PROGRESS OF THE WAR

IN the period under review the war entered its thirtieth month of its course. No sensational event occurred in the progress, which remained generally in favor of the Entente Allies.

President Wilson took the oath of office on entering his second term on Sunday, March 4, but the formal inauguration with the customary speech took place on Monday. The President was sworn in on March 4, no matter upon what day of the week it was.

A general election is to take place shortly in Australia, and pending the election Premier Hughes will be unable to go to London to attend the Imperial Conference.

The Caucasian campaign, which includes the operations in Persia as well as the operations in the Caucasus, provided an important piece of news in the report of the capture of Hamadan by the Russians, who followed up their success by taking the heights to the southwest of that Persian stronghold.

In the Mesopotamian campaign the British continued their pursuit of the retreating Turks and had approached within a short distance of Ctesiphon, which was the farthest point reached by Gen. Townshend before his retirement to Kut-el-Amara.

From the Egyptian campaign it was announced that the Turks had abandoned a strongly entrenched position in the neighbourhood of Sheikh Nuran west of Shellal, having been driven therefrom by British aircraft which dropped bombs on the fortified position.

The fact of the matter is that the decline in production in the United States alone during the year has been more than sufficient to offset the gains shown in Africa and Canada, besides the decrease in yield in Australasia also helped to offset the increases in the territory mentioned.

The production by ounces for the past three years follows: 1915. 1914. 1913. Australia 1,930,056 2,389,618 2,301,152 Africa 1,811,359 1,598,411 9,808,940 U. S. 4,465,807 4,887,604 4,572,976

WATERWORKS WE had hoped and expected to be able to print long before this a draft of the Bill to be introduced to the Legislature as proposed at its next session in Fredericton, by the Town of St. Andrews for authority to issue bonds to provide the funds necessary to defray the cost of the proposed waterworks installation.

DEER ISLAND AND CAMPOBELLO MAIL SERVICE WE would say to our Deer Island and Campobello friends that we believe the Post Office Department really intends to keep its promise in regard to improving the mail service between the islands and the mainland; but great bodies now slowly, departmental forms or must be written, documents of all kinds must be multiplied, and miles of red tape must be used, before a fulfillment of the promise can be expected.

month during the summer, including board, averaged $43.23 for male and $22.46 for female help, as compared with $37.10 and $20.20 in 1915. For the year 1916, including board, the wages averaged $39.77 for males and $22.97 for females, as compared with $34.1 and $20.0 in 1915.

Dispatches from Peking announce that the Chinese Cabinet had resigned because they favored China's immediate participation in the war on the side of the Entente Allies, to which the President refused to agree.

THE KILTIE BATTALION BRASS BAND

The 236th Kiltie Battalion Brass Band and Pipe Band, accompanied by a number of the other members of the Battalion, came to St. Andrews on Friday's train and left again on Saturday. Though their stay was short they managed to give three performances, a short outdoor concert in the Market Square on Friday afternoon; another longer one on Saturday afternoon, when a very large audience assembled to hear them; and on Friday evening in the Andreole Hall they gave a grand patriotic concert and vaudeville entertainment. The Hall was more than full on that occasion, extra chairs having to be placed in the aisles, and every member of the audience thoroughly enjoyed the excellent programme, which was as follows:

In St. Andrews the evening concert brought in $180, and $25 was collected on Saturday afternoon. Men being the chief need of the Battalion, two of its sergeants remained behind in the hope of securing some likely recruits.

"Do you enjoy grand opera?" "I might," replied Mr. Cumrox. "If in talking about it, I were obliged to use words that I can't pronounce and don't understand."—Washington Star.

WEIR OWNERS' ASSOCIATION

Notice has been given of a meeting of the Weir Owners' Association, for the Counties of Saint John and Charlotte, to be held in Saint George on Wednesday next. This Association was organized in May last, at the town of Saint Stephen, in succession to another Association, having for its objects similar principles, but conducted on a different basis.

The membership of the present Association is limited to weir owners, rather than weir fishermen who do not own or control fish weirs. The objects for the formation of the present organization were to establish and preserve better relations between the different elements engaged in the fish industry, and it is very gratifying to observe how successful have been the efforts of the promoters of the organization along those lines.

When this association was first discussed there was some opposition and much indifference among the weir owners towards the plan, and it began its existence with a membership of only a few members of the organization engaged in weir fishing.

The action which the sardine packers were forced by the Government of the United States under the provisions of the Pure Food Laws, and which they are now doing their utmost to put on the coast, caused consternation and alarm among weir fishermen, and all kinds of troubles were anticipated between the sardine packers and weirmen, but the wise and conciliatory methods adopted by the heads of the Weir Owners' Association led to the utmost harmony and good will between the weir owners and packers during the entire season of 1916, and not one case was reported of the packers attempting to resort to arbitrary methods, as was feared would be likely before the organization of this association, and, as a result, the last season was one of great prosperity for our fishermen, and the friendly relations between the two elements were never more strongly maintained.

One of the first acts by the Association after its formation was to seek and hold a conference between the packers and the weir owners, at which both parties learned of each other in all honest efforts to improve the sardine industry by the use of only the highest grades of fish to put on the market in the manufactured state.

To those who are closely identified with the work of the Weir Owners' Association during the past year, the good it has accomplished in the interests of our fishermen is a marvel, and it is a wholesome indication to see the support this movement has received from their owners. Starting, as it did, with only a score of members, the Association now, in less than a year, embraces nearly every weir owner along the coast from Saint Stephen to Saint John. There will be much important work to do at the meeting next week, and no doubt it will be largely attended.

The increase in cost of maintaining and operating fish weirs will be a matter requiring careful consideration to adjust without disturbing the relations existing between packers and producers.

WILL OF A FORMER CHARLOTTE COUNTY MAN BEING CONTESTED

The family affairs of the late George Clayton Leonard, founder of the well known restaurant known as Leonard's Cafe, are to be probed in proceedings in the Supreme Court, where his first wife, Mrs. Nellie Leonard, is seeking to prevent the second Mrs. Jeannette Leonard, of the town of Saint John, from receiving the bulk of the estate, which is valued at more than $150,000.

The first round of the fight in the local courts occurred in Supreme Court chambers this morning before Chief Justice Hunter, when the Hon. Mr. Justice K. C. acting on behalf of the first Mrs. Leonard, and Messrs. J. W. deB. Farris and A. C. Brydson-Jack acting on behalf of the second Mrs. Leonard.

From the statements made in court by Mr. Macneil, it appears that five years ago Mr. Leonard entered into a separation agreement with his wife whereby he was to allow her $2400 a year for herself and $1200 a year for her two daughters. Then he took a trip to Reno, where he procured one of the famous quick-lunch divorces and married Mrs. Jeannette Leonard.

Last September Mr. Leonard died at Los Angeles, and his will was duly entered in the California courts for probate. The bulk of the estate in British Columbia was also sought, the estate here consisting of real estate and mortgages. Under the will the second Mrs. Leonard is made executrix and receives practically half of the estate. The real estate in British Columbia is left to be sold and the proceeds divided between the brothers and sisters of the deceased and the two daughters by the first marriage. There is no bequest for the first wife.

In the proceedings taking place in Californian courts, Mrs. Nellie Leonard is attacking the validity of the Reno divorce and is said to be starting a second action in the Californian courts to upset the will, alleging undue influence and insanity. There is said to be also a further question involved as to whether the separation allowance of $2400 a year for Mrs. Nellie Leonard ends with the death of Mr. Leonard or whether it must be continued until the proceeds of her late husband's estate. Mrs. Nellie Leonard and her two daughters, both of whom are now married are living in Portland, Maine, while the second wife is residing at Los Angeles.

Chief Justice Hunter, after hearing the application this morning to prevent the British Columbia estate from being touched until the litigation in California is tried out, adjourned the matter for two weeks in order that the facts can be set out in an affidavit and an affidavit be procured setting out the law of California, in regard to the probating of estates.—Vancouver Daily Province, Feb. 21.

PREVENTION OF COAL SHORTAGE

This winter we have had a coal "famine" and that suffering has accompanied the shortage of this necessity is undeniable. The average citizen has a notorious short memory, but now is the time to impress upon him that, in many cases, the suffering was due to lack of foresight. In Canada many people buy in small quantities—often only one ton. If for any cause, there is a shortage of coal, the individual house-holder demands that the coal dealer do the impossible, namely that they supply fuel that is unavailable.

Whereas, had they purchased their coal in the summer or autumn, there would be ample supplies available.

While some large consumers, such as manufacturers, cannot store a six months' supply, most householders can, with their present bins or with enlarged bins, store coal to meet their requirements till March or April.

In recent years, we have had two coal "famines", first in 1901-02, the year of the coal miners' strike, and, second, this year, when the severity of the weather and the extraordinary prosperity in the United States caused an unprecedented congestion of freight. A survey of conditions in the United States demonstrates that in the future there will be more coal "famines" than in the past and that they will occur at shorter intervals. For this there is only one remedy:

Buy your coal in the summer. If you have not sufficient storage, enlarge your coal bin.—Conservation Bulletin.

NATIONAL SERVICE LITERATURE

One of the most valuable of recent literary contributions to the great cause is a booklet by Professor Stephen Leacock, entitled "National Service for War." In this booklet, Dr. Leacock makes a urgent call for national thrift and national saving. He attacks in vigorous style the evils of extravagance at this crisis in Canada's history, and by trenchant phrase and apt illustration disposes of various common errors in regard to individual spending of money during war time.

This pamphlet was originally published by Dr. Leacock himself, but the National Service Board were so convinced of its value in connection with their Thrift Campaign that they have had it reprinted and have undertaken its distribution. Copies may be obtained by writing to the Secretary of the National Service Board at Ottawa, or by applying to the National Service Director in any Province.

SEARCH FOR TRUTH

THE eye by long use comes to see even in the darkest cavern; and there is no subject so obscure but we may discern some glimpse of truth by long poring on it. Truth is the cry of all but the game of a few. Certainly where the chief passion, both not only all but the vulgar caravans and nor is it contented with a little ardour in the early time of life active perhaps to pursue but not so fit to weigh and revise. He who dedicates his age as well as his youth, the later growth as well as first fruits, at the altar of truth.

ROBERT P. PORTER

Robert P. Porter, the well-known journalist, founder of the New York Press, and for a number of years a member of the staff of the New York Times, died on Feb. 28, in London, in the sixty-sixth year of his age. Mr. Porter was born in Newich, England, June 30, 1850, and came to America in 1868. He was educated in private schools, and began his newspaper career on the Chicago Free Press when it was founded in 1872. His great ability in combining facts and figures soon gained him reputation, and in 1879 he was appointed chief of the division of the United States Census devoted to gathering information concerning wealth, debt, taxation, and railroads. In 1882 he was appointed by President Arthur a member of the Tariff Commission, and made permanent secretary. The same year he made a long tour through the industrial centers of England and Germany, and wrote elaborate articles on the subject for the New York Tribune. Three years later he made another tour abroad and discovered a series of articles for the Philadelphia Press.

During the Presidential campaign of 1884, Mr. Porter was an industrial writer on the tariff, and served as one of the editors of the International Review, which had published a valuable book, entitled "The West in 1883." In 1886 his letters to the Tribune and the Press were published in book form under the title of "Breakdowns Abroad." Always an ardent protectionist, and a bitter opponent of the Grover Cleveland policies, which had made great inroads upon the Republican party in New York, he, in company with Frank Habton, ex-Postmaster-General, founded the New York Press in 1887, with the purpose of putting his views before the workmen, their being no low-priced Republican organ in this city. In 1888 he became sole editor, and took a very active part in the campaign against Cleveland in that year. His papers attracted a large circulation. President Harrison rewarded him for his work in the election by appointing him Superintendent of the Eleventh Census in April, 1890, and he was engaged in that work from 1890 to 1893, resigning in September, 1893, to return to the editorial control of the Press. He took an active part in the campaign of McKinley, and in 1898 the President appointed him a special commissioner to Cuba and Porto Rico. He framed the tariff laws of these islands and conducted the negotiations with Gen. Gomez which ended in the disbandment of the Cuban army. In 1895-96, Mr. Porter made a trip to Japan for the Manufacturers' Association of America, and afterward made a special study of street and other railroads in Europe, and in 1904 he was induced to join the staff of the London Times, at first as editor of its "Engineering Supplement." When Roosevelt became President he was sent to Washington as the chief correspondent of the Times, where he remained until 1909, returning to England to take charge of the many special supplements of the Times, which necessitated journeys to North and South America, Japan, and Spain, and under his direction were produced, in rapid succession, supplements dealing with South America, the United States tariff, the Pacific Coast, American railways, Japan, Russia, Norway, and Spain, as well as others dealing with special industries, such as printing, textiles, rubber, food, and shipping. Since he had been responsible for the Red Cross and Recruiting supplements, and the general direction of the Times history of the war. At the time of his death he was completing a short history of Japan for the Oxford University Press. Among his books were "Life of William McKinley," "Municipal Ownership at Home and Abroad," "Industrial Cuba," and "Other People's Money."

THE CRIMINAL TURNED HERO

AS the Bible justifies particular rejoicing over the recovery of the sheep that went astray, so we may be allowed to find something peculiarly satisfactory in the heroism of the criminal without seeing fit to encourage the dangerous doctrine that heroism is only another aspect of a criminal's daring. Mr. Holmes, the well-known and able Police Court missionary, wrote in Blackwood's Magazine last June that the wonderful courage and endurance of a former English burglar who had settled near Aden and married an Arab wife. This man served as a spy in the Mesopotamian Campaign, entered the Turkish lines, was discovered and was tortured being burnt about his body and losing an arm, but he afterwards escaped. His letters revealed a simple passion for the land of his birth. It seemed to him a matter of ordinary routine in the circumstances to do what would be considered his one purpose was to "put in a bit" or "get in another day for England." The fact that he had taken root in Arabia made no difference. The exotic heat of Mesopotamia does nothing to parch his lively memories of the land whose laws he had once defied, but which he now desired to serve desperately.

in which Kinglake describes the character of Osman Effendi in Cairo. Osman was a Scotsman who had been taken prisoner by the Mohammedans when he was a drummer-boy in Fraser's force. Being given the customary choice between death and conversion to Islam, he had no notion of making a profession of Christianity a matter of self-respect and fearlessness to insolence, like the hero of Sir Alfred Lyall's "Theology in Extremis." He therefore clung to life, became a respected Mohammedan, and as though to prove his sincerity took to himself two wives. Kinglake after telling this, adds: "But the strangest feature in Osman's character was his unquenchable nationality. In vain they had brought him over the seas in early boyhood—in vain had he suffered captivity, conversion, circumcision—in vain they had burned him through fire in their Arabian campaigns—he could not cut away ever from poor Osman's inborn love of all that was Scotch. In vain men called him Effendi—in vain he swept along in Eastern robes—in vain the rivets adorned his harness; they of his heart still plainly lay in this, that he had three shelves of books, and that the books were through-Edinburgh Scotch—the Edinburgh that—and, above all, I recollect he put himself upon the Edinburgh Cabinet Library."

Readers of Mr. Kipling's stories will also remember the engaging gibberish, sung by the children of an Indian hill tribe, which turned out to be a dim memory of "The Wearing of the Green." The children, descended from Irish soldiers, there is nothing surprising in the patriotism, as such, of Mr. Holmes's hero. The thing that is surprising is what he is inclined to do for it in his obscure way. Surprising also, as well as his devotion to his Arab wife and children. He found with her, not the makeshift home of a "poor white," or the domestic bitterness experienced by the French colonial soldier who took an Arab wife in Mesopotamia's story, but a paradise of happiness.

In the February number of Blackwood's Magazine Mr. Holmes tells us of a letter which Walter Greenvay's adventures. They are so strange, and are recorded in the man's letters with what seems to be so much fancifulness and conscious artistry, that one is at first inclined to doubt their genuineness. Would a man who had disappeared into Arabia and taken up with native modes of life in that backward and generally far from agreeable land really write in a manner that suggests the mind of Burton tinged with the learned playfulness of "The Arabian Nights"? But the story is true. The corroboration supplied by Mr. Holmes is all of the undesigned and therefore powerful sort. Greenway's letters reached Mr. Holmes in pellets distributed among botanical specimens and had to be pieced together with enormous labor. Greenway writes of himself frequently in the third person as though he were an unconcerned spectator of his own life. He writes of "that Bedouin mute," for it was as an Arab pretending to be deaf and dumb that he penetrated the Turkish lines. He describes his return to his home after his escape—

"That Bedouin mute I told you about—he had a job to get home. The windows of heaven were open day and night. He toiled and waded, slipped and slurred, through mud-bottomed lagoons and miry sloughs. Dysentery returned. He struggled along on hand and knees till he gave up, and he was compelled to wriggle along like a snake, groaning in the morning, 'Would Allah it were even!' and at even, 'Would Allah it were morning!' from sorrow of heart. His pace, when he crawled out of the region of perpetual rain, was the pace of a snail. Now, from by night and a scorching sun by day only varied his misery. Most men would have prayed to die, but not he. Soft, bewitching eyes, blazing with love, peered through the darkness of his eyes. He, seeing into his own through all. He pressed on, though it cost him excruciating torture. He was determined to kiss again the sweet brown face those eyes were set in. He would feel once more the rapture of those soft delicious cheeks laid upon his own. The music of children's voices stirred him to tears. Fancy must be clothed in reality. He would not die till once again those darling heads had nestled their curls upon his breast, once again those sweetest lips had breathed into his ears the magic words of father."

At Basra he fell in with his father-in-law ("an Arab with an English heart"), and was conveyed to Mocha in the father-in-law's ship. As he approached his home, images of which had sustained him through everything, he saw nothing but a heap of ruins. His all had been destroyed by marauding Turks. Weak from dysentery, he fell senseless. When he recovered he found himself in his wife's arms. She had watched unceasingly by the ruins for his return. The children were there too—

And praise be to Allah for His gift of little children! Surely their laughter and their song are His own charms for giving back to a fainting man the youth and buoyancy which also were clean gone from him! He walked from a drowsy darkness, and lay face to face with his couch, with folded hands and grave face till he sees him smile. Then she stoops, presses a kiss upon his lips, and, mindful of a mother's caution, waves a hand and steps back the greater for the swell of joy which rises from sister and brother at Iza's good tidings of father's recovery. In a little while he is conscious of another woman's presence. The stately Victoria listens to his story, bent upon confirming with her fawn-like eyes the news her sister has brought. "Kiss me, my love," he beseeches. She touches his own lips with her own, and then, strokes his cheeks lovingly, and then, with all the authority conferred by six years' experience of life, goes out to gravely announce that father is nearly better."

There is a touch of Byron's lyrical delight in the sensations of his all this. Let us summarize the following narrative. Greenway visits Aden one day and there climbs a water-pipe on a high building to rescue a mewling kitten. As the one-armed adventurer descends among the breathless crowd he overheard some German speak disparagingly of his folly. He is struck down and overheard some things of more importance. They have store of "clocks," which are really inflexible machinery by British standards. He acts as burglar once more, and at night carries off the clocks as well as a German officer's uniform. He determines to use the clocks to the arsenals to which he had heard mentioned. He went to the Persian Gulf and there borrowed a motor-boat which his father-in-law had bought from an Englishman before the war. From Basra his objective was three hundred miles away to the Tigris. He completed the dangerous journey with his clocks to a spot near Baghdad—

"Marching to the Turkish hotel in charge, he was received with true Oriental courtesy, but little real favor. A few German junior officers who hung about enabled him to demonstrate his importance. They were suspicious at first. It was fortunate he remembered German tastes and had brought strong on the Tigris. By night he knew, would dare to disobey certain directions he gave for the safe-keeping of his additions to the stores. There is no disappointment when he paid the visit of inspection at a night of sleep. The day had passed pleasantly. His clocks were wound up and going beautifully, and the guard slept off their liquor. He took himself to Baghdad for an hour or two, as he said, on urgent business with his father-in-law. About midnight the arsenal blew up with tremendous roar which shook the earth, and flames ascended hundreds of yards to illuminate an inky sky."

The rest of the letters tell of Greenway, at his father-in-law's home at Mocha, slowly dying of dysentery. It is known that he died. And the faithful Arab wife has disappeared, perhaps never to be traced. The reader may see, as we felt inclined to say at first, that it is all too strange to be true. But let us get to Mr. Holmes from a doctor as the mission hospital founder Greenway died—

"A fortnight yesterday an Arab woman brought her husband, an Englishman, to this hospital. He was suffering from acute dysentery, from which he died on August 25. He had lost an arm recently, and his body was badly scorched by burnings. His wife, whose English is very imperfect, made us understand that he had served for some twelve months with the British Forces in Mesopotamia. She had a letter which he had written to her husband, but she showed it to me, and it was evident he was unable to make much of it. As far as I could make out, it told of toys or dolls sent for their children, and it might include a reference to a necktie or apron, or ribbons—all of which she wore, and kept perpetually fingering, with great pride, and gratified smiles also allowed me to glance at the letter. No doubt, though she intended me to thank you for gifts to the children if not for the things she kept fingering, I am dreadfully sorry for the little woman. She was devoted to her husband—she must have been—for she carried him somehow, since he was far too weak to walk, or to sit on horseback (at best she must have held him on a horse) for more than seventy miles. She was the picture of grief when he died, and for eighteen hours she mourned at his grave. It quite affected and saddened us all to see her. A few hours ago her father, an Arab sheikh, who seems to have conveyed the children to his own home, came and took her away. She thanked us with tears for what we had done for her husband—little enough—then ran to the graveyard, and her father had a hard task to coax her away."

Another letter in collaboration of the trip up the Tigris in the motor-boat. The writer says that he saw Greenway in Bedouin dress in a motor-boat. Asked what this strange conjunction of dress and occupation meant, Greenway answered that he was trading. Since then a mission has been started at the request of Mr. Holmes visited Mocha to try to trace the Arab wife. He found only the ruined home, which he was told had been destroyed by Turkish—another corroboration. Mr. Holmes has little hope of ever hearing again of the woman who figures benignly in these written fragments. He adds—

"But Walter has painted a picture of her which will last. He was a strange person, a hero if ever man deserved the term—how far a hero because of the wife, or how far because of the picture to estimate. That he was a good man at last, for all his early faults, I have no difficulty in understanding through her story of whom he was so justly proud, and the children also so lovingly entreated about his death. Blackwood's Magazine never fails us in stories of adventure, but it is Mr. Holmes here who has given us one of the best on record. The much-abused word 'romantic' may be applied to it without shame or falseness.—The Spectator."

MILITARY HOSPITALS LANTERN SLIDES

An Ontario minister the other day borrowed from the Military Hospitals Commission a set of lantern slides. These slides show what goes on at the hospitals and sanatoria. That is, they show something of how our injured soldiers are being restored to health and to power for self-support, however serious the injuries may be. The minister exhibited the slides at three country churches under his charge. In returning the set he writes: "My receding stature, who is also the postmaster and chairman of the local recruiting league, says they should be shown in every community. They most of the interest in many families who have the slides. The minister who returned them for sale for a longer period and put them in every available church in the district. A man with a well prepared lecture and a few local slides could render a valuable service to the country, both in allaying the unrest above referred to and in removing the prejudice in some families from which recruits might be secured."
