "national dream".

Our railways' heritage is the legacy of our national dream, and in large measure it is inextricably bound up with our railway stations themselves. These stations were points of departure and arrival for thousands of families as they travelled on odysseys of settlement across our enormous country. They saw the farewells of tens of thousands of Canadian troops who went off to fight in two world wars, and they were the welcoming sight that greeted the boys when they returned to their home towns.

These stations range from humble structures in tiny hamlets to grand edifices like Montreal's, Windsor's or Toronto's union stations. They have been the scenes of millions of journeys undertaken by Canadians of all walks of life and they loom large in the memories of millions of Canadians. The distress of Canadians when these stations are lost or destroyed is completely understandable and Canadians are familiar with the fights that have gone on when sometimes there has been an effort to destroy a railway station. The undying efforts of the Hon. Member for Bow River to preserve our heritage railway stations are to be heartily applauded. Canada has already lost far too many of these stations.

However, there are encouraging signs that at last we are beginning to do better. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada knows how important it is to recognize the heritage value of our railway stations. Twenty-four stations have already been declared on the advice of the board to be of national historical or architectural significance. These are the stations that would be afforded protection under Bill C-205.

The Board first recommended for commemoration stations which express the development of our various railway lines. This is in keeping with the board's mandate to preserve heritage locations of truly national significance.

For example, the stations at Levis, Quebec and Pictou, Nova Scotia represent the Intercontinental Railway Line. The Canadian Pacific Railway is represented by stations in McAdam, New Brunswick and Kensington, Prince Edward Island and at Rothesay, New Brunswick. Miami, Manitoba, commemorates the heritage of the Canadian Northern Line. The fact that these stations and others, such as Union Station in Toronto, have been recognized to be of national significance by no means precludes other stations from consideration in the future. The Historic Sites and Monuments Board receives submissions more or less continually and judges each proposed railway station on its merits in terms of national historic and/or architectural significance. Our early railway stations are an irreplaceable part of our heritage. Bill C-205 makes this point very clearly and I think that all Members of this House would agree with that sentiment.

The best way to save our heritage railway stations is to encourage co-operation among those parties having a stake in their future. We all have a role to play. This Government is working hard to see to it that Canada's heritage railway stations will be preserved in an appropriate and effective manner. At present the mandate for looking after them is divided and uncertain. The Bill before the House does us a service in reminding us of this fact. The Ministries of Transport and Environment, our railways, CN, CP and VIA, and non-governmental heritage organizations are all involved in this issue. We have certainly heard from the heritage organizations with respect to this Bill. In fact, The Heritage Canada Foundation has recently written about the importance of supporting this Bill and indicates that these buildings will not survive for future generations through good intentions alone. Legislation is the only fair and practical means to ensure that these buildings are protected and cared for.

I think it is appropriate that the House of Commons owes the Hon. Member for Bow River a debt of gratitude for introducing Bill C-205, an Act which has the commendable intent of protecting Canada's heritage railway stations. I, and I am sure other Members of the House, strongly support and recommend that Bill C-205 be referred to the appropriate committee for detailed study and then railway stations across our country so important to our lives will be commemorated. They represent a valuable part of our common history and I hope we will have the support to see this Bill come into fruition.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, as you might have expected I rise on this occasion. I want to begin by complimenting the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on his Bill. It is something that he and many others as well as myself have been working on for a number of years. I want to quote from a letter that I got this very morning from The Heritage Canada Foundation:

> One of the most important Bills relating to heritage preservation in Canada is now before Parliament. Bill C-205, an Act to protect heritage railway stations—

• (1710)

The letter goes on to say:

> Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River) has performed a highly commendable service in sponsoring Bill C-205. There is no question that the protection of heritage railway structures in Canada is long overdue.

It is signed by Jacques Dalibard, Executive Director of the Heritage Canada Foundation.

I am only too happy to add my personal support and the support of my caucus to the Bill of the Hon. Member for Bow River. Over these many years of his experience, and my own, we have fought long and hard to preserve these buildings not just as museums but for practical usage. We want to use the buildings as well as recognize their heritage, history and architecture, as the Hon. Member who just spoke mentioned.

Over the last 10 to 15 years, many dozens of railway stations and other historical objects of some significance have been demolished. We recall the instance of the CPR and the famous railway station near downtown Toronto which was demolished. The Railway Transport Committee of the CTC, six or seven years ago, after it received complaints and found out that the railway had simply moved in bulldozers and levelled the station, ordered the CPR to rebuild and restore it to its original state. I must confess that I have not looked into the situation in the last three or four years, so I do not know if the CPR has done that or not. The letter from The Heritage Canada Foundation mentioned these tragedies, and that was a tragedy. I am not sure if it has been corrected or not.

I think my hon. friend's Bill is timely, in fact overdue, and deserves passage in this House by six o'clock today. I want to say on behalf of my Party that we would agree to that, rather than send this to committee, have it go to Committee of the Whole and be given third reading between now and six o'clock.

I want to bring a particular matter to the attention of the House. My colleague from Bow River, who also sits on the Transport Committee, and other colleagues have had to suffer through this from me on more than one occasion. I want to cite a specific example of a building that the local heritage people in Regina have declared a heritage building, the Union Station in downtown Regina.

Since 1970, and that is quite awhile, I have been trying to get all the parties involved, all the actors in the piece, to agree to establish it as a heritage railway station that would not just sit there as a museum needing upkeep but as one that would have practical usage for many more years to come. That station was one of the early examples of the two competing railways having a Union Station and there is a lot of history there. All during the First World War, the 1920s, the 1930s and the Second World War, right up until the time of VIA Rail, it was maintained and operated. It had a nice restaurant and one or two shops, and it was kept clean. People by the thousands used it every day.

I and many others in my city and in other places have tried to get that station established as a heritage railway station that would also be a multimodal transportation centre. Greyhound Bus Lines, the Saskatchewan provincial bus company, initially the CPR and subsequently VIA Rail, the City of Regina, the Department of Transport, the Canadian Transport Commission, the Province of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada were involved. The Chamber of Commerce, the Regina Labour Council, the senior citizens' association and the downtown businessmen's association all agreed that this is something we must do. On two or three occasions, the city council unanimously passed a resolution in favour of doing it. It made alterations to the design of the big shopping complex in downtown Regina, the Cornwall Centre, in order to accommodate this multimodal transportation centre with pedestrian crossings, underpasses, the location of Saskatchewan Drive, whatever was required.

It took until February of 1982 before anything happened. Before I say anything more, I want to tell my colleagues opposite, the Hon. Member for Bow River and my friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), that I and others from all political persuasions have deliberately and actively kept this issue totally non-political and non-partisan, and it still took until 1982.

I am just as annoyed at the former NDP Government of Saskatchewan as I am at the present Conservative Government of Saskatchewan. In February of 1982, an agreement was finally signed. We got all the actors in the piece together. They signed an agreement to make that building a multimodal transportation centre as well as a heritage building. To be quite honest, blunt and frank, I think the NDP Government goofed all during the 1970s about getting that done. I fault that Government just as much as any other.

Then we lost the election of April, 1982. In June of 1982, the present provincial Government cancelled the bloody agreement. It was incredible. There was unanimity from all Parties, all business, labour, senior citizens and transportation organizations. This is the kind of tragedy to which The Heritage Canada Foundation refers in its most complimentary letter to the Hon. Member for Bow River.

May I put in a plea, Mr. Speaker? I will beg, grovel, snivel, whatever is required. Would the Hon. Member for Bow River and my good friend, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and other Members, particularly those from the Prairies, make representations to the Premier of Saskatchewan? I met with the premier. I met with the former Minister of Highways and Transportation of Saskatchewan. I tried everything I could, and I did not throw out any NDP dogma or ideology. I was careful not to do that.

For some crazy reason, maybe because I promoted it too much, maybe they got a mental block, that if it was the NDP promoting something good, it was no good. I do not know. I want to make that plea. I hope the House will pass this Bill quickly in all stages by six o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, like my Hon. colleague, I received a letter from Heritage Canada, urging me to take part in this debate, and that is one reason why I welcome this opportunity, because I have been very well served by this agency in the past. I also think the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) made an excellent suggestion, and that is why I decided to speak out in public about my interest in protecting heritage railway stations.

This Bill therefore deserves our attention, and I think the Hon. Member is to be commended, but on the other hand, the proposed legislation should be examined very carefully.

Mr. Speaker, I think all Members will agree that in addition to being a reflection of our past, our old railway stations are often representative of an architectural style that is typical of North America. They bear testimony to the expansion of our country and are a heritage that cannot be replaced. The federal Government has hardly any mechanisms for protecting historic buildings other than those that come directly under its jurisdiction, such as federal buildings.

There are hundreds of railway stations in Canada that can be preserved. In fact, there are several in my riding, and this year, the card I send to all my constituents shows a magnificent example, the station in Huntingdon. There are other stations as well, including the stations in Beauharnois, Valleyfield and Bellerive, that ought to be preserved. There are stations that the wrecker's ball has already destroyed such as Ville de Léry and Ormstown.

Mr. Speaker, the historical role of these stations should not be forgotten, and in fact, they are very much a part of the memories of many Canadians. At a time when railway tracks are disappearing, they are the last vestige of the conquest and settlement of this country. They represent important milestones in the buildings of our railways.

Mr. Speaker, they were the focal point for the departure and arrival of thousands of families on their travels across this vast country they had come to settle. These stations have always brought back memories for those who go back to the places they came from. I imagine many of us in this House have felt the same way. They are part of our national dream.

Many Canadians feel that without historic buildings, a nation loses its sense of history. This heritage must be transmitted from one generation to the next, so that the way of life of a previous generation, how it communicated and how it travelled, and in this case we are talking about the railways, can be understood, and in fact that generation now has a chance to preserve these buildings.

However, when we hear that despite the joint efforts of municipalities and members of the community, some stations were destroyed, that is a sure sign something must be done to protect them. Earlier, the Hon. Member mentioned a number of cases in his own province, hence the need for measures of the kind proposed by the Hon. Member for Bow River.

In 1976, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board recommended declaring some twenty stations as being of national historic significance. The Minister at the time accepted the Board's recommendation, and in some cases commemorative plaques were put in place. In Quebec, for instance, commemorative plaques were installed at the stations in Lévis, Saint-Jean-d'Iberville, Acton Vale, Berthier and at Windsor Station in Montreal. However, this measure was far from adequate, considering the desired goal. In fact, when the Historic Sites and Monuments Board submits recommendations for having certain buildings declared of historical value, this does not put any obligations or constraints on private or public owners. I could mention some examples. In my own riding, in the Municipality of Havelock where a commemorative plaque was installed, a decision was made to preserve the monument that had been so honoured.

The growing awareness of our heritage in recent years shows the good will of all concerned. There are several examples, Mr. Speaker, including Acton Vale. I will make an aside here, because during our caucus meeting to be held in Saint-Hyacinthe this summer, the whole Quebec caucus will take the train from Saint-Hyacinthe to Acton Vale, the very train promised by the Prime Minister in his election campaign, and we will go to this historic station on August 19. So it was possible to preserve this abandoned station in Acton Vale and for it to become a source of pride for the whole community.

If ordinary citizens like the people of Acton Vale can get together to preserve their national heritage, is there any reason why Parliament cannot find an appropriate way to encourage the public in its efforts and to speed up the conservation process considerably? We firmly believe, Mr. Speaker, that a law protecting heritage railway stations is feasible, although complex, and that Bill C-205 is going in the right direction.

The Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) was right to present this Bill. Its purpose is to prevent any change that would decrease the value of these stations. It provides that the status of a station may only be changed with the express permission of the Governor in Council, the opinion of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada and the joint recommendation of the Departments of Environment and Transport.

This Bill seems to fill the gap. It would require the railways to ask for specific authorization before demolishing or altering a station. The Governor in Council would have to issue an appropriate decree in each case on the recommendation of both the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of Transport and after public hearings by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the best way to protect heritage railway stations is to encourage cooperation between the railways and people interested in saving these stations. I know that the federal Government is now looking at other options that could be considered for protecting our heritage railway stations.

Mr. Speaker, I would again like to thank the Hon. Member for Bow River for this initiative to protect heritage railway stations in Canada. We are pleased with this initiative and we congratulate the Hon. Member.

We hope that this Bill will be submitted to the appropriate committee so that it can receive all the attention it deserves and be thoroughly considered.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues and commend the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) on this initiative. For a country that was built to a large extent on its railways, this Bill is particularly important in that it provides us with an opportunity to do what we can to ensure that these critical facilities in the form of heritage railway stations remain in place. So many have been obliterated from the historical and cultural landscape of Canada over the past number of years, I think it is appropriate that we take this step today.

Since we have all made statements in support of this legislation today, there is no question that the House is in favour. Therefore, it makes nothing but good sense that we show leadership, and I wonder if you would care to seek unanimous consent to not only pass it at second reading today but to go into Committee of the Whole and deal with it in its entirety. On behalf of my colleagues in the NDP I offer that co-operation to this first-class initiative. In this way we can demonstrate clear leadership in supporting not only the principle of the Bill but its substance in an effort to preserve heritage railway stations across Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there such agreement?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It was my understanding that at approximately 5.30 this debate would be interrupted for a visit to the other place to conduct some business. I believe that there was agreement among the Parties that we would recess after that until six o'clock. If that is not the understanding of my colleague, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, I would like to hear what he has to say.

• (1730)

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, that was in fact the understanding that we had as we progressed through Private Members' Hour. However, while listening to the very thoughtful debate from all sides of the House it occurred to me that, although we will be interrupted eventually for a few moments as we make the trek over to the other place, we could return relatively quickly. This is not the kind of Bill which will require an awful lot of debate in clause-by-clause consideration. As a matter of fact, it may not result in any further debate.

I would like to suggest that, if time permits before six o'clock, we return to the House of Commons from the other place and move expeditiously through clause-by-clause examination of this Bill and wrap up third reading of it. We can actually show some strong leadership on this heritage issue.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, we consider this to be a very important Bill. It is an excellent Bill introduced by my colleague, the Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor) and we want a legislative committee to study it.

Mr. Benjamin: What for? There is unanimous agreement on it.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) wants to ram things through when it is in his interest.

Mr. Benjamin: We're being helpful.

Mr. McDermid: No, you're not being helpful at all. We want this referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is, therefore, no agreement.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing the House that the Senate has passed Bill C-138, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st of March, 1989.

Also a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed, without amendment, the following Bills: C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products; Bill C-135, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff (code 9956); and Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall

June 28, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Eric Le Dain, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 28th day of June, 1988, at 5.25 p.m., for the purpose of giving the Royal Assent to certain Bills.

Yours sincerely,
Anthony P. Smyth
Deputy Secretary, Policy and Program

Mr. McDermid: Might I suggest, Sir, that the House recess until the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod arrives here at the House. We will then take care of our business in the other place and come back, probably by six o'clock, to return to the Orders of the Day.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—BILLS

[English]

HERITAGE RAILWAY STATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before we proceed, may I put the question on Private Members' Business?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If my hon. friend had not risen to his feet we could have dealt with this Bill in all stages by now. All he is doing is procrastinating. The Government requests our co-operation and when we give our co-operation, it does not want it. This Bill could have been given third reading by now.

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, this Bill has already gone through second reading and has been sent to a committee, from which it has not returned. In my view it was sent to the wrong committee, the Committee on Fisheries and Oceans. It has already had tremendous examination. I would certainly like to see it pass. I am receiving letters from all across the country asking that it be passed. I am very much in favour of it going ahead today if at all possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Mr. Taylor moved that Bill C-205, an Act to protect Heritage Railway Stations, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a further point of order. Would it be in order for me to ask again for unanimous consent for the Bill to go to Committee of the Whole now rather than the legislative committee? If so, I request that unanimous consent.

Mr. McDermid: No. Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. We have been asked that the Bill be directed to a legislative committee for proper examination. We have passed that motion in the House and I would like that to stand. I am not prepared to give unanimous consent.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A motion was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1740)

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that when the House went up to the Senate Chamber the Deputy Governor General was pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bills:

> Bill C-74, an Act respecting the protection of the environment and of human life and health—Chapter 22.
> Bill C-115, an Act to amend the Indian Act (designated lands)—Chapter 23.
> Bill C-51, an Act to prohibit the advertising and promotion and respecting the labelling and monitoring of tobacco products—Chapter 20.
> Bill C-204, an Act to regulate smoking in the federal workplace and on common carriers and to amend the Hazardous Products Act in relation to cigarette advertising—Chapter 21.
> Bill C-135, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff (code 9956)—Chapter 24.
> Bill C-138, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1989—Chapter 25.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, this has been a rather historic day. I think the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Ms. McDonald) should be congratulated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: No matter what an individual feels about the piece of legislation, whether opposing or supporting it, she did a tremendous job in getting her Private Members' Bill through. It was a great piece of work and I want to congratulate her on behalf of the Government.

As well, there has been agreement with our colleagues that we have a brief recess until six o'clock, at which time we will resume the free trade debate on Bill C-130.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it agreed to suspend the sitting until six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

At 5.51 p.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 6 p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-130, an Act to implement the free trade agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendments of Mr. Axworthy (p. 16661), and of Mr. Langdon (p. 16673).

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and with no small degree of personal satisfaction that I take part in this historic debate on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, an important agreement which opens a new chapter in the story of our magnificent and beloved country.

But there is one factor without which this agreement would not have been possible, one factor without which there would be no tariff reductions, no dispute settlement mechanism, no economies of scale, no new markets, no consumer savings—none of it. We have a free trade agreement today because our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Minister of Communications and this Government promised one thing—that Canada's right to determine its own culture would be respected in every degree.

That determination was reflected in an article in The New York Times of October 7, 1987, which stated: "one obstacle in the trade talks which the Americans could not break—Canada's insistence on protecting cultural industries, especially film, television and publishing".

Somewhat later Clayton Yeutter, America's chief trade representative, told the U.S. Congress in March of this year that the issue is "enormously sensitive to our Canadian friends—a cultural exemption was essential if we were to reach an agreement." What Mr. Yeutter said is true. The cultural exemption was a critical element. It was the one component by which an agreement could be reached, and without which an agreement was not possible.

To truly understand the significance of the cultural exemption and why it was beyond compromise we must first understand the nature of Canada's culture itself. There is no question that here in Canada we do and must look at our cultural products in a different light from that of our neighbours to the south.

[Translation]

Because our cultural reality is the choice instrument of the non-equivocal affirmation of Canada's own identity and sovereign character.

Mr. Speaker, the roots of our cultural reality go back as far and are just as deeply anchored in time as the history of our country itself.

Centuries and perhaps milleniums ago, even before the arrival of Europeans, native people had a way of life highlighted by a deep spirituality expressed through a thousand ceremonies and rites which enriched and sustained their communities. This spirituality was passed on from generation to generation right until present days.

Then came the French who settled in Acadia first before moving on to Quebec. With them they brought a new culture—the culture of the France of Kings, of cardinals, of Versailles.

Daring and adventurous, they were determined to fashion the savage nature into a new France, and our country continues to benefit from their work.

Of course they came to till the soil and trade in furs, but they did bring with them the cultural baggage of Molière, Voltaire and many others.

Eventually the English drove in the first stakes of the new imperialism which was to circle the globe. Of course they came with the Celts, and their very rich culture.

Each of these elements sank its roots ever deeper. Each people carried into the new land the expressions and rites which were its very own.

[English]

In time, others would arrive: north Europeans, east Europeans, Chinese and Japanese, Mediterraneans, and later so many people from so many countries around the world that Canada would be called the first multicultural society. Indeed, we have become a multicultural society. Today we celebrate the unending richness and the diversity which that has brought us, all the many cultures which have settled in and remained part of this land.

They have given us, all of them, great strength. They have made us uniquely what we are. Our culture is exciting precisely because it is constantly growing and developing as new strands are being woven into the nation's fabric.

But there has been vulnerability. Living next to the greatest cultural producer in the world has not been easy, especially when technology has made that culture instantly diffusible to the great majority of our citizens. I can tell Hon. Members of the House that it has not been easy to explain to our neighbours why we Canadians so often feel threatened by their cultural dominance, and why it has become so essential to us to take measures to ensure that our own culture is not eroded by their influence.

They cannot understand that we should feel threatened because they themselves have never felt threatened. To them culture is a commodity, it is bought and used or not used. It is switched on, or it is switched off. But what would Americans feel if they went out to their cinemas and found their films shown on only 3 per cent of their movie screens? Or how would they act if instead of television programs set in their own country, written, directed and acted by their own creative talents, all they ever saw were dramas and commodities about other cultures, other realities?

It is this cultural integrity, this cultural right that every nation has to protect and to encourage the development of its own words and images that we stressed over and over again throughout the free trade negotiations.

[Translation]

As I see it, the obstacles to understanding began to disappear only when the Prime Minister set our cultural concerns within the context of their ties with America's national security. That is how important our cultural reality is, so much so that we were quite prepared to withdraw from the free trade agreement had it been impossible to obtain the necessary safeguards in that respect. At long last the American negotiators realized that—else we would not be debating the issue today.

[English]

But what we have achieved in hard bargaining with the Americans we have not achieved through reason with Members opposite. As I have said in this Chamber on many occasions, I find it irresponsible of the opposition Parties to distort continually the question of the cultural exemption in the free trade agreement. That protection is there and they know it. It is comprehensive. As Article 2012 states clearly and without ambiguity, the cultural industries exempted from the agreement include publishing, including electronic publishing; film and video; audio and video music recording; broadcasting and cable. The exemption is equally unambiguous in its application. It extends to the production, distribution, sales, and exhibition activities in these industries.

Yet, what do we hear from Members opposite? Every opportunity they have they try to scare the Canadian public that Canada has lost its cultural identity. They are on very shaky ground, because even they have to admit that Canadian content rules in broadcasting have been maintained, as have simultaneous signal substitutions and Bill C-58; the structure and programs of our cultural institutions such as the CBC and the Canada Council; the Baie Comeau Book Publishing policy; and special support programs for the sound recording industry.

Not only have all those important programs and structures been maintained, but we have gone on to create new programs and improve established ones, contrary to the beliefs, and perhaps contrary to the wishes of opposition Parties.

Since the free trade agreement was tabled in the House of Commons last December, cultural initiatives have been taken in many fields. In the past several weeks alone, the CBC has received the go ahead for a new English language broadcasting centre in Toronto. It has received a commitment of $65 million for start-up costs once the centre is built. It has received additional allocations which will contribute to an increase in this year's budget for the CBC of some $53 million. Our just announced broadcasting policy and legislation will strengthen the CBC so that it can fulfil its mandate as the primary vehicle for Canadian cultural expression. For the first time the CBC's journalistic and artistic freedoms will be enshrined in law. The legislation and $250 million in support programs over the next four years are aimed specifically at meeting the Government's goals of more and better Canadian programming.

The film distribution program that I announced recently, the legislation for which has now entered this House, commits $85 million to a fund to help establish independent Canadian film distributors, and a further $115 million to the feature film programs of both Telefilm Canada and the National Film Board.

We have increased the Public Lending Right Program for authors this year by $800,000, and Canada Council grants by $8 million, all since the free trade agreement was tabled in the House.

Let us not forget postal subsidies. This program was due to be phased out over a ten-year period, not because of free trade, I may say, but because of the ruinous spending of our predecessors in office which brought us to the brink of bankruptcy. But because my colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has wrought an economic miracle in this country and has cut the annual deficit almost in half in terms of our gross national product, I was able to persuade him not only to continue the program of postal subsidies, but to establish it on a sound footing and to commit over $1 billion to it over the next five-year period.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: That will give Canadian publishers the certainty that they had not had in the past, and a greater opportunity to plan and strengthen their own development. Again, this has happened since the free trade agreement was concluded.

In the area of book publishing, not only does the agreement reaffirm the Baie Comeau policy, it actually strengthens it. In this day and age when the world-wide trend is toward international mergers in the publishing industry, Canada has affirmed that it will move decisively to establish Canadian control of the industry here in Canada. Under the free trade agreement, when divestiture of foreign-owned publishing concerns is required and no Canadian publisher can be found, the federal Government itself will step in and purchase at fair market price.

This is hardly abandonment of or retreat from the principles of cultural protection, as the Members opposite would have the people and the creative talents of Canada believe. On the contrary, it is one more step in the many that this Government has taken to make our cultural independence stronger and more expressive than ever.

The sound recording program, Bill C-60, amendments to the Copyright Act, the Book Publishing Development Program and Baie Comeau, a feature film fund, film distribution legislation, and now the broadcasting legislation, are milestones in our cultural development, and it is this Government that has taken them all. We will continue to take them, just as we will continue to take measures to strengthen our trading relationship, because both are in the interests of Canada.

I have said it many times, other Hon. Members have said it, distinguished Canadian academics and analysts have said it, but it bears repeating one more time: the past 50 years or so when Canada and our neighbour to the south have consistently reduced the barriers to trade between our two countries, is precisely the time during which we have so greatly furthered and strengthened the cultural sovereignty that we so cherish in this country.

Today the cultural sector generates in excess of $10 billion in our economy every year and employs more than 300,000 Canadians. But our culture goes beyond this. It is everywhere in our land, expressed with enthusiasm in a down-home square dance no less than a concert in Roy Thomson Hall, in a street performance in Montreal before a dozen people, or before millions at the Olympics.

Let us think about the Olympics for a moment. What did make it such a very special event that hundreds of thousands of Canadians and visitors will remember all of their lives? The sporting events and the medals, of course. But even more, I suspect, they will remember the participation of an entire community in sharing its values, its treasures, and its joys with the world. This is the essence of our culture— participation, sharing, be it our individual heritage or our common legacy as one country. Through it, we have come to offer the world many of today's most accomplished artists and creative aspects: writers like Robertson Davies, Mavis Gallant, Antonine Maillet, and the late Gabrielle Roy; singers such as K. D. Lang, Céline Dion and Daniel Lavoie; Maureen Forester, Liona Boyd, the Montreal Symphony, the Winnipeg Ballet, the Cirque du Soleil, the Stratford Festival. They are no longer solely Canadian names. They have achieved a renown that transcends borders. But none of them forget or want to forget that this is indeed home, that the talents that the world has come to appreciate began here, grew here, and developed here.

Free trade will not take these people away. Success might. Because Canadians can produce and create work that is unique, that is important not only to our culture but to the world's. The free trade agreement, Mr. Speaker, is the opportunity for our businesses and our industries, and the Canadian men and women in them, to prove that they can produce and compete no less successfully, and provide the growing and strengthening economy, which can only serve to reinforce our cultural commitments to Canada's great future cultural development.

• (1820)

The cultural exemption that we fought so hard for, and won, gives us that opportunity, Mr. Speaker. Because of it, we can move forward with confidence and with hope to the challenges ahead. That is why the people of Canada will support us in this great undertaking, and the Government, which has had the courage, the conviction and the vision to introduce it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Essex Windsor.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: Here comes the cry baby.

Mr. Langdon: I have to say—

Miss MacDonald: Congratulate me.

Mr. Langdon: —to one of my favourite Ministers, that was a magnificent effort to defend the indefensible.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Speaking of acting—

Mr. Langdon: I want to ask the Minister if she truly believes that the exemption which was promised, not just by herself but by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with respect to cultural policy, if that promise was kept, why is it that within the trade agreement there is, first, a change which shifts our former policy with respect to retransmission rights on cable television?

An Hon. Member: No, it doesn't.

Mr. Langdon: Second, why is there a change with respect to what used to be the case in Bill C-58, the printing-in-Canada clause? Why is it that in fact, in my office, representatives of the printing industry in Canada have told me that they expect to lose 3,000 jobs because of this change in cultural policy which the trade deal has put into effect?

Also, why is it that the recording industry has been in touch with us—

An Hon. Member: That is the Americans.

Mr. Langdon: —and said that the elimination of tariffs is going to be a significant blow, not just to themselves as entities here in Canada—they can survive that—but to the capacity to use some of their extra profits for the benefit of young and new Canadian recording artists. Fourth, why is it, if the Baie Comeau agreement, of which the Minister has spoken so glowingly—

Miss MacDonald: Eloquently.

Mr. Langdon: I said glowingly. That was close.

An Hon. Member: And accurately.

Mr. Langdon: Why, if that is the case, is there still outstanding the case of Gulf and Western, which this Government has not yet successfully resolved? Finally, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Come on. Give her a chance.

Mr. Langdon: Finally, the most important of all the cultural features which the Minister did not touch on, the notwithstanding clause, which says that notwithstanding some of the clauses which the Minister referred to, it will be possible for the United States to take commercial action against us for any cultural initiative in the future which we undertake to preserve and protect, the distinctiveness of Canada. Why was that clause put into the agreement if culture was supposed to be exempt?

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am so very pleased that the Hon. Member raised those questions so that I am able to straighten him out from the kind of tortured path that he finds himself in. We will take these points one by one. If I miss any, please feel free to come back to me.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you.

Miss MacDonald: First of all—

Mr. Langdon: Subject to the Speaker.

Miss MacDonald: —retransmission rights, which are addressed in the free trade agreement. Back in 1985, we had a subcommittee of this House, of this Parliament, which looked at the whole question of copyright. One of the recommendations that all-Party subcommittee made was that we should address properly retransmission rights that had not been dealt with before. It was there in the recommendation to this House. It was a decision that had been taken before the free trade agreement was negotiated, but it was honoured in that agreement when we had already informed the United States that that would be done. That was done with the sanction of this House.

An Hon. Member: Number one.

Miss MacDonald: Second, Bill C-58 and the changes to the printing industry. I was here when Bill C-58 was passed in this House, and I voted for it, I want you to know. It addresses a certain number of aspects of our film and publishing industry and of our television industry. All of those things have been maintained.

The one thing we have not agreed to, is that printing per se is a cultural industry. It is not. Typesetting is not a cultural industry. It is not part of the creative talent that goes into writing, that goes into publishing. It is an industry.

The Hon. Member might want to do something about it, but I can tell him that Canadian publishers, who may seek to find better prices for themselves, better economic benefits for themselves by having print done elsewhere, will search that out, as will Americans wanting to have their materials printed here in this country. So we see that for the first time printing is taken out from the cultural industries, where it should not have been, and it is now going to be placed in a position where it is competitive. We believe that our printing firms are competitive.

Third, the recording industry and tariffs—

An Hon. Member: It is two out of three.

Miss MacDonald: Let me deal with the recording industry and tariffs and support for our recording industry. The reduction in tariffs on the recording industry was begun in the Budget of 1982, and has been carried on continuously ever since, and I never heard the Member raise it once prior to the last couple of months. Not once has he raised it when it was going—and I can tell him that that decision to phase out the tariff was taken quite some years ago. But it is on 5 per cent of the recordings in this country which are aligned with American companies. We happen to be interested in the 95 per cent that are recorded here.

Because of that, we have introduced a special support program of $25 million over this five-year period, to help Canadian artists, beginning artists, to get on record and be able to promote their works. It is succeeding. You can come to my boardroom and see the 14 records that are mounted on my wall, gold and platinum records, that have come about as a result of support that we put into place for those sound recording artists.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Then there is the book publishing policy. We have retained the book publishing policy and we have moved on it in the Ginn case. The final negotiations for that are under way. We have already indicated to the House and to the Member that this is being carried out through the auspices of CDIC. He might not want the Government to be purchasing companies that should be divested here in Canada, but we believe that this is the route to go and then we will resell them to Canadian companies. We are dealing with the Gulf and Western issue.

• (1830)

Finally I come to the notwithstanding clause about which the Member wants some explanation. This shows me more than anything else that in reading the free trade agreement he has not understood it, so I will explain it to him, Mr. Speaker. If there is an exemption in place, then the cultural industries and our cultural products are outside of the agreement. That means they operate under the present trade remedy laws that are in effect in Canada or in effect in the United States. Under the present trade remedy laws the United States could retaliate against any Canadian cultural move to any amount. The Americans could take any move against us whatsoever. This limits them for the first time to the equivalent of any move that we take in this country. That is an advance from where we are at the present time. The Member might want to go back to allowing them to take any move, any move of any dollar amount whatsoever against us. We do not believe that is the way they should operate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying with respect to the debate on culture, that regardless on which side of the debate one is on, in the exchange that just took place between the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald)—and I am on the side of the Member for Essex—Windsor—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No kidding.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: —it goes without saying, or perhaps it needs to be said, that culture is more than the arts. Culture is more than entertainment. Culture is more than films. Culture is also how we arrange our lives together socially and politically. I am sure people of Mennonite extraction would want to say that part of their culture is how they have arranged to have certain goods in common over the years, or whatever the case may be. So how we organize our life together is part of our culture. What I say, whether Hon. Members across the way disagree or agree with me, is that our culture is threatened by this agreement. I hope the Minister will hear me out and then pass judgment on my argument. I do believe a lot of things which are distinctive to the Canadian community, if you like, are at risk in this agreement, and I hope to be able to make that case.

I want to start by cutting up the debate into three parts. One, where this agreement deserves the definition of free trade as it has been traditionally understood; two, where it is something less than free trade as it has been traditionally understood; and three, where it is a great deal more than free trade as it has been traditionally understood.

I start with where the agreement deserves the definition of free trade. What has free trade traditionally meant? It has meant the absence of tariffs, the absence of duties and other financial barriers to trade levied by a particular Government on goods coming from another country. In that respect this agreement over the next 10 years does provide for the elimination of those tariffs which now remain between Canada and the United States. In that respect it deserves the definition of free trade. But what is not often taken into consideration is that right now some 78 per cent to 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is tariff-free already. It is quite misleading to create the impression that somehow there is a great tariff wall between Canada and the United States, because this tariff wall has been coming down ever since 1945, and has been eliminated to the degree that 80 per cent of our trade is now tariff-free. So we are talking about eliminating the remaining 20 per cent, only 5 per cent of which is significant.

When people are considering what we may have negotiated away, they need to consider that we negotiated that away in order to achieve the elimination of that remaining 20 per cent of tariffs in so far as we are talking in any pure sense about free trade. It is also the case, of course, that having said that 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is tariff-free, that 80 per cent of our total trade is with the United States. We are also talking about the potential for an increased dependency on the United States. You would think that any self-respecting country would be worried if some 80 per cent of its trade were with one other country. But we have a Government here that does not think that is enough; it thinks the dependence that we have on the United States ought to be increased. That is the sense, and it is a very limited sense, in which this agreement deserves the name of a free trade agreement.

Speaking of the extent to which it is fair to describe this as less than a free trade agreement, you have to notice that the bottom line which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) laid out when he entered into these negotiations which he called secure access, unimpeded access, to the American market, has not been achieved. To that extent it does not even achieve the goals of free trade because all the U.S. trade remedy laws, the power to countervail et cetera, which the U.S. possessed before the signing of this agreement, the Americans still possess. All that we have achieved is the setting up of a bi-national panel to judge, when Americans take action against us, whether or not American law has been applied properly, not whether it is a fair law in the first place but whether it has been applied properly.

According to the Government, this is an improvement over the existing situation. That is at least arguable, but it is not secure access to American markets. It may in fact turn out to be just as much of a hassle as the existing system, because in the final text of the agreement there is another level of appeal, which could take a long time. One of the complaints about the existing system was that it took such a long time and that it became a form of harassment. That same ability to harass Canadian exporters exists in the agreement which the Government signed. That is the sense in which this agreement is less than free trade, that secure access to American markets was not achieved.

Many times in this House when we stood up and asked the then Minister of trade about American actions that were taken against Canadian exports, as in softwood, shakes and shingles, potash, et cetera, she said the purpose of the free trade agreement was so that these things could not happen to us. This is a bit of a chicken and egg situation. She said that if we had the free trade agreement this would not happen, but the Opposition held another view. We held the view that these American actions could not be separated from the negotiation context that we were in and that these were actions taken by the Americans to make Canada more desperate for reaching a deal with our neighbours to the south, and those actions succeeded. It is obvious the Government was desperate for an agreement in the final hours of the negotiations. It is obvious, when you look at the things the Government gave up and put on the table which it said it never would. That is the sense in which it is less than a free trade agreement. The Minister, when she used to tell us that the object of the negotiations was to get rid of these laws, has failed because these laws exist and will continue to exist.

The third way of looking at this agreement is where it is more than free trade. This is where you enter into a realm of political dishonesty that I find the most disturbing about this agreement. It is misleading in the extreme to describe this as a free trade agreement only. Included in this free trade agreement are arrangements between Canada and the United States which settle questions that have always been political questions in their own right, questions that have been separate political debates and have never been part of the debate on free trade, whether that debate was in 1948, 1911, 1891 or whenever the case may be. In this agreement is an attempt by the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to enshrine in this particular agreement, at least for a generation, its particular side of those separate political debates that have gone on for years.

What am I talking about? I am talking about foreign investment. Investment never had anything to do with free trade before. It was a separate matter altogether, and there have been lively debates in Canada over the years about whether or not to regulate foreign investment and how much to regulate it. The Liberals brought in the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The NDP did not think it was strong enough. The Conservatives thought it was a communist conspiracy.

After 1984, the Conservatives brought in their own version of FIRA, Investment Canada. However, what we see in this agreement is the Conservative Party calling that debate to an end, saying we will put our policies beyond the reach of future Parliaments and beyond the reach of future Governments, we will enshrine in this free trade agreement our view of what the rules should be with respect to foreign investment for a generation. I think that is wrong. I think that anyone who had any respect for Parliament and for the political process would think that that was wrong, regardless of his or her view on foreign investment. That is what I mean when I say that this agreement is more than about free trade.

How else is it more than about free trade? It is more than about free trade when it comes to energy. We know that it was only in the closing days of the negotiations that it even became known, and some Premiers claim they never knew at all, that energy was part of the package. What do we see enshrined in the free trade agreement? We see the Progressive Conservative view of how Canada's energy and natural resources ought to be managed.

There is nothing wrong with the Progressive Conservatives having their view of how our resources ought to be managed. I do not happen to agree with it, but what I find even more offensive is their attempt to put their particular approach to energy development beyond the reach of future Governments and beyond the reach of future Parliaments by enshrining it in this free trade agreement. They did it in such a way that there could never again be a National Energy Program.

I know that a lot of people did not like the National Energy Program. We in the NDP did not think it was great either. We voted against it. However, this agreement will make it impossible for any future Government to have any kind of national energy policy. I think it is vindictive and short-sighted in the extreme for the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada to live out its reaction to the Liberal National Energy Program of the early 1980s by writing into an agreement arrangements whereby no National Energy Program could ever be designed again, good or bad.

When former Premier Lougheed of Alberta came before the committee, we asked him directly if he realized that this meant that energy policy would be made in Washington, by the market-place or by OPEC and never again in Ottawa. He said yes, exactly, and that is why he likes this agreement. That is why we do not like it. We do not like not only the substance but the attempt by the Progressive Conservative Party to enshrine its particular view of how energy policy should be developed forever in this agreement.

The same is true with respect to services. Free trade in services was never part of the debate. The Government is fond of quoting the Macdonald Commission because Mr. Macdonald is a Liberal. They like to throw that back in the face of the Liberals who are genuinely divided about the free trade agreement. Lots of prominent Liberals are in favour of it, including former Liberal Minister of Trade, Gerry Regan, who came before the committee in Nova Scotia and went on and on about the benefits of the agreement. We know that the Liberals are schizoid on this issue.

The Macdonald Commission, however, did not recommend free trade in services. It did not even study the matter. Yet the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has the gall to quote the Macdonald Commission report as if it were a considered recommendation of what the Government is now instigating when it plainly is not, particularly when it comes to trade in financial services.

Another thing the Conservatives plan to win indirectly through this agreement what they could never win directly before, and I am sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is not here to hear this, is their position on social programs and medicare. The claim by the Opposition and others that our social programs are at risk in this agreement has been an object of some derision by the Government. One of the reasons the Government is able to get away with this is that people do not know that in this agreement, there is an arrangement by which over the next five to seven years, Canada and the United States will negotiate what constitutes a subsidy, what constitutes an unfair trade practice and what constitutes a competitive advantage. Our claim is that in those negotiations, we will find that things which are now said to be not on the table will be on the table. Medicare will be one of those things, and I will just cite an example from the committee hearings.

In Halifax, we heard from the President of National Sea Products, Mr. Gordon Cummings. He said that he did not have any worries about free trade. He was quite confident. He had plants in New Hampshire, I believe, and in Nova Scotia. He had done studies and found that the plant in Nova Scotia was marginally more productive than the one in New Hampshire.

I asked him what made the one plant more productive than the other, and he said that it was the fact that in Nova Scotia, he does not have to pay health care insurance for his employees, but in New Hampshire he does. I said to myself, should that not cause a little light to come on somewhere, should that not cause someone who really wants to be open to the facts to see that if, even by business peoples' own admission, things like health care insurance are part of what is calculated when talking about competitive advantage, those kinds of things will be on the table when we get down to that five to seven-year negotiation process?

Either the Americans will want our health care system changed in order that there will not be what might be argued to be a subsidy, or it could work the other way. Some Canadian firms could claim that they are being overly taxed in order to pay for a universal health care system. It does not matter which way it comes, because the point I am trying to make is that these things will be on the table. That is why it is so fundamentally misleading for the Government to say that they are not on the table. They are on the table and it does not really bother the Government. Why? Because government Members over here are not 100 per cent behind the universal health care system we have anyway.

Many of these people were around 20 years ago when medicare was fought. I am not talking about hospitalization. Hospitalization was brought in by Diefenbaker after some of the groundwork had been laid by the Liberals, but with respect to medicare, we remember only too well that it was Progressive Conservative provincial Governments that dragged their feet, particularly the Government of Ontario which did not want to have anything to do with medicare. In my own province, it was put off for a year by a man who is now a prominent member of the Conservative Party in the Senate, Senator Roblin.

Let us consider the political realities. The fact is that the Conservative Party of Canada would like to see medicare silently, gradually eroded so that private health insurance could make its way back in and various other things could be privatized. However, they do not have the guts to do that directly because they know that if they did, they would be booted out of the country so fast, it would make their heads spin.

What do government Members do? They enter into a free trade agreement whereby these kinds of things will come to be negotiated over the years. Perhaps the Americans will decide that, in the interests of harmonization, they will have a health care system like us. If that is the way I turn out to be wrong, I will be glad for all the Americans who do not have health care insurance now. I will be glad that they have a different health care insurance system, period. Unless that happens, our system will come under pressure to change. That is what I mean when I say that our social programs are at risk. That is what I mean when I refer to social programs, foreign investment, energy, financial services and regional development.

We know that regional development programs will come to be judged in light of how they affect the free trade agreement. We know that the Conservatives have, over the years, made a political career out of being critical of intervention in the market-place on behalf of regional development such as the Liberals instituted from time to time supported by the NDP.

What we have here is an attempt by the Progressive Conservative Party to break a tension in Canadian political debate which has existed for more than 50 years since the creation of the CCF. We have had debate over public sector and private sector, universal programs, and about managing and using our energy resources. This debate has led to a better country, compromise, a mixed economy, and made us different. This creative tension will be broken now and forever by a Government which, by virtue of this agreement, is trying to enshrine its view of the world for a long time to come.

I think that is wrong. I think other Governments and other Parliaments and Canadians in the future are going to come to rue this day when they find out they will not be able to get out of this treaty. Yes, there is an escape clause, but once we have entered the agreement, if God forbid we do and the Conservatives win the next election, how will we get out of it? At the end of that five to seven-year period, when we find out we are not getting a fair shake with respect to the negotiations, the North American economy will have already been rationalized, and unless the Americans want out, we will not get out. It is as simple as that.

We asked a question of some Congressman when we were at the Canada-U.S. meetings in May. Sam Gibbons, who I am sure you have met on occasion, when he was asked what if Canada wanted to get out of this agreement, said, "We already have an economic basket case to the south of us. We would sure hate to have an economic basket case to the north of us". You do not need to read between the lines very much to see as being the threat to Canada if we act in ways that the Americans do not see in their interests, once having entered this agreement. That is the strait-jacket the Government proposes to put us in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and my father have one thing in common, they are both United Church Ministers. However, my father never told a whopper like we just heard. Never.

The Hon. Member is a great industrialist and he started talking about an industrialist who has a plant in the U.S. where he has to pay the medicare cost for his employees, but not here. One of the things the Hon. Member neglected to say was that taxes are higher in Canada to pay for social services than they are in the U.S. Neither of those are mentioned in the agreement. The Hon. Member knows full well that social services are not going to be eroded.

I recommend that he read an article in the June 27 Toronto Star, not a paper known to be supportive of the free trade agreement. It was written by Anthony Westell, and I do not think anyone would label him a friend of the Government.

Mr. Langdon: He is a very strong free trader.

Mr. McDermid: He is a free trader? Isn't that interesting?

The article concerns social services and trade. One of the things he says is that there is direct evidence from other countries that social expenditures are not a cost on economic efficiency and competitiveness. In a 1985 study the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, a club of modern industrial countries, compared national expenditures on education, health, pensions, income maintenance and welfare. A lot of countries widely thought to be more economically successful than Canada turned out to spend a higher proportion of national income on social services, among them West Germany, Sweden, Austria, Italy and Denmark. Canada is low in the table of social spenders, only just ahead of the U.S.

As he explained in his article, social services are not considered a detriment to trade, a subsidy to trade, or anything else. In fact, they sit alone outside trade agreements. This agreement is not unlike those.

The Hon. Member stands here and says these are now going to be treated as subsidies under the free trade agreement. Why has the U.S. federal Government not attacked our social programs as an unfair subsidy? You believe that they think they are unfair subsidies, so why has that Government not brought action against us?

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, they have regarded certain Canadian policies over the years with respect to social programs as subsidies. The most recent example is the action they wanted the Canadian Government to take, which it took, concerning the drug patent laws. Americans have also brought actions with respect to our unemployment insurance laws.

Mr. McDermid: One case, and they threw it out. They did not even hear it.

Mr. Blaikie: I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to listen to my argument. These things will come to be talked about. They will come to be on the table. I am not saying we will definitely lose them. However, I think we will, and I am entitled to a different opinion from that held by the Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. McDermid: You can't base it on anything.

Mr. Blaikie: My point is that it is inescapable that these things will come to be negotiated. Yet they are our business, and there is no reason and it is wrong for them to be negotiated in the first place.

Mr. McDermid: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member talked about the fellow in Nova Scotia that I talked about and said that I did not point this out or point that out. I did not point those things out because the guy in Nova Scotia did not point them out. I was quoting him. If he did not mention the taxes, that is not my problem.

The fact of the matter is that both in Vancouver and Halifax we had business people coming before us who said our social programs make us more competitive, which is just the point that Anthony Westell was making. I do not disagree with him on that point. I believe that a good social service network does make a country more efficient and competitive. What I am worried about is that we are entering into a relationship with a country that does not believe that. That country may have the power to impose that view on us, quite unlike the European Economic Community which we are always hearing about as a comparison for the agreement we are about to enter into. Mrs. Thatcher mentioned it the other day. The fact of the matter is, the EEC has a great deal more symmetry between members.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The U.S. spends almost twice as much as the U.K. on health.

Mr. Blaikie: You also have a consensus on social policy in Europe. You have what I would call almost a social democratic consensus in Europe on social policy. You do not have the difference that exists between Canada and the U.S. with respect to social policy. So I would take Anthony Westell's argument and say, yes, he is right, and that is precisely why we should be worried. We are dealing with a neighbour to the south who has never seen the light with respect to social services.

• (1900)

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to ask the Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) a question about the discussions to which he referred with certain members of the U.S. Congress. He referred in particular to Congressman Sam Gibbons of Florida who is the Chairman of the House Trade Committee.

Does the Hon. Member recall the discussion which took place during that particular meeting with Congressman Gibbons about the alternatives to proceeding with a trade deal, be it this trade deal or some other trade deal? Does the Hon. Member recall Congressman Gibbons who, because of their system, is the one who vets pieces of legislation and determines whether or not they see the light of day, saying that he was currently sitting on 38 pieces of protectionist legislation aimed at Canada and that he would continue to sit on them until the deal was approved by the Parliaments of the two countries? He said he felt that the hounds of hell might somehow be unleashed if the trade deal failed and that in his judgment there is really no alternative to a free trade relationship between our two countries. Could the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Blaikie: I would be delighted to comment, Mr. Speaker, because this is the sum total of the Conservative argument. They always say that people who are against the free trade agreement are operating out of fear. What could be a more fearful stance than to say that if we do not enter into this sweetheart deal with the United States they are going to bully us, they are going to do this to us, and they are going to do that to us? They are probably going to do all those things to us anyway. At least we could have a little dignity on the way instead of selling out our sovereignty and economic independence.

To quote a famous American, we have nothing to fear but fear itself. Well, this deal has its origins in fear, it has its origins in the inability of Canada to make its case to the United States about fair trade practices and the inability of Canada to create an international economic order in which we do not have to be tied to the apron strings of the United States in a new North American trading block. That is what I call fear.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member loves to bash the Americans, and he was at it again tonight. He was talking about health care expenditures and saying that in the United States they do not care about it. To cite some figures, in the United Kingdom, 6.2 per cent of the GNP is spent on health care. In Canada, 8.6 per cent of our GNP is spent on health care. In the United States, 10.8 per cent of the GNP is spent on health care. Therefore, to say that the Americans do not care about health care and do not spend money on health care is a completely phoney issue. We know that the Hon. Member just loves to bash the Americans, and he is at it again tonight.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, it is wrong for people to say that those who are opposed to the free trade agreement are bashing Americans. I have every bit as much respect for the Americans and their independence as does the Member.

That he cites these figures on health care is amazing. The point of the matter with respect to expenditures on health care is not how much is spent but how it is spent. The point is whether it is spent in the context of a universal health care system or in the context of a privatized health care system which leaves 35 million Americans with no health care coverage at all. The Americans spend 10.8 per cent of their GNP on a fraction of their population. We spend that which we spend on everybody. That is what is at stake in this agreement.

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to join in this debate. Being a man from Atlantic Canada there are reasons of history and dictates of geography and economics which compel me to add a word, not only from a national perspective but also from the point of view of Atlantic Canada and especially Nova Scotia.

In 1984 when we were promoting our platform we were not talking about trade. We were talking about economic renewal and jobs. I think that all Members of this House would agree that our performance has been very satisfactory in that regard. There have, however, arisen certain considerations and influences since that time which have compelled us to take the initiative which we have which leads us to this particular debate today.

They are, first, the Macdonald Royal Commission, which consumed $20 million of taxpayers' funds and involved the most comprehensive review of the economy which has ever been undertaken in Canada. Its message was that this was an opportunity which should be pursued, that we had no alternative in view of world events. It concluded that, in view of the economies of all the world which were now so interdependent one upon the other, Canada should, in any event, pursue discussions with the United States.

Second, it became more apparent that countries were not setting up tariffs and quotas in isolation but were working together in certain trading blocks. Some 82 countries of the world had associated with each other to form 14 different and distinct trading blocks around the world. The only country that does not belong to a trading block is Canada, and Canada is more dependent on trade than any other country in the western world with the exception, perhaps, of West Germany.

Compare our situation to those of the other main countries of the world. Thirty per cent of what we produce is exported abroad. The United States exports only 10 per cent; Japan, 16 per cent; and the United Kingdom, 26 per cent. One third of what we produce is sold abroad, and we do not belong to one of the alliances to which I have referred.

There was of course, in addition, the increasing hostility manifested across the United States against Canada by way of countervail and other trading action which put in peril so many of the goods on which we were dependent. No sector of the Canadian economy was spared. Our fish, our lumber, our hogs, our beef, our berries, and our potash felt the influence of the retaliatory action which was so much in evidence only a year ago and was the subject of question after question from members of the Opposition. They asked when the Government was going to do something to deal with these unilateral impositions, these unfair non-tariff barriers which had been put in place by the United States. They asked when the Government was going to take action to protect Canadian jobs.

Some have estimated that if all the actions of which I have spoken, together with the pieces of legislation which were before the U.S. Congress, came to fruition, hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs would be put in jeopardy.

The manifestation of the hostility was seen not only in the retaliatory action but in hundreds of pieces of legislation from all parts of the United States in the U.S. Congress and the U.S. Senate. This, of course, dictated that in order to protect our dependency on trade we must take some very quick and overt action.

We on this side of the House did not invent trade legislation. This has been with us forever and a day. In 1854, before Canada was indeed a nation, there was a reciprocity treaty of some 12 years' duration signed on our behalf by the United Kingdom with the United States. The considerations prior to that treaty being executed were very much the same as they are now. They were ten times bigger than we. We were afraid of annexation. Could we compete? All those things we heard in abundance during the past few months and, indeed, more prominently and vigorously during the last few days, were considered. There was the test of time and 12 years later we came out very strong, more independent than we had ever been before, and, indeed, we wanted to continue the experiment. Unfortunately, the War of Independence intervened and the United States withdrew. But the exercise was useful and instructive and it is relevant at this particular time.

The question of trade and whether an accord should be secured with the United States was the subject of debate in the elections of 1876, 1891 and 1911. In 1947, Mackenzie King sent ambassadors down to the United States to secure a free trade agreement. He did not do that with the kind of massive consultation we have had throughout Canada during the past two years. These were public servants entrusted with a particular mission to try to surreptitiously come to a conclusion with the United States on a trade accord with Canada. It was only at the very last moment that Mackenzie King had a vision that there was a message from afar. Perhaps he took one of those walks in the snow. Whatever it was, he withdrew at the last minute.

In the era of Mr. Trudeau it was considered that an accord with the United States should be entertained because sectoral initiatives were commenced by none other than the Minister of Trade at the time, Gerald Regan. That approach was so successful that Mr. Gerald Regan, a former Premier of Nova Scotia, a former Minister for International Trade, and an avowed and dedicated Liberal and a very fine Nova Scotian, has today commended this trade initiative as being courageous and appropriate and in the best interests not only of Canada, but of Atlantic Canada and Nova Scotia. Do you know why, Mr. Speaker? Our particular province was the fourth largest trading nation in all the world when we joined Confederation, and history is instructive. We are never going to return to those days when Nova Scotia attained that status, but given the opportunity, given the access to the markets in the New England States where there now reside over 100 million people, if we could be guaranteed access to those particular states, we know what that would do for Nova Scotia and the Atlantic provinces. Of course, the example can be carried on to the rest of Canada.

All of us do not pretend to be trade experts. It is very difficult for us to know particularly who is right and who is wrong, so how are the people of Canada going to determine who has the upper hand, who is right and who is leading them astray? Perhaps the people of Canada should go to third parties and find out what they have to say. For instance, all the major associations in Canada which have the ability, the capacity, and the resources to spend the money to analyse this particular trade agreement have done so. They have indicated unequivocally that this trade agreement is in the best interests of Canada and that it would be an act of neglect, a cancer on the future of our children, if we refuse to follow, first, discussion and then consummation of this particular agreement.

The plethora of organizations which favour the agreement speak for themselves, the Canadian Consumers Association, the Canadian Life Insurance Association, the Canadian Meat Council, the Cattlemen's Association, the bankers, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the small business of Canada, the Canadian Chambers of Commerce, the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, the boards of trade, virtually all the Canadian provinces and, certainly, all the provinces in Atlantic Canada. If you were trying to find out, Mr. Speaker, if this particular agreement was in your best interests, would you not be guided by those people who have to make those kinds of investment? Would we not be instructed and encouraged, and would we not pay attention to the advice and direction they have given us in this respect? I would hope so.

Why is it that these particular associations are supportive? This is their trade agreement. They were involved in the SAGIT advisory committees. They instructed Mr. Reisman of the strengths and weaknesses in each one of their sectors, and their strengths and weaknesses are incorporated in the free trade agreement. For example, if one of the industries is particularly weak, then they have 10 years, the maximum amount of time, to adjust. If they are competitive and think they have a lead in the market and want guaranteed access immediately, then so be it. At the commencement of the trade agreement, when it takes effect next year, it is open competition if that is what they want. That should be instructive for those who are having difficulty in coming to a consensus.

I think it important that we view the examples and experience of other nations. I think we should determine what has happened to other countries when they have entered into a similar agreement to what is contemplated in this particular accord. For example, let us take New Zealand and Australia. We have the big country and the little country. We had the fears of absorption, the fears of dominance. This is the most recent example of a trade agreement in world history. It is about five years old. I can tell you that in the time since that pact was signed, New Zealand has more than doubled its exports to Australia because it has specialized in those things in which it has a particular affinity and a capacity. It is manufacturing refrigerators and stoves and appliances. It has dictated its efforts in a very particular direction, specializing, and it has done very well. Australia has done very well also. It has dramtically increased its portion of trade. It is a win-win situation. It is the kind of thing contemplated by all of those associations that support and endorse the agreement about which we are talking at this particular time.

Of course, we have to point to the largest trading agreement in history to date, the EEC. You will recall very well, Mr. Speaker, that in Great Britain there were reservations about the capacity of its labour force. There were questions as to how it would benefit, how it would be prejudiced. It took seven years to secure an agreement for Great Britain. There were reservations in Luxembourg and Italy. There were industries in France and some of the other European countries which worried about their ability to compete. They thought there would be irreversible prejudice. After 20 years of the experiment, I challenge anyone to find one country today which would withdraw from the European economic agreement.

The experiment is so successful that in 1992 they are going to tear down all the barriers so that a worker from Switzerland can walk over the border to Italy, France or Germany and will not have to show any green card, pink card or white card. They will have freedom to move, freedom to work and freedom to invest. The system now in place in the EEC involves much more homogeneity, much more harmonization, than anything contemplated by this agreement.

Has there been any prejudice to sovereignty or culture in that particular experiment? Is the Frenchman any less so today than he was before he entered the accord? The Irish still have their sagacity. Are the English any less assertive under Margaret Thatcher? We heard her here very recently. Was there an illusion, a perception of any less confidence today as a result of being melded into the European community than there was 20 years ago when England was supposedly independent? Are these examples not instructive?

Let us look at Sweden and the European Economic Community. There are nine million people in Sweden, 350 million in the European community. They have a trade agreement. There are no tariff barriers. Sweden maintains the most exhaustive and comprehensive social programs known in the western world. Yet it carries that on without prejudice, even though it is trading with the great Goliath. Are these examples not instructive?

• (1920)

With respect to the argument on sovereignty, Newfoundland when it entered Confederation had 3 per cent of the Canadian population in 1947. Are Newfoundlanders any less independent or assertive today than they were before? It is illustrative when I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and I went out to dinner not so long ago. We went to a Japanese restaurant. For dinner I ordered sushi. The Minister for International Trade ordered bait. Is that not indicative that Newfoundlanders still retain that capacity for which we love them and which is so peculiar to that rock?

What is involved here is a determination of the future. What we are talking about is the ability to compete.

It is instructive to look at Canada's Olympic hockey team. When we sent members of the team over to world competition about 10 years ago we found that we did not have a monopoly on the international game which we founded. We were internationally embarrassed by the Russians, the Czechs, the Swedes and the Finns. They had been watching us for a long period of time. They had looked at our passing plays. They had looked at our coaching methods. They extracted the very best and put them together. They beat us at our own game.

Last year we sent over three teams in international competition. All three won because we looked in the mirror and found that we were wanting. We got involved in competition. As a result, we raised ourselves to the level to which we were obliged to raise ourselves to. It is no different from industry competing in Atlantic Canada, Ontario or any other place.

I want to say to the high school children of Nova Scotia that they have the opportunity to stay and get a job. What have they been obliged to do? They have been obliged to go to Toronto, Montreal, the West and the United States. There is one high school in Bridgetown, Nova Scotia. Out of 2,400 graduates in the last 10 years 25 have stayed home. There are no opportunities. We now have regional development programs which we use to try to send aid to Atlantic Canada. All Governments of whatever stripe have undergone that experiment. There has been therapeutic and temporary relief, but not enduring jobs and long-term investment in order to keep the children of Atlantic Canada home.

Why cannot a high school student in Atlantic Canada have the opportunity to work in his particular region? Why must he be compelled to go abroad? This particular accord will be the best regional development program that can possibly be sent down the pipe.

One argument that has not been stressed is the economics of trade itself. We have a surplus with the United States in trade alone, but we have a deficit in trade and services. There is an indication that there will be a lessening demand in the United States for our goods. Our deficit in the trade account with the countries of the world is growing. We have a balance of payments problem which is increasing, increasing and increasing.

We can do one of three things. We can lower our standards, devalue the dollar or increase our productivity and our jobs and compete on the open market. I ask the people of Canada if they want to maintain the standard of living to which they are entitled and to which they have become accustomed which will support better social programs, cultural programs and medical programs. The only answer under the circumstances is yes. They want to maintain that which they have. The free trade agreement is the only possible solution.

There is no alternative presented by the Opposition which takes this place and which is so instructive based on history, on all the associations in Canada and by other experiences in the world.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, first, I suggest to the Hon. Minister that he should be aware that Switzerland is not part of the European Economic Community.

Second, I think he should look more carefully at Sweden which does not have the kind of comprehensive trade deal with the European Economic Community which we are proposing to enter into with the United States. In fact, Sweden has been very careful to use sectoral approaches. Swedes stress the industrial sector. As a consequence they have been able to build up a base for themselves which has given them not just successful exports to Europe but successful exports throughout the world. That has been the basis of Swedish prosperity and Swedish social programs. The fact that they have a social democratic Government helped a little bit, too.

As for the British, as I suggested the day that Margaret Thatcher was in the House, it took a particular sort of effrontery for a British Prime Minister to praise this deal at the same time that her Government has performance requirements which it imposes on foreign firms. Those require, for instance, that Japanese companies produce 80 per cent from British goods before they are permitted to operate within that country. We will lose the right to put those kinds of considerations into effect as part of this trade deal.

Mr. McDermid: Against the Japanese you mean?

Mr. Langdon: Against the Japanese.

Mr. McDermid: The trade deal does not allow us to do that with the Japanese?

Mr. Langdon: It does not.

Mr. Gormley: You have not read the trade deal.

Mr. Langdon: If the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister read the trade deal they will find that performance requirements cannot be put in place which would have an effect on trade relations between Canada and the United States. Certainly, performance requirements with respect to Japanese car production in this country would fall directly in that category.

Mr. McDermid: We have already put limits on that.

Mr. Langdon: I have three questions which I would throw at the Minister. The first is this. Does it not make the Minister think, make him pause and consider, that Nova Scotia was, as he said, the fourth largest trading nation in the world when it joined the Canadian Confederation the last time that it adopted free trade as a solution? Ever since then there has been a downward trend relative to the rest of Canada for Nova Scotia. That suggests to me, and I wonder if it does not suggest to the Minister and his constituents, that in fact Nova Scotia will be hurt by this type of second move to free trade just as it was by the first move to free trade.

• (1930)

I would also like to ask the Minister if he is not concerned with the fact that over the next seven years we have to negotiate with the United States an acceptable set of subsidies for both countries. We know that the United States does not support regional development subsidies. In the past it has fought against those subsidies. Therefore, we can expect them, in the seven-year bargaining process, to attempt to get us to get rid of regional subsidies, whether they come directly from Ottawa, or from the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Does that not worry the Minister?

Finally, does the Minister not realize that, in terms of extra jobs and extra economic expansion over the next two years, we could get at least twice as much growth from a 1 per cent decrease in interest rates as it is predicted that we will get from this trade deal? If that is the case, does the Minister not think that there is another approach that we should be taking?

Mr. McInnes: I would be happy to respond, Mr. Speaker, but I find it difficult when the learned spokesman throws these things in the air. What does the Hon. Member rely on in support of any of the allegations that he makes? At least when I was making representation to the House, at least when all my colleagues were, we were not grabbing at something in the air. These were facts that were based on the studies done by all these independent people.

I recognize that some of the trade agreements that I referred to differ from the one in question, but I suggest that they are instructive. We are talking about trade. We are not talking about the nuances. We are talking about the essence. Trading agreements and the history of trade indicate that liberalization as opposed to protectionism is therapeutic. That is what we are talking about. We are not talking about dotting the "i's" and crossing the "t's". We are talking about the essence of the debate.

Mr. Langdon: It did not help Nova Scotia.

Mr. McInnes: The critic for the NDP comes from Ontario. That province has done very well with the Auto Pact, which can be cancelled with one year's notice. Nova Scotia has to send all its lumber and all its fish unprocessed to the United States where it turns it into something else, adds value, and sends it back to us. Why can't we? Why does the Hon. Member deny the opportunity to Nova Scotians and to Atlantic Canadians to have those jobs? What have you got against us? You have done very well in Ontario. Why can we not have the opportunity?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If I am not incorrect, it is not proper to cast aspersions on the motivations of Members who are speaking in the House. Therefore, to suggest that I have anything against Nova Scotia is absolute rubbish. In fact, what we would like to see is sectoral agreements for Nova Scotia that would give the same prosperity that we have enjoyed in Windsor.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. It is debate. The Hon. Minister of Public Works has the floor.

Mr. McInnes: Unfortunately, Atlantic Canadian companies, and a good many companies in Canada, are obliged to put plants in the United States and hire people from the United States in order to have a presence there because they are prohibited from doing the processing and adding the value in Canada. We have had too many adverse experiences of that nature in Nova Scotia. We would like to have that investment at home.

When one talks about investment, if I came from Europe or Sweden and wished to invest in North America where most of the world wants to invest, would I come to Canada, or would I come to the United States? Canada is a better place to live, and there would be little disagreement on that in the House. But I would be more disposed to invest in Canada if I knew that I had guaranteed access to the United States, a market of 250 million and not only 5 million people. Surely that has to be one of the most compelling reasons for securing a free trade agreement—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I regret that I have to cut the Minister off, but time flies when you are having fun.

The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand) has the floor.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, in recent months as I have moved about my constituency and about the country, some individuals have asked me why I am opposed to free trade. They have asked me why my Party and my Leader are opposed to free trade. My answer to them is that we are not opposed to free trade in certain contexts. As a matter of fact, the Liberal Party and Liberal Governments for many years have pursued freer trade through multilateral negotiations, and have been very successful.

Under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, and in particular the Kennedy round of negotiations, the Tokyo round of negotiations, and the more recent Uruguay round of negotiations, Liberal Governments have successfully pursued freer trade. They have pursued freer trade to the extent that we now have in Canada, without this proposed trade agreement with the United States, more than 80 per cent of our trade with the United States without tariffs. The remaining 20 per cent has an average tariff of 5 per cent. That is down from the time after the Second World War when the average tariff between Canada and the United States was about 30 per cent.

Under Liberal Governments we have pursued freer trade, and we are not opposed to freer trade in the international context or in the sectoral context. It was a Liberal Government that negotiated the Auto Pact. That is not a free trade agreement, as suggested by the Hon. Minister who just spoke. It is a managed trade agreement which requires the Americans to invest money in Canada, invest in jobs in Canada, and invest in plants in Canada.

We are not opposed to free trade in certain contexts. What we are opposed to is this particular trade agreement that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has negotiated with the President of the United States. That is what we are opposed to. We ask Canadians to look closely at that agreement and not be misled by labels.

Unfortunately, in discussing this subject, just as they put the question to me asking why I am against free trade, many Canadians confuse theoretical free trade with this proposed agreement that we have before us. Because they are thinking of the free trade that they studied in university or that they read about in economic text books, they presume that because this agreement has the label of free trade it must correspond to what they are thinking about. Well, Mr. Speaker, it does not. This agreement is not a classical free trade agreement. It does not give total assured access to the United States. It contains many things that have no place at all in a free trade agreement. We are asking people not to discuss theoretical free trade. Let us look together at this very complex and particular agreement.

Today we learned, and it was to the astonishment of most of us, that the Minister who is out selling the agreement admits that he has not even read all of the agreement. To me that is a total abdication of responsibility. The Minister's answer to us is that he has read those parts of the agreement that he thought were important. In other words, he left out those parts that he did not think were important.

If any of us who are lawyers or who are familiar with agreements, and are responsible for giving advice on an agreement, simply picked clauses that today we think are important and left out other clauses, we would soon find out in five or ten years that those very parts that we ignored will come back to haunt us. That was a total abdication of responsibility for a Minister in the Cabinet who is responsible for the Bill. He admits that he did not read all parts of the agreement. It is a total abdication of responsibility on his part. How any Prime Minister can continue to have confidence in a Minister in those circumstances is beyond me.

We are saying to Canadians, let's not discuss this in terms of theoretical free trade but let us look at the terms of the agreement. That is why, last week, it was an insult to this Parliament, in my opinion, for the Prime Minister of Britain to come here and tell us that we should have no fear of this particular agreement because, in Britain, they are part of a Common Market, and the Common Market has not threatened or destroyed their culture, their identity, their sovereignty and their way of life, and consequently, if it hasn't done that to Britain, why should we be concerned about this agreement between Canada and the United States?

Well, obviously, the Prime Minister of Great Britain is not very familiar with the agreement either, nor is she familiar with the context in which the agreement takes place. Let us look at the Common Market. The Common Market is a free trade area between—I think it is about 12 countries, now. There are not two of those countries that speak the same language. There is no country in that grouping that dominates any one of the other countries.

You have a number of what I would call middle power countries, such as Britain, France, Italy, and Germany. You have Spain and Portugal, and the smaller countries like Belgium, Holland and Luxembourg.They are in a situation where they can counterbalance each other in their discussions and in their negotiations, where no one language will dominate. The English language is not going to dominate the German language, the German language is not going to dominate the French language. It is quite different, in the context of this proposed agreement. Here we have a bilateral agreement, a proposed bilateral free trade agreement, which is very different from a multilateral free trade agreement, in which you have one country of 250 million people, the strongest military and economic power in the world, in the agreement with a country of 25 million people, that is Canada.

Two-thirds of Canadians speak the same language as the Americans, where there is already a very frequent flow of radio, television, media, magazines, back and forth over the border. The context is not the same at all as the Common Market in Britain, and the Prime Minister of England, when she was here, should have known that and should not have preached to us about what was dangerous and what was not dangerous for us. The context is totally different in the Common Market and it cannot be compared to a bilateral trade agreement with one country of 250 million people and another country of 25 million people.

So, we are opposing this particular trade agreement between Canada and the United States. We are not discussing whether free trade in theory is good or bad. We are opposing this agreement and we ask Canadians to look closely at it. When he was discussing the subject just a few minutes ago, the Hon. Minister from Nova Scotia said that Canadians must have a difficult time in following this debate because Liberals and New Democrats get up and oppose the agreement while Conservatives support the agreement. Certain provinces are supporting it and certain provinces are opposing it.

An Hon. Member: Some Liberals are supporting it, too.

Mr. Allmand: He said that therefore the solution for Canadians is that they look at third parties for the answer. I do not think he meant to mislead the House. He went on to say that all those third-party associations which have analysed this agreement have come out in favour of the agreement. That is totally false.

I was a member of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade that held hearings on the agreement. I would say that 50 per cent of the associations and groups that came before that committee opposed the agreement. They had studied it as much as those who supported it. It is true that the majority of chambers of commerce and manufacturing associations and so on, supported the agreement, but not all, Mr. Speaker. You have in New Brunswick the McCain Industries opposing the agreement; you have the President of the Bank of Nova Scotia opposing the agreement; you have the printing industries opposing the agreement; you have parts of the clothing and textile industries opposing the agreement.

Mr. Speaker, there are groups on both sides of this question, and you cannot simply, unfortunately, rely on chambers of commerce and boards of trade and so on. In this respect, while I am asking Canadians to look at the agreement and not consider this debate or this question in terms of theoretical free trade, I am the first to admit that this is one of the most complex Bills that has ever come before Parliament.

Here we have a Bill which amends 27 pieces of legislation.

An Hon. Member: You haven't read it yet.

Mr. Allmand: When you sit down and try to understand it and you put the elements of the agreement here, the free trade agreement that was finally arrived at in December there, the Bill here, and all the other laws and legislation on the great table in front of you and try to follow it, it is a difficult matter. I admit it is a difficult matter. I am not the Minister responsible. I am not paid, like the Minister for International Trade, to be responsible for the deal. He has not even read it. He has not read it totally through. Because it is so complex, that is why I object to the process that we are going through. The Minister of the Government has said that we will have five days to debate this Bill. Here we have, as I said, a very complex Bill which—

An Hon. Member: On second reading.

Mr. Allmand: I believe that one of the purposes of debate in Parliament is not simply to debate the issue with each other, but I believe that one of its purposes is, by the debate which goes on here, that we inform Canadians about the issues so that they can then take steps themselves to look into the matters that we are discussing. They will not be able to do that if we rush through this in a five-day debate, when, as the Minister admits—and I admit too—this is a complex matter that is not easy to grasp. If we are really going to see the consequences of this deal, it will require some time. It is unwarranted that the Government should try to rush this through so quickly.

Now, why are we opposing this particular deal? I think, in looking at the accord, the proposed free trade agreement, we have to ask, what did we as Canadians get out of it and what have we given up? What did we get and what did we give?

Well, it is true, one of the things we got is the elimination of all tariffs between Canada and the United States over a 10-year period that will start next January 1. But, as I pointed out already, over 80 per cent of our trade is now without any tariffs. So all we are talking about in that 10-year period is the removal of tariffs on the remaining 20 per cent, which tariffs have already been reduced to around an average of 5 per cent. So that is what we will get.

Unfortunately, however, that will not assure us access to the United States market, because the greatest barrier for Canadian business to the United States market in recent years has been countervail and anti-dumping. Now, this is what the Government attempted to deal with in the first place, but it was not successful. Let me illustrate By the way, Mr. Speaker, the cases that are well known to Canadians as providing barriers to Canadian trade in the United States are exactly those, the cases of softwood lumber, shakes and shingles, fish, potash, steel and so on.

Since 1979, Americans have launched 300 countervail cases against Canadian business, and in 70 per cent of those 300 cases, injury was found by the American trade tribunals. This means that the Canadian goods going into the United States, subject to those countervail complaints, had to pay an additional duty because the American tribunal found against them.

In addition, those Canadian businesses that were subjected to the countervail harassment had to engage lawyers and accountants, and it took in many cases, as we were told before the committee, up to one or two years to fight those cases in the United States. As I said, in 70 per cent of the cases Canadians lost.

• (1950)

What we are getting out of the deal is the elimination of tariffs over a 10-year period, but we are not getting rid of countervail and anti-dumping. What did we give up to get this elimination of tariffs on the remaining 20 per cent of our goods and services when we were moving in that direction anyway, Mr. Speaker? We gave the Americans unrestricted access to Canada's energy supplies, something that has no place at all in a trade agreement. That is what the elements of the trade agreement say. It says the United States will be assured of non-discriminatory access to Canadian energy supplies.

Second, we left our agriculture unprotected. Everyone knows that agriculture in Canada is subject to a short growing season, a harsh winter, and the costs of a northern climate, yet Canadian farmers are obliged to compete with farmers in California, Arizona and the southern states where they can grow several crops in a year and do not have to face those costs and conditions.

We have removed our right to impose conditions on investment from the United States. All American companies will be treated as nationals. American firms will be treated exactly the same as Canadian firms. It is true that Canadians firms in the United States were being treated like American firms in the United States will be treated like American firms. The point is that there are approximately 10 times Auto Pact. I would argue that it limits our options in trading with other countries. We gave up all those things in order to get a reduction in tariffs on 20 per cent of our goods and services which we were going to get anyway through the multilateral process, GATT, the Uruguay round and the consequent rounds. What is also interesting is that this Government went to the United States seeking this agreement when we already had a $20 billion trade surplus with the United States. We have a $20 billion trade surplus and yet we go to the U.S. seeking a comprehensive trade agreement. In whose interest is it? We are already selling more to the Americans than they are selling to us. Of course the Americans jump at the agreement and start throwing these conditions at us which I have just described: access to energy, agriculture, putting their financial institutions on the same basis as ours internationally and so on, but we give up these things to get very minimal returns.

This is what we gave up and this is what we have. In the beginning the Government was arguing that the free trade agreement was the Government's way of fulfilling its commitment to Canadians to provides jobs, jobs and jobs.

Mr. Horner: We have already done that.

Mr. Allmand: There were many reports on how many jobs the agreement would give us. Some said we would lose jobs. Some said we would gain jobs. The most recent report from the Economic Council said that in all of Canada there will be a gain on average of 25,000 jobs per year for a 10 year period.

Mr. McDermid: Not bad.

Mr. Allmand: That is very minimal if we consider the record of Canada over the last 10 or 15 years in job creation.

Mr. Gormley: You guys put us down the tubes.

Mr. Allmand: These guys on the other side like to pretend that they are doing a great job with unemployment, yet when the Gallup poll came out last week what did Canadians say was their greatest concern? They said unemployment. Fifty per cent in the Maritimes who said that and 27 per cent said it nationally.

Mr. McDermid: It was 90 per cent when you were in power.

Mr. Allmand: Unfortunately the programs have resulted in a great growth in employment in Ontario where there is a Liberal Government but very little across the country, in Atlantic Canada, Québec and in British Columbia.

Mr. McDermid: The poll was 90 per cent when you Liberals were in power.

Mr. Allmand: I have touched a very sensitive nerve on the other side.

Mr. Horner: The Liberals cannot even decide on Sunday shopping in Ontario.

Mr. Allmand: With respect to this deal, we had the argument put by the Minister when he was speaking that it will encourage foreigners to invest in Canada so they can have access to the American market. Let us see what a prominent West German banker said about that at a conference in December on the trade deal in Montreal. He said that a Canadian-U.S. free trade deal would discourage European investment in Canada—

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Allmand: And a former chief of world-wide loans for the Dresden Bank said that without a free trade deal Europeans are almost forced to invest in Canada to reach the Canadian market, but free trade will allow them to serve Canada from plants in the United States. "I know that is not a friendly argument but it seems to be the truth. If large European firms are given the option of locating a manufacturing plant in either Canada or the United States, they will almost by definition choose the United States", he said "because of such factors as transportation costs, taxation rates, market size and labour laws".

I will close on that note. Why would many Canadian firms stay in Canada when they can go to the United States closer to larger markets and still have total access to the Canadian market? That is what several prominent Canadian businessmen said to us, such as McCain's in New Brunswick—

Mr. McDermid: The biggest Grit in New Brunswick.

Mr. Allmand: —such as the President of Quaker Oats and several others who have looked closely at the deal.

Mr. McDermid: All Grits.

Mr. Allmand: This is a bad deal and I encourage Canadians to look closer and not confuse it with theoretical free trade.

An Hon. Member: Donald Macdonald is the only smart Liberal you have.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, there was so much in that speech that was wrong it is difficult to get to it all.

I will start with this nonsense that the Liberals are spreading around the country that we have only five days to debate this Bill. That is what they are telling everybody. First, on second reading we will, with extended hours, have about two weeks, 10 days of debate. Then the Bill goes to committee where witnesses appear and where the Bill can be examined clause by clause. The Bill will be in committee for a few weeks and then it will come back to the House for report stage and third reading. This nonsense about telling Canadians there are only five days of debate on the Bill is totally wrong. The Hon. Member should not be saying those things.

Second, the Liberals say we should have been exempted from the American trade laws. That is what the Liberal Leader goes around the country saying. What he does not say and never has is whether he was prepared to exempt the Americans from Canadian trade law. The answer is, of course, no.

That is not what we were negotiating at all. The Hon. Member is spreading something around the country that is absolutely wrong.

Third, the Member said the safeguards were taken out of the Auto Pact. That is not true. The safeguards for Canadian content are still there. There is still a provision for maintaining that 60 per cent Canadian content for those companies in the Auto Pact. We have gone a step further. We have said that the non-Auto Pact companies must, if they want duty-free access, have 50 per cent North American content if they want to get rid of their 9.2 per cent tariff. That is a true North American content—parts and labour. It does not take into consideration all the other things.

One final point, the Hon. Member kind of ridicules the point that we will have 25,000 new jobs created because of this deal over and above the normal job creation capacity in Canada.

Mr. Horner: Each year for 10 years.

Mr. McDermid: Here are where the jobs will be created. On the Prairies 50,900 new jobs; in Atlantic Canada 17,700 new jobs; in British Columbia 28,900 new jobs; in Quebec, the province the Member represents, 58,100 new jobs; and in Ontario where I come from there will be 94,900 new jobs. Those are jobs over and above the job creation capacity that we have seen in this country, and the Hon. Member ridicules that. He thinks it is terrible that the Maritimes should get 17,000 new jobs because of the free trade agreement. How can the Member stand there and tell those falsehoods to Canadians when he knows full well that the agreement will be of benefit to his province, to my province and to all of Canada?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the remarks of the Hon. Member were parliamentary. He accuses me of falsehoods. I think Canadians will make a judgment on that. I stand by everything I said.

With respect to the questions he asked me, I will try to deal with them. All I know is that when the debate started, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) proposed that we have five days of debate on second reading.

Mr. McDermid: On second reading. You did not say that.

• (2000)

Mr. Allmand: I think that is totally unacceptable. If the Government is changing its point of view and we will have more than five days, that is great. I can remember very well that when the Conservative Party was the Opposition, we took six months to debate Bills of less importance than this.

I can recall very well the debate on the Bill that changed the Crow's Nest Pass rates and the debate on the bill on the National Energy Program. The Conservatives rang the bells night and day for 10 days and then stormed the Chair. If the Government is moderating its position and we will have a reasonable debate, that is fine and that is a change that is welcome.

I did not argue that we should have an exemption from U.S. trade laws. I said that when this Government started the negotiations with the United States, that was one of its objectives. The Government was not able to get that.

It is true, I agree with the Hon. Member that if they give it up, of course we have to give it up too. However, the point is that we in this Party do not believe that it is possible to have a bilateral comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States that is fair for Canada. We think we can negotiate sectoral agreements with the United States, we can negotiate the lowering of tariffs on both sides, we can approach negotiations with the United States in a multilateral forum with allies around the table with us against the United States. However, we do not think that we can get a fair deal for Canada in a comprehensive bilateral deal with the United States.

We are not against joining a trading arrangement, but we do not want a one-on-one, comprehensive trading arrangement with the United States because, with their 10-to-1 odds, we will lose.

Mr. McDermid: Come on, tell Ben Johnson that.

Mr. Allmand: Two hundred and fifty million Americans to 25 million.

Mr. Horner: That's 10 to one.

Mr. Allmand: They are howling over there. I sat here all day listening to their speeches. Obviously they are upset by these kinds of arguments.

Our population is 25 million, the United States' is 250 million. This is an arrangement that is completely and totally different from the Common Market and the Auto Pact. It does not compare and they know it.

The Hon. Member says that there is nothing in this arrangement which weakens the safeguards in the Auto Pact. We say that there is. Not only that but a lot of experts who deal with the Auto Pact say that there is as well.

Mr. McDermid: Who, Bob White?

Mr. Allmand: Yes, Bob White. Bob White knows more about the Auto Pact than anyone sitting over on that side. By the way, the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) admitted in Montreal yesterday that not only had he not read all of the free trade deal with the United States but he said he had never read the Auto Pact. I doubt that any of these people have. I know that our people from Windsor and from the automobile areas have, and they believe along with Bob White that this deal does weaken the safeguards.

The final question was with respect to jobs. By the way, the job creation to which he referred was job creation over a 10-year period, not over a one-year period. He mentioned jobs to be created in the West and in Québec, but the key thing is what kind of jobs.

The Economic Council report which is the basis of this discussion admits that jobs will be lost in the manufacturing and industrial sectors to be replaced by jobs in the service sectors. It says that most of the jobs to be created by the free trade agreement will be service jobs. This means that permanent, well paying industrial jobs will be replaced for the most part by low paying, non-unionized part-time jobs, and there is no comparison between the two of them. Canadians know that and that is why Canadians say that their biggest concern is still unemployment. This Government has not dealt with that concern.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I realize that time is short. I have two brief questions for the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East (Mr. Allmand).

The Hon. Member began his speech with the phoney Liberal argument that we keep on hearing about focusing on world trade, not just dealing with sectoral trade with the United States. Our Party believes that indeed, the free trade agreement with the U.S. is a good beginning. It is not exclusive. It does not shut out other countries. Indeed, it will grow into world trade agreements.

If the Liberals believe that world trade is that important, first, what kind of signal is the Hon. Member's leader sending to the leaders of other nations on this planet when he states that the agreement will be torn up? We do live in a very small global community. What kind of signal are other world leaders to take from that?

Second, if the Liberal Party is so concerned about trading with the world, why did it react the way it did when a world leader, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, spoke to this Chamber about world trade? Liberal Members should have been listening to that speech to find out more about what she and her country, the European Community and other nations around the world, not just the U.S., had to say about what they saw working in the world trade environment.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, we have said that we favour lowering trade barriers through the international multilateral context, i.e., through GATT and various rounds. The Uruguay Round is now under way and Liberal Governments have been successful in doing that. Even the Government admits that there are no tariffs now between the United States and Canada on over 80 per cent of trade. That was accomplished through that multilateral negotiation. In addition, we believe in sectoral approaches to trade with the United States. We do not agree with the comprehensive bilateral trade agreement such as was negotiated by the Government.

When we say that we will tear up the agreement, we mean that we will terminate the agreement when we come to power. We will have to terminate it within the law, but we will do that. I do not see why that sends a negative signal to the rest of the world. We are saying that we as the Government of a sovereign country do not believe that this is a good agreement for Canada. Our leader has said that while we will tear up this agreement with the United States, we will not terminate our friendly relations with the United States. As a matter of fact, we will continue to pursue, as we always have as a Liberal Government, action to lower trade barriers between Canada and the United States, but in the right context, not in the one used by this Government.

The Hon. Member also said that we should have listened to the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom when she was here the other day. What was wrong with the remarks of the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom was that she pretended to tell us what is good for us as Canadians. She should have known that she was speaking to a Parliament that was deeply divided on these questions and that she was the guest not of the Government of Canada but of the Parliament of Canada. She made a very critical error when she tried to compare this proposed trade agreement between Canada and the United States with the Common Market. I dealt with that at great length in my remarks.

As I said, there is no comparison between the 12 member Common Market with all the countries speaking different languages and with no dominant nation and a bilateral arrangement between Canada and the United States with the United States dominating in economic and other powers and with the language between Canada and the United States being for the most part English. That is a very different type of relationship.

We had nothing to learn from the Prime Minister of the United Kingdom and she told us nothing of value. It is obvious that she and her Conservative friends, Ronald Reagan and Brian Mulroney, decided to get together to sell us this bag of bones which they call a good trade agreement.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a privilege to be able to participate in this debate. In fact, it is something I have really been looking forward to ever since September 26, several years ago, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced that we would start to enter into negotiations to see if we could have a free trade agreement with the United States.

This agreement really talks about the future. I would like to spend the few minutes that I have this evening talking about that future under free trade in British Columbia. British Columbia looks forward to this trade agreement with a great deal of optimism. It is a reflection of the sense of self-confidence that I think most mature British Columbians have.

I want to start by sharing with my colleagues an interesting example of how young people in my riding have approached the debate on the free trade agreement. They recognize this agreement was really made for them. It will obviously have an impact on the kind of future they will enjoy. At Handsworth Secondary School in North Vancouver, in my constituency, a very enlightened teacher, Jim Adams, brought together a group of 15 students who formed the Capilano Free Trade Group. This was last October.

Since that time they have spent hundreds of hours studying and discussing the free trade agreement, as well as meeting with people. I of course had the opportunity to meet with them several times. They attended seminars. They met with Mel Hurtig. They met with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) from the opposition benches. They met with Simon Reisman when he was in Vancouver for a considerable period of time. They presented a brief to the parliamentary committee when we were there discussing the agreement last fall.

They also undertook a survey, a terrific learning experience, and visited 600 households with a quite detailed questionnaire, to determine people's attitudes to and knowledge of the free trade agreement. Finally, they put it all together in a report and it was finished just last month. Fortunately the Prime Minister was in Vancouver at that time and I had the opportunity of having him presented with the report by the students who had written it. That was certainly the highlight of an exciting time.

Here is a group of 16 and 17-year olds who spent all this time on this project and I thought it would be interesting to share with you some of their thoughts. Certainly it instils in me a great sense of confidence when our young people are so thoughtful.

They started off looking, of course, at the free trade agreement in particular and its impact on British Columbia, their home province, and B.C. industries. It is quite an extensive report and I quote:

> It has been stated that the FTA will create both winners and losers, and B.C. industries are no exception. The number of winners, however, should far exceed those adversely affected by the deal. This is due to the fact that much of B.C. industry is resource-based, and these commodities will find their demand increasing with the opening of the U.S. market.

They went on and talked about the energy sector. During this debate and during Question Period over the last little while we have heard much about the energy component of the agreement. If we listen to the Opposition, it sounds as though there is some requirement to suddenly export all our energy to the U.S. This group of young people looked at the agreement and here are their comments about the energy sector:

> The energy sector of British Columbia should gain much from the FTA. This province's non-renewable resources, such as coal and natural gas, will not be jeopardized. In times of shortage, export restrictions can be imposed, thereby protecting our resources. However, a portion of this commodity is still accessible to the U.S.
> A certain portion of B.C.'s supply is available, discriminatory pricing will be dropped on renewable energy forms. No longer can B.C. sell Hydro-Electric power at a higher rate than it charges Canadian consumers. There is much reason for optimism in B.C.'s energy sector, particularly in the export of Hydro-Electric power. The development of super conductors can only increase the potential in this field for B.C.
> A fear expressed by some British Columbians is that through the implementation of the FTA, B.C. will become part of a continental energy policy. The FTA does not force either party to buy or sell energy, which should ensure we will not be drawn into such a program.

They go on and look at some areas like the wine industry where adjustments will obviously be required. They then do their assessment of the 600 households. I found that particularly interesting since they are constituents of mine. The majority, 65 per cent, felt that the economy will benefit from free trade. They expect no change in food prices. I think that is probably erroneous. We will see some reduction in some food prices. Some 65 per cent of the people surveyed feel an election is necessary and more than 65 per cent said they would vote for free trade in the event of an election. I think that is pretty typical of Canadians right across this country.

Then they talk about the politics of free trade. I think we all should listen to the words of these young people. They said:

> The issue of Free Trade has become a complex process of speculation. The Canadian public is being presented with two drastically contrasting points of view. It is difficult for the average citizen to determine the realistic implications of Free Trade as long as these two contradictions exist. This economic issue has become the object of politics and is being manipulated in the interests of gaining public favour.
>
> Two visions are appearing: one for the Government and the other from FTA opposers. A citizen's opinion on this issue is simply becoming a question of who to believe. Attitude towards free trade are being clouded by directly opposite

"facts". The public must recognize that many of the positions on this deal are based on pure speculation.

It is our feeling that many emotional issues have been raised unnecessarily in regard to Free Trade. Many special interest groups are appealing to deep-set Canadian fears about sovereignty and American domination.

Free Trade has not been given the opportunity to be evaluated as an economic issue. It is being exploited by politicians in order to further personal goals. The results of our upcoming election will be greatly influenced by Canada's attitude about the FTA. So little is known about it that the election may be a reflection of Canadian fears.

I certainly hope not. In their conclusion we have again an interesting perspective on Canada:

Canada has often looked to a stronger nation for guidance. As a colony, it followed the British Empire. As an independent nation, it has lived in an American shadow. The Canadian attitude frequently reflects a feeling of inferiority. Many Canadians underrate their abilities in the global economy. This outlook is damaging to our confidence and patriotism.

Canada is in an ideal position for the future. It has a wealth of under-developed potential in all aspects of the economy. In the growing competitiveness of the world market, insecurities can hinder a nation's ability to progress. Similarly in Free Trade, Canada's inferiority complex may become a threat to the deal's success. Our society must recognize that we are contributing to the FTA as an equal, if not greater, level than the U.S.

I would say these young people have the situation pretty well addressed. In fact, the kinds of comments they make about fear and emotionalism are reflected in the speeches we heard today and we hear on public platforms from the opposition Parties, the Liberals and the NDP, who are trying to inflame those emotions. However, I am sure Hon. Members will agree that we have here young people who are able to see through that kind of false emotionalism. They have a sense of confidence about themselves and this country, which is what this free trade agreement is all about. It is based on and built on a growing sense of Canada's confidence in being able to compete both with the U.S. and around the world.

Mr. Schellenberg: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. We have heard a great deal of talk over the past few days about the need for debate on this issue. I wonder if the Speaker could determine why there are no opposition Members here to listen to the debate this evening?

Mr. Crosbie: Neither Liberal nor NDP.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Edwards): I regret that is not a point of order.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for bringing forward a very interesting observation. Perhaps they are not interested in what young people in British Columbia think about the free trade agreement.

• (2020)

We negotiated this agreement with a vision of a bigger and bolder Canadian attitude, a Canada of the 21st century. The Opposition, on the other hand, is mired in the past. Their politics is based on what Canada was in the late sixties, not what it is today. To use a phrase of one of our own great philosophers, Marshall McLuhan, they live in a rear-view mirror.

As a British Columbian I am particularly proud of the opportunities which this agreement provides for my province. All sorts of studies have been done. We have heard quite a bit about the report of the Economic Council of Canada which, as we have just heard, forecasts 28,900 new jobs in British Columbia as a result of free trade. We all know that the agreement itself does not create the jobs but creates the opportunity for individual business people to create those jobs as a result of new activities. In percentage terms the council concludes that employment growth in British Columbia will be 1.8 per cent.

Recently the Province of British Columbia did its own review of the agreement. Some of the material used was drawn from another report done by the Canada West Foundation which studied the implications of the free trade agreement on all the western provinces. That report concluded as well that the implications for B.C. were extremely positive. It indicated that the sectors directly benefiting from the free trade agreement account for 18 per cent of output compared to only 2.4 per cent of industries which might be adversely affected by the free trade agreement. That is pretty good news.

That has been broken down by regions within the province. In Vancouver and on Vancouver Island the positive effect will be with respect to 14 per cent of our industrial activity. It is very interesting to note that the highest percentage is in Prince Rupert, an area where there has been higher than ordinary levels of unemployment. The report indicates that 28 per cent of the economic activity in that area will be positively impacted by the free trade agreement.

The conclusion of the report of the Province of B.C., which has just come out, is that B.C.'s gross domestic product, in other words the value of goods and services produced by the province, is expected to increase by about 2.5 per cent, the highest in Canada. This is one time when B.C. is going to get more than its share, but that is okay, we will take it. That is very good news indeed. As the Premier said, this will mean more jobs, better jobs and more secure jobs. That is what we want for ourselves and our future.

I would like to take a few minutes to go through some of the particular areas of the British Columbia economy and how the free trade agreement will impact upon them. Forestry is, of course, our major industry in British Columbia. This study indicates:

The British Columbia forestry industry views the Agreement as a vital means of maintaining and expanding exports to U.S. markets. Most areas of the forest industry are confident about their ability to compete with the Americans. The elimination of tariffs will result in increased opportunities for the expansion of existing product lines and the development of new lines.

It is not only the Government or I saying this. Listen to what citizens involved in these fields have to say. John Howard, senior vice-president, law and corporate affairs at MacMillan Bloedel said:

> The removal of tariffs is a tremendous incentive to us to produce value-added products.

If there is one thing which we in British Columbia have really wanted to get going it is adding value to our forest products. We are not just exporting lumber, we are making windows, door sashes, and other wood products. With the elimination of value-added there will be these new opportunities.

Many of my colleagues know Mike Apsey, president of the Council of Forest Industries in British Columbia. With regard to the free trade agreement he said:

> Our lumber industry has been significantly more efficient than our competitors in the U.S. Their efforts to restrict our access have resulted in actions that effectively penalize us for being "too" efficient. Under a Free Trade Agreement, both countries would agree to test the limits of their comparative advantages. This should work to our industry's and this province's benefit if this Agreement is approved.

Therefore, the forest industry will benefit.

With regard to the energy sector, I have already shared the views of the students from Handsworth. Bob Kadlec, president and CEO of Inland Natural Gas, a good constituent of mine says:

> With the elimination of tariffs on natural gas, Canadian producers will be on an equal footing with their American competitors. The overwhelming Canadian advantage in the reserves-to-production ratio will automatically draw U.S. buyers of energy to Canada. More important, we will be viewed as a secure source of natural gas, which will translate into firm, long-term contracts.

Mining is a major industry in the Province of British Columbia. British Columbia has indicated that the free trade agreement will generate a positive environment for investment growth and for exploration activity. Tom Waterland, president and CEO of the Mining Association of British Columbia, says:

> The principles of freer trade in goods and services, enshrined in the Free Trade Agreement, provide a sound basis for improving trade between our two countries and worldwide . . . Specifically, the removal of tariffs, the temporary entry for business people, the removal of any discrimination between U.S. and Canadian suppliers of service, the investment provisions, and the disputes resolution mechanism, all provide potential tangible benefits to the mining industry of British Columbia.

In British Columbia we are trying to get a number of new manufacturing areas going including electronics, subsea, and aerospace. We recognize that there will be new opportunities created in all of these areas as a result of the free trade agreement. It will help the people involved in those fields as well.

Printing is an interesting area. I had thought that the printers may have problems with the free trade agreement. That is not true in British Columbia. In general printers in British Columbia are looking forward to operating under the agreement or are unconcerned. One interesting positive example is that the U.S. prohibition on the importation of lottery tickets will be removed providing an important market for British Columbia printers. That is something of which I am sure many of my colleagues were not even aware.

This report goes on and on. It talks about agriculture and fisheries and points out all of the advantages and some of the areas in which adjustments will be required. I would like to complete this sketchy review by referring to services. We know that, for the first time, in the Canada-U.S. free trade agreement services have been provided for. This is something which people have been tiptoeing around at the international level under GATT. This agreement is going to provide a prototype for the whole world. We in British Columbia view that as being extremely positive.

Mr. George McGough, president and CEO of Prudential-Bache Securities Canada Ltd. said:

> Prudential-Bache Securities Canada Ltd. believes that the future is bright for both Canada and the United States. The symbiosis and competition that have developed over the years between these two neighbors will be enhanced by Free Trade.

Jennie Ambrose of the Institute of Management Consultants said:

> We feel very strongly that free trade will benefit our profession in British Columbia. It will open the border for our members to compete in the increased market in Washington, Oregon and California, and we certainly believe we can compete.

That is the attitude we have in British Columbia. The Association of Consulting Engineers of Canada, a very important group said:

> The Association strongly supports and welcomes the bilateral agreement reached, as it removes serious impediments to the movement of business persons/professionals working in an already highly integrated business and scientific context. This will be reinforced with the application of national treatment and right of establishment principles.

In all those fields there is the potential of investment. We heard some opposition Members pooh poohing that idea. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I have talked to people in British Columbia who are already planning and waiting for the final legislation to go through to bring in investment in some very interesting fields. One I heard of recently is in clothing manufacturing. These people are going to be producing clothing in British Columbia for export to the United States. We have had a number of examples of other investment moneys coming in from Asia and Europe. We all know, of course, that British Columbia is a wonderful place to locate. We have highly skilled people and a wonderful climate, and we are really looking forward to some of that kind of potential being developed in British Columbia.

• (2030)

The time has gone far too fast. I have many different areas I want to talk about such as the wonderful opportunities this agreement will provide to women. However, I will have to conclude by saying that something that has bothered me throughout this debate is that one of my fellow Members of Parliament from British Columbia, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), has said he is going to tear up the free trade agreement. I really find that hard to understand. How can he really have the best interests of British Columbia at heart? I would hope that he feels he represents British Columbia. I would like to ask him to think about British Columbians and the future of British Columbia and how important this free trade agreement is to us as a province. It is important to my children and the children of my constituents because of the opportunities that it will create for them all.

This agreement provides a vision for the future, a vision of confidence, a vision I hope my colleagues understand. It is certainly understood by the students at Handsworth School.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my colleague from British Columbia on her excellent speech on free trade. In fact, she convinced me of its many benefits for our home province. I noticed that when she began there were no Members from the Liberal or New Democratic Parties here. We now have a couple and I am sure she has convinced them as well of the benefits of the free trade pact.

The Hon. Member touched briefly on the benefits to the fishing industry. Indeed, from any American fisherman you talk to or from any American fishing journal you read, you find out they feel their Government, the U.S. Government, has sold out their industry to the Canadians. So, obviously, it is of benefit to Canadian fishermen. It is no longer a matter of simply exporting raw fish, but getting into packaged fish products which are so popular with the yuppie market in that U.S. market of 250 million persons.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member about the forest industry. In the brief time we have been here, over the past three or four years, we have seen several countervailing duties imposed by the Americans on B.C. forest products in particular. We know how that has hurt us. Can the Hon. Member tell this House what the free trade agreement will mean to the B.C. forest industry. Will it prevent this kind of measure by the Americans in future? Will it have any effect on the countervailing duties we have experienced by a very protectionist American industry over the past few years?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the comments of my colleague from Nanaimo—Alberni. I know of his strong interests in the issues of British Columbia, and the fishing *i*ndustry and forest industries which he so well represents.

Certainly one of the real problems the forest industry faced, and I mentioned this in my speech, is the fact that the Americans brought forward these actions against shakes and shingles and then against softwood lumber. That really was because we in British Columbia had become more competitive. We had large investments in new plants during the 1980s, after the recession. There were very forward looking people in the forest industry. Obviously, some of our friends south of the border did not really like that. They tried to find some way of saying these things were unfair and were successful. One of the important aspects of the free trade agreement, and I talked to my constituents about this, is to provide secure access to American markets to get rid of those activities coming out of left field. That is where the dispute settling mechanism is going to be so important.

Something that has never before been provided for in such an agreement is a fair mechanism. There will be representatives from both countries who will be able to rule on whether or not a certain activity is unjustified or unfair trade or anti-dumping. We will not be subject to the political whims of the Americans. I think one of the biggest concerns was that there was this tide of protectionism that had been rising up in the United States because of its trade deficit. They were trying to blame others for it and we were kind of close by and got hit in that crossfire, I think, unfairly.

With the free trade agreement, we will have a fair way in which to assess those kinds of disputes. That is not to say there will not be disputes. I am sure that between any trading partners there could be times when an industry either on our side of the border or on the American side might try something that was unfair. We would still have our laws in place to deal with those things but they would be subject to the final ruling of the independent dispute settling mechanism.

Of course, as my colleague well knows, part of the free trade agreement provides that during the next five to seven years, both sides will be sitting down to discuss and try to determine if they can come to an agreement as to what subsidies are all about. That is important as well. However, because we were not able to get a final agreement on that during this part of the agreement, we have what I think is perhaps even more important, that is, the independent dispute settling mechanism. Certainly, for the forest industry in British Columbia that is very important.

The agreement excludes the softwood lumber memorandum from its provisions because that was in place previously. As we all know the 15 per cent export tax in British Columbia has already been done away with because the Province of British Columbia has put in place a new regime to deal with how it charges for timber. Of course, it is not too long before the tax on shakes and shingles will be done away with. So we would hope in the future we will not be subject to those kinds of intrusions.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to, first, congratulate the Hon. Member on a very fine speech. I would also ask her if she knew that those people in the United States who are familiar with trade law say that if the dispute settlement mechanism had been in place when the softwood lumber case was heard, a different result would have occurred? In fact, what we are talking about in the free trade agreement is not the law itself but the way the law is applied, that the rule of lobbies seemed to take precedence in the United States as opposed to the rule of law. I wonder if the Hon. Member had heard that and could she tell us if the dispute settlement mechanism finds favour in her province as a way of settling these trade disputes that we have with our largest trading partner?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, it certainly has been said many times by people in the forest industry that had this agreement been in place we would not have had the problem. We would not have been hit by that 15 per cent export tax. It might have been something else, but it would not have been at that level. In fact, in the report I have been quoting from so generously this evening, which was published by the Government of British Columbia, it states, and for the edification of my colleagues I will read it:

> Although U.S. trade remedy statutes were unchanged from a previous decision that ruled in Canada's favour, political pressures influenced the manner in which they were interpreted by the U.S. Department of Commerce, and the legal conclusions did change. Had the dispute settlement mechanism envisioned in the FTA already been in place, the softwood lumber case would probably not have evolved as it did. Under such a mechanism, Canada would have had the opportunity to present its case before an impartial binational trade dispute tribunal, where the interpretation of trade laws would be consistent.

The one thing that we want to ensure is that there is consistency in the interpretation. I agree with my colleague on that point.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina West): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to take part in the debate on this legislation. May I say at the outset, as has been said before over many months, the issue is not free trade, the issue is this particular agreement.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to clarify that the Hon. Member started his speech at 8.41 p.m. and that he has 20 minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there any problem with that? The Hon. Member has 20 minutes, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. Langdon: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benjamin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, the issue is not free trade, the issue is this particular deal and the terms in it. Free trade, like motherhood, is supported by everybody. Everybody has always supported free trade, at least since the end of the Second World War.

I want to say at the outset that for 30 years, starting around 1950-51, Canada and the United States, and Canada and a number of other countries, either bilaterally or under the GATT negotiated a continuous reduction in tariffs and duties on commodity after commodity. When we arrived at the beginning of negotiations and discussions with respect to this particular deal, as has been said by Members from all sides, some 80 per cent of our trade with the United States was free of tariffs, duties, et cetera. That is to say that there are no tariffs on 80 per cent of the products traded between our two countries. We arrived at that point through countless hours, days, weeks and months of discussion and negotiation, through mutual agreement both bilaterally and under the GATT. During that whole process and up and to this date the United States maintained and imposed its authority and its powers to impose countervails, embargoes or limits on quantities of commodities moving across our border.

In order to make the remaining 20 per cent of our total trade free of tariffs and duties, the Government decided that rather than take another five or ten years to complete bilateral agreements, commodity by commodity, and to eliminate remaining tariffs and duties, it would try to do it all in one fell swoop.

Mr. Schellenberg: Over 10 years.

Mr. Benjamin: This agreement takes effect next January 1, if and when it passes this House, and if and when this Government is returned to power. In order for the Government to get to that last 20 per cent, it proceeded to make all kinds of concessions, something which it did not need to do. If it was that good a deal for the United States as well as for Canada, then why did the Government have to give away the store?

The Government should have learned from history that even when we had an agreement with the United States on a host of commodities that from time to time the Americans would impose countervails, special duties, embargoes or even at the odd point in time shut the border down completely. That was done when we had an agreement, when there were no duties and no tariffs on particular commodities. I do not know whether a brick wall has to fall on the Minister and his colleagues before that lesson sinks in. That was true with respect to products such as salt, fresh fish, hogs, hog carcasses, lumber products and even raspberries. It is about time that we gave this Government and its confrères across the border the raspberry.

However, in case after case the United States exercised its constitutional right within its own borders to limit imports, reimpose duties or even total embargoes. Even with this Canada-U.S. deal the U.S. administration, the United States Senate and House of Representatives, as well as individual states, will continue to retain their constitutional authority to continue to implement whenever they see fit a countervail, a tariff, a restriction or quota on imports from Canada even to the point of a total embargo. We have been through this before when we had agreements with the Americans.

I think of a classic case as it affected Manitoba, Saskatchewan and a small part of Alberta. I refer to the importation of hogs from Canada into the United States. There was free trade. There were no tariffs. It was done by agreement. The United States administration did not object. The U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives did not object. However, six individual states embargoed completely the importation of hogs and hog carcasses from Manitoba and Saskatchewan. We had a deal. We had an agreement. However, under the American Constitution individual states have the constitutional authority to do this no matter what. In fact, they used the excuse that it was for medical reasons with respect to the contents of the feed that we were giving those hogs.

The House needs to be reminded, and in particular my colleagues opposite, that in order to get the fast-track approval from the U.S. Congress President Reagan wrote Senator Packwood, I believe it was, who is Chairman of the appropriate U.S. Senate committee. In the course of his requesting a fast-track agreement for the concluding of a free trade deal with Canada, the United States President gave his assurance that no matter what the agreement stated, the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives under the Constitution of the United States would continue to retain their constitutional authority no matter what the free trade deal said. Nothing has changed and nothing will have changed if, as, and when this is passed; if, as, or when this is implemented.

• (2050)

Mr. Schellenberg: There is the dispute settlement mechanism.

Mr. Benjamin: I am glad my colleague mentioned the dispute settlement mechanism. I know this Minister and his predecessors laboured long, as did Mr. Reisman, and all the other officials to get an effective, enforceable dispute settlement mechanism.

Mr. Gormley: And they got it.

Mr. Benjamin: We did not get it. The mechanism, the number of bodies on it, even if there are equal numbers in the United States and Canada, can only report, they cannot enforce. They can rule and report that there has been a violation by one country or another, or by one company or another in one country or another. But they can only decide and they can only report. They have no authority whatsoever to require or to enforce.

Mr. McDermid: Who said so?

Mr. Benjamin: Show me somewhere where they can enforce the dispute settlement mechanism.

Mr. McDermid: Read the agreement, Les.

Mr. Benjamin: I challenge you to tell me and show me where the dispute mechanism gives them the authority to enforce.

We have had this occur to us many times. I am not condemning the United States. It is not about to give up its constitutional authorities at whatever level of government. But I did not ask, don't expect, or want Canada to do that either. We have learned from bitter experience in a host of commodities on numerous occasions that sometimes when one level of government in a country gives its word, it turns out that its word is no good because another level of government refuses to live up to it. We have been through that with our friends to the south before.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Benjamin: You do not have a point of order. The Hon. Member can interrupt me when it comes to questions and comments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade (Mr. McDermid).

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member challenged me to show him where in the agreement it stated that it shall be binding. I would like the Hon. Member to look at page 275 of the agreement under Article 1904, paragraph 9, which states:

> The decision of a panel under this Article shall be binding on the Parties with respect to the particular matter between the Parties that is before the panel.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin).

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friend has just proven my point. It states that it "shall be binding". Binding upon whom?

Mr. McDermid: Both parties.

Mr. Benjamin: We have checked with some pretty astute legal minds—

Mr. Gormley: Shirley Carr, Bob White? Who else?

An Hon. Member: You guys don't have astute legal minds, come on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): This has been a very exciting debate today. I do want to listen to the wisdom of the Hon. Member for Regina West. The Hon. Member for Regina West.

Mr. Benjamin: My hon. friends opposite were not listening. President Reagan's letter to the U.S. Congress before this fracas even started assured them that the Congress of the United States, the Senate, and the House of Representatives shall retain their constitutional authority to do as they have done before on many other treaties.

Mr. McDermid: You don't trust them, Les?

Mr. Benjamin: You are darned right I do not. We have been a dozen times bitten and we are 24 times shy.

It states in the agreement that it "shall be binding". There is nothing that states that it will be enforced. There is nothing that states the U.S. Senate or the House of Representatives cannot overrule that provision. The fact of the matter is that they can and they will. The acute naiveté of my hon. friends opposite, if they think that, all of a sudden, overnight, the Americans, with the tens of billions of dollars of trade deficits that they have, will hold still for Canada to take an even larger share of their markets, then these people are dreaming in Technicolor.

Another thing that is conveniently overlooked when talking about subsidies is that nobody will say what is a subsidy either on this side of the border or the other, but the United States has many definitions of what is a subsidy. It told us in no uncertain terms a long time ago that unemployment insurance for fishermen was a form of subsidy.

Mr. McDermid: No.

Mr. Benjamin: They made that point very clear several years ago.

Mr. McDermid: Didn't even hear a case.

Mr. Benjamin: If my hon. friend would keep his mouth shut and ears open, he would get the point. They have made it clear that they do not like our regional development programs. They have made it clear that they do not like our regional transportation subsidy programs. They have made it clear that they do not even like the one introduced recently by the New Democratic Government in the Yukon. When they talk about subsidies, and they talk about a level playing field, and when my friends opposite talk about free market forces, free access, and guaranteed access, they seem to forget that the other guy has got the ball on our ten-yard line on that level playing field.

Let me illustrate. There are some 11 states in the southern United States that are called right-to-work states. They have no unions, or very few, if any, and no minimum wage. We have a marvellous poultry producer in Saskatchewan at Wynyard who produces and sells the best roasting and frying chickens anyone could want anywhere.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): What about the ones in Manitoba?

• (2100)

Mr. Benjamin: I will be fair to my hon. friend. They are as good as the ones in Manitoba. He has been selling them to supermarkets in Regina and Saskatoon. Some went into Brandon and Winnipeg, also, Calgary, Edmonton. He has a really good, efficient operation.

An Hon. Member: That is all the NDP speaks about, this guy—

Mr. Benjamin: He pays more than the minimum wage. In the Super Value store in Regina, where his roasting chickens are on sale, lo and behold, back last March there were some other chickens there for sale. Where are they from? From Georgia.

An Hon. Member: That is a long way to fly. That is a long flight.

Mr. Benjamin: Wynyard is 200 miles from Regina. Georgia is at least 2,000 miles. What do they pay in Georgia? No better, and usually less than $1.65 an hour.

An Hon. Member: How many guys do you have working on the chicken ranch?

Mr. Benjamin: That is not free enterprise, it is not fair enterprise, it is not fair competition. What this Tory Government expects Canadians to do is to take less than they presently have.

An Hon. Member: The quotas are still on the chickens.

Mr. Benjamin: The other little item that they conveniently forget is that the several dozen U.S. multinational corporations which manufacture just south of the Rio Grande River, on the border of the U.S. and Mexico, they pay Mexicans 65 cents an hour.

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Benjamin: Good old free enterprise, good old competition. The American Government classifies those products, General Electric automotive parts, electronics, as made in the U.S. of A.

An Hon. Member: Covered in the agreement.

Mr. Benjamin: They will come under this agreement. I will be glad to buy—

An Hon. Member: Read the agreement.

Mr. Benjamin: I will be glad to buy my hon. friends a keg of nails if that does not turn out to be true.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the Hon. Member is within the debate so we can get to questions and comments.

Mr. Benjamin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Surely this appeal by this Government to mediocrity in order to get bigger bucks for some multinational corporations is not going to satisfy most average Canadians, and is not going to satisfy Canadian-owned and Canadian-located manufacturers and processors in Canada who do not have, under this agreement, and will not have, what is called a level playing field. They will continue to operate at the whim of the U.S. Congress. They will continue to operate against unfair competition in terms of wages, working conditions and social programs under this deal. We want no part of it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member from the Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Gormley).

Mr. Gormley: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question to ask the Member. As a Saskatchewan Member as well, I listened with a great deal of interest to his comments on the agreement. There are two very interesting emerging themes in NDP speeches around Canada on the subject. I have heard them in Saskatchewan. When I debated this issue with Saskatchewan NDP people, they continued to deal with it. One is a rather specious point which has already been debunked by the Parliamentary Secretary. The second is the question of third country production, and this famous strip along Mexico which allegedly pays people 65 cents an hour. This is clearly, to those people who have read the agreement, both covered in the agreement and simply not something that is of issue in this particular free trade or bilateral trade agreement.

The NDP Members of Parliament in Saskatchewan challenged government Members of Parliament to debates on free trade. Those of us who have done a lot of work on free trade and are conversant with the agreement and have read the important parts of the agreement said, let's have a debate. The NDP MPs did not want a debate any more. This was an MP who was sabre-rattling and asking for debates.

I would like, by way of question, to ask him specifically about this question of the 65-cent-an-hour-in-Mexico arrangement that he has spoken of. Has he not read the free trade agreement? Has he not referred specifically to the annex that deals with third country production? It is in the agreement. I would like to ask him, why has he not read this part of the agreement when concerned Canadians already have?

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I invite my hon. friend—since we do not have all the precise U.S. legislation yet, and neither does the Government—to look at the report to the President of the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee, which worked with the Administration and which has the U.S. Administration's support. Under Article—pay attention. My hon. friend should pay attention. He asked a question.

Mr. Gormley: I am listening in rapture. I always have.

Mr. Benjamin: Keep your ears open and your lips from flapping. Under Article 103—

An Hon. Member: You have the public in stitches.

Mr. Benjamin: Under Article 103, the extent of obligations clause states that each party will ensure compliance with the deal at provincial,state and local levels. The U.S. intends to "provide that in the event of a conflict between a U.S. statute and a provision of the free trade arrangement, U.S. law shall prevail". When the Americans deem that products processed or manufactured on the U.S.-Mexican border, on the Mexican side, are deemed to be made in the United States of America, under Article 103, U.S. statutes will prevail. Now, can it be any plainer than that?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A very quick supplementary.

Mr. Gormley: What a tired litany of nonsense. When this man talks about U.S. law prevailing, is he trying to tell the House that Canada somehow forfeits some of our sovereignty by signing this agreement? Canadian law will prevail, as American will prevail, and the question about this alleged paying of 65 cents an hour to Mexicans has absolutely nothing to do with American law. It is covered specifically in the agreement with respect to third country entry of goods. This Member has not addressed my question. I can only conclude that he has not even read any part of the agreement, and that is regrettable.

An Hon. Member: He doesn't even know what section it is.

Mr. Benjamin: Whether it is a third country or the U.S.A., with their $1.65 wages for producing poultry, the U.S. law will prevail.

An Hon. Member: You still have quotas on poultry.

Mr. Benjamin: In other words, the U.S. has made it clear that they intend to support a certain supremacy of United States statutes. In the Canadian legislation, this bill asserts the subordination of Canadian law. When I look at the gutless wonders opposite I see that when it comes to standing up for Canada, they will continue to subordinate this country and subordinate our laws to the wishes of their big brother to the south.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Before I call upon the next gentleman, the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson), I would like to advise the House that, under Standing Order 55(2), debates will be 10 minutes without any questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am pleased to take this opportunity tonight to speak about the free trade agreement, and more especially, its effect on Newfoundland and the Newfoundland fishing industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: You are no doubt aware, earlier this year the Economic Council of Canada published its report on the free trade agreement. Having studied the agreement in detail, including the fine print, they came to a definite conclusion. This deal is good for Canada and for every region of this country. In fact, the Economic Council believes that the Atlantic provinces and the Prairies stand to gain the most from this free trade agreement as far as jobs are concerned.

• (2110)

The Economic Council is not the only organization which believes the free trade agreement is good for the country. Other independent research organizations, such as the Conference Board and the Canada West Foundation, have said that we will have greater economic growth and thousands more jobs as a result of the free trade agreement. Furthermore, all the major business associations in this country, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, and the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which represents tens of thousands of small businesses across Canada, want the free trade agreement implemented. They want it implemented because they know this agreement offers to Canadians the potential to move forward with a powerful and vibrant economic infrastructure.

For Atlantic Canadians this deal will establish innovative rules for trade in services which, Mr. Speaker, are the fastest growing component of international trade. Of particular importance to Newfoundland are benefits that consumers can expect as a result of the agreement.

A technical impact study published by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs listed a number of potential benefits which will arise when the agreement is fully implemented. According to the study, the cost of living of low-income Canadians will decrease by 3 per cent and that of middle and high-income Canadians by 2 per cent. The typical middle income family will pay $8,000 less to establish and furnish a home, and increased competition will improve the price, quality and variety of consumer products. No matter what we do in life, all of us are consumers. We will all benefit from the free trade agreement.

Another benefit, which few people talk about, is related to the tax we pay on imports from the United States. Every year we pay over $2 billion worth of tariffs on U.S. products. Removing those tariffs is the same as giving ourselves a $2 billion tax break.

Now, what does the agreement mean for the economy of the Atlantic provinces and Newfoundland in particular? Well, fish, agriculture, forest products, energy and minerals drive the economy of Atlantic Canada. Some 75,000 people work in these sectors. Their jobs depend heavily on exports. In fact, in 1986, Newfoundland exported over $1 billion worth of commodities, more than half of which went to the United States. In Newfoundland, the fishery employs 26,500 fishermen and 10,620 plant workers. In 1986, as a province, we exported $422 million worth of seafood products to the United States. This is the equivalent of 76 per cent of all seafood production in the province.

In recent years we all know that U.S. trade actions have threatened these exports. This has caused long and costly court procedures. However, the free trade agreement negotiations have resulted in a dispute settlement mechanism which will mean that Canadians will now get a fair hearing over future trading disputes with the United States. Regardless of what opposition Members say this binding dispute settlement mechanism is an important feature of the agreement.

I wish time permitted me to explain the finer details of this mechanism. I can say that the two Governments, the U.S. Government and the Canadian Government, are committed to curtailing the type of regulations which have hurt the industry so painfully in the past. Several attempts have been made by the Opposition to suggest that many of our social programs involving the fishing industry were affected by the agreement. This simply demonstrates the desperation of critics of the agreement. Their only hope is to mislead the Canadian public about some of the most important programs that this country values. The free trade agreement quite simply does not affect social programs in this country. The Americans recognize that social programs are not countervailable. In fact, in the past when the Americans attempted such an action, they lost their case. Our social programs were never on the table and they will not be in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: These universal programs are important to all Canadians and they are important to our Government.

The fishing industry is absolutely vital to the economy of Atlantic Canada. That is why the Government paid such attention to their concerns. What is good for the fisheries industry is good for Newfoundland. Through the free trade agreement the fishing industry has gained enhanced access to the U.S. market. This assured access will lead to increased investor confidence for entrepreneurs. This confidence will encourage further processing of fish products in a region which is attempting to reduce its dependence on primary production of goods.

Another plus for the industry will be the elimination of tariffs on all fishery products. Most products will be tariff-free in five years. In simple language, as a result of the agreement and because of the elimination of tariffs, Canadian fish products will be sold cheaper in the United States, which will mean an increase in sales and, therefore, an increase in jobs at home.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, key elements in the free trade agreement ensure that the East Coast fish processing industry and the jobs it provides will be protected.

Mr. Robichaud: That is a lot of bull.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Johnson: The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will benefit fishermen as well as processors. A fisherman's economic viability depends on resource availability, the quality of the raw material and good financial returns for catches. As processors secure an increased share of the American market, raw material from fishermen will be in greater demand. This greater demand, in turn, will mean increased returns for fish landings.

Not only the Newfoundland fishing industry benefits from this agreement, other industries, such as mining and forestry, will also have the opportunity to export to a larger and more secure American market.

This agreement speaks to many of the concerns of Newfoundland's citizens. It effectively responds to the economic needs of industry in the province while keeping in mind the vital regional expansion and social programs that uniquely serve the province so effectively. Already the Canadian and American economies are highly integrated. There is a natural north-south flow of trade that takes advantage of proximity, similar business practices, common language, time zones and climate. The free trade agreement simply expands and enhances an already highly productive partnership.

An era of increasing prosperity is opening up to us. Our challenge is to capitalize on the free trade agreement and realize the full potential of our exciting future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) on debate.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Renfrew—Nipissing-Pembroke (Mr. Hopkins) and his wife who are celebrating their thirty-third wedding anniversary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLellan: We have heard a great deal from the Government on the supposed benefits of this trade agreement with the United States. It is just pure, unadulterated mishmash which the Government is trying to have the Canadian people believe. We have heard one aspect with respect to the subsidies. In this agreement we are not going to have a definition of what a subsidy is for perhaps seven years. We will not know what a subsidy is. Yet, if subsidies are countervailable, Canadians should know what a subsidy is. How will we be able to plan our commerce over the next seven years if we do not know that what we are doing is within or outside the free trade agreement? How will we be able to plan the future of the energy sector if we do not know what a subsidy is? How will the Alberta Government, for instance, be able to determine whether a royalty is lawful under the free trade agreement or unlawful under the free trade agreement? If a royalty is a subsidy, then it may not be allowed under the free trade agreement. What about ethane sales at the rate it is sold in Alberta? Will that be allowed under the free trade agreement?

• (2120)

What about regional expansion programs? What about economic assistance to the regions that are not as economically sound as other areas? Will assistance to these areas that are undergoing regional economic difficulty at this time be a subsidy under the free trade agreement and thereby be disallowed? Will we be helping the regions that are going through economic difficulties by telling them that the funding they are receiving now will prohibit them from trading in the United States? Is that the way we will help areas like Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario?

This is going to be a double-cross on the regions of Canada, the regions that need economic assistance. This Government has led the regions to believe that they will be helped by this trade agreement with the United States. What about energy? The Government is saying that what this is doing for Canada is wonderful. What it is doing is giving away our energy for a bag of coloured beans, our energy on which this country has become so dependent.

The agreement says that in the event of a shortage of energy, the amount we have sold to the United States over the previous three years will be the percentage of energy that we will sell to the United States at the time of energy shortage. If, over the previous three years, we sold 40 per cent of our oil to the United States, then in a time of shortage, we would have to sell to the United States 40 per cent of our oil. Forty per cent is the situation at the present time, but that does not mean that the shortage will happen tomorrow. The shortage may not happen for seven years.

Suppose a shortage happens in seven years and the multinational companies in the United States tell their Canadian subsidiaries to buy oil from Canada for sale in the United States. The amount of oil that could be sold in the United States could be 60 per cent or more. In a time of shortage, we would be obligated to sell 60 per cent or more of our oil to the United States.

Mr. Crosbie: That is absolutely wrong.

Mr. McDermid: We don't have to sell one drop of oil.

Mr. MacLellan: That is not wrong. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. McDermid: No, we don't.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, they do. They are subsidiaries of American parents. That is, if there are any Canadian subsidiaries left, because under the free trade agreement, why would they need Canadian subsidiaries operating in Canada? If they can sell into the Canadian market without any subsidiaries, why have subsidiaries in Canada? We will see a closing of Canadian subsidiaries, or what we call Canadian subsidiaries at this time will be merely marketing agencies, causing tremendous cut-backs in employment.

What about our agreement with the International Energy Agency? Under the present agreement with the International Energy Agency, in times of oil shortages, we have to cut back our use of oil by 7 per cent and give it to designated countries that are short of oil. If those countries that are short of oil as designated by the International Energy Agency do not include the United States, then we will have to give 7 per cent of our energy to other countries and we will have to split with the United States the remaining 93 per cent. Presumably, we will have to give as much as or maybe more than 60 per cent of our oil to the United States.

The people of Canada are not being told exactly what they are being asked to give away under the free trade agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Total nonsense. I will debate the energy thing with you any time. You are totally wrong.

Mr. MacLellan: Over a year ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in Caroline, Alberta, said what a terrible thing the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission did in not allowing Canadian sellers of natural gas to pass along their transportation charges to the buyers in the United States. He said what a horrible thing that was and that he would correct it, bring it up at the Venice summit and tell the United States that this just was not fair and was extra-territoriality. What happened? We saw the first draft of the free trade agreement in October and nothing happened. The Federal Energy Regulatory Commission agencies in the United States have all the power they had before. We did see the National Energy Board completely gutted, completely emasculated by this free trade agreement. The National Energy Board is nothing more than a monitoring agency.

Mr. McDermid: You haven't even read the agreement.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, that's exactly what is in the agreement.

Mr. McDermid: You haven't read it though.

Mr. MacLellan: Yes, I have. You didn't make it easy.

Mr. McDermid: You can't even keep a straight face and say that, come on.

Mr. Gauthier: More than you can say for your own Minister.

Mr. MacLellan: The Government did not make it easy.

Mr. McDermid: I've read it twice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We have had a great day so far. There has been a lot of good debate. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) still has a couple of minutes left.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, the Government did everything it could so that people could not read the agreement. The agreement was not available. Do you know what was available, Mr. Speaker? It was a pamphlet printed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), not the agreement that was signed. We got a document of government issue. Canadians have not read the agreement. The Government did not provide the actual agreement to Canadians. All we got was the government issue.

Mr. McDermid: Come on into my office, I've got hundreds of them. I'll be happy to give you one.

Mr. MacLellan: Why not distribute them?

Mr. McDermid: They come into my office every day and get them.

Mr. MacLellan: Yeah, sure they do. The Government is completely oblivious to the needs of Canadians. It has gotten together with big business and said: "Look what you guys are going to get under free trade". Of course, big business wanted free trade and the Government gave it to them. All we hear now is: "Isn't it wonderful, isn't it going to be great". The Government is telling the Canadian people that this is in their interest. It is not in their interest because the Canadian people have had a mixed economy for the last 30 years, and that has been beneficial to the Canadian public. The Government is trading it for a free trade economy, which will be devastating to this country. We will lose regional industrial incentives—

Mr. McDermid: Oh, crocodile tears.

Mr. MacLellan: Oh, crocodile tears. I am telling you, you will be able to sail your dinghy in the tears of your constituents in five-years' time. You wait until the people realize what they are giving away.

Mr. McDermid: My constituents are going to grab it and run with it.

Mr. MacLellan: You watch, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary, what they will do when they find out what they are going to be giving away. This is a country of 800 one-industry towns. These one-industry towns will be closing because the Government is not protecting the uniqueness of Canada. The Government wants to centralize everything, small towns, small communities, fishing villages, mining communities. They will just be thrown up into the air.

Mr. McDermid: Where are they going to go?

Mr. MacLellan: To land wherever they want under this free trade agreement. That is what will happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not know whether there is a full moon out there tonight, but I think there is. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. O'Neil) has the floor.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I think it is quite appropriate that emotion should be followed by reason.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Mr. O'Neil: Which of course explains my order of appearance in the debate this evening.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to know what the Hon. Member is saying, but it would be nice—

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, when our Member spoke we wanted to know what he was saying and that big blabbermouth over there would not let us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rossi: I will not let him speak. He is going to throw me out.

Mr. McDermid: Get out your handcuffs, Clouseau.

Mr. Rossi: Stupid McDermid, that is what they call you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Now I know there is a full moon. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso has the floor.

Mr. Rossi: No, he will not have the floor.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I regret—

Mr. Rossi: Keep on blabbering, blabbermouth.

Mr. O'Neil: —that I upset the Hon. Member so much. I think it is regrettable that he does not have a thicker skin and is unable to endure the truth in this debate with greater poise. The fact is that the free trade agreement is good for Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Neil: That is why I speak with a loud voice in this Chamber in support of the interests of Nova Scotia and this agreement. If that Hon. Member from central Canada, who is so loyal to the principles of the Liberal Party, so he says—

Mr. Rossi: Take advantage because you will not be back.

Mr. O'Neil: —can stand here today so adamantly and strongly against the interests of my constituents in Nova Scotia—

Mr. Rossi: You won't be back.

Mr. O'Neil: —I cannot help him. I thought a man with his experience would be able to endure the debate a bit better.

Mr. Crosbie: The hairless Inspector Clouseau.

Mr. Rossi: I was ready for you.

Mr. O'Neil: I am going to tell the Hon. Member why this agreement is so good for Nova Scotia. It is good for Nova Scotia because it is good for the fishing industry, the forest industry, the Christmas tree industry, and it protects our right and opportunity to put in place—

Mr. Keeper: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper) on a point of order.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I was just hoping we could have some quiet so we could hear the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for asking his colleagues and members of the Liberal Party to allow me to address the House.

Mr. Rossi: And the Tories.

Mr. O'Neil: I said this agreement is good for the fishing industry. Of course, that means it is good for the people I represent. I want to tell my friends from other parts of this country who know nothing about the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada why this is important to the industry.

A very simple example is that certain fish products entering the United States are now hit with a tariff. That tariff increases the cost of Canadian fish products on the Boston market. As a result of this agreement, that tariff will be lifted. That means our fish will be more competitive on the U.S. market. We do not have the U.S. fish market cornered. We have to compete. Fish enters the U.S. from other countries, particularly Scandinavian countries. This gives us a competitive edge in that market.

The forest industry is also very important in Nova Scotia. That is why this agreement is supported by Stora Forest Industries, the biggest forest industry company in Cape Breton and eastern Nova Scotia. The president of that company said that clearly this agreement is in the interests of that large pulp and paper manufacturer. He said that because of the security it gives to that industry. He said that at present we essentially have free trade in the products they manufacture. He went on to say that the dispute settling mechanism gives an element of security to the industry against protectionism, which has over the last number of years resulted from political pressures in the U.S., and it has hurt many Canadian industries, including the forestry sector. It is good for the fishing industry, the forestry sector, and that is why spokespersons from both those sectors of the Nova Scotia economy have strongly supported this initiative.

You heard earlier tonight about what this agreement does or does not do to Canada's regional development initiatives and its flexibility with respect to creating better employment opportunities in the regions. Let me say first that this agreement in itself is a regional development initiative. It is good for the regions. It means that Nova Scotia can more fully develop the opportunities presented to build on the north-south trading link so that we can develop stronger economic ties with the eastern U.S. There will not be the same strong pressures for an east-west trading pattern in this country. We will have the freedom and flexibility to go south with our products as we did before Confederation.

More specifically, this agreement in no way forecloses an opportunity or prohibits Canada from helping industries in the regions. There is absolutely nothing in this agreement that runs counter to Canada's regional development policies. Think about that for a moment. Do we as a Government believe there is? Obviously not because in the midst of the negotiations, as we moved towards conclusion of the agreement, we announced the establishment of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the richest regional development incentive package ever for Atlantic Canada. It is working. There are companies receiving offers of assistance to locate and expand in Atlantic Canada long after this agreement was signed.

Where, then, is the prohibition to regional development? We have seen the western diversification fund established, again a strong regional development initiative which took place following a commitment to the free trade agreement with the U.S.

The facts are very clear, the practices are very clear, and they speak for themselves. There is nothing in this agreement that prohibits or in any way detracts from our ability to build in the regions. When the case is made that it somehow does do that, that case must be challenged, and I do so tonight. My constituents know full well that companies are being given offers of assistance and are accepting them and progress is being made in our regions.

What about the ordinary Canadian on the street, in the grocery store, buying a car, how does this help him in a very personal way other than through the economic sector? It helps him because it means lower consumer prices in many sectors. It will result in the elimination of tariffs on imported products. Many Canadians, including many of those who sit in this Chamber, buy products from the U.S. Many of those products carry tariffs. That of course is passed on to the consumer. Therefore, we save on that end.

We also save as consumers because components brought in to the country will not carry a tariff. When a manufacturer pays less for a component, that will in turn be reflected in the price of the end product. This agreement also enhances the industry in Canada. It will make it more competitive and competition invariably results in lower consumer prices.

• (2140)

I know that time is short but I do want to urge all Members to support speedy passage of this legislation which implements the agreement because the agreement is in the interests of my constituents, all Nova Scotians, and all ordinary Canadians. That is why the ordinary men and women in this country support this agreement and want to see it passed. They look forward to a stronger and more prosperous future in Canada as we take our full place in the world economy as a global trading partner.

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out, in opening my remarks on this trade agreement tonight, that the Government is promoting something by a name other than that which it really bears. On the cover it says "The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement" and inside it says "The Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement". That, surely, is the first key to what is happening here. That is bearing a false witness to the people of Canada.

When the Government says it has a free trade agreement with the United States, that has no more meaning or substance than "Avon Calling". It is a mere marketing slogan combining two words which we all view favourably; "free", because we all know how we depend on freedom and we all support it; and "trade", which we understand as being largely connected to our prosperity. When the Government talks of this as a free trade agreement it denies the reality and uses a mere marketing slogan to sell an agreement for which it has no mandate, had no mandate, and never will have any mandate.

When we recall 1983 and the leadership contest of the Progressive Conservative Party, who do we see standing proud and tall for free trade? John Gamble and Peter Pocklington, and where are they now in political terms?

Some Hon. Members: What about John Crosbie?

Mr. Parry: I'm talking about the serious contenders, of course. The other prominent front-bench members of the Cabinet spoke out against free trade. That is on the record and you can check it in Maclean's, Mr. Speaker.

I think that any Canadian viewing this agreement should judge it by the contents, not by the title, particularly when the title on the cover is not the title to which our partners in the agreement, the Americans, agreed.

The Government information continues to mislead. Let us look at some of the major factors in this agreement on which the Government is trying to sell it. Let us look at tariffs. I was sad to hear the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Johnson) repeating the misconceived idea that somehow the Canadian people are going to save $2 billion. The $2 billion will, of course, have to be replaced in some way. The Tories would do it by cut-backs, the Liberals by bank borrowing, and we as the Government would do it by an intelligent combination of that and increased taxes on the corporations which have been getting away so well under the present Government.

Similar are the energy provisions. When the government Party was the Opposition, it rang the bells for 16 days because it objected to an omnibus energy Bill. The Conservative replacement is to put everyone in North America on an even basis so that there can be no Canadian exploration programs, there can be no Canadian ownership programs, and there can be no Canadian conservation programs without, of course, the threat of American countervail.

Free trade in services is perhaps a little more hopeful. However, look at the way in which the service sector is organized. Look at the power of franchising which is directed from the United States. Look at the way in which that agreement can be ruled to eventually level down Canada's professional standards and eliminate provincial control over those professional standards. Certainly, there will be winners, but there will also be losers.

That brings me to the investment provisions. The Government should realize that in the time that it will take Canadians to go from owning one-half of 1 per cent of the American economy to owning 3 per cent of the American economy the American multinationals can go from the 40 per cent of Canada's economy they already own to owning 100 per cent.
