The motto "There's plenty of room at the top," must have originated with a bald-headed man.

The policeman of course knows a rogue when he sees him. The trouble is, he don't seize him when he knows him.

Magistrate: What's your complaint against the young man, John? Chinaman (with unpaid bills): Too muchee bime by.

You say that tall giant over there is a Parisian. Well I never saw a Frenchman drink so much whisky!—Oh, he's from Paris, Ont.

The Almanacs put the shortest day in the year just before Christmas; but financially it is the next day after.

MONTREAL
VETERINARY COLLEGE

ESTABLISHED 1866.

IN CONNECTION WITH THE

Medical Faculty of McGill University

UNDER THE PATRONAGE OF THE COUNCIL OF AGRICULTURE, PROVINCE OF QUEBEC.

Session commences the first Tuesday in October of each year.

Full particulars furnished to intending students by applying to the Principal —

D. McEACHRAN, F.R.C.V.S., V.S., Edinburgh,
Chief Inspector of Stock for the Dominion of Canada.

THOROUGH COMMERCIAL COURSE,

With Actual Business Practice,

ENGLISH, FRENCH, SHORTHAND and TYPEWRITING.

The Course of study is thorough and practical, and designed to impart a sound Business Education.

In the Actual Business Department, which is conducted on the Board of Trade principle, the student receives actual practice and experience in the various branches of commerce.

Students can commence at any time without experiencing any inconvenience or disadvantage.

Montreal, with its vast trade and manufactures, affords more opportunities for young men to begin life than any other city in the Dominion, and THE MONTREAL BUSINESS COLLEGE is pre-eminently successful in training young men for business pursuits. It is important also to be remembered that a residence in such a business centre as Montreal, where openings are of daily occurrence, is much more preferable and advantageous than in smaller places, in which the chances of obtaining situations are very remote; particularly is this the case when the cost for living is no greater in Montreal than in other towns or cities.

THE POLITICAL HISTORY OF 1888.

The early part of the year 1888 was marked by no stirring event of domestic importance, so far as the politics of the country were concerned. On the 23rd February the Dominion Parliament opened. A number of bye-elections had been held during the recess, and in the first few days of the session sixteen new members were introduced, no less than thirteen being Conservatives; only three were Liberals. This was naturally regarded by the Government's friends as an indication that their policy had met with general favor in the country.

The first test of party strength took place on March 6th. When Sir Charles Tupper moved the House of Commons into committee of supply, Hon. Mr. Mills (Liberal) moved in amendment: "That in the opinion of this House it is the duty of the Ministry to submit to Parliament a measure embracing such provisions as will remove all legal impediments to the efficient working of the Canada Temperance Act."

Under the rules of Parliament, the manner in which Mr. Mills' motion was introduced forced the Government to regard it as a vote of want of confidence, and to ask its supporters to disregard their private sentiments and vote it down, as its passage would necessitate the resignation of the Cabinet. This was strongly pointed out by Conservative speakers, who impugned Mr. Mills' motives in introducing his amendment in the manner he did. When the vote was taken it stood: for the motion, 57; against, 109; majority for the Government, 52.

Unrestricted Reciprocity was the subject of the next serious debate—the great event of the session—Sir Richard Cartwright, on March 14, moving: "That it is highly desirable that the largest possible freedom of commercial intercourse should obtain between the Dominion of Canada and the United States, and that it is expedient that all articles manufactured in, or the natural products of, the said countries, should be admitted free of duty into the ports of the other, articles subject to duties of excise or of internal revenue alone excepted. That it is further expedient that the Government of the Dominion should take steps at an early date to ascertain on what terms and conditions arrangements can be effected with the United States for the purpose of securing full and unrestricted reciprocity of trade therewith."

The debate on this was long, but not excitingly interesting. The subject had been thoroughly threshed out in the columns of the press and on the platform during the nine months preceding. The Liberals claimed that Canadian manufacturers had nothing to fear from the competition with the United States which commercial union or unrestricted reciprocity would involve, and that as the result of its operations the farmers of the country would secure better prices for their produce, and so improve their position. The Conservatives pointed to the failure of former attempts by Canada to negotiate a simple reciprocity treaty; instanced the action of Mr. Bayard during the fishery convention at Washington in declining, on behalf of the United States Government, to consider a proposition looking to reciprocity with Canada, and recalled the manner in which the United States had abrogated, at the earliest moment, the reciprocity treaty of 1854, and the reciprocity provisions of the Washington treaty of 1871. They asserted that under the National Policy adopted by the people in 1878, and endorsed in 1882 and 1887, Canada had made great and satisfactory progress in industrial development and material wealth, which such a change as Sir Richard Cartwright desired would jeopardize. They also asserted that the farmer derived as much advantage from the protective policy as any class of the community, being given, by the building up of manufacturing centres in Canada, that market at his own door which, under unrestricted reciprocity, he would have to seek in the United States, in active competition with the agriculturists of that nation. They also showed that Great Britain and not the United States was the chief market for Canada's products, and that there our chief competitors were the farmers of the United States, who looked, as we did, to England to take the surplus of their productions. It would also take from the treasury $7,000,000 of revenue, which would have to be made up in some other manner, which meant by direct taxation of the people over and above their present local and municipal burdens. The debate lasted from March 14 to April 7. During its continuance, Hon. Thomas White made his last important speech, and at its close the division, taken on an amendment by Hon. Mr. Foster, affirming the success of, and the country's adherence to, the National Policy, resulted in 124 voting for the Government and 67 with the Liberals, a Conservative majority of 57.

The next prominent debate was on the acceptance of the fishery treaty negotiated during the winter by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and Sir Charles Tupper, assisted by Hon. Messrs. Thompson and Foster, and Hon. Wm. Winter of Newfoundland, for Great Britain, and by Mr. Bayard, Mr. Putnam and Mr. Angell, for the United States. The Liberals criticized, but did not by motion attack the treaty, and without division it was adopted by the House of Commons.

Then among the memorable occurrences of the session came the debate on the abolition of the Canadian Pacific Railway's monopoly in the North-West. This monopoly, to last for twenty years, was an important provision of the contract under which the company undertook to construct the road. It was urged at the time it was granted, that it was necessary to retain the trade of the country to Canadian channels, and among eastern merchants and manufacturers it was a main inducement in leading them to accept the heavy taxation of the older provinces that the construction of the road by our limited population implied. The people of Winnipeg, after the main line had been constructed, had raised a strong agitation for the removal of this restriction on railroad competition, and the last provincial elections in Manitoba had resulted in the return of a majority of the Legislature pledged to work by every means to secure the right to construct railroads to the United States boundary. Under the circumstances, the Government decided that it was best, in view of the danger the continued agitation promised to result in, to negotiate with the company for a surrender of the remaining years of its monopoly. The terms were considered favorable. They implied no ultimate charge on the Federal treasury. In consideration of a guarantee of $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest for fifty years on \$15,000,000 of bonds, as security for which 15,000,000 acres of the company's land grant was pledged, as well as the surplus earnings of the company and the postal subsidy to which it was entitled, the company agreed to forego its monopoly contract rights, pledging itself, at the same time, to spend the proceeds of the \$15,000,000 bonds in improving and increasing the equipment and facilities of the road. The Liberals opposed this, but only to meet another defeat; the vote on the adoption of the proposition standing 112 to 60, a Government majority of 52.

Another topic that gave rise to some angry discussion, both in and out of Parliament, was the "standing offer" of reciprocity placed on the statute-book in 1879, when the National Policy was adopted, and which was intended as a means of facilitating negotiations with the United States, if at any time they were ready to resume the discussion of a reciprocity treaty. It included a large number of natural products, some of which Canada sends largely to the United States, and some of which the United States sends largely to Canada. The intention was that an arrangement that would include them all would be fair and of mutual benefit to the producers of the two countries. The United States Congress, between 1878 and 1888, however, of its own motion, and without any regard for Canada's interests or trade, placed on its customs free list a number of articles included in Canada's offer. Hon. Mr. Mitchell, on behalf of the Liberals, set up the contention that, in these circumstances, the Canadian Government was bound to do as the United States had done, and remove the Canadian duties from all the articles that had been freed from customs charges in the United States. The Government contended that this was neither good sense nor reciprocity. Its friends held that the offer was to be taken as a whole; that it was not to be left to the United States to choose which articles of the list they would have reciprocity in; and that the adoption of any such doctrine would place Canada at a disadvantage, because, under it, the Americans could pick out what they sent largely to us for reciprocity, and levy duty on everything which we sent largely to them. This view would undoubtedly have prevailed in Parliament had not the United States Government, through their attention being called to the matter, communicated with the Dominion authorities, claiming their failure to act on the lines laid down by the Liberals as a breach of faith, and threatening reprisals if the alleged discrimination was persisted in. The newly negotiated Fisheries treaty was at the time before the United States Congress. It was regarded as essential to the broader interests of Canada that nothing should be done that would jeopardize its ratification, and the Government consented to a course that it felt was not really in the interests of the country. As a result, seeds, green fruit, trees, shrubs and plants were placed on the Canadian free list, no matter what country they came from. But, immediately afterwards, Sir Charles Tupper, on behalf of the Government, introduced and carried through Parliament a measure amending the original offer, calculated, even under the Liberal interpretation, to prevent unfair discrimination against Canada.

These were leading events in the history of the session, which closed amid a general feeling that the strength of the Government had in no way been weakened in the country, a feeling that has been strengthened by events occurring subsequent to the rising of Parliament. It is right to mention among the interesting matters connected with the work of the session, the combines investigation, instigated by Mr. N. Clarke Wallace, the conservative member for West York, which proved, in the case of the coal, the cracker, the undertakers, the grocers and other lesser trade organizations, that these "combines" exist altogether independent of the tariff, and which is likely to lead a legislation at the next assembling of Parliament. A bill introduced in the Senate by Hon. Mr. Abbott, to abolish "bucket shop" gambling was regarded as an important victory or the moral element of the community.

Hon. Thomas White, Minister of the Interior, died on the 21st of April, and immediately on the close of the session (May 22nd), Sir Charles Tupper resigned his portfolio as minister of Finance, and went to England as High Commissioner. This, with the resignation of Hon. Mr. McLelan, postmaster-general, necessitated the selection of three new ministers. Hon. George Foster, having been appointed minister of Finance, Mr. Charles H. Tupper, M. P. for Pictou, was given the Marine and Fisheries portfolio; Mr. John Haggart, M. P. for South Lanark, was named postmaster-general, and Hon. Edgar Dewdney, Lieutenant-Governor of the Northwest Territories, was appointed minister of the Interior, presenting himself for election in East Assinibolia. To none of these gentlemen, on their appealing to the electors, did the Liberals offer any opposition.

In the local Legislatures, outside of the province of Quebec, no event of marked importance attracted public attention. The resolutions of the Quebec inter-provincial conference, adopted in November, 1887, were passed by the Legislatures of Ontario and Manitoba, these having but one chamber; but in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, after being adopted by the Legislative assemblies, the Legislative councils refused to assent to them. In Quebec the local Government, which had been instrumental in calling the conference, passed the resolution through the Assembly, but failed to send them to the Legislative Council. Since then the work of the conference has been allowed to rest.

Three measures enacted by the Quebec Legislature led to much discussion. These were the conversion of the debt bill, the Jesuits compensation bill and the Montreal district magistrates bill. The first provided that the outstanding debt of the province, represented by bonds bearing different rates of interest, issued at different times by different governments, and sold on the London and Paris markets under varying circumstances, should be changed into securities bearing a lower rate of interest, one clause of the Act authorizing this providing that if any of the bondholders did not willingly consent, the Government should have power to reduce the interest to be paid them on their old bonds whether they would or not. This was opposed by business men and bankers who showed that the holders of the province's bonds had purchased them in good faith in the open market, under the belief that they would continue for the full period stated by the Acts which authorized them; that this was a consideration that added to the value of the securities and enabled the province to obtain more money for them in the first place. It was shown that the carrying out the Government's scheme would seriously injure the credit of the province as well, being in its way a partial confiscation of private wealth and a repudiation of the public obligations of the province. The Government persisted, however, and by the votes of two Conservative members in the Legislative council, Hon. Mr. Starnes and Hon. Mr. Champagne, the latter of whom was shortly afterwards appointed a salaried district magistrate in Montreal, passed it into law. Members of the London Stock Exchange prepared a protest against the enforcement of the law, and asked the Dominion Government to veto it. No action in this direction has, however, yet been taken; neither has the local Government sought to proceed with its conversion scheme.

The Act to compensate the Jesuits proposed to vote the sum of $400,000 to be disposed of by the Holy See as it might see fit, after ratification by the Pope, the interest in the meantime being paid to the Society of Jesus in Quebec, the Jesuits on their part foregoing all claim to any property they had in the province previous to the conquest by England and the suppression of their order by the Pope. To compensate the Protestants for the taxation that this grant would imply, it was provided that Protestant educational institutions should receive a vote of $60,000, the interest upon which should be annually distributed by the Protestant Committee of the Council of Education. The Jesuits also specially retained their right (whatever it might be held to be) to the common at Laprairie. This proposition drew out strong opposition on the part of the Protestants of the province, who pointed to the well established facts: that the British Government had confiscated the estates of the Jesuits after the conquest in 1760; and that the whole Jesuits order had been abolished by the Pope in 1773, and therefore that the later revised order could have no claim whatever to property that the original Society of Jesus might a century ago have possessed and been deprived of by the King in the interest and for the welfare of the state. The bill passed in spite of protest, and being ratified by the Pope, became the law of the land.

The Montreal District Magistrates Bill abolished the Circuit branch of the Superior Court and vested its powers in two judges which it designated as district magistrates, but specially clothed with the same jurisdiction "for hearing and deciding civil matters as that exercised by the said Circuit Court of the district of Montreal." The British North America Act gives the power of appointing judges to Superior Courts to the Dominion Government. Sir John Thompson, the minister of justice, regarded this District Magistrates' Bill as an attempt to take from the Dominion Parliament one of its constitutional prerogatives under the guise of changing the name of a court and calling its judges simply magistrates. He therefore recommended the Governor-General to disallow the Act in question. This was done and the provincial authorities duly notified. The Premier, Hon. Mr. Mercier, for a time threatened to resist the power of the Dominion, and to withhold the promulgation of the disallowance proclamation in the "Quebec Official Gazette," but felt himself compelled to give way to public sentiment, and on October 2nd, the official declaration was made, and the District Magistrates' Court, which had in the meantime been constituted and gone into operation, was closed, Messrs. Champagne and Barry being re-appointed district magistrates under an old Act, with limited jurisdiction.

An event of more than ordinary interest was the election in Montreal-East, the most populous constituency in the Dominion, and one containing more French-speaking voters than any other two in the province. Polling took place on September 26th. The candidates were Mr. Lépine, selected by the workingmen and endorsed by the conservatives, and Mr. Poirier, who ran on the Nationalist-Liberal ticket, announcing as his programme the Champ-de-Mars resolution of November, 1885, condemning Sir John Macdonald's government for the execution of Riel. He also took strong ground against the right of the Dominion cabinet to veto provincial laws, and especially the Montreal District Magistrates' Act. He was assisted by Mr. Laurier, the federal, and Mr. Mercier, the provincial, Liberal leaders, and the whole campaign was marked by continued appeals to the French-speaking people to resist the outrage on their nationality implied in the execution of Riel and the vetoing of an Act passed by a French and Catholic legislature at the instance of an English and Protestant Dominion Government. The result was in some doubt, but the close of the polls showed Mr. Lépine, the Conservative-labor candidate, to be elected over the provincialist-liberal, Mr. Poirier, by a majority of 663 votes.

In Manitoba a number of political changes occurred during the year. Late in 1877, Mr. Norquay, after being in power for practically fifteen years, had retired, after failing in his efforts to float the bonds of the Red River Valley railway. He was succeeded in the premiership by Mr. Harrison, also a Conservative, but the party had been considerably weakened as the result of the elections of 1887, and on the 16th of January, Mr. Harrison announced the resignation of the newly re-organised ministry, and Mr. Thomas Greenway was called on to form a new government. After doing this, he dissolved the Legislature, and on the 11th July a general election was held, the result being the triumph of the new ministry, who elected 33 supporters to five only on the Conservative side. When the Legislature met, Mr. Greenway carried through a bill creating a railroad company consisting of three officials of the Northern Pacific Railway, and two members of the Manitoba Government, to build a railroad from the United States border to Winnipeg, with branches to Portage la Prairie and elsewhere, giving the new line heavy grants of public money to aid in its construction, guaranteeing interest on its bonds to a large amount, and authorizing the issue of other bonds to an extent that practically enabled the "company" to obtain some two hundred and fifty miles of railroad without laying out a cent of its own money. These terms excited some comment, and were justified by Mr. Greenway as being the best he could make. Early in October the Red River Valley road was completed into Winnipeg. About the same time the Winnipeg Free Press, a Liberal journal and former supporter of the Greenway government, and the Morning Call made charges that two of its ministers, Mr. Greenway and Mr. Martin, had been guilty of corrupt acts in connection with this and other contracts with which they had to do, the outcome being a number of criminal libel suits. The grand jury, however, on the indictments being presented to them returned "no bills," and the papers reiterated their charges. On the assembling of the Legislature (November 8), Mr. Greenway moved for a royal commission which was issued to Judge Killam, to enquire into the transactions of members of the government in connection with the R. R. Valley contracts. The newspaper publishers declined to appear before this commission, however, because they alleged the scope of its powers was so limited that they could not, under them, go fully into the facts upon which their charges were based. Judge Killam returned his commission to the Lieutenant-Governor and the Legislature adjourned without accomplishing anything. Meantime a case had been prepared for submission to the Supreme Court, approved of by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, to obtain a decision as to whether the Manitoba Legislature had power to authorize Mr. Martin, as Railway Commissioner, to construct a railway crossing the Canadian Pacific. The Northern Pacific & Manitoba road had also given notice of its intention to apply to the Dominion Parliament for a charter to construct the lines over which the dispute had arisen.

PROVERBS ABOUT WIND.

Cats with their tails up and hair apparently electrified indicate approaching wind.

If swine be restless and grunt loudly there will be much wind.

Pigs can see the wind.

Hunters say that the direction in which the loon flies in the morning will be the direction of the wind next day.

Magpies flying three or four together and uttering harsh cries predict windy weather.

Anvil shaped clouds are very likely to be followed by a gale of wind.

The vernal equinoctial gales are stronger than the autumnal.

If it blows in the day it generally hushes towards evening.

If small white clouds are seen to collect together, their edges appearing rough,—expect wind.

A light yellow sky at sunset presages wind.

If the full moon rises red—expect wind.

A very red sky in the east at sunset indicates stormy winds.

Heavy, white, rolling clouds in front of a storm denote high wind.

The sharper the blast,

The sooner 'tis past.

A gale moderating at sunset will increase before midnight, but if it moderates after midnight the weather will improve.

Wind storms usually subside about sunset, but if they do not, the storm will probably continue during the following day.

When the glass is low,

Look out for a blow,

Fast rise after a low (barometer),

Precedes a stormy blow.

Always a calm before a storm.

No weather is ill

If the wind is still.

Every wind has its weather.

Wind in the West, weather at best;

Wind in the East, neither good for man or beast.

THE LORE OF PRECIOUS STONES.

In the fourteenth century a fanciful Italian writer on the mystic arts set forth the virtues of the various gems, indicating also the month in which it was proper to wear particular stones in order to secure the best results! The idea took, and for some time it was the fashion in several Italian cities to have the precious stones of the ring determined by the month in which the bride was born.

If in January, the stone was a garnet, believed to have the power of winning the wearer friends wherever she went.

If in February, her ring was set with an amethyst, which not only promoted in her the quality of sincerity, but protected her from poison and from slanderous tongues.

The blood stone was for March, making her wise and enabling her with patience to bear domestic cares.

The diamond for April, keeping her heart innocent and pure so long as she wore the gem.

An emerald for May, made her a happy wife.

An agate for June, gave her health and protection from fairies and ghosts.

If born in July, the stone was a ruby, which tended to keep her free from jealousy of her husband.

In August the sardonyx made her happy in the maternal relation.

In September a sapphire was the proper stone, in preventing quarrels between the wedded pair.

In October a carbuncle was chosen, to promote her love of home.

The November-born bride wore a topaz, it having the gift of making her truthful and obedient to her husband.

In December, the torquoise insured her faithfulness.

Among the German country folk the last named stone is to the present day used as a setting for the betrothal ring, and so long as it retains its color, is believed to indicate the constancy of the wearer.
