OUR ENVOYS IN WASHINGTON

First-hand Information as to Reciprocity Conference and White House Dinner From Our Veracious Correspondent With the Canadian Ministers.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 14.—(Very Special.)—This has been a busy week for the trade envoys from Canada. As intimated in my last despatch, Messrs. Patterson and Fielding were rushed with eight sessions during the first few days of their visit, but finally got down to business in the Treasury Building.

While the deliberations of the commissioners were naturally somewhat of a secret character, I am able to furnish Sunday World readers with a note of the main features of the discussion. It seems, according to my informant, who is (it is almost unnecessary to say) high in the confidence of the president and the secretary, that immediately after the usual exchange of views on "Fine day" and "Fine day" had been given, Mr. Knox, who had impatiently asked Mr. Patterson to open his bag to reveal the contents, Mr. Patterson reached below the round table, his robe de nuit and his extra collar instead of his bag containing state papers, the opening of the negotiations was delayed for fifteen minutes.

Well, proceed with the list alphabetically," began Mr. Knox. "According to the order of the day, we shall begin with the letter 'B'. Very good. There should be reciprocity in the letter, gentlemen? Very good. Now, then, about the action," asked Mr. Patterson.

"Some terms," suggested Mr. Knox. "Some terms," suggested Mr. Knox.

The secretary of state turned to Mr. Patterson. "Don't believe in them," he said. "I don't believe in them. I don't believe in them."

Mr. Patterson was obliged to leave. He was obliged to leave.

SCHOOL TRUSTEES WIN IN MEDORA DISPUTE

Justice Middleton Finds That New School Was Necessary, The Township Thought Otherwise.

Mr. Justice Middleton on Saturday gave judgment in the case of School Trustees v. Medora. The Township of Medora v. the Township of Medora.

The judgment is as follows: "It is shown that the proposed school has been submitted to and sanctioned at a special meeting of the ratepayers called for the purpose. The circumstances surrounding the action of the board are not properly the subject of discussion in the material shows that the board is quite justified in the view that two buildings are necessary in this section. The mandamus must issue, and the township must pay the costs."

W. Chisholm, K.C., acted on behalf of the trustees and J. Thompson for the township. The application of William Sutherland for an order quashing his conviction for selling intoxicating liquor without a license during the months of November and December, 1910, was dismissed with costs.

The judgment shows that, while the defendant might not have had several sales of liquor on different days, and to different persons, as was contended by the crown, nevertheless there was one case proven, and consequently selling is the offence, no matter whether on one occasion or on several occasions.

Appeals to Countrymen to Maintain Separate Race.

STANDERTON, S. A., Jan. 14.—At the Dingaan's Day feast, held at New Denmark, Gen. Brits addressed a large gathering. In the course of his speech he said: "I earnestly appeal to parents to prevent their children marrying any of the English race. They must not let this colony become a bastard race, the same as Cape Colony. If God had willed us to become a mixed race, He would not have made the distinction between English and Dutch."

WINTER RACING GOSSIP DISFAVOR AT MONROE

Kentucky Derby to Be Raised to $6000 — Other Southern Tracks to Increase Purse.

By Bert E. Collier. JACKSONVILLE, Jan. 14.—The disfavor surrounding the racing at Monroeville Park has stimulated the reform, or anti-racing element, who have now the support of the municipalities. Plans, it is said, have been laid to attack at an early date the constitutionality of the law under which the Florida Live Stock Fair and Racing Association operates. The movement of the racing solons looking to a renewal of their lease of life in this city is also to be attacked. The latter, of course, will be fought out at Tallahassee next May. It is said that the recent shooting scrapes, especially the killing of James O'Brien by a watchman at Monroeville Park, has stimulated the reform element. In racing circles it is learned that the "city vote" will be relied upon to carry the day.

The stewards of the meeting have lifted the ban on the horses owned by W. R. Martin and formerly trained by Grove Baker. Mr. Baker, who claims to have been "talked out" has been denied the services of the course. The "outlaw" camp keeps growing daily.

It now develops that the "Kangaroo" trial arranged for the benefit of the subsequent turf scries was even a more glowing success than at first supposed. The meeting, it is said, almost broke up in a riot when a self-styled gentleman demanded proof, other than the mere word of a man like Dick Williams.

That prosperity prevails in the home of the thoroughbred—Kentucky—and that men vitally interested in the operation of the several tracks comprising the Kentucky circuit are indulging in the speculation of the future, is demonstrated in the announcement, from a semi-official source, to the effect that certain of the racing associations operating under the jurisdiction of the Kentucky Racing Commission intend increasing the monetary value of several of the annual fixtures raced for over their courses, chief of these being the Kentucky Derby, the purse value of which, it is understood, will be increased from $5000 to $6000.

Not alone will the profit-sharing intentions of the New Louisville Jockey Club affect certain of its stake events, inasmuch as it is understood the extremely high standard set last fall by this club in the matter of selling race purses is to be adhered to. In a word, therefore, no purse less than $500 will be offered during the forthcoming spring meeting at Churchill Downs. To the men making their livelihood on the thoroughbred turf such will prove welcome news, while to the host of sport-loving Kentuckians, who pride themselves on the possession of three of the most important courses in the country, the unsolicited generosity of the New Louisville Jockey Club is being accepted in the light of an assurance that the highest standard of racing possible will be reached at Kentucky during the season of 1911.

While no direct announcement has been made as to when the new season will begin, it is more than probable that such will be the case. In regard to the forthcoming meeting at Lexington, it may be stated that several stake events have already been added to those heretofore decided at the historic bluegrass course.

Too much should not be expected from the management of "Fair Lintonia" during the coming season. Under the able management of John Hackmeister the old Kentucky country track has again become a paying venture, but it will take years before Lintonia can regain its old-time popularity. The request of the management of this track at the recent meeting of the Kentucky Racing Commission, for permission to increase the commission derived from the operation of the pari-mutual machine may, it is some day advised, but the fact remains, nevertheless, that the French system of wagering has proved a costly innovation at this track.

Writing to one of his old-time turf friends in this city, Lyman Davis, secretary of the New Louisville Jockey Club, who also holds a like position at Innes and Empire City tracks, states that he has now fully recovered from his late severe illness. Mr. Davis is still at his home in Covington, Ky., but will, in the near future, go to Louisville to prepare the stake and condition books for the spring meeting there. Mr. Davis writes enthusiastically concerning the turf outlook, not only for Kentucky, but also on the Metropolitan circuit. As to Juarez, he assures the recipient of this letter that the Mexican venture has proved a gigantic success and by next winter will have become the real mecca of racing.

With the multiplication of futurity events for trotting bred colts, making it now possible to race each year for over $100,000 in the various stakes it has been freely predicted that there would be a general falling off in the patronage to some of these stakes. Yet those already closed for the coming season shows instead a material increase in the number of nominations. Secretary Horace Watson of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association, announces that no less than 874 weanlings have kept eligible for the $21,000 Kentucky Futurity for foals of 1910. The list embraces thirty-seven states, Canada and England from 311 nominators.

The largest list of colts comes from W. E. D. Stokes' Patchen Wilkes Farm of Lexington, Ky., which names eighty-eight of its grandly bred weanlings, including forty-eight by its sensational sire, Peter the Great, Walnut Farm of L. V. Harless, at Donesee, Ky., for the first time in many years, has to be content with second place, owing to unusually bad luck in his breeding operations. The past year's listing only sixty-two weanlings out of a possible 148, principally the get of its richly bred trio of sires, Moko, Walnut Hill and Oxone, next comes J. E. Newman's Claiborne Farm, Lexington, Ky., with thirty-eight grandly bred foals by The Director General and Osmond, Allen Farm of Pittsfield, Mass., as fourth, with thirty, mostly by its grand young stallion Binzars. Then follow William Simpson's Empire City Farms, Cuba, N. Y., with twenty-nine, the majority of which are by the peerless McKinney, and the New Western recruit among the lesser nominators to the Futurity, M. W. Savare's International Stock Food Farm, Minneapolis, Minn., which has twenty-four

Buy the "EVERITT" at $1,450--it Surpasses Standards of $2,000 Design, Capacity, Making and Quality

Every Part is Made True to 1-1000th Inch

By 783 special guiding fixtures every "Everitt" part fits into the car as designed, without fitting, forcing or hand-fitting, as the fixtures are used to guide the tools instead of separate hand-adjusting and guesswork on each part. This accurate car construction makes the "Everitt" strong and long-wearing, because it is as nearly perfect as advanced shop practice can attain. It makes the "Everitt" a well-built and solid machine.

The Tudhopes are the first makers in Canada to use "jigs" for metal working. To produce the "Everitt" jigs are used in Canadian shop practice for the first time.

You get the benefit in wear, strength and tuning-up of your "Everitt" which retains its original factory perfection.

The Aluminum Clutch Saves Transmission Wear

The "Everitt" adjustable clutch has a light aluminum body instead of a heavy iron body. Because this light clutch can be spun around instantly by the transmission gears, to much higher speed, when dropping from the high to low, the clutch then being driven by the rear wheels through the transmission, there is no strain or breakages of gear teeth.

The gears are so protected against excessive strains by the aluminum clutch that they wear perfectly, change without noise, are perfect and unchipped.

In braking stops, the light aluminum clutch stops quickly, not forcing the car forward by acting as a flywheel, straining the transmission gears.

The gradual taking up of motor speed by the bulged leather facing starts the car gently, with the least strain on transmission gears.

This means long "Everitt" car service, with perfect gears.

Made to Carry a Big Live-Load

A car with a carefully proportioned but strong chassis made to save weight, has so much added capacity for carrying passenger weight. This is putting the right kind of weight on the tires, and saving the wear from the wrong kind of weight. Your $1,450 comes back in liberal carrying capacity. The "Everitt" is big value from the big live-load it carries for you.

A Low-Hung, Easy-Riding Roomy Body

The "Everitt" double-drop frame car hugs the road. The car body floor is lowered by the double-drop side-frames, but high road clearance is maintained. Riders have lessened side-shock and jolting. Skidding is prevented. The strain is reduced. The "Everitt" is easy to get into and slight from. There is liberal spring clearance, wide running boards, wide seat construction. The double-drop frame permits this.

A Motor of Tremendous Strength

Any motor of the "Everitt" size has to stand 16 blows of 3,200 lbs. each every second it runs during racing. This tremendous, rattling, tearing explosion strain does not affect the "Everitt" Motor, because it is cast in one piece for the parts taking strain. By casting all cylinders, etc., together, and stiffening them with the crankshaft housing the entire motor is in rigid alignment.

You get the benefit because your motor cannot get "out of tune," and need constant attention. It has a big, strong, solid, stiff main casting that holds every part where it must run, right and smoothly.

This big main casting is in line with best motor construction. It is true to 1-1000th inch.

Here is the "EVERITT," made entirely in Canada by the Tudhopes, in Orillia. For the first time a car is entirely made in Canada. For the first time Canadians can buy at exactly U. S. price, saving $150 to $400 on each "Everitt" car. For the first time an extra tire is supplied with a Canadian car as regular equipment. It is the only entirely jig-made car, every part true to 1-1000th inch. It has the only chassis designed to save dead weight, leaving more capacity for live weight (passengers). It has the only motor simplified, standardized, strengthened and designed to give consistent, steady, efficient service, without tinkering, breakdown repairs, tuning up, constant attention. It is the only $1,450 car with long-stroke motor, big wheels, big brakes, 4-inch double-drop side frames, low-hung body, wide seats, big carrying capacity at low gasoline, oil and tire upkeep cost. It revolutionizes every 1911 standard in Canadian automobile selling by giving better value, higher quality, better material, more capacity, longer service, lower running cost, higher road clearance at $1,450.

Investigate the "EVERITT" and compare it with any other car. Every claim will make good. The "EVERITT" is supreme for value-giving.

"EVERITT" Fore-Door Touring, 1911 Model.

Standard Touring Model. Detachable Tonneau Model. Torpedo-Roadster Model. 1000-lb. Delivery Body Model. Prices $1,450 and $1,500, f.o.b. Orillia.

Double-drop frame, 110-in. wheel base, 56-in. gauge, 3 1/4-in. tires, 34-in. wheels, Universal rims, internal and external brakes on rear wheels. Bosch high-tension instant-spark magneto. Improved aluminum adjustable leather-face cone clutch. Nickel-steel selective non-crossing safety sliding transmission gears, housed at rear axle, 3 forward speeds and 1 reverse. Motor 4-cylinder, 4-cycle, long-stroke, unit-cast, self-lubricating, giving 30 h.p. Speed 4 to 55 miles per hour on high gear. All motor parts accessible and individually adjustable; 1 1/4-inch high road clearance. "Special Tudhope" equipment includes: Extra tire, tire cover, holders, brass foot rest, robe rail, right gasoline gauge, shock absorbers, tool kit, magneto, horn, extra size Gray & Davis gas headlights, gas generator, side and rear oil lights. Extra equipment includes mohair top with dust cover and best brass windshield at $125 extra. Guarantee, two years. (Minor variations in equipment for different models.)

Large-Size Wheels and Big Brakes

Big wheels bridge road ruts, small wheels drop into. The big-wheel "Everitt" rides easily, and wears tires less each mile than small wheels. This saves tire expense on the "Everitt"—longer mileage. The big "Everitt" wheels mean higher speed. Few, if any, cars at $1,450 have the "Everitt" size wheels.

Big drums, extra wide, on the "Everitt" make more sensitive brakes with greater leverage and less wear than small drums on small wheels.

Replacements That Fit--Placed by the Owner

In case of accident, any "Everitt" part from the factory will exactly fit your car to 1-1000th inch. This means that you can fit the part in yourself, without fitting. The exact and absolute standardization means lessened breakages anyway. In case of breakages, it means lessened work, time and trouble.

The "Everitt" is a safe buy for every possible accident.

Nickel-Steel Speed Gears That You Cannot Injure

These gears are automatically cut from nickel-steel—the material armor plate is made from. The "Everitt" owner gets gears both wear-resisting and tough. They do not chip or break. Your "Everitt" gears keep in good condition, noiseless, slow-wearing.

An Extra-Strong Frame With Double Drop

The side units of the "Everitt" chassis frame are pressed steel in channel section, with extra wide 4-inch channel. This gives great strength, with light weight. The low-body of the car is more graceful, better looking and easier to enter on account of the double-drop frame. You also get the benefit in the length of service of the "Everitt."

Perfect Equipment--Lots of It--The Best

Not merely best quality equipment goes with the "Everitt," but every "Everitt" has a "special Tudhope" equipment; a complete extra tire, cover, holders, shock absorbers, robe and foot rest, with the car. The gas lamps are of extra size, and Gray & Davis make. The Bosch magneto, high tension windings, gives a firing spark on a quarter turn of motor. This makes starting easy.

You don't get the above equipment with other cars at any price. Their full "special Tudhope" equipment is first introduced by the Tudhope interests, and is the only such equipment in the world.

The usual equipment of tool kit, horn, generator, gas and oil lights, comes with the "Everitt." In addition to the above extraordinary regular equipment.

You get a better and fuller equipment with the "Everitt" than in any other car on the market.

A Car the Owner Can Run and Care for

The "Everitt" is simplified to the highest degree. The motor has 152 less parts than the next simplest motor on the market. The chassis has few parts. In actual practice has few parts. Getting parts that "tie-up" the car. These parts are eliminated in the "Everitt." The result is that it is hard to get the "Everitt" car out of running order.

The owner can easily understand and operate his "Everitt." He can easily get at the motor, and remove any single piston, valve, etc., without disarranging or disturbing any other part of the motor.

Easy care is insured by accessible oil cups, automatic internal oiling of motor, a perfect magneto, a special "Everitt" carburetor, simple gear and brake levers and connections, etc.

A Car With Low Up-keep Costs

The long-stroke motor saves gasoline consumption, as the spark may be much more delicately adjusted and manipulated than in the short-stroke motor. Also, the throttle control is more delicate. The torque from the explosion is greater and there is less piston leakage, because the long-throated crank is more responsive to the explosion impulse.

The tire cost is low because the large wheels save the wear. The light chassis saves tire wear. The low centre of gravity saves side shocks on the tire. The large tires keep inflation better and heat less than small tires.

The tuning-up cost of the "Everitt" is much reduced through accurate 1-1000th inch standardization and fitting. This perfect construction maintains original factory perfection. The simplicity of motor and its strong main casting avoid "falling away" from original condition. There is almost no attention needed for the "Everitt."

The saved weight of chassis and motor mean lessened strain on tire and car at all times.

Canadian Making Means Preferability

The "Everitt" must be right as a car, as perfect as possible in every detail. The manufacturers cannot evade responsibility by distance from the consumer, by customs and exportation trade barriers, by having a tremendous market to draw on.

For the Canadian, this makes the Canadian-made "Everitt" the most preferable practical car purchase he can make, all it made within his reach, who are vitally interested in satisfying his needs by car service, wear, and perfection, with no alternative market in another country. The car must be right. This preferability extends also to replacements needed, the guarantee or repairs. There is no slow and distant shipment of parts, no customs formalities, nothing but a quick transaction of the business, and a direct shipment of the part replaced.

782 "Jigs" Make The "Everitt" Right

A jig is a guide for a machine and a holder for a part being machined. 782 jigs are used to make "Everitt" parts, one jig for each part. The one jig makes scores of parts exactly alike by being used scores of times. The blank drop-forging held in the jig is worked on by machine after machine, and when that part is completed, the jig, with a new piece, carries its new blank forging through precisely the same series of machines. Therefore, every "Everitt" part of one kind is absolutely like every other part of that kind because the same jig is used, and the same tools are guided by this jig the same way to 1-1000th inch on exactly the same place in each blank forging.

This means standardization—all parts alike. It also means strength and good building.

A Two Years' Guarantee to Back Up "Everitt" Quality

The manufacturer of any car who does not extend his guarantee a day beyond the usual 90 days' time, unless the quality in his product, thoroughly known by the manufacturer, will permit and make a long guarantee possible.

The "Everitt" guarantee is two years from date of purchase.

This is twice the length of guarantee given buyers of good cars. It means in the "Everitt" proof of extreme quality.

Every "Everitt" part has every Canadian wanting a service car ought to buy.

A $10,000-Car Inspection Service On the $1,450 "Everitt"

The guarantee of two years is made possible by the rigid inspection service on the "Everitt" during making.

The jig method of making not only saves making-time by permitting quicker work, but it means accurate construction.

This great cost-saving, minute adjustment in being avoided, is partly given back to the buyer in rigid and microscopic inspection of each part for flaws.

Every "Everitt" part has 5 to 50 inspections for flaws.

Every "Everitt" jig is checked again and again by gauges.

Parts with the least flaw, though accurate to 1-1000th inch, are instantly thrown out, because the jigs permit accuracy automatically. Such rejected parts represent comparatively small cost. They would be too costly to discard if made accurately by old methods, and the manufacturer would take a chance—his hope his 90-day guarantee would be too short to let trouble develop.

In the "Everitt" all such parts are thrown out on the same basis that they are thrown out on parts of $10,000 cars.

The inspection service in rigidity and frequency is a $10,000-car service.

You get the benefit in the $1,450 "Everitt."

You also get the benefit in the "Everitt" 2-Years' Guarantee.

Geographically, Kentucky leads the list with over one-third of the entire number. New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, Ohio, Minnesota, Indiana, Michigan and Texas, following in the order named. There are eleven nominations from Canada and one from England. Altogether the state promises to be one of the best of Kentucky's famous classics, and its liberal patronage by so large a number of breeders indicates their faith in the future of the sport.

Uncertain Work. "Wouldn't you like to be a king when you grow up, my son?" "No, pa, I'd rather have a steady job."

He Missed It. Going west on a train from Washington the other day was a 7-year-old boy, who was greatly interested in the scenery. Every minute or so he'd ask his mother a question about something he saw or didn't see. Shortly after the train had left Harper's Ferry, he had a complaint to make. "Mamma," he said, "was that Harper's Ferry?" "Yes," she replied. "I didn't see the rapids," said the boy. "New York Telegram."

SUNDAY MORNING

For Church People

THE SPOILERS.

The battle was over. The beautiful capital was in ruins. The people who traced their ancestry back through a hundred generations were captives in a foreign land.

With a prophet's insight he saw that his country must return to her ancient glory. For there was in her the potent germ from which a grander, greater nation should grow.

One hears so much said nowadays about getting on that he finds it easy to believe that the main thing is to become eminent in society, invention, politics or religion.

Little children should be taught this art. Youth and maidens should show their devotion to it. Men and women should devote themselves thereto no matter how onerous the task.

Encouraging to the Gentiles. Between 1890 and 1900 when Salt Lake City was solely under the control of the Mormons the increase of population was about 9000.

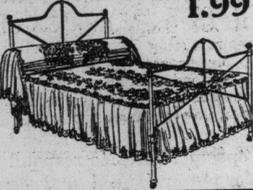

A Splendid Example. Instead of putting up a statue of a man, the centenary committee of New York and Vermont have decided to put up a lighthouse instead.

RELATIVES MUST PAY COST OF FRASER BATTLE

Octogenarian Should Be Exempt, is Ruling of Justice Britton.

Justice Britton has refused to saddle the costs of the lunacy trial of Michael Fraser, the 80-year-old bridegroom of Midland, upon the old man, and in a judgment handed out in Osbourne Hall on Saturday distinctly states that the relatives who brought the action must pay their own shot.

Old Michael Fraser, it will be recalled, became married a year ago Friday to a young spinster from Dundas, named Hannah M. O. Robertson, the daughter of a retired Presbyterian preacher. A previous attempt to become married had been frustrated by the relatives of the old man, who is worth $30,000, and they placed guards over him to prevent such an occurrence.

Marrid in Haste. On Jan. 12 two sleigh-loads of Miss Robertson's friends, including her ministerial parent, raided the house, rushed the guards and the ceremony was performed by the bride's father before the old man was fully dressed on washed and combed.

Catharine McCormick, an aged maiden lady, and cousin of the octogenarian bridegroom, and her brother, sought to annul the marriage on the grounds that old Michael was of unsound mental and incapable of managing his own affairs. This action was lost. Then the relative, thru her solicitors, asked that the costs be paid by Fraser, but the judge now declares:

Not Protection Alone. "It cannot be fairly said that the petitioner's motion was solely to protect Fraser. In dealing with the question of costs, I have considered the sufficiency of the petitioner's reasons for believing Fraser to be insane, if she did so believe, her reasons for thinking him incapable of managing his affairs, her reasons for commencing an action, the object she sought to attain, and the relation in which she and her brother stood to the petitioner's costs in any of these proceedings should not be paid by Fraser or out of his estate."

A TALK WITH MISS DRESSLER.

Miss Marie Dressler, interviewed a short time ago and the question of her birthplace came up. She had become a Broadway favorite, and her interviewer wanted to know whether the report he had heard about her Canadian birth was correct.

"Yes," said she. "I acknowledge the soft impeachment. I am a Canadian. I was born in Coburg, Ontario, and immediately thereafter the town became a summer resort."

"It's a long journey from Coburg to the star position in the Herald Square Theatre, New York," suggested the interviewer. "Indeed it is, and I am as much surprised as anybody could be over having made it," said Miss Dressler. "As a young girl I realized it was necessary for me to turn my hand to something in order to earn a livelihood. After a careful survey of the situation I decided that the stage offered more inducements for a girl than most other things. So I adopted it as a profession. I had no idea that one day my name would be flashing electric signs along Broadway."

"And doubtless fame has not been thrust upon you," remarked the interviewer.

Miss Dressler put aside the manner of a comedienne. "Fame is thrust upon few of us," she declared. "This is the result of hard work and a more trying life. But at last the journey's end is in sight. There is a little place in New England that I call home now, and I am looking forward to the time when I shall bid good-by to the footlights and all the kind audiences that have made success possible. I shall retire within a few years."

A Delicious Fish.

Victoria, B.C. and countries along the Mediterranean have not been long in discovering the delicious tunny fish, or "tong," as the French call it. It resembles salmon very much in its texture of the meat, but is lighter; in fact, sometimes it is, when made into a salad or creamed, taken for the white meat of chicken.

This fish is now being imported in cans in oil, similar to sardines. Flaked and served on lettuce leaves with French dressing, it is tasty. Another especially good dish is to marinate the fish in oil and lemon juice, to which a little salt, pepper and chopped parsley has been added, and then fry it slowly till brown, serving with a sauce tartare.

Relative Values.

She took two weeks to choose her winter hat. Ran here and there and tried on this and that. The matter of her horse and lingerie was studied long, as weighty things should be. And when it came to gowns, she pondered o'er. Each tuck and ruffle, bias flounce and zore, Debated well the style of skirt and sleeve.

PILES

"I have suffered with piles for thirty six years. One year ago last April I began taking Cascarets for constipation. It was the course of a week I noticed the piles began to disappear and at the end of six weeks they did not trouble me at all. Cascarets have done wonders for me. I am entirely cured and feel like a new man." George Kryder, Napoleon, O.

With the Pin Spillers

In picking up a morning paper and glancing over the bowling column, one is surprised at the number of ten-pin leagues that are spilling the pins on the different alleys around the city. It is not so many years ago that it was predicted that the great indoor winter game would never take a hold in this town. Too much cannot be said for this great pastime, and if the number of leagues keep increasing as they have been doing in the last year or so, a great number of new alleys will have to be laid.

BREEDERS' MEETINGS. Annual Gatherings of Live Stock Associations Early Next Month. The customary annual meetings of the different breeding societies will be held in this city on the dates and at the times herewith given:

Fact and Fun. The suggestion of a marine drive and promenade which will connect Dover with St. Margaret's Bay, Eng., has just been commenced. The road is being cut out of the face of the cliffs to the east of Dover. It will be 60 feet wide, gently sloping up the face of the cliffs for a distance of nearly a mile and a half. The cliff-cutting will require the removal of over 1,500,000 tons of chalk.

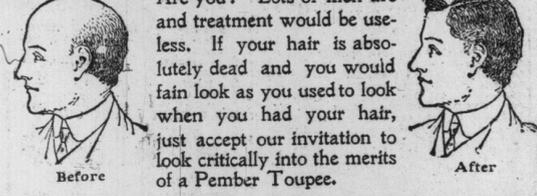

TO-MORROW. The robin chants when the thrush is dumb. Snow smooths a bed for the clover. Life flames anew, and days to come are sweet as the days that are over.

JUST A FEW NOTES. A report is current in Syracuse that the state fair commission may be abolished under the new administration at Albany and the management of the fair given over to the department of agriculture. The effect which such a change might have on the Grand Circuit trotting meeting and the Empire State Horse Show, heretofore held in connection with the fair, is causing alarm among horsemen.—New York Herald.

The Way of the Dandelion. A One-Minute-Sermon-Nature provided that there should be a winter, in order that the beauties of spring and summer might be more appreciated and better liked thru the contrast of extremes. If one had roses and pinks all the time, they would be as common as dandelions, an dthere are not many who care for the dandelion, and they think they must be in the smart set and must do as all the others do. That is why one sees so many tired people who do not get sleep enough—because they think they must conform to the crowd. They are the dandelions—pretty, but there are so many of them that they cease to be attractive. Therefore, it is a pleasing contrast when one runs across the man or the woman, who has strength of mind enough to avoid the mob—to resist the clamor, the constant invitation to do something, no matter what it is. A young woman gets into more trouble by being unwilling to dispense some hair-brained, frivolous woman of her set, who is ambitious to pull the other one into her frivolity. She does not want to prance around alone, and she tries to drag in a companion. And a whole lot of men are in the same way—if they were guided by their own common sense, they would be decent citizens, but the hum of the voices of the crowd hypnotizes them, and they become dandelions. # HORSE MATTERS WORTH ATTENTION

Points that the Different Breeding Societies Might Well Consider at the Annual Meetings to be Held in the Early Days of February.

Doubtless at the forthcoming meetings of the horse societies, many important matters will be brought up for discussion. Resolutions will also doubtless be passed, some of which may as well never have been thought of, for all the result that will follow. It is always thus and unfortunately it frequently happens that motions are accepted simply because they are made and without being considered in their different bearings. A subject well worth consideration is the treatment of horses at fairs and exhibitions. In the first place are the prizes large enough to warrant owners paying entry fee, transportation and maintenance and running the risks that always accompany shipment? It must be understood that in propounding this question reference is not made to the Canadian National Exhibition, although these horse prizes are none too large and hardly warrant entries from any great distance, but to fairs at other places where the communities are not so well to do. The average fair has to depend for its entries almost entirely upon the surrounding districts, and why? Because owners either cannot afford the expense entailed by exhibiting and the prizes to be won are not worth the trouble involved. That being the case, the fair or exhibition falls of its object, for the best being absent inferior animals count the ribbons. Veterinary inspection. Again should not veterinary inspection be more thorough and the prizes withheld when the exhibitor is not an importer and deserving of encouragement? If a horse is not a good individual and likely to get a good kind, he should not be considered. That being the case, the honor of winning would be great. Once more should not something be done to encourage smaller exhibitors to the large importers and breeders, who use fairs and exhibitions as markets and for advertising purposes. This is all very desirable, but is there not a possibility of encouraging the buyer and the smaller horse-breeder as well as the importer and large breeder?

Closing of Entries. Further, is the accommodation provided at many fairs so inadequate, the supplies deficient and the surroundings anything but calculated to be conducive to health. Yes, further, the present time is the fashion of managers to advertise a certain date for the closing of entries and then to keep the lists open until a few days before the beginning of the fair, or in some instances right up to the time of judging. Naturally fair managers wish to secure numerous entries—so every one who enters—so it must be manifest that the system here referred to is unfair and improper. It sets a bad example of violation of the rules and confers privileges on late comers, who frequently secure opportunities of entering classes in which the competition is not strong and of knowing that their horses are fit for showing up to the last moment. It also gives local owners a decided advantage. The date for closing having once been set it should be rigidly adhered to. The question of the necessity of classification that might be beneficially taken into consideration. Of course matters of transportation, registration, importation, and etc. will be taken up, but the discussion might well make a further range and include more subjects than they usually do. Appeals could well be decided upon for more official systematic and to the horse industry and the question considered of inspection and registration of all stallions standing for service and of mares being served. Finally there is the important subject of reciprocity in live stock with our neighbors. Taking one thing with another the meetings to be held during the first ten days of next month should be burdened with huge concern to a great industry.

VALUE OF HORSES IN THE DOMINION $225,000,000!

Figures for the Different Governments of the Country to Ponder Over—A Vast Industry That Deserves Additional Encouragement.

A few years ago, and a very few years at that, there was but one horse mart in the city, but that one was so well conducted that it attracted national attention, and at the time of the Boer war, the attention of the imperial authorities, with the result that other establishments cropped up and Toronto became the centre of the horse trade in Canada. It may not be generally known, but long before this Montreal was the centre of the horse and from that port quite an export trade was conducted. With the decline of export has come a greatly developed home market, of which Toronto, with its twelve or thirteen hundred stables weekly is not only the undoubted centre but practical monopolist. As showing the importance and value of the trade and the value of the horse industry generally, it is interesting to note that taking twelve hundred as the basis of calculation the value thus arrived at, accepting the official valuation of $150 apiece, is $180,000 per week, or at the rate of upwards of nine million dollars a year—to be exact, at the rate of $9,360,000 Per Annum.

And this, be it remembered, is from a single city. Taking the population of Toronto at four hundred thousand, or one seventeenth of the whole Dominion, if the other sixteen parts do 25 per cent of similar business each, we have a grand total of $46,800,000 Per Annum. That changes hands in the Dominion far horse flesh alone. While these mammoth figures may not nearly be reached, while, indeed, Toronto's annual trade may not amount to more than one half of the amount first given, they are sufficiently approximate to set people thinking and to furnish some idea of the magnitude, value and importance of the horse trade. After all if all the classes of horses are taken into account, and if there be as supposed, 1,500,000 horses in the country, the volume and value of the transactions may not be so tremendously over-estimated as at first sight might be thought. And just imagine it, 1,500,000 horses at $150 apiece means that there are in the Dominion Horses to the Value of $225,000,000. Surely, in the light of these figures, apart from the quantity of feed, stabling, equipment and labor that the maintenance of this vast and valuable host entails, the industry is deserving for the utility it represents of both natural and provincial encouragement to a far greater extent than it receives. ## APPARENT BOOM IN THE HORSE MARKET

Brisk Business Reported at the Different Auction Markets, With Bright Prospects Ahead—Sales for the Week

Business is certainly brisk in the horse market at Toronto. During the week past the demand was as nearly equal to the supply. It is said that money is showing a tendency towards stringency, but the bidding at none of the three horse auction markets in the city gave indications that this was the case, for business was brisk, quickly done and at good prices. That is the more astonishing for the quality of the offerings, especially in the draughts, was nothing exceptional in a general sense. In fact dealers say good animals, even of the heavy class, are becoming harder and harder to get. While a dearth has long existed regarding high-class saddle and carriage horses, it is only lately that the drain on the heavy classes has been severely felt and it is fast becoming a matter of calling for government action. Railway construction and the opening up of the country in every direction have brought about a serious situation. Inferior animals have been selling abnormally well for the one reason that the decent class are held beyond the prices that the average buyer is willing to pay. The sales by auction announced for the next five days number 1215 horses of all classes, which at $150 apiece means a turnover of $306,250 for the week or at the rate of nearly $11,000,000 (eleven million dollars) a year. And this independent of the private and commission sales by dealers outside the great marts.

THE BUREAU'S LATEST. Major W. A. Wadsworth, chairman of the New York State Racing Commission and master of the Genesee Valley Hunt, a gentleman almost as well known in this part of the world as in his own state, has generously donated the brown thoroughbred stallion, Beau Gallant, to the Canadian National Bureau of Breeding. Beau Gallant was formerly owned by S. C. Hildreth and bearing that gentleman's colors, won many a fine race. As a two-year-old carrying 125 pounds, after getting away seventh in a field of ten, and at 20 to 1, he won the Second Matron at Westchester, beating Commando, 124; The Farrier, 117, and other colts of subsequent note. This is regarded as a specially graceful act on the part of Major Wadsworth as a bureau representative beat his horse, Shotgun, at the recent National Horse Show in New York. Not only was Beau Gallant a good race-horse, but he has done well at the stud, having many fine colts and fillies to his credit. He is perfectly sound, a superior individual, and a horse well calculated to improve the stock of this country. As the manager and founder of the bureau says: "If private individuals, and foreigners at that, show such a generosity to the bureau, surely the government should manifest a like spirit." Beau Gallant is worth $5000 and once sold for four times that amount. Mr. Ryan further expresses doubt if the government realizes that this is the first time in the history of horse breeding that any country received foreign thoroughbreds specially grateful act on the part of

HOW THE OTHER HALF LIVES

If I had $5 to give the foreman. Not one, but half a hundred, have that reply to give. "It is something, surely, that needs looking into here," said another.

"I was working on a farm but was not wanted after the harvest, so I came here, thinking I could get work. I am starting out from the old country on a cheap rate. Sold out my home to come here, on the strength of emigration advertising. I have been unable to get a job since I came here."

"I always come to Toronto in the winter and it's none of your business." "Come here looking for work, say, could you?" "Trying to get a job. If I don't get it to-morrow, I'll break into jail, tho' I hate to do it."

How They Live. These are some of the explanations of their presence, and they cover a wide field; but how do they live? We will follow them to their resting places.

The House of Industry, the Victor Mission, the jail, the British Welcome League, the various societies, the House of Providence, have all and more than they can handle. The Salvation Army is working overtime to the accommodation for the army of the unemployed, and still, on street corners are swarms of helpless men.

In squalid cottages and dilapidated tenements, on dingy streets near the Don, in the questionable houses of the York-street and West Adelaide; in the "ward" north of West Queen-street, are scores of lodging houses where beds can be had for 15 cents. Some are filthy and clean, most are filthy beyond description, but all are full to overflowing with a motley crowd. They are kept by foreigners of every nationality; few by Canadians or British; but, under their unhygienic shelter, they are getting their rest for aching limbs and the solace of sleep for hunger and a broken heart.

Slept in Piano Box. One man told the writer that he passed the coldest night of the winter in an empty piano box in a back alley. "It was rather cramped," he said, "with simple padding, but got fairly warm after I had been in an hour or two. Any way, it was better than freezing."

Two or three others avowed that they slept in empty box cars with only their overcoats for covering. "Ye gods! fancy it, you who open the register in your bedroom before you crawl under the eiderdown quilt!"

How do they subsist in the daytime? Here comes a question that is harder to answer. Those who beg will not acknowledge it for obvious reasons, altho there is hardly a housewife in Toronto but can tell of food handed out gratuitously to the poor men at the door. Those who have little house jobs to go to will not say too much for fear of being expulso. Only those who do not know themselves as being in this legion. We must confess that the food problem of these hungry hundreds is still somewhat of an enigma.

Last evening, tired of asking questions and receiving evasive replies, the writer tried another plan; that of listening instead of talking, and he was well repaid.

Superior Lodging House. He found a large, old house, that had seen better days, with a board outside announcing: "Good, cheap beds, 15c and 20c." Passing in under pretense of looking for a friend, he entered the first room from which he heard voices. It was a not uncosy kind of room, with a dark red carpet. On one side was a disused fireplace with handsome marble mantelpiece, relic of bygone days. On the other side and end, a little table close together, but fairly comfortable-looking, were ranged seven fifteen-cent beds. A stovepipe from some room below ran up between the mantel and the door. Learning what and why he challenged against the wall, he took in the scene in detail.

The only nine o'clock, each bed had its occupant, for the man without money, perforce, retires early. Squatting on the floor between the stovepipe and the door, were two or three visitors from other rooms. The house held many lodgers. The air was hazy with smoke and redolent of the pungent fumes of burning "snipes."

cigars picked up in the gutters. Sounds nasty. Myes. But they come cheaper than tobacco when your nickel is needed for soup.

A discussion of the situation was in progress, sort of parliamentary committee. The hon. member for the bed near the door, a well-favored, middle-aged man, took up the debate as the writer entered.

"Boys, boys, it's fierce. I was born just outside Toronto fifty years ago, and I've worked here man and boy nearly every year since. I came back late in the fall from a visit to my brother in the States and have not been able to get a job. I walked to Weston and back to-day to get fifteen cents for my bed, and all I had to eat was a piece of bread. I picked up crossing the railway. To-morrow I am going out to the Junction, a woman has promised me twenty-five cents to none of my name ever went to jail or the poorhouse, and I won't be the first. I'll starve to death before I do."

"Booze was my downfall," said the next man, who, in a sixty-three years of age, and have held a good position and owned property. Now I am down and out and my own daughters forbid me their houses.

I have a brother-in-law a J.P., who threatens to have me arrested if I'm seen on his street. I don't drink now, but it makes no difference, see, nothing ahead but to get taken into some home."

Two Days in the Pogle. "Don't try the Pogle" (House of Industry) came a brisk voice from the street. "I'll tell you my experience there. Last Saturday I couldn't raise the price of a meal or a bed. I went up there and asked for one night as I had a friend coming thru on the Sunday, who had promised to hold me up for a week and I had a job to go to Monday. Half past eight next morning I went to the office to get out. An old fellow shouted at me as if I was a dog. "Can't get out here Sunday—don't care what you want. Get out of this office." I had to stay in all that day and break two boards stone Monday before they would let me out. I missed my friend, lost my job, had my clothes spoiled and did seven hours work for two beds and five cents—see, see, see, see, see, see. Call that charity! Bah!"

The hon. member spat contemptuously upon the floor. The hon. member on the street took up the thread. He was young and sat up with his arms round his knees as he spoke.

"I'm just back from across the Don. Thirty days for begging. I asked a guy on Stone-street for the price of my bed. I'd had nothing to eat for two days, but a frozen sandwich I picked up on Richmond-street. Bull checked me and evens my life away. They taught us at school that poverty is no crime. I've been herded with drunks and criminals, locked in a dog kennel at night, given food enough to keep life and body together and done two dollars worth of work a day for the city. It's a—grat. If a man can't get work—what's he to do? He's got to beg or steal. There ain't no third course."

False Pretences. "I did not know when I was well off," broke in an English voice. "I checked me and evens my life away and threw it up to come here. Then bloody lies told by the immigration people caught me. And it was all Toronto—Toronto, Queen City of the West, carpets paved with gold and hall that Tommy-rot. Work for all! Where's it? (Blo' me, mates, where is it, I ask?) Now the old brother, and he's got to beg or steal. There ain't no third course."

CALGARY is the leading city between Winnipeg and Vancouver, and has as fine a climate as you can get in the world. It now claims a population of 50,000, and this coming fall will have three railroads instead of one. There is no city in Canada with brighter prospects.

The above illustration shows the location of PASADENA. It is right in the heart of railway activity, and is located in the section that should shortly be dotted with manufacturers' buildings, where they will be convenient to sidings, etc. Free sites are being offered manufacturers in the vicinity of above property and it is claimed that at least four have decided to locate there.

PASADENA lots are being sold at a close figure for a quick sale. Buyers should make from 50 to 100 per cent. on their investment before the present year is gone.

take the bread from our mouths. Listen to the bread to the Dago talk. What right have they to give these scum the preference over us British subjects? They work on the railroads in the summer and drift into the cities in the winter. What good are they to the country? I asks him. "Do they settle down and raise families? Not one in twenty. They hoard up our good Canadian money and ship it home to their dirty sinkholes in Europe, and when they have enough they follow it and a fresh batch comes out. Wise policy to coin money here and send it over to keep the damn Egyptians and Syrians and Macedonians. Dam the policy, I don't think. That's the cause, minister, of the unemployed in our land. Some of these days, I see, "mark my words, there'll be a race war in this country, and that's no idle dream. Good-night."

The speaker's verdict was agreed to without a dissentient voice and the debate closed.

Growing Burden. The writer as he walked home pondered deeply over the problem. The rough rhetoric of these men who knew the situation better than trustees of charities or masters of jails gave much food for thought. The question of the unemployed is a pressing one; it grows and multiplies, and it is a disgrace to a young country, besides being an intolerable burden every winter. Some of these men are rogues—bound to be; the great majority are looking for work to support themselves and their loved one. It's not right to treat them as criminals. Something must be done and that right quickly. Did the mail speaker in this red-room hit the nail on the head? What do you think about it, good readers? Have you any suggestions to make as to civic labor or the altering of the immigration laws?

A Club for Each Wife. The marriage customs of the Papuans are somewhat similar to those of many other savage races. The ceremony is largely a matter of purchase. The men marry when they are about 18 years of age and the girls at 14, or even earlier.

When a young lake man desires to get married he visits the father of his prospective bride and puts forward his personal belongings as an inducement to the father to consent to the union.

If a man has a gun he is a great personage and can demand anything, but besides their bows and arrows and spears most of the Papuans have very little. Even agricultural produce is scarce, the only cultivation undertaken being on a very primitive scale.

A little clearing is made by both men and women, and the women grow bananas and sweet potatoes. The men are always armed, and when the women go to the patch to attend to their crops or gather the produce the men go with them as a protection. The women, however, do the work.

Many families have a bundle of ancient Portuguese cloth centuries old, and when a young man is seeking a bride one of these heirlooms is generally part of the deal. The youth and the girl's father haggle over the terms and then the thing is done. The men are not limited to one wife, and once a girl is married she is subject to her husband in everything and is practically his slave.

Twelfth Day and its Cakes

Once upon a time, before Boxing Day became a legalized holiday, before bank holidays had been imagined, Twelfth Day was one of the most popular of popular festivals.

Such are the scenes that at the front and side of the Twelfth cake shops, scattered wild dismay, as up the slippery curb or pavement wide, we seek the pastrycook's to keep Twelfth Day.

The origin of the Twelfth Day festival, it must be allowed, distinctly pagan. In "Honey's Every-day" the selection of kings by beans. Our Twelfth Day nearly coincides with the Roman saturnalia, when a royal election was conducted in the same way.

The old Twelfth Night cake does not seem to have any of the side of extravagance of material, being composed of flour, honey, ginger, and pepper, which latter item recalls the methods of the maker of cream tarts in the Arabian Nights.

Now here the mirth comes with the cake full of puns. Where beans the king of the sport? Besides we must know the pea also. Must revel, as queen, in the court here.

When you are told by your grocer that the bread he shows you is as good as TOMLIN'S it is the sincerest form of praise.

Watch Welland Grow

We believe that well located real estate in a growing town offers one of the safest investments, combined with the promise of large increase in value which it is possible to secure.

We know that Welland has had a greater industrial growth in proportion to its size during the past two years than any other town or city in Canada.

We know that Welland has secured a new factory every sixty days during the past two years.

We know that Welland has a greater combination of advantages to offer the manufacturers than any other town in Canada, viz:—

- SEVEN RAILROADS
WELLAND CANAL
CHEAP POWER ($12.00 Per Horse-power)
CHEAP GAS (30c Per Thousand)
CHEAP SITES

We know that there are not enough houses in Welland today to supply the workingmen there at present.

We know that there are six large plants preparing to build during 1911, and that they propose employing some 5000 more workingmen.

We know that these men will need homes, and that they will need lots on which to build these homes.

Therefore we believe lots in Welland South, a workingman's high-class residential district, adjoining the factory district south of Welland, which we are offering for sale for a short time at from $60.00 each up—offer an opportunity for investment, combining absolute security with a strong probability of doubling in value within the next year.

Opportunities For Investment Equal To This Are Very Rare Indeed.

Therefore if you have any money to spare we would advise you to fill in your name and address below and forward to us, when we will be pleased to send further particulars

Two Days' Buoyancy on American Market Inspires More Pronounced Public Interest.

World Office. Saturday Evening, Jan. 14. Incidents both beneficial and otherwise have developed in connection with the New York market this week.

Wall street had an uneventful week. The situation in connection with the New York market has not been at all conspicuous and it was hard to decide upon the trend of prices.

Public confidence has been shaken mainly by the knowledge of poor commercial conditions. A species of fright has taken possession of those who have been followers of the market and many have ceased trading.

Cheap money is being taken advantage of by the market. The Bank of England did not reduce its rate of discount this week, the statement was a strong one for this period of the year and an early lowering of the rate to 4 per cent is expected.

OVERCROWDING OF CARS NOT TOLERATED ABROAD

United Kingdom. One of the reasons the "queue" system is generally observed, even when there is no officer to enforce order, is the practice of the public owners opening their doors to the cars at certain hours for parts of the people wait in line. Passengers board the cars at the front end and leave from the rear. When a car has its full quota of passengers the motorman draws a chain across the entrance and the conductor one across the exit, and no one is permitted to get on board until the destination of a passenger is reached. The cars run on the left track.

Overcrowding of Cars—Demands Met

London. There are occasions when complaints are made that passengers are delayed by the regulations prohibiting overcrowding of cars. This is most noticeable about 1 o'clock on Saturdays, which is universally a half holiday, and especially when the weather is bad. However, the only real inconvenience for those who want to board a car in the rush hours is near the beginning or end of a line, when the car is filled with passengers, which sometimes makes a person late in reaching his place of work.

In order to supply a sufficient number of cars to meet the demands of the rush hours, it is usual to start 76 cars at 5 o'clock in the morning, which number is increased to 273 between 7.30 o'clock, after which the number fluctuates, being 236 from 6 to 8 o'clock in the evening. The cars are of one class and there is no special service for business men at higher fares; the clerks, tradespeople and workmen are not treated differently, although those who ride before 8 o'clock in the morning have the advantage of the return and cheaper fare.

MANCHESTER.

At the various termini and busy centres the "queue" system has been adopted and is brought into use whenever there is a rush of passengers. The regulations made by the authorities against standing or overcrowding do not to any serious extent delay the movement of crowds in rush hours. As a general rule the Manchester corporation tramways are able to satisfactorily cope with the traffic by providing extra cars at rush hours.

The cars commence running about 7 o'clock in the morning, and up to 7 o'clock tickets are sold at workpeople's rates, when passengers buy a ticket for a single trip, or one for return which is good any time during the day of issue. The rates are as follows: The ordinary 3 and 4 cent fares are reduced to 2 cents; 5 and 6 cent fares to 3 cents; and 7 and 8 cent fares to 4 cents.

In the borough of Salford, which adjoins this city, the regulations provide that women in receipt of not more than $3.65 per week may travel at workpeople's rates up to 9 o'clock a.m., and many purchase return tickets at cheap rates any hour of the day.

LEEDS.

In this city the street car service is augmented three times a day to cover the times for commencing work, mid-day meal, and return from work. At such times about 30 per cent. more cars are placed upon the ordinary system. Workmen are entitled to special privilege of 4 miles for 1 penny (2c.), but a return ticket must be purchased before 7.45 a.m. and return may not be made before 12 noon. This privilege is extended to all others fulfilling the conditions named.

Standing in the interior of the car is allowed to the extent of eight persons over the number of seats provided, namely, 55. Straps are provided for the use of such persons and for convenience in walking thru the car. Rushing and crowding is minimized by prohibiting more than the number specified. In the case of special rushes it sometimes happens that a little delay will be occasioned, but the traffic generally is well provided for.

BELFAST.

The street railways in Ireland, as in England, have three classes of passengers, the rates for which are about 6 cents per mile first-class, 4 cents second-class and 2 cents third-class, the minimum fare being especially for tradespeople, clerks and workmen. Overcrowding is prevented by the conductor closing the gate of the platform when he has passengers enough on the car. Under certain circumstances eight passengers are allowed to stand on the lower deck and the same number on the upper deck. No difference is made in the street car service and all persons have the same privileges.

MARSEILLES.

The system of traction is the overhead trolley. Most of the cars are of the semi-convertible type, 28.9 feet in length, with accommodation for 48 persons, 21 seated inside and 28 standing on the platforms. The cars in the suburban service are of the same type and 40 feet in length. The open cars and a number of closed and semi-convertible ones are used as trailers, which are 25 feet in length. There are no double-deck cars.

In Marseilles all the street cars contain a card or plaque on the front and rear platforms, and also in the interior, which states the number of seats provided and the number of standing places.

The service is ungraded, and there is no classification of passengers and compartments, the fare being 1.33 cents within the city limits, except for circular trips, for which the charge is 2.89 cents. No transfers are given.

BRUSSELS.

There is no special increase in the street railway traffic of Brussels in the morning at the opening of business, as the majority of workmen walk to their work, and from 6 to 7 o'clock overcrowding is hardly noticeable. Workmen reside generally in the neighborhood of industrial plants and factories, but weekly tickets are issued at reduced rates by the tramway companies.

Overcrowding on street cars is strictly prohibited and does not occur, the number of passengers being restricted by the city regulations, which are enforced by the car conductors and the police. These regulations delay transportation to a certain extent, but during rush hours extra cars are added to meet the demand.

There are only two classes of street cars in this city—the fare for the first-class being 3 cents for an ordinary distance and 1 cent additional for longer, while for the second class the minimum charge is 2 cents.

BERLIN.

Increased traffic during rush hours is provided for by decreasing the running intervals of trains and cars during these periods; also in the case of surface cars by adding trailers, and on the elevated and subway lines by increasing the size of the trains. Police regulations are in force providing that the number of seats and standing places—the latter rarely exceeding seven—must be posted in conspicuous places on the cars. A greater number of passengers may be carried in the following cases: On week days between the hours of 11 p.m. and the close of the regular schedule; during sudden showers, snow storms, etc.; when traffic is interrupted; on occasions of parades, fairs, public festivities, and large funerals; and on Sundays and holidays from 3 o'clock in the afternoon till the close of the regular schedule. In addition to the weekday privileges. During bad weather and interruption of traffic one extra person may be carried on the front and rear platforms, and two are permitted in cars having longitudinal seats and three in cars having cross seats. Violations of these regulations are punishable by a fine of $14, or imprisonment in case of inability to pay the fine. In omnibuses an excess of passengers is not permitted, owing to existing laws for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

Workmen's tickets are issued by the electric and steam city and suburban railways to persons who are bona fide workmen. The tickets are sold at cheaper rates than any other tickets, and are good for one week, and entitle the holder to ride at any time or on night. The electric surface companies also make special rates for workmen and school children. In the case of workmen the tickets are good for one week, and cost 11.9 cents, when used once a day and 23.8 cents when used twice daily. The tickets are good only before 7 a.m. and after 5 p.m. School tickets are issued for periods of from one to twelve months in any calendar year without restriction as to the time used, and cost 71.4 cents a month when used on two car lines and 23.8 cents for each additional line.

MOSCOW.

The superiority of the car lines in Moscow is apparent to the casual observer in the well constructed and smooth roadbed; the cars exercised at street crossings and corners where cars are compelled to stop whether or not passengers alight or are taken on; the absence of strap hanging and crowding of the platforms; the civility of the conductors and motormen; and the reasonable fares charged.

The cars are commodious, seating comfortably 26 persons, with standing room for 8 more on the rear platform of the trailer. No one is permitted to remain standing in the car or to take advantage of the straps, nor can the front platform be occupied (with certain exceptions), the passengers being admitted by the rear and leaving by the front platform.

These ordinances naturally delay the immense throngs of people at certain times of the day, and it is no unfamiliar sight to witness scores at the principal centres waiting during the rush hours of the morning and evening. This traffic, however, which congests certain sections of the city, principally during the summer months when the largest part of Moscow's population is residing at the numerous country resorts surrounding the city, is quite satisfactorily handled by the addition of extra cars, mostly trailers, and more expeditious schedules.

Each passenger is presented with a ticket, which he must preserve until he leaves the car. He must be ready to exhibit the same to the inspector, who is likely to board the car at any time.

Only one class prevails in Moscow, the fares being 5, 10 and 15 kopecks (2 1/2, 5 and 7 1/2 cents). The fare of 5 kopecks is for 1 1/2 to 2 miles; 8 kopecks for 2 miles, and 10 kopecks to suburban parks, race tracks, and other suburban places of amusement. A reduced fare of 3, 5 and 8 kopecks, according to distance, is charged from 8 to 4 a.m. for the benefit of the working classes. Special rates are also given to students of the university and pupils of the numerous educational institutions.

The net profits of the 200-mile municipal trolley system were $1,000,000 in 1909, and $1,474,555 for the first eight months of 1910. In fact, they may reach $2,000,000 for the full year.

Lloyd-George and His Creed

During the course of the recent British electoral campaign, two business men of this city got into conversation regarding the political issues on which it turned. One of them has always belonged to the Canadian Liberal party, and naturally, therefore, might be expected to sympathize with the Liberals of the United Kingdom. Contrariwise, he expressed himself somewhat to this effect: "I have been a Reformer all my days, but I don't like Lloyd-George and his socialistic notions." Our friend is not alone holding this totally erroneous view of Mr. Asquith's chancellor of the exchequer, based, in all likelihood, on the distorted criticism of the London Unionist press. On the face of things, it is not a little curious that so many Canadians should exhibit an almost personal antipathy to Mr. Lloyd-George, a democrat certainly, and a fighting democrat at that, but a man who has risen from the ranks by sheer force of character and ability to high place and power, and who has the reversion of the premiership of the greatest empire the world has yet seen well within his grasp. Just because he has done this, because he has been and is a fearless champion of the masses of the people, because he has been and is the resolute opponent of hereditary and landed privilege, he is cordially hated and abused by the holders of these privileges and by their press organs.

Just about the time when the conversation noted above took place, another conversation also happened between Mr. Lloyd-George and the well-known British journalist, Mr. Harold Begbie. It appeared in The British Weekly, whose editor, Sir William Robertson Nichol, has done and is doing yeoman service on behalf of political and social reform. Mr. Begbie prefaced his record of the conversation with a brief but deft sketch of the personality of the statesman he had interviewed and asked: "Is it not worth your while to consider what he has to say, to forget all the vile abuse of him to which you have ever listened, and patiently, seriously, dispassionately to reflect upon his place and his meaning in this great commonwealth of England?" He quotes also a remark made to him by a French lady who understands English politics: "Nothing in Englishmen, Englishmen with their sense of fairness and justice—nothing strikes me so much as the bitterness of their intolerance towards Mr. Lloyd-George. They will not even hear what he has to say. I cannot understand it. It is so unlike Englishmen." If this French lady could not understand the attitude of Englishmen, even those whose inherited privileges and vested interests were attacked she would have still more difficulty in understanding why so many Canadians, who pride themselves on their democracy and claim to be reformers, should display similar unreasonable bitterness towards Mr. Lloyd-George and lose no opportunity of sneering at his motives and the cause he champions. But let him speak for himself.

Lloyd-George is not a socialist, and he thus states why that is so: "I am not a socialist, because I have never yet seen a scheme of things formulated by socialism which comes within the four corners of practicability. I want things done. I want dreams, but dreams which are realizable. I want aspiration and discontent, but they must be aspiration and discontent leading to a real paradise on a real earth, in which men can live here and now and fulfil the destiny of the human race. I do not say that socialism is a madness; I should distrust myself if I found the door of my mind closing against new ideas; but I say honestly and firmly that never yet have I seen a scheme of things propounded by socialists which a practical man of affairs could adopt and bring into actual existence. That is why I am not a socialist. I want to make life better and kinder and safer now, now at this moment; suffering is too close to me; misery is too near and insistent; injustice is too obvious and glaring; danger is too present—I cannot wait; I cannot work for the twenty-fifth century; no I must work here and now; I must alter and adjust things, as they are for the safety, honor and welfare of the century in which I live." "And you think," Mr. Begbie asked, "that they can be altered without violence and upheaval?" "Of course, of course," Mr. Lloyd-George answered. His confidence was justified, for the British parliamentary system throws no difficulty in the way of the electoral will, once it is expressed and maintained.

In reply to the question: "Why are you a Liberal?" Mr. Lloyd-George said: "The place of Liberalism in the world, the meaning of it, is moving in England more surely and certainly to the apprehension of reasonable men than in any other country. This is because British Liberalism is alive. And it is a good omen. As soon as a man is intellectually capable of standing outside the prejudices and traditions of a particular caste; as soon as he is able to stand superior to the pitiful snobishness and miserable class ignorance, which do so much to disfigure our national life, he perceives, he must perceive, that Liberalism is the true force of evolution in politics. I am speaking of a live Liberalism. The old sleepy and half-conservative Liberalism is dead. Liberalism to-day is young, alert and conscious of an ideal. It is capturing the imagination of the people. What is this school of human thought which we call Liberalism? It is a conviction that life can be better, stronger and worthier of humanity than it is at present; it is a conviction that great and most beneficent changes can be effected without revolution; it is a conviction that unless there is growth, steady and health-giving growth, you can have only one of two things in England—either paralysis or death. Anarchy threatens civilization with paralysis; Conservatism threatens it with death."

"Let it be seen," he said again, "by all sane and upright men what Liberalism stands for; let it be grasped by the consciousness of the whole nation that Liberalism is the evolutionary principle in politics—and how peacefully, how easily, how uninterruptedly we shall pass from the present base and hideous condition of things to a destiny which, at any rate, will less offend the taste of the refined, less wound the conscience of the just and less heavily and hopelessly degrade the poor." What is there in these declarations of political faith to alarm any Canadian? Mr. Lloyd-George is not attacking property—he wants a more equitable division of property. He wants to lay the chief burden of taxation on those best able to bear it—he wants to provide some nearer approach to equality of opportunity—just what Canadians boast that they possess. Mr. Begbie closes his article with the following tribute: "No man has been more misrepresented; no man more scandalously vilified. But a kinder-hearted, simpler-mannered, nobler-inspired and more honorable man never rose from poverty to power. He is hated by the unimaginative dullard, the incorrigible snob, the timorous and definitely wicked. But he is a safe man, a wise man and a good man; and at his back is much that makes in England for enlightenment and righteousness."

Discovered

Discovered again. Uncle Sam recently had an English reporter "do" New York and Washington in 36 hours, and when he gets back home he will write his impressions of the country. We often read that European travelers are asked, on their first visit to New York and before they have landed from the steamer: "What do you think of America?" And invariably the answer is returned that is most pleasing to the ears of the scribe. But there has been another English explorer, C. Reginald Enock, who has written of his travels in the United States. Doubtless he was more than 36 hours in the country, for he ascertained among other things:

The heat in New York is so intense in summer that the women go about clothed in a single garment called "a Mother Hubbard," and during the summer Chicago women clothed in Mother Hubbards sit upon the front steps of their houses. It is of interest to learn that the name "Manhattan" is of Dutch origin and that the huge skyscrapers of New York and Chicago rest upon wooden piles driven into the ground. From one of the pictures in Mr. Enock's book we are interested to learn that the Columbia River flows thru Montana, and in another place we are instructed that the Chicago drainage canal takes its water from Lake Michigan by means of "a subaqueous tunnel," reaching out under that body of water. Those who had supposed that the coinage of the 2-cent piece was stopped 20 or more years ago will here learn that the coin is still in circulation. Likewise it is information that a street urchin addressed Mr. Enock as "master."

We had supposed that if there was an article of diet which was indigenous to Uncle Sam's domain it was pie. In fact, English writers have unanimously decided that this was so. But it appears we were wrong. Pie, Mr. Enock tells us, is probably of Scottish origin. Moreover, also he enjoyed a pumpkin pie given to him by a California woman, he discovered that she did not know how to make the dish, whereupon he proceeded to instruct her. Here is his recipe: "A deep dish filled with fruit and no pastry on the bottom; a generous supply of fruit—no thin, scanty spreading of pumpkin—and then a cup placed in the middle to support the covering crust, so that, when you eat this pie there is a large supply of fruit, and when you think you have taken out all the juice, you lift the cup and a further generous and unexpected flow appears."

Gems of Canadian Verse

O, Love builds on the azure sea,
And Love builds on the golden sand,
And Love builds on the rose-winged cloud,
And sometimes Love builds on the land!

O, if Love build on sparkling sea,
And if Love build on golden strand,
And if Love build on rosy cloud,
To Love these are the solid land!

O, Love will build his pearly walls,
And Love his pearly roof will rear
On cloud, or land, or mist, or sea—
Love's solid land is everywhere.

Uncle Sam's Great Library

The United States is to have the world's biggest library. She holds third rank now, but Mr. Putnam, librarian of congress, has plans which will crowd the Bibliotheque Nationale and the British Museum into inferior positions. He is going to add quite a number of "miles" of books to the present stock. In 1909-10 425,925 printed volumes were added to the library, against 166,634 to the Bibliotheque Nationale and 149,464 to the British Museum.

As a reference place, the library of congress, occupying the largest and finest building of its kind in the world, is of incalculable value to government officials, members of the senate and the house and the employes in the various departments, as it comprises history, political science, official documents of national, state and foreign character, and reasonably complete data on purely American subjects. While the circle of borrowers from its shelves is extremely limited, what is termed an "inter-library" loan system allows other libraries temporary use of helpful volumes not required at the time in Washington.

In this way, the library of congress appears to be, in a sense, the hub of the American library wheel. It is inevitable that such a huge collection should have retained much that is of little real value, dusty tomes and papers that waste space; but a great deal of this matter will be sorted out and removed. Careful supervision, particularly as to growth, will make the library of congress continue to be the great illuminant of governmental deliberations.

Credit Where Due

J. S. Ewart, one of Canada's legal representatives before The Hague Tribunal, which decided the fisheries dispute, has written a letter, the object of which is to take from Sir Alan Aylesworth the chief glory of the victory. Mr. Ewart is a fair man, and his word that Sir Alan was unfamiliar with the details of the controversy can be accepted as truth.

But who believed that Sir Alan Aylesworth had delved into the archives and brought forth the mass of information that was to serve the chief counsel in their presentation of the case for Canada and Newfoundland to the tribunal? Nobody. Men learned in the law, and Mr. Ewart was one of them, were employed for that purpose, and when the digging was done, it was for the counsel to make such use of it as they required in the interest of the British contestant.

There was glory enough to go round. Canada has been so accustomed to see the other fellow, especially when the other fellow happened to be the United States, get the better of an arbitration bout that the winning of the chief points in the fisheries dispute was considerable solace, and a squabble as to which one of the many Canadians who attended the court should be given the greater share of the credit is not immediately interesting. Nobody begrudges Sir Alan Aylesworth his title for services rendered; and Sir Alan is big enough not to deprive Mr. Ewart and the other legal gentlemen connected with the case of the glory that comes from the award of the arbitrators.

Apart from The Hague dispute, however, we all remember that it was Sir Alan Aylesworth, then plain Mister, who protested in the name of Canada against the cringing attitude of Lord Chief Justice Alverstone, when the United States, by and with the consent of that dignity, was enabled to walk off with the lion's share of the proceeds of the Alaskan boundary dispute. For that act, if for no other, Mr. Aylesworth is entitled to the gratitude of the people of Canada and Great Britain. He has served Canada well, even if we have to reluctantly admit he seems to be out of place in parliament.

The fact that Alaska has gained only 1 per cent. in population in the last ten years would seem to indicate that something needs developing up there.

Are Churches Doing Their Work

The presence of Mr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander in Toronto for a revival campaign has raised the old question: Are the churches performing their proper functions? We know that a great many people are not in favor of appealing to the emotions, and that many people think that the soul-stirring efforts of such men as Mr. Chapman or Dr. Torrey or Crossley and Hunter are not working for the lasting good of the people, and that their meetings are or will be soon forgotten.

When the city preachers were talking about the organization of the present campaign some of them were inclined to discourage the idea, not because there was no need of an awakening but because they thought the churches should do the work that they were importing Messrs. Chapman and Alexander to do.

Take for example the Methodist body. Are they doing their work? Are they attracting to their services young men and women outside of any church? Doubtless some are doing this, but we know that many in Toronto fall a long way short of the old churches that 20 years ago made Methodism the strong force it was for the uplifting of mankind. They have learned preachers and splendid vocalists; an exclusive membership; frescoed walls and ceilings—but, beyond that, what? A few rich men pay the salaries of the ministers, the organist and the sweet-voiced singer, and the officials are very happy in the possession of abundant finances to keep the mortgage off the edifice.

But how about the poor man who can't hold up his end? Where does he go? Cold-shouldered out, and if he must go to church he will select the poor mission chapel, where the communicants are no richer than himself.

How about the unattached man and woman of the boarding house, who are attracted by the fine preaching and the splendid singing and approach the ushers of one of these gilded places of worship? They are sized up as nickle contributors and put in a back seat, in the draught of the door or behind a gallery post. Nobody cares for them there, and if they possess a spark of self-respect that church will see them no more.

But what of others of the down-town churches, planted where the floating population is large? Would you think that an ordinary man could go into one of these churches Sunday after Sunday for year after year and never make the acquaintance of any one beyond the usher who showed him to his seat? Years ago, ministers were selected, partly at least, for their ability to do pastoral work. They went into the highways and byways and they compelled sinners to go in. They made them welcome; visited them in their homes, and gave them the spiritual and moral uplift.

That this is no longer the way in many of the churches of Toronto is a reproach to the pastors who now unite to stir the Christian community with the fiery eloquence of a Chapman and the sweet notes of an Alexander.

Another proposition: Is the work of the revival lasting? Not all of it, perhaps, but certainly a good deal. It would be impossible, of course, to measure the good that is done by a campaign such as that which is now being held in Toronto by the number of converts who become attached to the churches by reason of the work of the evangelists.

Critics of Dr. Chapman will say that he is soon forgotten, and after his departure the churches will settle down in the same old way. It will be the fault of the ministers themselves if this is the case. Their effort should be to follow the lead of Messrs. Chapman and Alexander; to interview and canvass all those who have taken an interest in the meetings, and throw their doors wide open to those persons who are not now attached to any church.

Learned discourses and fine singing may hold some of these people for a while, but if they are going to get the cold shoulder it will not be long before another revival will be needed in Toronto.

The churches are not wide awake. Many of them are content to hold that which they have and leave the great work of rescue to such active organizations as the Salvation Army, which seeks out those who are in distress of body and mind and gives them both the new start and the support necessary to sustain them in the beginning of their Christian pilgrimage.

GENTLEMEN BURGLARS IN HIGH POSITIONS CAUGHT A-BURGling

Attend to Professional Duties by Day and by Night Break Into Houses of Society Swells.

BUDAPEST, Jan. 14.—A band of seven gentlemen burglars has been discovered here by the Hungarian police through the capture of one of their number. The wife of a notary, on returning to her flat, discovered that the door had been forced, and in the dining-room she found a young man of her acquaintance named Emmerich Prager in evening dress helping himself to the silver. Despite his protestations that he was only looking at the plate while waiting for her husband, she locked him in the room and telephoned to the police. He confessed when arrested that he belonged to a band of seven, who, like himself, had a superior education, and were in respectable positions, he being the secretary of a company. They attended to their professional duties by day, and in the evening, at night they broke into the houses of people they knew in society, when they had reason to believe that they would not be at home.

London To Fight Yankee Meat Trust With Municipal Cold Storage Plants

Scheme Will Have Far-Reaching Results Upon the Trade—Eighty Per Cent. of Supplies Consumed by Metropolis Are of Foreign Origin—Cold Storage Warehouses to be Erected at Smithfield Market.

By Phillip Everett. LONDON, Jan. 14.—The American Meat Trust, which has just been patting itself on the back for having apparently succeeded in forming a world wide concern able to dictate to the people of all nations what they should eat and what prices they must pay, is doomed to meet with a great disappointment here in London, for the greatest city in the world is seriously and, correspondingly, the meat trade has declined. In building the market the city used the basement for an underground railway station, so that the supplies could go right into the market. This was, at the time, regarded as a brilliant achievement, but the advent of cold storage reveals that the utilization of the basement in this manner was a mistake. The result now is that the city cannot provide cold storage accommodation below the market, and the situation has been met by private companies providing cold stores outside. There is still room for more accommodation, and that is why the whole subject has not come up for consideration. If the city can acquire the private concerns they will have the complete control of the trade.

France Will Adopt New Time Standard

Clocks Will Be Set Back Nine Minutes to Conform to Greenwich.

PARIS, Jan. 14.—After a discussion lasting twenty-six years France is about to adopt Greenwich time. All clocks will have to be put back 9 min. 21 sec. The bill enacting this reform has already been passed by the chamber of deputies, and is about to be introduced in the senate, where it is expected, it will be approved. The bill runs: "Legal time in France and Algeria shall be the mean time of Greenwich, retarded by 9 min. and 21 sec." France, Greece, Holland, and Portugal have hitherto been the only European countries to dissent from the plan of the Washington conference, which legal time throughout the world. This scheme consisted in dividing the world into twenty-four zones, the time in each differing by an hour from that in the adjacent sections. Thus, West Europe (Greenwich time) is an hour behind Mid-Europe, time is an hour behind that of East Europe. France has hitherto held aloof from the arrangements, thus annoying that the Greenwich meridian was chosen instead of that of Paris as the point from which Western European time began.

Big Water Factory For St. Petersburg

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 14.—The largest "water factory," as it has been christened, in the world, has begun supplying water to the St. Petersburg mains. It takes in Neva water, allows it to stand in tanks, whence it passes through filters, and finally through an apparatus that charges it with ozone, which is claimed to destroy all kinds of germs and microorganisms. The purified water is then run into the mains. The factory is the work of a German firm. The electric energy required for the "ozoning apparatus" is 8000 volts, and the total cost of the undertaking to the city about $750,000.

Brothers in New Parliament

To no section of the last British Parliament have the fates been so unkind as to the small band of parliamentary brothers. At the dissolution there were seventeen families represented by two brothers each in the house of commons, and in spite of the small number of seats that have changed hands, the number of these "family parties" that have been broken up by the election is surprising. Mr. Herbert Hope, the Conservative member for Bute, has to mourn the defeat of his brother, the Liberal member for West Fife, while Lord Morpeth, one of the Conservative whips, has lost the seat of the Hon. Geoffrey Howard, who lost his seat in the Tories. In Ireland the brothers Healy have changed their luck this time. Last January they were Conservatives, but after being re-elected for Northeast Cork. The result in North Louth leaves "Tim" seatless, whilst brother Healy has won back the lost seat for the Conservatives.

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, has just sailed for Australia on a visit to Lord and Lady Dudley, whose unfortunate matrimonial troubles have created such a stir both locally and at home. The duchess is going out presumably for her health, but really to act as a mediator between Lord and Lady Dudley, who is probably the most deservedly popular woman of title in London. As a very young girl, Lady Dudley, who is Miss Rachel Gurney, and a member of a famous Norfolk family, was left motherless, and Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, took up the child, finished her education, chaperoned her and finally brought her out in the social world of London, where she soon met and married Lord Dudley. After this social effort, the good duchess who is probably the most deservedly popular woman of title in London, directed to the life she likes best—namely doing good work among the very poorest of the poor in the east end. Down in Hoxton the duchess lives a great part of the year in a modest house in the midst of the worst slums and surrounded by a population which consists very largely of habitual criminals. Here her chief mission is to rescue young girls from the streets, but her chief charities are widespread and everything she does is on a systematic basis, and her work is carried out with as little publicity as possible. The hopes of the Dudley family are now centred on the good duchess.

No Questions Asked of Church Leanings

PARIS, Jan. 14.—Great preparations are being made for taking the census throughout France, which will begin March 5, 1911. Every person who has spent the night of March 4 in any commune of France, whether he be a Frenchman or an alien, will be required to fill in the census paper, and officials will even be posted at the stations so that railway passengers may be subjected to the formality. The census paper will contain a large number of questions, and a quantity of particulars are required in reference to business or profession. It is typical, however, of France and French politics that no question is asked as to religion.

PARIS, Jan. 14.—Great preparations are being made for taking the census throughout France, which will begin March 5, 1911. Every person who has spent the night of March 4 in any commune of France, whether he be a Frenchman or an alien, will be required to fill in the census paper, and officials will even be posted at the stations so that railway passengers may be subjected to the formality. The census paper will contain a large number of questions, and a quantity of particulars are required in reference to business or profession. It is typical, however, of France and French politics that no question is asked as to religion.

SHACKLETON ADVOCATES SANATORIUM NEAR POLE

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Sir Ernest Shackleton, who got nearer to the south pole than any other explorer, has declared his intention of visiting Spitzbergen this summer. He further voices the opinion that it would be a good thing if a sanatorium for consumptives could be established in the polar regions. A snow month stay amid the ice and snow of Spitzbergen would do wonders for a person suffering from lung and chest troubles, declares Sir Ernest. He points out that Arctic air is absolutely pure, and beneficial to all chest complaints.

Lloyd-George and New Liberalism in England

New Man Who is Working Himself into the Position of "The Great"—His Early Struggles and His Final Triumph.

LLOYD GEORGE Most Hated and Insulted of British Statesmen. He May Become Successor of Gladstone and Disraeli in Affections of British People.

The English people must always have a man to whom name they may add "the great." Palmerston and Gladstone were this kind of men, also Disraeli to a certain extent. Later on Joseph Chamberlain had some of the necessary qualifications to become the heir of Gladstone as a popular hero. In the meantime a new man is working himself into the position of the great man of England. That man is Lloyd George. Hated he is, insulted and attacked with the utmost violence by his political enemies; despised and perhaps "kicked" because he worked his way up from the bottom of the ladder and because his words and expressions are more passionate than those of any other statesman of the present day, yet he has no one can doubt, even for a moment, that with every passing day the battle is centered around him and his ideas.

And so far he has won at least a partial victory. His last sixpence. "I shall never forget," he said, "the terrible importance of this last sixpence every week. It is the strongest impression of my childhood. Even now I do not think I can understand the terrible anxiety in a household where everything depends on the last sixpence. It is an anxiety which has robbed thousands of noble women of their strength and driven thousands of weaker women to despair. It is terrible. If more of our politicians realized this, our politics would be more reasonable."

Angel Duchess To Antipodes As Mediator

Will Attempt to Settle Matrimonial Troubles of Lord and Lady Dudley and Avert His Resignation.

(From a Staff Correspondent.) LONDON, Jan. 14.—Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, has just sailed for Australia on a visit to Lord and Lady Dudley, whose unfortunate matrimonial troubles have created such a stir both locally and at home. The duchess is going out presumably for her health, but really to act as a mediator between Lord and Lady Dudley, who is probably the most deservedly popular woman of title in London. As a very young girl, Lady Dudley, who is Miss Rachel Gurney, and a member of a famous Norfolk family, was left motherless, and Adeline, Duchess of Bedford, took up the child, finished her education, chaperoned her and finally brought her out in the social world of London, where she soon met and married Lord Dudley. After this social effort, the good duchess who is probably the most deservedly popular woman of title in London, directed to the life she likes best—namely doing good work among the very poorest of the poor in the east end. Down in Hoxton the duchess lives a great part of the year in a modest house in the midst of the worst slums and surrounded by a population which consists very largely of habitual criminals. Here her chief mission is to rescue young girls from the streets, but her chief charities are widespread and everything she does is on a systematic basis, and her work is carried out with as little publicity as possible. The hopes of the Dudley family are now centred on the good duchess.

SHACKLETON ADVOCATES SANATORIUM NEAR POLE

LONDON, Jan. 14.—Sir Ernest Shackleton, who got nearer to the south pole than any other explorer, has declared his intention of visiting Spitzbergen this summer. He further voices the opinion that it would be a good thing if a sanatorium for consumptives could be established in the polar regions. A snow month stay amid the ice and snow of Spitzbergen would do wonders for a person suffering from lung and chest troubles, declares Sir Ernest. He points out that Arctic air is absolutely pure, and beneficial to all chest complaints.

Every thing now depended on whether the party would settle down and govern the country in the usual manner, or if it would carry on the case of progress. At first it looked a little uncertain. The house of commons made several good laws, but they were rejected by the house of lords and the government bore its fate with great patience, but soon it was evident that this could not go on however. In 1908 Lloyd George was made chancellor of the exchequer and in 1909 he brought in his famous budget. This budget made three demands; increased taxation of the rich, assistance of the poor and liberation from the tyranny of the landlords. Everybody remembers how the battle was fought with great strength. The house of lords rejected the budget and the elections of January 1910 followed. Contrary to old custom the peers scoured the country speaking at meeting after meeting. All the influence of the landlords was brought to bear against the budget, but it was a touch the sacred privilege of living on the toll of others, all the influence of the high church was massed against the non-conformist heretics, and the whole inborn nobility of a great part of the middle classes was turned against this man of the people who dared throw down the gauntlet to the good society which had ruled Great Britain. But men whose word carried weight because of their birth and their ability locally supported him. Asquith, Churchill, the young aristocrat, fought shoulder to shoulder with him, men who seemed brave and safe like Grey, Haldane and Curzon held their tongues, and the new party, Rosebery alone deserted absolutely. The elections resulted in losses compared to the preceding albatross elections, but it gave the new Liberalism a sufficient majority of 124 members.

Island of Rassay New Mining Centre

LONDON, Jan. 14.—A new mining centre may be opened up as a result of the discovery of iron ore in the little island of Rassay, which lies between Skye and the mainland of Scotland. The island covers an area of about twenty-eight square miles. The investigations, it is said, have been so satisfactory that a Scotch steel firm has secured an option for the purchase of the entire island. It is believed the recent developments have been considered sufficiently important to justify the erection of blast furnaces for the smelting of the ore.

Motoring

COST OF MAINTENANCE HAS GREATLY DECREASED

Upkeep Expenses No Longer a Drain on Car-Owner—Economies Made in Important Features—Less Fuel Used.

A few years ago the motorist having the means to purchase an automobile and deciding to make the investment found later to his sorrow that the initial cost of the car was not the greatest cost, and the upkeep expense proved to be such a drain on his income as to make it necessary for him to dispose of the car after one or two seasons' use. It was not uncommon to find the cost of maintenance and operation to be actually greater than the cost of the car itself. Not only was the cost for repairs and replacements excessive, but incidental charges connected with its operation, and which had not been taken into account, proved appallingly great. These facts became well and generally known and deterred many from buying automobiles, although the means permitted an initial purchase of an apparently satisfactory car. Economies of comparatively recent date have made it possible for a man of even moderate means to own and maintain an automobile, and these economies have been made in the principal items which heretofore made the cost of maintenance excessive.

Tire Bills.

The tire matter has been the greatest bugbear of expense, and almost every one who has investigated the subject has met many owners who have stated that the expense and trouble with tires have been the one great drawback to the otherwise unalloyed pleasure of motorizing. The manufacturers have all agreed that the greater percentage of the troubles originate from two causes: first, overloading of the tires; and second, insufficient inflation. Manufacturers of motor cars in figuring on cost of production were too prone to attempt a saving in the matter of original tire equipment.

The difference between the cost of tires that might be mustered and tires marginally larger to give a proper margin of safety figured so importantly in the first cost of car production that the big heavy seven-passenger touring cars are giving service of five thousand miles and upward on one set of tires. This means that a big touring car can be driven throughout the entire season with an average of one set of tires, while a smaller car may require two or three sets before comparative inexpensive incidents which can be repaired at small cost.

Other Items.

Gasoline is another item of expense which has been reduced. While the first cost of gasoline is higher than it was five or six years ago, carburetors have been greatly improved and gasoline waste thereby reduced to a minimum. In an official test made by the Automobile Club of America a Lozier 50-horsepower six-cylinder touring car carrying seven heavy passengers ran 17.1 miles over country roads with one gallon of gasoline. With gasoline at 20 cents a gallon it is to be seen that the cost to a passenger for gasoline is now a negligible factor.

In the matter of lubricating oil economies have been perfected in a similar manner, namely, by the improved methods employed. A few years ago, in order to lubricate with the system then in vogue, it was necessary to pour gallons of oil into the motor. Modern methods now provide systems whereby every drop of oil is mechanically directed to the surfaces to be lubricated, and one gallon of oil does the work which formerly required five.

The Owner Drives.

Perhaps one of the greatest economies effected in the case of the man who must figure closely is the chauffeur. A few years ago very few had the courage to attempt to maintain an automobile without employing a professional chauffeur. In the first place the average motorist could not be expected to do so can master the knowledge necessary to care for an automobile, and, in fact, the more or less complicated mechanism of the automobile of that day made it out of the question for an owner to make the attempt. The better class of automobiles have been simplified and perfected to such an extent that beyond the minor details of oiling very little care is required and the small knowledge necessary to operate an automobile successfully is such that almost any one not wishing to be annoyed with the details of the chauffeur. Even the owner who has felt competent to drive his own car and who has sufficient mechanical knowledge to care for it with the quick detachable tires and air bottles for inflation, etc., has made the changing a matter of a few minutes' time and little trouble.

Private Garages.

The private garage has also provided another means for effecting a big saving, and is now made a part of the scheme of every well planned home. Concrete construction has made garages of this kind comparatively inexpensive, to say nothing of the convenience of housing the automobile in one's own establishment.

The various economies enumerated big, high-powered cars, to slide from the high-powered car, as it was formerly to maintain a car of smaller power. He has realized that the big, high-powered touring car is desirable not only for its larger carrying capacity, but for the greater riding comfort and greater touring service which it will give, even although it costs more. The fitted seats for three or four passengers, seven-passenger touring cars formerly opened the way for heavy expenses in the way of entertaining, but the toy tonneau bodies which these cars may now be fitted have made them popular with those who desire the comfort and service which the big car will give, but who do not care for larger carrying capacity.

Manufacturers realize that the continued popularity of the motor car depends on its practical and economical uses and are striving continually to effect economies in maintenance and operation. The owner who a few years ago was appalled at the incident of expenses is surprised to find how much has been accomplished in the way of economies in this direction.

TESTING CARS AROUND TORONTO

A RUSSELL CAR BEING TESTED ON THE SNOW ROADS OF HIGH PARK.

THE MODERN CAR

Instead of being termed a fad, or even a vehicle for pleasure use only, the motor car is now the tool of civilization and is performing more thoroughly and more loyally than any other invention of which we have a record, with due consideration of its comparative youth—four years, so far as practical purposes are concerned, have been its experimental and deemed to be toys for the rich.

With almost 400,000 machines in use in America and the number fast increasing, the statement for the automobile is now the tool of civilization admits of little argument. The so-called pleasure car, or passenger-carrying vehicle, is to a large degree an absolute necessity to a great number of people, not one of whom would think of giving up his car any more than he would consider dispensing with his telephone. In addition, there are phone after their advantages were appreciated. In another month, all of whom thousands of new owners entering the field every month, all of whom are receiving proof of an indisputable nature in favor of the motor car's advantages.

The use of cars is now so general and the conveniences and time-saving qualities so apparent in our everyday life that machines are not alone taking the place of the horse, but are opening up new fields in our lives that would be undreamed of under ordinary conditions. As a health-giver and as an educational factor, the motor is far more important than is a mere vehicle for pleasure driving. Every family can find almost continuous use for the modern motor vehicle. A prominent manufacturer points out that the head of the house can use it going to and from his business, for making business calls, entertaining customers and business associates, and for touring. The use of the car gives him a greater knowledge of the country, while the mental and physical exercise of driving makes for better digestion and better health. The ownership of a car certainly adds prestige. A man's wife and daughters may use the car for social calls, entertaining and for open-air driving.

As a willing slave for all work, the motor vehicle is now entering that broad commercial field involving the transportation of freight and the quicker and more economical distribution of goods, which tend to foretell the emancipation of the horse, and tends to bring close to hand the time when that noble animal will become the pet of mankind, instead of the slave of a relegated quickly. The displacement of the horse will be a steady but not abnormal growth. Nevertheless, the ultimate outcome must see traffic, especially in large cities where it is of a congested nature, given over entirely to power driven machines. It is not too optimistic to say that ten years from now a horse on the streets of New York or London will be as rare as a motor vehicle was ten years ago.

Altho the growth of the automobile industry has been of a magical character, the zenith has been reached without any great revolution, mainly because the trade has been in strong business hands, with mechanical men of the highest ability to power machines along with practical and sane lines. The trade now and like that of any other industry, in the best known factories, which produce almost all the automobiles in use, there are ample facilities for making sufficient machines to supply the normal demand.

THE AUTO AS A HEALTH PRODUCER

The most interesting thing about the automobile is that it is not a luxury or a rich man's plaything, but enables a man to double his capacity for work and at the same time is a means of greatly improving his health. There are five cases where the automobile is a necessity to one where it is not. The family that lives a few miles from town used horses and carriages for years. They always owned the best horses they could afford. In instances where they could afford it, the farmers have driven teams worth $200 and up and a carriage worth $100 or $200 or more. Such people drive automobiles now and save horseflesh and money.

There are thousands of city men who are doing just double the work they were able to accomplish before owning an automobile. It is an extravagance for such people to own a car. In almost every office a few years ago were men called men. They tried to do all kinds of exercises to make health. What has been the result since their automobile has been brought within their reach? They have become stout, husky men, with a brown upon their cheeks which equals that of their country brothers. "Red blood" has become a term which is much in vogue. Did you ever hear it before the automobile arrived?

It is not the office man alone who gets the benefit. His family accompanies him when he rides after office hours. The result is a great improvement in health. Instead of a month of fresh air during the summer vacation, it is a delightful trip daily. Who ever knew or demands and laces doing this good, or any other goods outside of gratifying a love of vanity and display? The automobile is indeed a factor in American life that cannot be removed. It is here to stay and will last as long as the world stands or until some improved method of transporting individuals quickly and economically can be devised.

A GREAT REDUCTION.

A sweeping reduction in automobile prices on many of its models is announced by the United States Motor Company. The reduction is made possible thru the co-operation and organization realized in the formation of the company. There is little doubt in the minds of those acquainted with the industry that the announcement marks the beginning of a new epoch in motor car standards. Full page advertisements announcing the new prices appearing in the newspapers from the Atlantic to the Pacific on New Year's Day and on the eve of the New Year show, have created a deep impression upon manufacturers, dealers and buyers alike. It is a sequel of the company's statement issued months ago when President Benjamin Brisco said: "The object of the United States Motor Company is to realize in the highest degree, efficiency and economy resulting from concentration and co-operation in production and distribution, to the public in motor cars at the lowest prices consistent with but a fair and reasonable profit."

HAS TOUGH DRIVE THRU STICKY CLAY.

Harry Bickie, of Chardon, Ohio, the gentleman who handles the Ford Motor Cars in that part of the country, has more nerve than the average autolot. On Thursday morning, Bickie, left Chardon for Plainville in his Ford model T, a distance of more than thirty miles, and made the trip in a little over an hour. The road between the country seats is one of the worst and most dangerous in that locality, as it is up and down all most of the way and covered with slippery clay. Anyone who has driven over this rough, hilly, sticky clay country can appreciate what this trip meant after recent heavy rains and snows which put these roads in about as bad condition as they have been in for a year. Bickie ran most of the way on high gear and when he reached the top of a hill, he put on his brakes and turned his car into a bob-bed.

Liverpool to New York by Automobile

IT is some 2800 miles from Liverpool to New York. About the same distance as from Halifax to Vancouver.

To run 2800 miles at an average speed of 48 miles an hour is a feat. To run THREE TIMES that distance, and then four hundred miles more is a performance equalled by but one engine in the world.

This is the record of the Knight Sliding Valve Motor—a record of 8830 miles.

In the test given it by the Royal Automobile Club (the highest authority in Europe) a 22 horsepower Knight Motor ran as far as from Liverpool to New York, back to Liverpool, back again to New York, and four hundred miles on the second return journey, maintaining an average speed of forty-eight miles.

Every-day records come and go, but the KNIGHT ENGINE RECORD STANDS. Despite the prestige gained by this record no engine builder has attempted to put his product to a similar test.

The Knight sliding valves are beyond question the most momentous improvement in engine building in years. car owns the exclusive Canadian rights to the Knight Motor. The claims for this motor are greater power, greater reliability, greater smoothness and silence in operation, greater economy.

Our Catalogue gives full information. Our three leading models are equipped with Knight Motor. Do not purchase a car without satisfying yourself regarding this really wonderful invention.

Mechanical Details of 1911 Cars

By C. E. Duryea.

Yearly the automobile shows have been growing more interesting. This is due to the fact that the public has become "motor-wise" and is not only the bodies, colors and equipment of cars, the visitors to the shows now keenly inspect and discuss the vital portions of the vehicles. The shows which opened in Madison Square Garden on Jan. 7, under the auspices of the Association of Licensed Automobile Manufacturers, attracted the greatest collection of pleasure vehicles and commercial vehicles ever seen together under one roof.

Never before has there been offered so fine an opportunity to see such a large range of motor vehicles, from the little brush runabout to the ten-ton Hewitt truck.

It is impossible to tell briefly the many niceties and new wrinkles in construction. The machines must be seen and carefully examined to be appreciated, but a little resume of some of the things to be found and compared may not be amiss.

Clutch.
Clutches show more diversity than any other main feature. Brakes are by hands almost wholly, a few show brakes being seen. The service is almost identical. The brake must take out of the vehicle the energy put into it thru the clutch. The brake slips till the load is stopped. Most clutches will slip the drivers if the engine is powerful enough. Most brakes will slip the same wheels if applied hard enough.

The clutch is used possibly more often, but the brake gets more severe wear. Yet we have cone, disk plate and band brakes. Brakes are almost universally run dry, but clutches are often run in oil. The growth in use of the band clutch, from $2.2 per cent last year to 7.3 per cent this year, a gain of 13 per cent, may be an indication that designers are recognizing the good features of the band clutch for certain purposes. The cone clutch seems to have lost 42.6 per cent last year, against 40.4 per cent this year, a retrogression of over 5 per cent. Plate clutches dropped from 14.6 per cent to 4.1 per cent, while disk out-clutches rose from 40.7 per cent last year to 45 per cent this year. Since the distinction between these two forms of clutch seems to be in safety to consider them together.

Some makers and some statisticians consider them as the same type, and often they are called by either name. Together we find 51.2 per cent last year, against 51.1 per cent this year.

Helen Ware wonders why 99 per cent. of people who write plays seize on ideas which have no interest to the general public, nor have dramatic possibilities. Why the moment you become a star everyone wants to put you on the high road to riches by advising you to invest your money in all sorts of schemes?

Why, because you are in the profession you are asked to endorse every old kind of medicinal preparation for making fat people stouter and thin people slimmer?

Why, the moment you become a star your hotel rates increase from $1.50 a day to $4.00?

Why you are compelled to stand for all sorts of stories that are without rhyme or reason, and fifty-nine different definitions for success as a star?

Marie Dressler in
"Tillie's Nightmare"

Charming Comedienne Returns
After Long Absence to Delight
Royal Alexandra Patrons.

An announcement which should prove most welcome to local theatre-goers is the engagement of Marie Dressler in Lew Fields' new musical production, "Tillie's Nightmare," at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, beginning to-morrow (Monday). It has been a matter of genuine regret that Marie Dressler has not appeared here more frequently in the past three or four years. No funnier man or woman ever stepped foot on the stage than this comedienne, and her return to this city after such a prolonged absence is expected to result in crowded houses at every performance.

"Tillie's Nightmare" comes here direct with the entire original cast and stage embellishments which characterized its phenomenal run of 350 performances at the Lew Fields' Herald Square Theatre, New York.

It is as Tillie Blobs, daughter of a keeper of a boarding house in Skidnates, a small town in New York State, that Marie Dressler makes her appearance. She is the drudge of the family, and when as the curtain rises on the first scene she plans to go to the theatre with her rustic lover, it will be the first night off she has had in two years. At the very last moment, Tillie's mother demands that she stay home and make pickles, and the scene draws to a close with the boarders—a broken-down old book-keeper, who imagines he is an inventor; a team of cheap vaudeville people; a brassy drummer, and Tillie's work-dodging sister—all departing for the show. Tired out, the poor drudge falls asleep in her chair, and then comes the nightmare. In an entertainment of this kind, the surprise which comes with the unfolding of the plot, form such a delightful factor, that it is never well to tell in advance the story of the play. Suffice it say that all of Tillie's friends appear under unusual conditions, and that the merriest is of the whirl-wind variety. It is most unusual for a modern musical play to have such a consistent and coherent plot as Edgar Smith has written for "Tillie's Nightmare."

Composer A. Baldwin Sloan has written tuneful music for this play, while Ned Wayburn has outdone himself in the way of chorus numbers and ensembles.

As is now theatrical history, Mr. Fields has surrounded Miss Dressler with a company of unusual merit, and a most elaborate production made in eight scenes. Among the principal players are the Misses Octavia Brooks, May Montford, Lottie Uart, Ethel Fairbanks, Nellie De Grasse, May Brennan, Aarons' Original Dancing Girls, and the Messrs. Clarence Harvey, Horace Newman, Charles H. Bowers, George and John Gorman, Harry Laughlin and Sim Pulen.

Matinees will be given on Wednesday and Saturday.

Montreal Grand Opera Company

Makes Toronto Bow This Week

Canadian Musical Organization
Will be Heard During
The Week at Princess—
Famous Singers and Per- manent Orchestra of 40.

With two of the most famous singers of the world's operatic stage in the persons of Edmond Clement and Frances Alda, with a large company of other singers hardly less capable than the less known to fame, and with the great permanent orchestra of forty men which has been described by all the Montreal critics as the most brilliant ever heard in opera in that city, the Montreal Grand Opera Company makes its first bow to the critical public at the Princess on Monday, and during the whole of the week will present a constant change of bill chosen from its varied repertoire.

The opening performance will be the duplicate of one which was described by the Montreal critics as marking an epoch of musical history. This was the production of "Carmen" in which Edmond Clement, greatest tenor of the Opera Comique and of Franco, as Don Jose was paired with Eather Ferrabini, the great dramatic soprano of the Italian section and as fine an artist in French as in Italian, in the role of the gypsy cigarette girl. In this performance Carmen and her unfortunate lover are made of equal importance in the focus of the drama—as the composer intended but as is never done in this country, where the opera is always given "as a vehicle for a mezzo-soprano star." Clement's Don Jose is a great tragic creation, as impressive in the passion and dignity of the love scenes of the early acts as in the brutal and murderous madness of the deserted lover in the end. Ferrabini's Carmen is no sentimentalized courtesan, but the fiery, proud, daring and sensuous peasant-girl, shown in all the animal splendor of which the Sicilian players were such incomparable examples. In the tremendous drama of these two souls as acted by two great artists and expressed by Bizet's thrilling orchestration under the baton of fusch-a-leader as Agide Jacchia, there is little space for the accessory characters, yet there are played by singers of high repute: Zaza as Escamillo, Alice Muchot, prima donna of the regular French company, as Frasquita, Henri Varillat as the captain and Mabel and Magnonelle as the two smugglers. It is altogether an astounding cast.

There follows on Tuesday, "La Boheme," best loved of all Puccini's poignant and tuneful musical-dramas, with Ferrabini again (in what was considered her greatest role until this season she equalled or surpassed it with the later Italian operas), and Ugo Colombo, a tenor of whose acting abilities and musical intelligence the Montreal critics and those of the New York musical papers are enthusiastic admirers.

On Wednesday the second of the two great gala nights, with the second of the world-known stars in her most successful role as the heroine of Mascagni's exquisitely singable opera, "Manon." Frances Alda is known to every follower of grand opera for her high reputation both at the Metropolitan and at Covent Garden, where her deliciously smooth and expressive voice and intelligent acting have placed her among the great sopranos of the age. As a visiting artist she sang four times at the Montreal opera, and was so thoroughly satisfied with the surroundings there that when Director Jeannotte asked her to come and strengthen the Toronto program with one appearance she was delighted to acquiesce. Both her Manon and her Mimì were greatly admired in Montreal as they had already been by audiences all over Europe and in New York. "Manon," while it has been given in Toronto, is not too well-known here. It narrates the tale of the unfortunate "Manon Lescaut" of Abbé Prevost's tale, which it closely follows, and is full of suave and exquisite music both for the soprano and for the Chevalier des Grieux, Manon's young and staid lover. The latter's music culminates in the famous and thrilling aria, "Away, Sweet Image," which as sung by Louis Deru, the company's French tenor, never failed to bring down the house. The opera is sung in the original French.

Thursday, in Italian, Puccini's "La Tosca," a fine sample of modern operatic methods applied to Sardou's wonderfully-constructed melodrama. Naturally this piece makes tremendous demands for acting, which are amply met by Ferrabini as Tosca, Colombini as Cavaradossi, her brilliant and daring lover who is tortured within her hearing and finally killed by order of Scarpia, and Pimazzoni, a rich and impressive basso, as the fiendish Scarpia himself. This production found especial favor with the Earl and Countess Grey, who "commanded" a second performance of it in Montreal and came from Ottawa specially to hear it.

On Friday, also in Italian, an absolute novelty to Toronto in the shape of Mascagni's interesting opera, "L'Amico Fritz." This opera, based on the well-known, Erckmann-Chatrian rural tale of "L'Ami Fritz," is of light and almost comic texture, and tells how Fritz, a worthy and wealthy farmer but a misogynist, is won in spite of himself by the bright eyes of Suzel, the pretty daughter of his steward. Much of the music is in Mascagni's best vein and is full of that peasant picturesqueness which made "Cavalleria" world-famous.

Saturday matinee will offer another French work, almost a novelty, for "Lakme" has not been performed here since Thomas gave it almost twenty years ago. Revived last year by the New Orleans Company, it was an immense success with both French and English opera-goers wherever they saw it, and especially in the Canadian cities which they visited.

seem, was written for all time and to fit all changes in public sentiment. It is not so difficult to account for the continued prosperity of the piece when its dramatic merit and generous supply of excellent features are considered. It tells a delightful story of the Kentucky hills, it depicts stirring incidents true to any time and clime, and it abounds in a simple, wholesome philosophy of true living that makes a direct appeal to all. The picaresque feature (a score or more of little colored lads in songs, dances and band musky delights young and old alike, the horse race loses none of its interest by frequent repetition, and the comedy is so unctuous and breezy that it never fails to please. One secret of "In Old Kentucky's" wonderful success is an excellent company, which is always provided by the management. A high standard of excellence in this respect is always maintained. In last year's organization, a charming young actress, Miss Mildred Johnson, made a substantial hit in the role of the mountain heroine. Madge Brierly has been retained for this season. Bert G. Clardy also remains in the role of "The Colonel" in which he has been seen for almost the entire period of "In Old

FERNANDO AUTORI, BARTONE, WITH THE MONTREAL OPERA COMPANY, AT THE PRINCESS THIS WEEK.

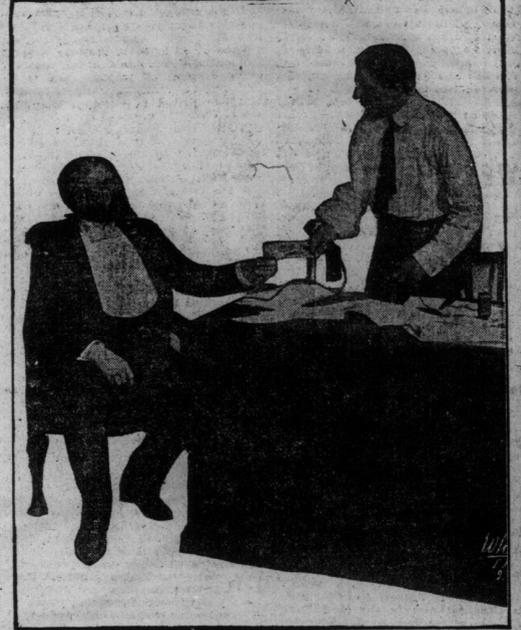

Altho the company contains very few Canadians—for there are not many such in the ranks of grand opera anywhere—it is a noteworthy fact that its entire direction is in the hands of a Montrealese, A. Clerk Jeannotte, a former pupil and friend of the De Reszkes, and for some years associated with the producing department of the Metropolitan Opera. The conductor, selected by Mr. Jeannotte, Simeone Agide Jacchia, is not unknown to Toronto, but his splendid work with poor materials during previous visits gave little more than a hint of what he would achieve when provided with a strong permanent company. Most of the orchestra under his baton are former members of the Manhattan and Metropolitan forces, including several soloists of international reputation.

One of Most Popular of Stage Offerings With Some New Features.

Not many plays nowadays hold the attention of the public year after year as has "In Old Kentucky," which comes to the Grand this week and yet to-day it is one of the most popular offerings on the stage. The tendency of latter-day dramatists is to write upon themes of immediate public interest, questions of contemporary importance. These are the plays that interest for a day or a year and then become stale. Not so with a play like "In Old Kentucky," which, it would

Big Bill at Shea's

Manager Shea Keeping Up
Holiday Cheer by Furnishing Novel Attractions.

Manager Shea is keeping up the holiday cheer at Shea's Theater and the bill this week is full of novelty, good music and comedy. The big vaudeville house is the favorite place of amusement these days and capacity has been the rule at every performance for several weeks and the list of attractions this week will mean an advance sale of seats.

Heading this week's bill is the latest of miniature musical comedy, "The Photo Shop," Jesse Lasky's biggest and newest offering. Manager Shea has for several seasons been presenting the Lasky attractions and they have never failed to find the warmest approval from the Sheagong audience. "The Photo Shop" is headed by Chas. L. Stein and Marie Fleming in the characters of Daniel, Push and Miss Posing, and a company of twenty singing and dancing girls assist in the tuneful merry-making. Special and elaborate scenery is employed in the setting of the act and the costumes are said to be the most gorgeous of the season. The music is catchy and the act is sure to be one of the big attractions of the week. As a special attraction on the bill, York and Adams, the sterling Hebrew comedians, will make their first vaudeville appearance in several seasons. They were last seen in Toronto as the stars of "Playing the Ponies" and are big favorites with theatre-goers. Their material is new and original and they will be warmly welcomed. Harry First and his appearance here in a one-act play, "The Strongest Link." This act has been retained at the vaudeville houses in New York for several weeks and has been a sensation, and Manager Shea is giving his patrons one of the greatest treats of the season in securing the offering for the week. Mr. First is assisted by a great company of well-known players and the playlet is nothing short of a sensation. Cliff Berzans, with his donkey comedienne, Maud, and his tiny ponies, will be one of the special attractions for the week, and the grown-ups and the kiddies will laugh alike at the antics of both. Albert Hole, the phenomenal English boy soprano, will be heard. This boy was heard in Toronto last season and the beauty of his fresh, young voice has not been forgotten. He is singing an entirely new repertoire. Paul La Croix, the "Mad Hatter," will be another great comedy number on the bill. La Croix has more hats and does more stunts with them than can be imagined. De Renzo and La Due are aerial wonders, and Wills and Hassen are the novelty equilibristas. The big bill will close with new pictures on the kinetograph.

"The Shepherd King" Next Week. "Wright Lorimer, the talented romantic actor and Biblical scholar, will return to the Grand week of January 22, and be seen in his beautiful spectacular drama, "The Shepherd King." This play has been endorsed by the leading clergy in the big cities in the United States and many have recommended it to their congregations, as a play that should receive their patronage.

Referring to the production recently by the New York Sun and that it was another "Bon Hur."

The Cherry Blossoms A Positive Novelty

Ever Popular Burlesque Attraction Coming to Star This Week.

What may be considered as a positive novelty in this season's list of attractions to be offered at the Star Theatre is the ever popular show, "The Cherry Blossoms," which starts a week's engagement at this popular play house on Monday. This company is too well known to the patrons of this house to need any introduction, suffice it to say, that the company is presenting one of the most pleasing and interesting and original programs ever seen here. The production is a positive novelty, and entirely different from any other company. In addition to the vaudeville portion of the program two light and breezy satires are presented, and both are said to contain much merit and many novelties, and good clean, light comedy. The management pride themselves in having an attraction that is so uproariously funny as to have a laugh for everyone, yet so far above the average attraction of this kind, that is not compelled to resort to horse play or vulgarity to draw patronage.

Trocadero Company Gayety This Week

High-Class Burlesque and Musical Novelty Aggregation Next Attraction.

That the character of burlesque this season will be a radical departure, and marked advance over previous years, is demonstrated by Manager Waldron's present effort as presented by his new Trocadero Company. He has set a standard this year for high-class burlesque and musical novelties which other managers will find it hard to approach, while none will eclipse the splendidly equipped organization in the burlesque field this season. Manager Charles Waldron's judgment in the selection of his company this season is apparent in the splendid voices of every member. The principals are all splendid singers, while the consistent groove all thru the piece, with plenty of musical embellishments on the side. The opening scene shows the ship in the ice and the story hinges around the discovery of a beautiful woman ket in the ice fields, who tells a fascinating story of a wonderful country above and beyond, to which the explorers and company find their way in the course of the narrative and also to a race course scene in France, which gives another change of scene. The principals of the company include Frank Finney, Sam Adams, Martin Walsh, Frank Ross, Geo. Brennan, John Griffith, Chas. Madison, Thos. Bullock, Minnie Burke, Jeannette Young and Daisy Lundy.

The cast was made up of Louis James, Julia Arthur, Frank Losee, Marion Elmore, George Edson, Mrs. W. H. Elwood. Of these then famous names only one is now familiar to players on current programs—that of Frank Losee, who is playing the role of a banker in "The House Next Door" with J. E. Dodson. The others have stepped out of the theatrical world or passed on and are no more.

Louis James, who was the original Col. Sandusky Doolittle, is dead, having closed his career in business some time in the early months of this year with J. E. Dodson. The others have stepped out of the theatrical world or passed on and are no more.

The Original Cast of "Old Kentucky"

Prominent Professional People Who First Presented the Popular Northern Drama.

"In Old Kentucky" in its long, honorable and successful career of nearly a score of years has had many players for its several roles of fame and fortune, but it has probably never had a more distinguished cast than that which first gave it a presentation behind the footlights.

That, was in the summer of 1892 at the Grand Opera House in St. Paul, Minnesota, and the company was one that Jacob Litt had brought together for a stock season during the warm days of the summer. The season had drawn almost to its close when Charles T. Dazey, then a young man, armed with a letter from John A. Hamlin, owner and manager of the Grand Opera House, Chicago, sought an audience with Jacob Litt and read him the play. Mr. Litt was pleased with the reading and determined to try the play out, and if it went well, he promised to give it a regular production. So "In Old Kentucky" had its first learning on the three last days of the summer stock season.

A few months after this "try out" Mr. Litt put the play on regularly with a fine cast, which included Bert G. Clark, still playing Col. Sandusky Doolittle; Bettina Gerard of sad memory; George W. Deyo, Charles K. French, Harrison Hunter and other actors of wide reputation.

Female Impersonator Is Julian Eltinge

Will Appear in "The Fascinating Widow" at the Princess Next Week.

Lulu Glaser's stay at the Herald Square Theatre has been extended.

24, 25, and see Julian Eltinge in "The Fascinating Widow," will say so. In his offering Eltinge appears as a man in the early part of the first act, and the makers of his vehicle, who are also responsible for such musical hits as "Madame Sherry," which is also under the A. H. Woods' direction, have managed a plausible reason for the famous creator of feminine types to masquerade as a girl. Eltinge and his play are said to be an absolute novelty in present-day theatricals and infinite possibilities are offered for the display of his unique and extraordinary talents. As an impersonator of feminine charms he has already been looked upon as preeminent. Eltinge's make-up are astonishingly clever and his gorgeous array of gowns are said to be far ahead of anything ever displayed upon the American boards. The story of "The Fascinating Widow" concerns a college youth named Hal Blake (Julian Eltinge), who is greatly enamored of a certain attractive maiden named Margaret Leffingwell. Her mother objecting and wishing a son-in-law of her own choice, tries to make a match with one, Oswald Wentworth, Blake, to shield himself from the consequences of a whipping he gives Oswald, his rival for the hand of Margaret, dons the garb of a young and dashing widow. In this disguise he ensnares his rival and receives a marriage proposal from him. With various alibets Eltinge, as Mrs. Monte, proceeds to win the admiration of all the men he meets. He works with such success that he completely turns the heads of his opponent in the game and events go so far as to have the guests assembled in the college chapel for the wedding before he tells who he really is. When his rival's perfidy is disclosed Margaret's mother readily gives her consent to the marriage of Margaret and Hal Blake. The complications, lines and situations are such as to create no end of laughter and the transformation from the bride to the man in full evening attire makes the audience sit up with wonder and amazement. The change is made in a trifle less than two minutes. The Eltinge costumes are said to be gorgeous and the music catchy.

The "Africanders" Colored Minstrels

Greatest Organization of its Kind to Appear at Majestic Theatre This Week.

Reese Bros. troupe of famous Africanders (colored minstrels) numbering fifty-two people, including a genuine Dixie band, which recently returned from an extensive tour of Europe, will hold forth this week, beginning tomorrow afternoon, at the Majestic Theatre, in conjunction with a clever combination of vaudeville performers. The cast includes such notable colored entertainers as Messrs. Arthur Reese, Otto Reese, Tom Davis, Rube Johnson, William Carlin, and Octavia Besseley. The first part, without which a real minstrel show could not be presented, is presented by the organization, is vastly different from the old-time minstrel first part. Here begins a story that runs the whole way thru the show. The opening scene is at the Southland Hunt Club, a swell negro organization. A group of the enterprising members form themselves into an expedition party for the purpose of discovering the north pole, the idea being to give the colored race a place in history. The trip is made in an airship. In "Parkland," the first stop, the colored aviators are captured by the natives of the island of that place. After explaining their mission, however, they are allowed to resume their journey. They make a lively ascent again. Later they encounter Aurora Borealis and Polar bears, but are finally rewarded by finding the pole, which they dig back to Southland, where it is eventually purchased by a colored barber, who has it painted in the regulation colors of the territorial profession and installed in the front of his shop.

Brand new and original fun is injected into the first part during which several solos are rendered by eminent colored soloists all of which are new and sparkling. The finale of the first and ragtime scottische" in which the real plantation pastime is the predominant feature which the audiences always enjoy and appreciate. Then follows several clever vaudeville specialties, which are bound to meet with the approval of the most fastidious. The closing part of the minstrel entertainment is entitled, "The Colored Asylum," which serves to introduce the colored keepers in a lunatic asylum. The troubles they encounter come fast and furious. During the progress of the skit they are ably supported by dancers, who give practical demonstrations of the real old-time plantation buck and wing dancing.

EDNA CLAYTON, WITH "THE CHERRY BLOSSOMS," AT THE STAR THIS WEEK.

Percy Haswell in Vaudeville. Vaudeville has claimed Miss Percy Haswell as a well-known stock actress in Chicago. On January 23, she will appear for the first time in a playlet by Allan Fawcett, called "Master Will's Players," the "Will" in this instance referring to the Immortal Bard. Miss Haswell is a well-known stock actress and has also appeared in many metropolitan successes. She has also played Shakespearean roles which fact, in the main, is responsible for the writing of "Master Will's Players."

Nazimova, now touring the south after a hurried trip to the coast, will shortly return to New York when she will be seen at her own theatre in a new play.

HOW OTHERS HAVE BUILT

Edited by
FRANKLIN E. RELFRY

There is interest in this house, which was built last year for Mr. J. M. Sinclair, on Russell Hill-road. Features that are uncommon prevail and beautify the general scheme. Its exterior is a harmonious coloring, built of red brick and roofed with a red Lexington tile, which blends well with the trimming colors of brown.

The verandah is pretty, with its overhanging eaves, and is enhanced with its flooring of Welsh quarry tile.

There is a richness in the appearance thruout, because of its decoration and the planning of the hallway and adjacent rooms are commendable. The alcove, for brief reception, with the semi-circular bay window, is particularly attractive. This is finished with Boston leather, and the hall is decorated with a burlap dado and stencilled frieze above.

An archway of pedestal and plaster trim in ash makes the entrance to the dining-room pretty. This room is prepared in a cork color, trimmed with ash, stained a deeper brown, and buff stucco between beams of ceiling. One handsome feature here is a mantel with large green tile and brass trimmings.

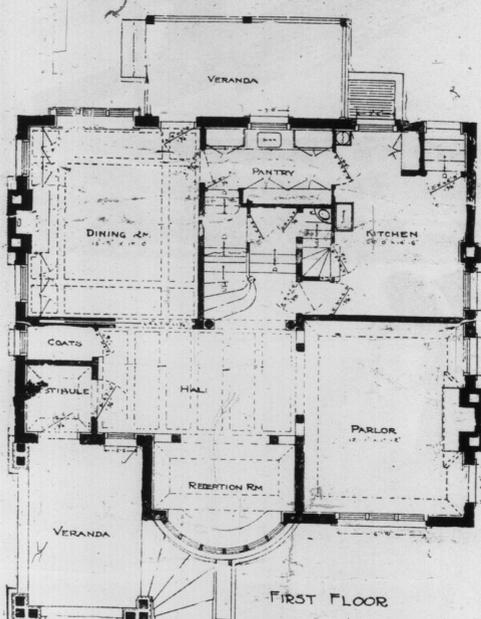

The reception-room is brighter than the others, being decorated with a champagne-colored paper, embossed, of French pattern, and white enamelled woodwork. A very rich ceiling adorned with a large oval of laurel leaves in staff plaster and hand-

This firm has become one of the most popular companies in their line in the city, having since 1906 grown from a small firm with an output of about 25 furnaces per year to the present output of 250 per year, which goes to show that Toronto people appreciate a good furnace. Mr. R. Hughes, who is the present manager of the firm, has been connected with the furnace and moulding business for the last eighteen years, having been connected with some of the largest furnace firms in Canada. The company have a branch at 8 Dupont-street, where they carry on a large retail hardware business. Mr. Hughes has great confidence in Toronto's future, and predicts much greater advance in the building trades during 1911.

Low-Down Feature.

As a rule cellars are low, and therefore a furnace that can be easily accommodated, without diminishing fuel capacity or restricting the height of the ashpit, has patent advantages. The Howard corresponding furnaces of other types, which permits of the hot-air pipes being taken from the top instead of the side. This is also conducive to thorough successful heating.

Perfect Draught.

Owing to its special construction, the Howard furnace retains the products of combustion longer and at the same time preserves a better draught. This happens because it is the only perfect down-draught furnace. The products of combustion from the firebox have uninterrupted passage to the smoke pipe without abrupt turns or checks. Hence they are not divided and do not lose the force of heat and draught they hold. This again is highly important for proper and economical heating.

Dependable Neckwear

Unquestionably you know who tailored your suits. The make of Hat, Gloves and Shoes you are wearing, but what about your Neckwear, the most important item in your wardrobe?

Worried by the limit by advertising men claiming that it pays to advertise a certain trade mark, we have been forced to admit that so far little attention has been paid by wearers of high-price neckwear to their respective make.

It does not require an expert to readily distinguish the difference between cheaply made and fashioned ties and neckwear designed and tailored by experts. Neckwear stands second to none and why? Because particular attention is paid to every detail in the manufacture of this well-known make.

MADGES I HAVE ACTED WITH.

By Bert G. Clark.
During my connection with "In Old Kentucky," and I have been acting in the famous play for more than eighteen years, I have seen quite a number of women play Madge, the little girl heroine of the piece. I was not in the original cast of the play--the cast that "tried out" the piece in St. Paul for three nights in the summer of 1892, but I was the first actor to play Colonel Sandusky Doolittle in a regularly organized company, and I have been playing the part ever since.

Bettina Gerard was the first Madge I played with. What a woman! Beautiful, brilliant, educated. She had everything that made for success except stability. She made Madge a pretty little rogue, full of the spirit of the mountains, fiery, devoted, ready for any sacrifice for the man she loved. She set the type which has been followed to a certain extent ever since. Poor Laura Burt, who has since been leading woman for Sir Henry Irving and a star in America, was the next Madge, and a fine dramatic performance she gave; perhaps the best, from the purely dramatic standpoint, of any woman who has played the part. Lulu Tabor followed her--she has retired and is now Mrs. Considine of New York--and was very sweet and pretty and engaging as the little mountain heroine.

Elsa Ryan, the delightful little woman who is now and then seen in metropolitan fashion in some musical play and always adorning whatever she does, played Madge for a season or two. Elsa gave a touch of daintiness and prettiness to the part that it has lacked in other impersonators. Bessie Barriscale, with a head of shimmery golden hair, played the part "straight" and got a lot out of it. She is one of a great family of actors children--the Talliaferros, the Greys, the Barriscales, and the Burts. She is a cousin of Laura Burt, who was the second of the actresses to play Madge.

After Miss Barriscale came in rapid succession Nellie Callahan, Marion Slattery, Marie Quinn--one of the most prominent actresses, to make a record necessary. I have seen them come and go, but I remain true to the dear, old, bluish-haired, gallant Colonel and he is just as true to me and helps me over the rough places.

Hoffmann's sloth is a descendant of the extinct giant ground sloths. The three-toed sloth, or ai, is a resident of Brazil. The animal walks upside down in this way, clinging to branches by means of the strong toes. It is able to turn its head completely round by means of nine vertebrae instead of the usual seven bones in the neck. Another pet distinguished at once by its tail is the kinkajou, from South America. Its name means "twisted tail." The grey slow loris came from China. It is a tree-climbing animal of nocturnal habits.

and Juno, statues of Castor and Pollux and a "Mater," the Roman goddess of the hearth. These were found in an interesting building with three apses.

Among other sculptured objects found were three heads of negroes, with closed eyes, which are supposed to have reference to Hercules, the legendary founder of Alesia, who is said to have made war for a long time against the negroes.

An amphitheatre, several temples and many houses were brought to light. Much interest was taken in the construction of the heating apparatus in one room, which evidently served nearly the same purpose as the dry hot room in a modern Turkish bath. Many domestic utensils in bronze were found. The construction of wells, cisterns and aqueducts showed that Alesia enjoyed a high state of civilization and comfort.

Among the objects of art was a mutilated statue of a Gallic chief, which may represent Vercingetorix. Altogether this is one of the most interesting discoveries ever made of an ancient city.

The researches have revealed the remains of four successive cities. After the conquest by Julius Caesar, Alesia became an important Roman city. Then it declined and became important again in the second century of the Christian era. It was twice destroyed by the barbarians who overran the Roman Empire. After its second destruction in the fifth century it disappeared from the map of the earth.

The great Vercingetorix is still held in reverence by Frenchmen. Julius Caesar had conquered a large part of Gaul through the dissensions of the inhabitants. Then the Gauls, becoming desperate, united under the leadership of Vercingetorix, a young Arvernian chief. He gained several victories over Caesar's lieutenants, but was defeated by Caesar himself, and retired to Alesia, which is on a plateau, whence he issued an eloquent appeal to all Gauls to unite against the invader.

There were at least 80,000 Gauls in and around Alesia, for Caesar speaks of a sortie of 60,000 men from there. The remaining Gauls promised to send reinforcements of 250,000 men to the help of Vercingetorix.

The siege works by which Caesar attacked Alesia are the wonder of history, on account of their extent. He enclosed an area of fourteen miles within them. Describing merely EVERY schoolboy who has studied Latin remembers the long-drawn-out and sanguinary siege of Alesia by the Romans under Julius Caesar. Well, Alesia has been found.

Alesia was defended by Vercingetorix, the greatest and bravest of all the ancient Gauls. His conquest was the greatest achievement of Julius Caesar's life, and established his position as ruler of the Roman world.

Now they have excavated the site of ancient Alesia in France, and have found a vast collection of relics of ancient times. Upon the site is a modern village called Alesia-Sainte-Reine. In the ground around the city they found the remains of trenches and great quantities of Roman and Gallic weapons and armor. Most of the Gallic defenders of Alesia were in trenches outside the city.

Several beautiful objects of Roman times were found within the city. There was a stately group of Jupiter between Minerva

THE SCIENCE OF POETRY

EDITED BY

DONALD G. FRENCH

Why You Should Read Poetry. Harp of Ireland Wakes New Songs

The words of Charles Darwin ought to go down the ages as a warning. After speaking regretfully of his own lamentable loss of higher aesthetic tastes, he said: "If I had to live my life again, I would have made a rule to read some poetry or listen to some music at least once every week; for perhaps the parts of my brain now atrophied would then have kept active thru use. The loss of these tastes is a loss of happiness, may possibly be injurious to the intellect, more probably the moral character, by enfeebling the emotional part of our nature."

It is not the women who need this warning to-day, but the men, especially those who are immersed in the details of active business or professional life. Almost before one knows it, the appreciation for poetry vanishes in the sordid grind of active life. It is an evanescent thing. Even one who has delighted in poetry may by neglect easily lose the taste for it, and, finding that the reading of it has now become a hardship instead of a pleasure, rashly conclude that, after all, poetry is not a vital thing that appeals to mature minds. As if an art that has flourished as this art has in all ages, kicked and cuffed about, the least rewarded, commercially, of any of the arts, did not have vitality in it! "I have no patience," said the Dean of Salisbury in a recent address, "with people who contentiously say they do not care for poetry, for they say they do not care for some of the loftiest products of the human mind. If you have not, at present, a liking for poetry," added the dean, "than make one."

But how? Choose a poet who is generally acknowledged to be a true poet, the speaker went on to say, and "then every day, even if it be but for five minutes, read a page carefully, noting every suggestive word and visualizing every scene." The important word in that advice is the word "carefully." Poetry must be read carefully or it is better unread. Its beauties should be looked for, for the subtlest and sweetest beauties are not those that hit you in the eye. Read carefully and read honestly. Don't, for heaven's sake, make any pretence of enjoying something you do not enjoy or reading something you do not read. Better far never to touch it, and when you find it tie to you and make it yours, if it is nothing more than a happy phrase. You will be surprised to find how quickly you will grow adept in the search for such beauties, even as a school-girl grows adept in the search for four leaf clovers or an archeologist in the search for flint arrowheads.

Canada Has an Exponent of Irish Moods and Themes—Tender Charm of Father Dollard's Ballads and Poems.

In the preface to his volume of Irish ballads and other poems, Reverend Father Dollard says: "There is a certain glamor of ancient days, a weird fairy-spell ever brooding there o'er the shadowy valleys, the ruined castles, and the enchanted raths—the home of the mysterious Sidhe—that is altogether wanting in this modern, hustling, matter-of-fact western land." Be that as it may, one feels that Father Dollard's ballads will revive the memories and moods of those of the "old sod" who may happen to be now on this side of the water, and, indeed, the Keltic spirit whether it be in the breasts of the native-born Kelt or in those of the Canadian descendants cannot but respond to the chords waked anew by the harp of this Irish minstrel.

Love of nature has played a conspicuous part in Canadian verse, and Canadians will surely appreciate such ballads as the "Haunted Hazel":

Along a quiet glen where the gowan-catchers
And the linnet, shyest bird of all, his Wild note warbles free;
When the wind whistles o'er the blossoms
Of the brooklet, bend to listen,
There stands upon a mossy bank, a
White-hazel tree.

Even here we notice a point of distinction between Canadian nature verse and that of the truly Keltic feeling. Our poets do not recognize the animate soul of nature as the Kelt does; rather do they stand off and admire nature as inanimate scenery. Even nature as inanimate scenery is when the devotee of the Keltic feeling devotes to the one the intimacy as an inmate one, to the other it is acquired. The crooning tenderness and mystic spirit is well brought out in "By the Light of the Moon":

By the light of the moon at the gray
A wondrous sight you'll see;
By the light of the moon when the Banishes the moon
Faint comes a glow and lead
Weird cloud-shades hurry athwart
The sky.

This quotation illustrates the Keltic musical sense which goes to make Father Dollard's poems so pleasing to the heart of the reader. If we stop to analyse this quality, we will find here that the charm is due to the careful selection of broad, open, resonant vowels in the words of the poem. Note the prevalence of the "o" sound. Note the use of the "a" sound. Note the use of the "e" sound. Note the use of the "i" sound. Note the use of the "u" sound. Note the use of the "y" sound. Note the use of the "w" sound. Note the use of the "h" sound. Note the use of the "l" sound. Note the use of the "r" sound. Note the use of the "m" sound. Note the use of the "n" sound. Note the use of the "ng" sound. Note the use of the "sh" sound. Note the use of the "ch" sound. Note the use of the "ph" sound. Note the use of the "th" sound. Note the use of the "d" sound. Note the use of the "t" sound. Note the use of the "p" sound. Note the use of the "k" sound. Note the use of the "g" sound. Note the use of the "f" sound. Note the use of the "v" sound. Note the use of the "z" sound. Note the use of the "x" sound. Note the use of the "j" sound. Note the use of the "q" sound. Note the use of the "z" sound. Note the use of the "x" sound. Note the use of the "j" sound. REV. JAMES B. DOLLARD.

Like a soft wind, almost the heart's
Deep throbs
Are hushed and, whisp'ring of Prayer!
Down the white aisle they go, Christ's
Solemn tread,
Leaving the world and all its vaulted
Hopes,
To walk with Him on Calvary's mystic

And find "the peace that all surpasseth"
There!

Much of this verse has, we notice, been published in the newspapers. There is much newspaper verse which fulfills its purpose with its first publication, but the poems of Father Dollard certainly deserve to be put into the form of permanent literature. While the spirit of one man's homeland has its particular appeal, and that of another man has another there is yet "that touch of nature which makes the whole world kin" and that touch of nature things these poems so thoroly as to make them appeal not only to the reader of Irish descent but to the English-speaking population of the whole world as well.

Father James B. Dollard was born August 30, 1872, in Kilkenny, Ireland. He was ordained for the priesthood in 1896 at the Grand Seminary, Montreal. He has published two volumes of poems and a book of short stories. His poetry has appeared in many journals and magazines. He is now stationed at St. Monica's Church, Englewood, North Toronto.

Well-Known Quotations And Their Application.

Adding Insult to Injury.
"That dog of yours flew at me this morning and bit me on the leg, and now I notify you that I intend to shoot it the first time I see it."
"The dog isn't mad."
"Mad! I know he isn't mad. What's he got to be mad about? It's me that's mad."

Never Borrow Trouble.
Borrowing is a bad thing as the best but borrowing trouble is perhaps the most foolish investment of "foreign capital" that a man or a woman can make. An amusing instance of this species of "operation" is set forth in a down-east newspaper, wherein a man related his experience, in a financial way, on the occasion of the failure of a local bank:

"As soon as I heard of it my heart jumped right up into my mouth. 'Now, I'm in a fix,' I said to myself. 'I've got my bills on that bank, I'm gone if I hear that's a fact.' So I put on my coat, and I put my hand to my forehead, and I said to myself, 'I run off the way. And when I got there, I looked carefully, and found that I hadn't got no bills on that bank—nor any other. Then I felt easier.'

Circumstances Alter Cases.
A farmer hired a man to help work the farm. One summer day, when the two were mowing in the field, several large flies came down on the farmer.

"Look at those big cranes," said the hired man.

"Those are not cranes, they are only larks," replied the farmer, somewhat surprised.

"If you don't say that they are cranes, I'll knock off work right now," said the hired man.

"As the farmer could get nobody at that time to take the hired man's place, he was obliged to yield to the whim of the mental."

"Yes," said the farmer, "I see now that they are cranes, but they are not big cranes; they are only half-grown cranes."

The hired man was satisfied with this concession.

Several months later, at dinner, the farmer said, as he poured out a glass of water, "Here is some very fine beer."

"That's no beer; that's only water," replied the hired man.

"You don't say it's beer you can tender your resignation, for I don't want any offensive partisans about the place."

The hired man knew very well that he was in another situation at that time of the year, so he tasted the water, and cheerfully endorsed the administration, saying, "Of course, it's beer, but it hasn't got much body to it."

Farming a Cure For Insanity

Novel Experiment For Cure Of Lunacy Now Being Conducted in British Columbia.

The Coquitlam Colony Farm, on the Fraser River, near New Westminster, consisting of 1000 acres, is being dyked and drained, cleared and tilled, to be attached to the new hospital for the insane being built there. In Man to Man Magazine, Vancouver, B. C., H. Sheridan-Bickert gives an account of this novel experiment.

Dr. Charles E. Doherty, the medical superintendent of the provincial asylum, has persuaded the government to let his patients work on a stock farm as a new and practical treatment of lunacy, and to fit them on discharge from the asylum to obtain immediate work.

For years the whole site was a complete wilderness of forest. Tents were erected and Dr. Doherty sent out fifteen patients in charge of two attendants, who cleared enough land for the erection of the present temporary buildings. In 1907 the clearing work commenced in earnest. Five hundred acres are already cleared, and the lowland is completely dyked and underdrained. Over forty-two miles of underdrains are in operation already. A pumping station has been erected on the Coquitlam River and a goodly farm in the Fraser, Handsome farm, has been cleared and is now in operation for one hundred and twenty head of cattle.

Reform Theories.
The principles at the basis of Dr. Doherty's experiment are chiefly two. One is that the idle confinement of the insane with the lack of opportunity for mental exercise, aggravates the mental disease rather than cures it; the other is, treat a man as sane as long as he will become so. On the whole it is a unique psychological experiment, and it seems to work satisfactorily. Insane patients assisted in clearing the colony farm from the outset. When asked by the interviewers about the difficulty of clearing the ground, Dr. Doherty said:

"Fortunately among our patients were two or three lumbermen and powdermen. These fellows handled about as seventeen tons of blasting powder in one month without having a single accident."

The hospital will secure its milk supply from the colony farm, the work on the farm will be done largely by the patients. "We have already seen the excellent effects of the non-repressive and non-confined policy I have instituted, and I confidently expect even better results from the open-air and healthy occupation on the farm," says the medical superintendent.

Repressive Measures Discarded.
"I long ago came to the conclusion that the idle confinement of the dependent insane, to be successful, must be sustained by the highest order of human attention. The insane are not to be treated as slaves, and the medical superintendent in 1905 I have endeavored to adopt the methods of the general hospital rather than that of an asylum. In short, I think my duty to discharge attendants, to render them custodial care. The old strait-jacket and box-bed are doomed. At least, they have no place in my reform, and I am glad to say that reform, our province secretary, has never placed any obstacle against the instant dismissal of employes for brutality or insubordination of any kind, authority to discharge attendants, and of course, electrical. The good effects of this method of treatment are becoming more and more apparent in the hospital each day. The continuous baths have been very efficient in reducing motor restlessness and have exerted very beneficial reflex influences in stages of anxiety and depression. You would be surprised to see how quickly excited patients become accustomed to the water and quiet gradually into a peaceful sleep. Last year we administered (the consultant memorandum) three thousand four hundred and eighty-seven warm full baths, five thousand and one hundred and fourteen rain and needle shower baths, eighty-four steam cabinet baths, followed by passive massage. We also gave, I see, over forty continuous baths as high as seven hours and numerous applications of hot and cold packs. There were also one hundred and sixty-five applications of Farad's current, and twenty-five of the electrical vibrator. These methods are, I believe, far more effective than restraint, hypnotics and locked doors."

In explaining further the liberty allowed to patients to go in and out, he says:

"I have proved that any such restraint is as unnecessary as close confinement. I have removed the eighteen-foot fence that formerly surrounded the hospital and the gates are unlocked during the day, leaving the patients, except, of course, the acute cases, to come and go more or less as they please. The increase of out-door exercise and out-door life has already shown its beneficial results in a marked degree. The deaths for the last year have been the lowest percentage on record, and we have been remarkably free from epidemics. Now we have received any complaints of the conduct of our patients out of doors.

Minimum of Supervision.
"Previous to last year the institution was provided with night nurses, but simply with night watchmen—three in number. All the night watch had to do was to walk around every hour, sometimes even less frequently. They were supposed to pass thru every hall and ward at least once an hour carrying a kerosene lantern. Deaths from exhaustion of maniacal patients were a consequence common; the maniacs, who were frightened by being locked in a room; the sick failed, of course, to receive proper attention, while the violent could not be controlled. I would not mind suicides did not occur. It must have been more luck than management that they didn't. I have endeavored to deal with this matter thoroughly, and we have now nearly a full quota of night nurses as our full day team. When I ascertained the night force the first thing I did was to throw open nearly all the inside doors, and very satisfactory results have followed. Patients now have a toilet room at night as during the day, it is exceedingly rare that a patient becomes violent enough to warrant closing any door. I am now putting in vogue a system where not a door of a single room or dormitory is closed at night, and every patient can use the toilet rooms, drinking water, etc., as in the day time. Through my regime, I have attempted to prove the feasibility and wisdom of handling acute maniacal cases by hydro-therapeutic measures and to abolish mechanical restraints."

Dr. Doherty is an energetic worker and is regarded as one of the most progressive alienists in Canada. He is a graduate of Trinity University, Toronto, and served as general superintendent in the Kootenay and Nelson hospitals. He was made superintendent of the British Columbia provincial asylum in 1906.

Among these "sons" are Jane Austen and Anne Boleyn. What is her "genetic" or her "valor," that made the ill-fated Anne's home a "sacred shrine"? Mr. Stead suggests a directory of the burial places of the illustrious dead.

Plays From Dickens.
A book which should interest amateur and school dramatic societies is Horace B. Browne's "Short Plays from Dickens." Mr. Browne has adapted a score or more of dramas and comedies embodying most of the better-known scenes and characters in "Sketches by Boz," "Nicholas Nickleby," "Barnaby Rudge," "Martin Chuzzlewit," "David Copperfield," "Bleak House," and "Our Mutual Friend." In the main the sketches deal with humorous incidents, and while we miss the rotund Mr. Pickwick, we rejoice that the fearful socialists and the comic blunts as to settings, including a diagram of the stage, the dialog is skillfully "arranged" from the novels.

Story of the Chanticleer.
The "Story of the Chanticleer" is an analysis and interpretation of M. Rostand's famous play by Marco F. Liberman. Its first few pages are given up to a history of the play itself, telling how it came to be written and recounting the difficulties which were surmounted in preparing for its presentation. Then follows an analysis of the story of the play, thru which the writer, who is professor of romance languages in Cincinnati University, interprets the complex symbolism. He does not always make it quite plain whether he finds the basis for his interpretation in Rostand's explanations, or in his own conception of the meaning of the lines. Nevertheless, what he has to say of it is sometimes brilliant and always interesting. The Hen Pheasant is at once a warning against and a whack at modern decadence. The need of picturesque costume as a setting for poetic drama was one of the reasons which moved Rostand to give his satirical play its barnyard expression. The third act (the chicken's reception day) is the culmination of the play's satire of modern life—"The very theme of 'Chanticleer' has been chosen because it could lead up to it," says Mr. Liberman. He fears that its exceeding bitterness will mar the permanent success of the drama.

BOOKS THAT HAVE HELPED ME.
The Christian Endeavor World printed, not long ago, a symposium on the perennial theme, "Books That Have Helped Me," and a South Carolina newspaper, The Columbia State, has amused itself by analyzing the feast, "How often," exclaims the editor, "have we read this alluring title over a list of names 'en brochette,' skewered by a story idea as barren as Aaron's rod before it blossomed? How often have men and women of more or less prominence and intelligence been asked to say 'what books have helped them,' and have answered the sphinx in riddles more insoluble than his own?"

His opinion is: "The question cannot be answered. That is the reason it is hurled at us again and again with that iteration which only Falstaff has adequately qualified. Moliere took his own wherever he found it; and so with every quick-witted and intelligent man of the world, in the musings of some philosopher, in the vagrant thoughts of one that merely 'babble of green fields,' or, perhaps, in the green fields themselves, in the song of poet or of bird, in the lisp of leaves or ripple of the rain, or in the deep solitude of our own souls. And then, perchance, mindless of the wellspring of our inspiration, we seek to trace it, and vainly think to find it in some erudite volume, some echo of the world-old thoughts, some thrill of the early stirring of the pulse of time."

The pleasant little villages that grace the hillsides of the hills—
Down among the wheat fields—
The little white-walled villages crowded close together,
Clinging to the Old Sod in spite of wind and weather;
Ballybrack, Ballymore, Ballyboden, Boyle,
Ballynagary, Ballynagore, by the banks of Foyle,
Ballynaneen, Ballynaneen, Banaha, Ballydasare, Ballybrack, Ballinalack, Barna, Ballydoyle.

Several other letters of the alphabet are represented by names of length and thundering sound:
"On the Southern Lianes—north where strait light gleams
Many a yearning exile sees them in his dreams."

The ballads are chiefly lyrical and present various phases of the Irish heart, the love of home, the yearning of the exile, the simple superstitions regarding fairies, various religious legends and beliefs. One narrative poem, "The Hanging of Myles Lehana," presents very forcibly the case of the landlord and the evicted tenant.

In his sonnets Father Dollard has wisely chosen subjects of serious import. Many verse writers make the mistake of using the sonnet form for light or unimportant themes which should be allowed the freedom of the lively lyric and not confined within the staid bounds of the sonnet. The sonnets are marked by skillfully chosen description and effective language. As an example, we quote:

THE PROFESSION.
A holy stillness fills the very air:
The tapers flicker, and the organ sob.

And That Set Him Thinking.
"I always feel, after I have spent an hour or two in your company," he said, "that I am a better man."
"It is very good of you to say so," she replied. "Don't hesitate to come often."

Just Dissolved.
"So you broke your engagement with Miss Spensley?"
"No, I didn't break it."
"Oh, she broke it?"
"No, she didn't break it."
"But it is broken?"
"Yes, she told me what her clothing cost and I told her what my income was, then our engagement sagged in the middle and gently dissolved."

Midwinter Fashion Fads

The New "Serang" Wrap, Borrowed from India; The New Black Collars; The New "Bird or Paradise" Scarves—and Some New Dresses

LADY DUFF-GORDON, the famous "Lucile" of London, and foremost creator of fashions in the world, writes each week the fashion article for this newspaper, illustrating it with sketches and photographs of her own original models.

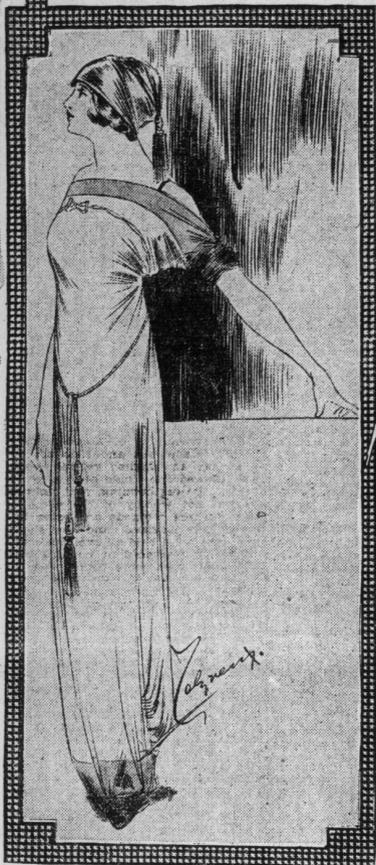

Lady Duff-Gordon's American establishment is at No. 17 West Thirty-sixth street, New York.

The New "Serang" Wrap Closed by Throwing One Side Over the Shoulder.
By Lady Duff-Gordon ("Lucile")

I HAVE just come across a delightful novelty—one of those little things which are of great importance in the scheme of dress—and, so that you may immediately take advantage of it, propose to pass on its details forthwith. You must know then that it is destined for wear about a neck which would otherwise be left bare by a down-turned collar, or the almost decollete curve of an entirely collarless corsage, and that it consists of an encircling band of black velvet baby ribbon, whose correct and piquant position is quite high up on the throat, almost as high, in fact, as the edge of the old-time collar-band, from whose unbecoming bondage we have been mercifully released.

Band is, indeed, almost too important a word to be used in connection with this mere line of soft black, which makes the neck look all the whiter by contrast, and which, narrow as it is, bears the burden of half a dozen little flowers which, at one and the same time, are useful as concealing the place of fastening and distinctly ornamental. For the tiny flowers—so tiny they are, too, that only the deftest fingers could manipulate their petals—are all formed of closely folded and variously colored silk, pink and blue, or blue and green, tawny orange and palest tea-rose yellow, with always a delicate touch of green in the guarding leaves, and, sometimes, too, an introduction of shimmering golden gauze in the innermost hearts of the little roses. A pretty idea, is it not? And the reality is, I can assure you, equally attractive, more especially, too, when in addition to the neck-band there is worn in the hair another but wider velvet ribbon, finished off in the same way with a cluster of silken and shaded blossoms.

Only note carefully that if you wear the two first little bouquet should be so arranged that it comes just under the left ear, while then the other should be placed at the right side of the coiffure. And always, too, the velvet ribbon must be black, else you will miss the whole chief of the scheme, this being indeed an admirable way of giving to the toilet that tiny band of black which is always so effective.

A rather more elaborated version of the same idea is to set an inch-wide band of black velvet, fastened with two or three rather large flowers, whose petals of gathered and pleated silk are laid flat on the velvet, while two little tie ends of velvet are in turn edged with a trail of half-opened buds and leaves. But, dainty as it undoubtedly is, this latter—and larger neck ornament first mis-

A Tea Gown by "Lucile" in Violet-Hued Charmeuse and Dead Blue Chiffon with Bordering of Skunk.

The New Wrap of Satin Crepe, Which is an Effective and Smart Adaptation of the "Serang" Worn by Ladies of India.

I will always like to think that you will adopt the best of the new fashions, and the best only.

Another novelty note, too, for you I have concerning the new scarves, which are veritable things of beauty and of shimmering gold gauze tissue shot with some deeply bright color such as sapphire blue, cerise or emerald green, which, as thus interwoven with gleaming gold, is subdued into a more subtle suggestion. They really deserve the name of "Bird or Paradise" scarves.

And now it is high time that I turned our mutual attention to those pictured tea gowns, by means of which I hope to prove to you most conclusively the special suitability and charm of the classical scheme as applied to garments in which we women want to take our ease and to look our loveliest with all.

First and simplest of all these there is that gown which is entirely carried out in stone-white crepe de chine, an inner slip of faintest flesh-pink nylon relieving it from any coldness of effect. For sole trimming there are cords of burnished silver which hold in the soft folds of crepe de chine beneath the bust and catch up the filmy chiffon draperies which make a most becoming background for the arms; other cords, looped and tasselled, being introduced at the left side of the skirt. Then another, and perhaps more generally becoming phase of the classically inspired tea gown, is represented by that second and charming affair of violet satin charmeuse, with partially veiling draperies of dead night blue chiffon, and for sole trimming some skunk fur, whose duties as a bordering are entirely confined to the violet-hued charmeuse. There is not a suspicion of any other trimming—no brightness and no broideries—but just the glamour of soft deep coloring and the charm of supremely graceful contours.

Finally, there is a tea gown whose lines over the bust are, I think you will find, quite exceptionally becoming. This scheme also leaving bare the very prettiest part of the shoulders and arms. Softest green charmeuse is the primary and most prominent material—a green so delicate this that it merges almost naturally into the bordering bands of iron-grey charmeuse, while definite contrast is then afforded by the dark skunk fur on sleeves and skirt. The tasselled girdle is of oxidized silver, and tied about the corsage is a narrow twisted ribbon of cerulean blue, fastening in front in a true lover's knot bow, this first suggestion of color being delightfully realized in the cap of blue charmeuse with its pendant tassel of silver.

For novelties in wraps there is nothing new that is more charming than the adaptation shown on this page of the "Serang" worn by ladies in India. When open, its lines are simple and full of grace. It is closed by simply throwing one side—weighted by a heavy tassel—over the shoulder. The effect gains even from the grace of that movement, which is classical in drama, since the closest succeeded the toga.

Luring Back the Birds to Fight Our Losing War on Bugs

BY RENE BACHE.

WITH all the help science is trying to give the farmers in their fight against insects, it is doubtful if any real progress is being made toward lessening those innumerable tribes. Every year, according to the Government's official estimate, bugs do about $300,000,000 worth of damage in the United States, and this huge tax on agriculture seems likely to continue for an indefinite period in the future.

One of the chief reasons for the vast multiplication of insects lies in the fact that the birds, their principal natural enemies, have been ruthlessly and systematically destroyed. It follows, then, that if war against them is to be successfully waged, the first thing necessary is to bring the birds back.

Already some experiments in this direction, very striking in their results, have been made in New England. Nesting-boxes have been put up in the orchards. The birds that came to occupy the boxes ate up the bugs, and so the latter had no chance to do any damage worth mentioning. The problem, which was a difficult one, has been solved in a rather curious way by German ornithologist—the Baron Berlepsch—who owns a large estate in Thuringia.

After years of study and observation, the Baron established the fact that the nesting holes generally preferred by birds are deserted woodpecker holes.

He examined woodpecker holes carefully and found, to his surprise, after inspecting and measuring several hundreds of them, that they were all formed on a uniform plan.

A woodpecker hole, dug in a tree by the chisel-like bill of the bird, is a cavity of considerable size. It is bottle-shaped, the lower part being somewhat enlarged, and the inner walls sufficiently uneven to enable the bird to cling to them. The opening is always inclined upward at an angle of four degrees so that rain cannot penetrate, and the walls are so thick that changes of weather are unimportant to the occupants. At the bottom is a curious V-shaped trough, which contains a mixture of mold and fine wood shavings for the eggs to rest upon.

Baron Berlepsch made copies of woodpecker holes, faithful to the smallest detail. When he nailed them upon the trunks and branches of trees or attached them to buildings, they were promptly occupied by birds of various species, which bred in them. In short, the experiment was a success.

To attract birds that nest in the open, hedges are very desirable, and it is important to avoid cutting down the undergrowth in woods and the outskirts of woods. Shrubs should be freely planted—especially those of thorny kinds—to keep away vermin, or those for which the feathered visitors have a special liking, such as the gooseberry, beloved by warblers. If these are suitably pruned, so as to leave branches terminated by multiple upstanding forks, the latter will afford excellent opportunities for the construction of nests.

Fallen leaves should be left on the ground. Birds find food under them, and by their rustling are warned of the approach of enemies. It is noticeable that birds generally avoid bare places.

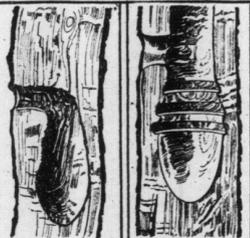

Some day, when the business of encouraging the propagation of useful birds has become fairly established, an important feature of it will be the providing of food for them in winter. For this purpose the Baron Berlepsch has invented an ingenious contrivance which he calls a "food bell." It is a glass receptacle, filled with hemp seed, and is hung from a tree. Being of glass, it is easy to see when it needs refilling. This, however, is merely the reservoir, which, by an automatic arrangement, supplies the seed to a dish beneath. As fast as the seed is eaten it is replaced by more from above. A bell-shaped roof over the dish protects the contents.

Another and even more interesting device of the Baron's is what he calls a "food tree." It is intended to imitate a tree thickly covered with the eggs and larvae of insects. But the food material used is a mixture of beef fat or mutton suet (for warmth) and hemp seed, dried and ground meat, white bread dried and ground, dried elderberries, ants' eggs, etc. This is put up as a regular commercial article in Germany nowadays. But any preparation more or less similar will serve the purpose, the method of using it being to melt the fat, put in the dry ingredients, and then pour the stuff, at boiling temperature, over the branches of a small pine or fir tree. All kinds of birds will eagerly seek such a food tree in the winter, and, in a playground or school garden, it affords delightful opportunities for the observation of feathered creatures.

"WHAT'S THE USE?"

THE EXCUSE OF THE INCOMPETENT

Copyright, 1911.

WITH the resistless force of Niagara a great stream of helpless humanity plunges every day into the abyss of wretchedness and poverty.

Old men, sick men, crippled men, women worn out with burdens that they never should have been called upon to bear, weaklings, victims of drink and drugs, children born to poverty and never given a chance to know anything better—they all sweep by on the stream that bears them to sorrow and misfortune.

The city man walks along the street, paying no heed to the blind beggar who calls to him from the corner or to the legless man who sits on the sidewalk with his hat held pathetically in his outstretched hand.

He sees the little ragged children that come from the dirty tenements, watches them as they dart in and out under truck wheels in pursuit of each other—moved by the impulse of childhood to find a little pleasure in play.

He pauses by the charity hospital and sees the sick and the lame at the windows, looking out on a world they never can hope to enjoy.

He knows that he is surrounded by misery and unhappiness. He knows that the game called life is not a fair game, and that the rules are made by those who are in power and want to keep in power.

Appalled by the frightful extent of the misery and desolation about him, he gradually becomes calloused to it.

"What's the use?" he inquires, when someone asks him why he doesn't do something about it. "Who am I to try to change the unchangeable conditions of life? Where would I begin were I to try, for example, to uproot the least of the many evils that I see? What's the use?"

Supposing that Robert Bruce seeing his country oppressed by its English invaders, knowing that the forces opposed to the Scots were ten times their strength and knowing thoroughly well that defeat and capture meant an ignominious death had asked this same stupid question.

Supposing all the patriots who stood manfully by him and risked their lives in this great struggle for Scottish independence had echoed the words, "What's the use?"

A certain little nation by the Northern Sea whose sons have made their mark throughout the world and stood shoulder to shoulder for civil and religious liberty would have been lost to the world and become identified with their English oppressors.

Many gallant men whose lives have been an inspiration to their fellow-countrymen all down the centuries would have lived in misery, sorrow or died shameful deaths as traitors to a king whose right to conquer their country they denied.

Bruce and the Scottish people, however, were not of the stamp that wonders what and where the use may be. It was enough that they were determined to be free.

The odds were fearfully against them; there seemed no chance of success in the contest for liberty. Yet they fought and won. And in winning they gave proof that when a cause is just it will triumph.

Not many years ago a company of engineers stood on the brink of Niagara Falls and watched the torrent of water pour over the cliffs, sending to waste power enough to do the work of millions of people.

One or two of them suggested that this power ought not to go to waste; that a way could be found to harness the Falls and to save some of its power.

The others were quick to ask what was the use. They were overawed by the immensity of the Falls. Any attempt to harness such a great plunging mass of water seemed to them useless. It could only end in a great waste of money and failure.

These latter gentlemen are to-day probably working in very small positions at very unimportant work.

The Falls were harnessed, and the work of millions of people is to-day done easily and swiftly by a power that does not tire or wear out.

And the eagerness with which the moneyed men of the country are gobbling up every available water power that can be found and reserving it for future use proves that the lesson of Niagara has been thoroughly learned.

Water power had been largely employed before the Niagara Falls were set to work, but the tremendous success of that experiment called attention to their great value, and to-day there is hardly a stream of water with a six-foot fall that has not been set aside for future use by people with money and the brains to employ it so that it will bring returns.

It is needless, however, to call the attention of capitalists and their highly paid employees to the senselessness of the question, "What's the use?" They became capitalists and highly paid engineers, lawyers and business experts by leaving that question entirely out of their vocabulary, and substituting, "How soon can we begin work?"

In manufactures, railroading, agriculture, wherever there is money to be made, there will be men to make it, and they will not waste any time asking questions about the utility of what they are going to do.

But in diverting the stream of human beings now sweeping into want and misery there is no money to be made.

Any man, whatever his character may be, will throw a line to a fellow man who has fallen into a river. He doesn't expect any money for the service. It is almost as instinctive as his own efforts to save himself would be were he in the place of the one who is floundering in the water.

But show this same man a hundred people all struggling to save themselves from drowning and you are likely to stagger him.

"What's the use?" he will cry. "I can't save them all." And the chances are ten to one that he will end by not saving any.

It is the same with the man who looks about him on want and suffering and feels his helplessness to do anything about it.

One case of starvation he could understand and help; one appeal for aid he might respond to.

But when there are thousands of such cases, when he cannot turn a street corner without seeing an old woman, thinly shielded against the cold, trying to earn a living by selling pencils, or a cripple cringing in a doorway and mutely appealing for help, he begins to grow indifferent and to wonder what is the use of trying to do anything at all.

And so suffering and want are left to organized charity, and often organization renders charity so cold and mechanical that those who are in need of it would as soon ask assistance of an iceberg.

The use in not allowing one's self to become calloused by suffering or to cease to hope that anything can be done to alleviate it is just this:

Poverty is an UNNECESSARY EVIL. You and every citizen can work to eradicate it, and when it shall have been eradicated most of the sufferings of humanity will disappear. It will not be eradicated in this generation, perhaps not in the next, or the next. But if half as many people think about it and talk about it and ARE TROUBLED ABOUT IT as now think and talk and are troubled about the fit of their clothes, it will disappear some time, and forever.

If the men who now are trying to get at the reason for the deterioration in the quality of their favorite brands of cigars and whiskey will try equally hard to get at the cause of drunkenness, they may find it.

When they have found it they may be impressing on politicians the necessity of better schools, the enforcement of the sale of nourishing food, instead of "rots and spots," and the absolute prohibition of child labor, succeed in giving the children of the poor a chance to grow up with healthy bodies and healthy minds. And the man who has health of mind and body does not become a drunkard.

Perhaps every passerby cannot give money to every cripple he sees on the street, but he can by working to elect able and honest men to office do a great deal toward putting the fear of justice into the hearts of some of the criminal factory owners and parsimonious railroad officials who MAKE CRIPPLES in order to run their plants economically.

A Question That Is a Confession of Weakness and an Acknowledgment of Surrender—The Favorite Quotation of the Indolent and the Apology of the Failure.

There is always something that can be done about it. Recently a jury in New Jersey gave a little girl who was injured in a machine at which she had been working a verdict of seventeen thousand dollars.

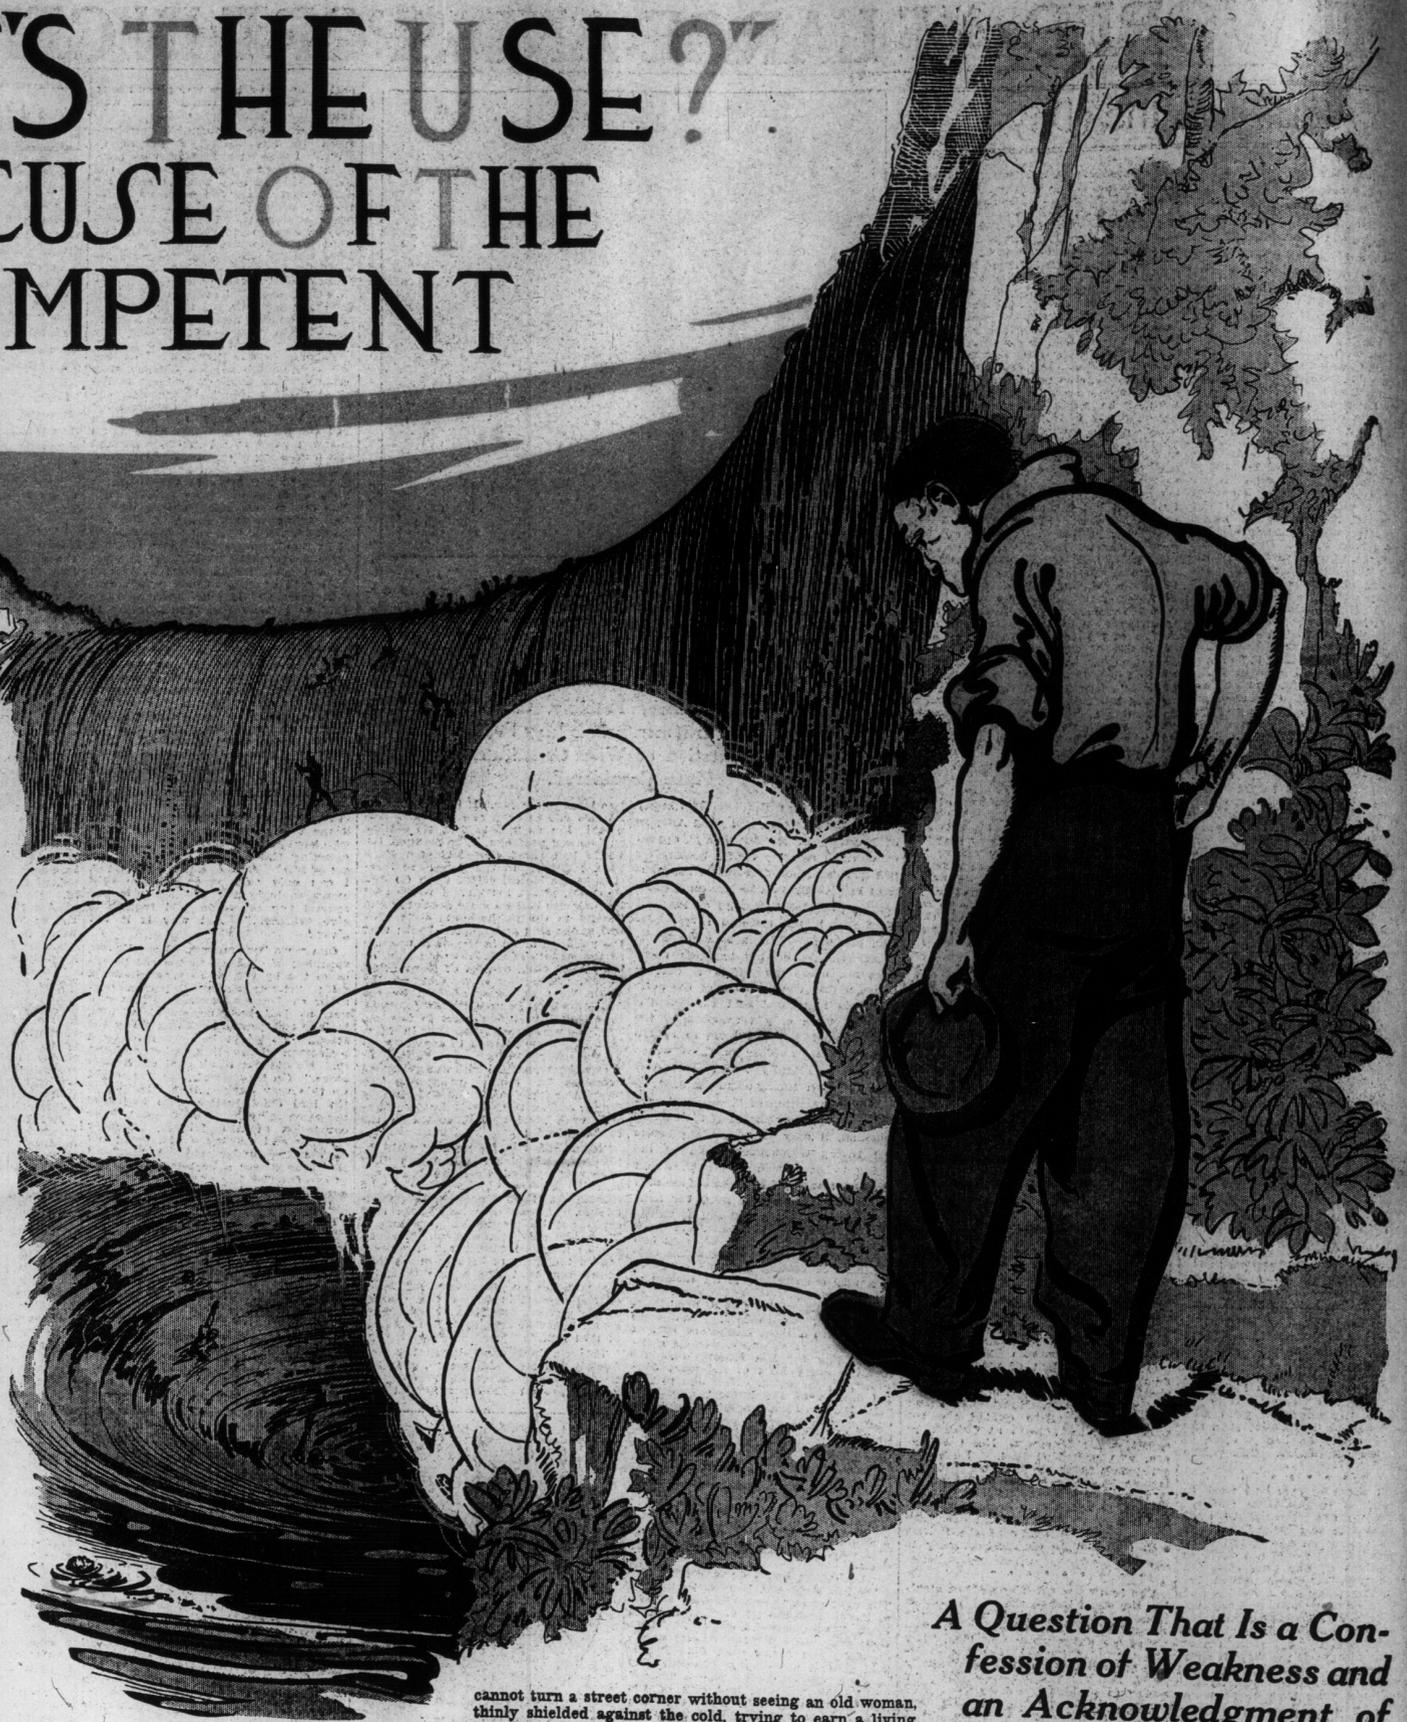

The judge to whom the case was taken on appeal set aside the verdict because a photograph of the girl had been admitted into evidence improperly.

He said he was sorry, but it was his duty to interpret the law. Something could and ought to be done about that. It might necessitate changing the law, but there are some people who believe that it would be better even to tamper with the ancient and honorable rules of evidence than to have a crippled girl starve because of them.

The stream of sufferers and weaklings still sweeps on into poverty, and men who have been able to keep out of that terrible current still ask themselves, "What's the use?"

Were it possible for a legislature to prohibit the use of that expression and to forbid men even to think it, we should begin to make progress in the right direction.

That, however, is beyond the power of any body of men; it lies solely in the power of the individual. And if you are one of those who ask the question and ACT the question, and this editorial causes you to think it over and substitute something better, it will not have been
