Mis.John W. Cope, of Poit Stanley, Suffers From Malarial Fever Followed by Ulcers - Her Friends Despaired of Her Recovery. A Cure Found After Doctors Declared There Was No Hope.
From the St. Thomas Journal.
One of the happiest couples in the country of Elgin are Mr. and Mrs. John W. Cope, who live in the bouse at the tollgate, or the London and Port Stanley road. The cause of their joint happiness is that Mrs. Cope, who for three years past has been a great sufferer, and whose recovery was not believed to be possible, has been completely cured by Dr. Willhams' Pink Pills for Pale People, after a number of physicians and many rendedies had failed. The many reports of the marvelous cures effected by the -use of Dr. Willhams' Pink Pills in different places are so well authenticated as to leave no dount as to the ap-

THE FLY AND HIS WAYS.

In the first place the common fly-or house fly-that gets into the milk and butter has to be kept from the table by fans, has a wonderful machine that is carried about to make life possible. The mouth of the little black scamp is curious contrivance to get food out of impossible places.

This mouth is really nothing more or less than a tongue which runs in and out of the head like the tongue of a snake. When the hovering insect sees a good spot to light on, where there is a promise of a meal, he settles down, shakes a leg or two, and then runs his mouth out ready for business.

This piece of machinery seems to come out of the head, and it ia. will always look that way if you don't get a good peep at the fly through the glass some day when he is busy on a lump of sugar.-Then you will see that the tiny

When the tongue comes out it spreads and the end divides into two broad, flat leaves that are planted flat down on the food that is to be stolen. This is like noth-Stifles, Sprains, Sore and Swollen ing so much as a pump with a Throat, Coughs, etc. Save $50 by use terribly strong 'draw,' that sucks of one bottle. Warranted by E. Lee up all the sweet syrup there may be on the lump of sugar.

But if the food should be hard and the fly cannot get a good hold spring and the smooth surface of the tongue roughens up like a file. 'Maston must be a very happy man, the tongue roughens up like a me. is wife dresses so plainly.' 'Yes; but Back and forth these edges work until the hard surface is torn and scraped and the hard particles that the fly likes are sucked up into the

Then the fly balances on four of his six legs and uses the front pair as a napkin, wiping off his tongue. ALL MIRACLES DO NOT OCCUR AT He is a neat little fellow and never takes a mouthful without brushing his face carefully. Of course i knows of a cure, by the application of MINARD'S LINIMENT, to a partially paralyzed arm, that equals anything that has transpired at Hamilton. of the others are feet -- but it would be a bit awkward for him t go sailing around with a napkin tied to his belt. It would be funny, too, wouldn't it? Then the fly gives a sudden flip of his wings, making them go so fast that you cannot see them, and he is off. Maybe he has been chewing the cover of a book, for there are wonderful fly dainties he skips off, he leaves a little spot of white where he has scraped up

Don't be alarmed though, for poisonous nature in him, and cannot hurt you. Some of his cousing have a way of biting and leaving sore places, especially those that drink blood, but the house fly is suddenly, upset the digestive organs and proves detrimental to the health and thrift of the animals. For this k reason, while it is best to supply a good variety, if radical changes are to be made they should be made gradually. This should always be done in changing from dry to green food in the sp.ing, and from green to dry feed in the fall. The safest plan with all s'ock is to give a light ration of dry feed, and gradually cient to maintain good health and At this season especially it never pays to allow stock to run down, in act it will pay to give a little special attention to keep it thrifty. It is of en the case that at this time the supply of feed will get short, and unicas care is taken, the stock will begin to lose flesh, and this is a condition always to be avoided, as cosis double to make up a pound of lost gain. An ingenious and scemingly valuable invention is that of a German baker for a new method of keep ing bread fresh for a long period .-It consists in mixing ordinary flour with the powder of hazelnuts. The invention will, it is said, prove of great value when used in storing up any kind of flour or kindred sub stances, and also baked goods, such as rusks or biscuits used in the army and navy. In preparing the hez hat flour, the kernels are first removed from the shell and then are ground or reduced to powder. Only the white substance of the kernel is ground. The powder or flour thus produced is added to that which is to be preserved in a proportion varying between 5 and 25 per cent., care being taken that the mixture is as thorough as possible, as it is important that the fatty element of the powderized nuts shall pervade the whole substance. The flour so mixed acquires a property which enables the bread or other goods made of it to keep much longer than similar goods of ordinary flour. The fatty or oily element prevents the absorption of moisture o a great extent, and, consequently, the formation of mould, mildew or similar growths. In addition to this the albumen and fat in the hazelnut enhance the value of the flour, because of their nutritive
